House of Commons Debates.

FOURTH SESSION—EIGHTH PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 7th July, 1899.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

BROCKVILLE AND WEST HURON ELECTIONS.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that in obedience to the Order of the House of yesterday, the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery is in attendance at the Table with all poll-books, voters' lists, and all other letters, documents and memoranda which have been transmitted to him by the respective returning officers, or which may otherwise be in his possession relating to the last election for the electoral district of Brockville, and to the last election for the electoral district of the West Riding of the County of Huron, respectively.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, I desire to move, seconded by Mr. Haggart:

That the poll-books, voters' lists and all other papers, letters, documents and memoranda relating to the last election for the electoral district of Brockville and the last election for the electoral district of the west riding of the county of Huron, respectively, which have been produced by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, be referred to the Select Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections for the purpose of inquiring into and investigating the conduct of the respective returning officers and of the several deputy returning officers at and in connection with each of the said elections respectively; with power to send for persons, papers and records, and to report thereon with all convenient speed.

As I understood from the right hon. leader of the Government yesterday that the motion would not be opposed by the Government, I presume that it is not necessary for me to say anything further in support of it. If I might be allowed a word of personal reference to something that was said by the right hon. gentleman yesterday with regard to my warmth, I certainly did not intend to exhibit any unbecoming warmth, and I do not think I did exhibit any. In the remarks I made as to the evidence, I carefully guarded myself from suggesting what I could not presume to suggest until the facts were brought out, that any of these gentlemen were guilty. I have looked over the records of the past when certain charges were made, and I think I brought myself very much within the rule of temper in language which has been observed by hon. gentlemen in the past. I might refer to the language of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) in connection with certain charges against Sir Adolphe Caron in 1892,—language in which that hon. gentleman did not exhibit quite the judicial temper which he was so desirous to inculcate upon me. On that occasion he said:

We have not sat in this House so long without understanding thoroughly that the hon. Postmaster General has been for many years one of the inner ring, and thoroughly familiar with all the machinery by which fields were fought and won in electoral campaigns. We have not been here for so many years, Sir, without knowing enough of the character of that hon. gentleman to know that being thus familiar with all the inner details of these campaigns, he is not, and I do not blame him for it, disposed to be made the scapegoat and to pay the whole cost of any little delinquencies that may come to light. Mr. Speaker, what my hon. friend has brought to light, and what I know well he will prove, if the opportunity is given him,—

He was not a member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, but he was a member of this House, which had to consider the report of that committee——is after all, only part and parcel of that colossal scheme of corruption by which and under which Canada has been governed for the last fourteen years.

Well, I am willing to submit the temper of my language in connection with this matter in contrast with that. He continued as follows:—

I know well, Sir, and the Ministers of the Crown know well, how the elections of 1882 were won, how the elections of 1887 were won, how the elections of 1891 were won, and how the recent by-elections, if they will have it, were bought and sold likewise. Sir, we know that the merest corner of the veil was lifted by the disclosures of last session; and I say to this House that if this investigation and the others demanded by the Opposition, be had, we shall see, and all Canada will see, with regard to the mode in which Canada has been governed for these many years past, that not on this continent, Teutomania Hall itself not excepted, has there ever been such a system of organized corruption as that investigation and others like it would expose.

Now, I think probably the right hon. gentleman will agree with me that I did not exceed the calm, judicial temperance of language which the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce displayed on that occasion. I did also intend to refer, Sir, to some remarks made by yourself in debate on that occasion, and which exhibited a certain amount of warmth which I do not, however, consider at all inconsistent with the personal characteristics that justified the Liberal party in raising you to the very honourable position you fill so well. If it were desired, I think I could refer to some pretty strong language of which very likely you, Sir, have a recollection on that occasion. Perhaps it would not be inopportune for me just to mention a sentence or two; and you will understand, Sir, that I am not citing this in any invidious spirit, but because my right hon. friend saw fit to criticise me more or less for the manner in which I dealt with this question yesterday. I have quite a long reference, but I will just read a sentence or two:

And what is the glorious end that is accomplished by this boodling? Why, Sir, it is to maintain the loyalty and unity of Canada to the British Empire, to maintain the old flag and the old monopolists, and surely that end justifies a great deal. The means to that end are the votes of public money, and what object could be more patriotic than to allow a reasonable and sufficient proportion of those public moneys to filter into the pockets of the Minister and then be disseminated among the electors for the good of the old flag?

And then, further on:

Besides, a man who can raise the wind for election purposes so well as the Postmaster General, is invaluable to that party; he cannot be spared; they will have more elections, and they will want him again.

I did not make any exhaustive research into any of the other precedents, but simply took the "Hansard" of 1882, which I happened to have in my hand, for the purpose of reference, and I do not make these references with any idea of reproaching hon. gentlemen opposite, but merely with a view of showing why I thought they should not consider me as having too warmly supported the resolution I submitted. I may say to the right hon. gentleman that I am always very glad to accept any suggestion from him as to the mode in which business ought to be conducted in this House. He has great parliamentary experience, and I do not take any suggestion of this kind from him in bad part at all, but am very glad to receive it. And what I have said with regard to the matter is only an attempt to justify any warmth I may have exhibited.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am quite willing to meet the hon. gentleman on the ground he has taken, and since he has been kind enough to refer to the little experience I have had in Parliament, I may be permitted to tell him that I do not think the examples he quoted are at all apposite to the criticism he offered. I may say at once that the language he used yesterday would have been quite in order, if the Government had taken the same attitude on the question which the late Government did on similar occasions, and which brought forth the replies of my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce and my hon. friend who occupies the Chair (Mr. Edgar). If my hon. friend had consulted the authorities, he would have perhaps found a more apposite authority in the opening speech of the hon. gentleman who moved the motion against Sir Adolphe Caron, rather than the speeches in reply to the refusal of the late Government to grant an inquiry. Unless I am greatly mistaken—and upon this point I am quite ready to stand corrected by the hon. gentleman—I think he quoted from the speech made by the mover of the resolution, not when he made the motion, but in reply to the attitude of the late Government in refusing an investigation on that occasion. My hon. friend quoted the remarks of my hon. colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce, also made in reply, but he no doubt did so because he assumes that this Government would do as the late Government did. That was his mistake.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). And as this Government has been doing.

THE RESTIGOUCHE BOOM COMPANY.

Mr. McALISTER moved that Bill (No. 65) to incorporate the Restigouche Boom Company, be referred back to the Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills for further consideration. He said: I may say, by way of explanation, that this Bill was before committee yesterday morning, and the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) requested that it be merely discussed, and not passed. A great deal of discussion took place on the Bill, but while a great many objections were made to the details, none was made to the principle of the Bill itself. Mr. Busted, who was the only one appearing to take objections, took the ground that the structure should be placed at the foot of the islands, some two or three miles above the point indicated in the Bill. In reply, I gave the opinion of experts who had examined the locality, that this could not be done, and the objection of Mr. Busted was the only one to the merits of the Bill. There was no objection to its principle. The hon. member for North Simcoe took objection to a great many of its details, and I admitted my willingness to accept an amendment covering the objections which he took. It was then suggested by the committee that the Bill should be referred to a special committee of three, and reported back to the committee. After that was agreed upon, the chairman said that the proper course would be to pass the preamble, and then refer the Bill to this special committee, on the distinct understanding that the passing of the preamble was not to be accepted as an indication that the Bill would be passed by the committee. On that understanding, the preamble was submitted, but quite a large number of members in the committee who were prepared to support the principle of the measure, had then left, under the impression that nothing more would be done with regard to it, except to refer it to a special committee. The preamble was rejected, but rejected, as I have said in the absence of these members who, if present, would have supported it, and who had left when it was agreed not to go on with the Bill.

I may say that the lumber industry is the most important on that river, and in order to carry on lumbering operations successfully, a Bill should pass empowering the company to build proper protection. I do not wish at all to override the will of the committee—but I am satisfied—and I think the majority of the committee who were present in the beginning, will bear me out in this—that the rejection of the preamble was irregular and due to a misunderstanding.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not know that this motion is absolutely unprecedented, though I do not remember any such motion having ever been made. Accepting, however, the statement of the hon. gentleman, that the vote taken in committee was a snap vote, the whole committee not being present, I have no objection to allowing the motion to carry.

Motion agreed to.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. SPROULE. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I beg to refer to a report which I see in a newspaper to-day regarding something that I said in committee yesterday, and which is a very unfair and incorrect version of what I really did say.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What is the paper?

Mr. SPROULE. I have here the Toronto "World," but I see that several other papers evidently misunderstood what I said, and reported me somewhat on the same line as this correspondent has done. The report says:

Dr. Sproule characterized the average system of lending of Canada "a swindling system," and held that no more charters of Bills should be sanctioned by Parliament that did not protect borrowers from a higher interest than was fair, and he understood that under the present system it was stated a loan was to be repaid, say with 6 per cent interest on the principal; whereas the interest was in reality on the full amount originally borrowed, irrespective of repayment.

Then it goes on to say that Mr. McCarthy said:

That unless such assertions were founded on fact they should not be made; but, if founded on fact, the sooner an investigation was commenced the better.

The report also contains the following:—

E. F. Clarke said all the expectations of the company might not have been realized, but it could not be pretended that there had been any sharp practice or operations in the remotest degree justifying the use of the term "swindling" or anything of that sort.

In the first place, I may say that I never made such a statement as is attributed to me here when it says that I "characterized the average system of lending in Canada as 'a swindling system'." I said, with reference to the company that was before us, that they sent out literature offering to lend say $1,000 or any other amount upon such terms that the borrower must take so much stock and would pay back $1.50 per $100 every month until he had made ninety-six payments, when his mortgage would be paid off and he would be entitled to have the mortgage cancelled and returned to him. But after he has made his ninety-six payments, he is told by the company that it will be necessary to make fifteen or sixteen payments more before he can get a discharge of his mortgage. I said that such conduct, taken in connection with such representations in their literature, might fairly be regarded as a swindling system. I said that several of these companies had been organized and were doing business in the country, and I knew of their operations. I characterized that operation as rather of a swindling character. I think the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke), in answer, said that every company did the same. My reply was that, in my experience, no such thing was done, and I gave as my reason—

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, I dislike to interrupt my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule), but I would ask your ruling on a point of order—

Mr. SPROULE. I had nearly finished what I have to say.

The PRIME MINISTER. I suppose that my hon. friend has fair cause to complain of the report, and I did not wish to interrupt him. But I would ask your ruling, Mr. Speaker, as to whether it is in order for the hon. gentleman to make an explanation concerning what passed in a committee of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. It is a personal explanation.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I may tell my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) that the Bill is still to come before the House, and he will have ample opportunity to set himself right.

Mr. SPEAKER. As to the point of order, my impression is that under the rules of the House, an hon. gentleman cannot, as a matter of personal explanation, refer to what has taken place in a committee of the House until that committee shall have reported.

Mr. SPROULE. The committee has reported.

Mr. SPEAKER. Then, I think the point is not well taken.

Mr. SPROULE. I was going on to say that, in answer to the statement that all companies did the same, I said that, so far as my knowledge extended, no respectable companies in Canada did it. I named the Canada Permanent and the Western Canada, the Farmers' Loan and Savings, the British Canadian, as companies that did not do it, and I said that I was confident that the same might be said of others. But I find a class of companies that have sprung up lately and are carrying on operations in this line. It will be seen that the report does not represent fairly what I said. I do not attribute to this correspondent any desire to misreport me, but it is evident that his summary is based on imperfect information or upon a misunderstanding of what I said.

THE PRINTING OF THE VOTERS' LISTS.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). May I ask the leader of the Government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) if anything has been done or any arrangement made to carry out the provision of the Franchise List Act. I find, on inquiry, that the lists of the county of Pictou for last year have been sent and that those for this year are here or are ready to be sent. I desire to know if we are to receive the lists in printed form?

The PRIME MINISTER. We have an appropriation in the supplementary Estimates for that very purpose.

Mr. BERGERON. We understood that the point was to be considered and decided, and either Parliament was to be asked to vote the money to print the voters' list or else a Bill would be introduced to change the law. Has that been done?

The PRIME MINISTER. There is no change in the law. The lists are to be printed.

Mr. BERGERON. But they were to be printed last year, and they were not printed. Mine were not.

The PRIME MINISTER. It may be that the appropriation proved insufficient.

Mr. McDUGALL. May I ask if the department have called upon the different county clerks to send in the lists? The reason why I put the question is that, as I understand it, unless within the last few days, the lists from the county of Cape Breton have not reached the Printing Bureau. Where they are, I cannot say. I am aware that some members have received copies of their lists printed from the Printing Bureau. When I asked at the Printing Bureau for mine, I was informed that they had not received the lists.

The PRIME MINISTER. I cannot inform my hon. friend (Mr. McDougall). The only information I have is a report received yesterday or the day before from the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery that the officers have been very negligent in sending in the lists, and very few lists have been received up to this moment.

Mr. BERGERON. How will it be in the future?

The PRIME MINISTER. My intention is to instruct the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to write a circular letter to all the officers to send in the lists.

Mr. BERGERON. The other day the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) explained that there was a flaw in the law, and that the officers cannot be forced to send in their lists, as they are not paid any fee. According to the hon. Minister (Sir Louis Davies) the law was to be amended one way or the other—either we would vote money to provide fees for these people and then compel them to send the lists, or it would be provided that the lists should not be printed except when absolutely necessary. If there is to be no amendment of the law, I do not know how my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) is going to be sure of having the lists sent.

The PRIME MINISTER. To pay a fee to the officers would certainly be a good way to force them.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). I know that, in some cases, the lists have been paid for by the Government. The officer who supplied the lists for my county was paid, though he claims he was not paid as much as he was entitled to. I did not understand that there was any question of the payment of the county clerk. I am surprised also to learn that some of the lists have been printed.

The PRIME MINISTER. It is the intention to have the lists printed, and we are having an appropriation for that purpose.

FOREIGN IMMIGRATION.

Mr. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria, B.C.). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to speak upon a matter that I consider of great importance, and, to put myself right, Mr. Speaker, as my remarks will be somewhat lengthy, I will conclude with a motion. I was present when the right hon. leader of the Government saw fit to castigate my hon. friend from West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) for bringing forward a matter, before the Orders of the Day were called, which he, with his knowledge of parliamentary procedure, thought was not of sufficient importance. But I hope the hon. gentleman will not accuse me of doing the same when he has heard the subject I am bringing up. On the 26th of last month I asked the question in this House :

1. Is the Government aware that fourteen statutes, viz., chapters 39, 44, 46, 73, 79, 80, 81, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88 and 89 passed by the local legislature of British Columbia on the 27th February last, and received by the hon. the Secretary of State on the 27th April last, contain a clause prohibiting the employment of Chinese and Japanese in connection with the undertakings referred to in said statutes ?

2. What is the policy of the Government in regard to the disallowance or otherwise of said Acts ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The Government is aware that a number of statutes of British Columbia passed in the present year contain clauses prohibiting the employment of Chinese and Japanese. These statutes are now under the consideration of the Department of Justice, but no report has yet been made.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to impress upon the right hon. gentleman the necessity that exists for an early opinion on that question of disallowance. The uncertainty that is engendered by Acts being passed and left in suspense, neither allowed or disallowed by the Dominion, is of great consequence to a large number of employers of labour in British Columbia. The fact that under some of their charters they were not allowed to employ Japanese and Chinese, makes it impossible for them to get capital in the old country until this matter is settled. I should like the right hon. gentleman to get from the Minister of Justice as soon as possible his opinion, or the opinion of the Council of his own Government, as to the advisability of allowing or disallowing these Bills. I will say that I myself am strongly in favour of restricting this immigration of Japanese. Now, the Japanese are, I may say at the outset, very much superior to the Chinaman in many ways. They are better men to come into the country, if there is any better about it, because they are a superior class. They use more of our eastern goods, they dress more in our way, they assimilate with our people a great deal better than the Chinese. But the trouble is that they come into the country as paupers, if not as serfs and slaves, and they are willing to work for a mere pittance in competing with white workmen in all sorts of labour. Now, in my opinion, and in the opinion of seven-eighths, at least, of the people of British Columbia, that is a great menace to the welfare and the well-being of, at all events, the working classes in the Dominion of Canada. Of course, I am aware that the Imperial Government has seen fit to put its foot down on any restrictive measures, and I suppose their action precludes the possibility of excluding these Japanese. I am sorry myself to see that the Government were obliged to veto these Acts. I know, as good British subjects, as members of the British Empire, we should bow to the superior authority of Great Britain ; and I suppose that the Imperial authorities know what is best for the Empire in doing as they have done. But I must say that I sincerely hope that means will still be found whereby the tide of these men, a tide that is bound, I believe, to increase very largely and very rapidly with the means of communication we have across the Pacific—I say I hope means will still be found to keep that tide back. Not only do I believe that the workmen of the Dominion are menaced by this kind of immigration, but the manufacturers and merchants of this country are also menaced. The two Asiatic races across the Pacific, China, and especially Japan, have, in the last two or three years, awakened fully to the necessity there is for them to compete with the older countries ; and with their ability, for there is no doubt these men have ability, with the cheap wages, the starvation wages they are willing to work for, they will certainly become dreadful competitors of the white race on this continent, unless some means are taken to offset that competition.

But, Sir, there is another, and, to my mind, a still greater danger than from the Japanese, that is from the "yellow spectre," as it has been called, or the Chinese race, of which there are over 400,000,000 living across the Pacific from our coast. For years a cloud of them have been coming across to our country. They come here and take the places that, in my estimation, should be held by men of our own flesh and blood. Now, perhaps, the House is tired of hearing about this Chinese question.

Mr. GIBSON. Hear, hear.

Mr. PRIOR. I think hon. gentlemen who say "hear, hear," do not know as much about it as I do myself, or as other members who come from British Columbia.

An hon. MEMBER. We are tired of hearing it.

Mr. PRIOR. The fact that you are tired will not stop the British Columbia members from bringing this matter up year after year.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. You were not so active when you were in the Government.

Mr. PRIOR. I beg your pardon. If the hon. gentleman will look up "Hansard" he will find that I have spoken exactly as I am going to speak now, not, perhaps, in the same words, but to the same intent, when our party was on the other side of the House, and as I have spoken on every hustings in British Columbia where I have spoken at all. Now, Sir, this subject has been before the House for at least twenty-five years. It has been brought up by every member of Parliament that British Columbia has sent to represent her in this House. Mr. DeCosmos, Mr. Roscoe, Mr. Bunster, Mr. Gordon, Mr. Shakespeare, Mr. Baker—every one of us have got up in this House and given utterance to the same opinions that I am going to express to-day. In 1878, Mr. Bunster, the hon. member for Nanaimo, caused some amusement by moving a resolution in this House, which I will read, as I dare say there are many members of the House who have never heard it. It was on March 18th, 1878 :

That the Government insert a clause in each and every contract let for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, that no man wearing his hair longer than five and one-half inches shall be deemed eligible for employment on said work, and that no person wearing his hair longer shall be eligible to any contract on said railroad, either by the engineers, employees, or any other person or persons so engaged on the said railroad, under penalty for the first offence of $100, and not to exceed $1,000 for the second offence, or imprisonment for the first offence for three months, and not more than twelve months for the second offence.

Well, Sir, the hon. gentleman did that because, I know, he was sincere in the wish to keep out the Chinese from British Columbia. It caused also a little amusement in this House when Mr. Mackenzie, in answering the hon. mover of that resolution, called attention to the fact that the mover of the resolution, and also the hon. member for Cariboo, would both be precluded, he thought, from taking contracts on the railroad, because their hair was not cut in the shortest fashion. But, seriously, this subject of Chinese and Japanese immigration is one that overshadows all other subjects that can be brought before Parliament, so far as the people of British Columbia are concerned. It affects mostly, of course, the poor labouring men, also the miners. I will not say of them, as it has been said about the Indians, that the only good Indian is a dead Indian, but it almost applies to the Chinese race. There are, I must say, some good, honest, clean Chinamen, well educated, smart business men, and money makers, but they are few in number. It is not of these that I speak to-day, but it is of the labourers, the men who are nothing more than serfs and slaves, who are brought over in droves, owned by Chinese firms, let out to contractors at certain sums of money, of the value of which they have no idea and never see a penny of it. I am aware that a large number of people in British Columbia employ Chinese servants, myself amongst the number. I employ a Chinaman as a cook, and it has been said: If you object to Chinese so much, why do you employ them? The fact of the matter is that it is impossible to get anything else in British Columbia.

Mr. GIBSON. Do you do your own cooking?

Mr. PRIOR. If the hon. gentleman wants to ask me a question, I will be very glad to answer it.

Mr. COWAN. You look as if you fared pretty well by that cook.

Mr. PRIOR.

Mr. PRIOR. Yes, I think I do as I do everywhere. The servant girl question of British Columbia is such that it is impossible to get white girls. As the Victoria "Times" pointed out a few weeks ago, in an editorial, it is necessary that we should try and get some society in England, or elsewhere, to send out girls to Canada and to the Pacific coast particularly, to go into domestic service in houses. There seems to be an idea amongst girls that it is far better to go into millinery shops and factories than into household service.

Mr. TALBOT. It is the same all over Canada.

Mr. PRIOR. I believe it is the same all over Canada, and that is the trouble that has to be met. If there were sufficient girls to perform household service very few people in British Columbia would employ Chinese. But the summing up of the trouble is that these Chinamen are a lower class of human beings than white people are. They are able to live in a manner such as no white man can, and the wages that they would accept would be such as would really mean starvation for the white man. Senator Jones, of Nevada, once gave a reason why the white man could not compete with the Chinaman, and he did it in so succinct a manner that I will read what he said to the House. He said that he had been talking to a labourer, and this labourer had spoken to him as follows:—

"While my work is very arduous," says the labourer, "I go to it with a light heart and perform it cheerfully, because it enables me to support my wife and children. I am in a position to bring up my daughters to be good wives and faithful mothers, and to offer my sons better opportunities in life than I had myself. I cheerfully support the churches, charitable institutions and other objects that enter into our daily life; but, after I have maintained my family and performed these duties, not much is left of my wages when the week is ended.

"How is it with the Chinaman? The Chinaman can do as much work underground as I can. He has no wife and family. He performs none of these duties. Forty or fifty of his kind can live in a house no larger than mine. He craves no variety of food. He has inherited no taste for comfort or for social enjoyment. Conditions that satisfy and make him contented would make my life not worth living."

That is exactly the pith of the matter. It is impossible for white men to compete with Chinamen at the wages that the Chinamen are willing to work for. These Chinamen are now beginning to learn trades. We have them working in British Columbia as carpenters, building houses, making shoes, making clothes, and in fact, entering into every industry almost that you can find. They are very apt scholars; they are very imitative and industrious, but they have no wives and there are no children. All the women are of a certain class; you cannot call them wives—there may be children.

The Chinamen sends every cent he makes and saves to China. Anything that he spends in British Columbia is for Chinese goods imported by Chinese merchants. I clipped from a paper, a few days ago, a little interview with the Inspector of the Merchants' Bank, of Halifax, who had been out on the coast. It says:

CHINESE BUSINESS.

The inspector here displayed a fly-sheet covered with Chinese characters, indicating the steps that the Vancouver banks take to secure the business of the industrious Celestial. Every sailing day of the "Empresses," streams of Chinese are seen going from bank to bank to get the best rates for a draft on Hong Kong. Many of these people have good deposits; but as soon as their savings amount to $1,000 or upwards they get a draft, and off goes the hard-earned Canadian money to China.

Perhaps some hon. gentlemen say: If these Chinamen are hardworking and industrious people you ought to allow them to come into the country. Men who make money in the country and do not spend one cent of it here are a detriment to the country. They never assimilate with the white people. A woman has to descend very low before she would think of marrying a Chinaman. Not only this, but the Chinese despise us. Although we think that they are a lower class of human beings they think themselves that they belong to a higher civilization; they despise us and they are becoming more and more disposed to break our laws. I do not think that anything can be done to keep these people out of the country unless it is by legislation passed by Parliament. It is the belief of nearly everybody in British Columbia that the only way to keep them out is to pass some strict legislation which would prevent them from coming across. I believe that the best way to do is to materially raise the head tax that is now placed upon them. I would urge on the Government, as I believe it has been urged by other British Columbia members, and will still be urged if it is not done, that they increase very materially the head tax as has been done in Australia.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). The expression of opinion which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior) is giving, I presume, refers only to the Chinese?

Mr. PRIOR. That is what I intended to refer to.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Speaking of the capitation tax?

Mr. PRIOR. Yes, to the Chinese. I would ask the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) whether he cannot, before many days are over, tell us what the policy of the Government is in regard to this? I understood the right hon. gentleman to say, if I am not very much mistaken, that in a little time he would tell us what is his policy in regard to this question, and if there is still time I would like to urge upon him that, if the Government have decided not to raise it, to reconsider the decision and raise the tax which is the only way to keep these Chinese out. The point that employers of labour cannot get cheap labour enough to compete is, I think, not well taken because there are now enough Chinamen in British Columbia to do all the work, that only they themselves can do. I think that these men who are in British Columbia should be properly treated, but there are enough there now and others should be stopped from coming. I find by looking at "Hansard" of the session of 1882, what the late Right Hon. Sir John Macdonald thought about these people. He said, when the matter of Chinese immigration was brought up by Mr. DeCosmos:

The Chinese bring no women to British Columbia with them, and are not likely, therefore, to be permanent settlers.

We know they do not bring in women. Still, the Chinese are there, and they are taking the place of white people, and this just shows that a very clever gentleman, such as that hon. gentleman (Sir John Macdonald) was, is not always right in his prophecies. He said:

Whenever a practical difficulty arises, it is quite in the hands of the legislature to deal with it in the manner in which it has been dealt with, after a great many years' experience, in the United States, and as it has been dealt with in the Australian provinces. At present every white man can be employed in British Columbia at good wages.

That is what has been done. The local legislature has seen fit to insert a number of anti-Chinese and anti-Japanese clauses in several Acts, but as we know, these have been disallowed. The right hon. gentleman, Sir John A. Macdonald, further on in the same speech, in order to show that he did not believe in Chinese labour, except to build a railway and then get rid of them, said:

If the temporary necessity had been overcome, and the railway constructed across the continent, with the means of sending the European settlers of labourers in British Columbia, then it would be quite right to join to a reasonable extent in preventing the permanent settlement in this country of Mongolian, Chinese or Japanese immigrants.

Although Sir John Macdonald wanted to allow them to be employed on the railway because they were not able to get enough white people in British Columbia to build the road, he held that as soon as that was done they should not have any permanent occupation in the country, and should be got rid of. Mr. Rochester, another gentleman, spoke on the question, and he said:

I do not know what the difficulty is with regard to Chinese labour in British Columbia, but I do know the people of Ontario would be glad if they had Chinese or other labour.

The opinion given expression to by Mr. Rochester then, is not, I believe, the opinion of the people of Ontario to-day, if we are to judge by the numerous petitions which have been presented to this House by trades and labour unions and other associations in Ontario, in regard to this Chinese question. The Hon. Alexander Mackenzie speaking, in 1878, in regard to the resolution of Mr. Bunker, said :

He hoped the hon. gentleman did not really expect such a resolution to obtain any support in the House. It was one unprecedented in its character, and altogether unprecedented in its spirit, and at variance with those tolerant laws which afforded employment and an asylum to all who came into our country, irrespective of colour, hair or anything else.

Now, Sir, I do not wish to say that we should not afford an asylum to people in distress, but I do say that our first duty is to ourselves and to our children. I do not think we are doing our duty to our own people if we allow the Chinese and Japanese to come in and compete with Canadian labourers. There is no excuse for seeking such cheap labour now, when we have seen recently that good, honest able-bodied Canadians can be got to work for 98 cents a day, as railway trackmen. I do not think any one in Canada should wish for cheaper labour than that. It has been argued also that labouring men cannot be adverse to Chinese as they employ them themselves, but if a man takes a contract and cheap labour is close at hand, and he can get men to work for 75 cents or $1 a day, it is only human nature that 99 men out of a hundred should avail themselves of that, and, therefore, the only way to do justice to the ordinary labourer is to keep these cheap workers out of the country. I believe that the Chinese are like a malignant cancer eating in the very vitals of the workingmen of Canada, but with this difference : that while up to the present time, no cure is known for cancer in the human frame, there is a cure for this Chinese cancer, and that is by the Government providing a sufficient poll-tax to keep them out of the country. Let me say that it is not only British Columbia that is interested in this matter. The gentlemen sitting in this House from all parts of Canada should take an interest in the question, because as sure as fate the Chinese will spread over the face of this country. We see the advance guard in Toronto, Montreal, and other cities, setting up their wash houses, and as to them not being civilized, why it was only yesterday I saw a Chinaman careening down Rideau Street on a bicycle.

Mr. DAVIS. He must have bought the bicycle.

Mr. PRIOR. He may have stolen it for all I know. I believe that if the Chinese and Japanese are not stopped somehow, they will ultimately swamp the artisans and workingmen of Canada. Let me therefore impress upon the Government the urgent necessity that exists for immediate restrictive legislation, and I can tell the Government also that unless they take some action this Chinese question will be brought up in Parliament year after year by all the British Columbia members. There is another class of emigrants coming to Canada at present, which I believe is as great a menace to our well-being and prosperity as are the Chinamen and Japanese. The worst of it is, that these men are not coming in solely of their own accord, but they are coming in with the assistance of the Government of the day. I refer to the Galicians and the Doukhobors.

Mr. PRIOR.

Mr. DAVIS. He never saw a Doukhobor in his life.

Mr. PRIOR. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) is just a little too previous. I was going to say that I have never been in company with either a Galician or a Doukhobor that I know of, but I have heard a great deal about them from men who live amongst them and from men who have lived with them in Russia, and who can speak their language. It is not my intention to do an injustice to any man be he ever so poor or humble, but I must believe my own senses and the opinions of my friends who know these people intimately. The hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) thought he would make a point by saying that I had never seen a Doukhobor. Well, I believe his colleague the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) has hundreds of them living near him, and I am sure he will endorse everything that I say this afternoon. Some of the information I have obtained is from a gentleman known in the Press Gallery, Capt. Clyde Phillips Wolley, a gentleman who has lived in Russia for many years, who has been amongst the Galicians and Doukhobors, who can speak their language and has written about them many times. Capt. Wolley is a gentleman well known in the literary world, one of the most patriotic writers we have in the British Empire to-day, and we can rely upon what he says of these people. I have information from others on this matter as well as from Capt. Wolley. Now, Sir, I presume that the aim of this Government is, as it ought to be the aim of every man who has the welfare of Canada at heart, to see Canada populated with the best, and the bravest, and the most intelligent people that can be got under the sun. From the very beginning of the colonization of Canada she has been peopled by a brave and intelligent race. The first settlers, the French Canadians, opened up our country under the greatest dangers and the greatest difficulties, and they are still willing to go to the uttermost part of the earth for the sake of the Empire. The French Canadians have shown the greatest loyalty and fealty to the British Crown, and let me ask the Government, why cannot we have more of the French people in this country instead of bringing in these Galicians and Doukhobors. I see in a paper to-day that some one—I forget the name—asks why should not France colonize in Canada as well as anywhere else. We would be glad to see some of those French colonists amongst us, rather than many who are coming at present. The aim should be to people Canada with those who have the courage and the wish to build up the British Empire and perpetuate British institutions. We want men who have been brought up to respect and obey the laws in their own country, so that they will respect and obey the laws in Canada; and we also want people with whom our young folks can associate and assimilate. Do we find these qualities in the Galicians and Doukhobors? In my opinion, both of these races are very far indeed from coming within that category. They are physically strong, I believe; but is that all that is expected of them? We want a little more than that. We heard from the hon. member for St. Antoine, Montreal (Mr. Roddick) the other day, that they were more liable to tuberculosis than almost any other race of people he knew. If I understood him aright, he said that something like 10 per cent of them suffered from tuberculosis in their own country. As for physical strength, we know that some of the lowest types of humanity are physically strong.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). That is not an argument against these people.

Mr. PRIOR. The hon. gentleman says that is not an argument against them; but if the only thing the Government looks to is to get people who are physically strong, I think they ought to look for a little something else as well. Let us see what the newspapers published in the district to which these people have been brought, say about them. At the late session of the Edmonton district meeting of the Methodist Church, composed of all ministers and preachers of that denomination resident within its bounds, together with an equal number of laymen, the following was adopted and ordered to be forwarded as a memorial to the Manitoba and North-west Conference of the Methodist Church, now sitting in Winnipeg. This is the resolution:

That in the opinion of the district of Edmonton, the immigration of such a foreign element as represented by the Galicians is to be deplored. They are by no means a desirable class of settlers, and, coming in such numbers, they threaten our social, political and religious interests. We feel this the more strongly on account of the rapid development of the country by a much more desirable class; and be it resolved that Conference be memorialized to bring this matter before the Government as a strong protest against such immigration.

erintendent of North-west Missions, in recent utterances in his travels through Ontario. I may say that at the meeting at which that resolution was passed, there was present a gentleman who was a strong partisan of the present Government, and who tried to have it laid on the Table for six months; but he was overruled, and the memorial was sent forward. We find also the following letter in the Neepawa "Press," a Liberal paper:—

The Galicians are being put on the lists whether they are qualified to be there or not. It must be a pleasant reflection for those British and Canadian-born citizens who, by the Greenway registration clerks, have been disfranchised by wholesale, and prevented from exercising their natural right of having a voice in the government of their country, to find the right of which they are deprived being widely and illegally accorded to these ignorant aliens. It must be almost equally galling to those free and independent subjects of native birth who have succeeded in getting on the lists, to find that their votes can be cancelled by the wholesale stuffing of the lists with these unqualified foreigners, who, besides owing allegiance to a foreign state, know nothing of the constitution and laws of this country, and will record their votes at the dictation of the officials of the Administration by whom they have been imported and fed, and from whom they are securing special privileges which are denied to Britons and Canadians.

According to that, the people in that country seem to feel that there is a danger of having these men put on the lists without knowing anything of our constitution or laws. At election time they might be able to carry anything they wished for people who would fulfil their desires. A paper called the "West," of Regina, of the 15th of June, said:

Surely the Government has received enough evidence to demonstrate that the immigration policy now being pursued is a very objectionable one to the people of the North-west. If enough evidence has not been submitted to convince them, then we must despair of ever succeeding, because it would be almost impossible to have greater unanimity than that presented by the North-west in its opposition to the Galician and Doukhobor immigration. The Liberals in the North-west—that is, all except paid servants and that portion of the press which is Liberal because there is money in it—are as strongly opposed to this wholesale foreign importation as are the Conservatives. It is almost impossible to find a rank-and-file Liberal who does not condemn the Government for what they are doing. Even Liberal M.P.'s speak strongly against the policy. The Methodists of Northern Alberta are the latest to condemn Sifton's methods. The resolutions they passed were very pointed, and lacked entirely any partisan flavour. It was a pure condemnation of the course being pursued by the Government, because that course they considered wrong. On the head of this comes word that people in Saskatchewan are petitioning the Government to remove the Galicians from there because they are a curse to that district, and are retarding the progress of the English-speaking settlements. Everywhere it is the same thing. The English-speaking people have become alarmed, and well they might. They see the greatest danger to the future welfare of the state, and have protested, and are persisting in their protests; in fact, instead of subsiding with acquaintance, the opposition to these people seems to be increasing the more we see and know of them.

Now, Sir, I turn to a paper published, I believe, by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver), a gentleman who supports the present Government in almost everything, but certainly not in regard to this class of immigration. On the contrary, he has been a consistent opponent of it, and, living, as he does, amongst those people, he knows whereof he speaks. On February 2nd I find in his paper a letter signed "Saxon," which reads as follows:—

Sir,—Northern Alberta certainly cannot be congratulated upon last year's immigration statistics. So large a proportion of Galicians and others who know nothing of the blessings of free institutions like ours, may one day constitute a serious menace to society. In the rebound from the state of semi-serfdom, in which they have always lived, liberty is apt to degenerate into license. If our population is to maintain its high standard of Anglo-Saxon civilization, with all that it implies in case of law and order, and capacity for self-government, it is absolutely necessary we should have a larger immigration from the United Kingdom.

On the 30th of March, I find also an editorial, under the head of "Immigration," which says:

The "Bulletin" has from time to time attempted to put the case of the citizen settler forward. Mr. Oliver has done the same in the House of Commons and elsewhere, and because he has done so the western newspaper organ of eastern monopoly, masquerading in the guise of Liberalism, attacks him in season and out of season, whether he supports or opposes the Government of which it has constituted itself the special champion.

The flooding of western Canada with people who are not used to the duties of citizenship is a serious question for the west and for all Canada. It is said that these strange peoples will assimilate with the English-speaking settlers, possibly, to some extent and at great length of time. But the work of their assimilation is that much of a drag and burden upon those with whom they are expected to assimilate. They have withstood assimilation in the country from which they come for many generations. What reason have we to expect their ready assimilation here, when settled in bodies large enough to insure all the machinery for the perpetuation of their whole system? This is a question concerning the very life of the nation—the very foundation of its life; and it is with an appreciation of its importance from every point of view that the "Bulletin" has hitherto dealt with it, and proposes to continue so to do.

Mr. CLARKE. To what does that refer?

Mr. PRIOR. It refers to the Galicians and the Doukhobors who are settled in the neighbourhood of Edmonton. Then, on the 8th of June, another article, headed "Immigration," appears. It is rather long, but I shall read it to the House, because I think it is very important. It is as follows:—

Mr. PRIOR.

Readers of the "Bulletin" will remember that from time to time this paper has felt it to be its duty to call attention to the undesirable as well as the desirable feature of the immigration policy of the Government, as viewed from the standpoint of this district and the settlers in it. For doing this it was fiercely attacked by alleged Government newspaper organs, and discredited as far as possible by Government officials' reports. But what the "Bulletin" saw clearly a year ago, because of its opportunities of close observation, which others at a distance did not see, and therefore did not believe, now that the immigration objected to has become large enough to attract their notice, is seen by them to be exactly as stated by the "Bulletin," much as they evidently dislike to acknowledge it. The fact that some two or three thousand Galicians had started from Hamburg to Canada, and that there were 50,000 more to follow, was of such importance that it could not be ignored.

It has, therefore, been dealt with by some of the party organs in a very gingerly way. The Toronto "Globe" and Montreal "Witness" may be particularly mentioned. The "Globe" says:

"The arrival of Galician and Doukhobor immigrants in considerable numbers in this country has given rise to some discussion as to whether we are in danger of experiencing some of the troubles from which our neighbours have suffered in the attempt to assimilate foreign populations. In some cases in the United States the objection has been made to the low standard of living among the incoming foreigners, the lack of that desire for improvements and comforts and refinement, which is one of the great civilizing forces. If, it is argued, a large number of people are content to live in squalor and ignorance, they tend to lower the standard of the whole population, especially by depressing the rates of wages in various occupations. If, it is objected, that some of the arrivals are not likely to make good citizens, but they form colonies, cling to their language and habits, and in some cases, return to their own country as soon as they have scraped a little money together. It is said in a recent work on city government in the United States that the naturalization of foreigners for immediate use as voters has been a source of great political corruption in the cities. * * * There is, however, no doubt of the wisdom of being careful in the selection of immigrants, and of taking every means of assimilating them with the rest of the population, and making them good citizens. The question of the period at which they should be allowed to exercise the franchise is one for careful consideration. To confer the franchise upon them before they understand the institutions of the country would be to inflict an injury upon them and upon the community at large."

It is only fair to the "Globe" to say that having delivered itself of this much truth, it proceeds to live up to its record by saying that the objections at first recited only apply to immigrants who settle in cities, and that the present naturalization laws, requiring three years' residence before voting, are a sufficient protection to the public interest.

The Montreal "Witness," being more honest than the "Globe," is more outspoken. It heads its article "The Hordes of Europe," and says:

"Talk of foreign missions! Canada seems likely before a year more is gone by to have upon her own domain a foreign mission work a hundred-fold greater than any she has ever done, in the task of Canadianizing the masses of continentals now being poured on her shores at a rate that must sensibly affect the abundance of her public domain and very seriously influence her future. We should give thanks to God that now that this long-impending flood has broken loose it has come in so mitigated a form. * * * But those who are coming are not all either Doukhobors or Finns, and there is every reason to expect, possibly to dread, a wholesale migration of the semi-civilized peasantries of Poland, Hungary and Russia. * * * The various railways are prepared to handle the traffic, and will convey these people to the west, where, if permitted, they will settle together in large communities. It is of the utmost importance that this last should not occur, as only those who have travelled in the country they come from can tell what it would mean to have a new Galicia in Canada. A railway management, whose talk is being rapidly appreciated by the profits of this traffic, and still more by the increased value it gives to railway lands in the North-west, looks, of course, with the most cheerful optimism of this movement, and assures us that the conditions of life in America will in time turn these people into citizens like ourselves."

That shows that even the papers supporting the present Government see a danger in this tide of immigration which is being induced to flow into this country. I am told by men whom I can trust that these people are wanting in all the principles of loyalty, patriotism, cleanliness—in fact, all the principles that go to fit them for good citizenship. I would ask, have they ever been trained so that we can expect them to accept our laws and usages? Were their ancestors law-abiding people? Have they been loyal to their own king and country? I am afraid that no one can say that they have. Have they been willing to fight for their country and religion? I am told that these Doukhobors maintain, as a principle of their religion, that they will not fight under any consideration, and I am also told, whether true or not—and if not true I know that I shall be set right by hon. gentlemen opposite—that before these men could be induced to come in, the Government had to pass an Order in Council exempting them from military duty. If that was done, it is a disgrace to the Parliament of Canada. I will not say so much of the Doukhobors, but the Galicians live under circumstances that, I think, can hardly be found to exist even among the Chinese. Their manners—so I am told by men who lived close to them for some time—are very little removed from the habits of animals. Again, the Doukhobors have religious scruples against bearing children. They neither bear arms nor children. That is considered to be the highest virtue they can have. They have no idea of what we consider the decencies of home life. The other day, there was an account in the press of one of them in Winnipeg selling his wife to another and thinking nothing of it, not having the slightest notion that it was wrong at all. Then, there have been several brutal murders committed by these Galicians under the most revolting circumstances. Only the other day I read that a woman was tied up by the hands and feet and almost beaten to death by her husband. I am aware that brutal assaults are sometimes made by white people, but these are exceedingly brutal. These people have never shown themselves in their native country, Russia, to be thrifty and able to make a good living on the lands on which they were established. The lands on which many of them who have come here were settled, are, I am told, even finer than the lands in the North-west Territories, and the climate as good, if not better. Yet with all these advantages, they have been found going off to the cities and turning out anything but desirable citizens. That is my information, whether true or not, but, no doubt, the hon. Minister of the Interior will be able to inform us on this point, as he must have secured a great deal of information concerning them before he allowed them to come into the country. How can we expect Canadians to welcome these people? We have nothing in common with them. They cannot assimilate with us in any way, and the settlers around them say they do not wish their young people to have any communication with them whatever. Are such people likely to make good citizens and contribute to building up the British Empire? If it be true that they will not fight, are they men who, if the time should ever come, as I hope it will not, would be willing to go forth as citizen soldiers and face the enemies of the Empire, as every Anglo-Saxon will be found to do, should the occasion arise. I do not think it is good policy for this Government to fill up the country with these people, simply for the sake of developing it. It would be far better to be less in a hurry, and restrict the influx of indifferent classes of immigration. It would be better in the long run to adopt such a policy than bring in people of a kind detrimental to the welfare of the country at large. I do not think that the Government is doing its duty in bringing in such people. I do not think it is right for them to pay $5 a head for men and women of this description, and only pay $1.75 per head for immigrants from the British Isles? The United States has had a good deal of experience in this class of immigration, and I think any man who is well posted on that subject in the neighbouring republic will say, that they want no more of them, because they are a menace to their institutions at present. The Chinese, to my mind, are bad enough, and they should be taxed, as I said before; but I do not think they are one bit worse than the Galicians who are going into the North-west to-day. It is all very well for the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) to point with pride to the large number of immigrants he has brought in since he took office and to the way he is filling up the North-west and Manitoba. It is all very well for the large railway companies and steamboat companies that carry these people and make so much out of them, to wish to see them come into this country. But I do not think that the Canadian farmers and artisans will look upon it with the same eyes. This immigration is bound, in time, and with the large number of these people brought into this country, to lower the tone of Canadians who are brought into contact with them. We are to-day educating our young people in a way that our fathers and grandfathers would never have dreamed of; we are giving every boy and girl, whether his or her parents can afford to pay for it or not, a school training which carries education to a high standard. Now, the education given to these young people will not allow them to live on next to nothing, to live in the way these immigrants are living. We are endeavouring to elevate the standard of living, so, I say, do not let us lower it by bringing to our country men who will work for 25 or 50 cents a day and think they are well off. In the cities of the United States there are large numbers of Poles, Hungarians and others of the same class as these, who are living under the most wretched conditions. You hear of these in all the commissions appointed to look into the sweating system—poor wretched people, living in cellars, working for a pittance barely sufficient to keep their wretched hearts beating. They have no pleasure, no hope, nothing to look forward to. I ask if we want this sort of immigration to compete with our own people. If the Government does not hold its hand and stop this class of immigrants now coming in, I think the end will be disastrous to the prosperity of the North-west and Manitoba, at all events. The Galicians and Doukhobors, we learn by these papers, extracts of which I have read, are allowed to live in communities. If they do that, they are bound to perpetuate their religion and their habits—and I must say that some of those habits are very filthy—and will not, in any reasonable length of time, assimilate with the rest of the population. If these people must be brought in, for heaven's sake, let us have them distributed here and there so that they may learn in a short time a different way of living. Another thing that will be found, I think, is that these people will gradually drift into the cities, competing with the men there and lowering the wage of the artisans and labourers. I am glad to say that in British Columbia we see our good Canadian Anglo-Saxons, generally, in very prosperous circumstances—men with nice homes for themselves and their families, well dressed and with a little money in their pockets. But if this tide of Chinese, Japanese, Galician, Doukhobors and others of the kind are allowed to come into the country, how long will this state of affairs last?

I have very little more to say on this subject. I have put the matter forward in as good a light as I possibly could. I think that if the Government have money enough to spend on bringing immigrants into this country—and I believe they should assist immigrants—let them pay $5 a head or $10 a head to good Anglo-Saxon men and women. Let them bring immigrants from the old sod. There must be plenty of them to be got if a little inducement is held out to them. For they have congested districts over there, and from those congested districts the people are going into the States, going into Africa, going all over the world, except, as we are told, to Canada. Surely the Government can help them. But if the Government wish to pay $1.75 a head to somebody, let them get good Swedes and Norwegians, who make good settlers, as I know. But for heaven's sake, let us have no more Galicians and Doukhobors. Why not assist some of the young men in the eastern provinces to move west. There must be many young men who find but limited chances on their fathers' farms in Quebec and Ontario and the maritime provinces, and who are now drifting to the United States. Surely, if the Government will assist them with money and with land to start farming in the North-west, you could get the North-west filled up with this class instead of with Galicians. If the Government would pursue that policy, in a few years they would find that Canada, instead of being overrun with a horde of foreigners will have a population of our own flesh and blood and will be a happy, contented, prosperous country, the envy of the civilized world. Mr. Speaker, I move that this House do now adjourn.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, if I were to follow my own inclinations at this moment, I would simply agree to this motion for adjournment and let the House adjourn and everybody go to his business. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior) has committed nothing less, though he deprecated it at the outset, than another unwarranted abuse of the privileges of this House. He has taken advantage of the present opportunity to make an appeal to some of the worst passions that may be in our population, an appeal which, however, I am sure, will not be responded to. But, not only is it a breach of the well-known rule of the House that a motion to adjourn, at this stage, should not be made except for an urgent matter of public business—

Mr. PRIOR. I say it is urgent.

The PRIME MINISTER. There can be no urgency in a question that has been before the country for twenty-five years and more. We are in the fourth month of the session. The hon. gentleman has had opportunity after opportunity, when the House was moved into Committee of Supply, to bring forward the matter which he has now called to the attention of the House. He has refrained, for reasons of his own, from doing so. And now, when another order of public business has been agreed upon between the two sides, he brings this question forward. It is not only a breach of the privileges of the House, but a breach of faith on the part of the hon. gentleman. Yesterday, before we adjourned, my hon. friend from South Lanark (Mr. Haggart), who acted in the absence of the leader of the Opposition, asked me what would be the order of business for to-day, and I told him we would take up again the Redistribution Bill. Now, there was an implied agreement between the two sides of the House that this business should be gone on with to-day. And, though that was understood, and everybody had made his preparations accordingly, the hon. gentleman springs upon us a question in which there is not the slightest urgency, which was brought before the House by my hon. friend from Burrard (Mr. Maxwell) several weeks ago in the shape of a Bill. But, in order to gain some kudos for himself, my hon. friend (Mr. Prior) brings this motion forward and gives his views not only upon the Chinese and Japanese questions, but upon the Doukhobors and Galicians as well. I say this is abuse of the privileges of the House. I put it to hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House that there must be some respect for word pledged between one side and the other, and when the Government is asked what business it will bring before the House announces that it will bring forward certain business, if any hon. gentleman intends to bring forward other business, he should give notice of it, so that we may—

Mr. PRIOR. I did give notice of it to one of the hon. gentleman's Ministers.

The PRIME MINISTER. Perhaps the hon. gentleman gave notice to one of the Ministers, but it was not brought up, at all events.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). I may explain that my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Prior) sent me a note some days ago—I think it was on Tuesday—that he would bring this question up. I am bound to say that I was aware that he was going to bring it up at the first available opportunity.

Mr. PRIOR. I said I would bring it up on the Orders of the Day.

The PRIME MINISTER. It is always within the right of any member of this House, when the House is moved into Committee of Supply, to bring up any grievance which he chooses. That is the constitutional rule, and, if that rule is obeyed, we have nothing to say. When we announce to the House that we shall move it into Committee of Supply the following day, we are prepared then to meet every motion which is brought up, and to discuss every grievance that may be brought up. But to move the adjournment of the House every day, as has been done, I think is interfering altogether too much with the business of the House, and I appeal to the good sense of the members of this House to discourage that practice, and to follow the true constitutional rule of ventilating grievances when the Government ask for Supply.

The hon. gentleman brings up this motion to-day upon the Orders of the Day being called, to discuss—what? A question of urgency? The question has been before the public, as he said himself, for twenty-five years or more. He has discussed once more the question of Chinese and Japanese immigration. Well, I have no intention at this time to discuss the Galician and Doukhobor immigration. My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), who has charge of that department, will deal with that question later on. But the hon. member has brought up the whole question of Chinese and Japanese immigration again before the House. I may say at once to my hon. friend that I sympathize largely with him, and I sympathize largely with the members from British Columbia in the attitude they have taken in regard to the undesirability of allowing a Mongolian immigration amongst us. It is a fact for which there must be some strong ethical reason that the Anglo-Saxon race, which has proved itself to be one of the most tolerant of all races that ever appeared on the earth, shows an invincible repugnance to people of the Mongolian races. We have seen this fact in Australia and in California, as well as in British Columbia; we find the same feeling exists in the Straits Settlement; we find it wherever the Mongolian race has penetrated. It might be easy to discover the cause of that feeling, though I do not care at this moment to go into that question. I simply recognize the fact that, though the English race is one of the most tolerant of all races on earth, and is always ready to open its doors, its institutions, its liberties, to all other races that come to its shores, whenever the Mongolian race presents itself, the English race immediately shows a strong repugnance. That is the fact, and though perhaps it is a sentiment to be deplored, still it exists, and we have to reckon with it. I say at once that it will not do for this Government, or for any Government, to ignore it; on the contrary, the Government is quite prepared to recognize it and to deal with it accordingly. The hon. gentleman is not the first who has brought this question to the attention of the Government. Long before this, the hon. member for Burrard (Mr. Maxwell) brought in a Bill to increase the head tax with which every Chinaman is met when he comes to our shore. It was found at the time that this Bill was unconstitutional, because it implied a money tax, legislation concerning which must originate from the Crown. The members from British Columbia who support the Government in this House, have interviewed myself and some of my colleagues repeatedly on this subject, and have asked us to increase the head tax from $50, as it is now, to $500. Well, to increase a tax of that kind, admitting the object to be very praiseworthy, is always a serious consideration. In fact, it is always a serious consideration when the government of any country has to impose a tax, not only on its own subjects, but on those of other nations who come to its shores. However, we took some time to look into the subject; we wanted to inform ourselves as to the other side of the question, because upon this, as upon all other questions, there are two sides. If we increased the tax to such a degree as to make it absolutely prohibitory of immigration, we had to inquire what the consequences would be. We know that we have done our best to establish a trade with China and Japan. Now, it may look a little inconsistent that whilst we have done our best to develop trade between Canada and China and Japan, by granting heavy subsidies to steamship companies, we should, on the other hand, adopt measures that will restrict that trade. But we have to look at the major fact, the dominant fact, that the people of British Columbia, as well as the people of all the other places I have named, belonging to the Anglo-Saxon race, have evinced the greatest repugnance to the Chinese and Japanese settling amongst them. I may say at once, without committing any breach of secrecy, that the Government will be prepared at an early date to inform the House as to what policy they will adopt upon this question. Further than this I will not say at present, but I will repeat, that we have given due consideration to the representations which have been made to us upon this subject by the members for British Columbia.

I may say, however, that in our treatment of this subject, the Government has made a distinction between Chinese immigration and Japanese immigration. Whilst we are prepared to deal with Chinese immigration in the way I have indicated, and to do our best to meet the views of the people of British Columbia, I am sorry to have to say that, so far as Japanese immigration is concerned, though it is the same in all its salient and important features, the question is governed by other considerations, considerations of Imperial policy, which must appeal to every gentleman of this House who is a British subject. As a part of the British Empire, we have duties to discharge to the Empire which we cannot ignore. Our attention was called last year to the legislation of British Columbia placing restrictions upon the employment of Chinese and Japanese labour. We appealed to the Government of British Columbia to revise their legislation in so far only as the Japanese were concerned; we were not at all disposed to interfere with that legislation in so far as Chinese labour was concerned. We also communicated with the Imperial authorities upon this subject, and we transferred to the Government of British Columbia the representations which had been made to us by the British authorities. The British Columbia authorities replied, giving us their reasons for not complying with the wishes of the Imperial authorities. Then, as the limit within which to disallow was drawing near, with the authority of the Council, I sent the following telegram to Mr. Semlin, Premier of British Columbia, on the 2nd of June last:

The Federal Government has only four days in which to disallow your Acts relating to Japanese as urged by Imperial Government, which fears prejudice to Imperial relations with Japan if Act referring to Japanese is allowed to go into effect. Have you any suggestion to make as to this legislation, so far as it relates to the Japanese? Immediate reply necessary.

On the following day, I received this answer from Mr. Semlin:

Telegram received. Regret that in justice to the interests of labour in British Columbia, can only refer you to minute of Council of February last, copy of which you have no doubt received.

In that minute of Council which the members of the House have in their hands, the British Columbia Government squarely refused to modify their legislation, not only with regard to Chinese, but with regard to the Japanese labour as well. Under those circumstances, we were in this position: either we had to let these Acts go into force and to sanction the restriction against Japanese labour, as well as against Chinese labour, or we were under the necessity of disallowing the Acts concerning both Japanese and Chinese labour. If it had been in our power to disallow only those Acts relating to Chinese labour, we would have done so, but it was not in our power. We had to take these acts as a whole, and, therefore, we were brought to the absolute necessity of disallowing them in toto. Now, I may say, if the British Columbia legislature were to re-enact these Acts, but separating the Chinese labourers from Japanese labourers and simply restraining Chinese labourers, we would not interfere with these Acts, but so long as the British Columbia legislature choose to restrain Chinese and Japanese labour together I must appeal to hon. gentlemen in this House to support the Imperial policy of not dealing harshly with Japanese subjects. Sir, as I said a moment ago, we are proud of our British Empire, and I would say to hon. gentlemen from British Columbia, however strongly they may feel upon this question, they must upon this occasion, allow their strong feeling against Japanese labourers to give way in favour of maintaining the policy of the Imperial Government in these matters. At the present time, as we know, the question of the Orient is one which may become very acute at any moment, and the moment the question becomes acute, Great Britain will be involved in these complications and she may be precipitated into war. If she is precipitated into war it is to her of the greatest and mightiest importance to have the support of the Empire of Japan. For these reasons, I hope the hon. gentleman who addressed the House a moment ago, upon the question of Japanese labour and upon the action of the Government, so far as we disallowed the Acts of the British Columbia legislature, will reconsider his determination, and will give his support in this matter to the Government which has acted in obedience to reasons of wide Imperial policy, and upon the conviction that we should do our best to maintain the alliance of Great Britain with the Empire of Japan. These are the reasons which actuated us. It is not a pleasant thing to have to come to this decision, but we thought we owed it to ourselves and our position as British subjects that every other consideration should give way before that reason of Imperial necessity. It will not do for us as British subjects only to sing "God Save the Queen" and to boast of our British connection at banquets and at demonstrations and celebrations. We must also be prepared to make some sacrifices because our obligations may claim sacrifices. I suppose I do not utter my own sentiment alone, but that I utter the sentiment of every hon. gentleman on this occasion, when I say, that we should be prepared and be ready for every sacrifice which our Imperial connection may demand at our hands. If we take the glory and the advantages we must also take the duties; we must be ready for them and abide by them. There are the reasons which have actuated the Government in relation to this question. There are other statutes which were passed by the legislature of British Columbia last session. In reply to the hon. gentleman some few days ago, I stated that these statutes had been submitted to the hon. Minister of Justice who is reporting upon them. He is considering whether or not they are legal and constitutional, and if they are legal and constitutional he has to report to the Government and the Government will have to consider whether the same reasons of Imperial policy are involved. The duty which may be incumbent upon us as to these statutes we must discharge in the light of the considerations that actuated us in dealing with the statutes passed by the British Columbia legislature the session before last. With the other question raised by my hon. friend, as to Galician and Doukhobor immigration, I shall not attempt at this moment to deal. I will leave it to my hon. colleague, the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), but I must deprecate the tone of the remarks of the hon. gentleman upon this subject. We cannot in this, our Canada, allow this policy of the dog-in-the-manger to prevail. We have lands in the North-west, what do we want to do with them? Of course we must have desirable immigrants. As to the Galicians I know nothing, but as to the Doukhobors I know a little, not that I know them personally, but all accounts agree that they are a noble race. Let me call the attention of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior) to this fact, and I think it ought be sufficient to make him recall his remarks with regard to Doukhobors. They belong to the Caucasian race; they do not belong to the Galician race. They are very peculiar in their habits; they will not fight, but I am sorry to have heard the remarks of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior) on this subject. The Doukhobors will not bear arms, it is true, but has it ever come into the mind of a British subject, in any part of the British Empire, to ostracize the Quakers or people of similar religious thought, because they will not bear arms? Why, Sir, some of these Quakers are amongst the best men that the British Empire has ever known. In conclusion let me say that, for my part, I am not prepared to favour the immigration of these Mongolian races which do not assimilate with us, but as to the Caucasian races and European races—not all of them, but all those who readily assimilate with us—it is our duty to open our doors to them and follow the example of the mother country in that respect.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). The reference which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior) has made to immigration outside of the Chinese and Japanese, makes it desirable that I should say a few words. The House will be in committee upon the immigration estimates in a short while, when every possible information will be given to the members of this House, and they will necessarily be in a much better position to discuss intelligently the subject than it is possible for them to do at the present time. To a very considerable extent I sympathize with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior) in regard to the Chinese and Japanese. The same views have been expressed in this House by the hon. member for Burrard (Mr. Maxwell), and these views have been pressed very strongly upon the Government by the different members from British Columbia. As I understand it, this is largely a question in British Columbia between the white labouring man and the Chinese and Japanese; and, as in most cases where the labouring man comes in contact with a competitor who deals with him unfairly, I am bound to say that my sympathies are altogether with the Canadian labouring man. I feel that the labouring man of British Columbia has a right to protect himself against this unhealthy rivalry; a rivalry which does not tend to develop the highest type of citizens. It was with very great regret that I joined my colleagues in the conclusion that we were bound to disallow these Acts, for the reasons which have been stated so well by the First Minister. I am not without very strong hope that means may be found to take effectual measures for the purpose of protecting the labouring men of British Columbia from the competition to which they are subject, and the danger they are in of being reduced in their style of living. It is a question, as the hon. gentleman said, which did not only affect British Columbia, but affects the labouring men all over the Dominion—although I do not share the belief that the Mongolian race will spread very much from the Pacific coast. I am not, however, surprised to know that the labouring men of the eastern cities have in a very emphatic way in some instances expressed their sympathies with the labouring men of the Pacific coast.

Now, as to the other question. The familiarity of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior) with the Chinese and Japanese question, has enabled him to deal with it in a manner which entitles his opinion to the respect of the House; but he is apparently not so fully acquainted with the question of immigration into the North-west Territories. I desire to correct the evident misapprehension he labours under in regard to the attitude of the Government as to foreign immigration. If we believe what appears in the newspapers, or, indeed, if what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior) said were correct, one would think that the attitude of the Government upon this question was that of encouraging foreign immigration and discouraging immigration from the British Isles and the United States, from which we might naturally expect to get immigrants of British lineage. That is an entire mistake. As to the question of the bonus, I shall refer to it later on, but I would point out to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior) that the change which he suggests would make no difference at all in the actual results. It is necessary to know somewhat of the history of the immigration question to understand what the particular effect of any particularly suggested course would be. During the last year, we received from ocean ports, 11,608 English, Irish and Scotch immigrants, and we received from the United States 9,119—I am speaking now of agricultural settlers who actually settled in the North-west. With reference to the United States immigrants, it is impossible to say that all of them were of British lineage, but, of course, with slight exceptions they would be. We, therefore, received last year 20,727 immigrants of British lineage, and the total number of Gallician immigrants last year was 2,509. Therefore, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior) will see that the supposed preponderance of Gallician immigrants over British immigrants is an entire mistake. Of course, that does not include the entire immigration, because you will see we received of Germans 563, Scandinavians 724, French and Belgians, 545; and miscellaneous nationalities, 3,832. They were kept separate last year because we desired to know what class of people were coming in. Those figures fully dispose of the idea that we are encouraging this particular class of people as against people of British nationality. The encouragement is all the other way. The efforts that we are making and the money we are spending for the purpose of getting British settlers, is altogether away and beyond the money we are spending in connection with Gallician immigration, or, in fact, immigration from any foreign country. An enormous amount of our immigration expenditure takes place in the western States, and a very considerable portion of it in the British Isles. The money we spend for getting Gallicians and Doukhobors, is almost entirely confined to the simple payment of the bonus of so much per head, but the very large amount of money which we are spending in carrying on a propaganda for the purpose of inducing people to come to Canada, is expended in other directions, and we have spent but a small amount in Austria, and none at all in Russia. Therefore, when the hon. gentleman asks us to direct our efforts to getting settlers of British nationality as against foreigners, that is exactly what we have been doing all the time. We have never changed our intention, or policy, or practice in that respect. When I took charge of the immigration branch, the work which had been begun some years before in the United States had practically died out altogether, and we were getting practically no settlers from the United States at that time. As the result of the large amount of money we spent in the United States last year, we secured nearly 10,000 actual agricultural settlers to settle on land in Manitoba and the North-west Territories, and every one will admit, who knows these settlers, that they are the very best people for our western prairies. Nearly 10,000 of these settlers were the result of our work last year, and I understand from the best sources of information, that we will, perhaps, get from 10,000 to 14,000 of the same class this year. These are people of our own lineage, most of them children of men who came originally from the British Isles, and a great many of them are Canadians who formerly left the province of Ontario and settled in Michigan and other states. They are practically, therefore, of the same class as the farming population of Ontario. I may say that these people come from the States of Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Dakota, Colorado, and a few from Kansas, Iowa and Illinois. I may say to my hon. friend (Mr. Prior) that in the immediate neighbourhood of Winnipeg, for fifty or sixty miles around, large tracts of land, which have for many years been lying idle in the hands of speculators and have been absolutely unsaleable, have been purchased by these very people from the western states, and the face of the country there is assuming a very great change and undergoing a rapid improvement. I state this to show my hon. friend (Mr. Prior) the mistake under which he is labouring, when he says that we are spending our money for the purpose of getting Galicians and Doukhobors, as against British settlers. The efforts, and the energy, and the ingenuity of our officers are all devoted in the direction of securing immigrants of British lineage.

Mr. SPROULE. What commission per capita is the Minister paying for the immigrants?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I will deal with that in a moment. As to the question of these foreigners coming, we have to face the matter in this way. Are we to make restrictive laws? If we do not feel disposed to go that far, are we to make distinctions against these people for the purpose of preventing them coming? That resolves itself into this question: Whether these people are desirable agricultural settlers or not? My hon. friend asked me a question about bonusing.

Mr. McNEILL. Before my hon. friend goes into that question, I have a slip in my hand, and I would like to ask him if he can tell us whether the information in it is correct or not. This is from Halifax:

The Hamburg-American steamer "Phoenicia" arrived to-day from Hamburg, and sailed this afternoon for New York. She brought 350 German immigrants, who landed. Eighty proceeded with the steamer to New York. The Hamburg steamers have landed more than 50,000 Galicians at this port this season, under contract with the Government, for settlement in the North-west. All who are expected this year have now arrived.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I should think the hon. gentleman would know that was not correct without asking me.

Mr. GIBSON. What paper is that?

Mr. PRIOR. The "Mail and Empire."

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is reports of this kind which have given rise to many of the false ideas that are prevalent with regard to the work of the Government in this connection. In the first place, the Government has no contract with the Hamburg-American Steamship Company. In the second place, the Government is not paying any bonus at the present time for Galicians. In the third place, we have not 50,000 Galicians in the country altogether, nor anything like that number, counting all who have come to the country from 1894, when that immigration started, until the present time. I think I can give the hon. gentleman the total number before I get through. The statement the hon. gentleman has read is so incorrect as to be absurd.

Mr. McNEILL. Could the hon. gentleman give me any idea of how many Galicians and Doukhobors have come in this year?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, I will give the hon. gentleman the figures in a few minutes. Of course, our returns are made up to the end of 1898, and consequently it would be impossible for me to give official figures for this year; but I will give the hon. gentleman the figures before six o'clock, if possible. I desire to explain the bonus system in a word or two, so that there may be no misapprehension on that subject. In 1882, when the late Mr. J. H. Pope was Minister of Agriculture, the question of bonuses was first considered, and it was then decided to pay bonuses for the purpose of assisting to induce immigration. It was decided to pay the same bonuses that were being paid by other countries, and this is a point to which I desire to direct the attention of the House. The bonus we pay in England is as high a bonus as is paid by other British colonies and other countries which are competing for immigration, with the exception of one or two countries which pay a higher amount. Queensland is a case in point. We pay a higher bonus on the continent, not because we desire to get more immigrants from the continent, but because the bonus paid by other countries for immigrants from the continent is higher. We have simply to pay that in order to meet them, and to get the booking agents to book the immigrants. If we raised the bonus to the booking agent in Liverpool, the effect would be not to secure for us more British immigrants, but that other colonies would raise their bonuses too. That is known to everybody who is familiar with the case. We would be paying out more money simply for the benefit of the steamship agents. I will prove that the Government of which my hon. friend afterwards became a member recognized that fact. Some years ago, when they decided to increase the inducements for the purpose of getting British immigrants, they did not increase the bonus to the booking agent in the way of paying a larger bonus for each man who came, but they changed it into another kind of bonus. They changed it into a bonus that would be paid only for each man who was shown to have settled in Canada, and in addition to that they gave a bonus to the immigrant himself. Let me tell my hon. friend what the policy of the late Government was; because, if I understand his main contention, it is this, that if we cut off or reduced the bonus to continental immigrants, and increased the bonus to British immigrants, we would get fewer continental settlers and be likely to get a larger number of British settlers. Now, the late Government tried that plan, and gave it up, because they found that it was a failure. On the 23rd of September, 1890, they passed an Order in Council, by which they agreed :

To pay a bonus to steamship agents in the United Kingdom of $5 for each adult settler on land, of 18 years and over, on certificate of "booking" and shipping such settler to Manitoba, the North-west Territories or British Columbia, and on a certificate of a Dominion Lands agent, to be furnished as proof of such settlement.

To pay a bonus of $10 to each homesteader, the head of a family, and $5 for each member of such family at the ocean adult age of 12 years and over, with an additional $5 to any such member of a family who may within six months after arrival in Canada become a homesteader, on settlement on land in Manitoba, the North-west Territories or British Columbia, on proof being furnished of such settlement by the certificate of a Dominion Lands agent.

There was $5 for the booking agent, $10 for the homesteader, and $5 for each member of his family. The House will see at once that that was a very liberal encouragement which the Government were seeking to give for the purpose of getting these settlers. After five years' experience of the plan, which the hon. gentleman suggests that we should follow, the Minister, in an Order in Council of the 26th of February, 1895, recommended :

That the provisions of the respective Orders in Council above quoted, in so far as they relate to the payment of money bonuses to settlers in Manitoba, the North-west Territories and British Columbia, be repealed as from and after the first day of March, 1894, since which date no bonus certificates have been issued by Canadian immigration agents in Europe.

The late Government first inaugurated the bonus system which we have now ; then they changed it on the exact lines which the hon. gentleman now suggests ; after trying it for five years, they gave it up because they found that it was a dead failure ; and we are carrying on the work on the system which the late Government adopted in the first place, but our work is more successful and we are getting a larger number of settlers. I need not discuss the reasons for that. I am discussing the suggestion that we should adopt the bonus system which is recommended by the hon. gentleman and by the press which supports hon. gentlemen opposite, and the statement of the hon. gentleman that we are following a special line of policy for encouraging foreign settlers, which was not followed by the late Government, and to which he has directed his censure.

Mr. CLARKE. Do the other British colonies pay the same bonus for foreign immigrants as the Canadian Government does ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. When I discuss the Estimates, I will give the hon. gentleman a detailed statement ; but I can say now, speaking from my recollection, that the bonus to the booking agent is the same ; but there are British colonies which offer special inducements. Queensland gives a bonus to the immigrant, just as Canada did some years ago. I believe my information to be correct, when I say that the other British colonies that go into it at all, give the same or no higher bonuses than we do—practically, the bonuses are all the same. Queensland is giving very special inducements at present, and as to whether these have any effect in diverting British immigrants to that country, who otherwise would have come to Canada, I am bound to say that I do not think they have had a pronounced effect. I believe that we are getting a larger proportion from the British Isles than formerly, and that the special inducements I have referred to have not greatly affected the question. What does affect the question is, what you do with the booking agent. Every man who buys a ticket has to do with a booking agent, and a clever, experienced agent can divert quite a large percentage from one country to another, if he so desires.

Speaking on the question of bonuses, I may say that some time ago I gave orders that the payments of bonuses to Galician immigration should be discontinued from the 1st of June of this year, and from that date we pay no bonuses whatever in respect of these immigrants. I have not inaugurated that policy as a permanent one, but that will be a matter for consideration and decision later on. Nor did I decide on it because I considered the Galicians to be undesirable settlers, but because I thought we were likely to get as many this year, without the bonus, as our immigration staff could conveniently handle. These immigrants, especially those from foreign countries, necessitate a great deal of work on the part of the immigration staff. As they do not know the conditions of the country, it takes much more labour to get them settled than people from the United States, who simply hunt up the land, make a few inquiries, and take care of themselves. That goes without saying. I thought we would get as many of these foreigners as we could satisfactorily handle without paying any bonus after the 1st June, and I gave orders to cease the payment of bonuses. After I did so, I received a remonstrance from the High Commissioner who was of the opinion that the policy of paying bonuses should be adhered to until the 1st September. I maintained, however, the position I took, and the order went that no bonuses should be paid after the 1st June.

I think I have given all the information which would be of any use on the question of bonuses, and I think I have made myself clear that, so far from increasing and accelerating the policy of encouraging immigration from Galicia and other continental countries, our policy was, until we stopped the payment of bonuses on the 1st June, precisely the same as that of the late Government.

Mr. CLARKE. Does the stoppage of the bonuses apply only to the Galicians ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, for the present. We are, I may say, getting no very great number of other people from the continent, but we do get some people from Germany who are very desirable settlers indeed, and I have no desire that the encouragement given to the immigration of those people by the payment of bonuses should be withdrawn. The stoppage only applies to the Galicians, who were coming in considerable numbers, and whom we expect to come in as large numbers as we can handle.

As to the question of the desirability of these settlers generally, I will take up just for a few minutes two or three objections that have been raised. In the first place, I desire to say that the hon. member for Victoria, B.C., (Mr. Prior) is not correct when he says there is any disposition on the part of the continental settlers, the Galicians and Doukhobors, to come to the towns. That is not correct. These people have no disposition for an urban life. Once they get into such a position on land that they have enough to eat and a house to live in, they have no disposition to go to the cities. Their habits are altogether the other way, and that is one of the prime reasons why I thought it desirable not to discourage unduly their immigration. If these people were people not accustomed to agricultural life, with any disposition at all to abandon agricultural life and come to the towns, I would unhesitatingly use every power that the Government would place in my hands for the purpose of preventing their going to the North-west, for nothing but disaster would result from such a course ; but it is because these people are agriculturists and have been for generations, because they have no idea of following any life except that of agriculturists, because their one idea is to go on land and stay there, that I consider them unquestionably good agricultural settlers and an acquisition to the country. These people came in at first under rather unfortunate auspices. While I do not wish to make a party discussion out of this I am bound to say the late Government was somewhat to blame for those unfortunate auspices. The movement began under the late Government. Professor Oleskow came out here and interviewed the Minister of the Interior of that day and the officers of that department. Having had a special authority from the Austrian Government in connection with the matter, he was desirous of making an arrangement whereby he would be authorized, for a certain payment, to supervise the immigration of the Galicians. The Government of that day did not see fit to make any arrangement with him, but these people came in just the same. The result was, that no supervision and no care was exercised in their selection, and the people who did come in at first were the least desirable of all the Galicians that have come to the country. Professor Oleskow informs us that if he had been employed to exercise any degree of supervision, the people who first came, and who were the people that went to Edmonton, and who first gave rise to the unalterable hostility which the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) has against the Galicians, would probably not have come at all. They were just such people as can be picked up in any country—paupers where they came from, and, of course, paupers when they got here. Since arriving, however, they have done fairly well. That does not, however, at all apply to the Galicians generally that have been coming in since. I may say to my hon. friend that one of the first matters called to my attention, on assuming office, was, that there were a couple of Galician settlements not doing well, for the reason that they had been given no direction or assistance in the way of advice as to the methods of conducting operations in this country, and consequently some of them had got discouraged and gone into the town, just as my hon. friend suggested they had a disposition to do. But they did not go into the town because they had a disposition to do so, but because they had been turned loose on the country, without any instructions being given them as to the methods to be followed, so that they did not know what to do, and became totally discouraged. But what I did in connection with these people was this. I consulted my chief officers of immigration ; we went over the whole case, and the result was, that, of the 115 Galicians who were in Winnipeg when I took office, at the end of six months after my immigration commissioner took charge of the work, there were not five. All had moved out to the Stuartburn settlement, where they are prosperous to-day, and under no obligations to anybody. The difficulty in their case at first was simply because they were dumped into the country and no attention whatever paid to them. But those people are now upon their feet in the Stuartburn settlement, not far south-east of Winnipeg. The settlement is a prosperous one, and the people there are doing quite as well as a lot of people coming from a foreign country, under similar circumstances, could possibly be expected to do. There is no movement of these people to the towns in the slightest degree. On the contrary, they manifest the strongest disinclination to the town, and a determination to stay on their land and make homes for themselves, if possible.

So far as the Galicians are concerned, the attacks that have been made upon them, in my judgment, are most unfair and most ungenerous. If we are ever going to have the North-west populated, we shall not succeed in doing it by standing on our boundary with a club or putting the microscope on every man who wishes to come into the country. We have had these prairies for a good many years now. I have seen the towns and cities in the North-west with business stagnant, and business people leaving them, and everybody in the North-west getting discouraged, because the urban population had nothing to do. And why? Simply because there were no people to trade with. The only solution of our problem there, is to get people on the land who will till it. And I am prepared to say this: That I do not care what language a man speaks, or what religion he professes, if he is honest and law-abiding, if he will go on the land and make a living for himself and family, he is a desirable settler for the Dominion of Canada; and the people of Canada will never succeed in populating Manitoba and the North-west until we act practically upon that idea. And upon the development of Manitoba and the North-west, in my judgment, the future greatness and prosperity of this Dominion of Canada very largely depends. In so saying, I do not wish to minimize the importance of other parts of the country, but I think the House will agree with me that the place to which our merchants and manufacturers of eastern Canada must look for enlarged markets is Manitoba and the North-west Territories; and there will be no markets there unless we have the population. So far as I have been able to observe the Galicians—and I have taken the trouble to drive out and go through the settlements, and even to go from house to house, for the purpose of seeing them; and I have interviewed many people of sound judgment who have taken the trouble to ascertain the fact, who have gone out there to inquire and form a fair opinion without prejudice and without desire to make political capital either for or against the Government—as a whole, they are most desirable settlers. So far as we have had them coming into the country up to the present time, we have no cause to find fault. I do not say that it would be desirable to get 50,000 or 100,000 of these people in one year. I do not think it would. But I do say we can well assimilate five or six thousand of them every year for the next twenty years. And there would be no danger to the institutions of Canada from the fact that, at the end of ten years, we may have fifty thousand Galicians in the North-west. Our experience of these people teaches us that they are industrious, careful and law-abiding, and their strongest desire is to assimilate with Canadians. Dr. Robertson, the general superintendent of the Presbyterian Church in Manitoba and the North-west Territories, has spoken in the highest terms of these people and has expressed the warmest commendation of the policy the Government has followed in bringing them in. He entertains the same opinion that I do, that it would be proper for us to encourage them to come and to make agriculturists of them; and it would be no menace to the future of the country, but, on the contrary, they will assist in the developing of the country and become good citizens. So far as their general habits are concerned, I may say that they are people who have lived in poverty. That is no crime on their part. I do not think that we as members of the House of Commons are prepared to say that we would not allow people to come into Canada because they have been unfortunate enough to live in poverty in the countries from which they come. I venture to say that the ancestors of many prominent citizens of Canada were poor in the country whence they came, and nobody thinks less of them on that account. They are people, as my hon. friend said, of good physique, and they are people of good intellectual capacity; and they are moral and well-living people. I desire to call special attention to that—to their moral habits of life. I venture to say there is no part of the population of Canada—and I am not seeking to disparage my own countrymen for the sake of making an argument—more law-abiding or more moral in their habits, one with the other, than the Galicians.

Mr. PRIOR. Do I understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) to say that the Galicians are of good physique?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Very good, indeed. And I was going to say they manifest a wonderful aptitude for improvement in their habits. When they come here, by reason of the manner in which they have been compelled to live, they do not present a very cleanly appearance. In that respect, they differ from the Doukhobors. The Doukhobors are said to be the cleanest people that ever landed in Halifax; and the railway conductors say, without hesitation, that they never had as clean a lot of immigrants on their trains as the Doukhobors were. That, I am bound to say, does not apply to the Galicians. But it is not less true that the Galicians show great aptitude for improvement. I could point my hon. friend to some most remarkable cases showing the improvements that have come under my notice. My hon. friend mentioned the servant problem. It will be found that the large number of Galicians and Doukhobors coming into that country will, to a great extent, overcome the difficulty that has existed in procuring persons who were willing to enter service. It is no disparagement of our Canadian boys and girls to say that they do not wish to go out to service. If they have a higher ambition, we desire that they should gratify that ambition. But what are these sons and daughters of farmers, who desire to leave the farm and follow professional or mercantile occupations, who would do what has been done in the province of Ontario, where the sons and daughters of the farmers have gone into the cities and have, in many cases, taken leading places—what are they going to do if there are no towns? And what will become of the towns if the farming population does not increase? We have had the question of populating these prairies on our hands for a good many years. From 1881, when the Canadian Pacific Railway contract was let, to 1896, it was surprising and extremely disappointing to see how slow had been the increase of the farming population. Everybody knows that we almost began to believe that we were never to have the growth of the farming population in the North-west that we anticipated in former years. And we never shall have it if we follow a policy of keeping people from coming in. If we can find people of fairly good character who desire to live an agricultural life, and who say they want to come to Canada and build up homes for themselves and are willing to obey the laws and pay taxes for the support of our institutions, we must open our doors to these people and give them such encouragement as will overcome the initial difficulties of their change of situation. For my part, I have not the slightest fear of the results. I call my hon. friend's attention and the attention of the House, to this point, that in all the experience of the United States—and they have had a great deal of experience upon these lines—none of the difficulties that they have had has been with an agricultural population. The foreign people who have gone there and concerning whom difficulties have arisen, are people who live in the towns and cities—mechanics and labourers. There has never been a difficulty with an agricultural population. I could show my hon. friend places in the United States where large stretches of country are settled with a foreign population—and not as good a class of people or as well circumstanced as the people who are settling our North-west—and they are as prosperous and as respectable and as highly respected as any rural population in the United States. There has been no trouble with them. We need not apprehend any trouble from those who come out to till the soil and make a livelihood for themselves and their families. Let me say another word to my hon. friend. These people take up a class of land that will not be taken up by Canadian or that English settlers will not take up. Galicians went upon a tract of land that we could not possibly get anybody else to look at, and they have settled down there, and cleared the scrub and brush away, and I venture to say that if the hon. gentleman will go up there in ten years from to-day he will see as prosperous, as contented, as law-abiding and peaceful a population as he will find anywhere else in Canada.

In so far as the Doukhobors are concerned, I have only this to say. I am altogether at one with my right hon. friend the Prime Minister when he suggests that it is not a reason why we should keep people out of Canada because they have a conscientious objection to bearing arms. I think the House will not agree with the suggestion that because a man may have conscientious objections to bearing arms, therefore he has not courage, therefore he has not those qualities which go to make up a good citizen. Sir, there is many a man who is ready to fight and who has no courage at all, he has nothing in the sense of true courage. While I think I would be quite prepared to put on a uniform, if it became necessary, and to go out in defence of the country, I do not believe that either I myself or my hon. friend would go through what these Doukhobors have gone through for the sake of their convictions. I doubt if there are five men in this House who would show the moral courage, who would show the tenacity, who would show the fortitude which these people have shown for the purpose of preserving the faith which they believe to be the true faith. They have this idea about military service, but so long as they are willing to till our land, so long as they are prepared to raise wheat and cattle and pay taxes, I think we will be able to use their money for the purpose of paying and equipping men who are perfectly willing to go out and do the fighting. These people have gone out on a tract of land passed over by all other people, not occupied by other people, lying there year after year, travelled over by the English and Canadian settlers that the hon. gentleman talks about, but who would not look at that land, we could not get them to settle there at all. These men went on a square block, they took up one section after another, regardless of the quality of the land, and they have taken their chances as to whether they would be successful or not. I have not the slightest doubt that if my hon. friend will go up to that settlement ten years from to-day he will see a population that will be a credit to the Dominion of Canada.

Now, my hon. friend says they have habits that are repulsive, which are to some extent contrary to the ideas we have as to what the habits of well-regulated people should be. Well, that is perfectly true. It was also true of the Mennonites; and all that has been said here about the Doukhobors and Galicians was said much more strongly in regard to the Mennonites, and I think it was said with much better ground, that is to say, that the argument which is used applied more strongly to the Mennonites than it does to the Doukhobors and the Galicians. We all know what the social habits of the Mennonites were when they came here. They have improved very much since then; but there was this difference between the Mennonites and these later settlers. The Galician is anxious to assimilate, the Galician is anxious to be independent, the Galician wants to be a Canadian, he wants his children to go to a public school. We have had the strongest evidence that these Galicians are desirous that schools should be established among them. We have their children going to the schools in large numbers now. We actually have two young men from the Galician settlement at Dauphin down in Manitoba College studying Presbyterian theology for the purpose of going out and acting as missionaries amongst their people. The Doukhobors are also quite willing to assimilate and become Canadians, that is to say, they have no prejudice against it. The Mennonites are altogether different. The Mennonites are exclusive, the Mennonites are opposed, and always have been to some extent by their mental attitude, to becoming Canadians. And yet, Mr. Speaker, although the Mennonites were not looked upon so favourably as the Galicians and the Doukhobors, they have been among the most valuable citizens we have had in Manitoba and the North-west. Why, Sir, there is no more prosperous portion of the province to-day than the Mennonite reserve. I venture to think that if the hon. gentleman will ask the leading merchants of the city of Winnipeg where, in the last ten years, they have made the most money, where they have had the fewest bad debts, and therefore have lost the least money, they will say that it has been upon the Mennonite reserve; and that of all the population of the province of Manitoba there is no portion that contributes more to its commercial prosperity than does the Mennonite reserve. I venture to think that we have just as good grounds for expecting that the Galicians and Doukhobors will be equally successful, and that they will be a credit to the country as the Mennonites have become, and with this added advantage, that they have a desire to assimilate whereas the Mennonites have not.

Now, I desire to point out in reply to my hon. friend that I think he is entirely astray when he speaks of the Doukhobors and the Galicians in the same way that he speaks of the Mongolian populations which menace our people upon the Pacific coast. Let me add that the settlement of our plains of the North-west by such people as we have been able to get there, not only settlers from the United States, but other settlers from continental Europe such as the Galicians and the Doukhobors, will fill up those prairies and create a trade, and thus benefit the urban population. That is not only in the interest of the country at large, it is in the interest of the population of the city of Winnipeg and of the various towns and villages in the North-west, because the increase of the rural population is the only possible means by which the urban population can be increased, or a trade built up for the purpose of sustaining it. It is also in the interest of the artisan and of the labouring man of Quebec and Ontario. Where is the artisan of the province of Quebec and the province of Ontario to look for an increased market, to what place is he going to look for the purpose of selling the goods which he has produced by his labour, if it is not to our North-west, to these markets built up by settlements upon our prairies? There is no man more interested in immigration, that is more interested in the successful development of the North-west, than the mechanic, than the man who has skilled labour to sell in the eastern portion of the Dominion of Canada. And it is with that view that I appeal with the greatest confidence to my colleagues in the Government, and appeal to the public wherever I have spoken upon this question, to support a vigorous immigration policy, knowing as I do that not only does the prosperity of the North-west depend upon it, but also the prosperity of the towns and cities of eastern Canada.

Mr. CLARKE. Might I ask the hon. gentleman a question? What does he say as to the allegations which are constantly being made that special privileges are being accorded to Galician settlers in Manitoba that are not and have not been accorded to Canadian settlers up there?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. So far as the department has any knowledge, the statement is absolutely untrue. I have given the most positive and special instructions that that should not be done, that no distinction should be made between the settlers of any class. I may add, as touching the hon. gentleman's suggestion, that at this moment I have despatched the chief officer of the Dominion Lands Branch to the North-west for the purpose of investigating the question as to whether any officers of the department have disobeyed their instructions.

Mr. CLARKE. I will take the opportunity, later on, if an opportunity offers, of reading a clipping from a paper friendly to hon. gentlemen opposite, in respect to this matter of discrimination in regard to which I have asked for information. I will send the clipping to the hon. gentleman.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I apprehend that the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke), when he speaks of special privileges, is referring to a statement that was made that they were given entries for land which had been refused to other settlers.

Mr. CLARKE. Yes.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. All I have to say is that, when that statement was brought to my attention, I brought it before the officers of the Dominion lands branch, and pointed out to them that the express instructions I had given them were not to permit that. I demanded an explanation of the officers of the branch, and information was given that they had no knowledge that such had been done, and they did not believe it had been done. Upon that I sent the Commissioner of Dominion Lands to the North-west with the special object of making a report upon that, and ascertaining if any officers had violated their instructions.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia). Mr. Speaker, in reference to the question that was raised by the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), I rather think that the conduct of the hon. Minister of the Interior has entirely vindicated my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Prior), because, with the reproof of my right hon. friend ringing in his ears, the hon. Minister of the Interior rises and makes a carefully prepared speech on a motion to adjourn the House. In reference to the doctrine as laid down yesterday or the day before yesterday, I forget which, by the right hon. gentleman, I must say that, in my opinion, it would limit, to a great extent, the liberty of action of private members of this House, because, if you speak upon a question on going into Supply, you will, on a question like this, deprive the mover of a substantive motion, of the right of a reply, which he might wish to avail himself of. The right hon. gentleman, when laying down that doctrine, I think it was the day before yesterday, quoted from May the practice of the English House of Commons, but Bourinot, as quoted by the hon. senior member for Halifax (Mr. Borden), says that the practice in our House is entirely different from the practice in the English Chamber, and he supports the contrary doctrine by the high example of my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I consider that by far the most important question that has been brought before this House to-day is the question of Mongolian immigration. Something like fourteen years ago a great deal of attention was given to this subject, and an elaborate inquiry was instituted by the Government of Sir John Macdonald. That inquiry established that Mongolian immigration was a menace to the prosperity and progress of British Columbia, and that it would be a danger even to Canada. The report that was made at that time, after going into the evidence taken at San Francisco, after going into the evidence taken by the Government of the United States, after going into the evidence taken at Portland, Oregon, and evidence taken in British Columbia, advised legislation, and legislation took place in 1885, as my right hon. friend will remember, when a tax of $50 a head was imposed on Chinese immigration. The person who wrote this report was the same person that prepared the Act, and any one who turns to the recommendations that were made, will see that it was recommended that the Government should legislate tentatively, and that they should look forward to further action, that in legislating no course should be taken that would give a severe shock to great interests on the Pacific coast, and that when $50 a head was imposed they should look forward to the time when $100 a head would be imposed, nay, when probably $200 a head would be imposed. The opinion that was put forward by that commission, need I add, was emphasized here to-day, because I find that the hon. Minister of the Interior takes precisely the same view of Mongolian immigration that of the hon. member for Victoria. The hon. Minister of the Interior not only reprovved the doctrine laid down by the Prime Minister, but, by the sentiments that he uttered, he actually condemned the Government of which he is a distinguished member. The Prime Minister will have, I believe, the sympathy of everybody on this side of the House in deferring to the Imperial instinct of every free citizen of Canada. But, what should have been done when these Acts were disallowed? If the hon. Minister of the Interior is correct in saying that Mongolian immigration is a menace to the workingman, what should have been done when the Acts passed by British Columbia were disallowed, when the protection to the workman supplied by the legislation of British Columbia was taken away by the disallowance of this Government? Taking the opinion of the Minister of the Interior as a just opinion, and as an opinion that we all share, what should have been done by this Government, because the power is with them, is this: We should have had an Act brought in by the right hon. gentleman or one of his colleagues, adding to the duty that is now imposed on the Chinese. This report points out that there is a great difference between Japanese and Chinese immigration. Every person who knows the character of the Chinaman and the character of the Japanese, who has followed the immigration of each race in the United States or in Canada, knows that there is not as much danger from numbers, from immoral practices, or from secret societies, involved in Japanese immigration as in Chinese. The Chinese are demoralizing, in the most—

The PRIME MINISTER. The Japanese?

Mr. DAVIN. No, what I say is that there is not as much danger from the Japanese as from the Chinese, because Chinese immigration is a menace to labour by contributing cheap but most effective labour. It is most effective, but it is cheap, and taking the form that has been described as celibate immigration, it is, of course, a very serious menace to the workingman who has a wife and three or four children to support. But it is not merely that. I am speaking now of the regular immigration, where immigrants come to make money, not, of course, referring to high officials visiting the country, either for pleasure or business, and I say that I believe no exception can be found either in San Francisco or British Columbia, to the rule that every woman that comes is a prostitute, and every woman is a more dangerous prostitute by far than those to be found amongst white people, even the most abandoned, because the practices of these women are indescribable. They strike not merely at the morality of the adult population, but at the morality of very young male children, and that, of course, is a thing that you must expect residents of a place like Victoria or the residents of any town—I suppose there is the same thing now in Vancouver, although I do not know anything by direct information about it—to look with dread upon such immigration as that.

I say that, when the legislature of British Columbia passed that legislation, and when it made the error, as error I consider it, of including the Japanese in the same class as the Chinese, when the Government felt bound to disallow that, we should have an Act brought into this House which would increase the poll-tax on Chinese coming into the country, as the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) implied should have been done. I believe every man will entirely sympathize with the view put forward by the Prime Minister, that where we have to deal with an issue in which the Imperial Government is concerned, respecting the Japanese, who have shown themselves as possessing some of the very highest qualities which have distinguished the Anglo-Saxon race, whom my right hon. friend loves to eulogize—when you have this nation showing themselves to be the England of the eastern seas, I think it was perfectly right for the Government to disallow these Acts. But, at the same time, I say that the Minister of the Interior, holding the views he has expressed, is guilty towards the province of British Columbia, in not having insisted on a Bill being brought in to deal with Chinese immigration.

Mr. MORRISON. Can the hon. gentleman tell me why it was, that the Conservative Government did not take any steps to increase the Chinese tax, or do something to restrict the immigration of the Chinese into British Columbia?

Mr. DAVIN. I was not, unfortunately, a member of that Government.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. But a very strong supporter.

Mr. DAVIN. I do not know that. I found it necessary on many occasions to differ from the Government, and, whenever I did, I found I was supported by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) and by the Prime Minister; and on those occasions I was able to do what will be found in "Hansard," and what will be found on the statute-books—I was able to accomplish a great many things for the North-west Territory that could not otherwise have been accomplished. I mention that for the behoof of my hon. friend (Mr. Morrison). He asked me, why did not the Conservative Government do this, and I tell him that I was very busy at that time getting the Government to do a great many things that came right home to the people I represented in the North-west Territories. I could mention them by the dozen; and, if the dealing with Chinese immigration is so dear to my hon. friend (Mr. Morrison) as it certainly is to his constituents, let him come forward and do as I did—let him make his motions, and press them, and divide the House.

Mr. MCGREGOR. And vote against them.

Mr. DAVIN. No, and vote for them. I squelched completely that intellectual insect of hon. gentlemen opposite on another occasion, and I hope the hon. hon. gentleman (Mr. McGregor) will not force me to bring "Hansard" in and ram something I will not name down the throat of such persons as my hon. friend (Mr. McGregor).

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

DOMINION PERMANENT LOAN COMPANY.

House resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 104) respecting the Dominion Permanent Loan Company.—(Mr. Clarke.)

(In the Committee.)

Mr. W. W. B. McINNES (Vancouver). Mr. Chairman, before the Bill is reported, I beg to move that the following be added to the Bill as section 4:

Any shareholder who has obtained or hereafter obtains a loan from the company, shall be relieved of all liability arising therefrom, and shall be entitled to a release and a reconveyance of any property charged therewith, upon his paying to the company the amount required to repay such loan, as represented by the agent of the company who effected the loan, or by the literature of the company circulated at the time the loan was made.

When this Bill was before the Committee on Banking and Commerce, I took occasion to move an additional clause very similar to the one I propose to-night. Although the motion received substantial support in the committee, a majority did not concur in the view that the proposed clause should be made part of the Bill. But I am confident the majority came to that conclusion on account of certain statements which were made in defence of certain practices of the company by certain members of the company who were present, and by members of the committee. For that reason, as well as because I am firmly convinced of the importance of the motion which I propose, I feel justified to-night in again bringing it to the attention of hon. members. As the committee is aware, there are quite a number of loan companies in Canada which loan out money on what is known as the instalment plan. They represent to intending borrowers that they will loan them say $1,000, and that the borrower shall have the privilege of paying that money back in a certain number of instalments of so much per month. It has been found, unfortunately for those who have borrowed money in this way and for those who have subscribed for stock in most of these companies, that when the time came for settlement with the company, the company has not been prepared to carry out its promises, its representations or its obligations. Now, the company which is asking for additional powers from this Parliament at this time, and which was formerly known as the Dominion Building and Loan Association, has acted in a way towards its borrowers which I think justifies this Parliament in taking cognizance of its conduct. Those who have borrowed from this company have had experiences which to them appear to be most unjustifiable. This matter was brought to my attention two or three months ago, when I received a petition from some prominent constituents of mine which set out in clear terms the grievances which they had against the company; and for brevity's sake, I will read this petition which is dated Nanaimo, May 8th, and is addressed to me:

We, the undersigned, borrowers from and subscribers to the Dominion Building and Loan Association (now the Dominion Permanent Loan Association) head office, Toronto, hereby appeal to Parliament through you for redress and relief from a very unfair, unjust and, we believe, dishonest condition which the association are trying to exact under the mortgage given by us.

When we obtained the loans from the association, the printed by-laws were handed to us, and the agents of the association stated clearly and explicitly that the by-laws contained all the conditions governing the contract between the association and the borrowers.

The clause in the by-laws most important to the borrowers is the repayment clause, which stated plainly that the money would be repaid and the debt discharged by the borrower making ninety-six equal monthly payments. We have faithfully complied with this clause, and when we made application for a release of our securities and a discharge of our mortgages, we were informed by the association that we had an additional sum of $225 on each $1,000 borrowed to pay before the release would be granted, the association claiming the right to change the by-laws and eliminate the clause specifying the number of payments to be made.

As this is a question affecting a large number of Canadians all over the Dominion, petitioners respectfully request that you bring the matter to the notice of the Dominion Parliament for the purpose of causing a Government investigation to be made.

And your petitioners will ever pray.

You will see that it is specifically stated in this petition that these borrowers—and they number 29—borrowed money from this company on a specific understanding that upon making 96 repayments they would be entitled to a full discharge of all the securities they gave the company—that, on payment of these 96 payments, they would be absolutely released from all liability connected with the loan. It is further stated that having complied with these conditions, and having done everything they thought they were under an obligation to do, the company, instead of giving them a release and discharge, wishes to extort from them an additional sum of $225, or 15 additional payments on every $1,000 which was borrowed. Now, I know the gentlemen who have signed this petition, and they are gentlemen of the very highest standing; and the fact that they have subscribed to that statement is sufficient to convince me that the facts stated in it are true. I know that the members of this committee have not the pleasure of knowing those gentlemen, and I have accordingly fortified myself with a few facts to show the committee that the statements contained in this petition are absolutely true. In the first place, I shall read section 3 of Article 3 of the by-laws of the company which were in force at the time these loans were made. This section, which bears upon this point, reads as follows:—

Loans on stock, with real estate mortgage as collateral security, shall be payable in ninety-six monthly payments of one dollar and fifty cents for each share assigned to the association, sixty cents out of each payment of one dollar and fifty cents being credited to the shares assigned, fifty cents to the interest account, and forty cents to the premium account; provided, however, that if the shares assigned mature before the expiration of ninety-six months from the date of issue thereof, the said payments of one dollar and fifty cents for each share assigned shall thereafter cease, the shares cancelled and the mortgage released.

You will see that in that section it is provided that, upon making 96 payments to the company, the securities which have been given to the company by the borrowers, shall be discharged and released. Furthermore, the additional inducement is held out to the intending borrower, that there is a possibility that these shares will mature inside of 96 payments, and consequently a borrower may be allowed to repay his loan by really making less than 96 payments. There is not the slightest suggestion to the borrower of the loans not terminating with that number of payments. The declaration is specific that 96 payments, and no more, will be all that will be required in order to secure the borrower a release. That same representation is repeated in all the literature of the company circulated to intending borrowers. I have here a copy of some of the literature which was issued at the time these parties who are now petitioning took out their loans, and I will read a portion which is set forth in large letters in one of their circulars, and styled an illustration. It is put in this shape so as to show intending borrowers the great advantage of borrowing $1,000 on this plan :

ILLUSTRATION

Showing the Cost of $1,000 Loan on Ten Shares of Stock for Eight Years.

The borrower pays $15 per month for 96 months.

In other words, in return for $1,000.00 he pays $1,440, with entrance fee of $10. The total cost of the loan, therefore, is $1,450. Deduct the amount of the loan, $1,000, and it will be seen that the whole cost of the loan has been only $450.

The literature continues :

Thus, the borrower has had the use of $1,000 for eight years, which cost him only $450. Had he borrowed from a banker or broker, at 6 per cent interest, he would have paid for the same amount during that period, $480.

That, again, shows clearly that the company represent to the public that, upon paying 96 payments, and no more, the borrower shall receive a full quittance. But further on, in the same piece of literature, I find, in great double capital letters, this paragraph :

STOCK GUARANTEED.

The stock of the association is guaranteed to mature in eight years, thus limiting the number of payments, and assuring a handsome profit to investors.

In view of that literature and the section I have read from the by-laws, there can be no doubt that the company is representing, in the clearest possible language that, upon paying 96 payments, and no more, the borrowers will be entitled to a full release. As stated in the petition that I read to the committee, a number of subscribers for loans have complied with all the terms, and have made their payments regularly ; but, when they applied for a release, they were coolly told that they would have to pay the company some 15 more payments before the company would give them a full discharge. I have in my hand a letter written by the manager of the company to one of the petitioners, William Woodman, dated Toronto, September 19th, 1898. Towards the close of the letter this sentence occurs :

It will take considerably more than 96 payments to repay your loan, probably fifteen more. You will see that even here they do not specifically state when this contract will come to an end. After making 96 payments, the company exact 15 more, but they say, "probably 15 more will be required," so that perhaps 20 or 25 more will have to be made. In other words, according to the agreement as interpreted by the company, there is no definiteness at all as to its finality. It may be asked, what is the excuse the company put forward for exacting these additional payments. There was only one excuse ventured before the Banking and Commerce Committee, and that was, that this company, when a new company, some ten years ago, estimated that the profits would be very large. They went into business when the rates of interest were high, and they thought they would be able to make such profits as would warrant their declaring that the stock would mature in eight years, and consequently that a person who took out a mortgage then would be able to obtain a release on making 96 payments. But I think I am in a position to show that that statement clearly cannot be true, or, if it be true, the company is persisting in continuing to swindle the public, because, not only eight or ten years ago did they represent to the public that if the borrower made 96 payments, he would get a release, but continuously since then up to the present they have made that same representation to the public. In fact, at present this company are representing to the public that they will lend $1,000, and that if the borrower pays back only 93 payments of $15 per month, making a total of $1,395, he will obtain a full discharge. Clearly, if the company can do that to-day with regard to persons who mortgage their property now to the company, they can do that to those who took out mortgages some eight or ten years ago. On the other hand, if they cannot do it to-day, in the light of their past experience, they are acting dishonestly towards the public in continuing to make the same representation. In either case they should be brought to book, and, when they are asking for further privileges, this House has a perfect right to insist that they shall deal fairly with their clients. They are offering at present to give $1,000 to the borrower and promise him a full release on his paying back, not 96 payments, but 93 payments, of $15 each. I have here some literature I obtained from their office in this city only a few days ago, in which they make the specific statement, without any suggestion at all that it depends upon contingencies as to expenses or profits, that they will lend $1,000 and that the borrower will only be required to pay back 93 payments of $15 each.

Mr. WALLACE. Has the hon. gentleman made an estimate of the actual rate of interest that would have to be paid ?

Mr. McINNES. No, I have not.

Mr. DAVIS. Sixteen per cent.

Mr. McINNES. I am merely dealing with the literature of the company and the representations they have made to the public, and it is on those representations alone the public are induced to take loans from the company. It was suggested in the committee, that really this was not a matter Parliament should deal with, but I submit that, inasmuch as this company is entirely the creation of this Parliament, inasmuch as it has no rights whatever to deal with the public outside those given by this Parliament, and inasmuch as it can be shown that they are dealing unfairly with the public, it is competent for this Parliament to compel them to deal fairly and honourably with their clients. It was also suggested that the proper place to fight out the disputes between the borrowers and the company is the courts. But while it is perfectly true that the courts are open to every one, still, as a matter of fact, it is not every one who can afford to go to the courts, and if the borrowers, who, in the very nature of the case, are men of small means, who have been forced to borrow money, are forced to go to the courts, it is manifest very few of them will receive their just deserts. Because, Sir, it is an unequal fight between a large company and a poor borrower. There are vexations about lawsuits, there are expenses attending litigation, which make it practically impossible for the great majority of these borrowers to secure their rights at the hands of the courts.

There is another reason why borrowers under the present condition should not be compelled to go into the courts to secure their rights in this matter, and it is this—if the borrower starts a suit to secure what he considers his just rights from this company and the case is brought on for trial, the rights of the borrower will be decided upon the exact wording of the mortgage. I take it that these previous representations as made by the agent of the company and as contained in the literature of the company would not be taken notice of; at all events, they certainly would not be taken full notice of by the courts; but, on the other hand, the mortgage would be held to contain the whole agreement, and the courts would not go behind or back of the mortgage. Consequently, though the agents and the literature of the company induced the borrower to believe that he was entering into a certain bargain, yet, if the strict language of the mortgage did not bear out that understanding, the borrower, as the law stands at the present time, would not succeed in the case, and, as I think, would not succeed in getting justice. Now, I would like to point out, furthermore, the process which takes place when these loans are effected. We all know that the agents are very anxious to secure these loans. They get a handsome commission for securing the loans, and it is clearly in their interest to get as much of the company's money loaned as possible. That has the effect, necessarily, of not making the agents over-scrupulous as to the statements they make to intending borrowers. I know quite a number of these agents, even the agents of this company, and I know men whom they have approached, and I know it to be the invariable practice of the agents to represent to the borrowers—and, so far as I know, they do it honestly, because they think the company will fulfil its obligations—that on making a specific number of payments, they will receive a complete discharge. Now, the literature of the company clearly shows that the same representation is placed before the public—it backs up what the agent says. The great majority of intending borrowers will look at the literature and listen to what the agent says, but when the crucial point comes of signing the mortgage, not one man in a hundred would read the mortgage—and, if they did, not one man in a thousand (I have seen the document) would understand it. I venture to say that there are not five men in this House who could read this mortgage over and understand it. We had a copy of the mortgage before the Banking and Commerce Committee the other day, and the language was seen to be tricky, ambiguous and uncertain, and the whole document was apparently drawn up with a view to confuse the mind of the reader and cover up the real intent of the mortgage. So I say the contract as between man and man which was entered into was the contract entered into on the representation of the agent of the company and of the literature of the company, and not as contained in the mortgage. Inasmuch, therefore, as the law now stands, the mortgage will be taken as conclusive of the justice of the thing in court and not these preliminary representations, I submit that this motion, which has for its object to make the representations of the agent the basis of the decision of the action and not the mortgage, should be adopted by the House.

I have only one other thing to point out, and that is the general importance of this matter. This is not a matter which is confined to my district or to the province of British Columbia; it is a thing in which people all over the Dominion are concerned, so far as this Dominion Permanent Loan Company has done business over the Dominion. Since this matter has been before the House, I have had letters from different parts of the country showing that people in widely separated sections are interested in it. The importance of it can be gathered in another way. You will observe that the manager of the company in writing to one of these parties stated that the company would exact fifteen more payments or a total of $225, more for every $1,000 he has borrowed. I think it quite fair to assume that, up to 1896, that company had loaned out in this country 4,000 such loans. If that is a fair estimate, and if $225 is exacted from each of these 4,000 borrowers, you will see that the enormous sum of nearly a million dollars is attempted to be extorted from these innocent borrowers by this company. You will observe, from that line of argument, that this question is of no limited importance, but is one of very widespread concern in the country. I do not wish to take up the time of the committee further ; but I submit that, in view of these considerations, the committee would be well advised and would be doing right by those who are not at present exactly in a position to protect themselves, if they incorporate the section I propose in the Bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think it is only right to say that when this matter was before the Banking and Commerce Committee there was a very full representation of the members there. All the facts that have been stated by my hon. friend (Mr. McInnes) were fully brought out and fully discussed before that committee. Everything was considered for several hours and the committee decided, by a very large majority indeed, that this clause should not be added to the Bill. I need not go into the reasons for that conclusion now, as the time is limited and there are other Bills to be dealt with. But I think it is fair that this committee should understand that the Committee on Banking and Commerce had considered all these points, and had decided against adding this clause to the Bill. Therefore, I think this committee would be well advised in rejecting this motion made by my hon. friend.

Mr. DAVIS. This is a question I happen to know something about, not in connection with this loan company, but another. We had one of these companies working on much the same lines in the town of Prince Albert, where I live. They came in some years ago, and made representations in the same way as has been stated, and got a lot of people to go in and take stock on the strength of statements they made and the literature they produced, telling the people that they would be able to pay back the loan in seven years if they went into the company. They circulated this literature and got up some local companies to take control of the thing. People went into it in good faith ; and I do not suppose there was one in twenty-five who read the mortgage ; and even if they had, it was so full of covenants that no layman could understand it—even lawyers could hardly understand it. These people understood by the agreement they had with the agent and by the literature that the agent circulated in the town that in so many payments they would pay up the whole amount they borrowed in seven years. Other parties who went in for the purpose of investing money in the same way were supposed to draw $1,000 when the seven-year period was up. Now, that was more than seven years ago. These people in good faith made their payments year by year, they never missed a payment, and when the time was up they asked to be released. They said : We have been paying for seven years, we have made our payments according to the agreement. But they were told that they would have to pay for three years more. When they showed their agreement and said : Well, here is the literature that was used by your agent, this is the agreement. Oh, they said, you had better read the mortgage, under that mortgage we can hold you as long as we please. The reason they gave, as my hon. friend says, was that they expected bigger dividends than they got. There was a case decided in Minnesota by the Supreme Court in which it was held that they were bound to release these parties ; that if their agent went into a certain place and made representations, this company were bound by those representations, and that they would have to release them. I think there is a case in Canada to the same effect. But I submit that if this Bill is going through now, and if there is any way this House can protect the public, it should be done. Everybody cannot go to law with a loan company like one of these ; there is no doubt that if they did, they would go to the wall. If a labouring man, who has been induced to go in and borrow this money on the understanding that he could pay it back in seven years, and if he found out at the end of the seven years that he could not get justice, has he got to go to law with this company ? It is impossible for him to do it. If he succeeded in a local court, it would be carried to the Supreme Court ; and the people recognize that, and, therefore, they submit to be plucked before they will go to law. I hope this will be taken into consideration by the House, because I know that it is not only in the places mentioned by my hon. friend that these cases occur. There is not a town in the North-west Territories where the same thing has not taken place, and I assume that the same thing has taken place in Ontario, and I think something should be done to make these companies do what is right.

Mr. HENDERSON. I agree with the hon. gentleman who has moved this amendment to a very large extent, inasmuch as I have had a prejudice against this class of business for possibly thirty years. But I hold to the opinion that it is unfair to this company at this time to add a special clause which does not apply to other companies doing business in exactly the same way. If the clause now proposed is to be enacted, it should be made general. Now, let me state in a few words the nature of this whole transaction. The borrower goes to the company and buys stock, he agrees to take his chance on the payment of this stock. If the company has a profitable business and the profits will enable him to pay his stock in eight years, then he will be entitled to the discharge of the mortgage given in security for the money which was advanced, or the money which he is to pay for the stock. If, on the other hand, the company was fortunate enough to make sufficient money to enable that stock to be paid for in six years, then the borrower would get the advantage, and I have no doubt in the world that he would take that advantage, and if such had been the case, he would not be in the position of these people in British Columbia, who have been unfortunate enough not to get their discharge. Now, what do these people contract to do? It is written plainly in the mortgage that they have agreed to pay 16 per cent on $1,000. This would amount to $160 a year, and in eight years, to $1,280. Then, principal and interest, would amount to $2,280. Now, that is written in plain words; it says what the borrower contracts to pay, there is no mistake about that. He contracts to pay $1,000, and to pay interest at 16 per cent thereon for eight years, as he alleges, making in all $2,280. Now, suppose it was paid off in eight years, by instalments of $15 per month, the borrower would simply pay $1,440, or $840 less than he contracted for in plain words written on the face of his mortgage that he should pay. It is said that the company asks him to pay fifteen monthly payments more than the ninety-six. Suppose he would do that, it would be $225. Still $615 less than he contracted to pay in the face of his mortgage. My impression is that we should not pass legislation that will be retroactive at all. These men go into this business with their eyes open, they are intelligent men. I saw a mortgage signed the other day, written in plain and distinct language, evidently the man who signed that mortgage was an intelligent man and knew what he was doing; yet he signed that mortgage with a clause in it that he was to pay 16 per cent for the money that he was getting. I do not think this Parliament has any right to step in between these two contracting parties and say that because a man made a foolish bargain with his eyes open, somebody else should suffer for it, because the other shareholders of the company would have to suffer if this man is relieved. But for the future I would say that it is the duty of this Parliament to prevent a recurrence of what is complained of at the present time, and I have no doubt that the Minister of Finance will before long do something in that direction. I myself would approve of there being used in all these charters for loan companies a form of mortgage, to be the only form of mortgage that would be used by the company; then there could possibly be no mistake made, no matter what kind of literature was circulated amongst the people. People go into these things because they think that they are going to make money by it, and I know for a fact that men do it with their eyes open. I remember one instance where a gentleman came to me and asked my advice with respect to one of these schemes. I asked him if he thought it was a reasonable thing, if he thought it could be done. After explaining it to him he thought it was unreasonable, and he did not go into it. He came back the second time, and a second explanation was given him, and still he agreed that it was impossible that he could make that amount of money in eight years. Notwithstanding all that, so terribly greedy was he to make money that he entered into a contract and bought some of these certificates. Now, it is impossible to legislate so as to prevent men going into these schemes when they will do so with their eyes open for the purpose of making money. I cannot believe that the people on the western coast are any less intelligent than those in this part of the country, and I know that people here go into it as a speculation, and when they do it voluntarily they must take their chances. I cannot say that I sympathize much with them. But I hope that if there is a possibility of avoiding a recurrence of what has taken place here, some principle will be introduced that will be made applicable to all companies.

Bill read the third time and passed.

BILL FOR RELIEF OF PENBERTHY INJECTOR COMPANY.

House resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 141) to confer on the Commissioner of Patents certain powers for the relief of the Penberthy Injector Company.—(Mr. McGregor.)

(In the Committee.)

Mr. HAGGART. What department has charge of this matter? The Bill is to allow the Commissioner of Patents, notwithstanding the expiry of a patent to extend the duration of letters patent on behalf of this company. We have refused always in this House to do it no matter what the circumstances have been, or through whose neglect it was. Even where the parties have sent down the money for the purpose of renewing patent and through the neglect of the officers of the department it was not renewed we have refused such legislation.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The practice before the Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills has been to require evidence on oath in order to prove the specific facts alleged in the preamble. Bills have been passed by the committee, reported and adopted by the House where the committee were thoroughly satisfied that it was owing to a mere accident that the money had not been paid on the proper day. It was held by the committee that in this case the party having the patent should not be prejudiced, and a clause was put in expressly reserving any rights which any third party had acquired in the meantime. There are some cases of great hardship, and there would be great hardship in this case if, after the facts, as alleged in the preamble, have been proved, the House did not grant relief. Very great care was taken; the department was communicated with and the officer in charge of the branch came before the committee and certified that, so far as the department was concerned there was no objection to the Bill, provided the rights of any parties who had acquired rights in the meantime were protected. That was done.

Mr. McALISTER. When the matter came before the committee two or three days ago, action on the Bill was postponed in order to ascertain if the Bill would prejudice the rights of any third parties. Evidence was submitted yesterday that no such rights would be prejudiced, and the committee agreed to report the Bill.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 140) respecting the Canadian Railway Fire Insurance Company, and to change its name to the Dominion Fire Insurance Company.—(Mr. Belcourt.)

Bill (No. 158) respecting the Edmonton District Railway Company, and to change its name to the Edmonton, Yukon and Pacific Railway Company.—(Mr. Oliver.)

Bill (No. 166) respecting the Temiscouata Railway Company.—(Mr. McAlister.)

Bill (No. 71) to incorporate the Algoma Central Railway Company.—(Mr. Dymont.)

FOREIGN IMMIGRATION.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assinibola). Mr. Speaker, when the recess arrived I was dealing with the question of Chinese immigration into British Columbia, and I referred to the Report of the Royal Commission on Chinese Immigration in 1885, in the resume of which we read as follows :

Everywhere the railway man and the mine-owners, the manufacturers and the housekeepers, the merchants and the shop-keepers, are against absolute exclusion, but the very best friends of the Chinamen think their immigration should be regulated.

The writer of the report, evidently looking at the state of things then existing in British Columbia, and in looking forward to what has actually taken place since, wrote as follows :—

That now (if here a speculative thought may enter) British Columbia has a great opportunity, by welcoming Chinamen, and thus securing not only cheaper labour than California, but conciliating the good-will and fixing the attention of a people, from the vast resources and inchoate wealth of whose country the veil is only just being drawn aside, whose commerce is of great value, and on the completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway may be of incalculable value. British Columbia has many features in common with California. It is a country which needs local railways; it is a mining country; it is a fruit-growing country. It possesses, besides, enormous resources in timber, lands and fisheries. If, therefore, British Columbia were to decide that the undoubted evils of Chinese immigration were largely counterbalanced by other considerations, what would happen is this: she would by vigorous legislation secure that her mines would be worked on a large scale, the riches of the country being thus enormously increased and her treasury swelled; she would engross nearly all the coal and timber trade and much of the fruit trade of the Pacific coast, while her fish would largely supply the markets of the eastern and central parts of the continent, and even with Europe no insignificant commerce would be within her grasp; her wealth positively, possibly and, above all, relatively to California, would develop at a ratio not short of mathematical; she would literally shoot ahead as one of the great seats of commerce and industrial activity; and, her position achieved, she could then apply herself to the political and social problem, and by the aid of the Dominion Parliament, deal with that.

It is quite clear that the writer of this report saw what was the great danger that was attaching to Chinese labour in British Columbia at that time, and that he looked forward with a steady eye to the time coming when to deal with that immigration would be an absolute necessity.

Mr. MORRISON. Whose report is that?

Mr. DAVIN. It is the Report of the Royal Commission on Chinese Immigration.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Who wrote the report?

Mr. DAVIN. It is signed by Mr. Chapleau.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Was it written by him?

Mr. DAVIN. His name is to it.

Mr. MAXWELL. It was the hon. gentleman himself who wrote it.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Chapleau's name is to it.

Mr. MAXWELL. You wrote it yourself.

Mr. DAVIN. When this report was written the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maxwell) was, I suppose, making his studies, to use a French idiom. How can he know anything about it? The report continues:

That assuming Chinese immigrants of the labouring class will persist in retaining their present characteristics of Asiatic life, where these are strikingly peculiar and distinct from western, and that the influx will continue to increase, this immigration should be dealt with by Parliament; but no legislation should be such as would give a shock to great interests and enterprises established before any probability that Parliament would interfere with that immigration arose. Questions of vested rights might come up, and those ought to be carefully considered before action is taken.

That, therefore, if restrictive legislation were considered opportune it should aim at gradually-achieved results, and the history of the questions, as well as the evidence, shows that by legislation regulating, not excluding, Chinese labourers, every purpose can be effected which those who apprehend evils from Chinese immigration could and actually do desire.

What I want to point out is, that the commission reporting in 1885 looked forward to this Parliament legislating in the premises. The same year the chairman of that commission, as will be seen by looking at "Hansard," introduced a Bill and it was passed into law, in which clause 4 provides for a duty on each Chinese coming into Canada of $50. Reading that report which, as I say, was signed by my late lamented friend Mr. Chapleau, who was then the Secretary of State, and taking section 4 of the Act passed at the instance of that hon. gentleman, it is perfectly clear that the idea at that time was that a fine of $50 was only a commencement, and that that minimum fine was put in the Act in order to give British Columbia at that time a certain advantage which undoubtedly she received from Chinese immigration restricted in that way, and to prevent the shock to important interests that would have been greatly damaged if there had been anything like prohibitive legislation. That legislation was passed in that form, looking forward to this Parliament at some future time adopting still more restrictive legislation.

Now, Sir, these Acts which have been disallowed at the instance of the present Minister of Justice were perfectly competent to the legislature of British Columbia, and I say—and I strongly urge it upon the Government—that now that they have disallowed that legislation, which British Columbia was perfectly competent to pass, they are bound to introduce this session legislation that will give to the labour interests in British Columbia and the labour interests all over Canada—because labour has a solidarity that binds the interests of the workmen on the Pacific coast with the interests of the workmen of the Atlantic—that relief in the premises that was pointed to by the report of the Chinese commission of 1885 and by the legislation of 1885 interpreted by that report.

With regard to the immigration of Doukhobors and Galicians, both in and out of this House, I have stood aside, and I stand aside, from most of my friends in the west who take an interest in this matter. I never could say a word against any class of men, any poor men, come from whence they may, who can assimilate with our population, and who come into the country to make their way; and I have never made any criticism on that immigration further than to regret the grouping of them together into colonies. I think it would be better for themselves, for the North-west and for Canada, if they were not put together in blocks, but were mixed with the people, so that assimilation would be more rapid. While not saying one word against the Doukhobor or Galician, I do regret, and I must persistently regret, that we get, comparatively speaking, so few immigrants from England, Ireland and Scotland. Let me direct your attention to the report on immigration in the Blue-book of the Department of the Interior for the year ending 1898. We find that there were 22,781 coming from ocean ports. How many of these were English, how many were Irish, and how many were Scotch? My friend, Mr. Devlin, only presents us with 733 from Ireland; we got only 1,400 from Scotland, and only 9,473 from England, making altogether 11,608. Taking that from 22,781, you have 11,173 foreigners, as compared with the numbers that I have given of Englishmen, Irishmen and Scotchmen. I think that is regrettable, and I cannot but think that with more effort and more inducement, and a more abiding sense of the importance of having those Anglo-Saxons who always excite admiration in the breast of the Prime Minister, we might have more from the Imperial isles. Now, having expressed my own individual view in thus welcoming the Doukhobor and the Galician to Canada—and I have no authority to speak for any one else—it is my duty to give expression, in their own language, to fears on the part of my constituents in this regard; and I have a letter here from Kinbrae which thus refers to the condition of the Galicians:

I write you in haste. What about the Galicians? They are dying north of Saltcoats like sheep—three and four a day. Two police and several special constables are sworn in to keep them rounded in and quarantined, and the doctor is constantly with them at the expense of the Dominion treasury. This is a nice state of affairs—that we are to be subject to all kinds of diseases, and also have to contribute by taxes to keep a doctor.

There is some very strong language used here which I will quote:

Is it not going to stop, or is Sifton to be allowed for all time to bring in such miserable paupers and call them settlers?

That is a letter which, of course, I am bound to read to the House. I would rather the language were not so strong; but I think we ought to know what the Minister of the Interior is doing with those Galicians, and this man is a responsible farmer. Some time ago I called the attention of the Minister of the Interior to a paragraph that appeared in the newspapers with regard to the condition of the Galicians north of Saltcoats. I did so in the interests of the Galicians themselves. If these people were suffering, and if they needed help, it was the duty of the Minister of the Interior, who is responsible for bringing them in, to attend to them and to see that they had this doctor that my friend and correspondent deprecates, and the expense of whom he seems unwilling to pay—a feeling in which I do not at all sympathize with him; but what I want to point out is this. Here is a letter coming to me from a respectable farmer, and saying positively that a state of things exists as to which the Minister of the Interior a week or two ago assured me, I think by letter, across the House, that there was nothing whatever in it.

Mr. DAVIS. There might not be.

Mr. DAVIN. Of course, I cannot guard my correspondent; but I do not see how he could invent this out of the whole cloth. Since the 1st of July, 1896, to the 31st of December, 1898, we received 17,287 foreigners; and I have only to say that I myself have no inclination to shut the door in the face of any kind of immigrants who can assimilate with our people; but I repeat, what I have just said, that more energy should be devoted to bringing in immigrants from England, Ireland and Scotland, and in that way we would be not only fulfilling a duty to Canada and a duty to the mother country, but we should be supplying the very best material to mix with the foreign element, and to maintain the position of our country as a British colony.

Mr. T. O. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). I shall not take up much of the time of the House in discussing this question. As far as the Chinese are concerned, I must say that I am not interested in them and know very little about them. The hon. member for Victoria, B.C. (Mr. Prior), however, appears to know very considerable about them, and he has told us that he has a Chinese cook. One thing, however surprises me, and that is if the state of affairs is such as he represents, how is it that although that hon. gentleman's party were in power about eighteen years, and although that hon. gentleman was a member of the late Government a short time ago, they did not do something towards doing away with this state of affairs in British Columbia, which he has so pitifully described this afternoon. Conditions certainly could not have changed so much in the last five years as to warrant radical measures now which were not required then. If the state of affairs he describes exists to-day, it must also have existed when he was a member of the Cabinet, and I should think that a gentleman of his pronounced views would have seen that that question was dealt with then. But it all depends, evidently, on whose ox is gored.

With reference to the Doukhobors and the Galicians, the hon. gentleman frankly told us he did not know anything about them. If he did not, he should have left the discussion and the bringing up of this question to some one else. He acknowledged that he did not know anything about them, and before the hon. gentleman got through he proved that admission very successfully. But he made some statements in which I cannot agree. One was that the people of Saskatchewan sent a petition to this House to have the Galicians withdrawn. I think he will do me the credit of saying that I should know a little more what the people of the Saskatchewan want than he. And for my part, I have never heard anything about such a petition, and if any such had been sent down here, I certainly would have heard of it. In place of the people of the Saskatchewan petitioning to have the Galicians withdrawn, we are getting in some more, so that we are evidently perfectly satisfied with them, and I can assure the hon. member for West Assinibolia that they are not dying off like sheep.

I was glad to see the stand taken by the hon. member for West Assinibolia (Mr. Davin). He did not agree with the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Prior). He had nothing to say against the Galicians and Doukhobors—not a word—but he made one remark which I regretted to hear in his speech, and that was his description of his own countrymen as a beggarly lot.

Mr. DAVIN. I did not say that. I quoted the well-known phrase of Shakspeare, "A beggarly array of empty benches." What I meant was that we had just got 733, and it was in reference to that small number that I made the quotation from Shakspeare.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not know what the hon. member meant, but he certainly made use of the expression that they were a beggarly lot.

Mr. DAVIN. No, I did not.

Mr. DAVIS. Of course, I accept his statement. The hon. member for Victoria alluded further to Prof. Robertson, who is the gentleman in charge of the Presbyterian missions in the North-west Territories and Manitoba, and he told us that Prof. Robertson had said something down here against the Galicians. I wish to draw his attention to the fact that I have here a letter from Prof. Robertson, who, I acknowledge, is an authority on immigration, because, owing to his connection with the mission in Manitoba and the North-west Territories, he has to travel a great deal over the country, it is part of his business to meet these people, and therefore an opinion from him must certainly have great value. I wish to read what Prof. Robertson has said of these same Galicians:

Dear Sir,—Mr. Knowles, of this city, whom I knew several years ago as a resident of Prince Albert, called to see me to-day on your behalf, asking for a copy of one of the papers in which an interview of mine, in reference to the Galicians, was published. I was sorry I could not oblige him, as I had no copy with me. The substance of the "interview" can, however, be given in a few sentences. Some of these people I saw at Dominion City, and a large number in the Dauphin district. Their young women I saw in private houses in Manitoba as servants. They impressed me as people of good physique, clean-blooded and energetic. From cap to clog their dress was peculiar, but a change here is easy. The dress of the Mennonites was and is peculiar, but they are proving themselves fair settlers. The Galicians, I was informed by those who knew them better than I, are industrious, frugal, thrifty, ready to do any kind of work at prevalling wages. A number of their young women go out to service, they learn our language rapidly, and seem anxious to know what is required to be done, and know how to do it to please. They are going to help to solve the "servant girl" problem.

If the hon. member for Victoria is troubled about the servant girl question, as he appears to be, since he told us he could not get a servant girl, and had to employ a Chinaman, although he does not seem to have much love for that class, let him come to the district of Saskatchewan and he will get there a very nice Galician girl.

At several places I was informed that these girls, after getting some needed clothes for themselves, sent regularly the most of their wages to help their fathers and mothers to make a home. Seeing some of their children playing at Dauphin, I said to them: "Are you not Galicians?" "No," they replied, "we Canadians; we not Galicians now." These children will grow up with the country. A deputation waited on the Rev. Dr. King, principal of Manitoba College, and myself, to ascertain whether something could be done to supply some of their people with missionaries. The interview was so satisfactory that we promised to do all in our power to help them. Two of their young men are now studying in Manitoba College with a view to the ministry; they are making satisfactory progress in their studies, and they are well thought of by their fellow students, and students in such cases are good judges.

These people may not be civilized up to our standard, they may not be so familiar with representative institutions as we are, they may be ignorant of our traditions, aspirations, ideas, but they seem to have in them the stuff of which good settlers are made. * * * It might be added that it has come to my knowledge that several Canadians and "Britishers" have married Galician women, and that more of this work of assimilation is likely to go on. Canadian women seem to dislike the west, and necessity is laid on some men to seek foreign alliances. Let Galician girls become familiar with English, and promotions from kitchen to parlour, in present social conditions, will neither be few nor undesirable. Since the substance of this letter has already appeared in print, I cannot reasonably offer any objections to your showing it to any of your friends.

This is a letter from Prof. Robertson himself, who gives in it a very good account of the Galicians, and I take it he ought to know more about them than the hon. member for Victoria. With reference to the Doukhobors, the hon. gentleman did not seem to be any more pleased with them than with the Galicians. Well, I might tell the hon. gentleman that there are more bores in this country than the Doukhobors. He quoted from a newspaper out west called the "West," and also from the Edmonton "Bulletin." As far as the newspaper "West" is concerned, it is well known in the North-west as a terribly strong partisan organ, without any kind of love for the Minister of the Interior, and for that reason keeps slashing away at that hon. gentleman and his department. As regards the Edmonton "Bulletin," the hon. gentleman says that is a paper published by a gentleman who sits on this side and which ought, therefore, to have some weight. Well, all I have to say on that point is this. I have only to say that if we take into consideration the articles written in the same paper about the Edmonton route, it would seem that we cannot always credit what that paper says. The editor seems to take very strong objections to things that do not exactly suit him. I have here a clipping from a Conservative paper, the Stratford "Herald." This shows the opinion of a Conservative editor on the Doukhobors and the Galicians as well. This is quoted from an editorial:

Why should not the Galicians and Doukhobors in time make good citizens? How much better than they were the ancestors of many of those who are now glib in the utterance of gibes at the new immigrants? The great need of Canada is population, and the time has not come to be over-particular and dainty, and to insist that all new settlers must wear gloves and part their hair in the middle, and be experts as to when it is good table manners to use a knife, a fork or a spoon. It is more material to inquire whether they are fitted to coax into activity some of our millions of acres of idle lands and make them multiply business for our factories, our railways and merchants, and thus help to feed others besides themselves. Those who do not like the Doukhobors do not have to live with them; goodness knows Canada is big enough, and the vacant lots numerous enough, to keep them hundreds of miles apart. It is time to stop the nonsensical abuse of people who with a proper chance under good Canadian laws and language and institutions will, with little doubt, develop into useful and creditable Canadians. Who knows but we may have a Doukhobor for Premier some day, and why not?

This gentleman seems to have risen above partyism, and is willing to give the facts of the case. Now, here is another small clipping from the Montreal "Gazette" of yesterday. Talking about the idea of planting a colony of Doukhobors, which has been mooted for some time, the "Gazette" says:

The idea of planting a colony of Doukhobors in the Lake St. John district came too late to be taken advantage of, but their friends will be glad to know that the new immigrants made such a favourable impression on the French Canadians, who are evidently disposed to give the Doukhobors a warm welcome if they could have stayed in the province of Quebec.

There is a clipping from a paper that every hon. gentleman on the other side will say is a paper with a reputation for fairness—and I think I can say the same myself. A short time ago the people of Ontario were trying to get a colony of these same Doukhobors into the Rainy River district. There is not a province of the Dominion but would be glad to settle within its bounds; and, if my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Prior) knew them as well as he knows the Chinese, he would be trying to get a colony of them into British Columbia. Now, in a country like the North-west Territories, we cannot be so very particular about the immigrants we get in as the hon. member for Victoria would like. He wants to know why we do not get Canadians into the North-west. We like to see Canadians coming in there; they are the very best settlers we get. But if the hon. gentleman takes a dollar from one pocket and puts it into another, he does not find himself any richer. To take people from one part of the country and plant them in another does not increase our population. We need the people from outside, who will take up land and increase the production of the country, for, with the increase of production, there will be an increase of consumption, and everybody will get a share of the prosperity thus caused. In the meantime, we cannot be too particular. I submit that the people coming from northern Europe are first-class people to get into the North-west Territories—Swedes, Norwegians and others of that class. Their climate is much the same as ours; they are accustomed to farming under the same conditions as they find in the North-west Territories. Any man who goes to the North-west, and is prepared to work hard and live cheap, as these people are, will succeed. These are the best class of settlers we can get. I travelled through the Galician settlement in my district last winter. I went through their buildings and stables, and I never found cattle—and I pretend to know something about stock—in better shape than the Galicians kept theirs. Their cattle were fat and looked well. The people were getting ready implements for the seeding in the spring. They were nice, clean-looking people, and were all working. I have never heard complaints of them, except from a few people who are scared and do not know what they are scared about. I had a letter, something the same as the one that has been read, wanting to know if these foreigners were going to have privileges that were not given to Canadians. Evidently, the writer had read in some paper—probably a Conservative paper—that privileges were being granted to foreigners that were not given to Canadians. I wrote to the gentleman, and asked him to explain what privileges they were getting. But he has not explained. I tried to get from the Minister of the Interior some privileges for three or four hundred families of Hungarians coming into my district. But he would not give any privileges, and said all people were treated alike. I think that if the gentlemen who are interested in this matter will look into it, they will find that people are treated the same, no matter what country they come from.

Now, the Mennonites have been mentioned. These people were brought in by the Mackenzie Government. They were abused, just as the Galicians and the Doukhobors are abused to-day. The country rang from end to end with complaints about these people who were being brought in and given the best land in the North-west Territories. As a matter of fact, the land they were given was a swamp, and that swamp at Gretna they have turned into a perfect garden. Their land to-day is worth $40 an acre, and they are selling it out and coming up to the district of Saskatchewan. They have turned out among the best settlers that ever came into the North-west Territories. Since they have come into our district of Saskatchewan, we find that they are energetic and progressive. They are strong supporters of our public school system; they establish school districts, and send their children to the schools. Of course, these people are of the second generation. They live much the same as other Canadians—build the same kind of houses, buy the same sort of things: it is nothing to see them riding about on bicycles. My hon. friend from Victoria talks a great deal about getting in Anglo-Saxons. I suppose he alludes to Englishmen. We had a class in the North-west Territories and Manitoba in the early days—Englishmen—who did not assist much in the development of the country. We had a lot of gentlemen farmers around Calgary, and some in my own district. They are known in the North-west Territories as "remittance men," and I suppose my hon. friend from Victoria also knows something about them. They wanted to farm on horseback, or in a buggy, to wear top-boots, knee-breeches and eye-glasses. Of course, they went to the dogs. When their money was gone, they went out and abused the country, not only from end to end of Canada, but all over the old country as well. They said the country was no good.

Now, I claim these people are an injury. What we want in that country are farmers, men who understand agriculture. We do not care whether they are poor or not, men with good strong arms are the capital that we want in the North-west Territories. Another class of people was brought in there a short time ago, and I will give hon. gentlemen opposite credit for them. They brought in farmers from France. Those people have done remarkably well since they came in. There were about 150 families of them who settled in my district, and without exception they are about the best settlers that we have there. They are thrifty, and get along well. Of course the hon. gentlemen brought in a few notaries, and lawyers, and fellows like that, who had broken down in business. Those were soon starved out, and had to go back. But the men who knew anything about agriculture have all succeeded. I hope that the Minister of the Interior, in looking after immigrants, will bring in a few more of the same kind. The member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) gave us a list of the different nationalities that came in. I have here a statement of the number of immigrants of various nationalities coming in, and also the number of homestead entries, and these figures show the progress that is being made under the conduct of this business by the Minister of the Interior. In 1897 there were 2,383 homestead entries made in the North-west Territories; in 1898 there were 4,528, just about double. In 1896, the last year that hon. gentlemen opposite were conducting the immigration policy of this country, there were only 456 homestead entries. I think that progress speaks well for the hon. Minister of the Interior. Now, here is a statement of the countries sending immigrants for 1897 and 1898. In 1897 there were: England, 1,519; Ireland, 69, and these, I may say, were all good immigrants. Scotland, 205; Germany, 520; Scandinavia, 474; French and Belgians, 383; United States, 712; Canadians, 2,373; Galicians, 4,363; Russians, 28; other countries, 218. In 1898 we find a remarkable increase. From England we received 3,203; Ireland, 266; Scotland, 701; Germans, 998; Scandinavians, 532; French and Belgians, 368; United States, 2,643. In 1897 we only had 712 from the United States, showing that we are making good progress in that respect. The totals are: 1897, 10,867; 1898, 27,856.

Now, I thought it strange at first that the hon. member for Victoria, B.C. (Mr. Prior) should bring this matter up, but after he had proceeded a little while and commenced to talk about these men getting on to the voters' list in Manitoba and the North-west Territories, he gave the whole situation away. He said that these people would get on to the voters' list, and that they would be an injury to the existing settlers up there. I do not know who he meant they would injure, but I suppose it would be his political friends. When he talked about their being dragged up by the official to votes he gave the whole thing away.

Mr. PRIOR. The quotation I read in regard to their being put on the voters' list was from a Liberal paper.

Mr. DAVIS. I accept the statement; I did not hear the hon. gentleman give the name of the paper. But I know he laid great stress about these people getting on the voters' list. He evidently believed what he read in that paper. He said they were going to be led to the polls like lambs to the slaughter by officials of this Government. I will tell the hon. gentleman that he need not be afraid. He must not underrate the ingenuity of his political friends in the west, because they will manage to get some of them. I read in a newspaper the other day where one of these men the hon. gentleman says are going to be dragged up to vote, and who had only been two years and a half in the country; some of the political friends of the hon. gentleman dragged him up, and got out some kind of papers for him, and got him put on to the voters' list in Winnipeg, but the affidavits were objected to and the scheme didn't work. The hon. gentleman's political friends are up to all kinds of tricks. They will get their share of the immigrants coming into the country, or I am very much mistaken.

I may say that so far as my own district is concerned we are quite satisfied with the Doukhobors. We are getting a lot of them up there. Prince Hillkoff has picked out a place for them on the Saskatchewan where they are going to settle. I hope the Minister will send us some more of them. So far as the Galicians are concerned, we have lots of room for them. The hon. member for Victoria says it would be better to go slow in bringing out these people. Well, we have been going slow for the last 18 years. When the hon. gentlemen opposite took office in 1878, they found that country with some 25,000 or 30,000 people in it, and when they went out of office there were only some 75,000 people. As the result of their labours for 18 years, only 40,000 people were brought in. And yet the hon. gentleman advises us to go slow. I think we have been going very slow for the last 18 years, and it is time we got a move on to build up the country. They prophesied great things of what they were going to do for that country. The leader of the Opposition said that 400,000,000 bushels of wheat, I think it was, was going to come out of that country in a short time as the result of the immigrants they were going to bring in there. But their anticipations did not materialize, and one of the reasons was because they did not put people in there to grow this grain. We cannot raise grain without having somebody to work the soil. At the rate hon. gentlemen opposite were going, it would take 500 or 600 years before that amount of wheat could be produced. The Minister of the Interior has put as many people in that country in one year as they did in eighteen years, and still they are not satisfied. They object to these people because they are afraid they are going to be good voters, that is about the strength of it. I hope the Minister of the Interior will go on and bring in plenty more of the same class of people.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). The right hon. the First Minister referred to the fact that the Government had disallowed the British Columbia Bill making further restrictions upon the importation of Chinese and Japanese. In reference to Japanese immigration into this country, we, on this side of the House, can very easily come to the assistance of the Government, because, to my mind, there is a very wide distinction between the Chinese and the Japanese. As the Prime Minister has pointed out, the Japanese are the allies of Great Britain to-day and they have been in the past. It would properly be considered an unfriendly act for any portion of the British Empire, recognizing the responsibility we have assumed as a part of that Empire, and knowing the close and cordial relations which exist between the two powers, to do anything, such as is contemplated by the legislation of British Columbia, against the Japanese. They are widely different from the Chinese in that they are more rapidly, than any people of whom we have any knowledge, acquiring European civilization. They are more anxious, perhaps, than any other people to adopt the English language, and to adapt themselves to British ways, British laws and the habits of civilized nations. The strong objection which is properly taken to the importation of large numbers of Chinese into this country does not apply with equal force, or perhaps with any force, to the importation of Japanese. In regard to the importation of these other classes of people, to whom reference was made this afternoon, I look with a good deal of apprehension, as I believe the people of this country will, on the efforts of the Government in bringing in these Galicians and Doukhobors and other peoples from the southern parts of Europe. Nearly thirty years ago, during the early settlement of Manitoba, the very best portion of that province was given up to the Mennonites. It was thought that they would be most admirable settlers, because they had many of the qualities which make good settlers. They had those qualities which we are told to-day characterize the Galicians and Doukhobors—industry, the desire to live on the farm, perseverance in their pursuits, and economy in living. For my part, I think the results of the settlement of the Mennonites are, in a great many respects, disappointing to the people of Canada, because they have not assimilated with the rest of the population in the country where they are living as it was expected they would and as it was desired. They have kept largely to themselves; they have continued their former habits of living, their forms of settlement and their system of education. There are many other things that we do not object to, because, although we have our system of Government, we know that it is not perfect, and, if there are other systems which experience has proved to be good, there is no reason why we should not profit by them. But after the lapse almost of a generation, we are told that these people are continuing to this day to keep themselves apart from the rest of the population and that they are not becoming Canadian citizens in the true and proper sense of the term. The Doukhobors are like them in many respects, I assume, having the qualities which the Mennonites have and which we thought would recommend them as admirable settlers in our North-west. The hon. Minister of the Interior told us what an admirable lot the Galicians were, how they had all the qualities that go to make good settlers, how they should be encouraged to come to this country and that the Government were doing what they could in that direction. In one breath he told us that, and, in another, he said: We are not going to discourage unduly their immigration, but we are going to discourage their immigration to a limited extent. Fifty thousand of them coming in one year would swamp us and would be injurious to Canada, but 5,000 would be an admirable number of Doukhobors to bring in each year, and we should encourage the immigration of that number. If the statements which the hon. Minister has made are correct as to the admirable qualities of these people, we could not have too many of them in a year, but the very fact that the hon. gentleman himself is discouraging their immigration to a larger extent than 5,000 people per annum, shows that he recognizes that the statements that he is making about these people must be taken at a discount. I am disposed to look with a great deal of apprehension upon the importation of Doukhobors and Galicians, and people of that stamp. Their traditions and history have been such as not to encourage us to have too many of them in our midst. My own observation and experience are that people from the north of Europe are the most desirable class of settlers that we can have in Canada outside of those from the British islands, or those who have been of British extraction, who have gone to the United States and are returning to Canada. They would not only be of assistance to Canada, but they would be assisting in that great Imperial work of building up the British Empire. If a British subject from the British islands goes to the United States he assists in building up that country, his children grow up to be American citizens, and may become hostile to Great Britain in a few years, but if he comes to Canada, he assists in building up the British power and influence on this half of the North American continent, and while he is assisting to build up the British Empire, he is helping us in Canada. This is the most desirable class of settlers we can get. After this class I think the best settlers we can get are these from the nations of the north of Europe. Many of the Icelanders have gone into Manitoba; they are an educated people; they have those qualities that characterize the men of the northern zone; they are industrious; they become good settlers and British citizens with British instincts and ideas. They rapidly acquire our habits and they assimilate themselves with our population. The same may be said of the inhabitants of Norway and Sweden. These people have gone, in considerable numbers, into the North-west Territories and Manitoba; they have scattered over the country and they have gone and settled among the Canadian people. They become Canadians themselves; they are anxious to adopt our language, to obey our laws and to be regarded as Canadians. That is not a theory, but it is the experience of the North-west Territories. They have scattered themselves among the English-speaking people up there. These are the classes that we should devote ourselves, I submit, to getting into this Dominion of Canada, and, from what I hear, these are the classes to whom the least attention has been paid for by the immigration department of this country. I regret that, because the department of immigration has been proceeding on entirely wrong lines. I would sooner see 10,000 immigrants from the British Isles come to Canada than 20,000 or 30,000 of those Doukhobors, the immigration of whom the Minister himself admits we have to restrict. The English are a migratory and adventurous race; no matter how well off they may be at home, there instinct is to spread out to all parts of the earth, and it is men of our blood, men like those who have made Canada what she is to-day, whom we should encourage to come here to assist us in building up a great British nation on this half of the North American continent.

Mr. HEWITT BOSTOCK (Yale and Cariboo). Mr. Speaker, I was greatly pleased to-day to find the members from British Columbia, on both sides of the House, in accord on this question of Chinese immigration. I was not before aware that my hon. friend from Victoria, B.C. (Mr. Prior), took such a strong stand on this question, for I do not remember having heard that he brought forward the subject with any great force as a supporter of the late Conservative Government, or even as a member of that Government. The Act under which Chinese immigration is now regulated was passed in 1885, and as the Conservative Government was in power until 1896, they had considerable time to deal with this matter in a more stringent manner than they did. The stand taken to-day by the hon. member (Mr. Prior) is a good deal stronger than he has ever taken before.

Mr. PRIOR. Really, I am glad to hear that.

Mr. BOSTOCK. This Chinese question, of course, affects British Columbia a great deal more than it does any other portion of the Dominion, and in view of the vast extent of Canada, the difficulty we have is to impress the people all through the country with a correct idea on this, which is to some extent a local matter. There are many who think that the Act of 1885 applies to all Chinamen, but that Act is specially worded so as to deal with the objectionable class of Chinamen who are taken over here in herds, as slaves, to compete unfairly with the workmen of this country. These Chinamen have been accustomed to living in such a state of misery in their own country that they can afford to work for cheap wages here, and the ultimate result of such competition by them must be that our own workmen will be forced down to the same miserable level of life, a thing which we do not want in Canada. Any one who has been on the Canton River, as I have been, will see the Chinamen swarming all over the river, practically covering the water with their boats, so that you can hardly see the river at all. They are born in these boats, live in them, are married in them and die in them, and practically they have no opportunity of availing of the advantages of civilization, such as we understand it on this continent. It is these Canton Chinamen, and the coolies from the rice fields who are brought over here by the Chinese companies and turned loose on the labour market of British Columbia. It is these that we desire to see kept out of Canada. The first section of the Act of 1885 expressly provides that the expression "Chinese immigrant" means,

Any person of Chinese origin entering Canada and not entitled to the privilege of exemption provided for by section 4 of this Act.

Section 4 of the Act specially exempts

The members of the diplomatic corps or other representatives and their suite and servants, as well as all consular agents, merchants, men of science and students, who are bearers of certificates of identity specifying their occupation and their object in coming to Canada, or other similar documents issued by the Chinese Government.

I point this out because I have reason to know that many gentlemen in this part of the country think that this law applies to all Chinamen entering Canada. As a matter of fact, the law does not apply to the better class of Chinese who have capital and who propose to go into business on their own account. Another strong objection to Chinese immigrants is that they do not settle on the land, or add to its productiveness. The only agricultural work they do is market gardening outside the cities, and they may be classed in the category of parasites, who live on the people of this country. They work for a number of years without spending much money in Canada, and when they accumulate sufficient money to go back to China, they do so and others come and take their place. I do not myself think that at the present time there is any danger of the people of British Columbia being placed at any disadvantage through, I might almost say, the Chinese being absolutely prohibited from entering this country. We have quite a number of them in there now, and all the time we have a large number of other immigrants who are ready to take their places, as soon as they know that these Chinamen are prohibited from coming into competition with them. I think it is very much more desirable, as has been pointed out by the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis), that we should have all through this country people such as these Galicians and others of that stamp to act as servants in our houses rather than these Chinamen. I do not class the Japanese in the same category as the Chinese at all. I think the Japanese are a more amenable class of people, and are much more easily assimilated with the European population than the Chinese can ever be. The Chinaman is much too conservative in his ideas and opinions ever to adopt the customs and habits of European people. They will not take the trouble to study our institutions, and they are quite content to come to this country and make a living without trying to improve their condition further than they are naturally obliged to do by the work in which they engage. In regard to mining in British Columbia, in which they have shown themselves to be apt pupils, they came over in large numbers in the first rush, when mining was started in British Columbia. I find in some of the British Columbia reports that in the early sixties they had as many as three thousand Chinamen at Yale, and a large number of those were reported to have gone back to China, carrying sums varying from $2,000 to $4,000. These Chinamen never go out into the country, and find new ground for themselves, but we always find them following up the white man, and working over again the ground which he has already worked. They do not help forward the opening up and development of the country. I was very pleased to hear the statement made by the right hon. leader of the Government on this question this afternoon. The members from British Columbia on this side of the House, who have been pressing this matter on the attention of the Government for some time past, were very pleased to hear the leader of the Government express the view that he expressed in the House to-day, and I hope it will result in our obtaining the legislation which we desire.

With regard to the immigration into the North-west, I cannot say that I know very much about the people referred to. On coming down here at the commencement of the session, I saw a number of Doukhobors in Winnipeg and at other points along the line of the railway, and they certainly impressed me as being an exceedingly good stamp of settlers. They gave one the impression that they were a strong, healthy people who would be able to do a great deal in opening up and developing the uncultivated districts of our prairie country. I might almost say that it is an insult to people of that kind that the question of their coming into this country should be discussed with the question of the Chinese. What we want, as was said this afternoon by the hon. Minister of the Interior, is a class of people who will go out into the country and live on the land, and so create a market for the merchants and traders of this country who have goods to sell. The great tendency in every country at the present day, especially in the older countries, is for people to leave the land and crowd into the cities; and if we can secure for this country a class of settlers who will go on to the land, and build up communities in that way, it will help the merchant and the trader of the country. These people will form a nucleus, and they will also in time, I think, become imbued with the desire to become like the people among whom they live, and to adopt the manners and customs of the country.

Mr. A. McNEILL (North Bruce). I do not intend to detain the House more than a moment or two on this subject. In the first place, I was very sorry this afternoon, when my right hon. friend the leader of the Government rose to reply to my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Prior), that he adopted the tone of reply which he thought right to adopt. I am not complaining of his complaint about moving the adjournment of the House. That I think was a fair criticism; but I was very sorry that the right hon. gentleman thought it right to cast across the House a charge of breach of faith. I do think that is a thing which should only be done in case of most absolute proof. In this case there was really no excuse for it; and I think that we on this side of the House have reasonable ground for complaint that no withdrawal of that charge was made after the statement that was made by the Minister of the Interior. It is a very grave thing, for the leaders of one party to charge a breach of faith against the leaders of the other party in this House, because if we cannot trust one another in matters of that kind, we are in a very bad condition to carry on the business of Parliament.

With regard to the statement of the right hon. gentleman on the subject of Mongolian immigration into this country, I was very much gratified to hear it. I thought his utterance on that subject was broad, and strong, and statesmanlike, if I may venture to say so, and I was very much gratified indeed to hear him adopt the tone he did adopt in reference to it.

With regard to the other question, the question of the filling up of our North-west Territories by Galicians and other European peoples, I must say I cannot follow altogether what was laid down by the Minister of the Interior. I was very glad to hear him say that he was using great exertion to get British people into the North-west Territories, and also to hear him make the statement that he was successful in getting a number of British people to come from the United States to settle there. But when he spoke as he did about not being in favour of standing at the borders with a microscope and a bludgeon to keep out intending immigrants, and implied, if he did not state definitely—and I am almost inclined to think that he went so far as to make the definite statement—that he thought we ought to receive almost any one who came to this country from Europe in order that we might fill up our lands as quickly as possible. I must say, I wish to enter my protest. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that he did not wish these people to come in in great numbers at once, but wished to see a flood of these people coming to the North-west Territory gradually. I venture to think that that is a very doubtful policy to pursue. With reference especially to foreign immigrants coming into our country, we ought to be exceedingly careful. I think it is very much better to move slowly and get immigration of the right kind, rather than to encourage in any way the immigration of people who will not prove to be, on the whole, suited to us in the long run. We know perfectly well that one of the great evils which is facing the republic to the south is this question of foreign immigration, and the fact that it has been overrun so much by that kind of immigration. For my part, I believe it is a dangerous doctrine to lay down, that we should encourage any considerable rush of these people into this country from the continent of Europe. I do not speak of Scandinavians; they are all right. But so far as these Galicians are concerned, from the information I have been able to gather about them—and I have information from one gentleman at least who is specially able to give an opinion on the subject, because he has been among them, and has seen them in their own country, and knows all about them—his assurance is, that they are a most undesirable class of immigrants. I venture to enter my protest against any policy which would subject us to the risk of being flooded by these undesirable foreign immigrants, men who will overcome, perhaps, if allowed to come in in numbers, the British element of this country—overcome it, I mean, in numbers. My idea is, that it would be very much better for us to move slowly and get in the right kind of people. I cannot agree with my right hon. friend that it is all right to bring in men who refuse to perform the first duty of citizens, namely, to take up arms in defence of the state. I do not think that is a good policy. I think it is a very great evil with regard to any class of immigrants, and a very serious objection, that they are not prepared to take up arms in defence of the country that protects them. So far as the Galicians are concerned, I understand they are a most undesirable class. What we ought to do is to try and build up a British country and not have our own people overrun and swamped by a number of undesirable foreigners from the centre of Europe.

Mr. J. V. ELLIS (St. John). I desire to say a word or two on this question. I do not very often trouble the House, and am in sympathy with the right hon. First Minister in his desire that we should endeavour to shorten in some way, if possible, the debates. I think that at this period of the session there ought to be an understanding, or agreement, or some rule, or method, arrived at by which the debates could be curtailed to the necessary limits required by the business of the country. I am not going to make any criticism on the hon. gentleman, in this respect, who brought up this subject, but I think that we might, one and all, endeavour to facilitate business and get home. I followed the hon. gentleman with a great deal of attention, and I observed that, in endeavouring to make out a case, he quoted a number of newspaper blood and thunder articles about these people selling their wives; but he knows very well that that is a thing which occasionally occurs in England. He could take a file of English papers to-morrow, and, no doubt, cut out some paragraphs about Englishmen selling their wives. I read the other day an account of a Frenchman selling his wife, and must say that I was shocked by it, because that is very rare with Frenchmen, but I would not have been shocked, had it been an account of an Englishman doing the same thing, for hon. gentlemen who know English customs, know that we occasionally read of such a thing taking place among certain classes in that country. The courts do not authorize it, and no one would think of judging the English people by it. No one would think of quoting any paragraph giving an account of such a transaction, against the habits and customs of the English people.

The main impression left on my mind with regard to the North-west is the great extent of that country. When I dream of it by night or think of it by day, I see a great space of land that ought to be settled, and, therefore, I agree in the idea that it should be settled. I am not going to speak with regard to Chinese or Japanese, but with reference to the Galicians and Doukhobors. I saw quite a number of Galicians on different occasions, and they appeared certainly to be a tractable people, well subject to control, and to have come to this country with a sincere desire to eke out an honest living. They bring with them, of course, their national customs, and to a certain extent a national existence that may be more difficult to overcome than the customs of the Doukhobors, but if the civilization of this country is not equal to cope with the comparatively small number of people who will come in from Europe, if it is not capable of holding its own, it is a civilization that is not worth maintaining at all. I am satisfied there can be no people, at any rate from Europe, brought into Canada who will injure Canadian institutions or in any way crowd Canadian life, because the conditions in which we live, material as well as mental and moral, are of themselves sufficiently strong to overcome any difficulties that might present themselves in the character of a people who come from Galicia or any other part of Europe. With regard to the Doukhobors, I cannot speak of people whom I saw only for three or four hours, with any authority, but I was a witness of the landing of them at St. John, when the first batch came across. I went over the ship, talked with the officers, talked with such of the men as I could find to talk with me through the interpreters of the Department of the Interior, and conversed with those who accompanied them, and who spoke the English language, and the impression I formed was, that they are a most desirable people to have in this country. I do not say that we should bring them in by the thousands, or tens of thousands, at one moment, but I think the ex-Controller of Customs (Mr. Wallace) rather misquoted the hon. Minister of the Interior with reference to what he said as regards numbers. I understood the hon. Minister to say that he desired only to bring them in in limited numbers, because he thought 5,000 were as many as could be controlled and managed by the officers of the department in one year. But, as regards the greater number, he was willing to spread it over a greater number of years. Now, the Doukhoborts are not a race, they are a sect. They leave their own country because they are driven out by the oppression and aggression of the dominant power there. They are driven along the same lines as English Quakers and dissenters were, some of whom were among the very best men in English history, men like George Fox and John Bunyan, men who were driven to the positions which they took by the tyranny of the magistrate, the injustice of the judge and the hardships of English prisons. And so the Doukhoborts were driven along the line of religious sentiment which has made them what they are by the national oppression of Russia. With these feelings or sentiments which they take up—I do not try to convert the House to Doukhobor sentiment—it was the most natural thing in the world that they should refuse to carry arms for a country which, if they did carry arms for it, would neither tolerate their opinions nor protect their property. The best thing they could do was to refuse to offer their lives to a country that refused to do anything for them. The forms of dissent from Russian orthodoxy which they have assumed must disappear in this country, because there is no ground for maintaining them—just as the Quakers have, to a large extent, disappeared, in the United States, and exist as a matter of sentiment rather than as a religious organization. So these sentiments of the Doukhoborts with regard to religion will, I believe, disappear in this country, and the Doukhobors will become a people like ourselves, not retaining their national habits, but under our institutions, with their industry and other good qualities, they will prove of great advantage to Canada. I found that on board the ship in which they came out they submitted themselves readily to the organization of the ship and to the officers of the ship. They assisted the officers by making an organization among themselves, and the men who were put to the front by them, they obeyed readily, doing all that was required of them. And when the landing took place and they were called upon to discharge their household goods and luggage, they laboured just as hard as any men possibly could to assist in that work. They were under perfect control. And the women of the party showed that they would readily take up with Canadian customs, because they esconced themselves at once in the comfortable cars provided by the Canadian Pacific Railway, quite as though they were used to those comforts, and at once began to make preparations to continue their journey. Many ladies of St. John came into contact with them in many ways during their short stay. The impression these people left was most favourable; and we all felt that it was a good augury for their future in Canada. Now, of course, I do not pretend to say what may happen in the future; but I am sure that these people have come here with the sincere desire to make good homes in Canada. I talked with their leaders, and that was the idea expressed throughout their conversation. Of course, everybody must be in sympathy with the suggestion made that we should have the best class of English, Irish or Scotch immigrants that we can get. But the day has gone by when we can take our pick. The British Empire has extended so wide that there are fields in every part of the world to which the British people can go. We must do the best we can under the circumstances, trusting to the power of our own civilization to make for these people comfortable homes here and to make them excellent citizens.

I dislike to detain the House, but I would like to mention that the sight of this ship-load of immigrants coming in and the incidents connected with it reminded an hon. gentleman who is a member of this Parliament, but not of this House, of an incident of sixty or seventy years ago. At that time, up one of the main rivers of New Brunswick, the Miramichi, a vessel came up the river laden with immigrants from Ireland. They were driven out of the ship, and upon the land, like sheep. The small group of English who lived there had not known that they were coming, and no preparation had been made for them. But something had to be done. The people who lived there thought they would be flooded by these newcomers, and the whole civilization of the place, such as it was, overturned. But natural sympathy asserted itself, and they made a place for the newcomers as well as they could. The third generation of those people are living to-day along the northern shores of New Brunswick and throughout the province. They have seats in the legislature, they have professorships and scholarships in the institutions of learning, and they are teachers of religion. They are as good citizens as it is possible to be. So, I believe, the Doukhobors will set aside their peculiarities, having no need for them here, and they will be ready to discharge every duty of citizenship as other citizens do. Their coming will be a great advantage to the country. I believe that men who come here a generation from this will be satisfied with the policy that brought into the country a people who are so well disposed as I believe these people to be to advance the interests of Canada.

Mr. McNEILL. What nationality were the immigrants to whom the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ellis) referred to?

Mr. ELLIS. Irish.

Mr. McNEILL. I suppose they would make good settlers.

Mr. WM. MCGREGOR (North Essex). I agree with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ellis), who has just taken his seat. In 1867, I had the pleasure of going to this North-west country, and I have had the pleasure of going there year after year since. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that to-day the great question for this Government to solve is the question how best to fill the western country, and how best to bring in there the things that the settlers require and to carry away to markets the products which are more than they can use. In 1867, we travelled 300 miles between St. Paul and Fort Garry, and there was not a single foot of that land occupied except at the Hudson's Bay posts. I had the pleasure of going over the same district last year, and I found every part of it occupied. In 1867 they did not grow a single bushel of grain in the larger portion of that district; last year they shipped from there one hundred millions of bushels of good Red Fife wheat. At that time the population of St. Paul was 19,000, and of Minneapolis 8,000. The population to-day of those cities is about 400,000. We should take advantage of the example which that country has shown us. We have a vast country to fill in the North-west. It is 800 miles from Winnipeg to Calgary, and the larger proportion of that country is fitted for settlement. We have 123 miles between Winnipeg and Rat Portage, and a very large proportion of that district is fitted for settlement. Then, when you take from Macleod to Edmonton and north, you find you have between four and five hundred miles from north to south of good country. The great question for this House to help this Government to settle is how to fill that country with the best people. It is true that we would be glad to ask England, Ireland and Scotland, Germany and France to send us the best they have. But those countries have been so employed with the demands of other countries that it is almost impossible to get a settler from them. We have to take what is offered us. I had the pleasure of being in this House twenty-five years ago, when the bringing in of the Mennonites was discussed. Then, as the Premier has said, there was more trouble with regard to the Mennonites than there has been about the Doukhobors and Galicians. Then we had another little wrangle with regard to the Icelanders. To-day we know there is no better settler coming from a foreign country than the Iclander. We all desire to send as many Canadians as possible to the North-west, because they have been trained here and know our ways, and they are nearer and dearer to us. We would like to get as many Americans as we can, because they understand our institutions. Now, not being able to get the number and the class we want, we must take what we can get and make the best of them. I have seen the Galicians, and to my mind they will make good settlers. They have come here for the purpose of making homes for themselves, and have brought their all with them. As to the Doukhobors, I feel satisfied that they will be all right. As for the Mennonites, they have proved themselves to be all that we could desire. It is true they have ways of their own, but nevertheless they eat, drink and sleep as we do, and they consume goods as we do, and I think they will become useful citizens. We have no greater question to solve in this country than that of filling up our North-west Territories with good settlers, and giving them transportation facilities in and out. I well remember the immigration from Ireland that took place 50 years ago after the severe famine in that country. A large number came and settled in our district. They were very poor, and worked in the stone quarries and at any other hard labour that was required of them. But their sons and their daughters are now an honour to any country that they belong to. They hold high positions in our district. The daughters have married sons of some of our best men, and their sons have married into some of our best families. I have no doubt that these people who are coming from Europe to this country will give a good account of themselves. I hope the Government will pursue their immigration policy with energy, because the great need of our western country is immigrants, in fact that country is almost valueless without settlers.

Mr. PRIOR. The right hon. leader of the Government saw fit to call me to account for bringing this matter before the House before the Orders of the Day were called. The reason that he gave was that he did not consider it of sufficient importance to be brought forward at that period. Now, I think the right hon. gentleman, if he will cast his memory back a few years when he sat at the left of the Speaker, will remember several occasions when he brought forward matters before the Orders of the Day were called, and when he was called to account for it by Sir John Thompson. So I do not think I am much to blame in view of these precedents. The right hon. gentleman saw fit also to charge me with a breach of faith in bringing it forward to-day, as he expected to take up some other business. Well, I can say this, that on Tuesday last I sent a letter to the Minister of the Interior telling him that next day, on the first opportunity, I would bring this forward before the Orders of the Day are called—I used those very words. The hon. gentleman came to me and asked if I would kindly take a seat on the front row of benches immediately before him, as he desired to be able to hear me clearly. Accordingly, on Wednesday I took my seat there, but the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) happened to catch the Speaker's eye before I did, and made a motion, so that I had to wait until to-day. The Minister of the Interior saw me before him with my books and papers and must have known that I was going to speak; so I do not know how I can be charged with a breach of faith. Besides that, the leader of the Government has cut off any chance there was for myself or any person else to speak on the Chinese question, by taking the only private members' day there was left. More than, that, when the hon. member for Burrard (Mr. Maxwell) brought up his motion it was declared to be out of order, which was tantamount to saying that there was nothing more to be said about it. The right hon. gentleman seems to think this matter is not urgent because it has been brought before the House for the last 25 years. Why, Sir, I think that fact shows that it is all the more urgent, it having been left in suspense for so long a time. Another thing the right hon. gentleman said was that I was appealing to the worst passions in a portion of the people. Now, if one of the worst passions of a man is a desire to save himself from fearful competition with a miserable rate of wages on which he cannot live decently and keep his wife and family, I say that is a singular expression of one of the worst passions. I am glad that I have noticed in this discussion a great change in the feeling of the members in regard to the Chinese question. Hitherto when this matter has been brought up there have been several members on both sides of the House to protest emphatically against any restriction being placed upon the Chinese. I remember distinctly the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) being very emphatic in his protest. I have only to say in conclusion that I must again urge upon the right hon. gentleman the desirability of putting a higher tax on the Chinese than exists at present, in order to try and keep them out of the country.

Motion to adjourn, negatived.

Mr. PRIOR.

REPRESENTATION IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

House again resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 126) respecting Representation in the House of Commons.—(Mr. Mulock.)

On section 2,

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock), in moving the second reading of this Bill, and in speaking upon it yesterday, stated that any suggestion which he thought was perfectly fair, he would be willing to embody in the Bill.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). I hardly went as far as that, did I?

Mr. HAGGART. You went as far as that.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Did I say any suggestion that one side thought fair?

Mr. HAGGART. Not at all. The hon. gentleman said that if he thought the suggestion a fair one, he would embody it in the Bill. I will draw his attention to a statement made by the hon. member for Welland (Mr. McCleary) the other day. The principle which the hon. Postmaster General introduces in the Bill is one of county boundaries. The hon. member for Welland has a strong claim that his constituency should not be interfered with. This constituency, as he stated, was a constituency returning a member of Parliament before confederation. By the Imperial Act, making the electoral districts of the country, Welland was set apart in precisely the same state that it is found at the present day. There has been no change from that time down to the present, and all the reasons which apply to municipal or county boundaries apply more strongly to Welland, because the people have been accustomed, within that district, to return members for that particular portion of it. It is sanctioned by a higher authority than even municipal or county boundaries. The district was set apart by the Imperial Act at the time of confederation. Surely that is a stronger reason for no interference with it than the application of the principle of county boundaries. On the one hand, you have the electoral district set apart by the Imperial Act, at the suggestion of the parties to confederation, while on the other hand you have the argument of judicial or county boundaries which may be altered from time to time by provincial authority. There has been another strong reason advanced on the very ground taken by the hon. Postmaster General as to the setting aside of electoral districts within county boundaries, and it is the claim put forward by the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill). He states that the three ridings of Bruce are within the county boundaries. According to the directions which are to be given to the judges the division shall be made as nearly as possible according to the numbers in the constituency. But as the hon. member has pointed out, the county is now divided as perfectly as it possibly could be. That argument has not been challenged in this House, and the only claim that was made was that of the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), who said that, in 1882, a grievous wrong had been done in that constituency, and that it was proposed to remedy it. My hon. friend (Mr. McNeill) stated that he has complied with every condition that is required under the present Bill. When the riding, as at present constituted, in 1898, according to the census of 1891, complies with all necessary conditions, is it an argument to say that in 1882 an injustice was perpetrated. There are two cases, the fairness of which I commend to the hon. Postmaster General, and provision for which he should make in his Bill.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Mr. Chairman, without now giving a final reply to the suggestions of my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart), I may, at least, be able to make some observations in reference to this proposal. The hon. gentleman claims that the electoral county of Welland should be retained because it was one of the electoral districts named in the Confederation Act. The same might be said of the electoral county of Monck, which was also an electoral county provided for in the Confederation Act. Yet, the late Government, in 1882, saw fit to abolish the electoral constituency of Monck, created by that same constitution. It was not abolished on account of a lack of population, because, at the time of its abolition in 1892, it had a population of 15,940. There were other constituencies at that time with a less population which were retained. If, because its population was not quite up to the unit, it was abolished, one would have thought that the first change, on that ground, would have been in a constituency which had a smaller population. For instance, Brockville had a population of 15,107. Leeds and Grenville had a population of 12,443, yet Leeds and Grenville was not interfered with.

Mr. Haggart. Yes, it was.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It was not wiped out.

Mr. Haggart. No.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It was retained. While the late Government abolished Monck, with a population of 15,900, they did not put the pruning-knife, apparently, where it ought to have first been placed if the question of population determined them on that occasion. Moreover, I can point out that the same Confederation Act created a large number of constituencies, naming the component parts of each of them, and yet the late Administration, and all previous Administrations since that day, have felt it to be perfectly in harmony with the spirit of confederation to change electoral districts that for the moment had a place in the Confederation Act. The Confederation Act itself contemplates changes from time to time, in all the constituencies. It provides for taking a census with the view of making changes, and these changes have not been limited at all, but sometimes have resulted in the detachment of parts of one riding, and their being transferred to another; in other cases the abolition of ridings, and in other cases the union of ridings. I might remind my hon. friend that there is a more glaring case, if it is wrong to interfere with Welland as it existed under the Confederation Act. Let me remind my hon. friend that, in 1882, the late Government abolished a county that had a statutory existence. They took the county of Stormont and Cornwall, that by the Confederation Act formed two separate constituencies, and returned two separate members, and they wiped out one of them altogether. They united these two counties.

Mr. Haggart. Are you not finding fault with all this?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am only pointing out to my hon. friend that he is estopped from taking exception.

Mr. Clancy. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) permit me to ask him a question? The hon. gentleman has stated, over and over again, that the single and one reason, above all others, was to undo what hon. gentlemen alleged was wrongly done in 1882. The hon. gentleman has pointed out that nothing of this kind was done in 1882 and it is to that question—

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Will the hon. gentleman state his question, and let me proceed? The question I will be pleased to hear, not an argument. I could illustrate in many ways wherein the scheme of representation set forth in the Confederation Act was departed from from time to time, and, therefore, I can hardly think that my hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) is very sincere in his criticism, for if he be, he is condemning his own conduct in the past. The county of Wentworth, and the county of Niagara, and others, disappeared by legislation of hon. gentlemen opposite. Now, I will say why it is necessary to deal with Welland.

Mr. Haggart. You dealt with that yesterday.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I did not allude to Welland, except to say that it was a county which had not sufficient population to give it two members, and could, therefore, only have one ; but in all cases in this Bill, where we are affecting any municipal portion of a county, then that county is brought wholly under the provisions of the measure. We are giving back to the county of Lincoln what belongs to the county of Lincoln municipally, and we are detaching from Lincoln what belongs to other counties municipally, and that means that we have to take from Haldimand in order to give to the counties entitled to them their municipal portions which are in Haldimand. That involves giving to Welland what belongs to Welland. You cannot adopt the principle of county boundaries in any of the counties that are the subject of this Bill, without having to do what the whole Bill does. You cannot do less than undo the gerrymander which set up these eight hives. I know of no way in which you can do this, if we are to undo the wrong of 1882 and 1892. In 1892 you made these changes in Lincoln, in Welland and in Haldimand, and we are only undoing these changes. You abolished Monck that time, and now we are only straightening out the county lines. My hon. friend from Bruce (Mr. McNeill) says that at present the county of Bruce is as fairly divided as possible. I shall not controvert that proposition, but no one will deny that in 1882 that county was improperly divided.

Mr. McNEILL. Will my hon. friend (Mr. Mulock) allow me to make a remark, as it may save him some trouble ? I wish to explain to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) that I do not ask any favours from him whatever. Let the county of Bruce go to the judges. That is all I want.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The representative of North Bruce is perfectly content with the measure so far as it affects the county of Bruce, and so that is the best answer I could give to my hon. friend (Mr. Clancy).

Mr. McNEILL. I do not want my hon. friend (Mr. Mulock) to misunderstand me ; I will put it in that way. I did not say that I was satisfied with the measure so far as the county of Bruce is concerned. I think it is a villainous measure so far as the county of Bruce is concerned. I will explain what I mean by saying there is no possible reason why the county of Bruce should be interfered with at all. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) has not been able to show the shred of a thread of a filament of a reason for interfering with Bruce. He and those beside him have been challenged for a reason, but they have not been able to show a shadow, or the ghost of a shadow, of a reason.

Section 2 of the Bill agreed to.

Section 3 of the Bill agreed to.

Mr. MULOCK.

On section 4,

Mr. HAGGART. Before this clause of the Bill is passed, I would like the fulfilment of a promise that was given by the Postmaster General and by the Prime Minister, that before the passage of the Bill, he would include, if necessary, in the Bill itself the names of the judges to whom he intended to refer the division of the counties.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am not aware that it was ever stated by any Minister that the names of the judges would be mentioned in the Bill. What the First Minister stated was, that, before the Bill became law, he would announce to the House the names of the judges whom it was proposed to invite to work it out.

Mr. HAGGART. Before the Bill passes this House ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Well, before it leaves this House. I think it was promised for the third reading.

Mr. HAGGART. You can do that tonight, if we hear that.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know whether my right hon. friend has selected the judges.

Mr. CLANCY. I asked the Postmaster General and the First Minister if they proposed to attach, as a schedule to this Bill, the instructions to be given to the judges. It is well that the committee should have these instructions before them, and I suppose the hon. gentleman will not ask that the Bill should go further until he at least announces the instructions which will be given to the judges.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. Shall this clause be adopted ?

Mr. CLANCY. Not yet.

Mr. McNEILL. It is very important that some information should be given the committee on that point. It is important that we should know whether the judges shall hear any evidence on the subject. In the mother country the commissioners there did hear evidence. One of the commissioners held a sitting in each constituency, and they advertised in the local papers their provisional scheme which they had prepared beforehand, and also advertised a day on which they would hear evidence for discussion, so that the people had an opportunity to go and present their views before the commissioners, and the commissioners in their report say that they were able, by the valuable information they obtained, to modify their provisional scheme on several occasions to very great advantage. I would like to know whether any system of that kind is to be adopted in Canada, or whether the judges are to be precluded from hearing evidence, as they are to be precluded from taking notice of the change of population which have taken place since 1891.

