The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am afraid I am not able to answer. The hon. gentleman can ask 5,000 questions concerning items in the Auditor General's Report which cannot be answered off-hand. I have no doubt that these goods were bought and used for a proper purpose. The hon. gentleman seems to be well acquainted with the methods of the late Government, because he assumes that every item must be intended to cover something wrong. It seems to me it would be only fair to assume, in the absence of anything to the contrary, that these goods were got for a proper purpose. The hon. gentleman is too ungenerous and too suspicious in taking the contrary for granted. The hon. gentleman speaks of extravagant prices, but we know that he called attention to what he said were extravagant prices before, and on investigation, it was found in every case that the hon. gentleman was mistaken, and that the prices paid were reasonable.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like the hon. Minister to point out one case in which I was mistaken. I have not heard the contradiction from any authoritative source of any statement I made.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). Oh, oh.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries laughs. I gave him a good many instances of high prices paid by his own department and he failed to answer a single one of them. He paid, for instance, $9.60 a case for condensed milk made down in his own country, and milk of the same brand is sent across to British Columbia and sold there for $5. I think that this committee have a right to ask the Minister of Finance for an explanation of this item of torches, rockets, &c. He has his officers beside him, who can give him the information. Last year we gave this money to be spent in the improvement of the ship channel, and now we would like to know in what way this part of the money so spent, helped to carry out the work. His officer can tell whether the money was used for a political demonstration or whether it actually went into the improvement of the St. Lawrence ship channel.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The officers of the department are unable to give the hon. gentleman the information. With every desire to give the fullest information, which I have been trying all afternoon to do and which I intend to continue to do, until the snow flies if necessary, I have no expectation of being able to satisfy my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor). I know he is determined to ask questions that cannot be answered, to make it his special business to ask questions from the Auditor General's Report concerning which it is impossible to have the information to give him off-hand. It is true, that every cent of public expenditure is a legitimate subject of question, but at a proper time. I do not think that I am bound nor are the officials of the department able to say off-hand what every dollar was expended for. The Auditor General's Report is designed to give us the fullest information on these points; and if that is insufficient we have another way of dealing with the matter through the Public Accounts Committee—where the hon. gentleman is most vigilant and where he has right to call for the information. But if he does not seek the information in that way, it is unreasonable for him to expect to be told off-hand the minutest details of every dollar of public expenditure.

Mr. TAYLOR. I think it is outrageous for the Government to come here and ask to be entrusted with the public money unless they are prepared to show what was done with the money with which they have already been entrusted. The hon. Minister tells us that he wants every dollar of this money to improve the ship channel, but that was the promise made last year, and here we find $186.50 spent for Japanese lanterns, rockets, torches, &c., &c. Now, what improvements does this $186.50 represent? The hon. Minister speaks of charges concerning high prices having been explained away and tells us we cannot show any cases of extravagant prices. Here on this very page, we find a record showing that for goods wanted for this ship channel instead of buying at Montreal the Minister comes up here to Ottawa to favour his friend, Mr. Charleson, and Mr. Charleson's accounts shows the following:—

Files : flat, 14-in., 3 doz. at $4.45 ; half-round, 3 doz. of 14-in. at $5.80, 2 doz. of 12-in. at $4.40 ; 1 doz. of square, 18-in., $15 ; 3 doz. taper, $2.75--$57.30.

All these prices are outrageous as anybody in the trade will know. The Minister could have done better at any wholesale hardware store in Montreal. I do insist that the Minister should ask his officer—and I know that his officer knows—what these rockets and Japanese lanterns and torches were for, and how they improved the St. Lawrence ship channel? I protest, on behalf of the people, against their money being expended in this way to get up a demonstration for the Minister of Public Works or anybody else.

Mr. HAGGART. We have drawn attention to some cases where a higher price has been paid than in others. When we come to look at the items we find one of $20,000 and another of $22,000, and how are we to tell whether these are correct prices or not? The hon. gentleman says we might have made a motion in the House and got the details, or we might have gone to the Public Accounts Committee and examined the accounts. We presumed the law was being obeyed, that the work was being done as the statute directs, as the Order in Council directs ; we presumed they were asking for tenders for these articles, and that they had been bought from the lowest tenderers. We find now that was not done, that there was no tender within the meaning of the law, that these contracts are given to favourites, or possibly to men who are not favourites. But we object that the Order in Council has not been complied with. The hon. gentleman states that because we object to $254,000 being expended in that way, the country will understand that we object to improvements being made in the St. Lawrence. The hon. gentleman is begging the question. What we contend for is that the law should be obeyed, that these dredges should be built according to law and according to Order in Council. We do not object to the expenditure when it is necessary, but we do object to paying 28½ cents per cubic yard for excavation when it can be done for very much less. I will tell you what the Minister ought to do. He should consult the officers of his department to see where they can build a modern dredge. Let him go over to Liverpool, and find out what the dredges they build there can do similar work for. They can do similar work for 3 cents. Go down to New York, where material is being taken out of the harbour and moved six miles, and the contract price is 8 cents. Let him make a comparison of what his department is doing with what it cost the Montreal Harbour Commissioners to dredge out Lake St. Pierre. Let him compare their prices with what he is paying here. If I remember rightly, the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal pay for their dredging 11 or 12 cents. I know that dredges are now being built that will move that material for one-fourth the amount that the Minister has paid. He should employ modern dredges for this work. But what we object to is the principle that underlies this transaction. The Minister may say that his predecessors in office did the same thing. I deny it. I deny that work was given to favourites without contracts to the extent of $40,000, let alone $254,000 worth of work. We object to the public money being expended by the Minister precisely as he thinks proper. What we find fault with is that the Minister promised this House, when he got his votes, that he would use all diligence to get everything done at the lowest price by tender and on specifications, and he has done the very opposite. I have been looking over the accounts, and if I remember rightly, he has spent $700,000 on works without tender, on works, we may assume, that he has given to favourites. I am aware that the Minister justified it in the House, and the Prime Minister justified it. They tried to interpret the statute in a manner entirely different from its plain meaning. They said it was a mere Order in Council, that it was not binding upon them, and that they could alter it. I say, as I have said before, that the principle is a bad one. They may get the work done as cheaply by day labour under the superintendence of the department, but that is not the proper principle. The principle which has been adopted by both sides of the House is that in every case where it is possible, the work should be given out by tender. Here is a sum of $254,000 spent for building dredges which the Minister says cannot be built in Canada. The best dredges we ever had were built by contract in Canada. There is a party on the Welland Canal who has improved machinery for building dredges as good as can be built. They are being built in the city of Ottawa. The Department of Railways and Canals has built them in the basin down here.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Did the Government build them?

Mr. HAGGART. I think they were built by tender. But I say that these new dredges are not up to the mark, they are not up to the requirements for dredging harbours.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Has the hon. gentleman seen the new dredges the Minister of Public Works has built at Sorel?

Mr. HAGGART. No, I have not seen them.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Then, how can you state they are not good?

Mr. HAGGART. I do not know anything about them, but I know that he spent over $100,000 last year in building dredges, and the work they do costs 28 cents per yard, while the old dredges were doing the work for 28 cents. I do not know the amount the Montreal Harbour Commissioners paid for dredging, but I think it was a good deal less. But I know that by modern methods it can be done for a great deal less than that rate. But the principle I am contending for is that of giving contracts to parties after tender. Every man in this country has a right to tender and supply the Government with material. No Minister has a right to take the public money and spend it in this way, although he may get as good value for it, and I will admit that he does sometimes. But it casts suspicion upon the department to let the work without tender, it is against the law, it is against the Order in Council, it is against the principle that both sides have always advocated in this House.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend insists that it is against the law, it is against the Order in Council, it is against the practice. I wish to insist that it is not against the law, it is not against the Order in Council, and it is not against the practice; but it is exactly in line with the law, as the hon. gentleman himself interpreted it, and it is exactly in line with the Order in Council as the hon. gentleman interpreted it. I want to thank the hon. gentleman for an admission he made incidentally. In the very sentence that he declared himself against the policy of building dredges at Sorel, by the Government, he admitted that he, in his own department, had built a dredge for the Intercolonial Railway in Ottawa.

Mr. HAGGART. I did not admit it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Is it not a fact that a dredge was built by his own department by day's labour?

Mr. HAGGART. I am not aware of it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Is the hon. gentleman in a position to contradict the statement?

Mr. HAGGART. No.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Because I have been informed that the hon. gentleman built the dredge to which he referred, in Ottawa, that it was built under the supervision of his own department and by the servants employed by his own department.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not think I built it at all. It was not built by my department. The Public Works Department had two places for repairing dredges, one at Sorel, and another here. I had nothing to do with it, as it was not in my department.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman is not going to shirk responsibility for what the Public Works Department did.

Mr. HAGGART. Not at all.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He must accept responsibility for the action of the Public Works Department in his day, as I have to accept it for a brother Minister now. I want to point out how very unfair it is for my hon. friend to quote prices for dredging here and place them in comparison with very low prices for dredging elsewhere. He quoted the average price for dredging here, and placed it in comparison with the price paid at Liverpool. Dredging has been done in Canada as cheaply as it has been done in Liverpool, according to official statements. There are cases in Canada where dredging has been done as low as 11 cents, 6 cents and 5 cents per cubic yard, but the hon. gentleman takes the average and puts it in comparison with some very low quotation. I find, in the Report of the Department of Public Works, that in 1895 the cost of dredging, under the late Government, was 54½ cents for the dredge "Laval," dredging the ship channel between Montreal and Quebec. I have no doubt that in this case there were exceptional circumstances. I presume it was hard material. I do not wish to say that the hon. gentleman opposite paid too much, but I wish him to be fair and not take a piece of work where the material is easy to handle, and place it in comparison with more difficult work. There are some places where you can get the work done for 5 cents or 6 cents per yard, and there other difficult pieces of work that will cost 54½ cents a yard.

Mr. HAGGART. What did it cost the Harbour Commissioners ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have not the figures here.

Mr. HAGGART. I think it was about 11 cents.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. For the same work in the ship channel ?

Mr. HAGGART. For work in Lake St. Peter, I think, but I may be mistaken.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The deputy informs me that he thinks the price was higher than our own, but I am not positive.

Mr. HAGGART. I may be wrong.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a few words in regard to the statements of the hon. Minister of Finance. He becomes highly indignant, and he tells us that we are entirely wrong in coming with our complaints before this committee. He asks: why do you not look up the Auditor General's Report and go before the Public Accounts Committee? He does not need to be told why we did not do that, because he knows that while the Auditor General's Report, according to law, should be placed on the Table of the House within eight days from the beginning of the session, it was weeks and months afterwards before it was placed on the Table of the House. The Act of Parliament, by which the hon. Minister should be guided, as well as the humblest citizen of this country, was violated in that regard. When the hon. Minister asks: Why do you not study up the Auditor General's Report, we supposed that the law had been complied with, and that these supplies had been furnished by public tender. If that had been the case, whether the prices were high or low, we would not have a legitimate ground for complaint. But when we find that the law in that regard has also been violated and that the Government have not asked for tenders, except in the flim-flam way that they do their business, we have a right to enter a protest. They say: We asked two of our friends to tender. These two friends, by a remarkable coincidence, tendered for exactly the same amount. There is no honesty in such a course as that, because every dealer and manufacturer and contractor, where public money is concerned, has the right to have an opportunity of tendering, and it is a duty that we owe to the country to ask for tenders and to give the contract to the lowest tenderer, if it is found that he is a man of reputation, who can fulfil his contract. In some countries they adopt the practice of making the tenders known to the public, while here tenders are opened behind closed doors, and calculation and computations are made by the officers of the department; but I say that there is no reason why this secrecy should be observed. Let contracts be opened before the world, and the people interested will make their own calculations. The public will know what is going on; it will be an additional safeguard to the people that the money will be properly expended. In regard to going before the Public Accounts Committee, where the hon. Finance Minister invited us to go, I may say that hon. gentlemen did not call a meeting of the Public Accounts Committee until the session was nearly three months old, and when the Railway and Banking and Commerce committees were meeting. Hon. gentlemen who are members of the Public Accounts Committee, are also members of these other committees, and they cannot attend two committees at once and do justice to both. The investigations that had been postponed from last year, had to be taken up first by the Public Accounts Committee, and, as our time was limited, we had not an opportunity of making all the investigation that we desired before the Public Accounts Committee. Yet we are told by the hon. Minister of Finance to go before the Public Accounts Committee. We come before this House because it is the right place to come. There are some very interesting items in connection with the dredging of the St. Lawrence channel.

The Minister tells us it is right and proper that a portion of the money which is appropriated for the dredging of the channel should be devoted to the building of dredges because without dredges we cannot do the work. That is a most extraordinary statement. Suppose you take $50,000 to dredge the harbour in Toronto, and suppose $45,000 of that was used in the construction of the dredge and $5,000 in the work of dredging, would you say that the $50,000 was spent for the purposes intended by the vote? Not a bit of it. The proper course would be to ask an appropriation for the building of the dredges and then an appropriation for the purpose of dredging. That would be the honest businesslike way of proceeding, but that is just exactly the way the present Minister did not take. With reference to some items, I see that the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) quoted some expenditures about which he vainly demanded some explanation. On Q-24, for instance, I see that on a dredge where they have a crew of eight people, they have no less than four cooks. I find on the tug "St. James," which has eight of a crew, there are four cooks. They must have been living on the fat of the land.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Were they all there at the same time?

Mr. WALLACE. I ask the hon. Minister if they were all there at the same time? I am asking the questions.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend said there were four cooks to eight men, and I think we must hold him to that.

Mr. WALLACE. I see there are four cooks' wages and the wages of eight men, and I would like to have the Minister explain.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Some people cannot keep their cooks.

Mr. WALLACE. Here is the tug "C. J. Brydges." On this there are three cooks and about seven or eight of a crew. Then there is another matter in which the figures are larger and more important. I see J. W. Wurtele, of Ottawa, contract dated January 11th, 1898, for $20,460, less $7.50 freight, and $70 of other items added. I would like to ask the hon. Minister if Mr. J. W. Wurtele is a dealer in those goods?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am informed that he is an agent for the manufacturers of these goods in England.

Mr. WALLACE. What is his business there?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Commission agent.

Mr. WALLACE. In what line?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Metals and hardware, and he supplied goods in that line for the late Government.

Mr. WALLACE. Did he supply them by tender or without tender?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. To the late Government?

Mr. WALLACE. The late Government is not on its trial now. It will not do for the Minister to state that certain things were done by the late Government. He simply makes a statement and cannot give any proof.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, I have the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. WALLACE. He says that certain things were done by the late Government. That is merely a statement of his own, but even if the late Government did wrong, and we have not a particle of proof in that connection, that could not be an excuse for the present Government doing wrong.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I agree in that.

Mr. WALLACE. We want to know whether the contract with J. W. Wurtele of January 11th, 1898, for $20,460 was let after public competition. I do not mean by bogus tenders asked from two or three persons.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have given the information already, but the hon. gentleman may not have been present. Four parties were asked to tender. I gave the names and the amounts in each case, but will give them again if the hon. gentleman did not hear them. There were two tenders of $20,460, and two others, one of $22,400 and one of $24,000. The two tenders, Cavanagh & Co. and J. W. Wurtele, being the lowest and equal, the work was divided equally between them.

Mr. HAGGART. Is that the Wurtele who furnished steel goods to the late Government? If I remember rightly, he was agent for cement.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am informed that he furnished what might be called the hardware supplies, the same as he did before.

Mr. HAGGART. I found out about the dredge built in the city of Ottawa. The dredge that was built in this city was the "Laval." It was built under the superintendence of the Public Works Department. It was done by public tender and given to the lowest tenderers.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is the dredge which I found on inquiry cost 54½ cents per yard for doing the work. I am afraid they did not make a very good job of that.

Mr. WALLACE. That will hardly be an answer to the statement made by the hon. Minister, first, that the Railways and Canals Department had built a dredge by days' work, and then that the Public Works Department had done it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We will look into that more closely, but no doubt the hon. gentleman's statement is correct, and I accept it.

Mr. WALLACE. As regards Wurtele & Co., and Cavanagh & Co., we are told that a large amount of angles, rivets, nuts, &c., were furnished, and that the two tenders were precisely the same. That is clear evidence that they were bogus tenders and that there was collusion.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Did my hon. friend never know two tenders to be alike?

Mr. WALLACE. I never heard of a work, where a long series of different articles supplied were tendered for, in which two tenders were alike.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In a bulk sum?

Mr. WALLACE. These tenders must have been made on some basis, so much for steel angles, so much for rivets, so much for nuts, and so on. I suppose that in the doctrine of probabilities it would not occur once in a million times that two tenders would be exactly alike.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. When they tendered at a lump sum?

Mr. WALLACE. These parties made out their tenders for exactly the same amount, which shows that there must have been collusion.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have known that to occur fifty times.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, when I was discussing the law question a while ago, said this was directly in accord with the law, and that the hon. Minister of Public Works performed his duty according to the law and the Order in Council. I would like to have the hon. Minister's authority for that.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not remember making any definite statement, and certainly did not rise to my feet to make any, but I did say that it was not contrary to law to do the work by the servants and officers of the department.

Mr. HAGGART. Certainly not. But is Mr. Wurtele an officer of the department?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I was taking part in the discussion about building dredges, by the officers and servants of the Department of Public Works, and I said that was not contrary to law. The law says you may do it either by tender, or if the Minister thinks it can be done more expeditiously and economically by the officers and servants of the department. I was not entering into any question other than this. I was not discussing whether the law is right or wrong, but pointing out that the law permits the work to be done in that way.

Mr. HAGGART. I was discussing the two contracts given to Cavanagh and Wurtele for supplies over and above $5,000 used in the construction of these dredges. I was stating that there was no question of urgency, and the work was not done by officers of the department. But even if there were urgency, that urgency ought to be reported to the Governor in Council, and the Governor in Council should give the Minister authority to go on with the work. In this case no Order in Council was had in the first instance. In this case no Order in Council has been obtained.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The law does not say that the question of urgency is the controlling one.

Mr. HAGGART. I was not talking of the law; I was talking of the Order in Council after the law, and here is what the Order in Council says:

On a joint memorandum dated March 20th, 1890, recommending that hereafter all public works involving an expenditure of over $5,000 shall be let by public tender and contract unless, owing to urgency or other cause, it be deemed advisable to take different action, and that in all such cases authority be obtained by an Order in Council.

I suppose the other cause referred to in the Order in Council is "being economically instituted by the officers and servants of the department." There is not even a pretense of an Order in Council in this case.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) referred to the expenditure on the tug "St. James," and pointed out that four cooks had been employed on that tug at a cost of $162.46. The Minister said: These cooks were not all there at one time." Now, if he looks closely at the Auditor General's Report he will find there was no necessity for a cook at all, because he will find that there was paid to Capt. Chevrier for boarding crew from 12th April, eight hands; May, nine hands; June, seven hands; and washing, $221. Then, for the balance of the season, Capt. Laferriere was paid for boarding crew, July 1st to October 31st, eight hands, four months; November, seven hands and washing, $40. Therefore, there was paid $661 for the boarding of the crew of that tug from the opening to the closing of navigation.

Mr. BERGERON. It is the same with every one of these boats.

Mr. TAYLOR. Here the Government paid for the boarding of the crew and there was no necessity for cooks at all. While the Minister is getting the information to explain that, I certainly wish him also to explain about this $186 expended for Chinese lanterns and torques and rockets.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am afraid I cannot furnish the information regarding the lanterns, but as to the cooks, I am informed that the arrangement is that the captain is allowed so much for boarding the men, and that we supply the cook in addition to that.

Mr. BERGERON. On the "John Pratt" there were six cooks.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There are some housekeepers who cannot keep their servants, and perhaps the captain of the "John Pratt" is one of these.

Mr. BERGERON. Where do we find the expenditure for the tug "Eureka" that the Minister of Public Works went promenading on last summer?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That will be included in the Auditor General's Report next year.

Mr. BERGERON. I suppose we will know it all then?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes. Wait till you see us next year.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the cost of these two dredges that were built last year?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There are two now under construction, but they are not finished.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the contemplated cost of each?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. About $100,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Last year the Minister (Mr. Tarte) stated that there were to be two new steel dredges at a cost of $75,000. He does not say "each," although the reading might mean that.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am advised that the estimated cost would be $100,000 each, but that a portion of that cost represents old machinery used, to the value of about $25,000. The Minister (Mr. Tarte) would therefore be correct in estimating the new work at $75,000 each.

Mr. BENNETT. Are there to be any more dredges built this year?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, it is proposed to build two new elevator dredges, costing about $110,000, and about $100,000 of that will be expended this year. The $100,000 represents, in addition to the new dredges under construction, the proportion of the two.

Mr. HAGGART. The two dredges that are being built will have cost $254,000. Is the rest to be applied to dredges?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, there are scows and other appliances in connection with them.

Mr. TAYLOR. As the hon. Minister cannot inform me what this $186.50 was expended for, perhaps his friend who is sitting at his left (Mr. Bruneau), and who is stated in the papers to be one of the three men who control Canada to-day, can give me the information I require. I understand that that hon. gentleman kicked some time last year and tendered his resignation, and afterwards withdrew it. Perhaps this was a demonstration got up to celebrate that event; for every person knows that this $186 of the people's money was not expended for deepening the St. Lawrence ship channel.

Mr. A. A. BRUNEAU (Richelieu). Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I can assure the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) that the Roman candles he refers to were not burned in my honour. I suppose the hon. gentleman has read the statement I sent to the newspapers, contradicting that ridiculous telegram, to which he has also referred; and I think he should be satisfied with this information.

Mr. BERGERON. Does not my hon. friend think we might take the other items and let this stand until we get the information we have asked for?

Mr. BENNETT.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have given my hon. friend all the information I am able to give him. I do not think we ought to wait for the information about the Chinese lanterns.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend knows that we are entitled to get all that information.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. On concurrence.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. gentleman knows that we cannot get much information then, when the Speaker is in the Chair. Under the circumstances, the hon. gentleman should let the item stand until we get more information in regard to these different matters.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman must recognize that we have given him all the information that it is possible to give in the absence of the Minister of the department. I hope that hon. gentleman is not serious in pressing for information about the Chinese lanterns; but I will promise him that if he allows the item to go I will give him some information in regard to that matter at another stage.

Mr. HAGGART. Will the hon. gentleman promise that all the material furnished for the dredges shall be got by tender?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I can assure the hon. gentleman that I am the hardest man in the world to get a promise out of—slow to promise, sure to perform. I cannot give the hon. gentleman a promise for the Minister for whom I am acting at the moment; but I can assure the hon. gentleman that the law will be complied with, as we contend it has been already. I will undertake that the contracts shall be brought down.

Mr. HAGGART. The Minister must promise that all contracts for over $5,000 shall be let by tender.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think the hon. gentleman ought to be satisfied with my promise that the law will be complied with.

Mr. HAGGART. No matter what the law is, the Minister has always promised that all materials required for the construction of the dredges, costing over $5,000, shall be bought by public tender.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I cannot give any promise. It is not right that I should give a promise in the name or on behalf of the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. HAGGART. Somebody ought to be in a position to do it. We had the distinct promise of the Minister last year, apart altogether from the interpretation of the Act of Parliament or the Order in Council. We had the promise of both the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Railways and Canals on nearly every occasion that all this work should be done by public tender and competition.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That only goes to show that I should be careful not to make these promises.

Mr. BERGERON. But the Minister of Public Works might have changed his mind. I remember that when he spoke about building dredges it was a new departure for the department. He declared that it was done because the dredges in Canada were in the hands of Conservatives, and he did not want to use them, and thought it better that the dredges should belong to the Government.

Mr. DAVIN. I really think we ought to take some steps as a committee to bind on the mind of the Minister of Finance, the acting Minister of Public Works, the conviction of the necessity of obeying the Order in Council and the law in the two particulars which I had the honour of bringing before the committee. There is another reason why we should do so. I see my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) behind the Minister of Finance, and there is great danger lest the Bourassian philosophy should have completely captivated the mind and conscience of the present Government, and therefore even a promise is not enough. We must invent some chains that will be even stronger than the chains of a promise, because the Bourassian philosophy is this, that when you utter an opinion or a promise, it only means that you utter your state of mind at that particular time, and if on the following day your mind should change, then the promise is of no effect. Then, there is another thing: That philosophy, as expressed by my hon. friend, does not fully explain this Ministry. We have had a more recent and, I think, probably, a more authoritative utterance from the head of the Government, who states his philosophy to be that the object is not to do good or to do right or to carry sound principle into effect, but to satisfy people. I exceedingly regret that the right hon. First Minister should have carried my hon. and learned friend away with him into so depraved a path of statesmanship. That philosophy would explain much. It will explain what up to the present has been the inexplicable, and tortuous, and extraordinary course of this Government. It will explain its course with regard to the tariff, and the plebiscite, and a hundred and one things in which it has completely falsified all its promises. Take that very thing we are discussing. If, when the Conservative Government had office, there was an item of $186 for fireworks, Chinese lanterns and other things that we could not account for, expressly such items which naturally give rise to suspicion—magic lanterns, for instance, Japanese lanterns, rockets, torches, and this most suspicious of all, "sundries," we would have heard no end of objection from hon. gentlemen opposite.

What is there underneath these "sundries"? Sundries, $54.20, just about the amount that would have to be paid for certain interesting cases that might be put on board to meet the exigencies of a little trip, such as the one the Minister of Public Works made up to the Indian school near Winnipeg. I want to know what is behind those sundries.

Mr. TAYLOR. The sundries were done up in cases, and the cases were charged for.

Mr. DAVIN. Cases, $4.75. I say that if, when the Conservative Government was in power, an item such as that appeared in the Estimates, we would have had—but where is the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen)? Not merely is that mellifluous voice silent, but his very seat is empty. He seems to have had a premonition that an item like this was coming up, and got out of the way. Many a time and oft have I seen that hon. gentleman get up, like a sheeted ghost, to criticise some small items—items connected with napkins at Rideau Hall, spittoons, and so on—for I must give my hon. friend great credit for this. In his absence I will not attack him. He has a genius for the infinitely little. If parties were reversed, we would have my hon. friend here, dwelling for hours on this one detail of the very large item we are asked to vote. I say here, in all seriousness, that, for the credit of the Parliament of Canada, for the credit of this committee, for the credit of the Opposition, for the satisfaction of the people of Canada, an item like this should not be allowed to be swept away with a wave of the hand on the part of the acting Minister of Public Works. I have no doubt whatever that the hon. gentleman has had many a difficult hour in Council with the redoubtable Minister of Public Works. No doubt there was many a stormy scene over that Council board, but that hon. gentleman is now away, and what language do we get from the man that we ought to depend on, to use Alexander Mackenzie's language, to lie on his arms in order to defend the treasury, with regard to this item of $186? He says: I really cannot tell you anything about it. But the bill must be in the Department of Public Works, and if it were produced, we would have an idea of what the sundries were. Otherwise, there will be a feeling in the minds of the committee that the hon. gentleman does not want to explore the secrets of this special item. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance need not be surprised, if we should be reluctant to take a course that might cast discredit upon our duties in Opposition, and I regret that particulars of this item have not been brought down.

We have, besides, a violation of that safeguard which the Government of Canada, in better and happier days, put into operation in order to prevent too great a drain on the public purse. This precaution is, however, cast to the winds by an hon. Minister who tells us that he would like to expend all our public moneys by day's labour. He would like to trample under his heel the obligation to call for tenders. Of course, in the absence of the Minister of Public Works, the cause of whose absence we deeply regret, we cannot expect the Minister of Finance to be versed in all the details, but we can expect him to be open and frank.

That is a thing we are accustomed to. And, although I shall feel obliged, however reluctantly, to let this item go, so far as I am concerned, nevertheless I record my protest that it is a most unsatisfactory state of things that an important detail like this is absolutely without explanation. I see before me the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint). He is silent—he, the representative in this House of the Dominion Alliance, although this item of "sundries, $54.20, cases and cartage, $4.75," remains unexplained. It is a sight that is far from edifying. Here is a man we would naturally expect to be up and demanding in stentorian tones what was underneath that item. I do not wonder that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) buries his attention in a book and seeks to avoid the unpleasantness of this debate; but I should expect the member for Yarmouth, on his left, would rise and in that earnest way that he knows so well how to assume, ask what was beneath this "sundries, $54.20; cases and cartage, $4.75."

Mr. BENNETT. Before the resolution carries, considering the large amount involved and the unsatisfactory expenditure in the past year, I beg to move this resolution:

That in the expenditure of $354,000, St. Lawrence Ship Channel (item No. 150), no work shall be performed exceeding $5,000 in value, and no materials exceeding $5,000 in value should be purchased, unless public tenders shall have been first invited and the lowest tender accepted.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) desires to move that, I would suggest that it would be better done in the House. I do not say that it could not be done in committee, but it would be rather inconvenient to put it as an amendment to a particular item. It would be better at a later stage.

Mr. HAGGART. It would be perfectly correct to do it in the committee.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. But it would be inconvenient; it would have to be done by way of amendment to my motion that the appropriation pass.

Mr. WILSON. The Government might accept it. It is only asking that that shall be done which is customary, and I do not see how there can be any objection.

Mr. DAVIN.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If we are to discuss this seriously, I would only say that it is not possible to lay down any universal rule in this matter. There must be some discretion which the Government must exercise, for which they must be responsible to Parliament. Even though we lay it down as a general principle, there are cases, as the law itself contemplates, in which it should not be followed. The law seems to contemplate that where it can be conveniently done, and where it is in accordance with the public interest, there should be public tender and contract. But the statute provides that it shall not be a universal rule, or a law that shall not be departed from.

Mr. TAYLOR. It makes it obligatory.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, the statute does not say so. The statute in this case is the Public Works Act, and it provides that the Minister shall advertise for tenders except in cases of urgency or cases in which, in his opinion, the work can be best done by the servants of the Government.

Mr. BENNETT. This motion has not reference to expenditure of the past, but to the proposed expenditure of $354,000. Now, it cannot be argued that the Government have not to-day a full idea as to how this money is to be expended; and this resolution only asks them to confine themselves in the expenditure of this amount to the system of tender and contract. If my motion is in order, I would ask that it be put.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). It might as well be understood what this resolution means. It strikes a blow at the vote. The vote is moved for and this is by way of amendment. If the amendment is carried the vote is lost.

Mr. BERGERON. Not at all.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In effect it is. It places limitations upon the expenditure which would make the service unmanageable, and cannot be accepted.

Mr. TAYLOR. It will prevent the spending of $186.50 for Japanese lanterns, torches, &c.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not at all; the Government can spend all they like on fireworks, &c.; it only means that they should ask for tenders before they do it.

Mr. BENNETT. Let it be attached simply as a rider to the item.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) is serious, it should be understood that this motion and the vote upon it will not go upon record. It is a very good way of airing a little fad without putting oneself upon record. But if he wishes to go upon record and assert a principle, he should move it on concurrence.

Mr. BENNETT. I can do it on concurrence too, and divide the House upon it.

Mr. McNEILL. The hon. Minister (Sir Louis Davies) speaks about fads, but it seems a rather good fad to ask that the public money be properly expended.

Mr. BENNETT. If the acting Minister will state that in this expenditure no amounts exceeding $5,000 for work to be done and materials to be furnished will be spent without tender and contract, I will withdraw the motion.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not think it would be politic for me to make a promise of this kind. We will have to ask the House to give us this money with whatever limitations the law and the practice of the department imposes. If further limitations need be brought about, that can be done by amendment to the statute. Beyond saying that we will comply with the law, I do not feel like making promises in the name of the absent Minister of Public Works.

Mr. BERGERON. Why cannot the Government of Canada do the same as the large companies? Why buy putty by the pound, nails by the pound, oil by the gallon, and so on? Why not do as the Canadian Pacific Railway or the Grand Trunk Railway or the Pullman Palace Car Company do—call for tenders for everything they require during the year, and buy it at the lowest possible price? What the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) asks is simply that the Government of Canada shall do its business in as businesslike a way as these large companies. What we want is to lay down rules so that it will be impossible for the Minister to squander any public money. The Minister of Finance knows that lots of this money has been squandered, and spent for nothing. It seems almost impossible to hold the Minister of Public Works to the law. Nobody has ever been able to do it, and I imagine nobody ever will be able to do it. But the Minister of Finance, as one of his colleagues, is responsible for all these things, and he should be willing to put the Department of Public Works under proper checks, not only for the sake of the country, but for the sake of the credit of the Government. My hon. friend, I presume, desires to remain in public life, and he should be anxious to preserve the credit of the Government and prevent anything like a waste of public money in any of the departments. I think he should be glad to accept a motion like this. I do not see why we should have to divide the House upon it at all, after the revelations that have been made.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No revelations have been brought before the House to-night which reflect the shadow of discredit upon the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) or anybody connected with the department. There may be, for aught I know, expenditures in these accounts where prices have been paid higher than should be, but, if so, we have had no evidence of the fact, and no attempt to establish that fact before the most competent tribunal for that purpose, although I am bound to believe that if it was possible for hon. gentlemen to show anything in this respect not fair, just and proper, they would have done so before the Public Accounts Committee. I know why they do not go there; it is because they are satisfied that they could prove nothing wrong. They would be glad to go there if they felt they had a good case. I accept at once the view that it is desirable we should buy in the cheapest possible way, providing we can get as good material, and if you buy at a fair price I do not object to any Minister giving the preference to his own political friends, always provided that fair and reasonable prices are paid. But the law on the statute-book, I think, is ample. If hon. gentlemen desire to make it more stringent, their proper course is to amend the law. I do not think any good end can be served by the amendment which has been moved. It would be placing a limitation upon this vote which could not possibly be carried out, and in that way it would be a blow at a service for which that vote stands.

Mr. McNEILL. The rule of the last Government was that work of this kind should be carried out by public tender.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Was that the case in the Curran bridge?

Mr. McNEILL. I understand it was. At all events, it was the general principle adopted by the late Government, and if hon. gentlemen opposite were able to put their finger upon any case where that general principle was not carried out, this Chamber rang with denunciations of the Government on every such occasion. Now, we are simply asking them to carry out the general principle in reference to this expenditure, and I think it will be very much better in the public interest that we should agree to it without a division at all.

Mr. HENDERSON. It seems to me that the point taken by the Minister of Finance against members on this side of the House for not raising this question in the Public Accounts Committee, is not well taken. There are fully one hundred, if not one hundred and fifty, members of this House who are not members of that committee. For my part I have been in this House some eleven sessions, and I was never on the Public Accounts Committee, and never had an opportunity of seeing a single account through that committee. Now, if hon. members who are members of that committee have not asked for these accounts, I do not think I should be debarred from getting information simply because other members of the committee have not thought fit to take that course. I think in the interest of all the members of the House who are not members of that committee, the Minister of Finance ought to grant the request that has been made and bring down this information to the House.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What information?

Mr. HENDERSON. The information that has been repeatedly asked for in regard to these items of expenditure, and that have not yet been explained. It has been stated that there are some very suspicious items indeed.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Who says that?

Mr. HENDERSON. It has been stated by members on this side of the House that there are items of a suspicious character. Take, for example, the cost of these Chinese lanterns, and rockets, and torches, and a number of other things, particularly the sundries. I want information with regard to these items, and I am unable to give an intelligent vote without that information. I hope the Minister of Finance will let the matter stand until he brings down the information; or, perhaps, from his deputy who sits close by him, he may be able to get the information to which the House is entitled before we pass this item.

Amendment negatived.

Public Works—

Ontario—River Kaminstiquia ..... $13,000

Mr. BERGERON. What are the works being carried on there now?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This vote is required to continue the work of dredging in the River Kaminstiquia to attain a depth of 20 feet to the Canadian Pacific Railway elevator.

Mr. BERGERON. I would like to know why the Government are expending that money in the River Kaminstiquia? Do I understand that this money is to be expended between the elevators of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the entrance of the river?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. From the entrance of the river to the elevator of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. BERGERON. I always understood that there was a very great depth of water there, and I cannot understand how this work can be necessary.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The information I have is, that between the 2nd of July and the 9th of November, 1898, the dredge "No. 9" was engaged in Kaminstiquia River. Resuming operations where left off last year, between McKellar and Mission rivers, the dredge made a further cutting of 3,629 feet long, having an average width of 190 feet, to a depth of 20 feet, arriving nearly opposite the mouth of the Mission River. A cutting was also made opposite the new steel elevator of 562 feet in length and 150 feet in width, to within 40 feet of the dock; also to a depth of 20 feet at low water. A shoal was also removed at the mouth of the Mission River, 370 feet wide, to a depth of 16 feet. The materials removed, consisting of hard pan, boulders and sand, amounted to 146,450 cubic yards; cost, $6,701.91.

Mr. HAGGART. That is what was done last year. What do you propose to do this year?

Mr. BERGERON. How much has that work cost already?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The total to March, 1899, is $250,725.66.

Mr. BERGERON. Is there any sign that there will be an end to it? Is there any quicksand that fills in the channel and has to be removed?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It will take a couple of seasons' work of a similar character to complete it.

Mr. BERGERON. Do I understand that there is quicksand, or any such kind of earth, that fills in the channel?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The bottom is silt, sand and mud.

Mr. BERGERON. Could the engineer not find a way of putting the entrance of the river in such a condition that we will not be called upon to vote money for this work every year? Would it not be better to construct some kind of masonry there?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am advised that the cost of masonry would be enormous, and that, while the present method is somewhat expensive, that would be more so.

Mr. HAGGART. Do I understand that the harbour silts up every year?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. What would be the cost of removing that? How many yards are there?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Last season's operations cost 4 6-10ths cents per yard.

Mr. BERGERON. Is the work done by our own dredge?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The work was done by our own dredge.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). I know that part of the country, and I know that they have to do some work every year, as there is quicksand in the entrance. The object is to furnish a harbour for steamers running in there to connect with the railway.

Hallfax Drill Hall (including lapsed amount ($6,389).....	$13,000
Kentville public building .....	15,500
Liverpool public building.....	12,000
Windsor public building (reconstruction of building destroyed by fire, 17th October, 1897).....	3,500
Windsor Drill Shed (reconstruction of building destroyed by fire, 17th October, 1897).....	1,900
	$45,900

Mr. BERGERON. Is this drill shed at Halifax finished?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This appropriation finishes the drill shed at Halifax.

Mr. BERGERON. And there will be no more asked for it?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not at present. It is a completed work; but there may be something asked for maintenance.

Mr. BERGERON. But this finishes the construction?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. PRIOR. What is the total cost of this drill hall?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The total cost, including this amount, is $275,000.

Mr. PRIOR. What is the size of it?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is 304 x 160, inclusive of a projection 20 x 65.10, and four projecting circular turrets.

Mr. PRIOR. Was it needed?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Halifax is rather an important military centre. The old drill shed had been built before confederation, and had simply decayed away.

Mr. BENNETT. Has the work of building the Kentville and Liverpool public buildings been commenced?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The work at Liverpool is under construction. The work at Kentville has not been commenced, but the site has been acquired.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the building at Kentville?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is a public building—customs-house, post office, &c.

Mr. BERGERON. What will it cost?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Twenty thousand dollars.

Mr. DAVIN. What is the population of Kentville?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). About 3,000.

Mr. DAVIN. What is the population of Liverpool?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is a little less.

Mr. BERGERON. Does my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) remember what was said about the Laprairie post office?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I remember what was said about the Liverpool post office.

Mr. BERGERON. Will this complete the Kentville building—$15,500 this year, and $5,000 last year.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No. At the time that estimate was prepared it was anticipated that there would be some expenditure at the close of the last year. With the contemplated expenditure this would have completed it, but no work having been done, before the close of the year, this will not complete it. The total, however, will be about $20,000.

Mr. HAGGART. Will the work be done by contract?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In the case of the Liverpool building a contract was awarded after public advertisement, and I presume the same method will be followed in the case of Kentville.

Mr. BERGERON. Does not the hon. Minister think that it should be done by contract?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In the case of the particular building in my own constituency, I did think so.

Mr. WILSON. I would like to ask the hon. Minister if $20,000 is to be the cost of these buildings?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No; I think the Liverpool building will cost less. The Kentville one is the more expensive.

Mr. WILSON. One will be $20,000, and the other will be how much?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Liverpool building will cost $17,000.

Mr. WILSON. What is the population?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is about 3,000 or less. It is the shire town of the county.

Mr. BRITTON. What was the cost of the building in Napanee?

Mr. WILSON. Something over $50,000, and it is one of the best buildings of the kind in Ontario.

Mr. BRITTON. What is the population of Napanee ?

Mr. WILSON. About 3,500.

Mr. BERGERON. It shows that hon. gentlemen opposite were no better than we were, though they believed they were.

Mr. WILSON. I recollect that my hon. friend (Mr. McMullen) shed a great many tears over that building, and that he opposed every building of that kind. I think myself perhaps, there was more money expended than there should have been, but I may say that I always took the ground that when public moneys were being expended, my county should have a fair share, and I think that is right. I do not find fault with gentlemen doing business in that way, except that they denounced it when we did it, and it is not a satisfactory answer for them to say: It was wrong when you did it, but we are justified in doing it because you did it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend (Mr. Wilson) will see that if his friends spent $50,000 on a building in Napanee, and we are spending only $20,000 in a place of more importance, we are making great progress in the right direction.

Mr. WILSON. But I will not admit that there is any town of more importance than Napanee.

Mr. HAGGART. Unless we get a promise that these buildings will be erected by contract and tender, I give the Minister notice that he may expect a division of the House.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is a fair question for argument.

Windsor, N.S., public building..... $8,500

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. These votes will complete the drill-shed and public building in Windsor, N.S. Immediately after the fire there was great distress, and the Minister (Mr. Tarte) undertook to build these.

Mr. BENNETT. Has the Kentville building been commenced ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The site has been acquired.

Mr. BENNETT. Do I understand the Minister to say that he will give no assurance that public tenders will be asked for ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In the case of the Liverpool building it was done by public tender and contract. The hon. gentleman has asked a fair and proper question, but I would prefer he would ask it later on.

Mr. BENNETT. If the promise is not given that these buildings will be erected by public tender and contract, I shall move that this item be struck out.

Mr. WILSON.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The usual practice is to have new buildings erected by public tender and contract, and I have no desire that that rule shall be departed from. I fully understand that will be done. It has been the practice in the past, and I should certainly recommend it myself.

Mr. KAULBACH. Is it the intention of the Government to erect a public building at Bridgewater, N.S., which I inquired about some evenings ago ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. While I warmly sympathize with the condition of affairs in Bridgewater, I am afraid I cannot at present anticipate the supplementary Estimates. However, I may say that the supplementary Estimates will be brought down at the opening of the House tomorrow, and I am afraid my hon. friend (Mr. Kaulbach) will not be as well pleased as I would like him to be.