The PRIME MINISTER I am quite sure my hon. friend ought to approve of the disposition of the Bill which precludes the judges from entering into an investigation as to increase or decrease of population. The subject of population can be considered only after a decennial census. We have to take the population, not as it is now, because we do not know it. We have to rely upon the census of 1891, and as to that I think my hon. friend ought to be satisfied. With regard to the other point which he has raised, whether the judges are to hold a court, the Bill does not contemplate that. I refer my hon. friend to subsection 2 of section 2, which gives the instructions to the judges. I am aware that in England the commissioners who were appointed to divide counties and boroughs and cities into ridings, and who were called boundary commissioners, were required to look into old marks and charts and records to find out the true boundaries of the different divisions with which they had to deal. I doubt if there is any such necessity in Canada. Our maps in that regard are different to those of England. Our country is a new country. It was first laid out into townships and the townships are well known by numbers, by concessions, and so on. The divisions that have taken place in the municipalities are also well known. The judges will have the map before them, and having that, they will have all the divisions on which they are to proceed. It may be that the judges will require some more information for their own sake; and if so, I suppose they will decide how they shall obtain it. But it is not contemplated by the Bill that they should hold a court.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman has not yet stated what the instructions to the judges will be, or whether they are embodied in the Bill, in subsection 2 of section 2, or whether they are to go further than that, because the instructions there are only stated in a general way. Therefore, I shall have to repeat my question and ask the right hon. gentleman if the instructions to be given to the judges based on that subsection, are to become a schedule of this Bill?

The PRIME MINISTER. No, it is not so contemplated.

Mr. CLANCY. Then, surely the right hon. gentleman does not propose that the Government shall have conferred on them such powers of legislation? If the right hon. gentleman thinks the instructions given in this subsection are sufficient, then perhaps the committee might be content; but this committee ought to know whether that is the case, or whether, this subsection is simply the basis of the instructions to be given.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There will be no variation from what the Bill contains.

Mr. CLANCY. Then the hon. gentleman is at variance with his leader, who does not assent to the proposition that this is the only instruction. I should like to have that made clear.

The PRIME MINISTER. This contains all the instructions, I understand. There cannot be any other understanding of this clause than that all the instructions to be given to the judges are contained in subsection 2 of section 2.

Mr. WILSON. The Prime Minister also explained that if the judges could not get what information they required from the maps, they were to get other instructions.

The PRIME MINISTER. No; other information.

Mr. HAGGART. Have you fixed on the time limit within which the judges are to send their report?

The PRIME MINISTER. The time has been left, I believe, to the discretion of the judges. I have no objection to the time being limited to a very narrow period.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The time is to be limited by the letters patent.

Mr. HAGGART. That time would be fixed by the Government. Have they fixed any time?

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not know that it would be possible to limit the time absolutely; but I can say to my hon. friend that the intention of the Government is to make the time as short as possible.

Mr. McNEILL. I would like to call my right hon. friend's attention to one matter. Of course, as we all understand there is a very formidable objection, which was brought forward in this House in 1892, when some of us were urging that a step of this kind should be taken and a commission of judges appointed. That objection is that it is bringing judges too closely into contact with party issues. I want to ask my right hon. friend what steps the Government are taking to see that the right course in this respect shall be properly safeguarded, so that the judges will understand that they are to deal with this matter as the commissioners in England dealt with it—simply on the lines of geography, population, and convenience—and that the party issue shall be excluded; because, if not, then I should say that it is a very serious blunder that is being made.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not think my hon. friend has really any cause to put to me such a question as that. The character of the work to be done by the judges is well defined in the language of section 2, which I shall quote again for the benefit of the hon. gentleman :

2. The letters patent appointing the commissioners shall direct them, in making the divisions, to consider the distribution of population according to the latest census of Canada, the public convenience, and such divisions as appear to them best calculated to do substantial justice.

Mr. McNEILL. These are very wide words.

The PRIME MINISTER. So they are. What is substantial justice? It is not to look after the interests of the one or the other party, but of all the electors, so that an honest expression of their opinion may be obtained. That is the only instruction, I believe, the judges ought to have, and that is the only view which judges of the high character we intend to appoint would admit themselves warranted in accepting. It will be the endeavour of the Government to select men who, I hope, will be satisfactory to all parties in this House, and if it were possible that this division of counties should be separated from political considerations, I would much prefer it. I may say that three years ago I made a motion that a Bill of this kind should be referred to a committee of this House, selected by both parties. This motion was not accepted. I do not know that I have changed my views. I would prefer that this question should be dealt with by a committee of both parties, but I know very well, from the attitude taken by the leaders of the Conservative party at that time, that such a proposition would not meet with their acceptance. They did not give any reason for their opposition, but simply refused to entertain the views I held. I considered then that the best thing to be done was to refer the matter to judges whose public character and position and the confidence which they enjoy, not only because of their high office, but because of the ability and impartiality which they have acquired as judges, would be the best guarantee of a proper and just settlement of this question. For my own part my desire is that the judges should deal with this matter, apart altogether from political considerations.

Mr. McNEILL. I am very glad to have the very satisfactory statement of the right hon. gentleman in that regard. That was the only danger I thought of with reference to the appointing of the judges. With regard to the proposition of the right hon. gentleman in 1892, when the Act of that year was being discussed, I remember that I myself opposed it and did so on the ground that it would not be satisfactory to the party which would be in the minority upon the committee. At that time a committee of this House had just held a very laborious investigation, and the result of its report was not satisfactory. Many members on that committee, on both sides, had worked with the greatest possible conscientiousness, but when the report was brought down it was not possible to deal with it in any other way than on party lines, and I felt that if we accepted the hon. gentleman's proposition to have the redistribution of seats—a question which touches most closely many members of this House—referred to a committee, the result of a report of such committee would not be satisfactory, but would be regarded, to some extent, at all events, as a party report.

Mr. SPROULE. It cannot be expected that the judges will be so familiar with every locality that they will be able at once to come to a conclusion as to how it would be best to divide counties, so as not to interfere with the commercial and social relations of the people. I therefore assume that they must have information from some source so as to enable them to come to a conclusion, and if they do not hold an open court, how will such information reach them? It must be by private representation of some kind, and in that case are we not justified in supposing that representations may reach the judges from sources that might, to some extent, be politically biassed. It seems to me it would be much better for the judges to hold open court and obtain what information they desire in open court than in a private manner.

The PRIME MINISTER. If that mode of procedure were adopted, I am afraid you would have the two political parties wrangling before the judges. It is true, the judges cannot have at this moment complete information regarding every part of Ontario, but with the information at their hand, by means of the dissemination of local literature and the public press and the well known geographical works we have of the country, it will be easy for the judges to obtain all the information they desire in order to come to a proper decision.

Mr. SPROULE. The same difference arises in mapping out districts for the division courts, and the judges in that case apply to people in the localities for information. I have seen them do so several times. The judges living in the county themselves do not pretend to know the locality as well as people living there, and have frequently appealed to public men in those localities for their advice and information as to where the lines should be drawn.

Mr. HAGGART. It appears to me that by the Bill the Government have no power to limit the proceedings of the judges under the letters patent :

2. The letters patent appointing the commissioners shall direct them in making the divisions to consider the distribution of population according to the latest census of Canada, the public convenience, and such divisions as appear to them best calculated to do substantial justice.

You cannot give the judges any more or limit them to anything less than what the Act provides. I think that, under this clause, the judges can do just as they please.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. In the lines of the clause.

Mr. HAGGART. In the lines of the clause.

Mr. CLANCY. It is a matter of sincere regret that the right hon. gentleman sacrificed his principles, and what he believes his conscientious duty, to a party triumph. He says that his own view was, and now is, that the better way would be to refer this to the party leaders, and by a conference settle the question amicably and fairly. But he was afraid to approach the leader of the Opposition, because he thought the leader of the Opposition might not accept the proposition to deal with the question in that way. It does seem to me that the remedy was in the right hon. gentleman's hands. He must feel that if he could not reasonably approach the leader of the Opposition, it was because he was entering upon the course he has taken at an improper time, when no hon. gentleman on this side could well consent to it. Whatever he might think of the hon. gentleman's proposition, he would feel that it was almost impossible to accede to it at this moment. We now have a statement from the right hon. gentleman that he has adopted a view entirely at variance with what he thought to be the proper thing. He says this for the purpose of carrying out what the country must know to be a rather worthless pledge, a pledge for the neglect of which I am pretty sure the country would absolve him. But, if now the party leaders could not get together the reason seems apparent. The right hon. gentleman has given it plainly, and the country will understand.

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) is rather too smart. The pledge we took was to have the Gerry-mender Act dealt with and reformed.

Mr. McNEILL. Which Gerry-mender—this one?

The PRIME MINISTER. The Gerry-mender Act with which the hon. gentleman (Mr. McNeill) is very familiar, and with which he had something to do. I must say that I would prefer, and I suggested in 1892, that the party leaders should meet in committee and try to come to an understanding. But the proposition I made was spurned; and, it having been spurned once, I did not care to propose it a second time.

On section 5,

Mr. A. MARTIN (East Queen's, P.E.I.) Before this Bill was introduced, we were told that we were going to have a fair Bill, a consistent Bill, and one which would be just to every part of the country. We were told that it would follow closely certain principles. But we find that in the Bill one principle is followed for one part of the country, and another for another part of the country. When they deal with western Ontario, they make a fetish of county boundaries. But when they come to eastern Ontario their zeal for county boundaries dies out. Even in the county next to the city of Ottawa we find that their zeal for county boundaries vanishes away. They go down a little further, and when they come to New Brunswick, there their love for the maintenance of county boundaries breaks out afresh. And when they come to Prince Edward Island, they pretend that county lines are sacred in their eyes and must be maintained. The Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) told us the Bill was intended to correct some mistakes in Ontario made by the Bill of 1882. Why, then, should he deal with Prince Edward Island. No change was made in the representation of Prince Edward Island in 1882, nor was any made at any time under Conservative rule until there was a change in the proportion of population and the number of representatives from that province reduced from six to five. Then, I ask the Minister of Customs why touch Prince Edward Island at all. The hon. gentleman told the House they had another reason—that they were pledged to do it by the Ottawa platform of 1893. But if the Minister would think it over he will remember that there are many things this Government were pledged to do that they have not done. Will he rise in his place and say they have fulfilled all their pledges? After all, what are these pledges? They were not all made in the interest of the country. I believe that every pledge they made in the interest of their party they are going to fulfil, and every pledge they made in the interest of the country they are going to break. The Franchise Act and this Gerry-mender are plainly in the interest of the Liberal party. If they had the confidence of the country, they would have no reason to introduce the latter. Did they fairly and equitably carry out their pledge with regard to prohibition? Was it a fair thing for three or four Ministers of the Government to go down to Quebec and speak against a measure that, they said was in their platform? Again, have they fulfilled their pledges with regard to expenditure?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Question! We are not dealing with the expenditure now.

Mr. MARTIN. The hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) is getting a little impatient. Perhaps I may be able to give him something that will interest him before I sit down. As the hon. Minister does not want me to refer to the pledges of the Government which are unfulfilled, those which were in the interest of the country, perhaps I may turn my attention to something bearing very directly on the question at issue. The population of King's County is 26,633; of Queen's County, 45,975; of Prince County, 36,470. Now, you give two members to Prince County. We will say that one of them will represent the same population as the member for King's. Then, the other will represent only about 9,000 people. And that I suppose is what the Minister of Marine and Fisheries thinks is fair-play. Now, let us look at the voting power of these three counties. The voting power of King's County is far greater, according to population, than the voting power of either Prince or Queen's. The voting power of King's County is 7,120, the voting power of Prince County is only 8,198. That is, Prince County has only a little over 1,000 votes more than King's County. Prince County will have two members for a voting population of 8,198, and King's County will only have one member for a voting population of 7,120. Can the hon. member justify that? I think the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries is the man who is responsible for this proposed change, and I think he must have misled his colleagues in making it. In 1892 Prince Edward Island was divided into five ridings, and the population of those ridings was equalized as nearly as possible. Under the existing distribution, King's has a population of 21,694, East Queen's 23,464, West Queen's 22,210, East Prince 20,723, and West Prince 20,978. That was, in my opinion, a fair and equitable distribution of the province and was accepted in Prince Edward Island as such. Evidently the reason for this new change is political, the object is to gain a political advantage. The hon. gentleman, when this Bill was discussed in 1892, misrepresented the state of facts—I do not say he did it willingly—but whether willingly or not, he misrepresented the state of facts in regard to the distribution that was made at that time. He said at that time that his riding was East Queen's. He assured this House, I have an extract of his speech in my hand, that East Queen's was his riding. He also assured the House that they were going to dump 300 of a majority into East Queen's in order to swamp him. Now, Mr. Chairman, instead of there being a majority of 300 in East Queen's that he had to overcome, the actual majority he had to overcome was only 40 votes. Surely the leader of the maritime Liberals, as he was styled at that time, could go into East Queen's and overcome the majority of 40 votes. I will give the House the position as it stood after the election of 1891. In the part of King's that was attached to East Queen's, that is lots 61, 63 and 64, there was a majority for McLean, who was running against Dr. Robertson, of 33 votes; in Queen's County, at Fort Augustus, there was a majority for Mr. Ferguson of 18 votes; in lot 24 there was a majority for Ferguson of 149; that is Ferguson's majority, including Mr. McLean's, in lots 61, 63 and 64, in the whole of East Queen's would be 201. Davies's majority at Belfast, which was the only place taking East Queen's only where he had a majority at that time, would be 161. Take 161 from 201, and you will have the exact majority that he had to overcome, only 40 votes. When the election day came round the hon. gentleman did not run for East Queen's at all, he ran for West Queen's. Now, these hon. gentlemen do not pretend to respect representation by population. They pretend to have great regard for county lines. They have introduced this Bill out of season. I have here what the present Prime Minister in 1892 said on this question, as found on "Hansard," page 3115:

Mr. LAURIER. Apart from the dispositions of this Bill, to which it must be my unpleasant duty to allude presently, the very fact that this measure has been postponed and put off until, I may say, the dying hours of the session, is in itself sufficient to deserve the most severe censure of this House.

Now, I do not think that you can find any where anything more applicable to the present position than these words of the present leader of this Government in 1892. The present Bill is introduced out of due season, and I could quote from the present Prime Minister in 1892 to prove it. They were already quoted. But we also had some prophetic words from the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries in 1892. What did he say on that occasion in regard to what might be done if his party came into power? Turn to page 3241 of the debates of 1892, and you will find that hon. gentleman saying:

And when the party which is excluded for the time being happens by a combination of accidents to be returned to power,—

That combination of accidents took place, and they were returned to power.

—that party will be, perforce driven to adopt the same unjust and unfair system, and will introduce a Redistribution Bill not founded on justice or on the lines of the constitution,—

Well, I think that is a prophecy that has been fulfilled in this Bill.

—and intended to give the people a fair means of representation, but intended to promote the interests of the party alone.

Has not every word of that been fulfilled? His party having been returned to power, by a combination of accidents, they have introduced a redistribution Bill which is not founded on justice and which is not upon the lines of the constitution.

The hon. gentleman, when discussing that Bill at that time, took the hon. members of this House to England for an example of what a redistribution Bill should be, and he stated what Gladstone had done :

Certain principles on which the Redistribution Bill should be based were proposed by Mr. Gladstone. He invited his great opponent to a conference, they sat in conference from day to day with their lieutenants on both sides. Lord Salisbury broadened the measure to suit the interests of his party, and what he conceived to be the wants and requirements of the country, and eventually the Bill, which threatened at one time to involve a dead-lock, was presented to the House as the joint product of both political parties of the state, and passed into law.

When the hon. gentleman was on this side of the House he told us that he had high ideals, and this was what the party then in power should do. Then, take example from England, What did they do to-day? They introduced this Bill, as he prophetically said they would introduce a Bill, which was not founded on justice or the lines of the constitution. Further on the hon. gentleman says :

I invite the attention of the House to that Act.

That is, to the British North America Act.

On reading the section to which I refer, it will be seen that the framers of the Act never intended that the redistribution of seats should be entrusted to the dominant party for the time being.

What is he doing now? Is it not entrusted to the dominant party? Is not this Bill to be forced through the House by the party vote? Certainly it is. Further on he says, and it bears on the constitutional question whether or not it is in the power of this Government to introduce this Bill at all :

I ask the House to take a higher view of their responsibilities,—

That was a very nice thing to say then, but he will not say it to-day.

—and I say that the Imperial Parliament determined in passing the law, that not only should the lines and principles be laid down, but that at every decennial census you should make a change in these lines and principles to suit the changed conditions of the country.

He was evidently under the impression, and I believe in his heart that he is under the impression yet, that all this should be done after a decennial census. He has repeated that in his speech three times. Again, the hon. gentleman says :

The Act does not say that the Parliament shall lay down what for all time shall be the lines and principles to be followed,—

While they must lay down certain lines, he says that these lines may not continue for ever. The next Parliament might change them. One Parliament might come in and say: We believe in county lines. Another Parliament might come in and say: We do not believe in county lines; we believe in representation by population; but in this Bill one or the other is adopted as it suits their party. He says :

The Act does not say that the Parliament shall lay down what for all time shall be the lines and principles to be followed, but that Parliament, after every decennial census, shall lay down those lines and principles.

Further on he says :

You have no authority arbitrarily to cut and carve as you please.

That is what they are doing in this Bill.

The law does not give it to you. A limitation has been placed upon your power. It does not say that you "may" do so and so, but you "shall." The imperative is used, and you "shall" do so, not once for all, but from time to time, after each decennial census you shall readjust.

If time would permit I could quote further from what the hon. gentleman said in giving his opinion on this question. I wonder that hon. gentlemen, who occupy the Treasury benches, could so far forget the traditions of the Liberal party as to forsake the policy of representation by population. I have here extracts from speeches of hon. members which bear on this point. For Prince Edward Island we should have the province divided according to population, which is a tradition that has been held sacred by the Liberal party from time immemorial. I have here the debates of the Parliament of Canada on confederation. I have expressions of opinion from the late Hon. Alexander Mackenzie, George Brown, Sir John Macdonald and others, every one of them advocating representation by population, but you cannot find one word about county lines. The idea was when they arranged this confederation that representation by population was to be the basis of the House of Commons. We find Sir John Macdonald using these words :

In settling the constitution of the Lower House, that which peculiarly represents the people, it was agreed that the principle of representation, based on population should be adopted, and the mode of applying that principle is fully developed in these resolutions.

And then you have the Hon. A. A. Dorion : quoted by Solicitor-General Langevin, speaking as follows :—

At the same time, I said that if these views were not accepted, I should certainly be in favour of representation based on population, with conditions and guarantees which would secure the interests of Lower Canada, and preserve to Lower Canada the institutions which are so dear to her.

Mr. Mackenzie said, speaking in regard to representation by population :

In the first speech I ever made in this House I used the following language :—

"I am not myself bound down to representation by population as the only possible measure. If the opponents of that measure can suggest any other remedy I am quite willing to give it a candid consideration; and I am quite sure that the large constituency I represent will support me in considering any measure which will place it out of the power of the Government of the day to perpetrate sectional injustice.

Further on, the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie says :

Up to the beginning of 1862 the agitation for a redress of this grievance had been carried on throughout the whole of western Canada ; and I am convinced that at that time there was not an individual who could appear in public in Canada West, and take any share in the public discussions of the day, with any chance of getting a favourable hearing, unless he asserted that he was in favour of representation by population.

Again, on page 422, he says :

There is, or there was then, a popular opinion that the Lower Canadians were only afraid of representation by population because they dreaded that the people of Canada West would use the larger power they would thereby obtain for the injury, if not the destruction, of their religious institutions. That is entirely an error. I am convinced that the people of Lower Canada have no such opinion and no such fear.

Here is a quotation from the Hon. Mr. Mackenzie which bears directly on the matter :

In the scheme, as propounded, we have all that we could possibly demand in the way of representation in the Lower House. And, besides that we have provision made for extending the representation east or west, as occasion may require, according to the increase of our population shown at the decennial periods for taking the census.

Alexander Mackenzie, therefore, had some respect for decennial census, and it was clearly his belief that it was only after a decennial census that this could be done.

Anything fairer than that could not possibly be demanded. And if Lower Canada increases more rapidly in population than Canada West, she will obtain representation accordingly, for, although the number of her members cannot be changed from 65, the proportion of that number to the whole will be changed relatively to the progress of the various colonies. On the other hand, if we extend, as I have no doubt we will do, westward, towards the centre of the continent, we will obtain a large population for our confederation in the west.

It is quite clear that we must have a settlement of our difficulties in some way, and I think the scheme proposed is a very favourable settlement of them. I think it is more than perhaps some of us expected at the time when the present Government was formed to bring about a settlement ; and I do think, Sir, that it would be the greatest act of madness that western members of this House could perpetrate to vote against it. (Hear, hear.) I am not, however, afraid that it will be voted against by them. I believe that under it we have obtained representation by population, that we have obtained what we have long contended was justly due to us.

That is what Mr. Mackenzie said at that time, and we did not hear him say anything about county boundaries, and we find that when you go to England, there is not always much respect for county lines. I shall make one or two more quotations, which are still more emphatic with regard to representation by population. The Hon. George Brown, page 994, "Confederation Debates," said :

I think the hon. gentleman has risen for a very poor purpose. And in place of accepting his explanation as correct, I dissent from it in toto. The position of the matter is quite the opposite of what he states. He says this is a different thing altogether. I totally deny that it is. I say this is simply what we asked for, only in another form. The measure we asked for was representation by population. We got that. (Hear, hear.) And the hon. gentleman is the last man to object to this, which is the very basis on which he agreed to go into the Brown-Dorion Administration—representation by population being the basis, accompanied by such checks and guarantees as might be shown to be necessary.

Again, at page 995, he said :

The hon. gentleman will admit that we have been wonderfully, unexpectedly successful in the policy we initiated in July last ; and I am prepared to say, as I have always been prepared to say, that, if practicable, this measure is a better one than the smaller scheme. But so far from its being a different remedy from ours, I say it is but an extension of our plan—that we who have contended for representation by population for so many years are getting all that we asked and something more.

These are the views of the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie and of the Hon. George Brown, the great leaders of the Liberal party in Ontario at that date. I presume that the present Liberal party intend to depart from the wholesome rule in regard to representation by population, and that they are to bow down and worship the boundaries as established by county lines, at least when it suits them, which are in themselves sometimes very arbitrary indeed. Mr. Gladstone, when introducing Redistribution Bill of 1885, very often departed from county lines, and I point to this because in Prince Edward we have no municipalities and municipal associations are broken up. There are county courts, and there are petty sittings of those county courts all over the province, but there are no municipalities, and when you divide the county lines, you break up no associations whatever. In 1884, when Mr. Gladstone was introducing his Bill, he used some very pertinent words in regard to the division of the city of London. I will quote his language for more than one purpose. When we were discussing the representation that Toronto should have, it was laid down that Toronto, being a large city, was not entitled to as large a population as a rural riding, but the very converse of that is what Mr. Gladstone sets forth, as applied to London, England. At page 376 of the English "Hansard," Mr. Gladstone said:

The metropolis it is proposed in a great degree to recast. The boroughs in the metropolis are generally suited for being so dealt with. Being parliamentary boroughs only and not having also established municipalities, they have no common historic life attached to them.

I see, the Premier laughs ; but the next part of Mr. Gladstone's speech which I will read, will turn that laugh the other way.

The PRIME MINISTER. I may be allowed to laugh now, when I have the chance.

Mr. MARTIN. At page 381, English parliamentary debates of 1884, Mr. Gladstone said :

The city of London, I am afraid, all circumstances considered, cannot equitably be exempted from some change. Its population is a population of 50,000.

The PRIME MINISTER. It is nearer five millions.

Mr. MARTIN. No ; Mr. Gladstone was referring to the city of London proper.

With a population of 50,000 odd, its electorate is remarkably large.

Now, you remember that Mr. Gladstone deemed that one reason why London should be made an exception to the general rule. Now, if you apply the same thing to my province, you will find that King's County, as I have already shown, to which this Bill gives only one member, has a larger electorate according to its population than any of the other counties in Prince Edward Island. I have shown you that though King's County has a population of only 26,000, and Prince County has a population of 36,000, there is only a difference of about 1,000 in the voting power of the two counties. When Mr. Gladstone introduced his Bill, he said that was one fact which should be taken into consideration in giving the city of London a large representation, and he gave a larger representation on that account. He said :

With a population of 50,000 odd, its electorate is remarkably large ; and its largeness of electorate, combined with its history, marks it out for some exemption from the application of the rigid rule of population.

Here are two things which we have to take into consideration. The first, as I have said, is that the city of London was entitled according to Mr. Gladstone to a larger representation on account of its larger electorate, compared with other parts of the country ; the second is that he was departing from the rigid rule of population, though representation by population was the basic principle of his Bill. The unit of population in England at that time was 52,700 ; yet Mr. Gladstone gave London two members representing only 50,000 people. That is a reason which cannot be overcome to prove that in dealing with Prince Edward Island you have done an injustice to King's County in giving it only one member, while you give the other county two members. What did you do it for ? Did the province want it ? The hon. member (Sir Louis H. Davies) was down in that province running the election of 1896 ; and though he stood up in the House in 1892 and made the statement which I have read, when he went down to Prince Edward Island, he had not a word to say about the redistribution that was made at that time. It was all right. The hon. gentleman made another statement at that time to which, before I sit down, I will refer. He said that it was enough that they were to load him with three townships from King's County in which he said there was a large Conservative majority ; but I may tell you that the large majority which he said was dumped on him from King's County amounted to only 33 voters. There was also a township called Township 24 added to East Queen's, against which the hon. gentleman fought long and laboriously in this House. With regard to that, he said : " You are going to add one township, lot 24, with 200 majority of Conservatives, and dump it into my riding." That was not the fact. The majority which he had to overcome there was 149 ; but he had a majority of 161 in his favour, and when the whole thing was toted up, all he had to overcome was 40 votes ; and yet I am told on good authority that he went privately to Conservative members, and represented, or rather misrepresented, that he was to be slaughtered by dumping 300 Catholic votes into his riding. If the hon. gentleman turns to page 4188 of " Hansard " of the year 1892, he will find that he said this :

Of course, I do not like the complexion of the electorate of that township.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) What was wrong with it ?

Mr. MARTIN. I do not know. I do not know whether it was the political complexion or the physical complexion.

Mr. DAVIN. Or the religious.

Mr. MARTIN. Yes, they are a very religious class of people. They are French Acadians, and are true to their religious principles. I was astonished to find the hon. gentleman saying that he did not like their complexion. I presume their religious complexion, because I see it reported that at a meeting at Sorel the hon. gentleman said that French blood flowed in his veins ; and I would like to ask the hon. gentleman, what did he see in the complexion of the electorate of lot 24, which is almost exclusively French that he detested so much ? Was it the colour question or the religious question ?

The PRIME MINISTER. They were too " bleu."

Mr. MARTIN. It is late, and I do not wish to tire hon. members. Though I have been stricted in the debate, I think I have made a pretty good case, and I think the hon. gentleman who has charge of this Bill, when he comes to his second thought, will strike this clause out of the Bill altogether. When the Minister of Marine and Fisheries goes to Prince Edward Island, I think he will find that very few will give him any support for the change he is making, because they know in their heart of hearts, as the hon. gentleman knows in his heart of hearts, what he is doing it for. He is not doing it for any advantage of the people of Prince Edward Island; he is doing it for the advantage of himself and his party. If he stands up in this House and tells us what is in his mind, that is what he will say.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The hon. gentleman has fired off his speech at the wrong time, and although he was out of order almost from the moment he rose I did not interrupt him, but let him go on discussing the principle of the Bill, which was agreed to long ago, while carefully avoiding going into details. He did not tell the committee why he objects to the reinstatement of the county lines in Prince Edward Island, and did not dare to say that any injustice was being done. One hundred and twenty-five years ago the county lines of Prince Edward Island were established and have never been altered since. They have been observed by the legislature ever since that island has been a province and ever since it came into confederation, in the establishment of counties as the electoral divisions. The counties of Prince and Queen's had two members each. King's has one member now, and nobody, Liberal or Conservative, has questioned the decision and propriety of that. In process of time Prince Edward Island lost one member by diminution of population as compared with the other provinces, and when the readjustment of seats was effected, instead of retaining the county boundaries, as they should have and giving to the one county that had only 3,000 beyond the unit, the county of King's, one member, as they should have done, and allowing each of the other counties to have two, the late Government cut and carved the island up into the divisions which they thought were going to give them wonderful party advantage, but which were a gross injustice to the people and the Liberal party. They took the whole townships of 29, 30 and 67 out of Queen's County and added them to East Prince. Prince, Queen's and King's each has had its county towns and boundaries for 125 years. The jury are summoned two or three times a year to the assizes; they never had any relation with the other counties at all. The judicial and political divisions were marked by the county lines, yet the late Government took three whole townships, with a population of 5,240, and dumped them into East Prince, and then they came to King's County and took three townships, 61, 63 and 64, and dumped these into East Queen's. For fear the hon. gentleman could not get any constituency that would possibly return him, they put three townships from King's and put them into East Queen's, and they took township 24 out of West Queen's, giving him a majority of 300 in East Queen's. Now he wants to maintain these anomalies which nobody can defend. The fact is the gerrymander of 1891 was intended to put certain gentlemen out of the House, but it most egregiously failed.

Mr. WALLACE. What are you doing here?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We are asking to reinstate the county boundaries, which were in existence 125 years ago, which have never been disturbed, which have been the basis on all the provincial representation, and which were made into law when the province came into confederation and remained so until 1891. What are the facts, speaking from a population stand-point? The county of King's only has 26,633 of a population, or 3,000 above the electoral unit, and it gets one member. That is all right, is it not? The county of Queen's has nearly 47,000 of a population, and it gets two. Does anybody object to that? Is there anything wrong there, either from the county boundary or the population stand-point. Prince has 37,000, which is a little short in the electoral unit, but that could not be helped. So the hon. gentleman will see that what we are proposing here is to re-establish boundaries which have been in existence 125 years, and are well recognized by the people, and there is no party advantage in it. The population of King's county is 26,633, and that gets one member. Queen's County has very nearly 46,000, and that gets two members. I say there can be no mistake about King's getting one member and Queen's getting two. The other two members are given to Prince County, which has 36,470. Is there anything wrong in that? The hon. gentleman said something about the voting power of the present district. King's County has only 5,900, whereas Prince County, east and west, has 9,600, and Queen's County 9,600. These two counties, with nearly 10,000 voters each, have two members given them, and the other has one member. This is just an attempt to remedy the great injustice done in 1891, and to remedy it on the lines of establishing the county boundaries. It does injustice to nobody, and is carrying on the traditions which prevailed in that province long before the hon. gentleman or myself entered political life.

Mr. A. C. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.)
When I see the hon. member for Queen's get up and say that there was gross injustice done by the laying out of the present districts in Prince Edward Island, I must emphatically deny his statement. We have heard the hon. gentleman talk very strongly of the great injustice being done and his friends behind echoed his words, but after they left the four walls of this House we never heard a word about the injustice in Prince Edward Island from them or their party. The fact of the matter is that when that redistribution was made, we commenced at the east end of Prince Edward Island and went along taking township after township until we got up to the unit of population without breaking up the townships. Then, we began with the next riding and went on until we got sufficient territory without breaking township lines, and we divided fairly so that no man could say truthfully that there was any advantage taken over anybody, and the fact was that if any injustice was done to anybody it was done to myself. If anybody had any reason to complain, I would, because they took some of my majorities off. But I thought it was done on a fair and square basis and never said a word about it. These county lines, which they prize so highly, do not amount to anything at all but are merely arbitrary. There are no bad results from the way the boundaries of the constituencies have been drawn, without regard to county lines—because these lines do not make a bit of difference. There is no good reason at all why there is any necessity for taking the county lines into consideration. If they are determined to give two members to one county, King's county and not Prince should have the two members. Apart from that, I maintain that the existing distribution is fair, fairer than any other distribution they can possibly make. And it does not break any township lines, as that has not been done heretofore.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). And is not done by this Bill.

Mr. MACDONALD (King, P.E.I.) That may be. But the hon. gentleman gives a reason which holds good for one place and does not hold good for another. The population for the five ridings, as given at the last distribution, was: King's 21,694; East Prince, 20,723; West Prince, 20,987; Queen's, 23,464; and West Queen's, 22,210. That is as close as could be got at that time without breaking township lines, and I believe is the best way to divide the province to do justice to all concerned.

Mr. MARTIN. The hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) says that a great injury was done to Prince Edward Island by breaking the county boundaries. You would think the hon. gentleman bowed down to county boundaries and worshipped them—for Prince Edward Island. But how did he do in the county immediately adjoining Ottawa? Are not county boundaries as sacred in Eastern Ontario as they are in Prince Edward Island? No injury was done either to the hon. gentleman or to any constituency in the province of Prince Edward Island by the distribution that was made in 1892—and the hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) knows it. There is another point in this Bill. In Ontario the division of the counties is to be made by judges. Are you going to do that in Prince Edward Island?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We are not dividing the counties in Prince Edward Island.

Mr. MARTIN. But are not you going to divide the ridings and counties with two or more members in Ontario? Are you not going to divide Toronto?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) will please address the Chair.

Mr. MARTIN. I am addressing the hon. gentleman through you, Mr. Chairman. Judges are to be appointed to divide the ridings in Ontario, and I ask the hon. Minister is that to be done in Prince Edward Island? In 1892, these gentlemen declared that a Redistribution Bill should be fair, that justice should be its dominating principle. But when they introduce a Bill of their own, the thin veil which covered their hypocrisy is torn away. Judges are not appointed to lay out the constituencies in Prince Edward Island for reasons that the hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) knows very well. But his expectations will not be realized. When he goes to Prince Edward Island the question will be asked him why judges should do this work for Ontario and not for Prince Edward Island. I call upon hon. gentlemen to give us a Bill based upon principle, and not one like this—which, I hope, will never become law—in which one principle is applied to one part of the country and another to another part of the country, as suits the convenience and advantage of the Government. No amount of talking on the part of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries will make the people of Prince Edward Island believe that he has any respect for county lines. The hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) said King's County had only 5,900 voters and Prince had 9,600. The hon. gentleman ought to know that he is totally wrong. King's has 7,120. Prince only 8,198. When he repeats that 300 of a Conservative majority was given East Queen's, he repeats what is very wide of the truth. I can show what the hon. gentleman and his party did with regard to county lines in Prince Edward Island. This map which I now show to the House will show what his friends did in the way of gerrymandering Prince Edward Island.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman said that I did it.

Mr. MARTIN. I said the hon. gentleman's friends did it. And the gentleman who was the leader of the Government at the time when this redistribution was made was rewarded by this Government. This was Mr. Frederick Peters, who was appointed by the hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) counsel before the Behring Sea Commissions, for which he has drawn, perhaps, about $20,000 in hard cash of the money of the people of Canada.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's P.E.I.) The red on that map represents one riding.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It should have on it a photograph of the man who drew it.

Mr. MARTIN. It certainly is not a photograph of the hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies), for his features are a little more regular than this. This is what I presume the hon. member for East Prince (Mr. Bell) would call a good gerrymander—one that would class A1 at Lloyds. The hon. gentleman had a seat in the legislature and was a supporter of the party that carried out this gerrymander.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Who is the hon. gentleman speaking of?

Mr. MARTIN. Of the hon. gentleman from East Prince (Mr. Bell). This small spot on this map is a district called Georgetown, and that town of Georgetown—

The PRIME MINISTER. Order. It is now half-past twelve.

Mr. MARTIN. If you turn to the debates of 1892, you will see that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries consumed about half an hour in talking of this same matter.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I may remind the hon. gentleman that, in Committee of the Whole on the Bill, discussion is confined to the clause which has been submitted to the committee.

Mr. MARTIN. Perhaps I can get a chance to explain it on the third reading.

The PRIME MINISTER. When section 3 was adopted, my attention was drawn in another direction, and I did not notice that you had put the question. I have an amendment to suggest to subsection "d." That subsection now reads as follows:—

(d) The parishes of Notre Dame de Stanbridge and Notre Dame des Anges de Stanbridge, together with the islands situated in the river Richelieu opposite thereto, are transferred from the electoral district of St. John's and Iberville to the electoral district of Missisquoi.

I move to strike out, in line 53, the following words:—"together with the islands situated in the River Richelieu opposite thereto."

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN.

The PRIME MINISTER. I wish now to make an alteration in subsection "k" of the same section, which reads as follows:—

(k) All that part of the township of Stanfold, to wit: the first twelve lots in the first three ranges of the said township, which forms part of the parish of Notre Dame de Lourdes, is transferred from the electoral district of Drummond and Arthabaska to the electoral district of Megantic.

I move to alter that so it shall read as follows:—

All that part of the township of Stanfold, to wit: the first twelve lots in the first three ranges the first ten lots in the fourth and in the fifth ranges, the first four lots in the sixth range, the first two lots in the seventh range of the said township are transferred from the electoral district of Drummond and Arthabaska to the electoral district of Megantic.

The reason is, that the township of Arthabaskaville belongs to the electoral district of Drummond and Arthabaska. But there are some settlements nearer the township of Somerset South which have been incorporated in the municipal township of Somerset South, and which have been annexed by the legislature of the province and by resolution of the county council, to form part of the county of Megantic, by a statute of the province of Quebec passed in 1895, chapter 12, 58 Victoria, of the legislature of the province of Quebec.

Mr. HAGGART. I know nothing about these changes, and I see there are no members present from the province of Quebec.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not propose to move the third reading to-night.

Amendment agreed to.

Bill reported.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 12.40 a.m. (Saturday).

SAFETY OF SHIPS.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 170) respecting the safety of ships. He said: This relates to the deck cargoes carried by ships from Canada to Europe alone. A very serious blow was struck at our shipping interests by the insurance underwriters in the last year, when they raised the rate of insurance to a very high and, we think, very unjustifiable rate. Among the reasons alleged for this unfortunate course was the manner in which our ships carry their deck loads, chiefly from St. Lawrence ports to the European markets. The English law provides that no ships arriving there after the 1st of November and before the 1st April shall carry any deck load higher than three feet from the deck. Our law provides that no vessel shall leave our ports after the 1st October carrying a deck load more than three feet from the deck. If it had not been for the British Act, which prohibits the entry of a deck load higher than three feet from the deck in the winter, I should be prepared to recommend, in conformity with the advice of the shipping interests, that we should permit the ships to load their deck loads flush with the bulwark rails. But as ships are not allowed to enter English ports with deck loads higher than three feet from the deck in winter we must conform to the English law. In this Bill, we extend the time up to the 12th October when steamers may load in summer a deck load more than three feet. This concession does not extend to sailing ships. Last year I was instructed that steamers would not come to the St. Lawrence ports at all, as under our restrictions with regard to deck loads, they were not able to make sufficient freight, and consequently they went to the Baltic ports instead. After consulting the shipping and insurance interests, I am advised that we can with great safety extend the time during which steamers may load their summer deck loads to the 12th October, which will enable them to arrive in England before the prohibited date of the 1st November. But this extension of time cannot be granted sailing vessels. In winter, under the new law, a steamship can load any deck load approved by the port warden up to the 12th October. At present there is no such requirement, and my hon. colleague (Mr. Do-bell) informs me that one of the ships left the port of Quebec, and when she got out in the stream she keeled right over, so high was her deck load. This provision requiring the deck loads to be inspected by the port warden and approved by him will prevent any vessel ever leaving port with any deck load which is not consistent with safety. The law also provides that no clearance shall be given by the customs officers to any vessel carrying a deck load unless and until she has complied with this requirement, that is, obtained the approval of the port warden. I do not propose that the second reading be taken in a hurry, but would specially recommend gentlemen representing the commercial and mercantile interests to have copies of the Bill forwarded to their constituents in the shipping interest for the benefit of their advice. I have taken the advice of the Montreal, Quebec and other shipping interests in the lower provinces, and think that this Bill meets with their wishes.

Motion agreed to ; Bill read the first time.

CLOTHING FOR THE ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE.

Mr. FOSTER (by Mr. Bergeron) asked :

Who supplied the clothing for the Royal Military College at Kingston previously to the present firm, and was it by tender and contract, and for what length of time ?

Who now supplies the clothing for this institution; were tenders called for, and if so, was the contract given to the lowest tenderer?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). I have the following information in answer to this question:—A communication from Lieutenant-Colonel Vidal, for Chief Staff Officer, addressed to the Commandant Royal Military College, sending this question and asking for an answer; then, answer to it of S. C. McGill, Lieutenant-Colonel, for the Commandant, addressed to the Chief Staff Officer, as follows:—

(1) George Creegan, of Kingston, from 1876 to June, 1898. At different times during these years other persons tendered for this work, but Mr. Creegan's price being lowest, his contract with the Commandant was renewed. (2) Messrs. Livingstone & Bros., of Kingston. The old contractor's work having been found very unsatisfactory for some time, and this firm being highly recommended, the change was recommended by the Commandant to the department and approved of. Tenders were not called for.

(Sgd.) S. C. MCGILL, Lt.-Col., Staff Adjutant,
for Commandant.

SALARIES OF POSTMASTERS.

Mr. MONK (by Mr. Bergeron) asked:

1. What is the postmaster's salary at the following places:—(a) Isle Bizard, P.Q.; (b) Ste. Geneviève, Jacques Cartier county, P.Q.; (c) Pointe Claire, P.Q.; (d) Beaconsfield, P.Q.; (e) Valois, P.Q.?

2. How many mails are delivered daily at Pointe Claire, Beaconsfield and Valois?

3. Is it the intention of the Government to establish a post office at Saraguay, Jacques Cartier county, P.Q.?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). 1. (a) Isle Bizard, salary $20; (b) Ste. Geneviève, salary, $100, and an additional allowance of $6 for forward duty; (c) Pointe Claire, salary, $120; (d) there is no post office called Beaconsfield in the province of Quebec; (e) Valois, salary, $24. 2. Mails are delivered at Pointe Claire twice per day, and at Valois, once per day. 3. A post office called Saraguayville was opened in the county of Jacques Cartier on the 1st October, 1898.

CONVEYANCE OF MAILS, JACQUES CARTIER COUNTY.

Mr. MONK (by Mr. Bergeron) asked:

1. How many mails per day are there from Montreal to Isle Bizard, P.Q.?

2. At what o'clock is the Montreal mail due to be distributed each day in the parish of Isle Bizard, in the county of Jacques Cartier?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. 1. There are two mails per day from Montreal to Isle Bizard. 2. Mails are due at Isle Bizard post office about 9.30 a.m. and 7.30 p.m.

Mr. MONK (by Mr. Bergeron) asked:

1. Did the Government call for tenders for the conveyance of mails from Beaconsfield, P.Q., to Ste. Geneviève and Isle Bizard?

2. How many tenders were received?

3. Who was the lowest tenderer?

4. To whom was the contract for the conveyance of the said mails awarded, and at what price?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. 1. Yes. 2. Three. 3. F. Lauzon. 4. To F. Lauzon, the lowest tenderer, but the inspector reports Mr. Lauzon as refusing to accept the contract, and, accordingly, up to the present no contract has been made.

FLOODING OF LANDS, STE. GENEVIÈVE.

Mr. MONK (by Mr. Bergeron) asked:

1. Did E. Lafontaine, appointed to examine the cause of flooding of lands at Ste. Geneviève, Jacques Cartier county, make a written report?

2. What was, according to said report, if any, the cause of floods in said locality?

3. What does the Government intend doing to prevent said floods?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). 1. Yes. 2. The following is an extract from Mr. Lafontaine's report:—

The owners of the water lots at Ste. Geneviève have not to suffer by the rising of the waters at Rivière des Prairies, caused by the melting of snow in the spring. The level of that river rises but little at such time, and when there is an inundation it is but slight, and causes but very little damage.

It is only towards the 15th of June, when the waters of the Ottawa River rise, a portion of which empty into Rivière des Prairies, that damages occur. The waters, not finding sufficient outlet in the rapids at Ste. Geneviève, rise and overflow the lands there, and spoil the farming of some 300 acres.

3. The matter is under consideration.

TENDERS FOR BINDER TWINE.

Mr. TAYLOR (by Mr. Mills) asked:

1. In what newspapers were tenders called for by advertisements calling for tenders for the binder twine manufactured in the Kingston Penitentiary between the 1st of July, 1898, and the 30th of June, 1899?

2. What was the date of the advertisement calling for said tenders?

3. On what date were the tenders to be received?

4. How many tenders were received?

5. What were the names of the persons or firms who tendered?

6. What were the prices offered by the unsuccessful tenderers?

7. At what price was the said twine sold to the Hobbs Hardware Company?

The PRIME MINISTER. 1. Toronto "Globe," Hamilton "Times," London "Advertiser," Windsor "Record," Chatham "Banner," Ottawa "Free Press," Brantford "Expositor," Kingston "Whig," Montreal

"Witness," "La Patrie," Montreal "Herald," Quebec "Le Soleil," Quebec "Telegraph," Halifax "Chronicle," Acadian "Recorder," St. John "Globe," St. John "Telegraph," Moncton "Transcript," Charlottetown "Patriot," Winnipeg "Free Press," Winnipeg "Tribune," Regina "Leader," Vancouver "World," Victoria "Province," Victoria "Times," London "Record," Kingston "Freeman," Ottawa "Le Temps," "The Canada Baptist," "Christian Guardian," "The Westminster," "Hardware and Metal," Essex "Free Press," Ottawa "Danebrog," "Dominion Presbyterian," Sherbrooke "Progrès de l'Est," Paris "Transcript," Belleville "Sun," Belleville "Ontario," Beeton "World," Ridgeway "Standard," Leamington "News," Peterborough "Examiner," Stratford "Beacon," "United Canada." 2. 12th January, 1899. 3. 15th February, 1899. 4. Four tenders. 5. H. N. Bate & Sons, Hobbs Hardware Co., Call Bros., Martin P. Connolly. 6. This information has always been considered confidential until such time as the twine is marketed. 7. See answer to No. 6.

POSTMASTER OF SYDENHAM, ONT.

Mr. BELL (Addington)—(by Mr. Davin) asked :

Has the postmaster of Sydenham, Ont., been discovered with a shortage in his cash during the last three months? If so, what is the amount of his shortage, and when was it made good to the department?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. To state that the postmaster of Sydenham had been discovered with a shortage in his cash, is to give an entirely erroneous idea as to what occurred, which simply was, that, instead of keeping the whole cash in the official till, the same, to the extent of $12.18 became mixed with funds of his own. When the inspector was making the regular inspection of the office, he called the postmaster's attention to the matter, and whilst the inspector was present, the postmaster immediately separated the amount by putting into the official till the $12.18. This occurred on the 19th May, 1899.

THE GALICIAN SETTLEMENT, SALT-COATS.

Mr. DAVIN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I should like to ask the Minister of the Interior whether Mr. Turreff, the land commissioner sent some three weeks ago to Manitoba, has returned; if not, what is he doing there?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). Mr. Turreff, the commissioner for Dominion lands, was sent up to Manitoba; he had also instructions to go to the Galician settlement near Edmonton, and to make a report to the department in regard to departmental work. He has not returned, and I am under the impression, speaking from recollection, that he telegraphed, asking if he might have leave of absence to go to the coast for a few days, while he was away. I have not yet any information as to what has happened since then.

Mr. DAVIN. The Minister will remember that some weeks ago I called his attention to the rumour in the newspapers that a considerable number of the Galicians near Saltcoats were dying, and the Minister was courteous enough to send me a note about that. Has the hon. gentleman since heard of the condition of the Galicians north of Saltcoats?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). I gave it my attention at once. The immigration commissioner had the matter in charge at the time and attended to it. The physician was in charge at the place mentioned and everything was done that could possibly be done.

INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION—ALASKAN BOUNDARY.

Mr. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria, B.C.) Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the right. hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) whether his attention has been called to an article which appeared in the Ottawa "Citizen" of this day, 10th of July. It is as follows:—

NEGOTIATIONS ARE OFF.

Story that Britain and the United States Could Not Agree to a Provisional Boundary.

New York, July 8.—The "Journal's" Washington correspondent says:

"Following are the British-Canadian propositions which have been rejected by the State Department:—

"First, the cession of Pyramid Harbour at the head of the Lynn Canal; second, the cession of any other port on the Lynn Canal; third, the cession of a strip of territory which would give access to tide-water; fourth, a free right of way across Alaska to any United States port; fifth, the variation of Hay's provisional boundary line so as to include Kluckwau, an Indian village, at the head of canoe navigation, leading into the Lynn Canal; sixth, the inclusion of the Porcupine district, with a near approach to navigable waters on the British side of the provisional boundary line; seventh, the proposition to arbitrate the provisional line precedent to the formulation of a modus vivendi pending a permanent settlement of the question.

"This statement was made by a high official of the State Department, describing the status of negotiations on the Alaskan boundary:—'The negotiations have been indefinitely postponed, or, to put it otherwise, they have practically been declared off.'

"These developments leave the boundary line in dispute where it was when the Joint High Commission adjourned on February 18th, with the situation not improved.

"Sir Julian Pauncefote, Ambassador Choate and Lord Salisbury went as far as to agree that a provisional boundary line, to be followed by a modus vivendi, was the first step. England proposed several lines, which were objected to, and eventually Secretary Hay delimited the territory with a line which was apparently agreeable to England. Canada then suddenly was revealed again as the really important factor, and made propositions at various times which were sustained by England. England's last diplomatic resort, which developed yesterday, is the astounding suggestion that the provisional line itself be submitted to arbitration. This was promptly refused by this government by cable.

"The United States is not unwilling to submit the true and permanent boundary line to arbitration, and has officially said so. The State Department officials here regard the proposal to arbitrate the provisional line as only another scheme for delay, profitless to this country and capable of being made advantageous to Canada. The State Department makes this point: 'It is a matter which two sensible and great governments could easily agree upon without the intervention of any other nation. Great Britain's refusal to accept our provisional line, precedent to the formation of a modus vivendi, is regarded as distinctly disingenuous and intended to secure, through the favour of an arbitrator, probably a European monarch or a South American despot, an advantage, to be utilized when the temporary line is arbitrated, as a basis for some preposterous claim.'"

I would ask the right hon. gentleman whether he can give the House any information as to whether this article, or any portion of it, is true.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, I do not think that I am called upon to give any information upon this piece of journalism. We have had such articles up time and again in this session, and every time that these sensational despatches have been given as coming from such sources, the probabilities have been that they have not been true. I do not believe there is any more truth in this than there has been in preceding despatches of the same character. I am very glad to know, if there is any truth in this despatch, that there is a probability of the permanent boundary being referred to arbitration. One thing is true in that statement, and it is that the matter is pretty much where it was when we returned in February last in regard to the permanent boundary. In regard to the provisional boundary, we have been negotiating in the endeavour to have it fixed in a manner which would suit both parties, but, I am sorry to say, that, up to the present time, our propositions have not been agreeable to the United States, and the American propositions have not been agreeable to us. I am not without hope that we may reach a settlement upon this question, in fact, I have great hope that we shall do so, but the House will readily understand, that it is very difficult to settle a boundary so far distant as we are from the place where it is to be fixed, and with the limited information we have upon the subject.

EMPLOYMENT OF MR. W. T. R. PRESTON.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) whether Mr. W. T. R. Preston is in the Government employ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). He is.

REGULATIONS OF NEWFOUNDLAND GOVERNMENT RESPECTING EXPORT OF BAIT.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), whether he has any further information in respect to the regulations of the Newfoundland Government respecting the export of bait. I may mention that since I last had the matter up, I have seen some of the captains myself and have taken statements from them which I would be very glad to furnish the hon. gentleman for his information. I thought possibly that he might have some further information.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). Mr. Speaker, I am not able to make any definite statement to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) to-day. The Government has been in communication with the Government of Newfoundland since the hon. gentleman last brought the matter up in the House. I am not aware whether, in the last day or two, any communication has been received from the Newfoundland Government, but we have entered a very strong protest against the action of the Newfoundland Government in respect to our fishermen. I will look, when I go to the department, and see whether any communication has been received within the last few days.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Speaker, before the House proceeds with Government Orders, I think that an arrangement was made across the floor some days ago that unopposed notices of motions should go through to-day.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I may say to my hon. friend (Mr. Wallace), that I have looked over the paper, and I find that all the motions have been gone through once before, with the exception of the last four, that of Mr. Gillies, those of Mr. McCarthy, and that of Mr. Wallace. All the others have been gone through and must stand, because they are on debatable subjects. As to these four there can be no objection.

Mr. SPEAKER. By the unanimous consent of the House, I will call the four last motions on the Order paper.

TRADE AND OTHER RELATIONS WITH THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. McCARTHY (by Mr. McMullen), moved for :

Copy of the draft treaty respecting Canadian trade and other relations with the United States entered into and settled in 1874 by Sir Edward Thornton and the Hon. George Brown on behalf of the Imperial Government, with the Government of the United States, and for copies of the protocols and correspondence relating thereto, and the non-ratification of the said treaty by the United States.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I do not see much use in moving this, because this information is now in the sessional papers of 1874 and 1875.

Mr. DAVIN. Yes, it is all there.

Mr. SPEAKER. Dropped.

RETURNS ORDERED.

Return showing : 1. The number of wharfs and piers that have been constructed at the public expense by the Government of Canada, or the construction of which has been assisted by the Government of Canada, in the province of Ontario since 1867, and the total amount paid out of the public exchequer of Canada towards the construction, repairs and maintenance of these wharfs and piers from the 1st of July, 1867, up to the present date.

2. The number of wharfs and piers constructed in the province of Quebec during the said period, and the amount paid towards their construction, repairs and maintenance by the Government of Canada.

3. The number of wharfs and piers constructed in the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, and the aggregate amount expended in each of these provinces from the 1st of July, 1867, to the present date in the construction, maintenance and repairs of the said wharfs and piers.—(Mr. Gillies.)

Copy of the Treaty of 1825 between Great Britain and Russia, respecting Alaska, and for copies of the projects, protocols and correspondence between the Imperial Government and the Government of Russia respecting the said treaty, and subsequent thereto, and copies of correspondence between the Imperial Government and the British Ambassador at St. Petersburg during the negotiations for the said treaty.—(Mr. McCarthy.)

Return of all papers in connection with the applications made for, and the consideration of the commutation of the sentence of death on Marion Brown for murder.—(Mr. Wallace.)

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 154) further to amend the Customs Act.—(Mr. Paterson.)

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

REPRESENTATION IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock) moved :

That Bill (No. 126) respecting representation in the House of Commons, be now read a third time.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, I would move :

That the Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of amending section 4.

This is in regard to the city of St. John simply to make it clearer as to what should be the boundaries of the electoral districts of the city and county of St. John.

I may say at this stage, Mr. Speaker, that the Government have considered the question of the selection of commissioners who are to act under this law. I made a promise early in this debate that before the Bill was put through this House I would give the names of the commissioners whom we intended to ask to act on this commission. The gentlemen we intend to ask to sit on this commission are all judges of the High Court of Justice of Ontario. They are :

The Honourable Sir John Burton, Chief Justice of the Court of Appeal of Ontario.

The Honourable Sir John Alexander Boyd, Chancellor of the province of Ontario, president of the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice of Ontario.

The Honourable Mr. Justice Falconbridge, one of Her Majesty's judges of the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice of Ontario.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into committee on the Bill.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. BERGERON. I, unfortunately, was not here on Friday afternoon, as I did not expect that the clause relating to the province of Quebec would be passed. I would ask the right hon. the Premier to be kind enough to answer me some questions with regard to clause 3, so that the House may understand the change that is made in the province of Quebec.

The PRIME MINISTER. After we dispose of the electoral district of St. John, N.B., I have no objection to answer the question of my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron).

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The existing Bill, in paragraph 4, provides that the city of St. John shall return one member, and that the county of St. John shall return one member, the object being to constitute the city into an electoral district and vote for one member, and the county of St. John to constitute an electoral district for one member and vote for one member. There is some doubt as to whether that is clearly expressed in the Bill. By the Act of 1891, of the legislature of New Brunswick, the boundaries of the electoral districts of both the city and the county were defined for electoral purposes. We propose to follow the lines of the provincial Act and the paragraph which we move to insert in lieu of the one now in the Bill, reads as follows:—

Parts (a) and (b) of subsection 5 of section 2 of chapter 11 of the Statutes of 1892 is hereby repealed and the following is substituted therefor:—

“(a) The electoral district of St. John shall consist of the city of St. John, as now existing under provincial legislation, and shall return one member.

“(b) The county of St. John shall consist of the county of St. John, as now existing under provincial legislation, and shall return one member.”

This in no way alters what was proposed to be carried out by the Bill, but it makes it more clear and definite.

Mr. WALLACE. What is the population of the city, and what is the population of the county?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have not got the population before me now, but this amendment does not alter the meaning of the Bill as originally passed.

Mr. WALLACE. Surely the hon. member can tell us what the population of each of these electoral districts is? I would like also to inquire whether the city of Portland is in the city of St. John or in the county of St. John for electoral purposes under this Bill.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Portland is now in the city of St. John.

Mr. WALLACE. We know that, but in what electoral district is it?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The town of Portland is now part of the city of St. John, and my impression is that for electoral purposes it will form part of the city of St. John.

Mr. WALLACE. We do not want the Minister's impression, we want facts about a thing like this.

Mr. HAGGART. What was the difference between the provincial electoral district of St. John and the electoral district of St. John as constituted under this Bill now?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The Bill as now before the committee makes the federal electoral division identically the same as they are in the provincial elections.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the distinction between them and the Dominion electoral districts?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In the case of a member for this Parliament the electors of the city of St. John and of the county of St. John voted together for one member and the electors of the city of St. John alone voted for another member.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the difference as the Bill proposes now between the electoral district of St. John City as it was and as it is under your Bill?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Under the present Bill the electors of the city of St. John will elect one representative for this House.

Mr. HUGHES. Is it the same area?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The same area as affects one of the members at present. As to the other member, the electors of the county of St. John, the parishes outside of the city, will elect one member.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the population of the county?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Eleven thousand, as I understand it.

Mr. WALLACE. And what is the population of the city?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Between 30,000 and 40,000.

Mr. WALLACE. What does the House think of that?

Mr. McNEILL. How long has the existing condition of things prevailed before the introduction of this Bill?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It has varied from time to time. There is an anomalous condition of things existing in the city of St. John which has no parallel in any other constituency in the Dominion. There have been times when the city and the county together elected two members. There have been times when the county and city voted together and the city voted alone. At the present time the city votes for its own members and the county for its own members in provincial matters.

Mr. McNEILL. So far as the election of members for this House is concerned, I understand that the city of St. John and the county of St. John have together elected a member to this House—at all events, since confederation.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They do not now in the province. They have altered that.

Mr. McNEILL. I am not speaking of the province; I am speaking of this House. I do not consider that we have a right to hand over all our prerogatives to the provinces. I understand that this is an arrangement that has existed for many years. There has been no gerrymander here, and it seems to me strange that hon. gentlemen should interfere in this way, and pounce down on this one particular place in the province.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is the only one where this extraordinary condition prevails.

Mr. McNEILL. I understand that one of the constituencies has a population of between 10,000 and $11,000, and the other a population of nearly 40,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. McNEILL. That seems a very strange arrangement to make.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There are a good many similar cases.

Mr. McNEILL. It is another illustration of the manner in which the Liberal party, so far as this Bill is concerned, set the principle of representation by population utterly at defiance.

The PRIME MINISTER. Hear, hear.

Mr. McNEILL. My right hon. friend says "hear, hear," but I think there is no question at all about it. If my right hon. friend will forgive me, I say that the very root principle of this Bill sets the principle of representation by population at defiance, because you ask the judges to decide what the constituencies shall be without knowing what the population is. The very foundation of the constitution in this regard is that the constituencies shall be readjusted from time to time on the basis of population, as between province and province; and whatever reason we can adduce for giving a greater representation to the more populous province, you can adduce for giving a greater representation to the more populous county, and in so far as this Bill calls on the commissioners to readjust the constituencies in the dark, as to the change of population which has taken place in the last eight or nine years, to that extent the principle of representation by population is set utterly at defiance.

The PRIME MINISTER. The principle of representation by population cannot in any way come into this question. My hon. friend is aware that the principle of representation by population entered into the Representation Act of 1882, so far as the province of New Brunswick was concerned. That province did not increase in population under the regime of hon. gentlemen opposite, I am sorry to say, and therefore lost one member. But now we find this unique condition of things in the city and county of St. John, probably not to be found anywhere else on the face of the earth, that the electors of the city of St. John elect one member, and then the same men vote with the electors of the county to elect a second member. Nothing could be more anomalous than that.

Mr. McNEILL. They are well content with it, are they not?

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not know whether they are or not; but my hon. friend ought not to be content with such an anomalous condition of things. If this Bill passes, the electors of the city of St. John will elect one member and the electors of the county of St. John will elect one member. The hon. member tells me that there is a great disparity in the populations. The city of St. John will have about 30,000.

Mr. McNEILL. Nearer 40,000—I think 39,000.

The PRIME MINISTER. Well, let us say 40,000. The county of St. John has a population of 11,000.

Mr. McNEILL. Over 10,000.

The PRIME MINISTER. One is a rural population and the other a city population. How can my hon. friend defend the present system, by which the men of the city of St. John elect one member, and then go and vote for another member in conjunction with the 11,000 of the county of St. John? My hon. friend will agree with me that the same purpose will be served, and in a way more regular and more convenient for the members, by having one to sit for the city and one for the county, and no injustice will be done to any one.

Mr. BERGERON. Oh, yes.

The PRIME MINISTER. To whom is the injustice done? Certainly, the present half-and-half arrangement is not suitable to anyone, while the arrangement proposed in the Bill cannot work the slightest injustice to any person on earth.

Mr. McNEILL. My right hon. friend will forgive me if I remind him that this is a Bill introduced with one excuse—that is, to redress an injustice that was committed in 1882 and to fulfil a pledge. Surely my right hon. friend does not pretend to say that there was an injustice committed in 1882 in the city and county of St. John. So far as the anomaly is concerned, since the arrangement is working satisfactorily to the people of the two constituencies, I do not think we need to trouble ourselves about the anomaly. Our constitution is full of anomalies, and so long as they work well, we are all satisfied. I do not think it necessary that we should set about having everything cut and carved in accordance with some theoretical principle, provided always that the present arrangement is a satisfactory one to those whom it affects.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend is not a reformer.

Mr. McNEILL. I belong to the great reform party of Canada, the Liberal-Conservative party; and I think it hardly lies in the mouth of my right hon. friend, who has adopted our policy, to say a word of that kind across the floor of the House. This amendment does not come within the four corners of the reason given for the introduction of this measure, and when there must be another readjustment of the constituencies in 1902, I think it would be reasonable to allow the present arrangement, by which no injustice is done, and with which every one is satisfied, to remain at least until that time.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. My hon. friend will see that the committee has already agreed to this clause in the Bill:

The electoral district of the county of St. John shall consist of the county of St. John only.

In the amendment we are not altering that.

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, you are.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We are making that more clear which was somewhat doubtful. The county of St. John is expressly defined as one electoral district, but we should have gone on to say that the electoral district of the city of St. John shall consist of the city of St. John only. The amendment does not alter the Bill, but makes it more clear.

Mr. HAGGART. I was led to the same belief as the hon. gentleman by the remarks of the Minister of Railways and the Premier. I asked if the electoral district of the city of St. John was as it had been fixed by the law; but it is entirely different. There is 16,000 or 18,000 of a difference. I find by the census that the population of the city of St. John is 24,000 and that of the county 25,000 under the old Act, and now you intend to alter that entirely.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries tells us that this was passed on Friday, and there is to be no further discussion on it, and that it is only making some verbal alterations. But we did not do our duty on Friday night, and since hon. gentlemen have opened up the question we propose to have it ventilated now, and it is in order to do so. What are the facts? The hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) has told us that his impression was that the city of St. John had 24,000 and the county 25,000. That is the case probably by the census returns, but a different state of affairs exists to-day. The city of Portland has been taken from the county and added to the city. I asked the question a while ago, where the city of Portland was in this redistribution—whether in the city or county. The hon. Minister of Marine could not tell, the Minister of Finance said his impression was it was in the city, but nobody could give a definite answer. I appealed to the hon. Postmaster General, who had the Bill in charge, but he was silent. What are the facts, so far as we can glean them? They are that the city of St. John, under this Bill, will have 39,000 people, and the county 10,000, so that the city has four to one of an interest in the question. This is a gerrymander, and the right hon. First Minister tells us that he wished to avoid gerrymandering. Oh, he says, representation by population cannot come in, in any way, on this question. I should think not, where you make a division of city and county, and give the city four times the population of the county. Such a preposterous division I never heard of. The right hon. First Minister thought it was an anomaly to have the city sending one member and the county sending another. Perhaps so. I believe there is not a parallel case throughout the whole Dominion, but we are told that it is something with which the people there are quite satisfied, and if it was an anomaly, it was a fair and proper division. The total population gave about the unit for two members, or a little over. I assume that the people of New Brunswick thought it was a pretty fair distribution for I am not aware that they have disturbed that arrangement in the local legislature.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is just what they have done.

Mr. WALLACE. For many years they had that arrangement in the local legislature, and presumably where they have four members for the city and two for the county, it will be more convenient to divide it up in some fair way, by giving the city twice the representation given in the county, if that is a fair division—four and two.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is the division.

Mr. WALLACE. That recognizes in a certain way, at any rate, the principle of representation by population. But this Bill totally ignores that principle, by providing that 40,000 people shall elect one member and 10,000 the other. Surely there is nothing to justify that. The principle of representation by population should guide us in a rough and ready way, at any rate. We recognize it in the distribution of members for the various provinces. Quebec sends sixty-five, and every other province sends its proportion according to population—one member for about every 22,700, or whatever the unit of population is, according to the census. The same justice should be done, so far as conveniently, each electoral district; but here you have the two, the city and the county, which for these thirty-two years have been represented by two members on the principle of representation by population, approximately if not exactly. Now we have a proposal iniquitous in character, because it ignores every idea of fair-play, by allowing 40,000 citizens of St. John to send one member and 10,000 in the county to send another member. When you have adopted, as we have in Ontario, the system of one man one vote, you must, to be honest and logical, carry out the law fairly and approximate, at any rate, by giving one vote one value, a thing which you totally ignore in this case and all through the Act in the province of Ontario as well.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend is surely not serious. If he will reason a little he will see the absurdity of his argument. The anomaly he complains of is one that he is responsible for. How does the thing work to-day? There are 5,000 electors in the city of St. John for every 1,000 in the county, and the city electors vote also for the county member, so that the same disproportion exists now as will under this Bill, only we follow the principle of recognizing county boundaries. There is no occasion at all for my hon. friend to get so angry.

Mr. BERGERON. If my right hon. friend wanted to reform this way of voting in St. John, which does look anomalous at first sight, there is a way of doing it without completely reversing the principle which the right hon. gentleman said he was desirous of establishing when introducing the Bill, of having representation according to population as much as possible. He admits that the city of St. John, with a population of 39,000, will elect a member, and that the suburbs in the county of St. John, with a population of 11,000, will also elect a member. Until now it was considered that the county gave such a small vote that it had to be tempered by the larger vote of the city, and then it could not be called a hive, which it may be now, prepared for the benefit of somebody. We do not know. It came so late that we cannot judge very well of the reasons for it. If my right hon. friend wanted to do the proper thing, why does he not take part of the city of St. John and annex it to the county and make a constituency. My hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) need not laugh. We have the same thing in the city of Montreal, and the same thing is being done in the city of Toronto.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Mr. BERGERON. Why, 35,000 people are being taken from the county of York and put into the city of Toronto.

Mr. WALLACE.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). They are part of the city municipality and not of the county.

Mr. BERGERON. But if you do it in one way, why can you not do it the other? It would equalize population better, giving about 25,000 to each constituency. Otherwise the people will naturally suppose—of course, I do not know whether it is true or not—that, instead of doing right, you are trying to make a hive of a very small county with about 1,800 votes. It will be nothing but a pleasure for a man to run in such a county, and will offer an excellent chance for a gentleman who desires to get into the House in an easy way.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) said that he did not do as I state, that he had divided the city and county of St. John into electoral districts, giving each a representative and fairly dividing them, because one has a population of 25,000 and the other 24,000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Mr. HAGGART. Yes. I can interpret the Bill as well as anybody—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not object to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) interpreting the Bill, but what I object to is this misquoting what I said.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman denied my statement that it was so. I stated that under the Bill as introduced by the hon. gentleman he has divided the county and city of St. John in two electoral districts, giving each a representative; in one district a population of 25,000 and in the other of 24,000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) is falling into an error. The municipal boundaries have been altered by provincial legislation since the time of which he speaks.

Mr. HAGGART. I am looking at the returns for the electoral districts.

Mr. POWELL. Perhaps I can throw a little light on this matter. What was originally the city of Portland and included in the census returns under five wards originally, was a distinct city, and before 1890 it was incorporated into the city of St. John and made part and parcel of that city. But the time-honoured state of affairs was continued by the redistribution of 1882 and the redistribution of 1892. It stands to-day as it always was, and the change is this carving out of a little constituency of 10,000 inhabitants.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. In conformity with the municipal boundaries.

Mr. POWELL. They are not coterminous with the municipal boundaries.

Mr. ELLIS. I do not know exactly the terms of the amendment, as I was not in my place at the moment when it was proposed. But I feel it my duty to refer to the representation of St. John, as it is under discussion. I would have to answer to my constituents in case any discussion arose about the reasons for the settlement of the matter. Now, I represent a city of 39,000 people; and the effect of the legislation is to take away from these 39,000 people the right to have a vote for two members of Parliament. The main idea of the settlement of the question is that the city and county of St. John, which is the title of the county of St. John—there is no county of St. John under the law—should be made one constituency, and that two men should be chosen for it, the same as in the case of Halifax and Pictou. The division on the ground of population is not a good one. In the last election 7,200 votes were cast in the city of St. John, and 1,900 in the county and outside of the city. The total vote on the list is about 11,000 in the city of St. John, and 14,000 in the city and county, leaving 3,000 for the county outside the city. So the new constituency would have 3,000 and the city and county 11,000. I would press upon the Government that on principle and on grounds of greatest fairness, no alteration is necessary now, but that if change is made two members should be elected for the city and county of St. John.

Mr. POWELL. It is true, as the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) said, that there is an anomaly in this matter, but it is no more an anomaly than giving the universities of Oxford and Cambridge representations in the English House of Commons.

The PRIME MINISTER. Oh, yes.

Mr. POWELL. It is precisely the same thing. The city of St. John, on account of its position in the province of New Brunswick, and, I think, by virtue of its charter—the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Ellis) will correct me if I am wrong—had a right to distinct representation in the House of Assembly.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). As long as the charter was not altered.

Mr. POWELL. It has not been altered.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, it has; over and over again.

Mr. POWELL. Only so far as the incorporation of Portland is concerned. The leading principles remain the same.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Powell) means by leading principles.

Mr. POWELL. From the time the province of New Brunswick was set apart as a separate province in 1784 down to 1892, that is, for a period of 108 years, this anomaly existed. Now, Sir, what dissipated the anomaly so far as representation in the provincial assembly is concerned? Well, Sir, in 1890, in the general election, the city and county of St. John returned six members in opposition to the then Administration, headed by the present Minister of Railways and Canals. One year after that election, the hon. gentleman caused to be introduced and put through the House a Bill by which two members were given to the outside parishes of St. Simonds, Lancaster, Musquash and St. Martins, with a population of about nine or ten thousand people. I question very much if they did, at that time, number so many as they do at the present time, because the county of St. John has been depopulated somewhat. But in this way the city of St. John and these parishes were dissevered. Previous to the incorporation of Portland in the city, had Portland been incorporated with the parish in which it stands—St. Simonds or Lancaster I think—and a division made on that basis, the population of the two ridings would have been nearly even. But Portland was overwhelmingly in opposition to the then Government, and if Portland had been put in, as part of one constituency, there would have been no hive for the supporters of the Government, and so that anomaly was created of giving two members to what were originally four parishes, with a population of 10,000, and giving four members for the city of St. John, with 38,000 or 39,000. Now, what is sought to be done is the violation of the most sacred principle as laid down by the leader of the Government, that respect should be paid to historic associations and to the traditions of localities. To-day we have the whole arrangement broken up. Why not adopt the division which has so long existed, and which was perpetuated in 1882, and still further in 1892, by which there was no destruction of the old order of things. Or, if they must divide, why not divide in the perfectly obvious way suggested so as to give two constituencies, one with a population of 24,184 and the other a population of about 25,000—as equal a division of population as is practicable? What should have been done was to have given one member to the old city of St. John, that was recognized as having some peculiar privileges for over a century—giving one member to the old city of St. John, then one member to Portland and the balance of the county. I think the fair principle was enunciated by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Ellis) when he said that it would be better to give two members generally to the city and county, the same as is done in Halifax, in Pictou, in Hamilton, and in this city of Ottawa. Now, what objection could there be to that? There could be no objection urged, although I myself am a strong believer in representation on the basis of population so far as it can be worked out. That is unquestionably the true principle.

The PRIME MINISTER. Hear, hear.

Mr. POWELL. I do not know whether the right hon. gentleman says "hear, hear." ironically, or as an expression of his genuine sentiment. So far as New Brunswick is concerned, the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) pointed to Westmoreland as an anomaly. Well, it is an anomaly. To-day, I suppose, I represent nearly 50,000 souls, the largest constituency in our province, by all odds, with the exception of St. John. Westmoreland contains as large a population as the constituency represented by the Minister of Railways and Canals, the county of Restigouche and the county of Victoria put together. So that one county has the same representation as three other counties in the province of New Brunswick. The principle of ridings sending individual members is doubtless the correct principle, and it is what all parties should have in view. But this is moving the sun back on the dial, it is going back to a state of affairs that every political party in every civilized country is endeavouring to get clear of as rapidly as practicable. There should be no different principle applied to New Brunswick than is applied in other provinces. The Government laid down the principle that they did not intend to meddle with affairs in the provinces any more than was necessary in order to restore the state of affairs before 1882. This is going further; it is creating an anomaly; as I said before, it is creating a state of affairs that is deprecated in every enlightened county with representative institutions. I think they would do well to act on the suggestion of the hon. member for St. John, that the county and city should be put together with two members, or else divide it on the lines of the old constituency, giving to Portland and the parishes of the county outside of Portland one member, and one to the city of St. John.

Mr. TUCKER. I have only to say that the statistics quoted by my colleague from St. John (Mr. Ellis) are quite correct. There are 11,000 voters in one division, and 3,000 in the other. The hon. gentleman quotes what was done years and years ago by our grandfathers; but I say that does not apply to us at all at this moment. What we have to deal with is the future. Now, as being interested in the general welfare of the city and county of St. John, I have written to a large number of my friends asking their opinions of the change proposed by the Government. So far, I have not received from any of those gentlemen to whom I wrote a single word against the proposed change. I consider that I was sent here for the purpose of serving both the county and the city, at least it is my desire to do so, and that is what I am endeavouring to do. For that reason I raise no question in regard to the population, or in regard to what was done years and years ago. Every one here knows that the city and county of St. John returned three members some eight or ten years ago, if my memory serves me right. Now they return only two members, but we have no reason to complain, I suppose, according to the principle which prevails elsewhere.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It may appear a little strange that I should insist upon saying a word with regard to this feature now under debate as affecting the province from which I come. My opinion is that the representatives from the different provinces affected ought to be the best judges of how their province is affected by this Bill. While I am sorry to differ with the two gentlemen who have spoken on the Bill, the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) and the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Ellis), still it is a legitimate difference. They have given their views with regard to the effect that this Bill is to have upon those particular constituencies now under discussion, the city of St. John and the city and county of St. John. I want to start out by stating that the question of representation by population has about as much to do with this discussion as it would have to do on a discussion of the tariff. The principle of representation by population was fought out in this country before confederation; it was so thoroughly fought out and established that it forms part of our constitution to-day. Representation by population was honestly carried out at the formation of confederation, and the representation of every province was based upon that principle. The advocates of that principle have adhered to it ever since, and it has remained and been acted upon ever since confederation, and will remain for all time while we have our present constitution. Quebec being taken as the pivotal province, every other province has a proportionate representation as compared with Quebec. That same clause provides for the readjustment of representation after each census, in order to carry out that principle. If the rate of population is changed so as to entitle one province to a larger representation on that basis, then provision was made for a redistribution so that the equilibrium could be kept up, that the proportion could be kept up. But so far as representation by population within each province is concerned, this Parliament never had anything to do with that, and should never occupy itself with such a discussion at all. How do I prove that? I prove it by consulting the very promoters of that principle, the men who fought it out and established the principle of representation by population. When confederation was formed that principle prevailed with regard to the provinces. Take the large city of Montreal, that was given credit for its large population in fixing the representation for Quebec. That province received a representation based upon the whole population, including that of the large city of Montreal. In like manner Ontario obtained a representation upon its whole population including the large city of Toronto. But did the men who framed the constitution and who adopted the principle of representation by population, turn round and give Montreal a representation by population in this Parliament? Not at all. The large city of Montreal did not get representation by population as between the provinces. Then it is fair to state that having fixed that principle as it is fixed by the constitution, as between the provinces, that principle does not apply within a province when we are legislating here. Therefore, it makes no difference to Quebec, if she has her 65 members here, how the 80 or 90 members from Ontario are distributed in Ontario; nor does it make any difference to Ontario, so long as she has her quota of members here, how the 65 members of Quebec are distributed in that province. That is a question that we have nothing to do with in this Parliament, we are only concerned in maintaining the proper provincial representation.

Mr. POWELL. Might I ask a question? Was it not entirely with regard to the principle of representation by population that the counties of Queen's and Sunbury, with such a small population, were united into one constituency when New Brunswick was deprived of one member under the census of 1891?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Was that entirely the cause? We find that Restigouche, with only 8,000 or 9,000 of a population was still left with one member. No matter how you handle it, there will be inequalities of population.

Mr. POWELL. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) wants a complete answer, I will give it to him. These two counties, Queen's and Sunbury, lie contiguous to each other, but there was no way of taking from any other county on the north to make up the population of Restigouche. There was no way of doing it without creating great disturbance and dissatisfaction. These two counties lie contiguous; they were very small counties, and, as they came so near the unit of population, constituting an average electoral constituency, they were united.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I will answer the question that my hon. friend (Mr. Powell) put to me, if he has not answered it himself already. That bears out the argument I was making. The union of these two counties was caused by that condition of the constitution that insists upon the principle of uniform representation, based upon the population as between the provinces.

Mr. POWELL. Oh, no.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Oh, yes.

Mr. POWELL. How did that affect it?

Mr. COSTIGAN. If the hon. gentleman will allow me to go on.

Mr. POWELL. Certainly.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I say, yes. When the census was taken, the change of population showed that New Brunswick must lose some of its representatives. It had more than it was entitled to on the basis of representation by population. I am correct in that, I suppose. The representation of New Brunswick had to be reduced in order to comply with the principle of representation by population embodied in the constitution. We had to reduce our representation by two members. Then the question arose: How can we so drop out two members as to disturb least the representation and the constituencies of our province? One member was dropped from St. John, but the city, I think, had two members then, and the county one.

Mr. ELLIS. No, that was not it.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Was it the reverse?

Mr. ELLIS. Yes.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Well, the constituency that had two seats was reduced to one representative. The city and county, included together, had three representatives, and their representation was reduced to two members. We had to make a reduction of one more member. We found Queen's and Sunbury lying side by side, and it was concluded, and wisely concluded, that there was no other way of proceeding than to take away the two representatives, and give one member to these two counties. There were no other two counties that could be so easily dealt with as these two.

Mr. POWELL. Oh, yes, there were. You had Albert and King's, King's and Queen's, and Albert and Westmoreland.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The population not having made the same increase in New Brunswick as in some other provinces to maintain its representation, it had to lose two of its members, and, in making the change, the committee will agree that it was made with the least possible disturbance to the representation of the province. The only way in which this Bill interferes with New Brunswick is as to the manner in which the two representatives coming from the city and county of St. John shall be elected. It does not propose to reduce or increase that representation, but it proposes to declare that the county and the city shall each elect a member. The hon. member for Westmoreland

(Mr. Powell) says that it would not have been objectionable, if the Government had taken Portland and left it with the county, and let the old city of St. John elect one member, and the county and what is now a portion of the city of St. John elect another. The Bill itself lays down the principle that it is advisable to avoid, as far as possible, altering well-established boundaries. The representation that is fixed here will not be changed. The two representatives who will be elected are not proposed to be elected by constituencies created and defined by this Parliament. These constituencies are created and defined by the local legislature. The city of St. John is one constituency, and the county of St. John is another constituency. The Government say that they will take the constituencies of the city of St. John and of the county of St. John as they are made by the local parliament. They say to the city, which has a larger population than the county: Elect your representative. And to the county: Elect your representative. The city of St. John has a larger population, but what has been said before as to city and rural representation in regard to other cities, applies to St. John. Cities do not always suffer, although they have a larger population than rural constituencies. It is only a few years ago that the cities had over one-third of the representation in the other Chamber, and men living in St. John find constituencies in other parts of the province of New Brunswick. I hope that the section which provides for the change and for the removal of the anomaly which exists in regard to St. John, will be carried, so that the city will elect its member and the county will elect its member.

Mr. HUGHES. I would like to ask the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Ellis) if there is a county council, made up of representatives of the city and county of St. John.

Mr. ELLIS. There is.

Mr. HUGHES. Very well; the Government are violating county boundaries, because the county and city form one municipal organization. I want to point out to the right hon. First Minister that in North Victoria he is overlooking the sacred principle of county boundaries.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). That does not enter into the discussion here.

Mr. HUGHES. I am bringing this up as an illustration—if the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals will kindly keep quiet—to show that there is no principle in the Bill. I have the honour of representing a part of three counties—North Victoria proper, a part of the district of Haliburton, and the township of Peterborough. I draw the attention of the right hon. First Minister to this to show that the principle of county boundaries is seriously shattered in connection with North Victoria. If the hon. gentleman would adopt the principle of county boundaries, restore Peterborough where it properly belongs to-day, and give to North Victoria the district of Haliburton, which belongs to North Victoria for judicial purposes, I think he would be acting in harmony with the principle of the Bill. They have done me all the harm they could by letting me seriously alone in that riding. I can tell the hon. member for Victoria, N.B. (Mr. Costigan), who thinks that members from other provinces have no right to interfere in regard to New Brunswick, that we have as much right in this Parliament to discuss a question pertaining to New Brunswick as he has, and we shall not hesitate to do it either. If the principle of county boundaries is to be carried out in this Bill, then the suggestion of the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Ellis) should be adopted. There is a county council for the city and county of St. John, so that it is just as much an integral municipality as any other municipality in the Dominion. They talk about county boundaries in the province of Ontario, but under this Bill they have violated county boundaries in many respects. Do these gentlemen opposite know of the recent County Councils Act in the province of Ontario, under which municipal boundaries just as sacred as any mentioned in this Bill, have been violated. I presume there are not half a dozen townships or local municipalities in the province of Ontario that are not cut in pieces under this new County Councils Act. We find part of the town of Lindsay voting with part of the township of Ops to elect a municipal councillor and part of another section of Ops voting with Emly. They have divided farms in some cases under this Act, and the Liberals in Ontario claim it works well, although I think to the contrary. There is not the same necessity for maintaining county boundaries in the representation for this Parliament as there is for the local legislature or the county councils, but, on the contrary, I adhere to the old principle that the province should be divided up as nearly as possible into equal units of population for federal purposes. A county like Restigouche, with a large territory and a scattered population, I think a district such as that, though small in population, should have a member. I maintain that the Government should adopt the suggestion of the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Ellis).

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) has stated that this clause violates the principle upon which the present Bill is alleged to be based. Any one who understands the law with regard to the existing conditions in the city and county of St. John, would not make that statement. It is true, as stated by the hon. member (Mr. Hughes), that there is a general municipal organization, including both the city and county of St. John, but that organization is only for certain limited purposes, such as the maintenance of the poor, which can, no doubt, be better managed by a combination of the two municipalities. But while there is a county or municipal council for the city and county combined, there is a distinct municipal organization for the city of St. John, and the city, under provincial legislation, is distinct from the county for electoral purposes.

Mr. HUGHES. Is there a separate and distinct county council for the county, outside of the city?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is not, but all the same, by law in the province of New Brunswick, there is a distinct county called the county of St. John.

Mr. POWELL. The city and county.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, called the county of St. John, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Powell) does not seem to be familiar with the law on that any more than he is familiar with the facts, when he stated that this change was made in consequence of the result of an election which took place in the city of St. John.

Mr. POWELL. I did not say that. I said that it was two years after your candidates were defeated in the city of St. John that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) went to work and carved out a constituency, by taking parts of four parishes and giving 10,000 people two members, contrary to what had been prevailing in the city almost from time immemorial.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Powell) only stated part of the fact. He could not have misrepresented the situation more clearly if he designed to do so, than he did when he stated that the division took place in consequence of an election some two or three years previously. In the year 1889 there was a consolidation of certain of the parishes of the county, which constituted the city of Portland prior to that date, and it was united with the city of St. John. The city of St. John, from that period, and at the time of the legislature referred to, comprised all the territory previously included within the two cities of Portland and St. John. Subsequent to that combination, a feeling arose in the county of St. John that they were not in as good a position in the legislature from the point of view of representation as they were entitled to be, and not only did the councillors representing the county of St. John, but the councillors representing the whole municipal organization of the city and county petitioned the Government to make this division, and to set up the four parishes which constitute the county to-day, as an electoral district, and to make the combined cities of St. John and Portland, known as the city of St. John and Portland, electoral district, and give them separate representation in the provincial legislature.

Mr. POWELL. That petition was never presented to the House.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I beg your pardon, that petition was presented to the Government and read to the House.

Mr. POWELL. And submitted to the House.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know what the hon. gentleman means by "submitted." I stated that the municipal council of the city and county of St. John presented that petition, and that the Government considered that petition and acted upon it. There was some trouble from the Opposition upon that, as there usually is against anything that a government may propose, but I believe the change was entirely satisfactory to the people both of the city and the county; it was unquestionably satisfactory to the people of the county. The legislature declared in specific terms that there should be a county of St. John, not a city and county, but a county, and it declared that the county should be composed of that part of the city and county of St. John, outside of the city, and should consist of the parishes of Simonds, Lancaster, St. Martins and Musquash, and that they should hereafter be called the county of St. John.

Mr. HUGHES. For what purpose?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It does not say for what purpose, but it says it shall be called the county of St. John, and it declares it shall be a separate electoral district and return two members.

Mr. HUGHES. Merely for electoral purposes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not care for what purpose. It answers my purpose perfectly well if it is for electoral purposes, because it is for electoral purposes we are dealing with it now.

Mr. HUGHES. Is there any such thing as a municipal council of the county of St. John? There is not.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes) is, I suppose, perfectly satisfied on that subject, as he has answered his own question—

Mr. HUGHES. There is an electoral county of St. John, but there is no municipal county of St. John, as I understand it. If I am wrong, let the hon. gentleman set me right.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is a distinct county constituted by the provincial legislature, and known as the county of St. John. I do not care whether it is limited to electoral purposes or whether it is municipal; that is entirely beside the question. The legislature of that province having the right to deal with the question, and having a better knowledge of the situation, I think, than any member on the other side of the House, who has been recently addressing himself to this question, has made this provision; and I think we are proceeding on lines entirely in harmony with the principle of this Bill when we say that the county of St. John shall have one member and the city of St. John shall have one member. I cannot see, for the life of me, how there can be any objection grounded on principle to this arrangement. I could understand that there might be a feeling in regard to it among certain people in the city of St. John, though I have not learned that there is any such feeling. I have, in common with my hon. friend representing the city and county (Mr. Tucker), taken every means to ascertain what the feeling in the city of St. John has been in reference to this change; and I have not yet ascertained that there is any objection to it in that constituency. I think I would be safe in saying that if there had been much objection, we would have heard of it. My hon. friend would certainly have heard of it; it would not have been necessary for him to write to people, for they would have made known to him their objection, as I think they would have done to me; for I have been a resident of the city for a number of years, and have been in close communication with the people there. So that, so far as the general principle on which the legislation before the committee has been framed, I cannot see how objection can be taken from any quarter, because we are following the lines which the provincial legislature has laid down governing its electoral powers. I do not know how we could appeal to a safer authority or ask a better guide than the people of the province; and I fully approve of the argument made by my hon. friend from the county of Victoria, N.B. (Mr. Costigan), when he so lucidly pointed out that after all it must be a question resting largely with the people of the province, how they should desire to have their electoral divisions made up, and is not so much a question for the other provinces of the Dominion. There might very well be some objection among the people of the city of St. John, based upon the ground that, whereas under the existing law they have a right to vote for two members, if this becomes law they will only have a right to vote for one; and to that extent it becomes a fair matter for consideration, and has received a great deal of consideration. But we had to deal with an anomaly so grave that there is no parallel to it in respect to the representation of any of the counties or ridings throughout the whole Dominion. We say to the people who are living on one side of the boundary line between the city and the county: "You shall have two votes," and we say to the people on the other side of the boundary, "You shall have only one vote." That is to say, we say to the people of the city of St. John: "You shall have the right to elect a member for yourselves and solely by your own votes, and you shall have the right to overrun and swamp the votes in the county when a member is being elected for the county portion of the city and county." That is an anomalous condition, and it required to be dealt with in some way or other. It might have been dealt with in the form in which my hon. friend from the city of St. John (Mr. Ellis) preferred, that there should be a combination of the city and county, and two members chosen by the city and county combined, each elector voting for the two. For that view there is very much to be said. But there can be nothing said for a continuation of the existing condition of things. Now, when it became necessary for us to consider the question as between the city and the county, and when I conferred with my hon. friends who directly represent that district in this House, and when there was no strong opposition to this proposition on the part of either, but a very decided opinion in its favour on the part of one, and when we came to take into account the fact that the city, having it is true a larger population, still had all the influence which naturally radiates from a large city and the principal city of the province, and when we considered that the county with its separate and divided interest might very well claim to have a voice in the election of one member for itself, it seemed to be fair and reasonable and entirely in harmony with the principle on which this Bill is founded that the constituencies should be divided in the manner in which we have proposed to Parliament. Now, my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) seemed to have a confused idea with regard to what the Bill, as first introduced, proposed, and what this amendment proposes. He is entirely in error. I admit that the hon. gentleman has a perfect right to interpret any Bill as he pleases; but both he and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) cannot be right; one or the other must be wrong. Well, I think the general sense of the House would be that my hon. friend from South Lanark is astray in his interpretation. The Bill is founded upon the 5th section of the Act of 1892, which declares:

That in the province of New Brunswick, the electoral district of the city of St. John shall consist of the city of St. John as now existing under provincial legislation.

The electoral district of the city of St. John is and was, at the passing of this Act, declared to be a separate electoral division, and entitled to elect one member.

The Dominion adopted the bounds and limits of the city of St. John, as defined by provincial legislation; that is all it did. The Act of 1892 declared that that division should have the right to send one member to Parliament. That stands; we do not propose to interfere with that. The Bill as it first came in did not interfere with that. There is where my hon. friend is wrong. He supposes that the Bill does interfere with that, and that we are proposing to alter what we first presented to Parliament. In that he is in error, because the amendment we are now submitting, and the amendment originally submitted, do not interfere with subsection "a" of section 5. We leave subsection "a," and repeat it exactly as it is found in the Act of 1892. It is repeated for greater clearness, not because there is any doubt in our minds in regard to what would be necessary legal interpretation; but we thought it better, as a matter of prudence, and out of the abundance of caution, which my hon. friend as a lawyer will understand, to put both of these sub-clauses together in the new Act, so that everybody could see at a glance what alterations have been made in reference to this constituency without turning up the previous Act. That is the sole object of the amendment now proposed.

Mr. HAGGART. I was not aware of the clause in the Act of 1892, but took the divisions in the British North America Act, under the impression that they were the same at present. I took the electoral districts as they were made by the census of 1891, and I found that a part of St. John county consists of Dufferin, Mason, Lorne, Stanley and Victoria wards, and I was just going to ask the hon. member for St. John whether these wards have the right to vote for him as representative of the city of St. John?

Mr. ELLIS. They did at the last election.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, they are part of the city now.

Mr. HAGGART. If the Act of 1892, which I was not aware of, making the electoral districts of St. John city and St. John county the same as they were made by the provincial government, were not in force, then my argument was perfectly correct, but I was not aware of the change made in 1892, and I see that hon. gentlemen opposite are only correcting what is really a doubtful description by their amendment.

Mr. McNEILL. I wish to enter my protest—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You have done that already.

Mr. McNEILL. My hon. friend, I am sure, has no intention to interrupt me improperly in any way. I wish to enter my protest very strongly against the doctrine laid down by the Minister of Railways. We are going further and further away from the old views held in this House, and interfering more and more apparently, under the present Administration, with the rights and privileges of this House. During last session we had our right to settle the basis of our own franchise taken from us, and now the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals tells us that we ought to hand over to the provinces the right to define the constituencies for the election of members to this House. That is what I desire to enter my protest against, and what I had not protested against before, because the hon. Minister was the first person to advance such a monstrous proposal. We are to-day face to face with this condition of things, that a member of the Administration tells us that, in his judgment, we ought to hand over to the provincial legislatures the formation of constituencies for members of this House. I should like to know from the hon. Minister of Marine whether that is his view or not. I should like to know whether he approves of handing over to the provincial authorities the right to settle the bounds of constituencies for the election of members to this House? That is a new doctrine, and one which will not commend itself to the Parliament of Canada nor to the people. The privileges of this House were sufficiently encroached upon last session without a further inroad being effected, as suggested by the hon. gentleman. However, the view he propounds is fortunately not embodied in this measure, because hon. gentlemen opposite have not in this measure dealt with the constituencies in that way but have formed the constituencies to suit themselves. The hon. gentleman talks again about an anomaly, and I challenge again hon. gentlemen opposite to give some reason why they are so anxious to interfere with this anomaly, as they call it, at present. It is doing no harm to any one, there is no protest against it from any quarter, it is not suggested that any of the people in these constituencies in any way disapprove of the present conditions. Why then should it be interfered with now? It is not within the four corners of this measure. The only excuse given for the introduction of this measure at all is the excuse that it is necessary to redress some grievance which was brought about by the Act of 1882. But no one pretends that the Act of 1882 in any way interferes with these constituencies. Why cannot the anomaly which has stood for a hundred years remain until the census is taken? I understand that for a hundred years the city and the county of St. John have been voting together. If I am wrong in that statement, my hon. friend opposite

(Mr. Ellis) will correct me. What is the reason for interfering with that condition of things now? None so far has been assigned. Hon. gentlemen opposite must either assign some reason for this extraordinary course or admit that the one they have put forward on behalf of this Bill is not a valid one. I should like very much if my hon. friend the Minister of Marine, would tell me if he can suggest any reason why it is improper to allow this condition of things to remain as it has existed for so many years until we take the next census, especially in view of the fact that no one has complained, and that there is no evidence at all before the House that the change may not be undesirable to the people who are to be interfered with.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not see much benefit in repeating time and again the arguments that have been urged so forcibly by my hon. friend behind me. The Minister of Railways has already explained that the province of New Brunswick thought it was time this anomaly should cease, and they did away with it as regards the provincial electoral districts. With regard to those districts, they determined that the county should have a representation of its own and not to be swamped by the city vote, and that the city should have a representation of its own. My hon. friend the Minister of Railways says that that decision, reached by the province and approved by the people of the city and county, is a just one, and should be applied by us to the electoral districts of the Dominion by giving the county a representation of its own and not allowing it to be swamped by the city vote, and giving the city a representation of its own. That is the principle of the Bill, following on the lines of the provincial legislature on the subject. The only ground for this amendment is to remove the possibility of any doubt which might arise and make more clear what I think is sufficiently clear in the Bill itself, namely, that the intention of Parliament is to give one member to the city and one to the county.

Mr. HUGHES. Does not the provincial legislature give twice as much representation to the city as to the county?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. Why does not the hon. gentleman do the same?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We would if we could, but unfortunately we are not entitled to another member.

Mr. BERGERON. If we pursue the investigation a little further, we shall have from hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches a certificate from the city of St. John asking for this division. The hon. member for the city and county said he had written many of his friends and never got an answer. A little while afterwards my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals said about the same thing—that he had consulted people down there and had received no answer. In fact, nobody asked for it and nobody spoke against it. I do not wonder at it, because nobody down there knows the measure that was presented to the House to-day. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries goes further. He said that they are only doing what the people desire—that the people of New Brunswick asked for this.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I stated that the provincial legislature had already legislated to divide the county from the city of St. John.

Mr. BERGERON. This has been brought into the matter by the speech of my hon. friend from Victoria, N.B. (Mr. Costigan), because nobody ever thought of it before. If we are to revert to the divisions made by local legislatures, this Parliament will have an immense amount of work to do before we prorogue. You will have to go through the province of Ontario, and the province of Quebec also, because it has not been divided in the same way for the Dominion as for the local legislatures. The hon. member for Victoria found this legislation perfectly good in 1892, and was one of those responsible for passing it. But to-day he finds it is better to divide the counties according as the local legislatures do. But he has to answer the pertinent question put to the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries. It is true, that the local legislature divided the county from the city of St. John, but then they gave four members to the city and two members to the county.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) cut up two representatives in such a way as would give to the city twice the representation that is given to the county?

Mr. BERGERON. I am not saying what I would do just now. I stated it a few minutes ago. I am now answering the argument of my hon. friend who says they have adopted the same course as taken by the local legislature. But I am showing that they do nothing of the kind, for the local legislature give four members to the city and two to the county. But here it is proposed to give one member to the city with 40,000 population, and one to the county outside the city with 10,000 population. My hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries a few moments ago read, in answer to my hon. friend from South Lanark (Mr. Haggart), the statute of 1892, but he did not read the whole of it. He said that he thought they might as well come down here and ask to go into committee again and put this through. They did well, for they would not have been able to have put this into operation, if they had not come back and made the change they now propose. How does the present law read ?

The electoral district of the city of St. John shall consist of the city of St. John as now existing under provincial legislation.

That was all right, had the Government left the Bill as it was ; but it goes on to say :

The city of St. John, as now existing under provincial legislation, shall also form part of the electoral district of the city and county of St. John.

The Government would not be able to put the Bill into operation without coming here and proposing what they are now proposing. The hon. member for Victoria a few moments ago, when he spoke of dividing the counties on the same lines as those for the local legislature, spoke of Montreal. Montreal is given six members. It has been divided in the same way for the federal as for the local House. But this is not acting in accordance with that one question, because in the local legislature the city of St. John has twice as many members as the county. The question we are discussing now is, whether we shall adopt the principle laid down by my right hon. friend, when he first introduced the Bill, to divide the counties according to population, or whether he shall follow the other principle on which he now insists, of following the divisions for provincial purposes. So many principles have been appealed to since this Bill came before us, that it would be difficult to know which one the Government is really acting upon. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries is perfectly satisfied to accept the changes made by the local legislature. But how does he stand in his own province with respect to that ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. All right.

Mr. BERGERON. Not at all ; if he were to follow the local lines in his province, he would have to change his position altogether. This shows the absurdity of the whole thing. I would suggest that the proposal made by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Ellis) should be accepted, and that the city and county of St. John should be united, and two members elected, as you have in Hamilton, Ottawa, Pictou and Halifax. This would give two members to a population of about 50,000. As I said a few moments ago, if this is not done, the people will believe that there is some special object to be served, and that that is not a good object. The division is not being made according to any principle hitherto laid down. The Prime Minister and the Minister of Customs said that it was evident this was a good Bill, because we did not propose any amendments to it. But the reason for this was given by the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), when he said we did not recognize the constitutionality of the Bill. I hope that somebody will move to have the city and county of St. John united, with power to elect two members for the Dominion Parliament, and I should be glad to vote for that.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I must say that I fail altogether to understand the opposition that is given to this proposal. It alters nothing at all, but simply defines the boundaries. So far as the representation is concerned, it leaves things just as they are at present.

Mr. BERGERON. No.

The PRIME MINISTER. Well, I will leave it to the judgment of the House. I have endeavoured to make myself understood, and I will try once more. It is so plain to me that I cannot understand why there should be any debate about it. At the present time the elector of the city of St. John votes for one member.

Mr. BERGERON. He votes twice.

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes, having given one vote for member for the city of St. John, he gives another vote for member for the city and county of St. John. Now, let us suppose that if in the city of St. John there are 5,000 electors. Of these, 4,000 vote for one candidate, and 1,000 vote for the other candidate. The same men then give another vote for the second candidate, 4,000 for one, and 1,000 for the other. But for the second vote they vote with, let us say, 900 electors in the county of St. John, of whom 500 vote for one candidate and 400 vote for the other. So, you have absolutely the same result. The second vote is altogether lost. Whether the vote is cast or is not cast, the second man is always elected by the county of St. John, because in the city of St. John, though the same electors have given the same vote, it is clear that, so far as the electors in the county of St. John are concerned, they are not affected by the vote in the city.

Mr. BERGERON. Why give them the vote, then ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not see why, and that is the reason why we propose to do away with this anomaly and separate them. They get only one vote each under the arrangement we propose. At the present time the second vote is lost.

An hon. MEMBER. I do not see that. Suppose there are 900 electors in the county of St. John, and 500 vote for one candidate and 400 for the other, that leaves 100 majority.

Mr. BERGERON. There is a reverse side to that medal.

The PRIME MINISTER. Suppose that in the city of St. John 4,000 voted one way and 3,000 voted the other way, you have 1,000 of a majority in favour of one candidate. In the county of St. John you have 4,500 voting for one and 1,400 for the other, leaving a majority of 3,100. Take it as you please, the second vote does not count, therefore it is simply making the matter clear if you compel the people to vote separately.

Mr. WALLACE. I have followed closely the figures given by the First Minister and I must say that I could not understand his argument.

The PRIME MINISTER. That is no fault of mine.

Mr. WALLACE. He says that it is no fault of his, but I contend that it is his fault. I say that there is not one member on this side of the House, and not one member on that side of the House, that can go over the figures that he gave us and understand them. There is only one thing about it that I did find clear. He said that they first vote for a member in the city, then they vote for a member in the city and county, and that will give the same result. Well, turn up the record of the last election and see. In the last election the member for the city of St. John (Mr. Ellis) had a majority over the next highest candidate of 722. Then, we come to the city and county, and we find that Col. Tucker was in a minority in the city in that same district of 1,892. Then, how does that tally with the statement made by the First Minister that the result is the same in both cases? In his county we are now discussing, in the last election, Mr. Ellis had a majority in the city, and Col. Tucker was in a minority of ninety-two in the city, but was elected by a majority of 191 in the county.

The PRIME MINISTER. I went so far as to say that the proportion was the same, giving so many votes to one person and so many to the other.

Mr. WALLACE. But the thing does not work out on any definite plan. In the election before that, the result was different, because there were two Conservatives elected, and each of them had a majority in the city of St. John. I am reminded that Sir Leonard Tilley was elected in 1878 in St. John by a majority of eight, whilst his colleague in the city, Mr. Burpee, a Liberal, was elected for the city and county by an overwhelming majority. So that the rule laid down by the First Minister did not apply in 1896, and it did not apply in 1878. Now, the member for the city and county of St. John (Mr. Tucker) says that he is quite satisfied. Well, I suppose he would be. He gets a five constituency of 10,000 people, or less. In the last election 1,948 votes were polled in this constituency. There were three candidates, there was the liveliest opposition, and every man had an opportunity of voting pretty well for a candidate expressing his views. But in spite of that 1,948 votes polled at the last election in the county of St. John, and 7,204 votes polled in the city of St. John, each of these constituencies is to have a member.

The member for Victoria, N.B. (Mr. Costigan), says that this is the right thing, that he is satisfied. He says, moreover, that this is a principle that has prevailed ever since confederation except as regards the distribution of representation between the provinces. Sir, I repudiate any such statement. Go over the redistribution of 1882. Surely the member for Victoria must have been sleeping in this House ever since to have made such a statement as that. Go to the county of Cornwall. It had 9,904 population, Stormont had 13,294; these were added together, making 23,198, a little more than the unit of population. But it was in accordance with the principle of representation by population. We had four new members and had to create four new constituencies in the province of Ontario. But that was done in accordance with the principle of representation by population, nothing more or less. Yet the member for Victoria does not appear to have known that. Take the county of North Simcoe. It had a population of 49,000, a redistribution took place, and it had a population of 26,000 closely in accordance with the principle of representation by population. Take the constituency of Niagara, comprising the town of Niagara and the township of Niagara. It had a population of 3,445. The county of Lincoln, alongside, had 22,000, in round figures. These were joined together, making a constituency of 23,000, because there were some other changes. Yet we find one of the men responsible for that legislation, one of those who had been a member of the Government for fourteen years after that legislation was passed, getting up in this House and telling us that there was no principle of representation by population in the Redistribution Bill of 1882 nor in any previous or subsequent Bill. Why, Sir go over the whole list. Take the county of Norfolk, take the county of Brant. In North Brant there were 11,800; under the redistribution there were 17,600, in accordance with the principle of representation by population. In North Perth there were 34,000, redistributed there were 26,000.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Take Leeds and Grenville.

Mr. WALLACE. Very well; we find no change made in it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, there was.

Mr. WALLACE. A slight change.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They left it with 12,000.

Mr. WALLACE. North Leeds and Grenville, I suppose, the Minister meant. Is that what he meant?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Leeds and Grenville.

Mr. WALLACE. There is no such constituency. North Leeds and Grenville is the constituency. There were 12,924, and it is true that under the redistribution there were 12,423, or a decrease of 500. I do not say that in every constituency they were brought up or brought down to the exact unit of population, but I do say, that, running through the whole of that Act and taking every constituency, there was a measurable and successful effort made to bring them closely to the unit of population. I have a column showing the population previous to the redistribution and those afterwards, and if hon. gentlemen will look over it they will find that there was a fair and successful effort made to bring about this result wherever changes took place. In many places changes were not made, because the principle of county boundaries might have been applied with injury to the principle of representation by population. East of Toronto, there is no doubt that the unit of population was smaller than it was west of Toronto, where the counties were larger and more populous than in the eastern part of Ontario. When the hon. member for Victoria, N.B. (Mr. Costigan) gets up and tells us that representation by population has not been a question since confederation as to the number of representatives that each province would send to Parliament, he totally disregards the history of legislation and the history of this Parliament in those years.

Mr. McMULLEN. No.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), as usual, blunders and says, no.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) has blundered all the time.

Mr. WALLACE. I can read twenty or thirty more counties where changes have been made on the principle of representation by population.

Mr. McMULLEN. Where it suited you, that principle was adopted, and where it did not suit you it was not.

Mr. WALLACE. It would have suited the Conservative party to have kept Cornwall and Stormont as two separate constituencies, because each of them had sent a Conservative to Parliament. The four constituencies that were joined together, when two constituencies were abolished, were represented by Conservatives, and we might fairly assume would be represented at the next election by Conservatives. Parliament under Conservative rule voluntarily abolished these two constituencies and deprived them of these two members. That cannot be denied, even by the hon. member for North Wellington, or the hon. Postmaster General. They cannot deny that Niagara and Lincoln were represented by Conservatives, and that they each gave Conservative majorities in the next general election. The same thing can be said in regard to Cornwall and Stormont. They gave Conservative majorities in 1878, and again in 1882, if taken separately. Therefore, they would have returned Conservatives, but the Conservative party voluntarily abandoned the political advantage that they had for the purpose of giving effect to the principle of representation by population.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

The House resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 118) respecting the Great Northern Railway Company, and to change its name to the Great Northern Railway Company of Canada.—(Mr. Savard.)

(In the Committee.)

On section 9 (b),

Mr. HAGGART. What is the meaning of this?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. This is practically the clause recommended by the sub-committee to whom the Bill was referred. Dr. Russell was chairman of the sub-committee and drafted the amendment, and I added the words "ownership by purchase or by lease," to make it consistent with the latter part of the clause; as I was informed that the company might have a great deal of difficulty in purchasing the right, but they would have no difficulty if they had an undertaking from the present company to lease it to them for a long period of years.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is nothing serious in the change?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No. It was threshed out by the sub-committee and they thought in view of all the circumstances that this company should adopt the obligations of the old company, and this is the means of carrying it out.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not understand the explanation. What is the obligation imposed upon this company?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Either to pay back the bonus they got from the parish of St. Andrews, or to procure the ownership of the road by lease or purchase and operate it as by the agreement under the subsidy clause. There is a clause in the subsidy agreement, under which they undertake to operate the road, but they failed to do so and transferred it to another company. It is a long story, but this clause was drafted by the sub-committee and passed almost unanimously by the Railway Committee after a long discussion.

Mr. HAGGART. Was the obligation transferred to another company by Act of Parliament?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It was confirmed by Act of Parliament.

Mr. HAGGART. Why do you impose on this company an obligation which was transferred to another company by Act of Parliament.

Mr. BERGERON. It is a long story, and if my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) were present at the Railway Committee he would understand it. It was very seriously considered by the sub-committee and its recommendation was endorsed unanimously by the Railway Committee. There were seven miles of railway between Lachute and St. Andrews, and it belonged to the Great Northern Railway Company. The gentleman who was representing the whole company obtained subsidies from Quebec, and municipal subsidies amounting to $59,000, and he got $10,000 from the municipality of St. Andrews on condition that he should operate the line between Lachute and St. Andrews. After a few years it was found the road did not pay, and a charter was obtained here by what was called the Ottawa Valley Railway Company, and a transfer of that seven miles was made from the Great Northern to the Ottawa Valley Railway Company, the latter company being simply on paper. Later on the proprietor of that company—if I may call him so, for there was only one gentleman in it—transferred that piece of road from the Ottawa Valley Railway Company, which actually never had been in existence, to the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway, but without the obligation of operating the line. This was never sanctioned by Parliament or by Order in Council. The new company, the Great Northern comes in and their line is in that part of the country, and when they apply for a charter the municipality of St. Andrews intervenes and asks that that line for which they have paid a bonus should be operated, or that they be reimbursed their $10,000. This amendment declares that the Great Northern shall acquire, either by lease or purchase, that road between St. Andrews and Lachute and operate it, or that they pay back to the parish of St. Andrews the $10,000 that was voted by it.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not understand that. The obligation was transferred to another company, and as I understand the transfer of the obligation was sanctioned by Act of Parliament. Is that so?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is a disputed point. The one point my hon. friend left out was that this branch and the part now under this company were all originally the Great Northern, that is, under the ownership of Armstrong; and when he wanted to transfer the road to the present company, they did not want to take this branch, with the obligation resting upon it; and, as the sub-committee put it, they got up this scheme to transfer to this paper company these nine miles and the rest of this branch. The committee do not consider that that was legally done, and they think the obligation should now be placed on the original company. They hold that the original company were aware of all the facts, and have no right to claim that they should be relieved.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

REPRESENTATION IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

House again resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 126) respecting representation in the House of Commons.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. D. HENDERSON. It seems to me, after listening carefully to several hours' discussion of this amendment, that the whole thing narrows itself down to a very small point. From all the information I could obtain, both in the House and elsewhere, with regard to the city of St. John and the county of St. John, I am led to believe that there is a municipality known by the name of the city and county of St. John. If that is the case, and it is the intention of the Government to give that municipality two representatives, I fail to see why the division between the two portions of this municipality should be made in a different way from what is done in the province of Ontario, where the judges are to decide as to the particular portions of each municipality that will form the respective electoral divisions. Section 2 of the Bill reads thus:

Where, under the foregoing provisions, any county or city is to be divided into more than one electoral district, such division shall be made by a board of commissioners.

Now, instead of the House determining that one portion of this municipality of the city and county of St. John shall send one representative and another portion shall send another representative, it seems to me that the same rule should be applied to St. John that applies to other municipalities in the Dominion. If not, what is the use of a principle at all? We are told that one of the leading principles of this Bill is that the judges should decide; but here, in the case of the municipality of the city and county of St. John, there seems to be a complete evasion of that principle; for the division, instead of being made by the judges, is proposed to be made by this Parliament, and in a way that seems to me to be extremely unfair, when we take the population into consideration. As I understand, one of the ridings shall have a population of nearly 40,000 and the other a population of only 10,000. I fail to see why the general principle of the Bill should not apply to this case.

Mr. POWELL. The hon. member for Victoria, N.B. (Mr. Costigan) stated that in the case of the city and county of St. John, there was an evil that should be remedied. The hon. gentleman is not in the House; but as nothing I have to say is of a personal nature, I will refer to his argument and will refer to it very briefly. That hon. gentleman was in this House in 1872; he was in the House in 1882; he was in this House in 1892; he was a member of this Government in both years, 1882 and 1892; in each of those years there was a Bill passed relating to the redistribution of seats in the House of Commons consequent upon the completion of the decennial census; yet it is a most remarkable fact that the hon. gentleman, who had the opportunity of remedying any evil that existed in respect to the representation of the city and county of St. John, should have allowed the matter to go unheeded in 1872, especially in 1882, when he was a member of the Cabinet, and had an opportunity to rectify it, and again in 1892, when he was still a member of the Cabinet, and had another opportunity to rectify it. Then, as respects the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair), he says that at the time the Bill of the New Brunswick legislature of 1891 was passed through the New Brunswick House of Assembly, he was acting in pursuance of a petition from the council of the city of St. John, or the municipality of the county and city of St. John. The hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken. In the first place, he had no such petition, and no petition was presented to the House of Assembly in 1891. In the year 1891, in which a Bill in relation to the Act of 1891 was passed, there was a petition presented to the House from the municipal council of the city and county of St. John; but it was not for the purpose of favouring the Bill of the session of 1891, nor curing the evil that the Minister says required remedying, because the Bill had then been passed. The hon. gentleman took the reins of power in the province of New Brunswick in February or March, 1883, and led the House from that time down to 1891, when this Act was passed. And it was a remarkably strange thing that although the hon. gentleman and his Government had petitions, not from the municipal council of the city and county of St. John, but from the town council of the town of Portland, he had, if my recollection is right—and I think the hon. gentleman will not contradict me—petition after petition from the municipal or town council of the town of Portland asking that this anomaly be rectified, and that the city and county of St. John, outside the city, be allowed representation entirely distinct from the city, yet he did not act until the session of 1891. If this was right in the year 1891, when he passed the Act, it was right in 1883, 1884, 1885, 1886, 1887, 1888, 1889, 1890, but that gentleman did not seem to be seized with any earnest desire to rectify what he, in a peculiar state of affairs in 1891, considered was wrong. I have in my hand a stenographic report of the speech made by the hon. gentleman on the floor of the legislature of New Brunswick when he introduced this Bill.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman says he has a stenographic report?

Mr. POWELL. I do.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We never had a stenographic report, nothing but a synoptical report.

Mr. POWELL. The hon. gentleman scarcely ever made a speech on the floor of the legislature of New Brunswick which was not reported by a stenographer.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You are entirely in error.

Mr. POWELL. I am not. It may have been epitomized afterwards, but the speech was reported by a stenographer, and the hon. gentleman had Mr. Risteen on the floor of the House, a most competent reporter, whose function was to report the speeches of the hon. gentleman, as he must remember distinctly.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You are the most reckless individual I ever came across in my life.

Mr. POWELL. I am very much astonished that you should say I am reckless in that respect. All that I have to say is that the impression made on the hon. gentleman's mind is made on cerebral material so incapable of receiving a lasting impression, that he is to be commiserated instead of being found fault with on this occasion. In that speech the hon. gentleman said:

He was credibly informed that on no less than four occasions had petitions strenuously urging this reform been presented, emanating from outside parishes of St. John.

He then proceeded to give his reason for pressing the Bill; and I again call the attention of the House to the fact that there never was a petition from the municipality of the city and county of St. John:

He had one before him which emanated from the corporation of Portland, in 1885, and was signed by Shadrach Holly, mayor, asking for an exclusive representation for Portland, the same as that enjoyed by the city of St. John. That petition did not get very far, the reason being—

I would call attention of hon. gentlemen to this, because the representation in the city of St. John, at the time this petition was presented was entirely a Government representation, and each and every member thereof was an ardent supporter of the hon. gentleman's government.

He had one before him which emanated from the corporation of Portland, in 1885, and was signed by Shadrach Holly, mayor, asking for an exclusive representation for Portland, the same as that enjoyed by the city of St. John. That petition did not get very far, the reason being that the then representatives from St. John were opposed to any change in the representation, not knowing how it would affect their friends and supporters in all parts of the country. They opposed it then just as the present members from St. John oppose it, because they are doubtful of its results on themselves. They had no alternative but to oppose it—they were not here as free agents. The Government in 1885, supported as it was by a united representation of St. John, did not feel like antagonizing their supporters in this House. But as the matter now stood, the Government did not look to the present representatives from St. John for advice or support. The Government would thus be in a position to remedy any injustice which existed, and which, generations ago, should have been remedied. He quoted a petition (accompanying a Bill) read in the House in 1886, asking for separate representation for Portland and the parishes.

The hon. gentleman made that speech, and it is very good reading from beginning to end, and he will find no mention in it whatever of a petition emanating from the council of the city and county of St. John. To convince the hon. gentleman, I may mention that at that time, as he will remember distinctly, the council of the city and county was entirely opposed to his government, on account of a question that agitated the minds of those people, in respect of which I may say I had very little sympathy with the then members of the city and county. The constituency was so agitated that they could carry it for any purpose they saw fit. The warden at that time was opposed to the hon. gentleman and was a member of the House of Assembly, and a member of the Opposition, and the Opposition were in an overwhelming majority at that time in the city council, so that nothing favourable to the Bill of 1891 would spring from them. I find, on consulting the journals of the House, and referring to the vote on that occasion, there was not a solitary representative from the city who voted for that Bill. There was a motion to read the Bill, section by section, the House voted on this motion, and each and every member from the city voted against the Bill by voting against the resolution to have it considered section by section. Among the nays were Messrs, Hannington, Melanson, Turner, D. Lewis, Rourke, another member for the city of St. John, who at that time was the warden of the city and county of St. John, who resided in Carleton, and Mr. Shaw, another member for St. John. All the members of the House were not present. Afterwards, when the committee had gone into further consideration, it was moved that the chairman should leave the chair and report the Bill as agreed to, and the House divided, and the following voted against the motion, being the six new members of the city and county of St. John:—Dr. Stockton, Alward, Rourke, Shaw, McEwen, a present supporter of the hon. gentleman, and Mr. Smith.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They were all in opposition.

Mr. POWELL. Certainly. The hon. gentleman at that time did not introduce a Bill for the purpose of remedying an injustice. Was the hon. gentleman true to his position, as leader of the Government, when he allowed a gross injustice, as he puts it in his speech, to continue in respect of the city and county for no less a period than eight or nine years? He put forward this as a pretext; it is not his reason. When I seek for his reason I find it elsewhere. I deduce it as an inference from the facts. The hon. gentleman, in 1891, introduced this Bill that I have spoken about. The object, I have no hesitation in saying, was to gain political supporters in the city and county of St. John. He thought that though there was a fair prospect of his carrying the two seats in the county, it was utterly useless for him to think of carrying the seats in the city, where this unreasonable sentiment prevailed. What did he do? He passed this Bill of 1891. It would have been too flagrant a violation of every principle of justice for the government to have gone further at that stage, but this was only the precursor of one of the worst Bills ever sought to be put on the statute-books.

In the year 1890 a Bill had been introduced and passed in the House and become law in amendment to the Controverted Elections Act of the province of New Brunswick; and under that law, it was necessary for an election petition to proceed to trial within six months after the time it was presented, the provision of the Dominion law being copied in this respect. The six months has run by in the case of election petitions of 1890. In order to get support from the city and county of St. John, the Government after their election petitioners were dead as Julius Cæsar and all that was required was a formal motion to wipe them off the records of the courts, the Government introduced a Bill, notwithstanding the law that he himself had put through the House—a fair Act—in effect repealing this law so far as the petitions relating to St. John were concerned. The only two petitions left hanging were those of the city and county of St. John, the Government introduced a Bill which passed into a second reading—and I have forgotten whether it passed into law or not—declaring that, notwithstanding the words limiting the time to six months, it should be assumed in respect of any election held in 1890 that this Act should not apply, and putting a construction upon the language entirely opposed to the interpretation of every lawyer who I heard express an opinion upon it. In order to prevent this outrage to be brought about, we applied to the Chief Justice, Sir John C. Allen, for an order—an order and a summons in fact—because we had to deal with it immediately, and the ex-parte order striking the petitions off then was to be used in case a hearing could not be had in time. The summons was served on the petitioner, and the hearing came on before the Chief Justice and the petitions were struck off the files of the court. This was the last we heard of this Act, so far as I recollect. It is evident that, as I have said, the Bill now before us is a moving of the sun back upon the dial. There cannot be any justification for it. The absurdity of giving ten thousand people one representative and the forty thousand people next them only one cannot be defended or excused. Anomalies do grow up, we may regret their existence yet refrain from meddling with them. Who ever heard of a legislature in the name of justice and sound legislation and advanced liberalism attempting to perpetrate such an outrage as this. The present Minister of Railways and Canals, in the legislature of New Brunswick, introduced a Bill in 1894 to give to certain counties additional members. These members were given from Carleton, Kent and Gloucester, so they should be on the basis of population in the same position of the majorities of the counties in the province. On that occasion the county of Westmoreland had not the honour to receive, although entitled to two, an additional member. But we were in the position of Opposition in the city of St. John at the time. There is a parliamentary majority behind hon. gentlemen opposite and they can put the Act through, doubtless, if they see fit. In respect to these matters, however, that touch our constituencies some sound, plain principle should be adopted. There is no principle underlying this Bill. The Government do not claim there is. The great thing in the country is to have the people believe the principles of fair-play govern and underlie the legislation, the contrary leads to anarchy. Suppose that at the next general election—a consummation devoutly to be wished—the present Government are driven from power. Well, there are men in the Conservative ranks who are governed by the same feelings as are many Liberals to-day, and they will attempt retaliation for this measure. See the evil precedent the Government have established. In the county of St. John, 10,000 people who, for some time past, have cast a Liberal majority are to have one member, and alongside of them, 50,000 people, the majority of whom under ordinary circumstances are Conservatives are to have one representative. If political gain is to dictate the line of procedure, our constituencies will be divided not on any well-grounded principle, but according to the whims and desires—and baser desires, I have no hesitation in saying of the rank and file of the parties of this country.

I have one remark to make with respect to the hon. member for the city and county of St. John (Mr. Tucker), no wonder that he is very anxious that this Bill should pass. He is the gentleman who is said and believed to have largely footed the bills in the city and county of St. John in the last election. We all know what that means. It is unfortunate that we all have to be charged generally, in partial truth at least, with such things. The less number of constituents he has, the less will be the election bill. It is all very well for him to clamour that he may have a constituency of three or four parishes, a little pocket borough, and then throw upon his co-representatives in this House the work of carrying the large remaining portion of the constituency with an electorate of 50,000 people; but let the House understand his opinion is not disinterested.

Mr. McALISTER. Reference has been made on two or three occasions during this debate to the county of Restigouche which I have the honour to represent. It has been referred to as a county of small population. I admit the population is not very large. But there are two things to be said. In the first place this county was given a representation with the rest of the province and it has not been changed up to the present time. In the next place the county is one of very large area. Again, there is no county in the province of New Brunswick that has increased so fast in population in the last twenty years as the county of Restigouche. I find on referring to the census of 1891 that it showed a larger percentage of gain in population from 1871 to 1881 than any other county in the province. On referring to the census of 1891, I find that Restigouche leads in the same way for the decade between 1881 and 1891. The counties that increased in population between 1881 and 1891 were seven in number, and the other counties decreased in population. The increase in the county of Gloucester was 15.42 per cent; Kent, 5.4 per cent; Northumberland, 2.4 per cent; Victoria and Madawaska (one electoral district) 16.1 per cent; Westmoreland, 9.9 per cent; York, 1.9 per cent. And Restigouche showed an increase of 17.7 per cent, a larger percentage, as I have said, than any other county in the province. I may say that this increase still continues, and I think I am safe in saying that the next census will show a much larger increase than has been going on hitherto. The town of Campbellton, in which I live, in 1881 had a population of a little less than 1,500. To-day it has a population of between 3,000 and 4,000, showing that it has a little more than doubled since 1881. If the rate of increase since 1891 continues, the next census will probably show a population of between 4,000 and 5,000. Now, as I said before, while the population of the county is not large, I think that under the circumstances the Government would not be justified in interfering with it. It has a large area, and it is also increasing rapidly in population, in fact more so than any of the other counties. I make these remarks in view of the fact that reference has been made to the county of Restigouche as containing a small population, and, therefore, as being overrepresented by having one member.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I alluded to the county of Restigouche to-day, as my hon. friend mentions, in a question I put across the floor of the House, but I did not do so for the purpose of claiming that undue representation was given to Restigouche, but only to show that there were inequalities of population, that they were inevitable, and that in the case of Restigouche there was a greater inequality of population than that which would be established, in the amendment of the Bill with respect to the city and county of St. John. My hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) has entered into this question from a point of view which is entirely new to us on this side; he has discussed the political consequences of it. I am bound to say that his explanations are quite a revelation to me. He says that, if I followed his observations intelligently, we have at present a condition of affairs which gives the Liberal party two members from the city and county of St. John, and that we have deliberately chosen to say that hereafter we shall only get one.

Mr. POWELL. Does the hon. gentleman not know that the Conservative party was split up by an independent candidate at the last election?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have a pretty good knowledge of the affairs of St. John, and if I venture to make the prediction—though one should never prophesy unless he knows—you cannot by any system, not even by the ingenuity of my hon. friends opposite in their Act of 1882, cut and carve the city and county of St. John in such a manner as that it would fall to send two Liberals to Ottawa. That is my belief, and the prediction I venture to offer. But I may take advantage of this opportunity—as hitherto it has been largely an Ontario question that I did not care to enter into—to make a remark about Nova Scotia. Frequent reference has been made, at earlier stages of this debate, to the importance of the principle of representation by population. My hon. friend from Victoria, N.B., (Mr. Costigan) emphasized the fact that in the lower provinces we never understood that representation by population was of the great consequence which seems to have been attached to it here. As a question between the provinces, we all recognize the fact that population has to be considered. But I say, from the point of view of the province of Nova Scotia, there was never any regard paid to the principle of representation by population in the arrangement of constituencies within the limits of the number assigned to the province. Now, at the beginning of confederation we had 19 members for Nova Scotia. Every county, regardless of its size, received one member and some of those counties with small populations received the same representation as the large counties of Cumberland, Pictou and Cape Breton. As there were eighteen counties and nineteen members, the city and county of Halifax received a second member. Later on, when there was a readjustment and an additional member was assigned to Nova Scotia, even then the principle of representation by population was not recognized as the one of chief consequence, but the principle of county boundaries, which is recognized in this Bill, was regarded as the one of paramount importance, and an additional member was given to the county of Pictou—I think Pictou received a member at that time. Later on, another member was assigned to Nova Scotia, and again the question of county boundaries was regarded as the paramount question, and a second member was assigned to the county of Cape Breton. The result has been that from the beginning there were great inequalities of population, and these inequalities have been carried down to the present time. I allude to that briefly to show that this principle of representation by population, neither at the beginning of the union nor down to the present time, has ever been regarded as the paramount question in distributing the representation. The county of Cumberland contains 34,500 people, according to the last census; it is much larger to-day. But we are dealing with the census of 1891. But it has no greater representation in this House than the county of Richmond with 14,000, or Victoria, in the Island of Cape Breton, with 14,000. In each of these cases these small counties receive the same representation as the larger counties, and only in one or two exceptional cases, where the surplus members over and above the number of counties enabled it to be done, that the counties receive two members. Looking into the case of New Brunswick, we find to-day that there are great and striking inequalities, greater than any that are proposed in this Bill. For example, the hon. member for Westmoreland states that he represents a constituency containing 50,000 people. He is probably not far from correct, but, according to the census of 1891, the population was only 41,477, though it has doubtless grown since. Yet my hon. friend from Restigouche (Mr. McAlister), representing only 8,308 people, comes from a county having the same representation that is given to the great county of Westmoreland. Right alongside Westmoreland is the county of Albert, with 10,000 people, yet Albert has the same representation in this House as the great county of Westmoreland. And so, you may go through all those counties, and you will find these inequalities existing. They have existed from the beginning, they must continue to exist, and they exist because in the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia the principle of representation by population was not recognized within the province, but the first and great question was, that each county should, if possible, have a representative. County boundaries was the paramount principle then, and not the question of representation by population. In the cases of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick more recently, there was a redistribution whereby two small counties were united. Perhaps this was the most convenient way, though the arrangement is open to strong objections. There again the principle of county boundaries was recognized; and it will be found in every case in the lower provinces that the principle of county boundaries has been regarded of greater importance than the principle of representation by population.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not know what meaning my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) gives to the term "always." I can assure him that he is very much mistaken in saying that the question of representation by population has never been considered in the province of Nova Scotia.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not of so much importance as county boundaries.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. When I had the honour of first obtaining a seat in the House of Assembly in Nova Scotia, as my hon. friend knows, Falmouth, with 146 electors, I think, returned a member.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I was speaking of representation in the Federal Parliament.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. In fact, there was a regular system of small boroughs in the shape of townships with very small populations and a very small number of electors. My hon. friend knows that the government of which I first had the honour of being a member, brought in a Bill for the purpose of dealing with this very question and equalizing the population according to representation. I am afraid that he did not take as much interest in those matters at that time as I did, and consequently may not remember the circumstances. But we were unable to carry the Bill which we introduced in the legislature of Nova Scotia, and were obliged to withdraw it and fall back upon county representation, which, as he says, has prevailed up to this time. But he is well aware that a great change was made in equalizing the representation in the province of Nova Scotia, and that while county boundaries were maintained to a large extent, and from the difficulty there is in completely carrying out the principle of representation by population, still we have always had that in view, and the moment we had another member added to the province, we at once gave that second member to the county next largest to Halifax, the county of Pictou. Subsequently, when we obtained another member—I think it was subsequently—we extended the same thing to the county of Cape Breton, because those two counties, Pictou and Cape Breton, each had a larger population than any other county in that province. While it is true that county boundaries have been observed to a very large extent, the question of representation by population has always been kept in view, and, consequently, when we lost a member we had to carry out that principle as nearly as we could by putting the two smallest counties together. It has been frankly admitted that it has been attended with great difficulty, but as far as it could be done, both of these principles, county boundaries and representation by population, have been respected in the province of Nova Scotia. I only rose for the purpose of reminding my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) that since I entered public life a great deal of attention has been paid to equalizing representation according to population.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is not much difference between my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) and myself in this matter. I confined my observations from the time of confederation onward, because I did not suppose that what occurred before confederation would have any bearing on the question. I did not argue that population has no value in this matter at all. I do not propose to say that in arranging representation anybody can be absolutely indifferent to population, but my point was that representation by population was never considered to be of the chief importance and was not regarded at all as of equal importance to the principle of county boundaries, because in no case in the province of Nova Scotia have county boundary lines been disturbed. If the true principle be that there should be a unit of representation based on population, the breaking of county boundary lines in Nova Scotia, as was done in Ontario, might have secured what might have been a more equitable representation, so far as the unit of representation is concerned, but in Nova Scotia county boundary lines were always regarded as being more important than the securing of absolute equality in the unit of population.

Mr. McALISTER. The hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) made a comparison between the county of Restigouche and that part of the county of St. John intended to be created into a separate riding by this Bill. The census, I think, shows that the latter has a larger population than Restigouche, but, unless it has had a very rapid increase in population since 1891, I have no hesitation in saying that the population of Restigouche is much larger than that part of that county of St. John, and when the census of 1901 is taken, I think it will bear me out in this statement.

Mr. BERGERON. Mr. Chairman, when you took the Chair it was understood with the right hon. the Prime Minister that we would be allowed to ask a few questions about section 3, which was passed on Friday night. I want to be very brief, because I am almost afraid to open a new subject, as there is so much discussion upon it, and it may be carried too far. I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister upon what principle he has taken the parish of Lavaltrie from L'Assomption and put it back in Berthier?

The PRIME MINISTER. Upon the principle that it broke county lines.

Mr. BERGERON. It does not show upon the map that it is better because it is reversed. The map which we have, and I suppose it is correct, shows that the parish of Lavaltrie is entirely out of the county of Berthier. It shows that, by the topography of the country it belongs to L'Assomption, but, when we come to the population, which, I think, is more important, we find that there is a great deal of difference. The right hon. gentleman knows that Berthier has a population of 19,065, and that L'Assomption has a population of 13,674, making a difference of nearly 6,000. When the Government, in 1892, took the parish of Lavaltrie from Berthier and added it to L'Assomption, they were equalizing the population by within about 1,000 souls. After the parish of Lavaltrie had been transferred to L'Assomption the population stood: Berthier, 18,836; L'Assomption, 14,667. There was already over 4,000 of a difference, and my right hon. friend, by putting back the parish of Lavaltrie into Berthier, brings it to over 6,000 of a difference. Surely the principle invoked by my right hon. friend has no place here. There must be another reason. As far as county lines are concerned, the parish of Lavaltrie belongs, for all purposes, to L'Assomption. It already makes a straight line, and this change takes it out of the straight line and it also makes a difference in the population of over 6,000. Of course, my right hon. friend is not obliged to give me all the reasons which he may have had, but I want to put before the committee the fact that it cannot be justified on the ground of the equalization of population. I see also that the Bill transfers the Caughnawaga reserve from Chateauguay to Laprairie, Napierville. My right hon. friend will remember that when he introduced this Bill I remarked to him that the Indians on the Caughnawaga reserve would be entirely out of the voting as they have been deprived of the vote by the repealing of the Franchise Act, and I would like to ask the right hon. gentleman what his object is in making this change. Surely it is not a question of population, because Chateauguay had a population of 15,800, and when the Caughnawaga reserve was attached to it there was added a population of 1,936. Laprairie and Napierville has a population of 19,065, and the right hon. gentleman is taking 1,936, which was added to 15,800, from this population, making it still smaller, and adding it to 19,065, which will make it over 21,000. Will the right hon. gentleman explain the reason why this change as to the Caughnawaga reserve has been made?

The PRIME MINISTER. I will explain the two changes. My hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) has asked me, first, the reason why we have taken the parish of Lavaltrie and put it back into the district of Berthier. The reason is that the parish of Lavaltrie, from 1852, when the last division of counties took place in Lower Canada, has been part of the county of Berthier. I do not dispute that if the legislature of that date had looked only to geometrical symmetry, they would have placed the parish of Lavaltrie in the county of L'Assomption, but the legislature of 1852 put Lavaltrie in Berthier, and about 1852 Canada was endowed with her municipal system. My hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) knows that in Quebec, as in Ontario, the counties are divided into local municipalities, either townships, villages or parishes, and the mayors of the local municipalities constitute the county council. Although Lavaltrie has been in L'Assomption for Dominion elections since 1892, it is still part of the county of Berthier, and the mayor of Lavaltrie attends the municipal council of Berthier. The registry office of Lavaltrie is in the county of Berthier. For judicial purposes L'Assomption belongs to the district of Joliette, and if I remember aright the county of Berthier belongs to the district of Richelieu. For all purposes, except the purpose of Dominion elections, the parish of Lavaltrie belongs to the county of Berthier, and the lists upon which the electors of Lavaltrie would vote would be prepared and revised under the judicial authority of the county of Berthier. That is the reason, and the sole reason, why we have made the change. The population of Lavaltrie is 987, and the majority last time in favour of the Conservative candidate was thirty-one, so it does not affect the result one way or the other.

Mr. BERGERON. I did not say that. The right hon. gentleman is always looking at the political complexion of the change.

The PRIME MINISTER. I did not look at the population so much as at the county boundaries, and I say it is far better that the people of Lavaltrie should vote with Berthier in federal elections, as they do in all other matters. These, I think, are cogent reasons why Lavaltrie should be put back in the county of Berthier.

Mr. BERGERON. Both counties belong to the judicial district of Joliette.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not think so. Perhaps by a recent Act of the legislature it may be changed, but I believe even now they have concurrent jurisdiction in Richelleu and Joliette. My hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) asks why we took Caughnawaga from Chateauguay, and put it back in Laprairie. Well, it does not affect the result one way or the other, because the Indians do not vote. But suppose that 100 of the Indians left the tribal system and could vote, all their interests would be in the county of Laprairie, and they would have no interest for any purpose whatever in the county of Chateauguay. Caughnawaga naturally belongs to Laprairie, and for that reason we put it back.

Mr. BERGERON. If the local legislature gave the Indians the right to vote, it would put 2,000 of a population on to Laprairie county which has 19,000 already, and take it away from Chateauguay county which has only 15,000. Is that the whole explanation the right hon. gentleman has to give.

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Well, if we had plenty of time, I think I could give some other reasons, but where is the use. Now, why was the parish of Lacolle taken from Iberville and put into Missisquoi? St. John and Iberville county has a population of 23,868, and Missisquoi has a population of only 19,256. In 1892, when Lacolle was put into Missisquoi, it was done to equalize the population between the two counties.

The PRIME MINISTER. Not at all, because they took Notre Dame de St. Stanbridge and Notre Dame des Anges from Missisquoi and put it in Iberville. What they take away with one hand they put back with another.

Mr. BERGERON. But my right hon. friend is increasing the more populous county by 1,621 population and decreasing the less populous county by the same number. My right hon. friend has spoken about the political complexion of these changes, but what has he to say to this? He is back putting a large Conservative parish into St. John county because he does not fear it there, and he is taking it away from Missisquoi where it might be dangerous to his candidate, and by taking Notre Dame des Anges and Notre Dame de Stanbridge into Missisquoi, he helps his political friend in that county.

The PRIME MINISTER. Then, if I am to follow the argument of my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron), the reason why Lacolle was put into Missisquoi in 1892 was because that Conservative parish was to help the Conservative candidate in Missisquoi, and the reason why they took Notre Dame des Anges and Notre Dame de Stanbridge away from Missisquoi was because Iberville was already strongly Liberal.

Mr. BERGERON. Not at all.

The PRIME MINISTER. That is the reason he attributed to us, and why should not I attribute it to him?

Mr. BERGERON. I have shown that it was done to equalize the population.

The PRIME MINISTER. But that was not the reason we did it. I will tell my hon. friend what the reason was. We took the parish of Lacolle from Missisquoi and put it back into the county of St. John for the reason that I have stated in regard to the parish of Lavaltrie. In 1852, by the Redistribution Act of that year, the parish of Lacolle was put into the parish of St. John, and it has remained there ever since. To-day it is part and parcel of the county of St. John's for all purposes except for Dominion elections. In the local elections, it votes in St. John's, for municipal purposes it is part of St. John's, its jurors belong to the county of St. John's, the mayor of the parish of Lacolle sits in the municipal council of the county of St. John's, and can be elected warden of the county. For district purposes it has to go to court to Iberville. On the other hand, the Act of 1892 took from the county of Missisquoi the parishes of Notre Dame de Stanbridge and Notre Dame des Anges de Stanbridge, and put them into the county of St. John's. But these parishes are part of the county of Missisquoi except for Dominion electoral purposes. The mayors of these two parishes sit in the municipal council of Missisquoi, the jurors from them are required to go, not to St. John's, but to Sweetsburgh in the district of Bedford; and, therefore, there is no reason whatever why these two parishes should not be transferred to the county of Missisquoi where they properly belong. I stated when introducing the Bill that the main object we had in view with regard to the province of Quebec was to return to county lines, and that is the reason of these changes.

Mr. BERGERON. To go back to the divisions of 1852 is quite a reactionary step.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am sorry you are not as conservative as you ought to be.

Mr. BERGERON. We must be the reformers, for we have lost them on the other side of the House.

The PRIME MINISTER. You will make a mess of it.

Mr. BERGERON. Not worse than my hon. friend. Notwithstanding what the right hon. gentleman says, the fact remains that by the last census the population of St. John's and Iberville was 23,268, and the population of Missisquoi 19,456, a difference of nearly 4,000.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. When the Redistribution Act of 1892 was passed, you never bothered with figures.

Mr. BERGERON. What was done by the Act of 1892 was to equalize the population by taking the parish of Lacolle, which has over 2,500 and putting it into the county of Missisquoi, and by transferring to the county of St. John's the parishes of Notre Dame de Stanbridge and Notre Dame des Anges de Stanbridge 1,625, which left a difference of about 900 to equalize the population. My hon. friend to-day is changing that altogether and giving more to the county which has more and less to the county which has less. I suppose I need not ask my hon. friend the reason for taking the parish of St. Pie from Rouville and putting it into Bagot.

The PRIME MINISTER. The same explanation.

Mr. BERGERON. The county of Bagot has a population of 21,625 and the county of Rouville a population of 16,012, a difference of over 5,000; so that the transfer of the parish of St. Pie from the county of Bagot to the county of Rouville made a difference of about 4,000, and the addition of some other parishes brought the population of Rouville up to about 20,000, or pretty near the unit. This was done, not for political purposes but purely to equalize the population. My right hon. friend now brings by this change the population of Rouville to 16,000 and leaves the county of Bagot with about 21,000. I suppose I need not speak about the transfer of the parish of St. Marcel from the county of Bagot to the county of Richelieu. I suppose there is the same explanation for that?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the reason of speaking of the parish of St. Eugène de Grantham as being transferred from the county of Bagot?

Mr. J. E. MAROIL (Bagot). I may explain to the hon. member for Beauharnois the reason, but I am obliged to explain in French, as I am not very familiar with the English language.

(Translation.) I draw the attention of the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) to the fact that the wording of the Bill is not correct, when it speaks of the parish of St. Eugène de Grantham, formerly in the county of Bagot, as being transferred to the county of Drummond. Here are the reasons why this change was made. In 1867, the county of Bagot was formed from the different parishes referred to in this Bill, and from the parish of St. Hugues, which included the concession Brodeur. Later on, they created the parish of St. Eugène of Grantham, which belongs now to the county of Drummond; but, in order to form this parish, they had to dismember the parish of St. Hugues, by detaching from it the concession Brodeur, as also a part of St. Germain and a part of Drummondville. In 1892, when the census of those counties was taken, the parish of St. Pie was taken from the county of Bagot and put into that of Rouville. If, as they say, this was done in order to equalize as much as possible the population of those different counties, I submit that they should have detached the whole parish of St. Nazaire d'Acton and annexed it to the county of Bagot. At any rate, by the gerrymander of 1892, the concession Brodeur was entirely overlooked and, as a result, at the election that took place last year in the county of Bagot, there were 63 electors, belonging to that concession, who did not vote at all, having no right to vote.

I do not speak as a party man, because I do not know what the political complexion of these people is, but I think a crying injustice was done these people by depriving them of their right of vote.

The reason why we ask that St. Nazaire be put into the county of Bagot, is because that is where it properly belongs; while the parish of St. Eugène, which now belongs to the county of Drummond, and which was formerly part and parcel of the county of Bagot, will go back under this Bill, to the county of Drummond. So, you see, those people who rank among the electors of Bagot, according to the census of 1891, are not entitled to vote as such. Now, in order to avoid confusion in the preparation of the lists of voters which are now under the control of the municipalities, we have come to the conclusion that it would be preferable to annex the whole parish of St. Eugène to the county of Drummond, and to take the parish of St. Nazaire and put it into the county of Bagot.

Mr. BERGERON. The explanation of my hon. friend is very clear to me ; but I cannot understand how the wording of this can make it effective. As a matter of fact, the parish of St. Eugène de Grantham is not in the county of Bagot, and I call my hon. friend's attention to that, because the wording of the Bill cannot remain as it is, as it would not be true. I will pass now to another change that has surprised me. The Bill says that the parishes of St. Nazaire and Ste. Christine, as municipally constituted, shall be included in the electoral district of Bagot. We had a meeting there, and they voted in the election at Bagot.

Mr. MARCIL. A part of it.

Mr. BERGERON. I am speaking of the parishes. They may be badly divided, and it would be very important to see about it now. The parishes of St. Nazaire and Ste. Christine are to-day in the county of Bagot.

Mr. MARCIL. Not all of them.

Mr. BERGERON. It is important to find out which are in and which are not. The wording of this Bill, at first sight, is not correct. It is said here : "The parishes of St. Nazaire and Ste. Christine, as municipally constituted, shall be included in the electoral district of Bagot." There might be a concession or two not included, I do not know.

The PRIME MINISTER. The parish of St. Nazaire is in the county of Bagot, as an ecclesiastically constituted parish.

Mr. BERGERON. They voted the last time in the county of Bagot.

The PRIME MINISTER. They vote in the county of Bagot, but there is a part of the parish which forms part of the municipality of St. Nazaire, which is still in the county of Drummond, and it is to include that part, which is for all municipal purposes part of the parish of St. Nazaire, in the electoral district of Bagot, that we insert this clause.

Mr. MARCIL. I might explain that there is no change at all about Ste. Christine. That is just the same as before.

Mr. BERGERON. Why do you mention it then ?

Mr. MARCIL. It is only St. Nazaire in which there is a change. A part of St. Nazaire belongs to the county of Bagot, and a part to the county of Drummond, and the intention is to have the whole parish of St. Nazaire in the county of Bagot, in exchange for the sixty-three electors who used to belong to the county of Bagot and now belong to the parish of St. Eugène de Grantham, which parish belongs to Drummond county.

Mr. BERGERON. Ste. Christine belongs to the county of Bagot.

Mr. MARCIL. Yes, because a part of the parish of Ely, which belongs to the parish of Ste. Christine does not belong to the parish of Ste. Christine for municipal purposes, but only for church purposes. They do not pay taxes to Ste. Christine or go to the council meetings.

Mr. BERGERON. Where did these people belong before ?

The PRIME MINISTER. These two parishes have been formed from two townships, part of the township of Ely and part of the township of Drummond. This is to make it absolutely sure that they will all go into the same place—that the municipal parishes of Ste. Christine and St. Nazaire shall all go to the county of Bagot.

Mr. BERGERON. The parish of St. Guillaume is transferred to the electoral district of Yamaska ?

The PRIME MINISTER. In 1871, the parishes of St. Guillaume and Bonaventure were detached from the county of Arthabaska for all purposes covered by the local legislature—registration purposes, municipal purposes, judicial purposes. Since 1871, the parishes of St. Guillaume and Bonaventure have voted for local purposes in the county of Yamaska. They form part of the municipal council of Yamaska and belong to the judicial district of Richelieu. Therefore, this is to complete the change that was made and has been now in existence for almost thirty years, that is to say, to put the parishes where they belong in the county of Yamaska.

Mr. BERGERON. And they are two Liberal parishes ?

The PRIME MINISTER. They are.

Mr. BERGERON. I suppose the right hon. gentleman will give the reason also for putting in the electoral district of Nicolet, St. Eulalie and St. Samuel. I think they belong to that county already.

The PRIME MINISTER. The parishes of St. Eulalie and St. Samuel are part of the Township of Horton, which originally belonged to the county of Arthabaska. They have nothing whatever to do with the county of Arthabaska, but are part of the county of Nicolet for municipal, registration and judicial purposes as well. This is only to make it doubly sure that they do not form part of Arthabaska.

Mr. HAGGART. What electoral district do they vote in now in Dominion elections ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Partly in Nicolet and partly in Arthabaska.

Mr. HAGGART. They may have the right to vote in both places under this Bill, because it does not say that they shall be transferred to the electoral district of Nicolet.

The PRIME MINISTER. At present I believe there is only a concession which ought to vote in Drummond and Arthabaska. At the last election there was a contest between the two revising officers, and they did not vote at all, and this is to make it absolutely sure that they will vote in Nicolet.

Mr. BERGERON. What about the township of Stanfold? The hon. gentleman is splitting the township in two. It is a good Grit place and gives a large majority.

The PRIME MINISTER. It is a good Grit place, and I am sorry for my hon. friend from Drummond and Arthabaska (Mr. Lavergne) that he is to lose them.

Mr. BERGERON. He has 1,200 besides.

The PRIME MINISTER. There is a reason for this. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) is familiar with the township of Stanfold, which is a very fine one, he knows that the part which is on the River Becan-cour is separated from the rest of the township by a swamp, and is not connected with Stanfold proper, but new parishes have been established on the river, including Notre Dame de Lourdes; and that this part has annexed for all municipal purposes with the township of Somerset South, in the county of Megantic. That has been done under a resolution of the county of Drummond and Arthabaska, and also a resolution of the county of Megantic, confirmed by Act of the legislature. I will find the statute for my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) if he will give me a moment.

Mr. BERGERON. While the hon. gentleman is looking for the statute, I may say that I have found what I was looking for. The hon. gentleman will find that the townships of Ste. Eulalie and St. Samuel are in the county of Nicolet already.

The PRIME MINISTER. For the local?

Mr. BERGERON. No, for the federal.

The PRIME MINISTER. This is to make it sure.

Mr. BERGERON. Too much law is as bad as none.

The PRIME MINISTER. In the last election the electors of the parish of St. Samuel did not vote at all. Mr. Methot, the returning officer for Drummond and Arthabaska, would not recognize them as within his territory, nor would the returning officer for Megantic County count their votes. This is to make it sure that they shall have the opportunity to vote some place the next time.

Mr. BERGERON. While my hon. friend is looking for that statute, I may say how it strikes me. When this Bill was introduced it was said to be for the undoing of the redistribution of 1882. And every one must be struck with the thought that the Bill was really prepared for Ontario, and that, so far as it applies to other provinces, the work has been done in a hurry and without due consideration. We have had proof of that in the case of St. John this afternoon. Hardly anybody on the Treasury benches could explain the section to us. So far as Prince Edward Island is concerned, I read in "Hansard" today that they were at loggerheads how it was to be done. When we come to Quebec, I do not see any reason in it at all, unless I read between the lines. The reason given by the Premier are very clever, but it is quite evident that they were not intended to be given when the Bill was prepared. All these parishes except St. Pie, which, of course, my hon. friend (Mr. Brodeur), who presides over this committee, would not have because there is 200 of a majority, had been put back into Bagot to help my hon. friend (Mr. Marcell). And for Lacolle and Caughnawaga and Lavaltrie, it can be understood. But, when we reach Yamaska, Drummond and Arthabaska, and Nicolet, there is something the committee does not know, and it might be worth while to explain. Some subsidies were promised in Nicolet and Yamaska, and promised under very solemn circumstances, and by the leader of the Government himself, when he went there, and letters were put in the hands of the member for Yamaska (Mr. Mignault). But when it was decided to complete the Drummond County Railway and pass far away from these parishes, the Government naturally felt that they could hardly go back before these people and hope to win their support without granting subsidies. As I have no doubt that my hon. friend (Mr. Mignault), with the persistency which characterizes him, though he looks quiet enough, must have gone to the Government and asked: How can I get out of this fix? He was told, like the hon. member for Nicolet: Never mind, the failure of our promise will be made up with a number of Grit townships from Arthabaska put into your county. This is the reason for the gerrymander in Quebec. Drummond and Arthabaska has a majority of 1,200. In putting in two or three of these parishes, with large Grit majorities in Yamaska and Nicolet, and one or two in the county of Megantic, the hon. gentleman is trying to assure himself of all three of these counties. All of this has not been explained by the right hon. gentleman himself, but this is what I read between the lines of the Bill.

The PRIME MINISTER. I must say that I admire the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Bergeron's) imagination. His idea that the promise of a railway can be made good with voters is one which it requires some imagination to conceive. The hon. gentleman has answered his own statement with regard to Nicolet. He said that the railway was promised to Nicolet, and because it was not given two Grit parishes were put into the county. But, he has said that these parishes, Ste. Eulalie and St. Samuel were put into Nicolet in 1892. Then, we are merely confirming the legislation of 1892. So far as Yamaska is concerned, we simply make the constituency, for Dominion purposes, coincide with the constituency for local purposes. Now, with regard to the township of Stanfold, I refer my hon. friend to the Act of 1895, 58 Vic., chap. 12. It provides that lots 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, &c., are detached from the township of Stanfold in the county of Arthabaska, and annexed to the township of Somerset South, in the county of Megantic, for all purposes except registration purposes.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that the local Act?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Where do these people go to church?

The PRIME MINISTER. In a new small mission they have at Notre Dame de Lourdes.

Mr. BERGERON. What does it belong to?

The PRIME MINISTER. It belongs to Somerset South. Municipally, these people are in the township of Somerset South, which is in Megantic. They vote in Megantic for municipal purposes, and they are a part of it for all purposes except registration, with respect to which they have been retained for some time to come in the county of Arthabaska. That is the reason for the change.

Bill reported.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have a slight amendment to offer in section 3, subsection (g), which now reads:

The parish of St. Engène de Grantham, now in the electoral district of Bagot, is transferred therefrom to the electoral district of Drummond and Arthabaska.

It should read this way:

The part of the parish of St. Eugène de Grantham now in the electoral district of Bagot, &c.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON. Before this Bill passes from this House I desire to enter my final protest against what I regard, and what hon. gentlemen on this side of the House regard, as an uncalled for measure. The fact that the county of Halton, which I have the honour to represent, is not interfered with by the Bill, is a good reason why I should be able to speak of this measure without any prejudice. I have no pent up indignation of 18 years standing, as the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) had, and which he gave vent to a few days ago in the most unmeasured terms. Nor do I share the conclusion to which he arrived after the leader of the Opposition made his statement that he would not take the responsibility of moving an amendment to a Bill which he regarded as unconstitutional. I say that I do not share the conclusion at which the Minister of Customs arrived when he said that we on this side of the House regarded the measure as being so fair that we would not even move an amendment to it. The reason given by the leader of the Opposition for not moving an amendment is the one which he stated, namely, that he had an objection to moving an amendment to a Bill which he regarded as beyond the power of this House to pass. Personally the members on this side of the House seek no preferences from the Government, nor do we think that it is fair that hon. gentlemen on that side of the House who are more numerous, should insist upon having preferences. The question of two representatives for the county of Brant, which has received so much attention, is one I think that deserves even more consideration. To my mind, to make two Liberal hives out of the small county of Brant with a voting population of only some 33,000, is something that cannot be characterized by any hon. member on that side of the House as being fair, when in the same Bill the hon. gentlemen propose to take the large county of Welland, with nearly as much of a population as the two ridings of Brant will have, and convert that from a Conservative county, as it is now, into a Liberal hive. The county of Welland as it exists at this time—because this Bill has not yet passed—is the same as it has been for some 32 years, it is the same for the Dominion as for the local. No change in the long period of 32 years with the representation either in the House of Commons or in the local legislature. As we are all aware, the boundaries of this riding were fixed by the British North America Act, by such men as the Hon. Geo. Brown, Sir Oliver Mowat, and others, the fathers of confederation, regarding it as a fair limitation for the size of the riding, and a proper thing that that old historical county should be represented in this House as well as in the legislature at Toronto in the form in which it was described in the British North America Act. Her Majesty the Queen approved of that measure, but notwithstanding that fact we find that hon. gentlemen are now proposing to interfere with this old historic county, and change it from what it was determined upon by the fathers of confederation in 1867.

Now, what are hon. gentlemen seeking to do? What is their object in changing the various constituencies throughout western Ontario? Men have been accustomed for years and years to vote together, they know just exactly where they are to go to poll their votes when election time comes on. But under the new arrangement all things will be new. They tell us their desire is to repeal the iniquities of 1882; and the Prime Minister, in introducing this Bill to the House, declared in the most solemn manner, with his hand raised toward heaven, that this Bill would be a fair Bill, fair alike to Liberals and Conservatives. They claim that they have grievances, they think that there are iniquities. I believe these iniquities are more imaginary than real, and I am quite sure that any hon. gentleman who listened to the able speech of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) a few evenings ago, would have no hesitation in saying that these grievances were more imaginary than real, that as a matter of fact the Liberals lost nothing by the redistribution of 1882, but on the contrary they were gainers, and consequently they have no real grievance.

With reference to the county of Welland to which I desire more particularly to refer, they now propose to add the township of Pelham and the township of Wainfleet. The township of Pelham contains a population of 2,554, and the township of Wainfleet, 2,803. These added to Welland as it now exists, and as it has existed for the past 32 years without and change, either for the local or the Dominion, will make a riding of 30,489. Now, let us bear in mind that the township of Pelham originally was a part of the county of Lincoln, and it is now a portion of the county of Lincoln. Why, then, tear it away from Lincoln again and put it into another county? I think we have heard to-night statements made that a parish ought to be put back where it was many years ago. The township of Pelham, away back at the union, was in the county of Lincoln. It was put into the county of Welland for good reasons, I have no doubt, by such men as the Hon. George Brown, Sir Oliver Mowat, and other good Liberals who at that time helped to frame the British North America Act. Now it is proposed, for the first time in thirty-two years, to change the boundaries of this old historic riding. We think it hardly fair; we think it is one of the instances in which unfairness is exhibited in this Bill, and, as I said before, men like the Hon. George Brown and Sir Oliver Mowat agreed that there was fairness in the arrangement made in 1867. Her Majesty the Queen assented to the Bill, and, as Mr. Speaker says, signed it by her own hand, declaring that it was considered fair and proper, and that no injustice was done as between one side and the other. The township of Pelham in 1896 gave a Liberal majority of 230, but with a good strong candidate it is presumed that it would give a majority of 300, and that is one of the townships that it is proposed to add to the riding of Welland. For what purpose? I can see no other purpose than that of legislating out of this House an hon. member (Mr. McCleary) who has been an honour to the county that he represents. Under the Bill, as constituted, the riding of Welland will have 30,489 of a population, and the county of Brant will have about 33,000 of a voting population. Brant is to have two representatives, who will, presumably, support hon. gentlemen on your right Mr. Speaker, but, not satisfied with two Liberal hives within the small county of Brant, they are prepared to do something that, I believe, from one end of the province of Ontario to the other, and from one end of the Dominion to the other, when the circumstances are fairly known, will be declared unfair and unworthy of a large majority for the purpose of legislating an hon. member out of this House. They will add two townships to the riding of Welland, which will give it a large Liberal majority, and make it a Liberal hive. Now, hon. gentlemen tell us that the reason for this is, that they have adopted the principle of county boundaries. Why adopt a principle if the principle is going to work an injustice? I confess I have listened to the arguments, day by day, in favour of the principle of county boundaries, but I have not yet heard one argument that convinces me that county boundaries alone should guide in apportioning the constituencies of Ontario or Quebec. I fail to see that a principle that works an injustice should be absolutely adhered to. At best, it is a game of chance. We simply apply the principle, and take our chance as to what kind of constituency will be hewed out. It may be a small one; it may be a large one; it may be a proper one or an improper one. But there is one thing sure in adopting a plan of this kind, and it is, that this House absolves itself from its prerogative of determining how the constituencies shall be formed which are to be represented in this Parliament. Last year we had the spectacle of taking away from this House the power of dealing with the franchise, and handing it over to the local legislatures. With what result? We have the extraordinary spectacle during the whole session of Parliament of one of the chief cities in Canada being unrepresented on account of that special measure, or of that new franchise law, which was imposed on us by the action of the Government and their supporters last session. Surely, the lesson for this House to learn is, that it ought to be careful not to hand over to the different provinces the power to deal with the constituencies, when so great an injustice has been inflicted upon the city of Winnipeg by handing over to the province of Manitoba the making of the franchise for that province.

The legislature of Ontario does not observe county boundaries. They make no pretense of doing it. They only show respect for county boundaries when it suits their convenience, but when it does not suit them, they adopt some other system. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) to-night made an extraordinary statement. He said that the matter of arranging constituencies should be left to the guidance of the people of the provinces; they knew best. Now, he proposes to leave the arrangement of the constituencies in the province of Ontario to the guidance of the provincial legislature at Toronto. If we do so, we can only assume that the legislature at Toronto will do very much the same as they did with the representation in the legislature. They pay no attention to county boundaries when it suits their convenience to do otherwise. We have frequent illustrations of that fact, and, besides, as Ontario will from time to time no doubt change the county boundaries, create new counties and change the old counties, the fact is, that we simply hand over to Ontario for all time to come the making of the constituencies, which is the basis of representation in this Parliament. We give that power over wholly and solely to the legislature of the province. We have that exemplified in the case of the formation of the county of Dufferin. In establishing a new county they changed the formation of different counties, and, every time they choose to establish a new county, they will interfere with the present arrangement. As a matter of fact, the moment they establish a new county, new boundaries will be created for various constituencies represented in this Parliament. We have that point exemplified in regard to the city of London and the city of Toronto. The western part of Ontario, the large territory known as new Ontario, will no doubt very soon, perhaps before another decade, be divided into ridings for representation in the local legislature and into counties for municipal purposes. The Ontario legislature will have the cutting, or carving, of an immense tract of country, and thus we shall have shown to us that we have entirely given up the power and right to say one word as to what the formation of the constituencies in new Ontario will be, because we have handed the whole matter over to the provincial legislature, which deals with the matter, not as we propose to deal with it here, but deals with it irrespective of county boundaries. In the province of Ontario we have county lines which are not respected. In the county of Simcoe and in Peel, the county adjoining the one which I have the honour to represent, this is illustrated. Only about ten years ago a township was taken from the county of Peel and added to a portion of another county for the purpose of strengthening a gentleman in the county of Peel, making a riding of unshapely appearance, extending from about 10 miles north of the town of Brampton to near the town of Barrie. Not only in Simcoe and Peel are county lines avoided, but in Welland, Lincoln, Haldimand, Monck, and Cardwell is the same thing to be seen. In how many other places county lines have been avoided, I am unable to say, as I have not gone to the trouble of investigating the province from one end of it to the other, but we have this assurance, at any rate, that when we lay it down as a principle here, that ridings ought to be carved out along the line of county boundaries, the provincial legislature, which has to deal much more closely with municipal matters than we have, pays no attention to that principle, but cuts out their ridings for legislative purposes in such a manner as appears best to themselves. I desire to say one word with regard to the county of Middlesex, for apart from the unfairness in connection with Welland, another injustice is done Middlesex. Welland has been for thirty-two years in a state of quiet repose without interference by the local legislature or by the Dominion. Its boundaries received the approbation of the fathers of confederation, and I think we might well have left that county as a relic of what the framers of our constitution conceived to be right and just. The Government should not change the boundaries of Welland, simply for the purpose of legislating an hon. member out of this House, or any Conservative out of this House. I appeal to hon. gentlemen opposite to be fair, and in the case of Welland to make an exception to the rule, as Sir Oliver Mowat does. I appeal to them not to be bound by a principle which is simply a piece of gambling, a principle which is shown to be unsound, a principle which the late Prime Minister of Ontario shows is not sound, because he has departed from it in forming and continuing ridings without considering it. In the case of the county of Middlesex another principle has been set aside by this Bill. The county of Brant brought forth much warmth from the Minister of Customs in defending the proposition to make two Liberal hives out of that small county with a population of 33,000; and in that county the town of Brantford is thrown in with the rest of the county, and the judges are asked to divide the whole into two ridings. How different with the county of Middlesex, in which the city of London is situated. Parliament proposes by this Bill to tie the hands of the judges in reference to that. It says: We will allow you to deal with Brantford and the county of Brant, but we will not allow you to deal with London and the county of Middlesex on the same principle; we will first say that the city of London, with a population, under the census of 1891, of over 31,000—and now probably 40,000—shall have but one representative, and then the balance of the county shall be divided into three ridings. Why not be as fair in this case as you were in the case of Brant? Why not say to the judges: The county of Middlesex shall have four representatives and we will allow you to divide this county into four divisions, each of which shall send a member to this Parliament. Let there be fairness all around. I ask that the principle applied in one instance shall be applied in the other. I shall conclude my remarks by saying, that I hope the Prime Minister, before this Bill finally passes off the scene—if he cannot do it in this Chamber I hope he will intercept it in the Senate Chamber before it becomes law—will do himself the honour—and I believe he will be doing himself an honour—of fulfilling the pledge he gave to this House early in the session, when he declared, with uplifted hands, that this Bill should be as fair to Conservatives as to Liberals.

Mr. GILMOUR. Mr. Speaker, before this Bill is disposed of, and so that I may not be misunderstood, I desire to put myself on record in regard to the county which I represent, and the city of London, of which a portion is in my county of East Middlesex, and which is affected by this Bill. I have listened with much attention to this debate, and particularly to the arguments as to the constitutional rights of this Parliament to pass such a Bill at this time. Not being a lawyer, I have listened as a jurymen would, to the learned and able minds of the House explaining the constitution, and I must say that I have been disappointed. I have seen legal gentlemen, in endeavouring to make their explanations, get into deep water and flounder to an extent that it made my heart feel for them, and I earnestly desired to see them relieve themselves. I saw some of them make painful attempts to twist and turn the constitution in order to suit the exigencies of the case. It reminded me of Nelson of old, who, when he did not want to see, put his glass to the blind eye. The arguments of the legal gentlemen so disappointed me that I have had to fall back on my own resources, and take my own counsel as to the situation. Now, if it really be the case that under the constitution this Parliament can change its constituencies at its whim, it is a most unfortunate thing, because I have no doubt in my mind that Parliament may do it for party purposes, and at any time it suits—to the extent even of fixing a constituency for a by-election. I would rather it had been that the constituencies could only be changed after each decennial census, so that we might know where we are during the succeeding ten years. During this debate I have heard many quotations made from learned men, both dead and living, with regard to the constitution and the powers of Parliament under it, but I have never heard any quotation which asserted that Parliament had the right to act, after it had once distributed the seats, before another decennial census had been taken. I have not a great deal of fault to find with regard to my own county; indeed, if the Government and Parliament had a right to pass this measure, I would not complain even if they cut my political head off. But I submit to the House, that in all fairness, since this Bill takes away one member from the county of Middlesex, the Government might have proposed to give another member to the city of London. The three representatives left in the county will, by the present Bill, represent a population of 58,000, according to the last census, and the member for London will represent a population of 40,000. I have heard the principle laid down here: That the city population does not require the same representation as a rural population requires. I beg leave to differ from that argument entirely, for in my opinion the city population requires more representation than the rural population, their wants are more, and in any legislation you may give to the city population you cannot help but legislate for the rural population. A great deal of credit has been taken for the fairness of this Bill, in remitting so much of it to the judges. I think myself that much more might have been left to the judges and less said about the fairness of the measure, because, in my opinion, we might have trusted the judges even more, and said less about the trust placed in them. I think, however, that the judges will not be flattered with the trust you repose in them, inasmuch as you only trust them a little with the province of Ontario, and you forget altogether to trust them in the province of Prince Edward Island. Had this been a proper Bill to pass, I think you ought to have made it apply not only to the portion of Ontario to which it is confined, but over the whole country from ocean to ocean. It has been said that this is a necessary Bill in order to do away with an iniquity that was perpetrated some time ago with regard to Ontario in former redistributions. Well, all I can say is this, that I notice that at the last general elections a minority of the votes of the province of Ontario were cast in favour of the Liberal party, and yet they secured a majority of members; so that the arrangement of the constituencies could not have been so very bad after all. The Liberal party ought to try to return to power again by the same road by which they came in. I think they ought to tell to the country again the same story which they told before in 1896. I intend to tell the same story in my county, if again a candidate, that I told then; but I do not believe the Liberal party will do so. Mr. Speaker, I declare myself against the passage of this Bill.

Motion agreed to, on division, and Bill read the third time and passed.

CONDITIONAL LIBERATION OF CONVICTS.

Bill (No. 171)—from the Senate—to provide for the conditional liberation of penitentiary convicts.—(Sir Wilfrid Laurier.)

INSURANCE ACT AMENDMENT.

House again resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 86) to further amend the Insurance Act.—(Mr. Fielding.)

(In the Committee.)

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). When this Bill was last in committee it was disposed of with the exception of one point, which was reserved at the request of my hon. friend from York, N.B. (Mr. Foster). In the investment clause it is provided that the companies may invest in the debentures or bonds of any steam railway company. It was suggested that that was rather a broad provision, and that we ought to try to limit in some way the class of securities in connection with that special class of companies. I suggested an amendment, which I showed to the hon. gentleman before he left the city, and which he agreed to. It will read as follows:—

The debentures or bonds of any steam railway company which has earned and paid regular dividends upon its ordinary, preferred or guaranteed stocks for the two years next preceding the purchase of such bonds or debentures.

That is to say, they must be steam railway companies, with dividend-earning powers. The same words will require to be inserted twice in the Bill. I move that the clause be amended accordingly.

Motion agreed to, and section, as amended, agreed to.

Bill reported, amendments concurred in, Bill read the third time and passed.

WINDING-UP ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 163)—from the Senate—further to amend the Winding-up Act (Mr. Fielding), read the second time, and referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce.

SUPPLY.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Charges of management..... $145,119 42

Mr. DAVIN. What is the explanation of this increase of $10,000 in the printing of Dominion notes?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The only explanation is the exceptional increase in the circulation of notes, which, during the past year, has been much larger than in previous years.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is simply to meet the increased circulation?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, rendered necessary by the expansion of trade.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understand that the item has reference to the cost of printing Dominion notes. I would draw attention to the fact that the paper on which these notes are printed is not sufficiently strong in texture. These notes go to pieces very easily. They are handled very frequently, much more so than any other denomination of money, and my experience is they tear very easily indeed. It is worth while considering whether the paper cannot be improved.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I shall be happy to accept the hon. gentleman's suggestion and look into the matter. This is the first complaint I have heard. I think it will be found that the paper is up to the standard, though possibly the standard is not high enough, and I will look into it.

Militia—

Pay, allowances, &c..... $352,896

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) tell us what is the policy of the Government, as he promised to do on this vote?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Since the present Government has been in power we have drilled annually more than three-quarters of the militia each year, and this year, that is the year 1899, we propose to drill all the militia that are properly officered and able to go out to camp. Our main object is to secure efficiency. I think the country will agree with me that if we are spending a large sum, as we have been ever since confederation, from $800,000 to $1,500,000, and sometimes even beyond that, it would be good economy to add a sufficient amount to make our militia system as perfect as possible, so that in time of necessity, whether on account of internal trouble or an attack from the outside, if any such misfortune should happen us, we shall have a militia force which in a few days can be put in the field. As to whether we can every year call out the whole militia for annual drill, will depend, of course, upon the revenue of the country. It is the policy of this Government to have the whole of the present force annually drilled, or, failing that, should funds not be available, I would recommend that any economy practised should be in the direction of reducing the numerical strength of the force and maintaining the principle of annual drill of the whole available force at all hazards. With reference to this vote, I stated, when I asked for a supplementary vote of, I think, $125,000 for the last fiscal year, that I would propose a reduction of this vote by a similar amount. The hon. member for York then criticised that proposition because, he said,

I would want this year probably the money voted over again. I have considered that question, and am of the opinion that the criticism is not a fair one. The amount to be voted is for paying the men who may be called out for the present financial year, that is, prior to the 1st July next, and the number to be called out at given dates is a matter which is left largely to the discretion of the General Officer Commanding. It so happens that this year the whole force was called out prior to the 1st July, and therefore we required the $125,000, but next year it may happen that a much smaller force will be called out before the 1st July, and therefore we may reduce the amount by $125,000, as compared with that which has been expended during the fiscal year just closed. With reference to some changes being made in the organization of the militia, I have already said that we consider efficiency of prime importance. With a view to that, some new departments are being created. An exceedingly important one is an army medical staff. That has practically been created and established now under the very able direction of Surgeon Lt.-Col. Neilson. I believe the system which has been adopted here is a very good one. It combines our old regimental system, which has been in existence here, and which was the system in England for many years, with the medical staff system, which is the one now adopted in the Imperial army. Surgeon Neilson, after a very careful examination of the whole subject, has, with the approval of the General Officer Commanding and my own, adopted the system, and I believe it will be found to work advantageously. I may say also that, differently from most changes of this kind, it will result in a slight saving to the country, instead of an increase of expenditure. Any military man can see the importance of this establishment, and my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), as a medical man, will recognize at once the very great importance of having a medical staff of this kind. In case our men have to take the field, it is our bounden duty to provide every possible means known to science and to skill to take care of the men who may have the misfortune to become ill or to be wounded. We are establishing in this connection four bearer companies, a new thing in this country. One was organized in Halifax about a year ago, and is being uniformed and furnished with the necessary equipment. These companies are being organized at four different places.

Another important improvement is about to be carried into effect in the establishment of an army service corps, in addition to the army medical corps. That will mean the establishment here at headquarters of an officer who shall have charge of all questions of transport in the field, and who will organize throughout the country means to provide transportation of stores and supplies, in case of our being suddenly called upon to do so, and who will arrange his plans for securing the necessary stores and supplies at short notice in different parts of the country. This is an exceedingly important branch of the service, the need of which has been felt in the past, when on two or three occasions we have, unfortunately, found it necessary to use our militia force in the field. I may say, in a word, the object is to make our militia force a perfectly self-reliant and perfectly self-contained force, so that we shall have every branch of every service represented by a skilled man, a man who is able at once, at a moment's notice, to take the field and discharge the important duties which would devolve upon him. Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, having made this general statement, it would be better now to take up the individual items. I shall be very glad to answer, so far as I can, any question that may be put to me on these items.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If I remember well, when the Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden) brought up the votes in the first instance and proposed to enter into some of the details, it was suggested then, and arranged, that we should have the policy of the Government stated on the present occasion, and I may say one of the reasons I was anxious that it should be done was, that when the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) asked what was the intention of the Government with regard to the annual drill, the hon. Minister said, as far as he was personally concerned, he was of opinion that the entire force should be called out for the full period of drill every year, but it was a question that had not been finally settled by the Government. One of the reasons why I suggested that it would be desirable that we should have the general explanation on the regular item being brought forward was, that we might know the conclusion at which the Government had arrived on that very important point. I do not quite understand from my hon. friend that the subject has received the consideration of the Government in the meantime, or that they are in a position to state what is their intention, whether to have the entire militia force called out for the full term of drill—

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I stated that that was the intention.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am glad to hear that. I entirely agree with the Minister of Militia that it would be true economy to spend a larger sum of money and accomplish the object in view by having the work thoroughly and efficiently done, than it would be, for the purpose of making a small saving to impair the whole efficiency of the militia organization for the want of a thorough drill. I may remind the House that the importance of having the militia service of this country put on the best possible footing was presented to the House by the Government, when they asked an increase of the vote to provide for the services of the General Officer Commanding. And the House very cheerfully met that position by giving an increased allowance; and, so far as I am able to form any opinion, I have no hesitation in saying—I do not pretend to be an expert in such matters, as I am entirely a man of peace—that we can congratulate the Government of having obtained the services of a very able and efficient officer in that high and very important position. I notice, in the report of a speech made, I think, in the province of Quebec, the General Officer Commanding attached the very greatest importance, not only to the full period of drill, but he appeared to indicate that it was scarcely possible to bring the militia force of Canada up to the state of thorough efficiency, from every point of view desirable, without an extended term.

He was speaking, perhaps, especially in reference to Quebec, but I am inclined to think his views apply to the general question. If that be the case, it would be very much better to extend the term of the drill a few days, even at some increased cost, provided that step is absolutely necessary in order to obtain that thorough efficiency that we all admit is so desirable. I desire to say in reference to the remarks made by the Minister of Militia and Defence, that there was a point of very great importance brought up in the report made by the General Officer Commanding, to which I wish to draw his attention, and that is with reference to the permanent force. It may not be included in the item immediately before the committee, but as I am on my feet I wish to draw the attention of the Government to a fact which strikes me as of vital importance in reference to the defence of the country. We have a small permanent force, and as that force has been organized for specific objects, it would be a most undesirable thing for the Government to adopt such a course as would to a large extent destroy the utility of that force. As I understand it, the General Officer Commanding, in his report, states that the removal of a large portion of that force to the Yukon has completely disorganized the force, that it has in fact rendered it impossible to carry out the objects of Parliament in providing for that permanent force, that is in connection with the various schools. He says it would be absolutely necessary, and if Parliament expected that force to perform the duties for which it was organized, to recall that large portion of the permanent force from the Yukon, or to organize an additional force under the Act. Now, I entertained no doubt whatever that immediately upon that statement coming from such a high authority, the Government would at once recall that military force from the Yukon district. So far as I am able to form a judgment, I think the Mounted Police are better qualified for service in the Yukon than any military force. We all know that the Mounted Police has proved itself a most admirable and efficient militia force in this country. But the military force now in the Yukon are simply useless, they are completely paralyzed, they are not in a position to perform any of the duties devolving upon the Mounted Police, such duties as are required in the Yukon district. You have only to read Major Walsh's report to see that they did not know what to do with this large military force sent up there at an enormous expense, and having said that some 70 or 80 men might be brought down to Dawson in the meantime, you have a force of over 200 men and officers in the Yukon district at great cost and absolutely useless, only useful for the purpose of putting up military barracks in a section of the country where there are only a few Indians and a mere handful of white people. Experience has shown that the Government have made a great mistake. I do not see how any person can read either the report of the General Officer Commanding or the report of Major Walsh without finding that an utter waste of public money was made, and the usefulness of the permanent force has been destroyed by that act. Not one hour's service has ever been demanded, nor in an emergency could they move a finger until the Riot Act has been read in Dawson, and then you have to send up a long distance to Fort Selkirk where the main body of this force is, in order to obtain their services. Why the Government should have sent a military force into such a country as the Yukon, where the Mounted Police were so admirably adapted to do the work, passes my comprehension. Experience has shown that the Mounted Police are a thousand times more efficient than a military force for any service that might be required in that region. I cannot understand why, when it is ascertained that there was no possible utility in keeping them there, they should not have been brought back at once as the General Officer Commanding said it was absolutely necessary to do if the Government desired to maintain the permanent force in efficiency. I should be glad to hear from the Minister of Militia and Defence why it is that, having obtained the services of an eminently capable General Officer Commanding, his views should be utterly disregarded on that subject, in view of Major Walsh's evidence that there was no necessity for them, that in fact so far as any one could learn from his report, they are rather in the way instead of performing any useful service. I may say that so far as my voice and influence go in this country, I am ready to support any expenditure necessary in order to maintain our militia force in a state of efficiency. We owe that to the country, we owe it to ourselves, and we owe it to our self-respect as a nation. I shall most cheerfully give my hearty support to every object such as the maintenance of an efficient force for the defence of this country, and I am certain that such measures will meet with the general support of the people irrespective of politics.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Mr. Chairman, I may say, first, that I feel very much gratified indeed at the way the hon. leader of the Opposition has received the statement I have made in reference to the somewhat increased estimate, and to know, that so far as he is concerned, speaking, I suppose, for the party which he leads, he will co-operate in any reasonable measure designed to perfect our military system. I may say that that is the view I expected the hon. gentleman would take, because I know that he is accustomed to take broad and statesmanlike views on questions of this kind. But, at the same time, I must confess that I am somewhat disappointed at the somewhat narrow view he put forward, and I think, the very unfair statement he made in reference to the action of the Government in sending the force to the Yukon. Of course, that is a matter for which I myself and the Militia Department are not specially responsible. It was the policy deliberately decided upon by the Government after being requested from the Yukon to send a force in there in case that it might unhappily be needed. The hon. gentleman has divided his observations on this point into two parts. First, he says that as a result of sending a permanent force into the Yukon territory, we have marred its usefulness, in fact, to use his own language, disorganized it as a teaching body for the militia of this country.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I wish the hon. Minister (Mr. Borden) to understand that I am not offering my personal opinion upon this subject. I am simply quoting from the report of the General Officer Commanding.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I will come to that point. I think the statement made by the General Officer Commanding does not bear out the strong language which the hon. gentleman has used. I may say that the permanent force of this country has done as good work, and I think more work, during the past year than has ever been done by this force before. The General does not discuss the question of policy. He says:

It is satisfactory to know that the services of the troops have proved valuable, but in the event of its being considered advisable to retain the whole or any portion of the force, I request that a corresponding increase in the establishment of the permanent corps may be approved. With the reduced number of permanent troops now available, it is found to be impossible to satisfactorily carry out the instructional system for officers and non-commissioned officers of the active militia at the various schools of instruction.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Will my hon. friend read that a little louder? He has dropped his voice at the important point.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE.—

It is even difficult to carry out the ordinary routine duties.

It is true that the Major General has made that statement, but he has not said that the permanent force has become completely disorganized.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I said that the duties for which they were intended were rendered impossible of performance, and that the whole raison d'être of the organization of the force, according to the General Officer Commanding, cannot be carried out.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There is a good deal of difference between what the Major General says which is that the work cannot be satisfactorily carried out, and the statement made by the hon. leader of the Opposition, which is that as a result of sending 200 men to the Yukon, the whole permanent force of the country has been disorganized. In answer to his statement, I repeat again that there has never been a year, I believe, in the whole history of the permanent force when such good work has been done as during last year, or since the time that the troops were sent into the Yukon. The question of sending the troops there was discussed in the House last session. Last session the hon. gentleman, I think, was present in the House when the vote was taken and the matter was discussed over and over again. The necessity then, I think, it was agreed by both sides of the House, was urgent, and, if the necessity was urgent then, there was no other force which could be sent into that country except a portion of the permanent force. The hon. gentleman suggests that because they had not been called upon to use their arms there was no necessity to utilize this force, but will the hon. gentleman say that their presence in the Yukon might not have prevented serious trouble? He cannot say that. He should know the contrary. We had in Dawson City a collection of 30,000 miners or more. Immediately after the force was sent to Selkirk a request was made to have fifty of them sent to Dawson, and later on a request was made for thirty more, so that we had stationed at Dawson seventy or eighty members of the permanent force. I venture to say that their presence there has had a salutary effect upon the condition of society in Dawson. If the hon. leader of the Opposition has read the papers to-day he will have seen what took place in London only a few hours ago. The permanent force was called out, and what threatened to be a most serious riot was immediately put an end to. Some thirty or forty of these men were called out and immediately all the trouble that was threatened was ended. Now, the hon. gentleman has asked me what our policy is in reference to the Yukon force. That is a very fair question. While his criticisms, I think are exceedingly unfair, Parliament has a right to know what our proposal is in reference to the future in connection with the matter. I may say at once that it is the intention of the Government to withdraw one-half of the force from the Yukon at the earliest possible moment, and I think, with the slight increases which have been made to the permanent force and when these 100 men are brought back here, the General Officer Commanding will have no cause to complain of the lack of men in order to make his schools perfectly satisfactory. The permanent force is restricted by the Militia Act to 1,000 men. When I came to office, I found that the number of men had gone down below 800. We were authorized by our establishment list to keep it at 800, but it so happened that the force had run down to about 750. After the force of 200 men were despatched to the Yukon, we increased the force to its full strength of 800, perhaps a little more. So that readily we have lost by no means 200 men, and when 100 men return we shall have the force fully as strong here as it was prior to the contingent being sent to the Yukon. I may tell the leader of the Opposition that the force sent to the Yukon has been performing patrol duty there continually, and that it has been of the greatest assistance to the North-west Mounted Police. They have not simply lived in garrison and waited for something to happen, but they have been utilized in various ways.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have shown that Major Walsh had not reported that there was any necessity for a military force there. He tells us in that report that the North-west Mounted Police were thoroughly efficient, and that when the troops got to the Yukon he did not know what to do with them, so that they could not have gone up on his recommendation. If there was any necessity for them in the country at all it was at Dawson, but after months of weary journeying at an enormous cost to the country, these two hundred officers and men took up a position a long distance from Dawson, and Major Walsh intimated that he could possibly provide for the taking care of some seventy of them, but after a few days he intimated that it was not necessary for them to go to Dawson at all. Major Walsh who was in charge of the whole district did not know what to do with them, and their time was occupied in building expensive barracks at a place where there were only a few white men and Indians, and no insurrection could take place. The evidence from first to last points to the fact that a more law abiding or a more peaceably disposed community never existed in any part of the world than in that territory. Even ladies wrote that they felt as secure and more secure in Dawson than they did in large cities in more civilized communities. I do not at all doubt the accuracy of the report of the General Officer Commanding in reference to the excellent conduct of the men; but that is not the question. He reported:

The small field force under Lt.-Col. Evans is now divided between Dawson City and Fort Selkirk,—

Why divided? There were no duties for it to perform at Fort Selkirk.

—but happily its services in the cause of public order and security have not hitherto been called into request.

Here the General Officer Commanding says: That they were able to perform no services for the simple reason that there was nothing for them to do. As I pointed out, if any duties were required the Mounted Police were a thousand times better qualified than a force of that character; and if more men were required you could have recruited into the Mounted Police, and have avoided the destruction of the whole object for which the Canadian permanent force was established. The General Officer Commanding further reports:

I trust that the detachment of permanent troops now on duty in the Yukon district may be permitted to return to duty in their respective corps in the early summer.

If they had duties to perform I have not the least doubt that the force would perform them well, but there were no duties to perform.

The General also reports:

But in the event of its being considered advisable to retain the whole or any portions of the force,—

THE MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENSE. Hear, hear.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Of course the Minister of Militia having sent them there could keep them there if he wished, but the General Officer Commanding first tells him that there is no necessity for being in that country at all and then he says:

But in the event of its being considered advisable to retain the whole or any portion of the force, I request that a corresponding increase in the establishment of the permanent force would be approved.

Would the General Officer recommend such an addition to the permanent force of this country at an enormous cost, unless he found that sending these men to the Yukon disorganized the whole system as contemplated by the organization of that force? He says further:

With the reduced number of permanent troops now available, it has been found impossible to satisfactorily carry out the instructional system for officers and non-commissioned officers of the active militia at the various schools of instruction.

There the General states that the very object for which the permanent force was established was destroyed. We can take that statement with the statement of Major Walsh that he never asked for them, and that they did not know what to do with them when they got there. I cannot understand the objection to bringing them back, except that the Minister of Militia, having made a blunder, is afraid that he would expose himself to the danger of being charged with having blundered by bringing them back; and so he says that that can only be done piece-meal. Do the Government intend to do that which the General Officer Commanding declares is absolutely necessary to carry out the object of that permanent force? If they only bring back half the force, they will have to increase the permanent force by the half of the force that is left there, or else they will be wasting a large amount of money which this country pays for a permanent force, by having the object for which that force was established interfered with. If you want a larger force in the Yukon, why should you not temporarily increase the Mounted Police force, and bring back this permanent force which the General Officer Commanding says are required here? It strikes me as a matter of grave importance, that the public money which Parliament is ready to give, and which the country will support them in giving, for having an effective and thoroughly well-equipped permanent force, should not be diverted from the purpose for which it is intended.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am far from admitting that the Government committed a blunder last year when we sent to the Yukon 200 men of our permanent force. If there was a blunder committed at that time, my hon. friend must take his share of it, because I do not recollect that he offered the slightest opposition to it. If my memory serves me rightly, he supported it, at all events by his silence, if not otherwise. At that time we were all of opinion that it was a wise move, in view of the great influx of population into that region, and in view of the rather turbulent character of the population, to send a body of our permanent force there to protect law and order. There was no difference of opinion in the House on that subject. But it is easy to be wise after the event. The hon. gentleman says, that the Major General says, that these men have not been called upon in a single instance, and that the population are orderly and well-behaved; but my hon. friend knows that it has been said, be prepared for war if you want to have peace, and no one can say that the preparations which were made last year have not contributed largely to the peace and order of the Yukon country. There are sections of this country where we have a military corps, which is only used for the purposes of instruction, and has never been called out. But after the event my hon. friend suggests that we should withdraw the force from the Yukon. Now that the country is settled and that we know the character of the population there, we think we can safely withdraw half the force. Perhaps we can withdraw the whole of it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The PRIME MINISTER. But I want to put this question to my hon. friends opposite who say "hear, hear," even in the face of the report of the Major General, for whose opinion I have great respect: Since we have a military force, not a very large one, but the nucleus of a permanent force, probably to be increased as the population increases, are these gentlemen prepared to condemn the Government for having taken the position that it would be a wise policy to have a military force in the Yukon? In this respect I think we can take a leaf out of the book of our neighbours, who, from the time California was discovered, have had a force on the Pacific Ocean. We have a fortification at Esquimalt, so as to be prepared for emergencies; and I put it to the patriotism and the intelligence of hon. gentlemen opposite, I put it to the intelligence of the Major General himself, whether he thinks it would be a wise thing on our part not to have a force in the Yukon. Before the Minister of Militia withdraws the force altogether, for my part I intend to think seriously on this matter. If I were to follow my own inclination at this moment—I do not know that it is my deliberate or last judgment on the subject—I think it is a wise policy to have a military force in that distant country. We know as a matter of fact that to-day the Americans are sending a military force to Skagway, that they intend to send one to Pyramid Harbour, and that they have one in Alaska. If the Americans find that to be a wise course, I appeal to the hon. gentleman's better judgment whether it is unwise and unpatriotic for us to have a military force in the Yukon? I am not prepared to express that opinion. I ask my hon. friend and other hon. gentlemen opposite whether they seriously advise the Minister of Militia to withdraw his force altogether from the Yukon. I can only say we will think twice before we take that step; and when the hon. leader of the Opposition gives more attention to this question, I think he too will come to the conclusion that it would not be wise to withdraw the whole force, but to leave a military nucleus in the country.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not intend to prolong this discussion ; but the First Minister was not in when I made my first remarks. I take the ground that the Mounted Police are infinitely better qualified to perform such services as may be required in the Yukon than a military force. We have uniform testimony as to the good conduct of the miners, so that I look upon the presence of a military force there as rather offensive than otherwise ; and when it is presented so strongly to us by the General Officer Commanding that the absence of that force was seriously affecting the object for which the permanent force was established, and that it should be withdrawn, I think we should give weight to that opinion. Besides, I regard the Mounted Police as infinitely better adapted to preserve law and order among that class of population than a military force, for many reasons, some of which my hon. friend has touched upon, and others which I could not very well touch upon, regarding the action of the United States Government officials. We are in a stronger and better position with a sufficient body of Mounted Police than we would be with the very small body which we would necessarily have there, supposing the right hon. gentleman would carry out his plan of having a portion of the permanent force organized in that district. That would necessarily be a very small force, and for defensive purposes, I am inclined to think that the work would be more efficiently done and at a smaller cost to the country by allowing the Mounted Police to remain there than by removing them from there, where they are absolutely necessary.

Mr. MORRISON. I think the action taken by the United States Government at the juncture when it was desirable to send troops to the Yukon will be within the recollection of every hon. gentleman. They undertook to send troops there in very much larger numbers than those sent by Canada, but they never carried out their design, not because of lack of necessity, but apparently owing to lack of that efficiency which has distinguished the action of this Government. This Government set to work, moved by the same reason that actuated the United States, but carried out its plan. I do not think that the hon. leader of the Opposition would care to see this Government follow the example set by the proverbial king of France who marched his troops up the hill and then marched them down again. Any impartial person will admit the necessity that existed at the time, and which induced the Government to send troops out there. Whether it is necessary to keep them there is another question. The point to which the Government decided it advisable to send the troops was Fort Selkirk, for the good reason that it was not then known nor is yet, that a large number of people would not resort to the vicinity of Pelly River, which joins the Yukon at Fort Selkirk. Fort Selkirk was settled years ago by the Hudson Bay Company as being the point of all points in that district which was the most convenient for centralization in the case of trouble. A large influx of people was expected into the Pelly district. It was hoped that that district would turn out as the Yukon has developed since, and it was expected that Fort Selkirk would be the capital of that territory, as it may yet become, and I think it was the most central distributing point to that country. It has turned out, however, that the greatest congestion has been some 180 miles down the river. But the river is apparently navigable, and the troops could be conveniently transferred in a short time to the district of the Yukon, if necessary. Having a police force there, I suppose it has not been necessary to transfer all the troops, after building the barracks at Selkirk, to the Yukon district. The police force is not very large, but, at the same time, it can do efficient work indeed ; but if dire necessity should occur, I do not think that the Northwest Mounted Police force would, with its other various duties, be able to cope with the difficulties that might arise, particularly in the case of a population of 40,000 or 50,000 people. The police force is not primarily and solely military, but has various duties, whereas the militia force is purely military. When I was in Dawson City, in October, it was expected that the services of both the police force and the militia would be called on. A very serious fire, the largest, I believe, that ever occurred in Dawson, broke out, and there was every probability of the warehouses of the North American British Transportation Company and the Alaska Commercial Company being burnt, as well as some of the other large provision buildings. If that had happened, clearly great hardship would have resulted in the town of Dawson, especially as these companies, being mercenary and without any sentiment, would drive a pretty hard bargain for their goods, and refuse to render that assistance which humanity would demand under ordinary circumstances. Fortunately, the fire did not go that far, but an incident occurred which shows, to a small extent, what a small thing might cause a riot and disturbance. When the fire was going on, the Alaska Commercial Company, we are informed—but of this we have no official statement—refused to furnish buckets to the troops, who came to the scene and formed a bucket brigade. Commissioner Ogilvie was obliged to declare that if these people did not open their warehouses and allow the soldiers to take what material they required to quench the fire, he would order the soldiers to help themselves. The manager saw that he had a determined man to deal with, backed by our militia and Mounted Police, and at once gave in and let them take what they required. Had the police and soldiers not been there, these people would have defied the populace, and no doubt would have set at defiance a small corps of Mounted Police. Occurrences of that kind might take place at any moment. But whether, because of the presence of these forces or the inherent law-abiding character of the people, there was splendid order preserved; and I do not think it too much to attribute the preservation of law and order to the presence of the Mounted Police in that vicinity. Fortunately there were no riots, but all the elements of a riot were there. The people going in there are bound to increase, and there will be quite a large population in the vicinity of Fort Selkirk. But going out further, we have the Atlin district. According to the reports circulated now, by whom I do not know, there is said to be a great deal of ill-will in that district, owing to the way matters are conducted, but whether there is any more foundation for these reports against officialdom there than in the reports against the same class in the Yukon, I do not pretend to say. There are a great many people going in there. Its proximity to American territory—Skagway—and the facilities for getting in there being greater than for getting into the Yukon, it is expected that a large population will flow in, mainly from the United States. The few mounted police at the border, at Bennett and along Tagish will in no way be sufficient to cope with an uprising in case there should be one. A few miles away they have a post, they have the soldiers at Selkirk. These, supplemented by any that might be sent in would be sufficient to cope with any emergency that might arise. And these are emergencies that are not by any means remote. Human nature in mining communities is very much the same the world over. There is not such great difference between the camp on the Yukon, at Cripple Creek, at Coolgardie or elsewhere. When we recall the history of any of the districts in other parts of the world there is certainly a justification for the maintenance of some force other than the Mounted Police in that district. I have said that the Mounted Police cannot be excelled; but they have other duties that can only be performed with thorough efficiency by themselves, and they perform those duties remarkably well. In fairness to them their force should be increased to a number equal to their own force and the militia added, or a number of militia should be maintained. There should be no conflict between Mounted Police and Militia. I would not support any Act that I thought would lead to superseding the police by the militia or any other body. They should be independent, and should have full sway of jurisdiction where they are, and should not be superseded by the militia. There may be a little element of that in considering the question on the part of the officers of these different bodies. The remarks of Major Walsh cannot have had reference to the initiatory steps to send the militia there, because he was not in Dawson, or in the Yukon when the troops were despatched from Ottawa. As to his saying that there is absolutely no apparent necessity for their being there, that might be true. But, following out the argument of the leader of the Opposition, on the same ground the city of Ottawa would be quite justified in discharging its policemen because there is no fear of disturbance in the city. It is a compliment to the militia and the mounted police that there has been no apparent reason for their presence in that country. I think if the militia are to be supported and maintained in Canada, it is just as well for us to have a portion of them maintained there, where there is more apt to be a necessity for their services than in any of the older provinces. As to their suffering for lack of instructional facilities, it seems to me that troops in their position should have a better opportunity for drill and instruction that would prepare them for an emergency than they would have in the school at Kingston, Quebec or elsewhere. There is no argument that I can see against the course taken by the Minister and the Government in sending these troops up. And, having sent them up there, we should give them a fair trial, and should not be too hasty in withdrawing what I think we can say is the cause of having peace and order maintained in that country.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Morrison) has found admirable reason for keeping the militia out there. What for? As a fire brigade. If a certain fire having taken place, had gone as far as—

Mr. MORRISON. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) will pardon me for a moment, I will say that only for the presence of the troops and the mounted police there, the whole city would have been obliterated, and the hon. gentleman knows what that means.

Mr. SPROULE. While the hon. gentleman was telling us what awful catastrophe might have occurred but for the presence of these seventy men, I was wondering if it was possible that the Government, after taking so much money out of that country—thousands and thousands of dollars—they did not even provide the common necessity of a fire brigade out there.

Mr. MORRISON. There was a fire brigade.

Mr. SPROULE. But it seems that the Government did not do this, and the people were dependent on the militia to make an improvised fire brigade in case of necessity. If the hon. gentleman could give us no better justification for the Government keeping the troops out there, it would be quite as creditable to him and to the party he endeavours to defend, if he gave no answer at all. But what struck me as indicating the unwisdom of this course is the fact that the Minister of the Interior has told us over and over again, and so has the Prime Minister that the management of that country under their care was so perfect that life and property were as safe there as in the city of New York or London. If that be the case, what necessity was there for keeping the troops out there? It was said by the Minister of Militia that when the proposal was made to the House to send these men out, it was not opposed. Why, we were told by the Government: We have information in our possession, private information, that justifies the action we are about to take. These men were sent away at very great cost to the country surely, then we know that everything quieted down long before they ever reached the country and that from that time to this there has not been the slightest information of disturbance amongst the people and there never was. The people were quiet all through the winter, the spring, and summer. But yet the troops are retained there, and we are told that we may withdraw half of them. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Morrison), who has just sat down, says: You would not have the Government do like the celebrated general who first marched his troops up the hill and then marched them down again. Of course, that would be an acknowledgment that there was no need for sending them. That was too much for the hon. gentleman to candidly confess; and having unwisely sent them there, he must unwisely keep them there. I think I am perfectly safe in saying that if we believe all the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) has told us about that country, the quietness, the maintenance of law and order and everything else, and the little need there, was even for the Mounted Police, we cannot come to any other conclusion than that it was an unwise step to send the militia out there, and it is doubly unwise to keep them there, that it is a useless expenditure of public money every day they are kept in that country. It is not only doing that, but it tends to disorganize the force at home. If we believe what the General Commanding has said, and we are bound to believe it, because he is a very able man, he is unable to get the efficiency out of the force that he ought to be able to get, on account of a portion of the force being out there, and a small number being at home, with whom he cannot work to advantage. If there is no need for that force out there, then why not bring them home? The Minister has given us no reason for incurring the expense of keeping them there. The hon. gentleman who has come to his defence says practically that we require them as a fire brigade out there. The Government have not even taken the ordinary precaution of organizing some kind of fire brigade, and we must use the very expensive body of a militia force for that purpose. The Government might organize a fire brigade out there for one-tenth part of the cost of maintaining the militia force.

Mr. DAVIN. I have listened without surprise to the speech of the Minister of Militia and Defence and to the speech of the hon. gentleman who supported him. I was not surprised, because I cannot conceal from myself that the Government, in every department in regard to the Yukon, has blundered hopelessly. The Minister of the Interior blundered, and we need not be surprised that the Minister of Militia and Defence blundered. Now, what was the chief reason given by the Minister of the Interior for the Teslin Lake Railway? It was, not that we might have a commercial road, but that we might have a military road. He said it was absolutely impossible to look forward to maintaining peace and order in that country, unless we had that Teslin Lake Railway built. We remember that the Minister of Justice told the Senate that if they had the information he was in possession of, hinting at information that indicated turbulent possibilities in the Yukon, they would not dare to take the responsibility of refusing to pass that Bill. The policy of the Government in the Yukon has been one of reckless extravagance, and now it is a policy of bugaboo: You do not know what danger there is, what tumults will arise in Dawson. These were the arguments given from the Treasury benches. But the hon. gentleman from British Columbia, who addressed the House in support of the Minister of Militia and Defence, gives another excuse for taking the force there and keeping it there: it is, that the Government should put its establishment on a war footing in the Yukon in order that it might be always ready to put out a fire. Why, Sir, that is the 'reduction ad absurdum' of an imbecile Administration. Now, the Minister of the Interior asks us to look at the miners. Why, a man of his experience should know that there is no analogy between miners and the employees of a railway or a factory. Everybody knows that the history of mining in every country proves that all a mining population wants is security, and, when that is assured, the miner is one of the most peaceable of men. He may go out at night into a saloon and drink up his earnings, but banded turbulence, such as the Minister of Militia and Defence refers to, does not belong to miners. We had a mining population in Kootenay, and what was the military force that kept that population in the most perfect order? One policeman. I have talked with these miners, I have talked with American miners. They had their implements for mining, and I said: Where is your bowie knife? Where is your revolver? The answer was: We are going to mine in a British territory; we have mined in British territory, and we have mined in the United States. In the United States we carry revolvers, because our own Government, we are ashamed to say—these were Americans—don't protect the miner in his rights, as your Government does.

Mr. MCGREGOR. Now you have struck the key-note.

Mr. DAVIN. Protect him, not with the gun of the soldier, but with the strict and fair administration of the law. But I will take a more turbulent population than the miners. When the North-west was opened up, we had in the small towns a rowdy population, coming from the United States. They opened saloons, they had their bowie knives and their revolvers. They thought they were about to carry out the same kind of life they had been accustomed to in the Western States. They did not stop three days, and it did not require any military establishment at all. It only required a policeman to go and say to them: What are you going to do with that revolver? Where is your license? We do not allow you to carry a revolver. You do not need to protect yourself here; we will protect your life and property. And that rowdy element disappeared, but the well-conditioned element was glad to remain. Now, in the Kootenay you have an illustration of how completely peace and order can be kept in a mining camp without having a regiment of soldiers. My hon. friend the Minister of Militia and Defence has laid down a doctrine of the responsibility of the Opposition and I do not know where he finds it. I do not think he will find it in the speeches of the great financiers, either in this country or in England. The hon. gentleman speaks as if, when an item passes through committee, not adversely assailed by the Opposition, the Opposition is as much responsible as the Government for that expenditure. Gladstone never laid down such a doctrine as that. The Government makes the proposal, but you cannot suppose for a moment that even if all things were equal, the responsibility of the man whose duty it is to criticise, is as great as that of the man who makes the proposal, and who, by the theory of his position, is in possession of all the information that ought to guide him in the premises.

Mr. DAVIN.

Not only that, but the conditions are not equal. The hon. gentlemen are surrounded by a large majority, and when they propose any given policy, involving an expenditure they can carry it out. You cannot, for one moment, suppose that responsibility, where there is no power to carry out your opinions, would be as great, as for instance if the conditions were even and if you act under such a state of things that, should the Opposition be determined to fight it out under all circumstances, they would be able to carry their point. The responsibility of the Opposition is great and important, but no Government can take a course which is one not in consonance with sound financial views and not in consonance with the rule bearing on the responsibility of Government. No Government can shelter itself from public odium, or from the attacks of the Opposition, by saying: When we proposed this you did not assail it, and you are, therefore, as responsible as we are. I think you will find in one of Mr. Gladstone's speeches that he dealt with that question when he was in Opposition. He repudiated entirely and denounced as cowardly the conduct of a Government that, when its policy is assailed turns around and says: You are as responsible as we are. You voted the money, or what is more likely to have taken place, you did not vote at all; there was no vote and you allowed it to go. I repudiate that doctrine. It is not parliamentarily sound and it is not for the best interests of the people. It would not be useful to the people if we should accept such a doctrine as that. It is palpable that a mistake has been made, and a far greater mistake would have been made on the same theory, though we could not help ourselves, in regard to the Teslin Lake Railway, but the Senate happily threw out the proposition. Now, we know from the evidence of leading Reformers, from the evidence of a leader of the Reformers in the North-west Territories, Mr. Bulyea, who told me that the water in which vessels were to ply in order to implement that railway was not a foot deep. It is known that that policy was an unwise, an absurd, and, therefore, a preposterously extravagant policy; nevertheless, hon. gentlemen supported it upon the same kind of argument that is now put forward as an excuse for sending an army of 200 men to the Yukon when a police force sufficient was sent up previously. I should like to ask the hon. the Minister if my memory is correct, that Major Walsn was in Dawson, or on his way to Dawson, a considerable length of time before the force went up.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Many months before.

Mr. DAVIN. That is my recollection. They say their position is one unassailable and impregnable. With this man who was vaunted by the hon. Minister of the Interior

(Mr. Sifton) as an experienced North-west man, as an ideal man for that position, surely that militia force should not have been sent up and this vast expense connected with it incurred without learning from Major Walsh what his opinion was. We know now what his opinion was, because the moment that he expressed his opinion he said that it was a foolish thing to send them up. One of the hon. members from British Columbia, who was up there, and who gave evidence as an expert, tells us that these 200 men helped to put out a fire and to get a few buckets out. We can hardly accept that as a sufficient excuse for this mistake. What is the proper course to take in the face of the report of the Major General, which my hon. friend from British Columbia (Mr. Morrison) entirely misunderstood? The Major General is not speaking of the instruction of the 200 men in the Yukon. He is speaking of the instructional system of the whole force. Now that it is acknowledged that these 200 men are not needed the hon. Minister should say: It is acknowledged that there was a mistake and we are going to bring back these 200 men. What is the use of this piecemeal policy, merely for the cowardly purpose of shrinking from a frank acknowledgment of the failure of the policy that was adopted? A Minister of Militia should be a man of gallantry and dash, and I would urge upon the hon. Minister that, when he knows that his policy has failed, knowing as he knows that it was a piece of useless extravagance to bring back his force and let the people be saved this useless expenditure.

Mr. MCGREGOR. That is a mistake.

Mr. DAVIN. My hon. friend (Mr. McGregor), who falls into these discussions with a kind of refrain does not agree with me. My hon. friend would not agree with me under any circumstances unless I agreed with the Government. His normal position is that of agreement with the Government, so that we need not mind what he may say upon the subject.

Mr. MCGREGOR. The rebellion of 1855 cost several millions of dollars which might have been saved if there had been a few soldiers in that country to check it.

Mr. DAVIN. There is about as much analogy between the half-breeds and the condition of things that led to that rebellion and the miners of the Yukon and what is going on there as there is between two things totally dissimilar. Can it be possible that my hon. friend (Mr. McGregor) means to suggest that the administration of the Yukon is of such a character at the present time as to create a rebellion?

Mr. MCGREGOR. The Administration is all right.

Mr. DAVIN. If the Administration is all right, why should there be a rebellion?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. With the permission of the committee I want to say a few words in reference to the Royal Military College. I expressed very strong dissent, when proposals for changes were made in relation to that college, but I may repeat here what I had an opportunity of saying in Kingston a short time ago, that the Royal Military College of Canada is a proud monument to the memory of every able and distinguished Canadian Premier, Hon. Alexander Mackenzie, and with it, his name will be long connected. It is well known that the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie when he obtained an Act from this Parliament to found that college, bestowed a great deal of personal attention on the matter, and had the good fortune to secure the services of Major Hewitt, subsequently General Hewitt, an eminent soldier, under whose management the college rose to a high position. I think Major Hewitt was Commandant of the Royal Military College for about ten years. No better evidence could be afforded of the high position which the Royal Military College attained in the estimation of distinguished military authorities, than the fact that Major General Sir Andrew Clarke has recorded in an official document: That the Royal Military College of Kingston, Canada, was second to no military school in the world, not only as to its curriculum, but also as to the character of the men it had sent out. When Major General Sir A. Clarke wrote that, there were some seventy Kingston cadets in the British army, and I believe there are now over eighty. I am not one of those who regrets to see the Canadian cadets in the British army. I believe it is an opportunity to Canadians to show the high position they can attain, and that it is also calculated to form a link between the heart of the Empire and this portion of Her Majesty's Dominions. The Royal Military College having attained such a high position under the system organized by the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie and Major Hewitt, I look with no little apprehension upon one change made by the present Government when it came into power. Let me say here, that one change made by the Government was an admirable one, the reduction in the fees. The late Government I believe made a mistake in largely increasing the fees of the students, for that was followed by the natural consequence of largely reducing the attendance. I believe that if the country goes to the expense of having a Military College, it is desirable that as many persons as possible ought to be able to avail themselves of the advantages such an institution affords.

However, I regard it as a very great misfortune that the present Government reduced the term of service in order to graduate, from four years to three, because I fear it will greatly lower the standard of education. Of course, it must be impossible, to crowd all the knowledge obtained in a four years course into a three years course, and I can hardly believe that the three years course will enable the students of the Royal Military College to take such a high position in the future in the British army. We are not surprised to learn that several of the graduates of that college have died gloriously on the field of battle in many parts of the world, and that they have shown that valour which might be expected from the children of the Anglo-Saxon race which people Canada. I shall not confine my reference to the Anglo-Saxon race, because at this moment we have a most illustrious instance of one of our French Canadian graduates of that college, commanding the attention of the first minds in Great Britain on account of the ability he has shown. Lord Salisbury, the present Prime Minister of England, has passed a high eulogium indeed—not too high because it was richly deserved—upon Major Girouard, for the wonderful ability which that brave soldier has exhibited in carrying out one of the most important enterprises in which the British army has ever been engaged, and to which the success of Lord Kitchener in the Egyptian campaign is in no small measure due. The services rendered by Major Girouard in providing rapidly and promptly for the transport of supplies and troops in the Soudan, by railway, are at present receiving the highest commendation from the military authorities and the Government of Great Britain. I say, we rejoice to know that the cadets graduates of the Royal Military College have obtained such distinction, and we also are gratified to know that a very large proportion of them, are now occupying important positions in their own country, both in our engineering and military service. One of the first objects of the College is to qualify men to strengthen our own Canadian military force, and I trust that in the future that object shall be served to a greater extent than ever before. Now, as to the reduction of the college course, I hope the Government will carefully watch the results of that. I had the pleasure of visiting the Royal Military College a short time ago, and so far as I could form an opinion, the drill, the athletic exercises, the surroundings, and everything connected with the institution merited my sincere admiration. I was delighted to find evidences of efficiency and vigour that were exhibited on all sides. I hope the Government will watch carefully the effect of shortening the curriculum. The graduates this year are four-year men, and, therefore, we have not yet had an opportunity of seeing what kind of graduates a three-years curriculum will turn out. But there are two points to be considered—one with reference to the military education, and the other with reference to that general and scientific education which will practically finish the education of those who attend the college so far as this country is concerned.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

and who do not go into the British army. Therefore, it is important that the graduates should come out of the college thoroughly equipped as scientific engineers, and qualified for important business either as military or civil engineers. I was anxious to draw the attention of the Government to that question, with the view of ascertaining whether the Royal Military College is likely to maintain the high reputation it attained previous to the coming of the present Government into power, by substituting a three years term for the four-years term. I will not detain the committee further. I am obliged to hon. members for allowing me to interpose these few remarks at this time, as I cannot remain very much longer to-night.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Perhaps it would be convenient for me to say now the few words I have to say. I am sure every one must feel gratified at the tone in which the hon. leader of the Opposition has criticised the present Administration of the Royal Military College. I quite admit that the criticism which he has suggested with reference to the shortening of the course is one worthy of a great deal of consideration. I am bound to admit that when the proposition was first made to me, I was inclined to take a view similar to his own; but, after discussing the matter very fully with Col. Kittson, who, I think, the hon. leader of the Opposition will bear me out in saying has given evidence of great capacity and ability in the administration of the college—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. After discussing the matter with him, I felt that under all the circumstances we might venture to try the experiment. The hon. leader of the Opposition will notice that some changes have been made which modify the teaching which was given outside of the purely military education. So far as the military training is concerned, I do not think the college has suffered or will suffer by the change. But so far as the scientific, mathematical and other branches which are taught in the chartered colleges of Canada, are concerned, I think it will be found that the course is not as full as it was formerly. But I may point out to the hon. gentleman that now the age at which students shall be admitted to the college has been raised. That I may say in justice to Col. Kittson, was contemplated at the time the modification to which I am now referring was made. Further than that, it was contemplated to raise the standard of matriculation somewhat, so that we shall have, as a result, as nearly as possible at any rate, a condition of efficiency at the end of the three years equal to what it was under the former arrangement at the end of the four years. Whether or not it will turn out as we hope it will I cannot say.

Mr. HUGHES. Does the hon. Minister know how the students who have taken the three-years course have turned out in comparison with those who took the four-years course? I am told they beat them.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am told by the commandant that the comparison is very favourable to the three-years men. I may point out to the leader of the Opposition that in England in similar schools is a two-years course, though the teaching there is almost exclusively military. The hon. gentleman has referred to the character of the young men who have been sent out from that college. That college has undoubtedly been a credit to this country, and is, as the hon. gentleman said, an honourable monument to the sagacity of the statesman who founded it, Alexander Mackenzie. It has, perhaps, done more than anything else to make the mother country acquainted with Canada and with the kind of young men we have in this country. I believe it has been the means throughout the Empire of strengthening materially the position of Canada. The hon. leader of the Opposition has referred by name to Major Girouard, who has so greatly distinguished himself, and whose name is now known from one end of the British Empire to the other. There are many others. Indeed, it is surprising that such a large percentage of the men who have entered the Imperial service, Canadians from this college, should have distinguished themselves as has been the case. I have before me a list of names. Some of them are well-known names: Straubenzie has recently been brought back, and is now a professor in the college. The other day when I was present at the closing exercises of the college, it was rather an impressive and striking thing to observe that four out of the five military teachers in the college were Canadians, and graduates of the college. Twining is another; Stairs, a man who distinguished himself and gave his life for the Empire; Robinson, of Toronto; Campbell, Dobell, McKay, Ridout, Carey, and Lieut. Joly de Lotbinière. I thought it might be of interest in discussing this item to ascertain where the young men whom we have educated at that college have gone. The hon. leader of the Opposition has said that it was no great cause for regret, but on the contrary a cause for satisfaction that so many of the graduates of that college should have accepted commissions in the Imperial army. I quite agree with him in that view, particularly as we find them coming back, as I hope we shall find still more in the future coming back, to occupy permanent military positions in the Dominion. I have here a list of the number of men who have graduated. I find that on the 30th of June, 1898, there have been 261 graduates from the Royal Military College, of whom eighty-eight were commissioned in Her Majesty's Imperial service; 21 have commissions in the Canadian permanent force and the North-west Mounted Police, 20 are employed in the civil service of Canada, 55 are railway engineers and civil surveyors and architects in Canada, and 35 engaged in commercial business and other occupations in Canada. Four are civil engineers in other British possessions, 12 are civil engineers in the United States, 7 are dead, and the occupation of 24 is not known. It seems to me that, after all that has been said about our educating young men to go out of the country, when only 5 per cent have gone out of the British Empire, the money expended on this college is not wasted.

Mr. HUGHES. Major Burgess, a graduate of the Royal Military College, is in command at Sidney, Australia.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The discussion has hitherto been almost entirely confined to the military side of the question. Without undertaking to lay down any policy for the Government, I would suggest that we do not go far enough to recognize the Military College in the Civil Service.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We ought to be able to devise some scheme whereby we could utilize year after year in the various departments of our civil service a number of the young men who have had the benefit of the training at that college. In the Railway, Public Works, Interior and Marine and Fisheries Departments we have occasion to employ gentlemen of scientific attainments, and I hope we shall be able to devise some means of competitive examination by which, year after year, a number of the young gentlemen in the Military College will find some inducement to remain in this country and take positions in the civil service.

Mr. SPROULE. I have always thought that it would be well to provide as many places as possible for the graduates of the Military College in the civil service, but I have also thought it would be largely unfair not to give other young men who have acquired education in other institutions, an equal chance for admission to the service. Some years ago we passed a law providing for examinations for entry into the service, and those young men who pass those examinations ought to be treated also with consideration; but, while saying that, I recognize the fact that when these young men of the Royal Military College have finished their education, we ought to keep them in the country, as much as possible, without giving them any advantage over others educated in our other educational institutions. I have never had any serious objection to the Royal Military College that many of its graduates should go to any portion of the Empire, because they could there acquire practical information which they would not by remaining at home, and in case of need, no doubt, many would come back. As long as these young men are engaged in any colony of the British Empire, they are giving the assistances we are bound to give, as one of the colonies of that empire.

Mr. CLANCY. I do not see any statement in the Auditor General's Report that corresponds exactly with this item.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Look at the next page to that you are looking at in the Estimates—page 41.

Mr. SPROULE. I asked the hon. Minister some time ago how that increase was distributed, but the hon. gentleman's answer was interrupted.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The pay of headquarters' staff was $7,800 last year and is $13,800 this year. In the first place, we have engaged a chief artillery officer at $3,200. This officer has been appointed at the urgent request of the General Officer Commanding, for a term of eighteen months. If the committee will read the report of the General Officer Commanding, they will observe that he makes very strong statements with regard to the condition of the artillery and the absolute necessity of having an up-to-date Imperial officer here for a time. He wanted him here for three years, but we compromised the matter by bringing him here for eighteen months. I think likely that was a prudent thing to do. The other new appointment is that of director general of the medical staff, which I referred to in my opening remarks. The salary of the director general is $2,800. These items constitute the increase.

Mr. HUGHES. What is the Canadian rank of Colonel Stone?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Lieut.-Colonel, I think.

Mr. HUGHES. It does not carry with it seniority over those of the same rank?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think not. He is a major, I believe, in the Imperial army. I may say, with reference to the director general of the medical staff, that the increase is not really what it appears to be. Col. Nelson has been in the permanent force for years, in fact, he was the senior medical officer, and has been a long time on the force and has been with the battery at Quebec and Kingston and also in the Royal Military College at Kingston. All his pay and allowances amount to $2,263 before he was appointed—$100 a month, I think, and a house and allowances at Kingston. He drew $2,100 in cash. His place at Kingston will be filled by a medical officer at $2 a day. So that this apparent increase of $2,800 is really an increase of $1,267.

Mr. PRIOR. Before proceeding to the next item, I should like to ask a question with regard to Col. Stone. I have the greatest faith in the General Officer Commanding. I think Canada is to be congratulated on being so fortunate as to secure his services. But it does seem to me that some of our artillery officers who have been taking special courses in England, to learn about the new guns and so on, and with their experience here, should be competent to take that position. Of course, if the General Officer Commanding says that they are not, that is the end of it, I suppose. But it seems curious that none of them should be fit to take such a position. Another thing is the pay of the district staff, which, I think, is one of the items making up the amount now under consideration. I see by the Auditor General's Report that the district officers commanding get different pay and different allowances. It seems to me that if an officer is appointed to a similar position, it does not matter whether in Manitoba, Quebec, British Columbia or Ontario, being called upon to fill the duties of that position, the fact that he has 500 men or 5,000 men under him makes no difference—he has the same responsibility. An officer in the English army, if he gets to be colonel in any branch gets the same pay as other officers of similar rank. If he becomes a major general he gets the same pay as other officers of his rank. If he becomes assistant adjutant general or officer commanding a district, he gets a certain rate of pay. Why should not that apply in Canada? We find that one man in one district gets $1,700 and $500 allowance, and another man, because he has more troops under him gets $2,200 or $2,300 and allowance of $700 or $800. This, it seems to me, is not fair, and I think there should be some reform in the scale of pay.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. So far as the pay is concerned, that is, of necessity, uniform.

Mr. PRIOR. No.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I mean the pay proper. So far as the allowances are concerned, there is undoubtedly a difference. Col. Lake, late Quarter Master General, went into that matter very carefully the second year I was in office. I am sorry I have not his statement here, but I should be glad to show it to my hon. friend (Mr. Prior) if he will come to my office. Col. Lake went into the thing very carefully, bringing to bear upon it his perfect knowledge of the whole requirements of the force in Canada, and made a table, which I thought was a fair one, in which he gave allowances at different rates to officers in different places. For instance, when I came into office I found the district officer commanding at Montreal had a salary and allowances of $1,700, while the men who occupied a similar position at Kingston and Toronto, and, I think, Quebec, were receiving close upon $3,000. We have changed that, my hon. friend will be glad to know. We have given the officer at Montreal a house, and, I think, light and fuel, allowances, at any rate of $500 in addition to the $1,700. In Halifax, in the same way, the officer was receiving only $1,700, with no allowances of any kind. He has been given, I think, $300. We have been trying to equalize it with a view to the calls that would be made on the officer at the place at which he was stationed, and I do think that is the correct principle. We do not keep the same officer at the same place always. You must not forget the responsibilities thrown upon a man, say in Halifax, where there is a garrison and where there are so many calls upon him and he has to entertain more or less.

Mr. PRIOR. The officer in British Columbia is in the same position as the one in Halifax in that respect.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think the British Columbia officer has his quarters; the officer at Halifax has not even that.

Mr. HUGHES. The very interesting discussion which has taken place on these Estimates to-night, has been pleasant to all of us. Now, the custom for years past, both with this Government and with the late Government, was to let the militia items rush through without any discussion. I do not think it is the desire of the Minister of Militia and Defence, and it is not the desire of any members of this House, that these items should pass through without further suggestions. There are suggestions in the mind of many of us, and, therefore, as the hour has gone pretty well on and as the evening has been pleasantly spent, I will respectfully suggest an adjournment.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is magnificent, but it is not war. We have had lots of interesting discussion, but we have not passed a single item. I would suggest that we dispose of all these items and reserve one, because we have been wandering over the whole of them now.

Mr. HUGHES. I am willing to let these items pass, reserving one, on the understanding that all the others may be discussed at any other time.

Mr. WALLACE. The Minister proposes that we pass all the items but one to-night. But surely, with important items like these, with the enormous increases, and with all the explanations that seem to be necessary—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We might sit another hour.

Mr. WALLACE. So far as I am concerned, I do not object, but there are other members who have to meet their committees in the morning. The rule has been, that when half-past twelve has been reached, the House should adjourn.

Mr. BRITTON. I have some remarks that I would like to make, and I think it would be well to pass all the items except one, upon which we may have an opportunity to speak on another occasion.

Mr. SPROULE. We are asked to-night to deal with items of millions, to leave one item, and then hurriedly try to review the whole on that one item. It is quite unreasonable to propose to vote away so much money, where so many items require explanation.

Mr. HUGHES. I am perfectly satisfied there will be no time lost whatever, because the same discussion will go on. It has been the custom of all Governments to rush the militia estimate through. But to my mind they are as important as any other estimate here.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. My hon. friend knows that, so far as I am concerned, I am anxious to have a full discussion. The discussion this evening has been instructive and useful. I have no desire to press the estimates through at all, but it occurred to me that we might pass some of these estimates, and, as we have been discussing the whole question of the militia upon the first one, we might pass some items, with the understanding that the whole question shall be discussed on every branch of the militia upon some one item to be left over.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman is an old member of this House, and I think his past experience has pointed out that to pass all the items but one means that there is no discussion upon the balance. That has been the practice in this House. I do not think there has been any undue time taken up in discussing these matters. There are vast increases here which need to be explained. I think the manner in which the militia estimates have been passed through in the past is not creditable to the Opposition. I am wholly uninformed about many of the increases, and I think that the committee should be in possession of such information as will enable them to judge of the grounds upon which we are asked to pass them.

Mr. TAYLOR. It was understood the other night, when the supplementary Estimates were going through, that when we took up these items, the Minister of Militia and Defence should give us explanations in reference to freight paid on the Yukon supplies. Now, we would like to have that statement to-night, before these estimates come up again. I think we might pass items 104 and 105, and then we could reasonably ask the Minister to adjourn.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think hon. gentlemen opposite are a little unfair. The leader of the Opposition, before he went away, asked the privilege of discussing all these items. He went from one to the other, and stated as his reason for doing so, that he did not consider, at his advanced age, that he should be asked to stay to a late hour.

Mr. SPROULE. No, that is not the case. The hon. leader of the Opposition asked to be allowed to go to the Military College vote, and that a general discussion be permitted. The hon. Minister of Militia acceded to his request that a general discussion should take place upon the militia policy of the Government. After the discussion, the hon. leader of the Opposition left with the expectation that these items would be passed. After discussing these items for about three hours without passing one, to suggest, as the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) does, that we should rise without doing anything at all, is to make a suggestion that I cannot believe is sincere. I think the suggestion that the hon. Minister has made that the item should be passed with the exception of one, which should be left with the understanding that every item would be open for discussion at a later stage, is a fair proposition.

Mr. HUGHES. What common sense is there in any such statement. If we are going to discuss all of these items, we will not save any time by passing them and reserving one. This is simply going to stir up a little bad blood, and I am satisfied that the best plan will be to adopt the suggestion of the hon. member for West York.

Mr. McMULLEN. Let us have the bad blood; let us begin now. The generosity of the hon. Minister is receiving the treatment that it deserves from the Opposition. He has been too generous to-night. He has allowed hon. gentlemen to discuss every item, and because he allowed them to wander all through the list it is proposed to rise without passing a single item. Let us have the bad blood; we are here.

Mr. HUGHES. Because the hon. leader of the Opposition discussed these items that is no reason why the rest of us are not to discuss them.

Mr. McMULLEN. You do not admit that you are led by the hon. leader of the Opposition.

Mr. HUGHES. The hon. gentleman must have been out to-night or he is expecting a Senatorship, or something of that kind. Because only one or two of these items have been discussed, and he is asking the committee to pass all the items without any discussion at all.

Mr. SPROULE. I am surprised that the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) should get up and make the absolutely reckless statement that he has made when he was present and heard the discussion that took place. He surely could not help knowing that there were only a few of these items touched. Military properties and rifle ranges, warlike and other stores, clothing and necessaries, provisions and supplies, transport and freight, rifle association grants, miscellaneous and unforeseen, Government cartridge factory, defence of Esquimalt, monuments for battle-fields, have not been touched. The items of pay and allowances, salaries and wages, civil employees and annual drill, were merely incidentally mentioned in the discussion. In the face of that why should the hon. member for North Wellington make such a statement?

Mr. McMULLEN. Sit down and I will tell you.

Mr. SPROULE. I asked the question of hon. members who have been sitting in this House listening to the discussion. There is no justification for it, in my judgment, and there is no fair-play in it, because it cannot be assumed that, upon the discussion which took place upon one, two or three items, we are going to allow items to pass involving nearly $2,000,000, especially when all the information given to the House was given within two or three hours. The Opposition would not be doing their duty, and no hon. member knows that better than the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), because I have seen him consuming, or wasting, five hours of time on a vote of less than $500,000, instead of $2,000,000. In regard to the wisdom of adjourning, it does not seem to me that it makes much difference whether we reserve that one item and go over the other items again and pass one item and reserve the rest. I have always observed that the Government, and it is excusable in a Government, desire to get their Estimates through with as little discussion as possible. They are always willing to reserve one item and to promise a general discussion afterwards, but they do it in the hope that the discussion will not be reached until a late period in the session, when the members are anxious to get home. When we reserve one item, it is probable that the others will not be gone into as carefully as if they were gone into item by item in their regular order. Their desire is to have any discussion upon a reserved item take place at as late a period in the session as may be. This may be desirable from their stand-point, but it is not desirable from the stand-point of the Opposition. The Opposition desire the opportunity of discussing these items at the earliest possible moment, and in their regular order, and in this way they are doing nothing more than their duty.

Mr. McMULLEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. I want to know what the item is that is before the committee, and if the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) is in order in discussing every item on the list.

Mr. SPROULE. I presume it is in order to speak to the point of order.

Mr. McMULLEN. I claim the hon. gentleman is out of order, because we are on the first item and he is discussing all the items on the list.

Mr. SPROULE. It is in order for me to discuss the point of order. In doing that, I was answering the statement made by the hon. member for North Wellington that the leader of the Opposition had discussed all these items, and that we wanted to go over them again. We have not, up to the present, been confined to any one item, and when the hon. member for North Wellington, on the question of the adjournment, made the statement he did, am I not in order in referring to that statement and giving reasons why I think it is time to adjourn?

Mr. WALLACE. In discussing the point of order which has been raised by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), we are almost tempted to analyse the motives of that hon. member in proposing this point of order. Whence comes this new-born zeal? We know that the hon. member has been, on many occasions, quite zealous. It has been of intermittent character—one time bubbling over, another time down below zero.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) is discussing the point of order. He is not keeping to the point.

Mr. WALLACE. If I have wandered away from the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I will be obliged to you to call my attention to it. I was referring to the point of order and to the course of the hon. gentleman who has raised the point of order. What is the reason of all this new-born zeal? Is it because there is a Senatorship in view?

The CHAIRMAN. I understand the item under discussion is Item 104. The suggestion has been made by some hon. members of the committee to adjourn. Some discussion has taken place on the suggestion, but nothing has been done. I would ask the members of the committee to resume the discussion on the item.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood we were discussing the question of adjournment.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no motion before the Chair, and as the suggestion made by some members of the committee has not been acted upon, we had better resume the discussion of the item.

Mr. SPROULE. We should get the information with regard to the increase in this first item and then adjourn.

Mr. TAYLOR. I insist on the Minister carrying out the promise he made the other night to supply information as to the freight on Yukon supplies furnished by Bate & Co. That question is before the House to-night.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The fifth item refers to that.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is in order on any item according to the Minister's own statement.

Mr. WALLACE. We were promised full information as regards past expenditures, and we should have all that information before we allow a single item for a new expenditure to pass.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The understanding certainly was that when we came on the main Estimates to an item of a like character, the information would be given. There is an item for "supplies" here, and the Minister can give all the information he can on that. We did not understand that the moment we reached Militia estimates the information should be given.

Mr. WALLACE. We should have all the information with regard to the previous year before we pass one of these items.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I certainly stated I would give the information on the main Estimates, and I am prepared to give it when we reach the item a little lower down to which it applies.

Mr. SPROULE. My recollection of the statement made by the Minister of Militia and Defence—

The CHAIRMAN. I do not think this is a proper way to discuss the question under consideration.

Mr. WALLACE. I think it is.

The CHAIRMAN. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) is referring to a past debate and as there seems to be some misunderstanding in relation to that, the best course is to discuss the item under consideration.

Mr. SPROULE. Do you mean to lay down the rule that we cannot refer to a previous debate on a question of estimates such as this?

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to me there is an item in the main Estimates which bears on the information the hon. gentleman is seeking for, and I think it would be more desirable to wait.

Mr. SPROULE. That may be your opinion, but I want to have a definite ruling on it; because if that be your ruling it is the most extraordinary ruling I have ever heard in this House.

The CHAIRMAN. I have perhaps permitted too much latitude so far, but I thought it was the understanding of the committee that we should discuss the Militia estimates generally. It now seems to be the opinion of the committee that the discussion should be confined to Item No. 104, and I may ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) to confine his discussion to that.

Mr. SPROULE. Allow me to refer to facts which took place in this House. We were asked to allow the supplementary Estimates to go through as a matter of urgency, and that on the plea, that when the main Estimates were reached the information would be given.

The CHAIRMAN. Order.

Mr. WALLACE. He is in order.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Order.

Mr. WALLACE. Does the Postmaster General rule this House?

The CHAIRMAN. Order.

Mr. WALLACE. The Chairman should not allow the Postmaster General—

The CHAIRMAN. Order. I suppose the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) does not want to break the rules of the House.

Mr. WALLACE. I am breaking no rule.

The CHAIRMAN. Order. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) knows that when the Chairman is making a ruling no one has a right to interrupt him. I understand that there is some misapprehension as to what occurred some days ago and so the safe rule is to confine ourselves to the item under discussion.

Mr. SPROULE. If that be your ruling I shall be obliged to move that you leave the Chair. If the distinct pledge of a Minister is regarded so slightly in this House, then I for one will not be bound by it in future. It was a distinct understanding that we could discuss this subject when we reached these estimates.

The CHAIRMAN. I have nothing to say in regard to that.

Mr. SPROULE. We passed the supplementary Estimates, not as a matter of wisdom but on the solemn pledge of the Minister, and that question ought to be settled before we go further. If we are stopped from discussing these items, which we passed as a matter of grace and on the solemn pledge from the Minister that when we reached a certain stage we would be allowed to review them at our pleasure, we want to know it, and we will take our own means of having them discussed.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is no breach of faith. It was certainly understood when these items were passed that the information would be given at a later stage, that there would be ample opportunity to discuss it on the main Estimates. But to say that the Minister was bound to bring down the information on a particular item of the main

The CHAIRMAN.

Estimates, is not a correct statement of what occurred. I was willing that we should not be too technical in regard to confining the discussion to a particular item, but hon. gentlemen opposite did not favour that, and were not prepared to go beyond the first item. There is certainly no breach of faith. All the information which was promised to hon. gentlemen will be brought down, and brought down on a corresponding item of the Estimates.

Mr. SPROULE. I was not aware that we were to reach a corresponding item of the Estimates.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What is the difference?

Mr. SPROULE. There is this difference that we recognize the rights of the Opposition, and the ruling of the Chair is that we cannot discuss anything but the item before the committee.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. As I understand, there is in these Estimates before us an item corresponding exactly to every item that was under discussion in the supplementary Estimates. I promised when the supplementary Estimates were going through, that when we reached the main Estimates—of course, it was presumed on the correct item—I would be prepared to give all the information I could ascertain. I am prepared to do that; but I think it would be more logical to give that information when we reach the particular item to which it belongs—the item relating to provisions and supplies.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. Minister promised to make the statement, not simply when the main Estimates came up, but on the Monday or Tuesday following that discussion on the 30th of June, without reference to the Estimates. My hon. friend from Victoria, B.C. (Mr. Earle) objected to allowing the item to go through; but the Minister begged for the vote, saying that he wanted it on the 30th of June, and here is his language:

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. If the hon. gentleman will allow me, I will make a statement to the House at the very earliest moment on Monday or Tuesday, of everything connected with the matter.

That is on page 6530 of "Hansard." It was to correct his statement made last year that the freight was paid by Bate & Sons to Victoria; and when the hon. member for Victoria produced the accounts showing that freight was to be paid to or was charged by Bate & Sons to the amount of about $2,000, the Minister went on to explain that it was the first time the matter had been brought to his notice, and that he would speak to Mr. Bate about it, and give the explanation to the House on Monday or Tuesday. He certainly made that statement, and we want him to implement his promise to the House. Now, we are on the main Estimates, and he promised that when they came up this whole Yukon matter would be threshed out. There was not one word said about coming to a corresponding item, because there is no item in these Estimates for the Yukon.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not believe there is an hon. member of this House who had any expectation that this information would be given otherwise than in Committee of Supply, and under the proper item for militia.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Did you ever hear of an Opposition controlling the House?

Mr. TAYLOR. The Opposition of this House is going to make the Government keep their promises.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Well, start right along.

Mr. TAYLOR. If the Government do not think their promise is worth anything, a promise which was as solemnly made as any promise ever was, then we want to know it. The Minister did not say that we would be in Supply, but he was to bring to the House on Monday or Tuesday an explanation of how this thing happened. There is a big steal of $2,000 by Bate & Sons in this matter, and we want to have it explained. I have the account here which I moved for in the Public Accounts Committee, and after we get the explanation, I purpose going into the prices.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think it was the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Earle) who had this matter up, and who is more directly concerned with it, and if he expressed a willingness to let it go down to this item, I think it might go. If he feels that an explanation ought to be given now, it might be given, as he is the one most concerned.

Mr. EARLE. I would like to state right here that the position of the matter is this. I objected strongly to the item passing, and the Minister of Finance got up and asked that the item be allowed to pass, as it was a matter of importance that the supplementary Estimates should go through, and the Minister of Militia and Defence stated that if that were done, he would obtain the information in the morning, and at the earliest opportunity on the Monday or Tuesday following he would give the information we desired. However, that has not been done, and I presumed that as soon as we got into the militia estimates, the first thing we would get would be the information which he was not in a position to give when we allowed that item to pass. Therefore, I think the information should be given at once.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What page?

Mr. EARLE. 6355.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. As my hon. friend takes a very reasonable and moderate view, and he is not indulging in threats and charges, I shall at once comply with his request. If I did not give this information earlier, it is because we did not go into the Estimates when I expected at the time I made this promise, and I have not had an opportunity to-night of making this explanation sooner. On the very first item, the hon. leader of the Opposition asked me to state the general policy of the Government, and since then every moment has been taken in replying to the various requests for information from the Opposition. When this item was last up, it was contended that the goods should have been delivered free at the coast, and one microscopic gentleman took serious objection to a charge for 50c. for marking. It is true that I said, last year, when the item of supplies for the Yukon was under discussion, that the goods were to be delivered free of freight at the coast; but I also said, at another point in the debate, that 45 or 50 tons we would pay freight upon. The fact is, we had delivered on the coast free of freight about two-thirds of all the supplies which were purchased, and that we paid freight upon about one-third. It was originally intended, as the memorandum indicates, that all the supplies should be furnished at the coast, freight paid, but subsequently, by arrangement between Bate & Sons and the Quartermaster General, exceptions were made, and Bate & Sons tendered for certain supplies delivered in Ottawa. But the larger portion, the meat, flour and oil, was delivered freight free at the coast. I have taken the trouble to ascertain whether the country has lost any money by what has been done, and I am advised that the prices compare favourably with those obtainable at the coast. I find that we had delivered free of freight charges practically 400,000 pounds of freight, and that Bate & Sons delivered here, upon which we paid freight, 189,124 pounds. The stipulation was made, that the freight should not exceed $20 per ton. They paid the freight, and were recouped by the Government, and among the goods were 11,586 pounds, or 5½ tons, belonging to the department, which were packed in the cars that were only partly filled by Bate & Sons. So that the actual freight we paid to them on their goods was $1,984 altogether. I have here the prices of the goods, and I think that even the hon. member for Victoria will admit that, so far as the prices of the goods delivered at the coast are concerned—meat, flour and oil—they are cheaper, or as cheap, as similar goods could have been procured at the coast. The only question is as to the goods delivered at Ottawa and upon which the Government pay freight—whether the Government, after paying the freight, received as good value as if they had purchased the goods on the coast. In the article of biscuits the price was 5½ cents per pound. Let us apply that price for the coast, deducting package and freight. The cost of package was 1 cent, and freight 1 cent, which leaves 3½ cents for the biscuits at the coast.

Mr. EARLE. Where did you get the reduction of 3½ cents per box? Biscuits are charged at 5½ cents, and you pay the freight upon them besides. All you have to do is to turn up the Auditor General's Report, and you will find similar goods charged against the Mounted Police in the Yukon. Take corn-beef; we have only 2-pound cans on the coast, and they are charged $2.75. Four-pound cans would cost less in proportion, because they are made up cheaper and cost double the price of the 2-pound cans. But you pay $6.22. There is a difference of between $600 and $700 in the prices paid Bates and that paid in Victoria.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. What is the quality?

Mr. EARLE. It is Armour's and Libby's beef. There is no difference in the quality. In the whole list there is scarcely an article bought as cheaply as on the coast, and on top of this there is the charge of freight. Last year, when this matter was being discussed, as an excuse for purchasing the goods here instead of purchasing them on the coast, the hon. Minister stated that the prices here were better than on the coast, and at that time it was distinctly stated by the Minister that they were to be delivered on the coast. It does not make any difference what statements have been made, the country is out the freight and the excessive charges for packing, and so on, amounting to about $3,000.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will allow me to finish my statement. I have a list of goods here showing prices that we paid to the Messrs. Bate and the prices paid on the coast for goods for the North-west Mounted Police.

For instance, tea was bought here at 23 3-5ths cents a pound, while on the coast it costs 23½ cents. I am told that the grade of tea which was purchased here was a little better grade than that bought for the North-west Mounted Police, while the price is practically the same:

	Ottawa.	Van-couver.
	cts.	cts.
Peaches .....	8.58	9
Sugar (granulated) .....	9.33	10½
Bacon .....	4½	5½
	9	10
	10½	13½

Mr. BORDEN (King's).

	Ottawa.	Van-couver.
	cts.	cts.
Flour .....	5.65	5.85
	6.10	6.50
These prices are for flour delivered on the coast:
Rolled oats .....	2 7-16	3½
Lard .....	8½	9½
		10
Coffee .....	18	25
		30
Rice .....	3.63	4½
		5½
Corn beef (less duty).....	10½	11½

The prices are delivered on the coast compared with the price charged on the coast by the merchants there.

Mr. PRIOR. Was it duty paid?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE: Yes.

Mr. WALLACE. What was the freight?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There was no freight; it was delivered free. The beef and flour and the oil were all delivered on the coast.

Mr. WALLACE. The beef and flour could not have been delivered free, because the freight was charged.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No, it was not.

Mr. WALLACE. Well, the hon. gentleman—

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No freight was charged on these goods. I flatly contradict the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace).

Potatoes (evaporated) .....	15½	12½
		25
Onions (evaporated) .....	30	45
		55
Baking powder .....	13½	40
		75
Currants ....	9	6½

The currants bought here were a special brand. The prices there are considerably less, but the explanation is that it was considered better to pay the higher price, because the freight was high and we wanted goods that were clean and such as would give us the greatest value for the amount of freight and expenses.

Biscuits .....	5½	6½

Now, that is the comparison made up most carefully by the assistance of Messrs. Bate and the officers of my department. Now, I would like to apply the rule laid down by hon. gentlemen opposite respecting freight. Take, for instance, the item of pease, we paid 1½, the freight was 1 cent. That would leave one-third of a cent a pound as the price on the coast. Sal soda we paid one cent. Take the freight of one cent per eleven pounds, and the price on the coast would be nothing. Salt, we paid one cent per pound, so that the price on the coast on this also should have been nothing. Sugar, we paid four and a half cents; allow one cent for the freight and the price that should have been charged on the coast would be three and a half cents.

Mr. TAYLOR. You paid freight on this?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have given the hon. gentleman a list on which I have prepared the prices here and the prices there, and there is ample between these prices to pay for the freight. I am simply looking at it the other way and deducting the freight for the price paid to show what would be the price at the coast on that basis to bring the price of hon. gentlemen opposite to a reductio ad absurdum.

Mr. PRIOR. Where did the hon. gentleman get his coast prices?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I take the prices of supplies purchased for the North-west Mounted Police.

Mr. PRIOR. Purchased in Vancouver or Victoria?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE: Yes, I got the prices from Mr. White's office. We paid for rolled oats, 2 7.16. Take off the freight of one cent, and you have practically one and a half cents as the price on the coast. It seems to me that I have amply proved that, although I stated in the House or gave the impression that all the goods we purchased were delivered free of freight on the coast, so far as two-thirds of them was concerned that was literally true, and, so far as the others were concerned, the goods, though bought and delivered here, the Government made as good a bargain and even a better bargain than if they had been delivered on the coast at prices ruling on the coast at that time.

Mr. EARLE. Are the prices those of this year or last year?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. They are the prices at the time. I did not prepare this statement myself, but I instructed my officers to find out the prices that were being paid as nearly as possible at that moment, and these were the prices which were given to me.

Mr. CLANCY. I think we should have the accounts before the committee from which the comparisons were made. It is not a fair thing to make a statement of that kind without the committee being in possession of the accounts.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The hon. gentleman can have an opportunity of seeing the accounts in the proper place—before the Public Accounts Committee. I would be prepared to have my officers go there—the officer who furnished me this statement. He knows that his very position depends on the accuracy of his statement, so he would hardly venture to furnish me with figures that were not practically correct. Now, I cannot deal with the other serious charge which is brought against this account of Bate's. It is the most serious of all, and was brought forward, I think, by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor). That charge was that this country had paid fifty cents for marking goods, this item being charged in Messrs. Bate's account. I have investigated that serious charge. I find that Messrs. Bate were required by their contract with us to mark goods in a certain way. They provided themselves with a proper stencil for this work. We had in the department 121 boxes belonging to the department with which Messrs. Bate had nothing whatever to do. We asked them to send a man over with their stencil plate and mark these 121 boxes. They did so, and they charged fifty cents for doing it. That is the explanation of the fifty cents.

Mr. EARLE. You shipped your own goods under Bate's mark?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Bate's mark was simply addressed to the commanding officer at Fort Selkirk to show where they were going.

An hon. MEMBER. Fifty cents a box?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No, 50 cents for the whole of the boxes, less than half a cent a box. Now, with regard to the packing. There seems to have been $180.75 paid. 1,250½ hours were occupied in the work of specially packing these goods.

Memorandum.—Re packing the supplies sent to the Yukon for the Militia Department by Messrs. H. N. Bate & Sons, Ottawa.

Time—1,250½ hrs. charged for.....$180.75

When Bate & Sons were asked to tender for the supplies, they were not informed that these would have to be specially packed. It was found subsequently this would have to be done, and Bate & Sons were directed to pack the whole very securely, and to so fasten the boxes that they would not open through rough handling, or through efforts to abstract the contents in transit. Besides, the cost of transport was so very expensive, it was necessary to reduce the weight to the lowest point possible; therefore, cases lighter than ordinary ones were used wherever possible, and strengthened by bands to make them secure. (It may be remarked here that on account of the high freight charges the clothing, blankets and socks were unpacked from the wooden cases and sent forward in bales.) Messrs. Bate & Sons were informed that for doing the additional work in packing they would be paid only the actual cost.

The time to pack was so limited—less than four weeks—that the department thought it necessary to request Messrs. Bate & Sons to employ help from outside, if necessary, to assist those of their own staff in the packing, and from four to six outsiders, including a tinsmith, as well as four of their own men, were kept continuously employed at this work from about the 10th April until the last shipment was made on the 5th May.

To our knowledge Messrs. Bate & Sons, contrary to their regular practice, kept their men at work on the Saturday afternoons, and, during a part of the time, their men worked at night also.

Every one of the boxes and cases sent to the coast was firmly strapped at each end with flat iron bands (or wire)  $\frac{1}{2}$  inch wide, and most of them were fastened in the middle, on each of the four sides, with sheet-iron clutches nearly an inch wide. In some instances two sets of clutches has to be used on the longest cases and boxes.

Notwithstanding that Messrs. Bate & Sons' own men, and those employed by them from outside, worked thus continuously, the delivery was not completed until three days after the time specified, 2nd May.

In all there were 4,200 cases and boxes strapped; computing the time charged for—1,205 hours—at 10 working hours per day, there would be 120 $\frac{1}{2}$  days.

Were one man employed at the work of strapping alone, he would have to do 35 cases per day—carry them to where his wire was, strap them, remove them out of his way, &c.

But of the first lot of tea a tin plate was soldered over the hinged top of each chest; of the second lot the ends were strengthened diagonally with iron bands.

Then the lard had to be hermetically sealed in tin pails of 5 lbs. each.

The jam (in bottles) was all sealed with a special composition, for which no charge was made.

It will be seen, therefore, that even within the time charged for, a very great deal of work was done. Under ordinary circumstances, that is, if the time were not limited, it would have taken considerably longer to do the same work, as the men would not have worked so hard.

Material ..... $243.08.

Besides their own supplies, Bate & Sons strapped over 200 cases of supplies purchased by the department from other firms at a distance and delivered at Ottawa, without being securely fastened in some cases, as was necessary, and some of which had to be repacked. They were requested to do this work because their men had become accustomed to it, and could do it rapidly, and also because they had the iron banding already mounted for the purpose.

Out of say 4,455 packages shipped by Messrs. Bate & Sons, including 165 belonging to the department, there were 4,200 which were strapped.

Estimating that on an average about 10 feet of iron banding was used on each case, the quantity required for this service reached fully 42,000 feet, while about 16,000 clutches were used.

At 30 cents per 100 feet for this banding, the cost for it would be $126; for the clutches, at $5 per thousand, the cost would be $80; add for two kegs small wire nails, at $7. So, for material for strapping, the cost would be $213.

In addition to this would be the cost of the material for putting crating on a number of the small cases, two of which were, in many instances, crated together for convenience in transporting them overland, and to have the small ones put into lots of two or three each that were going round by the Yukon. For this latter material the charge was estimated as being only about 30, which was considered reasonable.

The department had to pay the Hudson's Bay Company $514 for boxes, for extra labour, &c., at the coast, and had also to pay for the sacks (15 cents each) and gunny sacks (10 cents each), in which the beans were put up.

Mr. BORDEN (King's).

Now, it seems to me that ought to be considered a fairly satisfactory answer to these two sets of charges. I understand the goods are all delivered now, and delivered in excellent order, and largely as a result of the extraordinary precautions which were taken. I believe the small sum of money which was taken here in exercising due precaution to preserve the property of the country from loss was well expended, and was more than justified by the result.

Mr. TAYLOR. I want to inform the Minister, in the first place, that I was not here when the discussion took place the other night, so I could not have made any reference to the 50 cents for marking.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I withdraw that.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman has read a statement of prices that he has had cooked-up somewhere as to what prices were paid. I could tell him where he got it, but let him go to the Auditor General's Report and refer to some items purchased there, and compare them with the prices given to the Bates.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think the expression "cooked" is a little too strong for the circumstances of the case.

Mr. CLANCY. It seems to be an extraordinary thing if the word cooked cannot be used. What does it mean?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Perhaps I am not sufficiently familiar with the English language, but according to my understanding it means that the Minister has done something wrong with these accounts. It seems to me it is not a proper expression to be used in Parliament. Cannot the hon. gentleman find some other expression?

Mr. TAYLOR. I can find no other expression in the English language to convey the idea that I intended to convey, that is, that the statement read by the Minister is not in accordance with the Auditor General's Report for prices. I do not know who has cooked up the statement he has read here.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I understand the hon. gentleman did not impute the cooking process to the Minister?

Mr. TAYLOR. No, somebody cooked the accounts for him, I do not know who, but it is a cooked account as compared with the Auditor General's Report. Turn to page M-38, to the account of McMillan & Hamilton, and to M-39 for Templeton's account. In Bate & Sons' account there are 5,980 pounds of evaporated apples, charged at \$9.75. Add a cent a pound to that, and it makes the price at the coast \$10.75. At Vancouver, there is an item of 100 pounds of evaporated apples charged in one account at 10 cents a pound for 450 pounds, and in another at 9 $\frac{1}{2}$  cents a pound.

So there is nearly one and a quarter of a cent a pound less for apples purchased at Vancouver than you paid Bate & Sons.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There may have been a difference in the quality.

Mr. TAYLOR. No difference in the quality, the same goods, and I am quoting articles—

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Put up by the same house?

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not know whether done by the Brantford concern or not.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. How can you tell, then, that they are the same quality?

Mr. TAYLOR. I am quoting the prices that the Government paid Bate & Sons at Ottawa, and the prices they paid at Vancouver, and no doubt they ask for the same class of goods in either case.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Ask the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Earle) if they are the same?

Mr. EARLE. I would say to the hon. Minister of Customs that evaporated apples are a standard article and differ very little.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. What is the standard?

Mr. EARLE. You will find that goods sold on the coast are of a higher standard than goods sold in eastern Canada. You know that.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I know that. The hon. gentleman will admit that there are differences in the qualities of these articles.

Mr. EARLE. There is a little, but there is no doubt that the apples sold on the coast are a No. 1 article.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. member for Victoria will have something to say in regard to this matter, and I will have something more to say if the hon. Minister of Customs will allow me to proceed.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. You must say what is correct.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am saying what is correct. This is taken from the Auditor General's Report. The department bought from Bate & Sons 3,000 pounds of apricots at $10.95, and with a cent a pound added for freight it will bring it up to $11.95 at Vancouver. They bought from Templeton at Vancouver 350 pounds at 10 cents, and 550 pounds at 8 cents. The price paid Bate & Sons was equal to $11.95. They bought 718 dozens of corned beef from Bate & Sons at $2.19, and at Vancouver, with freight added, $3.19. They bought at Vancouver 42 dozens of canned corn beef, which was charged by Templeton at the rate of $2.75 per case. $3.19 in one case and $2.75 in the other. Bate & Sons charged $6.10 per barrel for flour, which with freight added, cost at the rate of $6.10, while 200 barrels were furnished at $5.80 by Templeton at the coast. Bate & Sons furnished 6,500 pounds of prunes at $6.93, and with one cent a pound added, it made $7.93 at the coast.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The hon. gentleman would not give us the benefit of the lower price that we paid for flour. A large part of it was bought for $5.65, and the other part of it was bought for $6.50.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am taking the invoice as it reads—510½ barrels at $6.10. That is the only item of flour in the invoice.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Then there is another invoice, because there were two lots of flour. There were 3,800 pounds of flour at $5.65.

Mr. TAYLOR. That would be another invoice.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That is the invoice you have.

Mr. TAYLOR. I will read every item in the invoice from start to finish and give correct prices. Every one can see the reason why Bate & Sons figure on every page of the Auditor General's Report. Why are Bate & Sons selected?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Somebody had to be selected.

Mr. TAYLOR. They were selected because, when the Liberal party held a convention in Ottawa, I read from that little red bible, which I have in my hand, that after Mr. Longley had moved that famous resolution Mr. H. A. Bate, Secretary of the Ottawa Liberal Association came forward and hung upon the platform a banner in which was inscribed "Laurier expects every man to do his duty." That is why Bate & Sons have been selected. They live in Ottawa; they are merchants; they are strong Liberals, and they are shrewd business men. When the Government came into power they thought it would be a first-rate thing to pay this Government that compliment and receive all the patronage. They purchased a house and presented it to the right hon. Prime Minister of this country, and, therefore, this Government are under obligations to repay Bate & Sons.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Where did you get the information that a house was presented to the right hon. Prime Minister?

Mr. TAYLOR. It was common rumour in Ottawa, and I believe the facts are as stated.

Mr. SUTHERLAN. I think that is a very improper statement. I may say it is not a fact.

Mr. TAYLOR. I make the statement, and I will let the right hon. Prime Minister contradict it. I say that they bought and furnished a house, and that the right hon. Prime Minister lives in it. There may have been some others who contributed towards it, but Bate & Sons, being shrewd business men, knew that it would place this Government under an obligation by paying this compliment to the Prime Minister as they have done. They were allowed to purchase 600,000 pounds of binder twine from the penitentiary, without tender, last year at 4½ cents per pound, and through the ring they sold it at 13½ cents a pound to the farmers throughout this country. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) said that the cause of high binder twine last year was the war in Manilla. Yet this firm purchased binder twine from this Government at 4½ cents a pound and sold it to the farmers at 13½ cents a pound.

Mr. SPROULE. And as high as 16 cents a pound.

Mr. MCGREGOR. They got it at the same price as others, but binder twine went up.

Mr. TAYLOR. No one else got binder twine. They got the whole output, and they controlled the Brantford factory. They were all in the ring, as I will show, when the item comes up.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I bought binder twine which I used on my farm at 6 cents a pound.

Mr. MCGREGOR. I have known Bate & Sons for 25 years or more. I know that they are a firm of a higher character, and I will say that their character is higher than that of the hon. gentleman who is speaking.

Mr. CLANCY. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Livingston), got it at 6 cents a pound he must have got it from the ring.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken. I did not get it from any ring, but I bought it from a dealer in twine. I know as much about twine as the hon. gentleman.

Mr. TAYLOR. The farmers know what they paid for binder twine last year, and we will allow the farmers to settle that question. I was discussing the prices paid Bate & Sons in Ottawa as compared with the prices paid in Vancouver for a similar article. The Government purchased 6,500 pounds of prunes from Bate & Sons at $6.93. A cent a pound added for freight would make the price $7.93 at the coast. The hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Earle) knows that the price that Templeton furnished them for there 6½ cents a pound of the best quality is about right. Templeton furnished them to this same Government at Vancouver—

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The same quality?

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes. The Minister is very critical.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. How do you know?

Mr. TAYLOR. I sold more of them than the Minister did.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. You know there are different kinds, then?

Mr. SPROULE. There are different kinds of biscuits, too.

Mr. TAYLOR. There were 3,500 pounds of evaporated peaches at $10.33 per 100 pounds added for freight 1 cent, making 10½ cents a pound; and they were furnished up there for 6½ cents and 7½ cents by Templeton, and McMillan, and Hamilton. There was a nice little profit of 3 cents a pound on that for Bate & Sons over and above the ordinary price. There were 469 pounds of currants furnished by Bate at 9 cents a pound, and 1 cent a pound added for freight, making 10 cents, and any person knows that you can go into any country store, and buy at retail, and get 4 pounds for 25 cents.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. What kind?

Mr. TAYLOR. The very best quality of currants. Templeton furnished 100 pounds at 6½ cents at Vancouver, and my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Earle) knows that 6½ cents a pound is the outside price for the very best quality of currants. This Government pays to Bate & Sons, to give them a chance to make money, 9 cents a pound, and 1 cent a pound extra for freight.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am told that this Venosta Excelsior currant is the very best, and it is worth a great deal more than the currant supplied to the North-west Mounted Police.

Mr. TAYLOR. They are that good that you can buy them in any retail store for 25 cents for four pounds. Last year the Minister told us that the goods had to be supplied in a hurry, that he made some inquiries about prices, and found Bate could supply them as cheap as they they could supply them anywhere else. They got the contract without tender.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. They were asked for tenders, and they did not know but that twenty people might compete. A tender was put in.

Mr. TAYLOR. I sent this account to one of the largest concerns in our town, and asked them to put the prices opposite each line of goods.

Mr. TALBOT. The prices this year ?

Mr. TAYLOR. No, but the prices last year, when these goods were supplied.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Would you mind stating who this concern was ?

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes ; when I get through, I will tell you all about it.

Mr. MORRISON. The goods obtained from Templeton could not be obtained last year, because Templeton is dead a few years.

Mr. TAYLOR. If the hon. gentleman will look at the Auditor General's Report, page M-39, he will find that the Templeton firm was doing business last year. These are the goods to supply the Yukon contingent, and the Auditor General brought down these figures to the Committee on Public Accounts.

Mr. HUGHES. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Morrison) knows how Templeton was killed; that is the trouble.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Minister of Militia told us salt was 1 cent a pound, and that if you took the cost of the freight there, it would be delivered for nothing. That is a nice sort of argument. Bate & Sons charged a cent a pound for the salt, and they charged a cent a pound for freight, that is, 2 cents a pound, when they get it to Vancouver. Here is their account. Seventy bags of salt, 50 pounds each, 3,500 pounds at 1 cent a pound, $35. Seventy bags at 10 cents each, $7. My information is, that the very best dairy salt is worth 28 cents for 50 pounds, and no charge for the bags. But Bate & Sons charge 50 cents for the salt, and 10 cents for the bag, making 60 cents. Taking all the charges together, by the time this salt got to Vancouver, it cost the Government $1.10 for the 50-pound bag. Here is another item of their bill. Seventy bags of rice, 100 pounds, 7,000 pounds, $3.65. The quotation I have here is $3.35. Evaporated potatoes : charged by Bate, 15½ cents per pound ; real price, 8 cents a pound. Evaporated vegetables, charged by Bate 22 cents a pound, and I have it here that the current price is 18 cents. Here is another item in Bate's bill. Twenty-five bags of pease, 41½ bushels at 80 cents a bushel. They had 33½ per cent profit on pease at that price. Sixty cents a bushel is all any one paid for them at that time—a year ago last fall. Bate & Sons charged bags : 25 bags at 10 cents each and 50 bags at 10 cents each to hold the pease. Bate & Sons charged for evaporated apples 9·75 ; I am informed the real price is 8 cents. They charge for evaporated apricots, 10·95, when the actual price is 9 cents. They charge for evaporated peaches 9·33 cents, when the actual price is 8 cents. Then, here is another item in their account. Ninety cases of lard, 50 pounds each, 5,400 pounds at 8·75 cents a pound, and $1 per case for each case, making 9·75. That is a high price for lard.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I suppose the hon. gentleman knows there are various qualities of lard.

Mr. HENDERSON. How many qualities of lard does the Minister of Customs say there are on the market ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. If you look at any trade paper, you will see.

Mr. HENDERSON. I will undertake to say that the lard throughout this country is sold as one quality. The Minister is only trying to humbug the committee.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Look at any trade paper, or ask your neighbour (Mr. Earle).

Mr. EARLE. His neighbour can tell you. There is only one quality of lard. Fairbanks' people in Montreal are making a compound they call lard, but there is only one quality of pure lard.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Minister knows what lard is worth. Ingersolls are turning out pure lard, and it is good lard, and at the time these goods were bought, there was no difficulty in buying lard at 6½ cents a pound.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. How was this lard put up ?

Mr. TAYLOR. In tins.

Mr. HENDERSON. You can put it up in tins as cheaply as in pails. If I mistake not, the tin would be the cheaper package. The Ingersoll Packing Co. are selling lard at 6½ cents a pound. I am speaking of something I know of.

Mr. MORRISON. In regard to this question, I quote from the "Star" of to-day—

Mr. TAYLOR. Give that in your speech. Mr. Chairman, call him to order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I understand that the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) will not give way. I would ask the members of the committee to address the Chair.

Mr. MORRISON. With the hon. gentlemen's permission, I want to make an explanation.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. You dare not hear that.

Mr. TAYLOR. I dare hear the Minister of Customs or any other gentleman in this House when he treats me gentlemanly.

Mr. MORRISON. If the hon. gentleman will allow me, I will show him that there are different qualities of lard.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Minister of Customs knows there are different qualities of lard.

He is a manufacturer of biscuits, and he knows how cheap he can buy the poorest quality.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. How dear I can buy the best quality.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. member for Halton was talking about the price of the best qualities.

Mr. MORRISON. The best quality is 9½ cents. It runs from 5½ cents to 9½ cents. You are ignorant of it.

Mr. TAYLOR. I know more about the market and about all groceries than my hon. friend does about law, because I have put in thirty years at the business. The next item I will refer to is 2,000 gallons of coal oil at 26 cents a gallon. The Minister of Customs says the oil was delivered at the coast and he says that is a fair price. I say it is an outrageous price for coal oil, even delivered at the coast.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. What quality is that?

Mr. TAYLOR. It is the best American oil, I presume. It may have been Canadian for anything I know.

Mr. EARLE. It was Canadian.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then, so much the worse.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It was not Canadian.

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Earle) says it was, and I think he is in a position to know. A case of blacking, 36 dozens, at 27 cents. The proper price should be 25 cents. A case of blacking, D & M, 12 dozen, 75 cents—it should be 60 cents. 4 cases of black pepper, 200 pounds, at 12½ cents. 10 cents is the proper price. Granulated sugar, at 4½ cents a pound. That price is correct. 24 cases matches at $3.00, and 12 outside cases at $1. The price is all right, but there should be no charge for the cases. 48 boxes of Sunlight soap, at $4.30. The proper price is $4. 16 barrels of Lazenby's pickles, 92 dozen, at $3.25. The proper price should be $1.50. 16 barrels of vinegar, 49,730 gallons, at 27½ cents a gallon. The proper price for XX is 20 cents, and the proper price for XXX is 24 cents. 11 cases Reindeer milk, at $5.85 here in Ottawa, although it is sold at Victoria $4.50, and they had to pay the freight on it to the coast. 10 cases of tomatoes, 20 dozen at $1.25 a dozen. $1 is the proper price. 80 boxes of Sperm candles, 2,000 pounds, at $10.92. The proper price is 7½ cents a pound. 120 tins of marmalade at 75 cents per tin. The proper price is 65 cents. 16 boxes of raisins, 448 pounds, at 6½ cents. The proper price is 4½ cents for the very best raisins you can buy—layers. Then we come to the time for strengthening packages, etc., and repacking, $118; material used in strapping, nails, &c., $174. Then there are two kegs of nails, wire nails, $7, or $3.50 a keg. All the nails are charged at 4 cents a pound, though every person knows that last year the right price was 2 cents a pound, or $1.85 by the keg. Then, we have 12,500 pounds more nails at 4 cents a pound. I do not see why the Minister paid freight on six carloads of goods. When you take out the flour, corn-beef and coal oil, in my opinion six cars would not be required for the whole invoice. The corn-beef, I expect, was shipped direct from Chicago. If freight was paid on six carloads of goods, taking the flour out, they were very small carloads. $26,699 was paid for the goods on that first invoice. We have another small invoice for $8,563, with $519 deducted for canned beef, leaving $8,044.76. There is charged 2½ cars freight—$209, $216 and $55. There is also the item, time strengthening packages, &c., $61 and $69. these goods that ought to have been packed and would have been packed by any wholesale merchant supplying the goods and charging the prices charged in this invoice. We have the same class of goods, candles, 11½ cents per pound, twelve pounds; 7½ cents per pound is the proper price. Ten pails of lard—this is not in tins at all, but right from the factory, fifty pounds in a pail, at 9½ cents, which the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) told us is furnished by the pork packers at 6½ cents per pound. Three hundred and eighty-eight bags of South Dakota flour at $5.85 per bag. It does not say what quantity is in the bag. In barrels it is charged at $6.10 per barrel. There are 5,000 bags of biscuits—the Minister of Customs will know whether the prices are right and who furnished them. Perhaps they were biscuits made at Brantford, but they are charged at 5½ cents per pound, 500 boxes. The boxes are charged at 25 cents a piece, which hold the biscuits. Then we come to matches, which were charged in the other invoice at $3. Here they are charged at $3.75, and they were not parlour matches, for on the other invoice there is a case of parlour matches at $2.50, and here there is one charged at $2.50. In the other case there was $3 charged, but they evidently forgot the price that they charged, and invoiced them at $3.75 in this instance. At any grocery you could buy them at $3 a box. Five boxes of baking powder, ten dozen, at $1.75; $1.20 is the proper price. Twenty boxes sperm candles at $10.92; $7.50 is the proper price. Two cases pepper, 100 pounds, at 12½ cents; 10 cents is the proper price. This invoice runs on a par with the other one, all retail prices charged in every case, and then the freight added to Vancouver, and my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Earle), who is in the business, will tell you these are high prices for goods of the same quality sold out there. There can be no other conclusion than that the Government wanted to repay Bate & Sons, and allow them to charge their own prices. They were paid in all $36,302.59 for goods they supplied the departments, which appear in the Auditor General's Report. The Indian Department and every other that required goods simply sent to Bate & Sons, and Bate & Sons charged what prices they liked. Here are the various amounts taken from the Auditor General's Report :

Mr. TAYLOR.

A favoured and petted firm Bate & Sons evidently are.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman seems sometimes to quote coast prices and sometimes prices delivered here. He said he would give us the name of the firm.

Mr. TAYLOR. The name of the firm that said they would retail goods in the retail line at the prices on the list all through is the departmental store in Gananoque.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. They were not the prices at the coast, but at Gananoque ?

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, just as the prices charged by Bate & Sons are the prices at Ottawa.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, but sometimes the hon. gentleman quoted so much at the coast and so much here backward and forward, and it was hard to tell what he meant.

Mr. TAYLOR. When I was quoting salt the Minister said it cost one cent a pound, and that if you deducted the freight you would have it at Vancouver for nothing, but the salt was 2 cents a pound and 10 cents a bag. At the coast they charge 50 cents per bag. Here they charged $1 per bag and 10 cents freight, making $1.10 per bag.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Are these first-class ?

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, they offer the highest class of goods in every case, and they only put on this list the prices of such goods as they know. They have not put prices on tea and coffee, because they say you cannot draw comparisons in the case of tea or coffee. The hon. Minister selected tea and coffee as illustrations of what he paid here and out there.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The tea was against me, because the price was lower.

Mr. TAYLOR. You can buy tea or coffee at any price, and a great many other articles, but the articles I have named are staple articles, the same as pure lard, that my hon. friend referred to.

Mr. HUGHES. Do not let it go on record that the Minister of Customs uses pure lard.

Mr. TAYLOR. As a rule, bakers buy as cheap lard as they can to manufacture their biscuits with.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Do they do much business at the departmental store in Gananoque ?

Mr. TAYLOR. If my hon. friend will write for particulars, they will tell him.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. You are astray in your currants.

Mr. TAYLOR. You can go to any retail store and buy from three to four pounds as good currants as can be purchased for 25 cents, and you pay equal to 10 cents per pound, delivered at the coast.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The hon. gentleman cannot buy this particular kind at 25 cents for four pounds.

Mr. TAYLOR. I can buy the best currants—I do not say that these are the best brand, you may have a better brand—at 25 cents for three pounds, by retail, and I can buy four pounds for 25 cents.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You will find it difficult to convince anybody that a firm like Bate & Sons would overcharge.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Government have no right to go to Bate & Sons in preference to any other firm and pay them 25 per cent larger prices than they would have to pay if they would call for tenders. They promised they would run the Government on economical lines. Are they doing it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Minister of Militia asks an increase on every vote but one—the grant to rifle associations is reduced.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. If the hon. gentleman wants to know why that is, I may explain that last year there was a special vote for the Bisley building. We do not have to make a vote like that every year.

Mr. TAYLOR. He has increased by $10,000 the item for salaries for civil employees. He has brought a man from Goderich to be inspector of military stores, notwithstanding that he had as good a staff as he required. But he had to find a place for this political heeler, and this man was in Goderich during the West Huron election, canvassing from house to house, and yet drawing his pay as storekeeper.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That is not correct. If any officer of the department was engaged in any electioneering—I do not know that there was any—he was not paid by the Militia Department.

Mr. TAYLOR. He was playing the part of an offensive partisan and doing it on the bounty of this Government. He was sent out specially to do stumping and canvassing work with the "brigade." On account of such appointments, the Minister has to ask for an increase of $10,000 a year. I am as willing as any member of this House to vote all that is necessary for the militia. But the trouble is that the militia force are getting very little of this increase. The extra money goes to pay a larger staff and to pay three or four prices for supplies. I have here a memorandum of supplies bought from another political friend of the Government—Aikenhead of Toronto.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I suppose you never did that when in power?

Mr. TAYLOR. The late Government purchased everything by tender that could be purchased in that way. This Government, not only do not purchase goods by tender, but they do not sell the people's property by tender, but give it away for half price, as I shall show when we come to discuss the Estimates for the Department of Justice. They gave away to a ring the binder twine belonging to the people of this country, and the farmers are paying three or four prices for it. At page L-30 of the Auditor General's Report will be found the account of the Aikenhead Hardware Company. From an invoice of $2,026.27, I take a few items. For instance, there is ninety-one pounds of putty at 4 cents—the proper price is 1½ cents—nineteen gallons of boiled oil at 60 cents, and so on. At page L-44, there is another invoice of the same firm for $694.13. Among the items in it are the following: Thirty pounds of soft soap at 20 cents—who ever heard of such a thing! It is worth 2 cents. There is two gallons of boiled oil at 95 cents—the proper price is 45 cents; 120 pounds twine at 30 cents; 1,000 pounds of hard soap at 12 cents; thirty pounds cut nails at 4 cents, and 300 pounds cut nails at 4 cents. At L-53, the same company have an invoice for $2,152.43. Among the items here we find 200 bathbrick at 5 cents. You can go to any grocery store on a side street and buy a single bathbrick for 5 cents—the wholesale price is about 1½ cents. Then there is a lawn mower, $145. It does not say whether it was a horse mower or hand mower. You can buy the very best steel horse lawn mower for $85. And there is one lawn mower at $17—a hand lawn mower, I suppose. You can buy the best hand lawn mower at $8 or $9. Then there are nine stable buckets at $2.50 a piece, and 47 curry-combs at 48 cents each—the price of the best quality is 25 cents each. Then we find fourteen kegs of horseshoes at $6.50 per keg—and you can buy them in any hardware store for $4.50. Six boxes of horseshoe nails, $4.75 a box—and the retail price is $2.25; fifty bushels of lime at 30 cents—you can buy the best quality at 15 cents. The Opposition would not be doing its duty if it did not challenge increases in the staff, and almost every other item except that for the annual drill and such others as go directly to the militia force. I find that Messrs. Chestnut & Sons, of Fredericton, receive such prices as twenty pounds flour at 5 cents; thirty pounds of putty at 5 cents—proper price 1½ cents; twenty-six pounds of nails at 7 cents—proper price 3 cents; 243 pounds whiting at 5 cents—proper price 1½ cents. Then we find at page L-38: Larose et Fils, 25 barrels of cement at $2.50, and they get 20 per cent commission on everything they supply, labour and everything else. 25 barrels of cement at $2.50, with 20 per cent added, $3; 1,350 white brick, $2.80 per 100, $28 per 1,000 equals $33.60; 22½ pounds of nails, 4 cents a pound, add cartage, $16.70; 102 days at $2, add 20 per cent, $2.40; 119 days at $1, add 20 per cent, $1.20. Their account figures up $986.06, made up in this way: The first items I have read amount to $456.15. They run up 20 per cent, $91.23; then 20 per cent on $560.98, $112.16; 20 per cent on $932.44, $186.49. Then they charge for five barrels of cement at $3, 20 per cent added, $3.60. 3½ bushels of cement at $1.50, add 20 per cent, $1.80. Sand, 7 bushels at 6 cents, add 20 per cent, 7½ cents a bushel. Every person knows that sand is not worth 7 cents a bushel. This is the way the Minister is shovelling out the people's money, asking for votes $10,000 and $50,000 over last year, simply to give it away to political friends for goods they are supplying at two or three prices. In the whole of these purchases by the Minister of Militia and Defence by his staff, for supplies either for the Yukon contingent or for military purposes, he has paid on the average 25 to 50 per cent more than he would have paid had he advertized for tenders.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman is just where he was the other night when he gave us to understand that we were paying for ordinary brick 4 cents, when they were fire brick.

Mr. TAYLOR. They were not firebrick. The hon. gentleman cannot produce an account showing these are firebrick, they are white brick.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman told me at that time it was ridiculous to talk about firebrick being that price, firebrick were worth 12 cents a piece. The hon. member for Victoria, B.C. (Mr. Earle) knows something about these things, he is a large wholesale dealer and he knows the value of goods. The Minister has told him that part of those articles were freight paid, and part were not, and he has submitted the prices at which he has paid for these articles on which freight was not paid. According to the figures furnished by the Minister for corresponding prices for the Mounted Police, the member for Victoria would admit that these articles had been fairly bought. To submit prices and goods from a departmental store that may have been a job lot bought at auction, and putting them on "Hansard" as a quotation of first-class goods bought from a first-class house, is not the way to do. The hon. member for Victoria will have an opportunity now of comparing the figures the Minister has given here, and if this item is not passed to-night, he will have an opportunity of pointing it out on another occasion.

Mr. EARLE. As regards the figures here in the account of Bate & Sons, I have stated here before, and I state again, that they are fair prices take them all through for these goods delivered on the coast. In confirmation of that I will not take up your time to read the items here from three or four merchants on the coast who have supplied similar goods last year to the Yukon police force. The prices compare with those favourably in every instance. Wilson & Bros., large grocers on the coast, have supplied a large amount of goods to the Yukon force, and you will also see in their bills that the charges for packing are nil. Where they have furnished extra sacks they have charged for extra sacks. That is the only extra charge. Where they have strapped their goods and put them up for the northern trade, they have made no extra charge.

You will find charges for packing in none of these bills except in a few instances where extra cotton duck sacks have been specially furnished to go over their bean sacks. Who would think of buying salt in eastern Canada for the Pacific coast, salt that is delivered by sailing vessels from England to our merchants at $10 or $12 a ton? Take washing soda; here it is 1 cent a pound, over there it is 1 cent a pound; but no one would think of buying it here for the Pacific coast who had any idea of trade. In fact, if it is inquired into it will be found that the goods supplied by Wilson Bros. in Victoria and in Vancouver have given entire satisfaction, not only as to quality but as to the manner in which they are packed. These prices, take them all through, are good fair prices for goods delivered on the coast. I have not compared them item for item, but I know the price of all the staple articles thoroughly well. Some of them are a little above the prices of goods sold at any time during the last year. The prices quoted by the Minister of Customs to-night, I dare say, were supplied by Mr. White. Well, he calls for goods to be put up in a special manner, and the prices include packing and everything else. Most of his goods were in tins, and even then the prices compare very favourably with these.

Mr. CLANCY. Can the Minister give us separately the weight of the flour, the pork and the oil?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Meats, 114,520 pounds; flour, 140,900 pounds; coal oil, 17,200 gallons. Nineteen thousand two hundred pounds of pork and 71,163 pounds of bacon.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is not in Bate & Sons' bill.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No. Do you just want to know Bate & Sons' bill?

Mr. CLANCY. I only want to know the class of goods upon which freight is supposed to be paid.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Two hundred and twenty-seven thousand six hundred and twenty pounds.

Mr. CLANCY. That is goods upon which freight is paid?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Mr. CLANCY. Is that the whole of it?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, but the Hudson's Bay Company's order, which formed a part of these goods, was to be delivered. When I refer to two-thirds of the Yukon supplies, of course, I refer to two-thirds of all the supplies. When I made the statement as to the goods we were buying, I supposed that all the goods were to be delivered on the coast, but it turned out that a portion of the goods were delivered here—179,000, as against 272,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. I hope that the hon. Minister of Customs is satisfied, having appealed to the hon. member for Victoria, when he finds that the Government paid $3,000 more in freight, besides a higher price than the goods could have been purchased for at the coast.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I would like the hon. gentleman to sit down with Bate & Sons and establish what he says.

Mr. TAYLOR. I will, certainly.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Oh, not you. I mean the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Earle).

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. Minister of Militia gave the impression that on one-third of the goods only was the freight paid. In dealing with this apparent overcharge on the part of Bate & Sons, the statement of the hon. Minister gave us the impression that it was in relation to one-third and two-thirds. The hon. gentleman's statement, as revised, now excludes the goods purchased from the Hudson Bay Company. It does not stand in the proportion of one-third and two-thirds, and the question does not stand in the same position as the hon. gentleman put it a short time ago. The hon. gentleman says that it was 272,000, as against 189,000 pounds, regarding Bate & Sons. Will the hon. gentleman tell us what was the class of goods purchased and the prices of these goods which Bate & Sons repacked with such care, putting iron hoops around the special boxes of light weights? The hon. gentleman seemed to have a brief, so great was the detail into which he went as to the kind of boxes they were.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I have shipped a great many goods to the coast, and the hon. gentleman will understand that, where freight is 1 cent a pound, great care would be taken to have the cases as tight as possible, and, going on to the Yukon, they will have to be strengthened all the more on that account.

Mr. CLANCY. It has been stated over and over again by the hon. member for Victoria that the packing of these goods is not usually charged for, although it is charged for in this case. I would like to know from the hon. Minister of Militia as to the class of goods that were repacked by Bate & Sons.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I can give the hon. gentleman the number of packages in each car and what the packages were, but I am afraid I cannot give him the class of goods. Some of them were desiccated vegetables. I remember that, but I cannot tell the hon.

Mr. BORDEN (King's).

gentleman, from memory, what the classes of goods were.

Mr. CLANCY. It is very important that we should know. There are 250 boxes, according to the statement of the hon. Minister.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think I said 121 boxes.

Mr. CLANCY. It is very important that we should know what classes of goods these cases contained, because the prices paid might have been prices which ought not to have been paid on the cases and for this repacking, and all this extra expense which has been put in on a class of goods bought at a price that could not be justified.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Meat, flour and oil were the only three articles to be delivered free on the coast.

Mr. CLANCY. The person who sold these goods should have packed them and had them ready for shipment. That is what I am speaking about now and not about the freight.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The goods were forty cases of evaporated vegetables, fourteen cases of onions, twenty-five cases potatoes, thirty-three boxes of evaporated vegetables mixed, forty cases of lard, one case of tallow, twenty-five cases of evaporated potatoes. I am not quite certain, but I think these are the goods.

Mr. EARLE. These are not the goods referred to, because all these would come in the original package.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think they had to be re-packed in stronger packages.

Mr. CLANCY. It was obviously the duty of the firm selling those goods to have them prepared for shipment. Who gave the instructions about re-strapping and re-packing these 4,200 cases?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. They were given by the Quartermaster General, who had this done under his personal supervision.

Mr. CLANCY. And he arranged the prices with Bate & Co.?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Bate & Co. sent in a tender.

Mr. CLANCY. To whom?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. To the department.

Mr. PRIOR. Nobody else was asked.

Mr. CLANCY. Surely it was not the Quartermaster General who settled on the price?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The Quartermaster General recommended the prices to be accepted, and of course I approved of them.

Mr. CLANCY. Now we have it. The Quartermaster General ordered Bate & Co. to do the work, but the Minister is responsible, and the whole transaction is utterly unjustifiable.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The Minister is not trying to get out of his responsibility.

Mr. CLANCY. But he should find some defence for his conduct.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Oh, pshaw!

Mr. CLANCY. The Minister says: Oh, pshaw! but when the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) proved that this was an extravagant bargain, he said the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) quoted as authority a third-rate house, who had a job lot. What does he (Mr. Paterson) know about it. The firm quoted by my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) may be a house of as good standing as H. N. Bate & Son.

Mr. TAYLOR. Just as good.

Mr. CLANCY. And that is no way for the Minister of Customs to cast reflections on a first-class house, and try to get into "Hansard" that that is a third-rate house. Now, I want the Minister to name the goods that were re-packed, or else he should let the item stand.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. They are the goods I stated. Forty cases of evaporated vegetables mixed, fourteen cases of evaporated onions, twenty-five cases of evaporated potatoes, forty-two cases of compressed beef, fourteen cases of clothing, twenty-nine bales of clothing, one trunk.

Mr. CLANCY. Now, what was in that trunk?

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the Minister say that he bought compressed beef without its being ready for shipment?

The CHAIRMAN. Shall this resolution No. 104 be carried?

Mr. CLANCY. Not a bit of it.

Mr. SPROULE. Might I suggest, at this hour in the morning—

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We are going on with the Estimates.

The CHAIRMAN. Item 105.

Annual drill ..... $400,000

Mr. SPROULE. I respectfully submit, Mr. Chairman, that while I am on my feet you should not take up another item. This was a valuable discussion we had; we are not obstructing, and we have now reached an hour in the morning when it is fair that we should be allowed to go to bed so as to be able to attend to committee work to-morrow.

The CHAIRMAN. Shall this resolution be adopted?

Mr. HENDERSON. Having obtained the large vote in item 104 the committee should rise. As the Government wishes to continue, I notice there is an increase of $100,000 in this item.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Excuse me, I want to reduce it by about $125,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. If we are going to put in the time till 5 o'clock, the Chairman will get enough of it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The item will be reduced.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is what I object to, and I will tell you why. I am one of those who favour an increase in pay of the non-commissioned officers and men of the volunteer force throughout this country. We are told that this is the growing time, and that the revenue is buoyant. Then, I do not see any reason why these young men should be asked to go out and drill in the warm days of June, leaving their employment and their homes, losing their wages and living on humble fare, when the Government has plenty of money to pay them and to provide for them properly. I think the Government should take this matter into consideration. My opinion is that men who go out to camp ought to be paid a day's wage equal to what they can earn at home. They should not be asked to lose a cent by enlisting in the service of the country. Nor should they be asked to live on humbler fare than they get at home. Notwithstanding the reduction of this item, I still hope the Minister is asking for a sufficient sum to increase the pay of the non-commissioned officers and men of the volunteer force throughout the entire country.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I beg now to move that this vote be reduced by $100,000, for this reason. We have already voted in the supplementary Estimates for the financial year which has just closed a sum of money which, with what it had on hand, has paid for probably two-thirds of the drilling for the present calendar year, and I think that after making this deduction we shall have perhaps more than sufficient. It depends on the date at which the militia is called out. With regard to what my hon. friend says, I always listen to him, because when he speaks, he speaks to the point. No one would be more glad than I, as an old member of the militia force, to be able to vote a larger sum of money for the non-commissioned officers and men. It is a question well worth considering; but I think the young men of Canada, officers as well as non-commissioned officers and men, are prepared to make some sacrifices in order to defend this country, and I think they would be disappointed if they were not permitted to do so. I think my hon. friend mistakes the feeling of loyalty and patriotism of the young men who join our battalions and go into camp, if he supposes that they are led to do so by any mercenary motive. All they want is to get enough to repay them for any direct expense or loss that may occur. At present I think it is not necessary to make any provision of that kind. On the contrary, I think our young men would rather resent it.

Mr. HUGHES. I would like to say a word or two on the matter which has been brought up by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson). I agree with the Minister that the officers and men do not require any better pay per day than they are receiving. But what they do require, and what I think they should have, is a proper system of messing. I know that the proposition is before the Minister, as in the case of the battalion from the county of Halton, to have it properly messed at Niagara. I am satisfied that the men would prefer to have 10 cents per day for that purpose rather than an increase to that extent in pay. In time of active service, they would not object to eating in the tents; but they do object to doing so in camp; and if the Minister would provide sufficient to enable them to have marquees where they could sit down at table, I am satisfied that many young fellows who do not now go to camp would go.

I am satisfied that 10 cents a day given for this specific purpose would do it. They would appreciate 10 cents for that purpose better than 25 cents a day added to their pay. Not only should the marquee and these tables be provided, and they could be provided very cheaply, but there should be a little improvement in the rations. We find, by reference to this Yukon business, that prepared vegetables could be issued easily to the men, so that they might have some vegetables other than potatoes. There is no reason in the world why there should not be some improvement in the rations. Speaking of the reduction in this item, if a battalion does not drill before the 1st of July, it may not drill at all. I would draw the hon. Minister's attention to the fact that this year some corps were nearly omitted, and unless a special vote be brought up again to give a corps the right to drill twice in a year, it will lose its annual drill. I trust the hon. Minister will let the item stand as it is, and not ask for a revote for any corps which is unable to perform its drill in September instead of June. September, in the province of Ontario, is a very unsuitable month, and

Mr. BORDEN (King's).

June is the most suitable month. I wish to draw attention also to this fact. Many of our young officers are induced to join the force before they have that enthusiasm which comes from long years of training. They have to lose their time attending military school. Of course they get paid, but still it is a hardship to many of them, and in addition they are called on to purchase a very expensive outfit at a period in their career when they do not feel that enthusiasm that they will later on, and when they are probably not flushed with money. An ordinary drill uniform with sword and belt cost $75 to $80 at the least, which is too much for these young men and has a tendency to make them hesitate; and when that expense is added to the inconvenience of getting these things, it makes them feel like leaving the force entirely. This year, before going into camp, I was informed by a number of officers that there was not a sword to be purchased in the Dominion of Canada, and, besides, the prices are just graded according to the whim of these gentlemen who have them for sale. The department should keep not only swords and belts, but cheap drill uniforms for the officers, so that an officer should get his uniform at a reasonable price. These are matters that I know affect the corps seriously. I think the helmet should be paid for by the department. Unless the young officer puts his hands into his pocket and buys a helmet he cannot get one, and when he goes to the school, without his helmet, he is brought up with double turn by his superior officer with the question: Where is your helmet? He has not enough gall to face it out and is broken down at the beginning of his career, because he has not a helmet or the latest type of sword or the little fandangoes that change according to the whim of those who change the regulations every two or three months, according to the changes of the moon. All these things should be taken hold of by the department. The Government should supply the men with helmets. There is no reason why any one going to a military school should be called on to pay for his helmet. Not only should the helmets be provided by the department, but the swords and uniforms should be furnished to each officer as soon as he completes his qualification and should be kept in stock. We are told the English system of volunteering is purely voluntary, but I am informed that there is a considerable grant given to officers and men in the way of uniforms and all these extras. This matter might very properly receive the attention of the hon. Minister. Another suggestion in connection with the annual drill is this. The bands and staff undoubtedly should be over and above the strength of the company. No one will gainsay the proposition that the band and staff should be over and above the company establishment, and there should always be a separate pay-sheet for the band and staff as for each company. If that were the case, each captain would know exactly how many men he could count on, and he would have no trouble in sending uniforms to each company for the band, and a great deal of the interior economy of a company or battalion would be minimized. There are a great many other matters that we will have an opportunity of discussing again, probably before the Minister rushes these items all through. I would make this other suggestion. Thanksgiving Day is observed all through the country from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and on that day the city and rural corps meet for manoeuvres. These are of great practical service, and I would suggest the advisability of bringing these under the control of the department, and also the furnishing of transport and making some allowance to corps from a distance that will take part in these manoeuvres.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am very much obliged to my hon. friend for his suggestion. From his long connection with the militia and the active interest he takes in it, anything he has to say is always of value and well received. With regard to what he has said about the improved plan of messing, I noticed that battalion to which he refers in my short visit to Niagara, and I certainly think the scheme is a great improvement and am favourably inclined to it, and would like to help it along as far as possible. The question of assisting the officers to uniform themselves in some way by providing at our stores for the sale of uniforms at cost is certainly worth considering. We do that now in the matter of saddlery. The difficulty about providing uniforms would be to make them fit, and we could hardly undertake the work at present of making the clothing, but might, perhaps, do something in the way of getting uniforms and having them altered to suit.

Mr. HUGHES. I may say that through the courtesy of the hon. gentleman's officers, I know that a number of men sent their measurements to his department, and these were sent on to the Government tailor at Hamilton, who sent the uniforms, cash on delivery, to the officers, and they were very satisfactory.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am grateful to the hon. Minister for the manner in which he has received my suggestion. I do not doubt the loyalty of young Canadians and their willingness to join the volunteer force and fit themselves for the defence of the country. I have never been connected with the service, but I have been a careful on-looker, and the conclusion I have come to is, that we must not allow the young men to feel that they are treated by the Government in such a way as to cause them loss. The Government must deal fairly with them, and, when they go to camp, make them as comfortable as they can, and, so far as rations are concerned, to give them as good as they are accustomed to at home. And, in a pecuniary way they must not be called upon to suffer the loss of wages—because most of these young men are wage-earners. If they realize that the Government will give them fair compensation, the young men will go into the force with spirit. I think that the Government, in these growing times, might be a little more liberal to these young men who so willingly offer their services to the country.

Mr. SPROULE. I took it for granted that this increase in the item was to pay an increased amount to those who drill every year, and regret that there is no intention to increase the pay. The fact that our county councils are often asked to supplement the pay with 25 cents a day, is evidence that the young men of the country think the pay too small. Some county councils grant it, and some do not; some grant it one year and refuse it another year. This year, and others, I have known this matter to be discussed among themselves; and, when the proposition is made to them to enlist and fill up the companies, many of them would willingly go, if the county council would pay the additional 25 cents. But, otherwise, they seem to think they are putting in time largely for nothing. It is true, that there is an attraction in having a holiday and going out with the military corps, and there is the loyal question as well. But I think the loyalty question does not appeal so much to their hearts as having a holiday, and having some drill, and being out with the boys. But, with it all, they would like to have some money as well. When the county council is importuned for this vote of an extra 25 cents a day, the question always comes up: Why does not the Government pay this: why should not the whole country bear the burden? If the county of Grey sends out a battalion of full strength, and another county does not send out half the number, why should the county of Grey pay that amount extra for helping to keep up the militia, when other counties, equally as able, perhaps better able, do not pay a cent? It would be fairer for the Government to pay it. I am sure the country would willingly bear the increased expenditure. For one, I would be prepared to go on any platform and justify the Minister of Militia in giving more in this way. My hon. friend from North Victoria said: If you give the young men 10 cents a day extra and a marquee, that would satisfy them. I do not think so. I have often heard complaint of the small sum given, and think it should be increased.

Mr. CLANCY. I do not pretend to criticize what has been said by the hon. member for Victoria. I have no doubt he is well qualified to give valuable information and a weighty opinion. But if his proposition should be carried out, there would have to be an additional sum voted. The hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) raised the question, when discussing the supplementary estimate of $125,000 for this same purpose. The Minister explained he would reduce the main estimate by $100,000, leaving it at $300,000. The hon. Minister has since stated very explicitly the policy of the Government to be, that there shall be an annual drill. If that is the case, it will require every cent for that purpose alone. Last year $300,000 was voted for the annual drill, and he spent that and $125,000 besides. And when it was pointed out that it would take every dollar of $400,000 for the annual drill, the hon. gentleman complains that that is not a fair criticism. But, in seeking to show that it is not, he can only say that there will not be an annual drill every year—that is, that he will not carry out the policy that it is his intention to carry out. This means that he will come, at the end of this fiscal year, asking for another $100,000 to make up what he has actually spent. The hon. gentleman might as well face the country first as last. If his policy is to be an annual drill, he had better ask for enough money to pay for it, rather than, later on, to be obliged to put in the Estimates an amount that he is leaving out now, though he knows that it will be needed. The hon. gentleman proposes to reduce this vote to $300,000. I would like him to give the committee information showing how much he intends to expend on the city corps at local headquarters, also the pay that is to be given to the men and horses for supplies and transport, each separately.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The question which the hon. gentleman asks is a very fair one, but I have stated twice since 10 o'clock this evening that it depends upon the time of the year when the militia is called out whether the vote which I propose to take, $300,000, will be sufficient. I said that such a large proportion had been called out and paid prior to the 1st day of July this present year, that I believed the $300,000 asked for will be sufficient. Last year nearly the whole of the militia was drilled, and the total expenditure was $302,241 for the financial year. Nearly the whole of the militia was drilled during the calendar year of 1898. We voted last year $300,000. Out of that, $122,759 was incurred in the previous year, and paid, so that we had to come down this year and ask for $125,000. But as a matter of fact, if we had not paid $122,000 the previous year, we would have had within $2,241 enough in our $300,000 vote to pay for the annual training of the militia during the fiscal year just closed. So I say that while I do not guarantee that the $300,000 will be sufficient, I believe it will come pretty near it; and as we have got $25,000 extra which I take on the vote of last year, I think it is only fair to reduce this estimate by this $100,000. I will then have $25,000 more than

Mr. CLANCY.

I have originally estimated. The militia drills within the calendar year, and our Estimates are taken for the fiscal year. So it depends upon the date when the camps are called out, but I believe this will be adequate. The hon. gentleman wants to know how many city battalions there are.

Mr. CLANCY. How much of that $300,000 is to be paid for drilling the city corps at the local headquarters?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. They get $6 for 12 days.

Mr. CLANCY. How is that $300,000 divided among each branch of the service?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The annual training of the city corps is going on all through the year at the convenience of the men and officers. They drill at night in the drill sheds, and they are paid $6 for 12 days annual drill within the year, just the same as the rural battalions.

Mr. CLANCY. What portion of this whole sum goes for that purpose?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It depends upon the number of men.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman must have known how many men there were; therefore, I ask how much of this $300,000 goes to these branches of the same service?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I will give the hon. gentleman some information here which may satisfy him. This is the way in which the estimate is made up:

In 1896-97 it cost $47,000 ; but that was previous to the reduction of one-third the regular rates, at which the railway companies do the carrying now.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman will see that while that gives part of the information, it is based on an expenditure of $429,000. The hon. gentleman proposes to reduce that estimate by $129,000, so that, I am afraid, we are about as far from definite information as before. What I asked for were the relative proportions of the $300,000, and not $429,000 that he proposes to expend on these services. In regard to transport, 40,000 is put in the Estimates, but that is based on the expenditure of $429,000. If the service is carried out as estimated then at least $29,000 more will be required to carry it out, and since it is to be reduced practically by $129,000, I think we should have the information on which the hon. gentleman is proceeding to reduce it by that sum.

Mr. HUGHES. I can remember the time when Victoria County gave $5 per man every year the corps went to drill. It had no tendency to increase the efficiency of the corps in comparison with those from other counties that did not give any $5. Five cents a day with food and rations had a greater effect than $5 given to the corps. Young fellows from the best homes all through the Dominion of Canada will not sit down on the floor of a tent with a plate of hot soup between their knees and eat their meals. While they might do it in active service they will not do it in camp. Forty-two thousand dollars will give 10 cents a day to every man for his extra rations, and $10,000 will more than pay for marquees necessary to feed them. I suggest that the hon. Minister should consider this matter, and instead of reducing this $100,000 item, let the item stay at $400,000, so that he will have money at his disposal. I make this suggestion to the hon. Minister in reference to the pay of horses. A man gets 50 cents a day and a horse $1 a day. People sometimes bring horses to camp and they go back with $12 in their pocket, which is about the value of one of these horses. I would suggest that 50 cents a day be allowed for horses the first year, 75 cents the next year and $1 the third year. They can easily be branded on the hoof so that they will be known the next year. The hon. Minister did not make any reply to the suggestion I made about helmets.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. We are considering that matter. We are making purchases of helmets now. I cannot say how they will be distributed, as to whether we will charge the whole or a part of the price.

Mr. PRIOR. Mr. Chairman, I am very much delighted to hear what has been agreed upon by the Government, as stated by the hon. Minister of Militia. That is in regard to what the Minister said about the wish of the Government to make the militia thoroughly efficient, even though the number be smaller. That would be brought about by having all the militia trained every year, and it is most essential. I call the Minister's attention to the statement of the General Officer Commanding, that it is impossible to get the militia into an efficient state with 12 days' drill. Why not leave the $100,000 in this vote, and give the men 16 days' drill instead of 12. It is only a question of dollars and cents, and I think Canada can stand it in these prosperous times.

Mr. CLANCY. If it cost $429,000 to drill the militia and the Minister only asks for $300,000, that is deceiving the country as to the actual cost. He will have to get the vote in the supplementaries to get the balance.

Mr. MCGREGOR. You find fault when he reduces it, and you find fault when he increases it.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McGregor) is asleep half the time, and interrupting the other half.

Mr. MCGREGOR. Talk about something you know something about.

Mr. McMULLEN. He does not want to know what he is discussing.

Mr. CLANCY. I will never discuss the evidence of good breeding from these two hon. gentlemen who are interrupting. I was not discussing the wisdom of the policy of the Government as to whether they should have an annual drill or not.

Mr. McMULLEN. Sit down, and go asleep.

Mr. CLANCY. If you slept longer you would accomplish more good for the country. Since it requires $429,000 according to the statement of the Minister—

An hon. MEMBER. What do you know about it?

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Chairman, I appeal for your protection.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) has the floor and I ask hon. gentlemen not to interrupt.

Mr. CLANCY. I do not think such unseemingly interruptions—

Mr. CHAIRMAN. Order, the hon. gentleman should discuss the question before the Chair.

Mr. CLANCY. Well, now, Mr. Chairman,—

Mr. CHAIRMAN. I have called for order, and understand hon. gentlemen are willing to obey the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. BORDEN (King's).

Mr. CLANCY. I will not pass judgment on the ruling of the Chair, but his friends on the other side of the House are certainly not obeying him. I say that the Minister of Militia and Defence puts what is practically a false statement into the public accounts of the country.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. CLANCY. Yes, the Minister states that it will take $429,000 and when he only asks for $300,000 it amounts to a false statement of the actual cost.

Mr. MCGREGOR. You told us that one hundred times before.

Mr. CLANCY. I shall not answer those interruptions. I am addressing myself to the hon. Minister who presides so ably, and under the circumstances so amiably over his department. We should have a clear statement from the Minister as to the amount he requires for this service for the year?

Mr. SPROULE. If the Minister's own statement is that we require $428,000 to drill the whole force for one year, he ought to take that much at once in the main Estimates, instead of calling for supplementary Estimates afterwards.

Mr. HENDERSON. I fully concur in what the hon. member for East Grey has said. There is no money granted to the Government with more pleasure by this House than the money expended for militia purposes, and I think the Minister should accept this money which the House is willing to grant, and then he will be the more willing to accede to my request for additional payment to the non-commissioned officers and men throughout the whole service.

Mr. TYRWHITT. We are in the habit of boasting of our loyalty, and at the present time we have a practical opportunity of showing how loyal we are by placing a sufficient sum in the Estimates to drill the entire militia force next year. With regard to cutting down the allowance for horses, I object to that reduction too. The saddlery alone is worth at least $50 on a horse, and nine officers out of every ten are not the owners of horses, but job their horses, and it would be utterly impossible to get a horse fit to go on the field for $40 or less as described by an honourable member.

Mr. MOORE. I think this is about the best opportunity the Conservative party have had to congratulate the Government on an endeavour to be economical, and I shall have to separate myself from my associates on this side of the House in that respect. I am not entirely in sympathy with the demand for a large expenditure for militia purposes. In my opinion, if we cut down our militia expenditure one-half, and devoted the money for agricultural purposes, it would be better for this country. Some people may call this disloyalty, but I claim to be as loyal as any man in the Dominion of Canada. When we hear the Premier and the leader of the Opposition both stating that there is no prospect of war between Canada and any other country, the spending of so much of the country's money in this direction, when one-half of it would be more advantageously devoted to other purposes, I look upon as a farce.

Mr. CLANCY. It is just as well to get this matter right. I have not advocated an increase of expenditure. I advocate simply the Minister telling us what expenditure he requires, and letting the country know that we are going to spend $400,000 for the annual drill of the country.

Mr. HENDERSON. I wish to be perfectly candid in this matter. I am not ashamed to say that I am advocating an increase in the expenditure, and I have a warrant from my constituents to make this demand. I believe that is their sentiment, and it has been made clear to me in such a way that I have the utmost confidence in asking the Minister to do what a short time ago I asked him to do. If this money is required to carry through the department to the 1st July next, let the item remain as it is, and not call for a supplementary vote next session.

Mr. HUGHES. I just wish to say a word with regard to this expenditure.

Mr. McMULLEN. Obstruction.

Mr. HENDERSON. I rise to a point of order. Has an hon. member the right to charge another with obstruction?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not think it is proper to charge anybody with obstruction, and neither is it proper to make interruptions.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Withdraw.

Mr. McMULLEN. On the ruling of the Chairman, I withdraw the charge of miserable obstruction.

Mr. HUGHES. I have heard an hon. gentleman say something about rubbing an asses head with soap, and I think the remark would apply to the hon. member for North Wellington very well.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. HUGHES. If the Chairman will keep himself in order—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman will be kind enough to withdraw the expression concerning the Chairman which he has just used.

Mr. HUGHES. What expression have I used?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. He has just said that the Chairman of the Commons should obey the rules of the House himself, and I do not think that is a proper expression to use with regard to the Chair, and he should withdraw.

Mr. HUGHES. If I have charged the Chairman with anything I had not the right to charge him with, I withdraw the expression, but at the same time—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman must withdraw the expression without any restriction.

Mr. SPROULE. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. There is no point of order, the question has been decided, and I ask the hon. member to withdraw the expression without restriction.

Mr. HUGHES. I have withdrawn it and will do no more.

Mr. SPROULE. The expression I understood the hon. member to make is this—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The expression that was used has been withdrawn, and I would ask the members of the committee to get down to business. I want to be fair to everybody, and I think I have acted as fairly as possible. I would ask the members of the committee to discuss the question.

Mr. HUGHES. I claim privilege. I have been charged with being an obstructionist. No man can say that in the ten or twelve sessions I have sat here I have ever obstructed business.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. I have given my ruling, and the question is disposed of; and I would beg members of the committee to confine themselves to a discussion of questions before the Chair.

Mr. HUGHES. If the Chairman will rule instead of making speeches it will please me much. One hon. gentleman wanted this expenditure cut down. I say that no money spent by the Government so readily finds its way back to the pockets of the people as that spent on the militia, and especially for the annual drill. This training does great good also in fostering a loyal spirit among the young men and developing them physically, mentally and morally.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Item 106—

Mr. SPROULE. I think we might now fairly ask an adjournment.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order, the hon. gentleman will give me an opportunity to read the item.

Militia salaries and wages of civil employees ..... $63,000

Mr. SPROULE. I think I may fairly appeal to the Minister of Finance to agree to an adjournment now. This is the first day we have been on the main Estimates, and we do not generally do so much the first day.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. SPROULE. I have sat in this House for twenty-one years, and I think no one has observed more closely what has been done in the House year by year. There has been no attempt to delay business, and we have done a fair day's work. On many occasions we have been here all night, on many occasions not passing more than two or three items, and those not nearly as large as any of the items we have passed to-night. I can appeal to the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) to verify what I say, for he has seen it himself. This session we put through the supplementary Estimates rapidly, knowing that the exigencies of the time demanded that the Government should be furnished with the money; but it was with the understanding that when we reached the main Estimates there should be no attempt to curtail discussion. Having reached the main Estimates we have endeavoured to discuss the matter fairly. I appeal to the House that we have not taken a moment that we did not fairly think necessary to bring out information that should be made public. We have sat here all night, and now it is twenty minutes to five in the morning. We must have our time for rest as well as for work. And I say it is not fair that we should be called upon to sit here any longer. I move, therefore, that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. CLANCY. Before you put that motion. I have only to say that I hope the Minister of Finance will consider it. We commenced in Supply at 11 o'clock. Since then we have voted over $650,000. That is a pretty fair proportion of the main Estimates to vote in the time. Yet, hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches propose to keep us here longer. I do not think the country will view their conduct with very much favour. I do not think it is fair treatment. So far as I am concerned, I do not ask any favours; I am willing to sit here until to-morrow, if hon. gentlemen opposite desire it. But I appeal to the Minister of Finance, in view of the late hour and of the very considerable progress that we have made, to allow an adjournment now.

Mr. MORRISON. I have been here all evening, and I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) who has just taken his seat has displayed a great deal of assurance, after taking up all the time he has taken up, now to attempt to dictate to the House as to an adjournment.

Mr. SPROULE. He is not dictating to the House, only asking respectfully.

Mr. MORRISON. For my part, I would like to see some work done.

Mr. SPROULE.

Motion that the committee rise and report progress (Mr. Sproule) negatived.

Mr. HUGHES. The Chairman has not read that 106th resolution right.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We took one-tenth of the previous vote, and we are now voting nine-tenths. The votes are being read all through correctly.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Minister is asking for $10,000 extra. To whom is the increase to be paid?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. When the supplementary estimates for last year were under consideration, this item was discussed. I asked for a supplementary estimate for a similar vote to this on the ground that we had used the money voted for the last year in a previous year, that is, that a portion of the then vote had been expended in a previous year, and I promised then that I would in the future endeavour to arrange my estimates so that they would cover the whole expenditure. As a matter of fact the expenditure has been about $67,000 or $68,000 a year. This year we propose to take enough money to cover the whole vote, and not take any supplementary vote at the end of the present year. There has been a slight increase owing to the new rifle. The new rifle being a very delicate arm, we have had to employ armourers, and also the Oliver equipment being in store has to be looked after. So we have had slightly to increase the number of employees.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the Minister kindly inform the House to whom this money is to be paid?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. To the superintendent of stores and the stores staff.

Mr. TAYLOR. Who are the superintendent of stores and the stores staff, and what salaries do they get? The same with the armourers, the caretakers of the drill sheds, and the inspectors of clothing. I want a full detail of the total expenditure of this $70,000.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There are 12 districts. In district No. 1, London, the superintendent of stores receives $800. There are three employees, one of whom gets $1.50 a day, one $1.25 and the other $1. They do the work in connection with the stores, taking charge of the rifles and keeping everything in order. The superintendent of stores at district No. 2, Toronto, gets $1,000, his name is Gravely. There is a foreman who gets $547; district clerk, $600. There is an armourer, two caretakers and three employees. The whole expenditure is $7,738.85. One caretaker gets $1.65, another $1.50. The ordinary employee gets $1.25 a day and $1. The superintendent of stores in district No. 3, Kingston, gets $1,000. There are two armourers, two foremen, and two other employees. Total expenditure, $9,792. There has been practically no increase in this vote. The annual expenditure has been $65,000 and $67,000. Then in district No. 4, Toronto, there is an armourer, four store clerks, 12 labourers, 6 other labourers and a charwoman. Then in military district No. 5, the armourer has $2.25 and the caretaker $1.75.

Mr. PRIOR. Where do these armourers come from ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. This one who gets $2.25, I think his name is Smallwood, is a New Brunswicker, a very good man. Several of them come from England, and were brought here to look after the new rifles. District No. 5 is Montreal. The superintendent of stores gets $1,200, that is Colonel Mattice. There is an armourer at $1.63½, two employees at $1.50, one at $1.25, 15 at $1, one at 75 cents, and one at $5 a month.

Mr. CLANCY. Who is the superintendent at Montreal ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Lieutenant-Col. Mattice.

Mr. PRIOR. Can the hon. gentleman say what these fifteen men are employed at ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. They work in connection with the stores on St. Helen Island and in connection with the drill hall and armoury in Montreal.

Mr. PRIOR. How many regiments are there ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There are five or six, including the artillery. The total for that district is not excessive. We have combined for all purposes in connection with arms and stores military districts Nos. 5 and 6. There was a superintendent of stores in No. 6, but that office has been abolished and there is only, for the two districts, one set of stores and one set of employees, except that three men are employed in No. 6 district.

Mr. PRIOR. Which is No. 6 ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It is south of Montreal with headquarters at St. Johns. We abolished the superintendent of stores there and we have the whole thing in Montreal. We have only three men employed in No. 6 district, one $1.50 a day, two at $1 a day, so that the two districts together cost us only $9,800. No. 7, Quebec, is a very important district, as there are more stores there than anywhere else. We have a superintendent of stores, Lieut.-Col. Forrest, receiving $1,400.

Mr. PRIOR. On the subject of stores I would call the attention of the Minister of Militia to the fact that there is a tremendous amount of stores in Canada which are perfectly worthless. Would it not be well to have boards appointed to go around and condemn these stores at once ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There is a great deal of truth in what my hon. friend has said. In every district there is a large quantity of stores that are perfectly useless. A considerable quantity has been sold. We give old cannon away to those applying for them for the decoration of public parks. In No. 7 military district besides the superintendent of stores who gets $1,400, there are two armourers at $1.95 a day, and twenty-three employees. The total expenditure is $12,000.

Mr. HUGHES. What are these twenty-three employed at ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There is an immense quantity of rifles. The larger proportion of the new rifles are there.

Mr. PRIOR. In store ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, we have not been able to issue the rifles permanently to the rural corps until we can get the armour for it. No. 8 Military District, New Brunswick. The superintendent of stores gets a salary of $1,000. There are three employees at $1.25 and five at $1. The total expenditure is $4,000.

Mr. PRIOR. Who is the superintendent ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Major Armstrong, a very efficient man, is the superintendent of stores at St. John. No. 9, Nova Scotia, a man by the name of Curran is the superintendent, and he gets only $800.

Mr. HUGHES. Are the stores in Halifax separate from the regular stores ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes ; we have our own store-room there. There is an armourer, and there are seven employees, getting $1.50 a day down to $16 a month. In No. 10 Military District there is a foreman of stores getting $2, one storeman and caretaker at $750.

Mr. PRIOR. Does the foreman of stores get a living allowance ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I rather think he does, but I am not sure. Now the superintendent of stores has $730 and the caretaker $619.

Mr. PRIOR. He is the caretaker and sergeant-major of the regiment. It is not right that the foreman of stores should get more than the caretaker, and I called the attention of the Minister to that disparity at the beginning of the session. The caretaker of the drill hall, at Victoria, was for years sergeant-major in "C" Battery, and came with the battery from Quebec to Victoria, and was afterwards appointed caretaker of the new drill hall. He is a splendid instructor, and yet, he is getting less than the foreman of stores. The foreman of stores is a good man, and I would not like to see his salary cut down because he is well worth what he gets. He is an old Blue Jacket and has been a long time there. It seems absurd that the man who is responsible for the drill hall and the sergeant-major of the regiment should get such a small remuneration. It is wrong and against discipline that he should get less than the foreman of the stores, and I hope the Minister will look into the matter.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. When the hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior) called my attention to it I referred the matter to the chief superintendent here, but I have not heard about it yet. I shall look into the matter.

Mr. PRIOR. I would be the last man to ask that the pay of the foreman of the stores should be reduced.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It does not follow.

Mr. PRIOR. I hope you will give the caretaker an equal amount.

Mr. HENDERSON. In the 20th Battalion, Lorne Rifles, in the county of Halton, we have perhaps one of the most efficient battalions in western Ontario, and I am sure the Minister who is always ready to assist the Militia in any way he possibly can and in whose administration I have a great deal of confidence—except perhaps when he takes the liberty of promoting a junior major over the senior major—

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. They are all happy now.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to draw the Minister's attention to the fact that in the village of Acton we have an ancient drill hall, the roof of which is leaking. It contains the armoury of No. 6 Company, which is in charge of Captain Langton, a very efficient officer, and a gentleman whose ability the hon. gentleman no doubt recognized when he met him at the Niagara Camp recently. I would like if the Minister, out of this large vote, would devote a small sum to improve the armoury so as to protect the military property there which belongs to the Dominion.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. My attention has not been called to the matter before, but I will inquire into it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have not called the Minister's attention to it before, but as it is a somewhat important matter I will take the liberty of addressing him a letter upon the subject.

Mr. TAYLOR. Have you appointed any new inspectors of clothing?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There have been different inspectors and they have been paid by the day for each day they work. Mr. Robertson is the chief inspector, and we have employed the inspectors who were there at the time I came in. Mr. Watson is another. There is a man named McCormack.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is the man from Goderich?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Then there is a man named O'Leary and a man named Caldwell.

Mr. TAYLOR. What salary did McCormack get?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. $5 for the time he worked. He is not and never has been permanently employed.

Mr. PRIOR. Is he a tradesman?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, he was a tailor. I do not think he has been employed by the department for some months.

Mr. PRIOR. Does he inspect all new clothing?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, everything is inspected.

Mr. HUGHES. Is much clothing kept in store?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There is not an opportunity to keep a great deal, because we have to issue it rapidly on account of the camps. We have had no difficulty in getting clothing enough to supply the men.

Mr. TAYLOR. What was the vote asked for in 1895-96 for this service?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. $63,000. The vote for 1897-98 was $65,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman has increased this by $7,000 since 1896. Will he give the details of that increase?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It is owing to the increased number of men who had to be brought out to take special care of the new rifles, and some extra men who had to be employed to take care of the Oliver equipment which is being supplied to the force.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood that the Minister gave all the men employed in the several districts; but from the Auditor General's Report, I do not think he did.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I gave the list that was given to me.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman did not give their names and salaries.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I said I gave the number of men and the character of their employment and the amount paid in each district. I could only give the names so far as I remembered them.

Mr. SPROULE. By the Auditor General's Report it appears that the men doing the same class of work do not get the same pay.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There is a difference according to the importance of the place. This matter has been very carefully looked into, and it is consequently being reviewed by the chief superintendent of stores on the advice of the different superintendents under him in the respective districts. The greatest care is taken to pay these men what they really earn and not more. Length of service has also something to do with the rate of pay.

Mr. HUGHES. I move that the committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. FLINT. I do not think it is fair to ask that the committee rise before this item is passed. The Minister has given all the information, we have had a thorough discussion of it, and there is no reason why it should not be assented to.

Mr. TAYLOR. If the Minister of Militia had had control of his own Estimates and spoken for himself at half-past twelve, instead of allowing the hon. member for North Wellington and the Minister of Customs and the Minister of Railways and Canals to attempt to bulldoze the House, there would have been no necessity for this long sitting. They insisted on our going on and passing all the items.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Even on a motion to adjourn it is not permitted to refer to a previous debate or to circumstances which have occurred in the debate on the previous item. The discussion must be confined to the item before the Chair.

Mr. SPROULE. In speaking on an item in the Estimates, is a reference to what occurred on a previous item a reference to a previous debate?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The same rule applies as in discussing a motion before the House. Hon. members have no right to refer to a debate on a previous item.

Mr. CLANCY. I understand that it is not proper to discuss an item already passed, but in my experience—which may have been wrong—I have not known it to be held that one could not refer to a debate on a previous item.

Mr. PRIOR. There was a general discussion at first, concerning this and all the items. In that case, under the ruling, there can be no discussion of the item.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I understand consent was given that there should be a general discussion at the beginning. But afterwards, it was agreed that the discussion should be kept close within the rules of the House.

Mr. TYRWHITT. The hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) in his eagerness to reach his resolution on Prohibition has lost the sense of fairness that usually characterizes him in this House. He speaks of the Opposition obstructing—

Mr. FLINT. No. I have not spoken of obstruction.

Mr. TYRWHITT. I withdraw it. Now, it must be remembered that the Ministers, except the Minister of Militia and Defence have slept, while the members of the Opposition have been awake, bearing the heat and burden of the day. This is a matter which the Minister of Finance should take into consideration.

Mr. CLANCY. The member for Yarmouth said that the Minister had given full information. Now, I wish to cite the fact that the Minister has stated that in the case of this item there is an increase because he has to pay off a debt of last year of the supplementary Estimates of $9,000. I have asked many times for an explanation of an item of $100,000 which is on precisely the same footing, and yet the hon. Minister will not explain.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member for Yarmouth says it is not courteous for the members of the Opposition to act as they have done.

Mr. FLINT. I did not say that. I said it was not fair to ask us to rise and report progress, after the long and patient hearing which hon. members on both sides had given to the Minister, without passing the item. I did not refer to courtesy.

Mr. SPROULE. I took down the hon. gentleman (Mr. Flint's) statement, but if the hon. gentleman withdraws it, I will not press the point. But the hon. member said we had been unduly delaying the business of the House.

Mr. MORRISON. Hear, hear.

Mr. SPROULE. I would ask the hon. member what is the duty of an Opposition?

Mr. MORRISON. I have never been in Opposition to learn.

Mr. SPROULE. Well, those in Opposition could probably instruct the hon. gentleman (Mr. Morrison). The members supporting the Government rarely rise in Committee of Supply except to support what the Government proposes. If there is to be criticism, it must be by a member of the Opposition. I think I can appeal to this House that we have not made long speeches, and while we are not complaining of the disposition of the Minister to withhold information, I can fairly appeal to this House that we have not been in any way endeavouring to delay business which engaged the attention of the House during the night.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I may remind the hon. member that in the discussion on a motion to adjourn, it is not allowed to review what has taken place in the House. According to the parliamentary procedure of Sir John Bourinot :

Nor, on a motion for the adjournment of the debate, can a member refer to a vote just previously given, nor review what has taken place in the House.

So the hon. gentleman has no right to review what has taken place during the night, he must confine himself to the item under discussion, and to the motion for adjournment.

Mr. SPROULE. Am I not within my rights in giving reasons why the House should adjourn? and one of the reasons is that we have done a good night's work, and that we have not delayed the business of the House.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The rule is that the hon. gentleman has no right to review what has taken place in the House, so he must confine himself to the motion to adjourn.

Mr. SPROULE. I think I am safe in saying that I have seen this done hundreds of times, and I have never yet heard a member called to order for referring to what took place during the night. I am endeavouring to give the reasons why at this hour, six o'clock in the morning, after having done a good night's work, the Committee should rise, and why the Government should not force us to work any longer. We have not endeavoured to do anything like obstruction to-night. We have allowed a fair amount of business to go through. There has been fair and legitimate discussion on the Estimates.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I have to recall the hon. gentleman's attention to the rule that he must not review what has been said during the night.

Mr. SPROULE. Then what reasons can I give for desiring to adjourn.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like you, Mr. Chairman, to read the whole rule you have quoted. As I read it, it does not apply to a motion only when a Speaker is in the Chair.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. There is no difference, the rules are the same when in committee as when the Speaker is in the Chair :

When there is a question before the House, and a member moves the adjournment, he must confine himself to the question. Nor, on a motion for the adjournment of the debate can a member refer to a vote just previously given, nor review what has taken place in the House.

The motion now before the Chair is that the Committee do rise and report progress.

Mr. SPROULE. There is a distinction between a motion to adjourn a debate and that the committee rise.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER. When a motion that the committee rise is made, it is like a motion for the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. It is a motion that the committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again. Therefore it is a wider motion than one that the committee rise.

Mr. TAYLOR. Who is the caretaker of the Gananoque drill shed, and what salary is he paid?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. In all my experience of parliamentary life I have never heard anything like this tornado of questions being put to any previous Minister of Militia. I have brought with me all the information that any reasonable man could desire in reference to the policy of the Government, and the details of this expenditure. That information I have given to the House, but surely I cannot carry in my head the name of every caretaker in the Dominion and the salary paid him. It has been said that there has been no obstruction, and I have not charged it, but although the explanations are repeated over and over again, the fact remains that we have been here for eight mortal hours over two items. That may not be obstruction but it certainly is no desire to expedite public business.

Mr. HUGHES. I sympathize with the Minister of Militia, but the fault rests with the Minister of Finance who, with a little jaunty side-line air, refused to adjourn when the suggestion was made early to-night.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes) is not permitted to discuss anything that has been said during the night. The authority for this is quoted at page 551 of Bourinot.

Mr. HUGHES. Then the Minister of Militia was out of order?

Mr. CLANCY. The proposal that we should vote these millions of dollars of militia estimates at one sitting of the committee is, I submit, without reason.

Mr. McCLURE. I should like to ask if any one of the hon. gentlemen opposite has given the faintest reason why this item should not pass?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is a poser for them.

Mr. McCLURE. The only time I heard them discuss the questions under consideration—

Mr. CLANCY. Order; reviewing the debate.

Mr. McCLURE. I cannot review a debate because I heard no debate to-night. I have heard any quantity of talk, but not on the subject before the House. With reference to this particular item, the reason we have given why it should not pass, is that the member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) cannot vote for it until he knows who has charge of the drill-shed in Gananoque. I suggest that the Minister might try and find out the name for him and let the vote pass.

Mr. TAYLOR. When the Minister asks for a vote of money to pay any official he should be ready to answer the questions put.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Don't you know the name of the Gananoque caretaker?

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There is no such official of that kind so far as I know.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will you say positively there is not. I think there is a late appointee as caretaker, and I want to know his name and the salary he gets.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Will the hon. gentleman give me his name and when he was appointed?

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not know that. I think it is a late appointment.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There has been no one appointed by me. It may be in the Public Works department, but I have appointed no one.

Mr. MARCOTTE. (Translation.) I have listened very attentively to the debate now going on, and I think it my duty to rise and insist upon the Government giving us all the desirable information on the matter under consideration in the interest of the country in general. The whip of the Conservative party (Mr. Taylor) has asked the Minister of Militia and Defence (Mr. Borden) to give us the names of the caretakers of the Gananoque drill shed, and the hon. gentleman has not yet thought fit to answer the question put.

Mr. DECHENE. (Translation.) What was the question put?

Mr. MARCOTTE. (Translation.) The hon. gentleman wanted to know the name of the caretaker of the drill shed at Gananoque and what salary he is paid.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. (Translation.) I have to recall the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that the salary that caretaker is paid is not provided for by the vote now under consideration.

Mr. MARCOTTE. (Translation.) I thank you, Mr. Chairman, for the pertinent answer you have just given; it shows that if you occupied the position now filled by the Minister of Militia and Defence, all the information we have been asking for since yesterday would have been brought down.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. (Translation.) I would beg the hon. gentleman to confine himself to a discussion of the question before the Chair.

Mr. MARCOTTE. (Translation.) I only wished, Mr. Chairman, to congratulate you on your ruling.

Mr. TALBOT. The member for Belchasse, interrupts me—

Mr. CHAIRMAN. (Translation.) The hon. gentleman is not allowed to address an hon. member by name; he should use the name of the constituency he represents.

Mr. MARCOTTE. (Translation.) The hon. gentleman (Mr. Talbot) is well and favourably known in this House.

When you interrupted me, Mr. Chairman, I was congratulating you about the intelligent way in which you had given us information. It would greatly conduce to the expediting of public business, if the Minister of Militia and Defence acted in that way.

We find that the sum provided for the payment of that salary and for salaries for civil employees has been increased by $10,000 over last year. It cannot be said that this increase of $10,000 in the expenditure of the country is an insignificant item, especially when one remembers that they promised they would run the Government on economical lines and cut down the expenditure. The hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Dechene) seems to be amused at my remarks, but did he not pledge himself before his electors to a policy of retrenchment in the public expenditure? Is that what they are doing? No, the Government have falsified their pledges in that respect.

It is not only about that increased expenditure of $10,000 that I would like to get information, but also on many other items of these estimates. It is all very well to laugh about penny-wise economy, but we ought to bear in mind that it is only by small savings that nations grow rich as well as private individuals. It is by avoiding all needless expenses that one accumulates a fortune.

It is astonishing to see how the present conduct of the Government contrasts with their past pledges. It is no doubt desirable that those who are called upon to defend the country or who are entrusted with the care of our armouries should be well paid as they constitute, as it were, our national guard. To them is intrusted the duty of restoring order in the country, should it ever be disturbed. All we want is to see peace prevailing in the country, so that we may develop our natural resources and improve our position, by fostering the agricultural, manufacturing and commercial interests of the country. I do not object to the salaries paid to the caretakers of our drill sheds.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. (Translation.) The hon. gentleman should confine himself to the item under consideration and should not refer to the salaries of public employees.

Mr. MARCOTTE. (Translation.) I am now referring, Mr. Chairman, to the salaries of the caretakers of our drill sheds. Suppose for one moment that some of those officials proved unfaithful and that our arms were stolen from our arsenals, does any one pretend to say that there would be no connection between the conduct of those employees and the defence of the country? Should we prove unable to defend the country under such circumstances; we might lay ourselves open to the reproach of cowardice and be charged with unmanly conduct, while it would all depend upon the lack of arms. This shows how important is the matter under consideration. I do not object to this item, as I am in favour of paying proper salaries to those who are called upon to defend the country, but I say that we want more circumstantial information about that increase of $10,000. The Government should not come down and propose such an expenditure after having pledged themselves to a policy of retrenchment. The Government should not come down and ask us to vote that item, without giving us some good and sound reason for it. The Minister of Militia should give us some explanations. I am waiting for an answer.

The hon. gentleman does not condescend to answer me. Such a large vote calls for minute explanations, especially when one remembers that it is asked by a Government pledged to economy.

I ask for details, and when the hon. Minister will have supplied us with information as to that increase of $10,000, I may then be able to tell him whether it is desirable to give it to them. Should his explanations prove satisfactory, then I will be ready to vote in favour of that item with my hon. friends on this side of the House.

Mr. MARCOTTE.

Mr. Chairman, would you kindly convey my request to the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence? Shall I have to speak English to get an answer? No reply is vouchsafed, and yet we are entitled to obtain some information. Why have they increased this vote? I call upon the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Dechene) and upon the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot).

Mr. TALBOT. (Translation.) What about that expenditure of $2,000,000 incurred by the old Government for the purchase of rifles?

Mr. MARCOTTE. (Translation.) And you have sold the old rifles for 25 cents apiece without any tender.

We are hungering for a little information, the smallest quantity of which would satisfy us, and the hon. Minister does not vouchsafe a reply. The hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Angers) seems amused at my remarks. Could he tell me the reason of this increased expenditure?

I think it is high time the mode of procedure followed in this House were reformed, when it comes to this pass that we are unable to get the least scrap of information from the Ministers. The hon. gentlemen opposite laugh, instead of supplying us with the desired information.

I say again, Mr. Chairman, that I am not opposed to this vote; all I want is to know the reason of this increased expenditure. As a member of this House, as a voter, as the representative of an honest and intelligent class of voters, I, with all my colleagues on this side of the House, ask for full information as to this vote.

Military properties and rifle ranges..... $147,000

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That item is made up as follows:—Rents of ranges, armouries and buildings, $10,000; fuel for armouries and buildings, $8,000; gas and electric lights, $9,500; water rates, $1,500; clearing snow, $1,000; telephones and general expenses, $5,000; making a total of $35,000, an increase as compared with last year of $3,000. The increase is partly in the rents of ranges, armouries and buildings. I have here a full list of all the buildings and properties for which we are paying rent, a pretty long list.

Mr. TAYLOR. Read them.

(The Minister of Militia and Defence (Mr. Borden) read the list.)

Mr. HUGHES. Did I hear Lindsay mentioned there?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No.

Mr. HUGHES. Then I must inform the Minister that we made application over a year and a half ago for a grant to our range.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. So far as I know, I have not heard anything of it. It has not come to my notice.

Mr. HUGHES. I made personal application to the Minister, and I made official application to the D. O. C.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I may say in reference to a question asked me by the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Tyrwhitt) that there is here an item of $7,000 being voted to fit up drill sheds and armouries suitable to receive the new rifle. In addition to this vote I am taking a further vote in the supplementaries so that we will be able to make a fair showing during the next year towards getting the new rifles distributed among the rural battalions. It is proposed in this vote of $30,000 for rifle ranges, to secure a rifle range at Montreal, and to improve the range at Bedford in Nova Scotia. I may say to the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Prior) that there will be a revote of the amount voted last year, $6,000, for that purpose.

Mr. PRIOR. I asked a question twice of the hon. Minister as to whether the contract had been let for the Vancouver drill hall, and I was informed on both occasions that it had not. It seems a most curious thing that a Liberal paper in British Columbia, owned by a gentleman who has a seat in another place, had information in that place that the contract had been let to a firm in Ottawa and Hull, Viau & Lachance. The editor stated in his paper that they had a statement from the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) that the contract was let. I know that these men believed they had got the contract, and one of them went to British Columbia to find out the prices of labour and material.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The explanation is that the Minister of Public Works had made a report to Council on the subject, but it had not passed Council when I gave the hon. gentleman the answer. Therefore the statement in the newspaper was not quite correct.

Mr. PRIOR. I suppose the two contractors had been notified that they would get the contract, because, as I say, one of them started off to British Columbia to make arrangements. Would the hon. gentleman tell me whether the contract has been let yet?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My impression is that the Order in Council did not pass, but I will ascertain. It is possible that an intimation was given to him in an informal way, but practically the contract was not officially awarded.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand the Minister to say that he paid rent for drill-hall in Brockville.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, $300. That building has been rented, I think, for a long time.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the hon. gentleman negotiating with people there to build a drill hall?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, I think there will be a vote in the estimates, if there is not in the main estimates. The city of Brockville is giving a site free upon which a drill hall will be constructed; then this $300 will be saved to the country annually. I understand there are three or four sites for a drill hall under consideration, but up to this time no decision has been come to. The local military authorities have certain views and the city council has certain views.

Mr. SPROULE. I am told that the town are being forced into the position of purchasing a site, and that Brockville has the assurance of the Minister of Public Works that the site will be purchased and that he has put the money in the supplementary Estimates for the commencement of the work.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. This is the first intimation that I have had of anything of this kind. I can scarcely think my hon. friend is well informed. I do not think the Minister of Public Works would have anything to do with selecting a site for the construction of a drill hall.

Mr. SPROULE. Has not the Minister told Mr. Graham, the local member for Brockville, that there would be an item in the Estimates for this particular work, and that that is the only site he will consent to take?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Do you mean the Minister of Public Works?

Mr. SPROULE. No, the Minister of Militia.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No. I could not say that, because the matter as to the site has not come to me for a decision.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand that Mr. Graham interviewed the Minister at Ottawa and telegraphed back that he had secured his permission for this site, and there would be an item in the Estimates for the building.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No.

Mr. TAYLOR. Was not an officer of your department in Brockville selecting a site, just prior to the election ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I cannot say.

Mr. TAYLOR. I see in the Auditor General's Report that there are large sums paid to Liberal firms here for goods supplied and labour done, and they were supplied without tender. Is it the intention of the Minister to pay out this money we are voting to his Liberal friends without tender and at exorbitant prices ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. These men were asked to put in tenders in conjunction with others, and the lowest tender was taken. We have in the department an engineer, a Royal Military College graduate of great ability, who takes the greatest care to see that everything is done properly and at the lowest figure. The work at Quebec is under the direction of a gentleman who has been in the service for a long time, and who, I believe, is one of the best employees of the department. In the main, I believe that the work has been well and economically done.

Mr. PRIOR. Do you mean to say that these tenders were advertised for ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No.

Mr. PRIOR. Just three or four Liberal firms were asked to tender.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There may be some Conservatives, but at all events, we are paying gentlemen opposite a compliment by continuing the same system which we found in existence when we came in.

Mr. TAYLOR. They go to Aikenhead & Co., a political supporter, and pay 4 cents a pound for putty that they could buy at a cent and a half a pound. All through the Auditor General's Report I find that the Minister is paying exorbitant prices for political supplies.

Warlike and other stores..... $45,000

Mr. TAYLOR. What do you want with this increase of $6,000 ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The vote is required for the following purposes:—Camp equipments, $12,000; harness and saddlery, $10,000; medical supplies, $3,000; barrack and miscellaneous stores, $10,000; maintenance of stores, $7,500; small arm material, $2,500. Camp equipment; 3,000 gray blankets, $4,800; 2,000 waterproof sheets, $2,200; 200 tents, $3,500; 10 marquees, $800; 4,000 mess tins, $700. Harness and saddlery: 200 sets saddlery, complete, $7,500; 30 sets officer's saddlery, $1,500; parts of harness and material for harness and saddlery, $1,000; medical supplies for camps, $3,000. Barrack stores, including shirts, palliasses, horse-blankets, bed-straps, mops, brushes, pails, brooms, &c., $6,500; miscellaneous stores, $3,500; maintenance of stores, replacing deficiencies, repairs, &c., $7,500; small arm material; this includes the purchase of such supplies as may be required for the armourers, and of articles required to replace losses by the men in the force, $2,500.

Mr. BORDEN (King's).

Mr. TAYLOR. I want to ask the hon. Minister about an item in the Auditor General's Report. Mr. W. C. Caldwell, of Lanark, supplied 2,380 blankets, weighing 9,855½ lbs., at 40 cents a pound. I want to ask the Minister when Mr. Caldwell tendered for these blankets. Did he tender for them at all ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, he was the only tenderer.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then he put in a written tender saying that he supplied them at his price.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR. Therefore there was no public tender called for ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I will explain the case to the hon. gentleman. We had a contractor who was supplying blankets at a figure lower than these, and when we came to inspect the blankets we found they were not up to the standard. They were stated by the inspector and by experts to be shoddy. When we required him to supply a different blanket we found that he could not do it at the price, and he withdrew and asked to be relieved, and we paid him for what he had put in at a price which was recommended—I forget exactly what it was—and allowed him to withdraw. We required the blankets, and Mr. Caldwell had been a tenderer, and we corresponded with him and asked him what he would supply a good lot of woollen blankets for, and he made us an offer and we accepted his offer. I venture to think the Department of Militia or any other department never got better value for the money paid than that contract.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am informed by a gentleman who is well conversant with the quality of blankets, and who is also a large manufacturer, that had he been asked to supply these blankets, he would have supplied them at a great deal less price and of better quality than these, because 40 cents would purchase the best quality of all wool blankets, leaving a big profit on it besides. Therefore it is no wonder that the Minister, with the money that he over-expended last year, bought these blankets at these prices, from Mr. Caldwell, paying for them $3,973.70.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DE-FENCE. It is only fair to Mr. Caldwell to read to the committee a letter which I received from him a day or two after the discussion of this subject which took place some time ago :

June 21, 1899.

Dear Sir,—On my way up to Toronto to-day
I noticed in the "Mail and Empire" that the Opposition were criticising the blanket contract, and making some very absurd statements. I presume you are thoroughly well posted regarding the matter and yet there can be no harm in my explaining a few things in the manufacturing.
We bought no wool last year, 1898, at less than 18 cents per lb. for Canadian wool, and we paid from 18 cts. to 20 cts. for the clip, and for some used to make the blankets for the Yukon we paid as high as 22 cents. But suppose we put the price paid at an average of 19 cents per pound, and add the cost of manufacturing each pound of wool, which we put at 12 cents, including dyeing, freight, &c., then 19 cents + 12 cents = 31 cents per pound for stock and manufacturing into the blankets. It takes 5 pounds of wool to make a 4-pound blanket, so that we get at 40 cents per pound for the blankets, $1.60, for what costs us $1.55. When rushed with the blankets for the Yukon we could not manufacture as low as the above, because we had to rush the work, and it cost more in consequence. The blankets required for the militia camps this spring were required to be finished by the 1st June, and having to be pushed cost more on that account. We had the 6,000 ordered shipped before that date, and the additional 2,000 ordered were shipped before the 17th, so there was no delay on our account.

These blankets were made out of last year's wool and were not affected by the lower price of this year's clip which did not go into these. We are paying now for this year's clip 14 cents to 18 cents per pound, and have bought no wool at less than 14 cents per pound. We buy it from the farmers, washed by them, but no matter how clean they make it we calculate to lose in shrinkage, after scouring and putting through air machines at least an average of 20 per cent, so that 5 pounds of wool will not make more than a 4-pound blanket. I arrive at the cost of 12 cents per pound for manufacture, as follows :—

	Cents.
Cost of labour, per pound of wool manufactured.....	8.00
Oil .....	.60
Soap .....	.75
Dyes .....	.75
Fuel .....	.70
Interest on investment and tear and wear (and freight to Ot- tawa) .....	1.20
Total.....	12.00

These figures may vary a trifle as I am giving them from memory not having expected this matter to come up. Canadian wool has dropped since the new clip came in this year, but in the early part of the spring foreign wool had advanced from (25 p.c. to 40 p.c.), twenty-five per cent to forty per cent, and still maintains its increased price. We are not dealing though with this seasons lower prices but with stock manufactured out of last year's clip of wool bought at last year's prices, and the very lowest we paid was 18 cents per pound.

Now, as to the blankets, you may have them subjected to any test freely, we guarantee them to be made from pure stock only, and invite inspection.

I hope I have not wearied you, but I felt so annoyed at the absurdity of figuring out last year's contract on this season's cost of wool that I could not keep quiet.

That is the statement of Mr. Caldwell who,
I think, my hon. friends on the other side of the House will agree to be an upright, straightforward and honest manufacturer, a man who would not put his name to a statement which was not true.

Mr. WALLACE. It is a very interesting letter the Minister has read. But I wish to point out to the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence that Mr. Caldwell says in his letter that you, the Minister, are familiar with this whole question. Why, Mr. Chairman, not a member in this House who was present when this subject first came up, but will remember how the Minister floundered, how he ran from post to pillar and from pillar to post and back again, not knowing the first thing about it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has no right to refer to a previous debate.

(Mr. Bennett and Mr. Bergeron) addressed the committee at some length.)

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) I am sorry I was not able to stay here later than midnight, which I thought was a proper hour for every respectable person to retire. I had thought of asking for information upon certain items that were a mystery to me, and on which I would like to have got information, but rather than continue the discussion at that late hour, I retired.
I find now that a great many of these items to which I wished to refer, have been passed over and I am denied that privilege. I think that the accounts of the Militia Department require very stringent criticism, for I find that in most cases the prices are extravagant, and the accounts are kept in such a way that it is impossible for this committee to know what the items are,
and what they represent.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I cannot understand the present condition of the committee. I left here at 12.30, and, Mr. Chairman, you will perhaps allow me to refer, in connection with the present condition of the committee, to what was the then position of affairs. The Minister of Militia had introduced his resolution, and when we went into Committee of Supply we asked him to give the committee a general statement of the position of affairs and the policy of the Government, which, I am bound to say, he did in a very efficient manner and everything was very satisfactory.

The Committee were good enough to indulge me with going, perhaps, a little outside the regular order, because it has been customary, ever since I have been a member of this House, on a subject of such importance as the militia estimates, that the Minister should give a general review, as he did, of the whole subject. That was the condition of the debate about the time I left. There is no doubt that in dealing with the Militia Department, it is especially necessary, in order to command public confidence, that the fullest information should be given to the committee in reference to the expenditure of such large sums of money. I find that progress has been made during the night, and that a number of important estimates have been passed, aggregating nearly $1,000,000. It appears to me that having made such substantial progress in a single sitting, there can be no objection to the committee rising now. I am informed by my friends on this side of the House that the Minister of Militia and Defence was quite willing, after two or three o'clock in the morning, to adjourn the House. There is no member of this House more anxious to promote public business than I am, but I must say that the responsibility for wasting the time of the committee falls upon the Government when they take an unreasonable position, and say that after a large amount of estimates have been passed at a very late hour, they will refuse to adjourn the House. I put it to the hon. gentlemen to say whether this condition of things ought not to terminate, so that the committee may rise. It is now noon, and if my hon. friends will consent to an adjournment I think we should make much more rapid progress with public business.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend's description of what occurred up to the time of his departure from the House last night, was entirely correct; and I am satisfied that if he had remained in the House the unpleasantness would not have occurred. For, while we differ in many things, I am pleased to say that the hon. gentleman has always manifested a desire to advance the business of the House, and has been above resorting to small and petty acts of obstruction. At an early stage of the discussion I suggested that we should carry out what seemed to be the view of my hon. friend, that instead of confining ourselves to particular items we should deal with the militia estimates in a general way. After we had made considerable progress on those lines, I suggested that we should go on and pass the various items with the understanding that in any case where information was defective, and there was a desire to have further discussion, we should reserve one item with full liberty to discuss the whole subject at a later stage. Unfortunately my hon. friends opposite did not see it their duty to accept that suggestion, but preferred to adopt other measures. When we saw that the time of the House was being wasted and that public business was not being advanced, the provocation was exceedingly great to the Government and the members supporting the Government, to sit here long enough to do a reasonable amount of business. I can assure my hon. friend that the information which has been given to him as to the cause of the whole difficulty is inaccurate.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would like to remind my hon. friend the Minister of Finance that a ruling you, Mr. Chairman, I think have made, rather unfortunately, although technically it may be correct, conflicts altogether with the views which have just been given by my hon. friend who is leading the House.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I may say that the ruling was given very late in the evening, at a time when nearly every one desired that the discussion should be limited to the special item before the committee.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The Minister of Finance proposed that all the items should be passed except one, and that on that item there should be a free range to go over the whole of the previous items. That is entirely contrary to your ruling. You have just ruled that not a word can be said in reference to any item that has been passed.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The ruling of the Chair came in at a later stage. We were proceeding, as it were, by common consent on the lines which my hon. friend himself had suggested. It was at a later stage when the difficulty occurred, and then the exception was taken, and the Chairman ruled that unless there was unanimous consent, he must follow the strict rules of the House.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is evident that neither side are in a condition, under these circumstances, to look at matters in a dispassionate manner. I propose that we meet at three o'clock with a determination to get on vigorously with the business, and I can assure my hon. friends opposite that they will find me ready to do anything in my power, and to exert my influence with my friends to promote the business of the House.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I sat here through the whole night, and therefore I am quite cognizant of what occurred during the progress of this discussion. I want to say that I entirely subscribe to the proposition of the hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition that it would be quite useless for the majority of the House to endeavour to coerce even a small minority to any particular course of action. But while doing so, I would ask my hon. friends on the other side to accept the converse of that proposition that gentlemen must not expect, because they are in a minority to compel action on the part of the majority to which the majority do not feel that they are in fairness and in justice called upon to accede. No Government that at all respects itself can submit to threats on the part of the gentlemen of the Opposition. A Government, as it commands a majority of the House, must surely be taken to have a right to direct and to guide the course of action and procedure in the House. They may call attention to improprieties on the part of the Government, but I maintain that it is utterly subversive of all principles of Government to undertake to say how public business should be carried on, and that such and such a thing should not be done. We owe a duty to hon. gentlemen opposite, but they also owe a duty to us as the majority in this House for the time being.

Mr. SPROULE. I appealed to the House that it would be unreasonable to pass $2,000,000 at that hour of the night. I may say also that the discussion was not irrelevant for the Chairman always kept us very closely to the question.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) will admit that he stated that he was doing this for his own amusement.

Mr. SPROULE. No.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. And my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) did the same thing.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) is the most guilty of the whole lot for what occurred. I said we had learned from hon. gentlemen opposite—the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) was not present, and does not know anything about it—I said we had learned from my hon. friend from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) how to discuss these items, and from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) who I thought would compliment me. We were here one night for thirty-six hours discussing one item of $16,000 for the Laprairie post office, and as last night we voted nearly $1,000,000 we wanted to adjourn.

Mr. SPROULE. It was after six o'clock this morning when I took up the Auditor General's Report, and as I stated I did not discuss any item under $200. There was no disposition whatever to obstruct business.

Mr. HUGHES. There was a suggestion of the hon. Minister of Finance that we should hold over one item, but we all know what that means, as it would be passed over altogether, and then the Minister of Railways like a jumping-jack following the dictation of the hon. member for North Wellington, said that we would have to pass all the items. There is a strong suspicion abroad that the Finance Minister and the Minister of Railways are jealous of the success of the Minister of Militia and that that is the reason they did not want to get these items through.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I subscribe to the suggestion of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, that public business can only be conducted with mutual respect to each others rights and privileges, and I think the hon. Minister of Finance made a serious mistake when he suggested that one item should be held over.

Mr. WALLACE. And in addition to that there was the strict ruling of the Chair.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, the very severe ruling of the Chair which I shall not discuss now, because the Chair quoted a very high authority for it. I would suggest that this vote be passed and that this House either adjourn until three o'clock, or that the committee rise until three, so that the Ministers may be in a better frame of mind to continue this discussion.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No object can be achieved by that, because the committees do not meet this morning, and we might as well continue discussing these items.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. You will get a little fresh air and lunch.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is no reason why we should lose any time now.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think that expression is most unfortunate.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hesitation with which the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries accepts a suggestion from this side of the House indicates a desire on the part of the Government to bull these items through without proper explanation. I should think if this suggestion is accepted, better progress would be made.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Montague) not being in the House all night, is not a judge of what has happened. I realize we all ought to be reasonable, and I will assent to the suggestion of the leader of the Opposition, on the condition that we proceed in the ordinary way with the discussion of the estimates until one o'clock.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is all right.

Militia clothing and necessaries..... $150,000

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I wish to ask the hon. Minister if he answered Mr. Foster's question yesterday with reference to the clothing for the Royal Military College.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I answered the question and it will be found on "Hansard." I would point out that the Government has no direct charge of this matter except to see that the general appearance of the cadets is maintained, and I might mention that the cost of clothing of the cadets is provided by the parents.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The answer is most unsatisfactory. The fact that the parents have to pay for the clothing ought to make the Government more anxious to see that justice is done, and, that, by no petty patronage the clothing of the cadets is interfered with. I have information which leads me to think that the absence of tender and contract in this clothing is extremely objectionable, and that the results of the present system are far from satisfactory. I think it is very improper that the Government, who have charge of that college, should try to shoulder the responsibility of this matter on to the college. I had the pleasure of making the acquaintance of the Commandant of the Royal Military College, and I must say that I was most favourably impressed by him, and that I believe he is a gentleman who is most anxious to do the very best in his power for that institution. But he is a young military officer from England, and he cannot possibly know anything about clothing contracts. It is entirely out of his department, and the Government should not seek to throw a responsibility upon him that never should rest upon him. This clothing should have been let out to public tender instead of private contract, and irrespective of all considerations the contract should be awarded to parties who would do their work well, and supply good material and good fit to the young gentlemen who are students in the Royal Military College. The Commandant might be a very good judge, after the clothes are on, as to whether they fitted properly or not, but he necessarily cannot have the information to enable him to judge the quality of the article that business men would have. I do not intend to say more about this. I hope this will be changed, and that the clothing required by the cadets will be provided by contract, after tenders have been called, in the way in which all these supplies in all the departments ought to be provided.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I beg to differ from the hon. leader of the Opposition when he says that the commandant is not a good judge of military clothing. It seems to me that a man who has worn the uniform practically all his life and who must know the cost of military clothing and how it ought to fit, is the very best judge we could possibly have. There has not been to my knowledge a single complaint, and I was surprised at the question of the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster). This is a matter which is not now for the first time under the control of the commandant, but has always been and I think very properly. Since my attention has been called to the matter, I will ask for further information, and if the work can be done as well by contract and the same supervision exercised over it, I should be very glad to have it done in that way.

Mr. HUGHES. I do not know the details in connection with the contract for the clothing, but I do know that if any article of clothing is not considered up to the mark by the cadet on receipt, he has the option of referring it to some authority in the college. I know that the contractors' work is kept up to the standard by this constant supervision.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What are the prices?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have not the prices.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That surely is information we ought to have.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I was not aware that there was any complaint with regard to the clothing as I never heard the slightest complaint.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman has told us that he had to dismiss the man who had it in hand.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I had nothing to do with that.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Here is an item of $150,000 for clothing and necessaries.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That has nothing to do with this vote.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What has it to do with?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. This is the clothing for the permanent force and the active militia purchased from the W. E. Sanford Co. cheaply, and a firm in Montreal.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Was the contract originally given these people?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, last year.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman has made no contract with others?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No.

Mr. HUGHES. I may say that this year, on going into camp, many of the corps did not get their new uniforms until just before they started and the reason was they were not manufactured. Would it not be well for the hon. Minister to take a sufficient sum to his credit now, so that he could have the clothing manufactured and ready for next year. I would take the liberty of drawing his attention to another fact. The new serge which fits very nicely and is good material, becomes very dark in colour, in some instances, when it gets wet. While some of it holds up very nicely, others seem to have a different dye and become darker, and in other instances I have seen them quite faded and bleached. The hon. Minister would do well to carry out the suggestion made by the General to supply a Kharki drill uniform for rough purposes. It is a very cheap and serviceable uniform. I have worn a similar uniform for upwards of eight months constantly during the day and sometimes during the night, and found it very serviceable.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. My hon. friend's suggestions are very valuable indeed. I only wish that we were able to vote more money in order to provide a reserve of clothing. I do hope in the near future we may be able to do so. This year a very large number of militia went into camp somewhat hurriedly, and we had a great deal of difficulty getting clothing ready. My hon. friend will agree that the department did very well under the circumstances, and that although many of the men only got their clothing at the last moment they looked fairly smart as they went into camp. With regard to the colour of the clothing, I think that the manufacturers in Canada had some difficulty in learning the way to make firm colours, but I believe they are able now to make as good cloth here as anywhere. Of course the committee know that all the cloth used in the manufacture of clothing for the militia is made in Canada.

Mr. BERGERON. I want to call attention to contracts given, I think, in 1898. There used to be given to a house in Montreal, which had been the lowest tenderer and had all the plant necessary to do the work cheaply and well, but in 1898 the contracts were given to some political friends of the Government, amongst whom a house in Montreal got a contract at a higher price than the old contractors submitted. Afterwards these people had to get the work done by the old contractors.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. What is the name?

Mr. BERGERON. Louis Boisseau & Co.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. They never made an article of clothing.

Mr. BERGERON. They got the contract.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That was in 1897.

Mr. BERGERON. I may be wrong in the year. Formerly the work used to be done by Shorey & Co., and when the Minister of Militia called for tenders in 1897, this firm tendered at the lowest possible figure expecting to get the work. Mr. Boisseau, however, a retail merchant, through political influence, obtained the contract at a higher price.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No.

Mr. BERGERON. We want to thrash that out. Afterwards Boisseau had to go to Shorey & Co. to get the work done.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Boisseau never did a dollar's worth of work for the department.

Mr. BERGERON. Who did the work for him?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Nobody did it for him. We cancelled the contract, and the work was done by the Sanford Co. and other people. Boisseau failed absolutely to do the work.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That was the question I asked some time ago, and the hon. Minister said that no contract had been cancelled. I asked whether the contractors had been changed, and he said not.

Mr. BERGERON. There is another Boisseau & Co., who belong to Toronto and who furnished cavalry clothing and pantaloons.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That is another firm.

Mr. BERGERON. I am putting the question which I desire the hon. gentleman to answer later on when he makes his explanation. To show how political favour was the ruling motive in giving these contracts in Montreal, the great coats, D. C., 4000, were tendered for by Shorey & Co. at $6.25. They were not given to Shorey & Co., but to a friend of a great politician in Montreal at 49 cents higher, namely, Workman & Co. There was a clear profit on that of $2,500, which has gone I do not know where. More than that, it was understood that whoever tendered for that work would have to buy the cloth from a friend of the party. Mr. Willet, cloth manufacturer at Chambly.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No.