Mr. KAULBACH. It is very unfair that the people of Bridgewater should be disappointed in the matter of a public building, for they are deserving of one; far more deserving than some other towns in the Dominion that got public buildings. I trust the Government will consider the way the people of Bridgewater are suffering in consequence of that sad calamity by fire, through which the whole business centre of the town was destroyed. The revenue from the town of Bridgewater warrants the Government in granting this appeal, which I urgently make on their behalf. In refusing it, I believe the Government are standing in their own light. I ask it not as a favour, but I ask it as a right, and I ask now that the Minister should place an amount in the Estimates so that this work may be proceeded with at once.

Marysville, N.B., public building..... $3,000

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This building has not been commenced. The vote was placed in the Estimates by the late Government, and it has been carried on.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not exactly understand how under the statute, these buildings can be erected except by contract and tender. The Minister (Mr. Fielding) seems to think there is some discretion in the matter. There is no discretion under the Act so far as I can understand, unless it is a case of pressing urgency.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend will see that the Act is more than that. I am not saying they should not be erected by tender, but I think the Government have power to erect them without tender if they wish.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) says there is something else in the statute ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I know there is something else in the statute, but there is nothing else which justifies what the hon. gentleman evidently suggests. There is this further in the statute: The case where from the nature of the work it can be more expeditiously and economically executed, by the officers and servants of the department. But I do not understand that authorizes the construction of any of these buildings by days' work. I should suppose that the officers and servants of the department referred to in the statute, are the permanent officers and servants of the department. It does not mean that you can employ persons to construct the building by days' work, and then say that you are within the meaning of the statute because these persons are officers of the department within the meaning of the statute, for to my mind it is perfectly clear they are not. Therefore, it does not seem to me that this further provision of the statute at all assists the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) in what he suggests.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend (Mr. Borden) was not present during the earlier part of the evening when we threshed this out in relation to another branch of the public works. The view which we have taken, and the view which we claim has always been taken of that statute, is: that this is a question in which the Minister must exercise his own discretion. Somebody must determine whether it is or not in the public interest to depart from the first provision of the statute, and that somebody is the Minister of Public Works. Of course he must come to Parliament and justify his conclusion. As a matter of law, the late Government and this Government held, that the Minister did have power to construct a work without public tender. However, in relation to public buildings the practice has been to ask for public tenders, and I have no desire that that practice should be departed from.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to make myself clear. There are two exceptions mentioned in the statute: One the case of pressing urgency, and to a certain extent the Minister must be the judge of that; but if he judges on ridiculous and absurd grounds that there is a case of pressing urgency, when it is perfectly obvious to every one but himself there is not a case of pressing urgency, he is of course responsible to Parliament and should be censured by Parliament. I am speaking now altogether apart from the Order in Council. With respect to the other branch of the section, namely, the case in which from the nature of the work it can be more expeditiously and economically executed by the officers and servants of the department; that is a case in which the construction of the statute is involved. I would not have very much doubt that what I suggested a moment ago is the true construction of it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Who is to be the judge of whether it would be more expeditiously and economically performed by the officers of the department?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman does not grasp my meaning. What I say is that "officers and servants of the department," do not include men hired for the purpose of erecting a public building. It seems to me to include only officers and servants who are regularly or permanently or continuously in the employ of the department. If a contrary interpretation has been placed on the statute, either by this Government or by the late Government, I would, of course, put forward this view with a good deal of diffidence; but it is a matter which I think might fairly be submitted for the opinion of the Minister of Justice, and I would be very much surprised if he took a different view from the one I have indicated to the committee.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Perhaps I should hesitate, as a layman, to express an opinion on this question; but I think the construction which the hon. gentleman wishes to place on the law is a very forced one. I would say that the intention is that on certain conditions—whether these conditions are wise or not is not a question of law—a building or other public work may be constructed by the officers or servants of the Government. If the hon. gentleman means to imply that that means the deputy, the clerks and the permanent staff, there could be no such construction at all, because any one must see at once that they could not construct a building. It must mean persons employed from time to time by the Government; not permanently, because mechanics, except in a limited degree, are not permanently employed by the Government. I would suggest that to my hon. friend as showing that his construction is a forced one.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not agree with that at all. I am more familiar with the Department of Railways and Canals, which has a number of skilled mechanics and workmen permanently in its employ in the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. I understand that the statute refers to these men; and, having these men, the Minister must judge whether a work can be more advantageously constructed by them or by contract. But the statute cannot apply to a case where you employ men solely for the purpose of constructing a public building or other public work.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman's interpretation is helped, of course, by the fact that the Department of Railways has a number of men permanently in its employ. But that construction could not be applied, except in a very limited sense, to the Department of Public Works and it is not the construction that has been applied either by the present or the late Government.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman speaks positively as to the construction of the late Government. I was always of opinion that the interpretation given to the Act by my hon. friend was the interpretation given to it by the late Government. There is a slight anomaly in the Order in Council, I admit, where it mentions the $5,000 limit. There is no limitation in the statute. The Department of Railways and Canals had a number of men on the canals, on the Intercolonial Railway and on other public works, permanently employed from one year's end to the other; and where work was to be done, such as improving the entrance to the Welland Canal or building a bridge over the Lachine Canal, it was within the discretion of the Minister to say whether he would do it by means of the permanent employees of the Government or by contract; but it was never contemplated that such a discretion should be exercised in the case of a new building.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The principal item of increase is in the case of the quarantine station at Grosse Isle; otherwise the votes are about the same as before. There is a vote of $14,000 to make provision for the construction of a water system, including basins and water closets, at the Grosse Isle quarantine station.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the first item of $12,000 for renewals, improvements, repairs, &c., of Dominion public buildings?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is the usual vote for small repairs for all buildings in the province of Quebec.

Mr. BERGERON. What was done at the Benthier post office for which there was some money voted last year and the year before?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The building was reconstructed and is now occupied. About $5,000 was spent.

Mr. BERGERON. Who made the valuation of the house that was bought?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The Deputy Minister of Public Works visited the district for the purpose of inquiring into the valuation and obtained his valuation from the assessor's books.

Mr. BERGERON. What legal work did Mr. Chenevert do for the $50 paid him?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He was searching the title.

Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. BERGERON. That was done by the registrar.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Both these gentlemen were employed—one a lawyer and the other a notary. One searched the title and the other prepared the deed.

Mr. BERGERON. Who supplies the light to the Montreal public buildings?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Royal Electric Light Company.

Mr. BERGERON. Were tenders asked for?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am informed not. The arrangement prior to that was made with the "Gazette" Publishing Company, but by the new arrangement we effect a considerable saving. The arrangement with the "Gazette" company was three-quarters of a cent per lamp per hour, and the arrangement now is three-fifths of a cent. There is a small increase in the number of lights, but a very material saving has been effected by the change.

Mr. TAYLOR. What is the cost per light per annum?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The amount paid to the "Gazette" Printing Company was $6,911.52 in 1896-97, and the amount for the present year is $4,424.32, being a saving of $2,500.

Mr. TAYLOR. How many lights?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. 399 at present.

Mr. TAYLOR. What was the cost of installing these lights?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The installation was already the property of the Government, having been purchased from the "Gazette."

Mr. BERGERON. Why then does the hon. Minister ask a vote for installing the electric light?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This vote does not contemplate any installation in the post office, but in other buildings in Montreal.

Mr. BERGERON. Here is an item for covering the roof with copper. Were tenders called for in that case?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Who had the contract, and what was his price, and how many tenderers were there and their prices?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The contractor was Joseph Lamarche. I cannot tell the hon. gentleman at the moment how many other tenderers there were or what their tenders were. The contract given to Mr. Lamarche was for $9,400. I will get the other information for the hon. gentleman later on.

Mr. BERGERON. If the contract is for $9,400, how is it that we are asked for $7,000? Was money spent upon it before?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The vote includes other things than the work done by Mr. Lamarche. The total work is $14,999. The expenditure up to the 31st December, 1898, was $211.32, and up to the 30th June, 1900, it is expected to be $7,768, making a total of $7,979. The vote is in round numbers, $7,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Is the public clock in this building in good order?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is not working very well.

Mr. BERGERON. Is there anything to be done to it? It is a very deceiving clock, and I have heard many complaints about it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We would not like anything for which this Government is responsible to deceive anybody. The clock shall have attention.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not see anything in the Quebec vote for a post office and public building at Valleyfield, that was promised by the Minister of Public Works last fall.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I cannot give the hon. gentleman any information in that case.

Mr. BERGERON. I am surprised not to see an amount here for this purpose, because in November last, in the last local election the Minister of Public Works promised at a public meeting solemnly that a large amount of money would be placed in the Estimates for a public building at Valleyfield. The town deserves it. It is a town of over 11,000 people; it has a custom-house, excise office and a post office entirely too small for the accommodation of the public. Of course, my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) cannot tell me whether there is an item in the supplementary Estimates. I suppose the agreeable surprise is in store for me of seeing this in the Estimates.

Public Buildings—Ontario—

Arnprior public building (revote of lapsed amount).....	$ 3,400
Dominion Public Buildings, renewals, improvements, repairs, &c.....	10,000
Ingersoll post office, &c.....	10,000
Kingston drill hall.....	40,000
Ottawa Public Buildings—
Repairs to masonry walls.....	4,000
Langevin Block, improvement to fire-proof character of the attic and roof, including steel shelving and additional vault accommodation...	24,000
Rat Portage post office, &c. (proper site given free of cost by municipality)..	14,000
Sarnia post office, &c.....	10,000
Toronto Dominion Buildings, improvements, renewals, repairs, &c.....	6,000
Woodstock post office, &c.....	20,000

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). I do not see any item here for the public buildings it was proposed to build in Alexandria. I would like some information as to the cost of the work so far done and of the site. If the hon. Minister has not that information at hand, perhaps he could furnish it later.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will promise my hon. friend during the discussion of the supplementary Estimates to give the information he desires.

Mr. TAYLOR. As to the Arnprior public buildings, I notice on page Q-44 of the Auditor General's Report, an account of the Arnprior Electric Light Company wiring 31 lights and two switches, $49.50. That amounts to $1.50 per light. I would like the hon. Minister to compare that with the price paid for installing lights in this building—$3.50 or thereabouts?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The wiring of a new building is always less expensive than the wiring of an old one.

Mr. TAYLOR. Not much.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think that any builder will tell the hon. gentleman that it makes a considerable difference.

Mr. TAYLOR. This is all that is paid in my own town, even for old buildings, and it is not necessary to buy a thousand lights as you have here in order to get it done to that price. There is another item in connection with Arnprior post office. I notice Mr. J. W. Tierney, a gentleman whom we had before the Public Accounts, and where it was proved he was a party heeler running a dry goods store, is paid $2 a day for 335 days, which includes Sunday and every day from July until May. Six hundred and seventy dollars has been paid this young storekeeper for being clerk of works.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have some recollection of that case. I recollect this gentleman, while not a practical mechanic, and, perhaps, therefore, open to this criticism, was a man of exceptional intelligence, and acquitted himself before the committee admirably. The price paid him was only that which has been customary to pay in all other cases. I believe subsequently a practical mechanic was placed in charge of the work.

Mr. TAYLOR. I want to ask if he is in charge yet, and is still drawing his pay.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Mr. Tierney, I understand, has not been in the service for a considerable time. The gentleman who has been in charge since is Mr. Marina. Mr. Tierney has not been there for some months. I suppose the inspector would have to be there until the contract is taken off the parties' hands.

Mr. PETTET. I notice several items here for the province of Ontario. I want to call the attention of the Minister to the fact that the late Government purchased a lot in the town of Picton for a public building, and I think the last year that they were in office they voted $13,000 for the purpose of constructing a public building at that place. The present Government for some reason struck that item out. I think we have strong claims in the county of Prince Edward for a public building. We have never received any expenditure of public money in that county, not even a subsidy to a railway or a public dock, with the exception of a vote which has been spent in Picton harbour. That is the only money spent in the county since confederation. I want to draw the attention of the Government to the fact that Picton is our county town, it has about 4,000 of a population, two large canning factories, two large seed houses, a tannery, a foundry, and other institutions; so, therefore, I think we are entitled to some expenditure of that kind.

Mr. McALISTER. Can the Minister say what is the population of the town of Ingersoll?

Mr. WILSON. I wish to say with reference to public buildings in the town of Picton, that there was an appropriation made by the old Government for a building in that town, and I think a site has been bought for the building. I am of the opinion that there are very few towns in Ontario that better deserve a public building than the town of Picton. It is a beautiful and an enterprising town, and the Government have already got the site. I think, as this Government has carried out so much of the policy of the old Government, that it might go a step farther and make an appropriation for a public building in Picton.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The speeches of the hon. gentlemen respecting Picton interest me very much. Let those gentlemen remember the old adage: If at first you don't succeed, try, try again. The hon. member for Restigouche (Mr. McAlister) asked me the population of Ingersoll. I understand by the last census it was 4,200, I presume it has increased since.

Mr. McALISTER. Has anything been done towards erecting this post office?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, the contract has been issued. The contract price is $13,437.

Mr. HENDERSON. I take no exception to this vote to erect a public building in the town of Ingersoll. But I wish to say that it seems to me a wrong principle has been adopted, not only by the present Government, but possibly by the late Government, in the erection of public buildings in the different counties in the province of Ontario especially, with which I am acquainted.

Mr. FIELDING.

Now, I say candidly, that I do not approve of the general principle of erecting an expensive building in any town of 2,000 or even 3,000 population. There is not only the first expenditure, but there is a continuous expenditure in taking care of the building. A caretaker has to be paid as well as the postmaster, and altogether it takes up too much of the revenue when a building costing $15,000 to $20,000 is erected for the purpose of a post office in a town even of the size of Ingersoll. I would urge upon the Government to adopt the principle that where there are four or five towns or villages of a reasonable size in a county, instead of erecting one public building at a large expense, say $30,000, that money should be divided into four or five parts, and four or five buildings should be erected in the different towns and villages throughout the county. In the county I have the honour to represent there are five incorporated towns and villages of about the same population, and we are without a public building altogether in the county. It would appear from the policy adopted by the present Government as well as by the policy adopted by the late Government, that until we have a town of something like 2,500 of a population or over, we will never be entitled to a public building. Instead of asking the Government to expend $30,000 in the erection of one public building even in a county town, I would ask the Government to divide that sum into five different parts, say $6,000 each. You can erect five different buildings, good substantial brick buildings, sufficient for the purposes of a post office and a residence for the postmaster. A building costing $6,000 would be sufficiently commodious to accommodate the post office, and also to afford a residence for the postmaster, who would be the caretaker of the building. In this way the Government would have a fireproof vault for the protection of the mails and the property of the public. Not only that, but they would save the expense of the rental which is yearly paid to these postmasters for the different offices throughout the county. I may say in my own county the post offices are too small. In the evenings and in the mornings when the mails come in, there is a great deal of crowding and inconvenience for lack of accommodation. Until the Government provides some better buildings or furnishes a larger rental, we cannot expect the postmasters to furnish a more extended accommodation than they do now. I hope the Minister of Finance, who is at the present time acting as Minister of Public Works will bear this suggestion in mind. I am under the impression that when I brought this matter up last year it received the favourable consideration of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and I hope he will look favourably upon the suggestion at this time. The Government will certainly not be the losers. Money is cheap, and if the money has to be borrowed for this purpose it will be saved to the country in the rentals which will not be required to be paid after these buildings have been erected. I hope the hon. Minister will bear this suggestion in mind, that he will draw the attention of the hon. Minister of Public Works to it on his return, and that throughout the country generally a policy of that kind will be adopted. I am sure it would result to the benefit of the treasury, and the comfort, convenience, accommodation and safety of the general public.

Mr. BENNETT. As to this expenditure of $24,000 in the matter of improving the Langevin Block, is that to be an entire contract for the whole amount, and will tenders be invited?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That work is done by the workmen of the Department of Public Works, with the exception of steel files and shelving and vaults, which, of course, have to be obtained elsewhere.

Mr. BENNETT. If this $24,000 is intended to be expended upon work to be performed by the permanent employees of the department, what proportion of it will be for material, and will this material be purchased by tender? The reason I call the attention of the hon. Minister to the work is that a little time ago some Estimates were passed for this work, ending in the last fiscal year, and a very considerable expenditure has been made without any tenders being invited, although the amount exceeded $5,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I find that, when I referred to the work being done by the men of the department that refers to work which has actually been done. This vote is taken for steel shelving for the Department of the Interior, $10,000, and for a vault for the Post Office Department, $14,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Will tenders be invited for the vault and shelving?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Tenders have already been invited for the vault, and the matter has not yet been determined. In the other case, there are only two firms making shelving, and they are both doing work for the Government.

Mr. BENNETT. Is that to be by public competition or merely asking a few persons for figures?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In a case where there are only a few persons in the trade it would hardly be necessary to go to the expense of advertising. Circulars have been sent out to the few people making these things, and tenders were invited from the people in the trade.

Mr. HAGGART. Does this cover the full amount required?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is an estimate. The tenders are in. An order has been given for the vault, and the price is $13,365.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the name of the firm?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Messrs. J. & J. Taylor, Toronto.

Mr. BERGERON. What is that work—repairs to masonry walls?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Pointing the walls throughout the buildings generally.

Mr. HAGGART. Surely it does not cost that amount?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The amount seems large, but it takes a great deal of money for buildings like these, and if the work is not properly done, they will rapidly go to decay. I discovered the other day a swallow building its nest in the front of this building where there did not seem to be any room. The work proposed is necessary.

Mr. HAGGART. The Minister should get a less prominent place than in the front of this building where we can see the amount of work that is being done every month.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We want to let you see what we are doing.

Mr. BERGERON. Is there any of that money going into Major's Hill Park fence?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the large amount wanted for the Kingston drill hall?

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. I would like to ask the hon. Minister whether an examination has been made of the upper portion of the Victoria Tower, the main tower of this building, where large amounts of stones fell some weeks ago?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, the architect has made an examination of the part of the building to which the hon. gentleman refers.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. In what condition did he find that particular portion of the building?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He found nothing beyond the falling of one piece of stone; but another examination will be made.

Mr. MILLS. While the hon. Minister is speaking of the parliament building, I would like to draw his attention to the reading-room. It is very poorly lighted; you can hardly read the papers in some portions of it. It is the most poorly lighted room in this building, and it should be the best lighted.

The ventilation is also very bad. I draw the hon. Minister's attention to both of these things, and I trust that next session will see an improvement, particularly in the lighting of the reading-room. I congratulate the hon. Minister on having provided a fine light in this Chamber. I think it is a great credit, and if he would extend his improvements in that direction I think it would be a step in the right direction.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I quite agree with the hon. member (Mr. Mills) that we ought to have a good light in the reading-room, and I will call the attention of the department to it.

Mr. HUGHES. While we are on this subject, I would draw the attention of the hon. Minister to the fact that the lavatories and bath-rooms are entirely behind the times.

Mr. BERGERON. You might add that they are very badly kept.

Mr. BENNETT. What proportion of the Rat Portage building has been done, and has the work been done by tender?

Mr. CLARKE. Before passing from that item, might I ask the hon. Minister for the names of the firms asked to submit tenders for shelving.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There are only two concerns, the Office Specialty Company and the Eclipse Furniture Company. They are both doing work for the Government.

Mr. BERGERON. What about the Kingston drill hall?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) asked me about the Rat Portage building. It has been placed under contract.

Mr. BERGERON. To whom?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Mr. William Garson, of St. Catharines, at $18,975.

Mr. BERGERON. How many tenders were received?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Several tenders were received, but I have not the memorandum.

Mr. BERGERON. Cannot the hon. gentleman get the names and the amounts of these tenders?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I can get them later on if the hon. gentleman wishes them.

Mr. HUGHES. Were they tenders or invitations?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Tenders.

Mr. HUGHES. By advertisement?

Mr. MILLS.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Advertisements in the press. The Kingston drill hall will cost $40,000. This is the amount estimated by the chief architect which will be required for carrying the work of the Kingston drill hall during the next financial year.

Mr. BERGERON. Was this work let by contract?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It was let by contract for $61,930, which, of course, does not include heating and furnaces, &c. M. Sullivan and Wm. Langdon, of Kingston, have the contract, and the lowest tender was accepted.

Mr. HENDERSON. Has a site been selected for the Sarnia post office, and if so, which site?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What is known as the Alexander site has been selected.

Mr. HENDERSON. Better known as the Lister site.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The name adds merit to it.

Mr. HENDERSON. You have to go back one generation to get the name of Alexander. Alexander is dead years ago, and from Alexander it came down to Lister.

Mr. McALISTER. Which Lister?

Mr. HENDERSON. Pretty nearly Judge Lister. I must congratulate the Minister on the selection of the site, as I think the Lister site is the proper site for a post office in Sarnia. There were three sites spoken of. The up-town site would have been very expensive, inasmuch as valuable buildings would have to be torn down, if the property were expropriated. The Maclean site was back from the main street, and would not have been desirable. I congratulate the Government on selecting what they call the Alexander site, and I hope the building will be erected there, and no change made.

Mr. BERGERON. What about the Woodstock post office? I am afraid my hon. friend (Mr. Sutherland) will now lose the grievance he had for so many years.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. A site has been purchased in Woodstock for $6,900 from Alexander Watson and Mary E. Adams. No work has yet been done.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it going to be done by tender?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is the usual practice in public buildings, and I presume it will be followed.

Mr. HUGHES. What is the population of Woodstock?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Ten thousand.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not think Woodstock is a bad place to put a post office in.

Mr. CLARKE. What are the details of these proposed alterations and improvements in the public buildings in Toronto?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The chief architect estimates them as follows:—examining warehouse, $2,040; customs-house, $250; inland revenue, $250; post office, $2,415; incidental expense, $1,041; total, $6,000.

Mr. CLARKE. Several deputations have waited upon the Government from time to time, requesting that additions should be made to the drill shed for the accommodation of the cavalry and artillery corps. The Minister will not forget that the city of Toronto purchased the site upon which the drill shed is erected at a cost of $150,000 to the citizens; and the original plan provided for the construction of the cavalry and artillery quarters. Several deputations appeared before the Government, asking for the completion of the original plan of that building, and I would like to ask is it the intention of the Government to place a vote in the supplementary Estimates to complete the drill shed?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is a matter in which the Public Works Department has to be guided to a considerable extent by the advice of the Minister of Militia. I know there has been an agitation for that extension of the drill shed, but I am not able to make any statement to my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) as to what action shall be taken.

Mr. CLARKE. Of course, a much smaller and less expensive site would have suited, if it was not the intention of the Government to complete the building as originally intended. When a deputation wait upon the Minister of Militia about this matter, they are generally referred to the Minister of Public Works. It is certainly necessary that accommodation should be supplied for the different arms of the service in the city. The matter has been brought to the attention of the Government time and again and I was in hopes that provision would be made in the Estimate to complete the drill shed.

Mr. HUGHES. I do not mean to say that the rural corps would expect to have drill sheds built at the expense of the taxpayers of Canada, as the city corps are having drill sheds built for them. But I understood there was to be a proposition this year whereby armouries would be erected for the rural corps. I draw the attention of the Minister to that.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Minister of Militia has brought that matter to the attention of his colleagues, and it is receiving our best consideration.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. I would like to ask whether the Minister of Public Works contemplates the erection of a passenger elevator in the Toronto customs-house?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The matter has been mentioned by the Public Works Department, but I am unable to give my hon. friend (Mr. Robertson) the assurance that it will be done.

Committee rose and reported progress.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. HAGGART. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There was an understanding several days ago between the right hon. the Prime Minister and several hon. gentlemen opposite that to-morrow there would be taken up the Bill relating to the preservation of health on public works; and if it is desired to-morrow that that be done, it will be done; otherwise, we shall go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. BERGERON. There was also the resolution on the Senate.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It was the intention of the Prime Minister to put that on the notice paper. If he has not done so, he will do it to-morrow.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the supplementary Estimates be down to-morrow?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The supplementary Estimates will be on the Table to-morrow.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 12.05 (midnight).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 18th July, 1899.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

DEATH OF HON. MR. GEOFFRION.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). It is only yesterday that we had to deplore the loss of one of our colleagues, and only twenty-four hours later the angel of death has again visited this House and taken a victim from amongst our ranks. I have to announce to the House the very sad news of the death of one of the most esteemed, one of the most popular, and certainly one of the most beloved members of this House, the Hon. Mr. Geoffrion, who died this morning after a very short illness. The House, I am quite sure, does not realize the magnitude of the loss which it has sustained in the death of Mr. Geoffrion. He had only come late into this Parliament, and though he was always a strong party man, he had no taste for political life, and it was only out of the abundance of his heart and generosity that he consented to become a member of this House. In it he never had the opportunity of giving the full measure of the ability that was in him. His influence among us, however, though not actively engaged in politics, was extraordinary, and it was the result of the many eminent qualities with which Providence had endowed him. It resulted from his great talents, his sound judgment, his strength of character, his kind heart and his broad fair mind. All these combined qualities made of him a ruling personality in the sphere in which he moved. In the city of Montreal, of which he was a citizen for more than thirty years, and especially at the bar of that city, he leaves a void which, I am sure, can hardly be measured and cannot be filled. For more than thirty years he was daily engaged in the discharge of his professional duties before the courts. Daily he was giving all the genius of his mind, all the treasures of his intellect, and all his ability to the administration of justice. He was always strong with the bench and popular with the bar. He was a friend of all, no matter to what station they might happen to belong, and his loss to-day is a loss to every man who has anything to do with the administration of justice in Montreal, whatever may be his station. His loss is simply irreparable. We can never have in any man the same amount of prestige and influence which he enjoyed; but if there was in a man so eminently and generously endowed, a quality which was perhaps superior to all others, it was his unfailing kindness of heart. He was my friend for more than thirty-six years, and during all these years I am free to say I never heard from him an unkind word of anybody, and my experience in that respect is the experience of all. He was one of those men who honour mankind, and his whole life was spent in doing good.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I had not the pleasure of the same intimate acquaintance with the late Hon. Mr. Geoffrion as the right hon. leader of the House has enjoyed, but I have seen enough of him and know enough of him to have no hesitation in associating myself in every word that has fallen from the lips of the right hon. the leader of the House. Mr. Geoffrion was known to be, as has been justly said, one of the most able, one of the most influential, and one of the most important members of this Parliament, and he has at all times shown all these qualities for which he has been given credit by the leader of the House. His loss is one, not only to be deplored from a party point of view by hon. gentlemen opposite, but to be deplored alike by every member of the Parliament, of which he was an ornament, and by the whole of the country in which he occupied so prominent and so distinguished a position in every phase and walk of life. I desire to tender my most sincere condolence to the right hon. leader of the Government for the immense loss he has sustained and to say that in the feeling of sorrow by which he is animated, he only experiences that which every member of the House I am sure on both sides experiences.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—RE APPOINTMENT OF JUDGES IN MONTREAL.

Mr. FORTIN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I rise to a question of privilege. In a report made of the few observations which I delivered in this House on the question of appointing additional judges to the Superior Court in the district of Montreal, the Montreal "Gazette" ascribed to me the following words:—

The judges in Montreal and the province of Quebec received the same salary they did thirty years ago, and with the enhanced cost of living. If the judges received more salary, perhaps the work they did would be greater. At any rate, it would be an inducement to the best class of men to accept positions on the bench. The best men could not now be secured, and second-class men, though good to a certain extent, had to be appointed to the positions.

I find in the Montreal "Star" a report pretty much to the same effect. In that paper I am quoted as having said:

The judges in Montreal were receiving to-day the same salaries as they received thirty years ago, though the cost of living had largely increased. He thought the judges would be encouraged to do more and better work if they were more adequately paid. Another feature was that owing to the miserable salaries paid it was impossible to get the best men to accept judgeships, and the positions had to be filled with second-rate men, much to the injury of the judiciary.

Although, Mr. Speaker, I did say something in favour of the idea of increasing the salaries of the judges, I never laid down a proposition so broad as that I have just read, namely, that only second-rate men accepted positions on the bench. What I did say is fairly reported in "Hansard," with perhaps the omission of a couple of words in the sentence which I am now going to quote. I said, as reported in "Hansard":

I may say, however, that it is by no means certain that the appointment of additional judges will do all the good that is expected. Something more than that is required, at least in the district of Montreal, and that is an increase in the salary of the judges. The judges in the district of Montreal receive the same salary to-day that they received thirty years ago, and everybody knows that the cost of living in large cities has greatly increased during the last twenty or thirty years. It seems to me that if the judges received a better salary than they receive to-day, possibly they would perform a greater amount of work; at all events, it would be an inducement to them. We have been told, and it is a matter of notoriety, that some of the legal gentlemen who accepted positions on the bench have done so at a great personal sacrifice.

It is notorious that eminent members of the profession in the district of Montreal, and I may say in all the large centres of population, will not accept a position on the bench for the salary at present attached to that position. The consequence is that the best men cannot be secured, and second-class men, although very good men usually, have to be appointed to these positions.

It is in this last sentence that some words must have been omitted, because what is here said does not logically follow from what precedes. What precedes is this: That some of the legal gentlemen most affected by this have only accepted positions on the bench at personal sacrifice. This refers to a particular case or to some particular cases of some of the judges. What follows is this, that it is notorious that some—not all—of the best men do not accept positions on the bench for the salary attached to that position.

Now, I am charged with having drawn from these particular cases the general conclusion that none but second-class men are appointed to the bench on account of the others refusing such positions. The idea I had in my mind and that I am as positive as it is possible to be that I have pronounced, might be expressed as follows:—

The consequence is that the best men cannot always be secured, and that, in consequence, in some cases, second-class men, although very good men, have to be appointed to these positions.

By the addition of these three or four words, Mr. Speaker, the idea I had in my mind and that I intended to convey is completely expressed, although the subject matter of the proposition might be open to discussion. Now, I say this in all fairness to the gentlemen who occupy positions upon the bench. I had in mind in that debate the position of the judges in the province of Quebec, and, more particularly that of the judges in the district of Montreal. And I would not, for any consideration—such a thing was far from my mind—make any sweeping statement of the nature of that attributed to me applicable to all the judges of the province.

Besides these two newspapers, I have had the honour of being criticised by another important newspaper in the city of Montreal. And the statements attributed to me in that newspaper go even further than those I have quoted and are far from the idea I desired to express on the occasion referred to. I allude now to the newspaper "La Presse." In its issue of Saturday, the 15th inst., under the heading: "Un Mot Malheureux," that newspaper published the following—I read from the French text—

"Si les juges étaient mieux payés, peut-être travailleraient-ils plus. Dans tous les cas, un meilleur salaire déterminerait une meilleure classe d'hommes à accepter ces postes. Aujourd'hui, on ne peut pas obtenir la meilleure qualité, et il n'y a que des gens de seconde classe, quoique bons quand même, qui acceptent d'être juges." Si l'on avait offert une récompense pour la plus grosse ineptie incontestable, personne n'aurait songé à celle-là, et M. Fortin prend d'emblée le premier prix d'incongruité.

Then the article goes on with comments with which, I may say, I myself agree. I must say, Mr. Speaker, that the statements attributed to me by this newspaper are entirely incorrect. I have read that portion of my speech as I delivered it on the occasion referred to, and there is no such statements as is to be found here:

Dans tous les cas, un meilleur salaire déterminerait une meilleure classe d'hommes à accepter ces postes.

And there is surely nothing whatever to justify the sweeping assertions that to-day the best men cannot be obtained, and that none but second-rate men are appointed on the bench. I am the more surprised to find in the newspaper "La Presse," when I read its issue of the 13th July, and not the report of this debate by its correspondent in this House. That report, I may say, is a fair one to me and expresses the idea that I had endeavoured to express. This report of the 13th of July has nothing resembling the words that are attributed to me in the article of the 15th. This is what the correspondent says, and to this I agree:

M. Fortin, député de Laval, appuie chaleureusement le discours de M. Madore, et fait ressortir la position intolérable faite aux avocats et aux plaideurs par l'encombrement des tribunaux de Montréal. Il profite de l'occasion pour faire remarquer que le traitement des juges est actuellement ce qu'il était il y a trente ans, et notoirement insuffisant, maintenant que tout a augmenté de prix.

As may be seen here is the report given by the correspondent, who is supposed to be present in the House, and who makes a fair report of what I said. Nevertheless, two days afterwards words are attributed to me in the same newspaper that I never said, with no other apparent object than to injure my position before the public, and statements are attributed to me that I never did nor intended to pronounce before this House.

I must explain that this is the first opportunity I have had of calling the attention of the House to this subject. This debate took place on last Wednesday, in the afternoon. I left the same evening and only returned to Ottawa last night. Last night after six o'clock was the first opportunity I had of seeing "Hansard," and, as I have stated, to explain the omission of one or two words in one or two sentences of the report.

With this exception, what I said is correct, and I adhere to it; but I repudiate the expression and ideas attributed to me by these newspapers.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I listened with great attention to the interesting speech delivered by the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Fortin), delivered on the occasion referred to, and I have listened to the explanation the hon. gentleman has now given to the House with regard to that speech; but I confess I am greatly at a loss to know why he has called the attention of this House to the subject at all. I understood the hon. gentleman to make two rather important statements. The one was, that if the judges—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not think it is absolutely regular to discuss this question now. I understand that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fortin) raises the question of privilege, and though no motion was made, I take it that he was in order in discussing the question of privilege and drawing the attention of the House to the fact that he had been misrepresented in the newspapers. But I do not think it would be regular to discuss that question—

Mr. DAVIN. I move the adjournment of the House.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am inclined to think, Mr. Speaker, that reference to the precedents will show you that it has been customary, on questions of privilege, to hear remarks upon observations of gentlemen bringing up questions of privilege. I may be mistaken, and, perhaps, it is more regular to have the motion made. I did not want to make a motion, because I did not want to deal so formally with the subject as to require that. But, as the press has been attacked for misreporting, and as the accuracy of "Hansard" has been questioned, I feel it right to say a few words. In the first place, I understood the hon. gentleman to make two statements, both of which were very important. He complained that the salaries of the judges in the province of Quebec were not sufficiently high, and he gave as one reason why the salaries should be increased that if the judges were better paid, they would do more work. That statement, I think, the hon. gentleman will find is made in the "Hansard," although he said that in some instances the judges undoubtedly did give a great deal of time to their work. That was a very important statement, and it is one that I hope is not correct. I hope that the hon. gentleman was entirely mistaken in supposing that any of the judges in the province of Quebec do not discharge their duties fully and completely because they are not better paid. I hope the hon. gentleman is mistaken on that point. But he certainly did lead the House to suppose, or led me to suppose, at all events, that one of the great reasons why a larger amount should be paid to the judges in Quebec was that as the salaries now stand, the best and ablest men at the bar refuse to accept judgeships.

Mr. FORTIN. Some.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Not all, no, I do not think the hon. gentleman said all, and it was unnecessary to say that. If it be a fact that the Government are obliged, in selecting judges for the province of Quebec, to take second-class men as the hon. gentleman himself intimated, because the ablest men at the bar could not be induced, with the present salaries, to accept positions, that is a most important statement.

Mr. FORTIN. The hon. gentleman will allow me to say that I made two statements. First, I said that some of the judges have accepted their positions at great personal sacrifice, and I may cite the instance of Sir Alexander Lacoste, Chief Justice of the Court of Appeals.

Mr. BERGERON. How many more?

Mr. FORTIN. There are a good many more. The second statement I made was that it was well known that some of the best men would not accept, but have positively refused to accept positions on the bench because the salary is insufficient. Now, I did not give this as the only reason for increasing the salary, but the chief reason was in the increased cost of living. The present salaries were established shortly after confederation, over thirty years ago, and since then the cost of living has increased.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That does not at all touch the subject I was dealing with. I was dealing with the statements made as I understand them to be made by the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Fortin), and I was giving what I understood to be the purport of his argument. I do not think that those who listened to him to-day will say that he has in the slightest degree changed the position or altered the argument from what it was. I need not go into the reason why the salaries require to be larger now than in former years. That is another very important consideration. But the great question is this: Are the salaries paid to judges in the province of Quebec sufficient to enable the Government to secure the services of first-class men to fill vacancies on the bench of that province? That is a most important matter. If the hon. gentleman is correct in saying that because of the present salary the best men at the bar in the province of Quebec will not accept judicial positions, and consequently the Government are obliged to take second-class men, to use his own words, that is a very serious matter, and no doubt will receive the careful attention of my right hon. friend the First Minister and of the Government. It is of the first importance that the country should be able to secure the very best and highest talent for these high judicial positions, every person agrees with that. Now, I do not know whether my hon. friend the member for Laval has, in the revised report of his speech, made those corrections to which he refers to-day.

Mr. FORTIN. Yes.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Very well, then we must, of course, take the speech with these corrections, but even then the two great facts that were brought out by the press remain: One is that my hon. friend suggested that better work could be done by the judges, or many of them, if they were better paid; and, secondly, that the salaries are too low to secure the services of first-class men, and therefore the Government are obliged to take second-class men. Now, I felt a little personal interest in this matter, because while the salary remains as it does we are likely to have the pleasure of retaining the presence of my hon. friend from Laval in this House, and we all recognize that it is a great honour and credit to this House to have him amongst us, and we would probably be able to retain him longer if the law remained as it is, and if he was not subjected to the temptation of a higher salary. I merely rise for the purpose of saying that I do not think my hon. friend made out a strong case against the press for having misrepresented him, because I think that the corrections which he has given to his own speech leaves it very much in the position in which we all understood it when it was delivered.

The PRIME MINISTER. I would call the attention of my hon. friend and of the House to the fact that there is nothing to debate at all upon this motion to adjourn, which was made after the remarks of my hon. friend from Laval. My hon. friend from Laval simply availed himself of his right as a member of this House to rise and make a personal explanation, saying that he had been incorrectly reported. Having said that much, there was no occasion at all for raising a debate. Having given the House a statement of what he said on that occasion, the House has only to accept the correction as an accurate version of the remarks which he then offered to the House. I will only say that we are all disposed to accept the correction that he has made to-day of the views which he offered to the House, because if my hon. friend had made the remarks which have since been attributed to him in "La Presse" the same controversy would have arisen at the moment which has arisen since. But the fact that his remarks were not questioned at the time, is a presumption that he has not been correctly reported. I think, perhaps, the most accurate report of his remarks was found in the correspondence of "La Presse," which certainly cannot be found fault with.

Motion to adjourn negatived.

MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY— SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I have the honour to present a Message from His Excellency the Governor General, signed by his own hand:

MINTO.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons, Supplementary Estimates of sums required for the service of the Dominion for the year ended 30th June, 1900, and in accordance with the provisions of "The British North America Act, 1867," the Governor General recommends these Estimates to the House of Commons.

Government House,
Ottawa, 18th July, 1899.

I move that the said Message of His Excellency, together with the Estimates, be referred to the Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to.

BOUNTIES ON STEEL AND IRON.

Bill (No. 161) respecting steel and iron made in Canada (Mr. Fielding) read a second time. The House resolved itself into committee on the Bill.

On section 2,

Mr. MILLS. Does that contemplate that the bounty shall be paid on iron manufactured from foreign ore, or on iron manufactured from Canadian ore only?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). It is a continuation of the existing law. It allows the bounty to be paid on iron made from either native or foreign ore, but there is a discrimination in favour of native ore. That is the existing law, and there is no departure from it.

Mr. HAGGART. Does this permit of a mixture being made?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They get bounty in proportion to the ore used.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to protest against bounty being paid on iron produced from foreign ore. We have a lot of iron ore in Canada, we have many mines capable of development in Ontario, Quebec, the maritime provinces and British Columbia, and if we are going to pay bounties upon the manufacture of iron, it should be upon iron manufactured from ore produced in our own country, so as to encourage the development of our own mines. I have, in my own constituency, no less than two iron mines capable of being developed. One of them was worked for quite a number of years, until three or four years ago, when it was closed down. If this bounty were given upon iron produced from Canadian ore entirely, these mines would be open, and would be developed to-day. I make my protest, not long, but firmly and strongly, against paying a bounty on iron from foreign ore, believing that it should be given only upon iron produced from ore from Canadian mines.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am obliged to differ very strongly from my hon. friend from Annapolis (Mr. Mills), who has just taken his seat. The object, of course, is to create a great iron industry in Canada, and I am inclined to think the course proposed by my hon. friend would have the effect of defeating that object to a large extent. I raised the question, as the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) knows, as to whether Newfoundland ores should be treated as foreign ores. The hon. Minister was not willing, and, I think upon reconsideration, probably with a tolerably fair ground, to accede to my suggestion that we should treat a sister colony as in a different position from a foreign country, but, as my hon. friend thought it would be opening the door rather too wide to do that, I was obliged to agree with the policy which he proposed in regard to this point. But to go so far as the hon. member for Annapolis would suggest, I think, would defeat the entire object of the measure, and I hope my hon. friend will not press that view upon the House. I am quite aware that there are in his county valuable iron mines which will become still more valuable under the operation of this Bill.

Mr. HAGGART. Mr. Chairman, I entirely differ from the views of the hon. leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) upon this important question. I am of the opinion that the principal object of these bounties is not for the working of these smelting furnaces, but for the development of the mines of our own country. The law, as introduced before, I know, admitted a certain percentage of foreign ores into the manufacture of iron and steel. The argument adduced was, that it was necessary to have these ores for the purpose of smelting. What is the object of developing large industries in the shape of manufactures in the country, if the mines of the country are not developed at all? The sole object of this protection ought to be, in the first instance, the working of the mines of the country, so as to encourage their development. For these reasons, I agree with my hon. friend from Annapolis (Mr. Mills), that, with the exception of a percentage of foreign ores which might be necessary for the purpose of smelting our own ores, the protection should be devoted entirely to the development of our own mines.

Mr. MILLS.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am going to apologize to the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) for taking so prominent a part in the discussion of this question. I would not have done it, if the attack had not come behind me. I do not at all relish being attacked in the rear. I will give my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) two reasons opposed to the view which he has advanced. First of all, the Bill of which he was one of the fathers and authors, and which was placed on the statute-book of the country, deals with the question of foreign and domestic ores precisely as this Bill does, so that my hon. friend and the Government of which he was long a member, adopted that policy and are responsible for it. In the next place, I would be glad, if my hon. friend would tell us how he is going to develop iron mines without manufacturing iron? Under this Bill iron mines in every section of Canada will be developed to an extent that otherwise would be absolutely impossible, and they will be developed because under this measure capital will be brought in, which will lead to the establishment of iron industries and create a demand for the iron contained in our own mines.