Mr. BERGERON. Yes. These great coats were made of cloth bought from Willet & Co., and the Government paid 49 cents per coat more than the tender of Shorey & Co.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No.

Mr. BERGERON. The very same thing happened up in Ontario where the work used to be done by the firm of Sanford & Co. in Hamilton for $26,000—that is one part of it. The contract with Boisseau was for 4,519 coats. In the Auditor General's Report I do not find the name of Louis Boisseau, of Montreal, but I know he got the contract, because he told me so himself. It may be that he transferred it immediately to another. I know he went to Shorey & Co. to have the work done because he could not do it himself. In calling for tenders the Government always stipulated, in fulfilment of a promise made by them when in opposition, that the firm tendering should not have recourse to the sweating system. This was carried so far that the contract was not given to the lowest tenderer under the pretext that that firm followed the sweating system, but that pretext was not always carried out in the matter of the clothing of the militia, because Workman & Co. do not do their work in any other way. I am told that the Sanford Manufacturing Company also do their work in the same way.

Mr. GIBSON. I would like to say that Mr. Sanford, while alive, asked all his men voluntarily in his pay to join the union and comply with the requirements of the Government, and his work is not done under the sweating system.

Mr. BERGERON. I accept the statement of my hon. friend. But the information I have is that it would be impossible for either the Sanford Manufacturing Company or Workman & Co. to do their work otherwise than under the sweating system. Under the sweating system that exists in Montreal, instead of doing their work in an immense building under one roof, they give it to women and girls in the parishes around Montreal who do the work and bring it back.

Mr. GIBSON. I can state that the men of the Sanford Manufacturing Company in Hamilton are all union men, and there is no sweating system.

Mr. BERGERON. I want to ask the Minister of Militia and Defence to explain how it is that the people of this country pay 49 cents more per coat to have the work done by political friends of the Government, instead of having it done by the old firm.

Mr. BERGERON.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I wish to say to the committee, that so far as Boisseau & Co., in Montreal, are concerned, in every single case in which a contract was made in 1897, their tender was the lowest. There was no sweating clause nor anything else, and I am prepared to bring down the papers and prove it. In every single item of the contract which was entered into with Boisseau at Montreal, he was the lowest tenderer.

Mr. BERGERON. Where is the contract? I have had an order of the House passed for it, and I cannot get it.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I will see that it is brought down. We entered into a contract with Boisseau; in fact, his prices were too low, and he was never able to fulfil his contract. He had to give it up after humbugging us for weeks and weeks, and then we gave his contract to Doull & Gibson, of Montreal, and the Sanford Co., of Hamilton, the next highest tenderers; and the records will prove that what I say is absolutely true. These tenders were advertised for in the public press of this country. As to the tenders asked for in 1898, in the meantime, the Postmaster General had introduced his Bill with reference to a sweating clause in every contract. The Department of Militia and Defence had adopted that as the proper thing to do in the interests of the workmen of this country, and then gave notice to all parties whom we asked to tender that they must tender with the understanding that their contracts were to be based upon the sweating clause. Shorey & Co. tendered, but they distinctly stated in their tender that they would not be bound by the sweating clause, and they wrote me a letter asking me to overlook it, because they said they had a contract with the North-west Mounted Police which committed them to do their work without that sweating clause being included. Now, the sweating clause means this: that the employers of labour shall do all their work within their own factory, and shall not have any of it given to outside parties or to sub-contractors. They must have rooms of a certain size, of a certain number of cubic feet of air for every operator, and the work should be done on the premises. The Sanford Company tendered also. They put in two tenders. They said, as I have stated, in an answer which I gave on the floor of this House recently, that if they secured $67,000 of this contract, they were prepared to come under the sweating clause, promising to construct a factory with larger rooms, and that the work would be done in that way. It turned out that their contract amounted to more than the sum, and we gave the Sanford Co. the largest part of the contract, and so far as I know and believe, they are doing their work in accordance with their contract. With regard to Workman, he was the lowest with regard to certain articles, and he got the contract. Shorey was lower than Workman; he was lower than Sanford; but he absolutely refused to be bound by the sweating clause, and he was out of the race. The same thing happened with regard to one or two others. The hon. gentleman says that the clause of the contract has not been carried out. I want to tell him that if he will give me information to that effect, I promise to make full inquiry into the matter. The hon. gentleman has stated that I have forced contractors to buy cloth from certain people. There is not the shadow of foundation in that, and I challenged him to prove it. Mr. Sanford came to me and spoke to me and I explained to him all these things. So far as Willett is concerned, he is a good manufacturer, but he complained that under the late Government, being a Liberal, he was never able to get a dollar's worth of work; and I said that if Mr. Willett could make his cloth as good and as cheap as anybody else, I should be very glad to see him get a part of the work.

But to say that I used any improper influence, or asked anybody to buy cloth from Mr. Willett at any price, is to say that which is absolutely unfounded; I never did anything of the kind. Now so far as any of these contracts are concerned, if the hon. gentleman wants to investigate them he is at liberty to do so, I am prepared to meet him anywhere and at any time with reference to them. I can assure him, and I can assure this committee that we have accepted the lowest tender under the conditions upon which we asked for tenders, and offered to enter into contracts. But Shorey, by his own action, was out of the race, and I made out contracts with Sanford & Company, of Hamilton, for a part of our goods, and with Workman & Company, of Montreal, for the rest, and at prices which were the lowest available.

Mr. BERGERON. With regard to that sweating system, I think the house of Shorey & Company were more honest than those who got the contract, because they declared that they would not do their work in any other way than by that system, that is, of having it done by their employees in their own houses. Workman & Company have been doing their work in the same way, but they didn't say anything about it.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Will the hon. gentleman make that statement?

Mr. BERGERON. Certainly, I make that statement. I have asked for the papers, and would have proved it before the committee, but I could not get any meeting of the committee. Workman & Company got the contract, and they are doing it in the same way that Shorey is doing his work.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There have been two or three meetings of the Public Accounts Committee, but we could not get any gentlemen to bring forward any work at all.

Mr. BERGERON. Did not my hon. friend try to prevent me from bringing any witnesses before the Public Accounts Committee on these very facts? Now, about the Willett business, this is the information I have.

At one o'clock the Committee rose for recess.

TUESDAY, 11th July, 1899.

At Three o'clock the Committee resumed.

Mr. TAYLOR. There seems to be an increase here. Will the hon. Minister please explain how this money is expended?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I did give an explanation, but I suppose the hon. gentleman would like to have it repeated.

Mr. TAYLOR. I was not here at the time.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Of this amount there is for clothing $125,000, necessaries $15,000, and allowance in lieu of clothing $5,000. The last item means that certain of the regiments, as the 48th Highlanders, of Toronto, take a cash allowance and provide their own uniforms. This is the ordinary vote for clothing, the same as we have had for many years.

Mr. WALLACE. I understood the hon. Minister to say that all the cloth was bought in Canada. I would like then to hear an explanation of the item at page L-48 of the Auditor General's Report of $2,094 paid to H. M. Accountant General for cloth caps, shoes and other similar articles.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There were a small number of purchases made in the old country. It was represented to me that it was necessary to obtain these articles in order to show the manufacturers here what was required. As far as possible we purchase everything in Canada and the quantity of goods purchased in the old country is very trifling, as a whole.

Mr. WALLACE. With an expenditure of $150,000 a year a large quantity of clothing must go out of use every year. I have been informed that the instructions are to destroy all old clothing. This seems to me like a waste of good material which many people in the country would probably like to have. Of course we know it would not do to have Her Majesty's uniform used by men driving wagons, and so on, but surely with some slight change, dyeing cloth or taking the military buttons off the tunic or coat, it would be possible to make use of these discarded articles with advantage.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The instructions are not to destroy the clothing. It is left with the corps for fatigue duty to save the new issue of uniforms.

Mr. WALLACE. I know in one case the instructions were given to destroy the clothes, and I said I would speak to the Minister about it. Another point to which I would call attention is this: A battalion in the county of Renfrew, whose number I cannot recall at the moment, went to camp at Niagara. Going part of the distance by boat, as they did, they arrived at camp on Wednesday night. There is supposed to be 12 days' drill. But in the case of this battalion they would have only three days the first week, and as it would be necessary for them to leave on Friday in order to reach their homes on Saturday, there would be only four days the second week, or a total of 10 days' drill. That seems to me a disadvantage in the training of the men, besides being an improvident use of money in moving a battalion so far.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The hon. gentleman mentioned the matter to me privately, but I think he did not give me the number of the battalion.

Mr. WALLACE. Yes, I gave the hon. Minister the number.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Then I overlooked it. I am not able to give the explanation; but perhaps before this discussion is through I shall be able to inform the hon. gentleman. Of course, the day going and the day coming are necessarily lost. If the drill was reduced to 10 days, that is certainly wrong and should be inquired into.

Mr. BRITTON. When I was out this afternoon, the question arose with reference to Livingston & Bros., whose account appears at L-71 of the Auditor General's Report. This is one of the most respectable firms in the Dominion, and is in a large enough way of business to undertake the most extensive contract for militia clothing. They have always tendered when tenders have been called for by the Dominion Government for the militia clothing, but, unfortunately, they have not been successful. This account is not for clothing paid for by the Government but for clothing paid for by the cadets themselves. Up to 1897-98 the work was done by a person named Creegan whose name appears in the accounts of work done for the battery. But there was some dissatisfaction with the clothing and the change was desired by the cadets themselves, which change was brought about by Col. Kitson and Col. McGill, the adjutant of the R. M. C. This work was done by Livingston & Bros. There are two items on the page. One is work actually paid for by the cadets and the other will be paid for by them. The rules of the Royal Military College require that a deposit be made by the cadet to cover his expenses, including his clothing. Most of their clothing, dress and undress is paid for by the cadets themselves. At page L-49 there is a small item to Livingston & Bros. of $17.50. I suppose that was because the goods were required in a hurry or because they could not be furnished by Mr. Creegan. The items to which I first referred show that goods have been purchased from Messrs. Livingston & Bros. to the extent, at least of giving them a trial. This is not necessarily to reflect on a man who was in the employ of the Government and doing the work prior to that time. He is still doing some work, I believe, in connection with the battery.

Mr. TAYLOR. How is it that the Minister asks for $150,000, when the actual expenditure last year under this head, as shown by the Auditor General's Report was $87,343.46?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am told that the item for 1897-98 was lower than the present, that it was only $90,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Is the annual expenditure for clothing and necessaries $150,000?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think it has not been as high as that always. When there is a drill of the whole force, more clothing is required. If we have an annual drill, we cannot get along with less than $150,000.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How do the prices paid for clothing compare with those paid in 1892-93-94-95?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have a price list here, showing the prices paid for clothing and necessaries each fiscal year since the 1st July, 1891. The first item is ankle boots, and the prices are as follows:—1890-91, $3.10; 1891-92, $3.37; 1892-93. $3.37; 1893-94. $1.74; 1894-95. $2.50; 1895-96. $2.50; 1896-97, $1.95; 1897-98. $2.45; 1898-99, $2.25.

Mr. WALLACE. Is that of the same kind?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am told that the standard of goods is very much higher now than it was a few years ago.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Who has the contract for boots?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. A gentleman named Hodgson, in Vankleek Hill, in Prescott County.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How was the contract let?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. By tender, after advertisement.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Was that the lowest tender?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes. I will read the statement, which is as follows:—

Mr. BERGERON. Is the price paid for great-coats not 49 cents higher than the Shorey tender?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. This is the lowest contract that was ever made. I will explain to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) that Mr. Shorey did not tender, because he would not include in his tender what we required, sweating cloth. I have the clause of the contract here, and, if the hon. gentleman cares to have it read, I will read it.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. gentleman promised to bring down all these tenders. Where is the cloth for the cavalry frocks made?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. In Canada. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Rosamond) who sits upon that side of the House, has made some of it, and he makes some very good cloth.

Mr. TISDALE. How long do these contracts for clothing run?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. One year now.

Mr. BERGERON. Where does the cloth come from?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. My hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) seems a great deal worried over the cloth. My hon. friend who sits behind (Mr. Rosamond), or his mill, makes a considerable portion of it, and it is very excellent cloth. Willett & Co. make a portion of it.

Mr. HENDERSON. What is the difference in the quality of these brooms that were purchased?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That is a question I was asking the hon. gentleman last night, and I know as much about the quality as the hon. gentleman did then.

Mr. HENDERSON. Brooms may be bought anywhere from 10 cents to 30 cents each.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The hon. gentleman did not know that last night.

Mr. HENDERSON. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon, because I am quite sure the question of brooms did not come up last night.

Mr. BERGERON. What did the hon. Minister say about mufflers a moment ago?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The hon. gentleman's friends paid 67½ cents, and we pay 52½ cents.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think that it is scarcely fair of the hon. Minister of Militia that he should buy such a poor article. I am sure the former Government were more considerate of the comfort of the men.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have been informed by my officers, who have been in the department for many years, that the goods we purchase now are very much better than they were three or four years ago.

Mr. BERGERON. That is the result of the National Policy, I suppose.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Stable brushes, hand brushes—

Mr. TISDALE. A fair criticism on the whole question, to make it worth anything, is, of course, as to the question of quality. I take it for granted that the hon. Minister has consulted with and acted through the officers delegated by the department. They settle the quality, and I do not understand how the same gentleman can say that these goods are so much better than goods purchased formerly, when they passed them. I do not go with the hon. Minister on that point, and he will permit me to express my doubt upon it. I think the department, under both Administrations, has endeavoured to get a standard of quality to see whether goods are cheap at a certain price ten years ago and now, and that in order to tell this, it would require a very considerable mass of information. At the same time, I congratulate the hon. Minister that, as a rule, the prices have not been increased, yet during the short time that he has been buying goods there were very material variations. We find that the prices in 1899, as a rule, though not always, were higher than in 1897-98. The great point in the whole question is, that as to clothing and shoes. In all these small things there is no end of people dealing in them, and, therefore, as long as there is not a material increase, it would seem as if the hon. Minister and his officers had endeavoured to properly discharge their duty. There is a material difference in the price of the boots and shoes.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have been comparing the same classes.

Mr. TISDALE. There is no such difference that one would be nearly $3 and the other $1. I congratulate the Minister on being able to show that he has not in all cases made increases, but in some cases has made increases. The policy which the late Government adopted and persevered in for several years was to get these articles made in Canada, if we could get them as cheaply and of as high a quality as the imported articles; and in order to encourage manufacturers, we let the contract for a term of years, not always by public advertisement, but by a system of circular to those who appeared competent to do the work. I am glad to learn from the Minister that the policy which we fought for and for which we were severely criticised has been adopted by himself and is working satisfactorily. Among those who supply the materials, I venture to say are the same people who supplied them to us.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, they are largely from Sanford's.

Mr. TISDALE. It is a great satisfaction to me to know that our policy in this respect, which was really based on the principle of the National Policy, has been justified at the hands of the hon. gentleman.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I desire to call the attention of the House for a moment to an incident which took place last night in which I am personally interested. This morning, when I looked at the morning papers to see what took place in this House, I read that the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) had stated that the Messrs. Bate "had bought and furnished the house in which the Premier lives." Hardly believing that the hon. gentleman could have been guilty of making such a statement, for which there is not the slightest shadow of foundation I got an advance copy of "Hansard" to ascertain exactly what were the words which the hon. gentleman had made use of; and this is the way he spoke:

Why are Bate & Sons selected?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Somebody had to be selected.

Mr. TAYLOR. They were selected because, when the Liberal party held a convention in Ottawa, I read from that little red bible, which I have in my hand, that after Mr. Longley had moved that famous resolution Mr. H. A. Bate, secretary of the Ottawa Liberal Association, came forward and hung upon the platform a banner in which was inscribed: "Laurier expects every man to do his duty." That is why Bate & Sons have been selected. They live in Ottawa; they are merchants; they are strong Liberals, and they are shrewd business men. When the Government came into power they thought it would be a first-rate thing to pay this Government that compliment and receive all the patronage. They purchased a house and presented it to the right hon. Prime Minister of this country, and, therefore, this Government are under obligations to repay Bate & Sons.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Where did you get the information that a house was presented to the right hon. Prime Minister?

Mr. TAYLOR. It was common rumour in Ottawa, and I believe the facts are as stated.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think that is a very improper statement. I may say it is not a fact.

Mr. TAYLOR. I make the statement, and I will let the right hon. Prime Minister contradict it. I say that they bought and furnished a house, and that the right hon. Prime Minister lives in it. There may have been some others who contributed towards it, but Bate & Sons, being shrewd business men, knew that it would place this Government under an obligation by paying this compliment to the Prime Minister as they have done.

Now, I may say at once that I do not feel called upon to contradict anything that has been said by the hon. gentleman; but in order to show to what levity gentlemen on the other side of the House can descend, and how they can utter absolutely foundationless accusations, the House will pardon me if I ask them to follow me into my private affairs. In the spring of 1897, I bought a House in the city of Ottawa. I bought it from the Leslie Estate. The price agreed upon, if I remember rightly, was $9,500. I paid down $5,000 cash, and gave a mortgage on the balance for $4,500. I bought the house in the name of my wife, because, being poor, and well knowing that if I died, I would have hardly anything to leave to her, I thought it would be right to give her a home. The amount paid cash I myself raised upon a note, which has not yet been altogether extinguished. That is all there is about it. The house has been furnished by myself, with the exception of a few gifts which were given to my wife by some of her lady friends. That is all there is to this transaction. For the accusation of the hon. gentleman there is not a shadow of foundation. The Messrs. Bate have never furnished nor bought a house for me.

Mr. TAYLOR. I accept the hon. gentleman's statement; but I am sure he has not lived in Ottawa without having heard, as I have heard from friends of his own, sitting on that side of the House, and from many other responsible men in Ottawa, whose word for truth and veracity I would take as soon as I would that of any gentleman in this country, that what I stated last night was the fact. The statement being common rumour, I heard it time and time again, particularly since the contract for these Yukon supplies was given to Messrs. Bate & Sons without tender, and at these extraordinary prices, and also since that firm were given the binder twine, belonging to the people of this country, at about one-third of what it was sold for. This is the statement that is prevalent in Ottawa, and I think the hon. gentleman ought to be under a compliment to me for having brought it to his attention publicly, so that he might give it a flat denial, as he has done to-day.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. TAYLOR. Hon. gentlemen may laugh, but you cannot go down street and ask any merchant in town without hearing him make the same statement that I made here last night. When the hon. leader of the Government sat on this side of the House, he and his friends behind him charged the late lamented Sir John A. Macdonald with having, through his wife, accepted a trinket from the then Sir Donald Smith, who was at that time, as he is to-day, connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and who saw fit to make Lady Macdonald a present of a gold necklace. Not only was that charge hurled against Sir John A. Macdonald, but when the people of this country made Sir Hector Langevin a present, the Prime Minister stood in his place and declared that no public man occupying the position of a Minister of the Crown should receive a gift from his friends without having their names made public and laid on the Table of the House. What do we see to-day? Sir Donald Smith, now Lord Strathcona, is a civil servant of this Government, representing Canada in England, and is more closely associated with the Canadian Pacific Railway than he was then; and what does he telegraph to this country? "I will head the subscription list for a present to the Prime Minister with $10,000, and, if necessary, I will make it $20,000." Will the hon. gentleman take the same stand now that he took when he charged in this House that the testimonial to Sir Hector Langevin was made up by contractors and others who had favours to get from the Government? The hon. Prime Minister has now contradicted the rumour that is prevalent. I thought I could look into the gallery and see one gentleman who told me that Bate & Sons were interested in getting up a house completely furnished for the Prime Minister of this country.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Name.

Mr. TAYLOR. I could name a dozen. The hon. gentleman says there is no truth in the rumour, and I accept his statement.

The PRIME MINISTER. I beg to say one word more. The rumour that has been current in the streets of Ottawa was that the house has been offered to me, but the truth is that I would not accept it.

Mr. BERGERON. Now that this matter is over, and I accept fully the statement of the Prime Minister—I am sorry the matter has occurred—I want to say one word about the clothing. The hon. Minister of Militia seemed to be annoyed a few minutes ago when I asked him if the clothing was all of Canadian produce and made in Canada. I believe my hon. friend was a member of the House some years ago when an investigation was held by the Public Accounts Committee into the clothing made for the militia, and when every possible effort was made by hon. gentlemen opposite, who were then in Opposition, to prevent the Department of Militia and Defence using any clothing made in Canada. They brought cloth from England, and from every manufacturer in this country, to show the difference; but it was proven to the satisfaction of the inspectors of the department and others that the cloth made in Canada was as good, if not better, than the cloth imported from Great Britain. Even though it has cost power to the Liberal-Conservative party, there is a satisfaction in knowing that at last hon. gentlemen opposite have changed their views, and that they now admit, by giving the contract in this country, that the cloth made here is as good, if not better, than what we imported, and just as cheap. I want to ask my hon. friend if he has fulfilled his promise made to me this morning to bring down the different tenders of 1897 and 1898?

I may explain, in order to show why we ask these questions. I made a motion for papers, and the return in answer is an illustration of how we are treated. What I asked for and what the House ordered was the tenders for the Department of Militia and Defence since 1896. I have accounts of Boisseau, Laliberté, Paquet, Shorey & Co., and others. I would like to know, by the way, if the Paquet mentioned here is the Senator of that name. But the tenders I asked for are not here, and I am reduced to ask the Minister as a favour—which I hope he will grant, but which perhaps he will refuse—to have these papers brought down. A member of Parliament is reduced to ask as a favour from a Minister papers which the House has ordered to have laid on the Table. If I get the papers, I shall be able to show that the lowest tenders were not accepted in every case. The hon. Minister may plead that the lowest tenderer worked under the sweating system. There is not one of these concerns, the Sanford Company or the Workman Company, or any of these having contracts that do not do their work under what my hon. friend calls the sweating system. It is the ordinary system and they have no other; it would be almost impossible for them to have another. Instead of the work being done in the factory, those who do the work for Workman & Co. in Montreal are doing it in their own homes. Why does not the hon. Minister agree with the right hon. Premier, who has given a contract to this firm, Shorey & Co., for clothing for the North-west Mounted Police. Messrs. Shorey having stated openly that if the department insisted on the work being done in any other way than the regular way they could not take the contract.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. My hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) is a very anxious inquirer; I hope to be able to satisfy him. First, I may refer to what was said by my predecessor in office, the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale). It is a satisfaction in a debate of this kind to have an hon. gentleman who is fair and at the same time knows something of what he is talking about. Though he was at the head of the department for but a short time, the hon. gentleman has left his impression on the department in the work he did in establishing standards for the cloth and the character of the clothing—standards which, possibly, were too high, but the establishment of them has been of great advantage to the department. I may tell the hon. gentleman, and also my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron), that they take too much credit to their political friends for having inaugurated the system of purchasing as much as possible the militia clothing in Canada. Alexander Mackenzie, as far back as 1876, began to work on that line. It is the Liberal policy that has since been carried out by succeeding Administrations to such a large extent. As to the character of the clothing, I have great pleasure in telling the hon. member for South Norfolk and I give him credit to a considerable extent for it—that the character of the clothing is improved and is improving, so that to-day, I believe we can manufacture in Canada as good clothing as can be made in England, and certainly, if the duty were added, as cheap as it can be imported from England. We discussed the question of the three-year contracts in 1896. I have no hesitation in saying, after three years' experience, that there was a great deal of force in the statement the hon. gentleman made at that time, that when you have secured the services of a reliable contractor and that contractor has become familiar with the work. It is best, wherever it can be properly done in the public interest, to continue the work with that contractor. But I think that object may be gained without entering into three-years contracts.

Now, as to the observations of my hon. friend from Beauharnois, who still persists, notwithstanding what I said before recess, in saying that I did not give the contract to the lowest tenderer. I repeat that we called for tenders upon certain known conditions. Among those who responded were Messrs. Shorey & Company. But they distinctly said that, if the department insisted upon enforcing what is known as the sweating clause, their tender was not to be considered. So they were not tenderers, and I insist that we gave the contract to the lowest tenderer. I do not see how I can make my statement plainer.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not deny what the hon. Minister said; but I want to tell him that the parties to whom he gave the contract are doing the same as Shorey declared they would do. But the other parties did not say they would do it. That is all the difference and the hon. Minister should be aware of it.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The hon. gentleman is misinformed. The W. E. Sanford Manufacturing Company are doing this work literally under the provisions of the sweating clause. They are not farming out the work, but are doing it in their own factory with members of the union, and under their own direct supervision. The officers of my department have inspected their building and they inform me that that is the fact. Moreover, the contractors cannot draw a dollar until they have made an affidavit that the work has been done in accordance with the provisions of the sweating clause of the contract. Now, after this statement made by me upon the floor of Parliament, will the hon. gentleman say that the Sanford Company are doing the work in the same way as the Shorey Company said they would do it. He knows that the Sanford firm is a reputable firm.

Mr. BERGERON. If the hon. Minister had said before what he is saying now, I probably would not have said what I did say. The information the hon. Minister gave this morning was that there was a question of the Sanford firm's contract being over $65,000, and if it did not exceed that amount they could not undertake to do it under the provisions of the sweating clause.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. My hon. friend did not follow me. I did say that there was a question as to the amount of the contract; but it is ascertained that, at the prices offered, their contract would run considerably over $70,000. So we gave them the contract, and they took it under the sweating clause. I know my hon. friend did not catch that part of the explanation or he would not have made the statement he did. Now, with reference to the other firm, which, no doubt, is more obnoxious to my hon. friend—

Mr. BERGERON. I am not talking politics. I am talking for the good of the department.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The other firm is that of Workman & Company, and I am informed by my officers that that firm comply literally with the provisions of the contract. I have not been there myself, and the statement I make is made upon the faith of the report made by the officers of the department.

Mr. BERGERON. I will not detain the hon. gentleman another moment. His words are on "Hansard" and before the Supply Bill is passed, we shall know whether his officers have posted him correctly or not. I have information one way from parties whom I have reason to trust, and he has information the other way from his officers.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. My hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron), I am sure, would not wish to injure any man in this House or out of it. But I venture to point out to him how careful he should be in making such statements about firms of this character. No greater blow could be struck at the credit of these firms than to make such a statement on the floor of Parliament. He has already said if he had understood me in the sense he now understands me, he would not have made the statements which he has made since we resumed this sitting. It is only fair to make this statement in justice to my hon. friend: The W. E. Sanford Company has done work outside of their contract. We wanted clothing in a hurry to get ready for the annual drill, and the Sanford Company said they were prepared to furnish it if we would allow them to do as they had been accustomed to do their work in the past. The amount was not a large one, and this concession was made. My hon. friend may have heard of that being done.

Mr. BERGERON. That may be.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. But I do not think that would apply to the Workman Company, because I think they have had no work—certainly very little, if any—outside of their regular contract.

Now, my hon. friend has asked me for tenders. If I said I would bring down tenders, what I meant was that I would bring down a statement of tenders. I never saw the tenders in my life. This is the system adopted: There is an independent board of officers over whom I have no control, who open the tenders. The clerk writes down the name of each tenderer and fills in the amount of each article for which he tenders. The lowest tender is then marked with a red line and the whole schedule is brought to me. I invariably approve of the lowest tender, unless there is some good reason—failure in former work or something of that kind. I have here the schedule showing the tenders for clothing for 1897-98. I am very much surprised, if my hon. friend moved for papers, that this was not brought down. I will make inquiry and ascertain the facts. The names of the tenderers are as follows:—Mark Workman, Montreal; Gillespie, Ainsley & Dixon, Toronto; W. G. Reid, the Tunstead Hat Company, Hamilton; W. E. Sanford Manufacturing Company, Hamilton; Zepherin Paquet, Quebec; G. Marsonais, O. J. Monday & Co., Montreal; Wm. Vincent, Quebec; Chalcroft, Simpson & Co., Toronto; L. H. Boisseau, Montreal; H. Shorey & Co., Montreal; W. R. Johnston & Co., Toronto; John Calder & Co., Hamilton; George Blanche, Montreal; P. E. Caron & frères, Hull; Doull & Gibson, Montreal; A. S. Campbell & Co., Montreal; J. B. Laliberté, Quebec; that is for furs, I suppose. Now, I find that last year the tenders for clothing were the following:—L. H. Boisseau was the lowest for artillery tunics at $5.03. There is the original paper, initialled by me, and I will send it to my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron). The next tender was that of the Sanford Co., Hamilton, $5.60; the next that of John Calder & Co., Hamilton, $5.65; Mark Workman, $5.70, and

Mr. BORDEN (King's).

Vincent, $7.25. Boisseau tendered for engineers' tunics at $5.03. There are the tenders of Mark Workman, Sanford and Paquet. For infantry tunics Boisseau was the lowest tenderer at $4.97; the next is that of the Sanford Company at $5.17. For rifle tunics Boisseau was the lowest at $4.97, and the Sanford Company came next at $5.30. Boisseau failed to fulfil his contract, and I went to Sanford, and Doull & Gibson, the next highest. Boisseau never made a dollar's worth of goods, and gave us a great deal of trouble. I repeat what I said before, that in every single case the contract was made with the lowest tenderer, and, when he failed, we gave it to the next lowest tenderer. That has been the invariable rule followed by the department since I came into it.

Mr. BERGERON. These statements, I am sure, are satisfactory to the hon. Minister as much as to us. I want to ask how the department has failed to comply with an Order of the House in not putting in all these tenders.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am very sorry, and I shall inquire into it.

Mr. DOMVILLE. How long have tenders been in the hands of the board of officers? When was that instituted?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It has been the system ever since I have been in the department. I am not sure how long it has been in existence, but it has been the practice for some time.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it Senator Paquet who has tendered and who has sold a great deal of goods to the department?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am not able to tell my hon. friend that.

Mr. TAYLOR. I want to draw the attention of the hon. Minister to a statement he made here last night in connection with the supplies furnished by Bate & Sons. He made the statement, if I understood him correctly, that flour, corned beef and oil were bought at a price delivered at Vancouver. I hold in my hand the original bills of lading for goods shipped by Bate & Sons on the 5th of May: Way-bill 6239, car No. 23760, 70 cases of corned beef—freight on corned beef, Montreal to Ottawa, $10.04, making a total freight charge on that car of $315.26. On the second invoice there is a charge for freight on 42 cases more of corned beef, $209.17. This is charged for in the invoice, so that the Minister has misled the House, and he has made a statement that requires looking into.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The hon. gentleman will be greatly relieved in his mind to know that we bought, outside of Bate & Sons, 42 cases of compressed beef in Montreal. That is the explanation.

Mr. TAYLOR. There are 42 cases, and there are 70 cases in the invoices, which appear as having been shipped by Bate & Sons. The 42 cases are on the bill of lading. The department had shipped some cases of goods in H. N. Bate & Sons' car, and this memorandum appears upon one of the bills of lading :

Shipped in H. N. Bate & Sons' car. No requisition given for freight paid by the department to the railway.

These goods were bought by the department outside, but they were shipped with Bate & Sons' goods. Bate & Sons paid the freight on them, and charged it in their bill, the account making $226.69. There is a reduction made of $188.98, it is proper to say, but the invoice gives $226.64 as the gross sum.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am informed by my officers that 70 cases of beef were bought at the last moment to replace a similar quantity of pork which had been ordered from the Hudson's Bay Company, and which order was cancelled. This was bought to replace the pork, and was sent from here. That is the only portion of the meat upon which we paid freight.

Mr. BRITTON. If Bate & Sons paid the freight, why should they not charge the Government with it ?

Provisions and supplies..... $112,500

Mr. BERGERON. There is an increase of about $15,000. What is the explanation ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The explanation is, that we found the amount voted last year rather insufficient. It is possible that this vote may not be all used, but it was thought better to take the vote, as we are bringing back a portion of the Yukon force. As I explained to the committee yesterday, the number of the permanent force had fallen below 800 eighteen months ago, and it has been slightly increased in order to keep up the strength of the schools and make them thoroughly efficient. The object is to provide for remounts, forage and forage allowances, fuel, light, hospital, vegetables, water rates, postage rates, barrack-room furniture, and so forth. I have a detailed statement, if the hon. gentleman would like to hear it. This vote was expended last year as follows :—

Mr. BORDEN (King's).

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. Minister took a considerable time a few moments ago to explain to the House the effect the National Policy was having in making a reduction in the price of goods. Notwithstanding the fact that the militia does not require a larger amount of supplies, the amount of money that the hon. gentleman is spending is increased by $15,000 this year. I find by the Auditor General's Report, L-53, that the Aikenhead Hardware Co., of Toronto, supplied goods to the value of $2,152.43, amongst which was a lawn-mower for the squadron of cavalry at Toronto, for which $145 was charged. There is another lawn-mower at $17. I would like the hon. Minister to explain why $145 should be paid for a lawn-mower.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I suppose it is a mowing machine.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then, I am prepared to say that you can purchase the best horse-power mower for $80. The hon. member for Victoria, B.C. (Mr. Prior) made inquiries as to the value of that article, and he says that you can purchase a hand-mower for from $7 to $8, if these goods had been purchased by tender. This firm also charged for nine stable buckets $22.50, or $2.50 for each stable bucket. Curry-combs were charged for at 48 cents apiece.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I can only say that those purchases, which are made without tender, and a large number are made by tender, are made upon the requisition of the officer in charge of the depot to the head officer here, if the prices are, in his opinion, fair and just. I never see these papers; they come here, and go through the office in due form; authority is given, and they are returned. The system we have now is precisely the system that has been in operation since confederation, except that there has been a change in the parties who supplied the goods. The prices will be found to be quite as good, if not better, than those formerly paid. I shall go carefully into the whole system, however, and if improper charges have been made, I shall take steps to have the money refunded, if there is any way to have that done. I say that candidly and frankly. I know nothing of these people; I never saw them. They were recommended to me as reputable, honest, decent tradespeople, and I believe they are such; but I shall take some trouble to inquire more particularly as to these people and the prices.

Mr. TAYLOR. The fact that the Minister is asking for a very much larger sum for the same supplies proves that he is paying exorbitant prices for them. I presume the practice is for him to give his officer a list of names of people from whom he is to buy supplies, and the officer simply goes to them and pays them their prices. Aikenhead & Co. furnished fourteen kegs of horseshoes for $90, and six boxes of horseshoe nails for $28.35; whereas anybody knows that you can buy horseshoes at $2.25 a keg, and horseshoe nails at $4. The hon. gentleman must be paying extravagant prices when he is asking $15,000 more than was asked last year, and probably $25,000 more than the Conservative Government administered this department for. The fact is that this Government is giving away the public money to political favourites by purchasing supplies from them and allowing them to charge what prices they see fit.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There is a standing order that officers shall obtain two or more tenders for all goods, and in addition to that they are required to certify that the prices are fair and just before the purchase is authorized.

Mr. TAYLOR. I see that on the invoice. It is a rubber stamp.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I do not know that a rubber stamp makes it any less binding.

Mr. HUGHES. I wish to call the Minister's attention to the fact that the terms used in item 109 are not correct military language, because the permanent corps are a part of the militia. I also wish to call his attention to the unsanitary condition of some of the barracks; in fact, the whole system of buildings is antediluvian. In regard to the horses, in the recent staff ride of three days through the Niagara peninsula, a large number of the troopers' horses gave out, whereas the private horses taken from livery stables stood the ride a great deal better. The horses of the permanent corps do not appear able to stand these hard rides as well as the ordinary horses of the country. I hope the Minister will inquire into that.

Mr. TYRWHITT. My experience with regard to the horses has been the very reverse. I have bought and sold hundreds of horses, and my experience is that the horses of the permanent corps are in first-class condition.

Mr. HUGHES. That may be true, so long as they are prancing around in their own little menage; but I am stating what actually occurred.

Militia Department—

Transport and freight..... $36,000

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The details are as follows: Transport at headquarters, district staff officers, and officers of the permanent corps on inspection and other duties, annual drill excepted, $12,000; militia attending schools of instruction, $10,000; freight charges on military stores, $18,000. The total expenditure in 1895-96 was $37,483. In 1896-97, $43,997; and in 1897-98, $39,927. I may say that the work in this branch is increasing.

but we are not asking for an increased vote because under an arrangement made a couple of years ago, we have reduced the cost of transport 33 per cent ; so that we are able to do one-third more work with the same amount of money.

Mr. HUGHES. I wish to protest against the staff college course at Kingston being continued as it is at present conducted. While the men from the civil service are as a rule thoroughly capable men, many of them are not by any means superior to the rest of the officers of the militia force ; and while an officer in the civil service of Canada may be able to spend four months at Kingston, it is out of the question for an ordinary volunteer officer to give up his time and business for that length of time.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Might I suggest whether in the opinion of the hon. gentleman the staff course could not be divided ?

Mr. HUGHES. The suggestion I was going to make was that the department should furnish to the militia officers of the country the books that would enable them to read up the course instead of being compelled to attend the college for four months ; and they could wind up with a week or two at Kingston. The history of the British army and of all campaigns the world over proves that unless a man has actual genius in him, no amount of staff work will make him a soldier.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. When the suggestion was made that a staff course should be given in connection with the Royal Military College, it seemed to me a desirable move in the way of putting the college to practical use. There is a great deal of force in what my hon. friend says ; but, at the same time, I would be hardly justified in calling the course a failure without seeing whether some modification could not be made by which it could be continued.

Mr. WALLACE. Will the Minister give us some explanation of the large items on page L-64 of the Auditor General's Report. For instance, what is the meaning of the payment of $7,560 to the Grand Trunk Railway ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That is the transport of stores from one point to another, and also the transport of troops for their annual drill.

Mr. WALLACE. I suppose that the cost of the transport of troops would come under the head either of annual drill or pay and allowances ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, there is an item of $12,000 for the transport of the headquarters and district staff officers and officers of the permanent corps at inspection and other duties, annual drill excepted. We pay their transport both ways.

Mr. WALLACE. But here are a number of items, Canadian Pacific Railway, $2,716 ; Canadian Pacific Navigation Company, $578 ; Grand Trunk Railway, $7,560 ; Kingston and Pembroke Railway Company, $289 ; Intercolonial Railway, $1,540, and so on.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have already given the item $12,000. There is also militia attending schools of instruction, $10,000—that would be partly paid to the railways ; freight charges, military school, $18,000—that also would be partly paid to the railways.

Mr. WALLACE. At page L-61-62-63, Auditor General's Report, we have charges of thousands of dollars attending schools of instruction. But you have there the names of the persons who are paid, so these can hardly be included in the items the hon. Minister has given.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There is an item, "Attending schools of instruction," $10,000.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. I see the right hon. First Minister in his place, and I desire to ask him a question with regard to this item No. 111. But before asking the question, I may say that I sometimes get an opportunity of agreeing with the Government and with the First Minister—and this is one of the opportunities. I fully agree with the First Minister's views, as expressed last night, with regard to the withdrawal of troops from the Yukon. I am sure that public sentiment will support the Government even if they determine to keep the whole force now in the Yukon in that territory. The Minister of Militia stated that half the force would be withdrawn. I think that before such action is taken there should be the grave consideration, and I am quite in accord on this point with the views of the right hon. First Minister. If it were a question of sending the troops into the Yukon at the present time, the number might be considered, but the troops are there, and they should be kept in that country until the various centres are furnished with local or municipal police, and with the equipment for municipal government the same as in eastern cities. The presence of a permanent force in that country has, to my mind, done a world of good. As to the Mounted Police, we all know that they are an efficient body. But Major Walsh is a Mounted Police man, and, very possibly, he would like to have the credit of all the kudos accruing in connection with the government of that country for the Mounted Police. Notwithstanding his opinion, I think the Government are acting wisely in deliberating before they withdraw the permanent force as a protective force from that country. The Americans have troops along the international boundary. I am told that they are sending troops there to-day; and I think it would be wise to keep the permanent force there, for unpleasant circumstances may arise that may require the co-operation of the forces of Canada and the United States in the preservation of order.

Now I desire to ask the right hon. the First Minister a question with regard to a statement made to-day in Washington in connection with the Mounted Police. If he will give me a reply, I think it will be appreciated by the public of this country. I have received the following telegram:—

(Washington special to New York.)

New York, July 11.—The "World" says an unofficial intimation has reached the State Department that the Canadian Government intends to send to the Porcupine region, in Alaska, a body of mounted police to maintain order. If this proves correct the administration will meet the situation by ordering troops to Pyramid Harbour.

I have also a despatch from Washington saying that the British Embassy does not credit the story. I do not know whether the First Minister can give me a full reply from the fact that this refers to a removal of the Mounted Police under the direction of the Yukon officials, and he may not yet be aware of such a movement. But I find on the map that this Porcupine River and region, no doubt the part of country alluded to, is about 300 miles north of Dawson. It is probable that such a move might have been made by the officials in the Yukon, and I would like to ask the First Minister whether his department, which, as I understand, has charge of the Mounted Police, has any information as to this proposed movement. I cannot, I may say, understand why a movement of troops or police away north of Dawson should cause the Americans to send troops to Pyramid Harbour, which is in another direction. Perhaps my right hon. friend can explain.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I think I can give my hon. friend the information he asks for. There is in that part of the country the Porcupine River and also Porcupine Creek. Porcupine Creek is a tributary of the Klabeela, which discharges in Chilcat River, at about five miles from Pyramid Harbour. We have had that post for about two years. Porcupine Creek is in that direction, at a short distance from the post. We have no intention, at the present time, of fortifying the post we have already there. I believe we have ten men at that point. There are some mining camps on the Porcupine Creek. There are two creeks, the junction of which form Porcupine Creek. Our American friends have called one Bryan and the other McKinley. We believe, so far as we have information, that the force we have in that vicinity is quite sufficient to maintain law and order at that place. Our force is on the Dalton Trail at a place known as Dalton's Cache, only a few miles—it may be one or two miles—from Dalton's Cache. We have been told that the American authorities intend to send a force to Pyramid Harbour. If it were not breaking a state secret, I would say that, for my part, I would strongly object that the Americans should send any force into that disputed territory under existing circumstances, so long as the question of permanent boundary has not been settled.

Mr. WALLACE. We have not yet had the explanation from the Minister of Militia as to these items. If the hon. gentleman will give us some detail, for instance, this item of $7,560 for the Grand Trunk Railway, that will be sufficient.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am informed that that includes about 10,000 items—clothing, military stores, boots and shoes, blacking brushes, blacking—I can hardly go through the list; I think my hon. friend (Mr. Wallace) can hardly be serious in asking me to give information of that kind.

Mr. WALLACE. I do not think the hon. Minister heard my question.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have already told the hon. gentleman what the vote was for.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman told me before that he did not know.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I told him nothing of the kind.

Mr. WALLACE. I am sure the hon. gentleman does not mean to be rude—

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I will read if the hon. gentleman will permit me—

Mr. WALLACE. The Minister does not understand—

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. All right, the hon. gentleman does not want to have his question answered.

Mr. WALLACE. If it were parliamentary, I would say that that was an impertinence. I should be quite in order in saying it is another of those ebullitions of courtesy in which the hon. gentleman sometimes indulges. I do not think I am asking too much in asking for the information I have suggested—some details as to this item of $7,560 to the Grand Trunk Railway. The facts will be an indication as to what services are rendered by the railway companies and other transportation companies, and will be, so far as I am concerned, satisfactory. But the hon. Minister goes to his secretary and comes back with a reply, which, to say the least, is not very polite. But everybody has his own opinion of politeness, and we must let the Minister judge for himself. He said that this item was for blacking brushes and other things. That makes it still worse, in my opinion. I understood him to say that these items were for transporting the permanent corps from one headquarters to another. I presume that where there is an exchange of the corps at Quebec and Toronto, each would not take its own supplies, but would leave the supplies where they had been tendered for and delivered. So, there could be no charge for freight. Then we know that the railways carry the personal baggage of passengers free.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have no desire to appear impatient; but I think the hon. gentleman and the committee will overlook anything of that kind when they recollect that I have been here since ten o'clock last night, that I have not had a wink of sleep and have been listening, or trying to listen, to the questions that the hon. gentlemen have plied me with.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman was absent many times.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) does not accept my statement, I cannot help it. I have told the hon. gentleman that $12,000 of this vote is for the transport of headquarters and district staff officers and officers of the permanent corps on inspection and other duties, annual drill excepted. Does the hon. gentleman accept that?

Mr. WALLACE. Yes.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Another statement which I make for the third time is that $10,000 of this vote is for the active militia officers, non-commissioned officers and men going to the headquarters to their respective battalions, to the respective schools and depots and back home again. Thus the hon. gentleman has got $22,000. $18,000 of it is for freight charges on military stores. Military stores are made up of camp equipment of various kinds which are used by the military, and it is to pay freight charges.

Mr. WALLACE. Do not the contractors supplying goods deliver them where they are required free of charge?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. In nearly all cases they do.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like to ask the hon. Minister to explain an item that appears on page L-59 and 60 of the Auditor

Mr. WALLACE.

General's Report. I find that there is a charge of $10,012.58 for travelling expenses of officers, made up in part of hotel bills at $5 per day. I see the following account:—

Major Robert Cartwright, two months' pay on removal to headquarters, $466.66; travelling expenses, $125.40..... $592 06

Who is Major Cartwright, and where was he removed from? Is he the son of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright)?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes. I think he was stationed at London before he was appointed to his present position as Assistant Adjutant General.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is not the sum of $10,000 of the money of the people a great deal to have been paid for the travelling expenses and removal of officers? No wonder the hon. Minister is asking for an increased vote.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have not asked for it.

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, there is an increase of $10,000 this year. You asked for $30,000 last year, and you are asking for $40,000 this year.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I had to take a vote in the supplementary Estimates.

Mr. TAYLOR. Here is one account:

Travelling expenses, $87.10; hotel allowance at Montreal, 10 days, $50; cab-hire at Ottawa, $18.50; travelling expenses of man servant, $85.20; board of horses at Montreal, $6.50; board of groom, $7.50; on account of expenses of trip to England, $500..... $954 80

There is $10,000 of the people's money asked for militia purposes that does not reach the militia at all, but is simply given to officials to travel around the country.

Mr. WALLACE. Is that account of expenses to which the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) has referred for a trip coming from as well as going to England?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No.

Mr. WALLACE. Who is the money for?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. General Gascoigne. This is for his return to England.

Mr. WALLACE. Can the hon. Minister tell us how an eight or ten-day trip across the Atlantic would cost $500?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. These gentlemen travel in state, you know. He took his family and servants.

Mr. WALLACE. Is that usually allowed?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think this is usual.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is it usual, when you remove an officer and give him a promotion, to pay him $466 ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. This thing is provided for by the regulations. It is based upon a scale, and I suppose it includes the moving of his family and all the expenses connected with his transfer to Ottawa.

Mr. TAYLOR. What was his salary before he was removed to Ottawa ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. He was paid by the day ; I could not tell the hon. gentleman.

Mr. TAYLOR. What is his salary now ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. $2,800.

Mr. TAYLOR. What was his salary previous to the appointment ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I told the hon. gentleman that I cannot say. He was an officer of the permanent force receiving so much per day according to his rank. I suppose he would get a captain's pay of about $3-a day and allowance.

Mr. TYRWHITT. The answer of the hon. Minister is perfectly correct. He receives the pay of his rank and allowance.

Mr. TAYLOR. Three dollars a day would amount to about $1,128 a year. Assuming that it is $1,128 a year, you gave him a bonus of $466 besides that on coming to Ottawa, and allowed him $125 travelling expenses.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. He simply got what any other officer in the militia receives.

Mr. HUGHES. This $466 was two months' pay, and not a bonus.

Mr. WALLACE. We have not had a satisfactory statement of these expenses which are increasing. The vote is increased from $30,000 to $40,000.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I explained to the hon. gentleman that I had a vote in the supplementary Estimates. The expenses this year have been about the same. In fact, they are rather less than they were three or four years ago.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. Minister last year asked for $30,000, but he did not find it sufficient, as it is one of those items under which we may spend a lot of money. The hon. Minister came in with a supplementary estimate for 1899 and asked for $10,000, making $40,000. He considers this year that $40,000 will be sufficient. Presumably in another year we will have him coming down and asking for an increase of that amount. This is one of those items that the hon. Minister would have very largely under his control and would be, to that extent, more responsible than for some other items.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Not to the extent of one dollar.

Mr. WALLACE. Then the hon. Minister has no control over his department. We would expect that the Minister of Militia and Defence, who has charge of a department in which the officers are more amenable to discipline than officials in departments, would have the orders carried out that he gives. Yet he tells us that he has no control, to the amount of a single dollar, over these travelling expenses. I think that where moneys are voted in this way Parliament is abrogating its functions.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. What I meant to say was that I did not have anything to do with the details of these expenditures. The officers in the military branch arrange what officers shall go from the permanent force to the schools, and they arrange the question of transport of stores. Of course, I am responsible for the expenditure of every dollar of money that is expended in my department. What I meant to say was that, so far as these items are concerned, I assume that my officers know their business and act on the regulations. My Deputy Minister checks these expenditures and sees that the money is properly expended. As a matter of fact the military branch controls this expenditure and the Auditor General looks into it to see that no improper use is made of the money voted.

Mr. WALLACE. I do not think it will be satisfactory for the hon. Minister to tell us that his officers, in the performance of their duties, act on the regulations. I assume that the officers of the Militia Department in that regard are very much like officers of other departments, and that if you give a large amount of money to them to spend, so that they can go where they please to have a good time, no doubt they will have a good time. The country votes $92,000 over the $2,000,000 mark for the purposes of defence. We vote that money willingly if we know that it will be wisely expended. While we know that the private soldier performs his duties and gets very small pay, while the martial and soldierly spirit of the volunteers are matters of admiration, while we act in a niggardly way in dealing with our volunteer service, we are proceeding with a lavish hand so far as these officers are concerned.

Mr. BERGERON. The nabobs.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. Minister should exercise a restraining hand and keep a control of this expenditure. The Minister is apparently as much in dark as to these expenditures as we are, but he undertakes to give an explanation which is not very much of an explanation after all. We know that the Minister has had a long siege. We know that he has been here from ten o'clock last night until six o'clock this evening and that he has not had a wink of sleep. I regret that, but I repel any insinuation that any one on this side of the House is in any degree responsible for that state of affairs. We were willing that the House should adjourn at a reasonable hour and that the business of Parliament should go on. All that the hon. Minister has to do is to look straight in front of him and he will see the cause of all his troubles. He must not blame us, but he had better blame his colleague sitting directly in front of him. The very idea of obstruction is obnoxious to us.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It does not seem to hurt you.

Mr. WALLACE. There is another insinuation that we have been obstructing, but if the hon. Minister (Mr. Blair), by that means that obstruction does not seem to hurt us, he is quite right. I think that the hon. Minister of Militia who is wearied might appeal to his colleagues to let up, but so far as we are concerned, we are here doing our duty criticising, in a feeble way, it may be, the Estimates that are before the House, but anxious to get full information about all these expenditures for which we will be held responsible by the country.

Mr. TYRWHITT. In regard to the expenses connected with the transfer of officers from one headquarters to another and in discussing the relative pay, as between an officer and a private, hon. members forget occasionally that there is a great deal of capital invested in the education of an officer of the permanent force. Before he becomes fit to hold a position in the permanent corps he should, strictly speaking, have taken a course at the Royal Military College or elsewhere. After expending all this money, he receives in return less than any ordinary bricklayer or skilled mechanic. At first sight this appears to be a large sum, but we seldom find soldiers become rich, and the officers have to live in a certain social state, and to keep up appearances. All these expenses connected with the transfer can easily be explained to show that the officers reap no advantage from it themselves. The rule in regard to appointing to the permanent corps men who have been fitted by education for their positions, is not always strictly adhered to. I know personally a great many officers of that corps who have not been at the Royal

Mr. WALLACE.

Military College and who learned their profession after their appointment at the expense of the country. I hope, however, that future appointments will be given to men who have qualified at the schools provided by the country for their education, instead of to men who happen to be friends of the party in power.

Royal Military College..... $63,000

Mr. SPROULE. There is an increase here of $15,000.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It is only an apparent increase; it is not real. This is due to the fact that the number of cadets has largely increased, and it is necessary to estimate for a larger amount, but the net expenses of the college are less than before. The fees paid by the cadets, amounting to about $25,000, go to the Receiver General, and the department does not get the credit for them. But, as a matter of fact, the expenditure will be $10,000 or $15,000 less than last year.

Mr. SPROULE. What are the fees at the college?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. $300 the first year, and $250 per year afterwards. These fees pay all the expenses, including books, board and clothing.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Have any pupils been admitted without having passed the matriculation examination?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The Minister is positive?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Quite sure.

Mr. SPROULE. I think it would be in order for the Minister to give us some idea of the working and success of the institution.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. A year ago 34 or 36 new students were admitted; the year before that about the same number. This year there are places for 30, so that during the next year there will be an attendance of something like 90. In 1896 the number in attendance was 56. I think 11 went up for graduation this year. I may say in general terms that the college seems to be exceedingly prosperous and is doing excellent work—quite as good as it has ever done.

Mr. HUGHES. Both before and since Col. Kitson took charge of the college I have taken an interest in it, and I may say that the universal opinion is that a finer institution has never existed in any country. Col. Kitson is a man of thorough judgment and tact, and he manages the boys in excellent shape.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I have no doubt that the school is prosperous and is doing a good work; and yet I think it might, so far as Canadian interests are concerned, do a better work still. Has the Minister considered the question of giving positions in the civil service to graduates of the school?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, and I have thought that while we ought to do something at Ottawa, the provincial governments might also be asked to co-operate to some extent, and I have written to the premiers of some of the provinces on the subject. I think it would be hardly fair to take all the appointments to the permanent force away from the militia, but I have made up my mind to give the artillery appointments, which are technical, exclusively to the college, and as many as possible of the others. I would ask the committee to let the rest of these items go through with the understanding that any further discussion on any of the remaining items may be had on one item, which is allowed to stand at the request of the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague). I would be very glad if the committee would agree to that.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. member can hardly ask that.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Royal Military College..... $70,000

Mr. BRITTON. I do not intend to detain the committee very long, but there are two or three things I want to call attention to. The first thing the committee ought to notice is the smallness of the amount asked for the maintenance of this institution. The amount hitherto has been in the neighbourhood of $50,000 to $55,000, but owing to the increase in the staff and other improvements, the amount is now $70,000 out of a total of $1,700,000 odd for military purposes in the Dominion. No one who has ever attended or visited the Military College or taken pains to read anything about it, can fail to admit that for so small an expenditure a very large result has been obtained, if there is any advantage at all in having money expended for military purposes in Canada. It is a first-class institution in every respect, and growing in the public estimation every year. The present year the students number 74, or very nearly up to the capacity of the institution at present, and the number of applicants this year is in excess of the capacity of the institution, and very much in excess of any previous year. That in itself speaks well for its management and the interest that the public are taking in it. As was said the other night, in reply to the leader of the Opposition, the reduction in the term from four to three years and the reduction in the fees have proved most beneficial. Complaint was made, while the four years course obtained, that the college was in competition with the other educational institutions of the Dominion. It was complained that here was a Dominion fed institution in direct competition with these colleges, such as the University of Toronto, Victoria College at Toronto, the Queen's College at Kingston, McGill of Montreal, and the other Canadian institutions, but this shortening of the term removes to some extent that objection. And by increasing the age and requiring a higher standard—

Mr. MONTAGUE. What is it now?

Mr. BRITTON. It is increased from 15 to 16. These improvements are likely to be of lasting benefit for the purposes intended. There have been 261 graduates from the institution since its establishment. That does not seem a very large number for the length of time it has been in existence, but when we consider its capacity and the limited number that necessarily can take advantage of its educational course, the number is quite a large one. Over and above the 261 graduates, there are students who, for various causes, were obliged to leave before their term was finished—change of circumstances, ill-health and other causes. In addition to the graduates who are holding positions of responsibility and trust and showing to advantage in different parts of Canada, in different walks of life, I have a list here of those who have served with distinction in the cause of the Empire outside of Canada, and which I desire to read and put on record:

J. Irvine Lang, C.M.G., R.E.
Captain J. Irvine Lang, R.E., was appointed an ordinary member of the third class or Companion of the Order of St. Michael and St. George for services in connection with the railway survey and the delimitation of the western boundary of the Gold Coast Colony.
Graduated in 1883.

W. E. Cooke.
Captain W. E. Cooke, late Royal Canadian Artillery, was seconded for service under the Imperial Government, in the Uganda Protectorate. He was shot by a brother officer, who was suffering from temporary insanity at the time.
Graduated in 1890.

E. V. O. Hewett.
E. V. O. Hewett, Royal West Kent Regiment, took part in the operations on the North-west frontier of India, and rendered excellent services, being mentioned in despatches. He was first appointed superintendent army signalling to the 1st Brigade, Malakand field force, and with that force took part in the operations in Upper Swat and Bajour. Was then appointed divisional superintendent to the same force for the operations against the "Utman Khel," and filled the same appointment with the "Buner field force."

Obtained a commission after two years' attendance at the Royal Military College.

H. C. Smith.

Captain H. C. Smith, Royal Dublin Fusiliers, served in the operations in the Soudan, attached to the Egyptian Army. He was twice mentioned in despatches for services rendered, by Major-General Lord Kitchener of Khartoum.

Obtained a commission after three years' attendance at the Royal Military College.

D. S. MacInnes and C. C. Van Straubenzee.

Lieut. D. S. MacInnes and Captain C. C. Van Straubenzee, the former of the Royal Engineers and the latter of the Royal Artillery, rendered good services in connection with the late expedition to Ashanti.

Lieut. D. S. MacInnes graduated in 1891.

Captain C. C. Van Straubenzee obtained a commission after two years' attendance at the Royal Military College.

P. G. Twining.

Captain P. G. Twining, Royal Engineers, served on the first Uganda survey, under Colonel Macdonald.

Graduated in 1883.

Huntley Brodie Mackay.

William Grant Stairs.

Graduated in 1882.

William Henry Robinson.

Captain, Royal Engineers. Rendered valuable services as commanding Royal Engineers, west coast of Africa, 1889-92. Killed in action on the 14th March, 1892, whilst with conspicuous bravery blowing in the gate of the stockaded village of Tambi, near Sierra Leone.

Graduated in 1882.

K. J. R. Campbell, D.S.O.

Captain Campbell, late of the Suffolk Regiment, was made a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order for services in the operations against the Chief Nanna of Benin, during the period August to October, 1894. He was then employed with the forces of the Niger Coast Protectorate.

Discharged from College at his own request after two years' attendance at the Royal Military College.

E. P. C. Girouard, D.S.O., C.E.

Captains D. H. Ridout, H. C. Carey and Lieut.

H. G. Joly de Lotbinière.

All of the Corps of Royal Engineers.

Are employed at the War Office, in the office of the Inspector General of Fortifications, and are doing good work.

That is the honour roll of this institution, but is by no means embraces all the graduates who have earned distinction for valuable services at home and abroad. The officers I have mentioned are not only popular with their own regiments, but have had their services recognized by the highest authorities in Great Britain. Two of them have been loaned to us, and are now on the staff of the college at Kingston—Captain Twining, whose time has now expired and who is returning to his regiment, and Lieut.-Col. Leslie, the son of a distinguished citizen of the city I represent. These men are not only popular and distinguished for their ability in their regiments, but have proved most capable teachers in the college to which they have been loaned. No more popular professor than Lieut. Leslie is on the staff. Certain improvements are absolutely necessary, and I hope the hon. Minister will bear this in mind, when preparing his supplementary estimates. A hospital and new gymnasium are necessary, and both will be appreciated, not only by the present students, but by those who come after. I hope people in this country will take increasing pride in the Royal Military College. There is nothing that has done more to advertise Canada abroad. If we decide that we cannot afford, or for any good reason we do not desire, to continue to spend our money for militia purposes, the Royal Military College may go by the board with the rest; but, so long as we expend money for these purposes, then this institution, as a centre, at a site unrivalled in the world—and I do not think I am putting that too strongly—is an institution in which we should take a growing pride, and which should not be starved.

Mr. TYRWHITT. I have listened with pride to the list of names read by the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton) of graduates of the Royal Military College who have done honour to themselves, to their alma mater and to the country. I am a friend of the college at Kingston, and, if I had twenty sons, I would send them all to that institution. In my election in 1896, I regret to say, one of the subjects discussed on almost every stump was the college at Kingston, and I found it necessary to post myself in order to defend that institution. Although the college was attacked to my detriment at that time, I shall always bear kindly feelings toward that institution. It may be possible that the high grade of the institution may not be kept up to the standard, owing to the shortening of the term of service, and—I was going to say—the lowering of the fees. I hope the lowering of the fees and shortening the term will have the desired result of causing an increase in the attendance, and I hope that the high standard that has characterized the college, will continue.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Tyrwhitt) has touched upon a point it was my intention to bring forward. I cannot refrain, however, from saying to the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton) that the ardent appeal he made for sympathy with and pride in the Royal Military College need not be addressed to this side of the House. If he had been a member of the last Parliament, he would have addressed his appeals for sympathy to those sitting about him. If there was one subject more than another for which the late Government were bitterly criticised, both in this House and by the candidates of the Liberal party in the country, it was upon the Royal Military College.

Mr. BRITTON. They could not have understood it.

Mr. TYRWHITT. Like many other things.

Mr. MONTAGUE. As my hon. friend (Mr. Tyrwhitt) remarks, like many other things. They spoke of that which they did not understand. The statements they made were known to be absolutely ridiculous by the members of the Government and supporters of the Government, but it was one of the strong points of attack made on the Conservative candidate, especially in the country constituencies. But now the same thing has come to pass that we find in reference to other subjects in which the Conservative party were attacked. We are called upon now to listen to praises loud and long of this institution, for maintaining which we were attacked, when in power. It seems that the great Patron party has dropped from its platform one of its strongest planks. I do not see the members who were elected upon the Patron platform, except the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Lang). But, if I recollect correctly, the Patron party made all sorts of attacks upon the college at Kingston. It was said to be an institution maintained by the Family Compact, the old Tory Government, upon Tory lines, and for the education of gentlemen's sons at the expense of the country. There was not a platform upon which the Patron speakers did not indulge in the most bitter criticism of the late Government because they maintained this very college of which the present Government and its supporters speak with such pride to-night. And here we are passing an increased sum for the maintenance of this college. And the gentlemen who were elected specially to protect the agricultural interests, of which interests the two old parties were said to be neglectful, are absent from the House, or are sitting absolutely silent while this increased vote is going through for this college which was maintained, according to them, for the purpose of educating the sons of gentlemen at the public expense. We join heartily in the pride which has been expressed by the hon. member for Kingston—whose pride, I am sure, is not local, or, if in part it is local, it is mainly national. We join heartily in the expression of pride at the success of that college. We are also pleased to note the evidence of the abandonment of one of their planks by the candidates who were talking and canvassing against the members supporting the late Government in connection with this question. It is only another evidence that the late Government were right in maintaining this institution, and that the candidates supporting the hon. gentlemen were wrong, when they appealed to the country against the expenditure.

Mr. HUGHES. In regard to the present curriculum of the Royal Military College, I have given the matter considerable attention and have conversed with those who have given it much more. The age of admission to the college and the standard of admission are both increased. A cadet cannot join at as early an age as formerly, and he must have a higher degree of education before he joins. I understand that considerable of what may be called ordinary literary work which is usually regarded as being part of a high school and minor college course, has to be acquired before he enters now. Formerly much time was taken up in the study of non-essential branches. At the present time the course, I am assured, is as difficult as ever, in all the essentials of a military education and in the higher mathematics. I understand that the third-year men who have gone in under the new regime have graduated with as high honours as the fourth-year men.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have not heard the Minister explain why he has increased the vote this year from $55,000 to $70,000.

THE MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have explained that the increased number of students made it necessary to increase the vote, but that the real net cost to the country would be less. The receipts will be considerably larger, and it is merely a matter of book-keeping, because the amount of money received is paid into the Receiver General, and the college does not get direct credit for it. But as a matter of fact, the cost to the country will be less this year than it has been last year.

Mr. CLANCY. What were the receipts last year?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The hon. gentleman will find it in the Auditor General's Report, L-94. Last year, they were $15,883. It is estimated this year they will be near $10,000 more.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I notice there are certain advertisements in connection with this college. In what papers are they published?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. They have been published chiefly in serial almanacs, the Montreal "Gazette," the "Globe," and, I think, the "Herald," and the "Canadian Monthly."

Mr. MONTAGUE. Chiefly Liberal papers.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The Montreal "Gazette," I think, is not a Liberal paper.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think the Montreal "Gazette" is the only Conservative paper which gets an advertisement in this connection.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It may be so, but I remember giving it to every one who has applied for advertisement. I may say that we have discontinued these advertisements now, because we feel that the college is sufficiently well known. We have spent a good deal of money in that way, and we do not intend in years to come to spend any more.

Mr. TAYLOR. How many cadets were admitted last year?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think thirty-six. There are seventy-four students there now, in the three classes. The first year they pay $300, and the second and third year, $250. This year we give six commissions. I think recently the commandant told me that he had been asked to send an extra cadet, making seven.

Miscellaneous and unforeseen..... $20,000

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. I would like to ask the Minister a question in connection with item 112, that is, the rifle association grants. The Minister is aware that every year we send over to Bisley twenty men to compete at the National Rifle Association meeting. I am informed that up to two years ago the entrance fees of the competitors from Canada were paid by the Dominion Rifle Association. I am informed, however, that during the past two years these entrance fees have to be paid by the men. I would ask the Minister to inform me of the reason for this change, and why the twenty men who enter for these prizes at Bisley are now compelled to pay their own entrance fees instead of the fees being paid by the Dominion Rifle Association, as formerly.

Mr. BORDEN (King's).

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I may say to my hon. friend that these men are sent forward under the auspices of the Dominion Rifle Association. I was not aware of the fact which the hon. gentleman mentions, but it is not a matter over which the Government has any direct control, although as we subsidize the Dominion Rifle Association, I suppose we might be able to exert some influence in the matter. Since my hon. friend has called my attention to the matter, I will ask for an explanation.

Mr. HUGHES. I may say that the team is sent over entirely under the auspices of the Dominion of Canada Rifle Association. Since the erection of the Bisley building the association found themselves a little out of pocket. Owing to the liberality of the Minister of Militia and Defence last year, as you will see by the grant to the Dominion Rifle Association, the additional $5,000 was given to the association, which greatly relieved us of the debt which the association incurred by the erection of that very fine building on Bisley Common. I may say concerning these fees that it was a measure which was reluctantly adopted by the association in order to keep the expenses of the team down as low as possible. The expenses of the team are all borne from the time they leave home until they return. They have a very nice time, and all their earnings in the matches are pooled and divided up amongst themselves. While we were reluctantly obliged to ask these men to pay their own entrance fee, I hope, and it is the intention, that as soon as the association is financially strong enough, these fees will be again paid to the men, that is the intention of the association. There is really no great hardship. It is a matter the Government has no control over.

Mr. TAYLOR. Would the Minister explain why he asks for an increase of $5,000? I think the hon. Minister and the Government promised to economize. On every vote save and except one—grants to rifle associations—the hon. Minister has made an increase of from $5,000 to $40,000 and $50,000. I wonder where the economy is going to come in. In his small vote of unforeseen expenses last year he asked for $15,000, and this year he is asking for an extra $5,000.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. When the supplementary Estimates for last year were before the committee there was a full discussion between the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster), and myself in reference to this item, and several others in which the annual vote for years has been too small, and we have been borrowing from the next year to pay the previous year's expenditures. This is precisely one of those votes, and I read to the committee, item by item, every dollar of the expenditure which now amounts to about the sum that we are asking for in this estimate. I said to the House then, that in the main Estimates, for this year, we had taken a sum which would be sufficient for our requirements and we would not ask for a supplementary vote at the end of the present year. In regard to the reduction of the vote for rifle associations I explained before that that is due to the fact that last year we gave a special vote, as the hon. member for Victoria, B.C. (Mr. Prior) has stated, in aid of the construction of the Bisley building. That is ended, the money is not required and we are coming back to the normal condition of the vote.

Mr. MORIN. I would like to draw the attention of the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence to a practice which has become too prevalent in some parts of the country in regard to the militia. It has been pursued in my county and probably elsewhere. A number of young men give their names in for enlistment in the volunteer force, but when the time comes to go to drill they do not go. They send young men, ranging in age from 16 to 17 years, in their places. The one whose name is entered on the rolls draws his full pay, and gives the boy who acts as his substitute 20 or 25 cents or 30 cents a day to take his place. These men are doing nothing more or less than speculating at the expense of the Government. Of course when these men go down to drill it should not be merely for their pleasure. If they do not attend drill they will not get that instruction which they require. I would be sorry to see them punished for not attending, but I would suggest to the hon. Minister, that substitutes should not be permitted to take their places and that a stop be put to this practice. It will save the Government a considerable amount of money.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I may say that I am very much obliged to my hon. friend (Mr. Morin) for calling my attention to this matter. I had no idea that anything of the kind was possible, and I will see that the matter is inquired into. These young men must assume false names, I suppose?

Mr. MORIN. I cannot say.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. They must do that, and it would seem to me to be very easy to trace them. The matter, having been called to my notice, I will have it inquired into and followed up.

Mr. MORIN. I have seen that done right at my door in the county of Dorchester. Last Saturday I was at Lévis. There was a whole lot of them going up and down, breaking up camp, and I heard them talking about it. I remarked to some young men, and they were saying: Whose place did you take? and the reply was: The place of such and such a man. I do not say this from hearsay, but I say that I can prove it.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. If the hon. gentleman does not care to make the statement publicly, I would be very glad if he would give me any information he has privately.

Mr. HUGHES. The captain of the company is the man who is responsible for such a fraud as this, if such a fraud has been committed, and he is the man to get after.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Does the hon. Minister intend to increase the ammunition for the practice of country battalions?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No.

Mr. MONTAGUE. There is great demand for it.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. We have had a great deal of trouble, on account of the long carrying power of the new rifle, in getting rifle ranges, and the general has adopted the expedient which, I think, has been employed with some success in the camps, of having practice with the Morris tube at aiming and shooting. It is a fairly good substitute for practice with the rifle, but as soon as we can get adequate rifle ranges, of course, we shall give all the ammunition that is necessary for the militia to practice with.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How many rounds do you give now?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Twenty. Of course we supply them with ammunition at cost if they wish to practice to a further extent than that.

Mr. MONTAGUE. They are not able to purchase it.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What is this new instrument?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The Morris tube, it is called. I must confess that I have never seen it and cannot explain it.

Mr. HUGHES. It is an ordinary rifle with a tube and shoots a small cartridge. It is a tube inside of the old barrel, and the cartridge is much cheaper.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the hon. Minister supply this tube?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. We do it now in the camps.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. Minister knows that the chief value from practice is to have it at home, and as this tube is not so costly, you might supply it to the battalions.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think that it will be done, but I cannot say positively at present.

Mr. HUGHES. In addition to the Morris tube practice at the camps, each man has to fire volleys with his company, a certain number of rounds, starting at 30 yards advancing to 100 yards and returning to 500 yards again, firing as he advances and retires.

Government Cartridge Factory..... $97,861 60

Mr. MONTAGUE. What is the net result of the operation of this factory?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. This is the statement I have. For wages, the estimate this year is $38,820; material, $12,730; new machinery, $14,074; making $95,000, as against $65,000 the previous year; recapping defective .303 ammunition, revote $13,000. The money is to be repaid by the Imperial Government. The total cost was $87,000 and we turned out 1,500,000 ball cordite .303, and 1,000,000 blank and 4,000 shells. We also turned out a quantity of nine-pounder R. M. L. and recapped a number of the defective .303. They cost $25 a thousand in England, and I think we produced them at the same figure. We supplied some to the Imperial authorities at Halifax and they did us the honour of saying they preferred them to their own shells. We laid them down at Halifax for about the same price as the Imperial Government did.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. Is the Minister aware that some of the ammunition used by the artillery has not given satisfaction? I understand that at some of the western camps there was a complaint as to the quality of the ammunition turned out by the Dominion Cartridge Factory.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am aware that some of the .303 cartridges were defective on account of a defect in the shells which were imported. Yes, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ross Robertson) is right. I find, on inquiry, that some of the B.L. practice shells were found to be defective, but only a very small number.

Defence at Esquimalt..... $109,000

Mr. TISDALE. What is this vote?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. My hon. friend (Mr. Tisdale) will remember that there was an arrangement entered into some years ago with the Imperial Government, by which we co-operated with the Imperial authorities for the defence of Esquimalt, and under that arrangement we paid $76,500 a year. A new arrangement involves us in a somewhat greater expenditure. The following proposition has been made to the War Department, to take effect on October 1st, 1899. The Dominion of Canada to pay: (a) half the annual cost of the Imperial garrison, 320 officers and men, say £21,000 sterling; (b) half the prime charges for the barrack accommodation of the force, £12,500 sterling; (c) to continue to pay, as at present, the whole cost of maintenance of the local regiment, the strength to be maintained at the establishment fixed, and the militia to be subject to an annual inspection by the Imperial officer in command at Esquimalt, or the Lieutenant-General Commanding in North America, say £9,345 sterling. The total cost of the first year is $208,512, but of that amount £12,500 sterling is only chargeable for one year. The annual charge will be $140,000. This is a detail of the militia we propose to keep in British Columbia: Military officers, 5; submarine mining engineers, 3; infantry, 15; total, 23. Non-commissioned officers and men: 150 artillery, 50 submarine engineers, 400 infantry; total, 623 officers and men. The militia charge to the public will be simply the same as with regard to any other regiment in Canada. The only charge to us is the £21,000 sterling a year, which is half the cost of the garrison, and the initial charge of £12,500, which goes to capital account for barracks. I may say that this has been agreed to by the Government.

Mr. BORDEN (King's).

Monuments to battlefields ..... $3,000

Mr. MONTAGUE. Where will this be?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There are $2,500 for monuments to the memory of the battle of Stoney Creek, and $500 for a tablet at Burlington Heights.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The Historical Society is doing good work, and have recently purchased a property there, and I suppose the Minister will co-operate with them.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Mr. GIESON. I would like to point out to the Minister that there is some trouble as to where this monument at Stony Creek should be placed, and the matter should be settled by the Historical Society before the Government pay over the money.

Militia—

Artillery, fortress armament, &c..... $347,400

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. With reference to this vote, there was an understanding, in 1895 or 1896, that the Dominion would undertake to appropriate about $3,000,000 on capital account, although it was not actually voted, towards the defences of the country. Up to that date there had not been a dollar voted on capital account since confederation for the defence of Canada. That vote has not been exhausted. I think about $500,000 in addition to this vote is still on hand. This vote is to be used as follows:—Two batteries, 12-pr. B. L. Q. F. field guns, with harness, wagons and stores complete, $148,000; additional expenditure for quick-firing pattern upon four batteries, 12-pr. B. L. guns, already ordered, $25,000; two B. L. guns and emplacements in No. 1 fort, Lévis, $82,000; two B. L. howitzers on siege carriages for St. Helen's Island, $15,000; four Q. F. guns for Kingston, $55,000; to pay Imperial Government half the prime cost of the barrack accommodation at Esquimaux, per new agreement beginning October 1st, 1899, $61,000; making in all $383,000.

Mr. TISDALE. Where are these four batteries for?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. They are field artillery.

Mr. HUGHES. I would like to ask the hon. Minister what steps, if any, the Government have taken in relation to placing at the disposal of the Imperial Government a corps or brigade in case of service abroad?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I cannot say that we have taken any formal or official steps in that direction.

Mr. TISDALE. I do not see very well how, without a radical departure from the principle of the volunteer force, any steps could be taken in that direction. It is a matter that would require a great deal of consideration before any steps should be taken that would entail what would practically become a part of the regular army.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It would probably require a special enlistment.

Railways—Canadian Pacific Railway—
Land damages, &c..... $2,000

Mr. MONTAGUE. Where are these land damages now?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. At Fort Moody.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Who are the claimants?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Mrs. James Cooper, I think. We made an offer of a small amount, and the claimant has refused to accept it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is this the only claim?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There are a few others, but this is apparently the only one that is looming up.

Intercolonial Railway—

Land damages, Oxford and New Glasgow and Cape Breton divisions..... $2,000

Mr. MONTAGUE. What are these?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have asked for a vote as a residue to cover claims which are always cropping up. This is the usual appropriation. We expended $289.87 under this head last year.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It is usual when these sums are voted, to say what the claims are.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I must demur to that statement.

Mr. MONTAGUE. These are not for damages in the future, but in the past, and are not unforeseen.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They are to cover claims which arose out of the original construction. My deputy says he is quite sure this claim was settled out of court. These claims are passed on in various ways. A person makes a claim and we send an officer to examine into it, and if it has a sound basis he reports to us what is a reasonable amount to offer. If that is not accepted, the party is left to his remedy in the court.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Was there an agreement in this case?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The party accepted this amount.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Who made the valuation?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I could not tell. We have not one particular officer for this purpose.

Mr. MONTAGUE. When were these claims put in?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I could not tell.

Mr. MONTAGUE. This is probably a claim that was passed by the late Government and refused.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know. It may possibly have been passed upon.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not think that a claim for damages in 1888 would lie in abeyance absolutely for ten years and not be pressed and passed upon.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Oh, yes, they lie in abeyance sometimes longer than that.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The chances are that such claims are put in and passed on. We ought to have the particulars of when put in, what the claim was, and who made the valuation. All we want is the information, and will pass the item at once.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would suggest that a good time to get the information would be on concurrence.

Mr. MONTAGUE. A very bland suggestion, and one which in our time, have made very often; but it has not been accepted by hon. gentlemen opposite.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). Oh, come; I have accepted it frequently.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes, that is true. Very often hon. gentlemen opposite got information on concurrence and very often they pressed very strongly for it. This is a very small amount, but the point is one of principle. If this claim was rejected by the late Government, there should be very special reasons why it is allowed now without going to court. In the case where a man has the decision of the Exchequer Court there can be no question of favouritism. I do not charge that there is favouritism in this case, but such a consideration might arise. If we knew the name of the valuator, that might show us the nature of the decision. But not having any information—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. But seeing the amount is so inconsiderable—

Mr. MONTAGUE. But for that very reason surely the hon. Minister will allow it to stand until he gets the information.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Surely the hon. gentleman will not ask that.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the hon. Minister promise faithfully to bring the information down?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Intercolonial Railway—

Original construction ..... $1,800

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is to cover possible claims on the Intercolonial Railway arising out of the original construction of the road. None were paid last year, and it may be that none may mature this year, but it is always safe to have the vote.

Increased accommodation at St. John.. $400,500

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The committee may remember that we obtained a vote of $250,000 last year for the purpose of enabling us to put up a wharf and lay down tracks and provide necessary accommodation in the harbour of St. John at the Intercolonial Railway terminus there. Of that sum, we have expended $200,000 and we shall require a supplementary vote of $49,000 for this year. The amount we are now asking for, we hope will cover the whole amount. We are acquiring various small properties at the head of the harbour, and immediately adjoining our present station, and are constructing a pier capable of accommodating two large steamers and one small one, with freight shed and other appliances and with our tracks laid for the accommodation of traffic.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What are the items of the expenditure hitherto?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We had spent $201,000 up to the 30th June. Of this $100,000 has been paid upon what is called the Long Wharf property which was expropriated. There was a contract entered into for the wharf and trestle, included in one bulk sum of $328,173. Then, as part of the same contract and in addition thereto, there was a price per cubic yard for rock excavation, for ballasting, for pile dredging and other items of that character and also for a warehouse on the wharf, which would bring the cost of the wharf construction up to $410,000. The rock excavation was estimated to cost $41,600; the stone ballasting, $12,900; tie rods, $1,304; planking on inner face, $1,320. That makes a total of $385,297. The warehouse on the wharf will cost $22,795. Other items include pile dredging, $3,330; pile foundations for iron bridging, $1,700; iron bridging removed and re-erected, $2,030; new iron bridging, contract, $1,640; floor for iron bridging, 800 lineal feet at $2.70, $2,160; fencing and fender piles, $1,194; removing track, flooring, fencing and fender piles of present main line, $120. These items amount to $12,444. Then, $6,120 would represent the cost of a temporary pile trestle for sidings to wharfs; 1,400 lineal feet at $10, $14,000; platform on piles at north end of wharf, 9,000 lineal feet at 60 cents, $5,400. Then, track-laying on wharf, trestle and bridges, one and one-half miles, $300; on balance of main line and sidings, including ties and ballast, $3,400; rails and fastenings, $6,250; fifteen switches, $1,750; excavations for sidings back of elevator, $1,500, and removal of solid rock, $16,500, or a total of $18,000. Engineering, legal valuations, office and stationery expenses, $10,000. There are also a number of other items, making up a total of $685,756. That is the estimate of the total cost of the erection of the wharf and all that is appurtenant thereto.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How has the $200,000 been spent this year?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I told my hon. friend that $100,000 of that amount had been paid for what is called the Long Wharf property. Then, there are other properties in connection with it. There is the Hazen Estate slip, which has been expropriated at a cost of $500. There is the property belonging to Mr. Lightly, which cost $8,000, and which has been expropriated.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I understand that the work of erecting an elevator is still proceeding at Halifax. Is there any provision made for the work that is still to be done there?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are going to ask in the supplementaries for the sum which will suffice to complete that work.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman stated some time ago that it was expected the elevator would be completed about the 1st of October. Has he any further information in regard to that? There has been some apprehension expressed that the expectations of the Minister will not be realized, there is some fear existing in the minds of some persons in Halifax that the elevator will not be ready for this winter's operations, which would be very disastrous, as they felt the disadvantage of not having it ready for the past winter's work.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The contractor has not been proceeding very satisfactorily with that work. I do not like to say that he is going to be unable to complete it by the date mentioned, because he assured me personally, and assures my officers positively, that he will be able to complete it. He ought to be, there is no reason in the world why he should not, if his machinery has been contracted for, as he says, and it is specially admitted. I am informed that information is received to-day that there will be no delay whatever in the delivery of the machinery to the contractors. If the machinery comes, the other work could, without any doubt, be completed. There is no reason for any anxiety.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The people of Halifax will be very glad if the hon. gentleman's explanations are realized; I know they will be greatly disappointed, and justifiably so, if these expectations are not realized. It has been stated, I do not know with what degree of truth—I am not conversant with these matters—that an elevator of that kind can be built in the United States in about six weeks. I suppose we can hardly expect to equal their expedition.

Mr. GILSON. It cannot be done anywhere in six weeks.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am simply repeating a statement that has been publicly made in the city council of Halifax by Mr. Ald. Gildert, a strong supporter of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance. He is not a bulder, but he has had much to do with these works. There is one other matter I would like to mention to the Minister, that is, the depth of water on the south side of No. 4 pier, Deep Water Terminal. The hon. gentleman doubtless recollects that a committee of the Halifax Board of Trade investigated the depth of water at that place, and they made this report:

After careful inquiry, we find there is only 23 feet 6 inches of water at low tide, and that this pier contains the only two coal chutes available for the coaling of steamers. It is, therefore, absolutely necessary that there should be a sufficient depth of water to admit of steamers of the largest tonnage which may require to make use of said pier, to lie always afloat. We would therefore recommend that prompt steps be taken for the dredging and deepening of this dock to the necessary depth. Unless this is promptly done, it will not only seriously reflect against the facilities of the port, but will be a serious blow to the coal business over the Intercolonial Railway.

The hon. gentleman is aware that Halifax is largely a port of call for steamers in want of coal. During the past winter an enormous number of steamers have come in for their coal, and the Board of Trade seem to regard this matter as important. Some of these gentlemen are interested in this coal business. The hon. gentleman is aware that it is of importance to the port of Halifax for the reason that one large line of steamers has decided to coal altogether at Halifax instead of in the United States; they came to that conclusion within the past year. It is therefore of the utmost importance that every facility should be given to them. This report continues as follows:—

We would further recommend that on the capstans of each and all the piers, marks showing the depth of water at every 20 feet be placed in such a way as to be in full view of the masters when docking their ship, so that they may know exactly whether there is sufficient water in the berth assigned to them to admit of their lying always afloat.

Then, they say further:

We would further draw your attention to the fact that on the new pier no capstan nor stringer-piece has been provided on the upper edge of said pier, and upon inquiry we are informed that nothing of this kind has been provided for in the specifications for building. This, we think, every person at all conversant with the docking of ships will admit to be absolutely necessary, especially in winter time, as it would be almost impossible for the men running the lines when docking ships to do so with any degree of safety unless this very necessary protection was provided.

That came to my attention last month, and I did not then have any opportunity to mention it to the hon. gentleman in the House. I understood that a copy of this same representation had been mailed to him as well as to myself and my colleague. I would be glad if the hon. gentleman could tell me whether the matter has received the attention of his department.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have no doubt it is receiving the attention of the department. The engineer, Mr. Mackenzie, has been giving a great deal of personal attention to this work. I get a good many communications from Halifax in respect of the work itself there, and in respect to the elevator, and I usually forward these, with what instructions I think it is proper to give, to the engineer. I have no doubt this matter which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) has mentioned, is receiving his very careful attention.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think the hon. Minister said that he is spending $100,000 in purchasing this property.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In purchasing a portion of it—the long wharf property.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What is the total cost of that property?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. One hundred thousand dollars is the amount we have paid to the owners of the property. There is a further sum of $18,000 which the owners of the property have claimed from us, but which claim is now under consideration.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It was purchased by an expropriation, was it not?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, the property was expropriated, but there is quite a history connected with it, and if the hon. gentleman would care to hear it I will explain the circumstances, so that he will see how the additional claim for $18,000 has arisen. There was an offer made to the Government, prior to the expropriation, to sell the property for $100,000. We thought that, to avoid any possible question, it would be well that we should put on valuers and have the necessary steps taken to begin expropriation proceedings. The expropriation taking place, the valuers went on and placed a value of $118,000 upon the property. We had received, previously from the owners, an offer to sell the property for $100,000, and so we considered it rather as an engagement on their part to accept $100,000 as the purchase price. When the valuers had put this additional sum of $18,000 on the property the owners asked us to pay $118,000 for the property. We said: You agreed to accept $100,000. They said, true, but you went on and expropriated it, and having done that we think we ought to get the sum that the valuers say the property is worth. That is the point in controversy.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How does the hon. gentleman propose to settle it? Does he propose to allow it to go to court?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have not done that, although we cannot refuse to allow them to go to court

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).

if the parties desire. We have only paid $100,000, and it was only paid since Parliament has been in session, so that we have not had time to deal fully with it.

Mr. DAVIN. Who were the valuers?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They were gentlemen resident in St. John. Mr. McGregor Grant was one and Mr. George Robinson was the other.

Mr. MONTAGUE. You have a regular board of valuers?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not now under the law.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It is not customary to appoint local individuals.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, it is customary always. You could not very well take strangers, put them into a town, particularly in respect to a property of this kind, and expect them to make a value that would be reliable and satisfactory.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Who are these gentlemen? What is their business?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Mr. McGregor Grant is the manager of an insurance company in St. John, a gentleman of many years' experience, and, I think, one who would be admirably qualified for a duty of this kind. Mr. George Robinson was mayor of St. John for many years. He is a wholesale merchant.

Mr. DAVIN. Were these valuers judges?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, they were business men. Mr. Edwards was an insurance valuator. These gentlemen have had a good deal of experience in valuing real estate for the purpose of insurance, and they were chosen. I think it would be difficult to find gentlemen who would be better qualified to perform a duty of this kind. There is no mistake in regard to the valuation of the property, because the owners were receiving a rental of over $5,000 for a few years past.

Mr. DAVIN. How much did the owners expend in keeping it in order from year to year?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think not very much. They had the advantage of being free from taxation, although not entirely free. There was an outside limit of $300 of taxation to which they were subject. I do not think very much was required to keep the property in order. For the purposes for which it was being used it was in a fairly good condition.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What was the area of it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not that in my mind at the moment, and I have not the memorandum before me. The property was quite a long wharf running out very nearly to the border line of the harbour. The wharf itself was eighty-five feet in width and there was 100 or 200 feet of a slip available for public uses.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Has the hon. gentleman no information as to the size of the land?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not have before me the number of square feet.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The price of $100,000 is pretty large and it is a matter of speculation as to whether you are not paying too much for it. I know of one case in Halifax where the value of a wharf property was being adjudicated upon in the Exchequer Court. There were from fifteen to twenty men who gave evidence as to value and the valuations ran from $15,000 to $90,000 in respect to the same property. The court eventually awarded about $60,000, and the Court of Appeal reduced this award to about $40,000. If you had happened to buy that property on the valuation of the people who thought it was worth $90,000 you would have paid $50,000 more than would have been a fair price for it. It seems to me that the hon. gentleman should be very sure about it before he would agree to pay this price of $100,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am absolutely sure. We have made no mistake as to the amount. We did not pay too much.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). We are not in a position to form any judgment as we do not know what is the size of it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You would not be in a position to form a judgment if you did know the exact size.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Perhaps we would not, but we would be able to form some idea.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The property is more than 1,200 feet long.

Mr. DAVIN. I should like to ask the hon. Minister what is the business of Mr. McGregor Grant.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. As I said before, Mr. McGregor Grant has been for many years in the insurance business, acting as manager or agent for an insurance company. He has also been representing one very large estate in the city. Any one who knows the citizens of St. John would say that Mr. Grant would be a suitable person for this.

Mr. DAVIN. What estate was in his hands?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The John W. Nicholson estate.

Mr. DAVIN. Was it left in his hands?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He was left an executor under the will, and a trustee, I think.

Mr. DAVIN. When did the idea occur to the Minister of Railways to purchase this property?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. As soon as I began to consider the question of obtaining the necessary terminal facilities at that point. It is in every way suited, and the most desirable situation that could be selected.

Mr. DAVIN. Did the Minister discuss the price with any one?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, with many people, and before taking any step for expropriation.

Mr. DAVIN. Did the Minister arrive at a price before it was referred to arbitration?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Having had conversation with gentlemen from the city, I had in my mind a sum which I felt the property was worth, and which we could afford to pay for it. I had a conversation with the mayor, Mr. Robertson—I had no idea then he would be one of the valuers—and the members of the board of trade, and the consensus of opinion on both sides of politics was, that this property would be very well purchased, if we could get it for $100,000.

Mr. DAVIN. Before the arbitration the Minister thought about $100,000 would be about the price?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. DAVIN. Who was the third arbitrator?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Mr. M. D. Edwards.

Mr. DAVIN. It would look as if it were referred to these gentlemen to confirm the price agreed on by the Minister and those he discussed the particulars with.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I happen to have some knowledge of the matter, as part of the transaction occurred when my hon. friend (Mr. Blair) was absent in England, and I was acting Minister of Railways. I was aware that the owners of this property had offered, or suggested, its purchase at $100,000. At first I thought that this was a large sum, but subsequently the matter came before me, as Acting Minister of Railways, and it became my duty to look into it. The formal proposal to buy the property was made to me, and not to the Minister of Railways, because it occurred when he was in England, although I am aware that, before he left, it was the subject of conversation. Subsequently, when it came before me, in my capacity as Acting Minister, I gave it considerable attention. I tried to ascertain from trustworthy and reliable gentlemen, who were in no way concerned in the property, what its fair value was, and the general impression I received was, that $100,000 was not an excessive price. During the absence of the Minister, the owners of the property—

Mr. DAVIN. Who were the owners ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The owners were the St. John Terminal Company. The president of the company was Mr. A. A. Stockton, the leader of the Opposition in New Brunswick, and prominently associated with him was Mr. Justice McLeod. These were the gentlemen who manifested the most interest in the matter. They approached me and wished me, in the absence of the Minister, to take possession of the property, as there was a feeling in the city of St. John that the improvement should go forward. After carefully considering the matter, and inquiring from various trustworthy people, I formed the impression that $100,000 was not extravagant. Still, I preferred that the matter should be settled by expropriation, and we took proceedings under the Expropriation Act. Although I formed the idea that $100,000 was a reasonable price, I was not surprised to learn that the valuers—each one of them I happen to know, and they are gentlemen of the highest standing—gave their opinion that the property was worth something more.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman has established my contention, that local men interested in the value of property in a city, and anxious that city property should be as valuable as possible, were not the best parties to protect the treasury in the purchase of a property like this. Did the Minister of Finance ever know an individual, or a set of individuals, who did not put the full value on their property when they offered it to the Government for sale ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Most people ask what they think is the value.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Most people ask a good deal more than that, when they know the Government is to be the purchaser. I quote from "Hannard," of 1893, where the Minister stated that the property had been offered to him for $100,000. I venture to say that the people who made that offer did not expect to get over $80,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You are mistaken about that.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Then, they are a class of people in St. John that do not exist in any other part of the Dominion. There is not a gentleman on the other side of the House who can cite an instance where less than the value of property was asked from the Government who desired to purchase. The hon. gentleman appointed valuers, who say that the owners of the property asked $18,000 too little. I can fancy these gentlemen who owned the property, blushing up to the ears at their meekness in asking $18,000 too little of the Government of Canada. It shows that these gentlemen who were appointed to value it—while they were anxious to be right, no doubt, judging from the character given them—were anxious to see property in that city attain its highest value, and, having an honest sympathy, no doubt, with the people who owned the property, they placed a higher value on it than even the owners did. I think the hon. Minister has made out a very weak case.

Mr. FIELDING.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think I made out a strong case.

Mr. MONTAGUE. No doubt, you do.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. And the citizens of St. John think so, too.

Mr. MONTAGUE. There can be no question but that the citizens of St. John were anxious to have this money spent there.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They would not be anxious to have it paid for this property.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman knows that when an amount of property is being sold to the Government there is not such a keen desire on the part of the owner's neighbours to see that the last cent in value is got for the money paid by the Government.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is a good deal of jealousy in my experience.

Mr. MONTAGUE. In the judgment of the neighbours of this property it seems to have been worth $118,000, while it was only valued at $100,000 by themselves.

Mr. ELLIS. They were a company who were anxious to sell.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The Minister says they were not anxious to sell. They were earning about 5½ per cent on the property.

Mr. DAVIN. The Finance Minister spoke of two gentlemen with whom he had discussed the value of this property. One he mentioned; who is the other ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did not mention the name of any gentleman with whom I had discussed the matter. I did discuss it with some gentlemen in the city of St. John, but I did not mention their names. The names of the gentlemen mentioned were those who acted as valuers. I never discussed the subject with them at all.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Whatever may be the experience of the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) as to the value of land, my experience is that if you wanted to have a just and fair valuation of a property of that description, you would not be safe in selecting persons who did not know anything of the value of the property in the city to make the valuation. These gentlemen, all three of them, were entirely independent of the owners of this property, had no interest in them or connection with them, in business or otherwise. I think it would be difficult to select three gentlemen in the city of St. John whose appointment would have been approved more heartily than was the appointment of these gentlemen. In reaching a valuation of the property, the valutors held a court before which witnesses were summoned, who gave evidence, I think, under oath; and among the men who gave evidence were leading business men, bankers and others, in the city.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman has that report, I presume.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The report is on file, with the evidence. The manager of the Bank of Montreal and the manager of the Halifax Banking Company, and others, placed a higher value upon this property than the valutors finally concluded to award to the owners. So that we made no mistake with respect to the amount at which we acquired the property. I felt that in all human probability there would be a great deal of feeling over the matter, and it might be used to make political capital, unless we surrounded ourselves with every possible safeguard; and therefore we took a course which would protect us from any possible ground of criticism or complaint on the part of anybody.

Mr. ELLIS. With regard to the valutors, and particularly with regard to Mr. Grant, I have great confidence in him as one of the most conservative estimators of property in the city—a man entirely uninfluenced by the sentiments and fads which some men have about growth, and so forth. I am satisfied that his influence on the valuation was of the best kind, and that he could be trusted. The other valutors are also citizens of great knowledge and worth. The only objection I had to the valuation was that it took too much time; but that was owing to the giving of evidence by persons who could throw any light on the subject. I think the whole thing was managed very fairly indeed.

Mr. MONTAGUE. By whom were these valutors recommended?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I appointed them and selected them.

Mr. MONTAGUE. From personal knowledge?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. From actual personal knowledge. I knew the gentlemen myself, and if I had gone over the list of citizens of St. John, I do not think I could have selected three men who would have been more likely to reach a safe conclusion, or whose decisions would be more generally accepted by the community.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I suppose the owners of the property know the value of property in St. John?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I suppose they would have an idea.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It seems strange that a man would get $18,000 more for a piece of property than he asked for the property. This will stand out as a bright instance in the history of Canada.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They were very anxious to sell.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman said a moment ago they were not anxious to sell.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman misunderstood me.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Why should they be anxious to sell when they were getting an income from the property of 5½ per cent?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They really were anxious to sell. There may be times when men are anxious to sell a property, even when it is yielding them a fair return.

Mr. DAVIN. Who were the arbitrators for the Government?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There were three, all chosen by the Government. The company were not permitted to name any.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How much would the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Ellis), if purchasing that property, consider that it would be worth? Does he not consider that he would get it for $70,000?

Mr. ELLIS. It is not a matter on which I would express an opinion, because I am not in that kind of business. These gentlemen formed a company some years ago, expecting to carry on a very large business. It is true, they were getting 5 per cent on their investment, but it was rather an incongruous business. Mr. McLeod having become a judge, it is easily understood why he would be anxious to get out of the business. Then the business might fall at any time, because if the large lines of steamers which came to that wharf and paid a rental were transferred to another wharf, that rental might cease.

Mr. MONTAGUE. All of which decreased the value of the property.

Mr. ELLIS. It did not occur, but it might, and that is the reason why the company appeared anxious to dispose of the property. $100,000 was an assumed value. When the valuator was put on, they thought it was worth something more.

Mr. DAVIN. Who were the other proprietors besides Judge McLeod?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Mr. Pugsley owned an interest in the property, a small interest, I believe.

Mr. MONTAGUE. We are gradually getting the names.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know any more owners than those.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. member for St. John (Mr. Ellis) has not told us what he considers the property worth. I would take his opinion just as well as that of the manager of the Bank of Montreal. The hon. member is a property owner, I believe.

Mr. ELLIS. In a very small way.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is the hon. gentleman's modesty, as my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Borden) suggests. He is just as keen a business man as there is in the city, and if asked to-morrow to sell some property to the Government, I venture to say that, for all his kind looks, he would not offer it to the Government for one-fifth less its value. I do not think he believes in his heart that this was a good bargain. How much is the property assessed for?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know. That is really no guide.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It is a pretty good guide, because we can find out exactly, on what basis they assess.

Mr. ELLIS. I do not know what the assessed value is. My property is assessed at more than its value.

Mr. MONTAGUE. We ought to have the assessed value. My property in Hamilton is assessed at more than its value, and that is not an uncommon case in town lots.

Mr. ELLIS. I do not think that would apply to wharf property.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My recollection is that there was an arrangement between the city corporation and this company, that the company should not be subject to taxation beyond $300 a year. The question of valuation for assessment purposes would not, in that case, arise.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Was that by way of bonus, because we can easily figure it out. The party considered $300 was a fair taxation on it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. MONTAGUE. By whom was the offer made?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Mr. Stockwell made a formal offer to me. $100,000 had previously been spoken of as the value of the property. I received a formal offer from Mr. Stockwell and had conversations with Mr. Pugsley, Judge McLeod and Mr. Stockwell, chiefly with Mr. Justice McLeod.

Mr. MONTAGUE. They were anxious to sell at $100,000?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The property, at any rate, in their minds, under the hammer would not bring nearly $100,000?

Mr. DOMVILLE. Oh, yes, it would.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is pretty difficult to say what it would bring under the hammer.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This was expropriated property, and there was no question of what it would bring under the hammer.

Mr. MONTAGUE. You do not expropriate usually in that way?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is no other way than to have valutors proceed under the Expropriation Act.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The usual way is to have the value determined by a judge, and then you can appeal from him to the Supreme Court.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We do not know that.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I know it, but the Minister of Finance speaks of this as the usual way. I am pointing out the usual way. The disadvantage of the course pursued in this case is that you have no appeal, and the Government are perhaps morally bound by the $118,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Do not assume that.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If you had had the value determined in the ordinary way, you would have had it determined by the judge of the Exchequer Court and you could appeal from his decision to the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court has been known to decrease the value fixed in the first instance by the judge of the Exchequer Court.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Is there a case where the Crown is involved in which the Supreme Court reduced the valuation?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In a case relating to certain property in the city of Halifax, the Supreme Court reduced the award of the judge by $20,000. That is the only case I know of. The Minister of Railways and Canals says that witnesses were called and examined on oath. How could that be if these gentlemen were mere valutors appointed by the Crown?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I understood that they called Mr. Jones of the Bank of Montreal, and Mr. Taylor of the Halifax Bank, to give evidence.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My hon. friend will surely recollect that a valuator would have no power to take evidence under oath under the common law. It must be given by statute, and I am not aware of any statute that would apply.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They may have made statutory declarations, but I know that in a very formal way they made statements.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Did the Government have counsel present to cross-examine?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, we had a counsel looking after our interests.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Who represented the Government?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Mr. McLean.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Does the hon. member for St. John know how the witnesses in this case were examined?

Mr. ELLIS. I think they were sufficiently examined. They are citizens whose word is as good as their oath.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman knows that there is a vast difference in having men give their ideas of the value of a piece of property in an informal way for the benefit of their friends. The hon. Minister ought to let this stand.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. MONTAGUE. There never was a transaction that went through this House in which the owners of property asked less than its value. The property was offered at $100,000, but after valutors were appointed they reported it was worth $118,000. Possibly the Minister of Railways will know about it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There never was a transaction that will bear closer scrutiny. Right alongside you have the property known as the Harris property, and I would like to put the two transactions side by side.

Mr. BENNETT. Was Mr. Robinson the defeated Liberal candidate in the general elections of 1896, or was he a candidate at all in these elections?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, he was not a defeated candidate in 1896.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Mr. Robinson had been a candidate before, and had been defeated.

Mr. BENNETT. Were the names of these valutors suggested by those who owned the property, or did they make any demur at their appointment?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They were not consulted.

Mr. BENNETT. It seems strange that in the case of a property they valued at $100,000 they were willing to submit to the arbitrament of three gentlemen appointed by the Government.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They were not consulted at all.

Mr. BENNETT. That seems all the more strange. It seems strange that they should go into an arbitration—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It was not an arbitration.

Mr. BENNETT. Yes, it seems to me that it savoured of an arbitration. Did the vendors of the property agree to stand by such valuation as might be placed upon it by the Government?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, I think not. They were not asked to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The vendors agreed with me that they were only to demand $100,000.

Mr. MONTAGUE. In any event?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, that was the understanding I had.

Mr. MONTAGUE. But there is a claim.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes; when the owners found that these three gentlemen had valued the property at $118,000, they made what they called an equitable claim upon the Government. That claim is lying there. When I was negotiating with them, they valued the property at $100,000, and I had the option of accepting it or taking the matter into court. I decided to put it under the Expropriation Act, having, however, an assurance that the sum of $100,000 was what they would claim.

Mr. MONTAGUE. But the Minister of Railways and Canals had an option upon it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is most extraordinary, because the hon. Minister in 1898 said: "I have an option from the present owners."

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Before I went away, the parties said they would be willing to take $100,000, if I would take that sum.

Mr. DAVIN. How much did these people pay for the property?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think they paid this amount, but I know that, after having purchased it, they spent a very considerable amount of money on it, improving it and putting it into shape for use.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Ordinary repairs?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not at all. They spent thousands of dollars.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I suppose that is all in the evidence.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I presume so.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I suppose the Minister can get that for us.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My Deputy tells me that the evidence is in hand.

Mr. DAVIN. I would like the Minister to tell us, after all, if there was any arbitration.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. DAVIN. Really, what has happened is this, that the department agreed to pay a certain price for this property, and then they named three of their friends to buttress their opinion.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If these three gentlemen had decided it was worth less than $100,000, and the usual proceedings of expropriation had determined it, they would have been obliged to accept it. What was referred to the valuers was, whether the property was worth the $100,000 claimed. I was surprised to hear that the valuers placed so high a figure on it. But when I was told that $100,000 was not an extravagant price, I understood that the valuers might fix the price anywhere about that amount. But, after it was known that they had offered the property for $100,000, I thought they should have been content with that.

Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. CLANCY. Did the Government feel bound to abide by the decision of the gentlemen who were appointed to value the property?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) is directing the question to me, I may say, expressing my own opinion on a matter on which the Government has not yet decided, we were not bound by the offer of the gentlemen to sell for $100,000, but they were bound not to demand more than $100,000. If they had estimated the value of the property at a less sum than this, the Government would have been entitled to the benefit. But the owners say that, in fairness and equity, the Government ought not to take that $18,000. That claim has not come before the Government, and I do not express any opinion upon it. But I do know that I had no intention that they should receive more than $100,000.

Mr. CLANCY. Does not this appointment of valuers seem a strange proceeding? I understand that arbitrators were not appointed, because we are told that the parties were not consulted at all. I suppose that the Government thought the property not worth $100,000—there could be no other ground for the appointment of valuers. That opinion as to the value of the property was probably reached after careful inquiry, because people living in that city would have a pretty fair idea of the value of the property, and anybody to whom property is offered is not without means of gaining some information as to the value. It must have been present to the mind of those who were dealing with the property, that $100,000 was too much. If not too much, it is clear that those who were empowered to act, would accept the property at $100,000 as a fair price. That would be the end of it. But it must be plain that the Government did not believe it was worth that, and they asked the valuers to go on, perhaps in the hope that they would make the value considerably less, because they had an option under which they were not to pay more than $100,000 in any case. The valuers come back and say the property is worth $118,000. The owners then say: You were not satisfied to give us $100,000, and now your own valuers, with whose appointment we had nothing to do, say that the property is worth more. Does it not appear a very strange transaction from beginning to end? It seems a strange transaction to take place on a property of the value of $100,000. It is a new case, as it has been put here tonight, that a set of gentlemen offer a property for any set sum, and those who want to purchase it are not satisfied with the price, and appoint men to value it, gentlemen, perhaps, of good standing, but who know nothing of the value of property.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If these gentlemen could not form a judgment, then you could not find anybody who could.

Mr. CLANCY. Gentlemen who had ideas of the value of property entirely adverse to those of the owners.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. These gentlemen considered the property worth more, and they were willing to sell it to us for $100,000, they were anxious to part with the property.

Mr. CLANCY. Was it stated to the gentlemen who made the valuation, that the Government had a standing offer of $100,000?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think I could state whether they knew that or not. I did not make any communication to them on the subject at all, I do not know whether my hon. friend did. But I must say that what the hon. member has said just now surprises me, because the course which was taken here was the course which is taken every day. I had occasion to expropriate a property, and there is nothing surprising that these gentlemen desired to find a market for the property. It is not every day of the week that parties come along wishing to buy a property valued at $100,000 in the city of St. John. They felt that here was an opportunity of finding a market for this property, and desiring to sell for their own business reasons, they made this offer, and I believe they considered that $100,000 represented the value of the property. I think they considered they were making a fair offer. It happened, fortunately for them that the Government desired to acquire a property on the harbour of St. John, and this was very favourably situated, and, perhaps, as some inducement to the Government to locate at that point rather than at some other point, they made this offer.

Mr. CLANCY. Nobody else thought it was worth that for any other purpose?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend must not think that, because I myself had many conversations with persons in the city able to form a judgment as to what the property was worth, and I mentioned to them that these people were willing to sell at this price, and I invited their judgment as to whether the sum was reasonable. I am bound to say that in no instance do I recall an opinion expressed to me to the effect that the price was excessive or unreasonable.

Mr. CLANCY. It seems odd that the hon. gentleman did not take it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It was not taken not because I did not think it was a good purchase, but because I knew that unless the purchase was made in a way in which it could stand scrutiny, there would be politicians on the other side from one end of the country to the other howling against it as a job; you cannot make a transaction in which the Government is a party without people who are opposed to the Government making attacks on it without rhyme or reason.

Mr. DAVIN. Why was it not put in to the Exchequer Court?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The same course was pursued here as in all other cases where property is expropriated. We filed our plans, we took the property, and we put on, not arbitrators, but valuers for the purpose of advising us as to what they considered a fair sum to offer to the owners. We would have been quite free, and it would have been our duty, in case we had not had an offer from them at a less sum, to tender to these people $118,000, according to the valuation fixed. We would then have been in a position to say to the owners: Now, go ahead, if you are not satisfied with this price, go to the Exchequer Court and we will produce the evidence of these valuers, and we will rely upon that. The report of the valuers was made in writing, fixing the value of $118,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Then, how did the vendors become possessed of the information that the valuers had placed a sum on the property in excess of $100,000? And when the Minister ought to know that the vendors were willing to accept $100,000, why did he disclose the fact to the vendors that the valuers had fixed $118,000, and not hold them to their original offer?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Why does the hon. gentleman assume that the Minister did disclose the fact?

Mr. BENNETT. Then, how did the vendors know? There must have been a good deal of friendliness between the valuers and the vendors.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You cannot get three valuers to examine a property and come to a decision without its leaking out.

Mr. MCNEILL. Were the owners consulted as to these gentlemen who were appointed?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, they never are.

Mr. MCNEILL. It strikes me as curious that the Minister of Finance has said that this was an ordinary transaction, that the owners of a property worth $100,000 should be prepared to leave the valuation of that property to any body of men at all.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They were not asked to. The hon. gentleman, perhaps, is not familiar with the procedure in such a case. If we desired to run a canal through the hon. gentleman's land, we would make our plans as to the quantity of land that we would require for the purpose of our canal, and we would file our plans and expropriate the property. We would then put our valuers upon that land and make a valuation of the damages that he ought to get for our forcibly taking his property. We would not ask him what valuers we should select, we would not consult him on the subject, the department never does. All we have to do is to be careful to make such a selection of valuers, men of judgment, whose valuation, when made, can be relied upon as likely to convince a court. There was no arbitration, no consultation with the owners, there never is in these cases. We have to do it repeatedly, and the same procedure was adopted in this case as we are adopting in respect to canals every month of the year.

Mr. BENNETT. Was the property encumbered?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, there was a mortgage, I think, of $26,000.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And that is as much as could be raised upon it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman think it is fair to jump to a conclusion of that kind? Is it fair for him as a member of Parliament to say that the owners of this property could only borrow upon it $26,000?

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is the amount that could be raised on it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend is not very often so unreasonable as that.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not desire to be unfair or unkind, but the fact is, here is a property encumbered to the extent of $26,000. To whom was it encumbered?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. To a gentleman named Fawcett, of Sackville, N.B.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The banks were not interested in it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, they had nothing to do with it. Mr. Fawcett is a man of large means.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think the hon. Minister will find, and it is no discredit to the gentleman who owned it, that the property was encumbered for just about all that could be raised upon it.

Mr. McNEILL.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman know the property?

Mr. MONTAGUE. No, but I am judging from the circumstances, and from the statement of the hon. Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding), which statement was that these gentlemen were anxious, for reasons which he did not desire to mention to the committee, and which reasons I do not wish to probe at all, that they were desirous to dispose of it. These are undoubtedly financial reasons, as the property was mortgaged to the extent of $26,000. If the hon. gentleman had got the property at its proper value he would have got it at $50,000 or $60,000 at the very outside. There are ways of proving it. May I ask the hon. gentleman how much these gentlemen paid for that property?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot say.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The gentlemen are in the city, and some of them could easily tell us. It is a matter of public importance. You paid $100,000, and you are liable, perhaps, to pay $18,000 more.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think that we are.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Have you a conveyance of the property?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have the property.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Have you a conveyance of it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Certainly we have.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think that is an important point. These gentleman bought the property and spent so much upon it. Let these gentlemen state to the hon. Minister, that he might give it to the committee, how much they paid for this property. The hon. Minister says that they have spent quite a sum on it. I would ask the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Tucker) if this property is worth $100,000. I mean the gallant colonel from St. John. Here is a property encumbered to the extent of $26,000, and that is about all that can be raised upon it. I am asking the gallant colonel from St. John.

Mr. DOMVILLE. He does not hear you; he is not paying any attention.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Neither does the hon. member for King's (Mr. Domville), but that does not make any difference. I am asking the gallant colonel whether this wharf is worth $100,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. member (Mr. Tucker) did not hear you, I am sure.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Hon. gentlemen around him will certainly give him the information.

Mr. TUCKER. Being a little deaf, I was unable to answer the hon. gentleman as promptly as I should like to have done. But I should think that the best judges of a matter of that kind would be those who had spent two or three weeks in making a personal examination of the property, and who have pronounced judgment.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman is diplomatic.

Mr. TUCKER. I was unable to place a value on the property.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I was a little misled by what the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals said as to these men being valuers, when I supposed that there might be some moral obligation on the part of the Government to pay $18,000. What I understand to be the fact is that the Government appointed these gentlemen for the information of the Government, and not under any agreement between the Government and the owners of the property, that the valuation would be adopted.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not at all.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). They are in exactly the same position as if the Government had a regular officer for the purpose of examining the property and reporting. Under these circumstances, I say that not only was it not an arbitration, but it was not even a technical valuation, because a valuation means something that both parties are bound by after it is made.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That would be an arbitration.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). A valuation is where two men are appointed to settle a difference which has not already arisen. They are called arbitrators if appointed after the difference has arisen. I am impressed with the idea that this is a very high value for this wharf property, as far as we have been able to get any information about it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am afraid the hon. gentleman would be inclined to that view, anyway.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have seen valuations made before which have been corrected by subsequent valuations. I have known of circumstances very much like this in my own practice. There was a case where a value of $40,000 was placed on a number of properties by expert valuers, men who were as well acquainted with that property, as these men were acquainted with the property in St. John. The Government were proposing to buy the property; they had a further valuation made, and the first valuation was reduced by more than one-quarter. The property was acquired by the Government for a considerable amount less than this first valuation.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think there would be the slightest probability of any valuation less than this being made by anybody.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Of course, the hon. gentleman knows more about the property than I do.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is very favourably situated.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have some little idea of the value of wharf property in Halifax, and if this property is worth $100,000, such property must be worth a great deal more in St. John than in Halifax.

Mr. DOMVILLE. Our harbour does not freeze, but the Halifax harbour does.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My hon. friend (Mr. Domville) has referred to the Halifax harbour freezing. I think that not within his recollection has an event of that kind occurred. Moreover, we have very good depth of water all the time, which you do not always have at St. John.

Mr. CLANCY. It seems to me that a case might very well be supposed that would have two sides to it. We will suppose that the gentlemen owning a property were anxious to sell that property, as well as they could, and we will suppose that the Government were anxious to buy it as cheaply as they could. We will suppose another case, that they were disposed to favour a friend as well. There would be two alternative courses. One would be to call in valuers in order that too much would not be paid; another would be that if too much was paid, they could stand behind the valuers and say, if they were charged with paying too much for the property: We had the valuers there and that is sufficient justification. That is not an extreme supposition. I do not say that this is the case, but I say that if the Government were trying to defend themselves against an unfair attack, the appointment of valuers would be a very good way of doing it. If they were paying too much they would be able to shield themselves by appointing valuers.

Mr. McMULLEN. After listening to this debate I must confess that I am of the opinion that the valuers of this property appear to be very kind to the owners. I know nothing about the property, but, from the fact that the owners offered it for $100,000, I do not think we should pay them one cent more, and I object to going into the Exchequer Court and having an exhaustive examination by sworn evidence.

Mr. BENNETT. The two hon. gentlemen representing the city of St. John, N.B., ought to know something of the value of this property, if any member of the House does, and yet the junior member (Mr. Tucker) has refrained from expressing any opinion at all. I believe he is an extensive property owner in the city and having been engaged in the marine business he must have a knowledge of the value of wharf property. And yet he has not favoured Parliament with an opinion as to the value of this property. Neither has the other member (Mr. Ellis) ventured an opinion as to the value.

Mr. ELLIS. Perhaps I may not have conveyed my idea to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett). My own judgment is that the property is worth the $100,000 which the Government agreed to pay for it, and which the owners themselves offered to sell it for.

Mr. BENNETT. Not more.

Mr. ELLIS. I accept the view which is generally held in the city, that the $100,000 is the fair value of this property.

Mr. BENNETT. Was the Government represented by counsel before the valuers?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Mr. McLean represented the Government, but I was not there, and I do not know whether the other parties were represented by counsel.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I agree with what the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) has said, that if the Government eventually decide to pay the $100,000—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The $100,000 has been paid.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Have the parties accepted it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Certainly.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I thought you said there was a further claim for $18,000?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is true.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is merely a claim upon the benevolence of the Government?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I suppose so. They say they offered the property to us for $100,000, but that we would not accept it and took our chance of getting it at a lower price by expropriation. They contend that if the award had been lower than the $100,000 they would have to accept it, and that the Government is bound by the converse of that. They have made a claim on the grace and bounty of the Crown to be paid the excess, but they have received no encouragement in any shape or form from me, or none from the Minister of Finance, I believe.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Why was not a decision arrived at by the Government when this offer of the property was made for $100,000?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. At that stage the matter was not fully considered by the Government at all, and it was not dealt with by Council at all.

Mr. McMULLEN. I can easily understand that if the Government had accepted a property for $100,000 without taking any steps to ascertain its value by arbitration, they would have been subject to the same criticism that they are now. I have heard Sir Charles Tupper state in this House that in expropriating property on the St. Charles Branch, he got sick and tired of valuations, because the Government were called upon to pay exorbitant prices. I believe that when a man starts to sell a property to the Government, he will try to beat the country out of every cent he can possibly get. That is, I believe, the rule from the Atlantic to the Pacific. These people offered the property to the Government for $100,000, and it appears that the valuers, whether they intended it or not, have played into the hands of the sellers. But I do not think the Government should pay over $100,000, and I think they should be prepared to fight it out to the bitter end, even to the extent of giving up the property rather than pay any more.

Mr. MONTAGUE. We contend that the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) does not go far enough. That hon. gentleman admitted my argument. These gentlemen offered the property for $100,000, and I claim that that was an exorbitant demand. The property at the outside was worth probably $30,000.

Mr. GIBSON. They could not raise $26,000 or $30,000.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not see why they could not on $30,000 or $35,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Why do you not say $5,000 while you are at it?

Mr. MONTAGUE. The Minister of Railways should not get facetious. His wit is elephantine, and does not go in the House of Commons.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You are elephantine in your figures.

Mr. MONTAGUE. My figures are better than those of the Minister of Railways. I would like to know what these men got the property for.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think that has the slightest relation to the subject.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Oh, no, not a bit. It would help us to judge what the property is worth. The men are here, and they can be asked to give this information.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would have no objection at all to asking them, but I have not got the information.

Mr. McMULLEN. My hon. friend proposes to settle the value of this property by what was originally paid for it. I remember a case somewhat similar in connection with the St. Charles Branch. Additional accommodation was required at Point Lévis, and there was a property there for which the owner a short time before had paid a dollar a foot, and it was actually turned over to the Government at $4 a foot by expropriation; and that is what the Government had to pay, because that was the value put upon it. It just shows what I stated, that property-owners will try to get out of the country all they can get. You really cannot fix the exact value by finding out what was originally paid for the property.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It is some guide.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is not a sure guide. The city of St. John is a growing city, and I presume that there, as in other places, property may have risen considerably in value. Some years ago when the Harris property in St. John was bought by the then Minister of Railways for $200,000, we had a discussion for a whole night, thinking there was something wrong with the purchase. I do not find fault with hon. gentlemen opposite for their criticism. They are perfectly within their rights, and, perhaps, the course they are taking is in the interests of the country; I believe it is. It appears to me rather singular that the valuers valued the property at $18,000 more than the owners offered it for, and I think the Government would not be justified in paying a dollar more than $100,000 for it.

Mr. BENNETT. I think the proposition of the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) is a most reasonable one. The vendors of the property are in the city. Between now and to-morrow the Minister can see the title papers, which are, no doubt, in the department; and if the item is permitted to stand until to-morrow or a subsequent day, we could proceed with another item in the Estimates. As to the question of mortgage, that is a question also in doubt. I draw the attention of the hon. member for North Wellington to this fact, that the Minister does not know whether or not the sum was for principal alone or principal and interest together. If there was a large arrears of interest, that would make a considerable difference.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think there are large arrears of interest.

Mr. BENNETT. Another point, the amount at which the city assessed the property for municipal purposes would be an indication of its value.

Mr. McNEILL. The observations of the hon. member for North Wellington were very fair and in very good spirit, but I must confess that, assuming that these gentlemen, who were appointed by the Government, were competent and honourable men, I am not quite clear that the Government are not under some moral obligation to give $118,000. The Government had the option to buy at $100,000 and did not accept it, but said they would ask certain gentlemen to make a true valuation, and these men told the Government that the property was worth $118,000. Under these circumstances, I do not feel clear that the Government are not bound to give the $118,000, but I do not express an absolute opinion.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It was not exactly a case of option. When the proposal was made to me to sell this property, I was anxious to protect the Government at all points. I had received the impression from my communication with others that $100,000 was probably not an unfair sum. But when they were anxious to close the transaction, for reasons they explained to me, I said: Are you willing that we should take this property at $100,000 with the option of putting it into expropriation proceedings, in which case you are not to claim more than $100,000? They agreed to this, and I took the precaution to get this from them in writing. I have their telegram, in which they agreed that this property might at once be taken by the Government. They asked $100,000, and were willing to take that at once, but they were also content that we should take expropriation proceedings, in which case their claim would still be only $100,000. My hon. friend from Halifax took exception to my remark that these were ordinary proceedings in expropriation, but my remark was substantially correct. When the Government proceed to expropriate lands for a canal they file their plans and thus acquire the title, and then they appoint one or more valuers, and if the figures arrived at by the valuers are satisfactory to the Government, they tender that sum to the owner, and if the owner sees fit to reject their tender he may take his suit in the Exchequer Court. The owners of this land wanted to sell and they offered it for $100,000. Acting on behalf of the Government, I said: We will take the land on condition that we shall pay no more than $100,000, and if we proceed to expropriation you are not to claim more. Men of the highest character and experience were appointed valuers, and after spending several weeks on the matter, they came to the conclusion that the property was worth $118,550. That is ample vindication of the Government buying it at $100,000.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It is simply proof that the gentlemen appointed were not good valuers. The hon. member for St. John (Mr. Ellis) screwed his courage up to the point of saying that he thinks it is worth $100,000, in the opinion of the people around, but will not say that there is a shadow of foundation for making it worth $118,000.

Mr. ELLIS. These valuers heard the evidence, and that was their judgment after hearing all the facts.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Was the hon. gentleman present?

Mr. ELLIS. No.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The fact remains that these men put a very outside value on this property when they offered it to the Government.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think they did.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman says they did not, and yet they were willing, if a board of arbitration allowed them more, not to claim more. They were dead certain that the valuers would not allow them more.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They committed themselves to accept $100,000.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not believe the property was worth that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Of course you know best.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not pretend to know. I venture to say that a good many hon. gentlemen opposite do not believe that the property is worth $100,000. I venture to say that the hon. Minister still has grave doubts as to its being worth $100,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not the least doubt.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Then the hon. gentleman differs with a good many of his followers. If it is such an absolute certainty that the property is worth $100,000, in a very few minutes he can get the price paid by these gentlemen who sold to the Government. The hon. gentleman must have the deeds, as no doubt he had a search made as to the title.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, a full search.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Then it all will appear in the deeds?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It might not.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I venture to say that it does. I would ask that this vote stand until we get that evidence.

Mr. FIELDING.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What evidence?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Just what these gentlemen paid for the property.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How does that affect the question? Suppose they had obtained the property as a gift.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is an entirely different thing. They bought it as a business transaction, and they sold it as a business transaction. How much did they pay for it? How long did they own it? How much did they spend on it? What was the income of it? What was it assessed for by the city? These are the questions that we want answered, and I submit they are not unreasonable questions. Surely, we are not here to pass these things without information. I am not impugning the motives to the hon. gentleman, and I never do impugn the motives of any member of this House. I am not saying that there is anything wrong. If it is shown that these gentlemen paid anything like the sum of money for this property that the Government is paying, I will acknowledge that I was wrong. I can only say that so far as I am concerned, we have got to get that information.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know what these gentlemen spent, nor do I know what price they paid.

Mr. MONTAGUE. But the people are here.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. But I cannot very well bring them into this Chamber to state what they paid, nor can I go away and inquire of them. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Montague) is not reasonable, nor is not fair, in suggesting that this item should stand for this reason. It is a matter of indifference to this House—

Mr. MONTAGUE. How the money is spent.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman will find that, so far as the Department of Railways and Canals is concerned, there is just as much anxiety to get value for every dollar that is paid as there was when the department was under the direction of his hon. friends.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am not questioning that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In my opinion it is a matter of indifference to this committee and to the country what these gentlemen paid for the property, or what they have spent upon it. There is only one way in which the Government can proceed in cases where it has to acquire property. We have to depend, in order to ascertain the value, upon the judgment and experience of men whom we select to advise us. Proceedings are constantly being taken for expropriation in my department. There are not tens, not hundreds, but thousands of cases? What principle would the hon. gentleman have us proceed upon? No Minister can give his personal attention to these matters or ascertain the value of these properties. This only he can do, and this he is bound to do—to select as careful, competent and reliable men as he can find, to advise him as to the value of the property. I venture to say that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Montague) will not find among his political friends in St. John one individual of credit who will say that the valuers chosen by the Government are not as competent and as reliable men as can be chosen in the city of St. John. And what would these men do? They would ask honourable and well-informed men, who have no interest in anything except what is fair, what the value of this property is. They would not invite before them people of no experience, people of no standing, people who have no characters to maintain. I can tell the hon. gentleman that the gentlemen who conducted this valuation have just as much regard for their own characters as any member of this House. They have put their names and pledged their characters and respectability to the statement that this property has a value of $118,000. Now, what can the hon. gentleman say I did that I ought not to have done; what can he say that I left undone that I ought to have done? What other means could I have taken to assure the public that this transaction was fair and square, open and above board? These gentlemen having decided this to be the value, the hon. gentleman says the property is not worth more than $40,000 or $50,000. What does he mean? Has he any authority for such a statement? Ought he, as a member of this House, to suggest that these men of character and respectability have entered upon a scheme to rob the Government to put money into the pockets of certain property owners, regardless of their honour and their duty? It is a cheap way to make a point for the hon. gentleman to say that he does not believe that the property is worth this amount. But he has not a single circumstance to support his opinion. He does not know the property, never saw it, and, I dare say, never heard of it until to-night. Are statements made by an hon. member under such circumstances of the slightest value? Does he wish to have his judgment and opinion, as a member of Parliament, treated with respect, that he makes such a statement in this House? I say that to defer the further consideration of this item in order to find out what these gentlemen paid for the property, is simply to make a farce of the whole business. We have done everything to make sure that we are not paying more than the property is worth. These gentlemen have given the deeds of the property, and, the transaction being closed, there is no reason why this item should not pass.

Mr. DAVIN. I will give the hon. Minister the reason why this item should be closely canvassed. Both the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and the Minister of Militia and Defence (Mr. Borden) have laid down the doctrine that the Opposition are as responsible for an item passed in Committee as the Government. I contested that view last night, and I did so on the authority of Mr. Gladstone. But we have these two prominent members of the Government declaring that if we pass an item, whether we criticise it or not, we are responsible for it. The hon. member for Victoria, B.C. (Mr. Earle) I could call as a witness that, in regard to the proposal to send the militia to the Yukon, he and I discussed and disapproved of it. But, on looking at "Hansard," I find that I did not express my opinion in the House as perhaps I should have done. And last night I ventured to criticise the appropriation under that head, and the Minister of Militia said: You are as responsible as we are. Now, in regard to this large item—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The item was passed last year.

Mr. DAVIN. It is evident that if we do not canvass this item, we shall be told that we are responsible for it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am a little astonished at the warmth of the Minister of Railways and Canals. That is, in my judgment, not an evidence of the strength of his case. Now, if a Minister has made what he is able to show is a good bargain for the country, he will be willing at every stage to answer every question, and to give every tittle of evidence he can to show the value of that bargain to the country. If this was a good bargain, we would have the Minister of Railways and Canals down here with all these figures, just as we had the Minister of Militia and Defence this afternoon reading a whole list of figures.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He had plenty of time.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And so have we plenty of time to deal with a $100,000 bargain made by the Minister of Railways and Canals. Why does he not give us the information in this regard?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have given you all the information I have.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I say the information the hon. gentleman has given us wholly dis-credits the transaction. Has one gentleman spoken on the other side of the House tonight who has not discredited those valuers? The hon. gentleman asks me why I have the audacity to rise and asperse these gentlemen? I have not aspersed these gentlemen. It is the Minister of Finance who has discredited them.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I said that inasmuch as the company had bound themselves to sell the property for $100,000, that was all I was willing to admit they had a right to. But I said that after the valuers had placed it at a higher figure, there was room for a difference of opinion to the extent of $18,000.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I must accept the statement, but I believe the hon. gentleman will be found in the "Hansard" to have said that he was astonished, or surprised, at the report of these gentlemen.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I was surprised that any question could be raised as against the Government for more than $100,000. I say that now. The company had bound themselves by their communication simply to accept the $100,000, and my surprise was that they should want anything more. The first intimation I had of the valuation from the owners of the land, who came to me for the other $18,000, and I was surprised that they should ask for anything more than $100,000.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Ellis) himself say that that property is worth $118,000? Not at all. Take the junior member for St. John (Mr. Tucker), will he say the property is worth $118,000?

Mr. TUCKER. I said that these men, the valuers, were respectable men, in whom we have confidence in our city, and when they arrived at this conclusion we placed some value upon it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman is too good a business man not to have an opinion of his own on this question. He will not say that the property is worth $100,000.

Mr. TUCKER. I will tell you this much. I have been on the property before it was spoken of for Government purposes, several times, but I never looked at it with an eye as to its value. Since the Government have purchased it I made it my business to go down on one occasion to see it. Not knowing the relative value of land on either side, I did not know, nor do I know anything about it, and to arrive at a conclusion worth anything as to the actual valuation of that property, was on my part utterly impossible. Therefore, I could not stand here as you do and value land that I never saw. I would not pretend to do it. But I must say that I have some little faith in the report of respectable people.

Mr. MONTAGUE.

Mr. MONTAGUE. If these gentlemen had placed a valuation at $218,000, he will endorse their opinion, because they are respectable men.

Mr. TUCKER. I have sufficient faith in the gentlemen who form that commission to know that they would not make a wild report with the opportunity they had of examining the relative value of the land in the vicinity.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have shown that the friends of the Government have discredited their own commission. Now, what possible reason is there that this cannot stand over?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Surely the hon. gentleman does not want the impression created that he simply wants to block the thing for the purpose of blocking it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Not at all.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does it not look like that. Supposing that upon inquiry I find that the property was bought for $20,000—

Mr. MONTAGUE. Then, I say that you paid three times too much for it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS—supposing that, after it was bought, $10,000 was spent upon it how does that bear upon the question before us. And upon what ground can the hon. gentleman ask that this appropriation should not be made when I, as the head of the department, and when my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, who was acting in my absence, so far as our conduct is concerned, have done everything that it was our duty to have done in this connection and on the strength of which we paid the money?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to suggest to the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals that I agree with him to a certain extent in what he says. I agree that the amount that these gentlemen paid for the property is not conclusive as to its value. If these gentlemen had bought this property in the open market three months before and had spent no money upon it, it would be a most important thing for the House or for the judge of the Exchequer Court to know what they paid for it. But, if they paid a certain amount fifteen years ago, when conditions were different and business was not booming as it is now, it would have nothing to do with it at all. A recent purchase under circumstances similar to the present, would be a most relevant fact for the court or the House to know; otherwise it might not have any relevancy at all, and in any case it is not conclusive. Even if the owners only paid $50,000 for it, the Government might be perfectly right in paying $100,000, because these gentlemen might have got a good bargain. I know of a case, as I said before, where the valuations of property ranged from $15,000 to $80,000, according to the opinions of the witnesses. Because the House does not agree with the opinion of the valuator in this case, I do not think there is any aspersion cast upon them.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. How should the value have been determined?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not say that the value was not properly determined. I think it was a prudent measure for the Government to ask three men to value this property. The only thing that the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) proposes is that the hon. Minister should ascertain the price that the parties paid for this property, and lay it before the House before the item passes.

Mr. GIBSON. The hon. member for Haldimand has thrown the taunt across the floor of the House that there was not an hon. gentleman on this side who was prepared to stand up and defend a transaction of this kind. I have listened with a great deal of attention to the discussion in reference to this matter, and I must say that in it the Government deserve the support not only of the members on this side, but of the members on the other side of the House as well. Here we find these gentlemen owning a piece of property. I understand that they held that property for some years, and not for a month or two, as the hon. member for Haldimand suggests. They went into this transaction with the bona fide intention of establishing a steamship line. The hon. member for Haldimand says that the deeds will show what they paid for that property. Every lawyer and every hon. gentleman in this House who has had any experience in purchasing property knows that the price to be found in a deed is no criterion of the value of property. It is simply a conveyance of the land to the parties purchasing the property. There may have been $10,000, or $15,000, or $75,000 put on the property after these gentlemen purchased it. Did the Government make reasonable inquiries as to the value of the property? The hon. Minister of Finance, who was acting in the absence of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals in England, took the trouble to go down to St. John and make personal inquiry as to the value of the property, and I am informed, on reliable authority, that gentlemen who are well acquainted with the value of properties in St. John, gave it as their honest opinion, that this property was worth $100,000. The gentlemen owning the property offered it to the Government for $100,000, and the hon. Minister of Finance said that $100,000 would be the maximum, in any case, that they would give to the owners of the property, with the right to cut it down if they could. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals returned to the country. He was not satisfied about the value of this property, and he asked three independent gentlemen in St. John, occupying the highest position in the country, to act as arbitrators and as advisers of the Government as to the value of the property. These gentlemen, whose integrity cannot be questioned and whose reputation is at stake, and I would here remark that the reputation of the hon. members supporting the Government is as much at stake as that of hon. gentlemen opposite, gave it as their opinion that the property was worth $118,000. The Government expropriated the property and paid $100,000 for it, and they were justified in paying $100,000. I am glad to know that the Government did not see their way clear to paying this $18,000, because the bargain was made on the basis of $100,000. All that troubles the hon. member for Haldimand is that the Government went out of their way to take this ordinary precaution, because, if the transaction had been carried through when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power they would have expropriated the property and paid $118,000 without any question at all. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Montague) asks the Government to allow this item to stand in order to give the Conservative papers an opportunity of saying to-morrow that the Government had been caught paying more than it was worth for this property.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman must not impute motives.

Mr. GIBSON. I do not want to impute motives, and I withdraw. We know that from the moment the Mackenzie Government took power until they went out of office it was constantly and repeatedly assailed and attacked, and since the present Liberal Government came into power there has been a combination to try and discredit it in the House and out of the House and everywhere. I am proud to say that up to the present moment the Opposition have been unable to find anything against this Government, and in this particular transaction the Government are to be congratulated upon its businesslike disposal of it. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Montague) says that there was $26,000 loaned on this property and that the entire value was only $30,000. How does he know that the $26,000 covered the whole property, and it certainly is not likely that any company would lend $26,000 on a property only worth $30,000? How does he know but that that loan was obtained to rebuild the wharf or to make improvements? Neither would the transfer of the property be any value in fixing the price, because it is quite possible that between the time it came into the hands of the late owners and its sale to the Government many improvements may have been made. No transaction that has been brought forward in the House for a long time so commends itself to the good judgment of Parliament as this one.

Mr. McNEILL. I would suggest to the Minister that as it is now 12 o'clock, he might grant the reasonable request made by the member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague), and I believe if he does so more progress will be made. I have been here a good many sessions, and I hope the Minister will pardon me for saying, that I have a little more experience of the working of the committees of this House than has my hon. friend, and I have never found any good come of keeping the House sitting when we reach a crisis of this kind. In view of the fact that we have had such a long session, I think the Minister had better let the item stand.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I concede that it is desirable that we should make an early adjournment to-night, and if the committee pass this resolution I would be willing to adjourn. If this item were allowed to stand I cannot help thinking that such a course would involve an acknowledgment that there was something needed in the way of further information to justify the committee passing this resolution.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If the report of the evidence was here, I suppose it would contain the very information we want.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That may or may not be found in the report. If there was anything suggested in the way of doubt as to the bona fides of the Government in this transaction, or that sufficient information has not been furnished I would at once consent to let the item stand. I, for one, will not admit that every document in connection with all the items in supply should be piled up here in the lobby in expectation that some hon. gentleman would ask for information contained in some of them. If any gentleman thinks this transaction has an unpleasant odour, for any reason at all, let him move for the papers, and they will be brought down.

Mr. DAVIN. It is too late in the session now.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not by any means. You have the Public Accounts doing nothing, and they can investigate it any time. Let that committee take this subject up, and investigate it root and branch; but do not ask us to keep Parliament waiting, and stop the granting of the supplies while you are getting something that has no real business connection with the Estimates which are going through.

Mr. DAVIN. If this item passes, will the hon. gentleman say that he will bring down the papers?

Mr. GIBSON.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Unquestionably I will. The hon. member for Halifax suggested that we might furnish the report and all the evidence and papers that we received from the commission, and I will do so.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman, it appears to me, has shown the weakness of his own case by his refusal to give us the information we ask. If this is a splendid bargain for the Government, why should not the hon. gentleman pile up evidence to show that it is? I have not suggested that the transaction is fishy or dishonest. I am only suggesting that too much was paid for the property. I am not suggesting that it was intentionally paid; it may have been paid in ignorance; and the hon. gentleman has no right to assume that he was being attacked or to allow his anger to rise against gentlemen on this side of the House, who are quite within their right in making this criticism. The hon. gentleman says that the information which I ask for has nothing whatever to do with the question, and that we have no right to question him as to the expenditure of $100,000 out of last year's vote, when he is asking for a vote which has no connection with that at all. But he is asking for a vote in continuation of that work, and we are entitled to ask for every detail of the expenditure that has already taken place in connection with the same work.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Certainly.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. Minister of Finance admits that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I admit that.

Mr. MONTAGUE. When he is in his seat the hon. gentleman admits that, but when he is on his feet he scolds me for my attempt to get the particulars of that expenditure. Now, I will make what I think is a fair proposition. Let us pass that page of items, and let us reserve this one on the understanding that we shall have the full privilege of discussing the others. I am sure that is evidence that I do not desire to block the hon. gentleman's estimates.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have no objection to that.

Mr. MONTAGUE. On this understanding, that the hon. gentleman will bring down the evidence on the purchase, and every information he has.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That proposition is not an unreasonable one, and I accede to that. It will not be understood at all as involving any question of or reflection upon this particular transaction.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not see how it could in any way.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I want to say this to the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague), who is always fair in discussing items in Supply, that, whatever may have been the price paid for this property by these gentlemen, that ought not to be introduced as an element in considering the present value of the property. I do not know what amount these gentlemen paid for it; I have never felt that I was justified in asking them; I thought that was a matter of their own private concern, which they were not called upon to disclose. The question which I, as a member of the Government, had to concern myself with was, what is the present value of the property? A great deal has taken place in the city of St. John since these gentlemen acquired this property. Its importance as an ocean port has enormously increased. In fact, it has only been recognized as an ocean port since then. Large and important wharfs involving a cost of $750,000, have been constructed by the municipality of St. John near this property, and it has been enhanced in value accordingly. As St. John was growing as an ocean port, it was evident that the time was not far distant when this property would come into demand for the purposes for which the neighbouring properties were being used. Moreover, I want hon. members to consider this further fact, that this property was returning to its owners a rental of over $5,000 a year. Now, how can any hon. gentleman with a business thought on this subject, suggest any less value than $100,000 in respect of a property which was bringing to its owners that annual return?

Committee rose, and reported progress.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 12.10 a.m. (Wednesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 12th July, 1899.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

COMMITTEE ON PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS.

Mr. FORTIN moved that the Select Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections be empowered to employ a shorthand writer to take down such evidence as they may deem necessary.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. FORTIN moved that all the proceedings of the Select Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, and all the evidence which may be taken before it, be printed from day to day for the use of the members of the committee, and that rule 94 be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

MR. MARTIN JEROME.

Mr. ROCHE asked:

1. Is Mr. Martin Jerome an employee of the Interior Department in the province of Manitoba as forest ranger or in any other capacity?

2. If so, is he the same gentleman who is the Liberal candidate for the constituency of Carillon in the ensuing elections in that province?

3. Will his services be continued by the Government while he is engaged in party politics?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). 1. Mr. Martin Jerome is an employee of the Interior Department in the province of Manitoba as forest ranger. 2. Inquiry has elicited the fact that Mr. Jerome has been tendered but has not accepted a nomination for the legislature. 3. Should Mr. Jerome accept the nomination his employment in his present capacity will cease.

I. C. R.—APPOINTMENT OF MR. BRUCE McDOUGALL.

Mr. McDOUGALL (by Mr. Taylor) asked:

1. Has Bruce McDougall, of Moncton, received an appointment as an official on the Intercolonial Railway, in the general offices there, and if so, what appointment?

2. Has the Government any information that the said Bruce McDougall published a paper in Moncton called the "Plain Dealer"?

3. Was said paper excluded from the mails, and if so, on what ground? Was it on the ground of its scurrility and indecency?

4. Has the Government any information to the effect that the said Bruce McDougall while publishing said "Plain Dealer" referred therein to the present manager of the Intercolonial Railway and other leading officials thereof in a manner reflecting upon their personal character, and also upon their conduct in official matters?

5. Upon whose recommendation was said Bruce McDougall employed as such official?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). 1. C. Bruce McDougall has been appointed as clerk in the audit office at Moncton. 2. The Government is aware that the said C. Bruce McDougall published a paper in Moncton called the "Plain Dealer." 3. The department have no knowledge of the said paper being excluded from the mails. 4. The Government has no information as regards question number four. 5. Mr. C. B. McDougall was appointed upon the usual recommendation.

THE PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Mr. HUGHES. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to say, as a member of the Public Accounts Committee, that some days ago certain witnesses were ordered to come here to give evidence in a certain subject before that committee. The witnesses were summoned for last Tuesday, and were present, but no meeting of the committee has yet been summoned, and the witnesses are kept here at public expense. The delay also necessitates my remaining here on this glorious 12th of July, in the city of Ottawa, instead of being out in my own riding commemorating the event which brought civil and religious liberty into the world. I regret exceedingly that the chairman of the committee has so neglected his duty in this matter.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. HUGHES. Perhaps I am out of order. I would like to ask and to find out, if possible, when this committee will meet, so that these witnesses may not be kept here away from their homes at public expense?

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I beg leave to say in reply to the hon. gentleman that the committee met on various days and there was no business done. Yesterday it could not meet on account of the hon. member and others with him who kept the House in session all the time. I was going to call a meeting the night before last, but I saw from the temper of the hon. gentleman and others associated with him, that it was no use to do so. As to the hon. gentleman being prevented from promulgating those noble principles he refers to, I beg leave to say, as an individual member, that whatever may be my attachment to any order, the performance of my duty as a member of the House is of more importance than anything else. We are here to attend to public business, and we must do so.

Mr. HUGHES. I resent the personal aspersions cast upon me by the chairman of the Public Accounts Committee. The hon. gentleman was not in the city, and was, therefore, not in this House. He was not here, and that is the reason he did not call a meeting of the committee.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I was here yesterday morning, and would have called a meeting if there was any gentlemen to attend it.

Mr. HUGHES. The hon. gentleman was absent from the city. His statement is entirely erroneous in saying that he could not call this committee.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). That is not true, and he knows it.

Mr. BLAIR.

SCRIP FOR THE HALF-BREEDS.

Mr. DAVIN. I wish to call the attention of the Minister of the Interior to a very important statement which is made in the "Daily Herald" of Calgary, of July 8th. It will be remembered that when we had a very important Bill before this committee, one clause of which provides for giving scrip to the half-breeds of the North-west, the Minister of the Interior said:

Notwithstanding all the years I have lived in the North-west, I never saw one of these original certificates until I came to the department.

When I came to examine the certificate, I found that it simply said: "This certificate entitles John Smith or the bearer to $240 worth of scrip," setting out the particulars. So that when a certificate was issued, all that a broker had to do was to get possession of it without making himself liable for stealing it, and he would be entitled to come here and make a demand for the scrip.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am afraid the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) is quoting from a previous debate.

Mr. DAVIN. I am going to refer to—

Mr. SPEAKER. But the hon. gentleman must not quote. An indirect reference might be made to a debate, but certainly not a quotation.

Mr. DAVIN. It will be remembered that the hon. Minister of the Interior said that the scrip that will be issued by the commission will not be payable to bearer as previous scrip was, but that it could not be alienated without an assignment, and that assignment would have to be lodged in the Department of the Interior. He made a point by saying that the half-breeds who got the scrip would thus be protected, as they were not protected previously. In the paper to which I have referred, the Calgary "Herald," July 8th, I find the following:—

Some peculiar stories are in circulation in reference to the half-breed scrip issued by the treaty commissioners and now offered for sale by speculators. Notwithstanding Mr. Sifton's declaration to the contrary, the scrip is made payable to bearer, a portion of the printed matter having been struck out by the commissioners.

I think the hon. Minister of the Interior will thank me for bringing this before him and giving him an opportunity of making an explanation in regard to the matter.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). The statement which I made to the House the other day is absolutely correct. I would only say in regard to the hon. gentleman's statement, that I cannot enter into a full explanation of the matter at the present stage, because we are not at a stage of the proceedings of the House that would permit me to go into it. I have received a number of official papers, letters of recommendation and of advice from the commissioners, and so soon as my estimates are reached, or at any other convenient stage of the proceedings, I will lay the papers before the House and give a full explanation of the whole matter.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—SALE OF BINDER TWINE.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR (South Leeds). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I have something to say very important to myself as well as important to the country, and, to put myself right, I will conclude with a motion. In the Ottawa "Evening Journal" of yesterday, the following statement is made by the writer in the gallery, I have no doubt, who reported the proceedings of this House :

Proceeding, Mr. Taylor said, that as shrewd business men, Bate & Sons knew that their action would put the Government under an obligation to them. They bought the Government binder twine the next year at 4 cents, and sold it at an average of 13 cents, thus making enough to pay for two or three houses.

The enterprising editor or proprietor of the "Journal" sent one of the reporters of that paper to see Messrs. Bate & Sons :

A "Journal" reporter to-day called at H. N. Bate & Sons regarding Mr. Taylor's statements.

The "Journal" says that I made a statement that Bate & Sons purchased binder twine at four cents a pound. I made no such statement. After having made reference to the question of the house, to which I need not refer again, as that matter was discussed yesterday, the statement in the "Journal" proceeds :

"Another lie," said Mr. H. A. Bate, in the interview with him, "was the assertion that the firm had bought the Government's binder twine at 4 cents and sold it at 13 cents."

The statement I made in the House, as reported in "Hansard," is as follows :—

They were allowed to purchase 100,000 lbs. of binder twine from the penitentiary, without tender, last year, at 4½ cents per pound,—

At 4½ cents a pound. Who told that lie? Certainly it was not me. It was the "Journal" reporter in this House, who published the false statement that I had stated that 4 cents was paid for binder twine, when the statement I made was that 4½ cents was the price which Bate & Sons paid. The next statement they make is, that the statement that they sold at an average of 13 cents is false. I did not make the statement that they sold at all, because I believe the fact is that they did not sell it to the farmers of this country. The statement I made was this :

—and through the ring they sold it at 13½ cents a pound to the farmers throughout this country.

I said that it was sold through the ring, and I will prove, before I sit down, that there is a ring, and every hon. member of this House from Ontario, or from any other province where binder twine is used, knows that the farmers of this country had to pay from 13 to 16 cents a pound for their binder twine. The average was about 13½ cents that the farmers had to pay for this article. I did not say that Bate & Sons sold it to the farmers; the statement I made was that it was sold through the ring. Another statement that Messrs. Bate & Sons gave to the reporter is :

If we had bought at 4 and sold at 13 it would have been perfectly legitimate, provided we tendered in open market for the twine, which we did. The Government advertised for tenders.

There they make a statement, and I will leave it between them and the right hon. Prime Minister to say who tells the lie, because, if my right hon. friend will refer to "Hansard," page 1873, he will see that I put this question to the Government :

2. To whom and at what price was the binder twine manufactured at the Kingston Penitentiary between the first day of July, 1897, and the 30th June, 1898, sold? Were tenders called for, and in what papers were they advertised?

The Prime Minister replied to me as follows :—

To H. N. Bate & Sons, Ottawa, at the following prices :—Sisaf, $4.15 per cwt.; Beaver, $4.45 per cwt.; Maple Leaf, $4.95 per cwt. These were the exact figures that I quoted the other night when I said the average was about 4½ cents a pound.

Tenders were called for by circular addressed to the leading dealers throughout the Dominion.

Bate & Sons say that tenders were advertised for. The Prime Minister says that a private circular was sent out to the leading dealers throughout the Dominion. At a later date, I asked the right hon. Prime Minister this question :

What are the names and post office addresses of the leading dealers throughout the Dominion to whom circulars were sent inviting them to tender for the output of the binder twine manufactured at the Kingston Penitentiary between the 1st day of July, 1897, and the 30th June, 1898?

The hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick), answering for the Department of Justice, said :

The following are the firms to whom circulars were sent :—

Remember that the right hon. Prime Minister said that they were sent to the leading dealers throughout the Dominion, and Bate & Sons say that, in response to a public advertisement, they tendered in open market. I will prove, before I sit down, that there was no tender at all, but that the twine was sold before the circular was passed. Who were the leading dealers throughout the Dominion to whom this circular was sent? The gentlemen who composed the ring that has controlled the article of binder twine for the last year or two were the parties, with one or two exceptions, to whom I will refer, to whom this circular was sent :

Wood, Wallace & Co., Hamilton ; Hobbs Hardware Co., London, Ont.; John Hallam, Toronto.

Everybody knows who John Hallam is. A party heeler, not in that line at all.

Rice, Lewis & Co., Toronto ; H. Mooers, Kingston.

The gentleman there who handles the funds of the party when there is an election on, and who is not a merchant at all.

J. H. Ashdown & Co., Winnipeg.

The gentleman who handled the twine for all that part of the country for the ring, and a defeated candidate at the last election.

Coll Bros., of St. John, N.B.

To whom, as I shall prove, this Government sold the output of binder twine as soon as it was made in 1896, without tender, and who handed it over to the Hobbs Hardware Company. Coll Bros. bought it one year, the Hobbs Hardware Company the next, and Bate & Sons the next. This is the ring that controlled it.

The Farmers' Binder Twine and Agricultural Manufacturing Co., Brantford.

Which I shall prove by Mr. Bate's statement are also in the ring.

Charles Braithwaite, Portage la Prairie, and Jas. Elder, Virden, Man.

Both farmers, one a defeated candidate in the last election who opposed my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Roche), and neither of whom is in that line of business at all ; and H. N. Bate & Sons of Ottawa. These are the names given by the Solicitor General as the leading business firms to whom the Prime Minister said this circular was sent. Not a circular was sent to Halifax, not one to Montreal, not one to Quebec, not one to Victoria, or to any other place. Not a circular was sent to the Massey Manufacturing Company, the largest binder twine handlers in Ontario or in the Dominion. The Government wanted to hand it over to their friends, and they did so, as I will prove before I sit down.

Mr. BERGERON. To help a combine.

Mr. TAYLOR. Not only to help but to form a combine, with their knowledge. Mr. Bate says :

The Government advertised for tenders. We replied. We do not know whether there were other tenderers or not. We got the contract in March, 1898, at an average of about 4.50. That this was a reasonable price was proved by a purchase we made later, when prices had risen. In March, on the rising market, we bought from a private firm in Brantford 307,000 pounds of binder twine at 4.80 cents per 100 lbs.

That is the output of the Farmers' Binder Twine Company, of Brantford, which is handed over to the ring in order to gull the farmers of this country and make them pay from 13 to 16 cents a pound. He says further :

The pure manilla, bought at 4.95 from the Government went at 6.05 to 6.20.

The sisal, bought at 4.15, went at 4.90 to 5.25.

He does not say to whom. It went into the pool at these prices.

" Mr. Taylor's false statement that we sold at an average of 13 cents," said Mr. Bate, " was doubtless a guess based on the fact that the market made an extraordinary advance last year, and the highest price for the best twine towards the end of the year did touch 13 cents, which we did not get."

They practically admit my price, saying that it was got at the end of the year, after the pool was completed. But they do not sell to the retail trade of this country at all ; they do not handle binder twine. It is sold by the Hobbs Company and their branches throughout the country. He repeats again :

" We got the contract by tender in open competition, paid a fair price and sold at ordinary profits. I take the trouble to explain this, not because we would not have had a right to sell at the most exorbitant profit if we could have got it, but because when a man will make the recklessly false assertions Mr. Taylor has done about the binder twine, it can be judged how much reliance can be placed on his vile slander upon Sir Wilfrid Laurier."

Now, I want to ask who told the lies ? I did not make the statement that Bate & Sons bought the twine for 4 cents. The statement I made was that they had bought at 4½ cents. Who told that lie ? I did not say that they sold to the farmers of this country at 13½ cents. Who made that false statement ? " Hansard " proves that I said it was sold to the farmers by the ring who handled the twine. What is wrong about that ? They say tenders were called for by advertisement. The Prime Minister said : " No, there was a private circular sent to the leading dealers." Who told the falsehood there ? What else is there for me to prove ? I have told no lies in connection with the matter. I made the statement, which they admit, that they bought it from the Government without tender at 4½ cents a pound, and that it was sold to the farmers at 13½ cents. Now, I will prove that they bought it without tender. I moved in the Public Accounts Committee for all the correspondence in reference to this deal. After fighting pretty hard, I got it by piecemeal ; and what is the first document ? On the 19th of February, 1899, the Minister of Justice writes a letter to Messrs. Bate & Sons with whom he had previously had an interview in regard to the matter. In that letter, he says :

Referring to the interview between the Minister of Justice and your Mr. H. Allen Bate, I am directed by the Minister to state that he is prepared to consider any definite proposal which you may submit in connection with the manufacture of binder twine at the Kingston Penitentiary.

I may also inform you that we have on hand at Kingston Penitentiary a quantity of three different grades of twine, and the Minister will be glad to receive any offer which you may make in that connection, such offer to be treated confidentially pending a definite decision in reference thereto.

Whatever was said and done, in dealing with the property of the people of this country, must be confidential—

The twine referred to is the produce of the manufacture of the current fiscal year.

This document I only got by seeing that the next letter proved that one of that date had been written. On the 28th of February, Messrs. Bate & Sons wrote to the Minister of Justice, as follows :—

Ottawa, February 28th, 1898.

To the Hon. David Mills, Minister of Justice, Ottawa.

Sir,—Referring to the request contained in yours of the 19th instant, relative to making you an offer for the binder twine on hand, we beg to submit the following :—

For about 60 tons of sisal..... $4 50 per 100

For about 120 tons mixed manilla ..... 4 45 do

For about 100 tons pure manilla 4 95 do

Subject to cash settlements on dates of deliveries at our option, f.o.b. Kingston, providing of course that the manufacturing is well done and in perfect condition.

We are, awaiting the favour of an early reply,

Yours faithfully,

(Sgd.) H. N. BATE & SONS.

Remember, the hon. Minister of Justice got that offer on the 28th of February, and no doubt at once decided that he would hand the twine over to these people. I have no doubt that he went to Council with that proposition, but Council had to give some impression of honesty, and they issued a circular dated the 5th of March, calling for tenders. The Prime Minister said this was sent to all the leading dealers throughout the country. It was sent to the parties I have named, and what time was left for a reply? It had to be typewritten and addressed, so that I suppose it would leave the office about the 10th of March, and the tenders had to be returned by the 19th. There was not time for a letter to go to Virden and back, nor to Victoria and back. This is the circular :

Ottawa, 5th March, 1898.

Sealed tenders, endorsed "Tender for Twine," and addressed "Inspector of Penitentiaries, Ottawa," will be received until Saturday, the 19th instant, inclusive, for the prospective output of the twine factory at the Kingston Penitentiary for the current year. The lot consists approximately of 500 tons of "Maple Leaf," "Beaver" and "Pure Sisal" brands, and includes the twine on hand and manufactured since the 1st of August last, as well as that which may be manufactured before the 1st of August next. The twine will be delivered f.o.b. cars, Kingston, in quantities to suit the purchases. The Penitentiary warehouse to be cleared of all twine on the 1st of August next, at which date the contract will terminate.

Terms, cash on delivery.

The quality of the twine may be ascertained by inspection at the Penitentiary warehouse.

Tenders should state the price per pound for each grade, and must be accompanied by accepted cheque of $2,000, payable to the order of the Minister of Justice, which, in the event of the tender being accepted, will be retained by the department as a guarantee of the faithful performance of the contract and accounted for in the final settlement.

That was the circular calling for tenders, which the Prime Minister said was sent to all the leading dealers throughout this country, but which was sent to the five or six gentlemen who composed this ring which bled the farmers white last year. The next is the document I read in reply to the answer of the hon. Minister to my inquiry, which I put to the House some time ago, giving a list of the parties to whom tenders were sent. The next document on the file is dated 28th February, a copy of the one I read from Bate & Sons to the Minister of Justice. But on the 19th March, the day that tenders were to be called for, and which were to be received up to the 19th, the department got a document from Bate & Sons, which was not a tender at all, but simply a letter to the Minister, and which reads as follows :—

Ottawa, March 19th, 1898.

To Douglas Stewart,
Inspector of Penitentiaries.

Dear Sir,—Referring to your circular of the 5th instant, calling for sealed tenders for the prospective output of binder twine at the Kingston Penitentiary for the current year, we beg to say you may consider our offer made on the 28th ult., and addressed to the Hon. David Mills, Minister of Justice, for certain quantities of twine, as applying to the output for the current year.

In regard to the deposit of $2,000 asked for in your circular, and referring to our conversation over the 'phone this morning,—

Letters were not sufficient; they had a private conversation over the telephone.

—we will be pleased to send you our accepted cheque on Tuesday next, if desired. Kindly advise us on this point, and oblige,

Yours truly,

BATE & SONS.

There is the open competition. In reply to the circular, there was not a tender put in at all, because the ring had control, the ring knew to whom invitations had been sent, and the Minister of Justice handed over to Bate & Sons the entire output, on the condition of their letter of February 28th, without requiring them to deposit any cheque or to put up anything. No tender came in, and the Government deliberately and wilfully handed over the output of binder twine to Bate & Sons at a price far below its true value, judging by the prices paid for it by the people of this country. I want to ask who told the lie, and who told the truth. I say that no tender was put in, and there was no advertisement in the papers, as Bate & Sons say. And to prove my other statement, let me refer to the return which has come down and show the House to whom the output of binder twine was shipped in 1897 and 1898. To whom was it shipped last year, when manufactured. In July, August and September everything went to the Hobbs Hardware Co., and also in November. That was in 1897. In 1898 they commenced shipping in April, and shipped to Bate & Sons some small quantities. Then in May and through May they shipped to the Hobbs Hardware Co. How was it, if Bate & Sons were the purchasers, that the shipments were made to the Hobbs Hardware Co.? Every dealer in this country who handles binder twine, knows that he did not purchase from Bate & Sons at all. Hobbs Hardware Co. were the parties who had control, and who sold to the retail merchants, and the retail merchants sold to the farmers at from 13 to 16 cents per pound, which gave them the small profit of 1 cent per pound.

This binder twine belongs to the people, who entrusted the Government with its manufacture and sale, as their trustees. Just imagine any incorporated company appointing its president to handle its business, and that president sacrificing the property of that company, as this Government has done the property of the people, by handing it over to a clique and letting that clique squeeze the farmers by making them pay 13 cents to 16 cents for goods that this clique obtained from the Government at 4½ cents, on an average.

I intend to deal with this question more fully when the estimates of the Minister of Justice in reference to the penitentiary are going through.

Here we have a contract that was made with Coll Bros. in 1896 for the purchase of the binder twine, and the assignment of that by Coll Bros. to the Hobbs Hardware Co. in the fall of 1896. We have also a sale by the Government of the binder twine manufactured in 1897, to the Hobbs Hardware Co., and in 1898 the Government sold it to Bate & Sons, but the Hobbs handled it. This year it is sold again to Bate, and handled by Hobbs, and twice I asked the right hon. Prime Minister what rates he got for the property of the people entrusted to his management, and he said: I cannot give the price until the property is disposed of. He knows that if he had told the people that he had sold this binder twine at from 5 cents to 6 cents, for which the people have to pay 13 cents to 16 cents, there would be a little rebellion in the country. Therefore, on two occasions he refused to tell. I put the question in another form, by asking what prices had been offered by the unsuccessful tenderers, and the hon. gentleman again refused. Why did he refuse? I now ask him again to state what he got for the output of the penitentiary this year. I can see no possible reason for his declining to give the information. Every staple article is quoted in the newspapers, and there is no concealment of price. Nails, cotton, sugar, every staple article, has its prices quoted in the press every day, and our farmers are willing to give the merchants a fair profit. But can you call that a fair profit, namely, the difference between 4½ cents per pound, which the Government received, and 13½ cents per pound, on an average, which these merchants made the farmers pay? And they are compelling the farmers to pay the same prices this year. This ring, composed of the Hobbs Hardware Co. and the Brantford Binder Twine Co. control the output. The Hobbs Co. are the agents for the American trust; no binder twine can come into this country from the States except through that trust, so that this ring I have mentioned are enabled, with the assistance of this Government and the Ontario Government, to control the market and bleed the farmers of this country. They can snap their fingers at the farmers, when the latter ask for better prices, and say to them: You have to pay our prices.

Now, everybody knows that this industry was established by the Conservative Government in order to regulate the prices of binder twine. The late Sir John Thompson said that the prisoners would be put to work in the penitentiaries at the manufacture of binder twine, so that under no circumstances could our farmers be compelled to pay exorbitant prices. But to-day we have this Liberal Government, in collusion with the Ontario Liberal Government and the Binder Twine Co. of Brantford, controlling the output and making our farmers pay two or three times the value of the goods. This they have been doing for the last two or three years, and the right hon. Prime Minister refuses to tell the House what the Government is getting from this ring for the property of the people. Such a refusal is unheard of and utterly unjustifiable, because binder twine is a staple article, the true value of which should be quoted in the daily papers. Our farmers are willing to pay the retail men a reasonable profit, but not willing to pay the difference between 4½ cents, the price charged by the Government, and 13½ cents, the price charged by the merchants. How prophetic were the words of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, when he said when in Opposition, that for every dollar that went into the treasury, two dollars were taken out of the pockets of the people and went into the pockets of some speculators. This Government gets 4½ cents per pound for its binder twine, and the farmers have to pay 13½ cents, so that for every dollar that goes into the treasury, two dollars go into the pockets of the ring to which this Government has given the control of this staple commodity, so largely consumed by the farmers of this country. I beg to move the adjournment of the House.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The hon. gentleman moved the adjournment of the House for the purpose, as I understood him at the outset, of fortifying his own position, or his own veracity, which he said had been impugned by Mr. H. A. Bate.

Mr. TAYLOR. And the public press.

The PRIME MINISTER. And the public press, if he chooses to put it so. As to that, I have nothing to say at this moment—that is between the hon. gentleman and those he accuses. But, starting from this text, the hon. gentleman went on to discuss the policy of the Government with regard to the selling of the binder twine manufactured in the penitentiary, and he brought forward certain statements on which he accuses the Government. It is impossible for me or any member of the Government, at this time, to answer, because the Minister who is at the head of this department does not sit in this House. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) stated that he intended to bring this matter up again when the estimates for the Department of Justice come before the House. That will be the time to discuss it. In the meantime, I will confer with my colleague the Minister of Justice and bring to his attention the statements made by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. CRAIG. Although I am very anxious to have the business of this House proceeded with and to have the session ended, I wish to say a few words on this question. I think we all agree that the object of establishing the manufacture of binder twine in the penitentiary was that the prices might be kept down for the farmers, so that the Consumers Cordage Company, especially, which was the great manufacturer of binder twine at that time, might not be able to charge an exorbitant price. I imagine that this plan has not been successfully carried out. I think the farmers would not agree to the proposition that they have received full benefit from this manufacture. I take the ground that unless the farmers are to be benefited by the manufacture of binder twine in the penitentiary, the twine should not be manufactured there at all. As a rule, I am opposed to manufacturing in the penitentiaries by prisoners in competition with goods manufactured by parties outside. This binder twine was said to be a particular and exceptional case; and if the Government could show that by manufacturing binder twine there, the price had been kept down for the farmers, there would be some excuse for carrying on the manufacture in the penitentiary. The statements made by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) are most important and are rather startling, if we accept all that has been said—and I am quite disposed to accept it, as I know something about it—that the twine was sold to a dealer at 4½ cents and was resold to the farmers at 12 cents or 14 cents a pound. I think the Government should take care that nothing of this kind can happen again. I know that the circumstances last year were exceptional, that the prices of raw stock advanced very rapidly, and that is the reason that such prices were obtained from the farmers. But I think that the Government should lay down the rule and should make it one of the conditions of sale that those who purchase of binder twine—and there should be public advertisement for tenders and the highest tenderer should get the twine—should not be able to charge the farmers more than so much advance on the goods. I hold that this twine belongs to the country—in fact, we all agree to that—and especially to the farmers of the country; and they should not be at the mercy of speculators or combines—for it has been stated that a ring or combine really have controlled the price of binder twine to the farmer.

Mr. DAVIN. Although my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor), who brought this question before the House says that he intends to discuss it again when the estimates of the Minister of Justice come up, I think the House should warn the Government that we shall expect on that occasion very full and complete information of the unfortunate circumstances that the hon. gentleman has brought to the attention of the House. It will be remembered that as a consequence of the action of certain members of this House the late Government reduced the duty on binder twine some fifty per cent—from twenty-five per cent to twelve and a half per cent—and the result was that there was at once a reduction in the price of binder twine to the farmers. When the present Government came into power they said they were going to give a boon to the farmers greater than the old Government gave, and they took away the duty altogether. I was exceedingly glad they did that, because I had always contended that it should be done. At the same time, some persons warned the House and the country that, after all, twelve and a half per cent would be as effective for securing competition and low prices as would a complete sweeping away of the duty. And what occurred? As the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) and my hon. friend (Mr. Craig), who have just sat down have told us, the object in having this twine made in the penitentiary was to make sure that the farmers should not be at the mercy of a monopoly. Now, we find that this very remedy for monopoly is sold right out to a ring. Last year we had a very remarkable state of affairs in the North-west Territories. Binder twine was higher than it had ever been before, and mirabile dictu, but for the Massey-Harris Company, the farmers would have had to pay even more than they did. Whether it was their policy elsewhere or not, I am not able to say, but I suppose it was, Mr. Michaels, who represents the Massey-Harris Company in Regina, actually sold binder twine lower than the merchants were asking, because they considered that the price that was being demanded was beyond what should be charged to the farmer. I think they sold it at two or three cents a pound less than was being charged by the merchants—and it was greatly to their credit—in order to prevent the farmer being made the victim of this very ring that my hon. friend from Leeds has exposed. Mr. Speaker, it is really discouraging, it is a very unfortunate state of affairs, that when this House takes away the duty from binder twine altogether to help the farmers, affairs are so managed that the farmer gets it in the neck from the very source from which he might have expected relief. That is a very serious and a very lamentable state of things.

Mr. JAMES McMULLEN (North Wellington). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) who has just taken his seat is quite aware—or, if not, as a reader of the public press, he ought to be aware—that the cause of the rise in the price of binder twine last year was altogether the rise in the price of raw material. Every farmer knows that the rise of the raw material entering into the production of binder twine completely explains the increased price of the finished article. Yet, in the face of facts, and knowing these things, the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), and the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor), rise in this House and boil over with indignation, declaring that the farmers of this country have been robbed by the Government handing over to a certain firm or person the sale of the binder twine manufactured in the Kingston Penitentiary. I quite agree that this twine should be sold by open competition, and that every man in Canada should have an opportunity of buying it, and I believe it is the desire of the Government that should be the case. I am amazed to find hon. gentlemen opposite attempting to take such petty advantage of a condition of things which existed last year, and which never existed before. My hon. friend (Mr. Davin) yells out on behalf of the farmers, and he says that the late Government reduced the duty to twelve and a half per cent, but does he not know that this Government took the duty off altogether.

Mr. DAVIN. And then they handed it over to a ring.

Mr. McMULLEN. They gave binder twine free, and if, as the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) says, a combine has been formed in Canada, binder twine can be imported from any country free of duty to compete with that combine. When the vote for penitentiaries comes up, a full explanation will be given, and I have no doubt it will be proven that as high a price as was possible was secured for this twine.

Mr. TAYLOR. Pshaw!

Mr. McMULLEN. Yes, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) knows that at the time this twine was sold it was sold for the highest possible price.

Mr. TAYLOR. No.

Mr. McMULLEN. Yes, and he knows that. The manufacturers of binder twine in Brantford, one of whom is here, can prove that the Brantford Company held their twine and they realized more on it than in any other year.

Mr. TAYLOR. Seventy per cent, because they were in the ring.

Mr. McMULLEN. No, but because the raw material advanced to a high price on account of the war, and the price ran up from one point to another until it reached 13 cents. Hon. gentlemen opposite will fail to make any impression upon the farmers of this country because the farmers know that the reason the price of twine advanced was because the raw material could not be obtained.

Mr. BERGERON. That won't take.

Mr. McMULLEN. That is the truth, and these gentlemen opposite will get their answer from the people of the country.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). I would not at this time advert to the question raised by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) had it not been for the statement made by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen). An attempt has been made year after year by the Liberals of this country to assign causes that did not exist for the high price for binder twine, and agents selling binder twine took advantage of the arguments used by hon. gentlemen opposite and the arguments used by the same gentlemen when they sat on this side of the House. In that way these agents were enabled to extort from the farmers a higher price for twine than the farmers ought to pay. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) is at the old game that was practiced by him years ago, and he is preparing the way for binder twine agents in North Wellington.

to sell to the farmers in that riding at 3 or 4 cents a pound more than it ought to be sold for. He (Mr. McMullen) tells us that the high price of the binder twine was due to the advance in the cost of the raw material last year. That is not so. Every hon. member in this House knows that the war, to which he attributes the advance in raw material, did not take place until every pound of raw material which was required for last year's output was landed on the continent of America. He leads us to understand that binder twine is made entirely from manilla from the Phillipine Islands.

Mr. McMULLEN. I did not say so.

Mr. HENDERSON. Let me tell him that only a small portion of the raw material comes from the Phillipine Islands, and that a large portion of the raw material is not produced in the Phillipine Islands at all. I refer to sisal, which is grown on the American continent, and which was in no way affected by the war. We produce in Canada one-fifth of the raw material from which binder twine is made. Every one who has studied the question knows that 400 pounds out of every 1000 of binder twine consists of coarse coal oil. We produce that in our own country, and as the Government tell us they have reduced the duty on coal oil, there should be no increase in the price of that part of the raw material for binder twine. The argument of the hon. gentleman seems to amount to this: The less you make the duty the higher the price of the article. Well, the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) did not intend to state that. I say that the high price of binder twine was not on account of the advance in raw material, but was, on account of the combine amongst those who held the twine. The sisal, which enters largely into the manufacture of binder twine, comes from the southern United States and from Mexico, and, as I have said, 20 per cent of the raw material is produced in our own country and pays no duty. He tells us that the present Government took the whole duty off binder twine. That is where this Government made a grand mistake. The result of that was that large factories had to close down, because they saw the American twine could come into this country, and I am not sure but that some have ceased to manufacture altogether. It is a fact that only a smaller quantity of binder twine was produced last year in Canada, and the result was that when the farmers wanted the twine it was all in the hands of a few monopolists, like the Ontario Binder Twine Company, the Hobbs Company, and the Bate Company, who cornered it. It is a well-known fact that they instructed their agents in the earlier part of the year, to sell twine at about 7½ cents a pound, but when the time for delivery came they refused to deliver it to some of these agents. Some of them only got half the quantity they ordered, and some of them none at all. In one instance in my own neighbourhood, the agent only secured a portion of the twine he had ordered, when he threatened the Brantford Company with a writ, and went there with his lawyer and forced them, as it were, at the point of bayonet to deliver his twine. The farmers unable to get their twine at the price they bought it for earlier in the season, were obliged to pay 14 or 15 cents instead of 7½ cents a pound, and that was caused by the mischievous policy of the Government in taking the duty off twine, and destroying the industry in this country.

Mr. McMULLEN. If it had not been for the increased cost of the raw material, the price of twine would not be so high.

Mr. BERGERON. That will not take with the farmers.

Mr. HENDERSON. Even after I have informed the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen), and he should have known it before, that only a small portion of the raw material is produced in the Phillipine Islands, he still insists that the advanced cost of the raw material caused the increase in the price of twine. I tell him again that the war had nothing to do with it whatever, but that it was the mischievous policy of the Government—who did not understand the trade of this country—when they took the duty off twine, closed up the Canadian factories, destroyed competition, and compelled the farmers to deal with the combinesters in order to get their supplies. That is a positive fact. We know that the Farmers' Binder Twine Company last year were selling twine elsewhere when their agents to whom they had sold that same twine, were urgently demanding it. The fact is they were taking it to the other side, they were shipping their twine out of the country, they had cornered it in Canada, forcing the farmers to pay two prices for what they ought to have got at 7½ cents. With such a policy as this, I wonder at hon. gentlemen standing up here and giving expression to the utterances we have heard to-day, attempting to justify a policy which the farmers of this country from one end to the other condemn. Just another point. The hon. gentleman from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) stated that raw material could not be got. Now, let me answer that in this way. If raw material could not be got to make twine for Canadian farmers, how in the world did they get raw material to make twine to ship across the lines? Their factories were running in Brantford and other places, they were shipping twine out of the country, plenty of raw material to make twine with for the other side of the line, but no raw material to make twine for the poor farmers of Canada. The fact is, they had plenty of twine, and they knew that by unloading on the United States the supply in this country, they could extort an extra 7½ cents out of the pockets of the farmers of this country, which they did too. I hope the day is not far distant when the policy of hon. gentlemen will be reversed, when the duty that was taken off binder twine will be restored, when the Canadian factories will be reopened, and then the farmers of this country will get binder twine at 6 and 7 cents, as they did before. Another question. Why should twine that is made in Toronto and Kingston be handed over in bulk to one man or to one firm? The intention originally was that the twine should be sold direct to the farmers. But no, no, some friend has to be accommodated, some man has to make a little profit out of it, and it is handed over to one man. It is true they say that that man was the highest tenderer. But an ordinary farmer cannot tender for 500 tons of twine; he does not want that quantity, and he does not wish to be put to the expense of disposing of what he does not require, and has no use for. The result is that only a few people are in the twine business, and one of those lucky men got hold of a large quantity at 4½ cents; he turns it over to somebody else at probably 5½ cents, and then it is turned over to somebody else at a higher price. But before it gets into the farmer's hands, there are half a dozen nice little profits made out of it. This is the way, I say, that the farmers of Ontario have been fleeced year after year by the abominable policy of hon. gentlemen to your right, Mr. Speaker, a policy which never should have been inaugurated in this country. I hope, as I said before, that the day is not far distant when that policy will be reversed, and when the farmers of this country will get an article that is an absolute requisite, something they must have, and that they will get it at a reasonable price, and not be forced to pay toll to the Bates, to the Ontario Binding Twine Company, to the Farmers' Twine Company, who, as I was credibly informed the other day, paid a dividend of 60 per cent last year. I say the time has come that the farmers of this country ought to have a little protection, and I believe that when they have an opportunity they will rise in their might and tell the Government of this country that they must have protection, or else they will order them to turn right-about face.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am a little astonished at the position the hon. gentlemen opposite have taken this session. At the second session they were sympathizing with the Cordage Company, telling us that the action of the Government had caused a good many of these cordage companies to shut up. The leader of the Opposition told us it was the Government that had shut up and ruined many of those companies. The hon. member for East Durham (Mr. Craig) stated there was a little cordage company in the town of Port Hope that had been shut up, and the machinery had been taken away to Montreal, simply because it belonged to the cordage company that was in that combine. I was glad to hear my hon. friend say that the Cordage Company of Brantford made 60 per cent of a dividend this last year, besides a rest. The Consumers' Cordage Company also had a dividend of 40 per cent, besides making a very large rest for future uses. Will the hon. gentleman tell me that they put a duty upon binder twine to relieve the farmers of this country? Not at all; it only made the burden heavier upon them. Hon. gentlemen opposite must learn that this is one result of the system that they inaugurated. But when this Government took the duty off binder twine the cordage companies shut down. Why did they shut down? In order to make the Government believe that they were not able to run. But just as soon as it was fully settled, the cordage companies began to run, and run extra time, in order to make up the time they had lost by shutting down, there is no doubt about that. I ask the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) if he can stand up and state in this House that the raw material of which binder twine is manufactured did not go up. I heard a binder twine manufacturer state that he could make 3 cents per pound on the raw material that he had purchased without ever touching it or taking it out of the railway station, it became so scarce in Canada. But he did not make the statement that the raw material did not go up, but it did go up, and that was one of the causes. In western Ontario I have bought binder twine at 11 cents a pound. But I did not purchase early enough. Many farmers in my locality that were a little wider awake, purchased at 7 and 8 cents, because they bought early, while I was one that purchased late. I say that a greater falsehood never was stated than to say that it is the removal of the duty that put up binder twine. Why, the whole argument is against them. The farmers of this country know that it is one of the results of the protective system that has been in existence, and the manufacturers will always—

Mr. MONTAGUE. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman from Halton (Mr. Henderson) stated that taking off the duty on binder twine had caused a rise in the price, and the member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan) declares that no greater falsehood was ever stated.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). That is very true.

Mr. SPEAKER. I did not happen to hear the language. If the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan) refers to a member of the House, of course he must not use that language, he must take it back.

Mr. McMILLAN. I made a general statement, I referred to no single individual. But my hon. friend always was very quick to take up anything. He is just like another hon. gentleman, who stated that the butter that he shipped to the old country had returned every cent to the treasury, when in reality he purchased it at 21 cents and sold it at 13 cents. Mr. Speaker, what the farmers suffered from during the last year was only the dregs of protection. When binder twine is left in a free market and without a duty, there is no doubt in my mind that the farmers will get cheap binder twine. However, I will just make one statement. I understand that in the state of Michigan, where I have friends living, binder twine is manufactured by the government of that state. The first thing they do is to advertise, and they allow the farmers to send in for a certain quantity and send the money with their order. Allow me to say to hon. gentlemen opposite that they have forgotten entirely what the loss was to the treasury of this country in manufacturing binder twine at Kingston. When an investigation took place in this House, it was ascertained that $20,000 had been lost to the treasury, and it was found that it was the heelers of the Government of that day that had got that twine and had sold it out for large sums of money, and I doubt very much if that money is returned to the treasury yet. I believe the Government should advertise and allow the farmers to send in their orders, taking at least 500 pounds of binder twine, and sending the money along with the order, and that would assist in keeping down the combine in the country in the manufacture of binder twine.

Mr. McNEILL. With regard to the question of order, I would like to ask a question now, as I did not want to interrupt the hon. gentleman while he was speaking, and I do it now for our guidance hereafter. When an hon. member describes a statement made just before by another member of this House, as an absolutely false statement, is it sufficient excuse for him to say that he was making a general statement?

Mr. SPEAKER. The point of order is passed, and should not properly be raised now, but, as it happened that I was talking to an hon. member here, I did not hear the expression. I can only accept the statement of the hon. member, when he said that it was a general statement that he made and that it did not refer to any hon. member of the House.

Mr. HENDERSON. I will accept the statement of the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan) freely, that he did not intend to give a point-blank contradiction, personally. I am perfectly willing to leave it to the country to say whether I am right or whether the hon. gentleman is right.

Mr. CLANCY. I have no disposition to prolong this debate, but there have been statements made this afternoon by hon. gentlemen on that side of the House, I believe, unwittingly, and I would like the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) to remain, if he will kindly do so—

Mr. McMULLEN. Speak up, so that I can hear you.

Mr. SPEAKER. May I appeal to hon. members on both sides of the House to be good enough, whenever they have to address an hon. member on either side of the House, to do so through the Chair. I may say that some distinguished public men from a distance had seats on the floor of the House a few weeks ago, and, in a general conversation as to the conduct of the House, I asked them what they thought of it, and they said that it must be difficult to preserve order in the House, inasmuch as members are in the habit of addressing one another across the floor. I could not deny it, but I said that it was contrary to the rules. I do hope that hon. members will assist in observing the amenities of debate, and they could not do it better, in my judgment, than by referring to one another in the third person and through the Speaker, no matter whether it is a mere interruption or interjection.

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Speaker, I am not at all conscious of being guilty of that on this or any other occasion.

Mr. SPEAKER. I did not refer to the hon. member (Mr. Clancy).

Mr. CLANCY. I thought perhaps that you were under the impression that I had done so to-day.

Mr. SPEAKER. I did not wish to refer to anybody in particular, but I took this occasion to make the suggestion, and I am sure that it will be for the good of the House, if it is adopted.

Mr. BERGERON. You look over here more than upon the other side.

Mr. CLANCY. I was very anxious that the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) should remain in the Chamber. He made a statement—I would say, unwittingly—which I do not think he would have made, had he called to his mind for a single moment the fact that he was chairman of the Public Accounts Committee when this question was very thoroughly threshed out, and when it was shown that when the material had been purchased for this 500 tons, and a great deal more, of binder twine, the price was very much under 4 cents. Yet the hon. gentleman has made the statement this afternoon that the rise in the price of binder twine in this country was entirely owing to the advance in the price of the raw material. I think it is due to himself to state to the House that he was mistaken when he made that statement. It is all very well for the hon. gentleman, for the momentary purpose of gaining a little victory, to make a statement that is not consonant with the truth. I do not charge the hon. gentleman with telling an untruth, but I say that he has made a statement that he must know is utterly wanting in any foundation as regards truth. I was astonished at my hon. friend from South Huron (Mr. McMillan). Of all the men in this House, he is the last man, I thought, who would have risen in his place to defend a great wrong. Every farmer knows perfectly well that the farmers of Ontario were fleeced. I do not apologize for using that term; I ought perhaps to apologize for using so mild a term as to say that they were fleeced. The binder twine that was sold by the Government to Bate & Sons at an average of 4½ cents a pound, was sold, even to the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMillan) himself, at 11 cents a pound. He knows perfectly well how great the disparity in prices was, and he was a fortunate one, because the farmers generally paid 11, 12, 13 and 14 cents a pound for their twine. It was in the power of the Government—and I would call the attention of hon. gentlemen particularly to this—to have come to the assistance of the farmers. They were manufacturing binder twine to the extent of about 500 tons a year, which is about the capacity of Kingston Penitentiary, and they could have held that as a safeguard against any combine in Canada. They could have prevented the rise in binder twine, because they were not forced to sell. How did they sell it? That binder twine was sold practically without tender. Who were the parties bidding? I do not care to use the names in this House, but the gentleman to whom the hon. member for South Huron referred as a heeler, was one of the parties who manipulated this sale at 4½ cents a pound. Mr. Connor was the man who was charged, on that side of the House, in no mild terms, and I thought then, in harsh and unwarranted terms, of defrauding the Government out of $20,000. The hon. gentleman repeated that. Was he in his place when the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick) declared that there was nothing owing to the Government, and that the whole thing had been settled; and did the hon. gentleman repeat that statement to have a fling at a Conservative Government, as it will be shown here in answer to a question put on the Notice paper? I do not know why my hon. friend is calling me to order for having referred to the Notice paper.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). Nobody called you to order.

Mr. CLANCY. I understood you did. The transaction was wholly inexcusable. The twine was sold under circumstances which were perfectly plain. The evidence is, that Connor, on the one hand, Coll Bros. and the Hobbs Co. co-operated in this matter, that they came to the Justice Department and arranged, side by side, that one would call off, and the other would take the twine at his own price. What was the conduct of the Government? It is inexcusable, because it is the duty of the Government—

Mr. SUTHERLAND. What evidence has the hon. gentleman to prove any such disreputable transaction as this?

Mr. CLANCY. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sutherland) will go to the department, he can get the evidence and read it for himself.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The hon. gentleman has stated that these men, who are well known to be respectable merchants in this country, were guilty of a most disreputable and dishonest action. That is the way the hon. gentleman put it. I would ask him if he has any evidence of the fact.

Mr. CLANCY. I am not charging the merchants at all; I am charging the party of the hon. gentleman and his leaders.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The hon. gentleman made a general attack upon these gentlemen.

Mr. CLANCY. I did not say "dishonest" Government. I say that the transaction on the part of the Government was disgraceful and the farmers were the ones who, after all, had to bear the burden.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The hon. gentleman cannot produce the evidence in support of such a charge as that.

Mr. CLANCY. If the hon. gentleman will go to the department, he will get the evidence. It was before the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There was no such evidence taken by the Public Accounts Committee. There was evidence taken, but no such evidence as the hon. gentleman speaks of, as to any fraudulent manipulation taking place.

Mr. CLANCY. I am afraid the hon. gentleman has taken leave of his memory, and that he has not paid strict attention to the question. I do not know that the hon. gentleman was there all the time; however, that can be easily settled, and I will take another opportunity of making good the statement I made this afternoon. A strife of words here is unprofitable, and I shall not indulge in it. But I repeat that all the evidence shows the transaction either to be lacking in business capacity or to be perpetrated with design, and either way the farmers of this country have suffered on account of it. The Government were not compelled to sell that twine; they practically could have thrown it on the market at their own price, and they could have protected the farmers of the country. The evidence given by Mr. Stewart was, that they sold that twine because they feared a fall in the market, rather than a rise; and I venture to say that evidence can be produced. If hon. gentlemen will turn to the Trade and Navigation Returns, they will find that American twine was entered here at a value of \$5.81 per 100 pounds, so that it is perfectly plain that this transaction cannot be justified on any ground whatever, and that the farmers of Canada were the prime sufferers by it. Hon. gentlemen opposite may apologize and try to find excuses, but the fact remains that the farmers paid from 12 to 15 cents per pound, and that the Government sold the twine to the manipulators at an average of about  $4\frac{1}{2}$  cents a pound.

Mr. DAVIS. The hon. member from Halton (Mr. Henderson) told us that the fact of the duty being taken off twine had increased the price to the farmers, but in that he does not agree with the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), who stated in the House a short time ago, that the farmers of the North-west Territories paid \$400,000 more for binder twine than they ought to pay, because there was a duty on twine. Let these two gentlemen reconcile their statements. For my part, I cannot understand the argument that competition will raise the price of any commodity. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Henderson) told us that all of the twine factories in this country had been closed by reason of the duty being taken off, and in the next breath he said that binder twine was dearer in the United States than in Canada. If that be the case, let him tell me how comes it that the Canadian manufacturers had to close their factories when they could have kept them going, and exported their twine to the United States where the price was higher. The hon. gentleman from Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) tells us that because one or two merchants in Canada got a corner on a small quantity of binder twine, that raised the price all over the continent. He then said that this twine was sold for  $4\frac{1}{2}$  cents a pound, but the newspaper article read, shows that the parties who got it for that price sold it at a reasonable price to the retailers, so that I do not see how he can contend that the selling of the binder twine by the Government had anything to do with the price at which it was sold to the farmers. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Henderson) ever did any business, he must know that the price of twine increased on account of the advance in the price of the raw material. Twine, like wheat and every other commodity rises and falls in price, and as soon as the raw material lowers in price the price of twine will also lower.

Mr. GILMOUR. I think the circumstances of the case might have been explained with less heat than has been shown by certain gentlemen.

An hon. MEMBER. On the other side.

Mr. GILMOUR. I do not know but that I may say that. The Government has been blamed for allowing this binder twine to get into the hands of a few individuals, and I think they have been justly blamed. In the first place they took off the duty. This had the effect of shutting up some Canadian factories, and in the second place, at an early date in the year, they sold the whole of two years' output that the Government had on hand and allowed it to get into the hands of a few men. The whole make of twine was then manipulated by these men who took advantage of the situation. I believe the Government have also sold their output this year at too early a date, and I think that is a great mistake. I think it would be better to hold it until nearer the harvest time. I can tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) that the advance in the price of the raw material had nothing whatever to do with the increased price of twine to the farmers a year ago.

Motion to adjourn the House, negatived.

DISMISSAL OF JAMES DEVLIN.

Mr. HUGHES. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to draw the attention of the First Minister to the report of the Minister of Justice, in which it is stated that a man named James Devlin, late engineer of the Kingston Penitentiary, has been found guilty of forgery and dishonesty, and I would like to ask the First Minister if he is going to prosecute this man?

The PRIME MINISTER. I am unable to give an answer to my hon. friend at this time, but now that he has called my attention to it, I will answer in a day or two.

ELECTION ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. INGRAM. I wish to draw the attention of the right hon. gentleman to a certain request made by the Methodist Conference of the province of Nova Scotia, and by the clergy of Ottawa, Toronto and other cities in the Dominion, with respect to certain proposed legislation in reference to the Election Act. I would ask the right hon. gentleman if he will consent to allow a certain Bill, now on Public Orders, to be placed on Government Orders, so that it may be considered this session? If the right hon. gentleman does not feel like answering now, I would consent to this remaining over until tomorrow, so that he may have an opportunity of consulting his colleagues.

The PRIME MINISTER. What Bill?

Mr. INGRAM. Bill (No. 142) with respect to amendments to the Election Act as proposed by me.

The PRIME MINISTER. What is the nature of the Bill?

Mr. INGRAM. The Bill is intended to meet certain corrupt acts committed by persons taking part in elections, and by amending the Act I think it would be an advantage to hon. gentlemen on both sides. It would do away with the necessity of having the Privileges and Elections Committee dealing with such cases as they are now called on to consider.

The PRIME MINISTER. The Bill has not been called to my attention before, but I will be able to give an answer at an early date of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ingram).

DISMISSAL OF LIGHTHOUSE KEEPER QUICK.

Mr. M. K. COWAN (South Essex). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I desire to call attention to an article appearing in the editorial columns of the Windsor "World," under date June 27th, which I believe has been mentioned before in this House by the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett):

A letter from an Amherstburg correspondent recalls an incident in the experience of Mr. James Quick, who has been lighthouse keeper at Pelee. He was well known as a brave man, and it is one of the outrages of the present Grit aggregation has been guilty of. It is, indeed, shameful on the part of Mr. Cowan to reward honest services with this sort of treatment.

Mr. Cowan will have this to answer for. He will suffer in three ways, namely: from the friends of Mr. Quick, by means of those Liberals who despise a mean trick, and by the men who were disappointed by failure to get his job.

The letter referred to appears on the first page of the paper of that date, and a portion of it is as follows:—

On the 5th of December last there was a terrific gale blowing on Lake Erie.

The wind registered 80 miles per hour, the thermometer showed the mercury below zero, a heavy storm was raging. It was a critical time for mariners. On the middle ground on Pelee Island Reef a large vessel was stranded and flying a flag of distress, and in danger of breaking up. Both her life-boats had been launched and capsized, and she was covered with ice.

Mr. James Quick, then lighthouse keeper on Pelee Island, telephoned for assistance, and a tug left Amherstburg at 3 o'clock in the morning. On arrival at Pelee, the tug could not get nearer than 2,000 feet of the distressed vessel on account of the ice, the shoal water and the terrific gale.

Mr. INGRAM.

An appeal for help was made to the life-saving station, but the boat had not been launched for two years, and was not seaworthy, and, moreover, the captain was not there. An appeal was then made to Mr. James Quick, who came in his little boat through the blinding gale with provisions, clothing, necessaries as the crew required, and courageously brought relief to over a hundred persons in a dangerous situation. The tug remained by the vessel, and later on succeeded in releasing her.

Mr. Quick was dismissed from the Government service, and I am informed that the charge against him was that he did on this occasion absent himself from his station. He was dismissed without warning and without an investigation.

I would not have drawn your attention to this article, Mr. Speaker, nor taken up the time of the House in discussing the matter, if it had remained there; but the clear inference from the article was that a vessel had been stranded near him on Lake Erie, with the thermometer below zero and the wind blowing at the rate of eighty miles an hour, that the lighthouse keeper had gone to her assistance, and that because he had left his post on that errand of mercy and was absent for three hours, I had asked the Government, as a representative of the constituency, to have him dismissed. I would not have drawn your attention to the matter nor taken up the time of the House in regard to that charge in a local paper concerning myself had it not been that certain other papers had taken the matter seriously, and that I find this article copied and comments made upon it in rather a reputable journal, which says:

Mr. James Quick, the lighthouse keeper on Pelee Island, was dismissed by the Dominion Government for being absent on an errand of mercy to a shipwrecked crew, a large vessel being stranded in the neighbourhood during a heavy December gale. For rendering aid to a Nova Scotia fisherman under similar circumstances, Capt. Frank Carroll, of the Gloucester schooner "Polar Wave," has been presented with a gold watch. This is poor encouragement to a Canadian Government official to do the good Samaritan act. But, then, Mr. Quick was a Conservative, and was accordingly objectionable to Mr. Mahlon Cowan.

Mr. BERGERON. Hear, hear.

Mr. COWAN. I just desire to say for the information of my good friend the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron), who generally says "hear, hear" with that knowledge of affairs which I have no doubt he has of this particular case, that, instead of Mr. Quick being objectionable to me, quite the contrary is the case. I had been the solicitor of his family for some years. Although Mr. Quick was a Conservative, and although he took part in the last election against me, going so far as to call me vile names on the Island of Pelee, as he admitted afterwards, I never asked for his dismissal; but when I heard that he was in trouble, I went to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and I asked, for the sake of his wife and family, that he should not be dismissed from office. I was informed that he was dismissed on the recommendation of Mr. Stupart, director of the Meteorological service in Toronto. I was told that Mr. Stupart was in the city, and I saw him, and went with him to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies). I found that this man from 1893 had never kept up his reports on the meteorological service; that, when written to, he still failed to send them in; that over twenty letters had been written to him during the five years asking for an explanation of his dereliction of duty; that every one of those twenty odd letters had remained unanswered; that his salary had been kept back from the 1st of April, and that he was told that it would not be paid until these reports were brought up; that he still failed to bring them up. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries absolutely refused to retain in the service a man who would allow twenty odd letters sent to him to remain unanswered in five years. I simply say that I never asked for his dismissal, that although I had frequent letters requesting me, on account of the offensive part he took in the last election, to ask for his dismissal, I went to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and asked that he be kept in office. I, therefore, wish to give the statement that he was dismissed from office for being absent on a mission of mercy for two or three hours on his coast, an absolute denial. I might further state that I find, after the most minute inquiry, that his alleged absence on the occasion referred to was something that existed in the imagination of the correspondent and nobody else, and that no such incident ever occurred.

Mr. CLANCY. I intended to call the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to this matter before the session closed. Mr. Quick complains that he has been dismissed without a trial or an investigation into his case. The very statement of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cowan) that Mr. Quick had been more or less derelict in his duty for five years, that he had sent in no meteorological reports, that the inspector reported to that effect, for the first time, I presume, and that that was the reason he was at last dismissed, shows pretty clearly that Mr. Quick was singled out for dismissal. If the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Cowan) did not recommend his dismissal, I can tell him that he pays a poor compliment to his influence with the Minister of Marine and Fisheries if he could not induce him to save his wife and family from starvation. I am told that this man has occupied that position for a long time, and has become somewhat helpless.

Mr. COWAN. He is a perfectly able-bodied man and one of the best sailors on Lake Erie—a man about 35 years of age.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. member is more able to describe the man's qualifications for work than to obtain the work for him. If there was any sincerity in the hon. gentleman's conduct, he could have told the Minister of Marine and Fisheries what he knows, that of late there is not one lighthouse keeper in twenty who sends in these weather reports, because the Meteorological Office has refused to pay for them; and the hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that that was not a fair ground on which to base a charge against any lighthouse keeper in the province of Ontario. I do not know whether or not their instructions require them to send in these reports to the Meteorological Office at Toronto. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries will know. At any rate, Mr. Quick complains that he was dismissed on the plea set forth by the hon. member for South Essex, but without real reason, but the real reason is that there were other parties who wished to get his position. The hon. gentleman went to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and implored him not to dismiss Mr. Quick, but the Minister insisted and Mr. Quick was dismissed on a paltry ground. No complaint was ever made against him as regards his duties as lightkeeper. I intend to take the matter up later, and am very glad it has come up in this way, so that the Minister will be in a position to give the information I shall ask for on a future occasion.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am happy to be able to give now all the information the hon. gentleman can possibly want in respect to the dismissal of this lightkeeper. There were no politics in it from beginning to end, and nobody ever applied for his place. The hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Cowan) never spoke to me on the subject at all. But after my departmental officers had reported to me that this lightkeeper absolutely refused to obey any orders and after I had examined into the case, I went to the hon. gentleman and told him there was a lighthouse keeper whom I could no longer retain in the service because of neglect and flagrant disobedience to orders. My hon. friend asked me who he was and I told him it was this man, Mr. Quick. The hon. gentleman then told me he was very sorry that Quick should be dismissed as he thought he was a good lightkeeper, and urged me not to dismiss him. I replied that in the face of the official reports, I could not retain the man. The hon. gentleman pressed me all he could not to dismiss him, but I said it was impossible to retain him any longer. Here is the report which I have from my Deputy Minister:

Mr. James Quick was the lighthouse keeper and the meteorological observer at Pelee Island, and his services were dispensed with altogether on the ground of neglect of duty.

Since 1892 Mr. Quick was continually in arrears with his returns, and although requests were repeatedly made to bring these reports up to date, they were invariably disregarded, nor would he reply or give any explanations whatever.

Since 1893 he was requested at least twenty times to forward his returns, and his quarterly salary was withheld on several occasions, but even that had no effect in securing his attention, and the Superintendent of the Meteorological Service strongly urged, several times, that another appointment should be made at once, as the wind observations were very much needed from Pelee Island, and every effort was made by the department to keep him on, before the extreme step of dismissing him from the service had to be resorted to.

To-day a report has been received from the Superintendent of the Meteorological Service, stating that he had given instructions to Mr. Weber to instal the new lighthouse keeper and to report on the station as well, and he has reported that he found everything dirty, and the instruments on the platform loose and shaking. The rain-gauge was rusted out and the thermometers covered with cobwebs. The signal-mast was rotten, and must be at once replaced; there were no halliards, one stay had torn away, and the drum and cone were both rotten.

Mr. Quick, the late keeper, must have got very careless for the last two years, for the officer in 1897 reported that everything was in the very best order, and one of the finest stations in the lake region.

In the face of these reports it was impossible for me to continue this man in office an hour longer. Politics had nothing whatever to do with his dismissal, and the statement which the hon. gentleman read from a newspaper is absolutely unfounded. I see that the Montreal newspapers allege that he was dismissed for political reasons, but so far from that being the case, he was dismissed against the advice of the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Cowan).

Mr. BENNETT. It is charming to see the hon. Minister reward neglect of duties, but if a lighthouse keeper displays a great deal of activity he keeps him in his position. The Minister has in his department to-day a lighthouse keeper, who harboured three or four men in his lighthouse during the winter, who indulged in illegal fishing, and who were fined by the Fishery Inspector.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Who is that?

Mr. BENNETT. Surely it cannot have escaped the hon. gentleman's recollection. I asked him early in the session and he replied that he did not intend to dispense with this man's services. Baxter is the name of the lighthouse keeper and he keeps the lighthouse at Gin Rock light. Although the records show that he was fined $50 for harbouring persons who were guilty of illegal fishing, the Minister retains him in office, and it is a laughing farce in the community that this man is kept in his position, who harbours people engaged in illegal fishing, while other men, who may perhaps be guilty of some petty infraction of the law are punished to the bitter end.

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

JUDGES FOR DISTRICT OF MONTREAL.

Mr. J. A. C. MADORE (Hochelaga). There is a subject which I desire to bring to the attention of the House, Mr. Speaker, and which I think is of sufficient importance to warrant my doing so at this moment. The Quebec legislature, Mr. Speaker, passed an Act last session creating three new judges for the district of Montreal, and as I find nothing in the Estimates providing for their indemnity I deem it my duty, as a representative of the Montreal bar, to bring this matter before the House in case it might have been overlooked. That the legal business of the district of Montreal is in a congested state any one cognizant of the circumstances will readily admit. That such congestion is principally due to the fact that there are not sufficient judges residing in the district of Montreal is another circumstance which no one will deny. The legal business done in the Montreal district in the Superior Court is more than equal to half of the legal business of the whole province of Quebec. I have gathered from the "Official Gazette," of Quebec, for the year ending 31st December last, data in proof of the statement I have just made.

During the year ending 31st December, 1898, there were issued by the Superior Court of the province of Quebec 8,254 writs and summons, out of which number 4,925 were issued by the Superior Court in Montreal. In the whole province of Quebec 7,283 writs were returned into court, whilst in the district of Montreal 3,918 were returned. There were 3,276 judgments delivered by default, out of which 2,000 were delivered in the district of Montreal. 2,109 cases were contested before the Superior Court in the whole province of Quebec, of which 1,257 were contested in the Superior Court of the District of Montreal. These figures show that more than half of the legal business of the whole province is transacted in the district of Montreal. Besides we have a Court of Review, which is presided over by three judges of the Superior Court. The Court of Review sits for the revising of judgments only in Quebec and Montreal, and the province of Quebec, for that purpose, is divided into two. We find that in the section of Montreal, 266 cases were inscribed in review and had to be dealt with by the judges of that district, while only 87 were inscribed in the section of Quebec.

Let us see what is the number of judges appointed for the whole province of Quebec to transact the business before the Superior Court, and let us ascertain whether the district of Montreal has a fair share of the number of judges so appointed. There are thirty-two judges appointed for the whole province of Quebec. Of these thirty-two, only ten are resident judges for the district of Montreal, and one of these ten takes charge of the district of Terrebonne. You can readily see that, even with the appointment of three new judges the district of Montreal will not have its proportionate share of the number of judges appointed to handle the legal business of the province of Quebec, since, as I have established, I think, more than half the business is done in the district of Montreal.

It has been suggested that, instead of increasing the number of judges for Montreal, and thereby increasing the expense for the administration of justice, some other means might be found by which we could do away with the congestion of legal business in the district of Montreal. The province of Quebec is divided into judicial districts, and one of the suggestions was that two of these districts could be united, and that one of the two judges of the districts so united could be transferred to Montreal. I am ready to admit that there are some judicial districts in the province where the judges have little to do, the legal business being very small. But, Mr. Speaker, we cannot change that state of affairs, for this Dominion Parliament has no jurisdiction to change the bounds of the legal districts of the province. The only authority to do so is the local legislature of the province. If the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) were here to-day, he would certainly bear me out in the statement that it is an impossibility in the province of Quebec to change the judicial districts, at least, for the time being. The hon. member for Montmorency was at one time the Attorney General of the province; and, while occupying that high position, he undertook to centralize the legal business of the province in the large centres. He framed a measure which commended itself to the bench and bar of the province; but, though there were surely many good things in his Bill, he never could induce his colleagues to accept it, because they all knew—and the hon. gentleman acknowledged it himself—that no Government in the province of Quebec would be strong enough to carry a Bill to re-establish the old system of centralization and do away with the present system of decentralization. There is no doubt that it can be argued that decentralization of the administration of justice would, perhaps, bear some good results. But, as I have stated, the jurisdiction is with the province of Quebec, and the local government will not dare to introduce such a measure, because they know that the province is not ripe for such a change. As an illustration of this, I may say that, a couple of years ago, the local government of the province, seeing the bad state of legal business in the district of Montreal, tried to help. They proposed a measure by which the county of Verchères was cut off from the district of Montreal and transferred to the district of Richelieu. The thing was done on the quiet and very few people noticed it; but as soon as it was known in the county of Verchères, there was an outcry amongst the people, and such was the public indignation there that at the next session the Government had to bring in another measure to restore the county of Verchères to the district of Montreal. That shows that the mass of the people in Quebec are not only unwilling to go back to the old system of centralization, but they are unwilling even that the bounds of the judicial districts should be touched. So, it must be admitted that the first suggestion made to remedy the bad state of legal business in the district of Montreal must be discarded. We cannot afford to wait until the province of Quebec is ripe for a change in its system of judicature. The evil must be remedied and remedied at once. I do not know of any other remedy than the appointment of additional judges.

Another suggestion was made, and that was to have all the judges of the province of Quebec reside in Quebec and Montreal, and to send them into the rural districts only when they should be needed. When the system of decentralization was established in the province of Quebec, it was deemed necessary to have a resident judge in each judicial district. And I think, for very good reasons. The administration of justice would, to my mind, be jeopardized if all the judges were to reside in Montreal and none could be found in a rural judicial district except when specially called for. There are many procedures that require speed, so that surely rights would often be imperilled if there were no judges at hand. Lately this Parliament has passed a law compelling each judge to reside in his own judicial district, showing that this House believes that no such change has occurred in the province of Quebec since the establishment of the system of decentralization to warrant such a change as the one that is proposed. Moreover, the proposition, to my mind, amounts to the system of centralization. It would not be, perhaps, centralization in law, but it would amount, in fact, to a re-establishment of the old system. It would not be more popular in the province of Quebec, and it is subject to as many objections as the re-establishment of the old system. Another objection to this proposition is that the travelling expenses of the judges would be enormous. The judges of the province would be travelling all the year around, and their expenses would surely be greater than the indemnity of the three new judges we are asking the Government to appoint.

A third suggestion was made by those who opposed the creation of three new judges. They said: Let the judges reside in their own districts, but let them come in greater number to the city of Montreal whenever they are needed and whenever they have not much to do in their own districts. The words "whenever they are needed," if we consider the state of legal business in the city of Montreal now, means the whole year around.

This proposition is equal to the second one, because these judges will all reside in Montreal and will spend the whole time hearing the cases that are accumulating there awaiting their turn. And the districts would be deprived of their resident judges. So, the only way to help the city of Montreal in this predicament, I think, is what the legislators of the province think—the appointment for Montreal of three new judges.

After all, Mr. Speaker, the expense will not be so heavy, and the increase will not be so great. The travelling expenses of the judges from the rural districts to Montreal, as the system now exists, would be sufficient to meet the indemnity of one of the three judges. But even if the increase is to be $15,000, when such an expense is admitted by all to be a necessity, certainly this small amount added to our budget cannot be an objection. Now, at this time, when the country at large is willing to spend millions to improve the harbour of Montreal in order to enable that great metropolis of Canada to compete advantageously with the large cities of the United States, what is the weight of $15,000 in the scale when that sum is needed to enable the city of Montreal to protect the great commercial interests which centre there? And is it not equally necessary to expend this latter sum in order to enable the Government to dispense to the citizens of Montreal sound and speedy justice, which is one of the indispensable conditions of commercial progress?

Mr. T. FORTIN (Laval). I wish to say only a few words on this subject. I am a practising lawyer in the district of Montreal, and having been so for nearly eighteen years, I am in a position to know the state of legal affairs in that district. The conditions are such now that I think no other part of the country would tolerate. Cases are accumulating in all the divisions of the Superior Court and in the Court of Review to such an extent that when a writ is issued it is impossible for the solicitor even to give any idea of the time when the case will be heard. Various expedients for improving that state of affairs have been tried, and they have all failed. It was thought that by extending the jurisdiction of the Court of Review we would relieve the accumulation of cases before the Superior Court. To a certain extent, that did relieve the situation in the Court of Appeals, but did not in any way improve the state of affairs in the Superior Court. On the contrary, the list of arrears is now almost as large before the Court of Review as it is before the Superior Court. Now, Mr. Speaker, no one can form any idea as to the expense that is caused to litigants and the trouble to the lawyers and all those connected with the administration of justice that result from such a state of affairs. It is a matter of daily occurrence for thirty, fifty or sixty lawyers to flock into the court where the cases are to be heard. Thousands, I may say, of witnesses and of litigants are seen there waiting for their turn. If the cases are called, there is frequently no judge to hear them, and the parties with their witnesses must remain, sometimes a day, sometimes a week, and even as long as ten days. Every one knows that it is a hardship to compel witnesses, frequently business men, bankers, traders, wholesale merchants, to whom time is very precious—to compel these men to wait day after day, and at the end of five or six days to be told that the case is put off to the end of the list, or continued to the next term. I say it is impossible to form any idea of the trouble and expense involved in such a state of affairs, and all will admit the imperious necessity for some remedy. Various suggestions have been made, as was stated by the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Madore), to relieve this congestion of legal business. To my mind, there is only one thing that can improve the situation, and that is the appointment of additional judges. I may say, however, that it is by no means certain that the appointment of additional judges will do all the good that is expected. Something more than that is required, at least in the district of Montreal, and that is an increase in the salary of the judges. The judges in the district of Montreal receive the same salary to-day that they received some thirty years ago, and everybody knows that the cost of living in large cities has greatly increased during the last twenty or thirty years. It seems to me that if the judges received a better salary than they receive to-day, possibly they would perform a greater amount of work; at all events, it would be an inducement to them. We have been told, and it is a matter of notoriety, that some of the legal gentlemen who have accepted positions on the bench have done so at great personal sacrifice. It is notorious that eminent members of the profession in the district of Montreal, and I may say in all the large centres of population, will not accept a position on the bench for the salary at present attached to that position. The consequence is that the best men cannot be secured, and second-class men, although very good men usually, have to be appointed to these positions. On the whole, Mr. Speaker, I think it is the duty of Parliament to do something to relieve that state of affairs in the district of Montreal. Times are prosperous, we have a large surplus. I see on the Order paper that the Government is willing to contribute a large sum of money in order to improve the appearance of the Washington of the North, the city of Ottawa. Now, $15,000, or even $20,000, given to relieve the congestion of legal business in Montreal, would be well spent, and that end would be cheaply attained by that sum.

Mr. R. LEMIEUX (Gaspé). I wish to endorse the statements just made by the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Madore) and the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Fortin). Being a practising lawyer in the district of Montreal, I can speak from experience. During the last judicial year I have seen, several times, as many as 100 or 200 witnesses in room No. 23 of the court-house at Montreal, witnesses who had been subpoenaed, and who had been waiting there day after day, perhaps week after week, in order to be heard in the cases for which they had been summoned.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member representing Hochelaga (Mr. Madore) said a moment ago, that a system had been proposed in the Quebec legislature some years ago by the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain), who, I see is not in his seat to-day. The then Attorney General, now the hon. member for Montmorency, prepared a very great measure, and a very able measure too, by which he proposed to change the system now existing in Quebec; that is to say, he wanted to replace the actual decentralization by a concentration of judges in the district of Quebec and in the district of Montreal. I have heard myself the hon. member for Montmorency state that if his measure had been presented before the Assembly of Quebec to be read the third time, the Government of which he was a member, would surely have been defeated because the rural members would not allow the change that he proposed to be made. Now, Mr. Speaker, as was stated by the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Fortin), and the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Madore), we all know in the district of Montreal that the only change that can be made and that will meet the difficulties with which we are surrounded, is the appointment of three additional judges. The bar of Montreal, of which the hon. member for Hochelaga is bâtonnier, has passed resolution upon resolution for several years past. The legislature of Quebec at last came to the rescue, and during last session, a law was passed favouring the appointment of three new judges. It is true that the law is not enforced because the proclamation has not yet been issued, for reasons unknown to us, but I am sure that if the Federal Government would show any disposition towards the appointment of the new judges, the proclamation would soon be issued. At any rate, this is the only way of settling the actual state of affairs. Such an eminent gentleman as Sir Melbourne Tait, the Assistant Chief Justice of Quebec, told me that during the last term of the Superior Court in the district of Montreal, he was obliged to adjourn the court two weeks before the time to allow himself and his colleagues an opportunity to consider the old délibérés that had been pending for months and months. The judges in Montreal are simply overworked, and that is a fact known to every member of the bar. Sir Melbourne Tait said to some of the members of the bar in my presence that he was doing the work not of one man but of three or four men every day. He was working without taking any rest from the first day of the month until the last day of the month, and still, as he added smilingly: We are paid less than some bank cashiers are paid. I am not speaking of the salaries of judges; I think that they are very well paid, but I am speaking of their actual number. I say that, in the district of Montreal, the accumulation of work has been so great that the Government of this country must come to our rescue and give the judges a chance to deliberate upon the cases which have been pleaded before them. As the hon. member for Laval said a moment ago, the Government of this country, whether Liberal or Conservative, has been spending millions and millions of dollars for the commercial interests. Well, it is time that something should be done for the professional classes, that something should be done for the judiciary in the district of Montreal. This is the largest district in the Dominion of Canada, and we are obliged to call in judges from the country every day and every week to help their colleagues on the bench in Montreal. Some of the rural districts are complaining of this system. They say that they have their judges and that they want to keep them. It is true that in the rural districts the judges do not sit on every calendar day, but there are some matters which are settled en chambre, as we say in legal language, and at which judges are required every day. It is not fair that these rural districts should be deprived of the services of their judges. Therefore, I conclude by saying that the suggestion that is made by the hon. member for Hochelaga, the bâtonnier of the Montreal bar, and by the hon. member for Laval, is a proper one and that the Government should give us three additional judges.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, this is a question which is not altogether new to this House. On several occasions in former sessions the same subject has attracted its attention. I have had occasion to point, in former debates, to the anomalous position in which the British North America Act places this question. Under the terms of the British North America Act the organization of the courts has been vested in the provincial legislatures. On the other hand the nomination of judges has been vested in the Federal Government and the appointment of the same in the Federal Parliament. We are in this position, therefore, that the local legislature can organize courts, and if they do so, they incur no responsibility whatever, but they throw upon the Federal Government and Parliament the duty of seeing that the judges whose appointment they have ordered, should be paid. It is not a satisfactory condition of things, but such as it is, we have to deal with it. It would be more consonant for us, since we have to pay the judges, to say that we should exercise our own discretion and judgment as to whether these judges are required in any particular locality. We have not that discretion and we are constrained to follow the resolution of the local legislatures. Such being the case, I have often expressed my opinion that the Federal Parliament in this matter has very little, if any control, to exercise over these appointments after they have been ordered by the legislature. In former years I took that position, and I have to take the same position to-day. At the same time, though this position seems perfectly beyond dispute, it has been very often combatted by gentlemen on the other side of the House, and the position has been taken by several hon. members of the House that in these matters, as in all others, Parliament is able to exercise its own judgment, and that, even if the legislature has put upon it the duty of appointing more judges and providing for their payment, we should refuse to do so if we see fit to comply with their wishes. I prefer on this occasion not to revert to that debate, but to take a position upon the merits of the case which has been presented by hon. members of this House. It is beyond dispute, it cannot be controverted that the judicial district of Montreal is not at all organized as it should be and that the judicial business, owing to the fact that there are not sufficient judges to administer justice, is in a very sad condition. The matter has been brought again and again to the attention of this Parliament and to the attention of the legislature of Quebec, by the very highest authorities. To-day we have it on the authority of the bâtonnier of the district of Montreal, a gentleman who is appointed as their head by the lawyers themselves, we have it on the authority of eminent lawyers practising in Montreal, and in former years we had it on the authority of the Chief Justice and several puisne judges of the courts of Montreal. The attention of the local legislature has been frequently called to this condition of things, and at the last session they provided for the appointment of three new judges to sit in the district of Montreal. It was stated in former sessions on the floor of this House that the judicial business was unequally divided, and that whilst the district of Montreal had not enough judges to perform the duties entrusted to them, many of the rural judges had not enough duties to keep them busy. It has also been stated here that the law should be altered, and that all the judges of the province of Quebec should be compelled to reside in the district of Montreal, as in Ontario all the Superior Court judges are compelled to reside in Toronto. It has been contended that if all the judges in the province of Quebec, who under the law have to reside in particular districts scattered over the province, were compelled to live in the city of Montreal or in the city of Quebec, the evil would be obviated. There are two objections to this. First, there is the objection which has been pointed out by my hon. friend from Hochelaga (Mr. Madore), that the legislature of Quebec has been unwilling, up to the present to change the judicial organization with regard to judges living in specified judicial districts. The legislature is supreme in that respect, and we cannot compel it to change the system. But the legislature has not been following a caprice in this matter, for it has good and substantial reasons for refusing to depart from the system which prevails. It would be impossible for us in Quebec to adopt in its entirety the system which has given satisfaction in Ontario. The hon. gentleman who represents Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) and who at one time was Attorney General of the province of Quebec, some years ago introduced a Bill to change the system, but he utterly failed, and last session he told us frankly that the government of which he was a member would have been defeated on this measure if they attempted to carry it through. They therefore had to withdraw it in the face of the opposition which came from all parts of the province. This is a free country, and we are represented by parliamentary institutions, and, after all, the best way for all governments is to try and comply with public opinion. Public opinion may sometimes be wrong, but in that case it only remains for us to try and educate public opinion, while for the time being we have to submit to it, such as it is. The government of which Mr. Casgrain was the Attorney General had to submit to the will of the people, and they were compelled to withdraw that measure. There are good reasons to sustain the public opinion of the province of Quebec in this regard. The system of Ontario compels all the Superior Court judges to reside in Toronto, and it would be impossible for us to compel the Superior Court judges in Quebec to reside either in the city of Montreal or in the city of Quebec, even though we should appoint county court judges in Quebec as they do in Ontario. No Government could undertake to propose that system in the province of Quebec with any hope of having it passed by Parliament or approved of by the people of that province. If we adopted the Ontario system in Quebec, we would have to organize a class of courts in that province which are not in existence now. We would have to have county court judges residing in the country districts and Superior Court judges residing in the cities of Montreal and Quebec. Under the present system in Quebec the Superior Court judges perform all the duties which in Ontario are assigned to the Superior Court judges and the county court judges as well. We would have to recast the whole system if we made it similar to the Ontario system, and I doubt very much that if we did so, we would effect any economy whatever. A sentiment has frequently been given expression to on the floor of this House that the administration of justice in the province of Quebec costs, in proportion, far more than the administration of justice in the province of Ontario. The systems of the two provinces differ, but I maintain, without any hesitation at all, that the Quebec system is not more expensive than the Ontario system.

Mr. BERGERON. It does not cost so much.

The PRIME MINISTER. Indeed, our judicial system in Quebec is not so expensive as the system in Ontario. If hon. gentlemen will look at the estimates of the Department of Justice, estimates which have not varied for twenty years or more, they will find that in the province of Ontario we have to provide for the salary of the Chief Justice of Appeal, at $6,000, and the salary of four puisne justices at $5,000 each; the salary of the Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench at $6,000, and the salary of two judges at $5,000 each; the salary of the Chief Justice of Common Pleas, at $6,000, and the salary of two judges at $5,000 each; the salary of the Chancellor of Ontario, at $6,000, and the salary of three judges at $5,000 each. Then, you have to provide for the salary of forty-three county court judges, varying from $2,000 to $2,600 each, and the salary of twenty-three junior judges, varying from $2,000 to $2,400 each. In all, if I mistake not, you have to provide for the salaries of eighty-three judges in the province of Ontario. Now, take the judges of the province of Quebec. You have to provide for the salary of the Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench of the province of Quebec, at a salary of $6,000, and the salary of five puisne judges at $5,000 each; you have to provide for the salary of the Chief Justice of the Superior Court at $6,000, the senior puisne judge at Montreal at $6,000, fourteen judges at $6,000 each, fourteen judges at $4,000 each, two judges at $3,500 each, and three judges of the Circuit Court of Montreal at $3,000 each. In all, you have forty-one judges to provide for in the province of Quebec, whereas in the province of Ontario you have to provide for eighty judges, or, if I mistake not, eighty-three judges. That difference in the number of judges is not all accounted for by the disparity in population between the two provinces. It is accounted for by the fact that our organization is different. In the province of Quebec there are duties performed by the Superior Court judges which in the province of Ontario are performed by the county court judges. In the province of Ontario the Superior Court judges have jurisdiction only over a certain category of cases, whereas with us, in the province of Quebec, the Superior Court judges have jurisdiction over all cases that come before the courts. In the province of Ontario the expenditure for the salaries of judges, in round numbers, is $290,000, with about $15,000 for travelling allowances. In the province of Quebec the salaries amount to a trifle over $200,000—

Mr. BERGERON. Two hundred and one thousand dollars.

The PRIME MINISTER—and the travelling allowances about $16,000. In salaries there is a discrepancy of $90,000 in favour of the province of Ontario against the province of Quebec. We are told that the system of Ontario is a cheaper and a more effective system than our system, a proposition which I do not admit at all. I think our system is as effective, while it is more suited to our wants and habits, and is less expensive than the other system. These are the general considerations which apply to the present matter. At the last session of the legislature of Quebec an Act was passed providing for the appointment of three new judges for the district of Montreal. This Act has not yet come into force. It must come into force by proclamation. I may say that before Parliament was summoned, I myself wrote to Attorney General Archambault, asking him to come and meet the Minister of Justice and myself, in order to discuss the question. He told us very frankly that the people and bar of Montreal wanted these judges appointed, and that to refuse this request would be to deny them the justice they were entitled to. I pointed out that, while some of the judges in the district of Montreal were overworked, some of those in other parts of the province had very little to do. He frankly admitted to me that there was something in that, but he represented with great force that it was impossible by legislation to overcome that condition of things, as it is part of the geographical condition in which we are placed. He instanced the district of Gaspé, in which there is a judge who by law has to reside in the district, and it is impossible to conceive of the district of Gaspé being without a resident judge. That district is almost a province by itself. It has not a large population, but rather a small population, scattered over a large extent of territory. The cases there are not many; the litigation is not very great. But still the people have some wants, and Parliament must provide for them. Though a judge in the district of Gaspé has far less work than a judge who resides in Quebec or Montreal, still it is impossible to obviate that condition of things.

Mr. BERGERON. He has a smaller salary.

The PRIME MINISTER. That is true, but that does not militate against the difficulty. So I represented to the Attorney General of the province that the Government would take this question into their consideration and give it their best attention. I am very glad to have this expression of opinion on this occasion. It will, no doubt, assist the Government to come to a conclusion on the question. So far as my personal views are concerned, I have already expressed them. We have no discretion in the matter: we must give to the people and to the great city of Montreal, not only the satisfaction, but the justice, to which they are entitled in this matter. I believe the Parliament of Canada and the country are rich enough and fair enough to do that. Still, I would like to convince the House that this is a question on which there is a great deal to be said in favour of the proposition that has been maintained by the bâtonnier and the other hon. gentlemen who reside in Montreal—the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Madore), the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Fortin), and the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux).

Mr. BERGERON. There is not much to be said, after what has fallen from the right hon. Prime Minister, and what has been said by my hon. friends opposite, except that, from the last sentence of my right hon. friend, it struck me that it might have been arranged by him that the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Madore) should bring the matter before Parliament, so as to help the Premier in Council to have the salaries voted for the three judges. There is no doubt, as has been said, that there is a congestion of business in the courts of Montreal. It is an inconvenience for pleaders, witnesses and lawyers. This question, as my right hon. friend has said, has been before Parliament before. It seems to be acknowledged that there is something wrong, but how to remedy that condition of things is what we ought to study. It is true, as my hon. friends opposite have said, that the local legislature of Quebec, which has charge of the administration of justice, has passed a law to create three new judgeships for the district of Montreal; and, although my right hon. friend the Premier says we have no discretion here, I differ from him as to that. The local legislature may pass as many laws creating judgeships as they please, and, so long as we are called upon to pay them, we have discretion to say whether we shall do it or not. I believe my right hon. friend the Premier has already found that out, because I have no doubt in my own mind that the case was discussed with his colleagues, and that they did not agree upon it, at which I am not surprised. It has been said that the district of Montreal suffers. For the information of members of this House who would be called upon to vote the salaries of these three new judges, I want to say in what condition the matter stands in the district of Montreal. The right hon. gentleman says that there are some judges in the province of Quebec who have not as much work as they might have. We have the proof of this in a return that was brought down a few days ago at the request of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) on the 26th of June, and I will read this return to the House to show whether we could give relief to the district of Montreal by appointing three judges. There is nothing to prevent the legislature of Quebec, at its next session, passing a law asking for the appointment of two or three more judges; but my impression is, that the appointment of three new judges will not afford the remedy we desire.

I find in this return that some judges in the rural districts, who have not enough to do at home, are at liberty to give their services to the Chief Justice in Montreal, who calls on them when he finds it necessary. They are Superior Court judges and their names are: Judge De Lorimier, of the judicial district of Joliette, who gave his services from the 1st January, 1898, down to the 1st March, 1899, 84 days to the district of Montreal. Judge Lynch, of the judicial district of Bedford, who gave 29 days to the judicial district of Montreal. Judge Tellier, of St. Hyacinthe, who served 263 days in the judicial district of Montreal during 14 months. Judge Caron, of the city of Quebec, who put in 33 days of his time in the district of Montreal. It seems that there is not enough work in the city of Quebec to keep the judges there busy all the time. Judge Cimon, of the judicial district of Kamouraska, who sat six days in Montreal; Judge Ouimet, of the district of Richelieu, who sat 64 days in Montreal; Judge Bourgeois, of Three Rivers, who sat 10 days in the judicial district of Montreal; Judge Lavergne, who has a very large district under his jurisdiction. Even if the local government of Quebec would accept the suggestion of the hon. member for Hochelaga, which was repeated by the right hon. First Minister, they would still have to leave a judge in the district of Pontiac, because that is a very large and busy district. But still Judge Lavergne has been able to give nine days of his time to the district of Montreal. Judge Lemieux, of Sherbrooke, who gave 43 days to the judicial district of Montreal; Judge Bélanger, of Beauharnois, who gave three days to Montreal, and Judge Pelletier also, who sat three days in that district; Judge Charland, of St. Johns, who sat 126 days in the district of Montreal; Judge Choquette, who gave 40 days to the judicial district of Montreal, and Judge White, of Sherbrooke, eight days. In all, those fourteen judges put in 667 days in the judicial district of Montreal during 14 months. Three judges could not accomplish all this work, so that as far as the expense is concerned I do not suppose that by appointing these three judges we could effect any economy because we would still have to utilize the others.

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman must remember that though all the judges he mentions have put in this extra time in the judicial district of Montreal, that district is still in arrears.

Mr. BERGERON. Then the nomination of three additional judges would not prevent these other judges from going into Montreal again?

Mr. FORTIN. Probably not.

Mr. BERGERON. When the Act was passed at Quebec, the Attorney General gave as the reason for it that the expense of paying these judges I have named for sitting in Montreal would be saved, because the three new judges would replace them. But it is evident now that even if we name the three judges, those other fourteen would still have to sit in Montreal.

Mr. FORTIN. Very probably.

Mr. BERGERON. If we vote a salary for these three judges, I may mention in passing that there are ten or fifteen Quebec Liberals clamouring to be elevated to the bench, and consequently, even with these three additional appointments this year, next year we may still have a pressure for the appointment of three others. Unless you propose something which will put an end to this, you do not know where it will stop, and you will still have in the province of Quebec not sufficient judges for the Montreal district and too many for the rest of the province. The hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain), when Attorney General for the province of Quebec, introduced a Bill in the local legislature to reform the judicial system of the province, but that Bill was never discussed for causes known. When the present condition of affairs was created by Sir George E. Cartier in 1852 or 1854, which was called a system of decentralization, the means of travel in the province were difficult, and it was considered the best policy to appoint judges in the different districts. The means of locomotion, however, have since greatly improved so that it is possible for a judge to leave the judicial district of Montreal or of Quebec in the morning and get to any of the rural districts in these divisions the same day. What was the cause of the non-acceptance of the Bill introduced in the Quebec legislature by the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain), who I regret to see is absent? The local members said that if they supported such a Bill they would forfeit their seats, because in the shire town of each county there are a number of lawyers who are interested in having the legal business centralized in that place. They do not want to see the shire town disappear and lose the court-house.

Mr. BELCOURT. That would not remove the court-house. The judge would sit there just the same.

Mr. BERGERON. But they want a judge to be continually there. They have motions to make, and if the judges were all resident in Montreal they would have to wait several days and make only one motion when now they can make several, which means something to the lawyers. I am simply giving the reasons stated by the hon. member for Montmorency as those which prevented the passage of this Bill. My right hon. friend said we must follow public opinion. That may be true to a certain degree, but we must sometimes create public opinion. We have great examples in the history of our country of public opinion being created by our predecessors, and if they had simply followed public opinion, I do not know where we would be to-day. One of the best ways to create public opinion is to bring the matter so close to the people that they will understand it themselves. I was quite satisfied when I heard the rumour that my right hon. friend was not disposed to put an amount in the Estimates to pay these judges, for my impression is that if you want the people to instruct their local members to change the present system of judicature, the best way would be not to grant what hon. gentlemen are asking to-day.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Will the hon. gentleman be satisfied if the judge in the district of Beauharnois were transferred to Montreal?

Mr. BERGERON. That is not the point at all. So far as I am concerned, I simply look to the public interest, and I say there are some districts where there is no necessity to have a judge at all. For instance, one judge would be sufficient for the districts of St. Hyacinthe and St. Johns, and one for the districts of Richelieu and Joliette.

Mr. BRUNEAU. No.

Mr. BERGERON. Yes, we have the fruits of this statement in the return. I was looking for the report of the Department of Justice to find out how many cases were tried in those districts but cannot find it. Of course I have no personal interest in urging this reform, because it is not I who am going to pay for the judges but it is the people, and it is in their interest that I speak. The hon. member for Hochelaga has complained and suggested two or three plans, and the right hon. First Minister has complained and suggested some improvements, but neither has suggested a reform which could be put into practical effect, and that is the one I am suggesting. One judge would be enough for two districts in which there is not much to do.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. BERGERON. When the House took recess at six o'clock, I was answering some remarks of the right hon. Premier, in which he emphasized what had been said by my hon. friend from Hochelaga (Mr. Madore)—that the three means that had been proposed for an arrangement of the judicature of Quebec were not workable, because the people of the province were not agreeable to any of them. And I was suggesting a means, which, I think, had not been mentioned by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Madore)—that some of the judicial districts might be united by the local legislature and the judges thus set free might be transferred to the judicial district of Montreal. If I remember well, I was just mentioning that the districts of St. Hyacinthe and St. Johns be united, as also could the districts of Richelieu and Joliette. My hon. friend from Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux) asked me if I was in favour of uniting the district of Beauharnois with that of Montreal. I have no objection to answering that immediately. I believe that a judge from Montreal could perfectly well administer the business in Beauharnois. Still, that district is in a different position from the others. It is the south-westerly part of the province. Among the suggestions which might be made to the local government by my right hon. friend when he meets the Attorney General of Quebec is this, that the counties of Soulanges and Vaudreuil, which are to-day in the judicial district of Montreal could easily be put into the judicial district of Beauharnois. They belong, in fact, to that district. The diocese of Valleyfield, my right hon. friend remembers, comprises five counties, the territory covered by the judicial district of Beauharnois and the counties of Soulanges and Vaudreuil, and I think it is a very good division. If Soulanges and Vaudreuil were put into the judicial district of Beauharnois there would be so much less work for the judicial district of Montreal. I think we ought to take every possible means, as long as we do not impair the efficiency of the administration of justice in Quebec, to avoid increasing the expenditure on this service. My right hon. friend has said, with a great deal of truth, that the administration of justice in Quebec costs a great deal less than does the administration of justice in Ontario. I have made up the figures hurriedly, and I think the cost in Quebec is $201,000 and in Ontario $262,400. So much the better. I think that in a question of this sort, we here ought to strive as much as possible to keep down expenses. My hon. friend from Gaspé said that we have been doing everything to encourage the manufacturing industries of the country, and every day there is some suggestion for encouraging the farming interests, and that the professional interests should be encouraged. This is not the way we should discuss things here. As a professional man, I say we do not want any encouragement from anybody—professional men can take care of themselves. The point for us to consider is how we can secure the greatest efficiency at the least possible cost to the public. It should be remembered that this request for additional judges comes, not from the farmers nor from the people of the province, but from the local government. What the purpose is, except, as I have said, to secure the appointment of gentlemen who want to go on the bench, I do not know. If my right hon. friend does not grant the demand of the local legislature for the appointment of judges, but has a kind of interview with the Attorney General of the province, and comes to some understanding by which the judges in Montreal may be appointed without increasing the expenditure for the administration of justice in Quebec, the object in view will be entirely achieved, so far as the administration of justice is concerned. I repeat that my impression is, from the speech of my right hon. friend, that he would like to grant this request but he cannot get quite his own way; and the question was brought up in the House—I will not say as the result of an understanding, but it looked like that—so as to show the recalcitrant Ministers in the Cabinet that the thing is wanted in Quebec. But the administration of justice can be carried on perfectly with the judges we have in Quebec, if they are properly distributed.

Mr. BENNETT. May I ask the right hon. gentleman how many counties there are in each of these judicial divisions in Quebec?

The PRIME MINISTER. Three.

Mr. BERGERON. I should say three on the average.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not rise for the purpose of prolonging this very interesting discussion on the judiciary of Quebec, which has given us all a very great deal of information, but simply to say one word in favour of the British North America Act, with which my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) seems to find some fault on the ground that while the organization and the administration of the courts is left to the provinces, the appointment of the judges and the provisions for their salaries is left to this Parliament. I have no doubt that one of the causes from which my right hon. friend, like any other occupying his high and distinguished position, has a great deal of trouble, is from the question of patronage, especially in reference to filling these high and important judicial positions. I am inclined to think that my right hon. friend has altogether underrated the protection which the British North America Act gives him. If the organization of the courts and the appointment of judges were with this Parliament, all any aspirant would have to do would be to make a request to my right hon. friend, and say: I want to go on the bench. I think the time has come when you ought to make a provision for me; all you have to do is to introduce a Bill to provide an additional judge, and give me the office, and vote my salary. My right hon. friend has now this protection, that he can say: We cannot create judgeships, we cannot make vacancies; I should be delighted to consider your claims, if there was a vacancy, but there is no vacancy. That rests with the provincial legislature, and until they provide for a place, it is impossible for us to fill it. I am inclined to think that the same thing would apply to provincial legislatures, if whoever has the creation of these places could make the appointments. I think the pressure upon them would be much greater. At present it is divided, and my right hon. friend, I think, has weakened his position by not holding strongly to the ground that, while the organization of the courts depends upon the local legislatures, the Government of the Dominion has to provide the salary, and whoever is responsible for making the appointment must exercise judgment as to whether it is absolutely necessary in the interests of the country that these places should be created and filled.

Mr. INGRAM. In view of the discussion which has just taken place, I would like to ask the right hon. gentleman with respect to a Bill relating to judges moved by the Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick), whether he intends to proceed with that this session, and if so, is it a Bill similar to that moved by the Solicitor General last session affecting the age of judges.

The PRIME MINISTER. No, it is not.

PRESERVATION OF HEALTH ON PUBLIC WORKS.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think there was an understanding that an important Bill regarding public health was to be taken up to-day. That has been changed, and, as I understand there are some parties who will be here to-morrow, and who are anxious to speak upon that subject, I would ask the right hon. gentleman whether that question will be taken up to-morrow.

The PRIME MINISTER. Several gentlemen have intimated to me their intention of taking part in that debate. As this is a very thin House, I do not intend moving it to-day, nor yet to-morrow, if the House is not any more full than it is to-day.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would like to ask a question which is not on the paper, but to which I presume the Government will have no objection. I want to ask the Minister of the Interior whether Mr. Wade, Q.C., is now in the employment of the Government, and if so, at what salary?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). Mr. Wade is the Crown prosecutor in the employment of the Department of Justice for the Yukon district. I am not personally aware of the terms of his engagement, and therefore, cannot answer the question without consulting the Minister of Justice.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am very much obliged to my hon. friend, and perhaps to-morrow he would be kind enough to let me know.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I will.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance—I think the time has come when it is proper to press that question—how soon we may hope to have the supplementary Estimates.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I hesitate to name a definite day, for fear of not being able to keep my promise. We are pushing them forward with all possible speed, and at a very early day they will be laid on the Table.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is a very late period of the session to bring down large supplementary Estimates, and it has leaked out from a very authentic source that these are very large. If so, my hon. friend will see how absolutely necessary it is that we should have them at the earliest moment.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman. Perhaps, in fairness, I ought to say that, owing to the illness and the subsequent absence of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), some delay occurred which otherwise would not have happened.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Intercolonial Railway—

Increased accommodation at St. John. $445,000

Mr. MONTAGUE. I understood, from the hon. gentleman's statement last night, that this $100,000 has been paid.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, and the property has passed into the hands of the Crown, and the transfer has been executed.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Of course, if the sum has been paid, there is no necessity for discussing it, except to state my views a little more fully than I did last night. I may ask the hon. gentleman whether he has gone over the evidence since we discussed this last night.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, I have not.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I confess that the hon. gentleman could not have gone over it, otherwise he would not have made some statements which he made last night. Now, with regard to this purchase, I wish to make a brief statement and then to say that I think it is a matter which might very properly be discussed and investigated by the Public Accounts Committee. That is the only place where it can be investigated fully, and I think there are facts in connection with it, without insinuating anything unpleasant, that ought to be investigated before the Public Accounts Committee; and if I have the honour of a seat here next year, I shall, with the consent of the committee, ask for witnesses and papers in connection with it. This year the expenditure is not in the Auditor General's Report, and consequently that would not come regularly.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The amount was not paid until February. The hon. gentleman will see, from the reference to the report, that it was early in February before we had a report from them. So, it must have been later than the 1st of February when the transaction was closed. But I may say to the hon. gentleman that there would be no objection, so far as I am concerned, to the matter being taken up by the Public Accounts Committee at any moment that he pleases, although the item does not appear in the accounts of the present year; and I will facilitate that.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It will come in the regular way. This is a purchase of a piece of property from practically three gentlemen, Messrs. Pugsley, McLeod and Stockton. The property was offered to the hon. Minister for $100,000. The hon. Minister then appointed three gentlemen to investigate as to the value of the property, not being satisfied at the moment that it was worth the sum named.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is not the reason. It was not because I was not satisfied the property was worth $100,000, and that it was a reasonable price to offer. In any transaction of this kind the Government is certain to be criticised whether there is really any foundation for it or not, and, with a view of avoiding criticism and showing that there was every desire on the part of the Government that the matter should go through in a straightforward and proper way, we concluded that we would have competent valuers appointed. We asked them to value the property so that we might have their report, for whatever amount they might advise that the property might be purchased for safely, to depend upon in justification of our action in the purchase. That was the reason I gave the hon. gentleman last night.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not know that it is a stronger reason than the reason I have suggested. I think it is a weaker one.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The statement that the hon. gentleman made is not accurate.

Mr. MONTAGUE. If the hon. Minister had felt assured that no criticism could lie against him he would not have bothered with a commission of gentlemen that he named to inquire into the value of the property.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did bother.

Mr. MONTAGUE. At any rate, he appointed three gentlemen. These gentlemen met and took evidence in a very informal way. There was no sworn testimony at all. I am bound to say, and I do it very freely, that the evidence bears out the contention which the hon. gentleman has made. The statement of the people who were called before the commission goes to show that the property was exceedingly valuable, and the only difficulty I have in coming to a conclusion upon the question as to its being worth $100,000, or as to the sale of the property by these individuals, is to wonder why three gentlemen, resident in the city of St. John, would offer to the Government a property for $100,000 which all their neighbours whom they called upon to give evidence say was worth a good deal more than $100,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They wanted to sell it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is true, and I am told that they are still very anxious that this matter shall not be obstructed. I was warned that one individual would be ruined if this was stopped, but I cannot, for the life of me, understand how a man would be ruined by having the sale, for $100,000 stopped, of a property which was worth $140,000 or $150,000, or to take the valuation placed upon it by these men, $118,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman has stated that somebody has approached him on the subject. I do not understand him to say that any person with whom I am connected approached him, or that it was at my instance or suggestion that he was approached.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Oh, certainly not. The hon. gentleman may make mistakes, but he would not make that mistake. We find that this commission took evidence in an exceedingly informal way, and the hon. Minister of Railways exhibited a great deal of ignorance in regard to the commission last night. For instance, he said: Well, yes, I believe the Government were represented by counsel, but he did not know whether the owners of the property were represented by counsel or not. I find that the owners of the property were represented by counsel, and that counsel's name is Mr. Blair. I do not know who that gentleman is, but I am told that he is the son of the hon. Minister. The hon. gentleman has a son a lawyer; he represented the owners of this property when the question was up as to what the value of it was, and the hon. gentleman does not follow his son's professional career very closely or he would have known that he did do a certain amount of business.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not know that my son was connected with it in any way.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I accept the hon. gentleman's statement. I am told, too, that the gentleman who represented the Government, though not directly interested in any way, was in a position to be anxious that the property should be purchased by the Government, that the deal should be concluded, and that the sum of $100,000, at least, should be paid. Now, you have these two facts, together with the fact that the hearing was conducted in a very informal way, and it appears to me, on the face of it, to be an exceedingly funny commission for the purpose of making a valuation of a property which is being purchased by the Government of Canada.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). The hon. gentleman alluded to a gentleman who acted professionally in this matter, as if he might be interested, or concerned, in the sale of the property. Let me say at once that the gentleman who was acting professionally was Mr. Hugh H. McLean, of St. John, who was employed by me. If that gentleman had any, even the remotest, interest in the property, I learn it for the first time, and I think it is not correct, because he is a gentleman of the highest standing, and I am sure he would not have accepted the position if he were interested in the property.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not know the gentleman at all, and I am not going to make any specific charge.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am responsible for employing him.

Mr. MONTAGUE. If so, that responsibility will be assumed, I suppose, at the proper time, and the facts will come out. This property was purchased by the gentlemen who sold it to the Government in 1891. It was purchased under the hammer for $25,000. It was sold at Chubb's Corners under a mortgage sale, and the sum it brought was the mortgage and the added interest and expenses. It does seem to me a remarkable thing that prominent residents of St. John, having money to spare, should let a property, in 1889, be taken at the sum of $25,000 under the hammer and not bid on it, and then step up in 1899 and say that the property is worth $130,000 or $140,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They said $118,000.

Mr. MONTAGUE. There are statements that it is worth $140,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman is referring to the statements of witnesses.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am referring to the statements of witnesses who gave evidence, and who are residents of St. John.

Mr. BERGERON. Under oath?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Not under oath, and who made the statement that the property was worth $130,000, $140,000, $145,000, and yet these gentlemen allowed this property to go under the hammer at $25,000.

Mr. BRITTON. Had there not been valuable improvements made in the meantime?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am coming to that. The property was sold for $25,000, and was purchased by six individuals. I am told by the evidence here. Afterwards three individuals bought the other three out, and when the property came to be sold to the Government of Canada there were only three individuals interested in it. According to the evidence, $40,000 had been spent in improvements in addition to the $25,000 paid. That is the statement of the owners of the property, not under oath; no bills shown that were paid, no accounts laid before the valutors as to how the $40,000 was spent—I think I am correct in the sum $40,000, but it may be a few thousand one way or the other. According to the evidence, what they paid for it was $25,000 and what they spent on it was $40,000 or $43,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Montague) say there was no statement as to how that $40,000 was made up?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I said there was no account presented. There are some details. There are statements made: We spent so much on this and so much on that; but that is a mere statement. There is no evidence to show that money was spent at all, except the statement of the owners who desired to sell it to the Government and who desired to get the largest price for it. Now, taking the evidence of these gentlemen: $25,000 is paid for the property, and $40,000 or $43,000 was spent upon it, so that we will say this property cost these gentlemen $67,000 at the outside.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). What about interest and taxes?

Mr. MONTAGUE. My hon. friend (Mr. Mulock) says "interest and taxes," but surely if the property is worth $100,000, the interest and taxes would be paid by the income.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Did it always bear an income?

Mr. MONTAGUE. It did not, but the Postmaster General is giving away his case in that.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I know nothing about it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Oh, very well. The bare fact is this: The Minister of Railways said he made a splendid bargain when he bought that property for $100,000—and may possibly have to pay $118,000—a property which had been bought by these individuals ten years ago for $25,000, and on which has been spent $42,000 according to their own estimates, so that $67,000 was the purchase price of this property which has been sold to the Government for $100,000.

An hon. MEMBER. The increase in value.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Some one says "increase in value." There is not a gentleman on the other side of the House who will tell me that property in St. John has increased in value at that rate in the last nine or ten years.

Mr. MORIN. Increase in politics.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Some one says "increase in politics," but I am not suggesting that now. I am only giving the facts as they appear in that evidence, and the Minister (Mr. Blair) will correct me if I am wrong.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would prefer not to interrupt the hon. gentleman, and I will take occasion to make my statement later on. At the same time I do not wish it to be inferred from my not interrupting him, that I accept the hon. gentleman's statements as facts.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Now, as to the income from the property; this property was sold under mortgage. It was bought by these gentlemen, and for a number of years, so far as I can glean from the evidence, there was no income from it at all—at least if there was an income it was a very small income. After a while they seem to have made an arrangement with the Dominion

Mr. MONTAGUE.

Atlantic Railway, and after they made that arrangement the property gave an income of something like $5,400, but that was only for a couple of years.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The last two years.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It did not go any further than the last two years to which the Minister has referred. Now, I am told—my information may be wrong—that the property was not considered good security for $30,000.

Mr. BERGERON. That is a matter for investigation.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Quite so. I am told, and I may be wrong in my information, that not more than $27,000 could be raised on that property by way of a loan.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Would the hon. gentleman mind stating his authority for that?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I will give my authority at the time when it is necessary; the hon. gentleman can dispute it if he wishes. I am told that it was not considered good security for a greater loan than $27,000. I am told too, that that property is assessed in the city of St. John for $35,000. That appears in the evidence, but it is not quite clear whether that is subject to a special arrangement they made with the council or not. According to the evidence the assessment is $35,000, though the witness says that $10,000 has been reduced, and I am not aware whether or not that $10,000 is the complete reduction coming out of the special arrangement which they made with the council. However that may be, it appears from the evidence that the property is assessed in the city of St. John for $35,000. I submit that all these things tend to show the property not to be so valuable as the price which has been paid for it by the Minister of Railways would indicate. That is about all the facts that appear upon the surface. The Minister (Mr. Blair) has closed the deal, and of course there is no necessity so far as I am concerned, of going into it any more fully, even if we had the fuller information. I do not think, upon the surface, that a good bargain has been made. I think it shows that a bad bargain has been made, and for my part I shall feel justified at the proper time in asking that the subject be investigated before the Committee on Public Accounts.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I want to say to my hon. friend (Mr. Montague) that so far as the statement is concerned that he will take action hereafter to have the matter investigated before the Public Accounts Committee, he will find no member of this House more ready to facilitate this investigation than I am. I am entirely prepared to have the hon. gentleman produce all the witnesses, and if it suits his convenience, I assure him it will suit mine to have the investigation proceed at once. Whatever may be the hon. gentleman's information with regard to this, I make no doubt that I will be able to show that his information is unreliable, that his statements are not capable of being supported by worthy testimony, and I can satisfy—if not him—I can satisfy the Public Accounts Committee and this Parliament that the transaction is a good one for the Government, that it has been honestly and fairly conducted, and that it is defensible from every point of view. The statement of the hon. gentleman therefore does not alarm me, and he can rest confident that I will be available while I am here, at all time, to facilitate such investigation. I am very glad the hon. gentleman has taken occasion to read the evidence given before these valuers, because I am informed that the hon. gentleman has not availed himself of what are the leading facts which were made to appear before these valuers, and which are to be found, as I am advised, in the evidence which was taken on that occasion. I agree in the statement of the hon. gentleman that this property was sold at a forced sale, I think a foreclosure of mortgage, and that it only brought $25,000 at that sale. The facts behind that are, that this was a property owned by a firm in St. John, of the name of Kirk & Daniel. These gentlemen held that property in their books for many years as having cost them and as being of the value of $160,000. There was unquestionably a depreciation in value, particularly in wharf property, in the city of St. John. I do not know how far it would be proper to attribute that depreciation to the policy which our hon. friends opposite had introduced, and which did its most deadly work in the maritime provinces; but it is unquestionable that during the period that policy prevailed, property in the city of St. John did decline in value, and at the time this sale took place it had reached very nearly its lowest point.

Mr. McMULLEN. When was that property sold?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The sale took place ten years ago. Any gentleman who knows the contingencies which affect the value of property will not assume that at a forced sale a property would be certain to realize all its value. Up to that time it was used as a mill property and for the purposes of a public wharf; but unfortunately at that period there was no way of having access to it from the main street of the city in a business way; and there were a variety of other circumstances which tended to somewhat reduce its value. It did, however, sell for $25,000, interest, and expenses. Instead of being bought by three persons, it was bought by six. I am told that besides the gentlemen named there were three others originally interested in the purchase. After some time elapsed some of them desired to dispose of the interest which they had acquired in the property; and the hon. gentleman will see from the documents which he has in his hands whether or not what I am now stating is correct. At the time these people desired to part with their interest, the three remaining bought out the other three, which they were obliged to do, not on the basis of $25,000, interest and costs, but at a value of $50,000. Does that appear?

Mr. MONTAGUE. No papers whatever appear in connection with that. I do not know where the hon. gentleman gets his information.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am told that it does appear. I have not read this evidence, but I am told that that fact does appear. But whether it appears or not, I am told that is the fact.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What year was that?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It was before any improvements were made upon it by the owners. At that time the total amount of the rentals which were being received in respect of the property was only $1,200. The owners made some arrangement with the city corporation, and acquired certain rights by which they were able to make satisfactory connection between the main street and the wharf. They followed that by laying down a highway, building a bridge, and laying tracks, thus providing a railway connection between the Intercolonial Railway on the one hand and the end of this pier on the other. In consequence of the expenditure they made, which the hon. gentleman has correctly stated as somewhat between $40,000 and $43,000, they were able to induce persons to rent portions of the property which they had not been able to rent before; so that, as a result of their improvements, their rentals went up, from $1,200 to $5,400. As a consequence, the property has enormously increased in value. Now, we have the basis of $50,000 two or three years after the property was originally purchased and before these expenditures were made, and we have $40,000 added to the value by these improvements, making $90,000. Amongst those who were contributing the rentals was the Dominion Atlantic Railway Company, which owns one or two steamships plying between St. John and Digby, and which paid for a wharf privilege $2,400 a year; and they had an understanding with the owners of the property that if their business turned out as they expected, they would give an increased rental after the lapse of one or two years. The various rentals are as follows:—The Dominion Atlantic Railway Company, who had a lease of the end of the wharf and the right to use the warehouse for their business, although not the exclusive right, $2,400; Gibbon & Co., who leased the large building at the upper part of the wharf, and the western side of the wharf, $900; J. A. Likely, $240; four tenants on Main street, paying a total of $303; another, Mr. Brown, paying $36; Mr. Elliott paying $45; nine tenants of a large tenement building on Long Wharf street, paying $318; making a total of rentals of $4,242. The average of the wharfage from vessels coming to the wharf has been about $1,200 a year. The present year the wharfage has been less; and just immediately before the Government expropriated the property there was a certain and insured income of about $5,400. The hon. gentleman seemed to suggest that because these rentals had not been received during the whole period of the ownership of this property by this company, that was an element which ought to make its value less than the price we paid. But is there any reason or force in an argument like that? During the last two years before the Government took over the property they were in receipt of rentals amounting to $5,400 a year. Would not that be a controlling fact? My hon. friend has said that the property is only assessed by the corporation at $35,000, and that this ought to be taken as nearer its value than the sum paid by the Government, but he had in his hand the evidence, and, if I am correctly informed of the contents of these papers—which I did not read, but handed over to the hon. gentleman the very moment I received them from the Deputy Minister—the evidence discloses these facts, that in New Brunswick railway companies are free from taxation for a period of years; and this company, having laid down its line of railway and run it in connection with the Intercolonial Railway over its property to the end of this pier, was exempt from taxation, so far as the railway portion was concerned, which was by far the larger portion of the value, and was subject to taxation only on that part occupied by these tenants.

Mr. MONTAGUE. There is a reduction on that part.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not care, if there was. Possibly, $35,000 might have been claimed by the owners as an excessive valuation of that portion of the property.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It is not very clear, but it looks as though the ordinary assessment were $35,000, and that, in view of the special arrangement these gentlemen had with the council, there was a reduction of $10,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No doubt, these gentlemen endeavoured to reduce the estimate of value for taxation purposes to as low a figure as possible. That is not an uncommon thing in such cases.

Mr. BLAIR.

Mr. MONTAGUE. You will find that in Mr. Pugsley's statement.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This fact remains, that the city of St. John, not having authority under the law to assess them in respect of any portion of the property which was a railway portion, where their tracks were laid down, would not have the right to assess on the wharf portion, but only that occupied by these tenants.

Now, we have the fact that this property cost these gentlemen something over $90,000 three years before the Government took possession of it. We have, in addition, the fact that during the last three or four years property has been much enhanced in value in the city of St. John, particularly property which lies in the neighbourhood of the wharfs recently constructed by the city corporation. This property lies in the very heart of the city, and, when the value and the importance of the port of St. John came to be recognized, when steamships sought that port, and business came into it, this property necessarily became much enhanced in value. Its prospective value was also much increased. You could imagine how great would be the prospect of increase in value in respect of this property, if you were not a resident there and did not know how it was situated and how it lies in respect of the other wharf properties which have been erected by the city. It lies at the very head of the harbour, is splendidly situated, and is the best site possible for the purposes for which the Government acquired it, and, in addition, it lies adjacent to the Government railway, and can be reached immediately from our general depot at a very little cost in the way of construction of line. This property, I want the committee to understand, contains over seven acres on the whole. I have ascertained the exact acreage to be 7.08, which would be 280,000 square feet. I want to know whether any one will say that in a city like St. John, with its harbour coming into prominence as a favourable harbour for business, and the prospects which are opening before it, 50 cents a square foot would be an unreasonable price for such a property. If you only paid 50 cents a foot for the 280,000 feet, that would amount to $140,000. From my own experience on points along the Intercolonial Railway where we have had occasion to buy property, that would be a very moderate price. I am in treaty now for the purchase of property at Lévis, and taking every possible means to get it at the lowest figure, the lowest price is 40 cents per foot, and for some portions, on which there are improvements, we have to pay 80 cents per foot. Putting the lowest value, 50 cents per foot, on this property, you will have $140,000. From any point of view from which the property may be examined, it will be found that the Government have made a very fair agreement. I do not say to my hon. friend, although he has quoted me as saying so, that it is a splendid purchase, but I do say that we acquired it at a moderate, reasonable price, and I do not think the hon. gentleman will find any one in the city of St. John who has any idea of the value of property, who will say that we have paid more than we should for it.

I just want to read, for the information of this committee, the names of the persons who went before these valuers and made their statements as to the value of the property. Any one acquainted at all with the leading citizens of St. John will agree that we could not have made a selection of persons more likely to give an honest opinion, and whose opinion would be more reliable. We have, first, Mr. Pugsley himself, one of the owners. Then Mr. W. B. McKenzie, chief engineer of the Government railways.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. McKenzie does not put any valuation on it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. These are the persons whose evidence was secured.

Mr. MONTAGUE. If the hon. gentleman will read Mr. McKenzie's evidence, he will not regard the property as being quite so valuable as he says it is.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I had many conversations with Mr. McKenzie, and he was of opinion that there was no site in the city as favourable as this. Any gentleman who knows the city of St. John will say that if we were to put down terminal facilities in that city, this place, above all others, should be the choice. Then, there is Mr. Daniel Clark, an old citizen of great responsibility and the highest character, and who is an authority on the value of real estate. Also, Mr. Samuel S. Mayes, Mr. Herbert Mayes, Mr. John Collins, Mr. Robert Lee, Mr. A. O. Crookshank, Mr. W. H. Thorne, a very respectable gentleman and large merchant in the city of St. John, who is not a Liberal, but belongs to the Conservative party, and of whom, no doubt, my hon. friend has heard in times past, and has had communication with. Mr. Geo. F. Baird, who was a large owner of shipping property and other property. The hon. gentleman will remember whether he put a value on the property, but I understand he did, and that his estimate was in excess of that made by the arbitrators. Mr. E. C. Jones, manager of the Bank of Montreal; Mr. J. E. Cowan, Mr. Jas. Knox, Mr. T. B. Robinson, Mr. Hurd Peters, Mr. H. D. Troop, Mr. W. W. Turnbull, Mr. James Kirk, Mr. A. Chapman Smith, for many years mayor of the city; Dr. W. Christie, Mr. Edward Sears, the present mayor, and Capt. Taylor. I do not know that all of these gave evidence as to the value, but I think that nearly all did. Possibly Mr. McKenzie might be an exception.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Some of the others did not.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The great body of them, I think, it will be found, did, because I do not see for what purpose they would be likely to be called by the valuers except to get their judgment as to the value of this property. The hon. gentleman has implied that an unusual course was taken in this case, that there were no formalities such as it is usual to observe. I know of no other course it would have been possible for us to take. It is true that evidence was not taken under oath; but I suppose none could be so taken unless the matter reached the Exchequer Court by the refusal of either party to carry out the arrangement.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I notice that some claims in connection with this were referred to the Exchequer Court—cases of parties owning property at or near this point.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not aware of any. There have been properties expropriated in the immediate neighbourhood, but the valuers have not yet made any report in respect of them. I do not know whether, when they make their report, the amount reported will be accepted or not. If they are willing to accept it, I should feel, for one, like being guided by that report.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I can give the hon. Minister the information. I notice here, at page R—35, there has been some claim referred to the Exchequer Court—Charles W. Drury.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The estate of Charles W. Drury is not an estate in St. John of which I have any knowledge.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Then, the Auditor General must be wrong. I find it under the heading: "Intercolonial Railway, St. John: increased accommodation; Exchequer Court award."

Mr. DOMVILLE. It is part of the Harris land that you gave $200,000 for.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And that you are now using.

Mr. DOMVILLE. It is no good.

Mr. MONTAGUE. But the Minister of Railways and Canals is using it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It has not been any good for railway purposes. It lay unused all these years and was never worth—

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is not the hon. gentleman building an elevator upon it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. And why? Not because it is the site that would have been chosen, but because we have the property and we are trying to put it to some account. That is the reason and the only reason. No use has been made of the property from the moment it was bought, and I have never been able to see what object the purchasers had in acquiring that property in the first instance.

An hon. MEMBER. What did they get for it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Something over $200,000; I do not remember the exact amount.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. When was it bought?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Before 1891, I cannot state exactly what year. Mr. Drury does not own any property in this locality. The only persons whose property has been expropriated are the Hazen estate, Jos. A. Likely, F. E. Sayre, the estates of Edward Ironsides Simons and Edward Simons.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Then, to what does this entry in the Auditor General's Report refer?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It refers to property in some other part of the city.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It is under the heading: "St. John, increased accommodation."

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It has no connection with this matter.

Mr. DOMVILLE. Perhaps it is the rifle range.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is no part of this property now under discussion, which is the material point.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What other property has the hon. Minister had to acquire there outside of the property bought from this company?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Some few lots in the immediate neighbourhood. Immediately between the wharf property and the Intercolonial Railway station are a few lots we have had to get. We are changing the present railway track, which runs from the Intercolonial station to the bridge and we had to get some additional property to put the railway track upon so as to give us the uninterrupted use of the whole of the wharf.

Mr. MONTAGUE. As I read the evidence—I have not consulted the plan—on either side of the wharf is a slip, spoken of as the East Slip and the West Slip. Has the hon. Minister had to pay anything extra in connection with the West Slip?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have not had to pay anything yet. When we came to dredge the West Slip, as the dredging has to be carried down pretty deep in order to give us the necessary depth for the ships, we found the effect would be probably to weaken the foundation of a portion of the adjoining property. It is anticipated that we may have to acquire a portion of that property; and this, I believe, is allowed for in our calculation and taken into the estimate of cost. I was saying that the proceedings that have been taken are usual and customary proceedings, and attended with all the formalities and surrounded with all the protection usual in such cases. After all, the valuers whom you appoint to make a valuation are required to satisfy their own judgment and to inform themselves fully what the value of the property is; and after selecting gentlemen in whose judgment capacity we have confidence, it is not a matter of concern to the department how they satisfy themselves, so long as they do satisfy themselves. In this case, they met and brought these gentlemen before them. They did not content themselves with that; they made a personal inspection of the property, as they naturally would. After having made this careful examination and having had the information and judgment of these citizens on the question, they came to this decision. And I do not see that the Government could have done anything else than accept their judgment, having appointed these gentlemen for the purpose.

Mr. MONTAGUE. But you are not accepting it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are accepting it, to all intents and purposes. We are accepting it as an assurance that the property was worth the sum which these gentlemen offered to sell it for, which they declared their willingness to accept.

Mr. MONTAGUE. You don't propose to accept it for $118,000?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have never felt as a member of the Council and as head of the department that I would be justified in recommending that a larger sum should be paid for it than the sum which these gentlemen declared to us they would be willing to take.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Has that subject been considered ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, it has not. /

Mr. MONTAGUE. There are some memos. on the papers which would indicate that it had been considered to a certain extent. For instance, there is this memo. on one of the papers : Is Mr. Schreiber willing to recommend the extra payment ?—or something of that kind.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It has never come before Council in that form, and that question has not been dealt with. Judge McLeod came up to Ottawa during the present session with these gentlemen, and desired to be heard upon the subject. My hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) and myself had an interview with him, and we stated to him that the pressure upon Council was such that it was impossible to afford him a hearing. But we said that if he chose to defer the matter to a later period, a hearing would be accorded him. But until the matter does come before Council I have not felt like stating whether we should or should not pay any more than these gentlemen have all along declared their willingness to accept.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I see the hon. gentleman from Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) over there he has said nothing upon this subject. He knows the city of St. John very well, and he is also a friend of Judge McLeod, and I do not think he would concur in the view taken by some gentlemen opposite that Judge McLeod of the Supreme Court would attempt to extract from the public coffers any more than the property was worth. I think the hon. member for Westmoreland ought to speak, in justice to New Brunswick and in justice to his friend the judge. Perhaps he has some late information on the subject which he will give to the House. I know this property very well ; I certainly know it better than the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague), and I certainly have a more intelligent idea of the value of property in New Brunswick. It does not look very well to find fault with our city. It is struggling to do the best it can. It had a very hard time for a great many years after the fire. To-day the Government are endeavouring to make a port of it. In the last year or two we have succeeded in inducing vessels to come there, which have loaded, and have given a great deal of encouragement to the city, and in the last few years property is increasing in value. Now if any hon. members of this House were to go down and look at that property they would come to the conclusion that, placed as it is, it is an absolute necessity for the western traffic coming there, an absolute necessity to the Intercolonial Railway, and they would say that it was cheap at a quarter of a million dollars. My hon.

friend laughs. I do not know what property in his place is worth, but we think our property is pretty good.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am laughing to think how foolish these gentlemen were to offer it for $100,000.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I have seen a good many foolish men in my time, and I have known people to do a great many foolish things. My hon. friend no doubt feels it was a very foolish thing for these gentlemen to sell the property in the first instance. They were helpless. They were immense operators down there. They had an immense property, a valuable property, and after the fire when everything was paralysed, people took their money to build up the town, it went into bricks and mortar, and money was so scarce that properties almost went for nothing. These gentlemen were old, and I think one died. You know how prudent bankers are. They felt it was necessary to do something about this property, and as these gentlemen were not in a financial position to get along, it was brought to the hammer, and had to be sold as best it could be. The property was so large, so valuable for a large operator, that in the depressed times, there was nobody to take it, and like many other properties it went almost for a song. These gentlemen went along, they improved the property. There was not a proper approach from the railway. They spent a great deal of money on it, and they were working up a magnificent business. I know it was hard work to get wharf room there. Two or three steamboat companies were negotiating for it at various times, and it bid fair to be a most valuable property, one of the most valuable properties in the city of St. John. At this time the Government needed it for this improvement to the railway. It could not be said that these gentlemen bought that property to sell to the Government. They may say if they like that they expected to sell it to the Government of the day. They were not friends of this Government. Mr. A. A. Stockton, the leader of the Opposition, and Judge McLeod were friends of the late Government. Those gentlemen could expect nothing from the Liberal party, they were not our friends. But I do not suppose for a moment that they had any such intention in view. But they saw as shrewd men that when they got over the first difficulties, when business began to right itself and times improved, that would be one of the finest properties in New Brunswick, or at any rate in the city of St. John, and it had an immense future. If my hon. friend from Haldimand had ever seen it I am sure he would regret imputing to Judge McLeod or these other gentlemen any intention to get more for it than it is worth. I do believe that they made a great mistake in allowing the Government to take it for $100,000. I am satisfied that if they had gone to the Exchequer Court they would have got $150,000 at least; and I am satisfied that if they had gone to a jury of their own people who know the place, they would have got that sum. I suppose my view of it, being perfectly disinterested, is as good before this House and before the country as the view of my hon. friend opposite who knows little or nothing about it. But it does seem as though it would be a little hard for these hon. gentlemen from the west to come to St. John, when there is an election, and ask the people to vote for them, and to vote for their candidates for this House. What kind of a position will they be in when they have stated in this House that property in St. John is of little or no value? They are placing themselves in a very awkward position. I think my hon. friend from Westmoreland should say something. He does not wish to sit in this House and hear his friend the judge spoken of unfavourably; if he does, I am afraid he will realize that there is little gratitude between politicians. The Harris property right alongside of it was thought cheap at $200,000 or $220,000. I think I am right in stating that when the late Government bought it it was assessed by the city on a valuation of $8,000, at any rate it was not over $12,000. Yet with undue haste, without anybody wanting it, a perfectly derelict property, played out, they got that sum of money for it, and the owners were allowed to take all the machinery there was on it and sell it in Nova Scotia or somewhere else. The land was a swamp, a literal swamp, one which no one would think of purchasing. Every hon. gentleman who knows anything about our city knows that, if the land had been applied for the purpose of the city, such as building, it would not, under the most favourable circumstances, have brought $20,000. This land, which is to be purchased, is a most valuable property; there is no question about it. I am satisfied that if the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) could see it, he would say that he regretted ever having said so much as he has about this property, and having occupied so much of the time of the House about a matter as to which he is entirely incorrect. I state that in deference to the city of St. John. I hope that the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell), who often visits St. John, who knows the property very well, and who knows Judge McLeod, and these other gentlemen, will say a few words to remove them from the odium of having endeavoured to swindle this Government.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). At the risk of repeating some things that are already before the House, I would like to make a statement of the facts of this case, so far as I have had anything to do with them, and to give the House, perhaps, a little more information upon the subject.

Mr. DOMVILLE.

At the last session of Parliament a large sum of money was appropriated for the improvement of the Intercolonial Railway facilities at the city of St. John. It was well understood that the chief purpose of the appropriation was the construction of a deep water wharf and the general improvement of the terminal facilities in that city. Soon after that appropriation was made and immediately after the session, my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals left for England. In the meantime he had had some conversations, or informal negotiations with the owners of this property in St. John.

Mr. MONTAGUE. He had an option.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know that you could call it an option.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not know whether it had reached that stage or not.

Mr. MONTAGUE. In "Hansard" the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals is reported:

We had an option upon the property from the present owners.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We had an offer of it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I quite understood that the owners desired to sell it for $100,000. That had been stated before I had any direct communication with the parties myself. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals having gone to England, I was assigned to the charge of his department during his absence. Soon after that I paid a visit to the city of St. John. While I was there I met at different times a number of citizens, and they were naturally anxious to see some progress made in regard to these improvements for which an appropriation had been made. A number of these gentlemen, some of them in official positions and other citizens, mentioned to me the desire of the city that some progress should be made and expressed the hope that I might be able to make a move in that direction. About the same time I was brought in contact with the gentlemen who were the owners of the property, Dr. A. A. Stockton, Judge McLeod and Dr. William Pugsley. It will be well understood that when the appropriation of an amount is made and the season is passing away without anything being done, there is naturally a great deal of unrest and a desire to see something done. I was pressed by the citizens of St. John, who urged that the Government should at once do something to establish these terminal facilities. I said to the gentlemen who owned the property that I was not prepared to take any action in the matter immediately, but that I would consider their proposal. I happened to be spending a few days with my family in the village of Rothesay, where two of these gentlemen resided, and I saw them more frequently and had more frequent conversations with them on this matter than one would ordinarily have. They desired to sell the property; they did not conceal the fact that they were anxious to sell it. They gave me their reasons why it would be a great inconvenience to them to have to hold the property, and they had been building of uncertainty. They assumed that the hon. Minister of Railways intended to purchase the property, and they had been building upon that belief to some extent. They informed me that the leases of some of their tenants were about to expire; they did not know whether to renew the leases or not, and they desired that the uncertainty should be removed. They wished me, in the name of the Government, to take possession of the property and leave the question of the price to be settled later on. I was not willing to deal with the matter in that way, and I told them so frankly. I remember one morning meeting on the train, between St. John and Moncton, Mr. Pugsley, who was on his way to Campbellton. I had a conversation with him in connection with the matter, although most of the negotiations had taken place with Mr. McLeod, and some of them with Mr. Stockton. Mr. Pugsley again referred to the desire of his associates to have the uncertainty removed, and asked me to take possession of the property, leaving the price to be determined by any arrangement which might be made on the return of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals. Again I said that I was not satisfied to deal with the matter in that way, and that the Government could not enter upon the property without knowing the limit of their liability. He then said that he was willing to have the Government take possession of the property by either paying the money or taking expropriation proceedings, the company limiting their claim to $100,000. I obtained that offer from him in the course of our conversation in answer to my statement that I would not ask the Government to incur an unlimited liability. I then said to Mr. Pugsley that if that was the offer I wished him to give it to me from the proper officer of his company and in writing. He informed me that he was proceeding to Campbellton to take part in an arbitration there, that Mr. Stockton, the president of the company, was in Campbellton, and that I would hear from him. On that day, or the day following, I received a telegram from Mr. Stockton, which I shall now read:

Campbellton, N.B., August 15, 1898.

To Hon. W. S. Fielding, St. John.

In order to expedite matters, our company agree that if you file plan taking over Long Wharf property, we will allow price to stand until the return of the Minister of Railways, and will then either execute deed giving clear title on being paid $100,000, or will consent to valuation, we undertaking to put in our claim for that amount.

(Sgd.) A. A. STOCKTON,

Pres. St. John Terminal Ry. Co.

I thought that statement was tolerably clear, but I wanted to make assurance doubly sure, and I then sent to Mr. Stockton the following telegram:—

Rothsay, N.B., Aug. 16, 1898.

To A. A. Stockton, Campbellton, N.B.

I understand your telegram to mean that the Government have the option of buying the Long Wharf property for $100,000, or of taking it by the established practice of expropriation, and that if the latter course be preferred the claim of the owners will be $100,000. Is this correct?

(Sgd.) W. S. FIELDING.

In reply I received the following:—

Campbellton, N.B., Aug. 16, 1898.

To Hon. W. S. Fielding, St. John.

Yes, your interpretation is correct.

(Sgd.) A. A. STOCKTON.

On August 18th, I received from Mr. Stockton the following:

Campbellton, N.B., Aug. 18, 1898.

To Hon. W. S. Fielding, St. John.

Kindly inform me conclusion arrived at. Our tenants anxious to know.

(Sgd.) A. A. STOCKTON.

On the 19th of August, I wired to Mr. Stockton as follows:—

St. John, Aug. 19, 1898.

To A. A. Stockton, Campbellton, N.B.

Will file plan this afternoon or to-morrow. Please notify your tenants that they will be subject to the authority of the Government, and that in any matter relating to the occupation of the property they can communicate with Mr. W. B. Mackenzie, chief engineer of the Intercolonial Railway.

(Sgd.) W. S. FIELDING.

That is the story of how the property came to be purchased, or rather, of how we came to take possession of it. At that time we did not purchase the property, but we filed a plan under the Expropriation Act, which vested the title in the Crown. Then, the matter was placed in the hands of Mr. H. H. McLean, a gentleman of the legal profession in St. John, well known to any one who knows that city as a gentleman occupying the highest professional position. Mr. McLean was employed to conduct the legal business in connection with the expropriation. The hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) made some reference to some possible connection which Mr. McLean had with the business, which would make him not anxious to serve the Government. I asked my hon. friend if he would be kind enough to give me his authority for that statement, but he passed over my question. I can assure him that any one who has intimated that Mr. McLean would act otherwise than as a faithful adviser of the Government has been misinformed, and I would say that, his professional position places him above suspicion in the matter. The hon. Minister of Railways soon afterwards returned. I ceased to have anything further to do with the matter, and what occurred subsequently I know only from the information as it was reported from time to time by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals to his colleagues as to what had occurred. Three valuers were appointed, Mr. James McGregor Grant, insurance agent, a gentleman who has had to deal largely and in a very conservative way with the valuation of properties in the city of St. John.

Another gentleman was Mr. George Robertson, a merchant of long standing, a man who was mayor of St. John for years, and who is respected and esteemed. The third valuator was Mr. M. B. Edwards, an insurance agent of St. John, and a gentleman universally respected and esteemed in that city. There can be no question that the three gentlemen chosen as valuers were eminently qualified. They proceeded to make a valuation, and shortly after their decision was arrived at, I had a call from Judge McLeod, and then for the first time I heard that they were likely to report a higher valuation than the $100,000. The desire of Judge McLeod was that I should take what he called an equitable view of their claim, and help them to get the full amount awarded. I told Judge McLeod at once that I was not disposed to consider the claim for the extra sum as an open question, because, in my judgment, they had settled the limit of their claim at $100,000, and were bound by their agreement to take it. I told him I could not see how they could legitimately ask the Government to pay one cent more than the $100,000. I do not know whether Judge McLeod told me the award was actually $118,500, but at all events he told me that it was considerably above the $100,000, and I afterwards learned that the valuation was $118,550.

Mr. MONTAGUE. One hundred and seventeen thousand five hundred and fifty dollars.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, I think I am correct in saying $118,550. The exact sum I have learned from the papers during the last day or two. A short time ago Judge McLeod again called on me in company with Dr. Pugsley—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Was it not Dr. Stockton?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes; I mentioned Mr. Pugsley, but that was a mistake. Dr. Stockton, the president of the company, and Judge McLeod called again, and, when I told them my own view was averse to the claim, they expressed a wish to be heard before the Government. I met them, in company with the Minister of Railways, and we both told them that the Ministers were so busy that it would be utterly impossible to give them a hearing at once.

Mr. FIELDING.

I suppose that they have not given up the idea; I have no doubt they will be heard from again in some form, and in that sense only the question of the $18,000 may be considered to be an open matter. But in no sense is it true that the Government have assented to their proposal. In fact they have stated by Order in Council that $100,000 was the proper sum to be paid. I shall read that Order in Council, which is as follows:—

Extract from a Report of the Committee of the Honourable the Privy Council, approved by His Excellency on 27th April, 1899.

On a memorandum dated 26th April, 1899, from the Minister of Railways and Canals, representing that, for the purposes of the increased deep-water accommodation for the Intercolonial Railway in the city of St. John, now being carried out, it has been necessary to acquire certain property owned by the St. John Terminal Railway Company, and, by an Order in Council dated the 13th day of December, 1898, valuers were appointed to determine the value of the said property; under date the 7th February, 1899, they have reported that, after personal examination, they consider the sum of $118,550 to be fair and reasonable compensation.

The Minister submits, however, that he has had an undertaking from the company to accept a lower figure, namely, $100,000, and he (the Minister) recommends that authority be given for payment of that amount, with interest at the rate of 4 per cent from 20th August, 1898, the date of filing the plan of the property in the Registrar's office; such payment to cover all the wharf, land and premises comprised in the acreage, 7.08 acres, taken, and all damages in that connection, and to be paid only on receipt of a proper deed of conveyance and release to be obtained, as usual, through the Department of Justice.

The Committee submit the above recommendation for Your Excellency's approval.

(Sgd.) JOHN J. MCGEE,

Clerk of the Privy Council.

Therefore, in accordance with this Order in Council, the sum of $100,000 was paid to the company, they in return giving a deed for the property free from all claim whatever. As I have said, these gentlemen have stated that they have what they call an equitable claim for $18,000. They asked, and I suppose they will ask again, to be heard on that, and I presume it will only be courtesy to give them a hearing, but I have no hesitation in saying that from the circumstances connected with the transaction, from the agreement I made with them, and from the terms of the Order in Council, I consider the matter is settled, that we have paid these people all they are entitled to for that property, and, so far as I am concerned, I have no desire that they shall receive a penny more.

My hon. friend opposite (Mr. Montague) may say he did not mean it, but I am sure in this practical world we all know that the inference to be drawn from certain criticisms on this transaction would be, that the Government had endeavoured to serve some friends unfairly and unduly. I think the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) put a supposed case, that the valuers of the Government might desire to deal generously, and so forth, with the friends of the Government. Well, if we are to consider that aspect of the question, let me ask: Who are these gentlemen who owned the property? First, Dr. Alfred Stockton, a gentleman I have had the pleasure of knowing for many years, and a gentleman who has been known for the last ten or twelve years as perhaps the most determined opponent that the Minister of Railways and Canals had in the province of New Brunswick. Dr. Stockton opposed the Minister (Mr. Blair) in his local elections. He was the leader of the Opposition for years while my hon. friend (Mr. Blair) was Prime Minister of that province. He is a gentleman who has taken a very active part for a number of years in the interests of the Conservative party, and against the Liberal party. The second gentleman is Dr. Wm. Pugsley, who is personally and professionally a friend of the Minister of Railways and Canals. The third is Mr. Justice McLeod. Was Judge McLeod a friend of the Minister of Railways or of this Government? Mr. Justice McLeod sat in this House for years as a Conservative member; he was appointed to the bench by the Conservative Government, and he has the honour and pleasure of being a cousin of the hon. member for York, N.B., (Mr. Foster), my predecessor in the office of Minister of Finance. Put it on the ordinary low level which sometime wicked people will suspect—we know suspicion haunts the guilty mind—put it on that low level, and suppose for a moment this Government were disposed to view things in that way: is it reasonable to think that the Minister of Railways and his colleagues were going to break their necks to do some great favour for two at least of the gentlemen I have named? It is hardly possible that any one would for a moment adhere to that view. But after all, the great question is: Have we paid a fair price for this property, or have we not? I have stated that when I first heard the matter mentioned, I rather thought $100,000 was too much. I knew that property had been depressed in the Lower Provinces. Perhaps I did not look carefully enough into the great change that had been brought about in the condition of this country by certain events which it is not necessary to dwell upon, and with the usual modesty which characterizes this Government, we probably were not thinking of that fact. At all events, I did not think of the advance which ought take place, and which doubtless did take place, in the value of real estate from various causes. But, on later inquiry, from gentlemen who were in no way interested, gentlemen who perhaps might be assumed to be biassed against the owners of this property, I received the impression that $100,000 was not after all an excessive sum. I approached the negotiations from that point of view, and I came to the conclusion that $100,000 was a fair price. The valuation of property is a matter of opinion. You cannot determine its value by any precise mathematics. One man may say a property is worth $100,000, and another man may say it is worth $200,000, and both may be honest men, conscientiously giving their conviction. We find, however, that these valuers called some witnesses, and I shall quote the evidence of some of them. I never saw these papers until I got them to-night, after my hon. friend from Haldimand (Mr. Montague) had an opportunity of reading them, but I will read the evidence of two or three witnesses who are well known in this House, and who are well known throughout the political and commercial world.

Let me give first the testimony of Mr. George F. Baird. He was well known as a leading merchant of St. John and a large ship owner; he had a good knowledge of the value of property, especially property having a shipping side to it, and he would be accepted as a very excellent authority. He was also a member of Parliament, having been elected under circumstances which provoked considerable strife, and he was never expected of being a strong friend of the Liberal party. He no longer lives in St. John, having passed away last year. According to the summary which I find among the documents, Mr. Baird said:

That he is a shipping merchant; has been in active business for fifteen or twenty years. Knows the Long Wharf property; has become acquainted with it from mooring vessels at that wharf largely in this shipping business. He had always used the wharf as much as possible, whenever he could get accommodation at it for vessels loading for West Indies and South American markets; liked the locality for that purpose in preference to any others in the harbour. It was ample in its proportions, had good slips at the sides of it where vessels could get their moorings and bring cargo alongside in scows and lighters, and find smooth, safe waters without disturbance from tide such as would be found in wharfs down at the lower end of the harbour. The action of the tide is not so strong at that part of the harbour as it is down at Reed's Point; there it is smooth, and you can move your scows and lighters about just as you like, to the bow or sides of the vessels. If your scows are filled with water, there is a slip that becomes dry, and you can drain the scows and go on with loading. Then cargo can come by rail right down to them. He feels that this wharf is superior to any other in the harbour; it is convenient and central, and a vessel can lie there with more quiet than at any other place. In the days when Kirk & Daniel had it they asked about $110,000 for it. There had been some quite expensive improvements put on it since then. He should think it would be worth more now, but would not say just what.

The harbour is crowded for accommodation, and will be congested in a very short time, so that property of that kind is becoming more valuable.

He would measure the property by the revenue. A property bringing in $5,400 a year, with a prospect of increasing the revenue to about $6,400, he would capitalize at anywhere between 4 and 5 per cent, and mark that down as the price—would capitalize it at 4 as a gilt-edged investment.

If you take the lower sum mentioned as the revenue derived from the property, $5,400, and capitalize it at 4 per cent, which Mr. Baird said would make it a gilt-edged investment, on that basis the property would be worth $135,000. The Government paid $100,000, and the valuers state that they think it was worth $118,000. We have also the testimony of Mr. E. C. Jones, the manager of the Bank of Montreal. It was very lucky for the Government that we did not have to buy the property at Mr. Jones' valuation, but a gentleman who holds the responsible position of Manager of the Bank of Montreal in one of the large cities of Canada, is a gentleman whose opinion on a business matter is entitled to very great consideration :

Mr. Jones states : That he is the manager of the Bank of Montreal in St. John. He knows the Long Wharf property very well. He looks upon the property as the most valuable wharf property in St. John for two or three reasons : 1st, its extent ; 2nd, its position and its availability for the purpose for which it is now being purchased. Its position is unique ; it is just what is wanted ; there is no other wharf property that would answer the purpose. If sufficient capital were put in it to develop it thoroughly, it would bring in a revenue which would mean a good rate of interest on a very much larger sum than $250,000. He would look upon the property from the extent of its position, as a very fair value for $200,000 as it is, and a very cheap property at $150,000.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I cannot help expressing my awful regret that these gentlemen offered this property for $100,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think in the light of all these documents they did act somewhat foolishly.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Does not the hon. gentleman think that these witnesses are going too far ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. A witness whose honesty is not suspected can never be thought to go too far.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Does the hon. gentleman think that $250,000 is the valuation of an absolutely disinterested party ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have no right to think anything about a gentleman being improperly interested in any matter unless I have some evidence to show that he is interested, and I am bound to assume that a gentleman worthy of holding the high position of Manager of the Bank of Montreal in one of the large cities of Canada is one who dare not be improperly interested in any transaction of the kind. Mr. Jones's evidence continues :

Mr. FIELDING.

The condition of the wharf, he should think, is only fair at present ; it answers very well for the business which has been transacted at it. Wharf property is becoming more limited, and, therefore, will be more valuable.

He should think the Government would consider interest at 3 per cent a good investment ; that would mean $150,000. With the fact that the revenue is $5,400 now, and might easily be made $7,000 a year, he should think $250,000 a fair price for it. If he had that property, and could hold it, he would not sell it for a dollar less than $150,000. That statement is not based upon the fact that the Government wants it at all.

Now, I want to read one other bit of testimony, and I think it is one which hon. gentlemen opposite will regard as important—that of Mr. W. H. Thorne. Hon. gentlemen from the maritime provinces do not need to be told who Mr. Thorne is ; but for the information of others, I may say that Mr. Thorne is a leading merchant of the city of St. John, a gentleman of high standing in the commercial world, and he is, if I may use the expression, a worthy man though a Conservative. I remember a man who described one of his neighbours as a worthy man, though an Episcopalian ; and so I say that Mr. Thorne is a worthy man, though a Conservative. He is recognized as a leading light in the Conservative party in the province of New Brunswick. I am informed and believe, and have always understood, that he is the chief owner of the St. John "Sun," which is regarded generally as the organ of the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster). I do not think there is any reason to suspect that Mr. Thorne was anxious to have this Government arrange a job for any one on the Government side :

Mr. Thorne states : That he is the senior partner of W. H. Thorne & Co. ; has been in the business over fourteen years. Knows the property called the Long Wharf property. Judging from the revenue he understands it has been bringing in the last few years, from his knowledge of the property, if he were the owner of it, he would place it a low price at $100,000, taking into consideration the revenues and also the amount of land that is not utilized, but is capable of being utilized, and believing that the value of property is increasing, and believing that the value of water fronts in the city of St. John must be of very much increased value. He would not care, if he owned it, to sell it for that amount at the present moment. It is one of the best positions in the harbour, and very great improvements have been made there in the last eight or ten years. He believes wharf property to be increasing in value ; wharf accommodation is limited. Thinks the general condition of the wharf very good for the accommodations that are there now ; should think it good for a good many years. He should say the whole property is worth from $120,000 to $125,000. If he had it, would feel that $100,000 is a moderate valuation for it. If we were able to do so, would rather hold it than sell for $100,000.

That is the testimony of Mr. W. H. Thorne, and I am sure that hon. gentlemen opposite must, after this discussion, be satisfied that the price which the Government have paid is moderate, fair and reasonable. The hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) has repeatedly asked were these men so foolish as to offer the property for $100,000. Looking back at the whole transaction, I am free to admit that they offered it too low. If they had waited five or six months and allowed the thing to go into expropriation proceedings, under the evidence, I believe they would have got much more than $100,000.

Mr. MONTAGUE. $250,000?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I believe they would have struck a happy meeting between $100,000 and $250,000, which is the valuation of the manager of the Bank of Montreal. But the desire of these gentlemen to settle the matter, led them to name a price somewhere less than the valuation. However, they were satisfied to limit their demand to $100,000, and if they have found that they sold their property too low, that is the risk they took, and the Government should not be obliged to pay any more than the amount agreed upon.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I have made my statement and the Government have made theirs, and we will again examine into the matter later. So far as I am concerned, I made no statement that does not appear on the record, and have no hesitation in saying that I think there are circumstances which will show that this was not a profitable bargain on the part of the Government. I wish to ask the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals how the other portion of the money was spent, which was spent last year?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have stated already that the balance between the $100,000 paid for this property and the $200,000 was spent transferring the track and progressing with the works which are included in this contract.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Has the wharf been extended?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The contractor is now proceeding to carry out his contract. It is being rebuilt.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What was the contract price?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. $328,000 was the lump sum.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What does that contract consist of?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There are two features of the contract which I explained to the hon. gentleman yesterday. One was that the contract, so far as the building of the pier and the approaches are concerned, was for a lump sum.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The old wharf had to be rebuilt.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. A portion had to be taken off each side—about eighteen feet.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It was in pretty bad repair.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, but we were dredging so deep that we had to take that much and build a new foundation.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The engineer reports that a very large portion of the work had served its day.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No doubt, included in that contract will be a great deal of new work.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How much extension is given to the pier?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not more than sixty feet, between the present end of the pier and the harbour line.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What is the whole work supposed to cost?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. $695,000.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is very much larger than the hon. gentleman promised last year. Last year he said that, according to the estimates of his officers, it would take to build the work all of half a million dollars. There is a considerable difference between half a million and $695,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In one particular they did not estimate for a sufficient amount. There is an additional sum required to pay for the additional lands taken, which have been valued by our engineer.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What land?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. These additional lots I have spoken of. The land altogether will cost us $100,000 more than we anticipated.

Mr. MONTAGUE. So that really the site for this increased accommodation will cost $200,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not the site alone, but all that is connected with it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. So that the site is not sufficient, although boasted of as a very great site.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are not going to build any structure except upon this property. This property is large enough for the piers. It will be used for our sheds and the laying of our tracks, but we have to get some other property in the neighbourhood.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That leaves $95,000 yet to be accounted for.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not bind myself down to any figure last year.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes, the hon. gentleman said: "According to the estimate of my officers, it will take to build the work all of half a million dollars." The hon. gentleman must have had an estimate last year upon which he based his statement. Now he is $195,000 out and he says that $100,000 is for additional land. But what has become of the other $95,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have all the details here, showing how we make up the $695,000. The wharf and trestle, including the lump sum of $328,000, which I have mentioned, I estimate at $364,000; the warehouse on the wharf, $74,000.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Were tenders called for?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And given to the lowest tenderer?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Who is the tenderer?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. M. P. and N. K. Connolly.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Surely not?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is that really the fact?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You can take my statement as accurate.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I move that we expunge a large number of the speeches from "Hansard."

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am sure a great many speeches might be expunged. Warehouse and wharf, $34,000; new main line, $11,130; temporary trestles, $6,000.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Have you contracts for all these?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is not included in the contract I have spoken of.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How is that being built?

Mr. BLAIR.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Some of them necessarily have to be built by day's work and some by contract.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What amount is to be done by day's work?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Anything that could be done by contract has been so done.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How much is it proposed to spend on this work?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That must depend very much on circumstances. We lay down the rails ourselves. We furnish the rails and put them down. We do the track-laying ourselves in transferring the line of track from its present location to its new location. You cannot do that work by contract.

Mr. BERGERON. Were there many tenders for this contract?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Three altogether.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Who were they?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Besides the Connollys, there were Mr. Mayes and Mr. John Heney, of Ottawa.

Mr. BERGERON. Were tenders called for publicly?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. There was one difficulty which caused Mr. Mayes, whose tender was less than that of the Connollys, to withdraw his tender. He coupled his tender—not at the moment of tendering, but before we notified him, and in fact, before we opened the tenders—with a condition that the Government should give him permission to bring in a dredge from the United States free of duty and allow him to work in the harbour. We refused to allow the dredge to be brought in without duty. He declined to sign the contract, and forfeited his deposit.

Mr. BERGERON. What was the amount?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Five per cent of the contract—speaking from memory, about $14,000 or $15,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Is Mr. Mayes a Canadian?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, he is a resident of St. John. He had no dredge and said he had tendered in the expectation of being allowed to bring in a dredge from outside. We did not feel that it would be fair to persons who had dredges here to allow that, and we said: You took your own risk in making your tender, and in putting up your deposit, and your deposit will be forfeited.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is Mr. Mayes in the contracting business? Has he had any contracts before this?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think he is in the business. I believe he had a contract from the Government before for building a bridge.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I suppose this is Mr. G. S. Mayes. He built the bridge across Picton harbour.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How soon after the tenders were in did he find his mistake?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He did not find any mistake. We notified him to execute a contract within a given date or he would forfeit his deposit.

Mr. MONTAGUE. When did the question of a dredge come up?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We were aware before the contract was drawn that Mr. Mayes would not enter into it. He notified us to that effect.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Did he own a dredge in the States?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No; he wanted to hire a dredge and bring it in.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Why could he not hire a dredge here? Is he any relation to Mr. Bancroft who tendered on the Kingston graving dock? The hon. Minister will remember there was a gentleman named Bancroft who tendered on that work.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is a Mr. Mayes. He is not a mere name.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It is an extraordinary thing that he should tender and then be willing to lose $15,000 because he could not bring in a dredge free of duty from the United States.

Mr. BERGERON. Was he reimbursed by the Connollys?

Mr. MONTAGUE. The Minister would not know that. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) must see that it is an extraordinary looking case. Mr. Mayes tenders at figures at which he supposes he can make money, thinking he can bring in a dredge from the United States, and when he is not allowed to bring in a dredge, he forfeits $15,000 rather than get a dredge here.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My information is that he could not find another dredge in Canada to suit his purposes. I do not think there are dredges available suited for that work in the Maritime Provinces.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think there must be.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am informed, whether correctly or not, I cannot say, that there are not.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is an extraordinary statement. There are large contractors in Canada having splendid dredges. The Government also has good dredges.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are not hiring dredges.

Mr. MONTAGUE. But if you could get a lower tender, surely you would make an arrangement to let the contractor have a dredge.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think all the dredges are pretty well occupied.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Did it not occur to the Minister as a funny thing that a man should be willing to forfeit $15,000?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I only know that we did take the deposit.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And Mr. Mayes made no objection?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He made a good deal of objection, but his objection did not prevail.

Mr. MONTAGUE. When were his objections made?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. At the time.

Mr. MONTAGUE. In what form?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He wrote and protested.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Perhaps the hon. Minister will be able to tell us the difference between the Connollys' tender and Mr. Mayes'?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I had expected to give the hon. gentleman the figures, but my deputy informs me that he did not bring them tonight. I will be able to give him the information at some other time.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Well, this is like the continued stories in the magazines—we are compelled to stop just at the most interesting point. And it is interesting to find that a man drops $15,000 and slides out of a contract because he is not allowed to bring in a dredge which he knew he could not bring in.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I suppose Mr. Mayes may have thought that he would be allowed to bring it in.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What would be the duty on a dredge?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I suppose it would be in the neighbourhood of $30,000.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What would a dredge cost ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I fancy between $120,000 or $150,000.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend has got his idea from the Minister of Public Works. You can get them cheaper than that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I never bought a dredge, and never built one. You need a very heavy dredge there. At St. John the tide rises twenty-six or twenty-eight feet, and you need a dredge that will work in a high and rising tide.

Mr. BERGERON. I am glad to see that the work is being done by the Connollys. I think they are the best contractors the hon. gentleman could get. I am glad, not only because they will do good work, but because it is a vindication of them of all the abuse and insults which have been heaped upon them by the friends of the hon. gentlemen when they were on this side of the House. It is an extraordinary spectacle to find the Minister of Public Works, who was instrumental in dragging one of these men to jail, and in publishing them all over the world as scoundrels and thieves—to find him now a colleague of my hon. friend, who has granted them a large contract, which shows that he has confidence in their honesty and ability.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Are the Connollys doing all this work themselves ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not been in the city since they commenced their work.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Would the Minister be surprised to know that Mr. Mayes has a sub-contract under the Connollys ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would not be surprised. Very likely they will find Mr. Mayes a good man to do the work.

Mr. MONTAGUE. My information is that he has a sub-contract. Now, here is Mr. Mayes, who tendered for the job, and gets it. His price is a good deal lower than that of the man next above him. He retires from it on the flimsy excuse that he cannot get his dredge in from the United States. He loses his $15,000, and he takes a sub-contract from the man who gets the job at a higher figure. What does the Minister think of that ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think if he could get Mr. Mayes to build that wharf, he would get a very good man.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Where were the Connollys' dredges at the time this contract was let ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know. I know they were not in St. John.

Mr. BLAIR.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am informed they were in the United States. Did they get permission ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They would not require any permission. They were their own dredges, and they have a right to take them into St. John wherever they chose.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Did they pay duty on them coming in ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think not. The fact of their going from Canada to the United States would not oblige the Government to exact a duty from them when they returned.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Could they work them in bond ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know, I never heard anything about that.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman ought to know that Mr. Mayes is a sub-contractor under Connolly.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He did not require to make any arrangement with us.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Quite so, the only arrangement he had to make was to get out of the way, that arrangement would not be made with the Minister. Could the Minister tell us what price is being paid for the dredging per yard ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think the dredging is included in a lump sum. We asked for tenders for a certain portion of the work at a lump sum. The special prices that were given were more for the rock and the ballasting. My recollection is that the dredging was included in the general contract.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the hon. gentleman give us the estimate made by his department ? How much rock, how much dredging, and how much masonry work.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I gave the figures to my hon. friend last night, and I appear to have mislaid them since.

Mr. BERGERON. Since we are on the Intercolonial Railway, would my hon. friend be kind enough to relate to us the case of Mr. A. R. McDonald, who was superintendent of the Rivière du Loup branch of the Intercolonial Railway. He was suspended and afterwards dismissed, after having promises from the hon. gentleman and from the Premier that he would be reinstated, or something to that effect. Would the hon. gentleman tell us why he was suspended and dismissed ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think the hon. gentleman has any statement from me saying that he would be reinstated.

Mr. BERGERON. Yes, I have it here, in your best writing, and I intend to put it on the "Hansard" later on.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The history of Mr. McDonald's case is not a very lengthy one. He was complained against by the gentleman who was then the member for the district, Mr. Pouliot. The charges were serious, and at his urgent solicitation an inquiry was held into Mr. McDonald's conduct. The inquiry lasted for a length of time, during which he remained under suspension. The result of the inquiry was that Mr. Pouliot's charges were not sustained. He had charged him with active intervention in the elections, with offensive partisanship, and a variety of other things. I do not recollect just now the charges in detail, but after what had transpired it was deemed advisable not to reappoint Mr. McDonald, and his services were dispensed with.

Mr. BERGERON. I understand that the charges that were brought against Mr. McDonald were of a political character, that he was an active political partisan, and that they were made by Mr. Pouliot. An investigation was granted, was it not?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Does the hon. gentleman remember the instructions given to the commissioner?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No. If the hon. gentleman had mentioned that he was going to bring the matter up, I would have had the papers so that we could have gone into it.

Mr. BERGERON. It might be worth while doing that, because we will not get away from this resolution for some time. Will my hon. friend bring all the papers he has concerning the A. R. McDonald case?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will be very glad to do so.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It appears to me that the hon. Minister gave a very good reason for retaining Mr. McDonald. As I understood the very brief and curt statement with which he has been good enough to favour the committee, Mr. McDonald, who, as the hon. Minister is perfectly well aware, long held the position of district superintendent on the Intercolonial Railway, discharged his duties with great ability and success. I think, so far as I am able to form an opinion, that all parties were highly satisfied with Mr. McDonald's discharge of his duties. I had myself a great deal of intercourse with him, when I held the position of Minister of Railways and Canals, I may say that, of all the officials on the Intercolonial Railway, none appeared to me to be more devoted to the conscientious and painstaking discharge of his duties. It is right that I should say that under the circumstances. A change of Government took place, and a political opponent, a supporter of the present Government, brought, as I understand from the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, serious charges against Mr. McDonald, mainly connected with political partisanship and with having acted too strongly in favour of the party to which he belonged and to whom he owed his position and his advancement. The hon. Minister says that these charges were investigated. Mr. McDonald was suspended, and a full and lengthy investigation took place. The hon. Minister has been frank enough to admit that Mr. Pouliot's charges against Mr. McDonald fell to the ground, and that he was unable to sustain them. It appears to me that the hon. gentleman should have said that, having investigated these charges against this official, and finding that they were not well founded, it was considered a matter of justice to pay him for the time during which he was suspended. That is what Mr. McDonald was entitled to, but for some strange reason, instead of being reinstated and remunerated for the trouble to which he had been put improperly, he was dismissed. I cannot understand that. I think the committee would naturally have expected that the hon. Minister would have concluded his statement by saying that, finding that these charges which had been brought against Mr. McDonald by a political opponent and a person who was probably annoyed that Mr. McDonald would not take an active part in his favour, had failed in their entirety, and that there was nothing to be alleged against Mr. McDonald, he had been reinstated in his office. My hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) says that his salary was paid for the whole period during which he was suspended. I am also advised by my hon. friend that the Government properly felt that the case was so strong, that Mr. McDonald's vindication of his conduct was so good, that it was only right that they should pay the charges that he had incurred in securing his defence, by paying the lawyer who had defended him against these charges. I think the committee would naturally have expected, under these circumstances, that the matter had resulted in the complete reinstatement and restoration of Mr. McDonald to an office which, as I say, I had an opportunity for many years of knowing that he had discharged the duties of with fidelity and success.

Mr. BERGERON. The right hon. Prime Minister is here, and probably knows about this case. We might as well have as much discussion as we can to-night upon it. My impression is, that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals has not very many papers that he could bring down. He has probably forgotten the circumstances of the case, and I may be able to refresh his memory. As a matter of fact, Mr. McDonald has always been looked upon as a good and faithful employee of the Intercolonial. Charges were brought against him, by Mr. Pouliot, of offensive partisanship. The members of the Liberal party in that part of the province were not all of the same opinion. A great many of the Liberals stood by Mr. McDonald, and said that he was not guilty of the charge. During the course of his service as superintendent, he treated members of one party as well as those of the other, and always tried to be as agreeable and courteous to everybody as he could. Mr. Pouliot insisted, and the Government, I imagine, wanted to be pleasant to him. They instituted an investigation into the conduct of Mr. McDonald. The Government paid two lawyers to defend Mr. McDonald. I find that in an answer made by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals the other day to a question asked by the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain). We find here that

An official investigation was held into the conduct of Mr. A. R. McDonald, late superintendent of the Intercolonial Railway, before his dismissal. 2. It was held by J. E. Bedard, Esq., Q.C. 3. The investigation lasted sixteen and one-half days. 4. The Government paid counsel representing Mr. McDonald. 5. He was represented by Mr. Charles Langellier, who was paid $120, and by M. L. B. Dionne, who was paid $40. 6. Ninety witnesses were heard. 7. The total amount paid to witnesses was $310.28. 8. The total amount paid J. E. Bedard, Esq., Q.C., was $408.36. 9. The Department of Railways, or Government, were not represented by counsel at such investigation. 10. Therefore, nothing was paid. 11. The total amount paid for stenographer's fees was $82.50.

I have added them up, and I find that the expense came to $961.14. When the investigation was made, nothing was found against Mr. McDonald. At this investigation as many Liberals as Conservatives testified in Mr. McDonald's favour, and he had no stronger friend than Mr. Pacaud, proprietor of "Le Soleil," Quebec, and Mr. Langellier, member of the provincial legislature for Lévis, two of the most devoted supporters of the right hon. the Prime Minister in the district of Quebec. It was well understood that nothing was to happen to Mr. McDonald, and as a matter of fact, although he was suspended in January, 1897, he was not dismissed until December, 1897. He was paid during the whole year for doing nothing, and, besides that, Mr. Belleau, who replaced him at Rivière du Loup, was paid, and Mr. Ouellette was also paid a salary for the same position; so that it is no wonder the Intercolonial Railway does not pay.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend is wrong in that.

Mr. BERGERON. No, he will discover that these three men were paid at the same time. Nobody did more to support Mr. McDonald's claim than did the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), and it was expected that when Mr. Pouliot was dead nobody would then clamour for the head of Mr. McDonald. The present member for Temiscouata (Mr. Gauvreau) was at loggerheads with the Minister of Public Works because the Minister of Public Works wanted to support a member of the Pouliot family as a candidate in Temiscouata. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Gauvreau) said to the Conservatives: "Do not be afraid, for if I am elected, the axe will not be applied to any more Conservative heads in Temiscouata." Here is a letter from the Minister of Railways and Canals written on the 20th May, 1897, but the name of the man to whom it is written is in blank here, although the Minister, no doubt, can find the letter or a copy of it in his department.

Mr. BERGERON.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Have you got the name?

Mr. BERGERON. It is not given in the letter, but it does not seem to be a private letter.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Have you got the original letter?

Mr. BERGERON. This is a copy.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How can you tell whether it is a private letter or not?

Mr. BERGERON. If it was private it ought to be marked "private."

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It ought also to be addressed to some one.

Mr. BERGERON. I imagine to whom it was addressed, but it is not stated here.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Is that letter taken from any record of the House of Commons?

Mr. BERGERON. I do not know. So far as I am concerned, these papers were left me by the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain). I think I know the gentleman to whom that letter was addressed, but I will read the letter and the Minister can say whether it is true or not:

20th May, 1897.

Dear Mr. So and So,—I think that ultimately your friend Mr. McDonald will have no reason to feel that the department has used him harshly. I believe that is so in some respects, because his lawyers were paid, and he had the greatest encomiums that could be given on his conduct as a public servant:

I am not at liberty to say anything more just now, but I have no desire to be severe on him, nor do I know that the circumstances of the case would warrant it.

Yours faithfully,

ANDREW G. BLAIR.

SIR CHARLES TUPPER. That is a very good letter.

Mr. BERGERON. Yes, and Mr. McDonald's salary was paid, and he was brought up to Ottawa 'en attendant,' and promised that something would happen.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I suppose you saw him here?

Mr. BERGERON. Yes, what was he doing?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I suppose he was busy in the office of the department.

Mr. BERGERON. Did you see him doing any work?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think he must have been engaged.

Mr. BERGERON. I have seen Mr. McDonald here often, and he did not seem to be hard at work. On the contrary, he expected every day to be put back in his position, as he had been promised by the Minister of Railways and the Minister of Public Works, and the Prime Minister.

The PRIME MINISTER. He had no such statement from me.

Mr. BERGERON. When Mr. Poullot died, there was to be an election in the county of Temiscouata, and my information is that the Prime Minister told the friends of Mr. McDonald that he would be reinstated.

The PRIME MINISTER. I never told anything of the kind.

Mr. BERGERON. Well, I will read some letters. The Prime Minister was telling other people, too, that Mr. McDonald would not be reinstated. Several prominent Liberals were working for Mr. McDonald, among others Mr. Pacaud, whom I know personally did everything in his power for him. Mr. Charles Langeller not only had been his lawyer, but he was working for him politically speaking, and both had the greatest assurances possible from the Prime Minister that Mr. McDonald would be reinstated. There was an election in Nicolet, and I never saw parties doing everything in their power to carry a by-election as these hon. gentlemen opposite do.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Is that an unusual thing?

Mr. BERGERON. In former by-elections both sides would place their case as eloquently as possible before the electors, but I have never seen a party work as the Liberals do now, and carry on such practices as will be revealed, no doubt, before this session is over. In spite of the promises made by the right hon. gentleman and by the Minister of Railways, and by the Minister of Public Works, verbally and by writing, to reinstate Mr. McDonald, during the election at Nicolet, Messrs. Leduc and Bernier—I presume the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe—insisted on the Prime Minister appointing Ouellette, whose name must have been very often unpleasantly before the Minister of Railways when he was superintendent.

The PRIME MINISTER. Mr. Leduc never spoke to me about it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Do you say that Mr. Ouellette was not appointed before the election? It had nothing to do with the Nicolet election.

Mr. BERGERON. Yes, it had a great deal to do with the Nicolet election. When Mr. Ouellette was appointed he went down to Quebec and for a fortnight he was going from bar-room to bar-room at Point Lévis with the men of the Intercolonial Railway, and he was not in a condition to do good work. Even friends of the Prime Minister said that a man like that could not hold the position after a man like McDonald, who had discharged the duties of his office well, and to the satisfaction even of his enemies.

It was during that time that the election in Nicolet took place; and my right hon. friend, while passing through the city of Montreal, told two gentlemen with whom he was talking after lunch that after he came to Ottawa he would see that Mr. McDonald would be reinstated. He then went to Arthabaska-ville, where some gentlemen went to see him about the matter. I may say that there were accusations made that Mr. Ouellette went along the line in his car, and while he was stopping at a station, he would not let the ordinary train draw up at the station because it would stop his promenade. And it was said that he had something besides ginger ale on his car, and that during the time he was under the influence of ginger ale an accident happened on the Intercolonial involving the loss of $20,000 and the loss of one life. Now, the right hon. gentleman promised those two gentlemen in Montreal that Mr. McDonald would be reinstated.

The PRIME MINISTER. I never promised anything of the kind.

Mr. BERGERON. How could they boast of having a French Premier if Mr. Ouellette was dismissed and replaced by Mr. McDonald?

The PRIME MINISTER. What has that to do with the Nicolet election?

Mr. BERGERON. I am making my case. I said a moment ago that it was during the Nicolet election that these gentlemen saw my right hon. friend, and they insisted so much that although he had promised a day or two before to reinstate McDonald, he telegraphed to Ottawa to the Railway Department.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend is mixed in his facts. The Nicolet election took place in the fall of 1897, and the incident to which he refers was in June or July, 1898.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend is mixed in his dates.

Mr. SCRIVER. Read the letters.

Mr. BERGERON. I will when I come to that point. Who is making this speech? If my hon. friend (Mr. Scriver) is sleepy, let him go home and to-morrow he will read this in "Hansard." My right hon. friend knows that he promised, not only once, but twenty times to Mr. McDonald himself that he would be reinstated.

The PRIME MINISTER. I never did anything of the kind.

Mr. BERGERON. I am very glad the hon. gentleman denies it, because it will bring matters to a climax. This is what I want to know from the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, whether it is not true that Mr. Belleau, Mr. McDonald and Mr. Ouellette were all at the same time receiving a salary as superintendent of the Intercolonial Railway. The Minister of Railways must have received some complaints at the time, and he will be kind enough to bring them down. We will see whether it is true that Mr. Ouellette, after his nomination, went to Rivière du Loup, and that for 15 days he spent his time in the bars with employees of the Intercolonial Railway, and that during that time there was an accident on the railway resulting in the loss of $20,000 and the loss of one life. That surely can be ascertained. In January, 1898, my hon. friend promised to Mr. Pacaud that Mr. McDonald would have full satisfaction—"pleine satisfaction." The same day two gentlemen, Messrs. Carroll and Choquette, met Mr. McDonald's son and told him to ask Mr. McDonald to come to the Hotel Frontenac in the evening. Mr. McDonald went there, and they met him and assured him that as soon as the right hon. Premier got back to Ottawa, he would give Mr. McDonald satisfaction. That was in January, 1898. I have another letter of the Minister of Railways and Canals of the 3rd of November, 1897, addressed to Mr. Langeller. That was after the investigation, I imagine. This is the letter:

Dear Mr. Langeller,—I quite agree with you that the McDonald matter has remained unsettled long enough—in fact, very much longer than I could have wished. It was my purpose to bring it to an end without further delay in one form or the other. Until I have had the opportunity of considering the subject, I am not able to give you any information as to what course will be taken; but you may say to Mr. McDonald that this uncertainty will be relieved at a very early day.

Yours faithfully,
ANDREW G. BLAIR.

My right hon. friend, who lacks memory I am afraid, was very anxious about this, and on the 27th of April, 1898, he had a letter sent to Mr. McDonald by his private secretary. It is in French, but I will read it in English:

Dear Sir,—I have received instructions from the Prime Minister to inform you that he will be happy to give you an interview on Monday next, in the course of the forenoon.

Your very devoted,
(Sgd.) RODOLPHE BOUDREAU.
P. S.

A. R. McDonald, Esq.

Mr. BRITTON. Is that the promise to reinstate him?

Mr. BERGERON. Surely from a man like my hon. friend, who expects to go on the bench, we should not have a question like that. This is the letter of the private secretary asking Mr. McDonald to come up, as the Premier would be glad to see him on Monday morning. The Minister of Railways and Canals dismissed Mr. McDonald on the 13th December, 1898, by this letter:

Sir,—I am, by direction, to give you notice that your term of service as district superintendent of the Intercolonial Railway, will cease on the 31st inst., up to which date you will draw your salary through the head office of the railway at Moncton, N.B.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,
L. K. JONES,
Secretary.

I have no doubt that the notes which I have must come from Mr. McDonald, as they have been put into my hand by my hon. friend the member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain). I find that when Mr. McDonald met the Premier in Ottawa, the latter said to him that the Government never had the intention of dismissing him, and that after the session he would arrange matters.

The PRIME MINISTER. That is not my memory of the interview.

Mr. BERGERON. More than that, during the time the Intercolonial was in the hands of Ouellette, he, Ouellette, got on a spree and woke up one day in San Francisco.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What is the hon. gentleman reading from—from a letter?

Mr. BERGERON. I have lots of letters here. These are the notes left me by Mr. Casgrain. In July, the Minister of Public Works told Mr. McDonald that the Government would reinstate him, and advised him to sell his properties in Montreal and go to Rivière du Loup and prepare for work. This is a letter which the Minister of Public Works wrote Mr. McDonald on the 23rd of June, 1898:

Dear Mr. McDonald,—Before reading your letter of the 21st, I had written to the Minister of Railways and Canals, Mr. Fielding,—

Mr. Fielding was then, I suppose, acting for the Minister of Railways and Canals.

—and also seen Mr. Schreiber. I shall see the First Minister this afternoon, and be in a position to give you an answer more direct in a few days at Quebec.

Yours truly,
J. ISRAEL TARTE.

The word "Que." is struck out in the letter. At that time the Minister of Public Works had assured Mr. McDonald that beyond doubt he would be reinstated, and I believe that the Minister of Public Works has always been a friend of Mr. McDonald, and did everything in his power to prevent his dismissal and have him reinstated. I said a moment ago that at a restaurant in Montreal, the right hon. gentleman met two of his friends to whom he said he would not leave Ottawa before reinstating Mac, and that he had authorized Mr. Tarte to so state. That was told to Mr. Dansereau and Mr. David at the Duperrouzel restaurant about this time last year. I have given the names to my right hon. friend so that he may easily refresh his memory, and I take the word of these two gentlemen. The next Sunday Ouellette went down to Arthabaskaville and promised the First Minister in writing never to drink again, and then the First Minister promised he would not be dismissed. After that Ouellette went to Rivière du Loup and got on a terrible spree. He went around the hotel and then went to Montreal in a sleeping car and probably took the freak afterwards of going to San Francisco, but that I do not know. At last he was dismissed and replaced by Mr. Dubé. When it was perfectly decided, I suppose, that Mr. McDonald would not be reinstated, the Minister of Public Works wrote, on the 12th of July, 1898, to Mr. Dansereau, as follows:—

Ottawa, 12th July, 1898.

My dear Dansereau,—On my return to Ottawa, I found that most powerful influences had been worked in favour of Ouellette, in fact, Mr. Schreiber told me that the department had received orders to keep him. I do not know where to find McDonald, and as you are probably aware of his whereabouts I charge you to announce the news to him. It is against all my habits to deceive people by giving them hopes which can never be realized. It had been practically decided the other day to reinstate McDonald, but another decision has been adopted, and I want to have McDonald acquainted with it as soon as possible.

Yours truly,
J. ISRAEL TARTE.

All this was done on account of Mr. Poullot, who had started the investigation against Mr. McDonald. I have said that Mr. Gauvreau, the present member for the county, when canvassing for his election, had declared to his friends that there would be no political dismissals in the county so far as he was concerned. This was probably after it was found out that McDonald was irretrievably dismissed. Mr. Gauvreau, the member for Temiscouata, tells Mr. McDonald that he always stood by him:

Stanford, 24th Nov., 1898.

A. R. McDonald, Esq., Montreal.

Dear Sir,—You are aware of the accusations brought against me in regard to yourself, accusations which have recently been revealed to me by your friend, Mr. Pacaud. He must have informed you of what I asserted at his office. I have since met Sir Wilfrid, who authorized me to give the most positive denial to all such slander; he even promised to speak of the same to Mr. Pacaud. I do not know if he has done so, nevertheless, I am not ashamed of my deeds, and if I had in any way withheld your appointment I would have assumed all responsibilities over the same. I consider it most cowardly of those who wish to make me the scapegoat of their own turpitudes. I still heartily feel what you have done for mine, and this alone would have prevented me from injuring you in any way. I have nothing to reproach myself against you, either in word or deed, and if the Government had wished to employ you I would not have been against it, leaving them full liberty to do so.

Hoping these few lines will be sufficient to dissipate all your doubts, I remain, dear sir,

Very truly yours,
CHAS. A. GAUVREAU, M.P.

Of course, it is not denied, not only that Mr. McDonald's salary was paid, but that his travelling expenses were paid when he was here. He received $71.25 for travelling expenses and board. The vouchers are here. There is also a letter from Mr. Pottinger, asking Mr. McDonald for some vouchers, which, I suppose, were sent, because the amount was paid. There is another letter from Mr. Pottinger on the subject of an item of $60 for board.

There is the case, and it will help my hon. friend to find all the papers in his department either to establish his case, or to explain, if it is not properly presented to the committee.

Mr. BOURASSA. Where are the promises?

Mr. BERGERON. It is very clear, from what has been read and from the facts, that this man was kept there with the promise that he would be reinstated. Nothing was proved against him. There are letters here showing that the hope was held out to Mr. Langelier that the matter would be settled. If hon. gentlemen opposite were to state the case openly, they would admit that they intended to replace Mr. McDonald. For a whole year he received his salary. Here is this letter of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), in which he says: "It had been practically decided the other day to reinstate Mr. McDonald." Well, that is a funny Government. But he goes on: "Another decision having been arrived at, I want to notify Mr. McDonald as soon as possible." That seems to be the work of a friend, and says in effect: I have kept him in hope of reinstatement, but it has been decided not to reinstate him, and I want to let him know as soon as possible, so that he may do something else. If the colleague of the Minister of Public Works says the contrary, surely this shows that this is a most extraordinary Government. I have given the case, so far as the notes I have here show it. It is a most extraordinary case. Mr. McDonald did his work to the satisfaction of his superiors and the department. The only thing against him, as was said by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, was active partisanship.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That was one of the charges.

Mr. BERGERON. It is the only charge that justified the investigation, and nothing else was tried to be proved against him. And, the Government will not dare to say that they had anything else against him. They were not—I was going to use an unparliamentary word, but I will not—they were not brave enough to bring any other accusation against him. As to the charges that were made against him, he came out of the examination clearly exonerated, so much so that his lawyers were paid and he was paid his salary for the whole year. At that time a man named Boileau was receiving a salary, as will be seen when the papers are brought down. Then, Mr. Ouellette was employed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not doing the same duties.

Mr. BERGERON. Mr. Ouellette was employed to do Mr. McDonald's work. Mr. McDonald was superintendent of that division.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Mr. Belleau ceased to act as soon as Mr. Ouellette was appointed.

Mr. BERGERON. But Mr. McDonald was paid for the whole year. Mr. Belleau was paid for all the time he served, and Mr. Ouellette for the time he served. There were at least two salaries paid for 1898. And Mr. McDonald was kept like that until the month of December. Political influence was used against him; but political influence was not all against him, for a great many Liberals in Quebec were for Mr. McDonald, and are still. The right arm of my right hon. friend in Quebec, Mr. Pacaud, also Mr. Langelier, and, I believe, some of the gentlemen on the other side in this House were in favour of Mr. McDonald. This Government has done many bad things in the way of dismissals, some of them in my constituency, but I do not know of a worse case than this. Here was a public employee who had been in the service of the Government for nearly twenty-five years, an honest man, a man against whom no one has a word to say. They did not dismiss him outright; they played with him. They have treated many employees in a brutal way, but this is the worst case of all. This is what we call in French, 'tuer à petit feu'—taking his lifeblood drop by drop. I hope the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) will bring down the papers before the Intercolonial Railway estimates are passed.

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman chose to bring my name in in connection with this case. He started with a great flourish of trumpets, declaring that he would be able to show letters of mine in which I had promised Mr. McDonald and his friends that he would be reinstated. I did not hesitate to tell him that he had no such promise from me. Upon an interjection of mine, he reaffirmed the statement. Then he produced a letter from my secretary to Mr. McDonald to the effect that I would give him an interview at a certain time. I am sure my secretary did not write that letter without some reason for it. If my secretary wrote the letter to Mr. McDonald that I would give him an interview on a certain day, it must have been because somebody, either Mr. McDonald or his friends, asked for such an interview. If Mr. McDonald asked an interview to bring to my attention something connected with the public business, it was my duty to give it to him; and no doubt, he had written asking that I should see him. I remember the interview as distinctly as if it had taken place yesterday. But I will not commit the indiscretion of repeating what took place at a private interview. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) proposes to bring into this certain statements which he says were made in a restaurant. I must say I do not charge my memory with such matters. I transact my business in my office—

Mr. BERGERON. But does the hon. gentleman deny it?

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not deny it or affirm it. I do not transact the public business in a restaurant; when I go to a restaurant, it is generally for something else. I am ready to be answerable for anything I say or write in my office, and in my capacity as a public man, but I decline to be held responsible for what I may have been understood to say in a casual conversation. It is purely childish to ask me whether I had a certain conversation in a restaurant. I decline to answer that. Now, the hon. gentleman brought in the Nicolet election, and talked of Mr. Ouellette. The course of the moon is just as relevant to this question as is the Nicolet election. The election for Nicolet took place in the month of December, 1897. Ouellette was appointed superintendent of the division of the Intercolonial Railway from St. Flavie to Lévis and afterwards of the division from the latter point to Montreal, if I remember right, in the winter of 1897-98. In the summer of 1898, it is true, an unfortunate accident took place with regard to Mr. Ouellette. I sent for him to come to my office, and he came. I need not say what took place there, but he has since been dismissed from the service.

Mr. BERGERON. That is going off at a tangent. It may not be true as regards the election of Nicolet. Does my hon. friend remember that a deputation of his friends went to him at Arthabaskaville and asked him to reinstate Mr. Ouellette after he had been suspended for conduct which was not becoming in his position?

The PRIME MINISTER. That is all wrong. This is simply what took place. I was in Arthabaskaville, and I heard something about Ouellette, and wrote for information. A charge had been made against him, and in order to investigate it I wrote for him to come to me. I need not say what took place, at all events, I asked the department to continue him in office. What connection had that with the Nicolet election? Ouellette has since been dismissed from office. I now come to Mr. McDonald's matter, which, however, has nothing to do with the case of Ouellette. I think in the latter part of 1896, charges were made against McDonald. He had been for some twenty years superintendent of the division on the Intercolonial Railway between Ste. Flavie and Lévis. The charges were brought by Mr. Pouliot, who at that time represented the county of Temiscouata. Unfortunately, he has since departed this life, but my hon. friend knows that if there ever was a respectable man, of high character, it was Mr. Pouliot. We thought it advisable to bring Mr. McDonald face to face with those who had made charges against him, and have the charges either proved or disproved. The gentleman who was entrusted with conducting the investigation was Mr. Bedard, a leading lawyer from Quebec, a very able man, most impartial and anxious to do justice to both parties. After the investigation, a report was made. I looked over the record and came to the conclusion that the investigation had to a large extent substantiated the charges. The charges were those of offensive partisanship and misconduct in office. So far as political partisanship was concerned, I am free to absolve Mr. McDonald absolutely on that head. The investigation showed that he had not been free from that, but I became convinced that if he had infringed his duty in that respect, he had done it by order of a superior authority, and I would not hold him responsible for it. As for the charge of misconduct in office, I am free to say that the offences proved against him were not of a very grave character.

Mr. BERGERON. What were they?

The PRIME MINISTER. I forget at the moment. I did not charge my memory with the details, but that is the impression left upon my mind. It is eighteen months since I read the evidence. But the impression left upon my mind by the evidence and the report of Mr. Bedard, was that the offences proved against Mr. McDonald were not of a serious character. But one thing was proved to my satisfaction, namely, that the usefulness of Mr. McDonald as superintendent of that division was altogether gone, and that he could not be retained in that office. I may say at once that for some time I had contemplated recommending the Minister to give Mr. McDonald a position somewhere else. Against that gentleman personally, I have nothing to say, but I have no hesitation in saying that I came to the conclusion that his usefulness as superintendent on that division was gone. The fact was notorious, and it was proved in that investigation, and well known all over the line, that Mr. McDonald had taken an active part in all the municipal contests that took place on the line in his division. I would not call him an offensive partisan, but he was a person who gave a great deal of his time and attention to municipal contests, taking part on one side or the other, canvassing, assisting at the polls, conspiring in caucuses and giving the better part of his time to these contests. The result was that a large portion of the population, whom it was his duty to serve, lost confidence in him. But there is something more. It was a matter of notoriety that Mr. McDonald for a long time had been engaged in speculations as a railway promoter, and as a railway builder, and as a railway broker. He was engaged in law suits which members of this House have doubtless heard about.

Mr. BERGERON. He has been dealing in other places than Quebec.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have no answer to give to that remark. I do not know what the hon. gentleman means by his veiled threats, but they do not affect me in any way.

Mr. BERGERON. No, they do not affect you personally.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am telling the committee why we came to the conclusion that his usefulness was gone. Surely hon. gentlemen in this House will understand that an employee of the Intercolonial Railway should not be allowed to take an active part in municipal contests as a canvasser, and thus render himself offensive to a portion of the people. Take a little town like Rivière du Loup, where he was stationed, with a population of 2,000 or 3,000 souls, and, perhaps, 300 or 400 voters. We know with what bitterness municipal elections are fought in those small towns. Mr. McDonald was allied with one side or the other. Day after day he had to meet in his office men on business belonging to the railway, whom he had made deadly enemies by his conduct in these municipal matters. I have no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that he no longer could be retained in that position, and I communicated my opinion to my colleague the Minister of Railways and Canals. While I am not going into private conversations. I took that ground and maintained it. At the same time I recognize that Mr. McDonald had sinned more through indiscretion than otherwise. I remembered that he was highly recommended by some of my political friends. There are members of this House who are friends of Mr. McDonald, and who would have been happy to see him retained in the service, and who would have been glad if the Minister of Railways and Canals could have found a position for him in some other capacity where we could utilize his services. I would be glad if the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals would try to find a position for Mr. McDonald where he could utilize his services in some other capacity. I am sorry to speak in this way; I would prefer to have left this matter where it was, but if the hon. gentleman chooses to bring it up he will have to take the consequences. If we have erred, it has been in that we have been too lenient towards Mr. McDonald. We paid him his salary perhaps when we should not have done so. It is not correct to say that we paid the salary of Mr. McDonald and Mr. Ouellette at the same time. I believe that the records will not show anything of the kind. If it is that we have been too lenient with Mr. McDonald, it was that he should not have reason to believe that we wanted to treat him unfairly. We wanted to treat him as fairly as possible, believing that he had been more indiscreet than guilty. We have to bear the penalty to-day of being too lenient with those with whom we have at some time to deal. We would not be subjected to criticism by the hon. gentleman if we had treated Mr. McDonald harshly. He offers the criticism that we have not been severe enough with Mr. McDonald. Perhaps that may teach us a lesson for our guidance in future. I leave the case in the judgment of both sides of the House.

Mr. BERGERON. I have seen the right hon. Prime Minister defending a bad case very often, and he generally does it well. But this is too strong for him. I never yet heard such a lame defence. The hon. gentleman commenced by saying that he does not repeat private conversations. He does not say anything about the conversation he had in the Restaurant Duperrouzel with Messrs. Dansereau and David, two respected gentlemen and friends of the Prime Minister. It would have been better for the right hon. gentleman to say whether the statement of these gentlemen is true or not. He does not say yes or no;

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

he simply hides himself behind this noble phrase: I do not repeat private conversations. But it was not a private matter; Mr. McDonald is a public man to a certain extent, and the conversation has been well remembered by the others, that when these two friends were asking him what would be done in this case, he said that Mr. McDonald, if not reinstated in the same position, would at least be given something else. The hon. gentleman has just now given out the case himself, confirming the promise he made of putting McDonald somewhere else. The interview in his office my right hon. friend has passed over in a quiet way. He says: If my secretary has answered, it was the answer that he would give to persons who had come to my office to get an interview with me. The fact is that the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte had spoken to the right hon. gentleman very often about McDonald who was here for many days, and of whom he knew not only by letter but by word of mouth. He himself wanted to see McDonald; he felt that there was something due to McDonald, who occupied an anomalous and unjust position. The right hon. gentleman, who is just and fair sometimes, felt that it was due to McDonald to give him some explanation, and he ordered his secretary to write to McDonald as follows:—

(Translation.)

Ottawa, April 27th, 1898.

Dear Sir,—I have received instruction from the Prime Minister to inform you that he will be happy to grant you an interview on next Monday in the forenoon.

Yours truly,

(Sgd.) RODOLPHE BOUDREAU.

A. R. McDonald, Esq.,

P. S.

Mr. McDonald came here. The right hon. gentleman says that he does not want to speak about a private conversation. I would not have mentioned it, but I cannot help doing so. Mr. McDonald went into the right hon. gentleman's office and the right hon. gentleman said to him: My dear McDonald, as the late Sir John Macdonald said to Mr. Letellier de St. Just, your usefulness is gone. These were the very words that the right hon. gentleman used. Mr. McDonald said: Sir Wilfrid, have you brought me here simply to tell me that. You might have allowed me to remain at home and sent word to me. The right hon. gentleman said to him: McDonald, I do not want to be hard on you; we want to do something for you, and I am in hopes that you shall remain in the employ of the Government in a position better than the one that you had before. Mr. McDonald was kept here for a month in the department waiting for that good position. He mentioned what he thought it was to be to me, but I forget what position it was. The Prime Minister may remember it, and if not the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals must remember the position which was to be given to McDonald. Now, if the hon. Prime Minister remembers his conversation with McDonald in his office, and his conversation in the Restaurant Duperrouzel, he will remember that the promise that he made to McDonald was to reinstate him or to give him something better. The hon. gentleman required an investigation into the case of Ouellette, whom he had summoned to Arthabaska-ville, and after he had investigated the case he ordered the department to keep Ouellette. That is in "Hansard." All of the case except that portion bearing on the Nicolet election—and that is immaterial—is proven. My right hon. friend defends his action in this case by saying that there was political partisanship, but when he can keep a gentleman in office like Mr. Preston, surely he must not be very touchy on the subject of political partisanship, although to-day we are hearing of some of the most infamous political actions on the part of public employees that we have ever heard of, and if they were Conservatives they would be dismissed. In my county they have been thrown out of their houses, built on Government ground, because they were appointed by me, and because it is supposed that they would vote for me if they were allowed to remain there. Men appointed by the Liberal Government and paid by public money are not disturbed. Then, the right hon. gentleman says that McDonald took part in municipal affairs at Rivière du Loup. The old Government permitted public employees to mix in municipal affairs. Are you going to make slaves of public employees? Mr. McDonald has about twenty-five houses at Rivière du Loup and he is deeply interested in municipal affairs, but the right hon. gentleman takes the ground, as it will be found in "Hansard," and as it will go down to posterity, that a man who is a public employee and a Conservative cannot mix in public affairs. This is a most preposterous proposition, and one that this House should not approve. The right hon. gentleman attaches little importance to the charge of political partisanship against Mr. McDonald. It must indeed have been a very slight offence when the report of the commission is entirely in favour of Mr. McDonald on that point. The commissioner was Mr. Bedard, one of the best friends of the right hon. gentleman and a staunch Grit in Quebec. Mr. Langelier, another Liberal, was defending him, with Mr. Dionne, and the report of Mr. Bedard is that there was nothing against Mr. McDonald at all. It is unjust and unfair for the Prime Minister to say that Mr. McDonald was not only charged with being a partisan but that there was something else against him. The Prime Minister will have to answer for that, if not to McDonald, then to others. My right hon. friend has tried for a year to do something for Mr.

McDonald, and he was so convinced that there was nothing against McDonald political or otherwise, that for a whole year he has been trying to get something better for him. The right hon. gentleman promised Mr. Dansereau and Mr. David and he promised it to McDonald himself and he promised it to Mr. Pacaud and other political friends. He intended to do it, but he has not been able to succeed, probably the Minister of Railways would not do it for him, and now he insinuates that there were other charges against McDonald. When I ask him what the other charges were, he says he does not remember. Well, when a man has been twenty years in the employ of the Government and when he is put out of office without any possible reason, it is important enough for the Minister to remember what other charges were brought against McDonald, and upon which there was an investigation.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the hon. gentleman intimated to me that he would want those papers I would have brought them down.

Mr. BERGERON. I believe the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) was promised these papers long ago.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think so.

Mr. BERGERON. Well, I ask for them now. I ask the Minister to bring down the report of Mr. Bedard and the charges, so that we may know what the accusations are, and which the Prime Minister says he has not seen.

The PRIME MINISTER. I did not say I had not seen them.

Mr. BERGERON. Then what were the other charges besides political partisanship against Mr. McDonald?

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman will see what are in the papers when they are brought down.

Mr. BERGERON. All right; we will have another shot at them, and if the matter is not brought up this session it will be brought up next session. In order to show that McDonald was just as fair to one political party as the other, in the way of doing favours, and I know that as matter of fact myself, I see in this note that a Mr. Talbot—I suppose it is the member for Bellechasse—once telegraphed to McDonald that he was going to St. Michel with some friends, and he asked that a train passing by Chaudière should pass by the St. Charles Branch, or something like that, and this request was granted. My hon. friend (Mr. Talbot) is not a political friend of Mr. McDonald in any sense.

Mr. TALBOT. What the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) is now stating is altogether unfounded. There is not a word of truth in it.

Mr. BERGERON. Well, it does not say it was Mr. Talbot, M.P., and it may be some other Talbot.

Mr. TALBOT. There is not a word of truth in it. If the hon. gentleman allows me I will tell him what did happen. My wife was ill in town at the time, it was in winter and I telegraphed to Mr. McDonald to allow the express train to stop at St. Michel, my station, giving the reasons why I asked the permission. Mr. McDonald refused it, and at the time I knew perfectly well that he had often permitted Conservative friends of his to stop at any part of the road they wished to stop. He refused to do it, although I mentioned in my telegram that my wife was ill.

Mr. BERGERON. Well, it is another Talbot; it is not the one we have here. I understand this item will not pass until we get the papers down.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will let this item stand and bring down the papers.

Soulanges Canal, construction..... $1,610,000

Mr. BERGERON. When will this canal be ready for navigation?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. One has to speak with a great deal of reserve in naming a date for the completion of works under contract. I feel a little hesitation because I have already intimated to Parliament that I thought these works would be completed somewhat earlier. I have the strongest possible assurance from the contractors that they will be in a position so that we will be able to let the water in on the first week in September.

Mr. BERGERON. Were there not some landslides there?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There have been three or four slides, but I think they will be all cleared up by the date I mention.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Who are the contractors?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Sections 1 and 2, Ryan and McDonnell; section 3 is practically finished; sections 4, 5, 6 and 7, are being completed by Mr. Onderdonk; section 8, Charles Raynor; section 9, Macdonnell; section 10, Rogers and Taylor, practically completed. Section 11 is practically completed. Section 12—M. J. Hogan is the present contractor. Section 13, Messrs. Manning and McDonald. These are all.

Mr. BERGERON. Are the locks finished?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think they are.

Mr. TALBOT.

Mr. BERGERON. I think you have five locks instead of four.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have three, each with a lift of 23 feet 6 inches, one with a lift of 17 feet 6 inches, and one guard lock—five altogether. In addition to that, there is a guard gate.

Mr. BERGERON. What do you call a guard lock?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It has no lift. It is for protection.

Mr. BERGERON. At Valleyfield the first lock, which is a guard lock, is like the others. Does the hon. gentleman know how the case with Mr. Stewart stands?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That matter is before the court.

Mr. BERGERON. Is the matter of the quarry still before the court?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Sault Ste. Marie Canal, construction.... $18,000

Mr. MONTAGUE. What is this for?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is for dredging in the channel and levelling the ground.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What was the cost of removing the pier?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The estimated cost was $5,000.

Mr. MONTAGUE. You took a vote of $75,000 last year.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That was for the new bridge. The whole work will probably cost the sum estimated.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Did the Canadian Pacific Railway pay any share of the cost?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I understand not.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Were they asked to?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There was some correspondence on the subject, but it did not eventuate in anything. We had to do the work in order to get the use of the canal.

Mr. BERGERON. I am very glad the Government did it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I visited the place a year ago and the pier was an eyesore.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Who did the work?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The Dominion Bridge Company have the contract for the bridge.

Lachine Canal, enlargement..... $113,400

Mr. BERGERON. I thought that was finished twenty years ago under the Mackenzie Administration. What is going on there now ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are dredging fifteen feet between Locks 2 and 3, which we estimate is costing us $18,200; we propose to build a lock at the lower entrance to replace two others, costing $15,000; widening the old wier at Lachine, $30,000; building two sloping walls, $21,000; and to complete the MacNamee & Mann's contract, $18,000.

Mr. BERGERON. A very small part of this is for enlarging the canal proper.

Mr. TAYLOR. If I understand the Minister correctly, in making his speech last session, he promised the people of this country that they would have the canal deepened to the full depth at the opening of navigation of 1899. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman when the promise he made is going to be fulfilled. The opening of navigation has gone by for some months and I have not heard that the canal is yet enlarged to its full depth.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not many months have passed by since the opening of navigation. I had hoped, and had reason to hope from the assurances of the officers of my department, and the statements of the contractors, that we would be in a position to let the water in and provide a channel at the opening of navigation; but we did not expect to have the canals finished. I do not wish to imply that we are going to have the canals fully finished, but we are going to be able to let vessels drawing fourteen feet of water pass through.

Mr. TAYLOR. When ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am now strongly hoping that we shall be able to do it by the first week in September. Contingencies occur in all these great works, and it was found utterly impossible to have the work finished by the 1st of May.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend must not be too sanguine. Even if the Soulanges Canal were completely finished, vessels drawing more than nine feet of water could not pass through, because the deepening of the lakes to fourteen feet is not finished. Lake St. Louis is not deepened.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I understand that the work has progressed further than I thought and that nearly 300 feet of channel in Lake St. Louis is completed to a depth of 15 or 16 feet. We felt confident that we would have channel enough for the fall business, but we will have the full 300 feet ready by September.

Mr. BERGERON. I am very much surprised if there is a channel on Lake St. Louis of 14 feet.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. More than that.

Mr. BERGERON. How is it that vessels are using the old channel instead of the new one ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have not yet formally announced that the channel is ready and shipmasters are not going to run any risk. They will not use the new channel until they have assurance that it is completed.

Mr. BERGERON. At the foot of the Soulanges Canal has any deepening been done ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The intention is to have the channel at the foot of the canal dug to a depth of 20 feet clear, for a distance of 13,000 feet, from the head of the canal up. There is no dredging at the lower end.

Mr. BERGERON. I am talking of the lower end. You cannot pass there with a steam yacht drawing three feet of water.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Mr. Monroe very recently made a careful test of the channel there and said that no dredging was required.

Lake St. Louis Channel, deepening and straightening ..... $65,000

Mr. BERGERON. When will that be finished ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is almost finished now.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Who is doing that work ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The Weddell Dredging Company are the contractors.

Cornwall Canal, enlargement..... $150,000

Mr. BERGERON. Have all the damages been paid for landslides that have taken place there ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I never heard of any landslides on the Cornwall Canal.

Mr. BERGERON. Some vessels went through an embankment and caused some damage.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have vessels running into our gates and banks on all the canals.

Mr. BERGERON. This was on a level between two locks. It happened during three summers, one after the other.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It must have been before my date. We have had three or four on the Welland, but none on the Cornwall.

Rapide Plat Canal, enlargement..... $83,250

Mr. BERGERON. I see the hon. gentleman is asking for $35,000 also.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes; that was a revote.

Mr. BERGERON. What is being done, and when will the work be finished?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. A great deal of work has been done there. The contractors are Messrs. Poupore & Fraser on section 1, and the Welland Dredging Company on section 2. The work is done, and we are now awaiting the making up of the final estimates.

Galops Canal, enlargement..... $688,400
North Channel, deepening and straightening ..... $55,000
Galops Rapids, removing obstructions... $50,000

Mr. MONTAGUE. I would ask the hon. Minister to allow these items to stand, as some gentlemen desire to speak upon them.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It would probalby suit the hon. gentleman as well, if we allow the first to stand, and pass the other two. Any discussion that is desired can take place on the one item.

Mr. MONTAGUE. All right.

Trent Canal, construction..... $845,000

Mr. HUGHES. I do not wish to take up time, but would the hon. Minister be good enough to tell us what is to be done this year? Is he going to build the section between Lake Simcoe and Balsam Lake?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are going to make an effort in that direction.

Mr. HUGHES. Will the contract be let?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I hope so. We have it in contemplation.

Mr. PETTET. How much will it cost to complete this canal?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman mean to the Bay of Quinté? It will cost a good deal of money. We have not intended to take up any extensive work below Peterborough this year. The appropriation we are asking for will be sufficient to complete existing contracts and leave us $300,000 or perhaps $350,000, to start upon fresh work. It is in contemplation to let a portion of the work between Lake Simcoe and Balsam Lake, and possibly a portion of the work on the lower stretches, but we have not decided.

Mr. PETTET. Have the engineers gone over the canal? I do not wish to oppose the grant, but we know the Liberal party, when in Opposition, condemned this work, and, while Prince Edward will be benefited by it more than any other county, and I do not think there is a single person in the county would support the construction of the canal, I am not in a position to know anything about it. I would like to know of the hon. Minister if the canal would be of use to the country, when constructed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I should be very sorry to say that it would not be of any use to the country. We did not initiate the enterprise; we inherited it. I think it would be rather a reproach to us, if we left the canal unfinished half way between Lake Simcoe and Balsam Lake. It occurred to me that we should complete the work, a portion of it at any event. I do not see that there is any alternative.

Mr. PETTET. What is the depth of water in the canal?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It will not be more than 6 feet on the mitre sills.

Mr. HUGHES. I would suggest to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pettet) who has the distinguished honour of representing Prince Edward County, and who is candid enough to come here and say he knows nothing about it—and he is supposed to be one of the most intelligent men in his county—that he should go into the Library and read over the "Hansard" reports of discussions upon this subject, or procure the report from the Department of Railways and Canals of the commission that was appointed to take evidence on this subject. If he will do this before he undertakes to take up the time of the House, I am satisfied he will have a different opinion of the canal.

Mr. BENNETT. I understood the Minister to say that he expected to make a contract of the section between Balsam Lake and Lake Simcoe.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The new portion of it. I am asking a vote for that purpose. The hon. member (Mr. Bennett) understands the situation, and he knows that we have already under contract a very considerable portion between these two lakes.

Mr. BENNETT. Does the hon. Minister expect to have this section under contract this fall?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know what course I shall take with regard to that; but I am certainly contemplating having it under way at as early a date as I possibly can. I think this section between the two lakes must be completed. That is my judgment about it. I am not going to say whether it ought to have been taken up in preference to other work, but I am just going to deal with it as I find it. I find it under way, and I think we will have to complete the section between Simcoe and Balsam.

Mr. BENNETT. I think any gentleman, whether in this House or outside, who has taken the trouble to post himself on this work, instead of contenting himself with crying out against it, will commend the action of the Minister in placing under construction the link between Lake Simcoe and Balsam Lake. When does the hon. gentleman hope to have the lock completed and in running order at Peterborough?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The contract does not call for the completion of that lock—at all events, it is not likely to be done before next season. It is a pretty large undertaking, and it is something new. I think that when completed it will be a creditable work. There is nothing at all like it on the continent, and I think it is in pretty good hands. I hope it will be done by the opening of next season.

Mr. GIBSON. What is the estimated cost of the canal when completed?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I can tell the hon. gentleman that up to the end of April, 1899, there has been expended altogether $2,500,000 upon the canal.

Mr. GIBSON. Has it been used for any purposes of navigation yet?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not to any appreciable extent. Until we have the locks completed at the lower end it will not be possible to utilize it except as a local line.

Mr. GIBSON. It is for the purpose of carrying counties, and not for carrying the trade of the country. I remember distinctly a large deputation coming down here when Sir John Thompson was Prime Minister, and when the question was pressed upon him for the construction and completion of this canal, there was a promise made by the delegation to give the Government their moral support, and I remember Sir John Thompson saying to them that he wanted something more than their moral support. I believe it was gone on with for the purpose of carrying the counties through which it passes.

Mr. BENNETT. I do not think the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson) is hardly fair to this project. Practically speaking, this is not a canal at all, because there are miles and miles of lakes, some of which vary from ten to twenty-five miles in length and width, that are practically part and parcel of this canal system. It is true, as the Minister says, that a great deal of money has been spent on it, so much money that the consummation of it must be brought about. But I have always understood that this work has been undertaken, not so much as a local work as a part of a line from Lake Ontario to the Georgian Bay. When that is completed, and when there is a depth of six feet of water over the sills, and the large water stretches are utilized along the system, there will then be a water carrying route far in advance of the Erie Canal.

Mr. PETTET. When was it commenced?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I believe it was commenced before confederation. I think considerable money must have been spent before 1867.

Mr. BENNETT. The Imperial Government started it in 1837.

Mr. GIBSON. It would not do a great deal of harm if the estimate was cut down one-half. If a canal started before confederation is not completed yet, there cannot be a great necessity for the work. It is only a ditch at the very best. I have no fault to find with the class of work that has been done, it has been very well done, but as for its utility, it is one of the greatest farces that was ever perpetrated by the Government. My hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) spoke a few moments ago about the Soo Canal. I remember when he was sitting on this side of the House, and then I condemned it as an engineering monstrosity. That pier that was put in the canal was done at the instigation of the Canadian Pacific Railway in order to save them the expense of building a bridge.

Mr. HUGHES. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman is referring to a previous debate. The item to which he has referred has already been carried.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is true I declared the item carried, but we are in the habit, when a member gets up immediately and wishes to continue the debate, of allowing him to do so.

Mr. GIBSON. I am obliged to you for your ruling, because I am touching the hon. gentleman on a very sore spot, because all this blundering was done by a Conservative Government. I pointed out to them from my place in the House the absurdity of placing that pier in the Sault Ste. Marie Canal, and I think the member for Beauharnois will remember my criticism at that time. I called the pier then an engineering monstrosity, constructed for no other purpose than to save the Canadian Pacific Railway from building a new bridge. But I am glad to know that the present Minister of Railways and Canals was far-seeing enough to remove that objectionable feature from the Sault Ste. Marie Canal after the Government had spent so much money upon it.

Mr. BERGERON. I spoke in the same sense.

Mr. GIBSON. Yes, after the hon. gentleman had gone and seen it for himself. He then confessed frankly to me that if he had seen it before he would have assisted me in the criticism I offered at that time. Now, in respect to the canal under discussion, and which the member for Victoria (Mr. Hughes) is so touchy about, we know that if this canal had not been put through the hon. gentleman would not be sitting in this House. That is the trouble with the hon. gentleman. The canal was built practically for the purpose of carrying the county in his behalf. A large sum of money was spent in completing that canal, and I say from my seat in this House that it is a useless expenditure of money. It will never pay the interest of the money that has been spent upon it. All you want to do is to have the public work carried on in your riding during election time so that you may have some control of the men as you had in the past

Mr. HUGHES. I rise to a point of order, and insist on a ruling. The hon. member for Lincoln is imputing improper motives to me. He stated that my whole desire was to get work done on this canal for political purposes.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not think it is attributing an improper motive to say that some hon. gentleman has advocated a public work for the purpose of getting elected.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not want to interfere between the hon. gentleman, but I think we ought to have serious rulings, and I submit, Mr. Chairman, that such a ruling is not worthy of being put in "Hansard."

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think there is no improper motive imputed in saying that an hon. gentleman is advocating a project or political idea for the purpose of getting elected. I do not think there is an improper motive in that.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman seriously rules that?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Yes; certainly.

Mr. GIBSON. I am glad, Mr. Chairman, that I am within the rules of the House. We all know the purpose for which this canal was contemplated. This canal has been under consideration for eighty years, but there was not a great deal of work done upon it until a Conservative Government took it up in a serious form. The idea of going to the enormous expense of $845,000 for the continuation and completion of a work which is of no practical utility to the

Mr. GIBSON.

Dominion is one that has little to support it, and in view of the fact that the work has remained in a stationary condition for eighty years, I do not think the people desire that the Government shall rush it through. There is no doubt about it, that the work should never have been started, but the Government are committed to some of the acts of folly of their predecessors, and I suppose this is one of them. We have many illustrations of the fact that the other canals were only constructed and the work pushed forward as the exigencies of the general elections required. We know very well that, if the predecessors of the present Government had displayed ability, energy and foresight, as the present Minister of Railways and Canals has done during his short term of office, the whole canal system of Canada could have been completed ten years ago. The Welland Canal was commenced in 1870 or 1871, and it did not reach the summit level of Lake Erie until Mr. Mackenzie's Government came into power. Prior to that time the canal was constructed for 12 feet of water. Lock 25 had to be built, and Mr. Mackenzie, foreseeing the future demands of inland navigation, completed lock 25, under his own supervision as Minister of Railways and Canals, to a depth of 14 feet. The canal remained in that condition until a general election was coming on, when the Government of that day saw fit to increase the depth of the canal to 14 feet. The whole of our canal system was carried on in that way during the last twenty years. The Government which was so long in power and of which we hear so many praises coming from hon. gentlemen opposite, simply dilly dallied until a general election was coming on when a lot of contracts were made. The hon. Minister would be perfectly justified were he to cut the item under consideration, in two. There are many other things of more moment required in connection with the improvement of our inland navigation. I am glad to see that he has placed something in the Estimates for Port Colborne. But if this large sum of money were appropriated for Port Colborne instead of the Trent Valley Canal the people of Canada would realize a greater return for the expenditure than they will ever receive from the money that will be spent in building the Trent Valley Canal.

Mr. BERGERON. Does the hon. gentleman intend to make a motion to that effect?

Mr. GIBSON. I would be glad to do it if I had the power.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. gentleman has the power.

Mr. GIBSON. If the hon. Minister will take my opinion of the matter he will stop the work entirely. The Government are doing what I consider wrong when they are finishing the Trent Valley Canal.

Mr. HUGHES. I have never seen the old adage that wealth gives to an ignoramus the privilege of being insolent and arrogant without being subject to the censure that rightly should fall to him, better illustrated than in the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gibson) who has just taken his seat. The hon. gentleman has intimated here to-night that my election to this House was due to the Trent Valley Canal. No one to my knowledge ever charged that hon. gentleman with having any ability. He has no end of assurance and impudence, but I have never known that the hon. gentleman was charged with any innate ability, and certainly with none acquired. If he had had any acquired ability he would have been able to look up the records and ascertain that the Trent Canal, in my locality, was not started until two years after I was elected to this House, and that it was owing to the fact that, after I was elected, I brought to the attention of the Government the benefit that this canal would be to the locality, that they took the matter up and voted the money for it. In the election I distinctly refused to say whether I would support the canal or not. I refused to take a stand upon that question inasmuch as the commission which had been appointed to inquire into the project had not reported as to whether the water supply would be sufficient. A number of the croakers—the hon. gentleman was not in the House then, and I have the assurance that he will not be in the next Parliament—but a number of gentlemen in former Parliaments found fault with the proposition on the ground that there was not a sufficient water supply. That was the only argument I ever heard advanced against the canal by any gentleman of intelligence. That argument has been completely refuted by the reports of engineers who were originally adverse to the work, but who, after giving serious consideration to the question, have stated in their reports that there is an ample supply of water for the canal. I shall not take up the time of this House in discussing the merits of this question. Every person except some of those hon. gentlemen who belong to dark age intellectually, knows that the work is necessary in the interest of Canada. It is a work which has been discussed again and again in this House and in the country. I wish to tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gibson) that I took the stand along the canal route, that I would not support the canal if the engineer's report did not show that there was a water supply. I said, if there was a sufficient water supply I would support the canal. I do not require any fat contracts; I do not require to be a bloated monopolist to be elected to the Parliament of Canada. I have the confidence of the people of my county, and if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gibson), or any other gentleman of his stripe, comes along there—and I had the pleasure of disposing of a large number of them last election, single-handed—they will find that I do not require any assistance from public works to elect me.