Mr. WALLACE. Section No. 2, as I understand it, reads that no bounty shall be paid on steel ingots made from puddled iron bars, but that the bounty is to be paid on the puddled iron bars.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. WALLACE. That is, in the first place the bounty is paid on the pig iron, and then the bounty is paid on the puddled iron bar. If I understand it, the steel is made directly from the pig iron and it does not ordinarily go through the process of conversion into malleable iron or puddled iron bars; so that if this were done, it would be simply for the sake of getting the bounty. As to making the bounties payable on the iron ore brought in from Newfoundland, I can heartily endorse the statement made by the leader of the Opposition, that we should pay a bounty on the iron ore brought in from Newfoundland, and for this reason: We are told there is in that colony a kind of iron ore that is not to be found in Canada, or if found in Canada, then at such a distance away from our smelters that it would be economically impossible to transport it. If that ore is found on the northern shores of Lake Superior it would be manifestly impossible to send that ore to Cape Breton or New Glasgow where we now have smelting furnaces. If we are to become a great manufacturing people we must make the pig iron, and there should be no restriction. As to importing the iron ore, we should take that ore wherever we can get it, in Newfoundland, if not in Canada. If they can get it as they do near New Glasgow, they would utilize it there. I think that for other considerations, Newfoundland should not be treated as a foreign nation. We hope to have Newfoundland in our confederation, and we should not by any act of ours now, do anything to alienate the people of that colony. On the contrary we should go a step towards winning them for political reasons. As an economic proposition alone, we should permit the Newfoundland ore to come into Canada and to receive the same bounty that is given for the native ore. It will do more to promote the manufacture of pig iron and steel in this country than anything else you can do in addition to what is now proposed to be done. I submit to the Finance Minister that he should permit the Newfoundland ore to come in, and to receive the same bounty as the Canadian ore.

Mr. BENNETT: When this question was before the House on a former occasion, I called the attention of the Minister to the fact that in the manufacture of pig-iron with charcoal, a great deal more labour is employed than in its manufacture from coke. I may mention that there is at present a smelting furnace at Hamilton, and as I understand it the coke used there is all brought in from the United States, and consequently little or no labour is afforded in that respect to Canadians. Now, on the other hand, there is at present a smelter at Deseronto and another is being erected in Midland, both of which use charcoal, and an immense amount of employment will be afforded to our people in producing that charcoal. I understand the capacity of the Midland concern is about the same as that at Hamilton, but at the Midland smelting works, they will consume yearly about 50,000 cords of wood, while at Hamilton they will simply import the coke from the United States. It is evident that there must be a great deal of employment afforded in the taking out of the 50,000 cords of wood, and I ask the Minister whether he has considered the question of putting an increased bounty on pig-iron produced from charcoal as compared with iron produced from coke.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I remember that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) brought this matter to my attention, and I admit that there is a great deal of force in his argument. Nevertheless it would be difficult to distinguish between the two classes of fuel used in producing iron. The hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Mills), who opened this discussion, argued that Newfoundland ore should not be admitted to the bounty at all, and the hon. gentleman from West York (Mr. Wallace) advanced a view which goes to the other extreme, viz., that we should pay the full bounty for the Newfoundland ore. The Government have decided on a happy medium. We do not propose to shut out Newfoundland ore, but we do not propose to put it on even terms with Canadian ore. I feel quite satisfied that the good people of Newfoundland will not regard this as an unfriendly measure on our part, but on the contrary, that they will consider that in admitting their ore to a part of the bounty we are dealing in a friendly spirit with them.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I hope in a short time they will come into the confederation, and bring their ore with them.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I commend the sentiment of the hon. leader of the Opposition. There is no doubt that the probability of the sister colony of Newfoundland coming into confederation at no distant date, is a consideration we might well have in mind. And when that time comes, if it comes within the continuance of this bounty, Newfoundland will receive the additional advantage of getting the full bounty. There is another view of the question which I am obliged to take as Minister of Finance, and that is, that the sum of money which we may be obliged to pay under this bounty may be a considerable one; and if it were enlarged still further by paying the full bounty on Newfoundland ore, my fear is that the charge on the treasury would be too large, and the House might hesitate to consent to it. I can assure hon gentlemen that all these things have been well considered, and we think that the Bill in its present shape will serve its purpose of encouraging a very large development in the iron industry in the different parts of the Dominion. I trust the committee will be able to accept the Bill as it stands, without amendment.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the difference in the bounty you pay on iron manufactured out of foreign ore and iron manufactured out of native ore?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Three dollars a ton bounty from the native ore and $2 a ton from the foreign ore, and if it is a blend, as very often happens, then we will pay in proportion to the quantities of the native ore and the foreign ore entering into the blast furnace.

Mr. HAGGART. Notwithstanding the policy pursued by the last Government I have not altered my opinion on this matter. The reason given for admitting foreign ore into this country was, that it was impossible to smelt our ores without adding some foreign ores, and especially so in Nova Scotia. But take the case of the Hamilton smelter. We not only have a customs duty on the iron coming into the country, but we give a bounty of $2 per ton on iron manufactured out of the ore taken from the American mines on Lake Superior. I think that is entirely wrong. If it is necessary to take a percentage of foreign ore for the purpose of smelting our own ore, it is all very well. They will manufacture the steel and iron out of the iron ores, if you give them bounty enough, but if you only make a difference of one dollar a ton between iron manufactured from foreign ore, and iron manufactured from native ore, the probability is that on account of the larger development of the United States mines, they will take their supplies altogether of foreign ore, and that would be no advantage to Canada at all. The object of this bounty should be, and all our efforts ought to be directed to the development of the iron mines of Canada. I have no objection to our treating Newfoundland in an exceptional manner, as a sister colony. It may be necessary even to admit its ores free, or to put them on the same basis as our own.

But my argument has reference to the mines on Lake Superior. The Americans have developed their mines on the south shore of Lake Superior to the fullest extent. It is admitted that we have as good minerals on the north shore. What was the object of this bounty? It was for the purpose of developing the iron mines of our own country. Back of Kingston and in the county of Hastings we have as good iron as is to be found anywhere else in the world. We want all this ore manufactured in our own country, and we are perfectly willing to give a large bonus for the purpose of developing these deposits and starting the manufacture. But if the effect of that bonus is not to develop these mines, but to smelt foreign ores brought into the country, it is of no good to the country. You are only developing the foreign trade, and asking the people of this country to pay, in the shape of duties, a higher price for their iron than they otherwise would.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman says that we could make our iron from native ore, if we only gave bounty enough. To a certain extent that is true. I suppose we might raise oranges in Canada, if only we would give bounty enough; but I am inclined to think it would take a higher bounty than any of the hon. gentlemen opposite would be willing to give, in order to carry on an iron industry confined to the ores of Canada. It is well known that you must have the ores of different countries to blend together in order to have a satisfactory manufacture of iron. I think the argument of the hon. leader of the Opposition was most logical and conclusive. If you want to develop an iron industry in the country, you must have ore of different varieties, you must get your furnaces, and I am afraid that you would not succeed if you confined the furnaces to native ore. But if you provide for the use of both native and foreign ore, you are creating a market for the native ore, which would otherwise not be created at all; and I have no doubt that by the operation of this policy, not only considerable foreign ore will be used, but opportunities for the production of the native ores of Canada will be afforded, and in that way we shall develop our native ores in a much better way than by any other policy we could adopt.

Mr. EDWARDS. I was opposed to the original iron resolutions, when they were introduced in 1887; I was equally opposed to the resolutions on which this Bill is based, and I am now opposed to the passing of this Bill. I am opposed to it because I am opposed to the system entirely. I need not dwell upon that, because it is well known. But what amuses me is, that hon. gentlemen opposite support a system which has for its end the gradual wiping out of these bounties altogether. That is what the Liberal party have advocated. That portion of the Bill is the only solace it has for me—that in a few years the whole system will be wiped out. But what amuses me is, that hon. gentlemen opposite support this wiping-out process. It seems to me that the ground they are taking, and have been taking for some time, is, that it is a mistake to lower the duties by degrees. It seems to me that they have been going back entirely on the principles they have advocated.

Mr. CRAIG. I do not rise to discuss this question, but only to say that what amuses me and all other gentlemen on this side of the House is, that a gentleman who professes in words to be an ardent free trader, always supports a Government that has adopted protection. Now, I do not know why the hon. gentleman got up to-day to talk at all—

Mr. EDWARDS. To make you look ridiculous.

Mr. CRAIG—except to amuse gentlemen on both sides of the House. If the hon. gentleman were consistent, he would not support the present Government, because they are as protectionist as the Government that went out of power.

Mr. EDWARDS. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Would it be more consistent to support a Government which advocates what is right and best in the interests of the country in the lowering of the duties, or a Government who persistently say that the farmers and producers of this country shall be everlastingly burdened with high taxation?

Mr. CRAIG. I do not want to take up the time of the committee, but I just want to say that I think that the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, rather gave away his case. He asked: Would it be more consistent to support the party on this side of the House, or the party who say they are doing things for the farmers of this country? I am satisfied that he should support the party who say they are doing these things.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

COMPANIES' ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 160)—from the Senate—to amend the Companies Act (Mr. Fielding) read the second time, and referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce.

PRESERVATION OF HEALTH ON PUBLIC WORKS.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved second reading of Bill (No. 105)—from the Senate—for the preservation of health on public works.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this Bill is a result of the report of the commission which was appointed last year to investigate certain complaints which had been made in connection with the construction of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. There is no doubt that that investigation revealed the fact that a most unfortunate condition of things had existed with regard to the health of the men, and the Government have come to the conclusion to offer some legislation, with the view of obviating a recurrence of such a condition of things. In a country like Canada, with such a vast extent of territory, a large portion of which is as yet unsettled, and in which many public works will no doubt be constructed, several thousand men may happen at any moment to be congregated together at one point in what is practically a desert, far away from the means of communication and from the advantages of civilization.

Unless provision is made to compel these companies to look after the health of the men they employ the same condition of things will be renewed which took place on the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. The Government, by this legislation which it has introduced, will provide, I believe, a sufficient means of having the health and comfort of the men looked after. This Bill is intended to apply to all public works that come under the jurisdiction of this Parliament. It will apply, as stated in the first clause, to every railway, canal, bridge, telegraph and other work within the legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada. It provides that whenever such a public work is under construction, the Governor General in Council shall have the power to make regulations for the preservation of the lives of the men and their comfort as well. Of course, the reason why we place this power in the hands of the Governor in Council is because there may be occasions when there will be no necessity for any such regulations. If a public work is constructed in the older and settled portions of the country, where a population is at hand, where there are all the comforts and elements of civilization, the normal condition of things will be sufficient to regulate any new conditions which may arise and provide for the health and comfort of the men. But if a public work is carried on, say in the Rocky Mountains or the prairies or any other portion of Canada where the men may be thousands of miles away from all the comforts of civilization, the Governor in Council may have the power to make regulations regarding the health and comfort of the men. These regulations are five in number. First of all, to provide regulations as to the extent and character of the accommodation to be afforded by the houses, tents or other quarters occupied by the employees on the work. If, as has been the case on former occasions, and as I believe was the case on the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, the men were quartered in railway boxes and so cramped that they had not the requisite quantity of pure air, the Governor in Council can make regulations to compel the employers to provide these men with sufficient space to breathe in and make other provisions for their health. The Governor in Council may make regulations for the inspection of such houses, tents and other quarters, and the cleansing, purifying and disinfecting thereof where necessary. Also regulations to compel the company to provide the requisite number of medical officers, and hospitals, and for the isolation of persons suffering from contagious disease. We know, unfortunately, that deaths have occurred for want of such regulations on the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. After having read the evidence very carefully, I am not prepared to mete all the blame on the employers for the death of these two young men, and believe it was due rather to the conditions in which they were placed, but the investigation has shown conclusively that whenever you have such a lot of men as we had on the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, it will be indispensable that we should have regulations made and promptly carried out. I think all these rules will commend themselves to the judgment of the House. There is only one thing to which there may be an exception. Clause 4 provides:

The Governor in Council may, until Parliament otherwise provides, prescribe punishments, penalties and forfeitures for breach or non-observance of such regulations, and may also prescribe the procedure for enforcing same.

This is rather, perhaps, stretching the power which Parliament may be disposed to place in the hands of the Governor in Council, but, on the whole, I believe that this stretch of power is sufficiently qualified by the following provision, which enacts that no punishment by way of imprisonment to be prescribed by the Governor in Council, shall exceed three months. With this qualification, I think we can safely leave to the Governor in Council the providing not only of the regulations, but of the punishments for violating these regulations. In any case, the punishment by imprisonment is not to exceed three months. If this punishment were to prove inadequate, then we would have to come to Parliament to provide an adequate punishment, but on the whole I think that this measure, which is a tentative one, should commend itself to the judgment of the House.

Mr. POWELL. What is supposed to be the maximum money penalty?

The PRIME MINISTER. It is not mentioned here.

Mr. JOHN ROSS ROBERTSON (East Toronto). On the principle that prevention is better than cure, it is a pity that this Bill had not been introduced in the session of 1896. I suppose it is natural that a Government, like all human organizations, should display hindsight instead of foresight. This Bill strikes me as a tardy example of the policy of locking the stable-door after the horse has been stolen. I wish the Government could have seen its way to have punished those who stole the horse, I mean to place the criminal responsibility upon the corporation or men who are to blame for the crimes which attended the expenditure of public moneys in the Crow's Nest Pass work. I hope that this Bill will protect the fair name of Canada from a repetition of the Crow's Nest Pass disgrace; and I must say that if the hon. Minister of Justice is as slow to use the authority conferred upon him by this Bill as he was to act on the complaint of the late Dr. Meade, this Bill will be a sham and a delusion. While on my feet, and as the subject is pertinent, I may just as well say what I have to say in relation to the Crow's Nest Pass atrocities and Mr. Clute's report. I am not going to weary the House with an elaborate repetition of my views on this question. I have read the report and a good deal of the evidence. The facts, as shown in the evidence, are softened somewhat in the report. I mention that, not to the discredit of Mr. Clute, but to show that he has been careful not to go beyond the facts. The evidence and the report justify every single solitary word that was said last session by the members of this Parliament who held that the Canadian Pacific Railway was guilty—yes, blood guilty, in this matter. There is a lot of talk about one story being a good story until another is told, and that the Canadian Pacific Railway would meet its accusers with a complete defence; but where is this complete defence? The evidence and the report prove the guilt of the Canadian Pacific Railway, because that corporation accepted a subsidy from this Parliament and spent that subsidy under a system which rendered the theft of men's labour and the taking of men's lives inevitable. I am not going to consider Mr. Haney and the sub-contractors in this matter. Mr. Haney was the representative of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the sub-contractors were mere incidents in the Canadian Pacific Railway system of building the Crow's Nest Pass road. I have been told on good authority that everybody in sight, except Mr. Haney, were sweated in the building of this road. The sub-contractors were ground down until there was not profit enough to buy a suit of clothes let alone take care of sick men. The whole business seems to have been one huge carnival of callous greed; Canadians were decoyed to the Crow's Nest Pass work to build a railway for their board, the company kindly consenting not to charge anything extra for their coffins. It is all right to call down vengeance on the sub-contractors who were the victims of the system which Mr. Haney created under the auspices of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and for which the Canadian Pacific Railway should be held responsible. I think I can justify my conclusions by the acts of the Canadian Pacific Railway subsequent to the death of these poor men. I do not know, Mr. Speaker, that I would have risen in my place to-day to add one word to the discussion of this painful subject had I not felt it my duty to say a word in praise of the one man who shines in the blackness of this infamous transaction, and that man, Dr. Meade, the humane physician and brave coroner of Pincher Creek. No word of mine can reach the ear of that man who soothed the dying moments of these poor Canadian boys abandoned to a cruel death in an old box car. Dr. Meade, since this subject was last discussed, has passed beyond the sting of earthly censure and beyond the sound of human praise. The facts show that he did his duty as long as there was life in these poor Nova Scotians, and then he tried to do his duty by taking steps to avenge their deaths. It is all right for the glib agents of the Canadian Pacific Railway to say that this obscure individual and the other sub-contractors are responsible for the death of these two young men. Perhaps Dr. Meade thought as the Canadian Pacific Railway now pretends to think. In his capacity as coroner, he took steps to find out who were responsible for the death of Fraser and McDonald. Surely if the Canadian Pacific Railway were not to blame, the Canadian Pacific Railway had no need to suppress inquiry. A person would have thought that Coroner Meade, in his efforts to get at the truth, would have run up against the sub-contractors or other individuals who were to blame. But when Coroner Meade tried to place the blame for the death of these two poor men, whom did he find he was up against? Was it the sub-contractors? Oh, no. When Coroner Meade tried to move in accordance with his duty he found himself up against the whole might of the Canadian Pacific Railway in the Government of this country. I did a great wrong to the Deputy Minister of Justice last session. I blamed him for the red tape preliminaries which played into the hands of the Canadian Pacific Railway and baffled Coroner Meade. I am glad that the Minister of Justice has assumed responsibility for the shuffling which disgraced the Government of this country. If the Minister of Justice were in this House, I would tell him that in my judgment his responsibility is not a light one. He split hairs and coiled red tape around that coroner at Pincher Creek, who showed more humanity and more patriotism in this matter than the whole Government of Canada. If Dr. Meade were technically disqualified from holding an inquiry, why did not the Minister of Justice send out agents to investigate and prosecute those who were guilty of the murder of these men? On the contrary, the Minister of Justice threw the whole weight of the Government into the scale against Dr. Meade. The Canadian Pacific Railway had its way, as it always has with this Government. These murdered men were buried, and the Government were finally compelled to move. I suppose that the Canadian Pacific Railway did not object to a movement when it was too late to do anything, and now, I suppose, nothing can be done. I have nothing more to say than to express my solemn conviction that the hon. Minister of Justice has very little reason to be proud of this episode in the history of his department. And, with all his gifts and with all his eloquence, the Government of the right hon. First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) in this matter cuts but a poor figure alongside the lonely man at Pincher Creek who tried to do his duty, but who was throttled by the Canadian Pacific Railway, aided by the Minister of Justice, and, as far as I can learn, with the full approval of the whole Government of Canada.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that clause 2 of this Bill would be an encroachment upon provincial rights, because it is with the provinces that the duty of looking after the public health rests. And while these public works might be carried on in the Northwest Territories or in districts which are governed by the federal authorities, still, they are as likely to be carried on in the older provinces of the Dominion. So, I think there is a possibility of coming in conflict with the provincial authorities if this is carried out.

Mr. A. C. BELL (Pictou). I feel that the action taken by the Government in introducing this Bill is entirely in the direction in which the country would like them to move. There can be no doubt that the revelations made in the case of the death of two of my constituents on the Crow's Nest Pass Railway were very sad; and while nothing can now be done to help these poor young fellows, because they have passed beyond earthly aid, it will be a comfort to their relatives, I am sure, to feel that, in a sense, the loss of their lives is to bring to an end what was unquestionably a very great evil and a great reproach to Canada, having led the Government to take the action it has taken in order to insure that in the future similar scenes may never occur in our fair Dominion. I believe the Government have done the thing absolutely essential in this case. The evidence brought before Mr. Commissioner Clute shows that means were provided to protect these men so far as organization was concerned, but it was not efficient and I think that nothing but the supervision of the Government, nothing but the power in the hands of the authorities of the country to inflict penalties as provided in this Bill, will meet the case. I think it is certain that, so far as the Canadian Pacific Railway was concerned—while, I presume, the responsibility, in the first place, did rest upon them, because it was that company that was carrying on the work—they took the steps that they thought necessary in order to give to the employees upon that work such medical attendance and protection as would be sufficient. But the facts brought out before Commissioner Clute go to show that, although they did that, although they created machinery to provide medical attendance and supplies for these men, yet the inefficient manner in which that purpose was carried out, in that remote district, led to an enormous amount of suffering, and, in some cases, resulted in very cruel and painful death. The company seemed to have taken great care to supply medical attendance and medicine for the men. Their system was a complete one, so far as the machinery was concerned. They had an organization which was in itself complete, but it was inefficient because it was left to work in the hands of men who did not feel responsible, who were more engrossed in making money than in protecting those employed and who did not take the steps necessary to make the expenditure, which was willingly undertaken by the Canadian Pacific Railway, efficient. The Canadian Pacific Railway was not disposed to economize so far as this service was concerned. The figures brought down in the report, which I am glad to see and to which I am glad to refer here—because it was my duty in a previous session to direct the attack against the Canadian Pacific Railway for the death of two of my constituents—show that while the sum collected from the men in this service was $12,816, the Canadian Pacific Railway expended the sum of $17,731. The Canadian Pacific Railway paid out something like $5,000 in addition to the amounts which they collected from the men employed upon that road. So it is clear that the unfortunate results in this case were not results of neglect on the part of the company, nor of parsimony on the part of the company, but were consequences of the fact that there was not that supervision, that responsibility applying not only to the contract company but to the sub-contractors as well, which would compel them to look upon the care of the health and the lives of those men under their control, as a charge which they must answer for to the people of Canada, and if necessary to the Government of Canada. The facts brought out show that they had a complete organization, they had a medical man of high standing, a graduate of McGill, a leading physician of Lethbridge, who had charge of the whole work. He had ample powers so far as the evidence goes, he had full authority to employ subordinates and establish hospitals. But that was not done, and the result was that when the critical moment came, when the lives of my young countrymen depended upon the care and attention which should have been theirs, the machinery was wanting, the medical men who had charge of those districts had too much to attend to, their divisions were too long, they had no hospitals for isolating infectious cases, and the result was that the two young fellows who died were carried 70 miles out of one medical district through another and into a third without having, in the course of that long and fatal journey, met with a medical man whom they should have met at some point in their journey. Three medical men were there to take charge of the districts through which they passed, still from want of proper organization and a proper system these unfortunate fellows passed by all this means of relief until death overtook them, and death in the most horrible form. Inquiries were made at a later stage and as a result of their death the machinery was improved, additional hospitals were provided, isolation hospitals for infectious cases were provided, but it was too late. Now, it would appear from a perusal of Mr. Clute's report that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, who were primarily the responsible parties, had done a great deal to anticipate so far as they could such misfortunes and to provide for what was wanted. But it appears also that the medical contractor, the man who was at the head of the service did not devote himself to it with that assiduity and care for the protection of those men that he should have done. It would appear that the medical man who had charge of all this long line of railway, these thousands of men—for at one time there was something like 4,000 or 5,000 men employed—had a large practice in Lethbridge, and he was fully occupied there, his practice took up nearly all his time, and he did not give that supervision to his outside work on the railway which was absolutely necessary. In fact when he was examined it would appear that he had to a certain extent left the responsibility and care of providing for the health of the men to the medical men who were presiding over these special districts; and the commissioner found this difficulty when he wanted to know why a hospital was not provided at a certain point, and Dr. Mewburn said that the medical man who had charge of that division should have provided a hospital, or should have seen that it was provided. When asked: Was it not your duty to see that it was provided? He was of course enabled in that way to evade the responsibility of attending to that work. But no hospital was provided, because no such machinery as is now provided by the Government was in existence. To-day after this Bill becomes law, I presume each medical man in charge of a district will be responsible for death if he has not done his duty. If he has hampered his subordinates, if he has not given them sufficient power to do certain things which it was their duty to do, he would be subject to pains and penalties. It would appear from the evidence that to a certain extent all concerned in this matter looked upon it more from a financial point of view than a humanitarian point of view, as a work in which men should think less of money and more of responsibility to their fellows. It appears among other things that no less than three medical men having charge of subordinate districts were discharged from the employment of the company, or from the employment of Dr. Mewburn, who was the subordinate medical officer, and who had power of appointing or dismissing; they were dismissed because they had ventured to say before the coroner that their district was so large that they could not attend to all the work devolving upon them. If that be the case it strikes me that he was not taking the best means to keep a medical man in a position where he could do good work, but rather taking a course which would prevent him from reporting that he could not overtake his task, that he had more work than he could attend to. Consequently, while in the first place the company may be primarily responsible and should be held responsible for the illness and death that has occurred on that road, it yet appears that to a large extent the unfortunate results were not due to the parsimony of the company, not due to the fact that they had not looked ahead and made provision for medical attendance, because the evidence shows they did provide the machinery, but they were owing to the fact that there was not that feeling of responsibility, not that care on the part of the subordinates which was necessary in order to bring to the men who were in a large sense their wards—not sufficient to bring to those unfortunate men who were entirely in their hands at the time, that loving care and tenderness which they should have received from the medical men who were appointed to give it to them. It is an unfortunate thing that anything like a contract system should apply here where men are induced to take work at the least possible figure. Where you give a man a contract and in a sense he sublets the care of the sick to others, to a certain extent you are introducing the contract system and bringing into prominence the money consideration. It strikes me the Bill is entirely in the right direction. Unfortunately it comes too late to help the poor fellows in whom I was more particularly interested; and I am sure no greater source of gratification to their friends could arise now than to know that in their sufferings and in their death good has been done and good will result in years to come.

Mr. D. C. FRASER (Guysborough). I congratulate the Prime Minister upon the introduction of this Bill. I am glad as a member of this House, to know that human life is held in greater esteem than wealth, and that men who have to earn their living upon public works of this kind are going to have at least as much protection thrown around them as around those who employ them. This is indeed legislation in the right direction, and the more we recognize that men's lives and everything relating to their health is of more value to us than the prosperity of this country can be, the more we are moving in the right direction. We hear a good deal in this House of the wrongs that workingmen have to bear, and I am bound to say that much of it is true, and this legislation indicates a move in the right direction. But it would be very unfair that the remarks of the hon. member for Toronto should go without one word of criticism. I am not the apologist of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I trust I shall always be found with them when they are right, and opposed to them when they are wrong. But I am bound to say that in these two instances the Canadian Pacific Railway did what was greatly to their credit. They recognized no legal liability, they had the best legal authority in coming to that conclusion, but they recognized that a great wrong had been done to the parents and relatives of those two young men, and they voluntarily gave $1,500 in each case to their relatives, not under compulsion but simply as a gratuity. But they did more than that. At the same time they gave that money, they stipulated distinctly that it was not to prejudice any legal action the parties might bring.

The parents and friends of Fraser and McDonald are as fully entitled to-day to bring action as if they had never received that gratuity. If they think they have a case in court against the Canadian Pacific Railway they are at perfect liberty to bring suit. I only mention this lest it should be thought that the remarks made with such vigour by the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Ross Robertson) contained all the facts. I think it is only fair that there should be this recognition. It will not repay the friends and relatives of these two noble young men for their loss, but it is something to know that there is a recognition that a wrong was committed, and it is a recognition which the Canadian Pacific Railway indicate that they felt, although a corporation, and it is a feeling that corporations as well as others have under such circumstances. I think the action which has been taken is a matter that affords cause for congratulation to every member of this House. I heartily support the Bill, and I hope that, as various circumstances may arise, indicating reasons for further legislation, this Parliament will always be found ready to do what it can in the direction of adopting such legislation as will entrench the position of the workingman so that capital and strength and power may not ride roughshod over him, but that, while working in a far-off land for a wage he may have that protection to life and health which this Parliament should guarantee to every subject.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Speaker, as one who last year brought this subject before the House of Commons, I may perhaps say a word in regard to the legislation that has been introduced by the Government. In respect to the information we have just listened to from the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), as to the conduct of the Canadian Pacific Railway I think it is only right to acknowledge that a study of the report shows that the subordinate officers did not make use of all the means placed at their disposal to secure the safety and health of those with whose safety and health they were charged. The failure of justice was in not reaching the person or persons responsible for the disaster that befell these young men, because some person or persons must have been responsible. I am exceedingly glad to hear what has fallen from the lips of the hon. member for Guysborough as to the provision made by the Canadian Pacific Railway for the relatives of these young men, and of the rider that was attached to it that it no way interfered with whatever rights the relatives of these young men might have in court. In reference to this Bill I would like to point out that it places an enormous amount of power and discretion in the hands of the Government. This Bill simply provides that the Government shall practically pass by Order in Council legislation for dealing with companies employing large numbers of men, and there is a double disadvantage, as it seems to me, in a measure of this kind. In the first place, the Government are taking power which properly belongs to this House, and in the next place, we have no guarantee that the Government will do that which should be done if a Bill dealing with the whole question were brought into this House. Of course, a measure of this kind would place the gravest responsibility on the Government and would make them amenable to Parliament if they shall not have provided for such cases as that which led to this legislation. I just throw this out as a criticism, and I think that it would have been more satisfactory if an elaborate Bill had been placed before Parliament so that we might here arrange what should be done in the premises. I see that it is provided that the punishment under this Bill shall not exceed imprisonment for three months. For conduct, such as is easily imagined, a punishment of three months' imprisonment is a very small matter. There ought to be a further money penalty. However, the Bill, when passed, will not only place large discretion in the hands of the Government, but will place great responsibility upon them, and, when passed, there is a certain security that henceforth we shall have such incidents as that which led to this legislation guarded against.

Mr. F. OLIVER (Alberta). Mr. Speaker, I gather from the discussion, as far as it has gone, that it appears to be in the minds of hon. members that this Bill is rendered necessary by reason of an occurrence that took place on the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. I am not in a position to say that the Bill is not necessary, but I would like to take this opportunity of correcting the House as to the idea that there was a failure of justice on that particular occasion because there was a lack of legislation. I take the opportunity all the more for the reason that I find it is necessary to make a personal explanation, not only on my own behalf, but also on behalf of the late Coroner Meade, who was connected with this case, and whose action, or inaction, was stated by the hon. Minister of Justice in the Senate to be the cause of the failure of justice on that occasion. If the House will bear with me I will state the case in a very few words. The deaths of these young men occurred on January 23rd, 1898. Coroner Meade, in pursuance of his duty as coroner, called an inquest on February 5th. An injunction to prevent him from holding an inquest was secured at the instance of Mr. Haney, manager for the Canadian Pacific Railway. The fact of the injunction having been secured was brought to the attention of the Department of Justice and to the personal attention of the hon. Minister of Justice. He took the ground that it was not his business, as Minister of Justice, to take any action in the premises. The injunction was argued, and judgment was reserved. When that took place it was again brought to the attention of the hon. Minister of Justice, and it was represented that some action on his part was desirable. It was represented that it was desirable that if Dr. Meade was not competent to act for any reason, if there was any doubt as to his competence, or any probability that the injunction would be upheld, or that the decision in reference to the injunction would be delayed, Dr. Meade should be asked to withdraw and that another coroner should continue the case. The Deputy Minister of Justice, on behalf of the hon. Minister of Justice, replied that the department had no authority in the matter. Afterwards the department did communicate with the Crown prosecutor in the locality. He wired to the department here that "Dr. Meade apparently is indisposed to retire." The department then suggested that, as the decision would likely be received soon, it would not be necessary to demand his withdrawal, and that it might be well to await the decision and then, if under the decision Dr. Meade was barred out, another coroner would be directed to act in his place. On the statement of the Deputy Minister that Dr. Meade had refused to withdraw, and in the expectation of an early decision by the judge, I agreed. I was at Pincher Creek at the time that the death of these two men took place. And as I was personally acquainted with the facts of the case, I interested myself personally in the department concerning it, and brought these matters to the attention of the Minister of Justice and the Deputy Minister. On their representation that the decision on the injunction was likely to be received soon, I agreed to let the matter stand. The decision on the injunction, however, was not given until 15th April. I am not prepared to say what the department might have done as to hastening the decision on that injunction, but it seems to me that some indication might have been given to the judge which might have induced him to give a decision within less than three months of the time at which the affair occurred, when it was one of these cases in which it is easily understood that upon prompt action depended the attainment of justice. Speaking in the Senate on the question of jurisdiction over coroners, the Minister of Justice said:

I may say, in the first place, that the coroners are not officers of our department; in fact, they are not officers of the Government of Canada in that territory, but they are the parties who hold their office, they are not necessarily connected with the administration of justice at all. They are ministerial officers, whose duties are inquisitorial, and who may inquire into any matter that may subsequently call for legal investigation ** appointed by the local governments. We have no jurisdiction over them.

On that point it may be well to give to the House the opinion of the Premier of the Territories as to the jurisdiction over these coroners. Mr. Haultain writes:

Office of the Attorney General,

Regina, 22nd July, 1898.

Dear Sir,—Coroners are appointed in the Territories by the Lieutenant-Governor on the advice of the Executive Council. So are justices of the peace. All the duties of coroners, and many of the duties of justices, are in connection with the administration of the criminal law, which belongs exclusively to the Department of Justice at Ottawa. We have no responsibility or duty in respect of the institution or conduct of criminal proceedings, except the responsibility involved in the duty to appoint proper men as justices and coroners. If a justice or coroner neglected his duty or misbehaves himself he is amenable to the discipline of the Lieutenant Governor in Council, who may remove him. You will understand the position. If an inquest is necessary, or an investigation should be held, it is no part of our duties to have those things done, but we have the right to inquire into the manner in which our appointees conduct themselves officially.

Our duty is to supply coroners and magistrates; it is the duty of the Department of Justice to set the criminal law in motion through these officials.

Yours faithfully,

F. W. G. HAULTAIN.

F. Oliver, Esq., M.P.,
Edmonton, Alberta.

Therefore, the Premier of the Territories holds the opinion with great distinctness that the coroners are under the jurisdiction of that authority which pays them for the performance of their duty, and that the Department of Justice at Ottawa is the authority to order these proceedings to be taken. But the question may be left as to whether the Minister of Justice is right in saying that the Department of Justice has no authority in such a case; a case in which the lives of two men were involved, a case in which it was perfectly plain that prompt action was necessary to meet the ends of justice. I wish to take up now the question of Dr. Meade's action in the matter, and the responsibility that was thrown upon him by the Minister of Justice through his speech in the Senate on that subject. The Minister of Justice said:

The first communication we had in reference to the subject was the telegram that came to the department from a Dr. Meade, a coroner, who had undertaken to hold an inquest, and who had been enjoined from holding that inquest by parties interested, some officials connected with the contract of the Canadian Pacific Railway. * * * When we received this statement from Dr. Meade, our instructions to him were that he had better withdraw from the case and let another coroner be appointed in order that the inquiry might proceed. This he declined to do, and, therefore, there was nothing for it but to permit him to take his own course and be subjected to the delay which the injunction would impose upon him.

The responsibility for the delay is, in that speech, directly thrown upon the shoulders of Dr. Meade. The Minister states distinctly that the department did instruct him to withdraw, and that he refused to withdraw. Now, at the time that statement was made by the Minister of Justice in the Senate, I did not have copies of the papers on the subject in my hand. I have them now, and I take the liberty of reading them to this House in justice to Dr. Meade, and to show that whoever is at fault, it was not Dr. Meade's fault that justice was not done. I beg to read the following telegrams:—

Lethbridge, via Macleod, 1st March, 1898.

H. R. Meade, Pincher Creek.

Re diphtheria inquest, how do matters stand? How would it do to get a coroner outside of district, say Calgary, to continue?

C. F. P. CONYBEARE.

To that Dr. Meade replied:

Pincher Creek, March 3rd, 1898.

C. Conybeare, Public Prosecutor, Lethbridge.

Re inquest, suit yourself. I have no animus against C.P.R. Dr. Jenkins, living here, is a coroner. Could another coroner take over my jury, as I don't think you could get any one to dig up bodies on account of infection?

Dr. Jenkins could sit with me, if nothing else will do. Inquest stands adjourned, pending judge's decision.

DR. MEADE.

Now, I ask this honourable House is there any indication in that telegram that Dr. Meade refused to withdraw from sitting on that inquiry? Is there not, on the contrary, a plain indication on the part of Dr. Meade of his willingness to withdraw, or to take any other means that might be necessary in order that the proceedings might be carried on; the urgency of which proceedings he points out in this very telegram. You may say: Why did not Dr. Meade withdraw in any case. I will read you why. Here is a letter from the Crown prosecutor to Dr. Meade, dated Lethbridge, March 3rd, 1898:

Lethbridge, March 3rd, 1898.

H. R. Meade, Esq., Pincher Creek.

Dear Sir,—Your two letters of 25th and 26th both arrived on the afternoon of the 1st inst. We had telegraphed you on the morning of that day before receiving them. The department are determined, in view of the circumstances attending these men's deaths, that a full inquiry shall be held, and thought in view of the motion for injunction that it might expedite matters if the work were taken up by another coroner without awaiting the decision; hence the reason of my question, whether you would be willing to withdraw; but I presume the judge will give an early decision. I have to-day sent copy of your telegram to the department, and possibly by the time they receive it we may know the result of the judgment on the motion. At all events, you may rest assured that the inquiry will go on, either by yourself or another coroner.

(Sgd. CONYBEARE & GALLIHER.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask you is there not in Dr. Meade's telegram a clear indication of his willingness to withdraw in favour of another in order that the inquiry might go on, and is there not a clear indication to Dr. Meade in this letter of the Crown prosecutor that he does not need to withdraw, that the responsibility is taken off his shoulders and assumed by the department for the fullest inquiry into the matter. In the face of these facts, I am required, in justice to Dr. Meade, and in view of the statement made by the Minister of Justice in the Senate last session, to place the circumstances before the House. Further, I will say this: Last session I blamed the Deputy Minister of Justice for the delay and for the consequent failure of justice. The explanations of the Minister of Justice have changed the position to the extent of showing that he was responsible with, as well as for, his deputy.

Mr. H. A. POWELL (Westmorland). As there were one or two of my constituents employed upon the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, I had special occasion to look into this matter, and I must congratulate the Government on submitting this Bill to the House. Whether or not the Government will have sufficient power under the Bill to compass the object that is sought to be compassed and is so desirable, may be questioned. But in looking into this matter, I came to the same conclusion as the hon. the First Minister with regard to the unfortunate events which took place in connection with the Crow's Nest Pass Railway being rather a necessary result of the condition of affairs in a rough and undeveloped country, a necessary concomitant of pioneer life, rather than the blame-worthy conduct of any person, or set of persons, or company. I also agree with the hon. First Minister in this, that the evils were more in connection with the treatment of the well than of the sick. The abodes which were provided for the workmen by the contractors with the Canadian Pacific Railway, were simply such as would necessarily undermine the health of the strongest men. For instance, their hovels were buildings of about 40 x 60 feet in extent, and on either side there were bunks, 4 x 6 feet, constructed in two tiers, while the roof was only 6 or 7 feet high. It can easily be seen how, with a large number of people crowded into such a small space and breathing each other's breath, disease, if not asphyxiation, would almost inevitably take place. The result was, that the number of invalids to be found in these hovels was almost incomprehensible to people who know how very salubrious and healthy the climate of that country is. At the same time, an astonishing fact, running parallel with this, was that the percentage of convalescents among them in the hospitals provided by the Canadian Pacific Railway was so very large. It seemed that the best thing that could happen to a workman was to get sick. The percentage of convalescent patients was greater than is to be found in the best hospitals of the Dominion. In the case of typhoid patients, the percentage of deaths was only 1, which is somewhat extraordinary in febrile disorders of that class. The right hon. First Minister has said that for the sad deaths of the two young Nova Scotians that took place, no blame should be attached to any person. In corroboration of that, I may say that, in looking carefully into the report, I found that the deaths of the two unfortunate young men were almost entirely the result of errors of judgment. For instance, they were at Mann & Kennedy's camp when they were taken sick, one on the 15th of January, if I recollect aright, and the other on the night of the 19th or the morning of the 20th of the same month. On the 20th of January they were, contrary to the rules laid down by the medical authorities, despatched to the hospital at Fort McLeod, which was 80 miles or more away. Now, it seems almost incredible, but as a matter of fact, there was a hospital for contagious diseases provided by the Canadian Pacific Railway within a mile and a half of the camp, and only 70 yards from the road; and yet these two unfortunate patients, exposed to the inclemency of the weather, although it was a beautiful winter day, were taken on sleds for a large portion of the 80 miles.

Mr. BERGERON. Without food and without stimulants.

Mr. POWELL. Without food and without stimulants, as is suggested by the hon. member for Beauharnois. Now, I took the trouble to look into the preparations that were made for the care of the sick, and I might follow up what the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) has said, by stating that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, who were not even indirectly responsible, had assumed what was largely a work of charity and gone to a great deal of trouble and expended a large amount of money in seeing that the sick were properly attended to. They employed a principal medical officer, so I learn from the report, at a salary of $3,000. They also employed Dr. King to act as chief medical officer of a hospital which was situated at Fort McLeod, or some other place in that vicinity. They also secured the services of an eminent father of the Roman Catholic Church, who was also a skilful doctor, a regular graduate of a medical college, and who had with him, as trained nurses in his hospital, several Sisters of Charity. At the hospital expressly for the workmen at Lethbridge and at Fort McLeod they provided a number of trained nurses at a very large expense. They employed five perambulating physicians at a salary of $100 per month each with all expenses of transportation and maintenance paid. The duty of these gentlemen consisted in passing along the line, backwards and forwards, some making two trips a week, and some one trip a week, to see to the health of the employees. The company also provided tents for temporary hospitals or isolated hospitals for contagious diseases. They limited the principal medical officer in no way. A great difficulty, as hon. gentlemen can understand, is always experienced among people generally, from the fact that they become alarmed at the presence in their midst, or in their vicinity, of one who is afflicted with a contagious or infectious disease. They are not willing to take him into their homes or provide him with meals. That was the case here. These poor fellows, while in the unfortunate condition of affliction by diphtheria, went through the country in a deplorable state, and people were absolutely unwilling to run the risk of contagion by taking them in. The result was, that they died a horrible death under horrible circumstances, all owing to the fact that through the error of Mann & Kennedy, for which the Canadian Pacific Railway was in no way responsible, they were driven by the hospital provided almost at their door. I trust the Government will enact drastic regulations, and see that proper sanitary arrangements are made for the preservation of health. It is very unfortunate these people should die without having received proper medical attendance; and that they should die under such circumstances as those attending the deaths of these two young men, seems unnecessarily sad; but for their death, which all must lament, no one is to blame. Against providing such hovels as the contractors provided for these men, the Government should set its face firmly.

Mr. L. A. CHAUVIN (Terrebonne). May I ask the hon. First Minister if he had an interview with some men who had been employed on the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, and who were represented here by Mr. Pierre Denis, of Montreal; and if so might I ask him what answer was given to them, and what steps were taken to remedy their grievances?

The PRIME MINISTER. I would suggest to my hon. friend that this question will come better when we are in committee on the Bill. I will answer it then.

Mr. CHAUVIN (Terrebonne). (Translation.) I do not rise to discuss the question, but only to tell the House and the Prime Minister that I approve of the principle of the Bill now before us. In my opinion, this legislation is a move in the right direction. There is no doubt that the Government should not too often interfere with the labour question, as it would likely lead to abuses; but in such cases as this, it is only a fair exercise of authority on the part of the Government to come to the relief of the workmen by making regulations for the health and for the preservation of the lives of the men.

In my capacity of representative here, with other hon. gentlemen of the Canadian Society of Social Economy, of Montreal, I may say that we approve and are ready to approve of any measure providing for the improvement of the condition of the working classes in this country.