Mr. GIBSON. I am glad to have a lecture read to me by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes), because if any one in this House requires a lecture it is himself. He need not speak about arrogance or impudence, for in the words of the Scotchman he might "let that flea stick to the w'a." If there is any one in this House who has a superabundance of that it is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes). He need not refer to my want of intelligence, for my electors are a better judge of that than he is, and he has no more than he requires to be here. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes) has a certain amount of cunning, although not enough to conceal his hand, for he let the cat out of the bag when he said he was careful in his remarks as to whether he would advocate the canal or not. He wanted to see on what side the cat would jump, and when he found the canal was popular in his county he supported it. He now stands up and tries to dress me down for having the courage of my convictions in stating that that work should never have been commenced. We have now the supreme assurance of the hon. member (Mr. Hughes) that he was the prime mover in this canal matter, so that hereafter when any criticism of the Trent Valley Canal is being made hon. gentlemen will know that it is not the late Conservative Government that are to blame, but the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes), who is responsible for the whole business. It shows his influence with the Government of that day, when they were prepared to spend $6,000,000, and perhaps $10,000,000, in order to secure his return to the House. Let me correct a wrong impression of the hon. gentleman when he says that he is longer in this House than I am. I came in in 1891, and he came in on a by-election in 1892, and I have just as good a recollection of all the circumstances of the case as he has. I remember the large delegation that came down from his county and from the section to urge on the Government the building of the Trent Valley Canal. But the time of that delegation was apparently wasted, for we find now from the hon. gentleman himself, that he above all others was the man who got the canal built. It will remain as a lasting monument to the importance of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes) that he got the Conservative Government to spend $6,000,000 to return him to Parliament.

Mr. POWELL. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Gibson) has opened up a large field for discussion, and when we were making such progress with the estimates, it was uncalled for that he should launch out in the direction. Notwithstanding the claimed tenacity of his memory and exactness of his knowledge, in order to show that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gibson) knew little of what he was talking about, I will quote from the last report of the Department of Canals. He charged that the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) had secured his election by reason of the great expenditure on the Trent Valley Canal, but it may be news to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gibson) when I quote what the facts are, and before he makes such sweeping charges again, he should take pains to fortify that very defective memory of his. The hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) came into the House in 1892, and from confederation up to that date, about $700,000 had been expended by the Dominion Government on the Trent Valley Canal. After he came into the House, the Conservative Government only expended in 1892, $4,457; in 1893, $5,900; in 1894, $3,400; in 1895, $53,000. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Gibson) owes to the House an apology for such an arrant misrepresentation of statistics. In 1896, the first year the Liberal party came into power, I find a capital expenditure of $392,000, no less than six times the amount that was expended under the Conservative Government in previous years, after the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes) gained his seat in this House.

Mr. GIBSON. That is what I said. They kept dodging along.

Mr. POWELL. It was not the Conservative party kept dodging along.

Mr. GIBSON. Oh, yes.

Mr. POWELL. The Liberals dodged along at a tremendously rapid rate, for in 1897 they spent $496,000, in 1898, $351,000, and the estimates for the coming year will be about $800,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). It is only fair I should state that the contracts under which this expenditure increased were entered into within a few months prior to the change of Government.

Mr. GIBSON. Hear, hear.

Mr. POWELL. Now, as to the Welland Canal. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gibson) knows anything he should know about that, for it is under his nose in his own constituency. When the Conservative Government went to the country in the general elections of 1882, the expenditure on the Welland Canal that year was $600,000 less than the previous year; $650,000 less than the year previous to that; and $1,500,000 less than in the year 1878, when the Liberal Government called a general election. The election of 1887 took place in the month of February, and the Estimates for that year were not passed by the House until the month of April. I find that in 1886, the Estimates before the election, showed an expenditure on capital account of $250,000 less than the year previous; $220,000 less than the year previous to that; $344,000 less than the year previous to that, and $400,000 less than the year previous to that. The next general election was held in 1891, and in that year the total expenditure on capital account on Welland Canal was the small sum of $36,371. Yet, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gibson) stands up here, and charges the Conservative party, especially in connection with the Welland Canal, with making extraordinary capital expenditure on the eve of a general election.

Mr. GIBSON. Is the hon. gentleman aware that in all the years he speaks about the Welland Canal was under construction and under enlargement?

Mr. POWELL. I think it would be a fair inference from my remarks that I was aware of that. It is certainly a very sapient question to ask me whether I was aware of the capital expenditure, when I was going over the capital expenditures that had been made. I will pass to the St. Anne's Lock and Canal. In 1882, $193,154 were spent; the next year, $21,000 less; the next year, $31,000 less. In 1891, at the time of the next general election, there was no expenditure whatever. Now I come to the Grenville Canal. In 1882 the capital expenditure was $433,000; in the next year it was the same amount; in the next year it was $400,000, and in 1886, the year immediately previous to the general election, it was $104,000, or $53,000 less than the year previous. If I pass next to the Culbute lock and dam, I find in 1882 a capital expenditure of $29,000, about $25,000 in excess of the previous year. In 1886 it was $26,000. On the Murray Canal the capital expenditure in 1882 was only $7,000; in 1886 it was $179,000, which was only $30,000 more the preceding or succeeding year. I might go on and exhaust the whole subject to show that there is not a single instance, the facts of which were such as the hon. gentleman could base his assertion. Taking the Sault Ste. Marie Canal I find that in 1891 there was an expenditure of $325,000; in the next year it was larger; in 1895 it was $446,000, or about $900,000 less than that of the previous year. When the hon. gentleman scolds the Conservative party, and claims to be the embodiment of wisdom and knowledge with respect to these matters, he should place himself in a position to satisfy the House that he does understand a little about that matter, to which his whole energies have been applied.

Mr. GIBSON. I am sure that the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell), who poses as one of the wisest men in this House, will take my statement, when I say that I had a contract on the Welland Canal for the enlargement of section "J," when the general election was going on.

Mr. RICHARDSON. This discussion on the Trent Valley Canal reminds me a good deal of an incident that occurred in this House some years ago, when the Tay Canal was under discussion. Sir Richard Cartwright, when criticising the estimate, made the remark that he understood that this Tay Canal was calculated to drain the county of Lanark. Sir John Macdonald, who was then Prime Minister, said: "Well, Mr. Chairman, if it does not drain the county of Lanark, I think the House will agree that it will at least drain the public treasury pretty well." The committee will see the application of that remark to the present case. We have gone on practically since confederation fooling with this Trent Valley Canal, and spending hundreds of thousands of dollars every year upon it. According to the statement of the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson), the Liberal party were opposed to the Trent Valley Canal and the expenditures in regard to it. I was particularly delighted to hear the hon. gentleman get up and denounce the whole thing, and say that, as far as he was concerned, he felt that the time had come to stop expending money on this canal. It showed an amount of courage and consistency that at least appealed to me. Because of that I felt somewhat disturbed over the remarks of the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) in censuring the hon. member for Lincoln for what he said. Now, I am not an engineer, and I am not in a position to criticise this Trent Valley Canal with the technical intelligence that I should like to possess, but it has always appeared to me as a huge joke and an electioneering canal: I may be entirely wrong. If the Government are in a position to say that it is an excellent undertaking, and just the thing the country wants, I shall be prepared to support it. But it is as well for this committee to remember that this country has expended some $83,000,000 in constructing its canal system; yet, notwithstanding that fact, at least four-fifths of the products of the North-west do not go through the Canadian canal system, but through the American system. If that is the case, is it not the duty of this House to take stock of its canal system, and to determine that we shall not spend one dollar more on our canal system until we know that it is going to be of some value to the country? My hon. friend from Prince Edward County (Mr. Pettet), who should be considerably interested in this work, tells me that, so far as his county is concerned, it is of no value, in his estimation, and he believes that his people would be opposed to the expenditure. If this is merely a political canal, and has run along since confederation merely for the purpose of carrying constituencies, does it not strike the committee that it is about time that stopped? As I have said, I am not prepared to offer an opinion as to whether or not this canal is going to be of some value to the country. I am prepared to accept the opinion of the hon. Minister of Railways, if he states that it is valuable and is essential to this country; but if it is not so, I am prepared to vote against the expenditure of another dollar upon it.

Mr. BERGERON. What about the St. Andrew's Rapids?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I believe the improvement of the St. Andrew's Rapids would be of some value to an important section of the province of Manitoba.

Mr. McHUGH. I do not rise to continue this discussion. I do not think it has taken a course which is calculated to enlighten the House much as to the benefits of the scheme in question. I would rather the debate took a different course and have a discussion on the merits or demerits of the canal. Living close by the canal, I am in a position to form a judgment, and believe it is one which is going to be of great benefit to this country. If constructed, it will be one of the great transportation highways of this country. What money has been spent on it has been well spent. This canal, as far as it has gone, has opened the land stretches between waterways and given the people their only means of transportation for the products of the farm and forest along that line, and enabled them to bring these products to market much more cheaply than they otherwise could. In fact, they could not bring them to market at all were it not for the money spent on the construction of this canal. Now that so much money has been spent, the Government will be acting wisely to go on and push the work to completion at the earliest date possible. I know that in the past it has been discredited to some extent because it was used for political purposes, but I am satisfied that the men now at the head of affairs are not going to use it for such an object, and I trust that men on both sides who are interested in seeing it pushed to completion will bend their energies in the one direction, and that is to get rid of these political differences and serve the best interests of their country by having the canal completed at as early a date as the resources of the country will permit. And that policy will have my support. So far as the canal has gone all the money that has been expended on it has been wisely expended, because it has given the people means of transportation for their products. I do not like to see hon. members quarrelling over this matter, and instead of cutting this grant in two and only spending one-half, the Government ought to spend one-half on the Balsam division and the other half at the mouth of the lake. You would then begin to see the advantage of the Trent Valley Canal for a through route, and I trust that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals will see that this work is completed at as early a date as possible.

Mr. BENNETT. Since some gentlemen on the other side seem determined to prevent this estimate passing, I am going to appeal to some hon. gentlemen over there, who have not made up their minds in advance, not to accept statements that cannot be proved. A couple of hon. gentlemen have described the canal as a ditch. Well, we cannot be responsible for the ignorance of any gentlemen of the geography of the country. They do not seem to be aware of the fact that there is a large lake known as Lake Simcoe, situated in the county of Simcoe, a magnificent stretch of water, some twenty miles in size—

Mr. RICHARDSON. Is it salt or fresh?

Mr. BENNETT. To suit the hon. gentleman, it is freshness itself.

Mr. RICHARDSON. You live there.

Mr. BENNETT. Passing out of that large lake, when the connection is made that the hon. Minister has projected, there will be a connection of about nine miles in length with Balsam Lake. This Trent Valley Canal system is a connection of a number of very large lakes, and when completed there will be a canal having on the sills a depth of six feet of water, which will accommodate barges constructed to carry 15,000 to 20,000 bushels of grain and will therefore be a very large carrier, and cut a considerable figure in the transportation question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. This House is to be congratulated on having among its number an hon. member who knows everything. I was not discussing the geography of the country, but merely wished to have from the hon. Minister the assurance that this scheme will be valuable in a commercial sense, and I would be prepared to accept his statement. It is due to the House that he should inform the committee exactly what this undertaking is going to cost. I understand that we have already expended over $2,000,000 on it, and it may cost $5,000,000 or $10,000,000 more. It was on that point that I was speaking. I would like to know exactly what the undertaking is to cost.

Mr. McHUGH. I may mention that boats from Lake Skugog are using this canal almost every day. Large steamers that carry 500 passengers go through that lake every day.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I intended making a very brief statement to the committee with respect to the judgment I formed of the enterprise on the occasion of my visit to that section of the country. I went there to see the works and passed over the route of the canal some two years ago. I am free to confess that having heard a great deal to the detriment of the undertaking I had rather conceived a prejudice against it myself. The result of my visit to the country along the canal, to the various towns situated in that section led me to form a much more favourable opinion than I had entertained in regard to it, and led me to this conclusion—that while if the work had not been initiated, if nothing had been done, probably I could not have strongly recommended it to Parliament, yet, seeing the work had been commenced, we are fully justified in carrying it to completion, at least so far as the upper stretches and the connection of the two lakes, Simcoe and Balsam, are concerned. The canal certainly traverses a most beautiful country, and a country that is not only beautiful but has great agricultural resources and is a good business-producing country. As some hon. gentlemen have said, these various works we are constructing connect a chain of very beautiful lakes studded by lovely islands—and a altogether charming section as well as a productive section. I am bound to say that I cannot and do not agree with those who are looking forward with confidence to this canal doing a considerable amount of through business. I do not think it is going to present advantages such as are claimed by many of its friends as a medium for carrying western produce to the ocean. But I do believe that it will be a great convenience from a local point of view as affording cheap and easy communication for the people who are doing business along and about these stretches of water. I am satisfied also that the canal, when constructed and in operation, will have much to do with reducing the cost of transport over the railways, and will keep railway rates down to reasonable figures. It is estimated that it will cost $900,000 to complete the work which we have already commenced between lake Simcoe and Balsam lake.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Is that included in this estimate?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This item of $845,000 includes $300,000 of the $900,000 which will be necessary to complete the work.

Mr. RICHARDSON. How much has been expended?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The total amount expended is about two and a half millions. On the 13th February, 1895, a contract was made for section 1 of the Simcoe-Balsam lake division. On the 27th August, 1895, contracts were entered into for one section of the Peterborough-Lakefield division, and on the 17th May, 1896, a contract was made for section 2 of that division. These works are in process of construction under these contracts. As I say, it will take probably half a million besides this estimate to complete this work between Lake Simcoe and Balsam Lake. My strong opinion is that we could not leave that work uncompleted. A Government cannot take up such a work and leave it half way between two such important bodies of water as these two lakes. It would be discreditable to do it. Even if you had the strongest possible opinion against the utility of the work, you ought to finish it. I have no hesitation in saying that I think we are justified in asking for the appropriation we have placed in the Estimates in order that we may make some progress towards completing the cut from the present terminus towards the lake.

Mr. BERTRAM. A good deal has been said with regard to the geography of the country through which the Trent Valley Canal passes, including not a little that rather indicates that the hon. gentlemen who speak are not well acquainted with that section of the country. I was a resident of that section for many years before moving to the city of Toronto. There is no part of the province of Ontario with which I am better acquainted than this. I remember very well when I was on the steamer at the time it passed up through one of these back lakes, when the present leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) was aboard, and speeches were made about the advantages of the Trent Valley Canal. This was before any expenditure of importance had taken place. I held the opinion then and I hold it now that the commencement of the Trent Valley Canal and the involving of the country in that immense expenditure was a great mistake. The Toronto Board of Trade takes the same view. But I quite agree with what the hon. Minister has said on the other hand. We are not discussing whether it is advisable to undertake a work of this kind or not. The work has been undertaken and a large amount of money spent. I am not going to say which Government is responsible. The late Government took the initiative at all events. I believe the present Government, when they came into power, had a very serious question to consider in connection with this canal. There is no doubt it will be a great benefit to the country through which it passes. As to whether it will bring down grain from the North-west to Montreal that is another question. A large amount of money has been spent on the canal, and though I certainly consider it a mistake to have spent it, I think we could get better value for the money by spending it in other directions, I do not believe it would be wise or prudent for the Government to say: We will abandon the whole thing and lose the money we have put into it. Let us try to make the money we have put into it of some value, and let us make the work as successful as possible. I held that there was nothing left for the Government but to proceed with the work begun by their predecessors. I admit the amount is large, but still, all things considered, I think the policy of the Government in continuing the building of the Trent Canal, is the best that can be adopted. The large amount of money spent would be entirely wasted if we abandoned that work now, whereas we can make it of some value by going on and completing the work. As I said a moment ago, the wisdom of beginning the construction of this canal in the first place is not under discussion now. While I hold a strong opinion on that point, taking everything into consideration, I think the action of the Government probably the best under the circumstances.

Mr. HENDERSON. I rather think the hon. gentleman from Toronto (Mr. Bertram) is more anxious to make a point against the late Government than, perhaps, to advocate what is best for the country. He tells us that the Board of Trade of Toronto had expressed themselves opposed to this scheme. I think the Minister of Railways and Canals understands why the Toronto Board of Trade is opposed to this scheme: it certainly will bring no grist to their mill. As a rule, Toronto is very selfish, and if an expenditure of public money is not going to do something for Toronto you can almost rest assured that Toronto is going to give it some opposition. Now the hon. gentleman stated that the late Government initiated the construction of this canal. He may be well acquainted with the geography of the country, but I must tell him that he does not know much about the history of that part of the country. The Trent navigation improvement was begun in 1837, long before the late Government came into power, in fact, before many of the members of the late Government were born. So, I think it is unfair for the hon. gentleman, if a mistake was made in bygone years in respect to this canal, that he should charge it on the late Government, when, as a matter of fact, it is over sixty years since the improvement of the Trent navigation was commenced. But I certainly must say that I think this work ought to go on. I am quite willing to take the responsibility of saying that this is a proper course for the Government to pursue. The member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson) says it will never pay. I ask the hon. gentleman if the St. Lawrence Canals will ever pay. I question if they ever will. All the money we have expended on the St. Lawrence Canals certainly never will come back into the public chest. All the money we have expended on the Welland Canal will never come back. Nobody expects that public works are going to pay a revenue to the Government to indemnify it for their construction. But the public good is obtained, transportation is cheapened, and in one way or another the public is indemnified for the outlay.

Mr. BERTRAM. I think the hon. gentleman's reference to the city of Toronto was rather uncalled for, and I do not see that there was any particular reason why he should have made the observation. He gives this House to understand that the city of Toronto is never interested in any project that will not directly benefit that city. He did not give any proof of that statement, and I am surprised at a gentleman of his intelligence making a statement of that kind. I always supposed that any public work that would benefit Ontario or the Dominion would benefit the city of Toronto. I represent one of the divisions of Toronto, and I am not opposed to this undertaking being completed. I am supporting the Government. Then, the hon. gentleman says that I do not understand the history of the country because I did not go back to the beginning of the enterprise. I did not need to do so. What I said was that the work was not commenced in earnest until the late Administration committed the country to this expenditure.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I entirely dissent from the view of my hon. friend from Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram), even though he is an excellent business man. He tells us with perfect frankness that he visited that district and made up his mind that the work would be of no special value, or words to that effect, as a national undertaking. Now, let us analyse his frank confession with regard to that. We have already spent some $2,500,000 on this undertaking, and the Minister of Railways and Canals, for whom we all have the greatest respect, tells us that in addition to the estimate which we have before us there will be another estimate of $600,000 to complete any one section of the enterprise. Now, let us take the statement of the Minister of Railways and Canals, that it will cost $1,500,000, or probably $2,000,000. The probability is, from all past experience, that this work will cost the country four or five millions. Now, the hon. member for Centre Toronto tells us that inasmuch as a mistake has been committed by the previous Government, this Government must go on and spend a lot more of money, throwing good money after bad. Now, notwithstanding that the Liberal party opposed this vigorously, are we to go on and spend unlimited sums of money on an enterprise that is to be of no national value to the Dominion of Canada? There is not a business man in the House that will not say that such a proposition is most absurd. If we have already squandered $2,500,000 upon it, is that any reason why we should go on squandering still more. Take the Tay Canal, for instance. We were told it was to cost $50,000 to $100,000, and before we got through with that undertaking we spent some $400,000 or $500,000 on it.

I think I am correct in saying that one year the revenue from that canal did not exceed $3. Are we going to go on and pursue this policy in regard to this undertaking? I am convinced, and I think it has been abundantly demonstrated, that we should not spend these sums of money on this undertaking. The hon. Minister himself admits that, so far as his judgment goes, if it were to rest with him as to whether such an undertaking should be instituted, he would decide the question in the negative. He tells us that this is a beautiful country, that there are islands in the lakes, and that the scenery is charming, but he admits that this undertaking will not be of any permanent national value to the country. It may carry some local freights; but I fear the chief design of the enterprise has been to carry elections. I do not believe that the farmers and the great mass of the taxpaying people of this country desire that the country shall be loaded with a debt of from $5,000,000 to $10,000,000 in order that this work shall be completed. The time has come to stop spending money on such undertakings. It would give me the greatest pleasure to see the Government drop the estimate, that they might consider it during the year and make an investigation, so that they will be able to come before this Parliament with such a statement of the case as will, if they intend to carry out the work, satisfy this committee—because I am sure it needs to be satisfied—that this is an expenditure warranted by the circumstances.

Mr. ROGERS. I have listened attentively to the discussion of this question, as I do to all discussions in connection with this celebrated canal. It was evident all through the country when the Patron movement was active, that one of the most foolish expenditures that could be undertaken was that upon the Trent Valley Canal. Not only the constituencies in the western part of the province, but the very constituencies that might be directly benefited, and that might have been supposed would support it, condemned the project and say that it is a farce and a humbug to spend more money on it. We know very well why some hon. gentlemen are supporting it. They feel that they are doing it for votes. That has been the consideration actuating some hon. gentlemen in this House, and, I am sorry to say, it is not very much to their credit. As the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals has said, a certain amount of money has been expended, and it appears necessary to him to carry to completion the work that has been undertaken. If we had the assurance of the Government that they had no intention of finishing the work, there would be some consolation in the matter. I can only hope that they do not purpose doing so, although they may not care to say so. The time of these one-horse canals, or ditches, I think, is past. When there was an agitation going on all through the country about this project, a gentleman in Kingston, in discussing the matter, said that the canal could be of no practical use to this country. He said that by increasing the depth of the natural waterway from 3½ to 7 feet, thousands and thousands of acres of land would be drowned. I believe there will be more land drowned in that part of the country than would pay for building a railway through it. The Rideau Canal has been built for sixty years, and we are not yet done paying for land damages. We have estimates passed in this House every year for land damages along the line of that canal. The Trent Valley Canal is only in its infancy, and in a lifetime we will not be done paying damages resulting to the land from its construction. The hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. Bennett), in discussing the Welland Canal, says that the days of one-horse canals are done. I thought he would never have said any more in favour of these little ditches after having made that statement. It is true, that the days of these small canals are done. A railway could be built and operated at a much less cost.

Mr. BERGERON. Is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Rogers) in favour of this vote?

Mr. ROGERS. I will just give you my views in reference to the matter, and you can do as you like, and I will do as I like. I think, after the discussion which has taken place, that the Government will know that they cannot in the future propose an expenditure of this kind without meeting with opposition, and they will know that there will be a more serious discussion another year.

Mr. HUGHES. It strikes me that a year or two ago, when this large and influential deputation came to wait upon the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, and when this array of beauty and talent from all the different districts between Frontenac and the Georgian Bay stood up in front of this building to be photographed, one of the prominent features of that picture was the countenance of the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Rogers). I am sorry to see the desertions from the ranks of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals to-night. I cannot understand why the hon. gentleman's followers have turned tail, as they have in opposing this canal. I am not going to say any more upon the subject in reply to these hon. gentlemen who have spoken, because any school boy knows that this must be a valuable work to the country.

Mr. ROGERS. I will just say, in regard to the deputation, that Mr. Young, the editor of the Trenton "Courier," asked me if I would come in and hear what they had to offer in favour of the project. I did go, and I would go again. If I could get any information in any way, I would do so. I would go to a Conservative caucus, if I thought I could learn anything, but I know that I could not learn anything in such a place. I went in with the deputation, but when they came out, I thought that they had made such a poor case of it that I could not see how they could expect the hon. Minister to have any faith in their proposition.

New scow, St. Ours Locks..... $1,600

Mr. BERGERON. We want some information about this scow.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The item can pass, and I will get the information to-morrow.

Mr. BERGERON. Oh, no. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) is having some money spent at Sorel for scows, and we want to know how these are built. I will consent to the passage of the item if my hon. friend will give the information to-morrow.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. All right.

Trent Canal—

Rosedale Bridge, two concrete piers.... $600

Mr. HUGHES. The Government enlarged the swing bridge at this place, necessitating the township increasing the height of the piers and raising the superstructure. I maintain that the township is entitled to the cost of the piers above the old level, and to the cost of removing and replacing the superstructure. I trust that the Minister will give his attention to that. I do not object to the $10,000 towards rebuilding the bridge over Chemong Lake, but I ask the Minister to make this expenditure a precedent for others of a similar nature there. I am sorry to see there is nothing in the Estimates for a swing bridge in the township of Emily, over Pigeon River. This Government controls Pigeon Lake and Pigeon Lake controls Pigeon River, and the answer cannot be well given that this is not under the control of the Government.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes) must not conclude there will be no provision for this.

Mr. HUGHES. I asked the Minister before and he said he would not do it. He claimed the Federal Government had not the control.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That was at that time.

Mr. HUGHES. I thought the Minister was wrongly advised then, and I knew he would change his mind. Another matter, the dam at Bobcaygeon flooded the mouth of McLaren Creek, necessitating a diversion of two miles in the main road. I have always maintained that this Government was responsible for this diversion of the road, and that they should compensate for the new road that had been built. It will take only $1,500 to do that, and it will take less than $1,000 for the Emily bridge, and I trust that the Minister will give his careful attention to it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That item will stand.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Oh, pass it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. If we are allowed an opportunity for free discussion at another sitting there is no reason why it should not pass.

The committee rose and reported progress.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What will be the business for to-morrow?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Estimates, and perhaps a Bill respecting public health and public works.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 1.40 a.m. (Thursday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 13th July, 1899.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

LIGHTHOUSE KEEPER AT ENTRANCE ISLAND.

Mr. McINNES (by Mr. Maxwell) asked :

1. How long was Robert Gray, Esq., lighthouse keeper at Entrance Island ?
2. When did he resign ?
3. While in the Government employ did he contribute to the superannuation fund ?
4. What amount would he be entitled to if superannuated ?
5. Has he applied for superannuation ?
6. If so, has he submitted, in support of his application medical certificates from Drs. Davis and Walkem, of Nanaimo City, to the effect that he became physically incapacitated while discharging his duties, and that he is unable to resume work ?
7. Has his application been granted ? If not, why not ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). 1. Twenty years. 2. On April 26th, 1897. Resignation to take effect 1st July, 1897. 3. Yes. 4. $160. 5. Yes. 6. Yes ; he submitted certificates from these gentlemen, but they were not entirely satisfactory. 7. No ; Professor Prince reported that on the 7th July, 1897, he found Mr. Gray living on Gabriola Island, and that he seemed to him to be in a fairly active and healthy condition. This was seven days after he was reported as lying dangerously ill in Nanaimo hospital.

Mr. HUGHES.

REGULATIONS RESPECTING ISSUE OF LONG SERVICE MEDAL.

Mr. KLOEPFER asked :

1. Have the regulations been issued yet regarding the issue of the proposed Long Service Medal ?
2. What are those regulations ?
3. Will an officer who has served upwards of thirty-five years and who has just been placed on the retired list, be eligible for a medal ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). No Canadian regulations have yet been issued, but a Royal Warrant was published on June 2nd last in the London "Gazette" granting to the volunteers and militia in the colonies the Long Service Medal. It is expected that, at an early date, regulations will be promulgated in Canada under the provisions of the warrant. In regard to the third question I can give no answer except to say that I suppose that an officer who has served continuously for thirty-five years and is on the retired list would be entitled to the Long Service Medal.

POLL BOOKS AND VOTERS' LISTS USED AT PLEBISCITE VOTE.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid on the Table a partial return made by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to an order of the House dated the 10th May, 1899, calling for copies of the poll books and voters' lists of the counties of Beauce, Lévis, Montmagny and Kamouraska as used at the plebiscite vote.

ADMINISTRATION OF THE YUKON - SALARY AND APPOINTMENT OF MR. F. C. WADE.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. While questions are being answered I might perhaps be permitted to take the opportunity of reminding the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) that he was good enough to say that he would inform me to-day what salary was paid to Mr. Wade, the Crown Prosecutor, as I think he described him, and I would be greatly obliged if he would also say whether he was appointed by Order in Council.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). In compliance with the suggestion of the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) made yesterday, I asked my colleague the hon. Minister of Justice to give me a memorandum of the facts. He was to send it to me to-day, but I have not yet received it. It is probable that I will receive it some time this afternoon or evening, and I will communicate it to the House. As to the latter portion of the hon. gentleman's question I may say that Mr. Wade was appointed by Order in Council. That I remember distinctly.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the right hon. leader of the Government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), whether he, as I would almost be inclined to assume, has abandoned the intention of bringing forward the resolution in regard to the Senate during the present session. I can hardly believe that the right hon. gentleman would leave to the 120th day of the session, and of a summer session, the introduction of a resolution raising so important a question as that. I am in hopes that he will be able to say that the matter will be deferred to another session.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). No, I am sorry to say I cannot gratify the wish as expressed just now by my hon. friend. My hon. friend is familiar with what is to be the tenor of the resolution which we intend to bring in. If we did not bring it in earlier it would have served no purpose to do so, because there has been no occasion, the whole of the time of the House having been fully occupied, as my hon. friend knows, up to this moment. It is not the intention of the Government to give up this resolution.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may ask my right hon. friend when we may hope to have the resolution laid before us. I have no idea myself as to what the tenor of this resolution is. I have not the slightest idea, and I think my right hon. friend will agree with me that the House is entitled, at this period of the session, without further delay, to have laid before it the express terms of the resolution.

The PRIME MINISTER. The request of my hon. friend is certainly most reasonable and I must ask his pardon. I thought he was familiar with the tenor of the resolution, judging from the length of the remarks that he made upon the idea and the way that he discussed it on a former occasion. If the hon. gentleman says that he discussed it without knowing what it was I shall have to accept his statement. I shall probably be able to inform him of its terms next week.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I was not discussing the proposed measure. I was discussing what I supposed were the crude and ill-considered proposals made by the right hon. gentleman at a banquet in the city of Montreal.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT.

Mr. INGRAM. Would the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) answer the question I asked him yesterday as to my Bill to amend the Dominion Elections Act?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am sorry to say that I cannot give the hon. gentleman an answer to-day, and I do not think I will be able to do so before next Monday.

SUPPLY—SALE OF LIQUOR IN MILITARY CANTEENS.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). Before the House is moved into Committee of Supply, I desire to bring up a matter which I find referred to in the Ottawa "Citizen" of this morning. In the proceedings of the Ontario Alliance which has been meeting recently in Toronto I find in the report, the following reference made to my department and myself:—

At the evening session resolutions were passed against military canteens.

And later on :

In the course of a lengthy discussion upon the military canteen, Major Campbell, of Orillia, took the Minister of Militia, Dr. Borden, very thoroughly to task, concluding that it was time the Minister was retired. He told how the Minister had given permission to the various camps for the violation of the order prohibiting the sale of liquor in canteens, and when the results were called to his attention, by a "miserable subterfuge," he had tried to make it appear that he was unaware of the violation, and promised stringent enforcement. This promise, Major Campbell urged, he had not kept.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is only fair to myself and to the officers of my department, that I should make a very brief statement of the facts. When I assumed office, I found a regulation in existence which had been passed in December, 1893, forbidding the sale of intoxicating liquors in military canteens at camps of instruction. The language of that regulation is as follows:—

48. Nothing in the Queen's Regulations and Orders for the Army, so far as they relate to the establishment of canteens, is to be understood as permitting the sale within the limits of camp-grounds during the annual training of the militia of Canada, of spirituous (to include wine) or malt liquors of any kind; their sale within such limits being strictly prohibited.

49. Officers commanding camps of instruction will be held responsible that the above order is carried out, and they, together with officers commanding units of active militia, will in those districts where the law so directs be liable to prosecution in respect of any liquor sold in tents or other premises subject to their control, in addition to such penalty as may be inflicted for a breach of military discipline.

My attention has been called to the fact that this regulation was not being enforced. Knowing that in my own province that regulation had been strictly enforced, I was surprised, but I thought it proper, so long ago as the 18th of October last, to call the attention of the General Officer Commanding to this alleged inequality of the enforcement of the order as between the camps in Ontario and Quebec and the camps in Nova Scotia. This memorandum was sent to the General Officer Commanding, through the Deputy Minister of the department :

Ottawa, 18th October, 1898.

Memo. for the Deputy Minister.

Representation having been made to the Minister from different sources, that General Order 78, of 1st December, 1893, prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in camps of instruction, is not being enforced, the Minister requests that the attention of the General Officer Commanding be called to the matter, and that steps be taken to have the order strictly enforced hereafter.

(Sgd.) E. F. JARVIS, for Private Secretary.

Referred to the General Officer Commanding for necessary action.

(Sgd.) C. EUG. PANET, Col.,
D. M. M. & D.

When the camps were being organized in the present year I again thought it my duty to call attention of the General specially to this matter, and on the 25th of April last I wrote the following letter to him :

Ottawa, 25th April, 1899.

My dear General,—My attention has been called by clergymen of several denominations, and recently by the Rev. G. E. Lloyd, editor of the "Evangelical Churchman," of Toronto, to the question of canteens in our camps of instruction. Some years ago an order was promulgated, forbidding the sale of liquor in canteens. In my own province this order has been carefully observed, but I am informed that in the other provinces it has not. In view of the strong temperance feeling in this country and the agitation which is being constantly carried on, and also in the interests of the soldiers themselves and of the department, I hope you will endeavour to have this order strictly enforced at the approaching camps.

Yours very truly,
(Sgd.) F. W. BORDEN.

Major General Hutton, Ottawa.

In reply to that letter, I received the following from the General :—

Ottawa, 26th April, 1899.

My dear Dr. Borden,—You may rest assured that whatever regulations exist shall be strictly enforced in our camps.

The regulations as regards the sale of intoxicating drinks within the limits of our camps are explicitly and clearly laid down in our regulations and orders recently passed by an Order in Council.

Mr. BORDEN (King's).

I have no wish to recommend at present any change to existing regulations which have been approved as regards the sale of liquor in camps.

Yours very sincerely,
(Sgd.) EDW. T. H. HUTTON,
M. G.

Surgeon Lt.-Col.
The Hon. F. W. Borden,
Minister of Militia and Defence,
Ottawa.

After the London camp had been concluded, I received a letter from a representative of the Women's Christian Temperance Union of London. It is quite a long letter, and I shall not trouble the House by reading it. This letter alleged that drunkenness had existed in the camp to a greater extent than ever before in any camp in Canada, but the writer carefully abstained from giving the name of any person or the name of any authority ; simply saying that this was current rumour. I at once forwarded that letter to the General, and received from the General the following reply :—

Laprairie Camp, June 23rd, 1899.

Dear Dr. Borden,—In reply to your note of the 21st, forwarding a letter from Mrs. May R. Thornley, dated the 19th, I can only say as follows :—

I should be much indebted to the lady in question if she would give me directly or indirectly, through you, any corroboration of her statement that liquor was sold in the camp at London, or that any canteen existed in the camp for the sale of liquor.

I was personally in command of the 1st Division encamped at London, as you are aware, and, as is my habit, I was frequently in the lines. If any irregularity such as that described by Mrs. Thornley had existed it would have been brought to my notice. Mrs. Thornley is entirely in error in her statement that there was irregular drinking and dissipation in the camp. I authoritatively contradict the statement, and during the whole period of my command there I never saw a drunken man, nor have I ever seen a camp of young men and inexperienced soldiers conducted with better regularity and with better discipline under the circumstances.

If any irregularity took place on the first night of arrival, it was due to the fact that men either brought liquor with them or obtained it in the town.

The only canteens which existed in the camp were canteens at which the sale of liquor was excluded, and the regulations and orders upon that subject, as well as my own directions, were, so far as I know, and am informed by my brigadiers, carried out.

I shall be glad if you will convey the foregoing to Mrs. Thornley in any form which you may deem best.

Mr. WALLACE. Who wrote that letter ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. General Hutton.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I thought the hon. gentleman said that it was from the gentleman in command of the 1st Division ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. General Hutton was himself in command of the 1st Division, and therefore the letter is all the stronger.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Quite so.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I may say that on receipt of this letter I forwarded a copy of it to the lady who had made the complaint and asked her either to withdraw the charges or to state what evidence she had. I have as yet received no reply whatever to my letter.

Mr. WALLACE. What is the date of the last letter ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The last letter is dated the 23rd June, immediately after the camps. Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out one thing with reference to this. There seems to be a popular misunderstanding as to the meaning of the word "canteen," and a great many letters which I have received in reference to this matter were apparently due to that fact. A military canteen is a shop where everything is sold which a soldier may require, and in England it includes the sale of beer, and perhaps stronger liquors. In Canada the canteen has been continued, and it must be continued, because soldiers must have the opportunity of buying such things as they may require; but the sale of intoxicating liquors has been prohibited in our canteens. There are still canteens, but under the regulation no liquors of any kind can be sold. I think there has been a misunderstanding through not knowing the significance of the word canteen, as applied to military matters; and from the fact that there are so-called canteens or shops where articles are sold, not including intoxicating liquors, the impression has gone abroad to the public that the sale of intoxicating liquors is still permitted. One word more with reference to the charge made at this meeting of the Ontario Alliance by Major Campbell. I can only say that if the words which I have read are a correct report of what that gentleman said, it would be impossible for any man to condense into so short a space a greater number of inaccuracies or a more unjust attack or aspersion upon myself and the gentlemen who are administering the Militia Department.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Speaker, I want to make a few observations; but before I do so, I would like to ask my hon. friend the Minister of Militia if he knows what Major Campbell means by the statement that by a miserable subterfuge the regulations prohibiting the use of liquor in the canteens have been evaded.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have not the slightest idea.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am very glad indeed that the hon. Minister of Militia has felt it due to himself to deal with this subject promptly. Nothing more disastrous to the whole militia organization could go abroad throughout Canada than the impression that, notwithstanding the stringent regulations which the Government have continued, prohibiting the sale of liquor in canteens, the effect of these regulations could by any means be evaded. Nothing could place the public mind in a more unfavourable position towards that important organization than the impression that the bringing together of great numbers of young men in military camps was to result in dissipation and in the use of intoxicating liquors. It is impossible for the Government to attach too much importance to the matter, or to take too rigid means for absolutely preventing these numerous gatherings of young men in camp being abused by any means whatever, by individual members of the force being permitted to bring into the camp surreptitiously even moderately small quantities of liquor, and thus evading the regulations. I am very glad that the hon. Minister of Militia has felt it his duty promptly to lay before the House, as he has done, the evidence of the determination of the Government and of himself, as Minister of Militia, to do everything in their power to prevent anything like intemperance at these important gatherings of the young men of the country.

Mr. HUGHES. As this matter has been brought up, and the statement made has been so sweeping as to include all the camps, I wish to say, with regard to the second Niagara camp, which I had the privilege of attending, that I heartily bear out the statement made by the hon. Minister of Militia. The ordinary regulations were in force; there were canteens for the sale of pipe-clay and various other commodities which soldiers require; but I have no knowledge of the sale, directly or indirectly, of intoxicating liquors on the ground, and there was very little intoxication in the camp. I do not think you could get a large organization of men together with less intoxication than there was at that camp.

Mr. PETTET. From my experience as paymaster of the 2nd Battalion during camp, I can say that I never saw an officer or a private under the influence of liquor. If there was any liquor on the ground, it was not abused.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Mr. Speaker, my attention has been called to a matter which

I think of sufficient importance to justify me in trespassing for a few moments upon the attention of the House, and making a remark or two in respect of it. The Montreal "Star" of last evening contained an editorial article having reference to a subject of debate yesterday, that is, the purchase of the Long Wharf property; and this morning the Ottawa "Citizen" contained an editorial article of a like character. These two statements are identical in many particulars. They are identical in the important and essential particular to which I will refer; and the fact that these statements have so appeared in these two different newspapers simultaneously, and in their editorial columns, justified me in suspecting that they are the outcome of either an organized bureau of misrepresentation or of a conspiracy to misstate and misrepresent to the public the facts which were stated to Parliament yesterday. The editorial of the Montreal "Star" contains this statement, which I will read:

Another instance of the benevolence of the Government alluded to last night was the purchase of the Long Wharf property at St. John. The owners only wanted $100,000 for it, but the Government was not to be outdone in generosity, and as a valuation (what a beautiful thing is a valuation) showed the property to be worth $118,000, the Government stumped up the other $18,000.

The Ottawa "Citizen" of this morning contains this statement:

That was an interesting fact brought out by Dr. Montague, M.P., in connection with the purchase by the Government of the Long Wharf property at Halifax. The owners of the wharf offered it to the Government for $100,000, but the Government insisted on paying them $118,000 because the valuers placed it at that figure!

I need not say to any member of this House who was present during that debate, that a more perverse, unauthorized and unwarranted misrepresentation of the facts could not possibly be made. No person who sits in the Gallery—and I presume this must have emanated from the Press Gallery—could labour honestly under any misapprehension with regard to those facts. The fact is, that $100,000 was the amount the Government paid, and the only amount the Government agreed to pay; and no member of the Government held out any hope or expectation to the owners of the property that any more than $100,000 would be paid. I say it does afford a justification for the inference that there is a determination on the part of the newspaper press published in the interest of hon. gentlemen opposite, to distort and misrepresent the actions and the conduct of the Government, feeling, I believe, well assured that if the facts in respect of these matters are known, the impression created by them must be favourable, and it is necessary, therefore, to mislead the public by distorting and misrepresenting the facts.

Mr. BLAIR.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman is rather insinuating in his language—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not as to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. MONTAGUE—that some one had asked the papers to make such a statement.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Oh, no; I did not do that.

Mr. MONTAGUE. So far as any hon. gentleman on this side is concerned, the hon. Minister's attack is quite gratuitous. The transaction was bad enough in its true light and need not be misrepresented, as no doubt the papers have misrepresented it. It is bad enough without giving the other $18,000, but we are not sure that the hon. gentleman may not still pay the $18,000. So far as I am concerned, I neither saw the item nor knew anything of it.

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman had better await the investigation with which he threatened us before making further comment. He said yesterday he would have the matter investigated. We are quite prepared for an investigation. He has no reason to say now that the Government has not acted properly in the matter.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The item is still under discussion, and we have a perfect right to discuss it.

The PRIME MINISTER. The more it is discussed the better.

CANADIAN TROOPS FOR THE TRANSVAAL.

Mr. HUGHES. I beg to draw attention to a paragraph in this morning's "Citizen," stating that the colony of Queensland has offered to the mother country 250 men in case of trouble in the Transvaal.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has already spoken on the motion to go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. HUGHES. I thought that I had spoken on the Orders of the Day being called.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I understand the House does not object, and the hon. gentleman may proceed.

Mr. HUGHES. The colony of Queensland has offered 250 men for service in the Transvaal if required. I take this opportunity of again pressing upon the Canadian Government the necessity of our taking some action in the premises, also to fulfil our part as the senior colony of all the British colonies. I know it for a positive fact that there would be no trouble in enrolling, not merely 250 men, but, if necessary, thousands of men in Canada to go to the assistance of the motherland in a war with the Transvaal, where more than in any other part of the world, the necessity arises to vindicate the honour of the old flag. I am satisfied that a brigade of 5,000 men could be enrolled at a very short notice, and I know hundreds of officers who would be only too glad to take part in leading such an expedition. In the House of Commons there are a number of gentlemen who would be only too pleased to give their services to the mother country. I have before offered to raise a corps and have no hesitation in offering to raise a corps again for service on any such expedition.

The PRIME MINISTER. I sincerely hope that no opportunity will arise for Queensland or any other part of the British Empire to send troops to the mother country to meet difficulties in South Africa. We are all of the opinion, I believe, in this House, that the troubles which are brewing there will be appeased before the sword is unsheathed. We all sympathize with that portion of our fellow-countrymen in Africa, and it is not too much to hope and believe that the Transvaal will recognize that since that country is under the suzerainty of Her Majesty they must see that the same measure of justice is given to all classes. And if these principles prevail, as I hope they will, we can further entertain the wish and thought and hope that there will no occasion for the troops offered by Queensland to leave that country and for Canada to follow her example.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I quite agree with my right hon. friend that every person in Canada most sincerely desires that no possible necessity will require that Queensland or any other portion of Her Majesty's dominions should come to the aid of her Government in connection with the difficulty now threatened in South Africa, but I would say to my right hon. friend that if those difficulties are avoided, that avoidance will be largely due, we have every reason to believe, to the outspoken support that the press of Great Britain has given to Her Majesty's Government in exhibiting a determination firmly to maintain the rights of British supremacy in South Africa, and that nothing will contribute more to a complete avoidance of anything like war between the Boers and Great Britain than the knowledge on their part that not only the great heart of the Empire, the British Islands, are united in a determination to maintain British authority and not to lose one jot or tittle of the rights Great Britain possesses as a suzerain power in regard to that country, than the impression that the action of Queensland will have created that England would not have to depend upon the British Islands alone but that the outlying portions of the Empire would be ready, in case of necessity, to strengthen the arms of the mother country.

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Post Office Department ..... $203,055

Mr. MONTAGUE. Might I ask the Minister of Railways and Canals if he can give us the explanation with regard to tenders put in for the work at St. John?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I am getting the information.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). My colleague has occasion to be absent, and we will take up the Post Office estimates until he returns.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the reason for the increase of $5,000?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Macklock). The various increases are set forth on page 18, and are made up as follows:— There are four increases of $50 each in the chief clerks and eight increases of $50 each in the first-class clerks. Mr. Bennett has been transferred to the inspector's office and the inside service at $1,600. In the second class there are five increases and a vacancy has to be filled. That makes an increase of $1,250. In the third class there are forty increases, and there are several transfers from the outside to the inside service. Six packers were recommended for increases, making $320. Mr. Birch was transferred from the Ottawa post office at $510, and Mr. Jeffrey the same, $480. From that is to be deducted one clerk, Mr. Watson, died, and one, Mr. Taylor, was transferred to the Ottawa post office, making a deduction of $840. This makes a net increase of $320. These items together makes up the $5,180 of a change.

Mr. DAVIN. Are these all statutory increases?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We have not recognized the statutory increases in the sense of increases that move automatically by virtue of the statute. But they are increases within the range of those contemplated by the Civil Service Act. They are all lawful within the provisions of the Act.

Mr. DAVIN. What is the average salary for letter carriers in Canada?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) will find it all in a schedule of the Civil Service Act, page 197. The maximum salary is $600.

Mr. BERGERON. I understand that there is a branch of the department that has grown very much within the last few years, the stationery or distribution office. Would the hon. gentleman give some information in regard to this? How many officers are there and what are their salaries ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Would it suit the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) to wait until we come to item 39, to which this properly belongs ?

Mr. BERGERON. That will do. I hope my hon. friend will be able to give us some information when we come to the item.

Mr. HUGHES. I presume that this is a proper item under which to bring up the question that I mentioned to the Minister last year. He will remember my speaking about mail clerks who are in temporary employ, but whom the department may wish to make permanent. As I understand it, a temporary clerk may have been on the staff five or even ten years, and become a very efficient officer, yet, under the law, if he becomes a permanent officer, he must spend six months in apprenticeship at a salary of $300 a year.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think the law is as stated by my hon. friend (Mr. Hughes). He probably has in mind the case of a mail clerk in his own county ?

Mr. HUGHES. Yes.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There are only so many permanencies provided for by the statute. When one of these positions become vacant, it is for the Government to fill it either by promotion from among the temporaries or by appointment from some other available source. One thus appointed to a permanency is called a probationer. The Act does not recognize the status of a temporary mail clerk, so, when one is appointed to a permanency, he can only come in as a probationer.

Mr. PRIOR. There are one or two points I want to call attention to with regard to temporary clerks generally, not temporary mail clerks alone. Permanent clerks are allowed holidays, but the temporary clerks are not. In fact, when these permanent clerks are absent, these temporary clerks have to do their work without any extra pay. Some of these temporary employees are men who have been for years and years in the service, because there is no place for them to be appointed to as permanent officers. If the temporary clerk is sick, even though he brings a doctor's certificate to show that he has not been shamming, the Government does not pay him for the time he has been off. This may be all in accordance with the Civil Service Act, in fact, I believe it is ; but it appears to me that, if that is so, the Act should be amended. The hon. Minister knows that my colleague (Mr. Earle) and I have spoken to him of these matters in his office. He was good enough to give us as much information as he could about them.

Mr. BERGERON.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That matter would be more properly discussed under the item of the outside service. Of course, I do not object to discussing it now, but if it is desired to keep the discussion in order, it should come up on another item.

Mr. PRIOR. In that case, I shall bring it up later on.

Mr. INGRAM. I suppose that this is hardly the item on which to discuss mail contracts ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not wish to prevent anybody discussing anything, but, if it is desired to keep the discussion in order, I may point out that this item has to do with the staff here at Ottawa. Mail contracts will properly come up under item 269 probably.

Mr. INGRAM. In the meantime, I would like the hon. gentleman to refresh his memory with regard to certain contracts between Aymer and St. Thomas.

Mr. PRIOR. On looking at this vote, 21, it seems to me that it relates to what I want to discuss, as it covers the whole service.

Mr. BERGERON. No, this is only for civil government.

Mr. PRIOR. If there is no objection I would sooner finish what I have to say ; it is only a few words. Now, in regard to the letter carriers. Those men are given to understand when they join, whether in writing or not, I do not know, that they will have a statutory increase. But such has not been the case since the present Government came into power. They used to get that increase up to 1896, then, I am informed, it was stopped for 1896 and 1897. Now, does not the Postmaster General think that it would be an honourable and a fair thing for the Government to pay those men the statutory increase that has been stopped from them ? I hear they have begun to pay it again, so there can be no good reason why it should have been stopped. Some of those men got into debt, expecting they would get the larger salary, and they ran up expenses that they have not been able to overtake so far. That is the case in Victoria, B.C., and I think the Government should pay those men the statutory increases that were docked from them in those years. The same remark applies to the letter carriers and the temporary letter carriers, that apply to the temporary clerks. When they happen to fall sick their pay is stopped ; also they are not allowed any holidays, so far as I understand. Then again the staff is not sufficient to afford an extra man to take the place of any that are sick, or off from any other cause. Therefore, the men have to do extra work in such a case without getting extra pay. I hope the hon. gentleman will look into the matter and set it right. I know he will do what he considers fair, and I hope he will accept my suggestions as fair.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). With reference to the first point raised by my hon. friend, the temporary clerks generally, either in the inside or outside service, are not allowed pay when absent. That is the law, I understand. It is not a new thing, it is the law as we find it, and there has been no change in it. It is competent for Parliament to change the law if it sees proper, and it is competent for my hon. friend to move Parliament in that direction. At present I can only administer the law as I find it. With reference to the increase of the salaries of letter carriers, I think myself that every man whose maximum possible salary does not exceed $600, might fairly be assumed to be entitled to an increase unless there is cause to the contrary. In regard to that class of officials in the department, I have proceeded upon that principle, and have recommended for an increase every person who is not at the maximum of a salary of $600, thereby shifting the onus, as it were, on the officer to show cause why he should receive the increase. As to the past, there is no vote in the Estimates to pay any arrears. There is nothing in the law, as we are advised, entitling the staff to the increase, therefore, it is sufficient at present to deal with what is recommended. As to the suggestion that the staff in any place is insufficient, I hardly think a case of that kind can be made out. I think the general complaint on the part of the taxpayers is in an opposite direction. It may occasionally happen that a staff temporarily runs down from some unexpected cause, but that is not a permanent condition of affairs, I think, in the Post Office of Canada.

Mr. PRIOR. The hon. gentleman said that it was quite competent for me to bring in an amendment to the Act in regard to the pay. I think anything that has to do with an increase of salary must emanate from the Government; a private member has no power to do that.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He cannot propose an Act, but the hon. gentleman could easily invoke Parliament to give an expression of opinion, and on that opinion the Government would have to act.

Mr. INGRAM. This question of temporary clerks comes up every session. While I believe the hon. gentleman desires to do what is fair in respect to temporary clerks, it seems to me that some of the objections now urged by the hon. gentleman to giving them better treatment can not be overlooked. Take, for instance, a man appointed four or five years ago, and who still remains a temporary clerk. It is unfair to that man, who is still performing his duty every day the same as a regular clerk, that if he is obliged to lose a day his pay should be docked. That is the objection I have to dealing with temporary clerks in the way in which they are dealt with. I know of instances where temporary clerks have become permanent appointees, while others that were appointed before them still remain temporary clerks. That, I think, is unfair, and I hope the hon. gentleman will look into it and remedy that injustice.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). I think the matter referred to by the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) is well worthy the consideration of the Government. A temporary clerk is at a great disadvantage. He may be performing his duties, and we will assume that he does equally as well as the permanent clerk. But he has less pay, he has no superannuation allowance to look forward to, he has not that permanency that is assured to a permanent officer. Then he is at a continual disadvantage in regard to the treatment the Government accords him. A temporary clerk gets no holidays, as has been pointed out, and he very seldom gets promotion. If illness overtakes him his pay stops, while in the case of the permanent officer he gets leave of absence and his pay goes on. Now, why should there be such a disparity in the treatment of these two classes of officers? The permanent officer has a superannuation, the Government takes a paternal interest in him, and after he leaves the service he is still paid for the services he had rendered. I think the Government could fairly reconsider the case of those temporary clerks. Now, with reference to the other point raised by the hon. member for Victoria, B.C. (Mr. Prior) as to the letter carriers. The Minister has replied that it is not the rule in Canada that the civil service are overworked.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I did not refer to the question of work at all. My hon. friend from Victoria was complaining that some of the staff could not get holidays, owing to the staff being too limited. I said it might occasionally happen that the staff in any locality might run down, but that was not a normal condition of affairs in the service.

Mr. WALLACE. That is in substance what I said, and I am not going to quarrel with the Postmaster General over that. I agree with his statement in a general way. Of course, we know there are exceptional cases, but as a rule, I think, the Postmaster General is quite right. But while that may be so, I think we should take care that no class of officers should undergo a hardship. Take the case of letter carriers in cities. I think an official of the Government is a much better man, serves the Government much better, and satisfies his own conscience by doing a good day's work, and I am not going to complain when the hon. Postmaster General, or any other hon. Minister, imposes a good, solid day's work on any official. I think it is quite right that he should do so, and I think it makes a better man of the official to be given a good day's work. The consciousness of having performed his duty well gives an incentive to the officer to continue in the performance of his duty, and it is a justification for the Minister to give him promotion and an increase of his salary, when it is required. The letter carriers commence at $30 per month in cities. For men performing responsible duties, entailing a good deal of physical work and a good deal of intelligence, if these duties are properly performed, I think $30 a month is a low remuneration. They are told: It is very low, but you have to acquire a knowledge of the service, to go through your training, after which the Government will give you an increase of $30 per year. You have to pass your examination and to demonstrate your fitness by experience to do the work. It is three years ago yesterday since the hon. Postmaster General assumed office. Am I right in making the statement that the letter carriers have received none of their statutory increases?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). I do not think that any year has passed without any of them having received increases.

Mr. DAVIN. Do they receive them as a right, if they do their work properly?

Mr. WALLACE. That is quite an indefinite answer.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not want to give an indefinite answer.

Mr. WALLACE. I assume so. What I want to know is, how many letter carriers there are in Toronto. There must be between one hundred and two hundred.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. About one hundred in active service.

Mr. WALLACE. How many of these in Toronto have received the statutory increase each year?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We will have to get the Estimates of last year to deal with that.

Mr. WALLACE. I am told that not 5 or 10 per cent got the statutory increase.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think that last year every letter carrier whose salary was under $540, received an increase of $30. That is what I recollect.

Mr. WALLACE. That is, in three years.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think in the first year they got it. I think that in the Estimates we passed in August, or September, 1896, there was provision for the increases on the old principle. I think these increases were all awarded. We adopted the Estimates that we found prepared for us.

Mr. WALLACE.

Mr. WALLACE. There were no Estimates, as I understand it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Oh, yes; they were laid on the Table of the House in the spring of 1896, and partly proceeded with, and they contained all the increases that the Government considered these officers were entitled to. I think we carried out that vote.

Mr. WALLACE. I am trusting to my memory, to my recollection, and the Minister's recollection does not seem to be much stronger than my own. He says his impression is so and so; but the hon. Minister ought to give us something more reliable than impressions. I know that the letter carriers have addressed a petition to the hon. Postmaster General, asking that they receive their statutory increases, which have been kept back from them. I think that in the case of the letter carriers the complaint is a stronger one than complaints coming from almost any department under the Government that I could name. They start with small salaries, they have arduous duties to perform, and they are given a good day's work. The hon. Minister says that they should do a good day's work, and I quite agree with him. I believe that every officer in the Government service should be given a good day's work, and that there should be a removal of those unnecessary officers from any department, if there are such. These men perform laborious duties; they do intelligent work, and I believe they do it well. Although I am not brought in contact very much with them, I hear that they perform their duties satisfactorily and courteously. Though commencing with low salaries, the Government have retained their statutory allowances for some time, and I would ask the hon. Minister to make a statement to the House as to what statutory allowances that might have been granted, have not been granted by the Government.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am not carrying in my memory a financial statement.

Mr. WALLACE. I did not ask it from the hon. gentleman's memory. I supposed he would have a record of it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have it neither in my memory nor on record here. I have a record for these estimates, but I cannot tell what increases have been given A, B and C each year that has gone by. This is a matter for each year's consideration. There may be some possibly who have not received increases in days gone by.

Mr. DAVIN. How many letter carriers are there in Montreal and Toronto who are working for less than $35 a month?

Mr. WALLACE. While the hon. Minister is getting that information, I may call his attention to a petition of the letter carriers addressed to the Postmaster General, which, I am afraid, contradicts the statement, or the impression, that the hon. gentleman made. They say in this petition that

On joining the civil service we were informed that statutory increases would be made in our salaries each year.

That is a correct statement of the case, no doubt. The invariable practice was, and the law provided, that statutory increases of $30 should be given each year. The practice conformed with the law. You may say that the law is permissive, that it did not make it obligatory, but custom and practice and law made it universal, and these officials might fairly expect that it would be continued. The next statement they make is, that

The statutory increase was regularly granted until 1896, when the same was stopped without notice.

That statement of the letter carriers does not agree with the statement of the hon. Postmaster General to the committee a few moments ago. It was stopped in 1896. The hon. Postmaster General tells us that they continued the increases in 1896, just as they had been made formerly. This statement was made to the hon. Postmaster General himself by the parties interested, and we must assume that it is exactly correct. There is no disputing that. When the Postmaster General told the House that in 1896 he continued the condition of affairs previously existing, he was in error. He said it was his impression, but I told him we wanted the actual facts of the case, and not impressions. The letter carriers, in support of their application, say in this statement:

A majority of us are married and have families to support,—

Well, that is our own case.

—and the discontinuance of the annual increase, which we were led to expect when joining the service, has caused great hardship amongst us.

That is quite true. While in the country, men do live at less cost than in the city, the letter carrier is essentially a resident of the large cities, and the loss of the $30 a year annual increase to a man with a salary of $30 a month in a city must be severely felt. I believe myself that the salaries paid to letter carriers was at the very lowest notch before this increase was stopped by the Minister, and when we are told that the revenues of the Government are increasing, and that the country is prosperous, there is no excuse for this Government economizing in this petty way. The Government apparently has millions to spend in various directions, and it was ill-advised economy to curtail the statutory increases of these letter carriers, who deserved better treatment from the Government. The next statement in their petition is:

That the cost of living in cities is very great, and even had we received the expected increase it would be necessary for us to have exercised the strictest economy. That men who are thus insufficiently paid are compelled, against their will, to contract debts which place the civil servants in an unfavourable position with the business community. That the carriers entitled to their annual increase be placed on the same footing as they would have been had the same not been discontinued, and that back-pay be paid to them from the time it was stopped, so as to enable them to liquidate the debts that had to be incurred.

While I think that every one should live within his income if he has health, and unless he meets with some of those misfortunes which come to high and low alike, yet it must be said that when men receive these low salaries and are compelled to live right up to their salary, then when the increase they expected is suddenly stopped, they are put at a great loss, and so these letter carriers can fairly make the request that their back pay be given to them. The only justification for the refusal of an increase of salary is one of two things: Either the officer is sufficiently well paid already, and that occurs very often in the civil service, or, that the times are not prosperous and every citizen having to curtail his expenditure and economize, the civil servants will be asked to practice the same economy. Now, these two reasons do not apply in the case of the letter carriers. It is universally admitted that the letter carriers of Canada are not overpaid, and it is equally true that in these prosperous times they should not be asked to economize when no other class in the community is so asked. There has undoubtedly been an era of prosperity during these three years. The general revenues of the Government have been increasing, and the Post Office revenues have been so abundant that the Postmaster General has felt justified in reducing the postage from 3 cents to 2 cents. If the general public of Canada thought that this reduction was obtained at the cost of depriving letter carriers of their legitimate salaries, I do not think they would willingly accept the boon under such conditions. The request of the petition that back pay should be granted from the time it was stopped, is one that the Postmaster General should grant. He made a mistake when he stopped the annual increase to these deserving officers, and if any economy had to be practised by the Government, in my opinion these were the last men in the Government service who ought to have been touched. If a man was getting $360 a year and he came to the service three years ago, he would have been entitled under the old rule to $390 in 1897; to $420 in 1898, to $450 in 1899. But under the ruling of the Postmaster General he has lost $30 the first year, $60 the second year, and $90 the third year. Even if the Postmaster General gives the $30 increase this year, the letter carriers will in future lose $90 per year to which they are fairly entitled under the contract they made with the Government.

Mr. DAVIN. Hear, hear.

Mr. WALLACE. I say that the Postmaster General has deprived each of the letter carriers of $90 a year to which he is fairly entitled under the law. Surely with the Postmaster General himself sitting in luxury getting his $7,000 a year, and his ordinary expenses in addition, surely he is not going to say that nineteen letter carriers at $360 a year for their services are only worth as much as the Postmaster General alone. These letter carriers are intelligent men. They are good citizens. They have passed the qualifying examination. They discharge their duties well, and yet their salaries are curtailed, and the conditions under which they entered the service are ignored by the Postmaster General. This is doing them a great injustice. I do not know whether this statement will move the heart of the Postmaster General or not, but I know that it is only a modest and moderate presentation of the actual facts of the case. Hon. gentlemen opposite have tried to make a great showing of economy in the Post Office Department, but as a matter of fact they have administered that department extravagantly. They have ignored the legitimate and proper wants of the public service in that department without increasing the expenses; but in this case, in trying to economize they have done an injustice to a deserving class of officials. The Postmaster General himself recognizes that fact by giving the statutory increase for the year ending the 30th June next. Is that what I understand the Minister to do?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Estimates provide for increases for all the staff in my department whose salaries are under $600.

Mr. WALLACE. Statutory increases?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. An increase; you can call it what you like.

Mr. WALLACE. We will not dispute that point. By that very fact the hon. Minister acknowledges that he has been doing wrong in the past. On what principle of fair-play or justice can the Minister this year give an increase, which he may say is not statutory or obligatory in any sense, but permissive, and not give it in other years? By that fact he acknowledges that he has done wrong to these men in the past. If they had got the increase last year they would have $60 this year, and they would have that for all time. You drop $90 from their salaries for the three years, so that it is not $90 for one year only, but $90 for every year you are defrauding these men, who have responsible duties, such as the handling of large sums of money in registered letters. Though cases have occurred in which men have gone astray, as men go astray in every walk of life, the letter carriers, as a class, have performed their duties faithfully, honestly and with courtesy and attention to the public wants. This loss of $90 to one of these men amounts to a loss of one-fourth of his salary. How would the Postmaster General and the other Ministers like to have one-fourth of their salaries cut off? They would not accept the conditions with good grace. I would like to see their salaries brought down to some extent, except in the case of the Premier of the country, whose salary, for many reasons, I would say should be kept up at a good figure. The other Ministers could very well have their salaries cut 25 per cent, as they have cut those of the letter carriers, and then they could come before the country with better grace than they can now, to cut down the salaries of such a very deserving class as the letter carriers.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Am I correct in understanding that the letter carriers all over Canada receive the increase this year?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Estimates provide for an increase to any letter carrier whose salary is under $600.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). To how many letter carriers in Halifax would that apply? The total increases last year appear to have been $210, which would give an increase to only seven.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think that will probably be all on the staff who are not at the maximum.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The salaries of twenty-one letter carriers this year amount to $12,050. I entirely concur in what has been said by the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) with regard to these men. I know that in the city of Halifax they are a very hardworking and deserving class of men, and they have felt very much the loss of the increase which they had been led to expect, and were certainly entitled to receive, on a fair understanding of the contract under which they entered the service. They were men who gave up other occupations, and who, if they gave up their present positions could not very well get a means of livelihood. It may be that they have no legal right to exact the increase from the Government; but on every principle of fair-play, it seems to me they were entitled to receive it. I am very glad the hon. gentleman sees his way clear to giving them the increase this year, and I only regret very much on their behalf that they have not received it during the past two or three years. I would be very glad if the hon. gentleman would, before the Estimates pass, give me more definite information on the matter which I do not now understand.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If the hon. gentleman refers to page 84 of the Estimates, he will find that there are 21 letter carriers at Halifax, including one temporary employee, showing an increase of $210. That provides for an increase of seven, one being temporary. If he will turn to the civil service list, he will find that there are six letter carriers at Halifax at less than $600, and the others over $600.

Mr. DAVIN. Look at Winnipeg, there is a decrease there of $60. I entirely sympathize with the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) in the position he takes, that if we are to reduce salaries, we should reduce the larger salaries and not the small ones, for in the one case you would only cut off luxuries, whereas in the other you cut off the necessities of life. There was a spirit manifested in this Chamber yesterday, which obtained expression in the speech of the hon. member for Gaspé, who declared that since we have a surplus we ought to appoint three more judges at $5,000 a year. Of course I cannot discuss that question now, but I may say that I have no sympathy in the argument to add unnecessarily to a plethoric expenditure on a bloated judiciary, but I would have sympathized in an argument to raise the salaries of poor men. I know of no more deserving class than the letter carriers, and I am not now speaking in the interests of my constituents, because in my constituency we have none, but in the interests of justice to men, who, in all sorts of weather, have to perform their very severe task. I may say that it is not with respect to these men alone that the Postmaster General has shown himself a hard taskmaster. He has put a griping hand upon the poor employees in the Post Office Department everywhere throughout the Dominion, but I do not see that he has touched the men with large salaries. I have been told by postmasters in Ontario and the lower provinces, in fact everywhere, whose salaries are being cramped to such an extent, by pairings off here and there, that their positions are hardly worth keeping. There is no economy more ill-advised than that which works injustice to deserving labour. I would like very much, since the Postmaster General has taken it into his head to give these letter carriers the increase they are this year entitled to, that the same just sentiment would govern him with regard to other ill-paid officials in the department. I do not know what his motives are, I cannot penetrate the secrets of his bosom, I cannot tell why this year he feels he must give the increase that these men were entitled to last year as well as this, but it is much better that right should be done in any case even though the motive at best be somewhat obscure. If the protests of the hon. gentlemen on this side of the House in past sessions be the reason for his change of heart and for his doing this tardy justice—for all that he is doing now is what he should have done in previous years—he is to be commended for his repentance, even though that will not alleviate the sufferings caused by the self-denial which he imposed on deserving men throughout the cities of Canada by his determination to earn a spurious reputation for economy at their expense. But I do not think that these men will feel that because my hon. friend has been constrained to take the course he is taking now, it is to him their gratitude must be directed. The only position in which he can stand before them now is not that of a benefactor but of an absolved departmental penitent.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In reply to the first question, as to whether there has been a decrease in the salaries of the letter carriers of Winnipeg, I find that there is an increase in the salaries of eleven at $30 each.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. One letter carrier having a salary of $390, has resigned. Deduct $330 from $390 and you will get $60. With reference to the salaries of postmasters, I would say to my hon. friend that I have never yet had anything whatever to do with the reduction of salary of any postmaster in Canada. They are remunerated according to fixed rule. I have not interfered with or reduced the salaries of these officers. The other classes of postmasters are remunerated on a different basis—with reference to the revenues of their post office. The existing scale of remuneration I think has obtained in Canada ever since there was a post office, even prior to confederation. I have not interfered to reduce any postmaster's salary, so my hon. friend is in error in attributing the amount of their salaries, whatever it may be, to any decision or order of mine. Before concluding I may say that I am in error in one thing. I recall now that in one case I did reduce the salary of a postmaster who was receiving $2,000 a year. That was a special case. There may have been other isolated cases, so I qualify what I have said in that way.

Mr. ROGERS. A great deal has been said in this House about the principle of statutory increases. I have never been able to see any good reason for those statutory increases. It seems to me to go without saying that the Government should do their business on the same principle as any other institution, mercantile, manufacturing or agricultural. In all these lines employees are dealt with according to merit; the worthy ones find their pay increased and their positions improved. I find that at the time of election, all those who address the public at meetings or otherwise are very much in favour of this idea, that the Government should run its business on business lines. Especially is this the case when gentlemen are addressing agricultural audiences. when they tell the people that the Government should run its business on the same lines of care and economy as a farmer runs his farm. Since I entered this House my observation teaches me that the Government business is not run always upon these lines. It is true that the salaries of letter carriers are small as compared with others. But it is also true that there is no compulsion upon any man to take such a position, or to keep it if he finds it does not pay him. We all know that when such a position is vacant there is great pressure brought to bear by many applicants to secure it. If the Government's business was run on the same principle of supply and demand as other lines of business are, surely there would be no need for the shedding of so many tears over the hiring of letter carriers at salaries of from $300 to $400 a year, and as high as $600. There are plenty of young men in the country, farmers' sons—I am very sorry that it is so—who would be glad to leave their farms and take positions in the cities at this pay. We know very well that the great agricultural community, which has to foot all these bills, cannot afford to pay its labourers anything like the wages paid in the service. Of course, I know that the answer will be, in accordance with the feeling which used to exist, that it does not require any intelligence to be a farmer. My hon. friend from West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) spoke of the privations and hardships suffered by these letter carriers, of the weather they had to face in the performance of their duties. I wonder if he has considered the privations and hardships and exposure that the great agricultural masses have to go through for much less pay. Such arguments as those of the hon. gentleman would have little weight at the time of election before an agricultural audience, when used to decry the Government for attempting to economize. And hon. gentlemen would not care to have it repeated against them just before election, when they appeal to an agricultural audience, that they had spoken against the economy and in favour of the payment of salaries better than the agricultural interests can afford to pay for service calling for equal labour, sacrifice and intelligence. That sort of argument may do well enough in the city where many people argue only that the more that is paid to the civil servant the more money they will have to spend. The city people do not need to care very much for economy in these matters, for they know where the money comes from—the farmer has to pay it all. I will admit that there is a disparity between the salaries paid to letter carriers and the salaries paid to some others. I think that the pruning knife might be applied to those receiving higher salaries much better than to the letter carriers. Speaking of the intelligence and ability required for the business of the letter carriers, I would like hon. gentleman to compare that with the intelligence and ability required for a farm servant. I would not like to say that these gentlemen who speak about these matters are talking through their hats, but it does seem to me that that is about the way they talk. If they had had the experience I have had for the last twenty years as an agriculturist, doing my share to make this country and hold it where it is, they would change their tune, I am sure. Their arguments, as I say, would have little weight before an agricultural audience, and I think they will have less weight even in the cities than formerly, because the city people have more sense than they used to have.

But I do feel that the postmasters in the country are the most miserably paid of any class of public servants. It is really a shame that a man should be paid only $10 or $12 a year for taking care of a country post office. They often write to me and ask if there is no possible way of getting an increase of salary.

Mr. BERGERON. There is the Patron principle.

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, and it is all right, As the people say, it does not pay for sweeping their floors. I would like to see some of these gentlemen who respond with their superior "ha ha," try it for a while. I know that it is replied that these salaries are paid on a certain principle. But that principle should not be pressed so closely when you have to deal with cases like these. The post office is the only thing that the Government gives these people. To get their mail at some fairly convenient place is the only luxury these people have, and the city people should not insist upon remunerating so poorly the man who throws his doors open to accommodate his neighbours and the public. In some instances in my county, we can hardly get people to take the post offices, and in some cases the neighbours actually subscribe $15 or $20 a year to induce some person to perform this service. If the Postmaster General could see his way clear to grant country postmasters a little more pay for the trouble and inconvenience of keeping these little post offices, I think he would be doing a just thing and one advantageous to the people at large; I am sure that no person would object.

Mr. BELL (East Prince, P.E.I.) I am glad to hear the remarks of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Rogers), who has just taken his seat. As I understand it, the postmasters in the country are paid on the basis of 40 per cent of the receipts of their offices. I have no fault to find with the principle. It is well to have a principle and to stick to it. But circumstances arise where you have to sacrifice the principle or sacrifice the interests of the people. The suggestion of my hon. friend brings to my mind a condition of things in my own riding, something like that he mentioned. I refer to the post office in Hamilton, lot 18, concerning which there has been some correspondence with the Postmaster General. The receipts of the post office only justify an expenditure, I think, of $4 a quarter, or $16 a year. Now, it is impossible to get any person to take the position of postmaster at that figure. The people have offered to build an addition to the post office at a cost of about $10, and they have offered to buy all their postage at that office in order to swell the receipts.

Mr. WALLACE. In justice to the post office where they deal, they should do that.

Mr. BELL (East Prince, P.E.I.) They are not obliged to do that; they frequently go to the county town, and buy their postage there. But I say they have offered to do this in order to increase the receipts of the post office, and still they cannot induce any one to take charge of the office. The consequence is, that at the present time the people are deprived of a post office. The rule laid down by the Department is, no doubt, a very salutary one, but I think there ought to be some exceptions made that would meet a condition of this kind. Usually, persons are found willing to take a post office in country places; in fact, there is a competition to get it; but here is a place where no one wants it. Under these circumstances, I think there ought to be some departure from the general principle in order to meet the necessities of a particular case. Then, I want to ask the Postmaster General what is the rule with regard to the extension of the service to country post offices where they only receive a mail say—twice a week. I have in mind an office in my riding, Sea Cow Head, where the people are very intelligent, and have a large amount of business to transact, yet they receive the mails only twice a week. Now, upon what principle is the Government guided in extending facilities so as to give three mails a week, instead of two? Circumstances often arise where the frequency of receiving the mails ought to be extended.

While on my feet, I wish to refer to a remark of the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) in regard to the judiciary of Canada. He referred to the judges in terms which I do not think should be employed by a member of this House. He applied to them the epithet of a "bloated" judiciary. That offensive term is applied sometimes to certain of the aristocracy to show how puffed up they are with their hasty and ill-gotten wealth, and how offensive are their manners and morals. But the term is utterly misapplied when used with regard to our judiciary. They are neither wealthy or puffed up, nor offensive in manners or morals. They earn every dollar of their salary. They are an honour and credit to Canada. The hon. gentleman should withdraw and apologize for his insult to the judiciary.

Mr. DAVIN. I am glad to have the weighty support of the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Rogers) in regard to the salaries of postmasters throughout the country, and I am also glad to hear the remarks of the hon. member for Prince, P.E.I., (Mr. Bell) on that subject. It is quite clear that there is a general opinion that country postmasters suffer an injustice at the hands of the department. I want to give just one instance. There is a small post office lately established, called Condie, on the line between Regina and Prince Albert. I had the honour of bringing the case before the department, and I thank the Postmaster General for having a post office established there. It was quite necessary, and a postmaster has been appointed. The postmaster offered to carry the mails from the train to the post office for $50 a year, for four trips a week in summer and winter. The distance is not very far, but it entails going out four times a week and watching for the mail. Now, $50 is a very small sum. When I called at the department and gave cogent reasons to the Deputy Postmaster General why that post office should be established, he seemed impressed by the reasons I laid before him. A petition had been sent to the same effect before I left Regina for my parliamentary duties. But when I went, early in the session, to inquire why it was that no arrangement had been made for carrying the mail, I was told that the department could not afford to pay $50 for carrying the mails from the station to the post office, a distance of probably a couple of hundred yards, but which still entailed 208 trips a year. With reference to what my hon. friend said about the judiciary, it is quite clear that he misunderstood my remarks. I did not at all compare them to a bloated aristocracy. But I do not want to go into the discussion of this subject now. I will be able to discuss it when the proposal under the estimates of the hon. Minister of Justice comes up. I can assure my hon. friend that he quite misunderstood my remark, if he thought that it indicated any want of respect on my part for the judiciary of Canada. I do not yield to him, or anybody, in my esteem for the character and learning of the bench.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In reply to the hon. gentleman as to the principle upon which post offices are established, or the service increased, I would say that it is upon the principle of having regard to the public interest solely. We cannot give an over-frequent service if the community and revenue are small. There must be some regard had to the revenue of the office; that being the justification, to a large extent, for increasing the service. In great cities you have greater frequency of service, because there is a greater public need for it. In regard to the salaries of postmasters, we had that question up in the House some time ago. Many people act as postmasters merely to oblige their neighbours, not for the sake of the revenue at all, and post offices are dotted here and there—I will not say with over-liberality, but they are numerous in order to meet the convenience of rural districts. A mere increase of $50 a head to all these postmasters in Canada would probably involve an expenditure of half a million of dollars.

Mr. WALLACE. How many post offices are there?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think there must be 10,000 or more.

Mr. WALLACE. Are there not only 7,000?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think there are nearly 10,000.

Mr. INGRAM. The usual practice of this House, in criticising the expenditures of the different departments, is to find fault with the extravagance of the Ministers, but we find to-day, instead of finding fault with the extravagance of the Postmaster General, the complaint is that he is studying economy too much in his department. I am sure he must feel highly honoured when he finds the self-constituted leader of the Patron organization complaining of the economy practised by the hon. Minister in his department. I did not rise to discuss that matter, but I wish to ask the hon. Postmaster General three questions affecting his department. First, I would like to know how the special delivery system is working, and, in the next place, I would like some information from him respecting the postal note system. I wish to draw his attention to what I think is a fault in the postal note system. It has been organized for the purpose of sending small amounts through the country. If you send $5 you pay perhaps 2 cents, while if you send 25 cents, you pay an equal sum for it. I think a change should be made in the system, providing that the charge for transmission should be on a pro rata basis. I believe that would be a more reasonable method. I understand that there has been a change in the registered letter system of the country. Under the present system, persons sending registered letters containing money through the mails have, in case of their loss, found great difficulty in securing the return of the money posted in a registered letter. I understand the department is making a change, whereby, in the event of a registered letter being lost, the amount of money contained in it shall be made good.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend (Mr. Ingram) has asked a question in regard to the special delivery system, which is somewhat vague, but if he desires to know whether the public is availing itself of the privilege, I may say that I understand the public is. I understand that, in Toronto, it is used to a considerable extent, and that while at first one person was sufficient to deliver all the special letters, the number has been increased to two, and I think that shortly three will be required. I think the number of special delivery letters in Toronto is about 600 a month. In reference to the postal note charges, we must have a minimum. I think the minimum charge for a postal note is 1 cent.

Mr. INGRAM. I thought it was 2 cents.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No. I think it is 1 cent. I do not think we could have a lower charge than that. The highest charge is 3 cents for $5. I think it is 1 cent up to a certain amount, 2 cents up to $2 or $3, and 3 cents for the balance up to $5. That is the very principle that the hon. gentleman suggests. There is not much margin left for a greater division, as we have no centimes in this country. In regard to the question as to whether there is a change in the registered letter system, I suppose the hon. gentleman refers to the legislation that is now going through the House. I explained the proposal to the House upon that measure. Of course, it is not law yet, although the Bill has received the sanction of the Senate as well as of this House.

Mr. BEATTIE. I would like to ask the hon. Postmaster General a question. The letter carriers of London have received no statutory increases for the past three years, although they consider they are justly entitled to them. I would like to know if the Government have any intention of paying these back statutory increases.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Government have no intention of paying anything except what the Estimates indicate. The Government do not consider the law as creating a liability in regard to increases.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I cannot allow this item to pass without saying a word or two upon it. A good deal has been said about the small remuneration that letter carriers receive throughout the country. I have been looking up the question, and I find that in Winnipeg letter carriers get $530 a year, and in Toronto $546 a year. That statement is based on the Estimates placed before us to-day. Gentlemen from the city do not estimate the remuneration for labour in the same way that we farmers in the country do. The average wage paid to farm labourers for a number of years is very small indeed. The report of the Ontario Bureau of Industries for 1897 is the last we have, but I have an advance report for 1898, which gives the wages of farm labourers, without board, for the year at $244. In 1897 the average wage in the country without board was $236, and in 1896 it was $243. The average from 1888 to 1897 was $251. I think that statement is correct. I know whereof I speak when I speak of farm labourers. It is a very small remuneration, and I am sorry to say that the condition of the farmers of Ontario has not been such that they have not been enabled to pay a higher salary. The salaries that letter carriers in cities are receiving to-day are more than double that which farm labourers are getting throughout the country. The occupation of letter carriers does not require a great amount of education. They must be able to read the addresses on newspapers and letters, and I suppose they have to be respectable, decent individuals, and keep themselves properly dressed. But, I would say that if these places were put up to competition, for every one that could be engaged you would have ten ready to take their places. We must see that men in the employ of the Government get fair remuneration for their services, but in this case the employment is steady, and although they have to go out in all weathers, letter carriers are not exposed to the inclemency of winter weather in the country, where a snowstorm is more serious in its effects than in the city. There is a class of post offices in the country where the remuneration is very small, such as post offices where there is no place of business or little store. In the cities the letters are delivered free at the expense of the whole country, and where a farmer throws his house open to accommodate the community with their mail matter, I think he should receive better compensation. As has been stated, there is often competition for the post offices in the small towns and villages, because people have an idea that it brings them incidental trade, but that does not apply to the small post offices in country districts. As to the letter carriers, taking into consideration the services they render, and the qualifications required from them, I think they get a fair remuneration.

Mr. OSLER. Personally I congratulate the Postmaster General on the reduction in the postal letter rates which he has effected. I wish to give him full credit for that. I believe that the present loss of revenue on account of it will soon be made up by the increased business, but I hope that he will not economize at the expense of the officers of the department. The city letter carriers are quite differently placed from officials in the country. Their rent is high, their living expenses are higher, and they consequently deserve more recognition from the Government. I agree that the remuneration to country postmasters is entirely inadequate, for I do not think it is proper that important correspondence should be sent to a post office where the person in charge only receives $10 or $12 a year. I do not believe these officials should be unduly paid, but I for one would not object to seeing them better paid. If the letter carriers entered the service expecting this annual increase, or if it was morally certain they should get it, then the Government should pay it to them. I notice in going over the salaries that the letter carriers in Toronto are paid smaller salaries than the letter carriers in almost any of the other cities. In Toronto post office the salaries average $546 a year, in Ottawa $600, in London $550, in Hamilton $550. The difference is very small, but nevertheless the Toronto letter carriers are entitled to the highest pay given to any letter carriers, and specially in view of the fact that there are only four temporary clerks in that office.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I appreciate the reference of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Osler) to whatever action I may have taken in the department, and I am glad that it meets with his approval. Whatever may have been the case in the past, these Estimates at all events provide for the increase of salaries to letter carriers, and are to that extent, on the line which the hon. gentleman approved of. I would say generally, that I have had under consideration the adoption of a scheme which would be some incentive to letter carriers who faithfully discharge their duties, even after they attain their maximum. If the prospect of an increase to $600 serves the useful purpose of stimulating them to efficient service, as I presume it does, I would be glad to go a step further and provide some prize for efficiency after the maximum salary has been attained. If a scheme like that can be evolved, it would probably quite compensate for any temporary disappointment which these officials have experienced. I may say, that this scheme is not yet sufficiently ready for submission to my colleagues in the Government or to Parliament, but I have had it in contemplation. As to those postmasters who receive $10 a year it will be found that the quantity of business attended to is nominal and that these offices are established on the routes of couriers where a bag is deposited for the convenience of a few neighbours, and the income of the office is not more than perhaps $10 a year, representing about one letter each day. They can in no sense be called regular post offices.

Mr. MARTIN. In how many cities in Canada is there free distribution by letter carriers ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Halifax, St. John, Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, Kingston, Toronto, Hamilton, London, Brantford, Winnipeg, Vancouver, Victoria.

Mr. MARTIN. What is the smallest city in which there is free distribution ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Fredericton, the capital of New Brunswick, has in a sense a delivery, but it is rather unique. There is a letter carrier there who has been on duty since ante-confederation days, and who has some peculiar privileges and perquisites. The population is about 8,000, but it is not a fair sample of a city with free distribution. The next lowest in population is probably the city of Brantford, with a population of 18,000.

Mr. MARTIN. Some years ago it was proposed to extend that privilege to Charlottetown, the capital of Prince Edward Island. Charlottetown, has a population of probably 16,000, double the population of Fredericton. There is not a province in the Dominion without one city at least having this accommodation, and Charlottetown being rapidly growing, and the Postmaster General having shown himself progressive in other ways, he ought to see his way to extend the free letter delivery to the capital of the island province.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will take the matter into consideration.

Mr. MARTIN. The population is up to the limit of other cities to which accommodation has been given.

Mr. SEMPLE. I think there is no department of the Government that has received more attention than the Post Office Department, and I believe this fact is appreciated through the length and breadth of Ontario. I know some who carry the mails for too little, because the contracts are let by competition. Whoever is the lowest, and furnishes the proper security, gets the contract, whether he is a Conservative or a Reformer. It is gratifying to find hon. gentlemen opposite complaining of too much economy in some respects, and wanting the expenditure increased. I think the people of Ontario appreciate the economy that has been practised by the Postmaster General; yet I think he might very well consider the cases of some of these small post offices in Ontario where the postmaster receives only $10 or $15 a year, and see if he cannot give them some increase. Many of the salaries paid in the cities are too large, and might be reduced, while some of these country postmasters who are receiving a very small pittance, ought to be paid more.

Mr. WALLACE. I did not quite understand the answer given by the Postmaster General to the hon. member for London (Mr. Beattie) as to whether he has definitely decided not to pay the back allowance to these letter carriers. Has the Minister got an answer as to that ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. What I stated to the hon. member for London was, that the Estimates set forth all that the Government have decided to recommend to the House. I added that the Government did not recognize the law as creating a legal liability on the part of the Crown for increases of salary.

Mr. WALLACE. I suppose that, stripped of all verbiage, that means that the Minister is not going to give the letter carriers this back pay. I regret that, because I think they had fairly earned it. The Minister has not reduced the expenditure in his department, but has increased it; and if he desired to practice economy, he could have applied it somewhere else. Can he give us approximately the amount of the expenditure of his department for the year just closed ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The accounts have not been made up yet; but I think the expenditure will be within the appropriation.

Mr. WALLACE. While the revenues of the Post Office Department are increasing, the employees, especially those to whom I have referred, are fairly entitled to consideration; but the Minister has decided, as I judge from his language, not to recognize any legal liability, and not to give any further increase. I think his economies might be applied in other directions. For instance, I understand that the Government in their contracts with the railway companies for the carrying of the mails, are paying about the same as they did when the railways of Canada came into existence. Is that correct ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The remuneration to the railways is not uniform. Some are paid so much per train mile, and some are paid so much per mile of railway per annum, the remuneration, I suppose, varying according to the service rendered. Although the rate per train mile may be the same as it was many years ago, yet the volume of mail matter carried is in many instances greater than it was many years ago.

Mr. WALLACE. In many instances I have no doubt it is ; but as the number of trains carrying mails is much larger, I assume that there would be no very material increase in that respect. The amounts that are paid to the railway companies are so very large that I think it is time the Postmaster General, who is studying what can be saved in his department, should devote some attention to that subject. I would like to ask him if he has made special inquiry into that subject, or whether he proposes to make reductions or to make new contracts with the railway companies for carrying mails.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not think I have disturbed any of the railway contracts that my predecessors left to me, or reduced the allowances they had contracted to make. I suppose my hon. friend would scarcely approve of my recommending the doing away of any allowances which his Government assented to.

Mr. WALLACE. Why ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Because my hon. friend's Government, no doubt, did what he thought was right in this respect.

Mr. WALLACE. Surely, you are not going to stand still ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have not as yet declared any want of confidence in the good judgment of my hon. friend or his colleagues in regard to the rates allowed to the railways. Perhaps they might properly be revised. For the benefit of my hon. friend's Government, of course, I would rather assume them to be correct than otherwise, but if my hon. friend will point out to me any railway mail contracts which he thinks should be revised, I shall be extremely pleased to give them my attention.

Mr. WALLACE. I would then ask the hon. member to resign and have me appointed as Postmaster General to do the work at $7,000 a year, without political responsibility for the policy of the Government otherwise, and I might be able to give him some pointers, but I admire the remarkable coolness with which the hon. Minister assumes it is all right because he says it was done by a former Government, when it was really not done by them.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. WALLACE. No. The state of affairs, according to him, was allowed to go on because the present Government allowed it to go—

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It was passed on from Government to Government.

Mr. WALLACE. His statement that the previous Government were responsible for it because he continued it, is not quite correct. Surely he is not going to ask us to do the work of his department. He coolly asks us to demonstrate how his department can be improved and public money saved, and promises that then he will adopt our programme. What we want to have is further particulars as to the enormous expenditure for carrying the mails by the railways. There is a growing feeling that we are paying them an enormous amount. While at the time those railways began operations and when everything was in a crude state, these figures may have been approximately correct, we were then but trying an experiment, and after that experiment has been tried all these years, it looks to me as if the Postmaster General, with all his courage, was afraid to tackle the railways, though he has no hesitation in tackling the poor mail contractors who carry the mails at from $50 to $300 a year.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend is giving away his secrets. He has been behind the scenes evidently.

Mr. WALLACE. I do not know what the hon. Minister means, and would ask him to explain.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If these contracts were bad, why did you not correct them ?

Mr. WALLACE. I am not saying they were bad, but that while the Minister can courageously attack the mail carriers, who are performing services for twice the money value they received, who are doing work for the Government at less pay than they will do it for a private individual—and in this I am not speaking about the larger contracts, some of which may be quite high enough or even too high, but of the ordinary mail carriers throughout the country—he is afraid to devote his attention to the railway rates for carrying the mails, involving millions of dollars in expenditure. I would invite the Postmaster General to open up that question if he has the courage to do it. It will not do for him to say that he is simply continuing the contracts which existed previously to his coming into office. That will hardly be accepted as a satisfactory answer. We want him to say that this state of affairs is satisfactory to him, or if not that he will have it investigated and make it satisfactory. We would like to know whether he proposes to have an investigation and revise the prices paid these railway companies, and whether he is prepared to tell us what other countries pay for similar and corresponding services ?

Mr. HAGGART. Let me supplement some of the remarks my hon. friend has just made. If I remember rightly, it is only about a year or two ago when the hon. gentleman was talking in the same vein as my hon. friend from York, and wanted the appointment of a commission for the purpose of regulating the railway rates. I knew at the time that he was treading on very dangerous ground. I do not think he ever applied for a commission, because he knew that its report would be such that he would not dare to come down and ask for a vote to carry it out. The Government has given the power into his own hands to fix the remuneration for the railway companies. We did it when in power, and in justice to the department I must say that I think the railway companies are not getting a larger amount than they are entitled to. I think that if the hon. gentleman had a commission appointed for the purpose of investigating this question, the result would be that he would find himself in a pretty bad hole. I do not see a vote in the Estimates for this commission, and I am glad to see that the Postmaster General has taken the power into his own hands, which the statute gives him, to pay what rates he thinks proper. If we were to follow the plan of the United States, I can assure the Postmaster General that he would have to pay a far greater rate to the railway companies for the carriage of the mails than he does at present. While on this subject, I would ask the hon. gentleman if, in all his improvements, he has ever considered the question of a personal delivery of the mails, the same as they have in Great Britain. I inquired into that system thoroughly when I was in the department, and I came to the conclusion that by adopting that system you could dispense with a number of mail carriage contracts in the well-settled sections of the country. Instead of having a number of contracts for carrying the mails, you could adopt this system of personal delivery, which would be as cheap and, perhaps, cheaper than the present system. The hon. gentleman might try it in some part of the country where it could be properly tested namely, parts of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. I think that he will find that, by a thorough change, doing away with these little offices throughout the country and with the numerous contracts for carrying the mails, he could adopt a system of delivery, such as they have in the United Kingdom, which would be as cheap as the present system and far more efficient.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I can take no exception to the remarks of my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart)—quite the contrary. As to the adoption of a rural delivery, that is a question that is at present engaging the attention of the people of the United States. Whether they will be able to make it a success remains to be seen. It is a very different matter having a rural delivery in a country like England, small and with compact population, and having a rural delivery in a country like Canada of vast area and with only a few millions of people. With reference to the remuneration of the railways, there is no item in the Estimates for a commission.

Mr. HAGGART.

Mr. HAGGART. There was such an item at one time. We supposed that the commission had sat and had given the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) the benefit of its inquiry.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I received some advice after Parliament prorogued which I thought was well intended and entitled to great weight; and, in consequence, I did not recommend the appointment of a commission.

Mr. WALLACE. What was the amount voted?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Five thousand dollars. That has been saved to the country.

Mr. HENDERSON. What has been the result of the postal note system? Is it generally used, or is it used to as great an extent as the Postmaster General expected? I have rather thought, or have been led to believe, that it has not met with the approval of the general public to the extent the department had hoped.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The postal note system began with one or two denominations of notes in August last. There are now, I think, seventeen different denominations of postal notes. The issue of these extended over many months, and I think the last was not ready for use until December last, or thereabouts. The number used has grown steadily—perhaps fluctuating a little—and I think it is between 60,000 and 70,000 a month at the present time. It seems to be filling a public want.

Mr. WALLACE. The Postmaster General has admitted what we had, perhaps, forgotten in the rush of business—that he had obtained an appropriation of $5,000 about three years ago for the expenses of a commission to inquire into this matter of the money paid to railways. In his early experience in the department he also had conceived the idea that this question required some examination. Now he tells us that this $5,000 was saved to this country, and he claims credit for another economy in his department. He investigated the matter sufficiently to feel justified in asking Parliament for this vote to investigate the question of the rates paid to railways for carrying the mail. He says that some sagacious man said: Don't; and he accepted the advice. Well, could not the Postmaster General take us a little further into his confidence and tell us why his friend advised him not to spend this $5,000 and why he did not have this investigation that, in an earlier stage of his official life he thought was necessary, and why this information is not given to Parliament as to the payment by other countries for similar service rendered by the railway?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I should think that my hon. friend (Mr. Wallace).

with his usual astuteness, would not have asked an answer to the question, after the answer he received from one of his colleagues.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) has no responsibility.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He has been Postmaster General.

Mr. WALLACE. Many years ago. But I want the responsible Minister to give his statement now. The hon. member for Lanark was not responsible for that vote of $5,000, and cannot tell us why it has not been thought proper to hold that investigation into this question of the millions that are paid to the railways.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have already answered the hon. gentleman.

Mr. WALLACE. No, that will not do. That is not an answer.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. What do you want answered?

Mr. WALLACE. I want to know why the Postmaster General, after asking $5,000 for this purpose, has not gone on with that investigation. He would not have asked Parliament for this $5,000 if he had not made any inquiries whether these enormous sums that are paid to the railways year after year should be paid. Has the hon. gentleman investigated this matter? He cannot say; he has not had sufficient time, for he has been in office three years. If he has investigated it, we want to know if he is prepared to come before Parliament and say: I asked Parliament for an appropriation to appoint a commission to investigate this matter, and I proposed to give Parliament the results of that investigation. He has not told us that. Has he done so? Has he done all this work himself, and saved that $5,000? Because he said he saved the $5,000.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I did not say I saved it; I said it was not spent.

Mr. WALLACE. There is not much difference, anyway. But a saving is not made unless the work is done at a less expense, or at no expense. He said the money was not spent. Well, that is no information at all. We know it was not spent. But we want to know why it was not spent, after he had asked Parliament to vote it for that purpose. He has excited our curiosity, and after he has said to us: Now, the money is paid to these railroads—

Mr. MCGREGOR. You have got mixed up.

Mr. WALLACE. I am not aware of any mixing up. If the member for North Essex (Mr. McGregor) is not mixed up, I do not know who is, unless it be our Postmaster General here, who asks for $5,000, and tells us the money was not spent, and when we ask why it was not spent, he says the member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) has given the reason. But that will not do for us. We want to know from the responsible Minister the reason.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Have you no faith in the member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart)?

Mr. WALLACE. I do not think that is the question before the House. The question is whether we have sufficient faith in the Postmaster General, but the Postmaster General is not giving us an opportunity to see whether we have faith in him or not. He asked Parliament for $5,000 for a certain purpose. Then he says he has not spent it, and we ask him the reason why and he does not give us an answer. That may satisfy the member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin), but it is not sufficient for me. The people will want to know why he has not expended this money, what new light he got that enabled him to refrain from spending that $5,000, to desist from making this investigation where he expected to save hundreds of thousands of dollars per year, because I assume that the railway companies are being paid too large an amount. I assume that from the fact that the Postmaster General, after he had investigated the matter, came to the conclusion that he wanted a further investigation, so as to revise all these bargains and make new contracts, after the inauguration of the new state of affairs. But he has not given the information to the House, though usually willing to express himself fully in regard to his department. I think we can fairly ask for a further and more satisfactory explanation from the Postmaster General.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Carried.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Post Office Department—

Contingencies ..... $49,435

Mr. BERGERON. I wanted to say a word or two in regard to the printing and stationery branch of the Post Office Department, but as the hon. Postmaster General very properly said, this is the item upon which I may bring the matter up. My hon. friend was taunted this afternoon with his economy. In fact, I think that even some hon. gentlemen sitting behind him informed him that he was too economical. He may not be entirely au courant of this part of his department, which is altogether too expensive. I do not blame him personally, because I think our friends have their share of guilt for having incurred this expenditure in this little branch of the service. It commenced with a very small expenditure of about $2,000 a year, and to-day the expenditure for printing and stationery amounts to $20,000. I believe that one clerk with a salary of $1,800 a year, and an assistant at probably $400 or $500 a year, would be amply sufficient to administer that part of the department. I am told, and this is the point I want to make, that there are six or seven clerks now employed in that branch.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The superintendent of that branch is Mr. Sydney Smith. He was in attendance at six o'clock, and I asked him to be back here at eight o'clock. I do not see him in the Gallery, and if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) wants to go into the details, I would suggest to him that he allow the matter to stand until Mr. Smith returns.

Mr. BERGERON. I might make an arrangement with the hon. gentleman, that if I should not happen to be here at the moment, that he will keep the item for me.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will do so. Or we may pass it, and take the subject up on another item.

Mr. BERGERON. I have no objection, if the hon. gentleman will see that I have a chance to go into the matter. It is a matter that the hon. gentleman will be glad to know about.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. As soon as Mr. Smith arrives, I will get the hon. gentleman the information that he desires.

Yukon Provisional District—

Amount required for mail service.... $103,000

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will explain this item. We had this up in committee on the supplementary Estimates for the year closed 30th June last. The committee will perhaps remember that we reduced the item. Part of this item includes the carriage of the mails in winter by the Mounted Police, and there is an item in the Mounted Police vote for their service generally. As it is impossible to separate the services, it is thought advisable to allow the mails to be continued to be carried by the Mounted Police, and then, at the end of the fiscal year, the vote will be apportioned between the two departments. I, therefore, wish this item reduced by $64,130, because the services will be performed by the Mounted Police, and when at the end of the fiscal year it is ascertained what proportion to charge to this department it will be charged to the Post Office. There is no necessity for taking the vote twice, because the Mounted Police vote will cover the service between Dawson and Bennett, and we will append a note if necessary, that when we come to the Mounted Police vote, and when the fiscal year is closed, there will be charged from that vote the proper proportion to the Post Office Department.

Mr. BERGERON. I suppose the Minister cannot say what will be the proportion for his department?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No one can tell that now; it will have to be apportioned by the officers of the department. I have not charge of the Mounted Police, but nevertheless, they perform the service when instructed to do so. I move to reduce the vote of $103,000 by the sum of $64,130, leaving a balance of $38,870.

Mr. WALLACE. On what basis do you get that figure?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Of course it is a service that is in its infancy, and whilst I am giving these figures at present as to the expenditure in sight, as the season advances there may be some other expenses which will be provided for in the Supplementaries of next year. My hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) reminds me that 10 per cent has been taken off this vote, but I am now giving the full face value, and not considering that. The full amount my department requires is $38,870, made up as follows: Salary, postmaster at Dawson, $3,200; clerks at Dawson, $7,200; board about $9,000; Mr. James's salary, $2,000.

Mr. WALLACE. Who is Mr. James?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He is a first-class railway mail clerk that I transferred to Skagway to take charge of this service. His salary, including mileage, in the railway mail service, would amount to about $1,500 a year, and I undertook, in consideration of his going to Skagway, to make his salary equal to $2,000 a year and his board. I explained all this in the supplementary Estimates. I have to come to Parliament for this, as under the Act I could not pay more than the statutory allowance for his office. I thought it unreasonable to transfer him from the service in older Canada without making it worth his while, and he has proved himself an excellent officer. The total expenditure for Mr. James is estimated, salary, $2,000 and board, $720. We give the postmaster at Bennett, Mr. Kane, $1,750, which includes his board, we thinking that if we allow him $720 for his living expenses, his salary would be about $1,000. For the mail service between Bennett and Dawson and Bennett and Atlin and Bennett and Skagway, we estimate $10,000, and incidental expenses, $5,000. The contract made with Mr. Irvine, or with the Canadian Pacific Navigation Company, of which he is manager, is about $250 a round trip between Dawson and Bennett, and $50 between Atlin and Bennett, and if the season lasts the usual length, it would take $10,000 to provide for that contract.

Mr. BERGERON. It is not my intention to propose any increase in that expenditure, but we have heard lately that living at Dawson and at other places in that part of the country is very expensive, and if the employees are paid too small a salary, it will take all their salary for them to live. This would leave them open to temptation to make money in other ways, something which I am sure the Government would not tolerate. Under these circumstances, would it not be better to pay the employees higher salaries? The hon. Minister said that the salary of the postmaster at Dawson was $3,200. What does he think that salary would be equivalent to here? It is said that the population of Dawson is about 40,000.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is not so much as that.

Mr. BERGERON. It may soon reach that, as it is a place where population may increase very rapidly. A postmaster in a city of 40,000 population in this part of the country would have as much salary as that. I speak purely in the interest of the service when I say that it is better that the employees should be well paid, so that they will be encouraged to attend to their duties, and will not attempt to make money in other ways. I am perfectly satisfied to leave the matter with the hon. the Postmaster General.

Mr. WALLACE. I am forced to disagree with the suggestion of the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron), and to agree with the Postmaster General in the course he has adopted. Once you fix a salary at a certain figure, it is difficult if not impossible to reduce it when the expenses of living have been reduced; whereas by fixing the salary at the right figure, and giving in addition a living allowance which is fair and reasonable, when the cost of living falls, you can reduce the living allowance without reducing the salary. In that regard I think the Postmaster General has taken the right course. I would like to have further particulars in regard to the expense of conducting the mail service, and with regard to what the Minister proposes. I understood him to say a few weeks ago in the House that up to the time navigation opened, he would utilize the North-west Mounted Police, and after that he would have the mails carried by contract. Am I correct in that understanding?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. WALLACE. I think the method of utilizing the North-west Mounted Police for such a service is not a good one. While it might have been useful in the early days of the country, it should not be made permanent. If it were, the Minister should give us some sort of statement or calculation which could be revised afterwards as to the cost. It is not quite satisfactory to have the whole of these expenses charged to the North-west Mounted Police, and then to have a readjustment of the accounts in a year or so hence. We should know approximately, at any rate, what these additional expenses are, so that we can charge each department with the amount which properly belongs to it. The Minister does not propose to do that, but he proposes to ask the House for a definite sum of $38,870. He proposes to pay the postmaster at Dawson $3,200, and ten clerks each $60 a month, amount to $7,200, and then, he makes an allowance for the board of the ten clerks, and I presume the postmaster as well.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, the postmaster's board is included in the $3,200.

Mr. WALLACE. Then it looks to me as if $9,000 for board would be a most extraordinary sum to pay—about $3 a day for each. I remember some years ago, when the facilities for getting into Dawson were not so good as they are to-day, the manager of one of the transportation companies told me that he would furnish all the provisions necessary for a man's sustenance for one day for one dollar. My hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Earle) informs me that the railroad is now built to the head waters of the Yukon River, so that there is no difficulty in taking in provisions and supplies, and $900 a year for the board of each of these officials would be a pretty large amount. Mr. James gets a salary of $960 and $540, which would be the salary he would receive here as a first-class mail clerk.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am estimating $75 a month for the living expenses of these clerks at Dawson City. I do not think they can live respectably for less.

Mr. WALLACE. Where is Mr. Cane located?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. At Lake Bennett. He had once the distinguished honour of being a resident at Newmarket, in North York.

Mr. WALLACE. That is not in North York. It is in West Ontario.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It soon will be in North York.

Mr. WALLACE. Yes, I see the hon. gentleman is preparing for that contingency. The expenses of this section of the Post Office Department for the last fiscal year were $103,000. That is a very large expenditure for a very unsatisfactory service; and although the Government have not made adequate provision for an effective service, the Postmaster General evidently does not anticipate that there will be any less expense, because he has put that $103,000 in the Estimates for the current fiscal year. It is not the duty of the Mounted Police, as a permanent work, to carry the mails. That work does not comport with the status of men who are required to act as peace-makers, and who have the task of preserving the peace and dignity of the country. If they are not required for that duty, they should be taken out of the country and sent where they are required or their services dispensed with. I think the Postmaster General made a mistake in not providing for an efficient service, and is persisting in that mistake in continuing to use the North-west Mounted Police as mail carriers. How often does he propose, during the present year, to carry the mails in and out of Dawson?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman is in error in assuming that the employment of the Mounted Police, in carrying the mails, is to be a permanent affair. The maintenance of the mail service in the winter involves considerable outlay in supplies and equipments of various kinds—dogs, as well as huts and provisions for the men.

Mr. WALLACE. Dogs are cheap.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Not dogs fit for this service, and I think it would not be safe to take this work away from the police and put in the hands of private contractors altogether. It is the policy of the department to transfer, as rapidly as is consistent with safety, this service from the Mounted Police to contractors, and I have an advertisement in the press calling for tenders to be received up to the 24th July for the carrying of the mails, in order to see whether we can get parties who will tender for the service and put up sufficient security to warrant our entrusting them with it. I would prefer not dispensing with the Mounted Police all at once, but to work gradually into the hands of the contractors as we become satisfied that we have contractors competent to do the work. In the coming winter, we propose, if possible, to have a weekly service, but intend having a fortnightly service by the Mounted Police and a fortnightly service by a private contractor. Then, if after the year's operation, we find that the private contractors are able successfully to perform the service, the department might feel justified in wholly dispensing with the Mounted Police and having the whole work done by contractors. But you cannot tell what private contractors might do. They may give security that they will perform their contracts and then fail in the performance. We have an organization there now, and I am not willing to risk the whole mail service on one chance, but propose to gradually divorce it from the Mounted Police, as we find the contractors competent to carry on the work. The summer contract begins with the opening of navigation, and continues during the period of navigation, and that was awarded to Captain Irving, of Victoria. Speaking from memory, the contract is $250 for the round trip between

Mr. WALLACE.

Bennett and Dawson, and $50 for the round trip between Atlin and Bennett. It is estimated that the payments for the services will cost about $300 a week for a weekly mail. It starts from each end every week. I would like to give a weekly mail service in the winter, but that is a question of ways and means. I am in hopes that we will be able this winter to perform part of the services by horses instead of dogs. When the ice is well formed on Lake Bennett horses can go from Bennett to the head of Lake Labarge, which is, I think, 130 miles. They could not start on the ice as soon as dogs, but there will only be a few days' difference. By using horses we will reduce the expenditure and improve the efficiency, because horses will be able to carry bigger loads and get more quickly over the ground. Two horses may be used, in tandem. If we can succeed in the summer in making a good trail, we may be able to extend the horse service a considerable distance by getting round the points where there is rapidly running water that now interrupts the winter service.

Mr. WALLACE. I can only express my dissatisfaction with the very crude system adopted after three years' experience, during which the necessity of having an efficient mail service was evident to everybody. And even now he tells us that he does not want to give a contract, because the contractors may not fulfil their duties, and he wants to leave it with the Mounted Police until they may by degrees work into a system of contracts. I think that is a very unsatisfactory statement. He tells us that to Atlin and Dawson City from Lake Bennett it will cost him about $300 a week. If that service continued the year around, the cost would be $15,600 a year. But he is asking between six and seven times that amount. He was voted between six and seven times that amount last year for a fortnightly service, presumably—but not a fortnightly service actually. It may have been a fortnightly service in the sense that mails were despatched every two weeks, but, so far as delivery is concerned, a point which was of vital importance not only to the country, but to the Government, it was not fortnightly at all. Hon. gentlemen opposite were inaugurating a system of government and appointing officials for that territory, upon whom they should have had a firm grip. But they make the excuse now, that they could not properly govern the territory because it was so far away and so difficult of access. But they made it twice as far away by having a mail service only half as frequently as was necessary. The very first thing that the Government should have done in that territory was to provide an efficient mail service, so as to have complete control over the officials there, the Mounted Police, the manager, or commissioner, and all the others. This they neglected. The Postmaster General, I assume, was looking after other matters in his department, and neglected this branch of the public service. An enormous sum of money was voted last year, and he proposes that a practically similar amount shall be voted this year. The Minister cuts it down to $38,800 now, but he said that this matter of the Mounted Police will have to be settled at a later date. I think he might have given us an estimate at any rate, so that we might make a comparison of the expenditure of the department for the various years, which we cannot do with from $60,000 to $100,000 unsettled. The most important part the Postmaster General has not given attention in a way the country had a right to expect. He has spent the money, $103,000, apparently, and he proposes to spend the same amount this year, but he has not provided efficient mail service to that district. It is true that, now that others have made arrangements, now that the railway has been completed from the Pacific to the head waters of the Yukon, thus forming one chain of communication, and now that there are numerous, almost innumerable, steamboats on the river, he will probably do better. I think that the importance of the work and the large expenditure made there will justify the adoption of a system under which the mails will be carried down by almost every reliable steamer, affording the people the best facilities, even if they charge a higher price for carrying the letters to that country. At any rate, to afford the most prompt facilities for doing business in that country—a business that is constantly spreading out and becoming of enormous magnitude—the Government should have done these things. In the first instance, the Post Office Department should have been alive to its duty in this matter, which, I am afraid, it has not been—and I am afraid it does not realize even to-day its responsibility in this matter.

Mr. DAVIN. I do not find that the hon. Minister has given any explanation of the defectiveness of the postal service in the Yukon. He is, of course, aware that the people have been complaining everywhere, and the newspapers have been flooded with complaints that letters have been delayed for months and months—not one or two letters, but letters delayed by the wholesale. I remember one of my brother members showing me a letter that had taken a very long time—I have forgotten just how long—to come down from the Yukon. It has struck the public, and it has certainly struck me, that if a contract were given to a private firm, to one of the efficient firms transacting large business there and showing great executive power, the service would have been pretty well attended to.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not think so.

Mr. DAVIN. I shall be very glad, if the Minister can show here to Parliament, and through Parliament to the country, why it was that that defective postal system from here to the Yukon prevailed. Probably, he can give us a satisfactory explanation, but that satisfactory explanation has not yet been given. It seems to me that now is the time for it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I had to choose between a private contractor for carrying the mails and the Mounted Police. My own judgment suggested the Mounted Police. If they could not perform the service efficiently, I doubt if there is another company in the world that could have done it. They performed the service as well as human beings could perform it. I intend to adhere to the police until I have proof that the service can be as efficiently performed otherwise. My hon. friend (Mr. Davin) will have an opportunity of judging who is right in the case during the present season, because I intend to test the system of contractor or Mounted Police. It may be found that, with improved facilities for transport—for example, the construction of the railway now completed to Bennett—that the contractors can be depended upon. I am satisfied that, in the work they have done, the Mounted Police were as efficient as any force could have been, and they had all the abundant means and the best facilities that could be afforded at that time.

Post Office—

Mail service ..... $2,207,000

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. On this item the hon. gentleman can speak upon the subject mentioned a moment ago.

Mr. BERGERON. I want to get some explanation of item 39, on page 20: Printing and stationery, $21,000. Last year it was $18,500. I would like the Minister to explain why this increase is necessary. I may say that my impression is that this branch is costing altogether too much. It has increased from year to year, until to-day it has attained altogether too great proportions.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Post Office Department is an expanding department, and you cannot expand the Post Office Department without feeling the consequence in printing and stationery. Every time you open a new post office it means new supplies, new forms. Every time there is a change in a post office, it means new forms, and whenever there is an expansion, as, for example, when we established the postal note system, it involves new forms, new books and new printing. Now, this is the explanation offered to me by Mr. Smith, who has charge of that branch, the postal stores. Last year the main Estimates contained $18,500 for printing and stationery, and the supplementaries, $3,808.33, making a total for 1898-99, of $22,308.33. The expenditure for the fiscal year closing on 30th June last, was $22,292.02, leaving an unexpended balance of $16.31. The vote in the present Estimates for the current year is $21,000, as against an actual expenditure last year of $22,292.02. If that $21,000 sees us through this year, it will mean that the expenditure on these items will be $1,292.03 less. But if it does not see us through, and there is a small increase for printing and stationery, it will be simply because of the normal growth of the Post Office Department. This branch of the service is in the hands of an officer who has not his superior in the service, I am satisfied, in fidelity and in efficiency, than Mr. Sydney Smith. He has been in the service for many years, is the son of an old Postmaster General himself, and he has enjoyed, and deservedly so, the confidence of every Postmaster General.

Mr. BERGERON. How many years has he been in this branch?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Twenty-five years. I have found him to sympathize with my efforts to conduct the service efficiently, but without any cheese-paring, and with a due regard to the taxpayers as well as to the service itself. I am satisfied you could not have it conducted more efficiently than it is.

Mr. BERGERON. I am not criticising the administration of my hon. friend, because this expenditure commenced long ago. I think it is one of those matters that it is well for us to discuss, because we might learn something from each other. Now, when Mr. Smith commenced, how many employees were there in that branch? I want to know how we have reached that expenditure.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If you mean the clerks in the stores branch, that is one branch of my department in which there has been a very considerable reduction in the staff. The stores branch, as it is called, contains the supplies that have to be distributed all through the country to the postmasters, such as mail bags, locks, office equipments, obliterating stamps, &c. There are certain men in that branch who receive requisitions and who make up parcels and send them off by mail. Now, the number at present engaged in that work is considerably less than it was when I took office, and the staff is, I am sure, well employed.

Mr. BERGERON. How many are there?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There were over forty-five in that branch when I took office, there are thirty-eight now. The salaries amount to about $5,000 less per annum than when I took office.

Mr. BERGERON. And when Mr. Smith took hold of that branch, how many were there?

Mr. MULOCK.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. At one time the distribution of stores took place from Ottawa for Ontario and Quebec, while the distribution for the maritime provinces, and Manitoba and the Territories took place from those districts; there was a scattered staff to attend to it. The service has now been gathered in and operated from a central point, Ottawa, and that has involved a concentration of the staff here to carry on the service instead of in a divided way, as heretofore. But that was before confederation. After confederation the distribution for those provinces and the Territories took place from Ottawa, and the staff grew from half a dozen before confederation to some forty-five three years ago, and now it is thirty-eight.

Mr. BERGERON. Then, if I understand my hon. friend, when he took charge of the department, there were 45 employees?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is as I am informed.

Mr. BERGERON. And there are 38 now, seven less, making a saving of about $5,000 a year.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. About that.

Mr. BERGERON. Yet we are asked to vote more money.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will explain to my hon. friend that I do not consider that this vote is put in the right way. It has always been put in that way, and I do not think it ought to be. There is in the service generally a class of expenditure for what is called "clerical and other assistance."

Mr. BERGERON. I am speaking of the second item, printing and stationery.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Well, then there is nothing in that item for wages or salaries.

Mr. BERGERON. That is only for forms and printing?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, forms and printing drawn on the Department of the Secretary of State.

Mr. BERGERON. Does clerical and other assistance come in conjunction with that?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, it is scattered through the department generally. It is an extra item.

Mr. INGRAM. I would like to ask the hon. Postmaster General if the clerical and other assistance has increased in his department in the last few years?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. A number of employees may change. There may be a reduction in a certain class and an increase in a certain other class.

Mr. INGRAM. Speaking generally, has the number been increased ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Speaking generally, since I have been in the department, there has been a reduction of six or seven.

Mr. INGRAM. I see that in respect to printing and stationery, the hon. gentleman says that there is an increase. He also says that the staff in the department has been decreased. I wish to draw his attention to the fact, that within the past few years, the officers in the post offices throughout the country, have had their duties increased by reason of the additional forms being issued by the department here which compels the officers in the different post offices to put additional work upon their clerks. I do not think the department have increased the number of their employees in the post offices sufficiently to keep up with that extra work and, there being a decrease in the number of clerks here, I see no reason why the number of clerks in the outside post offices should not be increased in view of the extra work imposed upon them. I know that the St. Thomas post office has always been short-handed, and that about a year ago one of the clerks resigned. I mentioned this matter last session and asked the hon. Postmaster General if he would be kind enough to look into the matter and see whether the office was short-handed or not. The staff are overworked. They frequently have to remain to a late hour to overtake the duties imposed upon them. They go to work at six in the morning and in some cases are compelled to work on Sunday to keep up with their work. I trust that the hon. Postmaster General will give this matter his consideration.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Ingram) did call my attention to this matter last session, and I did look into it. I sent an officer to St. Thomas and he did not report a shortage, but he reported a defect in the administration of the office, and I think, he, to some extent, corrected it. There was only one wicket and only one person serving the public at the wicket. The result was that there was generally a congested state of affairs in the post office. There being but one wicket, the other clerks, who might not be otherwise occupied, were unable to serve the public and the public were kept waiting. Mr. Bennett directed that there should be two wickets and two clerks attending to the public. He reported that as an entire solution of the difficulty. My hon. friend, of course, will know the facts better than I.

Mr. INGRAM. There have been two wickets in the post office since the building was erected, but the difficulty is that at the noon hour, when the principal mail trains come into the city and at four o'clock, when the children come from the schools and naturally crowd the post office, with the changing of the mails, the making up and distributing of mail matter taking place in the post office, it is impossible for the clerks to have both the wickets open. The public complaint was due to the fact of the young man resigning his position and his place not being filled. I am sure if the hon. Postmaster General will look carefully into the facts and into the report he will find that to be an actual fact. There has been no fault found, as far as I know, in respect to the administration of the post office, the cause of the trouble being simply that they are short-handed.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. A lack of good management.

Mr. INGRAM. I think you will find that Mr. Bennett's report will bear out the statements I am making.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am quite as solicitous as the hon. gentleman is to see that the office is sufficiently administered. I shall be pleased if the hon. gentleman will come to my department and look over Mr. Bennett's report. If he takes exception to it, from his local knowledge I will attach much weight to what he advises. My own impression is that Mr. Bennett has reported that the arrangement which has been made meets all the requirements.

Mr. INGRAM. I shall be glad to avail myself of the opportunity of reading the report.

Mr. BERGERON. I imagine that this would be the proper time to ask my hon. friend if anything has been done in regard to the appointment of a postmaster at Montreal ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Nothing has been done yet. I found that the post office at Montreal had been managed on somewhat ancient lines and I thought it advisable, before installing a new postmaster, to a large extent, to modernize the system of management so that he would start with a fair chance. I have had two of the most experienced officers of my department take charge of the office, Mr. Bennett and Mr. Armstrong. They are not my appointees, but are experienced men, none better in the service, and they have made great changes and improvements, and I think they have put the office in a satisfactory condition. They are working at it quietly, not being always in attendance now. They were in constant attendance for a while, but one was taken off and the other remained in constant attendance. Now, the other goes back and one will take it for a week at a time. In this way we are getting the office running on proper lines. I am in hopes that, in the course of the summer, we will get it in good working order.

Mr. BERGERON. And then the postmaster will be appointed ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am looking forward to making the appointment when the office is in good shape. I want to put it in such shape that there will be no excuse for it deteriorating. Montreal is almost, if not the most important post office in Canada. It is not only important to Montreal, but to Canada, that the mail service shall be equal to all the possibilities, and I intend to bring it up to that state of efficiency.

Mr. BERGERON. A difficulty arose there last summer, or fall, about the letter carriers riding on the street cars and then being deprived of that privilege. They sent a petition to the hon. Postmaster General. What has been the result?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Street Railway Company were paid a contract price for some years for the transportation of letter carriers.

Mr. BERGERON. How much was it?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think $2,400. They demanded that it should be increased about $10,000—I think $800 a month. It was thought not to be in the public interest that mail clerks should be riding on the cars with too great freedom, because it would perhaps induce them to slip off from their beats. Moreover, it was impossible to accede to the demands of the railway company, but a satisfactory arrangement with the company was made by which the company issue a special letter carriers' ticket and we pay for the service that is rendered. The post office purchases a lot of letter carriers' tickets at a considerable reduction, because the letter carriers make short trips. I think everything is satisfactory now.

Mr. WALLACE. What is the estimated cost under that arrangement?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think a little less than the contract price. I think it is a shade less.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the arrangement in Toronto?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is a contract for a lump sum.

Mr. BERGERON. The same as in Montreal?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think a little more than Montreal.

Mr. BERGERON. I wish to bring to the notice of the Minister a communication I have received from a gentleman in the parish of St. Victoire, in the county of Richelieu. They had a mail service there three times a week, and a request was made of Mr. Bruneau, member for the county, to secure a daily mail. Probably Mr. Bruneau brought the matter to the attention of the Minister, because, if I am rightly informed, the post office inspector visited the place in December last, and tenders were asked for the daily carriage of the mails between St. Victoire and Sorel from the 1st of April, 1899. The tenders were opened on the 10th February, but when the 1st of April arrived there was no daily mail. Mr. Bruneau, probably expecting the thing would be done, authorized the postmaster, Mr. Paulhus, to carry the mail every day from the 1st of April, but there was no contract. This was done from the 1st of April to the 27th of April, and this gentleman, writing to me on the 29th of May, says that the three days a week service has been resumed as formerly. It seems that the post office there is kept in a very bad way, and that the mail does not arrive and depart at a proper time, it being a kind of go-as-you-please matter. The gentleman who writes to me, and I suppose you must take it as coming from a gentleman who is a politician, says that if Mr. Paulhus was not a good Grit, he would not remain postmaster very long, because he does not give satisfaction. My correspondent wants to know why the parish of St. Victoire is treated in that way. I would be glad if the Postmaster General would give me some information about it, so that my informant may know what the particulars are.

Mr. BERGERON.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I cannot be expected to give all the details of eight thousand mail contracts, but I will give my recollection of it. The village of St. Victoire is, I think, seven miles from Sorel.

Mr. BERGERON. About that.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The mail service was tri-weekly, beginning at Sorel, which was the only post office connected with St. Victoire, and the member for Richelieu (Mr. Bruneau) pressed me on many occasions with great earnestness to establish a daily mail system, pointing out that there was no telegraphic system to St. Victoire and no railway facilities. The revenue of the post office is about $150, I think, so far as my recollection goes. I told the member for Richelieu (Mr. Bruneau) that I would see what this daily mail service would cost, and so we called for tenders, but the cost was, I believe, more than the gross revenue from the post office, and we would have nothing left to pay the postmaster and other expenses. I did not let the contract, and the matter has remained in that state up to the present time.

Mr. BERGERON. I will send the "Hansard" to the gentleman who wrote to me, and he will get the answer.

Mr. INGRAM. Would the postmaster say whether a contract has been let for carrying the mail by stage from Aylmer to St.

Thomas, and whether the old contract has been cancelled on the air line of the Grand Trunk Railway, connecting those two points ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It was represented to me last winter that it would serve the public convenience better if the mails between St. Thomas and Aylmer were sent by stage, and I directed the calling for tenders for that service. Tenders were received, and before the contract was awarded there was one tender that was lowest, but it appeared to have come in too late. There was a contention about it, and I refused to accede to the view that the tender was in time, and yet I did not like to award the contract to a higher tenderer, and so I solved the problem by directing that the matter should be put up to tender again. I do not remember whether the time for the reception of these tenders has elapsed, or whether the contract has been awarded.

Mr. INGRAM. The department issued orders to those who carry the mails between the station and post office, that that would be discontinued on the 1st of May, but they were again ordered to continue it. I understand that the contract of Mr. Winder had been accepted, that the bonds had been sent to him and accepted, and that afterwards a telephone message asking that the bonds be returned was sent to the postmaster at Aylmer. Mr. Winder has the contract between the Aylmer station and the post office. He is a responsible man, and his tender, as I am informed, is considerably lower than the next one.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Do you mean under the re-advertising ?

Mr. INGRAM. Yes.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have not heard anything about it.

Mr. INGRAM. I am informed by letter that Mr. Winder's tender was $199, and that the next lowest tender was $250, and his second tender $99.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The contract will be awarded to the lowest tenderer, whoever he is, if there is nothing against him.

Mr. INGRAM. Mr. Winder has at present a contract with the department, and he seems to be a very good man.

Mr. GANONG. Can the Postmaster General give me any information with regard to the Grand Manan mail service, to which I called his attention last Friday ? The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) is here, and perhaps he may know about it. I met a gentleman on the street to-night who had recently come from there, and he complained that as yet no arrangement had been made for this mail service. The island is six or seven miles from the mainland, has a population of about 3,000 people, and, as a large amount of business is done there, it is important that this service should be attended to. It is in the interest of the people there that some arrangement should be made at once.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The service is in the charge of the Department of Trade and Commerce. I think the steamer was subsidized under the head of mail subsidies, and when the steamer was taken off the line she was sold. But I understand from the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce that some arrangement had been made.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I believe the service as heretofore performed will be renewed. The parties who were negotiating with the department were unfortunately demanding a sum for services they proposed to render which would have exhausted the entire sum at my disposal in a period of about two months and a half. It was impossible to accede to that proposition, as it would deprive the inhabitants of all services for the balance of the year. I understand that negotiations are going on by telegraph at this moment.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not know whether it is pertinent to this item, but, perhaps, the committee will allow me to inquire whether the Government propose to do anything for a very important service which has a strong claim upon Canada, both from its usefulness and its importance as a large contributor to the Intercolonial Railway. I mean the steamship service between Newfoundland and Cape Breton. It is an admirable service, and has maintained a weekly connection between the island of Newfoundland and North Sydney for every week in the year but one. Last winter it was much obstructed by ice, and did not accomplish quite as valuable a service. The steamer "Bruce," which has been put on that line, furnishes a more rapid communication between every part of Canada and Newfoundland than any other means of communicating with the island. If the Government have at all considered the matter, I can hardly think they would hesitate to show their appreciation of the enterprise of the Messrs. Reid in establishing such an admirable means of communication, and bringing such a large amount of travel and traffic over the Intercolonial and through Canada.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I may say to the hon. leader of the Opposition that negotiations are pending at this very moment between the Government and Mr. Reid on that subject ; but they are hardly in a state as yet to communicate to the House.

Mr. BERGERON. Would this be a proper time to ask my hon. friend about the contract for the ocean mail service of which we have seen something in the papers ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I think we had better wait until the items come up.

Mr. WALLACE. This afternoon I made a few remarks on the question of the mail service, and I propose to refer further to that question. I said that the Postmaster General was quite ready to cut down the payments to those who had mail contracts throughout the country, but that the payments made to the railroads formed a much larger item. The hon. Postmaster General admitted that when he came into office he had asked Parliament to appropriate the sum of $5,000 to investigate the question of the payments to the railway companies for the services they performed; but some good angel whispered into his ear that he had better not do that, and he told us innocently that he had not expended the $5,000, and had, therefore, saved that much to the country. Now, I would like to know who it was whispered this into the Postmaster General's ear. Who was this great benefactor who told him that he had better not investigate these matters? Was it the railroad companies who were anxious that no investigation should take place, because, as the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) told us, if an investigation did take place, the railroad companies would be entitled to a much larger amount for the services they performed. If that be the case, the railroad companies are a very innocent and unsophisticated lot of corporations; but they have not that name. They do not know that they are not paid half or three-fourths what they should be for the services they render; they are quite oblivious to the fact that they are entitled to much more money; and the Postmaster General, by simply shutting up his book and not expending that $5,000, has kept these innocent railway companies in the dark, as to the further amount they would be entitled to if an investigation were held. I assume that the railroad companies would proceed with that investigation if they had the strong case intimated by the present Postmaster General and by a past Postmaster General. These companies carry the mails on their regular trains. It is not on record that they carry a single mail at a time that suits the convenience of the Government unless it suits their own convenience. The service forms part of their regular passenger train equipment; and the Government pays for the officer on board who performs the work. All that the railway companies do is to give a certain space required in a railroad car. I assume that the fair way to do would be to do as the express companies do. The railroad companies are common carriers. They are bound to carry Her Majesty's mails. They are bound to carry the merchandise of anybody who goes to them and pays them a fair tariff for the work performed. Now, we have some thousands of men who are day by day carrying the mails from the railroad stations and from the towns and centres of business all over this country. These men, you would suppose, should be paid a good deal more money than the railroad companies, which simply give a portion of a car for the letters and newspapers to be carried; but when we come to investigate, we find that for the ordinary convenience of mails, apart from the railroads, by horses, by foot, by wagons and other conveyances, all over the country, there is paid the sum of $754,000, or, adding the cost of transferring at the stations, $765,000.

While the railways receive $1,352,000, it looks to me as if the payment to the railways was out of all proportion to what is paid to the ordinary mail contractors. In one case $754,000, and in the other $1,352,000, without tender, and without investigation, although the Postmaster General asked for and received from Parliament an appropriation of $5,000 to make an investigation, which he never made. If you take up the payments to each individual railway company, you will find large sums paid for services, where the railway company is simply running its trains, not for the accommodation of the Post Office Department, but for its own purposes, and as we have had occasion to know, in several instances, when conflicts arose between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canada Atlantic Railway in the Parry Sound district, at Scotia Junction, the mails were delayed twenty-three or twenty-three and a half hours every day. The community was put to great inconvenience, and apparently the Post Office Department was not strong enough to assert that authority which the laws of the country have given it in order to correct this condition of affairs. We are paying these railway companies enormous amounts. Take, as an example, the Kingston district, which is a fair average district, because there are in it some long stretches not very thickly settled, and other portions well settled. In that district the department pays the ordinary land conveyances $37,300, and the railways $68,000 per year, in round figures. The Kingston and Pembroke road receive $7,200 a year, the Bay of Quinté $7,125 a year, and other railways make up an appropriation for that district of the enormous amount of $68,000. The Postmaster General is not doing his duty, when he permits such a state of affairs to continue without investigation and without comparing this expenditure with what other countries pay for similar services. He does not undertake to make a single comparison or statement to this House to show whether we are paying too much or too little. He does not tell us how the scale paid in this country compares with the scale paid in other countries for similar services. We are left completely in the dark as regards this expenditure of $1,352,000. When he is asked what justification there is for that expenditure, what return we receive on what basis it is made, he has to confess that he really does not know. I would like the hon. gentleman to take the House fully into his confidence and tell us why he did not spend that $5,000 in order to make an investigation. It is not at all likely that we are paying too little to these companies, for, if we were, we would find them clamouring for more, as they are not noted for their bashfulness or lack of assertedness in pushing their claims to anything they consider they are entitled to. The hon. gentleman is not doing his duty to this House if he does not tell us to-night on what basis, or for what reason, he is paying these railway companies one and one-third million dollars for carrying the mails, when he is giving very little more than half of that to private contractors, who are day by day, and night by night, carrying the mails over land routes all over the country, and serving every part of the community, cities and towns, as well as districts, hamlets and villages.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Of course, I reply to the hon. gentleman, as he desires a reply, but I can only repeat what I have already said. The Government of which my hon. friend was a member, when in office, followed the example of its predecessors, and left the condition of affairs which I found awaiting me.

Mr. WALLACE. And found satisfactory?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I found that condition of affairs existing, which had received the endorsement of long years of acquiescence by previous Governments, and I do not know that my opinion, whether favourable or otherwise, to the existing arrangements, would determine the question altogether. Still, I attach so much weight to precedent handed down to me by those who have had greater experience, that I carried on the system bequeathed to me by my hon. friend and his associates, and their predecessors, and no doubt he will approve of the respect I had for the legacy left me by the Administration of which he was a member. As regards what is paid in other countries, no doubt the most appropriate country for the purpose of comparison would be the United States, and I understand that the United States pay very much more for the like service than we do. The Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway are the chief railways engaged in carrying Canadian mails, and they continually complain that they are underpaid. In like manner, the Michigan Central, which carries the mails between Fort Erie and the Detroit River, makes the same complaint, and is continually applying for an increase. So that my hon. friend will understand that these innocent, unsophisticated orphans of railway companies are not resting upon their rights, but are continually clamouring for more pay. I have not acceded to their demand; but to relieve my hon. friend's anxiety, I would inform him that I did not change my policy of holding an investigation at the instance of the railway companies, but I thought he would have understood, from what I said before six o'clock, that the suggestion made to me, to which I then alluded, did not emanate from the railway companies, but rather from a member of this House who has had considerable experience in the Post Office Department as one of my predecessors, and who was a colleague of the hon. gentleman. Inasmuch as he gave expression to the same view on the floor of the House, I think it is not necessary for me to name him. My hon. friend can judge who it was who, in the public interest, advised me not to proceed by way of a commission.

Mr. CARGILL. A very important matter has been brought to the attention of the Postmaster General by the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace). It is a revelation to me, at least, that the Government is paying twice as much to the railways of this country for carrying the mails as they are paying for all the other mail service combined throughout the country. That is a matter worthy of the most serious consideration of the Government. As the hon. member for West York has stated, the railways merely supply a car for the purpose of transporting the mail.—

Mr. WALLACE. A quarter of a car.

Mr. CARGILL. They only furnish the space, and the Government pays the employees to take charge of the mail and distribute it. The only expense that the railways are put to is for sufficient steam to carry the mails from one point to another. Very serious complaint is made throughout the country about the very small remuneration that the letter carriers get. These contracts are let by public tender. A number of parties who are anxious to find employment, put in their tenders, and, in many cases, they carry the mails for a good deal less than the work is worth. Of course, that is their fault. At the same time, I think it would be more in the interest of the country if these poor mail carriers in the country got a fair remuneration for the service they render and make the railways carry the mails at a much less price than they are receiving to-day. In the case of the mail carriers, the department dictates terms, making them leave a given point at a certain hour and deliver mails along the route at certain hours during the day. These mail carriers have to comply with the conditions of the Post Office Department or forfeit their job. But, apparently, the department has no control over the railways in this mail service. The railway will not put on additional cars to accommodate the Post Office Department or supply any extra mail service without receiving extra pay. They will carry the mails only on such trains as they run over the road and no others. It seems to me that when they are so well paid they should render the service that is required in the different portions of the country. In the locality where I live they had, at one time, a very good mail service. But the railway came to the conclusion that there was not enough business being done to enable them to run two trains a day. The consequence was that one train was taken off, and we in that section had to be content with one mail a day. Of course, we murmured and complained, and referred the matter to the Post Office Department; but we could not obtain any redress. I believe the Postmaster General is administering this department to the best of his ability and with a desire to do what is best in the interest of the country. I feel satisfied that if he gives careful consideration to this matter which the hon. member for West York has brought very intelligently before him, he will come to the conclusion that the railways are being paid much more liberally for the services rendered than the letter or mail carriers of the country.

Mr. POWELL. I would like to ask the Postmaster General what is the ordinary allowance per mile to railways for the carriage of mail?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The lowest allowance is 2 cents a mile. I think. In 1864 a commission was issued, and they adopted a scale of remuneration—4 cents for what is called baggage car service, the baggagemen employed by the railways handling the bags, receiving and delivering, and 8 cents a mile for a postal car, that is, furnishing a postal car or a portion of the car and carrying the mails and mail clerks. There is another system of remuneration. On the Intercolonial Railway main line we make an allowance of so much per annum per mile. I desire to say 't nas nothing to do with my hon. friend's question—that in referring to Mr. James on a former item, I spoke of him as a first-class mail clerk. I made a mistake. He was a second-class clerk.

Mr. POWELL. What is that allowance on the Intercolonial Railway?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think about $130 per year per mile. On the leading lines of the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway the same system prevails. I endeavour, where the service is only limited, to pay on the train mile or baggage-car basis, but when there are a great many services between two points, as between Hamilton and Toronto, Toronto and Ottawa, and Toronto and Montreal, where the services are frequent, the other system is adopted. I have never, myself, changed a service to so much per mile, but my predecessors have converted many of the ordinary services of so much per train mile to so much per railway mile. I have had to establish mails on certain lines since taking office, and I think in all cases we have paid on the scale adopted in 1864, except sometimes where I have had it at 2 cents a mile.

Mr. POWELL. That is a great deal lower than in the United States, is it not?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The railway men say so. They complain that I treat them very hardly and very unfairly.

Mr. POWELL. Whatever railway men think, the people of the United States think that the railways treat them very hardly over there. Another question I would like to ask the Postmaster General is the amount that we pay in case of special trains for the service. There are some cases of that on the Intercolonial Railway.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The scale is a dollar per train mile. My hon. friend refers to the United States. I may say that a year ago this question came up in Congress, and a special committee was appointed to consider the whole question of the basis of remunerating railway companies for the carriage of the United States mails. That commission met in Chicago in June and in July last, but I think they did not accomplish much.

Mr. POWELL. Do you pay more than $1 per mile for special trains anywhere in Canada?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think not.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). What is the total cost per annum for the carriage of the mails by the railways?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The total contracts as set forth in the Postmaster General's report are $1,350,000, in round numbers.

Mr. TAYLOR. I want to bring up a question which I will ask permission to do on this item, as I want to leave by the train. I want to ask the Minister to do an act of justice to a constituent of mine whom I am sure, after hearing the report that has been brought down, he will admit has been harshly treated by him, that is Mr. J. R. Leake, postmaster at Morton. He had been postmaster for some 23 years, and he was dismissed in 1899 on a charge of political partisanship. I moved for a return which I hold in my hand. The first letter of that return is dated Westport, 23rd November, 1897. The elections were held in June, 1896. This letter is addressed to the Hon. Mr.

Mulock, Postmaster General. It is written by Mr. W. H. Fredenburgh, who was the Liberal candidate in that election. It reads as follows :—

Your letter of the 10th instant, re certain complaints made against Postmaster Leake, of Morton, duly received and noted, and in reply beg to say that I have been very credibly informed that Mr. Leake took a very offensive political part in the election of June, 1896, which, according to the policy as stated on the floor of the House at the first session, would be quite sufficient to cause Mr. Leake's dismissal. I have been informed that for several days before the election he kept a document in the post office, the object of which was to pledge electors who would sign it to support George Taylor, the Conservative candidate at the then coming election. He also, it is said, went out on the street with the document in hand, and used his influence to get all he could to sign or pledge their support to Mr. Taylor, attended Conservative conventions, and in other ways took a very active part in the interest of Mr. Taylor and against me. If any man is liable to be dismissed for political interference, I think Mr. Leake is one.

I am, hon. Sir,
Yours truly,
W. H. FREDENBURGH.

The next letter is dated the 1st December, 1897, and is addressed to Mr. Leake, and signed by Mr. W. D. LeSueur, secretary. It is as follows :—

Sir,—I am directed to inclose to you herewith an extract from a communication which has been received at this department charging you with specific acts of partisanship during the Dominion election of last year. The Postmaster General would be glad to receive any reply you may desire to make in regard to the charges in question, and I am to request that your reply may take the form of a statutory declaration.

Mr. Leake replies to that by a statutory declaration, the last clause of which reads as follows :—

I have not allowed the discussion of politics around my store for years. On the day of said election an agent came to me in my store and said that a certain person upon whose farm I had a mortgage would vote for Mr. Taylor if I would ask him. My reply was : "No, emphatically." I was in my office all day, except about 15 minutes, while voting. And I make this solemn declaration, and so on.

(Sgd.) J. R. LEAKE.

Declared before me at Morton, in the county of Leeds, this 6th day of December, A.D. 1897.

(Sgd.) J. C. JUDD,

A Commissioner in and for Leeds and Grenville.

The next letter is from Mr. Sliter, inclosing two declarations charging Mr. Leake, the postmaster, with offensive partisanship. They are lengthy, and I won't read them, because it is not necessary. One is from Mr. Sly, and one from Mr. Robert Wood. There was no attention paid to them. The matter apparently dropped there until the 12th of March, 1898, when this document was presented to the department through Mr. Fredenburgh, the defeated candidate, and it shows that the axe came down on Mr. Leake through the influence of the executive of the Reform party of that township. This was sent to Mr. Fredenburgh, the defeated candidate :

We, the undersigned executive of the township of South Crosby, do hereby recommend the appointment of A. E. Sliter as postmaster at Morton, and request that you will urge the Postmaster General to make the appointment as soon as possible.

(Sgd.) CHARLES E. JOHNSON,
HENRY HALLIDAY,
C. B. HALLIDAY,
A. D. DeLONG,
R. G. MURPHY,
L. W. BROWN,
H. S. DAVISON,
D. A. COON.

The next is a letter dated Morton, January 2nd, 1899, addressed to the Postmaster General :

Hon. Sir,—I beg to call your attention to the application and material before you of long-standing for the removal of our postmaster. The management of our office here is simply unendurable, and it is too much to ask the public for a continuance. If he cannot be removed upon the material before you, kindly let us have an investigation.

I am, your obedient servant, (Sgd.) J. JUDD.

Then Mr. Hawken, Post Office Inspector from Ottawa, was sent up, not to hold an investigation, but to go round and see, first, Mr. Fredenburgh, and then these parties who had sent in these complaints. He made private inquiries, and made a report on which Mr. Leake was removed, and Mr. Sliter was appointed in his place. Mr. Leake writes me this letter, dated the 26th of April, 1899 :

Morton, 26th April, 1899.

George Taylor, Esq., M.P.

Dear Sir,—In reference to my dismissal from the postmastership of Morton, I beg to say, that last fall I received a letter from Mr. Mulock, containing charges against me of being partisan in political matters. In reply thereto I made a statutory declaration, and sent it to the Postmaster General. It should be on file in his office.

Some time between 10th and 15th of March last, I noticed a stir around Mr. Sliter's—a stranger was there, and I supposed it was the electrician from Rathbun, changing the telephone office from Mr. Sly, who moved to Taylor next day. Afterwards a gentleman came into my store, and announced himself as Mr. Hawkin, post office inspector, from Ottawa, and that he had come on a painful errand. He showed me a list of charges against me as postmaster, that is, partisanship, &c. I never had a paper here and asked voters to sign it for Mr. Taylor and against Mr. Fredenburgh. There was a paper left here, but it was solely for Conservative convention purposes, and before either Mr. Fredenburgh or Mr. Taylor was in the field. And after the Conservative convention was over, I took it up from the counter and gave it to Mr. Taylor first opportunity. The paper, anyway, was like a chip in porridge, neither good nor hurt. I have not talked politics, nor allowed it to be discussed in my office these years past. On election day, 1896, I was in my store and post office all day, excepting one half-hour, whilst voting. An agent came in, in the afternoon, and asked me to influence a man largely under obligation to me—a Liberal—to vote for Mr. Taylor. I said emphatically: "No, let every man vote as he chooses, untrammelled. All the people here, of both parties, said, "Most decidedly we want to stay with Mr. Leake," excepting two men, and am astonished that Mr. Mulock would allow himself to be hoodwinked by such a quantity and quality.

Respectfully,

J. B. LEAKE.

P.S.—If Mr. Hawkin held an investigation here I was not notified of it, or to attend it. And Mr. Mulock was misinformed when he said I was. There certainly was no public investigation. I only wish there would be one—I would be there.

These are the facts of the case. Mr. Leake is one of the most respectable men in the county, a merchant of many years' standing, and postmaster for twenty-seven years. By the advice of the executive of the Reform Association there he was, in March or April of 1899, dismissed for political partisanship, two or three years after the election was held, without a sufficient investigation. Mr. Hawkins went there and saw Mr. Sly, Mr. Sliter, the gentleman who was appointed, Mr. Fredenburg, and some others, and made his report upon that. This old servant has been dismissed in this way, and I claim that he should either be reinstated or that a public investigation should be held so that he would have an opportunity of presenting his side of the case. He knew nothing about it until he got a notice saying that he was dismissed, further than that Mr. Hawkins came into his store and had a conversation with him. He was not present at an investigation. I think that a great injustice has been done to him and I appeal to the hon. Postmaster General to order a public investigation. I am satisfied that the declaration made by Mr. Leake is true and that it will be found so, in every particular. I know myself that he was a faithful officer and that he took no part in the election further than to go himself and vote.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am glad the hon. gentleman has brought this matter to my attention, because I would like to undeceive him and to remove any erroneous impression that may exist. I have a copy of the report before me, and as this may be the only occasion upon which the matter will come up, I might say what it contains. I may say that long ago complaints were made against Mr. Leake, my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) says, of political partisanship. I have not, at least recently, read the correspondence upon that point, but I did not take any action upon the complaints. However, this spring complaints were made against the postmaster in regard to the management of the office and these complaints were referred to the inspector for his report. The inspector finds these complaints proved. What steps he took as to the form of the investigation I do not know. He is an old and experienced officer, and I presume that he would make a proper investigation. He found the following charges proved.

Mr. WALLACE. Will the hon. Postmaster General, before he makes his statement of the charges proved, make a statement of the nature of the investigation the inspector made?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I know nothing about the investigation.

Mr. WALLACE. Does he not state that in the report?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will read the report.

Mr. WALLACE. Does he not state it in the report?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If the hon. gentleman will permit me to read the report he will see what he says. I do not want to quote from memory, because I do not know whether I might be right or not. I know nothing as to the form of the investigation.

Mr. WALLACE. I asked the hon. Minister that because I thought before he reported the finding of the investigation he would report the form of the investigation.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He would do nothing of the kind. This would be the only thing that he would report. When complaint is made touching the administration of an office, if it comes to me and I consider it a proper subject for investigation, I endorse upon it a memorandum referring the complaint to the inspector for report. It goes to the officer and the next thing I hear of it is when he makes his report. It is his duty to make a proper investigation. I do not interfere at all. These officers are constantly making investigations under the direction of their superior officers, all over Canada. Some people write direct to me, and others to the officers of the department, and anything that touches the conduct of an officer, if sufficiently serious, becomes the subject of an investigation.

Mr. WALLACE. I only mentioned it in view of the fact that the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) made the statement to the hon. Postmaster General that there was no investigation made in the sense that the postmaster was not notified and did not know that an investigation was being held. I would like to have that point cleared up.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I can hardly believe that Mr. Hawkins would come to an ex parte finding. He is an experienced officer, a fair and just man, and I am satisfied that he never made a report without giving the postmaster a fair opportunity to defend himself.

Mr. WALLACE. That is the statement of the hon. member for Leeds.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am sure he never did it. It would be impossible for him to do such a thing. I may say that he refers to the following charges as proved: However, I think, in fairness I will not put these things on record. I will discuss it with the hon. member for Leeds, who is not now in his place.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. Postmaster General has deemed it better to defer the statement, and I have no objection to make as to that.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It may be made at some other time.

Mr. WALLACE. The statement made by the hon. member for Leeds is a serious one.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Either discuss it or drop it.

Mr. WALLACE. I do not intend to discuss it; it is a serious statement made by the hon. member for Leeds, but, as the hon. Postmaster General prefers to defer it to another occasion, I have no objection. I was going to make a reference, before that matter was brought up, to the former item, because I think it requires further investigation. We are paying the Intercolonial Railway for carrying the mails, $145,000 a year. Take that road as a specimen: it is a Government road. They do not run a mile on that road, I presume, for the accommodation of the Post Office Department.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There are some special trains run in connection with the ocean mails.

Mr. WALLACE. Presumably, there will be some few items of that kind. I do not see any here in the list of payments made, but it may be that there are some. On the main line and branches at $130 per mile per annum the payments amounted to $87,750; Moncton and St. John, 89 miles, $11,500; Dalhousie and Dalhousie Junction, 7 miles, $910; Truro, Pictou and Mulgrave, 137 miles, $17,800; Oxford Junction and Brown's Point, 5 miles, $8,700; Sydney and Point Tupper, $11,800; Ferriage Straits of Canso, $1,800; Ste. Rosalie Junction and Nicolet from 20th February, $1,084; Ste. Rosalie and Chaudière, $872; British mails, $111. We pay the Intercolonial Railway therefore about $500 a day for 313 days in the year. You pay the Grand Trunk Railway Company for carrying mails on their roads the total sum of $373,248, which amounts to $1,190 a day. You give to the Canadian Pacific Railway $614,000 a year or $1,960 for every working day, nearly $2,000 a day. The services rendered are no doubt large, but these are enormous sums, and you cannot say that the service entails any additional expense on the railway companies further than furnishing a portion of a car or a whole car if it is required, for the carriage of the mail. Now, take Prince Edward Island, where you can make an exact estimate of the business, and you find that while we are paying for the ordinary land conveyance all over the Island $16,000, we are paying $18,900 to the Prince Edward Island Railway for the service. You pay that, notwithstanding the fact that the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Martin) is continually complaining to this House that the greater portion of the Island is not served by the railway, and that branch lines are required all over the Island. We must assume that the land mail service in Prince Edward Island is, therefore, very extensive. The Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) thinks this is a very moderate allowance that is paid to the railways for this service.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Do you say to the railways generally or to the Intercolonial Railway?

Mr. WALLACE. I am criticising the sums paid to the railways generally.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You said that I stated that the railways generally were not paid enough. I merely complained that the Intercolonial Railway is not paid enough.

Mr. WALLACE. I beg pardon of the Minister of Railways if I attributed that remark to him. He is too cautious to make such a statement, but it was the Postmaster General who made the statement.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What the Postmaster General said was that the railways claimed they were not paid enough.

Mr. WALLACE. The Postmaster General went further than the words which the Minister of Finance puts in his mouth. The claim of the railway companies would not be a justification for him paying this enormous sum, unless he endorsed that claim. He must either approve or disapprove of their claim, and when he gets to that point, he tells us that one of his predecessors, for whose judgment he has the greatest respect, paid the same amount to the railway companies. He is so conservative in his instincts that he does not like to change any regulation made by a Conservative predecessor in office. That is a curious doctrine to be preached by a Liberal who denounced a Conservative Government for extravagance, for wild expenditure, for not taking due care to preserve the public moneys, and denounced them too, because, as they asserted, the Conservative Government was under the control of the railway companies. It is a curious doctrine to be preached by a Government that proclaimed that when they got into power there would be a revolution in all these matters. We know that the present Postmaster General is making claims in every direction that he has made improvements, and that he has cut down expenditure, but when he comes to the most important expenditure in his whole department, he balks at that and gets frightened. He started for the ditch, but when he came close to it he pulled up, and refused to attempt to cross it. We are not satisfied with the course of the Postmaster General in this matter. We are not satisfied with his reasoning; that because the Conservative Administration permitted that state of affairs to go on, that that is a complete justification for him, and that we are estopped from complaining or criticising. Even admitting that the Conservatives were lax, or indifferent, or that we did not realize fully this enormous expenditure, is that a sufficient reason for the Postmaster General to allow that state of affairs to continue for all time? I do not think so. Every member of every Government must be always ready to justify his administration of affairs, and the expenditure of public money which he asks Parliament to vote and the people to pay. In this case the Postmaster General is not treating the House with that candour which we have a right to expect from him. He has given us no reason for demanding this enormous sum of $1,350,000 for the railway companies. He started out to investigate that, but he tells us that a former Postmaster General told him to keep his hands off, and that he was guided in the course he took by the advice given him then, and made no investigation. That is a confession that I did not expect the Postmaster General would make to this House. When he started out to make this investigation to inquire why $1,350,000 was voted to the railway companies for this service, he should have gone through with his investigation, and found out what the services rendered are worth. He tells us that the railway companies are not satisfied, and that the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway and the Michigan Central are demanding larger sums for this service, and now we hear from the Minister of Railways that the Intercolonial Railway is not satisfied with the $500 a day which the Post Office Department pays that railway for the mail service. Yet, the Intercolonial does not incur a dollar of expenditure that I know of, further than to furnish the necessary room on a car for the performance of the duties of the post office officials.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have fallen out with the Postmaster General because of his treatment of us.

Mr. WALLACE. The Minister of Railways say the Postmaster General has not paid sufficient for the service he performs, and that he has fallen out with him on that account. I do not believe the falling out is of as serious a character as the Minister of Railways would have us believe. They can be easily reconciled; but the safety of the Minister of Railways lies in this, that the Postmaster General cannot pull down the amount paid the Intercolonial without doing the same with the other railways, and then he would have a hornets' nest about him. At any rate, I think it is the duty of the Minister to tell us that, before he pays that money any longer, he will inquire and tell Parliament why he has paid these hundreds of thousands of dollars to the Grand Trunk, the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Intercolonial for services which are very easily and cheaply performed by these railroads, and which, when compared with the services rendered by other parties for the Post Office Department, seem to be very expensive.

Mr. WALLACE.

Post Office—

Miscellaneous expenses..... $190,953

Mr. WALLACE. Before that item is voted, I have a word to say about a matter with regard to which I have had some correspondence with the Post Office Department and also with the Postmaster General direct. A manufacturer in the city of Quebec, Mr. Mark Frankenberg, of the Globe Rubber Works, has a magnificent factory, perhaps the only one in Canada where both rubber goods and rubber cloth are manufactured. He achieved a great reputation in Manchester, England, where he carried on a large business; and some years ago, while I had the honour of being Controller of Customs, he decided to start a business in Canada. He came over and started business in the city of Quebec, investing a large amount of capital in buildings, machinery and the necessary plant to carry on a large manufacturing enterprise, and being a man of great energy and industry, and having capacity and experience, he built up a large business. Seeing that the Government were importing for the Post Office Department a very large quantity of rubber goods, he made application to the department for an opportunity of supplying those goods. He got very unsatisfactory answers from the department. When I was in Quebec last autumn, I met Mr. Frankenberg; I saw the extent and importance of his establishment, which employed many skilled hands. All he wanted was the opportunity to tender for the supplies for the Post Office Department, but that opportunity has been denied to him. The department say: Oh, we purchase our supplies from parties in England or elsewhere. I contend that is treating our Canadian manufacturers very unfairly.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. How long has he been there?

Mr. WALLACE. He came there before I ceased to be Controller of Customs, which was in the latter part of 1895. It took him a year to get properly going, but his establishment has been, I am sure, three full years in working order. He is selling his goods all over this country, and is doing a large business. He is a skilled and competent manufacturer, and all he wants is an even chance with others to supply these goods. If he supplies them at the same price that the Government pay the English, the French or the German manufacturers, then the Government should buy from the Canadian manufacturer. That is all that Mr. Frankenberg asks, but that privilege has been denied to him. I wrote to the department, and also to the Postmaster General, asking why he was not allowed that privilege, and the matter stands just where it was before. Mr. Frankenberg brought many skilled workmen with him from the old country, the business being new and of a technical nature, and he has educated large numbers of Canadians, who, he says, acquire a knowledge of that business very rapidly. I now bring the matter to the attention of the Postmaster General.

Prince Edward Island Railway—

To shorten main line by removal of curves .....	$10,000
Rolling stock .....	8,000

Mr. MARTIN. Will the hon. gentleman explain this vote?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The appropriation last year was $15,000, of which $13,923 was expended, and a further sum of $10,000 will be required to complete it.

Mr. MARTIN. Is there any other new work to be done?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not included in this vote. Any further work would require to be provided for in the supplementary Estimates. This is to complete what had already been begun. It is to straighten out the line, where there was a very sharp curve, and out of 5,100 feet, it will save 3,281 feet.

Mr. MARTIN. Although this large expenditure is to be made, the curve proposed to be made will not be much better than the curve which existed before.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am surprised to hear that.

Mr. MARTIN. The curvature before the straightening began was nine degrees and thirty minutes, and since the straightening it is nine degrees and nine minutes. There is only a difference of twenty-one minutes in the straightening of the road secured by this expenditure which, I think, was made by day's work and not by contract. I understand also that the grade is much more to-day than it was before the work began. I would like to ask what was the estimate at first for straightening this curve?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Let me first refer to the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Martin's) statement, made earlier, with regard to the curve. The hon.

gentleman has overlooked the fact that it was not a case of one curve only, but in a distance of 5,100 feet there were no less than three curves, each one of which was of 9·30 degrees radius. It was quite impossible to do away with the curves altogether, but two out of the three had been I may say, extinguished. One curve remains, but it is a curve of 9 degrees, as against 9·30 degrees, as it was before. There has been a saving of 3,281 feet out of the 5,100 feet. That is the condition of affairs, as I am advised by the officers of the department.

Mr. MARTIN. I understood the Minister, in replying to a question of mine, earlier in the session, to say that the curve now is one of 9·9 minutes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think that must have been an error in printing.

Mr. MARTIN. The Minister has not given the estimate for the straightening of this curve.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. True, I omitted that. I am not in a position to give the estimate; but I am informed that the work has cost $25,000 to date.

Mr. POWELL. What is the increase of the grade?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Eight feet. There was already a grade of 58 feet.

Mr. MARTIN. The object in spending this money may have been a very good one, but I think the results obtained are not commensurate with the sum expended. It must be remembered that this road originally only cost $14,000 or $15,000 a mile. It is shortened by only 3,281 feet, at an expense of $25,000. I think there are many ways of spending the money on that road which would have yielded better results than in dealing with these curves. I believe that on this road there is 50 per cent of curvature. On the line between Charlottetown and Summerside, there is only 49 miles of straight road, and 24·40 of curvature.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That would not be 50 per cent—the whole road is over 200 miles long.

Mr. MARTIN. I am speaking of the road between Summerside and Charlottetown. On the whole road the straight line aggregates 132·51 miles, and the curves 65·99 miles, or almost exactly 33 per cent of curves. I think there has been no demand for the straightening of these curves. In fact, if there was work to be done in the way of straightening curves there were worse curves than these requiring attention. I do not wish to impute motives, but the work was done in the riding of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), and I fear that the work was undertaken and the money spent largely in the interest of his political friends. I think the outlay is altogether too large for the results.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) I understood from the hon. Minister that the road was shortened 3,281 feet, and there was an increase in the grade?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) About $25,000 has been spent, and about $10,000 more is required. To shorten the road by 3,281 feet, we shall expend $35,000, and this on a road the construction and equipment of which, from end to end, cost about $14,000 or $15,000 a mile. This is perfectly ridiculous. I think I must, from my own standpoint, try to give the Minister a little friendly advice, and that is, when he comes to straighten the other curves, to let the work be by contract. If he does, I guarantee that he will get it done for one-third the amount that it cost in this case. I must say that I am very much afraid that this is done for special purposes. That is the opinion of people who understand these things. This expenditure of $35,000 has been spread over two or three years. The work has been kept going to give employment to party friends. That is the general impression, and I believe there is a good deal of ground for it. When this work was started it was expected that $8,000 or $10,000 would be all that would be required. We could not get any satisfactory information at the time. But it is going on year after year and the amount expended is increasing. Now we are asked to vote $10,000 to keep it going for another year. I think it time the matter was brought to a close; and if the Government study the interest of the people in the case of future work, they will have it done by tender and contract.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am sorry I had not anticipated that we would be asked to repeat the arguments already advanced in this House, I think, on more than one occasion, or I would have suggested to my hon. colleague, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) to remain in the House to hear what his colleagues from the island were going to say on this subject. I had no personal knowledge with reference to the necessity or importance of this work itself, until the matter was brought to my attention by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and thereupon inquiries were made by the officers in the service. The engineer was sent there with the view of making an examination of the road, and of advising as to the wisdom or necessity of having the work done. I did assume that as regards the importance of this work there was no difference of opinion among the gentlemen representing the Island. Any one who has travelled over the island road must have been impressed with the rather dangerous condition, or the unsatisfactory condition, of its curves, for the curves which it has been proposed to straighten are particularly severe, and I should think more than ordinarily dangerous. A small piece of the road, less than a mile in length, which has three curves within that distance of the character I have stated, would seem to indicate that some improvement was necessary. It was, as I have stated, on the representations which were made of the necessity of doing this that the appropriation was asked for in the first instance, and I do not recollect that on that occasion it was vigorously opposed. When the subject came up for discussion, I do not recollect that one or other of the gentlemen opposite criticised the manner in which the work was being done, and complained that it was not being done under contract, and I explained to the House why it had been determined that it was better to do the work otherwise than to call for tenders. It was on account of these things that the general superintendent for one, and the chief engineer for another, advised that it would be quite impracticable to invite tenders for doing this work, since the tenderers would not be able to make an estimate; at all events, if they did make an estimate, they would likely include an item for a considerable time that would be lost in consequence of the passing of trains over the portion of the road where the work was going on. I explained that fully to the House on a former occasion, and my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who is familiar with the nature of the ground, took part in the discussion. I do not think it is likely to be of any general advantage that we should discuss it again. The House was made fully aware of the fact that it was deemed advisable to do the work in this way. I am sorry my hon. friends opposite have had so little appreciation of the efforts which I have been making to meet what I believed was the desire of the people of the island who used the road between these two points.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) The Minister tells us that it was impracticable to let that work by contract. Anybody who knows anything about railroad building would know that it is just like making a new piece of road outside an old piece, or inside an old piece, as the case may be. Now, we are not objecting to straightening the curves on the Prince Edward Island Railway. In fact, there are some curves even greater than those that are being straightened, and we would be only too glad to see them all straightened. We think we are entitled to that from the way we have been used by the Dominion of Canada. In the first place, we have a road that cost $16,- 000 per mile as against the $48,000 per mile that the Intercolonial Railway cost, and you make us pay just as high rates on the Island road as you do on a road that cost $48,000 a mile. It is a most ridiculous, absurd and dishonest transaction, not only on the part of this Government, but on the part of preceding Governments. The people of Prince Edward Island object to this course. We have got to pay one-third more for both freight and passengers in comparison with other roads on account of increased length of about one-third by reason of the curves, and you charge us just as much as you do on a straight road that cost three times as much. Now, I believe that the Government would be consulting the interests of the country if they put the rates on that road very much lower than they are now. In the first place, we have no long hauls, and people only travel a short distance and send freight a short distance. Besides that, nearly all the people have their own horses and rigs, which they use when they want to go a short distance. If the rates on that road were put down to a reasonable figure in comparison with the cost, I believe the travel would be greatly increased, and the revenues would be greatly increased. As I said before, we do not object to these curves being straightened, but they should be straightened in a businesslike way. In the future you should let the work by tender, and then there would be no occasion for fault finding. Would the Minister tell me where these curves are to be straightened?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There are three distinct localities where it is proposed to straighten these curves, at North Wiltshire, Royalist and Caldwell.

Mr. MARTIN. I think the Minister should give some consideration to the proposition that was made by my hon. friend in regard to reducing the rates on the Prince Edward Island Railway. I think the Minister is anxious to do something for the province, although, if he has not accomplished much, I suppose we should not blame him because his intentions were very likely good. The question of reducing the rates deserves to be taken into consideration. You are scarcely justified in charging as great rates on a road that cost $16,000 a mile as you are on the Intercolonial Railway, which cost three times as much. If, on the Prince Edward Island Railway, you have to travel three miles in order to accomplish two miles of your journey, it is plain that you are not only paying at the rate of 3 cents a mile but that you are paying at the rate of 4½ cents a mile. You travel over a mile and a half of the road in order to accomplish a mile. I referred to this some time ago in speaking on another question, and I think the proposal is worthy of the attention of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals. I sincerely believe that, if the rates on that road were reduced to the capacity of the road, the hon. gentleman would have more revenue from its operation than he has to-day. There is a prejudice in the minds of the people who travel over that road because they have to pay more than when they travel on the Intercolonial. When these curves are taken into consideration it is not 3 cents a mile that they are paying, but they are paying at the rate of 4½ cents a mile, and, in order to equalize the rates of travel on the two roads, it will be necessary to reduce the rates on the Prince Edward Island branch about 50 per cent. Then the people of Prince Edward Island will be paying the same rate as is charged on the Intercolonial. I find that the working expenses of the Intercolonial are $2,711 per mile, and the working expenses of the Prince Edward Island Railway only $1,101.99. The working expenses of one road are more than double those of the other, and when you consider what I have already said, I think the question is plain to any person who will give it consideration. If the hon. Minister will give it his consideration he will find that his receipts will not be diminished, but that they will be increased by reducing the rates. The exact cost of the Prince Edward Island Railway, including rolling stock and everything, was $3,768,107.25 up to the 30th June, or at the rate of $17,610 per mile. The cost of the Intercolonial Railway, according to the latest statement I can get in the report of the Railway Department, was $55,668,913.95, or at the rate of $46,352 per mile. It is, in my opinion, unreasonable that the rate on a road which only cost about one-third of the other road should be the same as the rate upon the other road. It is not business that these rates should be left unequalized, and no company would think of running the road on the present basis; and I would ask the hon. Minister to give his consideration to this question. I am sure, if the Minister wants to wipe out the deficit on that branch of the Intercolonial, one thing that will conduce to it is to reduce the rates so that the people of Prince Edward Island will not be paying as they are to-day, at the rate of 4½ cents a mile on that section of the road.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. When my hon. friend (Mr. Martin) states that the working expenses on the Intercolonial are $2,700 a mile and upon the Prince Edward Island road $1,100 per mile and draws the inference which he does from that fact, I think he loses sight of considerations which do not really support his general conclusion. The fact that the working expenses of the Intercolonial Railway are so much larger is due to the greatly increased amount of business that is done upon the Intercolonial Railway and not, either to the condition of the road, or to the character of its structure, as compared with the Island road. I may say that the point of view from which my hon. friend has presented his claim, that the department might fairly consider this subject of making some reduction in the general passenger rate and the way in which he brings it forward are quite new to me. I am bound to say that I think it has some force in it and is entitled to consideration. The fact that the railway was made so much longer than it need have been made, that the mileage is so much greater than it need have been, and that the rates are based upon the same rate per mile as on the Intercolonial Railway is quite a new and reasonably strong point of view from which to present the case. Should I, yielding to the force of his strong presentation of the case, make a reduction and it should not turn out quite as he anticipates, or that there should be some increase in the deficit in the working of the road, I think I would have to count upon the assistance of my hon. friend to justify me in my course and to meet the very strong adverse criticism that my action in that regard would have provoked. I will say this to my hon. friend, that I am willing to give the subject a very fair and full consideration. If it is possible to see my way clear to meet his views, without detriment to the public interest, I should be very much pleased to be able to do so, and I would hope that, if the experiment were tried, the hon. gentleman's anticipations, as to the results would be more than realized.

Mr. MARTIN. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) will find that there is a prejudice in the minds of the people of Prince Edward Island due to the fact that they believe they are paying too much for travelling on that road. The hon. gentleman might follow the example of the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock), in reducing the rates of postage. He might not for the first year have the anticipated results, but I believe that he would eventually find that the receipts from the road would be increased rather than decreased.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) Quite an agitation is springing up in this country in favour of the adoption of the 2 cents a mile rate on railways generally.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I hope that agitation will not strike the Intercolonial.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) I hope not; I must agree with the hon. gentleman there, but I think this would be a very good opportunity to illustrate the matter and see if any such results can be obtained from the adoption of that experiment as are anticipated by its advocates. I am very much pleased to find that the hon. Minister of Railways looks favourably on the suggestions that have been thrown out by the hon. member for East Queen's (Mr. Martin) and myself on this occasion in a matter that to my mind appears so reasonable. I think the request is a reasonable one, in fact, I think the present state of affairs in Prince Edward Island is very unreasonable for the reasons that have already been set forth. The cost of the road was very small, and the expenses are also small, in comparison with the larger roads. I think myself that under these circumstances, while the road only cost one-third of the Intercolonial Railway, it would not be prudent to give us a rate at one-third of what is charged on the Intercolonial Railway. I am not so unreasonable as that, but it is worth while considering a very substantial reduction with the strong hope of increasing the travel there very materially, as I am sure it would. From a personal stand-point, I can hardly favour that, as it might bring trade past myself. But all the same, in the interest of the public generally, it would be a good thing, and if the Minister (Mr. Blair) should come to Parliament with an increased deficit on account of giving this advantage to Prince Edward Island. I would not feel disposed to blame him. I honestly believe that if this suggestion got a fair trial in Prince Edward Island, it would not increase the deficit to any extent, if at all.

Mr. BLAIR.

Mr. BERGERON. The Minister expressed the hope that a 2-cent rate would not strike the Intercolonial Railway, and, of course, I understand his anxiety that the Intercolonial Railway should pay. Let me ask him if there has not been a cut rate on the Intercolonial Railway from Montreal to the seaside resorts on the lower St. Lawrence, by which people can travel for less than a cent a mile. Has not the Minister received a communication recently with reference to this from those who are interested in making traffic arrangements between railway and navigation companies, and has my hon. friend not refused the request made to him? I understand he has cut down the rate to less than 1 cent a mile between Montreal and the watering places on the St. Lawrence.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) must have been misinformed, when he states such a rate has been made, even under the special circumstances which he has alleged. I have not yet been informed as to what the exact tourist rate is for the season, but I did receive a complaint—not, however, from the travelling public who are using the road, but from those who are interested in a competitive line of steamships—against the rate that the officers of the Intercolonial Railway had fixed for excursion parties of tourists upon certain sections of the road. I have written to the General Superintendent to know definitely just what these rates are. I can believe that, in accordance with the general custom that obtains on the Intercolonial Railway, as upon all other roads, they found it necessary, in order to induce traffic and to maintain their own traffic against competition, to make a rate which will enable them to hold their business. I presume a rate has been made in this case for parties of perhaps five or ten, or it may be a family rate. If that were done, I think it would be in accordance with the general usage upon railways, but I would not think the rate would have been as low as the hon. gentleman has mentioned. However, I will obtain information upon that subject.

Mr. BERGERON. Could not my hon. friend the Minister get from his chief engineer the last rate issued on the Intercolonial Railway from Montreal to Rivière du Loup or Cacouna?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have written for that information already, and shall let the hon. gentleman know when it arrives.

Mr. BERGERON. Does the Minister know if these tickets are so issued that any group of persons can travel on them as if they belonged to the one family, and that the rate is cheaper than on any other railway, or even upon the steamers?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman must understand that I am not speaking with respect to the particular circumstances which he has called to my attention, because I do not know, and I have not been advised, of any such special rate as he has mentioned. The usual course, I believe, is, that excursion rates are made to cover a party of ten or upwards. If ten persons combine to go, and get these tickets, only the parties who buy them can use them, and they cannot divide up, and one go to-day, and another to-morrow, and another the next day. They must go in parties.

Mr. BERGERON. And they need not be members of the same family.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Speaking from general knowledge, and not with reference to this particular case, there is a difference between family tickets and tickets usually issued to excursion parties consisting of a specified number. There are some points on the line to which family tickets are issued, and these persons who get the tickets must belong to the family, and their names are mentioned, and it is only the persons who are actually members of the family who can use these tickets. They are liable to be taken up, if they are found in possession of any other person.

Mr. BERGERON. I can tell my hon. friend the Minister. They are liable to be taken up. Can the Minister ascertain now whether the rates on the Intercolonial Railway to the St. Lawrence seaside resorts are not cheaper this year than ever before.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My deputy says he has no knowledge whatever on the subject, but, speaking from my own belief, I can very well understand that the officers of the Intercolonial Railway have made special rates for tourists from Montreal to points along the St. Lawrence in direct competition with the steamship lines. The officers, no doubt, have felt that in order to retain the business which they think legitimately belongs to them, and to secure other business, they should make a rate under these special circumstances, limited to a certain time and so arranged as to comprise a certain number of people within one group. I can well understand that such tickets are reasonably low, but under no other circumstances, I presume, could this class of business have been secured in competition with the steamers. The object of the Intercolonial Railway is to get all the business it can get which is remunerative.

Mr. BERGERON. The Minister knows that in summer special arrangements are made between navigation companies and the railways running to the same points. I suppose he knows better than anybody else that he has refused to go into any such arrangement. Does he remember that?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That question has not been submitted to me.

Mr. BERGERON. I may be wrongly informed, but the information I have is that the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific Railway have gone into an arrangement with the steamship companies, and that my hon. friend through the Intercolonial has refused to go into that arrangement. As a matter of fact, the Intercolonial Railway carries people more cheaply than any other conveyance down there. It carries them at the low rate of one cent per mile. Until we have the information from Montreal, there is no use of discussing this.

Mr. POWELL. I would like the Minister to give us the exact length of the new railway that was constructed in order to effect this saving of 3,000 feet on the Prince Edward Island, between the point at which the divergence occurred and the point it came in contact with the old line again.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The length of the old line was 5,100 feet, and that of the new line is 3,281 less than that.

Mr. HAGGART. Can the hon. gentleman give the grades and curves of the new line and those of the old line?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There were three curves on the old line of 9 degrees 30 seconds and there is one curve on the new line of 9 degrees. The grade is 8 feet heavier.

Mr. POWELL. The change is certainly a good one. Would the hon. gentleman please tell me the exact cost of the change?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. $24,410 complete.

Mr. POWELL. What is the depth of the cutting that was made?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I was there and saw that it was a deep cutting, but I cannot state to-night what the depth was.

Mr. POWELL. There must have been a very heavy cutting or filling, because the work cost about $70,000 a mile.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. A very heavy cutting and a correspondingly very heavy filling.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman must have given a wrong statement the other day, when he stated that the curvature on the new line was a great deal sharper than the old.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman is confusing the grade with the curvature.

Mr. MARTIN. I think there must be some mistake with regard to the curvature. I have here Vol. IX, No. 8 of the Sessional Papers of 1876, which contains a report on the gradients and the curvatures of the Prince Edward Island Road. I find on page 16 of sessional paper No. 66 that there is only one curve on that road of 9 degrees 30 seconds. The next is 9 degrees, the next 8 degrees, and the next 7 degrees, and there is a curve of 10 degrees, which I understand had been straightened years ago; and that is not either of the curves the Minister referred to. The curve of  $9\frac{1}{2}$  degrees has a radius of 604 feet, and is 5.14 miles in length. So that I cannot understand the Minister of Railways saying that there were three curves, when this is the report of the engineer who examined the road at that time. I was a little astonished to find the Minister saying that there were three curves of  $9\frac{1}{2}$  degrees. According to the statement of the Minister to me, which you will find on page 1854 of "Hansard," the curvature at present is 9 degrees and 9 minutes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Of course, I would not be able to state from personal knowledge, but I have stated the information just as I have received it from my officer.

Mr. BERGERON. That answer was given by the department.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There must be some mistake in the printing. The line will be shortened by this change 328 feet, and the length of the new bed will be 5,100 feet. The original curve was  $9\cdot30$ . There were three long curves, and the sharpest curve, after the work of straightening is made, will be 9 degrees.