Mr. B. M. BRITTON (Kingston). I read with a good deal of care, some weeks ago, the report and the evidence on which that report was based, and I must say that the conclusion I came to, looking at the matter as dispassionately as I could, was that neither the Government nor the Canadian Pacific Railway were to blame. We were all, of course, very much shocked at the tragic death of these two young men. We thought of the sufferings they had undergone before they died, the painful journey they experienced, and every one who read about them was deeply grieved, but a careful perusal of the evidence shows, as has just been said by the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Powell), that their death was the result of circumstances in that country, and in connection with that work, that could hardly be provided against, and that no one, under the circumstance, could have done, perhaps, more than was done to prevent the sad occurrence which we all regret. If the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Ross Robertson) had read the evidence, I hardly think he would have considered that the term blood guiltiness, which he applied to the Canadian Pacific Railway, was warranted at all. These two men were not in the employ of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. Have you read the evidence?

Mr. BRITTON. Yes.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. The 450 or 500 pages of evidence?

Mr. BRITTON. Not every word, but a good deal of it. They were not in the employ, in the first place, of the Canadian Pacific Railway at all, but of the sub-contractors, Mann & Kennedy. These men were primarily responsible for taking care of the health of these people and for looking after them in case of accident. It is quite true that provision was made by the Canadian Pacific Railway by the establishment of what are called base hospitals, and that the sub-contractors were charged a fee for every man in their employ, and it is quite true that the amount was inadequate to provide what was necessary for every emergency. But they did take such precautions as they thought were necessary, and in no case were they niggardly in supplying or going to expense to meet any call they then anticipated. Even the conclusion to which the commissioner came—and whether I read all the evidence or not, I read the report of the commission—is not so much against the Canadian Pacific Railway as against the system they pursued in first establishing only base hospitals, and not being able to establish emergency or isolation hospitals, where men might be taken in cases of contagious diseases. The hon. gentleman said that foresight is a great deal better than hindsight. So it is. Reading the evidence now, we can see just what possibly might have been done;

but placing ourselves, as far as we can, in the position of the Canadian Pacific Railway, in the first instance, or Mann & Kennedy, or anybody who had charge of these men, it is difficult to see what at the outset ought to have been done other than was done to provide against such unfortunate occurrences as did take place. Nothing that can be done or said now will aid these men, and I am glad this Bill has been introduced so that the power will be in the hands of the Government, and they will be responsible to a greater degree than they can now be, under present legislation, for the health of persons employed on public works in this Dominion. Then, if anything occurs we will know where the responsibility is to be placed. Without such legislation, how can the Government be charged, as the hon. member for East Toronto has charged them? In what are they blameable? They can only be blamed for not having had the investigation more quickly. If any other responsibility is sought to be placed on them, it can only be such responsibility as they would have been subjected to had a Bill of this kind been adopted before. Surely this Government could not be responsible for the injunction granted by a judge restraining the coroner from taking any action to investigate the deaths. Nobody finds fault with Mr. Meade now, knowing all the facts, knowing his willingness to retire from the inquest or to continue to conduct it, nor can any one say that he would not have conducted it, perhaps, well enough if he had been allowed to continue it. But here was an important principle that Mr. Haney invoked to prevent his holding the inquest. It appeared in the course of the evidence that morphia had been administered to one of the men, that there were circumstances in connection with his death, and with which this doctor had to do, that might perhaps, be urged against his acting as coroner. Mr. Haney, as the person interested, implicated if you will—but I do not say he was implicated—was within his rights in applying for an injunction to restrain the coroner from acting. The judge held his decision for some time, and it is suggested here that the Minister of Justice ought to have intimated to him to give his decision sooner than he did. But that would have been an interference with the judge in the discharge of his duties; I think it would have been an unwarranted interference in the administration of justice. To intimate to this judge that he should give his decision before he was ready to do so would be to intimate to him the direction in which he should give it. It is going a long distance out of our way to attack this Government because one of its members did not take some action with regard to the judge who granted the injunction restraining the coroner from action. Looking at the whole case, and without troubling the House with the evidence, without saying what the Canadian Pacific Railway did to provide for the preservation of the health of the men in the employ of the sub-contractors, without stopping to show the care that they took, I say that a careful perusal of the evidence will show, however much we may sympathize with these unfortunate men and their friends, that blame cannot fairly be attributed to either the Government or the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. ELLIS. I would like to ask my hon. friend first if he thinks the judge should have issued that injunction which he did, and if he thinks the judge should not have been brought to book for having kept back his decision so long. I think he is greatly to blame in the whole matter.

Mr. BRITTON. If the hon. gentleman wants us to bring the judges to book for their delay in giving decisions in cases before them, we shall have our hands pretty full.

Mr. BOSTOCK. I am very glad indeed that the Government have brought in this Bill and are ready to deal with this question for the preservation of health on public works. The particular matter referred to in the report which has been discussed is one that affected a part of the constituency which I have the honour to represent: and people in that part of the country felt very strongly about the way the whole medical service was handled in the construction of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. The feeling is that the men in charge of the construction of this line who were responsible for the carrying out of the work, did not see to it that this medical staff was sufficiently competent to look after the health of the men on the work. I was not present when this matter was first brought up; but I understand that the junior member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) went very fully into this matter, and showed from this report of Mr. Clute the way in which that medical service was dealt with. That being the case, it is not necessary for me to go into the matter. I simply hope that the Government will see to it that in these public works, some of which are going on in British Columbia at the present time, stringent regulations are made to provide for the health of the men working upon them. It is pretty well known, at any rate, by contractors who have much to do with the construction of such works, that there is often a great deal of sickness caused simply by the turning up of fresh soil which has never been worked before, combined with the crowded condition in which the men live in these bunk-houses. These things combined cause a tendency among the men to fall ill, and it is necessary, therefore, that they should have proper medical advice and proper care. Another point is worthy of attention, but it is not dealt with in this Bill—I refer to the collection of money from the men engaged in the construction of works of this kind. There is a feeling among the men that some better system should be adopted whereby this money which is collected from them every month should be dealt with. Occasions have arisen where large gangs of men have been at work, and they have felt, although not able to give actual proof of the case, that the construction company was actually making money out of the collections for this medical service. They have taken so much a month from the men's wages for this hospital and medical service, and, at the same time, as far as the men can see the cost to the company was nothing like equal to the amount collected from them every month. I think that is a matter that, in the interest of the men ought to be dealt with, if in any way possible. Where so much is taken from the men to supply them with medical necessities and hospital accommodation, a statement should be made by the company to show how the money is expended. I should like to have seen a clause in this Bill dealing with this point. I think it is necessary that this matter should be looked after much more closely than it has been in the past, and so I am very glad that the Government have introduced this Bill.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not rise for the purpose of continuing the discussion; but I think that before the Bill receives its second reading, we ought to have from the First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) or from some gentleman on the Treasury benches, a statement as to the question that has been raised as to whether, outside of the North-west Territories or even outside of the organized portions of the North-west Territories, this Bill would not be ultra vires. It is a very serious question whether the Government will have power to carry out the provisions of this Bill in any of the older provinces or even in those parts of the North-west Territories the control of which has been assigned to the Governor and his Council. Of course, I speak under correction, and would be glad to know what the opinion of the legal gentlemen on that subject is. I am afraid that a conflict of jurisdiction would arise in reference to the important question of the public health and the machinery to be used under this Bill.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). This question has engaged the attention of the Department of the Minister of Justice, and, while, in my judgment, at all events, the question is not wholly free from doubt, still, I think there is good reason to believe that the position taken by the Minister of Justice in this matter is correct. The first section provides that this Bill shall apply to all works under the legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada. This applies clearly to all works in the North-west Territories—there is no doubt about that. It applies also to certain works in the older provinces. Take the canals, for instance—these are clearly under the jurisdiction of this Parliament. On the other hand, the question of health is under the jurisdiction of the provinces. But it is a principle of construction that wherever a power is vested in Parliament, all the necessary incidents for the carrying out of that power are also vested in Parliament, even though they may conflict with a power vested in the local authorities. And, as the question of building a canal or a railway, which is declared by Act of this Parliament to be for the general advantage of Canada, is undoubtedly a matter over which the Parliament of Canada has jurisdiction it may follow that all the incidents for carrying out of that power are also under the jurisdiction of this Parliament. That is the construction placed on this Bill by the Minister of Justice—that as we have the power we have of building public works, and not only building them, but ordering their building—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is expressly provided for.

The PRIME MINISTER. But the rule of construction, which, I believe, is well understood and admitted and beyond doubt, is that all the necessary incidents for carrying out these powers are also vested in this Parliament. I must say, if I am to express my own opinion, that it seems to me the question may arise whether this is a necessary incident to building of these works. This question may be raised in the courts; but I do not see how we can obviate that. I may say, however, that it is not probable that the evils this Bill is intended to provide against will ever arise in the older provinces. It is not probable that such things will ever occur in the older provinces, where the population is dense and where the men employed in works of this kind find, in the midst of that population, all the means of preserving their health that are intended to be provided in the remote portions of our unorganized territories by this Bill.

Suppose the Crow's Nest Pass Railway had not been built in the Rocky Mountains, thousands of miles away from the comforts and advantages of civilization, but that it had been built in the thickly settled portion of Ontario, or in any part of the older provinces within easy access of the resources of civilization, what has taken place in British Columbia could not have taken place here. While I do not think the case may ever arrive of putting this Bill into operation in the older provinces, still I have no doubt there will be an occasion to test the constitutionality of the Bill. In my judgment, the question will be, whether this is a necessary incident of our power to build public works. If it is held to be a necessary incident, there is no question that we have the jurisdiction; but if it is held that it is not a necessary incident, but only a remote one, then the Bill may be ultra vires.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. I would ask whether it is the intention to draft rules and regulations to harmonize with the provisions of this Bill, and meet cases where its machinery is put into operation?

The PRIME MINISTER. Certainly.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and the House resolved itself into committee on said Bill.

On section 1,

Mr. SPROULE. I do not know whether I understood the Prime Minister to say that it was not contemplated to apply this Act in the older provinces.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. He said there would be no necessity for its application in any of the older provinces.

Mr. SPROULE. That may be, but I think if there was, there would be some conflict of authority. The Health Act of Ontario provides that in every organized municipality there shall be a board of health appointed, with an inspector, whose duty is clearly laid down in the provincial law, and who has power to enter any premises and examine them to see if they are in a sanitary condition. This provision would seem to be in conflict with the provincial law.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am far from saying that the point raised by my hon. friend is not well taken. But the Bill is intended to apply to every part of Canada where public works are being constructed. Certainly it embraces the older provinces, and I quite agree with my hon. friend that the question may arise as to whether this Act is constitutional. But at all events, we intend to apply it to all parts of Canada where works are going on under the legislative authority of this Parliament. It may be that the point is well taken, and I hope there will be no occasion for testing the point, because it is quite probable that no necessity will ever arise for putting it into force in the older parts of Canada, but simply in parts of Canada which are yet unorganized.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). With regard to the point which has been taken by the right hon. leader of the House, I think there may be some doubt as to the jurisdiction of this Parliament. A somewhat similar matter came up in Ontario in the case of Regina vs. Stone. There was an Act of the legislature of Ontario dealing with the matter of frauds in connection with the sale of milk to cheese factories. Almost exactly the same matter was subsequently dealt with by another Act of this Parliament, and in both cases the Act was held to be intra vires. The Ontario Act was held to be intra vires in the case of Regina vs. Watson, because it was dealing with contracts and regulating civil rights. When the Dominion Act came to be dealt with afterwards, it was contended that it was ultra vires in Regina vs. Stone, because it practically dealt with the same matter, and the Ontario Act had been held by the Court of Appeal to be within the powers of that legislature. I think the reason upon which the court upheld the Act of this Parliament was, that this Parliament can create a crime, although the provincial legislature have already dealt with the same subject matter by way of provincial regulation. Now, if this Act is dealing with a criminal matter, as distinguished from a local regulation, it may be held that this Parliament has power to pass it. Whether or not the Bill is couched in such words as would bring it within the principle I have mentioned, may be open to question. It may also be that it can be upheld upon the principle that the power to pass such legislation is incident to the jurisdiction of Parliament over public works.

On section 2,

Mr. BERGERON. Is not that very broad?

The PRIME MINISTER. It has run the gauntlet of the other House, and I think we may accept it, though the terms are broad.

Mr. SPROULE. The Provincial Health Act reads as follows:—

The Provincial Board of Health shall take cognizance of the interests of health and life among the people of the province; they shall specially study the vital statistics of the province, and shall endeavour to make an intelligent and profitable use of the collected records of deaths and of sickness among the people; they shall make sanitary investigations and inquiries respecting causes of disease, and especially of epidemics; the causes of mortality and the effects of localities, employments, conditions, habits and other circumstances upon the health of the people; they shall make such suggestions as to the prevention and introduction of contagious and infectious diseases as they shall deem most effective and proper, and as will prevent and limit as far as possible the rise and spread of disease; they shall inquire into the measures which are being taken by local boards for the limitation of any dangerous, contagious or infectious disease, through powers conferred upon said local boards by any Public Health Act, and should it appear that no efficient measures are being taken, and that the said powers are not being exercised, it shall be competent for the provincial board, in the interests of the public health, to require the local board to exercise any of the said powers which, in the opinion of the provincial board, the urgency of the case demands; and in any such case where the local board, after request by the provincial board, neglect or refuse to exercise their powers, the provincial board may, with the approval of the Minister of the department under which the board is for the time being acting, exercise at the expense of the municipality any of the powers of local boards which under the circumstances they may consider necessary, and they shall, when required or when they deem it best, advise officers of the Government and local boards of health in regard to the public health, and as to the means to be adopted to secure the same, and as to location, drainage, water supply, disposal of excreta, heating and ventilation of any public institution or building.

These are the powers conferred on the provincial boards. Then in the event of the local board not being appointed in a municipality the inspector may make a report and the Governor in Council has power to appoint an inspector to go into the district to carry out the regulations or instructions of the provincial board of health. They not only have that power, but they must exercise it. In the Muskoka district, where the local municipalities are not so well organized as in the older settled portions of the country, and where they do not have municipal boards of health the same as in the better settled parts, invariably the provincial board of health act when anything calling for action is brought to their attention.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not dispute anything which has been said by my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule), but, I would simply call his attention to this consideration: Suppose the Crow's Nest Pass Railway had been built in Ontario, there would have been no occasion for enacting a special law to deal with such an incident as this. The provisions of the Ontario Health Act would have been sufficient to preserve the health of those employed upon the work and to give them the protection to which they are entitled. My hon. friend asks: What is the use of such legislation in the province of Ontario? It would be of no use if Parliament had only to provide for the province of Ontario, but there are other provinces which have not the same legislation that Ontario has. I do not think that such legislation exists in British Columbia, and I am not quite sure that it exists in some of the maritime provinces. In these parts of the country a condition may arise which may require such an Act as this. My hon. friend, I am sure, will agree with me that no Government, sitting here in Ottawa, would care to exercise the power vested in them by this Bill unless there was no Act to deal with the matter in the part of the country where the trouble arose. For instance, no Government would care to exercise the power vested in them by this Bill, in Ontario, where there exists ample machinery to cope with any contingency that may arise such as is provided for in this Bill.

Mr. SPROULE. I drew the attention of the hon. First Minister to the point in the hope that, perhaps, it might be provided that this Bill would only apply to districts under the jurisdiction of this House and not to provinces where provincial boards of health already existed.

The PRIME MINISTER. The Senate looked at the Bill very carefully and came to this conclusion. There may be a point in what my hon. friend says, but I think we may take the Bill as it is.

On section 3,

Mr. BERGERON. There are very large powers granted under this section. The question which was, a few moments ago, raised by the hon. leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), I think, applies to this section, which provides for the extent and character of the accommodation to be afforded. How can we enforce this law against a contractor on the Soulanges Canal, for example? My right hon. friend says that most probably such a Bill would not be enforced in the older provinces, but he does not say that it will not be. How could you force a contractor on the Soulanges Canal to build his houses and his tents in such and such a way? This is a matter of civil rights which belongs to the local governments. You cannot give him the dimensions of his buildings and tents which he puts up for the use of his men. How would you provide for the inspection of the houses and tents and quarters? Who will be the inspector appointed by the Government? Who shall pay his expenses? Will you force the contractor to pay the expenses of a man whom he does not require, who says that he has carried on works for thirty or forty years without any such accidents as that which we are deploring this afternoon having happened under his supervision? Will you force him to pay an inspector who will be there, purely and simply, to earn a few dollars, because, that is the way that his position will be looked upon? How can you force a contractor to abide by your restriction as to the number of medical men whom he shall employ? We have proof in the commission, which was read this afternoon, that there was sufficient medical attendance on the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. It was not because there was not enough medical men that the accident happened which did happen. It was rather due to bad management, if I read the evidence correctly, on the part of the sub-contractors. With what justice can my right hon. friend force a contractor, say, upon the Soulanges Canal, and I only take that as an instance because it is near here, to employ the number of medical men which the hon. Minister of Justice might judge necessary. The last two lines I think particularly objectionable, which gives power:

To make such other provisions for the attainment of their object as the Governor in Council thinks proper.

I think this is leaving a great deal too much in the hands of the Governor in Council. Not only have I a great deal of doubt as to the constitutionality of the Act, but my impression is that, if it is enforced, it will create a great deal of dissatisfaction, and probably more than that, and if it is not to be enforced, why put on the statute-books such an extraordinary Act ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not at all agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron), and I think, on reflection, he will be very much disposed to modify the views he has expressed. The hon. gentleman says that we have no authority whatever to compel a contractor, on the Soulanges Canal say, to provide quarters of a certain specified size in which to lodge his men. The hon. gentleman says it is a civil right. I think it can hardly be called a civil right, but everything depends upon what is a necessary incident of the power we have and the power which this Parliament has to order the construction of public works. If we have the power to allow certain contractors to build certain works, on the Soulanges Canal say, or elsewhere, and to employ a thousand men, is it not within the power of Parliament to say that he shall give to each of these men the amount of air to breathe which we know, by the laws of science, is necessary for a man to breathe ? It is an extraordinary imposition, or an injustice, to say to a public contractor, that he shall not allow a man he employs to do the work which we authorize him to do, unless he provides the conditions which are indispensable to his health ? Is it at all against the natural justice of man, that we should compel the contractor to have the quarters of his workmen clean and well ventilated so that they shall not be subject to disease ? It seems to me there is nothing unjust to anybody there. Not only is there nothing unjust, but we are plainly only doing our duty when we provide that the men who are employed on the public works of this country shall have all the comforts which are indispensable for their good health. We certainly have the power to construct these public works in Canada, and in my individual judgment, I believe we have the incidental power to provide the conditions under which these works shall be carried out, so that the public health shall not be endangered.

Mr. BERGERON. Up to the present we have been talking of the duty of the contractors towards their men, but take the case of the workmen on the Soulanges Canal for instance, and a great many of them are living in tents and houses erected by themselves and which belong to them. Would they come under the operation of this Act ?

The PRIME MINISTER. We provide nothing specific in this Bill, but we give power to the Governor in Council to make rules and regulations. It is not likely the Governor in Council will be called upon to make rules and regulations in regard to such a work at the Soulanges Canal, because such a condition of things has never arisen in the older provinces as would necessitate the Governor in Council exercising these powers.

Mr. BERGERON.

It is in such a case as the Crow's Nest Pass Railway that these powers will be exercised. Complaints will be made to the Government that the men have not the necessary comforts of life, that they have not sufficient medical attendance, and so on, and it will be the duty of the Government to make regulations with regard to that. We have had no complaint from the Soulanges Canal, and apparently the men are satisfied there. In the civilized portions of the country where large works are being carried out, the men are surrounded by doctors, and other comforts of life are within their reach, and if not they can make their complaints very readily. This Bill is simply to provide for workmen in remote regions where their complaints cannot be heard. We have not provided any cast-iron rules in this Bill, because we believed it better that it should be left with the Government to decide as the occasion arises. It is not a very pleasant duty which this Bill places on the Government. It is a law which I hope we shall never need to enforce, but if there ever should be a repetition of what took place on the Crow's Nest Pass Railway two years ago, we want to have this law so that we can enforce it.

Mr. BERGERON. Would it not be better to have these rules and regulations incorporated in the law, so that it may be known what they are. My impression is that if this Bill passes, a contractor who tenders to build a railway or any other public work, would have to seriously take its provisions into consideration when tendering. If the contractor knew exactly what provisions he had to make for the convenience of his workmen, then the case would be quite different. For instance, a contractor in tendering might have his plant on hand ; he might have tents of a certain size, and timber to erect houses of a certain size ; but if he thinks that the Government will make provision that different tents and different houses should be used, then it would influence his tender. We must remember that this Bill if it becomes law would not only apply to the older provinces but to the whole Dominion, and as I have said, it would be better to have all the requirements printed in the Bill so that they may be known. If my right hon. friend were always in charge of the enforcement of this law I would trust him that he would not make any harsh regulations by Order in Council, but I can easily see that under this Bill there might be blackmail levied on the contractor.

The PRIME MINISTER. If I am not always here to enforce the law, some of your friends on the other side will be in my place.

Mr. BERGERON. I did not intend to express the hope that my right hon. friend should always be in power, but I have no objection that somebody like him should be in a position to enforce this Act. What is to prevent any person going to the contractor on the Soulanges Canal, for instance, and saying: The quarters of your workmen are not properly ventilated; you have too many men in a tent, and so on, and I will make a complaint against you under this law. It is true that he would have to come before the Government and the Government might not yield to his demands, but we do not know that. There is a danger of blackmailing, and that would be prevented if we specified all the details in this Bill. We could also say that it would not be put in force in certain parts of this country, where it would not be necessary. If you do not do that, I am afraid you will do more harm than good.

Mr. HAGGART. We have the power of constructing public works, and surely as an incident of that power we have the power to regulate as to what food is required by workmen, and under what conditions they should work. It is an incident, and not a remote one of our power, that the public health of the employees should be looked after by us. I have no doubt as to our power in this matter, but the advisability of this law is another question. I would not like to have the absolute responsibility of looking after the health of the employees on every public work; although perhaps it may be the duty of the Government to exercise their jurisdiction in that respect, however unpleasant that duty may be. On the whole, I doubt very much the advisability of exercising this power except in very special cases. If the contractor does not properly provide for his men, the responsibility is on the Government by this Bill of seeing that the houses, the tents, and the quarters of the workmen are in good condition. But suppose the contractor does not do that, how are you going to punish him? Have you taken any power here to provide that the amount necessary to put the workingmen in a comfortable position shall be deducted from the amount of the contract? Then, again, if the work is let to a sub-contractor, power should be taken in that case to enforce the law. I doubt very much whether you would have power, after letting a contract, to deduct any sum of money from it for such purpose. I merely rose to say that I think there is not much doubt that the Government have the power. It is an incident in the construction of the work.

Mr. PRIOR. I wish to say just one or two words in regard to this measure. I am thoroughly in accord with the right hon. leader of the Government, and I think this legislation is on proper lines. It seems to me there are no contractors worthy the name who would object to such a law being passed and put into operation, because it is to their advantage to see that their men are well housed, that they have plenty of fresh air, that they are guarded from danger, and that their health is well looked after. If the Government can legislate in that direction with regard to miners and with regard to men employed in factories, they can surely do the same for men employed on railroads and great public works. I do not know that I need say much on the subject, except that I am strongly in accord with this legislation. There have been some frightful cases of ill-treatment of men by contractors who are at a long distance from civilization, and this legislation is fair for both the employer and the workingmen.

Mr. POWELL. Is it the intention of the Government to take the very large powers contained in subsection "a," that is, to make regulations "as to the extent and character of the accommodation to be afforded by the houses, tents or other quarters occupied by the employees"? or is it the intention simply to regulate the accommodation provided by the employer?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Is not that what it does?

Mr. POWELL. No, it goes further. It is very general. Suppose the employees boarded at a house that was not under the control of a contractor. This provision is so broad that it might imperil the measure on constitutional grounds.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The regulations will provide for that.

Mr. POWELL. *If the Act is unconstitutional, the regulations would be no good. I simply make the suggestion.

Mr. TISDALE. It seems to me there is a good deal in the suggestion of my hon. friend. I think the provision should be limited to the accommodation provided by the contractor.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If you did that, he might evade the whole Act.

Mr. TISDALE. Suppose the men were boarding themselves. I am in accord with the Act, but this provision is very broad. It never struck me until the hon. gentleman (Mr. Powell) mentioned it and I think it is worthy of serious consideration.

The PRIME MINISTER. Six o'clock.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

PRESERVATION OF HEALTH ON PUBLIC WORKS.

On section 4,

Mr. DAVIN. Under this clause the Government will not be able to impose any fine.

Does not the hon. gentleman think it might be necessary to impose a fine ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I think that is included in the words "penalties and forfeitures."

Mr. BERGERON. A forfeiture would have to be imposed by the local law.

The PRIME MINISTER. If we have to collect fines, we will have to use the local courts; but we must pass the law here ourselves.

Mr. BERGERON. Why not put in a special clause providing that the Bill will not become law until put in force by Order in Council ?

The PRIME MINISTER. We must have the power to make the regulations, and if we make regulations, they will only operate in the place described therein. Suppose this law had been in force when the Crow's Nest Pass Railway was being built, our regulations would have only applied to that work and the district in which it was being constructed. By this Bill we have all the power required to make regulations, whenever necessary, and apply them to a particular district.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY—LOBSTER FISHING.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. ANGUS McLENNAN (Inverness). I hold in my hand the report issued in September last by the commission appointed to inquire into the condition of the lobster fisheries in the maritime provinces, with the view generally of providing regulations for their protection. The reason particularly assigned for the issue of the commission was the fact that all the fisheries officers throughout the maritime provinces reported to the Government from time to time during a number of years past, that the lobster fishing grounds were becoming exhausted, and it was evidently the desire of the Government to find some means or other by which the depletion of these valuable grounds should be stopped. I find, on looking over this report, however, that the duration of the season within which the fishing could be carried on, has been extended, instead of shortened, as was supposed to be the object in contemplation. It has been extended, particularly in certain districts along the Cape Breton coast, in fact, in the vast majority of districts, with the exception of the county of Inverness, which I have the honour to represent in this House. As will be seen by reference to the map of Nova Scotia, the county of Inverness extends the whole distance of the western side of the Island of Cape Breton. In the spring of the year the gulf ice, in its exit, strikes against the shores of this county, and that fact elicits this remark from the commission: That the lobster fisheries of the eastern counties of Nova Scotia are not so easily to be conducted in view of the fact that the ice remains there very late in the season along the four counties of Cape Breton, naming particularly the counties of Richmond, Cape Breton and Victoria, but to these the commission adds the county of Inverness.

And, notwithstanding, I may say, in passing, that they make this remark in the report, yet they suggest to the Government that the season for fishing lobsters in the eastern counties of the Island of Cape Breton should be three weeks longer than on the western shore, in other words, along the western coast of the county of Inverness. The result is that the fishery officials are commanded by the department at this very time to call upon 400 lobster fishermen along 140 miles of the coast of Inverness to cease fishing, whereas those along the coast of the three other counties of the Island of Cape Breton—those on the eastern side of the island—are permitted to fish for the next two weeks or more—that is, from the 15th July to the 1st August. In view of the fact then that the commission have given no evidence whatever to justify such a course, I protest against this feature in their report. Again I call the attention of the Minister in charge of the department and of the Government of which he is so distinguished a member, to the fact that this commission have done great and grievous injustice to the lobster fishermen in the county of Inverness. To emphasize this declaration I wish to submit to the Government in this connection that the four counties of Cape Breton, under the old regime, were under the same fishery regulations with regard to the lobster fishing season. This industry must appear to every person who pays the slightest attention to the matter one of the greatest importance to the people along these shores, an industry which has grown in the past quarter of a century in the maritime provinces from a mere nothing, until to-day it yields products to the value of $4,000,000 a year, of which this same county of Inverness, during the past year, produced about $70,000 worth. The partial extension feature of the report will be the more surprising when I read this extract from the report of Prof. Prince, the superintendent of fisheries of the Dominion. He, in turn, quotes, in justification of his contention in this regard, the New York "Fishing Gazette," of February 26th, 1897. He says:

The New York "Fishing Gazette," February 26, 1897, significantly published the following intimation:—

"It is believed that there will be no lobsters packed on the coast of Maine during the coming season. The principal packing will be done in the British provinces."

Prof. Prince then goes on :

In the Dominion of Canada there remains the last great lobster fishery of the world, and it is not too much to say that this fishery has reached a critical stage.

The signs of exhaustion are unmistakable. Small immature lobsters, 5 to 8 or 9 inches long, which a few years ago were rejected with contempt, are now eagerly taken, and form in some districts the staple article upon which the lobster canners depend. Instead of two or three lobsters sufficing to fill a 1-lb. can, not less than five, six, seven and even ten lobsters are now required.

As I have already stated, the commission was supposed to suggest means to the Government by which this great industry would be likely to be preserved. Forewarned by the experience of the New England States and other countries where no restrictive laws were passed or enforced, Prof. Prince was, no doubt, one of the prompters of the Government in suggesting the advisability of appointing this commission in order to suggest the means, as I have already said, by which this industry might be preserved to Canada. Instead of placing any restriction on the limit of time in which this valuable fish should be taken, this commission has extended the time, as I have shown, except along the coast of the county I have the honour to represent. It is true, as the Minister himself has urged, that other localities have complained just as Inverness does. But I contend there is no other locality in which the same conditions prevail as prevail along the 140 miles of coast in the county of Inverness. In small coves and inlets along the shore of Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick or Nova Scotia the conditions may be similar to those existing along the coast of Inverness, but I say, and repeat, that there is not another length of coast in the maritime provinces where the same conditions exist as in the county of Inverness. And, Sir, especially am I surprised at the conduct of this commission in view of the fact that I took the trouble, as hon. members in this House will bear me out in stating, when this commission were comparing notes in this city before preparing their report, to meet them in order that I might give them my views in regard to the local conditions in the county of Inverness. I have been given every assurance by these gentlemen that my suggestions in this regard will be carried out, that the greatest disparity that would be made between the two sides of the Island of Cape Breton would be between the 20th July and the 1st August. Thus they had given me every assurance that my views would be carried out, and I think the hon. member for Halifax will bear me out in the statement, because he also sought to impress the commission with some views that he held with regard to this fishery. He was present, and I am sure that he and others will bear me out in the statement that I had been given every assurance that my suggestions were reasonable and would be carried out by the commissioners. In this connection, I may say that, while this commission asked for evidence along the coast of the county of Inverness, there were a great many localities where it was impossible for them to take evidence, owing to the inclemency of the season of the year. I, therefore, consider that I had a right to appear before them in order to supplement any evidence they may have found within their reach during their tour of the county. In this connection also, I may instance the cases of the Magdalen Islands, where we have no evidence whatsoever, unless it be the evidence of the gentleman who packs lobsters on those islands. I consider, then, that I had at least as much right to give evidence before the commission as Mr. Leslie, who packs lobsters in the Magdalen Islands, and I believe his evidence was the main evidence taken before that commission with regard to the fishing grounds of these islands. Notwithstanding then, that I took pains to appear before the commission, and that I made several appeals afterwards, it would seem that the fiat has gone forth that the fishermen along the coast of the county of Inverness must cease fishing two or three weeks before their neighbours in the other counties of that Island. It is only a few days ago that I was comparing notes with a gentleman representing one of the maritime counties, and he, among others, assured me that in his constituency the packers and fishermen gave up the lobster fishery very early in July, and why it is that the coast of western Cape Breton, where the ice floats along for a couple of weeks further, and sometimes later, should be put on a par as to time with a coast thus situated, I cannot divine. I would appeal, then, to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to yet favourably consider my request, in view of the fact that he has not yet actually decided, or asked the Government, as a member thereof, to pass a minute of Council with regard to those regulations, so far as I know. If he has done so, it must be in this way, that the recommendations of the commission shall be taken with regard to any relieving clauses have they inserted in their report, whereas the restricting clauses are held in abeyance. I thus feel that the Minister has not definitely pronounced upon the report of the commission at all, and, therefore even yet I am not without hope that the Minister will reconsider this matter. In view of the evidence I submit to him, in view of the fact that the commissioner from the county of Inverness has refused to sign this report, owing to the fact that the other commissioners did not agree with him to include Inverness with the other counties of Cape Breton—I say, in view of these facts, I hope the Minister will take my evidence into favourable consideration, which I think, as representing the people of that county and their interests, should have much more weight with him than the views of commissioners hailing from distant parts of the Dominion. I say that, representing, as I do, these people and their interests in this House, I hope the Minister will consider the point that I have raised in their behalf, and include the county of Inverness with the other counties of the Island of Cape Breton in the extension clause. I want no further concessions for that county in this regard. I merely wish that it be included in section "c," which I believe covers the balance of the Island of Cape Breton. I merely ask, on behalf of these people, that he should consider this matter carefully, and give the weight that I think is due to my evidence, when I plead for them as their representative in this House. I desire that he should consider particularly the clause in the report of the commission which refers to floating or drift ice around the Island of Cape Breton, while it takes no account of this in dealing with the question of the open season for fishing along this very coast. Let him also consider the fact that for the past twenty or twenty-five years these counties have constituted a fishing district of themselves.

I observe another clause inserted by the commission, which, in their wisdom, they declared should be applied to the fishermen, and that is, that from three to five days of grace should be given them, when they receive notice to take in their fishing gear. I only hope the Minister has seen fit to give these days of grace at least to the fishermen of Inverness, while this fishing gear is yet in position, and that he will yet consider the petition I now make to place them on the same plane with their neighbours and fellow fishermen of the Island of Cape Breton. But if he should fail to hearken to the appeal I now make, I hope at least that when the Government take action in this matter and pass a minute of Council to make this report, or any part of it, permanent, the protest I now make on behalf of these people will be considered, and that he will place them on the same footing as their neighbours.

Mr. BELL (P.E.I.) I am glad the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. McLennan) has brought this matter up for consideration. The lobster industry is of vital importance to us in the lower provinces. I sympathize very much with the position that the hon. gentleman occupies. I sympathize equally with that occupied by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies). I recognize how difficult it is for any Minister of Marine and Fisheries to make an arrangement that will be satisfactory to all parties, in fact, it is impossible to make different seasons in different localities absolutely satisfactory to all parties. Notwithstanding my sympathy with the hon. member for Inverness, I am of opinion that, the only safety that the hon. Minister has is to follow strictly the recommendations of the Lobster Commission, because, if he departs from it in the Island of Cape Breton or in the county of Inverness, he opens up the question extending over the whole of the coast of the maritime provinces. The opening up of that question involves greater consequences and will produce greater dissatisfaction than if the Minister were simply to say: Here is the report of the commission and I must abide by it. I do not propose to go into the question as to how the commissioners arrived at their conclusions. I may assume that, after taking evidence they arrived at their conclusions and for the best possible reasons. The only safe course for the hon. Minister is to follow their recommendations. But in that portion of Prince Edward Island that I have the honour to represent, we have to complain that the hon. Minister has ignored the report of the commission. The report in respect to a certain portion of the island shore extending from West Cape to Carleton Head, recommended a season from the 20th of May to 10th of August. We have to complain that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries has not seen fit to follow the recommendation of the commission and has in the face of it shortened up the season to the 1st of August. He has deprived us of ten days legitimate fishing. The reasons assigned to the Lobster Commission, for a special season for this particular section of the island shore, were varied and manifestly convincing. One was that the profitable fishing on this section of the island shore did not commence until about the 6th of July. Consequently, all their real fishing had to be done after that date. They took the ground, as it was their right, that every section of the coast has an equal right to the privileges of fishing—to the bounties of nature. That argument was pressed home upon the commissioners who came to the conclusion that it was nothing but common justice to give to this section of the island shore a fishing season from the 20th of May to the 10th of August. I am free to admit that the hon. Minister does the best he can in the interest of the fishing industry, yet I am at a loss to understand why he should single out this portion of the coast and refuse to apply to it the recommendation of the commission. I think these people have a right to complain and a just right to complain. I am not going into another matter, that is personal between the hon. Minister and myself, in regard to our conversation and understanding on this subject. He takes one view and I take another.

But I insist that the people upon this section of the coast have a right to the privileges of the fishing suggested and embodied in the recommendation of the Lobster Commission. There is another remark that I desire to make in this connection, and it is in regard to the manner of closing the season. I think that the fishermen ought to have a week in which to take their traps ashore; during that time they would not be permitted to bait their traps, nor should they be held liable because their traps were found unbaited in the water. It is difficult to assign a particular limit of time, because you can never tell whether a season will be stormy or otherwise, but, at any rate, it is not fair, nor reasonable, nor just, to say to the fishermen that if their traps are found in the water, unbaited, after the season expires, these traps shall be destroyed. This is the course which the Government has seen fit to pursue in the past in regard to the lobster fisheries. Wherever there has been an infraction of the law in this respect, the Government has taken these traps and destroyed them. I think the policy of the Government upon that point is wrong; I think that the property under no circumstances should be wasted or destroyed. The ropes and traps and gear should be taken ashore and sold. I do not intend to take up the time of the House, but as my hon. friend brought this question up I thought I would take advantage of the opportunity to represent exactly the position of affairs and to press the claims of my constituency upon the consideration of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). Before this motion is carried, I desire to say, in answer to my hon. friend (Mr. Bell, East Prince), that no one regrets more than I do, that in the interest of the fishery, that he represents so ably, I was not enabled to comply with his views. Hon. gentlemen know the great importance of this fishing industry to the people of the maritime provinces. They are aware that it is about the only industry of the kind left in the world. They have seen similar industries along the coast of Great Britain and the United States absolutely destroyed for the want of proper protection, and it is only because the Department of Marine and Fisheries, for many years past, have been enforcing, with vigour and energy, the close season in respect to the lobster fishery in the maritime provinces, that we have that industry remaining at all. I have no hesitation in saying that if any relaxation in the enforcement of these regulations had taken place the industry would not have survived more than a year or two and the source of livelihood, for many thousands of people, would have been taken away. It is a constant contest between the fishermen, who are engaged in the industry, and who look, more naturally, to the immediate catch than to the protection of the industry, on the one hand, and the department on the other, which looks more to the protection of the industry and less to the immediate catch. Charged as I am with the responsibility of controlling these fisheries, I would be false to my duty if I did not follow out the lines laid down more or less by my predecessors. I think, if I have erred, I have erred upon the side of severity and extra rigour, because having lived amongst these people, I saw that the injury was being done and that the industry was being destroyed along our coasts by the same means and in the same way as it has been destroyed along the coast of Maine. Everybody who has any knowledge of these things knows that, if these men were allowed to fish in their own way, two years would not roll by until the lobster became an extinct crustacea, as far as the maritime provinces are concerned. Yet, I was pestered with applications, from one part of the coast and another part of the coast, to grant extensions of time on special grounds, which were always forthcoming. I came to the conclusion after consultation with my colleagues last year, that it was due to myself, due to the Government, and due to the lobster fishermen, that a commission should be appointed of nine capable men who should visit all the localities in the maritime provinces, take the evidence of the fishermen in each of these localities, and after collating it make a report to the Government as to what means should be devised for preserving this industry from extinction. This commission was appointed, and my hon. friend from Inverness (Mr. McLennan) had the nomination of one of the nine gentlemen on that commission. There is no minority report, and that gentleman, I understood, reported in conformity with the unanimous decision of the commission. As I say there was no dissent.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness) He did not sign it at all.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That may be, but at all events he presented no minority report, and as far as I could judge the report was unanimous. This commission decided that the close seasons which had been in operation for years before should be given up, and that five different seasons applying to different specified localities on the coast should be adopted instead. Now, as far as the two points of the complaints are concerned, I shall confine myself to them. The people on the east coast of Cape Breton which is washed by the Atlantic Ocean, had been complaining for many years that they were at a disadvantage as compared with the rest of Cape Breton, and as compared with the province of Nova Scotia and the province of Prince Edward Island, on account of the gales which beat upon their coast, and the ice which prevented them fishing there as early in the season as at the other places. With reference to that particular locality, the east coast of Cape Breton, the commissioners have recommended an extension of time. I have granted that extension for this year. So far as my present mind is concerned I intend to recommend to my colleagues the continuation of that extension as far as the east coast is concerned. As to the county of Inverness, what my hon. friend (Mr. McLennan) states is perfectly true. He came to me after he learned that the commission were inclined to report adversely to the extension in his county, and he pressed on me the very great necessity and importance that the same extension should be granted along the west coast of Cape Breton that was granted along the east coast. I discussed that matter at length with the lobster commissioners, but the commissioners did not report in favour of the hon. gentleman (Mr. McLennan), and it is perfectly obvious to any one who is acquainted with the facts, that if there had been an extension granted to the western coast of Cape Breton a similar extension must have been granted to the adjoining coasts of Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia. These coasts are within sight of each other, only a few miles separated, and it would have been absolutely impossible within the Gulf of St. Lawrence to have granted an extension to the west coast of Cape Breton and refused it to the east coast of Prince Edward Island and the north coast of Nova Scotia. The position I took was this: that while I am in receipt of hundreds upon hundreds of letters and petitions from all parts of the coast asking for similar extensions to those granted upon the east coast of Cape Breton, I found that unless the whole report of the commission was to be torn up and nullified, I would have to adhere to the recommendations of commissioners with respect to the territory defined by them. There was only one other place where they recommended an extension of time, and that was in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, between Catfish River and Tormentine in New Brunswick, and between West Cape and Carleton Head in Prince Edward Island, the narrow part of the straits. There they recommended an extension up to the 10th of August, and my hon. friend from East Prince (Mr. Bell) complains that while I granted an extension in that locality, I had not granted it for the full length of time the commissioners recommend. Well, Sir, I have not granted it this year for the full length of time the commissioners recommended, and for the very obvious and unanswerable reason, that by the commissioners report they are not permitted to fish there until the first day of May, but this year they have commenced to fish before the first day of May. The restriction, therefore, did not apply to them this year, and inasmuch as they commenced to fish the moment the ice moved away, I said: You have had the advantage of fishing before the first of May, and we will stop you on the 31st of July. I think the majority of sensible men will say that is a reasonable and proper conclusion. Next year, as far as I am concerned, I shall feel myself bound to grant the extension in the terms in which the commissioners reported, and I think I may fairly say that to the large majority of lobster fishermen who have many hundreds of thousands of dollars invested in this valuable industry, the decision I have reached will give satisfaction. I am aware that there are many hundreds to whom it has not given satisfaction, but they are the class of men who look to the immediate future for the immediate profit, and ignore altogether the preservation and conservation of the industry itself as a means of livelihood for the thousands of people who live by it along the coasts of the maritime provinces. In addition to the extension of time, the commissioners have recommended that there should be added three or four or five days grace for the purpose of taking up the traps, and a word as to that. I have not been able to make up my mind to accept that suggestion for the very obvious reason that to me, it represents simply an extension of the season by that number of days. I am too well acquainted with the facts down there not to know, that if four or five days time is given to take up the traps, these days will be utilized for fishing purposes, and you might as well grant the extension for the extra number of days first as last. I therefore hope that my hon. friends will see that the position the Government has taken in this matter is the only possible position they could take, and adhere to the recommendations of the commissioners who held sixty-five meetings, and examined many, many witnesses; so far as territorial divisions are concerned. I regret extremely that notwithstanding the pressure which my hon. friend from Inverness (Mr. McLennan) has brought to bear upon me from the month of April last, when the report was first made down to the present day, I have not been able to concede his demands, because if I did concede them it would involve a similar concession to the adjoining provinces of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island.