Mr. BELL (East Prince, P.E.I.) I have been over this road many times. There is one long or main curve, which is about the shape of a horse-shoe. The large curve is made up of smaller ones. There is no question as to the absolute necessity of this work. It is one that has been agitated for during many years—ever since the railway was first constructed. There is no doubt, also, that the work which has been done, although it does not shorten the distance much between Charlottetown and Summerside, is of great benefit to the railway, and will be of great advantage to the people. The reason why this work was done by day labour and not by contract and tender, is mainly because the Government, running the road, could more conveniently do the work, and at the same time not interrupt traffic. While this work was being done, the traffic was continued without interruption. The work may have cost more than was originally anticipated—most of these works do. It certainly, however, was done well and economically. In fact, the great complaint urged by the labourers employed was that they were paid too little for their services. So far as the work is concerned generally, there is a main ditch or dump of about thirty feet to be filled in and a cutting of about from ten to fifteen feet. Although the work was done by day's labour, it was done as efficiently and as economically as it possibly could have been under contract, and more satisfactorily to the general public, because the traffic was not interrupted.

I am quite in accord with my hon. friend from King's as to the advisability of the Government reducing the freight and passenger rates on the Island railway. The people there are fairly well off; each farmer has his horse and buggy; the roads are fairly good, and it is a very easy matter to travel from one place to another. Under these conditions, very few people travel on the railway, because of the high passenger rates charged, but if the Government should reduce the rates, the passenger traffic would be largely increased. The same difficulty obtains with regard to freight. On account of the high rates charged, and the facility with which people can move around with horses and carriages, they prefer to draw their freight by horses rather than pay the high rates of freight on the railway. If the Government would reap any profit from the operations of the road, they must reduce the freight and passenger rates. A petition has been presented from people in the vicinity of Summerside to reduce the freight rates on manure.

From Bedeque Bay, there is a large quantity of mussel mud hauled to various parts of the island, and it is very clear that reduced rates on that kind of freight would be advantageous to the Government as well as to the people. It would be advantageous to the people, because it would enable them to manure their farms to better advantage. It would also be in the interest of the Government in two ways. First, because the farms, being better manured, better crops would be raised, which would have to be carried by the railways; and, second, if the farmers raised better crops they would buy more dutiable goods, so that in both respects this would inure to the benefit of the Government. I am, therefore, quite in accord with my hon. friend from King's, and hope the Government will favourably consider the proposed reduction of freight and passenger rates.

Mr. HAGGART. Has the hon. gentleman an Order in Council to allow him to do this work by day's labour?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not recollect.

Mr. HAGGART. I suppose that the hon. gentleman is aware that he is obliged by statute to let the work by contract unless, under the interpretation of the Prime Minister, he shows reason and gets an Order in Council allowing him to do it by day's labour. Here is an expenditure of $25,000, and I suppose he has an Order in Council setting forth the reasons for doing the work by day's labour.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No doubt, the usual course was pursued, but I cannot say it now.

Mr. HAGGART. The Minister has his deputy there, and surely his deputy can inform him.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have just asked him, and he cannot give me positive information.

Mr. HAGGART. The Minister ought not to ask us to pass this item until he gives us this information.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will get the information, but it is not worth while to let the item stand.

Mr. BERGERON. I think we ought now to get all the information that the hon. gentleman said he would bring down.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). As the committee may remember, when this item for improvements at St. John was under consideration, it was removed for the purpose of enabling me to secure the actual figures and an abstract of tenders for the work to be done in this connection. I have the abstract here before me, and, with the permission of the committee will read it. First, we had a tender for the freight warehouse contract. These are the names of the tenderers:

George W. Appleby.....	$24,600
Rhodes, Curry & Co.....	22,795
Daniel W. & Daniel C. Clark...	25,945
J. B. McManus .....	24,950
G. S. Mayes .....	39,860

The contract was given to Messrs. Rhodes, Curry & Co., of Amherst, the lowest tenderers, at the amount of their tender. I have here also an abstract of the tenders received for the wharf and dredging at St. John. Tenders were asked for by newspaper advertisement, dated October 6th, 1898, and tenders were to be received up to the 26th of October, 1898. The first tender was John Heney, Ottawa, whose tender amounted to $298,193. His second tender, which I will explain later, by reference to some correspondence, asked to be allowed to add $33,000, making a total of $332,193. The next tender was received from Mr. G. S. Mayes, the amount being $219,990. I omitted to mention, when referring to Mr. Heney's tender, one point; perhaps I had better go back to that. In addition to the items of work we required, there were certain items that were not to be included in the bulk sum of the contract—rock blasting and stone ballast to be placed in the crib. The tenderers all gave prices. In the first place, in the bulk, and in the next, the price at which they were prepared to do this special work. The next tender was Mr. John F. Morrison, for $335,569. The last was Messrs. M. K. and N. Connolly, $328,173.

Mr. BERGERON. That was advertised all over Canada?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes; the advertising was pretty thoroughly distributed at all events. These tenders, you will observe, were received on the 26th of October, 1898, at Moncton. At the time the tenders came to hand at Moncton, Mr. Pottinger, the general manager, was not there; he was up the line. So the tenders were not received by him until two or three days afterwards. They were received at Moncton, of course, according to the time specified in the notice. The tenders were opened by Mr. Pottinger and myself at Montreal on the 31st October. He had the tenders sent to him from Moncton. They were received by him at Montreal, and I, being there, they were opened jointly by himself and myself, on the 31st October. Prior to the opening of the tenders, some correspondence took place with Mr. Heney, one of the tenderers. He called at my office on the 27th of October, as I see from the date of a memorandum which I made at the time. He said he had sent in a tender for the St. John work, but had omitted to state that he had based his figures on the expectation of being able to obtain a dredge in the United States, there being none available in the maritime provinces.

Mr. BERGERON. You are speaking of Mr. Heney?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. There were no dredges in the maritime provinces that would answer the purpose, and he had counted on being able to hire a dredge in one of the adjacent ports, Portland or Boston, and having it imported duty free into the Dominion, and having it work during the period required, and re-export it on the completion of the contract. He asked me whether or not the Government would give permission for the admission of the dredge, under the circumstances, free of duty. I stated that the question of the free admission of dredges for the purpose of doing work in Canada had been before the Government and application had been made in one, if not more, cases recently. The subject had come up before the Minister of Customs, and he had referred it to the Treasury Board, and the Treasury Board had decided that it was not fair to the owners of Canadian dredges to allow the admission free of American dredges, and I told Mr. Heney I would have great doubt of the application being favourably entertained. I gave Mr. Heney to understand that there would be very little doubt of an unfavourable result to his application. He went home and addressed to me a letter, which was received that evening at my office, and which was in the following terms:—

Ottawa, October 27th, 1898.

Hon. A. G. Blair,
Minister of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa.

Sir,—Since my conversation with you this morning in relation to the importation of dredging plant, in bond, to do the dredging in connection with the proposed improvements in the harbour of St. John, N.B., I learned that the duty on the plant I proposed importing will be about $33,000; I, therefore, most respectfully request that this amount be added to my tender; or, if this is contrary to the practice of the department, I beg leave to withdraw my tender, and trust you will kindly return my cheque.

I intended presenting this letter to you in person; but owing to your absence could not do so; but as tenders will not be opened until your return, I hasten to make this explanation before the relative position of the different tenderers can be known.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) JOHN HENEY,
Ottawa.

Mr. BERGERON. The letter says Mr. Heney had seen him during the day. The letter would imply that the hon. gentleman was away.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is quite true. He had seen me in the morning. I had left by the early afternoon train and was not at home when he came to the office in the afternoon. He wrote a letter and left it there for me. The first words used in his letter are: "Since my conversation with you this morning in relation to the importation" he ascertained what the duty would be. I have no doubt that he had gone to the Department of Customs, or to some other place, and had ascertained that it was going to cost him $33,000 to pay the duty on the dredge, and he asked that this amount might be added to his tender. It appears further in this connection that Mr. Heney—I do not know that I have a copy of that letter, but I am in a position to state that Mr. Heney, while writing to me—and the letter was left at my office here at Ottawa—also mailed a letter to Mr. Pottinger which he addressed to Moncton, and which reached Moncton in due course, and which Mr. Pottinger showed to me later when we were going over these tenders, and it was quite to the same purport, that he wanted to be permitted to add $33,000 to his tender price.

Mr. BLAIR.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman gives us the total amount of Mr. Mayes' tender, $219,900. The Connolly's' tender was $328,173; John F. Morrison's tender was $335,366. What is the amount of Mr. Heney's tender?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. $298,193, to which he asked permission to add $33,000, which would be $331,193. Mr. Mayes' tender, you will observe, was the lowest, that was $10 less than $220,000. The contract was awarded to Mr. Mayes. He had notice in due course, and shortly afterwards wrote a letter to me, dated 9th of November, after he had been notified that his tender was accepted. He says this:

Sir,—Referring to my tender for the work in connection with the terminal improvements at the Long Wharf, St. John, I beg to say that in making the estimate of the cost of the work, I assumed that the Government would permit an American dredge to be brought into Canada free of duty, the same as was done for the city of St. John in connection with the improvements recently made on the west side of the harbour. I felt the more sure that this would be done, because there is no dredge in the maritime provinces suitable for deep-water dredging. My intention was to build a new dredge, which, however, will take about four months, and to use an American dredge in the meantime. Being now informed that this concession cannot be granted to a private individual, I feel constrained to ask permission to withdraw my tender, and that you will be pleased to direct that my cheque be returned.

Mr. HAGGART. What was the deposit required?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Up to $250,000 a fixed sum was required, and then 5 per cent upon the tender price. $14,000 was the amount of deposit by Mr. Mayes, $20,000 was the amount deposited by Mr. Heney. These are the only two that are really important, of which I have the exact amount.

Mr. BERGERON. In this letter of Mr. Mayes, does he say by whom he was informed that he could not bring an American dredge into Canada?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, Mr. Mayes came up here to get permission.

Mr. BERGERON. By whom was he informed? He says: "I am informed."

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (reading):

Being now informed that this concession cannot be granted to a private individual, I feel constrained to ask permission to withdraw my tender, and that you will be pleased to direct that my cheque be returned. I am sure that an examination of the specifications will convince you that even if the expected concession were allowed me, my tender would be very low, and there having been a not unreasonable assumption on my part that the law would permit the introduction of an American dredge temporarily, you will, I feel sure, see the justice of this application.

That was a request to withdraw his tender and to have his cheque returned.

Mr. BERGERON. Was that complied with?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No. I see that I have the memo. here with regard to the deposit, which I may as well read. With Mr. Heney's tender there was an accepted cheque, dated Ottawa, 24th October, 1898, the Banque Nationale in favour of the Minister for $20,000. That was an accepted cheque. G. S. Mayes's cheque was dated 26th October, 1898, on the Bank of Montreal in favour of the Minister, $14,000. This was accepted. But as it was marked good for two days only, and certified by the General Manager, this fact created some doubt in the minds both of Mr. Pottinger and myself at the time, as to whether it would be proper to treat it as a sufficient accepted cheque. In order to make sure, before finally notifying the tenderer that the contract had been awarded to him, we communicated with the Bank of Montreal. I thought I had a copy here of the letter received from the bank on the subject, but I am not quite sure about that. At all events, we received from the Bank of Montreal at St. John an assurance that the cheque would be good, that, although limited on its face to two days only, it would be regarded as an accepted cheque by the bank for an indefinite period. Having that assurance from the manager of the bank, we thought there was no longer any doubt as to the sufficiency of the deposit, and it was following that, that notice was sent to Mr. Mayes. We had a visit from him in Ottawa, and received from him the letter which I have just read. Mr. Mayes was notified.

Mr. BERGERON. What was the answer of the department to his letter?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The answer of the department to Mr. Mayes's letter was the following:—

Department of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa, 23rd Nov., 1898.

Sir,—Having reference to your communication of the 9th instant, on that day received by the Minister, with respect to your tender for work in connection with the terminal improvements at the Long Wharf, St. John, I am directed to say that the department cannot see its way clear to comply with your request to be allowed to withdraw your deposit cheque, and to be relieved from entering into a contract in accordance with your tender.

I am to say that it is open to you, and you are hereby required, at once to intimate whether it is your purpose, in the view which the department is completed to take of your application respecting the deposit cheque, to enter into a contract for the execution of the proposed works, or not. As so much time has been lost already, and the season is becoming so far advanced, I am to request you to advise us by return mail of your decision in this matter.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
L. K. JONES,
Secretary.

G. S. Mayes, Esq.,
St. John, N.B.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the date of that letter?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The 23rd November.

Mr. BERGERON. And he had written on the 9th?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. On the 28th of November the following letter was received from Mr. Mayes, addressed to myself:—

St. John, N.B., Nov. 28th, 1898.

Hon. A. G. Blair,
Minister of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—I write to say that I adhere to the statements contained in my letter of the 9th inst., and must decline to enter into contract for the work in connection with the improvements at the Long Wharf.

With reference to my deposit, I sincerely trust you will see your way clear to return it (as expressed in my previous letter), which I think is only just and fair, under the circumstances.

I remain,
Yours most respectfully,
G. S. MAYES.

Following this refusal on Mr. Mayes's part to enter into a contract, the officers of the department were directed to notify Mr. Heney that it was open to him to accept the contract, treating it as a tender in itself of $298,193, and not treating it as a tender for $33,000 added. There was some doubt in our minds as to whether or not, under the circumstances, it would be proper for us to allow Mr. Heney to amend his tender.

We had not a fixed view upon that subject, and therefore notified him that he, being the next lowest tenderer, the contract was open to his acceptance.

Mr. BERGERON. He was $70,000 above Mr. Mayes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He was $70,000 above Mr. Mayes. On December 5 the following letter was sent to Mr. Heney:—

Department of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa, December 5, 1898.

Sir,—With reference to your communication of the 27th October last, received by the Minister, with respect to your tender for work in connection with the terminal improvements at the Long Wharf, St. John, I am directed to say that the department cannot see its way clear to comply with your request to be allowed to withdraw your deposit cheque, and to be relieved from entering into a contract in accordance with your tender.

I am to say that it is open to you, and your are hereby required to at once intimate whether it is your purpose, in the view which the department is compelled to take of your application respecting the deposit cheque, to enter into a contract for the execution of the proposed works or not. As so much time has been lost already, and the season is becoming so far advanced, I am to request you to advise us by return mail of your decision in this matter.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
L. K. JONES,
Secretary.

John Heney, Esq., Contractor, Ottawa.

On the 7th of December Mr. Jones received the following letter from Mr. Heney:—

Ottawa, Dec. 7th, 1898.

L. K. Jones, Esq.,
Secretary, Railways and Canals.

Dear Sir,—Referring to our conversation, I do not wish to send any communication until I see the Minister.

I am, yours truly,
JOHN HENEY.

On the 7th of December, which was the same day as that upon which the last communication of Mr. Heney was written, the following letter was written by Mr. Jones to Mr. Heney:—

Department of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa, Dec. 7th, 1898.

Sir,—Your letter of to-day's date cannot be considered as a direct reply to my communication of the 5th instant. If you will kindly again peruse it, you will observe that the case is put plainly to you—that your request for the return of your deposit cheque could not be entertained—and you are requested to intimate whether you are prepared to enter into a contract on the terms of your tender.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
L. K. JONES,
Secretary.

John Heney, Esq., Contractor, Ottawa.

On the same day, the 7th of December, the following letter was received by Mr. Jones in the department from Mr. John Heney:—

Mr. BLAIR.

Ottawa, Dec, 7th, 1898.

Sir,—In reply to your favour of the 5th inst., permit me to say that my communication of the 27th October, addressed to the Hon. the Minister of Railways and Canals, requested the permission to amend my tender in the work referred to, by adding thereto the approximate amount of the duty on the necessary dredging plant and appliances for the St. John work; or, if such permission was not in conformity with the rules of the department, that my cheque be returned.

My tender was prepared on the assumption that the same privilege would be accorded me that was, a couple of years ago, allowed the city of St. John, the importation of dredging plant in bond. But immediately on the hon. the Minister declining to entertain such a request, I made application to have my tender amended in the manner mentioned. This request was made immediately after my tender was put in, and long before the bids were opened or could be considered; and, permit me to say, the right to alter or amend a bid is conceded to intending contractors by all countries up to the time the same are opened.

Now, it being the depth of winter, I fear it will be a difficult matter to take the necessary dredging plant from the United States to commence dredging operations before spring; still, if an extension of time for completion equal to three months is granted me, and my tender is amended in the manner suggested by my letter of October 27th, I am quite prepared to enter into a contract.

I am, sir,
Very respectfully yours,
JOHN HENEY.

L. K. Jones, Esq.,
Secretary, Railways and Canals,
Ottawa.

That closed the correspondence between the department and these gentlemen tendering.

Mr. BERGERON. Was his deposit returned to him?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It has not been returned.

Mr. BERGERON. And it has remained like that since?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The deposit has remained in the possession of the Government. Following this correspondence, and the question seeming to be one of considerable importance, and one upon which it was proper for me to lay a statement of the facts before my colleagues in Council, I did so, with the result that an Order in Council was passed, authorizing the contract to be awarded to Mr. Connolly for the amount of his tender, $328,173, for the bulk sum portion of the work also at the prices which he had offered to do the other work at, $8 for rock blasting, and $1 for stone ballast in cribs. The Council decided, as I have said, that the contract should be awarded to Mr. Connolly. The circumstances which had occurred justified the Council in its opinion in forfeiting the amount of Mayes's deposit; and unquestionably as it was clear,—I do not say it was clear,—but as it was possible that there might have been something which had led Mr. Mayes, after the tenders had been in and the situation was well understood by him, to come to an understanding with one or other of the tenderers, we considered it our duty to forfeit the amount of the deposit which he had made. With regard to Mr. Heney, it seemed as possible to the Government, that there might have been an understanding also with Mr. Heney and the next highest tender to him, and if there was, it was a proper case in which Mr. Heney's deposit should also be forfeited. With these two deposits amounting in the whole to $34,000, there would be a diminution by that amount in the cost of the work, assuming that the contract being awarded to Messrs. Connolly, they were prepared to enter into it for this sum. In addition to the reduction upon the cost of the work which would ensue from the forfeiture of these two deposits, there was also the difference in the Connollys's favour in the item of this special work for the rock ballasting, of $1.40 per cubic yard, as between their tender and Mr. Mayes's; and 30 cents a yard for the stone ballasting in the cribs. Taking the difference between the amount which we would have to pay the Connollys under their tender for that special work, and the amount of the deposits, there would be in the neighbourhood of from $45,000 to $50,000—I will not say over $45,000 but about that sum,—of a saving in the amount, or rather of an advantage to the Government below the amount of the Connolly tender.

Mr. HAGGART. Would you get from the deputy an estimate of the amount of the rock and the number of yards of filling?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There were 5,200 yards of rock blasting and the Connolly price was $8 per yard, and Mayes's price $9.40. $1.40 per yard for 5,200 yards, is $7,280. There is according to the estimate of the engineer 15,000 cubic yards of stone ballast which at the difference of 30 cents per yard would be $4,500, which would make $11,780 of a difference in favour of the Connollys upon the special items in the contract. If you add to these sums the forfeit of $34,000, you have $45,780 which would be taken off the amount of the Connolly tender, and the residue would be the cost to the Government.

Mr. POWELL. I suppose your advertisement calling for tenders said that the Government was not bound to accept the lowest or any tender?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. POWELL. In view of this fact do the hon. gentleman consider the law would allow him to retain the cheque of Heney?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I confess I do not want to make any statement to the committee on the subject which might prejudice the Crown.

Mr. POWELL. Your expression of opinion would not prejudice you.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is not necessary for me to express an opinion. The inference may be drawn from the fact that this course has been taken, as to what the Government felt would be its strict legal rights in the matter, and I do not think if I had a doubt as to that I would be justified in expressing it?

Mr. BERGERON. I suppose no legal proceedings have yet been taken by Mr. Heney or Mr. Mayes to get back their deposit?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No. Mr. Mayes has been informed most positively that his deposit would be forfeited. Mr. Heney has been in communication with us, and the matter has remained just in that position down to the present moment.

Mr. BERGERON. Nothing has been done since.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Nothing has been done since.

Mr. BERGERON. My impression is that the Minister will not hear from them again, or they would have done it before this.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I hope I shall not. I want to point out to the committee in this connection that while I cannot say that it did enter largely into the judgment, or lead the Government to a conclusion in the matter, I had in my own mind, as also had the general manager of the Intercolonial Railway, grave doubts as to whether it would be possible for Mr. Mayes if he had accepted the contract, to have carried it out. The dredging portion of the work at least, was work of which he had no experience, and of which he had not done any previously so far as we could ascertain. Judging from the letter which we received from Mr. Mackenzie, the amount of the tender was much below what he considered the work would actually cost. In order to be perfectly sure in regard to the matter, Mr. Pottinger wrote, when he was up here at Ottawa, I think while this matter was under consideration, and before the 12th of November, to his chief engineer Mr. McKenzie a confidential communication stating that the tenders had been opened, that Mr. Mayes tender was the lowest at $220,000, and asking him whether in his opinion the work could be done at the price. Mr. McKenzie replied under date the 12th November to the following effect:

D. Pottinger, Esq., General Manager.

Dear Sir,—Replying to your letter of the 1st instant, and received on the 7th instant,—

According to that, Mr. Pottinger must have written from Montreal immediately after the opening of the tenders. The tenders were opened by Mr. Pottinger and myself at the Windsor Hotel, in Montreal, on the 31st October, so that Mr. Pottinger must have written the very next day. I understand that Mr. Mackenzie was away at the time that letter reached Moncton, and this is the letter written by him on the 12th of November:

Replying to your letter of the 1st instant, and received on the 7th instant, I have to say that from the best information at present obtainable by me, it does not appear to me that the bulk sum part of the St. John work can be carried on or completed satisfactorily, according to the true intent and meaning of the plans and specifications for so small a sum of money as $220,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Was there an estimate by the Government? If so, what was the amount?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There was an estimate of $322,050.

Mr. BERGERON. By whom were the plans and specifications prepared?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. By Mr. Mackenzie.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the cost of the dredging and the cost of the timber for the cribwork?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The dredging was put at 45 cents per cubic yard.

Mr. HAGGART. That is the most extraordinary price I ever heard of. If the Minister inquires, he will find that dredging in New York is done for from 7 to 8 cents per cubic yard, and that it was done on the Manchester Canal for less than 3 cents per cubic yard.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman does not really know the conditions under which this dredging requires to be done.

Mr. HAGGART. They must be extraordinary conditions.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman is exploding rather precipitately. Dredging in the harbour of St. John is not capable of being done under conditions anything like as favourable as at a place like New York. The engineer who made these figures made them, so far as this particular item is concerned, as I happen to know personally, in concert with the engineer of the city of St. John, Hurd Peters, Esq., who had had, within a year or two preceding this date.

Mr. BLAIR.

actual means of forming a judgment as to what it would cost to dredge in that harbour. The harbour is a difficult one to dredge in, not only owing to the force of the tides, but also owing to the extraordinary depth, and the difficulties attending the disposal of the dredged material. Mr. Hurd Peters agreed with Mr. Mackenzie—it was from him that Mr. Mackenzie got the rate of 45 cents—and Mr. Peters spoke from actual personal knowledge. He had charge of the work done by the city corporation of St. John; he supervised the doing of it, and he paid the bills. So that my hon. friend must not jump to such a hasty conclusion, against the opinion of men who have means of knowledge, and have characters to sustain.

Mr. BERGERON. I want to remind my hon. friend that on the Princess Louise graving dock, which is in tidal water, the price paid for dredging was 39 cents, and that sent one of the Connollys to jail, and created a terrible row in this country.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There will be no one sent to jail on account of the Government or the city corporation paying 45 cents a yard for dredging in the harbour of St. John. I know something of the difficulties attending dredging there, because I was engaged as counsel in a lawsuit connected with work of this kind. The dumping of the material is very difficult. It has to be dumped outside of the harbour, and the scows can be taken out only at certain periods; and while these scows with the dredging materials are being delayed, the dredges themselves have to remain idle.

Mr. BERGERON. When I was there some time ago, I saw the material dumped on the west side of the harbour, near the Canadian Pacific Railway elevator, and I was told that it came from the harbour.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You have to take the scows a mile and a half or two miles outside of the harbour to dump the dredged material. We had reason to believe, from the opinion received from Mr. Mackenzie—a well-grounded opinion—that it would be rather difficult to say whether the work could be completed at this price; that is to say, the price offered by Mr. Mayes; but the question did not turn on that. It was decided on other grounds and after the whole question had been submitted to Council.

Mr. HAGGART. As I understand, they are building a wharf with cribwork, and I would like to know what is the timber, the size and everything about it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The engineer estimated that the cribwork and stone would be 138,950 cubic yards at $1.50, $208,425.

Mr. HAGGART. We have that already. What we want to know is the price paid for the timber work to the successful tenderers?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. As far as the timber work in the pier is concerned that is all included in the lump sum of $328,000.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentlemen need not tell me that. There is a schedule of prices for every individual article for which you pay out every month, and that is moneyed out every month. What are the quantities on which they have moneyed out?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I give you the items just as I received them from the engineer at the time. The cribwork is included in the $208,425. I received a general estimate. The engineer does not send me, when I ask him for an idea of what the work will cost, a statement containing the elaborated details. He gives me in a general way the figures of what this work is going to cost, and taking all the items together, taking the construction of the work together with the cost of the land, he made his estimate, and figured that the work would cost $559,769.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman has a detailed estimate or tenders from each of these different parties that contracted for this work. Every bit of it is given in detail, and every detail is moneyed out. Every tender shows so much for wood work, so much for dredging, so much for spikes, so much for stone excavation, so much for stone filling. I want to know what the timber work was? I want to know what the price was per lineal foot and the quantity?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman is thinking of canal construction. No doubt, when inviting tenders for canal work, you will have your schedule and you figure out your quantities to the tenderers, and they fill in opposite each particular item how much they will charge—how much for earth work, how much for rock work, how much for masonry, &c., and the only way to ascertain how much any particular tenderer proposes to do the work for is to money out all the quantities. But that was not this kind of contract at all. We asked each tenderer to say: For how much will you build this particular pier? How much will you do this dredging for? We stated in a specification to what depth we wanted the dredging done, and over what particular area they must make that depth. The tenderers did not put in a schedule of prices except for the rock blasting and the stone ballast. They gave a lump sum for all the rest of the work, which was the chief part of the work. Is it necessary that I should repeat that several times over. That was the character of this contract—not an ordinary canal structure at all. There was no moneying out necessary except with regard to the smaller items of rock blasting and stone ballasting.

Mr. WILSON. Have you a copy of the tender?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. WILSON. Did not the engineer make a detailed statement showing how much timber and how much dredging?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No doubt he must have made out the items in detail to come to a conclusion, but I have not got that here.

Mr. WILSON. You might bring it here.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I can get it, but have not got it now.

Mr. BERGERON. Did the hon. Minister ever see that?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think I ever did.

Mr. BERGERON. Before incurring an expenditure of about $500,000, was it not the hon. Minister's duty to see that everything made up by the engineer was put before him and examined by himself. The hon. gentleman now says he never saw it. How can he say, then, whether the tender made by the Connollys was a proper tender or not?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My engineer gave me the figures, which showed that $322,000 was his estimate.

Mr. BERGERON. How could the hon. gentleman have ascertained whether that was correct or not?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman expect me to sit in judgment upon my engineer's statement as to what quality of wood or stone, or dredging or rock ballasting is required to complete any given work?

Mr. BERGERON. Yes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman is talking of a matter he does not understand.

Mr. BERGERON. Mr. Mackenzie may be a very good man for taking measurements in the harbour of St. John, and Mr. Peters is no doubt the best man that St. John can produce as an engineer, but when those figures arrive at the department, should not the hon. Minister have submitted them to his chief engineer and got his opinion? Should he not have said to his chief engineer: According to your estimate of the work, when they say they want so much for the stone, &c., is that correct? But the hon. gentleman pretends that it is not his duty to go through all that, but that when Mr. Mackenzie says the amount will be $322,- 000, he is to accept that as perfectly satisfactory.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If I had not men in my employ in whom I can have confidence, it would be my duty to put them out and get others on whom I could depend, and my duty would not go beyond that. I would be making a show of myself if I were to undertake to pass upon the correctness of Mr. Mackenzie's calculation as to the number of cubic yards of timber there would be in that pier or the cubic yards of rock blasting which would require to be done. Is it the business of the chief engineer to go down to St. John himself and measure what quantity of rock blasting there was to be done, or go with a tape line and pass across this pier and measure what quantity of cribwork requires to be done?

Mr. COCHRANE. If he had any brains, he would know it without going down. It seems to me that the Minister is fooling with the committee when he tells us—he, the Minister who is responsible for the expenditure of this enormous sum of money—that he did not know what he was going to do before he undertook the job, and that he had nothing to do with it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Who told the hon. gentleman—

Mr. COCHRANE. I have been listening to you—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Cochrane) will please address the Chair.

Mr. COCHRANE. I desire to be courteous to the Chair, and beg your pardon. But the country knows whom I am addressing. We want to know, before we pass this amount, Did not the Minister know from his engineer the amount of money involved in this job, and did he not have a detailed statement in his office before he gave the contract? The Minister told us that he supposed he had, but he did not think it worth while to bring it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I said nothing of the kind.

Mr. COCHRANE. Then I must have been dreaming. But I think the committee understood it just as I did—that the Minister supposed he had this in his office but did not think to bring it.

Mr. HAGGART. Perhaps the Minister will tell us whether the plans or specifications were exhibited to the different tenderers at the office here.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, they were seen at Moncton.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. Minister said a moment ago that if he had taken the precaution of having the figures of the engineer

Mr. BERGERON.

Mr. Mackenzie, and having them examined by the chief engineer, he would have made an exhibition of himself.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. BERGERON. A show of himself, then. The hon. gentleman used one word or the other.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I used the last word but not the preceding words.

Mr. BERGERON. In my way of interpreting English, when I see a show, it is generally an exhibition. The hon. gentleman said "show" then, if it pleases him. From what we have heard and from what we have known of contracts of this sort before, this seems to me to have been a combination, and the best combination I have heard of yet. We have got the figures here in parts and have not got what we were promised—the figures of the engineer and those of the different tenderers.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I beg pardon; I said I would bring an abstract of the tenders and I have brought it.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. gentleman has not brought what I understood he promised.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What the hon. gentleman understood I promised is another thing.

Mr. BERGERON. "Hansard" is there, and we can see what the hon. Minister promised. I certainly asked the hon. gentleman the other day for the figures of his engineer and of the different tenderers so that we could compare them.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman can compare the figures.

Mr. BERGERON. Yes, I can compare the lump sums. I know Mr. Mackenzie said the work would cost $320,000, and the Connollys got the work at $328,000. But how can one reach a conclusion until he has the detailed figures of the engineer and those of the successful tenderer?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Suppose that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) had plans for building a house and asked persons to tender for the building of that house. And suppose that a man tendered at $10,000. Does the hon. gentleman imagine that he would have a statement from that tenderer showing how much he calculated for the foundation, the walls, the roof, the plastering, the windows and so on?

Mr. WILSON. That would depend on how the tender was asked for?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have said that the tender asked for was to build a pier of a certain length at a certain spot, upon piles, and to dredge around that pier for a certain distance to a certain depth. The tenderer was asked to say how much he would do that work for in a lump sum. He gave us a lump sum, and I gave the contract at that figure.

Mr. BERGERON. I am more convinced than ever that it is a combination.

Mr. DOMVILLE. What does the hon. gentleman mean by a combination?

Mr. BERGERON. I am sure my hon. friend (Mr. Domville) understands that.

Mr. DOMVILLE. No.

Mr. BERGERON. Here are three men tendering for a work.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Four.

Mr. BERGERON. There were only three considered; there is no use talking about the one who was so high that he was not considered. One of these is Mr. Mayes. He sends in a tender of $220,000. I need not state it, I suppose my hon. friend heard before the figures of the engineer of the department, but this is $100,000 less than the figures of the engineer. I asked if Mayes was a contractor; my hon. friend, a few moments ago, said he had had no experience. That fits in with the idea of a combination. There has been a tender from an Ottawa contractor who is a good contractor, and who has the money to complete the work. He tendered for $298,000, but he finds out afterwards that he has no dredge. That dredge question plays a great role in this combination. Mr. Mayes says: I cannot do the work unless I am allowed to bring in a dredge from the States. So he takes it for granted that there is no dredge in Canada to do that work. He says that if he is allowed to bring in a dredge from the States he will take the contract. Of course, he is told that that cannot be done. So there is one man put aside, and his deposit of $18,000 is retained. He does not try very hard to get it back. He says if the Minister will be kind enough to give it to him, he will be glad to take it, but he makes no earnest effort to get that $18,000 back. Then the second tenderer, Mr. Heney, finds out that he has not got a dredge, and unless he can buy a dredge in the States, unless he can get three months' delay and bring a dredge into Canada without paying duty, he also cannot go into the contract. He offers to do the work for $298,000, plus $30,000 for a dredge. The Minister also refuses to accept his offer, and then he (Heney) asks to be relieved of his contract. The Government say: All right, but they keep his deposit of $18,000. Then they have two deposits, making $34,

000. Mr. Heney does not try very hard to get back his deposit. Then we come to the third tenderer, the Connolly Bros., whose tender is $328,000. Now, Mr. Mackenzie is a good engineer, I am told, but we have had good engineers in the past who were in partnership with contractors, and what happened five or six years ago may happen again.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I ask the hon. gentleman to have a little mercy on our officers. These gentlemen are in the public service, and they have a right to be treated as gentlemen.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. Minister will not prevent me from saying what I wish. I am here to perform a public duty, and I will do it. I do not care whether I offend the pets of the Government or not. They are in the hands of the Minister, who can do with them anything that he likes. Their salaries can be increased if they are Grits, but if they are Conservatives they are hounded like slaves. I only ask why these things are done. I do not say that Mr. Mackenzie has done anything improperly. It is a fact that we cannot get his figures. The engineer says it will cost $322,000, a lump sum. Connolly, without giving his figures in detail, makes a tender for $328,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He was not asked.

Mr. BERGERON. He should have been asked. The hon. gentleman will not squander public money like that without asking the contractor to come down to minor details. Mr. Connolly is an intelligent man, a good contractor, who knows what he is doing. Has my hon. friend never heard of the Kingston graving dock? Why could not the same thing be repeated? We are not going to hound the Connollys, as my hon. friends opposite have done, we are not going to treat them like thieves, as they have been treated by the Government party when in Opposition. The Connollys made a combination with Bancroft, and why could not the same thing be done again? Mr. Heney gets off, and Mayes gets off, that leaves Connolly with a contract at a price of $328,000. Mr. Mayes does not clamour for his money, and I do not think Mr. Heney will ask for his money any more. It is my impression that both these gentlemen have been reimbursed by Connolly, and why should they not be reimbursed? In what position would Connolly be by giving $34,000 to get a contract of $328,000? Subtract $34,000 from $328,000, and you still have $294,000 for a work that Heney was ready to do for $298,000, leaving the dredges out of the question. Now, is there not prima facie evidence here of a combination? My hon. friend may laugh, but the people who will hear of this will not laugh. What dredges has Connolly got? How can Connolly have dredges here in Canada when Mayes and Heney could not have any. Mr. Connolly got his own dredges from the States; he was doing some work at Philadelphia; he was more clever than the others. The combination is as clear as daylight. He says to the others: You pretend that you cannot bring in dredges without paying customs. He had his own dredges, and I believe they were the dredges that he took into the States, giving some bond to the United States authorities, which money was to be reimbursed when these dredges came back.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They were Canadian dredges, then?

Mr. BERGERON. I am not sure, I believe they were.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Then, you think we ought to have exacted duty from them?

Mr. BERGERON. I am not talking about duty at all. I am saying that Connolly either was more intelligent than the others, or else they all understood one another. More than that, I think the hon. gentleman told us last night that Mr. Mayes was a sub-contractor, working for Connolly. Is that not the case?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know that he is; I dare say he is.

Mr. BERGERON. Now, there is a combination. Mr. Mayes leaves his $16,000 there, and he is reimbursed by Connolly; Heney leaves his $18,000 there, and he is reimbursed by Connolly.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is a good reason why we should keep the deposits.

Mr. BERGERON. You can keep them, but that is like the white horse story, which I have not time to relate. The hon. gentleman has got the $34,000, but the Connollys will take that out of him without his knowing anything about it. Now, Mr. Chairman, so far as I am concerned, it seems to me as clear as can be that here is a combination. My hon. friend may not know anything about it, and if he does not know anything about it, at least he has taken no means to prevent it. He has not shown all the zeal that he ought to have shown over the expenditure of the people's money. If he had been spending his own money on this work, he would have looked into it a great deal more carefully. When his own engineer estimated 45 cents per cubic yard he would have gone to see how much the Connollys were doing it for. If Connolly was doing it for 35 or 40 cents—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How could I tell?

Mr. BERGERON.

Mr. BERGERON. By asking his own engineer to make his own schedule, and by asking Connolly to make his own schedule, and compare them.

Mr. HAGGART. We ought to have in possession of the committee the memorandum from the Minister of Railways and Canals to the Council, in which he set forth the facts and reasons for dropping this lowest tenderer, and whether he recommends that the sum of $20,000 which Heney has deposited should be forfeited, and the same in regard to the $14,000 deposited by Mr. Mayes. The minute of Council has either been approved or not, it has either been altered or amended in Council, and the Minister ought to be in a position to speak positively as to what has been done in Council.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I say that Council passed an Order approving of the letting of the contract to the Connollys on the statement of facts, as I have presented them.

Mr. HAGGART. I suppose the hon. Minister, further in his memorandum to Council, recommended some action in reference to the deposits of the other two lowest tenderers. The hon. Minister speaks, in his calculations, as if this $34,000 forfeited in effect lessened the difference between Mayes' contract and the Connolly contract, which difference was in the neighbourhood of $94,000. He says that the difference is further lessened by the sum which Connolly is lower than Mayes in reference to rock excavation, and also lower in regard to the sum of money which is required for filling the crib. That amounts to $11,000 difference, as he pretends, and he leads the committee to believe that he intends to forfeit $34,000; and this makes $45,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How much?

Mr. HAGGART. Thirty-four thousand dollars and $11,000 make $45,000. Then, I presume, from the remarks of the hon. Minister, that he looks upon that $20,000 as forfeiture. What we ought to know is exactly what he recommended to Council in his memorandum, whether Council has approved of it or not, or whether he has recommended anything in regard to the forfeiture of the $20,000 and the $14,000. The hon. Minister ought to be required to speak distinctly upon that point. Taking these two amounts, making $45,000, it will be seen that Connolly's contract is in the neighbourhood of $50,000 over and above Mayes', deducting $16,000 from the amounts which are forfeited to the Government, and the $11,000 difference. The hon. gentleman states that he has no details in his department or at Moncton in reference to this work. It is the most extraordinary statement that I ever heard from a Minister. I will venture to say that the engineer in charge of the department has a detailed statement of every piece of timber that goes into the work. I will venture to say, further—and it is not merely my belief, but the statement of a positive fact—that there is a schedule price attached to every item in the tender of Connolly for such work, and his deputy will not tell him that it is not so.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I know it is not so. I do not require to ask my deputy that. It is absurd to make such a suggestion.

Mr. HAGGART. How is he to be paid for the timber on the ground; how is he to be paid for the amount of excavation that he does? This is the first lump-sum contract I ever heard of. The hon. Minister says: How are you going to ask for details of everything in reference to building a House? How are you to ask how much paint is in it, how many yards of mortar, how many bushels of lime, how many feet of timber? Every contract that is let by the British Government gives every detail as to even every paint brush that is used. There is a separate statement and a separate tender for every pound of nails, mortar, lime, sand, timber, and everything that enters into the building. The hon. gentleman received tenders for a lump sum, but there is a schedule of prices attached to each. How is the Government going to pay on the monthly estimate, unless there is a schedule carefully made out. If it is as the hon. Minister says, it is the first time I ever heard of a contract being let in such a manner as that. The hon. gentleman says that he has a statement which shows that the cost of the excavation of earth in the harbour of St. John will amount to 45 cents a yard, and he refers to me and talks at me in a manner as if I were interrupting him with some foolish remark. I will tell the hon. Minister that, within two or three months, there has been let for the excavation, in the harbour of New York, of 8,000,000 yards of earth, and the parties have to take the earth 6 miles away, a contract in which the highest price is 8 cents per cubic yard. I will also show him that the Liverpool Harbour Commission paid for excavation, where the parties had to take the earth 3 or 4 miles away, less than 3 cents per cubic yard. There may be extraordinary circumstances with which I am not acquainted, in reference to the harbour of St. John. There may be some peculiarities about the work which may justify the Government in paying 45 cents a yard, but what the committee ought to have in their possession, when an expenditure of that kind is proposed, is a schedule of the amounts. The hon. Minister may not be required to have a personal knowledge of all the details, but the Deputy Head of his department ought to have all that information in his hands, when an extraordinary expenditure, such as is proposed to be made upon the harbour of St. John, is under consideration. I have been at the head of the department, and I have seen details of every piece of work published again and again in the reports in reference to every contract, every canal and every piece of railway work done by the Government from one end of the country to the other. There is a schedule of every item. It is absolutely necessary that there should be a schedule, in order that the monthly payments may be made.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How would you pay a man, as the work is progressing on the building of a house which is not under a schedule contract?

Mr. HAGGART. I tried to explain to the hon. gentleman. There is a schedule of every item of material that goes into the building. If you will get one of the tenders of the Imperial Government, you will see that there is a schedule for every item.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In the case of a straight lump-sum contract for the building of a house there would not be a schedule contract.

Mr. HAGGART. Not at all, as ordinary contracts are let for the building of a house.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Let me ask the hon. gentleman one more question. The hon. gentleman has asked: How is it possible to pay a man as the work progresses, unless you have in the contract a schedule of prices? How would you pay a man who was building a house under a contract for a lump sum, which is not, as the hon. gentleman admits, a schedule contract?

Mr. HAGGART. The architect in charge of the building pays him according to what, under his estimate, would be a correct amount.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Exactly.

Mr. HAGGART. But that is not the way that Government works are let, which I am trying to impress upon the hon. gentleman. There is not an expenditure of $5,000 in the whole of the Empire by the Imperial authorities for which there is not a schedule showing every pound of paint, every bit of glass, putty or anything else that enters into the details of the work.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Did the hon. gentleman never hear of a wharf being put up to tender and contract, and the tenderer being asked to offer a lump sum for the construction of such work, according to specifications?

Mr. HAGGART. Not according to specifications. The specifications give the depth to which the timber is to be placed, the amount of the timber that is in the wharf, the amount of dredging and rock filling, but nothing else.

Mr. MCGREGOR. Did you do so when you were Minister of Railways and Canals?

Mr. BERGERON. Speak to the Chair.

Mr. MCGREGOR. I ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart), if he did so when he was Minister of Railways?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

Mr. MCGREGOR. Then why were you $300,000 out on the Curran bridge and $300,000 out on the Tay Canal, between the estimates and the real cost, if you were so very careful about it?

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McGregor) is talking of something entirely foreign to the subject. On the Tay Canal there was a schedule of quantities. The quantities may be far in excess of the estimate of the engineer. This lump sum contract is on the quantities which are furnished by the Government engineer, and the different materials which enter into the building of the dock, so much per lineal foot for timber, so much for excavation, so much for dredging, so much a yard for rock excavation must be ascertained. There must be details of that, and yet the Minister says there are no details.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I said nothing of the kind. I said the contract contains no details of the kind.

Mr. HUGHES. That is just what he stated.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, the hon. gentleman said that I stated there are no details of the kind. That is different from stating the contract contains no details of the kind. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes) cannot see the difference his mind is not working.

Mr. HAGGART. Then if there are details of this contract we want them. The Minister says a lump sum is required to put the wharf in a particular place. That is an extraordinary statement for him to make. The engineer must have measured carefully the depth of the water in which this pier is to be built, he must know exactly the quantity of timber and all the details on which he estimated the cost of the work. He could not jump at the cost. Now, we know what the Minister pays per yard for dredging, we know what he pays for rock excavation, we know what he pays for filling the piers, and what we want to know is how much he pays for building the cribwork which is put up upon piles in that harbour. When we know that we will know approximately whether this contract has been let in an economical manner or not. Let me tell the Minister that when he saw that Mr. Heney had dropped his tender and that Mr. Mayes was getting out of it, why did he give the contract to Mr. Connolly? Why did he not forfeit the deposits of these two gentlemen, and then ask for further tenders?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I could not do that.

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, it has been done thousands of times in the department, and the moment there was a suspicion of collusion between the tenderers he should have advertised again. The time allowed for tendering was not sufficient to allow contractors to inquire into it. It was not a work that was urgently necessary, in fact I do not think it is a work that is necessary at all. The Minister is doing it for the purpose of building an elevator to come in competition with the Canadian Pacific Railway, who are perfectly competent to do all the business, and who have an elevator on the opposite side of the bay. Where he thinks he is going to get his grain from astonishes me. He intends to haul the grain a couple of hundred miles further than the Canadian Pacific Railway, and to enter into competition with a railroad which we have induced to build to St. John.

Mr. BERGERON. And the grain can go to Portland too.

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, grain that can go to Portland by the Grand Trunk Railway, and grain that can go to St. John by the Canadian Pacific Railway at a couple of hundred miles less haul, than over the Intercolonial Railway. It will be like the elevator at Halifax. By hauling the grain for nothing down there he may get some of it, but as to entering into competition with the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway, who will take the grain to Portland and St. John by a shorter route, it is perfectly absurd and ridiculous.

Mr. POWELL. There is one thing I would like to have the Minister make clear. I have no doubt he is able to do so, but although I followed him closely I do not think he has done so yet. If I understand him correctly, all the stone ballast is going into the cribwork of the wharf, and the cribwork of the wharf is in the lump contract with Connolly.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The contract provided for an additional sum for rock blasting under water and removal per cubic yard, and for stone ballast in accordance with wherever it should come from.

Mr. POWELL. But that is in the lump contract.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, the stone ballast to put in the cribs is not in the lump contract. That is outside the lump contract altogether.

Mr. POWELL. That certainly cannot be.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Wherever the stone ballast was taken from there was a certain amount to be allowed. There were only two tenders. Mr. Mayes who tendered for 60 cents for stone ballast from the old wharf—there did not come much from that as it so happened—$1.30 from the Harris property—a good deal was taken from there—and 80 cents from other sources. There does not appear to have been any taken from other sources. Connolly's tender was 75 cents from the old wharf, $1 from the Harris property, and 86 cents from other sources.

Mr. POWELL. What I fail to see is where the Minister is going to get his wharf to come in at all. If the dredging is all per cubic yard, and neither of these is to the lump contract, what in thunder is the lump contract for?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The dredging is in the lump contract.

Mr. POWELL. You told us that was so much per cubic yard.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I tell the hon. gentleman that the estimate of cost which I received from the engineer was, that the dredging would cost 45 cents a yard, but it is in the lump contract. Mr. Connolly undertook to say that he would build that wharf.

Mr. POWELL. As long as the hon. gentleman says that it is in the lump contract, we all understand that. We have reached this stage, that all the dredging is in the lump contract, and is it not a fact that all the ballasting is in the lump contract?

Mr. MCGREGOR. Yes.

Mr. POWELL. I think my hon. friend is right in that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. POWELL. That must follow, because I understand that the lump contract is for the construction of the wharf and the dredging around the wharf.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is a separate tender for the loading of the wharf. In the tenders each man was invited to say how much he would charge for the stone ballast in the cribs taken from these different places.

Mr. POWELL. What was included in the lump contract?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It included all the work of building this pier and doing this dredging complete, except so far as the rock ballasting, if there was any, and the removal of the stone ballast from those points were concerned.

Mr. POWELL. We have got that. There is another question I would like to have cleared up. The hon. gentleman has informed the House that he has before him no details of the work that entered into this lump contract. I am correct in that?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will tell the hon. gentleman what I have. I have the engineer's estimate of what in his judgment it would cost for building the new wharf and docks, tearing down part of the old wharf, and dredging to 30 feet below tide, which he said would amount to 252,000 cubic yards. That work he estimates to cost $113,625.

Mr. POWELL. That is outside of the lump contract.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is part of the lump contract. Then, he estimates that building the cribwork filled with stone will cost $208,425. That is all the information which I have in my hand. Now, it has been stated by the hon. gentleman dozens of times over that I said there are no other details, that there are no calculations nor figures showing how the engineer arrived at that estimate of the total cost. I did not say anything of the kind. I said quite the contrary. I said that the engineer must have made a careful calculation as to every square foot of timber that would be put in, every cubic yard of dredging that would be required, and all the necessary work to go to make up this structure; and I dare say that when the tenderers were at Moncton the engineer would show them, not his prices, but the quantities, with the plans and specifications, the size and location of the work. But I have not those figures; they are at Moncton.

Mr. POWELL. Where I was astray was that the Minister told the ex-Minister of Railways that it was arrant nonsense for him to have the details of this lump contract.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Is it possible that any gentleman sitting within the sound of my voice could misapprehend what I said as the hon. gentleman states? I have told the hon. gentleman again and again that these details were not in the contract. There is no reason why they should be. It is absurd that they should be.

Mr. POWELL. The hon. gentleman went beyond the contract, and said it was folly to suppose that these details should be here—that they would be at Moncton. He said it was absurd to have them here.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not say that. I used the word absurd with reference to the contract containing the details of prices and quantities, as to how the lump sum should be made up.

Mr. BERGERON. I want to ask the hon. Minister how much it will cost in addition to $328,000 to finish that work. How much rock blasting will there be, and what will it amount to ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The estimated quantity of rock blasting is 5,200 yards, which, at $8, the contract price, will cost $41,600.

Mr. BERGERON. The engineer's estimate for the whole work was $363,000, and the Connolly tender was $369,000. It seems that the Connollys were most intelligent gentlemen to come so near the estimate of the engineer.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Of course, that is intended as an insinuation.

Mr. BERGERON. No, that is not my way. I am generally too blunt. If I had an idea such as my hon. friend seems to have, I would say it openly. But when the hon. gentleman has not given us all the details of the calculations made by his engineer, when he has not taken the trouble to see the figures and the details of the successful tenderers, the Messrs. Connolly, and when in a work involving over $300,000 which the engineer estimates in a lump sum, would cost about $363,000, and when the Messrs. Connolly, in reply to the invitation for tender, say they will do it for $369,000, that confirms me in my opinion that the whole scheme was a combination to the detriment of the public interest.

Mr. HAGGART. I asked the hon. gentleman for the details and he said he had not got them. He has a very short memory. I find that last night, when I was not present he gave the full details to the committee. I have been asking him for the details, and he said it was a lump sum contract, that he was not in possession of the details, that the engineer might have the details in Moncton, and no doubt he had for the purpose of arriving at a lump sum. But now I find that the hon. gentleman was in possession of the details the whole time.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman is quite mistaken.

Mr. HAGGART. Let me give the hon. gentleman's own words as reported in "Hansard" :

There was a contract entered into for the wharf and trestle, included in one sum of $328,173. Then, as part of the same contract and in addition thereto, there was a price per cubic yard for rock excavation, for ballasting, for pile dredging and other items of that character, and also for a warehouse on the wharf, which would bring the cost of the wharf construction up to $410,000. The rock excavation was estimated to cost $41,

Mr. BLAIR.

600 ; the stone ballasting, $12,900 ; tie rods, $1,304 ; planking on inner face, $1,320. That makes a total of $385,297. The warehouse on the wharf will cost $22,795. Other items include pile dredging, $3,330 ; pile foundations for iron bridging, $1,700 ; iron bridging removed and re-erected, $2,030 ; new iron bridging, contract $1,640 ; floor for iron bridging, 600 lineal feet at $2.70, $2,430 ; fencing and fender piles, $1,194 ; removing track, flooring, fencing and fender piles of present main line, $120. These items amount to $12,444. Then, $6,120 would represent the cost of a temporary pile trestle for sidings to wharfs ; 1,400 lineal feet at $10, $14,000 ; platform on piles at north end of wharf, 9,000 lineal feet at 60 cents, $5,400. Then, track-laying on wharf, trestle and bridges, one and one-half miles, $300 ; on balance of main line and sidings, including ties and ballast, $3,400 ; rails and fastenings, $6,250 ; fifteen switches, $1,750 ; excavations for sidings back of elevator, $1,500, and removal of solid rock, $16,500, or a total of $18,000. Then engineering, legal valuations, office and stationery expenses, $10,000. Then, there are a number of other items, making up a total of $685,756. That is the estimate of the total cost of the erection of the wharf and all that is appurtenant thereto.

Why did not the hon. gentleman give me the details at once ? I was not here the night before last, but the hon. gentleman evidently is in possession of every detail, and might as well have given them at once.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This just shows how the hon. gentleman fell into error. I have been asked all this evening, and what I have been doing is to furnish this committee, fully and fairly, to the best of my knowledge and ability, what information the engineer furnished me and on what facts I acted in awarding this contract. I produced the document which I received from Mr. Mackenzie, the engineer, addressed to me personally, in answer to the request for this information, in which he showed me, as I have read to this committee, how he made up the amount which he estimated this work was going to cost. What the hon. gentleman refers to is a totally different thing. It is a statement, not made over a year ago, but made now, and which shows what the cost will be of this work now, under present circumstances. The engineer shows that there were some work added he did not include in his original specification, and included them in this statement. His original estimate of the cost of the work was $559,769. His present estimate is, with all these necessary additions, all of which I read last night, $698,156. There are additional items in that which were not contemplated at the time the contract was first entered into. The committee will understand clearly the difference in the two statements. I could have produced this, but the committee would not have accepted it, because it was not an answer to the request for the estimates that the engineer gave me before the contract was entered into. This is an estimate I have only just received, and is the basis of the vote before the committee.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. Minister promised to bring down some papers concerning the Macdonald affair.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have had the report of Mr. Bedard looked up and it is being copied with all possible despatch. To-morrow I shall have the pleasure of giving it to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. HAGGART. I cannot understand the hon. Minister's explanation. He says that he could not give the information because the contract was entirely different from the subsequent information he got from his engineer. And the engineer was giving him the details of the contract, $328,173, exactly the amount which the Minister states to-night that he let the contract for. Well, he goes on and gives the details of the same contract.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, no.

Mr. HAGGART. He says: "Then as part of the same contract and in addition thereto, there was a price per cubic yard for rock excavation," and then he goes on and gives the details of the warehouses on the wharf, the size of the pier it was to be erected on, and sums up the whole amount that the engineer has furnished as the total cost at $685,756. Then I see there is to be some 5,000 yards of excavation. Does the hon. Minister give $1.30 a yard for putting that in the pier?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There were 5,200 yards of rock excavation at $8 a yard.

Mr. HAGGART. I suppose he takes that rock and puts it into the pier. Does he get $1.30 besides for that?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The rock blasting under water and the removal of the rock into the pier is all included in the $8 a yard.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). And he does not get $1.30 extra for putting it into the crib?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). Can the hon. gentleman quote a case where so much as $8 a yard has been paid for rock excavation, and without tender?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What does the hon. gentleman mean "without tender"?

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry); I want to know if the hon. gentleman can point out any case in this country where $8 a yard was paid for excavating rock?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Under water—sometimes under 40 feet of water.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). But can the hon. gentleman point to an instance?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My deputy tells me that more than that was paid in the harbour of Victoria, B.C. I do not know of any case myself; I never excavated any rock under water.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). I can hardly believe that such an amount was paid even there. But if so, there may have been special reasons for it. We know that wages there are twice as high as they are in St. John, N.B., and that everything is more expensive. Concrete has been put in here for $5 a yard, but it costs $17 or $20 in British Columbia or the North-west, as in the case of the bridge at Edmonton.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The man who put in the lowest tender on the rest of the work wanted $9.40 for this rock excavation that the Connollys do for $8.

Mr. BERGERON. I have understood then the hon. gentleman will be kind enough to bring down the papers about Macdonald.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will do so with pleasure.

Mr. BERGERON. Now, will the hon. gentleman be kind enough to give me the facts with regard to the dismissal of Mr. Bernier, of Rivière du Loup?

Mr. INGRAM. Before we leave the point now under discussion, may I ask the question whether there are two separate contracts, one for $8 for taking out the rock, and one of $1.30 for putting it in the pier?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. INGRAM. Is it specifically stated in the contract that this rock is to be placed in the piers?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have no doubt it is. All that these parties get for blasting out that rock and putting it in the piers is $8 a cubic yard.

Mr. INGRAM. The reason I ask is because we have had experience in this Parliament of contractors taking advantage of the Government in this way: They have a contract to take out material, which they must dispose of in some way so as not to interfere with navigation; then they have another contract to fill in a certain space, getting so much a yard for it; and by the shrewdness of contractors, the material taken out which would have cost them money to dump somewhere out in the lake away from the harbour, they have used to fill in thus saving them money and at the same time getting paid for it. I want to know, was it stated in the contract that that material would be put in the piers?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is under the one contract. The engineer, in the statement read by the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) estimated for so much solid rock excavating under water and putting material in the wharf as ballast.

Mr. INGRAM. What is this $1.30 per yard for?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That may be taken from the Harris property. The department has been blasting a great deal of rock to make room for some additional tracks, and this rock would be included in that schedule and for taking that stone ballast and putting it in the crib, the contractor would be entitled to $1.30 per yard.

Mr. INGRAM. Mr. Chairman, I desire to have this clearly understood—

Mr. MCGREGOR. It has been made clear.

Mr. INGRAM. This is an important matter to the country, though my hon. friend from North Essex (Mr. McGregor) may care little about it. The Government would not be justified in paying $1.30 per yard to the contractor for putting the material they take out of the harbour in the crib, which would be more convenient for them than dumping it outside the harbour.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have already assured my hon. friend that the contractor is not entitled to and will not receive under his contract anything above $8 for the ballast, the rock excavation and the removal of and placing it in the crib. $8 covers the whole.

Mr. INGRAM. Therefore, there is no $1.30 at all?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not for that rock, nor for that ballast, only for the material that is taken from the Harris property.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). Would the hon. gentleman say where this work was let in British Columbia that cost $9 per yard?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The Deputy Minister says it was in 1880, according to his recollection. I may say to my hon. friend that the difference between the highest and lowest of these tenderers is only $1.60. Connolly's tender was $8, Heney's $7.80, and Mayes's $9.40.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). Is it the case that some of these contractors are now sub-contractors of the man who got the contract?

Mr. INGRAM.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That has been stated. I have no personal knowledge on that subject.

Mr. HAGGART. Before concurrence, I would ask the Minister to bring down the specifications on which this work was let, and a copy of the tender, or one of the tenders, and lay them upon the Table.

Mr. HUGHES. Could the Minister tell us in general terms what the cubic contents of the pier may be? In other words, will the cubic contents of the pier exceed the number of cubic yards of rock to be excavated in the harbour?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. There will be room in the pier for all the rock that will be taken out of the harbour?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, and more too.

Mr. POWELL. Would the hon. gentleman tell me what portion of these seven acres is covered with water at high tide, and what portion of that basin is going to be excavated?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. All that is going to be excavated further will be the east and west side of the pier for a distance of 525 feet. In front of the pier, some few feet after you get out, you will probably reach a depth of water which will be sufficient without any dredging. There is some dredging, I understand, at the end of the pier, but a considerable part of it is on the two sides.

Mr. POWELL. What is to be done on the Portland side? There is a large portion on the Portland side. What does the Government contemplate doing with that?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have not had occasion to consider that question yet. It is fairly well situated, I think, for business purposes. Part of it, of course, is under water in the neighbourhood of the tracks, but as you near the main street there are dwelling-houses and tenement houses upon the property.

Mr. HAGGART. I understood that we are at liberty to discuss some of the items other than the bridge on this particular item. I see there is an expenditure of $600,000 for rolling stock for 1898-99; was that expended?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That has all been expended.

Mr. HAGGART. You are asking a further appropriation of $343,000. What are you going to do with it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The rolling stock was all purchased by tender. The $343,000 we are asking for is for five locomotives, two first-class sleepers, three dining cars, 100 box cars, three first-class cars, six second-class sleepers two baggage and express, one postal, one flanger, two heavy platform cars, 30 refrigerator cars, air brakes, draw-bars and swings. The rolling equipment mentioned here is well within the average over the whole line to which the road is entitled under the additional mileage. For instance, there are still seven or eight locomotives which we will be entitled to ask from Parliament because of our added mileage. But we have not yet thought it well to ask for any more than the present business of the road will justify. I have approached it as moderately and as cautiously as I could, and I am justified in saying that the business of the road requires fully all the equipment we are here asking for, and absolutely more. Last year we were obliged to pay out of our income no less a sum than $60,000 and over, for the use of cars and car mileage to other roads, so that as compared with the highest amount my hon. friend had to pay, we have to pay $50,000 more in the last twelve months in that one direction alone. Our locomotives are in full demand, we require all we have, and more. The same thing may be said about the rolling stock.

Mr. INGRAM. I suppose the hon. Minister has fitted his engines with the latest appliances and air-brakes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. INGRAM. I notice an item of $20,000 for air-brakes. What is the amount paid for these appliances? In the meantime, may I ask if it is the Westinghouse Company that is furnishing them?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. These cost $70, and we are asking for a sufficient amount to equip 285 cars.

Mr. INGRAM. I am willing to compliment the hon. gentleman. I very much approve of these latest improvements being put on the cars. I am glad to compliment the hon. gentleman on taking such a step on the Government railways.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I trust my hon. friend will make himself heard on this side of the House, if he is complimenting me.

Mr. INGRAM. I was attempting to compliment the Government, and the hon. gentleman especially, for expending this sum of money in improving the rolling stock of the Government railway. I think, if there is one thing more than another that the railways should do, it is to adopt the latest appliances for the purpose of saving life and limb of those engaged in the dangerous occupation of railroading, and that the Government railway should set a good example to other railways throughout the country.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I agree with the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BERGERON. What engines had the hon. gentleman built in the United States?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I had twenty locomotives built in the United States. They were built by the Baldwin Company, of Philadelphia; they cost $9,800 each, and they are the cheapest locomotives that were ever put on the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. BERGERON. Are they good?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They are good.

Mr. HUGHES. What is the tonnage?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Seventy-seven tons.

Mr. INGRAM. What is the size of the cylinders?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think, 18 x 24.

Mr. POWELL. Some of them are compound, are they not?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, some compounds, and some others.

Mr. INGRAM. Has the hon. gentleman tried Kingston engines on the Intercolonial Railway at all?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, we are keeping the Kingston company as busy as, I think, they are capable of being kept. At all events, they are turning out for us locomotives as fast as they can turn them out.

Mr. INGRAM. The impression throughout the country amongst railroad men is, that the Government do not want to patronise the Kingston Engine Works.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is a mistake.

Mr. INGRAM. I am glad to hear that the Government is keeping them so busy that they cannot supply them fast enough and I think no fault will attach to the Government for having applied to the Baldwin Company.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think the Kingston people will find any fault with us. We required to have a number of engines last fall for our winter business. We applied to the Baldwin Company, and ascertained from them the best they could do in the way of furnishing twenty locomotives. We had these furnished in thirty days from the time the order was given, and paid $9,800 each for them.

Mr. BERGERON. Were they new, or had they been used before?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Absolutely new. I think the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) will tell you that they poured into his county at Moncton with a good deal of rapidity. We had to pay the Kingston people last year, to get them to build the same size of engines, $14,600 each.

Mr. BERGERON. What cars were built—parlour cars?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No parlour cars. We had some sleepers, dining-cars and first-class cars.

Mr. BERGERON. By the Wagner Company?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Were tenders asked for these cars and engines?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. We asked for tenders for engines from perhaps half a dozen of the American firms.

Mr. BERGERON. May we have the names of the firms?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I shall be happy to furnish hon. gentlemen with the names of the firms.

Mr. BERGERON. Will the hon. gentleman do it before we get through with the supplementary Estimates?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. I notice that in some of the sleeping-cars that were here the space was small from berth to berth, and it may be that the cars were built low to go through some of the lower tunnels. There was not as much space between the upper and lower berth as in the ordinary sleeping-car, in which the passenger can sit in the lower berth without bending the head. I wondered if the car was built low for the lower tunnels.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The cars were made standard size. I had the same impression as the hon. gentleman has, when I first examined one of the new cars, but I found that the impression was not well founded. It was due rather to the fact that the springs were new and the cushions were all out to their full extent. After a little wear they will fall, and there will not be any difference in that respect.

Mr. INGRAM. In respect to the duties on the Baldwin engines, was any reduction made to the Government, or did they pay the full duty.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am afraid that I will have to acknowledge that we smuggled these engines in. That is the only justification we have for paying the Kingston people the price I have mentioned. When we bring anything in for the purposes of the Government, it is not subject to duty. Cars or locomotives, coming in from outside, pay no duty, and, therefore, we have felt that in getting work done at home, we might fairly add to the cost outside the amount of the duty.

Mr. BERGERON. How does my hon. friend fix that with the hon. Minister of Customs? How does the Customs Department keep its books straight?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not let him know anything about it.

Mr. INGRAM. I would like to bring the attention of the hon. Minister to a case that occurred on the Wabash. It is reported—and the hon. gentleman, I understand, has the report in his department—by the Grand Trunk employees employed at Stratford, London and St. Thomas that one of the Wabash engines which had been used by the company in Canada was sent to Stratford. It was not repaired there, but was sent to the other side of the river where the repairs were made, and it was brought back into Canada without paying duty, while certain employees engaged in Canada, on the Grand Trunk, were laid off owing to scarcity of work. They are complaining now because the Wabash Company send engines to the other side of the river for repairs and bring them back into Canada without duty being paid on the repairs.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would not like to speak with confidence on that point, but I think the hon. Minister of Customs would feel justified in having the duty levied on repairs and improvements made on the other side of the line.

Mr. INGRAM. The impression is that the department gave instructions that there should be no duty placed on these repairs.

Mr. MCGREGOR. When a vessel goes over the river for repairs the owners have to pay duty on these repairs when the vessel comes to this side again. I am quite satisfied that locomotives would be in the same position. When a vessel goes to Detroit for repairs it has to pay duty when it comes back to Windsor.

Mr. HAGGART. The Minister does not intend to apply any of this money to purchasing rolling stock there is no provision for ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not a cent.

Mr. HAGGART. You have made no provision for the purchase of it ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am under no obligation for it.

Mr. POWELL. Who has the contract for strengthening these bridges ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The contract is not let yet.

Mr. POWELL. Who had the contract for similar work last year ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The Dominion Bridge Company.

Mr. POWELL. Has the Hamilton Bridge Company any contracts ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They have a good deal of work with us.

Mr. POWELL. What is that $100,000 for ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is not for repairing, but to add additional spans to a number of bridges.

Mr. POWELL. Are the contracts let for these yet ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. POWELL. What price do you pay the Hamilton Bridge Company f.o.b. at Hamilton ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Two and a half, or two and three-quarter cents ; less than 3 cents in recent years, just now prices are going up.

Mr. POWELL. Two and a half cents, of course, would be low, and I am glad to hear the Government are getting it for that. Are they subject to careful inspection, so that you may get good work ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. POWELL. Who is your inspector at Hamilton ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think a man named John Starr at Hamilton, and he is reported to be a very competent man.

Mr. POWELL. John Forbes or John Starr ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. John Forbes of the Star Company.

Mr. INGRAM. Do the bridge companies do their own erecting or is it a separate work ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Sometimes they do it and sometimes we do it.

Mr. INGRAM. Has the Government any bridge erectors in their employ ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. POWELL. Is not this charging of strengthening bridges to capital, instead of to revenue, a departure from the practice that has prevailed on the Intercolonial Railway for the last ten or fifteen years ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know that it can be said to be a departure, because the conditions under which this is to be done are conditions different from any existing heretofore. If one or more of these bridges became defective and required to be replaced, I quite recognize that in conformity with past custom we should charge that work out of revenue, against maintenance for the year. But when these bridges are good, and if the conditions had not changed, would last, perhaps, half a century, but are not strong enough, and we must double up their strength, it would be rather an extreme view to say that that would be a fair charge upon income. It is not so regarded in railway accounting as a rule, and I do not think it would be proper for us to do it. We ought really to do more of this than we are doing ; and if we were to make all these expenditures chargeable against income there would be no means of paying them at all without creating a considerable deficit.

Mr. POWELL. There have been circumstances in times past very similar to the present circumstances. The increase in weight of the engines some ten years ago led to the strengthening of the bridges. $15,000 or $16,000 was spent in strengthening one bridge, and $100,000 was spent in strengthening the north-west and south-west bridges over the Miramichi.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My engineer says that cost $65,000.

Mr. POWELL. He may be right. I have no recollection about it myself ; but these charges were all against revenue, increasing the deficit. By a mere stroke of bookkeeping the hon. gentleman reduces the deficit or shows a surplus, and makes an unfair showing on the operation of the road by his predecessor. Instead of charging these bridges in full to capital account, he should simply charge the betterment.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is all I am doing. I am adding new spans or strengtheners.

Mr. POWELL. The hon. gentleman a few moments ago said he was not only strengthening, but was providing absolutely new spans. In this case I think he is charging the full cost of the new spans to capital.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Certainly.

Mr. POWELL. That is unfair. Now, I notice another item: "Rolling stock to apply air brake to freight cars." In times past, the work of putting air brakes on cars was paid out of revenue?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not in recent years.

Mr. POWELL. However, at this early hour of the morning there is no use of detaining the House. Any remarks I have to make on this subject had better be made on concurrence.

Mr. HAGGART. I see it stated in the newspapers that the Government have decided to close the capital account on the Intercolonial Railway after all the immense improvements now being made are completed?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not made any such statement or authorized any such statement to be made. I think you can count with some confidence on the capital account of the Intercolonial being closed when the road is closed. I want to say a word to the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Powell) with regard to the spans. I think he is under an erroneous impression. What we did last year with respect to some of these bridges was not simply to strengthen them in the ordinary way by putting in an extra brace, but we took a whole structure from one locality and planted it alongside of another structure at another locality, giving to the bridge to which we made the transfer the double weight and strength caused by the combination of the two. You have exactly the same bridges that you had before, but they are differently placed, and you have on the old foundations from which the span had been removed a new structure. We are doing that in the cases to which I have called attention. The hon. gentleman says that this plan not having been formerly pursued, the Government are at an advantage over their predecessors as a result of adopting this different method of making improvements. That remark would have some force as applied to a period anterior to the last eight or nine years, when the Intercolonial had a deficit ranging from $350,000 to $650,000 a year. During those years I have no doubt that some, perhaps all, of that class of charges found their way into the maintenance account and went to add to the deficit. But during the years of the administration of my hon. friend from South Lanark (Mr. Hag-gart), with which I can most fairly compare the results under the present Administration, he has done nothing of that kind. I am prepared to show that we are expending year by year an equal if not a greater sum in maintenance and works than has been expended by the hon. gentleman, outside and beyond the cost of these iron structures and the other items found in the capital expenditure. I would be prepared to go over the details which go to make up the money expended on the Intercolonial in the way of maintenance and repairs year by year, and compare the totals with the hon. gentleman's totals: and when that is done, I think no one will say that it is an unfair mode of making a comparison, or that the present Administration is not entitled to confine its comparisons to a period within which the system has obtained which I am now continuing.

Mr. BLAIR.

Mr. POWELL. This new movement for the extension of the Intercolonial to Montreal will have led, when these expenditures are made, to about $2,000,000 additional capital expenditure, for nearly all of them are directly or indirectly attributable to the opening up of this scheme.

Mr. INGRAM. What is a train-load for these engines?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Five hundred tons is the maximum, but for the class of engines we had in operation down to the period when I undertook to increase its locomotive power, on a 1 per cent grade.

Mr. INGRAM. Is that the highest grade you have?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, with the exception of one little spot. This statement is made in respect of a 1 per cent grade. The present locomotives are capable of hauling 1,100 tons with perfect ease up a 1 per cent grade. In other words, the hauling capacity of the present locomotive is between two and three times that of the locomotives in use down to 1896.

Mr. INGRAM. What number of loaded cars?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Some of these locomotives are loaded to the extent of twenty-five or thirty-five cars.

Mr. INGRAM. They haul them up a 1 per cent grade?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. POWELL. I think the hon. Minister was giving what these locomotives started out to do, that is, to haul 1,100 tons, but in practical operation they can only haul 900 tons. They haul more than the old engines, but they move along at a snail's pace, and do not make much more than half the mileage. It is well to keep the fact in mind when thinking of the saving in respect of the cost of transportation.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, that is an item.

Mr. HUGHES. What is the weight of the rails on the road?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It varies. A part of the road is 56, a part 67, and a part 70. We are proposing, if things go right, to have a much heavier rail on in the future.

The committee rose and reported progress.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 2.35 a.m. (Friday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 14th July, 1899.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 172) to incorporate the British American Pulp and Paper Company.—(Mr. Sutherland.)

THE QUEEN VS. SKELTON ET AL.

Mr. DAVIN. I wish to mention the case of Queen vs. Skelton et al. Skelton and others were convicted of perjury, and were sentenced, and about the middle of March last an order was made for their liberation. I ask the Government to lay on the Table of the House the report of the Minister of Justice, on which this action was taken. It will commend itself to the Government, I think, that the House ought to be in possession of the reasons why so grave a step was taken, and I ask the Government to dispense with my making a motion.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I will speak to the Minister of Justice about the matter.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) when we may expect the supplementary Estimates for the year 1900 to be brought down.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I have a strong hope that on Monday they will be laid on the Table.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE—RESOLUTIONS RE SENATE REFORM.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I ask the Prime Minister whether he will be able to favour us with the resolutions in regard to the Senate on Monday?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

YUKON CROWN PROSECUTOR—MR. WADE.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). The hon. leader of the Opposition asked me the other day in reference to the employment of Mr. Wade as Crown prosecutor. I was unable at the time to speak definitely as to the terms on which Mr. Wade was appointed, but am now informed by the Department of Justice that his appointment is that of Crown prosecutor generally, representing the Minister of Justice for the Yukon district. It carries with it the performance of the functions usually in charge of the Crown Attorney of one of the counties of Ontario. The terms of his appointment, so far as the financial aspect are concerned, are simply that he hands in his bill for his fees, and they are taxed by the Department of Justice in the usual way.

Mr. DAVIN. Is Mr. Wade still registrar?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No, he has no office at the present time except Crown prosecutor.

SUPPLY.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Galops Canal enlargement..... $619,560

Mr. HAGGART. Would the Minister give us a short account as to why the canal was placed where it is, the present condition of the works, when he expects to have a fourteen-foot navigation? I understood him to say last year that it would be ready on the 1st of May last.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The hon. gentleman was not in the House when I made a statement as to that a day or two ago.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Would the Minister repeat that portion of his statement in regard to when he expects to open the fourteen-foot navigation through ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I shall be glad to repeat our view on the question. We had very strong hopes last year from the assurances that were held out to us by the contractors upon the various works along the St. Lawrence route that we should be able to open the canals sufficiently, at all events, to permit of the using of the fourteen-foot channel early in the month of May.

Mr. HAGGART. All through ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Well, not all through, but that we would be able, at all events, to afford a navigable channel all through to the depth of fourteen feet. Our expectations in that regard, I am sorry to say, were not realized. It is a fact within my own personal knowledge that last fall was a most unfavourable season for prosecuting the work speedily. There was a great deal of rain, and it is well known that in the rainy season such works are necessarily delayed. I am assured by our officers and by the contractors, that four or five weeks were lost by reason of that fact. The contractors have been working with a very great deal of energy and expedition, and are doing their best to meet our expectations, and to implement their promise to us. I believe that the delay was not their fault. We did not expect to have the Galops Canal completed but we have made an arrangement under which the contractor engaged to furnish the necessary tugs to take the barges and other vessels used in transportation up the rapids, and they, of course, could use the rapids coming down. Therefore, during the time that the Galops Canal would remain uncompleted the contractor was under obligations to provide a sufficient route by way of the river.

Mr. HAGGART. For fourteen-foot navigation ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, of course, more than fourteen feet in the river. We have been spurring on the contractors during the present season, and I may say they have clapped on all sail, and we have their assurance and the confident opinion of the engineers, that unless something absolutely unforeseen occurs, we will be able, by the first week in September, to afford a fourteen-foot channel all the way through.

Mr. HAGGART.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. When do you expect to complete the Galops Canal ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The Galops Canal will not be completed this season. We will use the river in the way I have indicated. But the canal will be completed before the end of another season, without a doubt. Our confident hope is that by the first week of September it will be possible for us to let the water into the canals which are now under construction, without a single exception. While the canals themselves will not be finished, while there will still be a good deal of work to do in the way of touching them up, and while some portions of the prisms in one or two places will have to be dredged, we will be able to afford a sufficient and useful channel for 14 feet draught after the first week in September.

Mr. HAGGART. Will the hon. Minister be kind enough to tell us where this Galops Canal is located ? If I am informed rightly, it is at the back of the village of Cardinal. I would like him to tell us the reason for selecting that route, instead of the front along the river, and give us the estimated cost of the two different routes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman is correct in saying that we are going through the rear of the village of Cardinal. The reason we selected that route was that after mature consideration by the engineers, and I may say by myself, we determined that it would be very much to the advantage of ship-owners and freighters if they could be assured of a direct channel rather than a circuitous channel. We are giving them a splendid straight route, and I am sure that it has been a matter of extreme satisfaction to the people engaged in the shipping business that this decision was reached. It was the opinion of our engineer, Mr. Rubidge, that that route, not only by reason of its being so straight, but having regard to other considerations, would be as favourable as the route first thought of. The first impression was that it would be about $200,000 more expensive, owing to the deeper cutting that would be necessary ; but when the matter came to be inquired into, and the comparative cost of the properties which we would have to expropriate for the purpose came to be considered, we found that it would cost a very great deal more than was first estimated to adhere to the route first thought of.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the cost of the work ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The whole estimated cost of the enlargement of the Galops Canal is $4,300,000.

Mr. BERGERON. How much has been spent already ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. $3,123,000 up to the 1st of May. This will leave a balance of the estimated cost of $1,176,795. The estimate expenditure from the 1st of May till the 30th of June was $100,000. We have estimated that the Iroquois section will require during the current year an expenditure of $125,000, the Cardinal section $513,400, and the upper entrance, $50,000, making a total of $688,400.

Mr. HAGGART. That will be all that will be required to finish the work ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not quite.

Mr. HAGGART. If you are going to finish it next year, why not take enough for the whole work ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We do not expect to pay out more than this in the next fiscal year, because on these great works, as the hon. gentleman knows, there is always a large balance awaiting final estimate, and we think a moderate estimate of the amount required for that is about $300,000. We expect that it will be some months after the expiration of the fiscal year before we shall be required to pay the difference between the sum now asked for and the actual cost of the work.

Mr. HAGGART. The statement of the hon. gentleman fully justifies some remarks I made with regard to the Galops Canal some time ago. I doubted very much the necessity of building that canal at all. It involved an expenditure of $4,300,000, which the department might very well have avoided. I am aware that the Minister's action is justified by the report of Mr. Rubidge and the other engineers of his department ; but I think the engineers of the department would not mind having their opinion on the subject strengthened by outside expert evidence. However, the Minister says he has made arrangements with the contractors for building this work, and that in the event of their not getting the work finished this fall, they will furnish means of towing vessels drawing 14 feet up and down the Galops Rapids. My idea was that the canal enlargement would be totally useless for barge navigation.

The only way to make it economical and useful at all would be to have vessels of the full size and capacity of the locks, with cheap navigation. Vessels with a capacity of 11, or 12, or 13 knots per hour would never use this canal at all, either going down or coming up, and the very fact that the Minister has made arrangements with the contractors to tow these vessels up the canal shows that it is perfectly feasible. If it is deep enough for a 14-foot navigation, if these vessels could be towed up the canal, there is no need for these locks at all, because the locks at present constructed are perfectly large enough for barge navigation. If you are going to build barges of the capacity of 14-foot navigation, I tell you that your scheme is entirely useless. It is impossible to navigate Lake St. Louis with a tow of barges, and having only 200 feet channel to go down and come up, if there is the slightest wind in the lake.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Would it make any difference, if the channel were 300 feet ?

Mr. HAGGART. Not a bit, or if it were 500 or 600 feet. The parties who are at present excavating and taking the tow down with barges, will know it is impossible with a 300-foot channel to keep the barges in the channel, with the slightest wind and the current at present in Lake St. Louis. The only way the canal can be utilized is by large vessels, 14-foot draught, and the full extent of the capacity of the canal. If you have those vessels, there is no need of the enlargement of the Galops Canal. I am not blaming the Minister for following the advice of Mr. Rubidge, superintendent of the canals, but I hold to the opinion which I have long held, that the expenditure of such a large sum is unnecessary, when the river itself can be utilized by vessels of sufficient power. The hon. gentleman may recall to me that, before my term of office expired, I asked for tenders for this enlargement. It is true ; I wanted to know exactly what it would cost. I intended to look fully into the matter, and get the advice of engineers thoroughly competent, as to the necessity of the work at all. However, the expenditure is now being made. I cannot understand the Minister, when he says that for expropriation purposes he gets the land at the back of the village cheaper than in front. I thought he owned the front already ; I thought that that was in the possession of the Government, and there would be no need to expropriate any property at all, except we might have interfered with some water-powers that are there at present. I know that a person below the water-power, where the starch factory is, pretended to have some claim.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are cutting right through the built-up portion of the town by the other alternative route.

Mr. HAGGART. You could have done it without cutting through the town at all. The Minister is fully informed, no doubt, on that subject, and I suppose he thinks the expropriation of what I consider the property at present belonging to the Government requires a certain sum. I should think it will be only to expropriate some imaginary rights. However, he is, no doubt, better informed on that subject than I am ; but I had the idea that the best place for building the canal is in front of the village.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. On the river.

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, that was the first plan.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No plan of that kind has come to my notice at all.

Mr. HAGGART. The first plan proposed was in front of the town. I ordered that survey and the plan for building it at the back of the village, but the plan first intended was in front of the town, and I think every one in that neighbourhood was rather astonished at the placing of the work where it is at present. I would like to know the position with regard to the Soulanges Canal. Are the contractors doing their work? What difficulties have the engineers met in its construction? Are those difficulties costing the Government a great deal more than was first contemplated in building the canal, and when is that portion of the work to be completed?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We expect to have the Soulanges Canal navigable by the first week of September. There have been, I suppose, the usual difficulties in the way of prosecuting the work to early completion. We have met with some extraordinary difficulties, three or four slides, causing a displacement in the canal, in some instances, after the work was practically completed.

Mr. BERGERON. There will be some more, too, in the same place.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would not like to say that there might not ; but I hope not, because every day we are nearing the period when the water will be let in, and, when it once gets in, I think we can count with some confidence on slides not again occurring. We had two serious slides, one quite recently. They add, necessarily, somewhat to the cost of the work, but not very much. They did not in either case extend over a length of 1,200 or 1,300 feet. The last was about 1,200 or 1,500 feet. I do not know of any other troubles looming up.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the increase over the estimated cost?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The estimated cost is $5,550,000, and it will require $704,214 to complete. Up to the 30th April there was spent $4,845,788. I do not think that the cost of the slides will very greatly enhance the amount that the work on the whole will cost us. I am not in a position to say what the removal of the earth which was precipitated into the prism of the canal, is going to cost us, but not a large sum. Otherwise, the work is about completed at these points. Considerable of the earth has not yet been removed, and we do not know what it will cost entirely to replace the broken points where cavities have occurred. A quarter of a million, I am informed, would be an outside figure to be added to the item, resulting from the casualty.

Mr. BERGERON. It will go nearly six millions?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Probably.

Mr. HAGGART. Will this $126,000 finish the Lachine Canal enlargement?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. And will $3,500 finish the Lake St. Louis channel?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think not quite. Probably a few thousand dollars more will be required.

Mr. BERGERON. Have all the land damages been settled on the Soulanges Canal?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is hardly safe to make a general statement on a thing of that kind. We have endeavoured to settle them, but there may be some few remaining.

Mr. BERGERON. But the money for them is voted?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. It is a matter of discretion whether they accept or prefer to go to the Exchequer Court.

Mr. HAGGART. Passing for a moment from the St. Lawrence canals, I see an item for $350,000 for deepening the entrance at Port Colborne—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am sorry the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) did not happen to be present when I explained this matter. I suppose he would rather read my explanation as it is in "Hansard" than have me to go over it again. But while I am on the subject, I may say that we have plans in progress which involve not only the deepening of the entrance, but also the providing of some berths and slips, so that vessels of large tonnage coming in may be able to moor and transfer their cargoes to smaller vessels. The amount was originally asked for the purpose of enlarging or deepening the entrance. But while the item was going through committee, I asked that "deepening" might be changed to "improvements" so as to enable us to use any portion not required for deepening the entrance for the purpose of providing berth accommodation and slippage for the steamers using the harbour. I may say that this is only a portion of what Parliament will be asked this session to authorize, as there will be an amount for a breakwater in order that there may be a safe harbour at that point.

Mr. BRITTON. I wish to call the attention of the Minister to a matter, which, perhaps, would have come up better under item 124: "St. Lawrence River and reaches—river, reaches and canals."

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have not been paying very close attention to the order of discussion.

Mr. BRITTON. If I may be considered in order, I should like to refer to a matter which I promised some vessel men I would call to the attention of the Minister. At the entrance of the Morrisburg Canal, a new and very strong pier has been built. This is sheathed with iron and has a very sharp corner; and vessels coming up, especially from the south, when there is a high wind are sure to drift against it—a tow particularly—and always with more or less damage to the vessel, because the vessels are not so strong as the pier. What has been asked for by the resident engineer is what, I understand, is called a ruffle on the pier. It is made by driving piles around the corner leaving them a little loose, but bound together with a chain and connected by a chain to the pier. A vessel striking upon this ruffle suffers no injury. Attention was called to this matter, I believe, as long ago as 1897. I can understand that, in the great works that have been going on from time to time, little things like this have been overlooked. But, in the meantime, considerable damage has been done. I have spoken to men who are connected with the transportation companies on the river and I call the attention of the Minister to the point as I promised them I would do. A few dollars comparatively would make the desired improvement.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The attention of the department has been called to this point by the transportation men. According to the opinion of the superintending engineer it was not necessary to make an expenditure for this purpose, but I think he has lately come to a different view. At all events instructions have been sent to him to put a cluster of piles round the nose of the pier, and that will be done.

Mr. HAGGART. I would ask the hon. Minister to take up the item for the Beauharnois Canal, as my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) is obliged to leave early this afternoon.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Very well.

Beauharnois Canal—

Steel bridge and masonry at St. Timothy .....	$3,600
Surveys and defining land boundaries..	1,440

Mr. BERGERON. I wish to ask what this item refers to: "Steel bridge and masonry, St. Timothy"?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman probably knows the condition of the bridge across the canal at St. Timothy, and whether it needs to be repaired or replaced.

Mr. BERGERON. I cannot say as to that. There was a wooden bridge there.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is a wooden structure and I am advised it is rotten and not safe. We have thought it our duty to ask Parliament for an appropriation to enable us to put a new steel bridge there.

Mr. BERGERON. The other item is for surveys and defining land boundaries, what is that?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That has reference to the canal reserve lands at Valleyfield. They are leased to a number of people, and we have found it necessary to have a general plan, and so surveys have to be made and some expert assistance procured in defining the boundaries.

Mr. BERGERON. Who is going to make the survey, will it be the engineer of the department?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not decided. Possibly our staff may be too much occupied, and we will have to avail ourselves of outside assistance.

Mr. BERGERON. There is very little to do, in fact I do not see that there is anything. The Government have maps and plans of these lands.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I suppose my hon. friend has informed himself upon the subject; but the conclusion he has arrived at does not correspond with that of the officers of the department.

Mr. BERGERON. There may be something that I do not know about. The item is a small one and being as the Minister explains, I do not wish to say any more.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is all that it is for. The hon. gentleman knows that there are a number of acres of canal reserve land in the neighbourhood.

Mr. BERGERON. But they are all marked and posted. They are marked with stones set five or six feet in the ground and sticking up so that any person can see them, even at night.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think my hon. friend is mistaken.

Mr. BERGERON. I desire to ask my hon. friend about the thousand dollars which was paid to the Estate Bergevin. He promised to bring down the papers. To whom was the money paid?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have given the officers a memorandum two or three times to ascertain from the Justice Department in whose name the cheque was actually issued, in addition to the name of the owner of the land. I understand it is the custom in the Justice Department in such cases to put on the cheque the name of the agent of the Department of Justice in addition to the name of the owner of the lands to whom the money is going. If the title has been examined into and the conveyances are found to be right, an officer of the Deputy Minister of Justice endorses the cheque and hands it over.

Mr. BERGERON. I want to know whether the man for whom the money was paid actually got the money, or if it remains in the hands of the agent.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is what my deputy tells me was done in this case.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. gentleman promised me the other day to bring down some papers by which I could see the name of the agent.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The Deputy Minister says he rather overlooked it. I spoke to him about it once or twice, and in the pressure of business he forgot to get the name of the agent of the Department of Justice. I think during the course of the afternoon I will be able to send a memorandum of it to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BERGERON. There was an accident took place some time ago at lock No. 7 on the Beauharnois Canal, where a propeller went through the lock, and I am sure a good deal of damage was done. I brought the matter to the attention of the Government some time ago when my hon. friend was not present. The Prime Minister took a note of it, and told me that he would bring the matter to the attention of the proper department, so that justice might be done to those who suffered the damage. A similar accident occurred before, and there was a great deal of difficulty in coming to a settlement.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I understand the case is situated in this way. The owner of the vessel that did the damage has made a deposit in the usual way, and he states that he has satisfactorily settled with the persons who suffered the damage, and that the amount has been agreed upon between them. He has recently made application here to have the deposit released for the purpose of paying it over, in part or in whole, to the claimants.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend has been misinformed. Of the four or five persons who suffered damages, I think two or three have accepted the settlement proposed by the owners of the steamboat, but one of them has not. I saw him myself at Valleyfield on the 1st of July, and he told me he had refused. These farmers have nothing at all to do with the steamboat company, they have only to deal with the Government. But the Government has to deal with the steamboat company, as was done in former years. The farmers make their claims, the engineer goes and makes an examination of the damages along with arbitrators chosen by the farmers, and they agree upon an amount, and the Government then asks the company to pay the amount to the Government for the farmers. The steamboat company pays the amount to the Government and the Government distributes it to the claimants who suffered the damages. In this case the employees of the Government have refused entirely to have anything to do with the matter, and told the farmers to go to the steamboat company. The farmers went and talked to the representatives of the steamboat company, which was not the proper way to do. They were treated by the company haut la main, they were told that the company was not ready to give them anything, and they might run for it. One of these farmers, a man named Pilon, has refused entirely to settle with the company. One of these men asked $300, and they offered him only $100; he would not accept it, and they told him he never would get anything more. Then these men got frightened and accepted an agreement by which they were to receive $100 instead of $300, but to this arrangement Pilon refused to accede. My hon. friend is misinformed when the company tell him that everybody is satisfied. If my hon. friend has in his hands any deposit of that company I hope he will not pay it back until these men are indemnified for their damages. This is an important matter for the farmers. Their lands were all sown, they had done their work in the spring, and the water overflowed the land about four feet and has caused damages for two or three years. Of course, from their past experience, they do not claim anywhere near the damages they have suffered.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am glad to hear my hon. friend say that the claims for damages in that locality are rather under than over the mark.

Mr. BERGERON. About one-third of what they were asking.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I understood my hon. friend to say that the claims for damages which are usually made in that neighbourhood are less than the actual damages which the party suffers. I am glad to hear that, because that has not been my experience in other parts of the country.

Mr. BERGERON. It is not a general thing.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I can assure the hon. gentleman, however, that in the interests of these parties for whom he is speaking, I will not consent to refund the deposit until these persons who have claims are settled with. I do not think the department could be in any sense responsible for any settlement the owners of the steamboat might make with the claimants. We cannot prevent them from going and making a settlement on their own behalf with the company. That is a matter in which they might be assumed to be able to take care of themselves, to look after their own interests.

Mr. BERGERON. The proper way is for the farmers to deal with the Government, and not with the steamboat company at all.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Still, if parties see fit themselves to deal with the owners of the steamer, how can the Government possibly prevent them from doing so?

Mr. BERGERON. In this case the officers of the Government, the superintendent at least, said to them: I will have nothing at all to do with it, because I have had so much trouble in the past with these claims. You must settle with the steamboat company yourselves. These farmers did not know any better, and they took his advice.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the officers of the Government made any such statement, that alters the case. I have in my mind a case of a similar character that arose on the Welland Canal, and we were very glad to have the owners of the vessel put themselves to the trouble of seeing the claimants and adjusting the damages with them. It is very much easier, I think, for them to reach an understanding than it would have been for us to have done so, and I would not discourage it in any case. I would rather favour it, of course, always providing that no misrepresentations are made to the parties, the parties being left free to exercise their own will in the matter.

Mr. BERGERON. I am very glad to hear the hon. gentleman speak in that way. These are my opinions, too. But the parties were deceived: they were told that if they did not deal with the steamboat company, the Government would have nothing to do with them.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We will try to protect them.

Chambly Canal—

Surveying property and planting stones.. $900

Mr. HAGGART. What is this for?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is to mark the canal boundaries. We have had a great deal of trouble by reason of the fact that the boundaries are not well defined.

Rideau Canal—

To deepen rock cut at Kilmarnock.... $6,750

Mr. HAGGART. I would like to ask the hon. Minister whether that work is to be done by tender or day work?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I can assure the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) that it will be done by tender, if it is at all possible to do it. I know of no reason why it should not be done by tender. All of our work is done by tender, where it can be done.

Murray Canal—

To provide floating landing stage..... $1,800

Mr. HAGGART. What is that floating landing stage for?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. For vessels to stop at.

Welland Canal ..... $53,640

Mr. INGRAM. What are these bridges for between Port Robinson and Port Colborne, for which a vote is taken? Are they railway bridges over the canal?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, they are ordinary highway bridges.

Mr. HAGGART. What will it take to complete the pier at Port Dalhousie for which $15,000 is asked? This work has been going on for a number of years.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Which pier is the hon. gentleman referring to?

Mr. HAGGART. The west pier.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We had an appropriation of $20,000 last year for the west pier, and $15,000 is to continue the work. It is concrete, and it will probably require a further vote.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the total estimated amount that it will require to finish it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The probable cost of the whole work will be in the neighbourhood of $50,000.

Mr. HAGGART. It is being done by tender, I suppose.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, every bit of it.

Mr. McCLEARY. I would like to ask the hon. Minister in reference to the four bridges between Port Robinson and Port Colborne, if this money is intended to be expended on repairs to the old bridges, or if the Minister contemplates the erection of new bridges.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is for putting in new concrete piers. The old wooden ones have decayed, and we are replacing them with concrete piers, both east and west.

Mr. HAGGART. There is a vote of $20,000 towards the renewal of the entrance pier at Port Colborne. What is the estimated amount that will be required to finish these piers?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am afraid I cannot give the hon. gentleman that information.

Mr. HAGGART. You say you have a plan for the construction of docks, and piers, and everything else, at Port Colborne. How does this come to be a separate item? Is it not part of the scheme?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is a proper and necessary charge on the revenue of the year. It is for work which is quite disconnected from the works for the deepening of the entrance and the improvement of the harbour. It is quite a different work. The others will necessarily be a capital charge, while this, being a renewal, is a revenue charge.

Railways and Canals—
Miscellaneous ..... $51,187 20

Mr. HAGGART. I see there is an increase of from $8,000 to $15,000 in the item of surveys and inspections on railways. What is the reason?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We find that the Railway Committee of the Privy Council is called upon to do so much additional work, and make so many additional inquiries, that something will have to be added to the vote to cover that class of expenditure. Moreover, the adoption of the principle upon which in

Mr. BLAIR.

1897 we decided to grant subsidies in aid to railways, authorizing an additional amount beyond the ordinary and customary amount of $3,200 a mile, based upon the added cost of the work, in excess of a fixed sum, makes it necessary that we should have a great deal more of engineering inspection and closer inquiry than we had required ordinarily under the prior existing circumstances. We have asked Parliament to give us this additional sum, so that we may have sufficient to make proper inspection and to have expert inquiry in regard to these questions that come before the Railway Committee from time to time.

Mr. HAGGART. Could the Minister give us the names of the officers?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have no permanent employees engaged in connection with that work.

Mr. HAGGART. You take about $15,000, quite a large sum.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We will try the experiment this year, and another year we can fix more definitely the sum we require.

Mr. HAGGART. Is this vote intended to provide for any new men, or are they all the same employees?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have made no changes. With the single exception of two officers, I have the same staff in my office that the hon. the ex-Minister (Mr. Haggart) had when he left it.

Intercolonial Railway..... $3,285,000

Mr. BELL (Pictou). I wish to ask the Minister if tenders were advertised for and contracts awarded to the lowest tenderers for the uniforms supplied to the Intercolonial Railway employees?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Nothing has been so fruitful of discontent among the conductors and other officers who have been supplied with uniforms than the character of the clothing which had been furnished them in times past. Before I came to the department, the system of calling for tenders generally had been abandoned, and I was inclined to agree, that the system which had been adopted and continued I think for some years was satisfactory. The only difference there has been since I came in is, that we have supplied a better quality of cloth, and consequently at a somewhat increased price. We select the quality of cloth, and we say to the merchant tailor in St. John, or Halifax, or Quebec: We want an article of that quality and we will require you to furnish cloth up to that standard, and we will pay you so much per suit for the making and allow you the cost of the cloth and a fair margin of profit. We have selected the tailors in the different localities, and under the system we have been able to give better satisfaction to the men than was possible when some years ago tenders were generally called for, and a few suits were made in one place and a few suits made in another, in all the towns and villages where there were tailor shops. There was always discontent and grumbling under the old system, one officer complaining that the other had a better suit or a better fit, and so on, and my officers informed me that it was an intolerable nuisance. The plan that has been in operation for the last four years or longer, has given better satisfaction, and we have not paid more than the customary price for the work.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The Minister will remember that there was some discussion as to the increased rates that have been charged on the Intercolonial Railway. I have received a letter from a very respectable and intelligent gentleman, who writes :

I find a vast difference in local freights. Lime was carried from St. John to this station (that is Thompson's station, in the county of Cumberland) for 56 cents per cask ; now it is 76 cents, which is only 9 cents less than the cost of the lime. A cask of oil costs 93 cents from Halifax ; former price, 60 cents ; nearly everything in the same proportion. Car lots are taken from one station to the next station for $4 per car ; now $6 is the smallest charge.

I mention this because the statements here seem to conflict with the impression left upon the House by the Minister, that there had been no increase in the local rates.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am surprised to hear of these instances, because I have been assured that while, in some cases, there might be exceptions, the general effect of the revision of the tariff schedule which took place some time ago, was in the direction of reduction rather than of increase. I think I explained that it was absolutely necessary to establish a greater uniformity in respect of the rates and the classification of goods. Our classification differs entirely from the classifications of the railroads with which we are connected, and with which we expected, and I think very properly expected, to do an increased business. For instance, take the case of lime. On the Intercolonial it would perhaps be classified as No. 3, No. 5 or No. 10, whereas on the Canadian Pacific Railway or the Grand Trunk Railway it might be included in No. 6 or No. 8 or No. 11. So that there was unavoidably a great deal of friction and difficulty in establishing rates and in carrying on smooth intercourse and exchange between the two roads. Our traffic manager brought these facts to our notice. He also brought the fact that we were endangering the security of life and property by allowing the cars to be overloaded, as they had been for some time. A car that was not capable of carrying more than twenty tons was allowed to be loaded up to twenty-five or thirty tons, and was liable to break down and block trains and occasion accidents. He suggested that it would be safer and wiser to base the charges upon weight rather than upon the car-load. We would thereby be able to regulate and control the load that would be put upon the cars. For these and other reasons, it was deemed desirable to revise the classification. We did not touch the rates, although they were indirectly affected. Some goods that were in one classification we put into another, and the rates are applied to the classification ; so that, of course, when we altered the classification of some goods, we altered the rates which were applied to them. On a careful examination of the results, as they were furnished to us by our traffic officers, we concluded that the general effect was to reduce and not to increase. There were occasional instances of increase, but they were not general. Since my hon. friend has called my attention to these specific instances, I shall see them in "Hansard," no doubt, and be able to refer the matter to the traffic department, and will find out what that department has to say in regard to it.

Mr. HAGGART. Has the hon. Minister some system of securing a similarity of classification on the part of all the railroads ? Is there no means by which the railroads can come to an agreement as to classification ? Any change in the classification or in the rates of the railroads has to be approved by the Government, and I think it is absolutely necessary that there should be a similarity of classification on all the roads. With regard to the clothing I had a controversy with the Minister of Finance last session in reference to the supplies for the Intercolonial Railway. I made the statement that there was not a single article purchased, even to a paint brush, when I was Minister of Railways, that was not purchased by tender. The hon. Minister of Finance said that perhaps that was so, but that the parties who were tendering for the goods were so few that it amounted absolutely to no tender at all. At that time I asked the Minister to bring down the names of the parties from whom I asked for tenders for the different articles required on the Intercolonial Railway, and, if there was a new list, to bring that down, so that we might compare them. I suppose the hon. Minister of Railways has followed the rule of the department in that respect, and has not purchased anything for the Intercolonial without tender, and has also left to the officers themselves the judgment of the articles furnished. The question whether an article of mechanism was up to the standard, was left to the man in charge of the mechanical department; and in the case of a chemical article the opinion of the authorities of McGill College was obtained. I suppose the Minister follows the same course, which is the only proper one. I will ask him, before the supplementary Estimates come down, to furnish me with that information, which I asked for last session.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think there will be no difficulty in getting a list in time for the hon. gentleman, though, I should imagine, it would be pretty extensive. The system pursued is identical with that which was adopted when I came into the department. The officers of the supply department do not in all cases call publicly for tenders by advertisement in the newspapers. Sometimes they do so by posters. For many things they circularize the trade, as the hon. gentleman used to do. The department has a list of all the firms to whom circulars must be sent. I suppose my hon. friend exercised some discretion as to whether he would have the circulars sent to B as well as to A, or have them withheld from B and only sent to A. But I shall be glad to give direction to have the lists prepared so that they will be on hand if the hon. gentleman cares to look at them.

Mr. INGRAM. With respect to the clothing, I suppose the department tells every conductor, brakeman, station agent and porter to purchase one of these suits every one or two years?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Two suits every year. We do not furnish the station agents with suits. The conductors, the porters and the brakemen on passenger trains get them.

Mr. INGRAM. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that he asks each merchant tailor to purchase cloth according to a sample furnished him, and that the tailor is allowed so much for making the suit.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman has not stated what the men pay for these suits.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They do not pay anything. They are given to them.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). I was going to ask the Minister to explain more fully how that part of the business is carried on by which the department supplies cloth to the contractor.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We do not supply the cloth. We supplied it one year, and found that there was no particular advantage in doing so; but we exercise careful supervision as to the quality of the cloth, and we see that it is uniform. We try to avoid every possible cause of friction between the men owing to one man's cloth being suspected of being better than another man's.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). If the Minister does not advertise for tenders, does he ask a certain number of parties to tender or select some one friend to do the whole business?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We do not select any one firm, although we do not ask for tenders. We fix a price for the suits and take a reliable firm in each town and give it a certain portion of the suits to make. A certain portion, for instance, will be given to a firm in St. John, another portion to a firm in Halifax, and so we divide it among the different towns and give it to those who are competent to do the work and are fairly entitled to be considered. Perhaps in the spring a Halifax firm will do it, and in the fall a St. John firm will do it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. How do you fix the value of the cloth? You say that you take a sample to a merchant tailor and ask him to make suits of that quality of cloth. He gets the cloth where he likes, but how do you determine the price you should pay him?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have tenders, too, from wholesale men, and we allow the merchant tailor the price for the cloth at which the wholesale dealer would supply it to us.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman is introducing a very bad practice. I had the same experience in the Post Office Department. Every town throughout the country insisted that the boots made for the letter carriers in that particular town should be made there, and the result was that we had the worst kind of boots and the worst uniforms you could imagine. Just fancy doing the same thing with reference to the volunteers—getting boots made for the Toronto troops in Toronto, and the London troops in London, and getting the uniforms for a St. Catharines regiment made in St. Catharines. The more satisfactory way would be for the Government to fix upon a standard of cloth and get the uniforms made by satisfactory parties, after calling for tenders. That would be much better in every way and relieve the department of a great deal of political trouble and bother. It would relieve the hon. gentleman of the bother of a member asking him to give a particular shoemaker in a certain town the contract for shoes, and to give to a particular tailor the contract for clothing in a particular town.

Mr. INGRAM. The system adopted by railway companies is, first, to call for tenders for making the uniforms. Then the successful tenderer is taken over the road and takes the measurements of the different employees. The clothes are made by the one party, and at the one price.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would bring to the attention of the hon. Minister a matter as to which I have received a communication from the Board of Trade of the city of Halifax, and which no doubt he is cognizant of. The communication I refer to is in the shape of a letter from Mr. Geo. Mitchell, President of the Halifax Board of Trade, inclosing a letter from Furniss, Withey & Co., who represent a line of steamers from the ports of Halifax and St. John to European ports :

With regard to the cheese traffic, we are absolutely unable to secure any cheese for our Liverpool steamers, for the reason that the railroads have not suitable cars available for shippers. Had they been able to give us proper cars, we have not the least doubt that we could have secured 20,000 boxes of cheese for Liverpool on the basis of 20s. ocean freight. Mr. Hardwell, the agent here, has done all he could to secure us proper cars, but he advised us this morning that he is unable to get them. We are, therefore, obliged to let the cheese business alone, which is much to be regretted, as there is in Montreal some 400,000 to go forward, and there is no reason why Halifax should not have a share of this traffic from Montreal at equal rates as from St. John, Portland and Boston. In consequence of not being able to get suitable cars we are obliged to send all our Manchester cheese to St. John, otherwise we should have been able to give a share of the business to the Intercolonial Railway to Halifax.

As I understand, the action of this firm results not only in a loss to the trade of Halifax but to the Intercolonial Railway, because when they send their goods to the port of St. John for shipment to Manchester, I understand that they send them by the Canadian Pacific Railway. No doubt this has been brought to the attention of the hon. gentleman.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I wish my hon. friend had been here last evening when the subject came up. I pointed out then that I felt that perhaps the committee might think I was making an unreasonable demand in asking to be allowed to equip the road with increased cars to the extent I did, but I was trying to keep well within the needs, and could very well have asked for an increased number. I quite admit the accuracy of the statements made by my hon. friend and which were communicated to me by the Board of Trade of Halifax, and I am doing the best I can within reasonable limits to supply the deficiency.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). As I understand, the vote asked for will be applied to securing cars suitable for that purpose ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. For that very purpose.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). At what date will the rolling stock be in proper shape to receive this freight ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. As soon as the appropriation passes we will set to work and make contracts at once for the earliest possible construction of these cars.

Prince Edward Island Railway..... $225,000

Mr. MARTIN. Will the Minister please say who has the contract for supplying passengers on the Prince Edward Island Railway with books, &c. ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The same person who has had the contract for more than a year. There has been no change.

Mr. MARTIN. I notice an advertisement calling for tenders for this service on February 7th, 1899. I understand that some business men in the city tendered for this service, and I would like to know if the lowest tender has been accepted, who the tenderer is, and what was the amount of his tender ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will get that information for my hon. friend (Mr. Martin). I do not recollect the facts, and the papers are not at hand at the moment. The tenders came forward to Ottawa since the session opened, but I have not taken any action either in the direction of withdrawing the contract from the present contractor or placing it in the hands of one of the tenderers. I will get the information to-morrow.

Mr. MARTIN. This seems to be a very singular procedure—to call for tenders and then not award the contract. The summer season is pretty well over now. I think the lowest tender should be accepted.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not been able to deal with it yet. I do not think there is much difference in amounts between the tenderers. Of course, I wished that if there was a change, the contract should go to one in whom we might have confidence and who would give the public a satisfactory service. I really have not had time to take the subject up and deal with it.

Mr. MARTIN. I have a letter from a party who tendered for this service and he says he thinks his tender was the lowest. He wrote to the superintendent at Moncton, but got no reply.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The matter has been hung up here. If blame attaches to anybody, it attaches to me, I suppose.

Mr. MARTIN. The procedure, as I say, seems very strange. I shall be glad to have the information from the hon. Minister to-morrow.

Canals—

Repairs, &c., operating expenses..... $505,350

Mr. HAGGART. There is an increase here of $25,900. Will the hon. Minister please explain the reason?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) has before him on the same page a table showing the items in detail. We expect that the Soulanges Canal will be in operation and will require to have a staff of employees like the other canals, and there is an item of $25,000 to equip the canal in this way. As to the other items, it will be seen that the increases and decreases about balance one another.

Mr. HAGGART. I suppose the hon. gentleman will take the whole staff from the Beanharnois Canal and move them to the Soulanges Canal?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is easier for the hon. gentleman to say it can be done than it is to do it.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not know what we want two canals there for.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I can only say that a good many changes have been made in the canals, and I do not know of a single instance where a canal has been closed. You have to face that contingency.

Mr. HAGGART. There is a decrease of $8,300 in the Lachine Canal.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is in repairs.

Mr. HAGGART. What repairs are there on the Trent Canal calling for an increase of $3,500?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am sorry I cannot give at the moment the details of these repairs.

Superintendent of Insurance—

To meet expenses in connection with this service, including $800 for the salary of J. R. Morton, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act ..... $7,200

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). This is the usual vote for the Superintendent of Insurance. The amount is the same as last year.

Mr. HAGGART. Who is this gentleman to whom you are giving $800, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He takes the place of another gentleman, who was getting $800. This gentleman was appointed to succeed him; he received a smaller salary at the beginning, and is now receiving the same salary as his predecessor.

Mr. HAGGART. What special knowledge has he, that he jumps in at $800?

Mr. MARTIN.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He came in at $750 and his predecessor received $800.

Mr. CLANCY. How long has he been in the service?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is his second year.

Mr. HAGGART. Who was his predecessor?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I forget the name. He left our service to take the position of actuary in an insurance company. This is one of the difficulties that we have in keeping good men, owing to the smallness of the salaries.

Mr. HAGGART. Can the hon. gentleman say that he has some special knowledge, some special qualification, which ought to exempt him from the Civil Service Act? Is he an actuary of experience?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We cannot get an actuary of experience at that salary. As the Act stands now, there is no half-way house between the $400 at which a temporary clerk starts, and the $1,100 of a second-class clerkship. There is a very long step, and we think it may be necessary to provide for something to fill in that blank. Meanwhile, if you want to get an officer who has something more than the ordinary qualifications of a temporary clerk, you have to provide for him in this way. This gentleman had special qualifications for the post, being skilful in mathematics, which gave him adaptability for this class of work.

Mr. WALLACE. It appears he was appointed a year ago at $750. I believe he is now twenty-three years of age.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He has graduated at Dalhousie College, Halifax, and was recommended to me as having special qualifications. I do not know as he passed with honours in the university, but he has special skill in mathematics, and is valuable for that purpose in the insurance office.

Mr. POWELL. What is his special work there?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is practically the work of an actuary, work largely of a technical character. He is under Mr. Fitzgerald.

Mr. WALLACE. How many clerks are there in that department?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think there are three in the office of Mr. Fitzgerald. If the hon. gentleman wishes, I will give him the information later in the evening. This is the usual vote, and I had not brought any information concerning it.

Mr. WALLACE. I think this is not the usual amount for a new man.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is work of more than the ordinary character. It is not work that you can get a man to do having simply the qualifications of a temporary clerk. He must not only be a well-educated man, but have special adaptability for this class of work, and I am sure you cannot get a man suitable for that class of work who will do it with success, with the ordinary salary of temporary clerk.

Mr. WALLACE. You have in that office Mr. Blackadar, Mr. Morton, Mr. Riley, and other specially qualified men, along with Mr. Fitzgerald. And here is a junior coming in, quite a young man, at $750 a year, and $800 for next year, which is contrary to the spirit and letter of the law. A Minister may say that special qualifications are required in order to perform these duties; but special qualifications are required in every branch of the public service, if an officer is to be capable and efficient. If he can give this young man $750 for the first year and $800 the second year, then any of the other departments can do the same thing, where there are many branches of a technical character.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is some force in my hon. friend's criticism, and I do not hesitate to say that is the law as it stands now. At present you cannot get qualified men for some of this work in some of the departments. For example, in the department of one of my colleagues not long ago, a gentleman died who was getting $1,700 or $1,800 a year. Now, you could put in his place a temporary clerk, if you wished, at $400 a year, or you could appoint a second-class clerk at $1,100. If my colleague to whom I refer had appointed a second-class clerk at $1,100 to do the work performed by the gentleman who died and who was getting $1,700, nobody would have found fault with that. But as a matter of fact, he was able, by taking a young man in at $700, to get the work done, but he had to get a very good man at that class, and you could not get him in at the $400 rate. This difficulty arises from the fact that in the civil service there is no half-way house between the $400 at which you appoint a temporary clerk, and the $1,100 which is the minimum of a second-class clerk.

Mr. PRIOR. That is the trouble in all the departments.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, and it will have to be corrected. You may require an officer somewhat better than an ordinary $400 man, yet you do not want to give him $1,100 at the start. Take a young man who has come out of the university, who has graduated with honours in some special department, and you offer him $400, which is not very attractive, but you offer him $1,100, and you are starting him too high. You must reach the happy medium somewhere. I think we shall have to legislate before the session is over in order to meet that difficulty.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman thinks the law is all wrong.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think so, and I think it will have to be amended.

Mr. WALLACE. Why not amend the law and act under it, instead of violating both its letter and spirit. I think the Ministers are not justified in these cases. If the law needs rectification and amendment, let the Government bring down a Bill and justify whatever changes they propose. But, while the law exists, they should not violate it, as they have done in this instance; not only the letter, but the spirit of it.

Civil Government—

Department of the Interior..... $92,766 60

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This item has been considered before, but some of the information asked for was not given at the time. There was a question asked about the fund out of which Mr. Ferguson, one of the second-class clerks, was paid, before his appointment as a second-class clerk. I was not prepared to answer the question, and at the request of the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster), the item stood over. Mr. Ferguson was paid from the contingent fund last year.

Mr. WALLACE. Is he on the civil service list?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No. The hon. member for York asked as to what fund he was paid out of, but I did not recollect at that time.

Mr. WALLACE. What is his Christian name?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. James N.

Mr. WALLACE. Will the hon. Minister explain why he was made a second-class clerk?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We had an explanation in regard to that at the time the item was up before, when I explained it fully, but have no objection to repeating the explanation now. A vote was taken for a second-class clerk to supply the place of a clerk who died.

Mr. WALLACE. Who was the clerk who died?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. Genest. He was getting $1,000 a year, which is the maximum salary of a third-class clerk. We wanted a man to take his place, but the matter was in precisely the same position as that explained by the hon. Minister of Finance a moment ago. We could not appoint a third-class clerk, and we could not get a man fitted for the position at $400 a year, which is the salary of a temporary clerk. We found that Mr. Ferguson was qualified, and it was decided that we would recommend him for a second-class clerkship to take the place of Mr. Genest. In the meantime, he was appointed a temporary clerk at $400 a year.

Mr. WALLACE. Has he passed his qualifying examination?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, he is fully qualified.

Mr. DAVIN. What are the duties of the geographer?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The geographer of the department was Mr. Johnston, who died some considerable time ago, and since that time we have had no geographer. The duties of the geographer are practically to supervise the geographical work connected with the map-making of the department. The Department of the Interior is responsible for practically all the maps got up by the Government, and it is necessary to have a skilful and qualified officer to supervise their preparation. Since Mr. Johnston died the department has several times felt very much the need of a skilful and qualified man, and we have now made an arrangement whereby Mr. White, who has been connected with the Geological Survey, and has been doing the geographical work for that branch of the service, will be transferred to the Department of the Interior.

Department of the Interior—

Clerical and other assistance, including $730 for J. D. Bollard and $425 for T. W. Hodgins, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act .....	$ 5,005
Printing and stationery .....	8,500
Sundries .....	7,000
	<hr/>
	$20,505

Mr. DAVIN. There is an increase here of $1,480.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. These two items "notwithstanding anything contrary in the Civil Service Act" are exactly the same as last year's vote, with the exception of the increase of $1,480, which is made up by taking a vote for one additional temporary clerk at $400 a year, who has been appointed, and we are also taking an appropriation for three additional temporary clerks who have not been appointed as yet, but whom we will require during the year, on account of the very great increase in the volume of the clerical work in the department.

Mr. POWELL. In consequence of the Yukon?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Largely that, but there has been an enormous increase in almost every branch of the department. The work of the Dominion Lands branch, at the head office, has largely increased by reason of the fact that homestead entries have more than doubled. The Yukon work, at the head office, in connection with the superintendence of affairs and of correspondence, is additional. Immigration work is very much larger, and consequently the clerical work is greater than in former years. I am asking for an additional vote for three temporary clerks who are not yet appointed, but whom I will need during the year, not perhaps just now, but towards the fall, when the work becomes heavy. There are six statutory increases to temporary clerks. Temporary clerks are paid $400 a year, and under a provision of the law they get a statutory increase of $30 a year instead of $50. That makes $1,780, from which there will be deducted $300, which, by a special provision, was last year paid to my private secretary. Four temporary clerks at $400 each make $1,600. Six statutory increases of $30 each make $180; that is $1,780, but $300 voted last year was paid to my private secretary by special provision and will not be required this year. That will make an increase altogether of $1,480. I was wrong in saying that all the statutory increases were for temporary clerks. One is for Mr. Bollard, whose name is mentioned in the vote, and there are also increases of $30 each for Miss Mercer, Mr. Morrisette, Mr. Duhamel, Mr. Scott and Mr. Hodgins.

Mr. SIFTON.

Mr. HAGGART. Why do you mention the names of Mr. Bollard and Mr. Hodgins particularly?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. Bollard's salary was raised by a special vote in 1897, and the Auditor General holds that his name must appear in the Estimates every year. Mr. Hodgins was a messenger in the department when I came there, but through some technicality he having been transferred from one department to another department and retransferred, his name was allowed to lapse and consequently I have to put his name in every year.

Mr. HAGGART. The Auditor General seems to apply a rule to your department that he does not apply to any other department. There must be other officers similarly situated whose names do not appear from year to year.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Not that I have appointed. The only exception I know is Mr. Rothwell, the Law Clerk, for whom there is a special vote.

Geological Survey ..... $56,700

Mr. DAVIN. While there is an increase here under other heads of expenditure there is a decrease of $7,000 for artesian borings in the North-west Territories. Would the Minister explain that?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The amount voted for the Geological Survey has varied from $50,000 to $60,000, and it is a vote that can be made smaller or larger, as the expenditure depends upon the number of parties that are sent out. The $3,000 for artesian wells is simply to finish up the borings which have been taking place north of Edmonton for several years.

Mr. WALLACE. Would the Minister give us a history of these boring operations?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The director of the Survey informs me that there is a very full history of the progress of the work in the summary report of the Survey, which has been laid on the Table. The boring at Pelican River was abandoned after 837 feet, on account of a very violent rush of natural gas. The boring for petroleum at Victoria, near Athabasca Lake, was continued until last summer when it reached 1,650 feet. This work had been carried on by the director of the Geological Survey for some years before I took charge. In my opinion, the utility of this work is more or less doubtful. The first year the director brought the matter before me to submit a vote to Parliament, I expressed the opinion that it was a matter which ought to be left to private enterprise, and that the money expended in making borings at great depth for petroleum was out of proportion to the benefit derived. However, the director was very anxious to proceed with the work, and after some discussion I agreed that up to a certain point I would sanction its continuance. I have made up my mind, if not absolutely, yet with some degree of firmness, that I will not take a vote again for this unless there is some new light thrown on the subject. The borings have not resulted so far in showing the existence of petroleum in paying quantities, and we have had no satisfactory results, except the knowledge as to the geological strata, which has been secured by the department. Everything is in good order, and operations will shortly be resumed, with the object of going to 2,000 feet if found possible. The boring is fully paid for to a depth of 1,000 feet.

Mr. WALLACE. What does it cost per foot to bore?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The cost varies according to the depth. It becomes more expensive the further down you go. From 1,000 to 1,650 feet 70 per cent of the contract rate per foot has been paid, the balance being held till the depth of 2,000 feet is reached. The cost of completing the boring from 1,650 feet to 2,000 feet, according to the contract, is $2,125; that is, exclusive of the casing and transport of the same, which is paid for by the department. The way the account stands at the present time is this. There is a balance on hand from last year's appropriation, which I thought, when these estimates were prepared, would be paid out before the end of the year, but was not, of $2,643.48. The amount we are asking for now is $3,000.

Mr. DAVIN. I quite agree with the view of the Minister, that it is not the function of the Government to bore for petroleum products; but there is a field of activity in which artesian well boring might be gone into by the Department of the Interior very profitably to the country. As the hon. gentleman knows, there are vast tracts of splendid land in the North-west Territories, where, at the present time, there is a complete destitution as regards water; and it is in my opinion the duty of the Minister of the Interior to see if water cannot be found on these vast and otherwise fertile tracts. Boring for water is in a wholly different position from boring for oil, because the Minister by his pamphlets and his agents invited men to come and settle in every part of the North-west Territories. Now, it does not do to say that the local government should take care of that. The duty does not rest on the local government unless you give the local government the administration of the land. While the Minister of the Interior administers the land, and invites people to settle upon it, and sells the odd section to those who are ready to buy, the responsibility of finding water is thrown upon him; and the true way to do that, in my opinion, is by means of artesian wells. I know that the predecessors of the hon. gentleman have to some extent tried to throw off their responsibility in this matter. They had a few well-boring machines, which cost a few dollars, and these they gave over to the local government. The local government have supplemented these with others; and they send these machines here and there at the bidding or request of some member of the local legislature. These well-boring machines are very defective. They go down a certain distance, and if they meet a rock their usefulness is gone. Though the Minister of Public Works in the Territories is doing his best to make the well-boring machines as effective as possible, the grant given to the local government by the Dominion Government is not enough to meet their needs and also to supply effective well-boring machines. Even if it were, it would not relieve the Minister of the Interior of his responsibility in this matter. Therefore, I urge him to take the matter up. I have urged it upon each of his predecessors with whom I have had to do business, I think in one case with satisfactory results. They bored for water at Deloraine, did they not?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That was a very exceptional case. They went to a depth of about 2,200 feet. It was a very expensive work.

Mr. DAVIN. Yet I think the results were satisfactory. In travelling in Dakota I have seen from the roadway what seemed to be a lake. I have seen cattle grazing on fields which seemed to be perfectly well watered, and I asked a farmer about the watershed of the country. I said, "You have a fine lake here." He turned around to me and said: "This a lake; all that is produced by an artesian well."

THE MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR.
In Dakota.

Mr. DAVIN. Yes, not very far from one of the stations on the Northern Pacific, probably 12 miles west. I rode up to where the artesian well was, and saw a pipe going up probably about six feet, and near to that a vast tank into which the water from the pipe flowed and then overflowed from the tank, so that you have always in the tank perfectly pure water, overflowing and following the sinuosities of the country. When it came to a valley, it formed a sheet of water that was not only an ornament but a convenience for the cattle and irrigated the land. I point this out to the hon. gentleman as an example of what may be done. If this can be done by the United States Government, why should not this Government do it for our settlers in the North-west? Take the tract of land—I do not know whether the hon. gentleman has ever driven over it—north-west of Pense, there is not in the North-west Territories a finer tract of land. I suppose the black loam is eight feet deep. Nevertheless as you drive north to Stony Beach, where there is a large and successful settlement, you will find on your way an extent of 16 or 20 miles on which no land is taken up, and the reason is that up to the present no water has been found there. There cannot be the least doubt that there is plenty of water to be had. If the Department of the Interior would once find water, the prospective settlers could easily calculate what the finding of the water would cost and whether the watering for a section or two sections would be within the compass of the means of three or four farmers. It would be easy for three or four to subscribe if that were the limit of charge. Suppose some portion had to be placed on the land, to be liquidated from year to year, until gradually got rid of, that would be acceptable to persons wishing to settle on these lands otherwise so desirable. When you travel east, you will find that there is a piece of land north of Whitewood that has as fine land also as is to be found in the North-west Territories, and yet no water has been found. It is the duty of the hon. Minister to solve this problem and it can only be solved by him. He cannot depend on the North-west Government because the moral obligation is not on that government and if it were you do not give that government the means of dealing with it.

THE MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR.
I perfectly agree in almost everything the
Mr. DAVIN.

hon. gentleman has said, and am pleased to find that he entertains the strong views he has expressed. The question of the water supply is one of vast importance. Shortly after taking office, I did take some steps in connection with this question by purchasing a number of boring machines and arranging with the North-west Government, who have better local knowledge of the situation, for the operations of these machines. I may say that part of the understanding which I had with that government, when its subsidy was increased by $40,000 in 1897, was that it should operate these machines. I am this year asking for another vote for four or five of these machines, and I am told by the members of the North-west Government that the operations of these machines have been extremely beneficial. That, however, I quite understand is not the same question as the question of boring artesian wells for the purpose of getting a larger supply and one that might be used for irrigating purposes. That question has been brought before me several times and has my perfect sympathy, but the operation is one which must be conducted with great care and after a thorough survey of the country, so as to make sure that the money will not be wasted. An irrigation survey is being carefully carried on, and I am in hopes that by the time Parliament meets again I will be able intelligently to place before Parliament a scheme which will be the result of the work of the irrigation survey and be able to place data before the House that will justify voting a sum for this work. I do not think I will be justified in going into this on too large a scale at first, but experimental work can be carried on with the object of finding out what can be successfully done. I propose during the next year that this $60,000 shall be spent as follows:—$25,000 to exploration. Publications connected with the department will take $15,000. To pay temporary assistants in the office and out of the office, $11,500. Instruments for laboratory purposes and library and miscellaneous, $3,000. Advances to explorers, $6,500. Last year the work of exploring was divided as follows:—Nova Scotia, three parties: east coast of Hudson Bay, one party; New Brunswick, two parties; Quebec, one party; eastern Ontario, two parties; western Ontario, two parties; Alberta, including boring operations, two parties; Yukon district, two parties; British Columbia, one party. That is not an absolutely accurate statement, because the work of a party will sometimes spread from one province into another. But approximately and as nearly as it can be given, that is an accurate statement of the disposition of parties last year. The work for the next year will not substantially differ in character from the work of last year. In the North-west Territories and British Columbia, we are going to give special attention to the West Kootenay, Atlin and Klondike districts, and Great Slave Lake. A member of the staff who wintered at Hudson Bay will make exploration there.

Mr. HAGGART. As I understand, the Minister stated, in boring at Pelican Lake gas was struck at a depth of over 800 feet. What was the pressure?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think we have that information.

Mr. HAGGART. Have you let the gas run there since you struck it?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It burst out. The place is so far away that the gas is absolutely useless.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. Minister ought to have had it plugged up. It is disgraceful to have it running. I have been told by people who are in that neighbourhood that there is a roar from the escaping gas that can be heard for miles. It is too bad that a commodity like that should be wasted.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. What the hon. gentleman says is true. If he can suggest any way to make use of the gas I shall be glad to adopt it.

Mr. HAGGART. But even if you can not make use of it, you can plug up the well and keep the gas there.

Mr. DAVIN. In connection with what I have been saying I am glad to hear that the Minister takes the stand he does on this question. The hon. gentleman knows, of course, that the well-boring machines are not for testing for water, but for helping the farmers. They have done a good deal of good, though they are not numerous enough, and in some cases, not effective enough. I believe the hon. Minister has received a memorial from the Agricultural Society, the town residents and settlers in the district of Moose Jaw.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think I have.

Mr. DAVIN. One is almost averse from bringing these things before the House for the reason that they may give a false impression. For instance, take the district of Moose Jaw. I had the pleasure last year of driving with an ex-Minister through the Moose Jaw district, and he was perfectly surprised at the seas of grain he saw and the signs of prosperity to be found on every hand. I would ask the Minister to give special attention to this memorial. It is addressed to him by the Moose Jaw Agricultural Society, and town residents, and settlers throughout the district:

SCARCITY OF GOOD WATER.

Memorial to the Hon. Mr. Sifton, Minister of the Interior, and to the Dominion Government, by the Moose Jaw Agricultural Society and town residents and settlers throughout the district:

That the lack of good, pure water in areas in the North-west, larger than some provinces in the east part of the Dominion, has detracted greatly from the comfort, progress and prosperity of settlers, and a pregnant cause and stumbling-block to immigration and settlement of the country.

That much benefit has been derived in numerous localities by settlers' efforts in digging ponds to be filled by the snow of the blizzard and by the liberal aid given by the local assembly and executive in constructing dams across coulees or gullies and digging ponds on the level prairie, at an average cost of from $200 to $400 each.

That experience of this system that costs so much labour and money has demonstrated that the water every passing year gets more foul and contaminated, and that many of the larger dams and ponds are already, especially in the winter season, unfit for the use of man and beast, and that new dams and ponds must be continuously constructed if good water cannot be got in some other and better way.

The hon. Minister will be aware what happened with regard to these ponds. No doubt what the settlers should have done was to fence the ponds in. Being unfenced, the cattle had gone in and sometimes wallowed in them, and the result is that the ponds, especially when they are frozen, have become very dangerous to health.

That fevers have made their appearance on the open prairie, and that in the opinion of the medical profession they are caused by the stagnant, foul, surface water.

That three-fourths of the settlers have practically no water in winter, and are compelled to water their stock with snow, and melt it for use in the household; that while we rejoice that non-working horses and cattle, from yearlings up, can be successfully wintered on snow for water, if regularly given, yet the lack of water in winter effectually stops all winter dairying, which otherwise would be the most profitable, and renders the fattening of cattle in winter next to impossible.

That pure water is indispensable to the manufacture of first-class gilt-edged butter that will command the highest price on the British market, and that the lower price that has thus far been obtained for North-west creamery butter is directly traceable to the extended use of stagnant water, whereby the aroma or flavour is affected; otherwise our creamery butter is quite the equal of the best Danish or any other butter ever made.

That the lower price commanded by our creamery butter in the British market, added to the cost of transportation over such an immense distance, lessens the profit to the North-west producer to such an extent that very many are deterred from engaging in it; while if we could obtain the highest Danish price for the bulk of our creamery butter, which we would undoubtedly get if better water could be got for our cows, what with our pasture—unlimited in quantity and unexcelled in quality—and other facilities, would enable North-west farmers to derive a large and ever-increasing income from making creamery butter.

That mixed farming, so absolutely necessary to success in the North-west is handicapped at every turn through lack of water.

That many tests in various localities have been made by settlers with boring-machines and by digging from one to two hundred feet in depth without success.

That it is freely admitted on all sides by our leading men of all parties, in and out of the Parliament of the Dominion, that the future hope, strength, greatness and durability of the Dominion is interwoven and inseparably connected with the success of the North-west.

That we therefore confidently appeal to the Premier and Minister of the Interior and the other members of the Dominion Government, and to the Senate and Commons Houses of Parliament, to vote the necessary funds to accomplish the solution of the water question in the North-west.

That the purpose of this memorial is not to ask aid for the water that can be procured by the use of the North-west boring-machines, but for test artesian wells in the localities where good water cannot be got by the use of said boring-machines.

That we rejoice to know that there is to be a large surplus over expenditure this year, thus putting it within the power of the Government to make the necessary grant without borrowing the money or largely curtailing other necessary expenditures.

And your petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

You see, Sir, that the farmers around Moose Jaw are ready to make the appeal on the ground of the large surplus. And if any appeal on that ground should be successful, it ought to be in this case. Certainly they can make out, in my opinion, a very much better case than the lawyers can make out for the appointment of more judges in order that there may be nice positions for legal gentlemen. If the surplus is to be used usefully, it cannot be used more usefully to the whole of Canada—and I am sure the hon. Minister will admit it—than in providing water for the most deserving class of our community, in the vast tract of territory which is the backbone and body of the Dominion. As the Minister of the Interior knows well, you cannot do anything better for Toronto, for Montreal, for Hamilton, for Guelph, for any of our manufacturing centres, than to make the North-west prosperous. That is the great custom field in the future for our manufacturers in Quebec and Ontario. Therefore, the Minister of the Interior, who develops these territories on every line, and in every branch, who endeavours to increase our population and increase the attractiveness of that country, by showing that that portion of the North-west has every advantage at present save that of water—the Minister of the Interior that takes that view will not only bring credit on his department, but will do the greatest possible service to the people of Canada. I would urge strongly on the Minister even now to appeal to his colleagues in the Council to give him some of this surplus to be used in the way that these memorialists urge.

THE MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I agree practically with all the hon. gentleman says on this subject. However, when it comes to practically working it out, it is necessary to proceed, not with great delay, but with considerable care in order that the expenditure of the money may not be in vain. I may say that the question of water supply for the farming population upon the prairie country is a subject to which I have had occasion to give considerable attention. It often happens that there may be a few years in which there is a lack of water in certain districts, and when it would not be good economy for the Government to undertake to supply that lack by means of an artesian well, because, perhaps, the amount of benefit to be derived in that case would not justify the expenditure. I do not say that that statement applies to the case of the farmers around Moose Jaw, but I say it would be unwise for us to proceed with the idea of boring artesian wells for the purpose of securing a water supply except as the result of a careful survey, so that we would know, first, that we were boring in a place where we were likely to succeed in getting a water supply, and next, that we were boring in a place from which the water could be economically distributed. Those are points which have to be considered in connection with this matter. I may say to my hon. friend that the matter has already been discussed between myself and the Minister of Public Works of the North-west Government, at considerable length upon different occasions, and I have discussed it with the officers of my department, and one of the subjects which the members of the irrigation survey will be asked particularly to study during the remainder of this season, will be that question as to the possibility of securing a water supply by the boring of artesian wells. They will also make estimates of the cost, so that I will be able, as I hope to be at the next session of Parliament, to submit the results of an intelligent and scientific examination of the country so that Parliament will know that the money will not be wasted when it is expended, so far as scientific skill is able to prevent it.

Mr. DAVIN. But have not the surveyors of the department already surveyed the district around Moose Jaw and the district I especially speak of, between Pense and Stony Beach? I am under the impression that the hon. gentleman has in his department reports from surveyors in respect to these sections of the country.

THE MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There are some reports; how full they are, I am not able to say. But I have not reports which bear particularly upon this subject. The measurements in many cases are there, but they are not such measurements as would enable me to say definitely what ought to be done. I have some recommendations on the subject, but, as I say, the information is not sufficiently full to enable me to lay before Parliament a proposition which is likely to be borne out by the results.

Mr. DAVIN. Suppose that in that country around Moose Jaw, or in that fine country I have spoken of north of Qu'Appelle—supposing that the sinking of an artesian well would give water, the hon. gentleman must be fully aware that the delay of a year would be not only false economy, but would result in loss to the whole country, loss to the individual farmers, loss to the district, loss, in fact, to the whole North-west. I can never put out of my mind that the Department of the Interior had a tremendous opportunity for good before responsible government was handed over to the North-west Government, and when the whole thing was in the hands of the Department of the Interior. My belief is that they could have done the greatest service that any department ever did for Canada by devoting adequate funds to tests for water in various parts of the North-west, as is prayed for in this memorial.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My hon. friend was not so zealous in impressing the late Government as he is in impressing this one.

Mr. DAVIN. I am glad to have that confession. I will say this, that I have nothing to complain of the hon. gentleman in regard to any suggestions that I have made, and up to the present I have never made a suggestion that was for the good of the country that has not been promptly attended to.

The PRIME MINISTER. It will always be so when you make good suggestions.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Can the hon. gentleman say the same of my predecessor?

Mr. DAVIN. Well, my memory sometimes—however, I am persuaded that the hon. gentleman is as convinced of it as I am myself. Let us suppose that the sinking of an artesian well north and west of Moose Jaw, or in that splendid region from Pense to Stony Beach, would result in getting water, what would be the advantage of that to the country at large? Why, the cost of it would be a mere fraction, it would be lighter than the dust of the balance, compared with the advantages that would accrue. I am very glad to hear the assurance of the hon. gentleman that he will take this into consideration next year, but I would prefer, for two reasons, that he should do it this year. First, I do not like the "to-morrow" business; I do not like putting off until to-morrow what you can do to-day. There is another reason. I should like my hon. friend to have the credit of doing it, and if he puts off until another year, such are the accidents of life, that he may not have the chance.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I might say to my hon. friend (Mr. Davin) that if we should not be here, no doubt the hon. gentleman will be in my position, and it would be done all the same.

Mr. WALLACE. I have listened, with a good deal of surprise, to some of the statements made by the hon. Minister of the Interior. He tells us about the large expenditures of money, running into the millions, that come under his charge, but when a necessary work, inaugurated by his predecessors, that is, the boring of artesian wells for the purpose of getting a supply of water—

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My hon. friend (Mr. Wallace) is mistaken. I am quite sure he does not intend to misrepresent the facts. The work that I do not intend to carry on was boring for the purpose of testing the country for oil. My predecessor did not inaugurate any work in the way of boring for water.

Mr. WALLACE. Oh, yes, he did; the machinery was purchased, and the boring was started.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. He should not make that statement.

Mr. WALLACE. That it was not started by his predecessor?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Not boring artesian wells. My hon. friend, I am sure, does not intend to make a statement that is incorrect. When I took office, I found an estimate of $4,000 or $5,000 for the purchase of well-boring machinery, but not machinery that would be capable of boring artesian wells. I expended the appropriation, purchased the machines, sent them up, and I am asking for $5,000 more for the same purpose. There was formerly no boring of artesian wells.

Mr. WALLACE. It is a distinction without a difference. It was boring deep wells for the purpose of getting water. We called them artesian wells. That is an enterprise that might well engage the attention of the hon. Minister. He has done very little. The former Government voted money for the purpose, and started the enterprise. That is what I said. The Minister has almost abandoned it.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Not at all; I am going on with the work.

Mr. WALLACE. In connection with boring for oil, the statement of the hon. Minister was, that they bored at Pelican Lake to a depth of 830 feet, that they then struck gas and abandoned it, letting the gas run out. An hon. member says that an enormous quantity of gas is escaping; he suggested that it should be plugged up. The party to which the hon. Minister belongs has reduced the practice of plugging to such a scientific exactitude that they could go into that without a bit of hesitation, and—

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have no use for gas.

Mr. WALLACE. If they have not been able to plug it up before, I am sure they could easily obtain a contingent from the province of Ontario for the purpose, and we could freely spare them. The hon. Minister tells us, further, that they have bored 1,650 feet at Victoria, and for the addition of 350 feet, to make up the 2,000 feet, they propose to expend $2,225, or $6 a foot. I happen to know something about work of that kind in Ontario, and I know of a contract for boring 2,500 feet being let at about $1.10 a foot. Boring in Ontario is as difficult as it is in the west. In this case, the Government are paying $6 a foot. I admit that you could not get the work done quite as cheaply out there as you could in Ontario, but 40 cents or 50 cents a foot additional would be an ample margin of difference. It seems to me extraordinary that the Government should pay $6 a foot, when contracts have been let in Ontario at $1.10 a foot. I think it is time for the hon. Minister to quit that kind of business, involving an unjustifiable expenditure of the public funds. Apparently, the whole of the work has been performed on the same scale. Parliament voted last year $10,000 for the purpose. Having bored 850 feet in one place, and 1,650 in another place, the hon. Minister tells us that the whole of the work was not done last year, that there were appropriations in former years, so that, prior to the appropriation of $10,000, we do not know how many other thousands of dollars have been expended. I think this is an extravagant expenditure of the public money. The hon. Minister cannot stop the work too soon, unless he is prepared to adopt business methods and go on with such enterprises as may be desired, on some sound and economical plan.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I would say in regard to the cost of the work, that the work has been done altogether under the supervision of Dr. Dawson, Director of the Geological Survey, in precisely the same way that it was being done before I took office. I left it almost entirely to him, excepting that he submitted his contracts and his operations to me for my approval. I can assure the committee that Dr. Dawson has not expended a single dollar that could be avoided, and I am perfectly satisfied that the work has been done as economically as it was possible to do it.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

to incorporate the Belleville Prince Edward Bridge Company.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself in committee on Bill.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. PETTET. I would ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hurley) is there any change proposed in the tolls under this Bill, as compared with the old Bill?

Mr. HURLEY. There is no change in the tolls. The Bill is just the same as the old Bill, except in some minor particulars.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

RELIEF OF ABRAHAM ARONSBURG.

The House resolved itself in committee on Bill (No. 144) for the relief of Abraham Aronsburg.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I would ask that this Bill be allowed to stand.

Mr. WALLACE. Does the hon. gentleman ask that this Bill should stand, in the interest of the petitioner?

Mr. LANDERKIN. There are some hon. members who wish to say something on the Bill, and as they cannot be here this evening, I ask that the Bill should stand.

Mr. WALLACE. When shall it come up again?

Mr. LANDERKIN. Probably on Monday next.

Indians—

Nova Scotia ..... $4,950

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This item was reserved when the main Estimates for the Indian Department were going through the committee some days ago, and I was requested by some members of the committee to give the committee some information in regard to Indian education, and also in regard to the operations of the Indian Department in the North-west, and the results that have been attained. The idea of the committee, I think, was that the information contained in the annual report on these subjects should be as briefly as possible summarized and placed before the committee. There were two subjects in particular on which I was asked to give some information. One was the success attending the efforts to bring the Indians to a self-supporting condition; the other was the obstacles in the way of conducting a system of Indian education. The work of attempting to make the Indians of the North-west self-supporting was begun, substantially, about 1879, when farming instructors were appointed for the purpose of instructing the Indians in farming and endeavouring to induce them to settle down to an agricultural life. The result at the present time may be briefly stated as follows:—We have an aggregate of 14,562 Indians settled on their reserves in the North-west Territories. Of these, 4,854 are rated as self-supporting, and the other 9,708 are still receiving more or less assistance from the Government in the way of rations and clothing. In the province of Manitoba there are 6,716 Indians settled on the reserves and of these 6,166 are rated as self-supporting, and only 550 are receiving aid from the Government. The larger proportion of self-supporting Indians in the province of Manitoba is largely accounted for by two facts. First, the Indians of Manitoba were not, in the ordinary sense of the word, prairie Indians, but wood Indians, and consequently they have much more easily settled down to civilized methods of life. There has not been so much change in their circumstances as in the case of the roaming Indians of the plains. For many years they have had little houses and settlements of their own, and have supported themselves very largely by fishing, hunting and doing whatever work they could get in the neighbourhood. The fishing and hunting which they were able to carry on in former years has not been very seriously interfered with by the progress and settlement of the country. The extension of the fishing operations of the fishing company on Lake Winnipeg has resulted to a considerable extent in augmenting the earnings of the Indians, and giving them better opportunities of earning a livelihood than they formerly had. The Indians in some of the settlements around Lake Winnipeg are in a very advanced condition. Some of their villages present the appearance of white villages, and they live a very decent civilized life. The prairie Indians are a very different class; they are the hardest class of Indians with whom the Government have to deal. They are necessarily nomadic in their habits, and hereditarily opposed to anything in the nature of steady and continuous labour. The extinction of the buffalo having taken away almost entirely their means of livelihood, they are very much more dependent on the Government than the Indians of Manitoba and British Columbia. However, very substantial progress has been made even in the case of the Indians of the plains. Even on the Piegan and Blackfoot reserves, where the greatest difficulty has been encountered to get the Indians to settle down and follow anything like an agricultural life, success is now beginning to attend our efforts, and I apprehend that considerable progress will be made in the next few years. Considering the difficulty that confronted the Government fifteen years ago, very great and substantial progress has been made by the Indians; and it may reasonably be concluded that in a very few years the Indian population of Manitoba and the North-west Territories will be practically self-sustaining. So far as any demand on the Government for direct aid in the way of food and clothing is concerned. The general policy which has been pursued has been that of giving the Indians as much farming instruction as possible, and inducing them by various means, which the agents have devised, to take an interest in farm-work. Various expedients have been devised for that purpose. On many reserves it has been found necessary to adopt a scale of pay for the Indians, either in rations or money, for the time they actually put in by working on the farms on the reserve. As I pointed out to the committee before, on the Blood and Blackfoot reserves a system was adopted of guaranteeing the Indians an extra price for the meat they raised, in order to induce them to take an interest in cattle-raising. While some success has attended the efforts of the department to induce them to take to agriculture, a greater success has attended our efforts in inducing them to follow the occupation of cattle-raising. There is not such a radical difference between the mode of life required of them in pursuing cattle-raising and their former mode of life, as there is in raising grain. However, on the whole, there is a general improvement, and the policy of the department has been to encourage the Indians along these lines by giving them agricultural implements, with a view of awakening in them a sense of responsibility for the care of what has been given to them, so that after a while they would get a sense of proprietorship and independence.

In 1888 there were 10,228 acres under cultivation, and in 1889, 16,844. Taking five as the average family, that we give  $3\frac{1}{2}$  acres to each family, but inasmuch as a considerable number of the Indians are hunters and fishers and do not carry on agricultural operations at all, those who do would, on the average, have a considerably larger acreage under cultivation.

At present the Indians actually have in use 480 mowers, 400 horse rakes, 52 reapers, 38 land rollers, 27 seed drills and 14 cultivators.

In 1888 they had 6,910 head of cattle and in 1898 they increased their stock to 15,871, averaging  $3\frac{1}{2}$  to each family of five. Of other live stock, including horses, ponies, sheep, &c., they had 3,578 head in 1888 and 15,464 in 1898. The cattle have improved greatly in quality, owing to the policy of the Government in that regard, which I explained to the committee when the matter was up before.

An illustration of the progress made by the Indians is the quantity of hay put up on the reserves. One of the hardest things the department has had to contend against is the natural improvidence of the Indian and indisposition to provide ahead for his requirements. We have great difficulty making them undergo the necessary labour to put up hay to provide for the coming winter. In 1888 the amount of hay stored was 13,064 tons, and in 1898, 49,656. This is a very respectable amount for them under the circumstances.

For the housing of stock in 1888 they had 1,554 barns and stables, and in 1898 2,600, many of a greatly improved class.

At present, with few exceptions, the Indians live in houses except in the summer months when many prefer to live in tepees. In 1888 they had 5,279 houses, and in 1898 6,345, but their houses are now of a much better class than formerly.

Those facts will give the committee a good general idea of the results of the operations of the Indian Department, and if members of the committee will take the time to glance over those figures, as they appear in "Hansard," and consider them a few minutes, they will remove from their minds the very prevalent and general idea that the operations of the Indian Department are a failure, in so far as any improvement of the Indians is concerned. There is no greater fallacy. It would be a serious mistake for the House to accept the idea that the operations of the Indian Department were not conceived in a spirit of national economy. It is in the interest of the very highest national economy and well-being that these tribes of Indians should be self-supporting citizens. They can only become so by persistent and patient effort along the lines followed in the past.

On the subject of education let me give a few figures which will show the committee the condition of affairs in that respect. We had, up to the time the last annual report of the department was compiled, a couple of months ago, 273 Indian schools in operation. There was a total enrolment of school population for these schools of 9,886 pupils and an average attendance of 5,533 or 55 per cent of the enrolment. Any hon. member of the committee, who has given attention to the school statistics, especially in rural districts, will see that an average attendance of 55 per cent of the total enrolment is a very large average attendance and compares very favourably with the average attendance in white schools under similar circumstances. I may say that the average attendance as compared with the enrolment is looked upon by educationalists as an indication of the efficiency of a school system and the interest taken in it and the closeness with which its operations are looked after. Two hundred and nineteen of these schools are day schools, and the enrolment of pupils amounts to 6,736. Thirty-two are boarding schools, and the pupils number

Mr. SIFTON.

1,156. Twenty-two are industrial schools, with 1,994 pupils on the roll.

Of these 273 schools, 91 are under the auspices of the Roman Catholic Church, of which 71 are day schools, 14 boarding schools, and nine industrial schools.

Church of England—88 schools, of which 70 are day schools, 11 boarding and seven industrial.

Methodists—42 schools, namely, 36 day, two boarding and four industrial.

Presbyterian—12 schools, of which are six day schools, five boarding and one industrial.

Moravian—one combined boarding and day school. The remaining 36 schools are undenominational. By provinces these schools are distributed as follows:—

	Day.	Board- ing.	Indus- trial.	Total.
Ontario .....	71	1	5	77
Quebec .....	17	..	..	17
Nova Scotia .....	8	..	..	8
New Brunswick..	6	..	..	6
P. E. Island.....	1	..	..	1
British Columbia.	27	4	7	38
Manitoba .....	46	4	4	54
N. W Territories.	34	20	6	60
Outside treaty limits .....	9	3	..	12
	219	32	22	273

The Indian population as shown by the census return is given according to denominations:

Roman Catholic .....	34,364
Church of England .....	14,424
Pagans .....	13,280
Methodists .....	8,855
Religion unknown .....	7,994
Presbyterians .....	1,054
Other Christian beliefs .....	1,581
	81,552

The balance of the Indians shown in the census, 18,561, which make up the grand total of 100,093, are outside treaty limits.

Of the 219 day schools, the salary for 177 is voted by Parliament, and for the remaining 42 the salaries are charged against the interest money of the band (33 in Ontario and four in Quebec). The running expenses of these schools are paid in the same way as the salaries. The day school salaries in Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick run from $200 to $300, while in the other provinces $300 is the fixed salary. I have here a list of boarding schools, but perhaps it would not be worth while to read it. We have 42 day schools, not in charge of any denomination, but all the boarding schools and industrial schools are in charge of some denomination, except that of Rupert's Land, which is a Government school. In the industrial schools of Manitoba and the North-west Territories there had been a total enrolment of 2,280 up to 31st December, 1898. Of these, 1,221 have been discharged. Of the whole number who have been discharged, 404 have died. That is a point which the committee will note as being of some importance. The fact that 404 out of 1,221 have died, goes to show that sufficient care was not exercised in selecting as pupils children who were healthy and free from hereditary taint. Latterly, however, we have been giving special attentions to requiring the pupils who enter the schools to be subject to a more careful examination, with the object of not permitting the entrance of children who are not, as far as possible, free from serious disease. Of the discharged children, 460 are reported as doing well in various lines of life. About ninety have returned to the Indian mode of life. The remainder have been lost sight of in one way and another. I said at a previous sitting of the committee that, when this item came up, I would explain some of my ideas on the subject. I perhaps cannot fully carry out those ideas, on account of the situation in which I found the department, and find it yet. My idea is, that the expenditure of money on industrial schools is perhaps not altogether the wisest. Of course, that is a matter of opinion, and there are very experienced men in the matter of education that do not agree with me in that opinion. My own judgment, however, is in the direction of believing that the schools for the Indian children should be extended on the basis of boarding schools, rather than on the basis of day schools or industrial schools. My observation leads to the conclusion that the day schools are not as efficient as they should be, by reason of the fact that the Indian children are not removed from the surroundings which tend to keep them in a state of more or less degradation. In order that the education may be efficient, I think it is necessary that they should be removed from those surroundings. They can be removed by being taken to boarding schools. On the other hand, while the industrial school answers the purpose of removing the children from their old surroundings and giving them a larger amount of education and a longer term, the attempt to make the Indian boy a mechanic capable of taking care of himself in competition with the white mechanic, is, in my opinion, a little premature. They have not yet arrived at such a stage of physical and intellectual development that the education given them is likely to result in fitting the individual Indian to take his place in the ordinary ranks and engage in the ordinary competition of life. My observation, as well as the observation of the officers connected with the service, will confirm the conclusion at which I have arrived. I found, when I took charge of the department, that the officers of the industrial schools manifested the greatest indisposition to allow the pupils to be discharged. They were disposed to keep them there, after they had long since arrived at an age when, if ever, they should be ready to go out into the world and take care of themselves. This was because of the fear the officers had that they were not fit to cope with the ordinary conditions of life, or to take care of themselves in competition with other people; in fact, they did not feel safe in allowing them to go. I only need to state these facts to show that it is questionable whether that system is an efficient one. Another point is, that this system of education is extremely expensive. If you take into consideration the cost of the buildings themselves and the amount that is paid per capita, and all the incidentals in connection with the carrying on of these schools, it costs an enormous amount of money to educate an Indian child; and the result, as I say, is not altogether satisfactory. If the same amount of money were expended in a number of boarding schools, which would give not so great amount of education, but a reasonable education, to a much larger number of Indian children, the result would be better on the whole for the Indian population than we have now. I would not, for a moment, think of endeavouring to carry out my views on this subject to such an extent as to stop this expenditure or to destroy the effect of the expenditure that has taken place on the industrial schools up to this time. We have these industrial schools. It is not so clear that their work is not of a beneficial character as to justify us in abandoning them, or rendering nugatory the expenditure that has taken place. But I am carrying out my views by not extending the industrial school system, but where an extension is required, adding to the number of boarding schools, rather than to the number of industrial schools.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). Can the hon. Minister tell me how the amount for medical attendance and medicine is distributed among the counties in Nova Scotia?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The vote is a bulk vote, and is not apportioned among the several counties. We pay the actual expenses, as the bills are sent in.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). I understand that the sum allowed for the county of Pictou is $75. I have been asked by a medical man if I could not secure remuneration for him for attendance upon Indian patients. I understand that the system is to have a medical man who is looked to to perform this service.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have a bulk vote, which is estimated according to the average amount for each county. There may be a larger expenditure in one county than the other. I may say that there is a constant struggle between the department and the medical officers in Nova Scotia as to this expenditure. It shows a violent tendency to increase.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). Is any provision made by which any but the one medical officer appointed gets remuneration for attendance upon Indian patients or for medicines supplied to them?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. At the present time, I believe, in the county of Pictou, there is only one officer. But we are not bound by the appropriation to do that. This salary is not specially voted so that it cannot be changed. If there is any sickness amongst the Indians it is not an uncommon thing, if the regular physician is not there, for some other physician to attend the patient and send in his bill.

Mr. DAVIN. Has the hon. Minister begun to carry out any policy in the direction of contracting the outlay for industrial schools?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No.

Mr. DAVIN. Well, Sir, I think the statement that has been made by the Minister will show those members of the committee who seemed on a previous occasion doubtful as to the desirability of the expenditure that was being made in the direction of educating the Indians, not merely theoretically but practically, that the results have been satisfactory, and I think their doubt will be, to a considerable extent, dispelled by the statement that has been made. It would be a most unfortunate thing, in my opinion, if the people of this country, who have a great duty to discharge towards the Indians, to whom the Indians stand in the position of pupils and wards, if, after an experiment ranging over some twenty years, and which has been as successful as could have been expected, if after an experiment of that sort which has been attended with the results given by the hon. gentleman, showing that a large percentage of the Indians are capable of taking care of themselves—I say it would be a most unfortunate thing if now we were to grow faint in our endeavours, and to hark back on the road of doing our duty to the Indians. Now, I will glance rapidly over the statements the hon. gentleman made in regard to the Indians. In regard to the position of the Indians in the North-west and Manitoba, I consider that the statement he has made, and which I can confirm, is one that we can regard with satisfaction. It is perfectly clear that the Indian is making progress in civilization. When first those territories were opened up, the Indian there was a pure savage; in fact, he understood none of the arts of life whatever. He gradually was coaxed to being a trader, coaxed to being a farmer, coaxed to being a rancher, and a considerable number of them to my knowledge, all over the territories, are on the way to be self-supporting farmers. I think we may look forward with some confidence to the time when these men or, at all events, their children, will be in as large a percentage self-supporting as the Wood Indians in Manitoba, who are, as the hon. gentleman pointed out, in a more satisfactory position. Now, I am glad to know that the hon. gentleman is carrying out the policy which was begun by some of his predecessors of directing the attention of the Indians to cattle-raising; and I think he will make no mistake if he acts on a suggestion I ventured to make on a previous occasion when his estimates were up, that he might not only direct his attention to cattle-raising, but direct his attention also to horse-raising. I think if the hon. gentleman will inquire, he will find that it would not entail anything like as much expense as he anticipates to improve the stock of horses by adopting the same methods as were adopted in the case of cattle.

Now, with regard to the schools, I am rather sorry to hear the tone of doubt as to the usefulness of industrial schools. The same remarks that I have made deprecating a change in our policy in regard to the Indians in other respects, will apply to the industrial schools. I have seen good results within my own experience from those industrial schools; and in this very city one of the cleverest printers that has ever been employed in the "Citizen" office was an Indian reared in our industrial schools. The hon. gentleman probably put his finger on the weak spot in our industrial school system when he said that in choosing the children sufficient care had not been taken. I think he will find that if, instead of allowing these persons interested in the school to take in all children that present themselves or that can be had to join these schools, some principle of selection is adhered to, the main principle of which should be the health of the children, why, then, I consider he will have taken a step that will do away with certainly some of the adverse criticism that ran through his remarks this evening. Now, I have had an opportunity, and probably the Minister himself has had, of seeing the results of the industrial schools, not only in our own North-west, but in the United States. I have visited the Indian agencies in the United States where they have industrial schools. I have seen those schools in operation, and have seen very happy results produced in consequence of the very same system which is pursued by our Indian industrial schools; so that, I would rather deprecate the Minister looking with too strong an eye of scepticism on the efforts that have been made in our industrial schools to civilize the Indians.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not want my hon. friend to misunderstand me. I said I had arrived at that opinion myself with a good deal of hesitation, and I did not express a great degree of confidence, because I am quite aware that other gentlemen who are well acquainted with the system of Indian education do not agree with me ; many, however, do. It is a matter with regard to which there may be strong differences of opinion. As the matter is quite arguable, I have not taken the responsibility of at all interfering with or curtailing the operations of the industrial schools after they have been established, and have been kept up to a proper degree of efficiency, and I have no idea whatever of interfering with them.

Mr. DAVIN. I am very glad to hear that the Minister does not intend to interfere with the existing machinery. I may tell him that in 1879 I visited the Indian agencies in the United States, where the same industrial school system that we have prevailed ; and I saw there the very best results. I have not lately followed the progress of industrial education in the United States, but I have no doubt that some of the officers of the Minister will be able to inform him how that is turning out at present. Now that a still longer period has elapsed, he will be able to form a better judgment of the efficiency of the system, and what has been its effects in the United States.

I may say that I would deprecate any steps, and I am glad to know that no such steps are to be taken to curtail the usefulness of our industrial school activity. Let me say this, however, that I do think that it would be advisable, in our industrial schools, and it will in no way interfere with their principle, to direct the attention of the pupils more to farming than to trades. Those who have aptitudes for trades should have these aptitudes developed, and they have been developed with the happiest and best results. But, so far as possible, I think it is better to direct the attention of the young Indian to farming, to make him a scientific farmer, if that is possible, but certainly to make him an efficient farmer. I think that, on the reserves, we might devise some means of appealing to the Indian's love of gain, even more than we do, in order to make him cultivate a larger amount of land than he does. I understand the hon. Minister to say that the amount of land cultivated is on the average of  $3\frac{1}{2}$  acres to the family.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. DAVIN. Of course, that is very small, and I think some means should be employed to appeal to the Indian's love of gain, which is strong.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. In those sections where they do carry on the cultivation of the soil the average is much more than  $3\frac{1}{2}$  acres to the family, but there are large numbers that we have not got settled down at all.

Mr. DAVIN. We know the Plain Indians have a strong love of gain, and they should be encouraged in the growing of hay and bringing it into market where they can get a good price for it. The commercial instinct can be cultivated in the Indian as well as in the white man, and once cultivated it becomes a civilizing influence of a high order. I am glad to hear that the hon. Minister does not intend to interfere with the industrial schools.

Mr. GUILLET. I would like to ask the hon. Minister, if I am permitted to do so at this stage of the discussion, if the department are considering the advisability of selling the islands in the St. Lawrence belonging to the Missisauga Band ? They have passed strong resolutions urging the Government to sell these Islands. They think the time is opportune, and they need the income which would be derived from the capital which would be increased by the sale. They have passed strong resolutions and sent petitions to the Government urging that the sale of the islands be continued.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There have been some resolutions passed, and the position is simply this : When I came into the department I found that the former Minister had caused a few of the islands in the St. Lawrence to be sold, but there was so much opposition on the part of the public to the sale that he discontinued it. I have left the matter where it was at that time. I have formed no positive opinion as to whether it would be better to go on with the sale or not.

Mr. GUILLET. I think it is very unfair to the Indians that public sentiment should be allowed to interfere with what is a private interest of their own. If the islands are to be reserved for the benefit of the public, they should be bought by the Government and kept for park purposes or for such purposes as might be thought desirable. But it is not fair that the Indians should be called upon to bear the expense of their preservation.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think the hon. gentleman is probably correct, that if the public want these islands to be preserved they should pay for them, and the Indians should get the benefit of it. I will give the matter my attention.

Mr. OLIVER. Before the vote for Indian schools is passed I would like to make a few remarks, as I do not agree with the position taken by the hon. member for Assinibola (Mr. Davin), in regard to Indian Industrial schools. I had the honour, during the first session in which I was in this House, to draw the attention of the House to the large amount of money involved in the grant to industrial schools for Indians in the Territories. I thought it was only right that, in so far as I was acquainted with these schools, I should give my views and such information as I had in regard to them to the committee. The conclusion I had come to and which, I believe, is very largely shared throughout the Territories is that the large expenditure, however good may have been the intention in regard to it, and however well it may have been administered, certainly has not been justified by results; that the improvement in the condition of the Indians generally, or in the condition of the Indians who attend these schools has not been such as to warrant the very large expenditure of public funds that is made upon these schools from year to year. This is a statement which I wish to repeat to the committee to-night, as far as my knowledge and judgment go. I do not wish that there should be any breach of faith with the Indians or with anybody; I do not wish that there should be any drawing back of the charity or good-will that may have been expressed to the Indians, but, I think it is only right that, if a certain result which has been attempted to be achieved, has not been achieved, that statement should be made. I have nothing to say against the motive in the establishment of these schools; I have nothing to say against the management of the schools, either by those who directly manage them, that is to say the different churches, or the officials of the Government. I believe that all is done with the very best of intentions, but I say that, as a matter of fact, the result desired to be achieved, has not been achieved. A sufficient time has elapsed since the experiment was started for results to be attained, and if results have not been attained, and I say certainly they have not, then it is time for Parliament to consider whether this is a proper expenditure or not. I say to the committee that not only have results not been achieved, but that in the nature of things, results cannot be achieved when the fact is that when you take the white man's money to educate the Indian's child, to compete with the white man, you are doing an injustice to the white man if you succeed, and when you take the white man's money to educate the Indian's child to compete with the white man and fail, you are wasting the white man's money and you are doing the Indian no good. You can have it either way and whichever way you take it you are doing wrong. I say that as a matter of fact, you have taken the white man's money to make the Indian a white man, and you have utterly failed. An Indian who has passed through an industrial school, is an Indian still, but he is not as good an Indian as before he went in. I do not say that he is not as good morally, or religiously, or educationally, but he is not as good. considered as a self-supporting person, as he was before he went in. The fact is, that when you put an Indian into an industrial school you teach him the white man's trade, and the white man's ideas, but unless you can on top of that give him the white man's ability to exercise these ideas so as to be a self-supporting and self-respecting citizen, you have thrown your money away. That is something you cannot educate into the Indian any more than you can educate it into the white man, for unless it is not in him you cannot put it into him; and I say, you have utterly failed to do that as regards the Indian in your Indian industrial schools. It is in the nature of things you should fail with the Indian; you have failed, and you could not do anything else. What the Indian wants is the self-supporting idea, the idea of independence, the idea that he has not only the ability to support himself, but the desire to support himself. Now, Mr. Chairman, the Indian can support himself as a pioneer, as a freighter, as a voyageur, as a hunter, possibly as a herder of cattle, and possibly as a farmer on a small scale. There is no question but that he can support himself in any of these lines if the circumstances surrounding him compel him to do so. But the Indian cannot support himself as a tailor, as a shoemaker, as a blacksmith, as a carpenter, in competition with the white men in those trades surrounding him. It is not because he cannot make a horseshoe, or put on a horseshoe as well as the white man; it is not because he cannot do carpenter work as well as the white man; but it is because he has not in him that idea of supporting himself; and because he has not that idea of managing his own business for his own support that the white man has. Now, that idea, if it were in him originally, would, as far as possible, be taken out of him by the system which we have adopted in our industrial schools. It is a system which takes away from the Indian the necessity of his own initiative. It is a system under which the Indian is merely a part of a machine, and any idea of initiative that he had in him in the beginning, is, as far as may be, educated out of him by the industrial school. The fact is, that the native initiative is taken from him by the industrial school system, and nothing of equal value to him is put in its place. This is the theory which I beg to lay before the House. But it is not a matter of theory; it is the results which we have attained which should guide us. As I have said, the question is not whether the Indian can make a shoe, or whether he can shoe a horse, or whether he can plane a board, but the question is in relation to the Indian: whether he can do these things for his own support, for his own credit, and for the support of his relatives and friends. I say the Indian has certainly not succeeded in doing that; I say that the results prove that he has not succeeded. I say, that the results prove that the Indians who have been at these industrial schools are not using their natural ability and the training which they learn in these schools, for their own support as citizens of the country, as it was expected they would. That being the case, I take the liberty of putting my view, based on my own knowledge, and from the information I have received, before the House. I go further, I say that the Indians in the part of the country in which I live, were, to my mind, at the time that the treaty money was first paid to them in 1877, better men than they are to-day, inasmuch as they were more self-supporting than they are to-day. I saw the Indians of Whitefish Lake in that year of 1877, drawing their own grain raised by themselves, to the water mill at Victoria Settlement to be ground, and I say here, Mr. Chairman, that these Indians at Whitefish Lake were in 1877 better men to my mind than they are to-day. That is to say: they were more self-supporting and self-respecting than they are to-day. And, Sir, it is the same with all the Indians. I repeat, that the system inaugurated and continued for the improvement of the Indian has not been a success, and so far as making them self-supporting and self-respecting citizens goes, they are not as good men to-day as they were twenty years ago.

Mr. DAVIN. But, Mr. Chairman, I suppose as a fact, there is not an Indian in Canada to-day, as fine a specimen of a man as the noble savage that first greeted the intruding white man. There is no doubt whatever that our contact with the Indian has degraded him from being the noble savage that we met first.

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. member (Mr. Davin) is speaking no doubt for himself.

Mr. DAVIN. We have arrested the Indian at a certain stage of progress from savagery. If we had not interfered with the Indian the chances are that he would have passed through the same process towards civilization as other races have passed through. When the Roman visited the Island of our fathers, he found our fathers very much what our ancestors in Canada found the Indian—fighting, internecine struggle, painted, using bows and arrows. But it would have been a most unfortunate thing—for we would never have had a Milton, nor a Shakespeare, nor would we have had my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) representing Alberta in this House—if our ancestors had been arrested in the same stage of development as the North American Indian was.

Now, Sir, we have a responsibility to this Indian race. It is plain that the results have not been such as, for instance, would attend the educating of white children with their inherited aptitudes of a long line of ancestors devoted to industry, and with the Indian we could not expect anything much better than has resulted. But merely because we have not had great success—I do not believe we have had it—that is no reason why we should retire from our duty to these Indian people. Let me put it this way to my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver). Let us suppose that in the education of one generation of these Indian children, we get one really bright and clever man—and we have got such a man—or one really bright and clever woman—and we have got such a woman—these two individuals showing good results from our system of education, and showing to what the Indian can be brought would justify all the outlay. And, Sir, what after all signifies the outlay compared with what we owe these people? We cannot get rid of the sacred obligation we owe the Indian, and we will not discharge that obligation by merely considering what is best to enable him to get a livelihood. We have to consider not only that, but we have to consider how far can we develop this Indian in the right direction of civilized man; how far can we raise these poor Indian people in the civilized scale. That is one of the questions we have to ask ourselves.

And, Sir, the missionary! We have read here how the Indian has, at all events, one thing in common with civilized man—he seems naturally a sectarian, because we have Methodists, Presbyterians, and Church of England, and Roman Catholics, and some Pagans. We have them divided in religious opinion just as if they were white people, and they are just as zealous in their sectarian views as any of us. That, I think, indicates the same characteristics as the white man in certain directions. That, instead of repressing hope, probably gives ground for hope as to the possibilities of educating the Indian. But we certainly never would discharge our sacred duty to the Indian by merely asking ourselves what is the best way of making him get a livelihood for himself. Shall we leave him to be a trapper, a hunter, a voyageur? No; I say, make him a farmer and a cattle-raiser, but also give him, just as you do the white man, an opportunity of education; and if there is a bright boy or a bright girl amongst the Blackfeet, the Sioux or the Crees, let him or her have the chance of education. I do not know whether my hon. friend ever met Poundmaker. If he did, he stood before one of the noblest specimens of manhood that ever met the human eye. No man ever entered this House or any other English-speaking House of Parliament that had on him more completely the stamp of greatness and nobleness than had Poundmaker. When he stood in the dock at Regina, he seemed like a prince of men, whom an inferior race had by some machination got hold of. And am I to be told that the children of a race that could produce such a man are not to get the opportunities of education? Let me take the late chief of the Blackfeet, a friend of one of the foremost and most estimable missionaries who have illustrated devotion and self-sacrifice in the North-west. That chief was a born statesman. If he had been educated, none of the diplomats of Europe whose names have been handed down as household words would have been able to cope with him; certainly none of them would have been able to get the better of him.

Mr. BEATTIE. What about Oronhyatekha?

Mr. DAVIN. My hon. friend mentions the name of a man whom we all honour. I will not venture to pronounce his name, which I have never attempted to do without falling ignominiously. It is much more than we had to bear when we were young, according to Lowell, who refers to the spelling of long syllables:

We nerved our larynx for the desperate thing,
And cleared the four-barred syllables at a spring.

I cannot do that in the case of my friend Dr. Oronhyatekha. Look at his executive power. I suppose there is not an insurance man on the continent with superior executive power to that of my friend who is at the head of the Foresters. He is a man of extraordinary executive power and grasp. He is a man who would have made a statesman, though I am afraid I may lose his friendly feelings by considering him as a possibility in that respect. He may say to me what Col. Sellers said to a man who wanted to make him a member of Congress: "No, what have I ever done to you that you should ask me to stoop to such a thing as that?" Joking apart, what is the test of the civilized man? It is the ability to adopt means to ends. There is the fruit and flower of the highest culture; and in this man's case, you have that power exemplified to an extraordinary degree. I do not know whether my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior ever had the pleasure of meeting the late chief of the Black-foot tribe. He may have met him travelling on the train.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR.
Crowfoot?

Mr. DAVIN. A more spiritual face no one could wish to see—a most refined face. And I remember the chief of one of the Indian tribes—I cannot just now think of his name—whom I saw leading his tribe from the nomad state to take up their abode on a reserve. His profile was the profile of Gladstone. No brother of Gladstone had a profile so like that of the great statesman. You could not see him managing that difficult task—because a difficult task it was—of bringing that tribe of Indians to go on the reserve, without seeing that he was a born leader of men. I remember when, in 1879, I was visiting in Winnipeg, I went down to the St. Peter's reserve. I do not know whether the chief I then met is still there.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR.
Henry Prince—he just died lately.

Mr. DAVIN. All I can say is that a more consummate orator never used speech than Prince was. Why, Sir, talk about volubility. No orator ever spoke in this House that he could not outspoke. I was there in an official position, as a commissioner, and he had a certain right to address me—I suppose about his grievances. He addressed me from a quarter past seven in the evening until twelve o'clock. I was told that he would go on until six o'clock the next morning, and I had to make a diplomatic excuse to escape.

Mr. DAVIN.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR.
Highly civilized.

Mr. DAVIN. I am pointing that out. What seems to be the flower of statesman-like civilization among ourselves but somewhat long speeches? Although I have referred to Prince somewhat jocosely, nevertheless he was a remarkable specimen of capable manhood. It would be a monstrous thing to say that the children of a race capable of producing such men are not to get their chance of education, merely because some of them fail. Why, how many fail under our own system of education, which is vaunted as so perfect that we are never tired of praising it? We know that the results are not always satisfactory. I think it would be presumptuous on our part to say that it always produces the highest type of cultured manhood. Certainly many of those who are the subjects of it are failures. But are we going to give it up because it fails to accomplish all we hope? No, it is the best thing we can do. We have to take the failures with the successes. Though I agree to some extent with what my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) says, yet it is only a half truth, and nothing is so misleading as a half truth. I do not think it would be wise for the department to be influenced in this matter by my hon. friend from Alberta. It is much better to go on in duty, faith and hope with regard to our Indian wards, make them farmers capable of cultivating their reserves, make them horse-breeders, or, if you like, guides and scouts. They would make good scouts and you could make good policemen out of them, for I saw them used in that capacity on reserves in the United States. But let us give a chance to any bright children amongst them of having their intellects educated and their moral natures softened and developed.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I shall not detain the committee by further discussion, except to say that while there may be honest differences of opinion about the best results to flow from a particular class of schools, my own matured and deliberate opinion is that the attempt which has been made to improve the standard of the Indians and bring them to a state in which they cannot, by any possibility, be a menace to the peace and safety of the rest of the country, is an attempt that ought to be pursued with all possible energy and determination. Looking upon the results which have been achieved, particularly in connection with the Indians of the North-west Territories, as distinguished from those of Manitoba—because there was not so much to do in the latter case—these results are simply phenomenal, under the circumstances. My hon. friend from West Assinibola (Mr. Davin) is quite correct when he says that a very few years ago all these Indians were absolutely savages, under no restraint, without any idea of civilized life, and I venture to say that in fifteen or twenty years from to-day that Indian population will be an agricultural population, almost entirely self-sustaining.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not wish to detain the House long, but I cannot quite agree with the airy manner in which the hon. member for West Assinibola (Mr. Davin) dismisses the question of a vote of $200,000, which is about the amount expended on these industrial schools. That is an amount which, in the minds of the House, is charged against the North-west Territories. In so far as it is chargeable against the Territories, it could be used to much greater advantage to the people of the Territories and the Dominion at large. $200,000 of an expenditure in the North-west Territories is a very important item, worthy of the most serious consideration, particularly by members representing the North-west Territories. It bears a very large proportion to the total amount available for the support of the schools of the whole population of the Territories, the maintenance of public roads, the carrying on of all public purposes. When we see the sum of $200,000 absorbed year after year in the ineffective attempt to educate a handful of Indian children, and when we find that that amount of money is required for the purposes of the white people, and when we find this House none too anxious to provide for those necessities as they arise, when we find that, on every occasion almost when a vote is asked for the purposes of the North-west Territories, we are met with the cry to look at the large expenditures made there—when we find all this, it is a matter of importance to this House to consider whether value is received for this expenditure. The success in the education of one or two Indian children, after years of experiment, instead of merely fifteen years, is not sufficient return for this expenditure of $200,000. Let the House not miss the point. There is no question about the intellectual brightness of the Indians. The Indian is just as bright intellectually as the white man. He can learn a trade just as well as the white man, he can study out of books just as well, and, as the hon. member for West Assinibola has told the House, there are Indians who are just as good speakers as white men. In fact, the gift of oratory is more general amongst the Indians than among the white men, and we might almost be led to believe that our friend from West Assinibola has in his veins some trace for connection with that race. There is no question at all about that side of the Indian character. You can educate the Indian, but to make the Indian use the education you give him for his self-support is the problem that has not yet been solved in any satisfactory degree whatever, and it is only right the House should be fully informed upon that point. A few minutes ago the hon. member for West Assinibola alluded to the fact that there were certain bright people who shone from amongst the Indians in certain lines of life. He pointed to a certain Indian doctor in this eastern country who appears to have a business ability which is not common to the Indian, as well as that intellectual ability which is common to them. There is also a lady of Indian blood whose name is prominently before the public as a poetess, and whose views, I suppose, regarding the Indian question, are entitled to some consideration. I may quote her opinion on the question of these industrial schools, and it is this, that no system of education which teaches a child to despise his parents will ever be successful in elevating the intellectual and moral sentiment of that child. That is exactly what is taught in the industrial schools, or they are not what they are represented to be.