Mr. A. C. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) I do not rise for the purpose of finding fault with the report of the commissioners appointed to inquire into the lobster fisheries of the maritime provinces. I have no doubt whatever but that these gentlemen did their work carefully and according to the best of their ability. I also wish to say, that I heartily approve of the position taken by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) in his desire to do everything in his power to conserve that very valuable industry to the people of the maritime provinces. I think, Sir, that the hon. Minister should be commended and supported in every step he takes with respect to the preservation of that important industry, and for my part I shall be prepared to back him up in every way in my power, as I have done heretofore with his predecessors in the Department of Marine and Fisheries. This is a very difficult matter to legislate on or to regulate, because the different localities always find various causes on which to base complaints. Now, Sir, I represent that portion of the Gulf of St. Lawrence where the lobster canning was first introduced, and it has been the longest fished of any portion of the Gulf. The fishermen there, in their own interest and in the interest of conserving and preserving that industry as far as it is possible for them to do, do not look for any extension of the season I would say to my hon. friend from Inverness (Mr. McLellan), who, very properly, interests himself upon behalf of the many fishermen whom he represents in that county, that if the fishermen themselves could only look at the matter in a proper light, and in the interest of continued fishing on their own coasts they would not desire to have an extension of the season. The people of my locality, knowing that the fisheries are getting fished out, are prepared, without any law or regulation of the department, to stop fishing even before the time that is set down for the season to close. Of course, there are seasons in which it may be very hard to comply with the regulations. On the north side of the province the coasts are often beset by spring ice a week or two later than they are on the south side, so that the herring, which is used as a bait for baiting the traps for catching lobsters, cannot come in, and the fishermen are thus prevented from prosecuting their business successfully. That has been the case this spring. However, I believe that the way to preserve this very important industry is to take every step that it is possible to take in a reasonable way to shorten the season.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). The commission extended the open season.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) So far as any extension of the season has been recommended by the report of the commission, I would strongly advise the Minister of Marine and Fisheries not to accede to that extension. When the lobster business was first prosecuted, a pound can would consist of two or three lobsters. Now, it takes from eight to ten and sometimes as many as a dozen lobsters to fill a pound can.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. As many as sixteen in some cases.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) We can easily see by this that the industry is getting fished out. The only thing that makes it pay at all at the present time is the immense number of traps that are set out, covering the fishing ground from one end of the coast to the other. The number of traps is being increased yearly to such an extent that it is only a matter of a very short time, I very much fear, when the whole lobster fishing industry will be destroyed. If some means could be devised without injury to individuals by which the fishing could be stopped altogether for two or three years, in order to give the fisheries a chance to recuperate, it would be in the interest of the fishermen themselves as well as in the interest of this very important industry as a whole.

Mr. ELLIS. Hear, hear. That is the only thing to do.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) I hope the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will take all steps possible to conserve this very important industry to the maritime provinces.

Mr. GANONG. I do not rise to make any particular complaint myself of the report of the commission, but rather to voice the feelings of the fishermen of the county of Charlotte in regard to the manner in which they were totally ignored by that commission. Although the Commissioner of Fisheries was several times asked that the commission should hold one of its sittings at the town of St. Andrew's or at some other convenient point in the county of Charlotte, it did not seem possible, under the arrangements of the commission, for them to come to that county, although it is one of the most important counties in this line of fishing in the province of New Brunswick. Some idea of that industry will be had when I state that in the year 1897 out of 2,205,000 pounds of fresh lobsters that were caught in New Brunswick altogether and exported, 1,547,000 pounds went from the county which I have the honour to represent. That was somewhat less than the quantity of the previous year, when 1,876,000 pounds were caught in that county. I do not think there is a county in the whole country more largely interested in this industry than the county of Charlotte. That county is very close to the United States market, and for that reason the live lobster market is very much more valuable to us than it is to some of the more northern counties. To give you some idea of the difference in value between the live lobster business and that of lobsters for canning, I may state that at a meeting recently held in our county, a fisherman who had just come from his traps stated that there were twenty lobsters in his traps, and that he had sold seventeen for 3 cents apiece and three for seventeen cents apiece, getting the same amount for the three as he did for the seventeen. This shows that some attention is required to be paid to this lobster business, or we shall eventually lose the whole of it. The fishermen of our county feel that they have been totally ignored in this matter of the Lobster Commission, and they feel it very strongly. I believe they have sent a representation to the Minister on the subject, and I hope that some time in the future the Minister may find it convenient to come down to the waters of the county of Charlotte, and learn more of the fisheries that are so very valuable to that county.

Mr. KAULBACH. I fully realize the many trials which the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has on his hands when protests are made by the fishermen along the coasts of the maritime provinces, and the difficulties he has to encounter in trying to satisfy the caprices of different people in connection with the fishing of lobsters, with regard to both the close season and the size limit. It appears to me that from the western end of the province of Nova Scotia and around the Bay of Fundy to the American boundary there has been a discrimination against western Nova Scotia on the Atlantic coast, which I think has been unfavourable to the interest of the fishermen, in making the size limit of the lobster nine inches, whilst those fishing north of my county have the limit of seven inches. It appears to me that the reverse should be the case. The fish that inhabit the waters of the district which I represent are in warmer water than those further north; and, besides, the waters of the Bay of Fundy and along the Atlantic coast off my county, have been fished earlier than those farther north, and consequently the size limit should not be against us.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I think the size north is eight inches, not seven.

Mr. KAULBACH. Anyway, it appears to me that this discrimination should not exist, but that the reverse should be the rule. Complaints are made from year to year that the lobsters are becoming less plentiful. If the waters are so depleted, and no effort made to restock with young fry, in the course of a very short time there will be very few, or almost extinct. We all know how very prolific the lobster is. When you consider a lobster of twelve inches producing about 22,000 ova or eggs, of that only about 2000 ova or eggs wasted, and the rest can be cultivated in fish hatcheries or in incubators, an idea can be gathered as to the profitable enterprise that can be arrived at by the introduction of fish hatcheries by the means of incubators. I think that the Government is very lax in not taking more active measures to see that the lobster fisheries are carefully looked after in the way of cultivating the fry. A large amount of money is spent in a variety of ways, but I have my doubts whether in many cases it is profitably spent. But this I do know, that no more profitable investment could be made than the expenditure of a sum of money in the establishment of fish-hatcheries along the coast of the maritime provinces. If this were done, we could keep the fisheries well supplied, so that all the catching that could be done would never exhaust the waters of their fishing grounds. I therefore hope that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries will seriously consider the propriety of granting a sum of money by way of bounty to the fishermen for this purpose, to be utilized in re-stocking the waters of the coast. What I believe we should do is to send some scientist to Norway, Sweden or Newfoundland, to ascertain how the fish-hatcheries are working in these countries.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We have one of our own.

Mr. KAULBACH. I know that, but it appears that that little nursery has not been so successful as to give the hon. gentleman encouragement to further efforts in a similar direction, owing, as I consider, to sufficient interest not being taken to follow it up.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We are making an advance this year, as you will see by the supplementaries.

Mr. KAULBACH. Yes, but it is so slow that by the time any advance is made, the fish will have been all caught, and there will be none to deposit eggs or fructify them. I am sorry I did not know that this matter was coming up, because it is one in which I am deeply interested, and I would have liked to have taken the opportunity of discussing the cultivation of codfish as well, and also the utilizing of cod-liver for the making of cod-liver oil for medicinal purposes. That is a question which could be profitably discussed by the whole House, and it seems to me that it will be in the interest of this Dominion, and especially the maritime provinces, if the hon. gentleman would endeavour to formulate some plan whereby the objects I am now advocating might be successfully carried out.

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The grant for a number of years for the repairs of the buildings at Ottawa was upwards of $100,000. Last year it was reduced to $75,000, but the officials of the department have made a memorandum setting forth the reasons why, in their judgment, it was quite impossible to maintain the buildings in proper condition with the reduced vote. They have gone into the question very carefully, and they say that the deterioration in buildings of this character is of such a nature that unless we have a larger appropriation, it will be quite impossible to keep up the buildings in that substantial condition in which we all desire this beautiful pile to be continued. I should be glad to give any further information that hon. gentlemen may desire.

Mr. HAGGART. What are the main items of the expenditure ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. A memorandum placed in my hands states that the works found necessary are mainly performed by the mechanics and labourers employed by the Department of Public Works under the direct supervision of officers of the department in compliance with requisitions of the various departments and in accordance with the plans of the chief architect. The expenditure for the wages of the men is $50,000, and the purchase of material and of such ready-made furniture as cannot be constructed in the Government workshop, about $50,000. The buildings which have to be maintained are the Parliament Buildings, the Eastern and Western Blocks, the Langevin Block, the Supreme Court, the Geological Survey Building, the Printing Bureau, the Fisheries Building, and the National Art Gallery.

Mr. BENNETT. How much appears in the supplementary Estimates in addition to this amount relative to public buildings in Ottawa, including Rideau Hall ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. On page 7 of the supplementary Estimates, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) will find several items, including :

Ottawa—Post office, custom-house, new boiler .....	$ 1,600
Supreme Court, Ottawa, new boiler....	1,200
Removing old and replacing new wire in Parliamentary Library.....	7,000
Ottawa Departmental Buildings—East and West Blocks, concrete floor, cleaning and painting passages, linoleum, &c. ....	7,500

Mr. BENNETT. If the hon. gentleman will look at the preceding page of the supplementary Estimates, he will find an amount of $104,709.69 to be expended on the public buildings in Ottawa.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, but these are not for maintenance. They are really items on construction account, and chargeable to capital, as follows :—

New Departmental Building (Langevin Block) Ottawa—Balance and interest due contractor .....	$29,811 73
Ottawa Public Buildings—Fire protection and electric lighting, &c.....	21,897 96
Ottawa Military Buildings, new store..	25,000 00
Ottawa Astronomical Observatory.....	16,000 00
To complete reconstruction of portion of Western Departmental Block, destroyed by fire 11th February, 1897.	12,000 00

Mr. BERGERON. On the question of ventilating this Chamber, I think we were promised by the Minister of Public Works last year—if not last year certainly the year before—that something should be done. The ventilation of this Chamber, when it comes to a summer session, is certainly an important matter for us, for we should take care of our health as well as look after the health of others.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I know that the Minister of Public Works made an effort to improve the ventilation. I do not know whether the experience of other members is the same as mine, but it seems to me that the ventilation is improved, and at present is by no means bad.

Mr. WALLACE. It seems to me that the conditions in this Chamber at times are almost unbearable. During the whole session we in this part of the Chamber have had to complain of a draught from above. We have communicated with the officials when we could get at them, but have not been afforded relief. Within the last ten minutes this portion of the Chamber has been very unsatisfactory.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I must say that at times I have experienced the same draught. I think it is due to the fact that the windows on the north are opened. The architect is of the opinion that that is the case.

Mr. WALLACE. We should have somebody to watch these things.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I agree that it is very important.

Mr. BERGERON. As to this amount of $100,000 for work and material—all this seems to be without tender. I see here in the Auditor General's Report about ten or twelve pages devoted to items for goods bought in small amounts and without tender and paid for. I suppose, at the highest prices.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I understand that there has been no change in the method of obtaining supplies. They are bought just as they were under the late Administration.

Mr. BERGERON. But we were promised a great change.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, where an improvement could be made; and many important and necessary changes have been made. It does not follow that everything that the late Administration did was wrong. If this is one case in which they did the business well, we should be commended for following them.

Mr. DAVIN. As the Deputy Minister is at the left of the acting Minister of Public Works, I would again bring up the question of the ventilation of the Reading Room. This is not only in the interest of those who use the Reading Room, but in the interest of the Ministers themselves, because a number of them have rooms off the Reading Room, and cannot have failed to notice the mephitic state the atmosphere is in. The Minister of Public Works promised me that something should be done about it, and the caretaker of the Reading Room says that an officer of the department was sent there and took some measurements, I suppose with a view to carrying out some plan; but nothing has been done. Of course, we are getting now to the end of the session and may be able to live through it. But for next session, in the interest of members of Parliament, something should be done. I also spoke about the lighting of the Library. There is not a shop, there is not an humble dwelling in Ottawa but is better lighted for purposes of reading than the Library. Of course more burners should be put in or the candle power of those already in should be increased. It is a perfect disgrace that members of Parliament going there to do the country's work should be metaphorically burning the midnight oil but actually burning out their eye sockets.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The question of lighting was referred to in the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Davin) absence. As to ventilation, I agree that something should be done. The architect informs me that he has the matter under consideration, and it is under contemplation to put in an electric fan, which it is thought will improve the ventilation. We shall increase the number of lights. I hope the House will be better accommodated in these respects next session.

Mr. DAVIN. We were promised a considerable amelioration of the expenditure on Rideau Hall. I am the last member of Parliament that would pinch or starve Rideau Hall, but there is a long distance between pinching and starving Rideau Hall and extravagant outlay. Now, here we have $17,000 for Rideau Hall, for grounds, renewals, improvements, repairs, furniture and maintenance. That is an enormous sum for practically jobbing around Rideau Hall. Then, allowance for fuel and light, $8,000. Then, removal of snow, public buildings, Ottawa, including Rideau Hall, $2,000. I would like to know how much of that belongs to Rideau Hall. Then, there is $16,500 for water service. I suppose for water service and maintenance not less than $30,000 go to Rideau Hall. Why, it is a monstrous thing. I would like to know very much whether there is any hope of a reduction.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Hon. gentlemen, if they will look at the public accounts in former years, will find that in some cases the expenditure for Rideau Hall was in excess of what it is now. In the year 1897, the expenditure was $22,341; in 1898, $17,736, and we are taking this year $17,000 for the same class of service. With regard to the water service, there is already on the notice paper a resolution which we shall come to in due course, regarding a new arrangement with the city of Ottawa, which will cover that item. For the present we pay the water rates.

Mr. BERGERON. If my hon. friend could have heard the speeches that used to be made by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) upon that item, he would get gray. Now, what is the new arrangement about heating? Some change was decided on two years ago for heating the public buildings in Ottawa.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, the apparatus was changed from wood to coal. About 5,000 tons of coal are used for Dominion buildings in Ottawa.

Mr. BERGERON. Who supplied that coal ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It was bought by public tender, and supplied by Mr. Heney, of Ottawa. He was the lowest tenderer complying with the specifications. There was another tender offering a different class of coal which the department did not accept.

Mr. TAYLOR. I notice a similar sum was asked last year for Rideau Hall, and I presume is all expended. I want to ask the member for Frontenac (Mr. Rogers), and the member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), how they approve, on behalf of the farmers of this country, of the Minister of Public Works spending $1,500 on articles which I will read, for the benefit of Rideau Hall. I presume these goods were purchased without tender. They were procured from a Montreal firm, Cuddy & Brodeur, I presume a third rate retail house. I hope the member for Frontenac will take a memorandum of this, and when he goes back inquire from the Patrons of his county if they approve the Government spending $1,500 for the following list of goods :—

20 Water bottles at $1.50.....	$ 30 00
12 Water jugs at $1.....	12 00

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I understand these goods were bought in the same way as under the late Government. In some cases it would be rather inconvenient to get these goods by tender, because the purpose of this appropriation is to keep up the supply at Rideau Hall according to the established standard, and the goods must be purchased to match those which are already in the establishment. I do not know whether they were bought wholesale or retail. To make amends for breakages, you have to get odd pieces that you would not get in a wholesale house.

Mr. BERGERON. Why buy so many glasses so closely after a plebiscite vote for prohibition ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Prohibition does not yet apply to the whole Dominion, and I am not absolutely sure that we are in a position to enforce it at Rideau Hall, even if we desired to do so.

Mr. DAVIN. How is it that such an enormous quantity of these articles are required every year ? There is a small item here, but from its reading I would like to know what it means : "Boyden & Son, articles short return."

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The practice in some cases is not to purchase these goods, but to hire them for emergencies, and where there are breakages they are short return, and have to be paid for as broken goods.

Mr. BERGERON. I want to ask about the lighting. We were told last year that the whole system was to be changed, gas was to be done away with and electric lighting was to be introduced into all the buildings. Still, I see we have paid over $12,000 for gas in the buildings here, as well as over $11,000 for electric light. If we are using electric light, why should we pay for gas ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. A small portion of the building is still lighted by gas. The hon. gentleman will see that we could not change the whole system immediately. We have a portion of the building in which gas is still used, but the gas account is much smaller than formerly.

Mr. BERGERON. I see that the gas account is over $12,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is for 1897-98.

Mr. BERGERON. That is the last account we have.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The lighting has been changed since then.

Mr. BERGERON. I would ask my hon. friend to allow one item to stand, as the hon. member for York, N.B., (Mr. Foster) has expressed a desire to say something upon the subject of lighting. We might allow one item to stand, so that the question may be discussed.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have no objection ; I think the suggestion is quite reasonable.

Mr. BENNETT. I would like to ask the hon. Minister the explanation of the expenditure of $18,000 for rents. Is that for buildings rented by the Dominion Government in the city or outside ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is in various places throughout the Dominion, where there are no public buildings, and where the departments have to be supplied with rented buildings.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. I would like to ask the hon. Minister whether the Public Works Department has taken into consideration the advisability of providing a separate plant for the purpose of supplying the public buildings with electric light?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. An arrangement has been made from year to year with contractors in Ottawa. We are, of course, free to provide our own plant, but it is not immediately contemplated.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. Has it ever been considered?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The matter has received some attention, but the hon. Minister of Public Works thought the arrangement that he had made with the local company was a satisfactory one. It is terminable at short notice, and we are free to establish our own plant, if it is deemed expedient.

Mr. OSLER. I do not wish to object to any of these expenditures on Rideau Hall, because I think Rideau Hall should be kept up in a proper manner. It is an old building, and the question might arise as to whether it would not be better to erect a new building, because an old building must entail enormous expenditures from year to year. What I want to ask the hon. Minister is, what system is adopted in bringing in the main Estimates and the supplementary Estimates? I see in the main Estimates an item of $470,000, and there is added to it in the supplementary Estimates $104,709, and certain items at Rideau Hall, amounting to $30,000. In looking over these supplementary Estimates, I cannot see one item that might not have been included in the main Estimates. Why are these items picked out to be brought down in the supplementary Estimates? I think it would have been a fairer thing to have included items which appear in the supplementary Estimates, in the main Estimates. It is proper that the supplementary Estimates should be reduced to the smallest possible amount.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Certainly, what the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) proposes is very desirable, but the experience of all governments has been that it has been found exceedingly inconvenient, if not impossible. The main Estimates are brought down immediately after the opening of the House, and as the session advances, important matters come to the notice of the Administration which must be provided for in the supplementary Estimates. I think my hon. friend will find that the amount of the supplementary Estimates is not exceptionally large. The experience of this Government, as I think it has been the experience of all governments, is, that it is necessary to provide for certain sums in the supplementary Estimates at an advanced stage of the session.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON.

Mr. BERGERON. Has my hon. friend ever heard of Estimates amounting to $5,000,000?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think my hon. friend will find that in the past there have been supplementary Estimates, chargeable to income, as large as we have them to-day.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend might ask his hon. colleague at his right (Sir Richard Cartwright) if such has been the case.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Without asking my hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright), I think I can make the statement, that there have been supplementary Estimates, chargeable to income, quite as large as those we have here to-night.

Mr. DAVIN. I quite agree with my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Osler) that we must keep up Rideau Hall. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Finance a question. I saw to-day, in the streets, with a distinguished member of the ministerial side, Mr. Smith, the organiser, and I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Finance whether he saw a campaign sheet that was issued by Mr. Smith in 1895, in which he puts it forward, as one of the planks of the Reform party, that the cost of the maintenance of Rideau Hall would be reduced?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have no recollection of that valuable document. In the particular portion of the Dominion from which I come we generally entertain ourselves at election times with the larger questions affecting the Dominion, and that must account for the fact that my attention has not been attracted to that particular document.

Mr. DAVIN. I am sorry that the hon. Minister of Finance is so hard upon the Reformers of the big province. It is a very polite way—and the hon. Minister of Finance always does everything in a polite way—of telling his Ontario friends that they are small-minded people.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Oh, no.

Mr. BERGERON. To show how recklessly money is expended under this Government, I will draw attention to a small charge that I see in the Auditor General's Report:

Cab-hire of officials—

To pay employees at Rideau Hall: I.
Coté, 7 trips at $1; J. B. St. Laurent, jr., 13 trips at $1.....	$20

Nearly $1 a day.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They must have been going on Sundays when there are no cars.

Mr. BERGERON. I think that they went on the cars, and put the rest in their pockets.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think my hon. friend is not serious in assuming that these persons took the cars and charged for cab fees. If so, it would be a dishonest transaction. The deputy informs me that there is an explanation of the item, although he does not have it at the present moment.

Mr. BERGERON. As the whole item stands, I would be glad if the hon. Minister would get it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Without having the item stand, I will get the information.

Mr. BERGERON. I understood that the item would stand.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, one item will stand.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the name of the caretaker of the public building at Orillia, when was he appointed, and what is his salary?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. John Frawley; salary, $15 a month; appointed several months ago.

Mr. BENNETT. I regret that the hon. Minister of Public Works is not here. However, I want to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Finance to the fact that there was a very suitable man employed as caretaker of that building, that there were no charges made against him and no investigation as to whether his services should be dispensed with, but he was summarily dismissed. I brought the matter up a year or two ago, and the hon. Minister of Public Works gave me his pledge that no person would be appointed to succeed him, stating that he had made an arrangement with the postmaster to take charge of the building. I regret that the Minister is not here, so that I could tender him my compliments on his veracity; however, the people of that neighbourhood can understand the veracity of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte).

Mr. CLARKE. How many telephones are in these buildings, and how much is paid for each telephone?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There are 129 telephones chargeable to the several departments, at a cost of $35 for each telephone.

Mr. TAYLOR. Has there been any innovation in respect to the lighting and heating of Rideau Hall. I see by the Auditor General's Report that there has been $8,000 paid to the Earl of Aberdeen on this account. Why should that be paid to him direct?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The practice has been for many years to pay this sum over to the Governor General as an allowance for fuel and lighting, and the Governor General pays for these out of that sum.

Mr. HAGGART. On what principle do you put telephones in the houses of Judge Burbidge of the Exchequer Court, and Registrar Audette?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That has been the practice for many years and I have never heard it called in question before.

Mr. BERGERON. What was the use of changing the Government then?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have changed a great many things.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Name one.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We do not want to be so ungenerous as to suppose that the late Government never did anything right.

Mr. BERGERON. Are these telephones placed in the houses of the Ministers as well as in the houses of the deputies?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, and always have been.

Mr. BENNETT. Down to what grade of clerks are supplied with telephones at the public expense? Why not let them put in their laundry bills?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They are supplied to the principal officers who have to be called up frequently. They are supplied to officers who do not confine themselves strictly to office hours, but have to be called up after office hours.

Mr. BERGERON. It is understood that the item of lighting here remains over for general discussion.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Quite so.

Harbours and Rivers—

Nova Scotia..... $104,450

Mr. BENNETT. What is the policy of the department as to the construction of these wharfs? Are they to be constructed and maintained by the Dominion or are they subscribed to in part by the municipalities? I find that hundreds of thousands of dollars are being spent on these wharfs all over the Dominion. Is it the policy of the Government that wherever political friends may require assistance, the Government will build docks to come into competition with the docks owned by private parties. Or is it the policy of the Government that where there is no possible business to be done at these docks, the Government, in order to make political friends, are going to waste tens of thousands of dollars. It seems quite evident that if there be a place where there is any considerable shipping done, private enterprise would be prepared to build these docks. Now, is it the intention of the Government simply for political reasons, to build docks where they will not pay, and where there is no shipping trade. Take the first item here, of Advocate Harbour, N.S., where a wharf is to be constructed for $2,000. Is there a wharf there already; is any shipping done there or is the trade so small that private capitalists will not build a dock there? I know instances where this Government, in the province of Ontario, have built docks in competition with the docks of private owners, which is manifestly unfair. I have known cases also in the province of Ontario where the Government had no excuse whatever for building a dock except that it was done for party purposes. Will the Minister do me the gratification of explaining to the House why the Government are now building these docks. It is quite plain that if the building of these docks were profitable, capital long ago would have been invested in their construction.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman used the word "docks" when of course he means wharfs, because docks have a different and special meaning. Where there is a certainty of private enterprise furnishing all the wharf accommodation needed, it is not necessary for the Government to step in, but in places where the people require wharf accommodation but where it would not pay to invest private capital in furnishing such accommodation, the Government might properly be called on to build a wharf.

Mr. PRIOR. Are the provincial governments not supposed to do that work?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think not. At all events, from my experience, they do not, and I am not going to discuss who it is that absolutely should do it. The practice has been for the Dominion Government to construct these wharfs in the various provinces of the Dominion. Every wharf so constructed is in every sense owned by the Dominion, and whatever is required for its maintenance must subsequently be supplied by the Dominion. These wharfs are usually placed in charge of wharfingers, who receive a percentage of the income for their services, but the keeping of them in repair is a charge on the Dominion. It is a very considerable item, and while I am not prepared to say what may have happened in any particular section, no doubt the expenditure on public works of this character has been a great benefit to the people in various sections. This is not a new policy but one which has been carried out for years, and I do not think anybody has previously ever urged that it is not a proper policy.

Mr. BENNETT. Whether the practice was carried on by the late Government or not is a question on which I do not propose to enter. The hon. gentleman maintains that the building by the Dominion Government of a new wharf at the head of Indian River in a place called Keene in the province of Ontario, which is only a creek, not as wide as from where I stand to the wall, is a proper expenditure. It happens, however, that it is in the riding of a Government supporter. If the money were asked for the building of a bridge, there would be some sense in the vote, but to build a dock on a creek no wider than from here to the wall is perfectly absurd. The Government lay down this proposition that wherever it will be a convenience to the public to have a dock erected, their application for that dock must be filed, and the dock will be built, provided of course political leverage can be used, because that is the lever that seems to have been used in the case I have cited. Here is a place that has been from the days of Adam without a dock, and in which no rational man would expend a dollar in the construction of one, because it will not produce any income, as there is no business to be done there. Could anything be more absurd?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The wharfs are not constructed under the impression that they are going to be paying institutions, but they are not a source of expenditure to the Dominion, so far as the care of them is concerned. The maintenance of course is a charge on the Dominion. It is quite possible that you might build a number of wharfs in places where there would be no source of income, and yet where these wharfs would be a great convenience to the public. The hon. gentleman cites a place where a wharf is to be built and where there never has been one since the days of Adam. If there had been a wharf there, it would not be necessary to build one. If there is a reasonable number of people, within a reasonable distance of the locality, it may be a proper place to build a wharf, notwithstanding the fact that there never was one there before and that it may not be a source of income. The business of the Government is to provide accommodation for the people to assist them in carrying on their trade.

Mr. BENNETT. On that principle the hon. gentleman should in every town, irrespective of its population, erect a post office.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In every town the Government provides a post office, and in larger places provides a special building.

Mr. HAGGART. Is not the hon. gentleman stretching the principle a little far? This year he is providing for 89 wharfs of which 54 are in the supplementary Estimates.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Nova Scotia happens to be a province with a large sea-coast. We would not build a great many in Manitoba.

Mr. OSLER. Looking over the Estimates, I find that there are 35 Government wharfs aided in Nova Scotia. That is a fair number for the Government to take charge of and maintain for all time as the hon. Minister tells us the Government is bound to do. But when we look at these little pleasant supplementary Estimates, which appear so innocent, and which the hon. Minister tells us were merely brought in at the end because they were never thought of before, we discover 56 new wharfs provided for in Nova Scotia, 56 added to 35 makes 91 wharfs and piers which the Government are taking charge of and which they are bound to maintain for all time. Surely there must be an election coming on in Nova Scotia if not in the rest of Canada. Yet this is the Government which was to economize. In summer time I live on Lake Simcoe where I have a wharf which I had built at my own expense. There are 40 wharfs all round Lake Simcoe, and the Government, I venture to say, does not expend on them one dollar in the year. There may be one or two, on which they spend money, but I venture to say that there are more calls made and business done at eight or ten of these wharfs than in 80 out of the 91 in Nova Scotia. Where there is a business to be done on the sea-coast, fishing and ordinary business, the Government should maintain a proper wharf but by all that is reasonable and businesslike surely they have not suddenly discovered 91 wharfs in Nova Scotia that are ports of call for boats and business generally. Very often hon. members say of Nova Scotia that it is a poor province and not well treated. Great Scott, a province with 91 wharfs, maintained at the expense of the Government, and this province complaining that it is badly treated! If you are going to maintain the wharfs on the sea coast from Maine to Labrador, and from the southern part of British Columbia to Alaska, on the same relative appropriation as you are providing wharfs for the accommodation of the citizens of Nova Scotia, it will take all the money of this country to keep up our wharfs and piers.

This list of 91 wharfs and piers that we are asked to provide for in Nova Scotia is simply an outrage. I care not how many wharfs were built, or how much has been spent on them in the past. I have not looked back to see how much the late Government spent on wharf accommodation; but I tell my hon. friend that for this Government to maintain 91 wharfs and piers in Nova Scotia is an outrage on the people.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am not much surprised at my fresh-water friend making the observations he did. He probably is slightly acquainted with the maritime provinces, that section of Canada which came to the relief of old Canada some years ago, when, according to the testimony of the leader of the Opposition, the old province of Canada was somewhat embarrassed financially, and came down and got Nova Scotia to assist her out of her financial difficulty. My hon. friend will not take that upon my statement, but I ask him to look in "Hansard" at the beginning of the session, and he will find this statement made in the speech of the hon. leader of the Opposition. I regret that the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) made the observations he did. I think the difficulty is just this, that when we in the maritime provinces want an appropriation we are content to ask for small amounts to satisfy the demands of the different sections of the province. I think if we were to come in and ask for $700,000 or $800,000 in a lump sum, in the good old fashioned way of some of the provinces, my hon. friend would not object. But because the province is content to make application for a number of small works, my hon. friend brings in his analytical mind to the examination of how many works there are in the country, utterly disregarding the fact that the total amount asked for for the province may be a very limited and reasonable one. However, joking aside, I can assure my hon. friend that, so far as I know the object of these appropriations, they are all designed to serve the people of this country. What serves the people in one section in the way of great public expenditure may not happen to serve the people in another section; and to select the items the hon. gentleman has selected and hold them up for special condemnation is not fair, it is not generous, it is not worthy of an hon. gentleman representing the great city of Toronto, and the great province of Ontario.

Mr. OSLER. I had the advantage, before I was a member of this House, of seeing some of the expenditures of the nature which it is now proposed to carry out that were originally made by the late Government. And of all the useless expenditure that it is possible to conceive, I think none could possibly be more useless than that upon some of the works in the lower provinces. Many of the wharfs were not used; in some cases they were not get-at-able. I am sure no one in this House will object to expenditure that is in the public interest; no one will cavil at improvements which are intended for the public good. But from what I have seen in the lower provinces, and from what I see here, I believe that nine-tenths of the expenditure asked for in these works is merely for local purposes and not for the good of the community. These are works given simply for patronage in a district. I am not objecting to expenditure in Nova Scotia. I am proud of Nova Scotia as a province; I believe it to be one of the richest in this Dominion, and I think it will increase in riches and prosperity to an enormous extent. But I do not believe it is wise for the Government to take charge of these wharfs. If they take charge of ninety-one this season, it is not unlikely they will take charge of 191 next season.

Mr. DAVIN. It is impossible for any one to go over the estimates and compare them with those of last year and not come to the conclusion that in the multiplication of little wharfs to be assisted, this time there is something extremely strange, if not alarmingly fishy. Now, if the hon. Minister will turn to the Auditor General's Report, pages Q-3 and 4, he will find that there were just thirty-five wharfs that required to be helped last year, and this year there are ninety-one. That looks alarming. And the names of some of the wharfs are very suggestive. How comes it that these wharfs to be helped are so numerous this year, especially in the supplementary Estimates? Is it possible to believe that the fifty-six for which items appear in the supplementary Estimates, if they really needed repairs, would not have been found worthy of attention by the Public Works Department in time to place them, or at least some of them in the main Estimates? Is it possible to avoid the conclusion pointed out very properly by my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Osler), that there must have been some other motive than putting wharfs in good repair to make their extraordinary accession to the supplementary Estimates. It throws us back on the methods in every department that we have been observing for the last three years. Never in the history of Canada has there been such an electioneering Government as this. In other cases, we have had Ministers who, on certain occasions, would, no doubt, pay a good deal of attention strengthening themselves before the electorate. But we have in office to-day a Government that, from the moment it came into power, seems to have realized that it was only by desperate efforts it could retain the power it had won by a fluke, and so, there has been abundant evidence that in the administration of every department, and not in that of the Public Works only, they have had in their minds only electioneering. I will not say corruption; it would probably not be parliamentary; but, Sir, nobody need be astonished, if, outside of this House in no bated breath, the people of Canada murmur and mutter "corruption."

Mr. LANG. I would inform the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) that the Indian River is not so small a stream as he represents it to be. To the village of Keen, where it is proposed to build the wharf is navigable, and has been for fifty years. There has been a wharf there since before he was born. It is rotting now and falling down, and there is not a great deal of business, I admit; and the people do not feel like renewing the wharf. But the people there have as good a right to a little help as other places have to a great deal.

Mr. BENNETT. The best answer I can give is that the predecessor of the hon. gentleman, Mr. Burnham, was in this Parliament two or three terms, and he had either one of two things, either the good sense not to ask for this appropriation or lack the temerity to propose it to the Government.

Mr. LANG. Because he never got anything for the county.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Burnham represented the riding on the merits of the Government he supported and not on the strength of petty grants of a few hundred dollars.

Mr. BELL (East Prince, P.E.I.) If I were a resident of Ontario, I should feel like speaking very much along the lines followed by those gentlemen from that province who have just spoken. I can quite understand that they should regard with suspicion a great many of these small votes for Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. But I would ask them to remember that there is another side to this question. Let them regard it from the stand-point of a representative of the maritime provinces. Take an illustration. Canada has spent $80,000,000 on its canal system. Now, Prince Edward Island pays a proportion of about one-fortieth of that sum or the annual interest on it. The people of Prince Edward Island are in an isolated position where they do not derive one cent of benefit from it. Nevertheless we pay our share and pay it without grumbling. Now, if you look at that 80 millions as a matter of investment, how much does it repay? If you take the trouble to make the calculation you will find that it does not return or repay one-third of one per cent. The money is expended in Ontario and Quebec to provide a national waterway to the sea. You cannot look at these things simply from the stand-point of how much the receipts are, you must look at them as public works for the general benefit of Canada. That is the way in which we must regard the wharfs in the lower provinces. They are for the general benefit of Canada, and if they do not make the returns that some people expect, they stand, at least, upon an equal footing with the canal system of Canada. If the people of the lower provinces do not grumble, but pay honourably their share towards the sustentation of the canal system from which they derive little or no benefit, surely the people of the west ought to be ready to contribute to the wharf system of the eastern provinces, even although they get but little direct benefit from it. Both systems are for the general benefit of Canada, and we ought to be prepared from all the provinces to contribute our fair share towards sustaining them.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Minister is asking for a vote for repairs to a breakwater at Cow Bay. We voted $5,000 last year, and he is asking for $15,000 this year. Has that work been let by tender, and if so, in what state of progress is it?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is a large and important work which has already received a very large sum of money. The work is being done by day labour. Perhaps I ought to apologize for the expenditure at Cow Bay, for it happens to be in the constituency represented by the leader of the Opposition. It is a large and important public work, and the people in the neighbourhood are very anxious to have it entirely renewed, but it is an enormous expenditure, and we have decided to expend just enough money to keep it in fair condition. It has been done by day's work, entirely in accordance with the law and the practice.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman stated it was in the constituency of the leader of the Opposition. I have no doubt he is employing men to work by the day and getting a pledge from them that when the next election comes around they will vote against the leader of the Opposition. Otherwise, why should he ask for $15,000 of the people's money to be spent on repairing a wharf by day's work, when the law distinctly declares that for any work costing over $5,000 tenders must be called for?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In the first place, it is not contrary to law, it is not contrary to practice, but it is entirely in accordance with the law and with the practice of the late Government, though I do not say that justifies this method of doing the work. But as to taking pledges from the men, I cannot blame my hon. friend for his suspicion, for that is the kind of strategy that he is most familiar with.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the hon. Minister is not exactly right in saying it is entirely in accordance with the law and practice of the late Government, because it was under the late Government that a Bill was passed saying that any work above $5,000 must be let by tender and contract. It may be a modern practice, but it certainly was not the practice under the late Government.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. But it was admitted in discussion last night that in the matter of repairs at all events, it was entirely in accordance with the law; and I cited a case where $170,000 was expended by day's labour by the late Government in the city of St. John.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the estimated cost of the Cow Bay breakwater?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is not contemplated to make all the repairs which the people in the neighbourhood desire, but with this sum we will put the work in as good a condition as we can. It would cost too much to make a thorough repair of the whole work.

Mr. BERGERON. You cannot put any money into a work without having an estimate of how much it will cost. We cannot go it blind like that.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It will cost just as much as we are willing to vote. We think, by this expenditure we can keep the work alive. It is not contemplated to complete all the repairs at present. This breakwater was built many years ago by the Archibald family who conducted large coal mining operations at that place. They sold it to the late Government and the late Government spent a considerable sum of money on it. At that time there were large mining operations conducted at Cow Bay. Subsequently, mining operations were discontinued. But a new company is about being started to renew mining operations, and it is likely there will be a considerable shipment of coal at that place.

Mr. HAGGART. What has been the total cost up to date, including these repairs?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The total cost up to the 31st of December, 1898, is $210,741.

Mr. DAVIN. Could the hon. Minister tell where Ingonish is? Is that in Victoria, as represented by the hon. member for Victoria, N. S. (Mr. Bethune), who has translated himself to the other side of the House?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Ingonish is in the northern part of Cape Breton island, in the county of Victoria, represented by the hon. member referred to.

Mr. CLARKE. Is this work to be done by tender and contract? Has anything yet been done?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, nothing has been done. The plans are in course of preparation.

Mr. BERGERON. Will it be done by tender?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think it probably will. Most of the new work is built by tender.

Mr. BERGERON. Would my hon. friend do it by tender?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think I would; but there may be good reasons why that principle cannot be complied with.

Mr. WALLACE. We know now what caused the hon. member for Victoria to transplant himself to the other side of the House.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the estimated cost of the work?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The total estimated cost is $21,500.

Mr. CLARKE. What was done with the $2,000 voted last year?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Nothing has been done with last year's vote. This is a breakwater, such as is usually built in the lower provinces.

Mr. BERGERON. What is this work for: what is the object of it? It has never been wanted before now.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend says that it has never been wanted, but in that he is mistaken. It is a breakwater, and I do not know that I can give any explanation of what a breakwater is to my hon. friend, who represents, in a sense, a maritime province, and who knows what a breakwater is.

Mr. BERGERON. I know that hon. members generally ask for everything they can get, but I do not remember that there ever was a demand for a work there. I am surprised that the demand is made this year.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I can assure my hon. friend that many applications for work are made that are not granted.

Mr. POWELL. What is the trade of Ingonish?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It has not much of what might be called trade. It is a fishing village.

Mr. WALLACE. What is the population?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The population is scattered along the coast. There is no settled population, in the sense of a village population, but it is scattered along the coast.

Mr. DAVIN. I see an item here of $8,000 for Port Hilford, in Guysborough. I am told that this is a very small place, and that there is no need for anything there. It has been done to meet the importunity of the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser).

Mr. COCHRANE. I am surprised that the hon. Minister of Finance, acting for the hon. Minister of Public Works, should pass these things over so lightly, and tell hon. members on this side of the House that they ought to know what he meant by a breakwater. I have the honour to represent a riding which is bounded on the south by Lake Ontario, where we have a great many wharfs, and there is a good deal of difference between a breakwater and a wharf. A breakwater means a pier built for the protection of a harbour, and a wharf means a place where grain is delivered and vessels tie up to put off merchandise and take on produce. I have no objection to money being spent where it is spent for the benefit of the country, but when we are told by the hon. Minister that he is building breakwaters for which there is no need, it appears to me that he is going rather too far. When my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island compares his little docks on the Island to our wharfs, I will venture the assertion that we have one wharf in the harbour of Presqu'île that ships more grain than the whole of Prince Edward Island. I am surprised that an educated legal gentleman would have his mind so warped as to compare a paltry little dock in Prince Edward Island with the canal system of this Dominion. The hon. Minister does not deign to tell us what is meant by a breakwater that is to cost $19,000 or $20,000, or what it is being built for, and hon. gentlemen opposite will cackle and laugh because they are supporting the Government, which have favours to give them. We are spending somewhere in the neighbourhood of $51,000,000, and hon. gentlemen, when they were on this side of the House, said that the country was robbed, and that the farmers had been bled white, when our expenditure was $40,000,000 a year. It is all very nice for these hon. gentlemen. My hon. friend from East Peterborough (Mr. Lang) said that the member representing that riding before him had never been able to get anything for the riding. I am glad, for the credit of the Conservative party, that he was not able to get such an expenditure for a wharf on a paltry stream running into Rice Lake. He told us that there was a wharf at that place before we were born. I am glad that the old Government did not grant any money for that purpose, because they would have spent $2,000 to build a wharf where there is no more need than there is for a wharf on the Parliament grounds at Ottawa. Hon. gentlemen opposite are building this enormous number of wharfs and doing the work without contract. They say it is according to law now, but when we were on that side of the House, we could not draw our breath unless it was done by contract. We could not let a five-dollar job without contract, and now we have this $19,000 or $20,000 to be expended on this wharf, and the hon. Minister says that the law which requires the work to be done by contract, is a dead letter, and that everything is all right. If an election were coming on, I wonder if we would not have the same job as was perpetrated on the Western Block when the election was on in Wright. I see the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram) looking serious. I wonder why there was not a sum in the Estimates to dredge Toronto harbour. The hon. gentleman is getting more protection than he got under a Tory Administration, and he is willing to accept that protection and let the harbour of Toronto go to the dogs. I was just wondering if we had an election on, if this money would not be spent in the same way as money was spent on the Western Block when the election was on in Wright. I was told that they had so many men on that job that they were carrying in laths one at a time, and I did see five men holding a ladder for one man to work on. Just as soon as the election was over, the men went back to Wright—the county of Wright; I do not say it was a right job. We were told the poor farmer was bled white when the Tories were in power, but I would like to know what colour he is being bled now. I know, Mr. Chairman (Mr. Ellis), that you look on these matters from a serious point of view, and I know you must feel sad to see how much money your political friends are spending on day's work, when it should be done by contract. I do not expect that the Minister of Finance should explain these matters as fully as the Minister of Public Works, but when we ask for information, he has no right to say: Oh, we ought to know it.

Mr. FIELDING.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did not say that.

Mr. COCHRANE. You said that to the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron).

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did not say he ought to know it, I said he did know it.

Mr. COCHRANE. Well I do not know it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend (Mr. Cochrane) does know because he has given a very excellent definition of what a breakwater is.

Mr. COCHRANE. But I do not understand how you can spend all that money along a coast which is so sparseley settled that you can hardly find a village in it. We have large shipping interests all through the province of Ontario, and if you are spending this money lavishly in Nova Scotia we are entitled to some expenditure in Ontario. I venture to say we are shipping more grain out of Brighton harbour than they will ever ship over this wharf until it rots down again. I do not object to your building wharfs if it be in the public interest, but I do object to your squandering the money of the people for party purposes. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask you if the Minister will not give us the information, why it is that these wharfs were not built during a long number of years past, and that it now suddenly crops up in the year 1899, that they are necessary.

Mr. BENNETT. I would ask the Minister of Finance if the following breakwaters and wharfs are situated in the county he has the honour to represent. Clark's Harbour breakwater, expenditure $5,000; Coffin's Island, $300; East Ragged Island wharf, $1,500; Port Latour breakwater, $3,000; Upper Port Latour wharf, $400; Shag Harbour wharf, $2,000; Upper Woods Harbour wharf, $1,600; Port Mouton wharf, $2,000; Port Medway breakwater, $500; Upper Port Latour wharf, $300; Lockeport breakwater, $3,000; East Ragged Island wharf, $1,000; Jordan Bay east breakwater, $1,200; Newellton Cape Island wharf, $2,000. Are all these expenditures in the constituency of the Minister of Finance?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) has apparently been reading from the main and the supplementary Estimates, and I think all these named are in the counties I have the honour to represent. I have to apologize to the House for asking such very small sums,—for these are all very small sums,—and I am sorry that I could not do better. As they say: Wait till you see next year.

Mr. BENNETT. I employed my time with the assistance of the "Post Office Guide," in discovering these places, but owing to the insignificance of some of them, I find they are not even post offices. Is it not a pitiable position for a Minister of the Crown to come down before the House—I was going to say taking advantage of the temporary occupation of the position of Minister of Public Works,—to ask to have these numerous amounts placed to his own credit in his own riding. I welcome it for the reason that the Minister of Finance must feel very uneasy in his own constituency. What did we find last night? We found that this same Minister of the Crown is placing in a town in his constituency—in Ontario it would be ordinarily termed a village—a public building at a cost of over $15,000. Look at the position of the Minister of Finance. After he had gone from one end of his own province to another, and even coming up to the other provinces stumping in the general elections of 1896, he could not find a member from the province of Nova Scotia who would resign his seat and give way in order that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) might get a portfolio. And what happened? He could not get a seat until Mr. Forbes who represented a Nova Scotia constituency in this House, dropped into a judgeship. After that humiliating position into which the Minister of Finance was forced by his own party friends in his own province, we find him coming down here and despoiling the public treasury, to do what? To build piers and docks and breakwaters at every conceivable point in his own riding. It is no wonder that those who sit behind him expect that they shall have grants of money, in order that they may strengthen their own position. I am glad to see that the Minister of Finance feels so weak and unstable in his own constituency, that he has to offer these bribes, as I claim they are bribes, to help him get returned to Parliament.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is much which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) has said that I need make no reference to. It will go down on "Hansard," and it will do its proper work at the right time. I have the honour to represent in this House two counties, and the aggregate amount these counties have received will be but a drop in the bucket as compared with the sums voted for public works elsewhere. But, because they happened to be small sums distributed over a number of places, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) imagines that by reading this list of names he can convey the impression that there is a large sum being voted for my constituency. I have not made a calculation; I have no mind for that sort of finesse; but I believe it will be found that in the two years, covered by the Estimates, the county represented by the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) will have at least as much money out of the public treasury as the counties which I represent. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) misunderstands entirely the public of Nova Scotia, and of the Dominion, if he imagines he can make any capital whatever by delivering a speech such as that which he has just placed on "Hansard."

Mr. SPROULE. I do not think the answer given by the Minister is to his credit or is an excuse for this expenditure. It will be admitted by every one that where trade has to be accommodated a reasonable expenditure should be made from the public treasury for the purpose of accommodating that trade. But the Minister has given us the information that in a place where we have already spent $200,000, it is only a very small village; practically a fishing village.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Where is that?

Mr. SPROULE. Cow Bay.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) is confounding two places. Cow Bay is in Cape Breton and is a coal village.

Mr. McISAAC. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) should consult his leader about that.

Mr. SPROULE. I am consulting no one except the Minister of Finance who is supposed to give us sufficient information to satisfy us that we should vote this sum. I say that where there is business to be accommodated there can be no reasonable objection to voting money to accommodate that business. But how can it be possible that after all we have spent in Nova Scotia there remain ninety-one places on which expenditure is necessary to accommodate the trade in that province. If you take the trade of the whole province and divide it amongst ninety-one places you will see how small the trade must be for each. As my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) has said, some of these places are so small that you cannot find a post office there. They are simply small fishing villages, and in Ontario no one would have the hardihood to ask for such large expenditure in similar small places. If in the province of Ontario, we get a couple of thousand dollars of expenditure in our large towns from year to year, the Government think they are dealing most generously with us. If you take the Trade and Navigation Returns you will find that these Ontario towns do far and away greater business than is done in these insignificant places in Nova Scotia. One of the members from Prince Edward Island in comparing the expenditure said: Oh but we have built the canals for you in Ontario. Does the hon. gentleman not know that these canals are the great highways for commerce for the whole country, and that their benefit does not accrue to the province of Ontario alone, but to the entire Dominion. They are important for the whole Dominion. They not only are useful for carrying the trade belonging to the Dominion, but also the trade of the western country bordering on ours and which comes through the Dominion. There is no comparison in an expenditure for that purpose and one such as proposed in the items before us. This money is to be expended in some places where no trade at all is being done, according to the Trade and Navigation Returns; and when we ask for expenditure in Ontario at large ports, where considerable trade is done, we can only get a beggarly amount of $2,000 or $3,000 to do a little dredging.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In the province of Ontario the hon. gentleman will find that the votes run from $10,000 to $60,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Take the city of Toronto, with 200,000 of a population, and it gets but $50,000. Take the city of Hamilton, how much does it get?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In each case what they need.

Mr. SPROULE. The people of Toronto do not think they get what they need. They think that $200,000 would be a moderate estimate for the needs of that port. But in the maritime provinces, a little fishing village, with no trade at all to speak of, gets $25,000. If you will compare the amounts voted for Ontario with what are voted for the province of Nova Scotia, if you will take a particular town in Ontario and put the expenditure there alongside of a particular town in Nova Scotia, you will find that the proportion of trade done in Ontario is $4 to $1 in Nova Scotia, and yet the proportion of expenditure in Ontario is very much less than in Nova Scotia. We object to this expenditure because it is being made at places where there has been comparatively no trade in the past and where there is likely to be comparatively none in the future. The hon. gentleman has not given us the information upon which he submitted to Council the proposals for this expenditure.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the hon. gentleman will ask me in any particular case, I shall be glad to give the information. He is mistaken when he says I refused it.

Mr. SPROULE. The information was asked for over and over again to-night and not given.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No information was asked for and refused.

Mr. SPROULE. It was asked for by the hon. member for Beauharnois and not given.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Every question put by him was answered.

Mr. SPROULE. I think that the hon. member for Beauharnois asked, in the first place, what was the nature of these repairs on the Cow Bay breakwater. Two or three questions were put to ascertain the nature of this expenditure, because if it were piles or crib-work, the work ought to be let by tender and contract.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. member for Beauharnois asked several questions which were answered evidently to his satisfaction. If the hon. gentleman will mention any item on which he desires information, I will do my best to give it to him.

Mr. SPROULE. I asked the hon. gentleman what were the repairs required to be made.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. For the Cow Bay breakwater it is chiefly concrete work.

Mr. SPROULE. How much does his engineer estimate requires to be done of concrete work ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The concrete work on the whole would amount to $24,750.

Mr. WALLACE. What is the nature of the concrete work ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. A concrete slope to protect the work which had previously been done.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. Minister does not say whether it is proposed to do this by day's work.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I stated that it was being done by day's work.

Mr. SPROULE. What is it costing per yard doing it by day's work ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. $5.50 per cubic yard.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman proposes to have this all done by day's work ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. A part has been done by day's work. We have already spent $5,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the hon. gentleman believe that he can do this work as cheaply by day's work as by contract ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Well, I happen to have some little experience in concrete work, and my observation is that it can be done better by day's work under competent supervision.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman has a different opinion from what his friends had when on this side. If there was one principle more invariably pressed on the attention of Parliament than another, it was the principle that any work costing $5,000 or over should be done by contract.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Repairs ?

Mr. SPROULE. Any kind of work, but the hon. gentleman is going to spend $24,000 and do the work by day's labour. I can only say that his experience must be different from that of every other Minister of Public Works. This is a kind of work that can be easily done by contract, as there is no difficulty in making plans and specifications. And, therefore, above all others, it is a kind of work that could be done by contract. And the hon. Minister has not even invited tenders to find out what the work would cost, but does it on the strength of an estimate given him by his engineer. The estimate may be right, but I think he is doing the work in a much more expensive way than is at all necessary.

Mr. CLANCY. Do I understand the hon. Minister to say that it was estimated that this work would cost $24,000 and that $5,000 has already been expended ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The amount expended last year was $5,000. Other expenditures have been made in previous years.

Mr. CLANCY. What I wish to ascertain is how much of the $24,000 remains to be expended ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. According to the Auditor General's Report we expended in 1897, $9,000 on this work, and in 1898, $5,000. With the appropriation now to be taken we expect to finish the work contemplated by the engineer. The concrete estimate was $24,000, but there are some other expenditures beside. Had we carried out the repairs regardless of cost, the amount necessary to be expended would be about $100,000, but the engineer cut this down to $30,000, of which half has been expended and we are asking the other half now.

Mr. CLANCY. Is it the intention to do more work than will be covered by this $30,000 ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is all at present. A portion of the work was practically abandoned, no attempt being made to renew it.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I would like the Minister to explain whether the estimate of the engineer on a basis of $24,000 is intended to cover the extent of the wharf which originally existed. A large portion of the breakwater was carried away between the years 1895 and 1896, and there was a break in one or two places between the extreme end and the shore.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This does not cover the whole extent of the wharf. The work we have undertaken does not extend to the outer work—that is practically abandoned. In view of the expense and the falling off of business in the place, we thought we would not go beyond $30,000 at the present time.

Mr. McDOUGALL. How much of the wharf will this expenditure cover?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. About 200 feet of the structure is practically abandoned and will not be touched by the present repairs.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I am afraid my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) will find that abandoning this 200 feet will prove a great disadvantage to the shipping that seeks the protection of this harbour. He must be aware also that another coal company is opening at that point with the intention of making use of the breakwater, as the coal company that previously existed did. I quite understand, that for years we have had to struggle with the difficulty of keeping that breakwater in repair; and when on one or two previous occasions a great break was made in it by heavy storms, we had to contend against very large estimates on the part of an engineer. At one time since I first had the honour of a seat in this House, the engineer of the department made an estimate of $100,000 for the repairs on that breakwater, which brought up the question whether the Government should abandon further repairs on the breakwater or expend this $100,000. The difficulty was to provide this $100,000, making it necessary for the department to change their plans, and the result was that some $22,000 or $24,000 was spent on the breakwater twelve or thirteen years ago instead of $100,000. That kept the breakwater intact from that time until 1895, when a heavy storm made one or two breaks, and application was made to the department for immediate repairs. It was not possible for the Government at that time to undertake the repairs for want of money. It was intended in the session of 1896 to provide a sum to make at least the necessary repairs to save the breakwater from further destruction by storm.

As my hon. friend will remember it was not possible to put any Estimates through the House during that session, and in consequence the breakwater suffered greater damage, with the result that now a much larger amount of money is necessary to put it in the condition it formerly was. I hope the Government will be able to extend it to its original length as soon as opportunity offers, because I believe that the people who are now engaged in opening up a new coal mine there will make that enterprise a success, and will therefore need that breakwater, as it was needed by the people who carried on a very large work there some twenty or thirty years ago. My hon. friend knows that the coal mines that were being operated in that locality and which made use of that breakwater, became the property of the Dominion Coal Company, and for reasons best known to that company, and perhaps to my hon. friend, those coal mines have been closed, and the port has been practically abandoned as far as shipping coal is concerned. Now that a new company is opening up another mine in the same locality, with the intention of making use of this breakwater, I hope my hon. friend will see that it is put in such a condition that it will be a permanent benefit.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. With most of what the hon. gentleman says regarding the importance of the breakwater, I cordially agree. He came in late in the discussion; if he had been here an hour earlier he would realize some of the difficulties which the Government experience in making liberal grants for these services. It is so difficult to make our friends—I speak of gentlemen on both sides of the House and in other parts of the Dominion—realize the need there is for works of this character on the Atlantic coast of our province; and when we ask for liberal votes in that direction I am much surprised that hon. gentlemen opposite seem to think that too much money is sought. Considering the amount of criticism we have had to stand for the expenditure that is now asked, imagine what the situation would have been if we had asked for the extra $70,000 which would be necessary to put that breakwater in good condition. It is unfortunate that a number of these important public works throughout the lower provinces have been allowed to go into decay. I am not blaming anybody for it, it may have been unavoidable. Whatever the cause of it may be, it is a fact that along the coast of the maritime provinces you will find a great many important structures, not always so large as the one at Cow Bay, but nevertheless large and important, which have been allowed to go to decay. In my own constituency there is one work which would require, according to the engineer's report, $70,000 to restore it. But I knew it was absurd to ask Parliament at present to make that appropriation so I have had to let it stand and wait for another opportunity. In my hon. friend's county there is an important breakwater at Gabarus, which was referred to the other night. It is a case in which it would require a liberal grant to put it in good condition, but I found it was impossible to make a large grant without swelling these Estimates to an unreasonable limit. Similar cases to those I have cited may be found along the coast of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, where considerable sums of money have been spent in the improvement of these works and in constructing new ones. I accompanied my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works during part of his tour last summer, and I know that the result of his examination satisfied him that he would require a much larger appropriation for those public works than they had had in the past, and in justice to that hon. gentleman I want to say that he was so deeply impressed with that view that in his first draft Estimates he recognized the claims of a number of places which, on a careful review of the whole matter, we found ourselves unable to sanction on account of the extent of the expenditures that would be required. With regard to Gabarus, we have taken a small vote, with which we hope to make a beginning, but it is one of the class of works that, if you touch at all, will require a large expenditure in the future.

Mr. McDUGALL. That work at Cow Bay has been kept up by public grants from this Parliament for some thirty years. It was first undertaken by private individuals operating a coal mine and was subsequently taken over by the Government, and has been maintained up to the present period. On account of the exposed place where this work was, it has suffered great injury and that injury might have been prevented had it been possible for the Department of Public Works to undertake the expenditure without the consent of Parliament. I may say that in my own experience cases have frequently occurred where it has cost twice as much to make repairs as it would have cost if the department had been able to act promptly without waiting for the consent of Parliament. Now, a word about Gabarus. On two occasions since the opening of this session I have asked questions about it. On those two occasions I asked if the Minister had visited that place when he was down at Cape Breton. I felt anxious that something should be provided for that work. On one occasion I was answered, I think by the Minister of Finance, who informed me that the Minister of Public Works did not visit the place. Now, that is a mistake. The hon. Minister did visit the place and he was presented with an address by the people and brought to the point where a survey was made with the intention of building this breakwater. I cannot understand how it is that the answer to my question, on two occasions, was to the effect that the Minister had not visited the place. I am glad to see that this grant is made now, but I cannot understand, unless my hon. friend will be able to explain when the supplementary Estimates are being discussed, what is intended to be done with this $8,000. I hope my hon. friend will be able to explain in some satisfactory way how this $8,000 can possibly be expended with the view of being of any advantage to the people of that part of the country.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We will go into that on the supplementary Estimates. In regard to the hon. Minister of Public Works visiting Gabarus it is certain that there must have been some misunderstanding. He visited so many places that I suppose it was impossible for him to carry them all in his mind. However, I am glad to know that he did visit Gabarus and has a personal knowledge of the work.

Mr. COCHRANE. I would like to ask the hon. Minister how he proposes to repair a work, that was formerly constructed of timber, with concrete?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am advised that the department repair the work by putting the concrete in the outer chambers of the cribs and building a concrete slope outside for the protection of the breakwater which would otherwise be carried away.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) Do they build the crib wholly of concrete?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not wholly, but they built it so that it forms a concrete wall.

Mr. GANONG. I do not rise for the purpose of defending the Government in using these grants for election purposes or of justifying them in doing these works by day labour instead of by tender and contract. I have just this to say in regard to the maritime provinces that I think hon. gentlemen from the west do not appreciate the condition in which we are down there. In my own county there are numerous places that demand greater attention than they have had in the past. I regret that the hon. Minister of Public Works did not reach my county, but when he got through with the happy country across the Bay of Fundy, he took a direct line for Montreal, totally ignoring us. On my representation he kindly sent his engineer to my county who made a survey of a work that is greatly needed at Seal Cove, Grand Manan, where a deep water wharf is required by the fishermen to make direct connection with the boats of the West India Steamship Company. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), states that nothing appears in the Trade and Navigation Returns respecting these places along the coast. That is no evidence whatever. The Trade and Navigation Returns show that the maritime provinces do $13,000,000 out of the $22,783,000 of the fishing trade of Canada. There is also this to be considered, that while there may not be any great population in those fishing villages, it is scattered along the shore and these breakwaters are the sole protection of the lives and property of the fishermen for fifteen or twenty miles. I know in my county of a breakwater which needs repairing, and I am glad to see that the hon. Minister of Public Works on my representations, intends to repair that work, which is the only protection there is for thousands of fishermen along the shore. This not a question of the number of inhabitants; it is a question of the protection of the lives of the fishermen for many miles. These breakwaters in the Maritime Provinces have been built to protect the lives and property of 40,000 or 50,000 people who are engaged in the fishing industry, and who have $4,000,000 worth of property afloat. It is quite essential that these men, who are engaged in this work, which is the hardest work that could be undertaken in the whole country, should have adequate protection for their lives and property.

M. SPROULE. I do not object to a reasonable expenditure for the purpose of giving fishermen necessary facilities for carrying on their work, but when I compare the answer that is given to us when we apply for an expenditure of public money for that purpose in Ontario, with what takes place in the maritime provinces I think we have just ground for complaint. When I applied to the department for an expenditure of public money for such a purpose, I have always been told that the department cannot pretend to spend money for the purpose of making harbours for fishermen. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Finance, when Parliament votes money for such works, what assistance the people in the locality give? In Cow Bay for instance, upon which, I believe, $200,000 will be expended—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. $200,000 has already been expended. All we contemplate, in regard to expenditure, is $15,000.

Mr. SPROULE. How much has been contributed by the locality?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not think anything at all. The work was built originally by Archibald & Co., a big mining concern, and it was ultimately taken over by the late Government as a Government work for the protection of the harbour generally. It has been repaired by the Dominion Government and no municipal aid was given. Municipal aid is not usually given towards works of that character. I am sorry to hear my hon. friend say that there is any disposition to discriminate against Ontario. I can assure him that there is no idea of that kind present in the minds of the Government, and if there are cases in Ontario, where the fishermen require break-waters, I think they ought to receive aid and encouragement the same as people in any other part of the Dominion.

Mr. SPROULE. I am only speaking of the experience I have had for some years. Whenever I applied to the Government for the purpose of having a work constructed of that kind that was the answer that I received from the department, and I take it that the same principle prevails now. Do I understand the hon. Minister to say that localities in the maritime provinces give no assistance towards the building of these wharfs?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think that is correct.

Mr. SPROULE. Let me compare that with what takes place in the province of Ontario. There is not an important harbour in Ontario that has been improved towards which the municipality has not given aid over and over again. Take Collingwood, Meaford, Thornbury, Owen Sound, Wiarton, Port Elgin, Kincardine, and other places. There is not one of these municipalities but has contributed a very respectable share towards the improvement of their harbours. More than once these places have passed by-laws for $10,000, $15,000, $20,000 and $25,000, and these amounts have been supplemented by money belonging to the country. When we asked for such a public work in a town of perhaps ten thousand inhabitants in the province of Ontario, the Government say to us: What is the municipality going to do? All through Ontario the municipalities are assisting, but when you go to the maritime provinces, the whole expenditure comes out of the Dominion treasury, and so the people of Ontario have a good deal to complain of.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman will find in the Estimates a number of expenditures in Ontario to which the people are not contributing, and I do not think they should contribute. The hon. gentleman cannot be referring to anything that has been said by the present Minister of Public Works. It is so manifestly unfair that he should have said that in Ontario they must contribute locally, when at the same time he is doing work in the lower provinces without any local contributions, that it is not at all probable the Minister ever said so.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the Minister point to any one such case in the province of Ontario?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) says that he knows of his own knowledge that in every one of these cases in Ontario the municipalities have contributed, I will accept his statement, but I think he is mistaken. In the province of Ontario in cases where even private companies were interested, although the Government did not own the works, the Government contributed to them in the public interest. There is no provincialism in this matter, and there ought not to be. If a dollar has been corruptly or improperly spent in any part of the Dominion, we should investigate it and condemn it. I should be sorry to see this question considered as an Ontario question, or as a maritime province question. It is a question for the whole Dominion. Ontario is a great province, and we look to it as being liberal and generous, and if the people of Ontario understand the wants of the maritime provinces I believe they will vote whatever is fair and reasonable, just as the maritime provinces people are willing to contribute to necessary public works in the province of Ontario.

Mr. SPROULE. The Government does not own these works in Ontario because the Government will not take them over from the municipalities, and although they are in the name of the municipality they are no more useful to the municipality than are these works in the maritime provinces. I am speaking of what I know, and I can tell the Minister that I remember when Collingwood voted $15,000, Owen Sound, $25,000; Midland, $10,000, and Thornbury, $10,000, for just such public works as these the Government are paying all the expenses for the maritime provinces. That has all taken place within the last twenty years. I asked for a return to see how much had been spent by the municipalities and how much by the Government, and I found in almost every instance the municipalities in Ontario have contributed a respectable share to the expenditure. Up to a couple of years ago, at all events, it was the practice to make the Ontario municipalities contribute. Now, that has not been the custom in the maritime provinces, and the only excuse the Minister now gives is that in the maritime provinces the Government own the docks. These docks are of no benefit to the Government in the world, but the Government keeps them up simply for the local needs of the trade. It is no argument to say that because the public works are in the name of Ontario municipalities, the municipalities in Ontario should be obliged to contribute a large share of the expenditure, while in the maritime provinces for the same purposes the municipalities contribute nothing, and the Government does the whole thing.

Mr. McDOUGALL. My hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) is mistaken, and I am sorry the Minister of Finance is not better informed with regard to the large expenditures made by private individuals on wharfs in the maritime provinces.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) was referring to municipal contributions.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I can inform my hon. friend that Little Glace Bay harbour in my constituency was maintained for thirty years by private expenditure, and at a cost of not less than $200,000, without a one sixpence assistance from this Parliament or any other.

Mr. SPROULE. We have the same kind of docks in Ontario, but they are owned by private individuals.

Mr. McDOUGALL. This property was owned, or at least controlled, by private individuals, but the public had the benefit of it.

Mr. SPROULE. And they charged harbour dues to recoup themselves.

Mr. McDOUGALL. The harbour dues were controlled by the Government, but the top wharfage was controlled by the people who spent the money, which was quite right. A few miles from that is another harbour kept open for a number of years, in connection with the development of the Caledonia and another coal mine, and a large amount of private money, probably $100,000, was spent in keeping that harbour open. I remember that in the county of Victoria on one occasion, I had to do with inducing the department to make a grant for the opening of a harbour at a fishing village, and the fishermen were obliged to contribute a large amount of work in helping to open that harbour. It is not generally done, but it has been done in a great many instances to my own knowledge. I wish to ask the Minister of Finance if he can tell me whether it is the intention of the Government to make provision for the repair of the wharf at Big Pond in the county of Cape Breton? The wharf has been injured, and I understand that the engineer of the department has made two or three visits within the last six or eight months to that place, with a view of repairing the old wharf or building a new one.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is one of the numerous things which we have had before us, and which we have not been able to deal with. We have not included it in our estimates, and whether it can be dealt with out of the general vote is a question for consideration.

Mr. McDOUGALL. It is too expensive a work to be provided for out of the general vote, I presume.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I see we have made no appropriation for it up to the present, and, therefore, we cannot do it out of any money in these Estimates.

Mr. McDOUGALL. We want the information as to what is the result of the survey.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have no doubt that the wharf is in need of repair, but if we were to make an appropriation at every place immediately on a survey being made, I would have considerably more difficulty putting through the Estimates even than I have.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Will the hon. gentleman give me the information on the supplementary Estimates?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will.

Mr. McDOUGALL. When the engineer was sent there, twice at least within the last few months, I had good reason to infer that it was the intention of the department either to repair the old wharf or build a new one. There must be some definite information as to the result of his visits.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No doubt, the information will show that the wharf needs repair, but unhappily a great many things require to be done, and they cannot all be done at once.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I would like some information with respect to the wharf asked for some years ago at the eastern end of Bras d'Or Lake, which was the terminus for many years of a line of steamers that ply on that lake, especially between Baddeck and eastern points. There are times when steamers that are on the lakes making connection with the railway at the Strait of Canso, cannot always make their way around to Sydney on account of stormy weather. In such cases they go to the extreme eastern end of the lake, at a point known as Little Bras d'Or, where a wharf was kept for a number of years, first by private individuals, and subsequently by a steamboat company. Since the building of the railway, the business of the steamboat company was not so profitable as to justify the expenditure necessary to keep up the wharf or build a new one, and consequently the place has been for three or four years without a wharf. Application was made to the late Government, and surveys were made, and I think we had very good reason to believe that it was the intention of the late Government to put a wharf there, looking on it as an important point within 3 miles of the town of North Sydney, and at the terminus of the route plied over by steamers which call at other points that were placed at an inconvenient location from the railway. By means of these lake steamers going that way, the people were brought closer to the railway at this point than by any other means. I was in hopes that my hon. friend, taking an interest in the patronage of those constituencies in the Island of Cape Breton not represented by members supporting the Administration, would have seen that this important point was not neglected, when such ample provision was made for works of a similar character elsewhere, and possibly not of such great necessity. I would be glad, if my hon. friend would give me information on this point, when the supplementaries are being discussed. I find an item in the Estimates for a wharf at Iona, in the county of Victoria, and, although I have not to do with the representation of that constituency, I still feel an interest in obtaining some knowledge as to the intentions of the Government with regard to the maintenance or building of a wharf at that point. It is in my immediate neighbourhood, where I have business relations with the people interested in that wharf, and I would like to ascertain what the plans of the department are with regard to the rebuilding of it. Is it the intention of the department to repair the present wharf, or to build a wharf at another point which has been recommended by some people, and which, I understand, was examined by the engineer of the department within the last year?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The matter is not yet decided. Either the present wharf will be reconstructed, or a new wharf built on another location which is outside the Grand Narrows bridge. The Minister of Public Works has not decided as to which is the best policy.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Having spent my life in that locality, I know something about how that particular point is affected by the different winds, and so on. I cannot too strongly urge upon my hon. friend to ascertain from some people more competent to judge, as to the dangers that attend shipping coming to a point such as that, where there is a very strong current and a bridge in the way, with wind on the shore. There is considerable danger attending shipping coming to that point where it is proposed to put the new wharf. The point where the present wharf is situated is not as satisfactory a place as people would like, but it is the best locality that can be selected. There is greater shelter there for shipping coming from all directions. The other place is at a point of the beach where a 4-knot current is quite common, and within a few hundred feet of the bridge. My hon. friend will understand the danger to shipping of attempting to come to a wharf put at such a place. The danger must necessarily be very great. There are times when, without the danger caused by the current at all, there is danger with easterly winds and a high sea that washes over that bridge to a height of some 15 feet, and my hon. friend will understand that a wharf, under conditions of that kind, could not be used. The location of the old wharf is about the best place that could be selected. It is not as satisfactory as people would like, but it will be more satisfactory than to extend the new wharf into the lake at a very exposed point. If the intention of the department is to build a wharf on piles, that will not cost as much as to build a wharf of cribwork. And if it is to be built of creosote piles, sufficient shelter and room can be had in the place where the old structure was. So far as I am concerned, I wish to see the wharf placed where it will be of the best service to the public, and if my hon. friend will be good enough to take the warning, I would advise him to take the opinion of mariners, rather than that of people who use the wharf from the land. It is immaterial to the latter where they get their landing, but it is of great importance to mariners where they bring their vessels, and the location of the old wharf is the only place where landing can be made with safety.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. Minister tells us that he does not know whether the Government intend to put up a new wharf or repair the old one. I always understood that it was the duty of the Minister to submit definite plans, or specifications, or estimates of the work proposed before asking the House to vote money. Because it is only by that means they can intelligently vote money. In this case the idea seems to be to vote the money first, and afterwards find out what is to be done with it.

Mr. BERGERON. There is the election to be considered.

Mr. SPROULE. There is enough to make us regard it in that light if we cannot get more information than the Minister has given us.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. McDougall) has shown the difficulties. There are peculiar circumstances owing to the currents and the winds in that locality which raises a doubt as to which is the proper course to be pursued. What the hon. member for Cape Breton says may be correct, and the old wharf may be the better place. One or the other plan will be adopted.

Mr. SPROULE. Would it not be better to settle that before asking for the money?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It would be better to do a great many things that we do not do. We do not expect perfection in government, but only a reasonable approximation to it.

Mr. SPROULE. This is departing wholly from the old correct and established principle. The usual course and the reasonable course is for the Minister to have a definite plan and an estimate of the cost of carrying out that plan. Without that, the House is not justified in voting the money. The hon. gentleman should send his engineers, and after he gets his information, decide whether he will build the new wharf or renew the old one, and then come and ask for the vote.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) and I differ slightly as to the proper course to be taken. In this case the sum asked is a sufficient vote to build the wharf. It may be more in the interest of the people to renew the old wharf; but with the knowledge that one or the other must be done, I see no reason to delay the appropriation.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Has the hon. Minister an estimate of the cost of building the wharf as proposed at the new place?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, the estimate is $5,500.

Mr. McDOUGALL. The hon. gentleman cannot build a wharf there that would be worth much for $5,500.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The engineers advise me that it can be done.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Has the hon. gentleman taken into consideration the cost of providing railway connection?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, the engineers say that they have considered that.

Mr. McDOUGALL. What length is it proposed to be?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is to be 250 feet long.

Mr. McDOUGALL. That is not a wharf that would be of much value to the people. In my judgment, it should be more like 500 or 600 feet, unless built direct into swift current.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In that case, we shall have to come back for more money.

Mr. McDOUGALL. That is just what I assure my hon. friend—that if he undertakes to build the wharf there he will not get one that will be worth anything to the people under $15,000, including the railway connections. One of the reasons given for putting the wharf at this place is to run a railway track upon it and have the cars discharge into these steamers. The railway roadbed must be extended for a distance of at least 200 feet, and the track put on that and then continued on the wharf. More than that, the wharf cannot be built as high as it was necessary to have that railway track to be of service. All these difficulties will stand in the way of my hon. friend if he undertakes to put a wharf at that point. Then, he has to secure the land. At the present site the Government have the land; they have it at a point where it is not necessary to spend a single dollar in making a roadway. All that is required to be done is to go about 150 feet, which will give ample wharf room and plenty of water, possibly twenty or twenty-two feet.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We shall have to look into these things.

Mr. McDOUGALL. While I am on my feet, I would ask what is to be done regarding Englishtown wharf, and what is to be done also with the $19,500 for Ingonish North Bay ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Ingonish was up before the hon. gentleman came into the House. With regard to that, the plans are being prepared. No work has yet been done. As to Englishtown, tenders have been invited; the advertisement is now appearing in the newspapers.

Mr. McDOUGALL. If nothing is prepared with regard to Ingonish, how can the hon. gentleman ask for a vote ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Plans are not prepared, but we have an estimate.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the nature of the work ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is a breakwater such as many others along our coast. This is a scattered fishing population, with a large number of boats. The vote covers the construction of a breakwater at Ingonish North Bay, including the purchase of the land. The structure will be 430 feet from high water mark, with an L of 100 feet in length, and twenty-four feet wide on the top, affording eleven feet of water at low water. It will be constructed of creosoted timber. The estimated cost $21,500.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Is this near the place where a large expenditure was made for the breakwater many years ago ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Is it for the purpose of building a protection to the beach which was broken into some four or five years ago and some works and buildings carried away ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is the breakwater at North Ingonish, and the hon. gentleman refers, I think, to another work.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Then there was no money spent previously in this locality ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not on this work, so far as I know, it is absolutely a new work. Tenders are called for on the Ingonish work concerning which the hon. gentleman asked a question.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that he is providing $19,500 for a work for which the plans are not prepared ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The plans are now being prepared. The specifications are in the hands of the printer.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the Minister propose to do this work by contract or by day labour ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think it will probably be done by contract. The other work referred to a moment ago was already advertised, and if I had to do it at once, I would issue tenders. The matter may remain until the Minister returns, and I do not want to speak for him.

Mr. KAULBACH. The Minister of Finance kindly expressed himself a few moments ago as desirous of meeting the wishes of all the people along the coast where repairs were needed and new works required. I would ask him if he has favourably considered an application that was made for repairs to the breakwater at Petite Rivière. It is an old structure, and for the want of repairs which were applied for three years ago or more, it has suffered considerably from the action of the sea. The application has been renewed since, even so late as a few months ago. I would like to know if the hon. gentleman intends to give anything to repair that work the present year? It is really very necessary, for the reason that every storm is injuring the temporary work more and more, and unless something is done very shortly all the money that has been expended in the past will be utterly useless. I think it is a matter that should receive the serious attention of the Government. I cannot complain that I have been very badly treated in my county. True, there is an amount given to the Tancook breakwater which is very necessary, but I say the Petite Rivière breakwater is equally necessary. I asked for a breakwater at Mill Cove, St. Margaret's Bay near the county of Halifax in my county, both of which are necessary. The fishermen of Mill Cove are on a very long stretch of shore, and are subject to serious loss in case of a north-east gale; they having no harbour in which they can run their boats for safety. I have asked for that work for some time past and have repeatedly appealed to the Government the past few years, but without any favourable result. I am glad to see that the hon. Minister has placed in the Estimates a sum for work near my town of which he was made aware last autumn as much needed, that is the Sawpit wharf, and Young's Landing. Both those are necessary. I am glad he has yielded to my appeal, but as to whether the amount is going to be sufficient to meet the needs of the two last named works, I am not prepared to say. I think, however, a larger amount would be necessary in order to make it such a work as will satisfy the needs of the public.

Mr. CLANCY. I think any person who has listened attentively to this discussion must be convinced that if Nova Scotia absolutely requires the whole expenditure that is contemplated, the size of the amounts would not be a reason to reject one dollar if the expenditures were meritorious. I do not think any member on this side has made any attempt at drawing sectional lines. But I am sure the Minister himself must have concluded long ago that in some places where new charges are created and in other places where old charges are continued, good sense would suggest that they should be dropped. Now, I fancy there are hundreds of harbours in the province of Nova Scotia that are being kept up to-day for every one of which some excuse may be offered. But that is not enough. It is a growing charge upon the treasury of Canada, and unless they are of sufficient importance they should be dropped. It is not enough that hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House urged that certain public works ought to be continued because they are important. I have no doubt there are many important works in that province. I admit the province is peculiarly situated, there are large fishing interests there that must be protected. But when you have admitted all that, is it not true that many of these places are being kept up that are going into decay, much like the work suggested by the hon. member for East Peterborough (Mr. Lang). He admitted there was no need there. I ask the hon. gentleman why he spends a dollar there? Why does he spend a dollar in similar cases in the maritime provinces? I have been looking over the Estimates of this year and last year, and I have discovered no less than 110 such works, some of them of a trivial character, yet they are kept up year after year. The evil is one that my hon. friend must see, especially when we are approaching another election is a growing one. I would like to point out to my hon. friend from Kent (Mr. Campbell) some estimates that have been put in, in the past that have all the significance of an election. Take the River Sydenham, for which $5,000 was voted three years ago, and of which $1,600 has been expended. The whole of last season has passed over and we have reached this present time, and that work is not done. Why? Simply because hon. gentlemen are keeping it for an election, and it looks as if some of these harbours in the province of Nova Scotia are being kept open in view of an election.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Why did not your friends do it in the last eighteen years?

Mr. CLANCY. My hon. friend said that if his friends got into power it would be done. Now, why is it not done? Why is the dredge taken away from there? The work so far in the River Sydenham is of no practical advantage whatever. I believe my hon. friend got $2,000 for the improvement of a little creek. Why was not that money expended? Is he holding it for an election? There is a revote this year. My hon. friend is waiting. I say, and holding it until an election comes on, and so this money is hung up.

I shall take occasion later on to inquire whether it is the intention of the Government to expend the money this year, and if it is not, I think it is the duty of the committee to refuse to vote this money that is to be hung up and waved before the people, here and there, so that hon. gentlemen can hold out expenditures to the country which are promised in the Estimates, and do the work when it suits them in order to carry constituencies. That is nothing short of a system of bribery. I am not going to prolong the discussion. It could not be expected that the hon. Minister of Finance would be as well informed in regard to these Estimates as the hon. Minister of Public Works himself, but the hon. gentleman has undertaken the burden for the hon. Minister of Public Works upon himself, and my hon. friend will not be surprised if we should be just to ourselves and just to the country and demand the most explicit information in regard to every item that the hon. gentleman is asking this House to vote. I think that would not be an unfair proposition, and that this House would be lacking in its duty if it did not insist upon getting that information from the hon. Minister. We cannot expect that hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House will trouble themselves very much about how the money is expended. They learned long ago that it is not part of their duty to inquire into expenditures. Without knowing anything about the harbours of Nova Scotia, I have no hesitation in saying that, while there are many expenditures that are meritorious, there are many that might, in the public interest, be dropped.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the nature of this work at Ingonish?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is cribwork.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the length of the work?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. 430 feet from high water, with an L 100 feet in length and 24 feet wide on top.

Mr. SPROULE. What will be the depth of this cribwork?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Eleven feet at low water. About half the length will be 11 feet in depth.

Mr. SPROULE. And the other a little deeper. Is this to complete the work or only to do a portion of it?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. $21,500 will complete the work.

Mr. SPROULE. Including this $19,500?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, that will cover the whole of it.

Mr. CLARKE. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Finance what method or principle is adopted in the department respecting works that are done by day labour, or by the department itself? Does the department ascertain from contractors what they would do the work for, in order that it may estimate what is the probable cost of the work and find out if it can be done more economically by day labour? The plan adopted in other departments and municipalities is that, when they ask for tenders, the departments themselves put in a tender, and if the departmental tender is found to be lower than the tender of any contractor, the departments get the materials and do the work themselves. I am in favour of doing these works by day labour if it is found that they can be done as efficiently and as economically as under contract.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It sometimes happens that tenders are invited and the prices found to be above what the engineers of the department think is fair and reasonable. In that case the department undertakes the work by day labour. In other cases the work may be done cheaper by tender and contract. There are some works which, by their nature, can be done better by day labour, and in that case the report of the engineer is had as to what is the fair value of the work. The department has the advantage of having divisional engineers all over the country familiar with the works, who are able to give the department estimates and reports in every case.

Mr. CLARKE. Does the department ask for tenders for all these works, and if it is found that the tenders are in excess of the appropriation, does the department then do the work by day labour?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That occurs in some cases. In some cases they do not ask for tenders, but a large number of works is done by public tender and contract.

Mr. CLARKE. Take the course of this work at Ingonish. Plans and specifications have been prepared. The department knows exactly what the character of the work is, the dimensions and everything in connection with it. Is it proposed to invite public tenders for that work?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, it is the intention of the hon. Minister of Public Works that that shall be done.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the item that was declared to be passed include the whole vote?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have been roaming over the whole of it.

Mr. CLANCY. While there was a general range of discussion, I presume that only the items down to that for Cow Bay, have been passed?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If that were the case I would have been able, half a dozen of times, to take exception to the debate. One hon. gentleman said that it would be more convenient to discuss these items without being confined to a particular one, and the debate has roamed over the whole of them. If there is any item upon which additional information is wanted, I will be glad to furnish it.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I find that $400 was voted for Cribbin's Point last year. How much was expended last year?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Up to the 31st of December, 1898, $390.14 was expended in completing the creosoted piling, in re-ballasting the balance of the empty face chambers, and in the removal of a quantity of gravel which had been thrown up by the sea on the covering at the inner end of the wharf.

Mr. McDOUGALL. What work is proposed to be done with the $300?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is to make good the damage done to Cribbin's Point wharf during the disastrous gale of the 27th November, 1898. That in the supplementary Estimates is for the extension of the same wharf.

Mr. McDOUGALL. What is the nature of the boat harbour at the Eastern Passage requiring an expenditure of $2,000?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is intended to afford the fishermen of the locality increased facilities. It is a new undertaking at the eastern side of the entrance to Halifax.

Mr. SPROULE. Will $2,000 complete the work?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. McDOUGALL. How much was expended on East Ragged Island wharf up to the present?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The work is in progress, and $2,500 is the cost. It is under contract.

Mr. McDOUGALL. What has been done to Judique wharf?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is under contract, and it is approaching completion. This $5,000 will complete it.

Mr. McDOUGALL. What is this vote of $3,000 for Livingstone Cove wharf?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is for the completion of Livingstone Cove breakwater. It is to cost $6,000, and we have expended $3,000.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Is it built of creosote or is it built of ordinary timber?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is built of native timber, and by day's labour.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I thought the department had long ago given up the construction of these works with ordinary timber, as it is in danger of getting worm-eaten.

Mr. McISAAC. On the north side of Cape George, in Nova Scotia, they use native timber, because there are no worms there.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I cannot see how there can be any difference.