Mr. DAVIN. It is very important that the statement made by my hon. friend should be met, because it is one with which we are often met in the North-west Territories. The hon. gentleman's argument would be cogent if we could suppose that were this money not voted for the Indians, it would still be voted for the North-west for some other purpose. But it would not. If it were not voted for these Indians, it would not be voted for anything. This money is not voted for the North-west Territories at all, and is not charged against the North-west Territories. The money that is voted for the North-west Territories is voted on a wholly different ground. It is voted on the same ground as the money voted to each of the other provinces. The Government, no doubt, think that the amount which they give the North-west Territories is a fair and equitable adjustment of the relations between the Territories and the Dominion. I have always contended that the amount is insufficient, but on each occasion I am told that the North-west Territories have been settled with on a fair adjustment and on the same basis of principle as the other provinces. I know very well that you cannot go anywhere in the North-west Territories but you meet some men who say: Look at this money given to the Indian schools; it would be better to give it to some purpose that immediately affects us. But the answer is:

You must not consider that the money spent on that industrial school, if not so spent would be spent on your pet object. It is fallacious to suppose that if this money was not voted to industrial schools in the North-west it would necessarily be voted to some other North-west purpose. I have always contended—but that is entirely apart from this question—that in the North-west Territories we did not get the amount we should get for carrying on the Government. I have shown here that on any fair analysis of our claims we are entitled to more. Of course that is a different question from the question of the money spent on Indians. Each of these tubs must stand on its own bottom. I must say that one of the greatest possible compliments I have ever been paid is that paid by my hon. friend. I have heard the same compliment paid to Mr. Gladstone; I have heard it said that Mr. Gladstone might have been an Indian because of some qualities he displayed. I thank my hon. friend for the compliment, and I must try to emulate the grace and the picturesqueness of the diction of our Indian wards.

Government of the North-west Territories ..... $322,073 10

Mr. DAVIN. Now, Mr. Chairman, here is the vote where my hon. friend can come forward and fight the battle of the North-west Territories. As I have said, I have always contended, that this vote is not enough. Take into account the fact that we have a vast territory, in which you could absorb three or four of your greatest provinces; take into account the fact that we have not the administration of our own land, and it will be seen that this paltry sum of $282,000 odd to pay grants for schools, clerical assistance, printing, and so on, is not sufficient. I am perfectly certain that the Government of the Territories must have represented to the Minister of the Interior that we are entitled to a great deal more.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I must say that they are not in fault in that respect.

Mr. DAVIN. I should be surprised if they were. There is an item of "incidental justice, &c., including clerical assistance." Is that now under control of the Lieutenant-Governor's office or is it under control of the local government?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, it is under the control of the local government.

Mr. DAVIN. You have several other sums specially voted. You have $5,580 for the Lieutenant-Governor's office, $15,000 for registrars, $50,000 for insane patients—that $50,000 really goes to Manitoba, for we have to send our insane patients to Manitoba—and $2,000 for schools in unorganized districts. But for schools, for clerical assistance, for all the numerous expenditures in carrying on the affairs of the country with a population now of from 120,000 to 150,000, you have only this main sum of $282,979. I have often made the calculation—and I will not worry the committee with it now—to show that on the basis of the provinces—our being deprived of the administration of our own lands, we are entitled to more. If we had the items calculated on a proper basis—so much, for instance, because we have no right to impose customs duties while our people pay customs duties to the Dominion Government—taking all these things into account, instead of this item of $282,000, we should have at least $400,000, and even with that amount, the Government would be cramped. I was in strong hopes that instead of having the same amount placed here for the North-west Territories as last year, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) would, at least, add $100,000 for this year.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The amount placed in the Estimates for the government of the North-west Territories, that is, the amount paid in the nature of a subsidy is $282,979. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) will remember that since this Government took office, the amount voted has been increased by $40,000, and $40,000 per annum is a very respectable addition to the amount voted. My hon. friend will remember that he laboured for a considerable number of years, while his friends were in office, to secure that increase and did not secure it. I think the hon. gentleman will admit that the $40,000 of an increase that was made two years ago was a very substantial one. I am far from saying that the amount paid to the government of the North-west Territories was sufficient to enable them to meet the demands which were made upon them. It is true, they had a larger subsidy than the province of Manitoba had in proportion to population, but I perfectly understand that the nature of the country, the nature of the demands that are made upon them, the position of the people, and the social problems that have had to be worked out there, are such that the cost of local government per capita must necessarily be much greater in the North-west Territories than in a province where the people are settled more closely together. A great portion of the difficulty in those territories comes from the immense extent of country over which a small population is scattered. They are compelled to build roads over an immense stretch of country; they have demands on them for bridges, and for public works, and for assistance to schools among a scattered population. While I am conscious of all the need which exists for a large subsidy, at the same time the hon. gentleman must recognize the fact that we have done something substantial towards increasing that subsidy during this parliamentary term, and that for the present at least a further increase will have to stand over until next year. I may say that I discussed this matter very fully with members of the North-west Government, and, while I am not in a position to say that there was anything in the nature of an agreement between us, yet I think it was understood that the increase which Parliament voted in June, 1897, was considered to be a reasonable increase at that time. It is only fair to the members of that government to say that they have, prior to the present session, pressed very strongly upon me the necessity for an increase, but I have not been able to see my way clear to recommend any addition this year.

Mr. DAVIN. I should be very much surprised, if the members of the government of the North-west did not press on the hon. gentleman the claims of the North-west to a higher subsidy, because I know what is the opinion of each one of them in regard to that. I know that each one of them has a very strong opinion in the same direction as that I have already expressed, and the hon. gentleman's own statement just now indicates that he is fully sensible of the weight of the circumstances which point to the justice of increasing that subsidy. You cannot, on any fair computation, on the same basis of principle as the subsidy is voted in the provinces, make a calculation which will show that they should not get $400,000, instead of $282,000. The hon. gentleman will certainly feel that if my contention is right, the North-west is entitled now to $400,000. Every year that passes on a pinch subsidy, is an injustice, not merely to the North-west, but an injustice really to Canada, because it will infallibly keep back the North-west from a rate of progress which it would otherwise attain. However, I suppose it is useless now to contend for any more than we have this year; but I certainly must say that I am disappointed that there is not, at all events, $50,000 more added to the subsidy.

Dominion Lands—

Chargeable to capital..... $135,000

Mr. DAVIN. Has the hon. gentleman brought down those papers about scrip that he promised to bring down when we came to this item?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The committee will understand that the vote which is being asked for now is the usual vote for Dominion lands service. The other day I had a Bill before the House, which was quite fully discussed, upon the subject of the issue of scrip to the half-breeds in the North-west Territories, and in connection with it there was a discussion concerning the necessity of a treaty being made with the Indians in the unceded territory. I may explain to the members of the committee that, while in the mind of the average citizen of Canada there is no special difference in regard to the jurisdiction by the Dominion Government in respect of any particular portion of Canada, yet in the minds of the Indian of the North-west Territories there is a very marked difference. The Indian of the North-west Territories knows where the line is which separates the ceded territory from unceded territory, and he regards that as a line which is absolutely fixed, and beyond which the Government has no right, in his view, to extend its operations further than is absolutely necessary for the purpose of keeping possession of the country, and maintaining the ordinary state of affairs, keeping the peace and preventing any undue disturbance. The presence of the Mounted Police even is resented in the unceded territories. It was explained in the debate upon that question that, when my Indian estimates were before the House, a vote had been taken for the purpose of sending commissioners up there to negotiate a treaty for a portion of the unceded territory. Settlers, prospectors, hunters and trappers have been for the last two years going in considerable numbers into the unceded territory to the north-west of Edmonton, and to the north-west of Athabasca Lake, in what is known as the Athabasca district, and in that district the Indians have been manifesting a considerable degree of restlessness. I foresaw from the reports that were laid before me, what was likely to take place, and rather more than a year and a half ago it was my intention last year, if possible, to send a commissioner up there for the purpose of negotiating a treaty with these Indians. I may say, while I am upon that point, that these Indians so resent the presence of white people who go apparently for the purpose of taking up land or of settling in that territory, that they are quite willing and quite ready to threaten open and deadly hostilities against persons who go there before any treaty has been made with them. It is not an idle threat, nor is it a thing which should not be regarded with the utmost seriousness. For that reason I decided that negotiations for a treaty would have to be undertaken. After consulting with the other members of the Government, it was finally decided that a treaty must be made, and arrangements were undertaken for that purpose. An attempt was made to negotiate a treaty last year, but it was found that it would not be possible to get notices to the attention of the Indians in that far off district, scattered as they were, in sufficient time to insure their attendance at the various points where the commissioners would be able to meet them. Therefore, upon the advice of those best acquainted with the subject, I was compelled to relinquish the idea of negotiating a treaty last year, and the result was, that the matter was laid over until this year. We now have an Indian commission sent up there for the purpose of negotiating treaties with the Indians of that district. In connection with this necessary work of negotiating a treaty with the Indians, arose the question of dealing with the half-breeds, and of the extinguishment of their claim for scrip.

Hon. members of the committee will have understood, from the discussion that took place on the Bill, which was before the House the other day, that the half-breeds of the Athabasca district claim that they are entitled to the same consideration as was received by the Indians of Manitoba at the time that the transfer took place. They received certain considerations in the way of an issue of scrip to them, which was a payment to them in an alternative way, enabling them either to take up land or to accept scrip which would be receivable in payment for Dominion lands and which they could sell, it being transferable, as an ordinary security for money, payable to bearer. The half-breeds of the Athabasca district claim to be entitled to the same treatment. The half-breeds of the North-west Territories claimed to be entitled to the same treatment and they were accorded the same treatment by the settlement made after the rebellion in 1885. I may say that the fact that the settlement was not made, prior to 1885, was largely a contributing cause to that rebellion. There were a number of circumstances which contributed towards it, and while the non-issue of scrip could not be held, perhaps, to be the principal cause, it was one of the causes which led to the irritation of the half-breeds resulting in the rebellion which took place in 1885. A commission was named, and scrip was issued to the half-breeds, but the children that had been born in the North-west Territories between 1870 and 1885 were not, even then, recognized. We had to consider this whole question in connection with negotiating a treaty with the Indians in the North-west Territories and the half-breeds of the Athabasca district. The half-breeds have the greatest interest in the Indians, and our advices, which circumstances have proven to be correct, were to the effect that it would be useless to endeavour to negotiate a treaty with the Indians unless we were prepared to deal with the half-breeds at the same time, and to extinguish their claims. We were further advised, and I think the soundness of that advice is not now questioned seriously, that we would have to deal with the whole of the half-breeds whose claims had not been settled, otherwise we would not be successful in dealing with any of them. The intermingling of the half-breeds of one part of the country with those of another part of the country make them perfectly familiar, one set with another, so that they know each others claims and sympathize with each other. We were informed that our only hope of making a treaty with the Indians lay in settling this whole question at once.

Mr. SIFTON.

I explained these facts somewhat to the House the other day when the question arose in connection with the issue of scrip as to whether it was a wise course for the Government to pursue to issue scrip, as had been done before, giving the half-breeds the privilege of taking up 240 acres of land, or in the alternative, giving them the privilege of taking scrip which would be receivable in payment to the extent of $240, for Dominion lands wherever such payments might happen to be made. The effect of taking money scrip was that the half-breeds would sell that scrip as a security for money. It would be a security for money just like any other security for money, and the percentage value would be judged by the amount of scrip on the market and the amount of Dominion land deferred payments outstanding. The matter was discussed the other day. Some hon. members, amongst others, the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster), particularly, took pretty strong ground that the course which had been pursued in the past and the course which we were now pursuing was not a wise course. The ground was taken that it was not a wise course because the half-breeds would improvidently dispose of the money scrip, that it would be disposed of at very much below its face value, that the money would be wasted, and that, as a result, the benefit which it was intended should go to the half-breeds, in providing this issue of scrip, would not go to the half-breeds to the same extent, or so substantially, as if some other method of giving assistance were provided. The idea which was expressed in the discussion, most largely, was the idea that the assistance should be given in some other way. The hon. member for York suggested that it should be given in implements, or stocks, or in some kind of assistance that would not readily be capable of being disposed of, and would not, at all events, be likely to be disposed of in an improvident way. There is much to be said in favour of that view. Suggestions were made on the line of the same principle indicating that the view of some hon. members was that assistance should be given in some way that would prevent the half-breeds from having the power of making away with whatever was given to them. I pointed out the difficulty of dealing with the matter in that way. I pointed out that the half-breed considered himself to be an independent citizen perfectly capable of doing his own business and taking care of himself. The half-breeds claim for scrip, in his mind, arose from the fact that he was one of the aboriginal inhabitants of the country, that other half-breeds had been treated in a certain way, that a kind of standard had been raised up as to what the treatment of the half-breeds should be, and that any deviation from that treatment would be looked upon by him as an injustice and a reflection upon him, particularly if that deviation had followed the line of taking from him the power to dispose of what might be given to him, or had followed the line of refusing to recognize his power to deal with what is given to him, or of refusing to recognize his ability to take care of himself, and do his own business. Some hon. members who are familiar with these people and have had dealings with them speak pretty strongly of the independent characteristics of these people, and they do not speak any too strongly. Having a considerable knowledge of these people, that is the impression that has been made upon my mind very strongly, and I have grave doubts about the ability of the Government to get these people to agree to any settlement of their claims that does not follow pretty substantially the plan which has been followed in former years. I would be willing to follow a better plan if it could be suggested, or if a settlement could be made with the half-breeds upon the basis of any better plan, but I have myself serious doubts as to whether that can be satisfactorily done by any other plan. The members of the committee will see the immediate necessity for dealing with this subject which has been put off for some years past, but which is all the time becoming a little more acute, and the people getting a little more impatient to have it dealt with. The immediate necessity for this lies in the necessity for putting ourselves in a position to make this treaty with the Indians of the Athabasca district. I pointed out to the committee that I have taken one step which I thought would, to some extent, preserve the value of the scrip to a considerable portion of the half-breeds, and that was that I changed the form of the certificate of scrip so that it could not be transferred to bearer on delivery. I changed the certificate so that it required to be legally assigned, and I knew perfectly well that was a great impediment in the way of transfer. The difference between getting a certificate payable to bearer and getting a certificate which had to be legally assigned and properly attested by witnesses is very great in respect to the half-breeds, and in the case of minors, where a legal assignment is required, of course it is prohibitive until the minors come of age. The Half-breed and the Indian Commission went northward leaving Edmonton about the 24th of May. My hon. friend from West Assinibola (Mr. Davin) has called my attention to the fact that notwithstanding the form of certificate, the Half-breed Commission have issued a certificate payable to bearer, and he has asked my explanation. That is a fact, and I was not in the position to explain it until a few days ago, when certain correspondence arrived, which I shall read. Suffice it for the present to say, that the Indian Commission and the Half-breed Commission, at a joint meeting, decided that it was necessary they should make this change, and they have sent me their statement in regard to it, and the matter is now before myself and my colleagues to decide whether we shall approve of their action. I want to be perfectly frank with the House, and I am bound to say that I believe we shall have to recognize the decision of the commission, in so far as the half-breeds of the Athabasca district are concerned. As to whether it shall be necessary to follow the same course in regard to the half-breeds of the older portions of the North-west Territories, that is a matter which we shall have to consider. The commission we have sent out there is a commission which I think every member of the House will agree is worthy of all confidence, in so far as the capacity of the members are concerned. The Hon. David Laird is one of the Indian Commissioners and I need only mention his name in order that every member of the House will admit that he is a man of the highest possible character, a man of most mature discretion and judgment, and in every possible way an ideal man to entrust with this work. Hon. Mr. Laird was formerly Lieutenant-Governor of the North-west Territories and Indian Commissioner; he was a member of the Government of the late Alexander Mackenzie, and is now again Indian Commissioner after a lapse of considerable years. Mr. Laird is a man who has had long experience with the Indians, and I may say here that no man who had ever to do with the Indians and half-breeds of the North-west Territories is regarded by them with greater respect and affection. I think every one will agree in that, without regard to political predilections. Hon. Mr. Laird is chairman of the commission. Mr. James H. Ross, Minister of Works of the Territories, is another commissioner. Mr. Ross is a gentleman who has lived in the Territories, and who is familiar with everything that has gone on there for a great many years, a man of good judgment and good sense. The third commissioner is a permanent officer of the department, Mr. J. A. J. McKenna who is one of the most capable and one of the best posted officials in the Indian service. We have on the Half-breed Commission Major Walker, formerly of the North-west Mounted Police, and Mr. Coté, a permanent officer of the department here, who has considerable experience in relation to matters connected with the issue of scrip and land matters generally in the North-west Territories. We could hardly have got together a body of men more capable, from their variety of information and soundness of judgment in matters of this kind, to cope with any difficulties that may arise. The members of the committee will see that the circumstances are very peculiar. These commissioners are sent into that country under such circumstances that instructions cannot be given to them. Notices were sent out over a year ago, that the commissioners would be at certain points on certain dates. When they get there the Indians are there, and the commissioners have to either make a treaty or fail to make a treaty within a few days. There is no time for instructions from Ottawa, there is no time for them to communicate with the Minister or with the Government, and so we have to depend upon the judgment and discretion of these commissioners. They have, to some extent, to take the responsibility in connection with these matters which, under ordinary circumstances, officers of the Government would not be expected to or allowed to take. A few days ago, in connection with this subject, I received the following papers marked "confidential," but under the circumstances, of course, the papers cannot be confidential, and I presume they were so marked by an error of the secretary or typewriter :

(Confidential.)

Half-breed Commission,
Lesser Slave Lake, 24th June, 1899.

Sir,—We beg to inclose herewith a copy of an extract from a minute of a joint meeting of the Indian Treaty and Half-breed Commissions, held here on the 22nd instant, together with one copy each of the two forms of scrip certificates as they now stand. The reasons which led to the change in the wording of Form (A) are fully set out in the minute, but we deem it advisable to state further in this relation that, apart altogether from the protests and general dissatisfaction which resulted from our announcement as to the terms upon which it was originally intended to issue money scrip, it was felt that the object which the Government had in view in providing for the assignment of money scrip, namely, the protection of the rights of minors, would be totally defeated by the fact that their parents, in the great majority of cases, had fully made up their minds to refuse land scrip, and that the scrip-buyers were prepared to purchase the money scrip certificates of minors from their parents. According to the wording of certificates (A), as it stood before the change and as it now stands, the money scrip called for thereunder is made "payable to bearer," and as there would appear to be a legal point involved as to the right of parents to act as the legal guardians of their children, and to thus appoint agents or attorneys to receive the scrip of the former, scrip-buyers signified their intention to take their chances as to the ultimate result of the Government's decision on this point, and to buy the scrip certificates of minors at a much depreciated value. The consequence of this would have been that while the rights of minors would not have been safeguarded, the interests of the whole half-breed community throughout the district of Athabasca would have suffered considerably. As a result of the change in the wording of the certificate, the value of scrip has risen considerably, and some of the claimants are now holding out from sale in the expectancy of a further rise.

We also beg to inclose herewith a copy of a letter on this subject dated 22nd instant, addressed to the Hon. Mr. Laird, chairman of the Indian Treaty Commission, in which the former urges very strong reasons for the change which was decided upon by the commissioners.

Mr. SIFTON.

The work of the half-breed commissioners at this point, although only commenced two days ago, is now progressing favourably, but in view of the large settlement of half-breeds in the vicinity of Lesser Slave Lake, it is not likely that we will be able to complete our labours here for twelve or fifteen days more.

After mature consideration, we have decided to follow the Indian Treaty Commission, and visit all the points advertised this year. It was feared that there might be trouble in making Indian treaties at Fort Chipewyan and at other places if it were known that the half-breeds there were not to be dealt with this year, so we have concluded to follow the Indian Treaty Commissioners as quickly as possible; but, on the other hand, we will not be able to make as complete an examination into the squatters' claims here as we first intended to. We will, no doubt, experience some difficulties and hardships in making the round trip after this date, but by working long hours and hard travelling, we believe we can accomplish it and get out to Edmonton before winter sets in.

We have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servants,

(Sgd.) JAMES WALKER,

J. ARTHUR COTE,

Half-breed Commissioners.

Then follows an extract from a minute of the joint meeting :

Extract from a Minute of Joint Meeting of the Indian Treaty and Half-breed Commissions, held at Lesser Slave Lake, District of Athabasca on the 22nd June, 1899.

Hon. David Laird in the chair.

Present : Hon. J. H. Ross and Messrs. J. A. J. McKenna, James Walker and J. A. Côté.

These are the members of the two commissions—

The half-breeds of Lesser Slave Lake, at a public meeting held this day with the commissioners, objected to the form of the scrip certificate (Form A), and claimed that it should be in the same form as was employed in the other portions of the Territories. They claimed the right to use the scrip of their children, for the latter's benefit, during their minority, and urged that to do so would be more in the interest of the children than would be the locking-up of the certificate before the issue of the scrip to any one but the person named in the certificate. Inquiry has shown that the half-breeds are determined not to take land scrip, but money scrip for themselves and their children, with the object of immediately realizing upon it, and that scrip-buyers are prepared to purchase the certificates of the old and young, notwithstanding the requirement as to assignment, but at a very low rate on account of that assignment. The requirement intended to benefit the half-breeds is therefore being turned to their disadvantage, but, at the same time, the dissatisfaction thus created is likely to spread in advance of the commissioners and lead the half-breeds at the points at which the Indians have yet to be met to use their influence to prevent the further extension of the treaty. The half-breeds of this district have evinced much intelligence and industry, and are much better able to look after their own interest and the interest of their children than were the half-breeds of the older portions of the territories. Consultation with the natural advisers of the half-breeds has led to the conviction that they would make good use of their children's scrip, and that it would be in their interest to have it at their disposal. It has, therefore, been decided to strike out from the scrip certificate (Form A) the words "and to be delivered to the said.....or assigns," which appear at the fifth and sixth lines between the word "bearer" on the fourth line and the word "and" on the sixth line.

That would make the certificate assignable by delivery, and to be recognized in the hands of the bearer, whoever he might be—

(Sgd) DAVID LAIRD,
Chairman.

J. H. ROSS,
J. A. J. McKENNA,
JAMES WALKER,
J. ARTHUR COTE.

Now, one man who adopted the view expressed by the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster), I think also by the hon. member for West Assinibola (Mr. Davin), and one or two other members of the House, that another method of assisting the half-breeds than that of issuing scrip in the old form should be adopted, and the man who adopted that view most strongly, and was best able to form an opinion on the subject, was Father Lacombe, a well-known Roman Catholic missionary, whose name is familiar in every wigwam and half-breed's house in the North-west Territories. There is no man who is so universally known and respected among the Indians and half-breeds. I had a discussion with Father Lacombe myself, but it turned on other subjects at the time, and he hesitated to express a strong opinion to me; but to others, I believe, Father Lacombe had some time ago expressed a very strong opinion against the use of money scrip. He also had issued a strong opinion in favour of assistance, if any were given, being given in such a form that the alienation of the assistance or the proceeds of the assistance would be in some way restricted. Therefore, he might be taken to have been one of the very strongest of those who held the opinion expressed by some though not all the members of the House when the Bill was before us a few days ago. Father Lacombe's services were considered so valuable by the Government that we secured his assistance and sent him up along with the commissioners. He is not a commissioner; he does not hold the position of being a member of the commission; but he simply goes as a representative of the Government in an advisory capacity, for the purpose of assisting the commissioners in connection with the treaties with the Indians and also in connection with the settlement with the half-breeds. Father Lacombe having had that opinion, I was extremely surprised when I received, along with this paper, the following letter from Father Lacombe, which is addressed to Mr. Laird, the Chairman of the Commission, and is inclosed with the other papers for my information and for the information of the Government:—

Lesser Slave Lake, June 22nd, 1899.

Sir,—Referring to the meeting of the half-breeds to-day, at which I acted as intermediary and adviser, after careful consideration of what was urged as to the form of scrip, I have come to the conclusion that very much trouble will arise if the parents be not able to make use of their children's scrip for their benefit during their minority. As you have no doubt observed, the half-breeds here have evinced more intelligence and industry than did the half-breeds to whom scrip was issued in 1870 and 1885, and although I came here strongly impressed with the desirability of doing everything possible to prevent the parents from using the scrip of their children and freely disposing of their own, the conditions here have led me to the conclusion that action in that direction will not result in any benefit to the half-breeds here, but to their disadvantage, for they are determined to make prompt use of their scrip and that of their children. I find that the half-breeds here, when they heard that scrip was to be issued counted upon turning it into money for investment in cattle for themselves and their children. Very, very few, if any, of them will take land scrip, and I am convinced that none of those who take money scrip will use it in direct payment for land, and the result of the impediment to free disposition will, therefore, be the depreciation of the scrip. They are bound to dispose of it, and it is in their interest that they should be in a position to get the best return possible for it. The dissatisfaction with the form of certificate is so great and so widespread that I fear if the commissioners have to persist in using it the dissatisfaction will spread in advance of the Indian Commission, and make it very difficult, if not impossible, to further extend the treaty, which I am so anxious to have all the Indians enter into. In the interest of the half-breeds, and in the public interest, I would therefore advise that if it be in the power of the commissioners, they should take upon themselves to amend the scrip so as to meet the wishes of the half-breeds.

With respect and consideration,

I remain sincerely,
Truly your devoted servant,
(Sgd.) FATHER A. LACOMBE,
As Adviser in the Commission.

The members of the committee will see that the man who is so conservative in his views and so well posted with reference to the whole subject, and who held such strong opinions on the subject as Father Lacombe, has entirely changed his opinion, and has endorsed the view, first of all, that a settlement in regard to the scrip upon satisfactory lines must be made before the Indians can be dealt with; and, next, he has endorsed the view, which I was not inclined to take myself, and on which I did not act, that the scrip should be issued in such a way that it could be assigned by delivery. The position of the matter now is that the certificates have been issued for the half-breeds in the lower portion of the territory, namely, the Athabasca district and the Lesser Slave Lake, and the commissioners have gone northward, and we will see no more of them until they return in the fall. No doubt they will issue certificates in the form in which they have issued the first for the half-breeds of that district. As for the half-breeds of the older portions of the Territories, we can deal with them as we see fit later on. But as regards the half-breeds of the Athabasca district, it is practically out of our power to modify the action of the commission, and it appears quite evident that it would not be in the public interest to do so. I am satisfied that the committee will agree that the commissioners, having exercised their judgment in that way, considering it to be for the best interests of the commission, the Government will be right in endorsing what they have done. Apart from the remarks of the hon. member for Assiniboia and his request for information, inasmuch as I have stated my views to the House, I made up my mind, as soon as the papers came, that I would take the earliest opportunity of putting the House in possession of all the facts.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am sure the committee will learn with deep regret the position in which the matter now stands. Past experience shows that the attempt to promote the interests of the half-breeds by the issue of scrip had lamentably failed and that practically almost all that was accomplished was to enrich a lot of scrip brokers, who followed the heels of the commissioners and who managed to secure possession of this scrip from the Indians by putting them under the influence of intoxicating liquor or by other means. The hon. Minister of the Interior was so strongly impressed with the deplorable failure of former Governments to accomplish anything in the interests of the half-breeds by this issue of scrip, that he wisely determined to take every possible means of preventing a recurrence of the former practice. The majority of the House listened to his statement with much interest and marked approval when he said that the Government had determined to take the most stringent measures for the purpose of preventing an abuse of the concession made to the half-breeds for the extinction of their claims. He said :

Let me point out to my hon. friend what has been done already. The practice in former years was to issue to the half-breeds a certificate which was so drawn that one might fancy it had been drawn for the express purpose of making it as easy as possible for a broker to get hold of it. Notwithstanding all the years I lived in the North-west, I never saw one of these original certificates until I came to my department. When I came to examine the certificates I found that it simply said: "This certificate entitles John Smith or the bearer to $240 worth of scrip," setting out the particulars. So that when a certificate was issued, all that a broker had to do was to get possession of it without making himself liable for stealing it, and he would be entitled to come here and make a demand for the scrip. I decided to have the form altered to say that the assignee would be recognized upon a proper assignment being filed in the department. I venture to say that assignments cannot be filed in the department for a large number of the certificates, for the simple reason that probably two-thirds of the half-breeds are now under age, and are not legally qualified to make an assignment, and the certificate would be simply held by them until they were qualified. At the same time, they would feel that their rights were recognized.

I may say that both sides listened to this statement of the policy of the Government with great satisfaction. There was, of course, a discussion as to whether some better means could not have been adopted, as to whether it would not really promote better the interests of the half-breeds, to give them land instead of scrip, because the settlement of the country was continually making land more valuable and the land would be much less easy to part with than the scrip, but we all approved of the restrictions and the protection with which he promised to hedge round the half-breeds in the issue of this scrip. But it appears now that the Government are not governing the country. They appointed a commission and gave that commission instructions, as clearly set out in detail by the Minister of the Interior, and which commended themselves to the judgment of the House, as a great improvement upon the former practice which had resulted in almost entirely defeating the objects of the Government; but it appears that there is a crowd of brokers, following on the heels of this commission, ready to buy up this scrip and to a large extent ruling and controlling the commission. The result is that the commission have thrown over the instructions received from the Government. I am at a loss to know where they obtained the power. They have gone back to the old practice that proved so utterly fallacious and useless, so far as the objects which Parliament and the Government had in dealing with these people were concerned. So far as the Athabasca district is concerned, the Government will be unable to do anything, the hon. Minister tells us, to set aside the action of the commission in violating the instructions under which they had been appointed. The House will learn with great regret that there does not seem to be any means of undoing what the commissioners have done. There is a good deal of weight to be given to such a letter as Father Lacombe has written for he speaks with great authority, but I do not think that he and his associates should have authority to disregard the instructions under which they were appointed, without first communicating with the Government and obtaining a revocation of these instructions. I think it is greatly to be regretted that such a course is taken. It is now perfectly obvious that the proper design of the Government to settle the claims and to settle them in such a way as to do most good to the half-breeds is going to be entirely defeated; and the result of the expenditure of this enormous amount of public money will be to demoralize a great many half-breeds and to hand over not only their rights but the rights of their helpless children to a number of brokers who will make a fortune out of this scrip.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman I think is under some misapprehension with regard to the facts. It is true that the commissioners have really exceeded their instructions, have done something that was not contemplated by their instructions. It is true that the effect of this is to remove a restriction which it was decided by the Government should exist. Of course, the Government has not authorized the endorsement of that action, nor have they confirmed it; but I have said frankly to the commission, that in all probability the logic of circumstances would compel the Government to endorse that action and stand by what the commissioners have done. But it must be remembered that the financial benefit to the half-breeds is not the primary object the Government had in view in making this arrangement. I say that is not the primary object. It is desirable that the provision which we make for this scrip being given to the half-breeds should be as great a benefit to the half-breeds as possible. That would commend itself to the common sense of any member of this committee. But the main reason for making this arrangement is to pacify and keep pacified the North-west Territories, to settle a claim which must be settled before the people of Canada can make a treaty with the Indians of that district—and the Indians of that district must have a treaty made with them, otherwise we shall be in danger of having an Indian trouble on our hands, the very slightest of which would cost us two or three times the amount of the scrip we issue. It only requires two or three hundred disaffected Indians—in fact, less than that will do—to cause a disastrous war. When we consider the disastrous effect upon the whole country and the enormous trouble and expense of dealing with such a trouble far beyond railway communication, the committee will see the immense importance of dealing with this question, and dealing with it in such a way as to meet the exigencies of the occasion. I am bound to say that I sympathize to a great extent with the gentlemen who formed that commission. I do not entertain the idea that any member of the commission, least of all the chairman, Mr. Laird, a gentleman of long experience of public life, a gentleman who, it must be admitted, fully realized the responsibility he was taking in going beyond his instructions—I do not believe for an instant that that arrangement was come to, that Mr. Laird sanctioned the proposal that was carried out, without the strongest possible reasons and without feeling that it was his duty to the Government to take the responsibility of that particular action, that it was his duty to the Government of Canada and to the people of Canada, whose servant he is in that particular, to place himself even in a position to be criticised for taking this responsibility. I have no doubt that any person who knows the kind of man Mr. Laird is, will endorse what I say in that respect. Then, we have a statement following that of Mr. Laird, who held very much the same opinion on the subject as I did—we have a strong statement of Father Lacombe, who only a few months ago, before he was confronted with these circumstances, held much stronger opinions on the subject, and in the same direction that hon. gentlemen opposite have expressed. Father Lacombe has been upon the spot; he has seen the circumstances of the case, and knows the extreme danger of trouble with these Indians. He knows how a spark might cause a flame which would cause trouble, would cost the people of Canada hundreds of thousands of dollars to deal with and put down. And, knowing these circumstances, knowing that a treaty could not be made if the views of the half-breeds were not met, he has changed his opinion, and has taken the great responsibility of advising the course which he knew was not in accord with my view when he left, and not in accord with his own at that time. I submit to the members of the committee that it is not likely that any one of these gentlemen has lightly advised the course which that commission has taken. I think that every member of the commission fully realized the responsibility under which he was acting, and I do not think that any one of them would sign that document without feeling that he was doing what his duty to the Government of Canada required and what was in the best interests of the country. This is one of those cases in which ordinary rules do not apply; it is one of those cases in which you cannot act as you would act in the ordinary case of departmental work, where you can put your hand on a telegraph operator, and have a message sent, and instructions changed, and new circumstances, as they arise, considered from time to time by the Government. Here we have a number of gentlemen sent off into a distant part of the country, where instructions cannot be got; and they felt that unless they succeeded in making a treaty at that time, dissatisfaction might arise, for years to come a treaty could not be made. As they have taken that responsibility, it will be great responsibility for the Government to take, if they refused to endorse the action of the commission.

Mr. DAVIN. Would the hon. Minister say how far they were from the railway when they made the first treaty?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. At Lesser Slave Lake.

Mr. DAVIN. That is about two days' journey from the railway, I think.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not know the exact number of miles.

Mr. DAVIN. I confess that I think the commissioners have taken a very high-handed course. What they have done is practically to vote want of confidence in their Minister, and put him in the very awkward position of being obliged to argue—and he argues very cleverly and very strongly—against the utterances of the Minister of the Interior who denounced, a few days ago, what these gentlemen are doing.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) is quite mistaken. I did not denounce anything. I explained, in temperate terms, what was proposed. I had the views that I explained. But the commissioners and Father Lacombe, who had the same views, have changed their opinion. I do not say that my own opinion has changed. But, as they have changed their opinion, I am bound to consider that changed opinion, keeping in mind the fact that they were probably in a better position to form a sound judgment than I or any other member of the committee.

Mr. DAVIN. There is a document there that is entitled to great weight, and that is Father Lacombe's letter, but to know how to judge that, as affecting the conduct of the men, we should know whether it was written before or after they have taken the unwarranted action they have done. If it was written afterwards, as there seems some reason to believe, it does not necessarily imply that this is the deliberate opinion of Father Lacombe.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It was written after, because if he was there he would have known what was done, and he would not have written a letter advising that it should be done after it had been done. That would be impossible, unless the hon. gentleman wishes the House to assume that Father Lacombe deliberately falsified the letter.

Mr. DAVIN. No, it would not be at all necessary, if these gentlemen had taken that course, and had then gone to Father Lacombe and asked him for a letter endorsing their course. Now, I will read the language used by the hon. Minister :

The hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that all these things were brought to their attention at the time.

That is, to the previous government.

They did not even take the small step I have taken in the way of changing the certificate; they let the certificate go fixed up just to suit the broker.

The very thing that is done now.

One would think the broker must have drawn the certificate himself, or got a lawyer to draw it, because there is no other explanation for it.

Mr. DAVIN.

It was drawn to enable the broker to get hold of that scrip in the easiest possible way. I think my hon. friends opposite lose sight of the fact that this is not a new question.

Then, in another place, the hon. gentleman says :

So that it is not at all the same thing to permit a man to hand his property over without any assignment at all, and to compel him to make a formal assignment of it before the transfer is complete. It will make the difference of perhaps two-fifths of the scrip being disposed of very quickly, and a very small fraction being disposed of it.

And again, when an hon. member from this side of the House said :

The Minister sees the viciousness of the old course. But why should he not depart further from it? He says it was a vicious thing to make an arrangement that enabled the half-breed to alienate his scrip the moment it came into his hands.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have a check upon that.

And again :

The safeguard is what the hon. gentleman knows perfectly well, that in four cases out of five the broker never could get an assignment executed at all. The scrip issued by the late Government did not require any assignment or endorsement, but was practically like a note of hand payable to bearer. Why was it made thus? Does the hon. gentleman suppose that the men who passed that law did not know what they were doing? The scrip was made out in that way because of the difficulty of obtaining an assignment. You can get a certificate out of the possession of a half-breed when you could not get an assignment from him signed before a witness.

Now, the hon. gentleman had sent up a form of scrip, and here is this commission, a short distance from a telegraph station abolishing the assignment without referring to the Government that created them, taking the matter entirely into their own hands. It is a most extraordinary thing. Of course, it takes away entirely the one bright spot there was in the policy of the Minister as it was explained here. I sympathize with the position of the Minister to-night. He is in a most humiliating position. He tells us frankly he has no course before him but to accept this statement on the part of his commissioners, that he did not take the right course. Now, what I fear has taken place is this: The brokers are following the commission. When they saw that the half-breeds were to have scrip that would require an assignment in order that it should be alienated, they went to the half-breeds and stirred up feelings among them; and you are not dealing in effect with the half-breeds at all, but you are dealing with the brokers. So here is the humiliating position of the Government, that they adopted a policy which had certainly one wise feature in it, and the very persons that were guarded against, that were buttressed against, these very persons, by going and making a few half-breeds wag their tongues, and say they would not accept scrip in that way, accomplished the very ends the Minister hoped to avert. So here you have a weak commission giving away to the mutterings of a few half-breeds. My hon. friend speaks of the Hon. David Laird as a very strong man. He is a very amiable man, but he is not a strong man.

THE MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My experience of Mr. Laird is quite the opposite. I have found him to be a man of great firmness and great strength of character.

MR. DAVIN. That is not the general impression among those who know him. Their impression is that he is a weak man, and he has behaved weakly here. A little firmness shown to the half-breeds, a little statement made to them that he had no power to alter it, that the form of this scrip came from Ottawa, and the difficulty would have been got over. The Minister feels that the humiliating position in which the Hon. David Laird and his friends have placed him, and I am sorry for him, because he has to stand here to-night and argue against what he said five or six nights ago. I greatly regret what has taken place for the sake of the half-breeds.

THE PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). My hon. friend need shed no tears over the misfortunes of the Minister of the Interior. On the contrary, I think the Minister of the Interior has reason to congratulate himself that he has selected so prudent a commission. If the hon. gentleman will give it a moment's attention, instead of finding fault with what has taken place, he will come to the conclusion that it was the best thing that could be done. The hon. gentleman in making the inquiry he did a moment ago—at what distance were they from the railway—implies that before the commission came to the conclusion to which they came, and the position they finally adopted, they should have communicated with the Minister of the Interior, and then having communicated with him, taken his decision. But my hon. friend forgets one thing. The notices which have been given to the half-breeds and to the Indians, have been posted for twelve months, and they were to the effect that the half-breeds and the Indians would be met by the commission at certain places. Consequently, the commission could only spend a certain number of days at each place, and then they had to hurry forward, otherwise they would be unable to keep their appointments with other Indians, which would tend to break up all their arrangements. So there was no time to communicate with the Minister, they had to go on. At the Lesser Slave Lake they could only spend a certain number of days, and thence they had to go on to other places in order to meet the Indians and half-breeds according to appointment. Now, under such circumstances, having taken counsel by themselves, what could they do? Their instructions were positive, that the old form of scrip should not be followed, but that another form should be adopted which would place it out of the power of the half-breeds to dispose of it. As the Minister of the Interior has said, what is the primary object to be sought in this matter? It is to benefit the half-breeds, it is to satisfy them, and to make them surrender their rights in the land.

If the half-breeds are not satisfied, the Indians will not be satisfied either, and if the half-breeds had created trouble and refused to take the scrip, so great is the influence they have over the Indians that the Indians would probably have refused to make a treaty, and we would have had enormous difficulty, and probably difficulty which might lead to very grave consequences. We have had experience in this matter in the North-west Territories and on the Saskatchewan. The Government dilly-dallied for a long time before coming to the conclusion that they were not satisfied to deal with the half-breeds on the Saskatchewan, as they had before dealt with the half-breeds on the Red River, and the waiting and waiting policy of to-morrow finally brought on a rebellion. Surely my hon. friend would not advise that we should delay. If it is not everything we desire, we had better come to a decision and settle these claims because, if the claims are settled and the half-breeds are satisfied, the Indians will sign a treaty, we will have peace, and there will be no trouble after having reached a settlement of this question in these distant lands. There is nothing else to do than to approve of what has been done. We would have all preferred that a settlement should have been made which would have been more beneficial to the half-breeds, but, at all events, we have secured peace in that land, and they have surrendered the territory.

THE MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The charge of inconsistency does not alarm me at all. If I am never charged with any sin worse than inconsistency, I will be perfectly satisfied. Consistency is said by Emerson to be the bugaboo of small minds. I do not wish the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) to think that I am making an application of the remark to him.

THE PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). My hon. friend (Mr. Davin) will not charge you with inconsistency.

THE MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The view which I expressed when the matter was before us was simply this, that the result of my observation had been that a change ought to be made. I made a change, believing that it could be carried out. I do not claim to have, personally, such an accurate knowledge of the Indian and half-breed population of the Athabasca district that I could be absolutely certain that my view could be carried out. I thought that would be an improvement; I think so still, and I am very sorry that my view was not carried out. But, we have sent a competent commission up there, the best commission we could get for that purpose. They have been met by unexpected and important circumstances which have arisen in connection with this matter, and they have exercised their own judgment, and, in view of the great change that has taken place in the opinion, particularly of Father Lacombe, I am not prepared to say that their judgment was not well exercised, or that, if I had been there myself, I would not have changed my own mind. Hon. gentlemen, in discussing this question, are losing sight of what is the important thing in connection with the matter, and it is that the commission is to be congratulated upon the fact that a treaty was made with the Indians. That was the important matter, and the fact that a treaty has been made with the Indians is a matter of very great importance in connection with our affairs in the North-west Territories, because it has been possible, in the last twelve months, that there might have been trouble, which, commencing in a small way, might have become comparatively serious before it could be put down. I think the committee is to be congratulated upon the fact that the commissioners have been successful in negotiating a treaty. I am sorry the view I had intended to be carried out has not been carried out, but I am not prepared to say that the commissioners have not been wise in exercising the judgment that they did.

Mr. DAVIN. I would not be surprised if the hon. Minister of the Interior is not consistent, but I should be surprised if any member of the Government were consistent, and I am sure the apothem of Emerson, that the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) gave him, that consistency is the bug-aboo of small minds, must be a great consolation to him. When I look at that Government, I am unable to get out of my head the words of an absurd character in Latin comedy—

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR.
All the talents.

Mr. DAVIN. All the talents and all the inconsistencies—"vigilans quippe somnio; vigilans dormio; sanus et vivus intereo."

Mr. MCGREGOR. Steady, steady.

Mr. DAVIN. Shall I translate it for the hon. gentleman?

Mr. MCGREGOR. No, I do not want it translated.

Mr. DAVIN. A character who dreams, and says he does not know where he is;

Mr. SIFTON.

vigilant and yet asleep; living and sound yet dead. That must be the position of hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House. And it would be an astonishing thing to me if in any policy, whether in regard to Indians, whether in regard to the tariff or anything else, they were consistent. To be consistent, they must be inconsistent. It reminds one of what Lord Houghton said of Goethe:

And from beauty passed to beauty,
Constant to a constant change.

Their consistency is inconsistency, and the only possible way that you can think of them in any homogeneous light is in the kaleidoscopic position of perpetual change. The defence of the Prime Minister and the complimentary defence made by the hon. Minister of the Interior I certainly cannot and do not think the country will look on with approval. We have the spectacle of a great Government issuing a commission, that commission going off and doing its own sweet will, changing completely the boasted policy upon which the hon. Minister had prided himself. I do not think the people will look on it with approval.

Mr. OLIVER. I would like to say that the hon. member for West Assinibola (Mr. Davin) is somewhat mistaken about the distance from Slave Lake to the nearest telegraph office. The distance is about 250 miles.

Mr. DAVIN. I thought it was 200 miles.

Mr. OLIVER. And the shortest time in which the journey has been made is about seven days. I do not know, if in this particular season, it can be made in that time, but that is the shortest time I ever heard of its being made in.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR.
About eight days.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, about eight days. Therefore, the position stated by the right hon. Prime Minister holds absolutely good that if the commission had delayed their operations at Slave Lake until they had communicated with Edmonton, in other words sixteen days, they would have missed their other connections throughout the country which would have been very unsatisfactory and might have produced a disastrous result. I would just add that it was very necessary from the events of the past year that an Indian treaty should be negotiated in that country. There is not a very large number of Indians, but a very considerable number of white people went into that country last year, and, unfortunately, to some extent, came into collision with the Indians, so that it was necessary that there should be an arrangement as to the rights of these Indians to avoid future collision. The practical inaccessibility of the country, up to the present time,

(or until last season, when the government of the North-west Territories, and now with the assistance of the Dominion, undertook the building of a road into the Peace River country) made it practically impossible for the Government to preserve order there except by the good-will of the Indians. Therefore, it is necessary, in the last degree, to retain the good-will of the Indians, and also of the half-breeds. The half-breed population at Lesser Slave Lake is about 1,000, so that they are in sufficient numbers and in a sufficiently favourable position to make more trouble than this Government would care to have to deal with; and trouble that it would be very expensive to deal with. In regard to the question of these villains and scoundrels, and I do not know what else they are according to gentlemen opposite—these scrip buyers who follow the commission—let it be understood that it is these men and the money which they pay for that scrip, that alone makes the scrip valuable in the eye of the half-breed. Let it be remembered that if the half-breed cannot turn the scrip into money, he does not want the scrip. And why should he? He would not consider that his title was extinguished unless he received in return something he could use. I ask again, why should he? These people who follow the commission may be very undesirable—personally, I do not know anything about it—but it is the fact of these men being prepared to pay money for that scrip that makes the scrip valuable to the half-breed, and that makes the attempt to extinguish his right effective. With all due deference to the gentlemen who differ from my view, I say that anything which detracts from the cash value of that scrip impedes the efforts that are being made by the Government to extinguish the half-breed title. The circumstances which were not within the knowledge of all the parties concerned at the time, were such that the scrip had to be made a cash article, or else the attempt to wipe out the half-breed claim would be a failure. I say that the commissioners who were sent to negotiate with the half-breeds of that country and with the Indians were well chosen, and if I am not getting into deep water, I will take the liberty of altogether disagreeing from the contention that the commissioners have put an insult upon the Government by amending the form of scrip. I say it is right and proper, when sending a commission into a far-off country to transact important business, that the members of that commission should be of such standing and character that they should be entitled to exercise their judgment so as to render their work effective. The fact of their having exercised their judgment, so far from reflecting discredit upon the Government, reflects the greatest credit possible upon the Government who appointed men of such strength of character that they were not afraid to take the action which was shown to be necessary in order to effectively carry out the work which they were sent to do. I for one say that it was in the nature of things that this change should be made if the work of the commission was to be successful.

Mr. WALLACE. Eleven days ago the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) told us that he did not propose to follow the course followed in the past, and that he was going to adopt a new system to protect the half-breeds, and especially the minors from that wicked class of scrip financiers whom the hon. member (Mr. Oliver) is defending now. Eleven days ago the Minister (Mr. Sifton) told us:

If prevented from alienating the scrip for the first three months, the immediate danger is averted. That is the danger of the half-breeds selling their scrip to people who will follow the commissioners, and resort to the peculiar means of buying the scrip which is resorted to in such cases.

The Minister secured the commendation of Parliament for throwing that safeguard around the half-breeds, but eleven days after he announces that he is going to adopt an exactly opposite policy. The Minister told us then that there was no latitude given to the commissioners, and that their instructions were positive, but now we find that the commissioners totally ignore the instructions of the Minister, and treat them as waste paper. Under the circumstances, if I were the Minister I would send a special messenger to recall these commissioners and dismiss them at once. The First Minister told us to-night, that twelve months ago notices had been given that the commissioners would meet the Indians at certain places on certain dates, and now the commissioners report that they will not carry out the instruction of the Government, but that they will make a law for themselves without any authority or justification. We are told to-night by the Ministers that this scrip is given, not to financially benefit the half-breeds, but to satisfy them, and so we are alienating from the half-breeds hundreds of thousands, we may say millions of acres of land, without recompensing those who are entitled to recompense. The statement of the Government that this scrip is given not to financially benefit the half-breeds is most extraordinary.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I did not say that.

Mr. WALLACE. It was said that the prime object was to satisfy the half-breeds, but apparently the object really is to pull the wool over their eyes and to hoodwink them. Does the Government suppose that they are going to deceive the half-breeds, and that if they deceive them now, the half-breeds will not discover at a later period that they have been deceived. If the object is not to assist the half-breeds financially, what view are they to take of it? They get the scrip supposing that they are getting something of value; but the Government say that is not the object at all, to assist the half-breeds financially; but the primary object is to satisfy them for the time being, and to compel them to surrender their rights in the land. Well, if the half-breed is the character we are told he is, a man of considerable intelligence and a man who is anxious to stand up for his rights, he will quickly discover what the Minister of the Interior has said and what the First Minister has said, that the primary object was not to assist him at all. Then he becomes, not satisfied, but dissatisfied; so that the Government, instead of promoting peace and harmony, are raising distrust and discord among that class of people—the very class it should be the object of the Government to smooth down and assist. They are giving away these millions of acres of land; but they say: "We do not care a snap of our finger whether the half-breed gets any advantage from it or not." The primary object is to deceive and mislead the half-breed—to give him to understand that he is getting some benefit, while his benefit is of the most illusory character. In transferring the scrip there is to be no form of law complied with, but the holder of it gets the benefit, whoever he may be. The camp followers who follow the commissioners, as the hon. member for West Assiniboia told us, have stirred up strife among the half-breeds, and have compelled the commissioners to take a course which is not in the interest of the half-breeds nor of the Government, nor in the interest of peace and harmony, but simply in the interest of this gang of camp followers who are following the Government commissioners for the sake of making their fortunes out of the half-breeds. And the Minister of the Interior tells us that he can do nothing now, that he is perfectly helpless, that his hands are tied, that he cannot remedy what he himself tells us is a great wrong. He says, "I do not think I am so wise as I thought I was a week or ten days ago, or some months ago, when I gave these instructions to the commissioners"—he had not as intimate a knowledge of the Indians of the North Saskatchewan as some others had. Though he made that positive statement a week or ten days ago, he does not adhere to it now, as he has not the same confidence in his opinion or his ability that other people have in theirs. I admire his humility and self-abnegation. The Minister, when it suits his interest, shows himself to be as meek and humble as the late lamented Uriah Heep. The Government claimed to have a well-considered scheme, one which should commend itself to the people of the country, one which in that short time the hon. Minister recommended to the people of the country, and for which he received their approval in this Parliament; yet to-day the hon. gentleman says: "I was altogether mistaken; I thought I was right, but I am a person who does not claim to have all the knowledge and wisdom on this subject, and from the fact that I find that the commission, at the dictation of the scrip purchasers, have changed the whole policy, I must give my approval to what they have done, though I am reversing the course I took ten days ago." I do not think that will meet with the approval of the country. I do not think it will be good for the district where this has taken place, but that it will lead to troubles in the future which I am sure every one of us is anxious to avoid. If mistakes have been made in the past, surely we should profit by the experience of the past, and endeavour to take a course which will prevent these difficulties in the future; but the Minister has not done so. He says there were errors and difficulties in the past; he denounced them a week ago. He asked our approval a week ago for one course, and to-night he is asking our approval for another course, without giving any reason for the change, except that the commissioners who have been sent to that country have ignored the instructions which he gave them, have ignored the law, and have taken a different course.

Mr. OLIVER. I would like to relieve the mind of the hon. member (Mr. Wallace) as to the difficulties that are likely to arise because the Government have not sufficiently assisted the half-breeds in the issue of this scrip. The half-breeds of that country are not asking for assistance from this Government under the present circumstances. They do not assume that position on this occasion. They are asking for what they consider to be their rights. They claim that they have certain rights to scrip, and when the Government deals with them in regard to those rights, and gives to them the scrip to which they are entitled, I say, so far as my knowledge of them goes—and it goes a little further than that of any other member of this House—that there will be no trouble, and they will be satisfied.

Mr. WALLACE. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if the scrip under these circumstances has little value, would they be as well satisfied as they would if the scrip had considerable value?

Mr. OLIVER. They are satisfied if the Government discharges its duty to them by giving them scrip which they can dispose of to the best possible advantage. They would not be satisfied if the Government gave them scrip which they could not dispose of to the best possible advantage. That is the reason why the change was made by the commissioners. But I say that if the Government pay the half-breeds what the half-breeds consider they are entitled to, there will be no trouble. In proof of what I say, I would remind the hon. gentleman that the scrip was given to the half-breeds of Manitoba and the North-west Territories according to an arrangement that was made with them. It has been alleged that much of that scrip passed out of the hands of the half-breeds without reasonable value being received for it. But there is yet to be recorded a single kick from any of the half-breeds of Manitoba or the North-west Territories who received scrip, that they wanted more, or that the Government had not dealt fairly with them. These people are business people, they know what they are doing just as well as any other people; they understand a bargain just as well, they are not lacking in intelligence any more than other men; they know that if they are entitled to a certain thing and get it, the matter is settled, and they are as good people to stand by their arrangements as any other in the world.

Mr. DAVIN. I wish to deal with another subject, but one still germane to Dominion lands. The hon. gentleman is aware that several times I brought before him a matter which I hope in consequence is in better shape, but I would like to submit to him a petition that no doubt has already come into his hands directly. It is a petition to the hon. gentleman from the Moose Jaw Agricultural Society and town residents and settlers throughout the district, with regard to seed grain in bonds. After recounting the circumstances that led to the issue of seed grain the petition goes on to say:

That the community were thus brought face to face with a dilemma: either to go bondsmen for their less fortunate neighbours—while they frequently had more than enough to do to keep their own heads above water—or see the most needful in the community go without seed and their lands go to weeds.

That the result was, all got bondsmen and seed.

That in consequence of the crop grown from the said seed turning out, as above stated, another miserable failure, many quit the struggle, left the country, or sought a livelihood from some other employment, and left the bonds to be paid by their bondsmen.

That patents have since been granted to individuals without settlement of said bonds; but on examination it is seen that said bonds are registered against said lands, and entered on said patents, constituting a bar to mortgage or sale, and a continual encumbrance.

That we, therefore, respectfully petition and urge that the said bonds be all cancelled; and that if, unfortunately, payment of relief is demanded contrary to the prayer of this petition, that each be only charged for what he personally received, without interest; and that the bad debts, if any there be, shall be borne by the Dominion Government, and not by the settlers, who, through feelings of compassion and humanity, came to the relief of their less fortunate neighbours.

And your petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

J. E. BATTELL,
Pres. Moose Jaw Agricultural Society.
B. FLETCHER,
Secretary.

Then there is another petition I would like to bring to the attention of the hon. Minister. It is a petition concerning the interest on pre-emptions, and reads as follows:—

Memorial to the Hon. Mr. Sifton, Minister of the Interior, and to the Dominion Government, by the Moose Jaw Agricultural Society and town residents and settlers throughout the district:

That a grievance exists in the North-west, the result, we believe, of an oversight or an anomaly in the Dominion Lands Act, re homesteads and pre-emptions.

That the homestead law, as it applied and was in force in pioneer days, enacted that a settler could take up a homestead and pre-emption and have three years to complete his duties, and was then supposed, but not compelled, to apply for his patent.

That immediately on applying for and getting his patent, interest at the rate of six per cent per annum began to accrue on his pre-emption.

That many settlers fulfilled their settlement duties promptly and applied for their patents, thus fulfilling in the letter and spirit the homestead law requirements; while others, equally, if not more numerous, took advantage of the law, not being compulsory as to the time when they should apply for their patents, and held their pre-emptions many years without being charged any interest, thus saving $24 a year.

That those who fulfilled their settlement duties in the letter and spirit of the law felt, and still feel, aggrieved, that the Government thus favoured the law-breaker instead of the law-keeper, and accordingly stopped making payments on their pre-emptions, money being much needed for other necessary purposes.

That they memorialized the late Government on the matter, asking that both parties should be placed on the same footing, not by retroactive legislation compelling those to pay interest who were exempt by the letter of the law, but by cancelling the interest on the pre-emptions of those who fulfilled the law in the letter and spirit.

That the late Government failed to make known their decision in this matter.

That we respectfully solicit a decision on this, to us, important matter, as there is a disquieting feeling prevalent amongst the pioneers as to what they may be required to do regarding both principal and interest on their pre-emptions; and we express a hope that, in the event of an unfavourable reply, they be not taken short in this matter.

And your petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

Then comes a petition on tree planting which I would also ask the permission of the House to read. After reciting a number of circumstances bearing upon the question of tree planting, the petition goes on to say:

That to purchase right of way, fence, cultivate and caretake would require a very large first outlay, and a yearly grant for many years.

That in view of the vast benefit that would be derived by resident settlers, and the great stimulus it would give to immigration to have groves of trees planted, properly cultivated and successfully grown in every district where no bluffs existed; that resident settlers be encouraged and prompted to plant belts of trees around their homes or premises.

That the money required to carry out the plan suggested by Professor Robertson, if spent to encourage and prompt tree-planting amongst settlers around their homes or premises, would effectually fulfil the purpose aimed at by the worthy Professor and the Government that prompted him to it, and would avoid the many difficulties of the six-mile belt system.

That if payment of principal or interest on pioneer pre-emptions would be accepted for a specified area of successful tree-planting properly fenced and thoroughly cultivated by each resident settler, it would be accepted as a great boon by the pioneers, and would be eagerly grasped at and successfully carried out.

That in addition to the successful tests made by Mr. McKay, of the Experimental Farm at Indian Head, resident settlers without Government or any other outward assistance, and without the expenditure of money except fencing and thorough continuous cultivation, without the application of manure or one pailful of water, have successfully raised belts of trees, without any loss from frost-killing in winter or hot winds or drouth in summer, with an average growth of two feet per annum.

That if a part of the yearly Dominion immigration grant was spent in promoting and stimulating tree-planting, in procuring water and preventing prairie fires in the North-west, that in addition to being a vast boon to resident settlers, it would so very largely improve and transform the appearance of the country, increase the value of property, and make life and home more congenial and comfortable on the treeless prairie, besides turning resident settlers into volunteer immigration agents; that the purpose aimed at by voting an annual immigration grant of upwards of $250,000 would be more speedily and satisfactorily accomplished than by expending all, as at present, in giving assisted passages and the spreading of immigration literature in the east, &c., &c.

Your memorialists, therefore, earnestly pray that a considerable portion of the annual immigration grant be spent in the North-west as suggested in this and accompanying memorials.

And your petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

Three of those petitions I have brought before the hon. gentleman to-night, and on a previous occasion I brought a fourth petition before him. At this late hour I will not take up the time of the committee by enforcing any of the prayers of these petitions. With reference to one of them especially, the hon. Minister knows my views and that they go a great deal further than the petition. I refer to the petition with regard to seed grain, but as the hon. gentleman knows my views I will not take up the time of the committee further to-night by giving expressions to them.

THE MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The question of the method of dealing with the bondsmen on the seed-grain debt is a question on which I hope to submit a Bill this session. I had thought I could not get to it this session, because I thought some time ago that the session would close earlier. But I apprehend now that I shall be able to bring it up for consideration early next week. I have already under consideration the other two petitions that the hon. gentleman has referred to, one of them be that relating to tree-planting, which is worthy of great consideration. I have the greatest interest in the subject and will give it my best attention.

Dominion Lands—

Chargeable to income..... $91,108 80

Mr. DAVIN. Does not the Minister think he has made good progress with his Estimates and—

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is early yet.

Mr. DAVIN. Some members who are not present desire to speak on this vote.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is practically unchanged, except a small increase in the outside service.

Mr. DAVIN. Is this the last vote that the Minister intends to take to-night?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have a number of small votes on the following page. Then I have items 92 to 95 inclusive, under the head of immigration. There is item 220, salaries and expenses of the administration in the Yukon. These are all matters that have been discussed in the House this session.

Mr. DAVIN. What is the explanation of this increase of $3,198?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is caused by the fact that we have two additional employees, Mr. Perrin and Mr. Taylor, who were taken from the immigration office at Winnipeg, and transferred to the Dominion Lands branch. Then the salary of one timber agent has been increased by $100. We are having about $1,000 additional for expenses in connection with the forests which are being attended to more closely than before.

Mr. DAVIN. It is now twenty minutes to twelve, and I think if we allow this vote to go through the Minister should be satisfied. We have had a very laborious week. When does the hon. Minister propose to rise?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think we can finish these votes to which I have referred. This item of Dominion lands does not involve any special discussion, the vote being practically unchanged. The immigration vote was discussed for three-quarters of a day during the present week. Then, as to the question of the Yukon, it has been discussed for weeks. The vote I desire to take in connection with it is for salaries for the department. The subject will come up again under other items, and hon. gentlemen will have ample opportunity to discuss it. There is no use of discussing a subject on every item. There is no reason why we should adjourn at twenty minutes to twelve.

Mr. WALLACE. I think there is good reason. This is not a very full House, barely a quorum being present. We want a fair discussion of these subjects. There has been no attempt to prolong the debate, as the Minister will admit.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have no fault to find at all.

Mr. WALLACE. Fair progress has been made. If the hon. Minister fixes an hour when the House should adjourn, that would be all right, but he must not ask that we put the whole of his Estimates through, for that would not be a fair proposition. I can say to the Minister also—what he knows himself—that by adjourning at twelve or half-past twelve the greatest progress is made.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I quite admit that hon. gentlemen on the other side have treated me quite fairly, and I do not wish to act improperly by treating them unfairly. I think if they will pass these items and the miscellaneous on the next page I will allow the immigration and the Yukon items to stand.

Expenses of Government in the district of Keewatin ..... $2,190

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This is to pay the expense incurred by the Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba, who acts in the capacity of Lieutenant-Governor of Keewatin.

Mr. WALLACE. Could the Minister tell us where Keewatin is?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Keewatin is a sort of no man's land; it runs to the north-west of Manitoba. The Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba has a sort of general supervision over it, but the functions of government are not very actively exercised there. However, there is some slight expense connected with it. The estimate is about the same every year. The increase this year is caused by the travelling expenses of Lieutenant-Governor Patterson. Here are his estimates:

I have the honour to inclose estimates of expenditure for the district of Keewatin for the year 1899-1900. I hope the item for travelling expenses will not be cut out, as was the case during the past year, as I wish to visit posts in the districts this summer which I was unable to reach during my visit in 1897.

The estimates are as follows:—Private secretary, $600; clerk, $480; travelling expenses through the district of Keewatin, $750; stationery, $50; postage, $10; charity fund to be distributed by J. K. McDonald, J.P., of Norway House, $200; miscellaneous, $100, making a total of $2,190.

For the relief of distressed Canadians in foreign countries other than the United States ..... $450

Mr. PRIOR. Does that include relief for miners in the Yukon country?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. In the supplementary Estimates we take a vote of $25,000 under this head. We have sent an expedition to the Hudson Bay by way of the Stikine River, and provisions are being distributed to the men through the Hudson's Bay Company. We cannot tell how much the expenditure will be, but we have instructed the company by telegram to go ahead and convey provisions.

Mr. PRIOR. There is a case to which I wish to call attention on the Stikine River. It seems the Government had made some arrangements, as the Minister says, with the Hudson's Bay Company to relieve them, but before that was done the relief was sent to them by the Alaska Trading and Transportation Company at the request of the provincial agent there. They got in quite a lot of food and stuff to them. Now they write a letter to me, which I only received yesterday, and think they should have some compensation. I have not yet had a chance to bring it before the Minister. Now the Government are subsidizing the Hudson's Bay Company's steamers to run up the river to look after men in cases like that, and this steamer is in competition with the Alaska Transportation Company, which they think hardly fair, as their boat was put on the river before the Hudson's Bay Company's steamer. They were the first to take up the relief, and now the Government subsidizes the Hudson's Bay Company's steamer, which now takes all the business away from them. If the hon. gentleman will allow me to bring this matter up on some other item, we will let it stand for to-night.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Certainly, the hon. gentleman can bring it up on going into Committee of Supply. If he wishes to speak of it in the House, I would be glad if he would let me have a statement of the matter, so that I could deal with it. The members of the committee will see that the consequence that follows in the apparently unfair competition with a private company's steamboat is not a consequence that is contemplated by the Government.

Maintenance, construction of roads, bridges and other necessary works in connection with the Hot Springs reservation, near Banff Station, Northwest Territories ..... $9,800

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The items connected with this resolution are as follows:—The salaries are the same. We are asking for $2,500 for repairs to buildings in the park. Any gentleman who has been at the park will admit that that is a desirable expenditure. The buildings have not been in a state creditable to the country. We are taking $1,000 for repairing roads; we are taking for new roads $500; for painting the bridge over the Bow River, $600; for small contingencies, $480. We are taking $1,000 for taking care of a herd of buffalo, including the salary of the caretaker. I may say that the enterprise we engaged in in a small way for the purpose of preserving the buffalo has turned out very successful. The herd are getting on phenomenally well.

Mr. WALLACE. How many are there?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have about sixteen. Three of them came from Texas, contributed to the Government as a gift by Mr. Thomas G. Blackstock, of Toronto, on condition that we paid the freight on them. The rest of them were given by Lord Strathcona. They were in rather a dilapidated condition when we got them, but they are in good condition now, and doing well. Then, we have $1,300 for new piping to carry the hot water down to the sanitarium. That makes $9,800.

Mr. DAVIN. I forget whether any means are adopted to get an income from the spring.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. DAVIN. What income does it bring?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman will find the information in the annual report.

Committee rose, and reported progress.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. PRIOR. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries whether he can inform the House what the Government intend to take up on Monday?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The Government intend to go on with Supply, but before Supply some of the smaller Bills will be taken up.

Mr. PRIOR. I would also like to ask the hon. Minister if he can say whether the supplementary Estimates will be down on Monday?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We hope that the supplementary Estimates will be down early in the week.

Mr. WALLACE. Will the hon. Minister inform us what are the smaller Bills to which he refers?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There are two or three on the Order paper—one as to public health, and one or two more, perhaps one respecting shipping. The main business will be Supply.

Mr. WALLACE. But the hon. Minister intends to bring these Bills up?

Mr. SIFTON.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will not say absolutely; they may come up.

Mr. WALLACE. I would like to know.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I cannot tell the hon. gentleman more than that. The right hon. Prime Minister thought that possibly we might bring up the Public Health Bill, and perhaps some of the smaller Bills. There is nothing of great importance.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 12.00 a.m. (Saturday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 17th July, 1899.

ABSENCE OF MR. SPEAKER.

Upon the meeting of the House at Three o'clock,

The CLERK said: I have the honour to inform the House that on account of the unavoidable absence of the Speaker, the Deputy Speaker will take the Chair, in accordance with statute.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER thereupon took the Chair.

PRAYERS.

PORT GEORGE, N.S.—PETITION FOR PIER IN HARBOUR.

Mr. MILLS asked:

Has any application been made by any one to have another pier at Port George, Annapolis county, to be located on the east side of the harbour formed by the present pier? Is it the intention of the Government to build such pier?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). A petition of the nature referred to has been received, and the matter is under consideration.

DEATH OF THE HON. W. B. IVES.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Speaker, the very melancholy duty again devolves upon me of referring to the sudden and untimely death of one of my late colleagues and a member of this House. I have conferred with my right hon. friend the leader of the House, who would have been most glad to have met this melancholy occasion by the adjournment of the House had not the present state of public business and the period of the session rendered that almost impossible. I need not say to this House, of which the late Mr. Ives has been so long a member, that perhaps no gentleman could be removed from this House whose absence would create a greater void. As an able lawyer, as a man of great business enterprise and capacity, as a member of the legislature for many years, and as an administrator of an important public department, Mr. Ives has filled an honourable place in this country, and has well and faithfully discharged the various duties devolving upon him. In the Eastern Townships of Canada, and in regard to the English-speaking population of the province of Quebec, he occupied a very important position, as every person in the House well knows, and I am quite certain that his loss will be deplored not alone by his Conservative friends in this House but by every member of the House, as perhaps no man on either side of the House to a larger extent enjoyed the kindly feeling and friendly regard of all who compose its membership. To me and to the party to which he belonged, his loss is a very great one indeed; and to Parliament and the country at large it is a loss that must necessarily be severely felt. Death has visited the members of this Parliament in an extraordinary degree during the present session. It is only a short time since one of the most prominent and distinguished Senators of the country, who left us in the enjoyment of a fair amount of health and vigour, and whom we expected to see return to us in a few days—I need not say that I refer to the late Hon. Senator Sanford—was suddenly snatched away by death. It only reminds us how frail, how slight, is the tenure by which we hold our positions here. I am quite sure that every member of this House will join in tendering their heartfelt sympathy, not only to the family of my late lamented colleague, Mr. Ives, but also to the family of the late Senator Sanford, who have been bereaved in both instances in such a remarkably sudden manner of the heads of those families.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, on behalf of those who sit on this side of the House, and who were not the political friends of the late Mr. Ives, I beg the privilege of joining my voice to the voice of the hon. leader of the Opposition, who has so feelingly spoken of his untimely death. I re-echo fully what he has said, that it would have been to me and to my friends a most agreeable though painful act, to have adjourned the House in order to testify all the more to the high esteem in which he was held among us. Mr. Ives, I need not remind you, was one of the most influential, important, and useful members of this House. Hon. gentlemen who came into this Parliament at the last general elections, were perhaps unable to appreciate him as fully as others, because being much engaged in commercial and business pursuits, he had not of late taken the same active part that he did in former years in the proceedings of this House; but those who have sat in the House with him for the last twenty years, can testify that he always imparted much useful information to the discussion of every subject he chose to speak upon. On some questions, indeed, it is not too much to say that he was an authority. In everything that pertained to finance, business, commerce, agriculture, lumbering and mining, he had a vast amount of knowledge and a great deal of experience, which enabled him to speak on all these questions as a master, and his loss amongst us will be all the more felt when we have to deal with such questions as these. To his friends, his political friends particularly, I can realize that the blow must be a very severe one, because he was a man of great wisdom in council, of great pertinacity of views, and of unflinching courage, and these qualities must have been invaluable to his party. I may perhaps be permitted to say that to myself personally, the death of Mr. Ives is a particularly sad one, because before I had the opportunity of meeting him in this House, when he and I were both young, struggling lawyers, we had occasion often to follow the same circuits. Many a time we were engaged together, sometimes on one side, sometimes on opposite sides, in the keen contests of the bar; and it is a pleasure for me to remember that the friendship we enjoyed at that time continued to the last to be of the most cordial character. I may be permitted, therefore, for myself and on behalf of my friends, to join in the expression of deep sympathy which we all feel for his wife and his friends in their sad bereavement. I may say also that I cordially join in the expression of sympathy which the hon. leader of the Opposition has uttered in reference to the death of the late Mr. Sanford. His death was a particularly sad one to his family, and under such circumstances the melancholy of death appeals to us all the more keenly.

EMPLOYMENT OF A. F. MARTIN, D.L.S.

Mr. ROCHE (by Mr. Davin) asked :

1. Is Mr. A. F. Martin, D.L.S., an employee of this Government as a surveyor in Manitoba, or has he been employed to do any work during this season?
2. If so, is he the same gentleman who is the Liberal candidate for the constituency of Woodlands in the ensuing elections in that province?
3. Will his services be continued by the Government while he is engaged in party politics?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). Mr. A. F. Martin is not an employee of the Government, but is the holder of a contract for surveying. He is not therefore under the control of the Government, and the Government has no power to sever whatever connection there may be between him and the Government.

ADMINISTRATION OF YUKON—"TIMES" CORRESPONDENT.

Mr. DAVIN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to read to the House a telegram that, on June 29th, was sent to the London "Times":

Ottawa, June 29th, 1899.

Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, in his speech last night arraigning the Government's methods in the Yukon district, declared that the condition of affairs in the Yukon was satisfactory until Mr. Sifton took charge; that in his administration of the Yukon the Minister had been guilty of serious neglect of duty and maladministration; that he had misstated facts in Parliament as to his information upon the requirements of the district; that he appointed mining inspectors who were incapable and corrupt; that Mr. Sifton's late law partners were illegally given gold leases; that Dawson City was so shamefully neglected as to sanitary arrangements that an epidemic resulted; that several officers named were guilty of corruption in office and took bribes; that official information was improperly disclosed; that Judge Dugas became improperly interested in mining claims, and that the late Commissioner Walsh acted improperly in the discharge of his duties and brought contempt upon Canada.

Mr. Sifton, replying to Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper to-day, maintained that the Government had not been guilty of neglect or delay in administering Yukon affairs. He denied emphatically that he granted a gold-dredging lease to his late law partner, but if he had done so there would be nothing wrong in his action. Commissioner Ogilvie made a careful inquiry into the charges of alleged wrong-doing, and his report, as far as it went, completely exonerated the officials. When his full report was received, the Government would consider it, and if it were found that a further and more complete investigation was required the Government would provide for it, but Ministers did not consider it proper that the question of their political responsibility should be taken from Parliament and sent to a commission of judges, as demanded by Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper.

On June 30th this telegram was sent to the "Times":—

The House of Commons, by a majority of 50, to-day rejected Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper's motion for a judicial inquiry into the administration of the Yukon. Three Liberals voted for the motion.

On July 3rd occurs the leader of the "Times" that I took the liberty, on a similar occasion to this, to quote to the House. I am not going to make any comments, so it will not be necessary for me to move the adjournment of the House. I wish only to point out to my right hon. friend that nothing could be more restrained than the language of that telegram, that it is most restrained within the limits of what actually occurred, and that therefore the language used by my right hon. friend on that occasion:

All I have to say to my hon. friend on the present occasion is that we have another Richard Pigott, another slanderer in the land, and that the "Times" has once more been made the victim of a hoax, written by somebody on this side of the ocean—

I think my right hon. friend will feel that that language was not quite within that circle of urbanity that usually characterizes whatever falls from him, and he will, no doubt, make an amend to the "Times" correspondent.

SUPPLY.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

The Department of Public Works—

Civil Government ..... $45,950

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The increase is due to a number of the clerks having received statutory increases. There is nothing else.

Mr. BERGERON. How many received it?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There were thirteen eligible for the increase, and six got it.

Mr. BERGERON. Will the hon. gentleman give the names in each case?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The following get the statutory increase:—

A. G. Kingston, R. C. DesRoches, R. J. Robillard, H. Rouleau, F. Gélinas, J. T. Costigan.

The following do not get the increase:—

E. F. E. Roy, J. C. Taché, J. A. Theriault, E. Dionne, T. J. McLaughlin, R. Bouchette, J. F. Hyndman.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. On a former occasion I brought this subject forward; and I would like for a single moment to draw the attention of the Government to the very unsatisfactory manner in which the civil service are dealt with. The arrangement of withholding the regular statutory increase from the civil service as a body and selecting certain persons who are to enjoy it, without any reference to the terms upon which that statutory increase formerly was given, I think, ought to receive the attention of the Government. I suggested on a former occasion that, as a number of lawyers in this House, gentlemen of standing in their profession, were of opinion that the members of the civil service had absolutely legal claim to the statutory increase, where their conduct was such as to merit the approval and recommendation of the Deputy Minister, the question, in my judgment, ought to be settled. If it be the policy of the Government to change the law, as it was held to be for many years, and no longer to withhold the statutory increase from persons whose neglect of duty or other cause prevented them from claiming the recommendation of the Deputy Minister, that would be one thing. But, as the opinion is held that under the existing law, a fiat granted by the Government would enable a civil servant who was in a position to comply with the requirements of the law and the practice under it, to obtain redress, I think that matter should be settled; I think the Government should either refer that matter to the Supreme Court for its opinion, or they should provide the means of having a friendly suit that would settle the question. And, if it be found that the law is being violated, as in my humble judgment and in the opinion of many who are much better qualified than I to form an opinion on a legal question, it is, then let the Government comply with the law, or else introduce such an amendment as will enable them to withhold the statutory increase at their will without assigning a reason for it. This is a matter that affects a large number of civil servants who entertain the confident belief that they are being dealt with illegally. I think it is most undesirable that in regard to the administration of public affairs there should be a case in which a single doubt can arise as to whether, in dealing with the civil service, the Government were complying with the law or not.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). The statements made by my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) clearly show that this is a matter on which legal gentlemen have differences of opinion, for he states that he is advised by excellent lawyers that the law, as it stands, gives the civil servant an absolute right to a statutory increase—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Under certain conditions. I do not say they have an absolute right, except where they have obtained the approval and recommendation of the Deputy Minister.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend is aware, from what occurred in a previous debate—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I was not here.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. But the hon. gentleman is probably aware, from his general knowledge of the subject, that we were advised by the Minister of Justice, to whom the subject was referred, that the construction the hon. gentleman gives to the law was not the proper construction, and upon that advice, which was concurred in by other legal gentlemen of eminence, we adopted the policy which has been proclaimed in Parliament. If we were persuaded that my hon. friend's view of the law was correct, I am afraid we should be obliged to introduce an amendment to the Civil Service Act, because the Government does not think it is desirable that a civil servant should have an absolute right to that increase. We have, under advice and subject to the difference of opinion that the hon. gentleman has stated, held that there is a measure of discretion in the Governor in Council; and, if it were shown that that discretion did not exist, I think there would be strong reason for introducing such an amendment to the law as would confer it, because the Government holds that this increase should not be granted year after year, unless the officer has merited it by special work. I am free to admit that, for my own part, I am not satisfied with the present method of selection. Admitting that there should be the discretion to which I have referred, there should be some uniform method of selection, and I have been endeavouring to devise some means, not in amendment of the law, but of the machinery by which it is carried out, whereby we might have a system with something like uniformity in the rules under which selection is to be made. The same reasons may not govern the one Minister in recommending a civil servant for the increase that may govern another. If it is possible to devise some means of greater uniformity, so that it may be as much as possible a matter of merit, and as little as possible a matter of favour, I should like to see that done. So far as the present time and the Estimates now under consideration are concerned, the Government have to hold to their present view, taken under legal advice, though, no doubt, legal gentlemen on the other side might give a different opinion.

Mr. McNEILL. I think it would be difficult to find a matter of greater importance to bring before this House than that which has just been brought forward by the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper). I take it, Sir, that a good civil service is one of the essentials to the continued prosperity of any country. I did not know that this matter was coming up, but I happen to have in my hand at this moment Lecky's "Democracy and Liberty," and I find that on page 45 of that very able work, a work which has commanded such attention, and is regarded of such great weight and authority, I find this:

A good permanent civil service has often saved a country when its nominal rulers were utterly untrustworthy.

It is absolutely impossible, I think to aggregate the benefit of the civil service to the country; and any course of policy on the part of the Government which causes the civil servant to feel that he is not in such a position as he ought to be in, is calculated to impair the usefulness of the service. The course that has been pursued by the Government in regard to the matter which the hon. leader of the Opposition has brought to the notice of the House, has caused the feeling among the civil servants that they have not been kept faith with by the Government of this country; and I do not think that any greater mischief could very well be imagined than that such a feeling should exist among the civil service.

Now, I would like to ask my hon. friend what possible reason there is for refusing to have this matter settled. Why should we not know absolutely and definitely what the law is with regard to this matter? Is there any reason why we should not know? Is there any reason why the civil servants should not know? Is there not every reason why the civil servants should know? If civil servants are not entitled to this statutory increase legally it is very much better that they should know that is the case. It is very much better they should know that, than that they should imagine that they are not only being unkindly treated by the Government, but that they are being illegally deprived of that which they can claim. If I understand the hon. gentleman aright, he says that he does not think the statutory increase should be given to the civil servants. That is another matter altogether. We are not discussing what the views of the hon. gentleman, or the views of the Government, may be, with regard to this matter. If the Government think that it is not good policy to give the statutory increase to the civil servants, why, that is one question; but it is another question whether the men who are now in the service have a right to the statutory increase. I say that if they have a legal right to that statutory increase, it does not matter one straw what the views of the Government may be on the subject. If these men have a right to the statutory increase they must get it; and surely the Government are not going to stand up and say: We will block this inquiry; we imagine that they have not got the right; but whether we are right or wrong, we are not going to have this matter settled because we do not wish them to have the statutory increase. That is the view, I understand, that is put forward by the Minister of Finance.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not exactly.

Mr. McNEILL. Well, pretty nearly so. I understood him to say he did not approve of the statutory increase.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did not say that.

Mr. McNEILL. I understood him to say he admitted that there were able, legal members of this House who believed that the civil servants have a legal right to that statutory increase.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend said so, and I assume that is correct.

Mr. McNEILL. And the hon. the Minister of Finance repeated the statement.

Mr. McNEILL.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I assume it is correct, if the hon. gentleman says so.

Mr. McNEILL. The hon. Minister of Finance did not deny it, he did not deny that there is a body of legal opinion in this House which holds that this is a legal right of which the civil servants are being deprived. Well, if there be such a body of legal opinion which holds that the civil servants are being deprived of a legal right, I want to know on what ground the Government refuse to have that matter settled and determined authoritatively. I do not think anything more mischievous could be imagined than that the whole body of civil servants should know that a large body of able legal opinion is satisfied that they are being illegally deprived of this statutory increase. On what possible ground does the Government refuse to do what my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition has asked that they should do? The only ground I heard my hon. friend allege was that he did not approve of the statutory increase. Surely that is no ground, that is not law. What is the law? That is what we want to know, and that is what my hon. friend will not let us know. My hon. friend says: I disapprove, and the Government disapprove of giving the statutory increase. We want to have an authoritative opinion as to what the meaning of the Act is. I have heard no argument or no reason whatever assigned why we should not have that authoritative opinion, except the statement of my hon. friend that he disapproves of the statutory increase, and I think that is a very poor reason.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I cannot quite understand my hon. friend's position. He says that if this is a right, the civil servant must have this increase whether the Government will or no. Well, if that is so, we need not debate it this afternoon, because if there is a "must" in it, and whether the Government will or no the civil servant must get this, that ends the matter. I take it for granted that by some process my hon. friend knows they will get it. My hon. friend the leader of the Opposition stated that he was aware that eminent legal authorities differ from the Government in this matter. I am bound to accept the hon. gentleman's statement at once; he would not make that statement unless he had been advised, I presume, by some legal gentlemen. But the Government are obliged to take their law from their proper adviser, the Minister of Justice. In this matter they acted under the advice of a gentleman who is not now in the Ministry, a gentleman who has a high reputation as a constitutional lawyer in this country, Sir Oliver Mowat, who advised the Government that they had discretion with regard to these statutory increases. But we are told to-day: Why don't we take some means of having a decision thereon. I am not aware that any proposal was made before the last fifteen minutes to take such a decision.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I made the proposal a year ago.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend says we ought to ascertain what the law is on this point. Well, it is quite competent for any civil servant to obtain a fiat, and take the case into the courts, but I have not heard up to this moment of any application for such a fiat. I am not aware that any civil servant challenges the soundness of the law under which the Government are acting in this matter. The Government have obtained legal advice that the law authorizes them to do precisely the thing which they are doing; believing that there is a measure of discretion in the Governor in Council in this matter, they are exercising that discretion, and awarding the statutory increases in certain cases and denying them in others. I am not aware of any application ever having been made to the courts by any civil servant challenging our legal view of the matter that all civil servants should not obtain increases. That those who do not obtain increases are dissatisfied, is highly probable, I would not be inclined to doubt that. All I can say is that the Government are acting under competent legal advice, the only legal advice which the Government are at liberty to accept.

Mr. McNEILL. I wish to say to my hon. friend that what we ask is simply that there shall be an authoritative opinion, that the Government will assist in having an authoritative opinion upon this question which is in dispute. My hon. friend says that Sir Oliver Mowat has given an opinion to the Government. We have asked over and over again to have that opinion laid upon the Table of the House, and we have never seen that opinion.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It was brought down last year.

Mr. McNEILL. I asked for it, and I have never seen it, it has never been laid on the Table of the House that I am aware of. At all events, we have not been told till this session that Sir Oliver Mowat said that if the Deputy Minister recommended the increase, the Government had power to refuse it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will answer my hon. friend at once. I do not recollect the words of Sir Oliver Mowat's advice, but certainly that was the substance of his advice. I do not remember whether he reported in writing or verbally. I am not aware that any one ever asked to have the opinion laid on the Table of the House; but I say at once that the substance of Sir Oliver's advice was that the discretion did remain in the Governor in Council, because we have been acting on it ever since.

Mr. McNEILL. We would like to see the words, if possible. I think my hon. friend, when he looks into the matter, will find that he has gone a little too far in his statement that he has made as to Sir Oliver Mowat's views, although I am quite sure he is perfectly sincere in the statement that he has made. But waiving that matter altogether, why should the Government not assist in having this cleared up? The hon. gentleman says that no civil servant has challenged the course of the Government. Well, now, what civil servant is going to challenge the course of the Government? My hon. friend knows very well that civil servants are not in a position to come forward and to challenge the acts of the Government in a hostile sense. It is only a matter of the simplest fair-play, and surely no Government could refuse such a request; we are simply asking for an authoritative statement as to what the law is. We ask the Government to assist us to obtain that, and I am sure it is not very much to ask. I am quite sure that it is such a request as the country will endorse. Suppose that it does cost money to give this statutory increase! When a civil servant has entered into an arrangement with this country to the effect that he is entitled to this increase, have we any right to say that because it costs money we will not pay it? I regard it as a crying scandal that men, having been induced to enter the civil service on the distinct understanding that they should get this increase, and every civil servant has entered it upon that understanding, that the Government should turn around and say: We will not carry out that understanding, and that they should take refuge behind a miserable legal technicality to deprive these men of the statutory increase that they believed they were entitled to when they entered the service of the country. We are simply asking the Government, as a matter of fair-play to have this matter decided once and for all, so that we may know what the legal status of the civil service is. I should wish to be understood as saying this, that I, of course, consider that if the Government believe that the statutory increase ought not to be granted, they have a perfect right to make any new rules they like for new men. But, I say that, in respect to men who went into the civil service on a distinct understanding, that understanding ought to be faithfully carried out.

Mr. McMULLEN. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that any person with an unbiassed mind, who reads the Civil Service Act, can come to any other conclusion than that the clause relating to statutory increases is entirely subject to the recommendation of the deputy head or the head of the department. If the deputy head or the head of the department does not think that a civil servant is entitled to an increase, he is not obliged to report favourably on the application. I do not think my hon. friend (Mr. McNeill), who has been an employer of labour, has always found that all his clerks are equally meritorious. If the deputy head or the head of the department chooses, owing to the fact of the efficiency of the civil servant and his devotion to duty, to grant him an increase, it is quite right he should have one; but if, on the other hand, the clerk is not up to the mark or is inefficient in the performance of his duties, he has a perfect right to decline to recommend him an increase. I have never, in my own business experience, found all my clerks equally meritorious. If the law is properly administered and all clerks that are entitled on account of meritorious service, to an increase are granted an increase, I think that is all that can be asked. If the law is mandatory, if every clerk is to have an increase, and if there were no reservation, the deputy head or the head of the department would have to recommend that everybody get it. If my hon. friend will read the Act, he will find that it provides that in every application, the deputy head and the head of the department must join in recommending that an additional amount be granted. If this is the case, if the Act is mandatory, I cannot see the necessity for making such a condition as that, because otherwise every member of the civil service would be entitled to the increase. I admit that the Civil Service Act should be recast, and I am sorry that it was not done long ago. The hon. leader of the Opposition was a member of the Government that appointed a royal commission upon two occasions to investigate and report upon the conditions of the civil service of the country. But the recommendations, which they made in the interest of the civil service and of the country, were not carried out. In 1892 a commission was appointed, which reported by Bill, and pointed out many ways in which the Civil Service Act could be amended in the interest of the service and of the country. That report remains a dead letter, and the Bill which was recommended was never introduced or passed. There is a great need to recast the Civil Service Act from top to bottom. There are a great many provisions in it to-day which should be revised, and the whole Act should be recast, so that it become more satisfactory to the civil service as well as more just to the country.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the position of the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), differs very much from my own, but the point I raised was not the policy of the Act, but the legal position of the question, which I think is an important one, and which my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) meets by a rather evasive answer, that it would be of no value to the civil service if you were to refer this question to the judges of the Supreme Court, and they were to say: Yes, under the Act the civil servant who diligently discharges his duty, subject to a recommendation for an increase from the deputy head of the department or the Minister, is entitled to it—it would be of no value, because the Government do not approve of it. He says we would just bring in a Bill to change the law and to prevent a deserving civil servant from getting promotion in that way. The position of the Government is a most unjust and undesirable one, and I am quite sure that the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) agrees with me that, if members of the civil service do their duty faithfully and efficiently it is of great benefit to the country, while if they neglect their duty or perform it inefficiently and in a slovenly and disreputable manner, it is a great injury to the country. The policy of the old Government, and which was the policy down to the time that the present Government came into power, was that, when young gentlemen who had obtained a good education and passed the necessary qualifications to usefully serve the country, were induced to go into the civil service at a low salary with the assurance that at a later occasion, if they worked hard and faithfully, and if they were diligent in the discharge of their duties and gave satisfaction to the Deputy Minister who was placed over them, and he recommended them to the Government for an increase, the increase would follow as a matter of course. I am quite willing to admit that the law was not, perhaps, observed with sufficient stringency, and that it was applied to persons who were very efficient, faithful and diligent, and at the same time to persons who were very much the reverse. I am quite willing to admit that there was a good deal of difficulty in that way, but I believe it is of great moment to the country to have a well-qualified civil service, which you will not have if you intimate to the members of the civil service that however efficient they are, however interested in their work, it will be of no benefit to them, and that they can get no further advantage, and as long as they see young men brought in and put over their heads who have no qualifications, by the favouritism of the Minister or some person who has influence with the Minister.

They find that notwithstanding all their hard work it goes for nothing, because the political favouritism that is used to their disadvantage leaves them without hope of promotion in the future. It creates a feeling of dissatisfaction throughout the service when our public employees know that merit alone is not rewarded. Does the Minister of Finance think that it is wise to keep the civil servants of this country in the condition they are in at present? The Deputy Minister may say to the Minister: Here is a most hardworking and diligent public servant and I want you to increase his salary; but under the present system which the Government have adopted, that recommendation is treated as naught. It would be infinitely better in my opinion to change the law than to continue that condition of things. I think the law ought to be changed by providing that the Deputy Ministers should be held to a rigid and strict account for recommending any one for an increase who is not absolutely entitled to get it on account of the efficient discharge of his duties, but providing also that those civil servants who earned the increase should get it every year. We see the Minister of one department bringing down recommendations for a large number of statutory increases, and another Minister bringing down no recommendations. The inference is that in one department the civil servants have faithfully performed their duties, and that in another department they have not, but the Ministers themselves will be the first to tell us that such is not the case, and that they have many deserving men in their departments whom they have not recommended. I believe the country would save money by rigidly carrying out the law as it now stands, and giving that incentive to a faithful and efficient performance of their duties which ought to be given to every deserving civil servant. I believe that the work of the country would be done better, if the civil servant knew that by a vigorous and faithful discharge of his duty he would get that promotion to which his labours and ability entitle him.

Mr. BERGERON. In the particular case now before the House, could the Minister say if the recommendations for these increases were made by the Deputy Minister?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In every case, as the law requires, where an increase was granted it was recommended by the Deputy Minister. I understand as regards the others, that there was a consultation between the Minister and the Deputy Minister, and these were selected and recommended by the Minister and the Deputy Minister. I have no doubt that the deputy would be glad to recommend a larger number if the Minister would concur, but the Minister must take the responsibility of recommending these to Parliament. I know in my own department the deputy recommended more than I was able to agree to.

Mr. BERGERON. The language of the Act seems to indicate that when a young man joins the civil service, he does so with the understanding that he would get an annual increase until he reached the maximum of his class, provided he did his work to the satisfaction of the deputy. It is indicated in the law that the annual increase shall be given on the recommendation of the Deputy Minister who is supposed to be above political influences, and is presumed to recommend the increase only on the knowledge that the man recommended has done his duty. The Act states that an increase must be given unless there are good reasons for not giving it. Since the present Government have been in power, the Ministers have interpreted that law so as to enable them to reward those whom they personally want to reward, and to leave aside those whom they did not want to favour. The Minister of Finance asked: Why did not some of the civil servants bring this matter before the courts.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did not exactly say that, I said none of them had asked for that.

Mr. BERGERON. Does not the Minister know that none of them would dare to do so. Such is the tyranny under which civil servants are living to-day, that if any one of them would dare to go to a member of Parliament to ask his influence he would be dismissed.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Oh, no.

Mr. BERGERON. Yes. If I am not mistaken I heard a few years ago that it was announced to the civil servants, that if they dared to bother members of Parliament or Ministers asking for increases of salary, or even for the statutory increases to which they are entitled to by law, they would be immediately dismissed. Why, the public servants in Ottawa are shaking in their boots for fear of being dismissed without any reason whatever. I have brought before the House the cases of civil servants who were permanently employed and who paid into the superannuation fund, and yet they were dismissed without any cause whatever. The Government even went so far as to repay these gentlemen the amount they paid into the superannuation fund, with five per cent interest added, thus admitting that these officials were dismissed for none other than political reasons. It strikes me, without giving a legal opinion on the case at all, that the Civil Service Act is now being administered purely and simply with a view of political favouritism on the part of the Government. How can men be expected to perform their duties faithfully and enthusiastically if they know that so long as this Government is in power they shall have no increase of salary, and that they will lose $50 a year for four or five years? Perhaps this is the reward that the present Government has given to the civil servants in Ottawa, most of whom voted for their candidates at the last election. I endorse the opinion of my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition, that there should be a test case submitted to the courts in order that we should have a decision as to whether or not the civil servants are entitled to this increase of $50 a year. If they are entitled to an increase, they must have it; if not, the law should be changed, because as it stands it is deceptive. Young men joining the service, join it with an incorrect idea, if the law is that they are not entitled to an increase. Why should we not have laid on the Table of the House the reports of the different heads of departments as to who are recommended for an increase and who are deprived of it by the political head of the department? The whole thing would then be plain at a glance, and the time of the committee would not be taken up discussing the matter.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend has introduced one new feature into this debate, which his predecessor did not refer to. He speaks of the tyranny under which the civil service are living under the present Government. He says that if a civil servant goes to a member of Parliament and asks for his intervention on his behalf, he is liable to dismissal. I would remind my hon. friend that the rule as to that is one which was established by himself and his honourable colleagues. No change whatever has been made in that respect since the present Government came into power. The rule passed by the Treasury Board a great many years ago, I think, under the administration of my distinguished predecessor in the office of Finance Minister, the late Sir Leonard Tilley—though as to that I am speaking from memory—was that if any civil servant should seek the intervention of a member of Parliament to obtain an increase of salary, that would be a proper cause of dismissal. I almost wish we had enforced that rule under the present Administration, because I think there is a good deal to be said in favour of it. When a civil servant seeks the intervention of a member of Parliament to secure an increase of salary, I think it may be taken as a pretty fair evidence that he is not willing to stand on his merits; and Sir Leonard Tilley showed considerable wisdom in adopting that rule. At all events, if that is an exhibition of tyranny, it is something of which we on this side of the House have not been guilty, and the hon. gentleman, who has exhibited so much sympathy for the civil service on this occasion, must charge it to the account of his own friends. I agree with all that has been said as to the desirability of having an efficient civil service. I have been long enough in public life to know how much members of Government must depend upon the efficiency of the civil service. Both in England and in this country things have frequently happened for which a large share of the credit was due to some deputy or clerk who received very little recognition. I fully recognize the desirability of having an efficient civil service in Canada—a service free from politics. While it is right and proper that a man may seek admission to the service for work which he has done for his political party, the very moment he enters it he should recognize that he is no longer the servant of that party, but the servant of the state, the servant of both parties. I have known many such men in the provincial service, and I testify with great satisfaction that gentlemen who were appointed by my predecessors showed that they had that correct understanding of their duties; and I can say the same in reference to many in the civil service of the Dominion. I do not believe the civil service are so much alarmed as my hon. friend says in regard to the present condition of the law. I believe they realize that the Government are dealing with them on sound principles. What, after all, is the difference between us? The practice under hon. gentlemen opposite has been that if twenty clerks were eligible for an increase, the whole twenty were recommended. There was no discrimination between those who were deserving and those who were not; the thing worked automatically; it was a purely mechanical arrangement. But we say that there is a measure of discretion for which the responsibility must rest on the Minister, and the Governor in Council. There is a possibility that one Minister will use that discretion according to a different rule from another Minister, the two not thinking absolutely alike. This is a difficulty which might be overcome by some uniform system. But I do not agree with the hon. gentleman that there is any material difference in regard to the interpretation of the law. He says he knows eminent legal gentlemen who take a different view from ours. He has not given the names of those gentlemen, and I have no right to ask him for them. I am bound to accept his statement; but I want to tell him that we are interpreting the law exactly as it was interpreted by the late Government for a series of years, and I have the evidence of that under my hand. This very point as to whether the law was mandatory, or whether it allowed discretion to the Minister and the Governor in Council, was threshed out last session, and in the course of that discussion, after some gentlemen had asserted that there was no discretion to the Minister, but that the increase was a matter of obligation, the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) spoke as follows:—

There is no doubt about the law in the matter. The law upon the matter is, as stated by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, that it is not at all obligatory upon the Government to grant these statutory increases each year. The law is merely an empowering Act which enables the Government, upon the report of the deputy head of a department, and upon the certificate of the head of the department, to grant the statutory increase. We have had opinions again and again that the Act is an empowering one. I differ entirely from my hon. friend from Bruce (Mr. McNeill) in reference to the matter; it is not obligatory at all. I had an opportunity when I was at the head of a department, of getting the opinion of the Minister of Justice and others in reference to this matter, and I must say, in justice to the present Government, that the opinion then obtained was precisely the same as that stated by the leader of the House.

Mr. COCHRANE. I agree, to a certain extent, with the contention of the Finance Minister, and also with the ex-Minister of Railways. As I understand the question, it is this: the law is that upon the recommendation of the Deputy Minister the increase shall be given.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. May be given.

Mr. COCHRANE. Then, what have we before us to-day? The trouble, to my mind, is this, that the Deputy Minister may recommend, and if the Minister does not see fit, he does not grant the increase. The Minister of Finance told the committee, if I understood him aright, that the Minister of Public Works had a consultation with his deputy; and it amounted to this, that the Minister recommended to his deputy the men he wanted recommended to get the increase. It amounts to a political machine. The Minister of Public Works told his deputy what persons to recommend, and these persons got the increase. That is the condition of things in the civil service to-day. I am not here to sympathize with the civil servants or to plead that they were induced to go into the service, because, no doubt, plenty would be willing to take their places, if they would leave, but I say that, when men join the service on the understanding that if they faithfully perform their duties, they shall be given the statutory increase, that condition of the contract should be carried out in all cases, and not only in some specially favoured ones. I think myself that a young man of ability is a fool to go into the service at $400, if there is to be no promotion, and I am confident that many would not have gone in, were it not for that provision in the law entitling them to the statutory increase, if they do their work faithfully. Is it not disgraceful that we should find men brought into the service and put over the heads of men who have been in it for years, and who must be more competent to do the work, if they have any brains at all? Men who have been working for years at salaries ranging from $400 to $700, find a man brought in from outside and appointed over their heads at $800. One can easily conceive the sense of humiliation which these men, who have been doing their work for years faithfully, should feel at thus being passed over. There ought to be some final interpretation given to this Civil Service Act. It is only right that those gentlemen in the service should know really where they stand. They should know whether they are to get the increase on the recommendation of the Deputy Minister, that they have faithfully done their work, or whether that recommendation must be submitted to the political head of the department and their right to the increase set aside at the whim of the Minister, despite the recommendation of the deputy. We should have the opinion of the Minister of Justice put on the Table. We have heard it stated that his opinion was put on the Table, but again we find the Minister of Finance saying that he is not sure whether that opinion was given in writing or not. If it was not given in writing, it could not be on the Table. We ought to have that opinion, and we ought to have an authoritative decision on the matter.

Mr. McNEILL. I just wish to say to my hon. friend the Minister of Finance that I do not think the quotation he has given from the remarks of the former Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) at all advances the argument. We do not deny that there is a discretion. If the civil servant has not discharged his duties efficiently, we do not say that he has any right to a statutory increase. But we say that those who do discharge their duties efficiently, and who are recommended—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Who is to be judge?

Mr. McNEILL. The Deputy Minister.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is not what the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) said.

Mr. McNEILL. I do not think he said, if the Deputy Minister recommended, the Minister was free not to act.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. McNEILL. If he did, it only makes it the more necessary that we should have the matter decided. I want to call attention to the fact that my hon. friend's colleague, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) when this measure was going through the House, distinctly said that, in his judgment, a civil servant would be entitled to the statutory increase, when recommended by the Deputy Minister.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. What measure?

Mr. McNEILL. The quotation was made by my hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), and there can be no doubt that the hon. gentleman expressed that opinion. The hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) expressed the same opinion, and I suppose my hon. friend would have some regard for the opinion of probably the greatest lawyer who ever sat in this House, the Hon. Ed.

ward Blake, who said that the increases would proceed automatically, provided the Deputy Minister recommended them, under this Act. If the hon. Minister of Finance has any doubt as to whether there was a great body of legal opinion in favour of the view that these gentlemen are entitled to the statutory increase, if they efficiently perform their duties, I think surely the opinion of his colleagues and of the Hon. Edward Blake ought to satisfy him. What is it we ask? Simply that this matter shall be decided, so that the civil servant may know whether or not, under the law, they are entitled to this statutory increase. That is all we are asking. We ask the Government to have the matter decided by a competent authority, and not to decide that they alone know. My hon. friend said that he had an opinion from the Minister of Justice, and that he knows what that opinion was, yet he does not know whether it was a verbal or a written opinion.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is very probable. It was given two or three years ago.

Mr. McNEILL. If it was, the hon. gentleman must know very well that it is exceedingly difficult to carry in his mind for two or three years exactly what that opinion amounted to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I know what the opinion was, because it has been acted on.

Mr. McNEILL. We agree on this side that it is discretionary, but how far is it discretionary? How far did Sir Oliver Mowat say it was discretionary? But suppose my hon. friend is correct, and Sir Oliver Mowat did, as Minister of Justice, give that opinion, I say we ought to have this matter settled in the courts, and we ask the Government to be good enough to have it so decided.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). I think I caught the name of Costigan as one of the gentlemen who got the increase.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). Is he a relative of Mr. Costigan, a member of this House?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My deputy tells me that he is a nephew. That gentleman gets an increase of $100 from $450 to $550, but there is nothing in this vote to authorize it, and, therefore, the usual words will have to be inserted. In the other cases the increases are $50 each.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend said that the statutory increases were recommended holus bolus, and that the Minister then selected the most deserving. But what is very strange is, that these increases always fall on the same side. In the last three years I know of clerks in the service who have always been recommended by the deputy head as having faithfully discharged their work, and yet who have never had an increase since 1896, whereas others, who have since come into the service, have got their increases every year. This shows that it is not altogether a matter of accident, but that it is done with a purpose, and it is just to avoid this favouritism and injustice that, I repeat, we ought to have the question decided by the courts.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I cannot contradict my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) in relation to other departments, not having the necessary information. But in my own department, there is not one officer who is eligible who has not received the increase one year or the other. As to what has been said of an officer being brought into my department and placed over the heads of others, there is no such case. The gentleman brought in was not placed over the heads of others. In every case the officers who were there were receiving higher salaries than the newcomer, and no officer had any ground for complaint. So far as my own department is concerned, the hon. gentlemen's criticism is not deserved.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. gentleman is acting Minister of Public Works. I would not say the same about the hon. gentleman's department that I would about others, as I believe the conditions are not the same as in others.

Mr. DAVIN. I do not intend to go into this matter fully, because I expressed my views last year. But I wish to point out one feature in the estimates of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), and of the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock). This year, we find the salary of nearly every officer in the department increased. The view of the Act taken by the Government facilitates this thing. The Ministers say: We will not give these civil servants the promotion they had the right to look forward to, the prospect of which is held out to them by the Act and the traditions that have obtained in the service, the promotion that is sanctioned by a common sense, horse sense—but, next year, when we are coming near a general election and when we shall have to look to these people's vote as well as to others, we will give them the increase. That is the only construction I can put on the action of some of the departments, especially that of the Postmaster General. Why, the change in the Postmaster General is phenomenal. It is hard to recognize him. He appeared in previous sessions as a taskmaster and slave driver; but this session he is as mild as milk and full of consideration for all the officers in his department. Now, Mr. Chairman, one of the things that must awe the minds of every man interested in the future of our country is the growth of corruption. The one dark cloud upon our horizon at present, in the midst of our prosperity, is corruption. And could any form of corruption be more insidious, could any form of corruption be more calculated to demoralize and degrade than that which would use the salaries paid to civil servants to secure their vote? Could anything be worse than to say to the civil servant: On the eve of a general election we will promote you, and if you do right in the election we will promote you! When these accretions of salary occurred mechanically, when these civil servants got their increases from year to year, they could be independent. If they did their duty, they could go to and from their work with easy minds, they could walk the earth like men. But now that the statutory increase is given only as a matter of caprice, it is capable of being made one of the most efficient wheels in the great threshing machine upon which hon. gentlemen opposite rely. Mr. Chairman (Mr. Ellis) I know well, because I have read your writing, that there is no man in Canada who is more sensible than you are of the importance of purity of election. And you know, Sir, that no more deadly blow could be dealt to a country than to strike at its liberty in the franchise. And yet, within the last three or four years, we have not been able to turn up a stone in the Government garden without finding the worms of corruption wriggling underneath. Their treatment of the civil service is a case in point. Why is it that this year in every department we see a departure from sound principles? Is it not because a general election cannot be far off, and this is an attempt to make the very departments where our Government business is carried on a part of this threshing machine system which, if it continues can only result in the demoralization of the country? I wish to put my protest upon record against this system of promotion by caprice, because it really makes it possible that the Government of the country may become accessory to this system which has alarmed public-spirited men!

Mr. PRIOR. While we are on this question of the promotion of civil servants, I would like to ask the Finance Minister if he can inform us who is the chief engineer of the Public Works Department, and whether anybody has been appointed to succeed Mr. Coste?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No formal appointment has been made, but Mr. Lafleur, who is the next in order, has been acting as chief engineer.

Mr. PRIOR. Is it the intention of the Government to appoint Mr. Lafleur to the position? It must be bad for a department like that to be without some gentleman in full charge of such important work.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Mr. Lafleur, I have reason to believe, is a very competent officer and is performing the duties of the office well. But I should prefer that the Minister at the head of the department should decide the question of the appointment, and I could not undertake to answer the hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior) on that point just now.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). I must protest against the statement made by my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) that there is such a reign of terror in our departments that none of our officers would dare to ask for an increase of salary for fear of dismissal. I have repeatedly had requests from officers in my department to obtain an increase of salary, and it never entered my mind for a moment to treat them with any harshness. In many cases I could not help acknowledging that I would have been very glad if I could give them an increase. But however impatient I may have felt sometimes at the persistency with which they asked for an increase, there is not a single case in which it ever entered my mind to dismiss a civil servant for making that request when he conscientiously believed he was entitled to it. I feel perfectly certain that every one of my colleagues in the Government has had the same experience. I would be very sorry if the public at large should get the impression that the civil service is at present under a regime so cruel as that.

Mr. BERGERON. Although my hon. friend is looked upon as the most humane of all the Ministers, he has not even heard what we have heard ourselves.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I beg my hon. friend's pardon. I do not claim to be better than my colleagues. I feel very certain they have all the same feeling of sympathy that I have with the officers in their departments.

Sundries .....	5,500

Total .....	$10,000
-------------	----------

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is an increase in sundries of $2,300. It will be remembered that the practice in former years was to charge telegrams in connection with the construction of public works to each particular work, thus distributing them over the works generally. The Auditor General took exception to that, although it was a long-established practice, and thought it better that the telegrams should be charged to one special vote. Therefore, in order to comply with the Auditor General's desire in the matter, which I think is not an unreasonable one, we asked for a larger vote for telegrams.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that the only reason for the increase?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, that substantially covers the whole increase.

There is an increase of $1,700 for printing and stationery. That is due to the general increase of the work in the department, which requires additional printing.

Mr. BERGERON. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that the increase of $2,300 in sundries is due entirely to this new way of charging telegrams?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The deputy informs me it is due entirely to the telegraph bill.

Mr. BERGERON. What will the hon. gentleman do with the other $3,200 which was the amount voted last year?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There are telegraphic accounts generally for the department, and there is a certain large telegraphic account which was distributed over the various public works throughout the country. That portion is now added to the special telegraphic account.

Mr. BERGERON. From which item will that former sum be struck off?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is nothing struck off. It would go in reduction of the various public works. Where a wharf or repair was being constructed, the item for telegrams was charged to that particular work. It will no longer be charged to that particular work, but will go to the special account for telegrams.

Mr. DAVIN. We ought to have more particulars for so large an increase. Does the present Minister of Public Works resort to telegraphic communication where his predecessors wrote letters?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not know that he is doing so, but even if he did, I should not consider it was a crime. In these days we use the telegraph more than we used to. The progress of the age is such that much work is being done by the telegraph to-day which a few years ago was done by correspondence. But I do not know that that is the case between the present Minister and his predecessor. This is due entirely to the fact, I am advised, that these charges were made to the various public works of the country, and the Auditor General thinks they should be shown in the contingencies department and not be distributed over the public works.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). Will any reduction be made in the other votes for telegrams?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, because it would be so trifling a sum in each one.

Mr. DAVIN. Was this change made in consequence of what the Auditor General wrote to the Secretary of Public Works on 7th March, 1898, page 255 of his report:

Sir,—Let me call your attention to the payments for telegraphing for the Public Works Department at Ottawa, since July 1, 1897, charged to votes other than "Civil Government Contingencies":

Mr. FIELDING.

Canadian Pacific Railway Co.'s Telegraph—
July—Dredging, generally.....	$132 32
August—Harbours and rivers, generally.	117 74
September—Repairs to buildings, Manitoba .....	118 46
November—Harbours, &c., Ontario generally .....	152 99
December—Repairs to buildings, N.W.T.	104 66
Great North-western Telegraph Company—
July—Dredging, generally.....	$247 86
August—Harbours and rivers, generally.	205 62
September—Repairs to buildings, British Columbia .....	160 98
November—Harbours, &c., Ontario generally .....	153 02
December—Repairs to buildings, British Columbia .....	92 01

We shall need for the above-mentioned accounts, information similar to that provided by other departments for all but Ministerial telegrams, that is, the names of the senders and receivers, and the cost of each telegram. This information was supplied by you for the October telegrams, which were paid by the Accountant of Contingencies, and charged to Civil Government—being the only month yet charged to that vote in 1897-98. A request for similar information was made in my letter of June 15, 1891 (see Report for year 1890-91, page C-332), but it has never yet been furnished.

It is not proper to charge all the telegrams in a month to some one outside vote.

Well, now, what I should like to know is this: Has this increase any relation to that letter of the Auditor General?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Auditor General did ask for information in that letter, and personally also in communication with the department. The information which my hon. friend refers to, I am advised, was afterwards given to the Auditor General. As to the charges being concealed in this way, I am advised that is the way they were charged for during a very long time, and the Auditor General called attention to what he regarded as an improper practice, and suggested a change, and that change has now been adopted.

Mr. BERGERON. It seems to me that there were some irregular charges made. I see that $250 has been charged by the Great North-western Telegraph Company in British Columbia for telegrams, when they had no office there, and the Auditor General remarks that that sum of money has been spent there. We do not know whether those amounts have been properly expended or not.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am advised that the Great North-western Company operates in connection with the Western Union there.

Mr. BERGERON. I will read what the Auditor General says in his report:

For instance, the September and December payments of $160.98 and $92.01 to the Great North-western Telegraph Company: Instead of paying these from the vote for "Repairs to British Columbia Buildings," (while the G. N. W. Co. has no offices in British Columbia, as appears from their printed list, and all British Columbia services were probably performed by the C.P.R. Co.) any telegrams concerning, say, "Toronto Harbour," should have been charged to that vote, and similarly for other works.

Please see that all telegraph accounts since July 1, 1897, are thus distributed, or charged to Civil Government Contingencies.

I have no objection to taking these amounts from one vote and another for different public works throughout the country to which they are improperly charged, so that the country does know how much is actually spent in this way.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If you take time to distribute them over the various sums, you will find that they are small amounts in each case.

Harbours and Rivers, Quebec—

River St. Lawrence ship channel..... $354,000

Mr. BERGERON. This requires a good deal of explanation.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This vote of $354,000 is required to cover expenses of management and the working expenses and maintenance of the dredging plant operating in the ship channel between Montreal and Quebec, as well as for the completion of two new steel elevator dredges now under construction, two new tugs to be built of wood, two new hopper scows, one stone-lifter, viz. :—

Completion of two new steel elevator dredges, now under construction (total estimated cost of each dredge, $110,000) .....	50,000
Two new tugs to be built of wood, with new boilers and compound engines similar to tug "Emilia" (to be used in ship channel).....	25,000
One new stone-lifter, to be built of British Columbia fir (to be used in ship channel) .....	12,000
One set new cast steel buckets and links for steel elevator "No. 3," now under construction .....	12,000

	<hr/>
Total grant required for 1899-1900..	$354,000

Mr. BERGERON. Where are these elevator dredges made?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. At the establishment at Sorel.

Mr. BERGERON. I understand the department has acquired some property at Sorel.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No property has been purchased at Sorel. There is a property under lease with an option of purchase.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the amount of rent per year?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. $1,200.

Mr. BERGERON. From whom is the property leased?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. From the McCarthy estate.

Mr. BERGERON. What are the dimensions of the property leased?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. About eight acres.

Mr. BERGERON. Have the Government built any works or buildings on it?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. A new building has been erected there, containing machinery, at a cost of $14,000. The centre building is for machinery, and the other buildings have been repaired.

Mr. BERGERON. What machinery have you?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Machinery for making boilers and ironwork in connection with the construction of these vessels.

Mr. BERGERON. Are these buildings placed there permanently?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The machinery building is permanent.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the policy of the Government since they have not purchased the property, but have an option to buy and a lease at $1,200 a year?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It would be difficult to answer my hon. friend on that point. The hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) has had some negotiations. The purchase has not been concluded, and the property is under option. I cannot give the hon. gentleman definite information at this moment.

Mr. BERGERON. I understand the position of the hon. Minister, but it is very unsatisfactory to the committee. If the hon. Minister of Public Works is not here, it seems to me that he should have left an answer to everything we might ask with the deputy head of the department.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I quite admit that it is unfortunate that the Minister of Public Works is absent, because the committee has a right to very much more information upon these points than I can give them. But if, on any of these points, any hon. member wishes any additional information, if he will kindly put the question, if I am able to obtain it, I will do so before the Estimates are through or before the item passes.

Mr. DAVIN. I understand my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) will bring the information.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. There are some answers that the hon. Minister can obtain from the Deputy Minister. Out of this $354,000, how much will go towards payment, not only of the lease, but towards the building which has been put there and the machinery which has been put into this building, how much towards the dredges and scows which are being built there, and how much upon the actual deepening of the channel?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The items which I have read contain no reference to the building; they are entirely for the construction of the plant and operation of the dredges. The first item of $100,000 is for the working expenses of the dredges and the remainder is for the construction of the plant.

Mr. BERGERON. How much?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. $254,000 would be for construction and $100,000 for operating expenses.

Mr. BERGERON. Out of $354,000, two-thirds are for construction and about $100,000 would be for the deepening of the channel.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman could not deepen the channel if he did not construct the machines to do the work with.

Mr. BERGERON. But these machines have been constructed for the last twenty years.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. But they are all the time improving them.

Mr. BERGERON. There are so many dredges in the river that you can scarcely pass through the stream. How long is the lease for on the property at Sorel?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will give the hon. gentleman that information later on.

Mr. BERGERON. What I want to know is this: The Government have leased this property at Sorel for $1,200. I do not know how many years they have the option for, but in the meantime they have gone on and built a large permanent building and put in some very heavy machinery. The Government are taking the credit in that part of the country for having all the scows and dredges in the whole Dominion built in Sorel, and they are making that a great cry with a view of carrying the next elections. We find now that out of this vote for $354,000, over $200,000 will be spent on the plant, and that is done by day's labour without tender and without contract. Five hundred or six hundred men are employed by the Government there, and we have no one in this Parliament to tell us, no means of finding out whether we are paying one cent too much or one cent too little, or whether we may not be robbed right and left. I leave it to the Parliament of Canada and to the country, to say whether such a system should be continued. I believe that nothing that has been done by any previous Government of Canada is so reprehensible as this. Does not the Minister of Finance himself see that this is a most extraordinary way of doing business. We are asked for $354,000 for deepening the St. Lawrence ship channel, and if the Minister of Public Works is making a speech in Paris to-morrow, he will no doubt say that the Government are spending all this money to secure 28 feet of water for bringing European commerce here, when as a matter of fact, three-fourths of that sum is spent on plant by day's work, costing probably twice as much as by contract, and only $100,000 is spent on the ship channel. It is a most unfortunate thing that the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), who is primarily responsible for all this, is not in his place to give us information as to how this money is being expended. The Minister of Finance and his colleagues must know it is wrong, and yet they dare not say so. A few days ago I asked the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) where he was having his scows made, and although he did not answer me then, I have no doubt that this same Government, expending the same money of the people, are having their scows for the Railway Department built in the United States. The Minister of Railways is fond of dealing with the Americans, and the Minister of Public Works deals at Sorel, and is spending bushels of money there without the control of Parliament. The law requires that every expenditure over $5,000 should be made by contract, but here the Minister of Public Works is spending hundreds of thousands of dollars without contract.

Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. HAGGART. The Auditor General should not allow them to.

Mr. BERGERON. The Minister of Finance told us that they were having some scows built at British Columbia. British Columbia is 3,000 miles away from Sorel, and how is the Government going to explain including both of these in the same vote?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The only reference I made to British Columbia was to say that these scows being built at Sorel, are in several instances constructed of British Columbia fir.

Mr. BERGERON. Who was that British Columbia fir bought from ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am informed that the quotations are obtained from agents for the sale of this wood at Montreal, and of course it has to be brought from British Columbia.

Mr. BERGERON. Then I wish to get the names of those who sold that timber, what it originally cost, the charges of transportation, the quantities and the price laid down at Sorel.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will take a note of that and get the information.

Mr. DAVIN. Will the Minister say how this work is being done at Sorel ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is rather difficult, I am afraid, to please my hon. friends opposite. They complained a few days ago at the Minister of Railways having some work done out of the country, and now they complain because the Minister of Public Works is having some work done in the country by day's labour and by Canadians.

Mr. BENNETT. Not at all. We are complaining that the work is not being done by tender and contract.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. You cannot get a tender on day's work. I take it for granted that the Canadian Pacific Railway, having large machine shops, are doing their work there by day's labour.

Mr. BENNETT. What we are complaining of here is : That you are spending this money by day's labour for building new machinery, and not for repairing old machinery.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Quite so. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) contends that it would be better to do it by contract than by day's labour in the Government workshops, it is a fair subject for contention, and in the absence of technical knowledge I cannot offer an opinion on it. It has been the practice of the Government of Canada for a great many years to have workshops at Sorel where work of this character is done, and I am informed that it is done under the supervision of Mr. Howden who was there under the late Government.

Mr. BERGERON. He is not in charge of the shops.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am advised by officers of the department that Mr. Howden is in charge of the shops.

Mr. BERGERON. Is he an engineer ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am informed that he is a mechanical engineer and has the general supervision of the shops at Sorel.

Mr. HAGGART. They are repair shops at Sorel and if you vote money for repairing, of course the work of repairing could be done there by day's labour. But here you are voting money for new work and the law is imperative that when the expenditure is over $5,000 it should be done by contract and tender. The Prime Minister gets out of the difficulty by saying that the Governor in Council may override the law by assigning sufficient reasons. But where is the Order in Council justifying this expenditure ? How is it that the Auditor General pays these sums contrary to law ? My contention is that urgency is the only reason for making such an expenditure without contract, such urgency as where a canal bank breaks and it has to be repaired immediately. Here is an expenditure of $354,000 and we have not even the farce of an Order in Council being brought down to justify it. Three years ago the Minister of Public Works stated that the deepening of this channel was about completed, that there would be no further use for repair shops at Sorel and that the Government would have this sum of money at their disposal for doing work in other parts of the country where these dredges could be used. Now, we have $254,000 for dredges and $100,000 for day's labour, nearly double the amount that was expended last year. The House is entitled to the Order in Council which overrides the law in connection with this expenditure. We want to know how much material, both of earth and rock, is to be dredged to make the St. Lawrence navigable up to the standard required by the Government. I see that the dredge is wanted to deepen Lake St. Peter. Has the Government taken over the dredging of Lake St. Peter from the Harbour Commission of Montreal ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I understand that the dredging was taken over in 1889.

Mr. HAGGART. That is what I understood too. Is there a report from the department as to the necessity of these dredges ? We want to have all this information, so as to be able to judge whether the work is being done by day's labour as economically as it would be under contract.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The only answer I can give to my hon. friend is a general one, that he may trust the Auditor General not to permit this to be done if it is contrary to the law.

Mr. COCHRANE. You override the decision of the Auditor General.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not think my hon. friend can give an instance of that. At any rate, he will find that this is carried out according to law.

Mr. HAGGART. Has he an Order in Council for it ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The deputy says that he has not ; but you may safely leave it to the Auditor General to see that the law is rigidly carried out.

Mr. DAVIN. The Order in Council, dated March 20th, 1880, says :

On a joint memorandum, dated March 20, 1880, from the hon. the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Railways and Canals, recommending that hereafter all public works involving an expenditure of over $5,000 shall be let by public tender and contract, unless owing to urgency or other cause it be deemed advisable to take different action, and that in all such cases authority be obtained by an Order in Council.

If there is no Order in Council, how does the department get over that ? I do not see how the Minister can ask us to vote such a large sum as this without some explanation as to how the work is done. It is perfectly clear that the law in this matter is being systematically violated. That is confessed. Then, how is the work done ? Is it done in a manner that this Parliament can approve of ?

Mr. COCHRANE. I want to draw the attention of the Minister of Finance to one instance in which the Treasury Board overrode the decision of the Auditor General ; that was in connection with money that was voted for immigration being applied to the Lake St. John Railway.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There are cases.

Mr. COCHRANE. In that case the money was voted for one purpose, and applied to another. Now, in reference to this item, I think there is a deception practised on the people of this country. Here we have the sum of $354,000 voted for the River St. Lawrence ship channel, and when we come to get the explanation from the Finance Minister we find that only $100,000 is to be used for deepening that channel, and that part of the $254,000 is to pay rental for a piece of property. The balance to build scows and dredges. To my mind it is the most absurd proposition that has ever been submitted to this committee. Instead of buying scows and dredges by contract, the department sees fit to turn the Government shops, which are for repairing purposes, into establishments for the manufacture of dredges and other things that they want. I believe that the Minister in his heart knows that there is a fraud being perpetrated on the people of Canada by the construction of these dredges in that shop. I am sorry that the Minister of Finance is put in the humiliating position of having to answer for such a job. It would be impossible for me or any other man in this committee to give an intelligent answer to the electors when they ask where that money has gone.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I quite appreciate the difficulty in which the hon. Minister is placed. We all regret very much the absence of the Minister of Public Works, and we know how difficult it is for a person, especially with the duties that devolve on the Minister of Finance during the session, to take charge of a department like the Department of Public Works, and at once master all the details. But this is a very large sum and the subject is a very important one, and I would suggest to the Minister of Finance to let this item stand over until he obtains the fullest particulars that he can as to the whole situation, and take it up at the next sitting.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If there is any particular information required, I shall quite assent to that, for the House is entitled to the fullest information. I think, however, that hon. gentlemen opposite are interpreting the Order in Council which was quoted by the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) in a way in which it has not been interpreted hitherto by the Auditor General. I presume that that Order in Council means that you cannot make an arrangement by contract except according to its terms. But that does not apply to work done by day's labour. I am informed that day labour has been employed in the Sorel workshops for many years.

Mr. BERGERON. For repairs, not for building.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. As a matter of principle, so far as the Order in Council is concerned, there is no distinction between day labour for repairs and day labour for anything else. The Order in Council was to prevent the making of a private contract for an amount in excess of $5,000 ; but day labour is not a matter of contract. As to the statement that there is a fraud in this, I think my hon. friend from East Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane) will on reflection see that he has been hasty. There is nothing in this transaction that is not creditable to the head of the Department of Public Works. He has, no doubt, come to the conclusion that these vessels and tugs could be constructed at these shops by day labour more advantageously than by contract. That is a fair matter for difference of opinion ; but because the Minister has so decided, it does not follow that there has been extravagance or wastefulness, much less fraud. Hon. gentlemen must remember that the navigation of the St. Lawrence is a matter of great public importance to the Dominion, as well as to the city of Montreal or the city of Sorel. The hon. gentleman must be aware that there have been difficulties in the navigation of the channel. Ships are all the time growing bigger, and the channel is not growing in proportion. We have had the navigation of the St. Lawrence attacked during the last few months, and the rates of insurance growing up. Because some vessels touched ground, the rates of insurance have advanced to a point which is the subject of strong protest from the commercial bodies of Montreal and Quebec. There must be a large increasing expenditure on the dredging of the St. Lawrence and in keeping open this channel. If the expenditure is larger than before, it is because the needs of dredging are greater than before. You cannot dredge the channel without dredging material, and the construction of sufficient plant for the purpose is a proper charge against the dredging. Hon. gentlemen are not right in saying that this is not just as much a charge for dredging as any other money spent on that work, unless they show that the material was not necessary for the dredging of the river. I do not think that any one would seriously pretend that there is ample equipment for the dredging of the river beyond the requirements of the growing trade of the St. Lawrence. In the lower provinces we constantly have complaints that we are not doing enough dredging, and we have to reply that there is no use in our asking for additional votes, because we have only two or three dredges at our command. If that is true in the lower provinces, no doubt also the St. Lawrence, with its growing needs, requires an increased sum for dredging. This increase, therefore, is justified by the great needs of the service. If hon. gentlemen opposite desire information on any particular point, I shall be most happy to see that it is brought down.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman is altogether mistaken in dealing with this vote as if there was any objection to the appropriation of a sufficient sum for the efficient dredging of the St. Lawrence. There is no difference of opinion on that subject, and no want of readiness to do everything shown to be absolutely necessary to provide proper facilities for the trade of Montreal. But the question we are bringing up is altogether different. An Order in Council was passed in 1880, declaring that, except in cases of urgency, all public work must be done by public tender and contract. Is my hon. friend able to show that since then a dredge was ever built in Canada by day's work? If not, I would recommend him to let the item stand and get full information as to how the various apportionments of this very large sum, between $300,000 and $400,000, are to be expended, and what is actually going on in connection with it. The committee would altogether fail in its duty, if it were to allow a sum of that magnitude to pass obviously in violation of the plain decision at which Parliament has arrived, and my hon. friend is making a mistake in pressing this item through under the circumstances. We want a complete statement in detail with reference to that large sum for dredging the St. Lawrence.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend has asked me whether it can be shown that since the passing of the Order in Council of 1880 any dredge has been undertaken to be built by day's labour. Yes, the late Government did commence to build a dredge by day's labour in the works at Sorel, and the dredge was unfinished when the change of Government took place.

Mr. HAGGART. Was there not a specific vote for that specific purpose?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am informed that it was built just as this one, out of the funds voted for the ship channel. Therefore, in this matter we are following precisely the practice established by the late Government.

Mr. BERGERON. What was the name of the dredge?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The dredge was begun by the late Government, and when the change of Government occurred, it was named the "Laurier." It never would be suspected that a dredge so named was begun by the late Government, but I understand that the hull was constructed before the change of Government.

Mr. DAVIN. Whoever told the hon. gentleman that we interpreted the Order in Council improperly, has, I think, failed to advise him correctly. If he will look at the Order in Council, he will see that what he has been advised as to its interpretation is quite wrong. The Order in Council states:

We recommend that hereafter all public works involving expenditure of over $5,000 shall be made by public tender and contract.

My hon. friend says he is informed that that Order in Council does not apply to works of this kind.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am informed that it has not been so interpreted.

Mr. DAVIN. I would like very much, if he, or whoever advised him, would give their reasons for interpreting the Order in Council that way.

Mr. BERGERON. To show the hon. gentleman how important it would be to allow that item to stand until he gets all the information, I want to put him some questions which he may answer later on. Where were the dredges made before 1896, and how were they made?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They were bought by the Harbour Commission and transferred to the Government.

Mr. BERGERON. How many dredges were there working in the channel before 1896?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Five.

Mr. BERGERON. What were their names?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They were numbered—6, 9, 8, 11, 12.

Mr. BERGERON. How many men were working in the Sorel shops before 1896 ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There were 470 at one time. At present there are 250.

Mr. BERGERON. What were the wages paid before ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. -The same as now.

Mr. BERGERON. I mean the amounts.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That would be according to the number of men employed.

Mr. BERGERON. For how long were the 470 men at work ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. About three months last winter.

Mr. BERGERON. Was it during last winter ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. When was the appropriation voted ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. As part of the general vote last year.

Mr. BERGERON. How much is generally done in a year in deepening that channel between Montreal and Quebec ? How much was done in 1896 and how much is done now ? I would like to have the number of dredges employed and the number of cubic yards taken out.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I can give from the report of the Minister what was done last year, but the comparison with 1897 cannot be made off-hand. The report shows that a total of 625,448 yards of material was taken out, the average per day per dredge being 810 yards.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) understands that I wish to be able to make a comparison between 1896 when we have these five dredges and to-day when we have the new plant.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I can obtain a statement for my hon. friend. It will be merely collecting facts that have appeared in the report and are before the country, still, I will have one of the officers collect it.

Mr. BERGERON. How many dredges will be working this summer on this channel ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Four.

Mr. BERGERON. That is less than before 1896.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The other dredges are old ones and have been replaced.

Mr. BERGERON. Which ones have been replaced ?

Mr. FIELDING.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Nos. 6, 7, 9 and 11 have been retired.

Mr. BERGERON. Where are they now ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They are dismantled.

Mr. BERGERON. How long were they in use ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. About twenty-five years.

Mr. BERGERON. How many new ones are being built now ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They have four at work, and two are being built, and it is proposed to build two others which will replace two of the older ones.

Mr. BERGERON. How much per day is spent on the whole work ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I could not answer that question off-hand. I am told that this appropriation of $100,000 is not out of proportion to the former grant.

Mr. BERGERON. It would be more satisfactory to have the information as to how much the work is costing per day. My hon. friend will understand that we are as much interested in having the channel deepened between Quebec and Montreal as he or the Government are, and we wish to help him to have as much work done as possible during the season.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The engineer tells me that each dredge costs from $100 to $125 per day for working expenses, including the crew, fuel, oil, &c.

Mr. BERGERON. How much work does the dredge do in cubic yards ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In average material, about 3,000 yards in ten hours.

Mr. HAGGART. If I understood the Minister aright, the average work last year was 810 yards.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is correct ; some of the dredges worked to some extent in boulders. Still, they are capable in softer material of removing 3,000 yards.

Mr. BERGERON. Where is the machinery that was taken out of the old dredges ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is being used in the new dredges.

Mr. BERGERON. And where is the machinery required for other dredges now under construction obtained ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No contracts have been awarded for new machinery.

Mr. COCHRANE. Have they called for tenders ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No.

Mr. COCHRANE. Do they intend to call for them?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will leave that to my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) when he returns.

Mr. BERGERON. Well, how about the two new dredges built last year?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There were not two dredges built last year; two are under construction, and it is contemplated to build two more.

Mr. BERGERON. Where was material bought for the two that are under construction?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Quotations were obtained from several firms, including Lewis Bros. & Co., J. W. Wurtele & Co., Cavanagh & Co., and J. M. Pyke.

Mr. BERGERON. From whom was it obtained?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Partly from J. W. Wurtele & Co. and partly from Cavanagh & Co.

Mr. BERGERON. What amount was obtained from Wurtele & Co.?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. About $20,000 from each.

Mr. BERGERON. Is this Wurtele in the steel business?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He is a commission agent for goods of that class.

Mr. BERGERON. What were the prices of the four tenderers?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have not got the figures with me, but I will bring them down for the hon. gentleman. In every instance where the hon. gentleman has asked for specific information, I feel it my duty to bring down that information.

Mr. HAGGART. You remember I asked for the quantities to complete the navigation of the St. Lawrence. I want to know what it has cost per yard for excavation, both of earth and of rock, and when it is to be completed. I want to know what is the difference between the required prism of the river now, and what it was when the department took hold of it four years ago.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think my hon. friend will find most of that information in the report of the Minister, which is now in his hands. But I will bring down anything additional that he requires.

Mr. HAGGART. The quantities are not here.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am advised that it is set out in full in the report of the Minister, at page 138. There are elaborate tables.

Mr. BERGERON. Where are the dredges working now?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Two at Varennes, one at Cap Santé, and one at Quebec.

Mr. BERGERON. How long will it take to complete the work, and what will be the cost?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. To give a 29-foot channel, which is the least that the present shipping requires, it will take these dredges three years, working night and day, at a cost of between $100 and $125 per day each. They will work about seven months in the season.

Mr. BERGERON. When were the tenders asked for the steel which went into the construction of these dredges?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In the spring of 1898.

Mr. BERGERON. When was the material bought, and when was the money paid to Mr. Wurtele?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Payments were made a year ago, in the month of June and July, partly out of the old year and partly out of the new.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that a son of Judge Wurtele, of Montreal?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes. One other point. The hon. gentleman asked me as to the practice of doing work by day labour notwithstanding this Order in Council. I am informed that the post office in the city of St. John, after the fire, was rebuilt by day's labour at a cost of $170,000. The whole thing was burnt, there was little or nothing left to repair, it was practically a new building.

Mr. HAGGART. Still, there is an Order in Council for the building of it in that way. You need an Order in Council for this expenditure, and I doubt very much if there is one.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We will get it for my hon. friend, if there is one.

Mr. HAGGART. But we do not know even yet that there is one. As to the building of that dredge down there, if I remember rightly, the statement was made to the House when the dredge was to be built, and when the money was voted for building it at Sorel. I think I will be able to get the particulars after dinner. If I remember rightly, Mr. Ouimet brought down the estimates, stating where the dredge was to be built, and he asked a vote for building it at that particular place.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend may be confusing another vote with this. I am advised there was a special vote taken for a dredge operating in the maritime provinces, but there was no special vote taken for this particular dredge, which was afterwards called the "Laurier."

Mr. McALISTER. Was not a portion of the old walls of the post office in St. John utilized? In that case it would be difficult for tenderers to know exactly what it cost to rebuild.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, the old walls were utilized; but still a very large amount of work, costing $170,000, was done by day's labour.

Mr. HAGGART. Was not this statement made: That on account of the difficulty of finding out what was required to be done, it would have to be done by day labour? I think that statement was made when the vote was taken.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is quite likely.

Mr. BENNETT. I think there was an expenditure included in this for the construction of a tug called the "Challenge," which was built at Sorel last year. Can the Minister tell me what the cost of the hull was?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There was no hull for a tug of that name.

Mr. BENNETT. Then it was the "Trudeau."

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The total cost of the tug was about $8,000.

Mr. BENNETT. I have only this to say, that if all the expenditures that have been made at Sorel are on a par with the expenditure in connection with this "Trudeau" tug, then there should be a minute inquiry. The circumstances were these: The "Trudeau" being a very old tug, was employed in connection with the Government dredge named "Challenge." The tug being old, the machinery was taken out of her at Midland. Instead of calling for tenders, as the Minister might have done for the construction of a new hull, at that point where different parties would have tendered, the tug being very small as compared with the tugs that have been built there, the machinery was taken out of her, and then it was shipped down to Sorel to be placed in a new hull, and the new hull was brought up to Midland. This tug, the "Trudeau" is a comparatively small tug, and instead of costing $8,000, it is a notorious fact that a tug half as big again there was offered for nearly $5,000. When the hon. Minister states that it cost $8,000 to build the hull, I presume he includes the carriage of machinery from Midland to Sorel. The price is a large one as compared with the price of tugs that I have known of in that locality. I would like to ask the hon. Minister whether that includes the cost of the transport of the boiler and the engine from Midland to Sorel, and the placing of them in the new hull?

Mr. FIELDING.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I cannot give the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) the information now, but I will take a note of it and see that it is produced.

Mr. BERGERON. Did I understand the hon. Minister to say that James Howden is the superintendent in charge of the works at Sorel?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. I have always understood that he was in charge of the tugs only.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He is in charge of the whole establishment.

Mr. BERGERON. Is he a permanent employee?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He is not technically in the civil service, but he is practically a permanent employee.

Mr. BERGERON. In looking over these accounts I see some most extraordinary charges. It looks as if hon. gentlemen were trying to get some of our good Conservatives by buying goods at their places. I suppose that these goods have been bought without tender.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Without public tender, yes.

Mr. BERGERON. I see that goods amounting in all to $175,000 have been bought without tender.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. All from Conservatives?

Mr. BERGERON. No; the largest amount is that paid to John Cavanagh, $30,000.

Mr. HAGGART. Who is Mr. Cavanagh?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He is a hardware merchant in Montreal.

Mr. BERGERON. I see Mr. Wurtele figures for $20,000, and that is without tender.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In that case, although I said without public tender, we invited quotations for these goods.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. Minister has promised to bring down the names and the figures, prices in each case.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Certainly.

Mr. BERGERON. There was paid $350 for wood to La Sclerie at St. Agathe. That is going very far away to get wood and I am surprised at the expenditure. For spruce, $11 was paid. There was paid to a man by the name of Remi Boyer $15 for measuring the tugs "Laurier" and "Iberville."

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am informed that the information was asked for in the House and that the measurements had to be made for the purpose.

Mr. BERGERON. Who is Boyer? Why was the measurement made by a special person, and not by the engineer or whoever is in charge of the works down there?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Boyer is a custom-house official.

Mr. BERGERON. An employee of the Government?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Why should the Government pay $15 to measure two tugs when he is an employee of the Government already paid a good salary?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will be glad to get that information for my hon. friend. I cannot answer his question, but I will be pleased to bring the information. I cannot answer off-hand a great many of the questions that the hon. gentleman has asked me.

Mr. BERGERON. No, and if the hon. Minister of Public Works himself were here he could not answer a great many of these questions.

Mr. BENNETT. Perhaps the hon. Minister can answer my question as to whether the old boiler and engines were placed in the "Trudeau."

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The chief engineer tells me that he is not quite sure, but he thinks they were.

Mr. BENNETT. Will the hon. Minister please, then, let me have the figures as to the comparative cost of the hull and where the balance of the $8,000 was expended?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We will try to get that information for the hon. gentleman.

Mr. DAVIN. I understood the hon. Minister to say that this item would stand until the information was brought down.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I thought I had given such a large amount of information upon this item that hon. gentlemen would not ask to have it stand. I have promised, in each specific case, to bring down the information as soon as I get it. If hon. gentlemen want the item to stand I shall have no objection, but I think that we could further the business by allowing the item to pass on the understanding that in concurrence the information shall be furnished. I will see that a memorandum is made of every request, and that information will be brought down.

Mr. HAGGART. Here is an expenditure of $354,000 which is proposed to be made entirely without an Order in Council. The hon. gentleman says that perhaps he has an Order in Council. Here is a department which has violated every promise that was made by hon. gentlemen when in Opposition, and which has acted in direct violation of the statutory law of the country. You may violate your own Order in Council by changing the Order in Council and substituting another for it. Here is a department in which over $700,000 has been expended in direct contravention of the statutory law, of the Orders in Council and of the promises which hon. gentlemen, when in Opposition, made again and again. What the country expects is the carrying out of the law and the pledges of hon. gentlemen, no matter whether the hon. Minister of Public Works is correct or not in saying that he can get a better service by adopting the day labour system. He stated that the best thing for the people of this country was to allow the Minister of Public Works to continue to work upon the day labour system. It has been contrary to the practice and principles of every Government in the country, contrary to the principle which has been insisted upon by the members of the Government when they were in Opposition, and contrary to the direct promise which had been given by the Government again and again, when a sum of money has been voted that the work for which it was designed would be done by public tender. Here is a department which is asking for authority for an expenditure of $354,000. We have no promise of the kind, and in looking over the accounts for last year we find that nearly the whole of the work done by the Public Works Department was in violation of the law and Order in Council, and in direct violation of every promise hon. gentlemen opposite made when they were on this side of the House.

Mr. DAVIN. Let me give an illustration of what my hon. friend has just been showing. The Minister of Finance has told us that Remi Boyer is a permanent employee of the customs, and yet that he received $15 for measuring the dredge "Laurier" and the tug "Iberville." Is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) aware of this clause in the Civil Service Act of 1888:

Subsections 1 and 2 of section 51 of the Civil Service Act (R.S.C., cap. 17) are hereby repealed, and the following substituted therefor:—

"51 No extra salary or additional remuneration of any kind whatsoever shall be paid to any deputy head, officer or employee in the civil service of Canada, or to any other person permanently employed in the public service."

In the face of that clause of the Civil Service Act, the Minister of Finance tells us here that this permanent employee has been paid $15 for measuring the "Laurier" and another dredge. It is not merely that they violated the Order in Council that was passed in order to protect the public, but they have actually violated the express provision of the law. The Minister of Finance told us to-day that we did not interpret that Order in Council properly. I do not know who inspired him at the moment, but if it was the Minister of the Interior that hinted that, I should like the Minister of the Interior to tell us, as a lawyer, how he interpreted that Order in Council other than as I had interpreted it. Here is a clause of the Civil Service Act deliberately violated in the case of this Remi Boyer. I need not tell the Minister of Finance that it is the desire of every man on this side of the House to facilitate the conduct of business as much as possible and bring this session to a close, but when we are confronted, in one department after another, with this systematic violation of the law, systematic violation of Orders in Council, systematic violation of all the safeguards that the wisdom of the past has fenced around these departments so as to prevent extravagance and corruption, how can we do otherwise than analyse and probe, and in the public interest try to get at the bottom of these irregularities? You know very well, Mr. Chairman, that where there are irregularities, you cannot prevent suspicion. If people want to carry on business honestly, why not carry it on regularly? If they carry on business irregularly, they need not be surprised that the Opposition in Parliament will criticise them as we do, and they need be still less surprised, if they find that the public of Canada will refuse them that confidence which they vainly expect.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

RELIEF OF ABRAHAM ARONSBURG.

House resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 144)—from the Senate—for the relief of Abraham Aronsburg.—(Mr. Landerkin.)

(In the Committee.)

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I have no knowledge of this Bill myself, but I am informed that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), who gave the matter some attention before the Committee on Private Bills, desires to express his views upon it. Unfortunately he is not present, and if there is no objection, I would like to move that the committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again, so that he may have that opportunity. I have no knowledge or opinion whatever on the Bill myself.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would prefer that the hon. Minister should go further and move that the committee rise. From all the information I could gather in regard to this case, I think the more it is investigated the more we shall be inclined to refuse the application.

Mr. DAVIN.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I was on the committee and I heard the whole matter discussed. The parties are complete strangers to me, but I do not think there is any element in the case that would justify us in putting off the consideration of the Bill. This is the second time it has been put off, and no reason has been given why it should be postponed, especially as most of the members of the committee are here. On Friday night it was postponed because of certain parties not being present. A postponement is again asked to-night, on account of the same parties not being present. It appears to me that if these parties are interested in their side of the case they should make a point of being here when the Bill is being considered.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I think the promoters of the Bill will gain nothing by pressing it at this time, and the motion that has been made by the hon. Minister of Finance is the only proper one under the circumstances. In fact, I would have been ready to cut it short, but at the same time I think we must give the matter very serious consideration, because there is great objection to the Bill.

Mr. MCGREGOR. The hon. gentleman would vote against the motion anyhow, as I think his mind is made up.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I rise to a point of order. I deny the right of the hon. gentleman to say which way I will vote when the question comes up. He has no right to make that imputation.

Mr. MCGREGOR. Perhaps not. If the hon. gentleman will vote on our side I will take it back. I heard the evidence, which was given very clearly, and I do not know that in my experience in this House we have ever had a clearer case. I do not see why it should be put off any longer. The witnesses were brought before the committee, and they gave their evidence, and the man, who is a poor man, I believe—I never met him before—said he had spent $500 or $600 on the case, and was unable to go any further. One of the parties said that he ought to have another witness from Toronto, the man who had married his divorced wife. If this Parliament is to be a divorce court at all, I am satisfied that a divorce should be granted in this case.

Mr. McCLURE. I heard the evidence given before the committee, and I am sorry to say that I arrived at an entirely different conclusion from that of the hon. gentleman who has just spoken. I do not want the matter postponed, for I am prepared to vote on it now, and I certainly would vote against the Bill.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have not any knowledge of the case; but I was informed that my colleague the Minister of Marine and Fisheries took a warm interest in this Bill, and I merely made the motion to enable him to have an opportunity of expressing his views. Having done that, I have no further interest in the Bill.

Mr. SCRIVER. As Chairman of the Committee on Private Bills, I see no object in postponing the consideration of this Bill. The taking of evidence in regard to it was rather an unusual course for a Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills. When the Bill was first brought before the committee, some members thought it was desirable to have further evidence. That further evidence was taken, and was carefully considered on both sides. For my own part, I consider that there is no object in postponing the consideration of the Bill.

Motion for the committee to rise and report progress negatived.

Bill reported.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 145) to amalgamate the Ottawa, Arnprior and Parry Sound Railway Company and the Canada Atlantic Railway Company under the name of the Canada Atlantic Railway Company.—(Mr. Belcourt.)

Bill (No. 20) to incorporate the Zenith Mining and Railway Company.—(Mr. Poupore.)

NIAGARA, ST. CATHARINES AND TORONTO RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. CLARKE moved second reading of amendment made by the Senate to Bill (No. 69) to incorporate the Niagara, St. Catharines and Toronto Railway Company. He said: This amendment limits the company to issuing securities to the extent of $20,000, instead of $25,000, per mile.

Motion agreed to; amendment read the second time.

LA BANQUE DU PEUPLE.

Mr. PREFONTAINE moved second reading of amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 6) respecting La Banque du Peuple. He said: The amendments are unimportant with regard to the principle of the Bill. The first is, that nothing in this Act shall affect any security held at the time of the passing of the Act by any judgment creditor of the bank. This is to cover a judgment creditor who obtained security in appeal. He obtained judgment, and the case was carried to appeal, and the directors gave him security for the amount of judgment and costs. The next amendment provides, that if, on the liquidation of the remaining assets and securities a sum be realized more than sufficient to pay 45 cents on the dollar, any surplus shall be divided among the shareholders.

The objection was raised against the liquidation being made by the directors, who are personally responsible, that they might make money out of the liquidation. In order to avoid that contingency, the Senate thought proper to add this clause, and, in order to guard more securely against any eventualities, it thought proper to appoint Hon. Mr. Desjardins, president of the Jacques Cartier Bank, as one of the liquidators. This is accepted by the representatives of the creditors and depositors of the bank, as offering more security to them, who are specially interested in this liquidation.

Mr. HAGGART. Do I understand that the shareholders are the only participants in the amount that may be realized over the 45 cents on the dollar?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. And the directors are relieved from all personal liability whatever? And the judgment creditors will be paid in full, while the others will not?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I may be allowed to explain. There is one judgment creditor in favour of whom an exception is made, and that is because he has obtained security from third parties, and so, of course, stands in a different position from other judgment creditors. The others are not preferred but stand on the same footing as the other creditors. As the creditor who has been excepted had taken security of the other parties, it is thought reasonable that his security should not be taken away from him.

Mr. HAGGART. Can the hon. gentleman (Mr. Prefontaine) explain why this distribution of the amount over 45 cents on the dollar is limited to the shareholders?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The representative of the creditors had nothing to do with that. It was to answer the objection as I have stated, that the liquidator might make money enough out of the liquidation. And it was suggested that whatever might be realized over the 45 cents should be deposited with the Deputy Minister of Finance here in Ottawa. Different ways were suggested, and the one resorted to was the one in the Bill.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. It must be borne in mind that there is only one class of creditors, and they are the depositors. No others have claims. The depositors will get 75 cents on the dollar, and if there is a surplus over and above the 75 cents, when the whole assets of the bank are liquidated, that will go to the ordinary shareholders of the bank. Some of the depositors had sued the bank and taken judgment, and one has gone further than that and obtained security, and he is the only one preferred.

Motion agreed to, and amendments read the second time and concurred in.

SUPPLY.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Harbours and Rivers, Quebec—

River St. Lawrence ship channel.... $354,000

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. Minister gave no explanation of the payment to Mr. Remi Boyer directly contrary to the Act of Parliament.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I have asked the proper officer to ascertain the facts of the case, but they have not yet been furnished me. I am satisfied that it will be found that this payment is not contrary to the Act of Parliament, but I am not able at the moment to give the hon. gentleman the information. It has been suggested to me—I do not give it as the explanation—that customs officers sometimes act as registrars of shipping and are allowed to receive payment as such. I will give more definite information. The amount is a small one, and it may prove to be a mere matter of expenses.

Mr. DAVIN. There are a number of other questions not answered.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. As far as possible, I have endeavoured to get the information asked for. One question was with regard to steel plates for the construction of dredges. I stated that quotations had been asked from Ed. Cavanagh & Co., of Montreal, Lewis Bros., of Montreal, J. M. Pyke and J. W. Wurtele & Co., of Ottawa. Their tenders were as follows: Wurtele, $20,460; Cavanagh, $20,460; Lewis Bros., $22,400, and Pyke, $24,000. The tenders of Messrs Wurtele and Cavanagh being the lowest and being equal were both accepted and the work was divided between them.

Mr. BERGERON. How can the tenders be made in that way. This seems to be a lump sum?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The specification was submitted and they were asked to tender a lump sum for the quantity stated.

Mr. HUGHES. Has the hon. Minister that specification?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have not. I was not asked to produce it. My hon. friend might ask the same question regarding any one of a thousand items mentioned in the Auditor General's Report. We cannot have all these papers at hand at the moment. But it can be obtained.

Mr. BERGERON. Is the name of that firm Lewis Bros., of Montreal?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. LARIVIERE.

Mr. BERGERON. I see they are down here for a pretty good amount in the Auditor General's Report.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I was asked to give some information also as to the McCarthy Estate at Sorel. I have ascertained that the property was first leased to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal by Mr. McCarthy in 1874 for five years, at $1,600 per year. In 1879, the lease was extended at the same rate for three years, with the privilege of a two years' extension. In 1893, the lease was made to the department for five years at $1,200 per year. On the 5th of September, 1898, the department secured from the McCarthy Estate a promise of sale, the price to be fixed by arbitration, and the department to retain the property under lease at the same rental until the Minister signified his desire to purchase. Therefore, we have a lease at $1,200 a year with the right to purchase by arbitration at any time.

Mr. HAGGART. No part of this vote is for the purpose of purchasing?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No. I was asked to give information as to the cost of the dredging, and I have obtained the following memorandum:—

Year.	No. of Dredges.	Cubic Yards Dredged.	Average cost per Cubic Yard. cents.
1895 .....	4	423,735	26 3-10
1896 .....	4	437,632	28 2-10
1897 .....	5	330,207	24½
1898 .....	5	625,488	28½

One dredge, I am informed, only worked for part of the season, and was afterwards sent to Kingston, so the five dredges were not constantly employed there.

Mr. HAGGART. Has the cost of the repairs been charged to that work?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, that has been the practice.

Mr. HAGGART. The Minister was to bring down the Order in Council showing his authority to do certain works without tender.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am informed there was no Order in Council, nor has it been the practice of the department to obtain an Order in Council under such circumstances. I have obtained from the department a list of a large number of works constructed by the late Government without Order in Council, and, I am advised, by day's labour; and the practice of the late Government in that respect, I understand, has been followed by the present Minister. The statute does not bind a Minister as closely as the terms of the Order in Council. But the Order in Council has not been interpreted by the Minister of Public Works in the line of hon. gentlemen opposite, and I am informed he has followed the practice of his predecessors in that respect.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. gentleman said this afternoon that all these amounts shown in the Auditor General's Report had been bought without tender.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not exactly without public tender, but I said that in large and important cases quotations had been asked.

Mr. BERGERON. It is not asking for tenders when the department goes to its friends and asks for figures; that will not satisfy the public that the cheapest rate is obtained. The Minister of Public Works tries to be as good as possible to his friends. He does business in a most extraordinary way, and some hon. gentlemen opposite, whom I see, would make an awful fuss if that were done by a Conservative Government. Now, the Minister of Public Works has bought a good deal of coal, but he does not call for tenders. He buys it right and left from his friends. I see here he buys from Benson & Co., Sydney, steam coal, 11 tons at $3.65. I find also that he buys from Alfred Lavallée, Sorel, 568 tons at $3.50; T. F. Moore & Co., Montreal, 3,597 tons of Scotch coal at $2.90, 23 tons at 60 cents, O. S. steam coal, 1,035 gross tons at $2.85; smith's coal, 130 gross tons at $4.15, and so on. Everybody gets a share. I have not time to go over the accounts. He buys wood also, a bit of everybody, some from J. & B. Grier, Montreal, over $1,900 worth; iron from B. J. Coughlin, Montreal, also without tender. I suppose he asked his price and gave him what he wanted. I mentioned this afternoon there was something bought from the saw-mills of St. Agathe. Then, there is lumber bought from Shearer & Co. Montreal, and goods from Lewis Bros., whose name figures very often here. He was asked for prices, and given his prices, I suppose, just as were Wurtele & Co., and Cavanagh & Co. I suppose the Minister of Public Works thought he must be generous, and distribute his favours all round. He divides it up among his friends so that they all get a share. I see the Minister of Public Works does not neglect the friends of his colleague the Minister of Railways and Canals, for he goes down to St. John and gives McAvity & Sons orders for $790 worth of goods, all bought at retail prices. It is like a man going to a retail merchant in a village and buying articles by retail.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. T. McAvity & Sons, St. John, are manufacturers.

Mr. BERGERON. But these are bought at retail. There is no use going to a wholesale merchant and buying goods by retail, and without asking for tenders. C. O. Paradis, Sorel, gets an order for $237; W.

F. Patenaude, Sorel, gets an order for $2,282; Thibaudeau & Co., Sorel, get an order for $241; A. C. Trempe, Sorel, gets an order for $452. Of course, all these men will now be friends of the hon. member for Richelieu (Mr. Bruneau). It is like that all the way through. It is clear as day that this is not at all the way which we have been told in the past business would be carried on if hon. gentlemen opposite reached the Treasury benches. I am amazed at the silence of the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), who sits there when we are unearthing the most scandalous transactions that ever came before this House. I am not at all surprised that the Minister of Public Works is too sick to stay here and pass his Estimates; it would have been impossible for him to explain all these. Of course, I sympathize with my hon. friend the Minister of Finance. He says, in answer to our questions: I know nothing at all about it, the man who did that is not here. I must congratulate my hon. friend for being so patient and doing as well as he can to give us information. But he cannot be expected to answer all the questions which we would be entitled to ask if the Minister of Public Works was here.

Mr. HAGGART. The Minister in charge of this department must remember that when these items were voted the Minister of Public Works promised us that every article would be bought by tender. Besides that, the hon. gentleman says that the statute is not as binding upon them as the Order in Council. My reading of the statute makes it imperative upon the Minister to ask for tenders. He buys two lots of material, one at $20,000 and one for $22,000, without tender, given to two parties out of four who are asked to put in prices. That is not the way I understand the meaning of this section regarding public works:

The Minister shall invite tenders by public advertisement for the execution of all works, except in cases of pressing emergency, in which delay would be injurious to the public interest, or in which, from the nature of the work, it can be more expeditiously and economically executed by the officers and servants of the department.

There is no evidence of that kind here.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Minister must be the judge of that.

Mr. HAGGART. Not at all, it is not a case of emergency.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE: Who is to judge?

Mr. WALLACE. The House of Commons.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The House has a right to review, but the Minister, at the time is judge.

Mr. HAGGART. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that these contracts worth $20,000 and $22,000 could be more expeditiously and economically executed by the officers and servants of the department? Is it a work of emergency? Does it come under either of these heads? Surely the hon. Minister does not contend that. It is true that the right hon. Prime Minister states that an Order in Council is necessary for the letting of the contract, and that no work amounting to more than $5,000 shall be done in any way other than that. He says that is merely an Order in Council; we can revoke an Order in Council. An Order in Council is not binding upon us. But here no Order in Council is passed. You do not even go through the formality of that. You do not get an Order in Council for doing that work, and the statute is obligatory upon you. Surely the hon. Minister of Finance does not pretend that any of these works come under the classification of works of pressing emergency.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What I mean to say is, that the terms of the Act give the Minister a discretion in that case, and my contention is, that the Order in Council has not been interpreted in times past as the hon. gentleman now seeks to interpret it. It has not been so interpreted by the late Administration. But in the particular case to which he refers, there was an Order in Council, and these tenders to which I have referred, were accepted by Order in Council. All I can say is, that an Order in Council has not been held to be necessary in the case of work that is to be done by day labour. It comes under the words of the statute where the Minister thinks that the service can be better done by the officers of his department. In doing the work by day labour I believe the hon. Minister was carrying out the intention of the statute and the Order in Council.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. Minister puts a curious interpretation upon an Act of Parliament. He says that the Minister of Public Works got an Order in Council. All the Minister does is to ask a person what he will do a certain piece of work for. The person replies: I will do it for $20,000. Then the hon. Minister goes to his colleagues and gets an Order in Council. The hon. Minister of Finance contends that that is a compliance with the statute.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do.

Mr. HAGGART. It is a most extraordinary compliance. Perhaps the hon. Minister has not heard me. Is it a case of pressing emergency or one which, from the nature of the work, can be more expeditiously and economically executed by the officers and servants of the department? The hon. Minister does not pretend that this work has been done by the officers or servants of the department.

Mr. FIELDING.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not that particular job, but my hon. friend admits that the greater part of the work has been done at Sorel by day labour by the officers of the department.

Mr. HAGGART. Repairs and that will comply with the statute.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. And construction.

Mr. HAGGART. No; it will not apply to construction. The department gets a vote for the purpose, say, of constructing dredges. There must be some reason more than the fact that the work can be more economically and expeditiously done by the department. To comply with the statute the hon. Minister should get an Order in Council first. What is the use of the statute, what is the use of the Order in Council, if the Minister at any time can let a contract, and if, after the contract is let without tender to any man that he pleases, the Minister can come to his colleagues and get an Order in Council accepting the offer? Does the hon. gentleman contend that that is a compliance with the statute and with the Order in Council?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). Will my hon. friend say what the statute requires?

Mr. HAGGART. I read it.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Does the statute say anything about an Order in Council?

Mr. HAGGART. Not at all:

The Minister shall invite tenders by public advertisement for the execution of all works, except in cases of pressing emergency, in which delay would be injurious to the public interest.

It does not require an Order in Council, because the statute is imperative.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Who decides whether it is a case of emergency?

Mr. HAGGART. The Minister decides as to whether it is a case of emergency, and does the work at once.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is what he did in this case.

Mr. HAGGART. Does the hon. gentleman contend that the purchase of steel, or wood, or coal, for the purpose of carrying on this business down there, constituted a case of emergency? A case of emergency is where a building is burned, and requires to be immediately erected, or where a canal breaks, and the work of repair must be immediately undertaken. I think, in most of these instances, the Minister has to go to Council to get an Order to complete the work. The only exception that is made is in case of emergency or where the work is required to be done by the officers and servants of the department. In these two cases, I think, it is requisite that an Order in Council should be got for the purpose of doing the work.

Mr. BERGERON. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Finance when will the dredge "Laurier" be in condition to work?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I may tell the hon. gentleman that the dredge is an honour to her namesake, and is working well.

Mr. BENNETT. I would like to ask the hon. Minister if he has any information as to the cost of the tug "Trudeau"?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have not been able to get the information. It was asked for this afternoon, when the department was closed, and I have not been able to obtain it, although I sent an officer for it.

Mr. BENNETT. I understood the hon. Minister to say this afternoon that this tug that was built at Sorel cost about $8,000. I have only this to say, that if the rest of the work done at that institution costs the country as much proportionately as that small tug did, it is no wonder such large figures appear in the public accounts. The Government, or rather the hon. Minister of Public Works, is asking for $354,000, under the heading of "Improvement of the River St. Lawrence Ship Channel," and in the ministerial press it will be heralded through the country that the Government is making great preparations to accommodate the shipping trade of Montreal. As a matter of fact, on reference to the Public Accounts of last year, we find that a very trifling part of the money went into the work of deepening the ship channel. Of the expenditure last year of about $200,000, we find that about $53,000 is for wages in workshops which the hon. Minister of Public Works is carrying on at Sorel, where upwards of 400 men are working by day's labour. There has been purchased material amounting to about $100,000, and the difference of about $35,000 was paid in wages and the operating expenses of the dredges engaged upon the work, so that, in other words, $35,000 of dredging was accomplished out of this expenditure of $200,000. Let us come down to the general principle of the matter. As I understand it, no contract can be entered into by any department where the amount exceeds $5,000, unless under certain terms which have been stated. Nobody can profess or pretend in this case that urgency removed the hon. Minister from the necessity of entering into a contract for the work. The hon. Minister, utterly disregarding all the principles of contract and tendering, goes to his party friends and purchases, without fair and open competition, from one upwards of $20,000 worth, and from another $20,000 worth, and in the purchase of $100,000 worth of material the formality of public competition is never indulged in. The hon. Minister of Public Works asserts his rights, and a good deal more than his rights, because in other departments, no matter how trifling the amounts may be, tenders must be invited. The hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) stated that one or two concerns did make calculations, and, although the amount purchased was nearly $20,000, by a most wonderful coincidence these two concerns had exactly the same figures. It seems like a romance that two different firms, one in the city of Ottawa and one in the city of Montreal should tender for supplies of material amounting to $20,000, and that these two tenders should be exactly the same when they are figured out. The Minister (Mr. Fielding) cannot fail to see that a certain amount of suspicion must attach to that. The Minister was anxious to distribute favours among his party friends, and so he went to these two firms, one of whom, Mr. Wurtele, is a commission merchant, had no steel to sell, and who I believe for the first time indulged in a transaction of selling a pound of steel. When the Minister wants oak at Sorel, in the province of Quebec, does he purchase it there? Not at all. The oak is brought down from the Georgian Bay to Sorel, and the Government pay about $300 on account of freight. Surely there must be any quantity of oak in the province of Quebec, and yet Mr. James Playfair, of the Georgian Bay district, is given $1,213 for oak, and of this amount $311 was for freight. I know a reason why probably Mr. Playfair, who is a very ardent Liberal although a personal friend of mine, had handed out to him this one thousand two hundred odd dollars. As I stated this afternoon, there was an old tug there named the "Trudeau," and it was necessary to build a new hull for her. Mr. Playfair and other gentlemen were in the business of constructing tugs, but the Minister (Mr. Tarte) was not anxious that the tugs should be brought at the cheapest possible price by open competition, for he wanted to take the work down to his shipyard at Sorel where he could employ more men by day's labour and purchase more supplies from his friends in the province of Quebec, and so when the tug was not built at Midland, where it ought to have been built, Mr. Playfair is appeased a bit by handing him over $1,200 for oak, and this business Government pays $300 for freight on oak from the Georgian Bay to the town of Sorel.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Where would the oak be got?

Mr. BENNETT. Surely all the oak that has been used for years past in the province of Quebec has not been brought from Ontario.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think you can get oak cheaper in that direction than you can anywhere else.

Mr. BENNETT. And if the Government wanted to buy $1,200 worth of oak in Midland, why did they not ask for tenders? All through the Public Accounts this same Mr. Playfair had very considerable sums paid to him for repairs to scows, and no tenders were invited, but he being a party friend of the Government was handed over this work at his own price. So anxious is the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) to please all his friends, that he actually goes down to the city of St. John, N.B., and buys hardware there amounting to thousands of dollars. Let it be understood in the country that the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) is conducting his department just as he likes, and that when he asks for this vote of $354,000 Parliament does not know but that he is going to spend the whole sum by purchasing supplies from his party friends privately at their own figures, and not by open competition. I am surprised how the other Ministers, and more particularly the Ontario Ministers, can sit there quietly in their places and tolerate such conduct as that. I will not say anything about the gentlemen behind the Ministers who are absolutely silent at this extravagance and illegality on every occasion. But how can the Ontario Ministers sit quietly by and see the Minister of Public Works expending hundreds of thousands of dollars without asking for tenders. Let me ask the Minister of Finance how much of this $354,000 is to be spent in purchasing materials?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The working operations of the dredges are estimated at $100,000. The estimate for the construction of new dredging plant and for the repair of the old dredging plant is $254,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Then judging by our past experience of the Minister of Public Works, he will place three or four hundred men at this work, pay them what he wishes, and then turn round and spend $254,000 in materials without asking for tenders. If business is to be conducted on business principles, why does not the Minister call for tenders for the construction of these dredges and award the contract to the lowest tenderer? Let us contrast the conduct of this Minister (Mr. Tarte) with the conduct of the other Ministers. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) wants to place some buoys in my district, at an annual cost of from $50 to $100, and he calls for tenders for that work as he properly should do. The Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) calls for tenders for carrying the malls for trifling distances, and I commend him for doing it, but when the Minister of Public Works asks us to vote $254,000, the House can get no guarantee that one single dollar of that will be expended on the principle of open competition. There is to be no competition and no tender for the building of these tugs and dredges. The Minister will go around the country irrespective of where the parties may live, and in order to give a certain amount of pap to a friend on the Georgian Bay he will buy the timber there, and in order to distribute the pap widely he will buy the hardware at St. John, N.B., and pay the freight on it to Sorel. It surprises me that the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram) does not look after his party friends when this patronage is going around. Why should not merchants in the city of Toronto supply these materials? There are shipbuilding concerns in the city of Toronto, and when the Minister wants to construct a dredge or a tug, why does he not ask for tenders in that city if he will not do it in Midland? We have no guarantee here to-night but that this $254,000 will be expended among the party friends of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) and not a dollar of it expended by tender.

Now, taking the expenditure of last year, what do we find? First, we find that in the town of New Westminster, B.C., there is purchased about $4,450 worth of timber from a firm there; I assume that there was no competition in that. Then, we find that from Mr. Cavanagh there was purchased about $25,000 worth of material. The Dominion Foundry at Sorel was given a contract for about $1,500 without tender. Mr. Grier, of Montreal, was given a contract of about $2,000 for timber. Lewis Bros., hardware dealers, of Montreal, were given a contract for about $1,300. Lavallee, of Sorel, was given a coal contract for nearly $2,000. Moore & Co., of Montreal, were given a contract of nearly $14,000. McAvity & Sons, of St. John, were given a contract of about $800. The Nova Scotia Steel Company was given a contract of about $920. Pateauade of Sorel, was given a contract of over $2,000. Playfair, James & Co., of Midland, Ont., were given a contract of about $1,200. Shepherd & Son, of Sorel, were given a contract of $2,600. Wurtele, of Ottawa, was given a contract for iron goods of $20,500—a man who never was known to be dealing in the question of iron, much less selling it.

An hon. MEMBER. He is a Tory.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, I will be bound to say that he is a much better friend of the Minister of Public Works than he is of any gentleman on this side of the House. While this vast amount of money is being voted by this House, hon. gentlemen opposite, knowing that the Minister of Public Works last year spent these large sums of money without indulging in the formality of asking for public tenders either for work or material, are going to-night to give him carte blanche to spend $354,000, knowing that only about $100,000 is going into the actual work of improving the river.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I hope it will be thoroughly understood by the intelligent people interested in the dredging of the St. Lawrence that the hon. gentleman opposite and some others who have taken the same view are determined to regard the construction of the dredging plant for that work as a squandering of public money, because they are determined to distinguish between the mere expenditure on operating the dredges and the construction of the dredges themselves. How you are going to meet the demands of that great national highway without constructing and improving your dredging plant is something that I cannot understand; yet hon. gentlemen opposite are determined to brush aside every dollar of expenditure for the purpose of producing this dredging plant, and to say that all we spend is $100,000 for the operating of the dredges. That is a line of argument in which I cannot follow hon. gentlemen opposite, and I venture to say that the hundreds of thousands of people who are interested in the navigation of the St. Lawrence will agree with me that in order to dredge the St. Lawrence we must provide the machinery for doing it; and when the Government use the workshops at Sorel for the purpose of building the dredges for that work, most sensible people will say that is a proper course to pursue. Hon. gentlemen have talked about the purchase of supplies, but in no instance is it pretended that any excessive price has been paid. If hon. gentlemen thought that there was, we would have had an inquiry before the Public Accounts Committee long ago, and all sorts of questions would have been raised and returns would have been asked for showing that such was the case. Let it be understood that there has been no change in the method of buying the supplies for this work. It has not been the practice of the department under the late Government to call for public tenders for these supplies. If hon. gentlemen turn to the Auditor General's Report for past years, they will find items of precisely the same character year after year. The late Minister of Public Works, in the exercise of the discretion which the law gave him, obtained these supplies, I presume, from his party friends. I make no complaint of that, provided he got them at fair and reasonable prices. There is no evidence given up to this time that the present Minister of Public Works has paid excessive prices; but hon. gentlemen opposite are determined to insist that every dollar of this expenditure went into the hands of political friends. The hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) says that one of the persons from whom supplies of hardware were bought, never handled anything of that line before. I am informed that the gentleman was in the habit of supplying goods of that character, and that he supplied them to the late Government. Most of the names which my hon. friend read are the names of persons unknown to me; but he happened to read the name of one firm in the province of Nova Scotia which is known to me. I happen to know that both the president and the manager of that company have been strong opponents of the present Government, and the president sat in this House as one of the most determined Conservatives, as he is to-day; and if I may judge of the other persons whose names he has read from this case, which I do know, I venture to say that a considerable portion of the money that has been expended has gone into the hands of Conservatives, and properly so, because they were engaged in the particular business and were prepared to supply the goods at fair prices. I think hon. gentlemen have failed to make a case against the Minister of Public Works, because he carried out both the spirit and the letter of the law, and took the same course as his predecessors in these matters.

Mr. BENNETT. May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? When the Minister of Public Works estimates for the construction of a dredge which his engineers say will cost $25,000, do hon. gentlemen opposite say that he should buy the material from his party friends and construct the dredge at Sorel rather than ask for tenders for the construction of that dredge?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is a matter on which there may be a difference of opinion. There are not many people in Canada who manufacture dredges; and because the Minister (Mr. Tarte) decided to construct a dredge at Sorel, it does not follow that that is a wasteful and improvident conclusion. I have no doubt the Minister had good reasons for the conclusion he reached.

Mr. BENNETT. If it is within the power of the Minister to purchase supplies for the construction of a dredge, it is equally within the power of a public contractor to do so.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. But every public contractor might not have the facilities.

Mr. BENNETT. If the Minister could secure the services of a competent man to overlook the construction of the dredge, a contractor could do the same. From my superficial knowledge of dredges, I do not think their construction requires a great deal of scientific knowledge. I know that they have been built on the Georgian Bay by practical men. But the Minister of Finance is laying it down to-night as the view of this Government that if they require to expend $20,000 or $30,000 for a dredge, they will not ask for public competition, but they will, as in this case, purchase materials from their party friends without competition, and then, irrespective of the cost, will construct a dredge in the Government workshops at Sorel.

Mr. TAYLOR. As I understand, this vote which the Minister is asking is $354,000, to be expended on the River St. Lawrence ship channel. Last year a vote of $256,000 was taken for this service. Referring to the Auditor General's Report to ascertain how that money was expended last year, we must come to the conclusion that this vote is going to be expended in a similar manner. Now, I want to ask the Minister who has charge of this matter to turn to the Auditor General's Report, at page Q-26, and tell me what the items I read there had to do with the improving the ship channel of the River St. Lawrence. There is a sum of $186.50 paid to R. K. Holland, of Montreal, for the following items: 275 Japanese lanterns, at 17½ cents; 150 do., at 12 cents; ¾-gross of rockets, $11.67; 450 bucket lanterns, $20.75; 10 dozen torches, at 90 cents; 100 torches, $20; sundries, $54.20; cases and cartage, $4.75. I presume the Japanese lanterns, the torches and the other things were for a Liberal demonstration. I can see no other reason, except it was a reception to the hon. Minister. No doubt the $54.20 for "sundries" was for something unmentionable for drinking purposes, and the $4.75 was to put it in cases and take it down to the dock.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Do you think the Auditor General would pass such an item as that?

Mr. TAYLOR. He has passed it, and the figures are here. What I ask is that the Minister should explain how these things were used to improve the ship channel. The hon. Minister challenges anybody to show a case where exorbitant prices had been paid. On this very same page, we have the account of Cyrille Labelle who is paid for the storage of sixteen barrels of oil, $8. He might better have bought the oil. He is also paid for 2,600 pounds of English oakum at 6½ cents. Any person in the trade knows that you can go into any hardware store and buy oakum for 5 cents. But the Government, as they say they are carrying on large works, they could easily import the oakum getting it at the lowest wholesale price. But instead of that they go into a little hardware store and pay more than the retail price. I would like the Minister of Finance to explain about these torches and Chinese lanterns and sundries for which $186.50 was paid?