Mr. McISAAC. All the reports show that at the north side of Cape George ordinary native timber can be used, and it has been used for thirty years, and has never been interfered with by worms. It is very strange, but it is a fact nevertheless.

Mr. McDOUGALL. There is a revote of $4,000 for New Harbour. How is it that the money has not been expended before now?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Minister of Public Works stated last year that it was his intention to make a personal visit, but I believe he was not able to reach that place, and perhaps the vote was not considered large enough.

Mr. McDOUGALL. But this whole $4,000 is a revote.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend (Mr. McDougall) knows that it is utterly impossible to do all these works at one time.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Then, what is the use of keeping that exact sum in the Estimates year after year, experience having shown that the amount is not sufficient for the work? It is simply dangling that before the eyes of the people.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) regarded the cost of the work as somewhat high, and he deferred the matter until he could make a special visit to the place. He mentioned that specially to the House last year. The hon. Minister (Mr. Tarte) probably did not realize the extent of the maritime provinces, and he thought he could reach all these places in one year.

Mr. CLANCY. My recollection is, that the Minister of Public Works was unable to locate this place last year, and I doubt if the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) knew where it was, although it was in his own county. I am not surprised to know that the Minister has not yet found out where it is. Before we vote this item, which is enlarging and aggravating the admitted evil of the Government hunting up harbours to spend money on, we should inquire more about it. The Minister of Public Works, as the Finance Minister admits, has been unable to locate this place or visit it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did not say anything of the sort.

Mr. CLANCY. Then, what did the hon. gentleman say? I am either very dull, or the Finance Minister was not quite so clear as usual.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) is not very dull, but I think he is making a mistake in criticising items with reference to the maritime provinces of which he can possibly have no knowledge whatever. The hon. gentleman might infer that the gentlemen interested in the maritime provinces would know something about these votes generally. I protest against his statement that this is an extension of an admitted evil. There is no evil, unless it can be shown that these moneys are improperly spent, for they are legitimate expenditures, and it is not fair for the hon. member (Mr. Clancy) to treat them as evils. He has heard from gentlemen on his own side of the House to-night that, far from regarding these expenditures as extravagant, there is great need for larger expenditure. The Minister (Mr. Tarte) has not been able to visit the place, but he asks the item to be revoted, in the hope that he will be able to visit it and decide later.

Mr. CLANCY. I suppose I am somewhat indebted to the Minister for that lecture.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) deserved it.

Mr. CLANCY. I want to say to the hon. gentleman that if I were well informed about those works in Nova Scotia, I would be in a better position than the hon. gentleman himself. I desire him to tell us precisely the character of the work and what it will cost. I imagine it was rather gratuitous on the part of the hon. gentleman to suggest that because we happen to live in the province of Ontario, we should keep our mouths closed and pass in silence any votes the hon. gentleman may choose to submit. I have this to say to him, that since he has taken the place of the Minister of Public Works he ought to be able to make it perfectly clear how much any particular work, for which he asked us to vote an expenditure, is going to cost and what the character of that work is. If he cannot do that, he should hesitate before giving these little lectures at which he is such an adept. Such lectures are not a very good answer, and this committee requires something better in reply to their legitimate demands for information than these little displays of cheap intellectual fireworks. Let the hon. gentleman stop this little war of words and become good-natured, and give us the explanations we require.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have been consistently good natured throughout, but hon. gentlemen will persist in treating all these Nova Scotia items as excessive and extravagant.

Mr. CLANCY. Not at all.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not say that any hon. gentleman opposite is bound to hold his tongue when expenditures in any province to which he does not belong are under consideration, but the whole spirit of the remarks regarding the items of expenditure in Nova Scotia is unfair and ungenerous, and not warranted by the facts. I have given all the information I have about New Harbour, and if the hon. gentleman wants any more, and if I can get it from the department, I will give it to him.

Mr. CLANCY. What is the expected cost? This vote was discussed last year at considerable length, and while there might have been some excuse last year for not being able to explain it fully, there can be none this. What is the object of the work? Has the hon. gentleman any estimate before him?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am not able to give very much more than what I have given. It is a breakwater designed for the protection of the fishing interests in that neighbourhood. It is likely to cost more than the Minister of Public Works believed it would, and therefore it is not intended to take further action beyond asking a revote until he can make further investigation.

Mr. CLANCY. Has there been an estimate made of the work?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, the engineer's estimate was $27,550.

Mr. CLANCY. What is the character of the work according to that estimate?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. To provide towards the formation of a boat harbour for fishing boats at the mouth of the St. Catharines River by constructing two piers of pile and brush and stonework converging at an angle of about 20 degrees towards the open Atlantic, to a southerly direction, so as to form a wave trap and dredging a channel four feet wide leading to the mooring-ground in the estuary resorted to by boats in stormy weather for a length of 1,200 feet to six feet depth at high water, ordinary spring tides. The east pier is to be 750 feet long, 25 feet wide for the inner 350 feet, and 30 feet for the outer 400 feet, and to have a wing 60 x 30 feet turned to the eastward at its outer end, the west pier to be 580 feet long, 25 feet wide for the inner, 200 feet and 35 feet wide for the outer 380 feet, so that both piers will extend to three feet depth at low water, spring tides. The detailed estimates of the proposed work amount to $27,550.

Mr. OSLER. I think the explanation we have heard from the Finance Minister is a very startling one. Last year an amount of $4,000 was put in the Estimates for work to be done. No one knew where and no one knew the cost. This has been discussed this evening at considerable length and the Finance Minister was rather indignant that he should have been pressed to give further explanations.

Mr. FIELDING.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not at all, I was quite willing.

Mr. OSLER. Well, it is only just now that the explanation has been given.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The question has only been asked.

Mr. OSLER. Here is a $4,000 item put in the Estimates, and the hon. Minister explained that this appropriation was perhaps a little under what the work would cost.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did not say that.

Mr. OSLER. I submit, with all due deference, that the only inference we could draw was that when the appropriation was $4,000 it was a little doubtful what the work would cost, but it might cost something more and probably would.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is not what I said but the hon. gentleman can draw his own inference.

Mr. OSLER. That is the inference I draw. Now, we have the admission of the Finance Minister that he had before him all the time the estimate of his engineer, showing that this work was going to cost $27,000. To my mind, it is simply playing upon the public to bring in this item of $4,000 for a wharf, which last year the Minister of Public Works did not know where it was, could not locate it. This year we have a revote of $4,000 to begin the work—the New Harbour breakwater. The natural business inference would be that that amount of $4,000 would probably be the cost. But now we have the statement that all this time the Minister of Finance had before him the figures from his engineer, stating that this work is going to cost $27,000. He proposes to get authority to spend $4,000, and proposes to commit the country, by this vote, to an expenditure of $27,000 without telling the House what the work was going to cost. That is neither proper nor defensible.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Strike it out.

Mr. OSLER. I will vote to strike it out if you will, or if you will bring in a proper estimate and say that the work is worth $27,000, that it is going to serve its purpose, that the wharf will be worth that expenditure, I will vote for it; but to submit a vote of $4,000, and ask us to pass that now, and then, during the next year or the year following as it may happen, when an election comes near, go on with this expenditure on the ground that Parliament had authorized the work, is a course that cannot be defended. And if there are other items in this long list of Nova Scotia wharfs in the same position, the Government are so thoroughly to blame that there is not a man on the back benches who will dare stand up and defend them. To lead this House to suppose that the expenditure on this work will be $4,000, when the engineer's estimate is $27,000, is an outrage on the country, on common sense and common honesty.

Mr. COCHRANE. It seems to me that the Minister is not treating the committee fairly when he says that we do not ask for the information. I was a member of this House long before the Minister of Finance entered it, and I want to tell him when the Conservative party was in power, the committee was never treated as he is treating us to-night. When a Minister of the late Government came down with an appropriation for works, he brought estimates, plans and specifications and told the committee what he proposed to do. But if we criticize the Minister the Minister treats us in a rather insulting manner. He tells us that he gives us the information we ask for. I want to tell him that it is his duty, as the servant of the people, when he asks for a new appropriation instead of letting us drag the information out of him—and it seems generally to take a yoke of oxen almost to get any information from these Ministers—to state the nature of the work and how he proposes to spend the money. Did I understand the hon. gentleman aright that there was to be a depth of water got by dredging of 6 feet?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE: Yes, that is the engineer's estimate.

Mr. COCHRANE. Now, does it strike the Minister of Finance as absurd to have an expenditure of $27,000 to get a harbour that would have a depth of 6 feet. I remember this debate distinctly when it came up last session. The Minister of Public Works could not even tell us where this breakwater was going to be put. They have located it since, and we have forced the Minister to give us some information. And we find that we are to have a harbour which, I suppose, he will say is for the benefit of the people of Canada as a whole, and this expenditure of $27,000 upon it is going to give us a harbour with 6 feet of water.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). If my memory does not play me a trick, I remember when this matter came up and the Minister of Public Works was asked for an explanation as to where it was proposed to make this outlay and as to the peculiarities of the harbour.

And while the discussion was going on the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) who was advised of the discussion came in and gave a very full, and it seemed to me, a very satisfactory explanation of the subject. He explained to the House what, at all events, impressed my mind favourably—that this harbour was intended to be equipped for the accommodation of the very large fishing fleet of small vessels prosecuting their business on the coast. Like all coasts this is subject to severe storms and it was absolutely necessary for the safety of the fishermen that a harbour should be provided. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Cochrane) says that it is absurd to have a harbour with only 6 feet of water—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is only for a channel leading to the moorings.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Six feet, at certain parts of the harbour, I can well imagine might suffice for the boats that are going to put in there in case of stress of weather, and I cannot think it fair to call the whole thing a sham because the dredging is to secure a depth of six feet. The hon. member for Guysborough gave a very full explanation of the case.

Mr. COCHRANE. The hon. member for Guysborough is not responsible for the expenditure. And I think it is humiliating to admit that a member knows more about the matter than the Minister who has undertaken the job.

Mr. OSLER. In looking over those 34 items, I find that 15 or 16 of them are designated in practically the same way as the item under consideration. Are there any of them in which the vote is merely a preliminary for further expenditures. In my ignorance I have been reading these items as though these figures covered the whole estimated expenditure.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think that in most cases it will be found that the sum estimated covers the work, but it will be impossible to give the hon. gentleman assurance that in every case the money will be found sufficient. It is no uncommon occurrence for votes to be given year after year for the same service. I think that no item stands in exactly the same position as this. I have already stated that owing to the estimates made by the engineers the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) decided not to proceed with the work without further inquiry, but asked to have this sum re-voted. Now, as to dredging the harbour to a depth of 6 feet, if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cochrane) heard me aright and wished to be fair he would have known that the dredging for 6 feet was only in the channel leading to the harbour, but it does not imply that there is only six feet generally.

Mr. CLARKE. Can the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) give us some information with regard to Port Hillford breakwater, for which $8,000 is asked?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The estimated cost of the work is $8,000, and tenders have been called for.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) This question of New Harbour was up last session and was discussed. The Minister knew little about it. The member for the county made the case as good as he could. We now find that this vote of $4,000 is the beginning of an expenditure of $27,000, and the amount of the estimate prepared by the department is only going to give us a little boat channel of six feet and a half of water. I say it is ridiculous to expend such an amount of money in a portion of the province of Nova Scotia which is more indented with harbours than any other part of this Dominion. They should expend $27,000, $50,000 or $100,000 on the rock-bound shores of the island of Cape Breton, either on the west or on the east coast; why they should expend so large a sum in the county of Guysborough already indented by harbours from one end to the other is beyond my comprehension.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the Minister propose to spend that money by contract or by day's work?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I cannot tell the hon. gentleman the manner in which this money will be spent. Until the Minister of Public Works returns, none of it will be spent. The desire of the Minister was to make further inquiry before approving the report of the engineers, which he thought was excessive. My impression is that the cost of the work is so large that I doubt if the Minister will proceed with it on the present plans.

Mr. SPROULE. It would be much better for the hon. gentleman not to put such an item in the Estimates at all if he is unable to give the House no more information with regard to it than he has given us. To commence with $4,000 to do a $27,000 job seems to me very poor business. In the first place he puts it at a sum so small that he need not call for tenders. Therefore, it is frittering away money without getting a proper return. But the Minister cannot say whether the work will be undertaken at all. We have already voted it once, and it has stood on the books for over a year. In my judgment the House should not be asked to vote any such item.

Mr. CLANCY. I would ask the Minister of Finance whether he thinks that this committee ought to vote money to place in the hands of the Minister of Public Works to decide hereafter whether he will use it or not. He may expend it or not, as he thinks proper. This House should have definite knowledge that the Minister of Public Works deems this an important work; so far he does not deem it so. If we vote this $4,000 now, it will commit this country to the expenditure of $27,000. I ask the hon. gentleman if he proposes to proceed in this House with estimates of that kind? I think the hon. gentleman should drop that item.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's).

Mr. CAMPBELL. Do you want yours dropped?

Mr. CLANCY. I have not asked for any. I say I wanted the Public Works Department to go on last year, and I want them to go on this year. It is a work of utility that can be defended on every ground. I would like similar information in regard to this New Harbour. It is well named New Harbour, because it is a new state of things, and one which the Minister of Finance finds it difficult to defend, with all his ingenuity, and although he is usually so able to make out a good defence. I think the hon. gentleman would do himself credit to drop that item rather than ask this committee to vote $4,000 and thereby commit the country to an expenditure of $27,000 for a work that the Minister of Public Works declared to this House a year ago, and which the Minister of Finance reiterates to-day, is not a work for which any need can be shown to exist.

Mr. McCLURE. This work may be new to the hon. gentleman, but it cannot be new to all the members of this House, because there was a full explanation given of it last year. Not only that, but it is a matter that was inquired into by the late Government. After a petition had come from the community largely signed asking for the building of this work, the late Government sent an engineer who made a full examination and reported. That full information is in the department, and it was explained to the House last year as will be in the recollection of members here, that it provides a harbour of refuge on a coast where there is no harbour for a long distance. The people up that river are obliged many times to take refuge far away from home, and this work is intended to provide for them a refuge nearer home. This information was all given last year very fully, and I recollect distinctly that so full and complete was the information, that when it was given hon. gentlemen opposite allowed the vote to go through immediately. Now why should we fight it over again? If this sectional kind of discussion is going on and if hon. gentlemen are going to oppose the item simply because people cannot tell the exact latitude or the exact longitude of the coast where the work is situated then it will be in order for somebody to inquire why the Government expends $50,000 or $75,000 to straighten some little creek up in Toronto which the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) himself knows nothing about, and concerning which he has taken no pains to inform himself.

Mr. OSLER. The hon. member says that there has been $70,000 voted for straightening a creek in Toronto, I am not aware of it. I am not objecting personally to the expenditure of this money, and there is no one in this House who has ever found me objecting to a proper expenditure of money.

Mr. GIBSON. What are you objecting to?

Mr. OSLER. I am objecting to the Government bringing forward here an item of $4,000 which purports to be the whole cost of the work.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, it does not. My hon. friend is mistaken. That is not the rule.

Mr. OSLER. It is most unfair if every item in the list is open to criticism in the same manner as this. I do not object to an expenditure estimated at $4,000, costing $5,000 or $6,000, because it is impossible, in works of this kind, to come within one or two thousand dollars of the actual amount. But what I do object to is to have the bald statement that $4,000 is to be taken as full cost for a new breakwater. When this came up last year, the hon. Minister of Public Works gave an answer, so far as an answer was elicited, showing, according to my recollection, that he knew absolutely nothing about it. It was promised that he would find out what the work entailed. All he knew was that, somewhere on the coast something was necessary. I appeal to my hon. friends opposite whether it is fair, or honest, or businesslike, to bring in an item of $4,000 when the Government have in their possession an estimate which is seven times the amount they ask for here. The Government are asking for a vote that is merely an instalment of what will be required, and the hon. Minister's explanation is that he knows nothing about it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I never said that I knew nothing about it. I have a memorandum here giving all the information that the hon. gentleman wants.

Mr. OSLER. I admit that, at the last moment, the hon. gentleman told us that he had in his possession information which should have been given to this committee before it was asked to vote one dollar.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not agree with the hon. gentleman.

Mr. OSLER. In an ordinary business transaction when discussing an estimate of expenditure, if I say I want $4,000 to build a breakwater, and conceal the fact that that breakwater is going to cost $27,000, I am not acting fairly or honestly with the man whom I am asking to join me in spending that money. If this is a proper place to build a harbour, I will vote $27,000 or $50,000 for that harbour. But I appeal to hon. members, on the other side of the House, if it is fair to ask the hon. members of this committee to vote $4,000, presumably to build a wharf which, according to the information in the possession of the Government will cost $27,000 at least. There will be no money expended on that harbour this year. I do not think there is the slightest question that the Government do not intend to spend any money there this year. I think it would be fair and proper to strike out the item and come next year and ask for a full appropriation towards the completion of that work if necessary. From what I have gathered from the discussion of this item it makes me suspicious that every item on the list is open to similar criticism. I cannot conceive that this one item is the only item that has been treated in this way by the Government. My own feeling is that the Government are not treating the committee fairly when they bring in an estimate in the bald manner in which they have brought this in, absolutely deceiving the committee and seeking to submit the country to an expenditure seven times more than the amount that is asked for.

Mr. FLINT. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Osler) seems to be displaying a great deal of Brummagen indignation over a state of things which has always existed in this House. This is precisely the way items have always been placed in the Estimates, and hundreds and thousands of dollars have been expended where only a portion of the money has been asked for from year to year. If time permitted I would point to dozens of cases in which votes have been taken in that way. In the harbour of Toronto, the city which the hon. gentleman represents, large expenditures have been made, although only portions of the money were placed in the Estimates each year. I consider that the hon. gentleman is simply assuming before the committee an indignation that he does not feel, because, no hon. gentleman, who has listened to the conversation in the committee in regard to that new harbour, and who was present last year when the fullest explanations were offered, can pretend that he was not aware that a larger sum than $4,000 was to be expended. It was well known that this was only a portion of the contemplated expenditure, as the hon. Minister of Finance has pointed out. I think it is taking up the time of the committee to no purpose.

Mr. McDUGALL. I think it is quite evident that it is not the intention of the Government to spend any money on this work during this present year. The hon. Minister of Finance has told us that, according to the estimate of the engineer, it will require $27,000 to complete that work and make it satisfactory to the people. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals told us that it was proposed to make a channel six feet deep for the accommodation of fishing vessels. I can understand my hon. friend, if he is referring to open boats, but anything other than open boats could not use a channel affording only six feet of water. My hon. friend must know that in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, no fishing craft larger than a common open boat is used to any extent of a less tonnage than about twenty tons, and a twenty-ton craft will require about six feet of water. Four thousand dollars was provided in the estimates last year and the experience of the department is sufficient to enable them to know whether $4,000 could be used or not. We have the right to come to the conclusion that $4,000 could not be utilized for the purpose that is intended, and yet they are continuing that vote of $4,000 for another year. There is only one object, and it is to deceive the people interested in that harbour. Four thousand dollars is about one-seventh of the estimated cost of the work, and it is only sufficient, according to the statement of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, to give these fishermen one foot of water. They are told to wait until Parliament gives them $4,000 more and they may have another foot of water. If nothing can be done with this money Parliament should add $4,000 or $8,000 to the vote so that progress can be made with the work, because putting this amount of money in the Estimates is only trifling with the intelligence of these people. We have no information to justify us in coming to any other conclusion.

The intention is to deceive the people who are interested in the expenditure of this money. It is worse than absurd to attempt to make such an explanation as to why $4,000 are kept in the Estimates for a work for which $27,000 is required, in view of the statement of the Minister of Railways that this vast expenditure will only provide 6 feet of water. This $4,000 is evidently kept in the Estimates to keep the people quiet for the time being, and without the Government intending to spend a single dollar on the work. Why did not the Government put in at least double the amount, as they have done with regard to other works? I am in favour of expending money to afford harbours for the fishermen who are engaged on our coasts. They are entitled to every protection this Parliament can give. They are pursuing a dangerous employment, and the Government are only making their difficulties greater when they deceive them by putting amounts in the Estimates, when they have no intention of spending this money. Let the Government drop this item altogether, or else provide sufficient to carry on a larger portion of this work than $4,000 will provide.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It was understood that we should take all these items together, and they have been so discussed, and I am not aware that any question asked to-night has not been fully answered. The hon. gentleman from West Toronto (Mr. Osler) assumes that it is a monstrous proposition to keep an item standing in the Estimates which only covers a portion of the work. On the contrary, I think it is a very sensible procedure. The Minister found that the estimate by his engineers was very large, and it was the most natural thing in the world for him to say: I will not go on with the work on the basis of that expenditure, but I will try and devise some plan that will be less expensive. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McDougall) says that we are deceiving the people, and that the item should be struck out, but if he will go down to New Harbour, I do not think the fishermen there will agree with him. On the contrary, he will find they are glad to have the vote in the Estimates, as an evidence of the desire of Parliament to carry on the work. If this is found to cost $27,000, the Minister will hold the matter over for inquiry, and try and devise some other plan, with the assistance of his engineer, which will cost less money, and which will meet the wishes of the people. Of course, it is only burlesque to say that no one knows where this harbour is. It is a place for boat fishermen, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. McDougall) knows that there are thousands of fishermen in the lower provinces who earn their living in boats which do not draw 6 feet of water.

Mr. McDOUGALL. But these boats are not called "vessels," as the Minister of Railways called them.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Well, "vessels" is a very broad term.

Mr. McDOUGALL. It is a misleading one.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This work is intended for the accommodation of boat fishermen, and at New Harbour there are thirty smacks, manned by 75 men, while there are a dozen smaller smacks engaged in the lobster fishery.

Mr. McDOUGALL. These are open boats.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. And the hon. gentleman knows, a large portion of the fishing industry of the maritime provinces is carried on in small boats, and we believe that the lives of men working in small boats have to be protected. Although $27,000 is larger than I should wish to see spent for this purpose, I am not prepared to say that under no conditions should a break-water be constructed there, even at a cost of $27,000. It is a larger expenditure than I contemplated for the work, and I entirely agree with the Minister of Public Works, that this vote should be kept standing until he has an opportunity of consulting with his engineers to see if they cannot reach the same end for a more moderate expenditure.

Mr. GIBSON. I am in the judgment of the House, when I say that the Minister of Finance has answered every question to-night as rapidly and as fully as it was possible for him to do so. My hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Osler), who takes such an interest in his city, raised no question about the sums of money we voted for the city of Toronto.

Mr. OSLER. We have not come to the discussion of them yet.

Mr. GIBSON. Wait until I get through. Now, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Osler) says that the Finance Minister does not know where this expenditure is to be made, but I would ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Osler) who is an owner of ferries in Toronto, can he tell the House the part of Toronto harbour which requires dredging the most? I do not believe he can, and yet he stands up here and finds fault with the Minister of Finance because he cannot tell him everything about some harbour in Nova Scotia.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Every question he asked was answered.

Mr. GIBSON. I have had a little experience on this side as well as on the other side, and I leave it to the sense of hon. gentlemen on both sides if it has not been the custom ever since I have been here for the government of the day to simply ask for an appropriation based upon what might be the amount expected to be spent during the year. The hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) will not pretend to say that because an item of $75,000 is put in for Toronto harbour, the Government are deceiving the public since the work to be done in that harbour will cost a great deal more. He knows as well as any man that the work in Toronto harbour has been going on for years, that $1,000,000 has already been spent on it and will still have to be spent before the harbour meets the requirements of the trade of that great city. To argue on the line the hon. gentleman takes, we ought to strike out this item of $75,000 because it does not represent all the expenditure that will have to be made on that particular work, and that consequently the Government are deceiving this House and the people. Take up any item of expenditure in any of the estimates that have been presented to this House during the past ten years, and you will find the Government asking for $30,000 or $50,000 or $100,000, as the case may be, for the expenditure on a certain work during the coming season. The hon. Minister of Finance pointed out to the hon. member for Toronto that the engineer's estimate was that this work was going to cost $27,000, and that the Minister of Public Works did not think he was justified in going to that expenditure. A sum was voted last year, and the intention of the Minister was to make a personal examination of this new harbour before incurring any expenditure. If he thought the work was one which would warrant the expenditure on it, he would then begin with the $4,000 and come back to Parliament for the balance required. There was no deception practiced on the House. The hon. Minister of Finance frankly told the committee, at the beginning of the discussion, that the information which the Government had was to the effect that this harbour was going to cost $27,000.

Mr. OSLER. That information only came out at the last moment.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The moment the hon. gentleman asked the question, he got the information. If he did not get it before it is because he did not ask for it.

Mr. GIBSON. I am right when I say that the Minister of Finance replied more than once that the work was going to cost $27,000. That question was answered a year ago. The Minister of Public Works stated in the House a year ago that all he asked for was an appropriation of $4,000 and that he intended going down himself and examining the work. He was prevented from doing so by illness, which we all regret, but if he should go down and find, from the experience he has gathered as Minister of Public Works, that another scheme can be devised by which the same advantages may be gained for the new harbour at a less expense to the country, he should rather be commended for his caution instead of being criticised. There is not an item of public works expenditure that has not exceeded the estimate at the final completion of the work. First and foremost, the Government decide on a certain work being done. They receive from their engineer an estimate to cover the whole cost of the work. That estimate may be asked for or it may not, but if it is asked for, the Minister in charge of the work gives it to the House. But the Government do not ask a million dollars appropriation for a work because the work is going to cost that amount. It finds out from its engineer how much money he will require to spend during the coming year, and upon that basis the Government is justified in putting into the Estimates the sum they are advised by their engineer will be required for the season's work. That goes on from year to year. It has sometimes happened under the late Government, and will happen under all Governments, that circumstances arise which cause the work to cost more money than was contemplated, and the Government have to come back the second time for an appropriation, but in such a case they must give the reasons why the cost of the work exceeded the estimate. But to say that, in this instance, the Finance Minister was attempting to mislead the House is to make a statement that is utterly unfounded. The Finance Minister has answered in the most gentlemanly manner every question asked of him by every hon. member opposite, and in all fairness the committee ought to allow these items to pass. They have been well discussed and I do not think there is any object to be gained by simply discussing the thing off and on after we have been going into all the details for the last four hours.

Mr. CLARKE. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman was in the House the entire evening or not. But if he were, he would hardly have used the language respecting the criticism of my hon. friend on my right (Mr. Osler) which he has just given expression to. At any rate an examination of the official report of this debate will, in my humble judgment, abundantly justify the remarks of my hon. friend. The information as to the entire cost of this work and the fact that the engineer had estimated the cost at $27,000 were not brought out until this matter had been discussed at very considerable length. I do not know if the Finance Minister was asked the question directly, but I have a vivid recollection of my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) having to insist on his rights to demand the fullest explanation of the item before the information he asked for was vouchsafed. My hon. friend on my right (Mr. Osler) expressed his willingness to vote any sum declared by the department to be necessary for the construction and completion of any work required in the public interest on the coast of Nova Scotia or anywhere else, but what he did object to was that after this item and the expenditure in connection with it had been discussed for a length of time, the information was vouchsafed that seven times the amount of the vote was the estimated cost of the work. My hon. friend said it would have been much more honest for the Finance Minister to have given the statement to the House at once showing that $27,000 was the estimated cost of the work, although he only asked for a miserable appropriation of $4,000. If this information was in possession of the Minister, if the estimates of the engineer were in his possession and given to the House last year, how is it that something has not been done on this work yet? Is my hon. friend from Cape Breton justified in his opinion that the whole thing is a blind?

Mr. GIBSON. The hon. Minister of Finance gave you an answer when he said that the Minister of Public Works was unable, on account of illness, to go and visit the work.

Mr. McDOUGALL. The Minister of Public Works visited the neighbourhood, but did not think enough of the work to give himself the trouble to go and see it. He was in the immediate neighbourhood of the place.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman either means that the Minister of Public Works did visit or he did not. He did not visit the place.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I said that he visited the neighbourhood and passed by the place.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What right had the hon. gentleman to imply that the Minister of Public Works did visit the place? If he was somewhere in the neighbourhood, that would be of no use unless he were close.

Mr. CLARKE.

Mr. McDOUGALL. The intention of the department was evidently not to have the work gone on with, or the Minister would have made some effort to inform himself when he passed within a few miles of the locality.

Mr. CLARKE. Hon. gentlemen opposite declare that the fullest information was given twelve months ago, and also again tonight. If the intention was to go on with the work, why did the Government not ask for a larger appropriation, and give a contract, and go on with it? The hon. members for Lincoln, and Colchester, and Yarmouth have made reference to an item which is not under discussion at all, the item respecting the dredging of Toronto harbour. When that item comes up, if these gentlemen ask for information from the Minister, and he cannot satisfy them that the appropriation is a reasonable and necessary appropriation, let them move to strike it out. I can tell the hon. gentlemen, if they are not aware of the fact, that the city of Toronto has contributed a very large sum for these works for the preservation of the harbour, under arrangement with the Government. The criticism of my hon. friend (Mr. Osler) was perfectly justified, because the information which the Opposition thought they had a right to demand, had not been given at the time. The department is in possession of facts to give to my hon. friends from Colchester, Yarmouth and Lincoln to show good reason why expenditures are being made in Toronto harbour. As I say, an agreement was made years ago with the Dominion Government, under which Toronto was to pay a portion of the cost of these works, and the share of the city of Toronto has long since been handed over.

Mr. GIBSON. How many years ago?

Mr. CLARKE. Several years ago. The city provided the sum of $100,000, if my memory serves me well, for this work; and this discussion of the work in Toronto harbour does not apply, as my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Osler) did not object to this expenditure on New Harbour.

Mr. McCLURE. Yes, he did: he said it was deceiving the people.

Mr. CLARKE. I repeat, that my hon. friend did not object to the expenditure of $27,000 on this work in the New Harbour, if it was found to be a work of necessity and a benefit to the people of that locality. What he did say—and I am in the judgment of the committee—was, that it was a deceptive way to introduce this work by asking an appropriation of $4,000 year after year, when, according to the estimates of the engineer, which the Government have in their possession, the cost of the work would be at least $27,000; and that information was not given to the committee until after the matter had been under discussion for three-quarters of an hour or an hour. I protest that it is the right of members on this side to criticise both the expenditure and the method adopted by Ministers in giving information.

Mr. McCLURE. I did not criticise the expenditure on Toronto harbour, as it was not under discussion, but I referred to it as a matter of illustration. This item was objected to on the ground that only $4,000 was voted, while the expenditure would be much more. It was shown that the proposed vote for Toronto harbour is $75,000, and it is well known it would cost $500,000. As to the information, if the hon. gentleman's memory was as good as his imagination is fertile, he would know that this information, which he says was dragged out at the last minute in this debate, was given over twelve months ago, when the Minister of Public Works said that it was reported to him that the work would cost $25,000, and he was going to visit the place and ascertain if a good harbour could not be provided for $8,000.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Why did he not go ?

Mr. McCLURE. That has been explained; and the matter stands in the same position to-night, and the same vote is asked, and the same information given, as a year ago.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. McClure) say why the estimate was $25,000 last year, and is $27,000 this year? Has there been a new estimate of the work?

Mr. McCLURE. There is a difference of $2,000. Probably, last year the Minister of Public Works was speaking from memory, while this year the acting Minister is speaking from record. There may be comfort in that for the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy). It is an idea about large enough for him to get comfort out of.

Mr. BENNETT. How far is Port Hilford from New Harbour ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I could not tell the hon. gentleman, but it is in the same general vicinity.

Mr. BENNETT. Will $8,000 complete the work at Port Hilford ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, the estimate is that $8,000 will complete the work.

Mr. SPROULE. When the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) draws a comparison between this item and the item for Toronto harbour, he ignores the real difference between the two. The principle upon which these appropriations are made is to appropriate in each case all that can usefully be expended within the year, or all that the Government can afford. What is to be done with $4,000 out of this estimated expenditure of $27,000? If it is for the breakwater, you cannot let a contract, because the money will not cover the expenditure; and, if it is for dredging, you cannot do that work until the other part is done. So, it is the part of wisdom to hold this back until the House can vote sufficient money to do the work efficiently and without waste. The case of Toronto harbour is very different. The sum of $75,000 can be spent there to advantage in a year.

Mr. McDOUGALL. What explanation has the Minister to give of the item for Tancook harbour? There was $1,500 of a revote last year. Was any money expended on the work ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There has been an expense in former years, but none lately. The expense up to the 21st of December, 1898, was $6,422.76. This vote is for repairs, and it will complete them.

Mr. KAULBACH. I do not think this amount is sufficient to pay the cost of the repairs. It is quite a long breakwater, and an increased amount should be added in order that it may be carried out to the channel where there would be sufficient water to float vessels. It is the only means whereby exports can be shipped from that island. It is a large island, a polling district in itself, and the people really need a convenience of that kind. At the time an expense of some $6,000 was made, it enabled vessels to go to the head of the breakwater and part way on the side; but since then a great deal of sand from the action of the sea has been driven in, and the breakwater now requires to be extended. I think the Minister will find that this amount will not be sufficient to complete the repairs to that work.

Mr. CLANCY. I am sure that hon. gentlemen opposite will agree that the point that was sought to be made against the member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) that he had taken objection to the item on the ground—

Mr. LANDERKIN. Let him defend himself.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman requires somebody to defend him very often.

Mr. GIBSON. You have spoken forty times to-night already.

Mr. CLANCY. Well, this is the forty-first time, and I now appeal to the Minister of Finance if he is not asking the committee to leave it to the judgment of the Minister of Public Works rather than to the judgment of this House whether that work should go on. I appeal to the Minister himself to say if there is a parallel case in a single item in that whole sum of $163,000 standing in precisely the same position as this one. If he says there is, then I will not attempt to discuss it any further.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend will remember that I stated some time ago that where the Minister of Public Works found that an expense was likely to be much larger than he contemplated, I thought it was quite reasonable that he should take a revote of the sum in order that he might make further inquiry. I do not think the Minister of Public Works would go on with the work on the basis of the present estimates. I have stated that last year his desire was to obtain a re-examination of the work to see if he could not obtain a plan of doing it at a less cost. I think the quotation made from his speech showed that he thought a fair sum was $8,000 or $10,000. I would not understand from that that the Minister of Public Works would go on with the work on the basis of a $27,000 estimate, and I would expect that he would obtain a further examination and try to obtain a reduced cost. I do not think there is anything unreasonable in asking the item to remain under those conditions.

Public Works—Prince Edward Island—
China Point, reconstruction of head
pier ..... $1,500

Mr. MARTIN. I want some explanations from the Minister about the progress made.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This vote of $1,500 is to provide for repairing and reconstructing China point head pier, 73 by 30, that has been weakened and partly carried away. The estimated cost is $2,300. There was at the time this memorandum was made an estimated expenditure for the then current year of $800, which had probably since been expended. The revote applied for $1,200, and the new vote of $300 made the appropriation $1,500 which, added to the $800 which is probably all expended, makes the total cost $2,300.

Mr. MARTIN. I find that in 1896, $500 was voted for this work. I would like to know from the hon. Minister how much was spent in 1896.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The expenditure in 1896-97 was $284.

Mr. MARTIN. Has the rest of the $500 lapsed?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, it lapsed at the end of the year.

Mr. MARTIN. The whole expenditure on this work, up to the 23rd May last, according to a return that was brought down, was $693.58.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There was $800 estimated up to the 30th June, and the balance might have been expended. This estimate of $800 was made in the latter part of the year, but the work is under contract and probably the amount the hon. gentleman has quoted represents the exact expenditure.

Mr. MARTIN. I wish to call the attention of the committee to the culpable delay of the department. In 1896, $500 was voted to repair this work which had been carried away, I think, in that year. We find that the sum that had been spent up to year 1898 was $253.70, and I have information that there is nothing practically done towards the construction of that work up to the present time. In 1897, $2,000 was voted, and I would like to ask the hon. Minister why the work was not proceeded with. How much was expended out of that vote?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There was practically no expenditure in 1897-98. The accounts only show an expenditure of $13.

Mr. MARTIN. This only shows the justification there is for the discussion which has taken place to-night. I find, in this item, that out of $81,400 voted last year, there is $44,700 not expended at all. Although there was a vote of $500 in one year and of $2,000 in another, practically nothing has been done yet.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The work is now under contract.

Mr. MARTIN. When was it put under contract?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In February last.

Mr. MARTIN. A work that was carried away in 1896.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There are lots of works carried away which are not under contract yet.

Mr. MARTIN. I am going to give the committee an account of the way this matter was dealt with. I have here the statement of the expenditure on this wharf. I find that in 1897 the Government bought material to the value of $253.70. That material has been upon the ground from 1897 up to the present time. There was only expended during that time for labour $38.72. Here we come to a course which the Government do not pursue in a great many other cases. We have been discussing the fact that dredging work was done in the St. Lawrence River without tender, but, for this small work in Prince Edward Island, the Government have invited tenders from all over Canada. Out of this expenditure $96.13 has been paid for advertising. For this small work of repairing a wharf in Prince Edward Island the following amounts were paid out for advertisements for tenders:—"La Patrie," Montreal, $13.20; "The Guardian," Charlottetown, $8.40; the "Prince Edward Islander," $5.25; printing department, $8.65; "Herald," Montreal, $15.75; "Advocate," Pictou, $6.30; printing department, $10.02; "Chronicle," Halifax, $8.40;

"Echo," Halifax, $8.40; "Pioneer," Summerside, $3.36; "Acadian Reporter," Halifax, $8.40. This is the way the money went. That is what you call feeding the reptile press.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) Did they advertise in the British Columbia papers?

Mr. MARTIN. It is a greater wonder they did not advertise in the British Columbia papers. When there are large contracts for $300,000 or $400,000, the Government contends that the work must be done by day's labour without calling for tenders, but in the province of Prince Edward Island, when there is a trifling expenditure for repairing a wharf three years are wasted, and it must be advertised in the "Herald," and "La Patrie" of Montreal, and in the Halifax papers, perhaps the Minister's own paper, but I do not know.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the hon. gentleman does not know, why does he suggest it?

Mr. MARTIN. The Minister (Mr. Fielding) can tell us whether the "Chronicle" is his paper or not.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) means to suggest that I have a penny's worth of interest in the "Chronicle" he is mistaken. It is a most excellent paper, and if my hon. friend (Mr. Martin) will read it more regularly he will get a lot of information.

Mr. MARTIN. All the information I can get here is that the "Chronicle" was paid $8.40 for advertising repairs to a small wharf in Prince Edward Island, which the Government did not repair after all. I have called attention to it time and again in this House, and attention has also been directed to it by residents of that locality. One letter from China Point, dated 13th January, 1898, says that materials which cost about $250 are lying there waiting for a sufficient sum to carry on the work. This material was lying there, and although the money was voted it would not be sent down to go on with the work. I have a letter here, dated the 30th December, 1897, which states as follows:—

I have not yet heard from you in reference to the proposed repairs. Kindly let me know what is intended to be done, as the people are dissatisfied over the delay in repairing the wharf.

Here you have the man who is in charge of the work asking for money which had been voted to repair a wharf that was damaged three years previously, and yet not a dollar is forthcoming for the work. I see a letter in this correspondence from the Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries calling attention to the importance of this work, and yet that letter is also neglected. There is also a letter dated May, 1897, from Mr. Welsh, who formerly represented the constituency, and no satisfaction is given him, his influence went for nothing at all. The culpable negligence which the Government has shown in regard to this, and the waste of public money in advertising in "La Patrie" of Montreal, and the "Herald" of Montreal, and the two Liberal papers in Halifax, and another in Pictou, is a fair sample of the executive ability of this Government.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) has, perhaps, more ground for complaint than have his friends who have been complaining because work has not been let by tender and contract. I believe that for an expenditure on a small wharf there is no need of advertising over all creation, and, perhaps, in this case, advertisements were inserted in too many papers. But having decided to advertise for tenders, if the Minister confined himself to one or two papers in Prince Edward Island, instantly some gentlemen opposite would rise and complain that the people of the whole Dominion who were paying for this work had not the opportunity of competing for its construction. On the whole, I do not know that the public would blame the Government for advertising. I would rather be accused of advertising too widely than the opposite.

Mr. MARTIN. The Minister of Finance takes great credit to the Government for advertising this work extensively, but the fault I find is that when there is an item of $2,000 to repair a small wharf in Prince Edward Island, they advertise it all over the Dominion, but when they are spending hundreds of thousands of dollars they do not advertise it at all, nor do they call for tenders. If the Minister would pledge himself that the Government would continue that system of public advertising in every case, I would be inclined to pardon him in this instance. Why did they not advertise the sale of hundreds of tons of binder twine which were sold without public tender, after a wink had been given to their friends? Why were not tenders put in "La Patrie," in the Montreal "Herald," and the Halifax "Chronicle," asking for tenders for the dredging at Montreal?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the advertisement were put into all the papers of the Dominion, or all the Liberal papers, of which there are a great many, there would not be money to put into the wharf at all.

Mr. MARTIN. The whole expenditure up to the 30th May on this work was $393.58, and the cost of advertising was $96.13. The labour performed cost about $22 and the advertising $96.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The $96 advertising was for a contract representing $2,000.

Mr. MARTIN. I am quoting from a return furnished by the Department of Public Works.

St. Peter's Bay, pier reconstruction..... $500

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is required for levelling up and reconstructing the top portion of the present breakwater, putting in new base timber, stringers, &c.

Souris, Knight's Point, strengthening of breakwater, &c..... $15,000

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is required to continue the work of reconstructing the Souris breakwater. The total estimated cost is $20,500.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) Is that just lose stones thrown over outside the breakwater?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Stone laid down roughly and not cemented—Nova Scotia stone. The only contract is that of D. H. Ransay for $8,900. This contract covers all that remains to be done.

Mr. MARTIN. Has it come under the hon. gentleman's notice that the contract entered into in 1895, for repairing this breakwater at Souris, P.E.I., and given to George Wightman, was entered into on the 1st July of that year; that the work was to be completed in three months, that there was some delay in the execution of the papers, so that if the contract was not signed until some time in August—I think, the 3rd or 5th—through no fault of the contractor. That there was a clause in the agreement and specifications under which the contractor was not allowed to proceed with the work until the engineer in charge had laid it out for him. That the engineer in charge, even when the contract was executed on the 3rd August, did not visit the place, and consequently some further delay occurred before the contractor was allowed to proceed with the work. That would only give him from the middle or the 20th August until the 1st October to complete the work—say six weeks. The consequence was that the storms, which are periodical at that season, had swept the whole work which he had under construction away. At that time $7,000 worth of material had been swept away and the contractor was the loser to that amount. The contractor claims, and I think correctly, that one of the chief reasons for not having the work ready and fully ballasted before the storm arose, was the delay in the execution of the papers and the delay in laying out the work for the contractor in good time. There is also this claim that is set up, that a part of the wharf which was not to be repaired by him had been left insecure, not being properly ballasted—that is the part nearer the shore than the part the contractor was building. The consequence was that a storm came up breaking away part of the work between the shore and the work the contractor had undertaken to perform carrying away $7,000 worth of material. That was why the work which he was engaged on was carried away. He suffered loss to the extent of $7,000. I think that is the amount for which he has put in a claim. I believe the claim is a good one, and would ask the Minister to give it his close attention. If nothing else is done, a fiat might be issued to enable him to bring suit against the Government, because he says he has a legal claim in the case. I may say that he is no political friend of mine, but I think he has a just claim and I hope it will be considered.

Mr. MARTIN.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Has application been made for a fiat?

Mr. MARTIN. I understood that the Minister was to give a fiat, but it has not yet been done.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is in the department of Justice, and I am not in a position to say what may be done. But if they feel they have a legal claim, I hope they will make application for a fiat. I am advised that the view taken by the department was that any mishap that occurred was due to the fault of the contractors and not to the fault of the Government. Any delay in the signing of the papers might be a reason for the contractors refusing to enter upon the work, but, having entered upon the work, I take it that they would have to assume all risk. However, I have no personal knowledge of the matter and am only giving what I believe to be the view of the department. If the gentlemen cause application to be made to the Department of Justice for a fiat, it will receive consideration.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings, P. E. I.). I have some knowledge of this matter, and I can say that delay occurred between the acceptance of the tender and the signing of the contract—some two or three weeks—the fine weather of summer; and that is the of work that should be carried on during the fine weather of summer; and that the first cause of the claim that Messrs, Wightman and Mellish make upon the Government. Their work was behind, and the storm came up and broke away, as the hon. member for East Queen's (Mr. Martin) has said a part of the structure to which they had to connect their part of the pier. So he could not go on with his work until he had entered into a contract for the part of the work he had to do. Therefore, he had to carry on his work at a time when it was almost impossible to do it with satisfaction and economy; and a storm carried away one of the large crib works which he had constructed. He alleges that this is largely owing to the delay of the department in the first place and to the other hindrances caused by a carrying away the part of the work with which he had nothing to do. He fulfilled his contract, notwithstanding his loss, and not only that but I am informed, he filled the cribwork with hard stone, which the contract did not call upon him to do. Under the circumstances I believe that if not a legal, he has at any rate a good equitable claim, and I thought if the matter was brought to the attention of the hon. Minister of Public Works, by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, he would give it his careful consideration. As my hon. friend (Mr. Martin) said, this gentleman is no political friend of mine. Though my next door neighbour, he works tooth and nail against me. Still, I believe his claim is an honest one, and if I had anything to say in the matter I would beg the Government to give the matter their very best consideration.

Mr. CLARKE. What are the details of the expenditure?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The amount under contract is $8,900, with superintendence and contingencies $500, making an estimate of $9,400. In addition there is the replacing and securing of close piling of 70 feet of seaward face and providing further riprap protection of this face, and other items amounting to $11,100, making a total cost of $20,500. This is the estimated cost of the work.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) I suppose the rest will be let by contract also?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It probably will, but I am not in position to give my hon. friend (Mr. Macdonald) a definite answer.

Public Works—Harbours and Rivers—Prince Edward Island—

Summerside Harbour ..... $30,000

Mr. MARTIN. There has been a petition from the people of Wood Island about the extension of the breakwater at that place. An expenditure was made by the late Government of $13,000 or $14,000 on the harbour, but still there is not accommodation for vessels of any capacity. A petition had been forwarded to the Government, I understand, for the extension of what is known as the western block. I would like to know what the hon. Minister intends to do about it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Application has been made, but the amount is not provided for in the Estimates. For the present we will not be able to do the work.

Mr. CLANCY. Is this Summerside harbour a new harbour?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is an entirely new work. It is not let yet.

Mr. BELL (East Prince, P.E.I.) I may explain that this is a work that has been in contemplation for some time. The grant of $30,000 is a revote from last year. It is the only expenditure that has ever been proposed to be made upon the harbour of Summerside. This harbour is second in importance in Prince Edward Island. It is an excellent one, giving easy access from the straits of Northumberland, but it is very much exposed to westerly winds. From these winds in the fall of the year there is no shelter for shipping. The proposition here is to vote a sum of money towards building a breakwater from a place called Indian Head on the island shore out to the lighthouse. The effect of that will be to give vessels a shelter. They can run into the harbour under shelter of this breakwater, instead of having to go two or three miles further inland to find a precarious shelter behind some wharfs. The main benefit to be derived from the expenditure of this money is, first, to provide a shelter for the shipping. In the next place, the object is to protect and to prevent the filling up of the harbour. There is a sandbar upon the spit that runs from Indian Head to the lighthouse, and the action of the wind and waves tends to drive this sand into the harbour. The construction of the breakwater here will prevent that sand being driven into the harbour and filling it up. The next benefit will be, that the current of the river will be kept in a more condensed volume, and so in the spring of the year the channel will open more quickly by reason of the action of the heavier current. It will also have the effect of keeping the channel open later in the fall and for the like reason. Also, by condensing the water in the channel it will cleanse it and deepen it. All these benefits will arise from the construction of the breakwater. It is a matter of great importance to the town of Summerside, and I trust it will not remain, as heretofore, a mere proposition, but that it will be carried into successful effect immediately.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the Minister state whether he has an estimate of the whole cost of the work, and whether it is intended to let it by tender?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This work will cost a considerable sum. It has been advertised, and the lowest tender received was $147,000. The Minister thought the amount excessive, and he declined to award the contract. His engineers are now readjusting the plans, and expect to get the work done for about $100,000; therefore, it is well that the House should know that it will involve ultimately an expenditure of about $100,000.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman does not propose, under such circumstances, to expend $100,000 without letting the work by tender.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. For the present no decision has been reached. The contemplation was to do it by tender and by contract, and tenders were taken for that purpose. But finding the price excessive, the Minister decided not to award the contract.

Mr. CLANCY. If the Minister of Public Works were here himself, I am sure the committee would ask him whether that work would be let by tender or not. Now, as the vote is being asked pending the action of the Minister of Public Works, I think the hon. gentleman ought to be in a position to state whether this work is to be done by tender, because, if we voted it and left it to the discretion of the Minister, without any statement whatever that it should be let by tender, it would be giving him a free hand.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Minister of Public Works having attempted to let it by tender, and having failed to get a satisfactory tender, if he were satisfied that he could carry on the work under the direction of his own engineers for a less sum of money, or for a reasonable sum of money, I think he would be justified in doing it. At the same time I am not prepared to say that that is his intention. He advertised twice for tenders for this work, and the last tender was one which he regarded as excessive. Under these circumstances, if he was satisfied that he could carry on the work under his own officers for a less sum of money, I think he would be justified in doing so, although I am not in a position to state that he contemplates doing it in that way.

Mr. MARTIN. What is the estimate of his engineers for the whole of this work?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The reduced estimate the engineers make is $104,000.

Mr. CLARKE. What was the lowest tender?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. One hundred and forty-seven thousand dollars, but since then the engineer has made some reduction of the plan, with a view of getting it down to a lower cost.

Mr. MARTIN. So, the work now is not to be done according to the former specifications?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No.

Mr. MARTIN. I would like to ask the Minister in what papers he advertised this work to cost $100,000? When he advertises a little contract of $2,000 for repairing a wharf, and spends $96 in advertising, I suppose, in advertising a contract of $100,000, the Minister has given the advertisement to papers all over the country who are supporting his Government. I would like to have a list of the papers, and the amount paid for advertising.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am afraid the hon. gentleman will have to do us the favour to ask for that information later on. I have not a list of the papers at hand, and am not able to give him the information now.

Mr. MARTIN. There is one thing I wish to say about it, and it shows how the business has been done here for three years, as the hon. member for East Prince has said. This amount of $30,000 has been placed in the Estimates for three years successively, but not one dollar has been expended, and very likely, although we have $50,000 this year, the result will be the same. When the session is over the hon. Minister or some one for him will come down to Prince Edward Island and say: See what a handsome sum we have in the Estimates for Prince Edward Island. There is $50,000 in one item and $40,000 in another. When we come here next year we will find that there is not one dollar expended. The hon. Minister will not give a promise to this committee, where $100,000 of money is concerned, as to whether the work is to be done by tender or not. This committee should see that this work is let by tender. A paltry work, such as we were discussing of $2,000, must be let by tender and advertising in "La Patrie" and the "Herald" of Montreal, and the "Chronicle" of Halifax, but when we come to work involving an expenditure of $100,000, they do not know whether it is worth while to invite tenders for that.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have already expended a good deal of money in advertising for tenders.

Mr. MARTIN. Yes, and there may be a great deal more money in doing the work by day labour for the hon. gentleman's friends. I do not wish to impute motives, but I think that this committee should insist that this work should be let by tender. Such works as this have invariably been done, in Prince Edward Island, by public tender by the late Government. The hon. gentleman has given the whole case away by stating that the specifications have been changed. The estimate of the work was $105,000, but they are going to change it, and to adopt a new specification. I should like to know the difference between the old specification and the new one. They will come before this House in a short time and say: We asked for tenders for that work and the lowest offer was $147,000, while we got it done by day's labour for less than $100,000. I shall insist that we know the difference between the present specifications and the original proposal. I am not opposing the vote; I think it is a necessary work, but I think that this committee is entitled to some guarantee as to the expenditure of this money. If we cannot get it we might as well not come here at all.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This item has been in the Estimates for a couple of years. The fact that the hon. Minister of Public Works advertised twice for tenders for this work is a clear indication that he had it in his mind to have the work done by tender and contract. He intended to do it by tender and contract, and I have no doubt that he will do it in that way, but if the hon. gentleman asked me to give him an undertaking that it will be done in that way I could not do so.

Mr. MARTIN. I think we are entitled to know the difference, what is proposed to be done now and what was proposed before.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The change under the new specifications, chiefly, is a reduction in the height of the work, so that the quantity of work to be done will be less. I will be glad to give the hon. gentleman the specifications. The specifications are now in the hands of the engineers.

Mr. CLARKE. I would like to ask the hon. Minister if tenders have been called for since the plans have been modified.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, the engineers are modifying the plans now.

Mr. SPROULE. I object entirely to this mode of voting money. This is a work which the hon. Minister admits will cost somewhere about $100,000, and he comes to this House without any definite plan. He says that the plan has been changed, but he does not tell us what the change is. The committee will only sanction an expenditure of money based upon intelligent information as to what the cost ultimately will amount to when the work is completed. Yet we can get no information from the hon. gentleman as to what this work is likely to cost. I do not understand the hon. Minister to say that the Government have come to a final decision to undertake this work. The vote has been in the Estimates for two or three years, and the money may not be expended. I think that method of voting money is entirely wrong. It might be used corruptly if an election were being carried on in that part of the country, and I say that it should not be used in that way. Parliament should not undertake a work of this magnitude or nature without knowing sufficient about it to justify it in undertaking it with a definite object in view.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I cannot quite understand what information the hon. gentleman desires. I think the purpose of the work has been made perfectly clear. The hon. member for East Prince (Mr. Bell) made an explanation of the work from his local knowledge which I could have made if necessary. It is a breakwater; tenders were invited, but the cost was found to be excessive. The engineers are reducing the plans, and they have reduced the estimate to $104,000. I anticipate that the hon. Minister of Public Works will do the work by contract. He has already shown his desire to do it in that way by twice advertising for tenders. I cannot give the hon. gentleman a solemn guarantee that it will be done by contract, but the hon.

Minister of Public Works has indicated his desire to do it in that way.

Mr. SPROULE. That item must have been submitted to Council, and it must have been decided whether the Government shall go on with the work or not. If they do not intend to go on they should make that statement to the committee, and if they do intend to go on they should say so, and they should submit the plans and estimate of the engineers showing the cost of the whole work. The hon. Minister will not say whether the work will be gone on with or not. My opinion is that it will be gone on with, but evidently there has been no final decision in Council, otherwise he could give the committee as definite a statement as was given to Council whether it is the intention to go on or not.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the work was found to cost an excessive amount the hon. Minister of Public Works would not go on with it, but our anticipation is that, by a reduction in the height of the work, he will get it down to a moderate figure and the work will be done.

Mr. MARTIN. I do not think that is at all satisfactory; it is far from being satisfactory. I think this is a case where the hon. Minister should tell us what is actually to be done. Of course, we have had some information from the hon. member for East Queen's about the desirability of the work and where Summerside is, but we have no idea of the work that is to be done. Under the new specifications it is not to be raised as high as under the old specification. We have no explanation of the difference except that this work will not be raised as high by a foot or two feet. Otherwise, we are altogether in the dark. If this contract is to be let by tender, why is it that the sum is not voted here?

If it takes $105,000 to complete the work why is not that amount put down in the Estimates? The very fact that this is done on the instalment plan one year after the other, leads to the conclusion that it will not be done by contract. The Government commenced to straighten a curve in the Prince Edward Island Railway, and although it was only going to cost a few thousand dollars they expended $25,000 on it by day's labour. That makes me very suspicious of this vote. I think we should have before us the old specifications for this work as well as the new specification, so that we may see the difference between the two, and that we may decide which is best in the interests of the public.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman could hardly expect to get much information from the old specifications, but he certainly should have the specifications under which the work is now proposed, and as soon as they are printed there is no reason why he should not have them. We have given all the information about this that any one could rationally demand.

Mr. MARTIN. What was the first estimate?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have not at hand the first estimate, but the lowest tender was $147,000.

Mr. MARTIN. That is altogether beside the question. Before the members of this committee can have any idea of what we are talking about, we must have the specifications for the new work, and also the first estimate of the engineer.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not agree with the hon. gentleman that he should have an estimate on which we do not propose to do any work, but there is nothing to conceal, and there is no reason why he should not have all the estimates in the department.

Mr. MARTIN. I want to know the difference between the lowest tender that was submitted previously, and the estimate the engineer made of the cost. I would like to know if the lowest tender was much above the engineer's estimate at that time.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The acting Chief Engineer informs me that the first estimate was for about $135,000, and one tender was as low as $95,000, but the person tendering at that sum refused to go on with the work. Then a later advertisement was issued, and the lowest tender was $147,000. The Minister thought it excessive and declined to go on. New specifications are now being prepared, and though they are not complete, the engineer is able to state that the estimate is $104,000.

Harbours and Rivers—New Brunswick—

Burnt Church Wharf..... $8,000

Mr. McALISTER. What is the nature of this work?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is a wharf on the Miramichi River, between thirty and forty miles from Chatham, and it is absolutely necessary for the convenience of the people living along the river.

Mr. CLARKE. Was it built by tender?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think it has been. Tenders were asked by the late Government, but the tenders were higher than it was calculated the work would cost, and it was not proceeded with. The plans have been very much cut down and new tenders have been received for $14,000. The steamers traversing the river stop there and the business is considerable.

Mr. McALISTER. What sort of business is carried on?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Fishing business.

Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the full cost?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. $14,500.

Campbellton, repairs to ballast wharf.... $750

Mr. McALISTER. What is the reason there is only $750 this year and there was $2,500 last year? There was no expenditure made there that I am aware of.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is a further amount in the supplementary Estimates.

Mr. McALISTER. Yes, but that only makes $1,750. What has become of the other $750?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The balance has been expended on the purchase of materials.

Mr. McALISTER. From whom were these materials purchased?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The timber was purchased from Mr. Shives several months ago.

Chatham, N.B., reconstruction and repairs to custom-house wharf..... $6,000

Mr. PRIOR. Why is this increase of $5,000 over last year?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This increase is asked for on the report of the engineer. The work has not yet been undertaken. The acting chief engineer tells me he doubts if it can be advantageously done by contract. $6,000 will complete the work.

Clifton Breakwater—

Creosote block, stone talus and repairs. $9,500

Mr. McALISTER. Is there a harbour there?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is required to place a stone slope around the side of the wharf. The estimated cost is $11,180. $500 was spent during the past year. It is repair work, and the probability is it cannot be done by contract.

Mr. PRIOR. Does not the hon. Minister think it about time for the House to adjourn?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Having made a maritime night of it and having left the field clear for Quebec, I propose that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to, and committee rose and reported.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. What does the Government intend to take up to-morrow.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I believe there was an understanding between the right hon. the Premier and the leader of the Opposition that the question of preferential trade might be brought up on the first motion for Supply, but that was postponed to-day on our having reached Supply at a late stage. I think it will be taken up to-morrow. The House will be moved into Supply with the expectation that that discussion will be entered upon.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 3.05 a.m. (Wednesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 19th July, 1899.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FISHERY GUARDIAN, DISTRICT No. 1, N.B.

Mr. GANONG (by Mr. Bell, Pictou) asked :

Is Isaac Dick a fishery guardian in District No. 1, New Brunswick? If not, when was he dismissed? What was the cause of his dismissal? Who preferred the complaint? Was any inquiry held? Who has been appointed in his place? By whom was he recommended? At what rate is he to be paid for his services? Is he a British subject?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). Isaac Dick, Fishery Guardian, District No. 1, N.B., is not now in the employ of the department. The employment of these officers is not permanent, and there is no formal appointment and no formal dismissal. I am not aware whether Capt. Pratt has appointed anybody to succeed this officer; but I have telegraphed to ascertain. Capt. Pratt will know whether a new appointment is necessary or not.

DRILL HALL AT VANCOUVER, B.C.

Mr. PRIOR asked :

1. Has the Government awarded the contract for the erection of the drill hall at Vancouver, B.C.?
2. If so, to whom, and at what price?
3. How many tenders were received for the work, from whom received, and at what prices?
4. Does the contract awarded, if any, include all the work required to complete the building in accordance with the plans and specifications as approved by the Minister of Militia and Defence?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). 1. Yes. 2. Contract awarded to Viau & Lachance at $65,658. 3. Seven tenders were received, viz. :

Viau & Lachance, Ottawa.....	$65,658 00
John G. Brown, Victoria, B.C.....	78,638 00
Edward Cook, Vancouver, B.C.....	78,873 00
David M. Fraser and David Saul, Vancouver, B.C. ....	79,500 00
Thos. Bradbury, Vancouver, B.C....	83,550 00
Charles Lemoine and Fran. E. For- tin, Pembroke ....	87,214 90
Geo. Calder and Alex. Bruce, Vancou- ver, B.C.....	91,070 00

4. Yes. A note is appended that the Militia Department, however, have since asked that the main drill hall be increased 30 feet in length. The present contract does not cover this, as the Minister of Public Works declined to alter the specification.

DRY DOCK CHARGES, VICTORIA, B.C.

Mr. PRIOR asked :

1. Has a petition, signed by Thos. Shaw and others, been received from Victoria, B.C., in favour of the late reductions in the dry dock charges? If so, what are the names of those signing?
2. Have any other petitions of a like character been received?
3. Have any protests against said reductions in rates other than those mentioned by the hon. Minister of Finance on 29th June, 1899, in answer to a question on this subject, been received?
4. If so, who are they from?

THE BRITISH COLUMBIA ALIEN ACT.

Mr. PRIOR asked :

Is it the intention of the Government to disallow the Act intituled : " An Act to amend the Placer Mining Act " (otherwise known as the " Alien Act " ), passed by the provincial legislature of the province of British Columbia, on the 18th January, 1899 ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The Government has not yet received the report of the Minister of Justice on the statutes passed by the British Columbia legislature at its last session ; therefore, it has not given any consideration to the statute mentioned in the question.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE—MORNING SESSIONS.

The PRIME MINISTER moved :

That on Thursday next and for the remainder of the session, this House shall meet at eleven o'clock in the morning ; that in addition to the usual intermission at six o'clock p.m. there shall also be an intermission on each day from one to three o'clock p.m. ; that the House shall also meet on Saturdays at the same hour of eleven o'clock, and Government Orders shall have precedence at such sittings.

He said : I believe, Mr. Speaker, that this motion will be agreed to by my hon. friend. In making this motion it is my duty to inform the House what business still remains to be introduced by the Government. I may say that the only important business which still remains to be introduced is the railway subsidies, and I think we will be able to place them on the Order paper during this week, at the latest, probably on Saturday. Then, there are one or two departmental Bills of no great moment, which I believe will not entail much discussion. Then, there will be a measure of some importance which will especially interest the members from British Columbia; we propose to submit to the House resolutions to amend the Chinese Immigration Act.

Mr. FIELDING.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would take this opportunity of asking the Minister of Finance if there are to be any further supplementary Estimates of any kind.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. At the present moment we have no intention of submitting any, but it may be possible that some small items which have been overlooked will be introduced. If so, they will be merely to correct omissions and will not be material.

Mr. BRITTON. Is it the intention to proceed with the Bill from the Senate in reference to the Criminal Code?

The PRIME MINISTER. That is a question as to which I am not prepared to give an answer to my hon. friend to-day. I think we are all looking forward with some degree of earnestness to prorogation; and the Government will not be indisposed, with the concurrence of hon. gentlemen opposite, to curtail the session and bring it to as speedy a close as possible.

Mr. TISDALE. I think, in view of the period which the session has reached and the important matters, though few in number which the Prime Minister has mentioned, we had better leave that Criminal Code Bill for another session. It has been printed now, and I have reason to believe that several gentlemen who are interested in the administration of criminal justice have a number of matters to suggest that would, I am sure, entail such a lengthy discussion that, in the interest of the Bill itself, it had better be left over until another session.

Mr. CHARLTON. It would be regrettable, I think, if a Bill of the importance of this one should be allowed to stand over. I am aware that there is a great difference of opinion as to the provisions of that Bill, but why it should entail a very lengthy discussion, I am unable to understand. I hope the Government will see its way clear to let that Bill be considered. Of course, we are all desirous of prorogation, we have spent a great deal of time here; we have spent time on a good many matters of less importance than the Bill that has been mentioned. It is a Bill so important that I think it is incumbent on this House to consider it, and I trust the Government will take that view of the case, and, if possible, allow it to be considered before prorogation takes place.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton), who has just taken his seat, has given the best possible reason for the course that has been suggested by my hon. friend (Mr. Tisdale), that this measure should stand over, having been printed, until another session. The hon. gentleman himself says it is a Bill of very great importance and it does not require a word to accentuate that statement, because it is a Bill affecting criminal procedure, and all such Bills are of very grave importance. At this late period of a summer session, I am afraid that a measure of that kind cannot receive that careful consideration that it should receive in the interest of justice. I have no doubt that my hon. friend opposite will see the point.

Mr. ELLIS. Will there be an understanding that Saturday sittings will close at six o'clock, or will they continue after six?

The PRIME MINISTER. We will be guided in this matter very much by the wishes of the House. Our intention is to sit until evening, but I will not make any special rule as to that. We will be guided by the wishes of the House every day.

Mr. MILLS. Does the right hon. Prime Minister intend to sit every morning?

Mr. DOMVILLE. I would like to ask if the temperance resolution of the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) will be taken up before the close of the session or not. If not, it should be struck off the list, as it is only misleading the public.

The PRIME MINISTER. This matter will be given an opportunity of discussion.

Motion agreed to.

QUEEN VS. SKELTON ET AL.

Mr. DAVIN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to mention to the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) the case of the Queen vs. Skelton et al. The hon. Minister was good enough to say that he would speak to the hon. Minister of Justice about laying his report upon the Table.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I took a note of the hon. gentleman's request the other day, and wrote a line to the hon. Minister of Justice, who asked me to come and see him. I went and saw him, and he was anxious to know if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) had made out a formal motion. I did not know exactly what the hon. gentleman wanted, whether he wants all the papers or what papers he exactly wants, because there was a report made by the Department of Justice, and if he wants that report simply, or if he wants all the papers, it will be well for the hon. gentleman to make a formal motion. Would the hon. gentleman make a formal motion for the papers, specifying what he wants?

Mr. DAVIN. What I asked for was the report of the hon. Minister of Justice. Am I to understand that the hon. Minister of Justice sees no objection to bringing down the report? Really, all the papers ought to be brought down.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I think it would be more satisfactory, if a motion were made. The papers are voluminous. The hon. Minister of Justice showed me the file. I do not think you could discuss the matter intelligently unless you had the papers.

Mr. DAVIN. I should be quite contented at this stage of the session with the report of the hon. Minister of Justice. The report, I suppose, is a reasoned report?

PORT COLBORNE AND PORT MAITLAND.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I might mention to the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), who is acting for the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), that some time ago the hon. Minister of Public Works directed that an examination by engineers be made of the two harbours, Port Colborne and Port Maitland. I see in the Estimates which are to be discussed very shortly, a grant of an amount for Port Colborne harbour. I should like that the hon. Minister of Finance should bring down, before this is to be discussed, the report of the engineers upon the two harbours. Will he be good enough to do that?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I shall be glad to inquire into the matter, and, unless there is some reason why it should not be brought down, I will bring down the information.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. FORTIN. Mr. Speaker, since the motion for morning sittings of the House has been passed, I beg to move:

That the Select Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections have leave to sit during the time that this House is in session.

Motion agreed to.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. McDUGALL. Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) to a return brought down in response to an Order of the House of the 15th of May. The return was brought down on the 23rd of June, and it is not complete. I drew the attention of the right hon. First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) two weeks ago to the fact that the return was not complete, and the right hon. gentleman made a note of it in the absence of the hon. Minister of Railways.
Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). If the hon. gentleman (Mr. McDougall) will point out what the deficiency is, I will bring it down.

Mr. McDUGALL. In order to assist the hon. Minister in supplying the shortage, I will call his attention to a letter of Mr. Pottinger, addressed to his chief engineer, dated the 26th of October, 1897, where he proceeds to say:

Dear Sir,—At Grand Narrows, allow a man named McNeill, under lease, to erect a building—
And so on. This is the first communication that is on file, and before the general manager could have written such a letter, he must have had an application, and there must have been some correspondence. I am aware that there was an application. Further on in the papers there is a letter of the applicant, addressed to the general manager, dated the 31st of December, 1897, in which he proceeds to say:

Dear Sir,—I have made an application to the Government over two years ago for a lease on a piece of land here,—

And so on. That application is not on the file.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman want the application?

Mr. McDUGALL. The Order calls for all the correspondence including the application of course.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, but I would like to know what papers the hon. gentleman wants.

Mr. McDUGALL. I want all the correspondence that took place during the two years up to the 31st of December, 1897.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would like the hon. gentleman to have in his mind that the officers were directed to furnish all the correspondence; but if there is any deficiency, and if he will state what the deficiency is, I will call their attention to it, and try to supply it.

Mr. McDUGALL. The officials have only given the latter part of the papers, but there is some correspondence that took place previously.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would like to know what the hon. gentleman wants, so that I can look at it myself. The application, apparently, is the only paper that is missing.

Mr. McDUGALL. The application is missing, and the applicant says in his letter that he made application two years ago. All the correspondence that took place subsequent to the date of the application down to December, 1897, is not in this file.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is not likely that there is a great deal of correspondence.

SUPPLY—PREFERENTIAL TRADE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. KAULBACH. Mr. Speaker,—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Speaker, I must call my hon. friend's (Mr. Kaulbach) attention to the fact that this day has been set apart for a particular motion on going into Committee of Supply, and I would have to ask him to defer, until the next motion is made to go into Committee of Supply, what he proposes to take up. At the request of the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill), I propose now to move a resolution in reference to preferential trade of which notice was given some considerable time ago, and which appeared in the Votes and Proceedings. At the outset, I may say that I intend to be as brief as I can be, consistently with the importance and gravity of the question that is now brought before the House, which I do not hesitate to say, I consider at this moment probably the most important question which is before this country. I think it would be well to intimate now that I intend to make a very substantial change in the resolution of which notice is given. I will state very frankly to the House why I do this. The question of preferential trade is one upon which I do not think there ought to be any difference of opinion in this House, and believing that there ought not to be any difference, I have, with the consent of my hon. friend (Mr. McNeill), modified this resolution in such a manner as to enable the Government, if so disposed, to accept it. The resolution of which my hon. friend (Mr. McNeill) gave notice, was one that we could not naturally expect the Government to accept, because it involved a censure, to a certain extent, upon the Government, and I now propose to change the character of the resolution somewhat. I need not detain the House to read it over at length at this moment, further than to point out an important change which is embodied in the first three lines of the final clause, which said :

And this House regrets that the Speech from the Throne contained no intimation that the Government have (in response to these repeated advances from the Imperial authorities) made any attempt to secure, &c.

I propose, Mr. Speaker, with the consent of the House, to change these lines of the resolution and to substitute the following :

That in the opinion of this House, it is the duty of the Government in response to the repeated advances by the Imperial authorities, to endeavour to secure for the produce of Canada that preferential treatment in the markets of the United Kingdom which would be of such inestimable value to the farmers and other producers of Canada competing against foreign rivals in the markets of the United Kingdom, would set in motion a great tide of immigration to our shores, people the vast wheat areas of the Canadian North-west, enhance farm values in the older provinces, promote the unity of our Empire, and speedily deliver it from—

I strike out the word "dangerous" in the resolution here.

—and speedily deliver it from dependence upon a foreign food supply.

My right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) will see at once, that the change which I propose to make in this resolution places himself and the Government, and in fact every member of this House, in a position to give this resolution their support if they so desire. As I have said, this is a question which not only ought not to be of a party character, but it is a question which has obtained the support of all parties in this House and in the country in the past, and so, I thought it desirable to make such modification as would enable the Prime Minister to frankly accept it in the spirit in which it is offered, I shall deal with the subject, therefore, from the point of view, that in my judgment there is nothing to prevent the adoption of this resolution by the unanimous vote of the House, and such a unanimous vote would, of course, be calculated to greatly strengthen the hands of my right hon. friend and of the Government in giving effect to it. The House is familiar with the whole subject, and as my hon. friend from North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) has embodied in the resolution the statement made by the Duke of Devonshire upon a very important occasion bearing upon this subject, I do not propose to go at any very great length into the history of this matter, except in so far as is necessary, to put as succinctly as I can before the House the position which this question in my judgment now stands.

I may say that in 1891, the United Empire Trade League was formed by a number of gentlemen in the House of Lords and the House of Commons of Great Britain, who, although disagreeing upon political questions generally, came to the conclusion that a great advantage to the Empire would result from the adoption of what was called preferential trade between Great Britain and her colonies. By preferential trade between Great Britain and her colonies, they meant, and so stated, that it was to be a policy under which Great Britain would admit to her markets the products to her colonies on better terms than similar products coming from foreign countries, and that in return her colonies would give a tariff preference to imports coming from the United Kingdom. That, in a word, was the principle of preferential trade. There was a great difficulty which stood in the way of this, as was fully recognized by the Empire Trade League, and they sent a very important deputation to the Marquis of Salisbury, who at that time (1891) was Prime Minister. That deputation was sent to press upon His Lordship the abrogation of the Belgian and German treaties, which formed an insuperable obstacle against the colonies giving to the mother country any preference in their markets over that which they gave to all the other countries with which Great Britain had most-favoured-nation treaties. Lord Salisbury on that occasion referred to those two treaties as "unlucky treaties." He stated he could not understand how such treaties ever came to be made, pointing out, that there were great difficulties in the way of their abrogation, but promising that the Government would give prompt attention to any means by which these treaties might be abrogated so that the difficulty of establishing preferential trade between Great Britain and her colonies would be removed. Lord Salisbury spoke of preferential trade as one of the most important questions that, in his judgment, could engage the attention of public men of any party, but he also spoke of the fact that it would cause a very great change in the relations between Great Britain and her colonies, and that unless the subject was so agitated as to obtain the support of public opinion, the Government could not be expected to abrogate these treaties, the abrogation of which would be attended with some considerable difficulty. I shall not detain the House further than to say, that these steps were promptly followed up on various occasions, notably at what I might call the Imperial Conference held in this city of Ottawa in 1894, at which my hon. friend, Sir Mackenzie Bowell, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, presided. On that occasion, not only was the Government of Canada represented, but, as the House well knows, the Governments of Australasia and of South Africa were represented, and Her Majesty's Government considered the question so important that they appointed Lord Jersey, a peer of very high standing, to represent them. At that conference, the following important resolution was unanimously adopted :

That provision should be made by Imperial legislation enabling the dependencies of the Empire to enter into agreements of commercial reciprocity, including the power of making differential tariffs with Great Britain, or with one another.

That any provisions in existing treaties between Great Britain and any foreign power, which prevent the self-governing dependencies of the Empire from entering into agreements of commercial reciprocity with each other, or with Great Britain, should be removed.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

That important resolution was, as I have said, unanimously adopted at this Imperial Conference. As matters stood, it is well known that Great Britain had the power of receiving articles sent from the British Colonies free, as at present, but that same freedom applies to the products of foreign countries which came into competition with these colonies, and the whole aim of the repeal of the Belgian and German treaties was to remove the difficulty which stood in the way, and which prevented Great Britain from accepting from any colony any remission of duties and placing them in return upon better terms than those foreign countries which had most-favoured-nation treatment with Great Britain. I may say that my right hon. friend, as is very well known—and I do not intend to go into this subject at all any further than absolutely necessary to the discussion of the question—in common with, I may say, everybody else, came to the conclusion that the adoption of preferential trade between Great Britain and Canada would be of immense value to Canada. When I had raised this question at a meeting before the Chamber of Commerce in the city of Montreal, the organ of the Liberal party stated very emphatically that the obtaining of preferential trade, which would give the products of Canada a better position in the Imperial market than those of foreign countries that came into competition with them, was a question on which there was no difference of opinion in this country, that we were all agreed, if such a thing could be obtained, it would be greatly in the interests of Canada and the Empire that such a policy should be adopted.

My right hon. friend, in the campaign of 1896, which led to his obtaining power, spoke very emphatically in the city of London, Ont., in favour of this principle, and I think also at Toronto gave his cordial adhesion to it, and pledged himself to use any influence in his power to secure its accomplishment, and he pointed out there in language quite as strong, perhaps more forcible than any I could use, the immense advantage which such a policy would be to Canada. I may say that subsequently another very important and significant occurrence took place, and that was the appointment by the Board of Trade in Toronto of a delegate in the person of one of the members of Toronto (Mr. Osler) to represent it at the third meeting of the Chambers of Commerce of the Empire in London, and this meeting passed a resolution, embodying the views of the Toronto Board of Trade on this question as to what might be done in order to accomplish preferential trade between Great Britain and Canada. Mr. Osler submitted that resolution at the meeting of the Chamber of Commerce, which was held in June, 1896, and on that occasion I think that meeting was opened by a very famous speech from the Secretary of State for the Colonies, the Right Hon. Mr. Chamberlain, in which he then adopted practically, as a solution of this question, the resolution which had been passed by the Board of Trade of the city of Toronto, as forming the basis upon which he believed could be worked out this question of preferential trade between Canada and the mother country, and in fact between all the colonies and the mother country. I do not intend to detain the House by reading the resolution, which is already in our "Hansard," or the speech of Mr. Chamberlain in which he practically adopted and endorsed the views of the Board of Trade of Toronto, and which is so well known as to make it unnecessary that I should detain the House by going over it, but I may say that that was followed by the Jubilee. I need not tell the House that to me it has always been a source of the most deep regret that my right hon. friend, who represented Canada on that important occasion, did not avail himself of that most happy opportunity that could possibly present itself to accomplish the work which he and, in fact every person in Canada, had agreed it was of the greatest importance to Canada to accomplish, and to secure the accomplishment of which was worthy of every possible effort. But it will be remembered that from some cause, and I do not intend to go into that matter further, my right hon. friend did not see his way clear to the adoption of such a course as we had been led to expect. But, perhaps, as it is so important, although it is not new to the House, I may read the statement made by the Secretary of State for the Colonies to the Premiers assembled on the occasion of the Jubilee, in which are embodied in a few words his views and the position in fact of Her Majesty's Government on that subject. He said:

In the meanwhile, however, I may say that I note a resolution which appears to have been passed unanimously at the meeting of the Premiers in Hobart, in which the desire was expressed for closer commercial arrangements with the Empire, and I think it was suggested that a commission of inquiry should be created in order to see in what way practical effect might be given to the aspiration. If that be the case, and if it were thought that at the present time you were not prepared to go beyond inquiry, if it were the wish of the other colonies, of Canada and of the South African Colonies, to join in such an inquiry, Her Majesty's Government would be delighted to make arrangements for the purpose, and to accept any suggestions as to the form of the reference and the character and constitution of the commission, and would very gladly take part in it.

The view that the right hon. Secretary of State for the Colonies has invariably taken from the first in regard to this matter, is, that it would not be promoted by any dictation on the part of Her Majesty's Government, but that Her Majesty's Government would be only too happy to treat in a broad liberal spirit, and in no "huckstering" manner, with the colonies concerning anything that would bring about so desirable a consummation as the binding together more closely Great Britain and her colonies by substituting such a tie of self-interest as would be created by these mutual beneficial and advantageous relations which preferential trade with Great Britain and her colonies would involve. I merely indicate that in passing to show what the position of the question was. The Duke of Devonshire's remarks at the reception of the Premiers at Liverpool are embodied, to a certain extent, in the resolution of my hon. friend from North Bruce (Mr. McNeill), who copied them from a leading paper in Liverpool, which gave a full report on that occasion of the remarks made by His Grace the Duke of Devonshire. But since then, the British Empire League, of which His Grace the Duke of Devonshire is the president, have published no doubt a revised copy of his remarks on that occasion, and I may, perhaps, as they will be still more accurate than the statement in the resolution and I think quite as strong, I may, perhaps, be permitted to read a few words:

There never was, in my opinion, a time at any period of our history when the colonies and our dependencies filled a larger place in the thoughts of the people, and in their political dealings. Never at any time—even at times when we have been fighting to acquire or to retain our colonial possessions—never at any time when the stream of emigration has been most rapidly building up our colonial expansions—never at any time have they filled a larger part in the thoughts of the public than to-day. It would be too much to say that they now occupy the attention of our statesmen to the exclusion of more purely domestic matters, or that those domestic matters do not still occupy the largest portion of the time which we devote to politics, but there is, I think, at the present time something in the air—there is something which, if I am not mistaken, is growing into a great and irresistible force which is speaking to the minds, and more than to the minds, to the hearts, of the people, and which tells them that they are citizens of a greater state than that which is contained within these little islands on the north-west of Europe—(applause)—that they have to deal with larger issues than those of the success or defeat of this or that political party—that even their relations with the European states are of less importance than the relations which they may be able to establish or to maintain with those younger, vigorous and prosperous states which it rests with the people of this country in a great measure to decide whether they shall grow up as portions of our Empire, or whether, by neglect or mismanagement, we shall compel them to found for themselves an independent and a separate existence. (Applause.)

His Grace followed that statement up with an elaborate statement showing the utter failure of the predictions made for the policy of free trade, which he refers to in very strong terms. He said:

The world has not become the commercial paradise which was predicted in the early days of free trade opinion, when it was hoped that free trade would bind all the nations of the earth so closely together that it would be a matter of comparatively little importance by whom they were ruled or under what influence they were governed. We have since learned by painful experience that no old or new markets are being thrown open to us by the influence of free trade alone, and that if we want to provide for the increasing commerce which is necessary for the support of our increasing population, we must find those markets for ourselves—(cheers)—and must use every opportunity, either of expanding or of consolidating our colonial possessions.

That language was very gratifying, and I need not say that it was interpreted by the Australasian representatives who were present on that occasion as practically an offer of preferential trade. And it was so regarded by the press of Great Britain. I need not remind the House that the day after the Duke of Devonshire made the statements to which I have referred, he was attacked by all the Cobdenites and extreme free trade papers throughout the kingdom, as having, for the purpose of meeting the views of the colonies on this question of preferential trade, thrown over the doctrines of free trade altogether. I will call attention for a single moment to the utterances of the newspapers on the subject of this speech, which, I think, will satisfy the House as to what was in the mind of His Grace when he thus approached the Premiers with the statement of which I have made reference. The "Times" said:

This silent, gradual process of awakening throughout the country on the trade question has brought about an astonishing change, which is now beyond all controversy. The recent tariff legislation in Canada and the discussions as to Australian confederation seem to indicate that we may be on the eve of some remarkable development.

The "Morning Post" said:

The Duke of Devonshire's speech is a funeral oration on the Cobdenite school. It is obvious enough that the lead taken over the seas on this question finds a response in the growing opinion of the British people.

The "Standard" said:

The Duke of Devonshire's candour was complete and creditable.

I will not take more time referring to that, because I think it is very conclusive as to what was intended to be conveyed by His Grace, what was accepted by the press and by a number of the Premiers who were present as to his views on this question of preferential trade. But I may say that when the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) returned, the course which he had pursued in England in regard to this question of preferential trade was somewhat severely criticised—I will not say that it was too severely criticised—you could hardly expect me to say that. My right hon. friend met these criticisms by a speech made at a banquet in Toronto, which was given him after his return from England. I wish to call special attention to what he said there, because I think I have a ground on which I may fairly claim to-day his hearty support and that of his Government and of his friends in this House, for the resolution which I propose to move. He referred to the criticisms made on his failure to demand preferential trade and gave a reason—and it is only just that that reason given by the right hon. gentleman himself should find a place in my statement. He said:

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

I claim that we must look at this question upon a broader surface, upon a broader motive, than this motive. Certainly, if I thought I could have obtained for my country, for the products of Canada, a preferential treatment in the markets of Great Britain, I would not only have been wanting in patriotism, but I would have been wanting in reason—I would simply have been an idiot—if I had failed to obtain such preference.

The right hon. gentleman there commits himself just as strongly as he did before the general election to the opinion that preferential trade would be of the greatest importance to Canada if it could be obtained. And he went on to explain that the reason why he had not pressed that question more strongly was that he felt that, in order to accomplish preferential trade, the vital point in the first instance was to obtain the abrogation of the Belgian and German treaties, and he was afraid that if he combined the two measures, he might fail to accomplish either, but that separating them he would have a better chance of securing consideration for this measure. He said further:

But let me say that above all things, in matters political, I have learned my lesson from British precedents, and I know that all reforms have to be taken one step at a time, and he who endeavours to do more than that is likely to end in failure. That has been too often the case in past years. If ever Canada is to obtain preferential treatment in the markets of Great Britain, the first and foremost condition, the essential condition, was to obtain the abolition of the Belgian and German treaties.

My right hon. friend was quite right, as we all admit, that these treaties absolutely precluded the accomplishment of the reform, and that their abrogation was an essential preliminary to it. But I do not agree with him, as he is well aware, that it was necessary to separate the two questions. The abrogation of the Belgian and German treaties had been put forward by the United Empire Trade League, and all the advocates of this reform, as something to be accomplished in order to secure preferential trade between Great Britain and the colonies. Without that, so far as the colonies were concerned, there was nothing great to be accomplished. The right hon. gentleman proceeded :

The treaties have been denounced, there is nothing in the way now, the coast is clear, the ground is ready for discussion.

I invite my right hon. friend's attention to that, because I am not dealing with this as a party question. I say frankly that I consider the question of preferential trade as infinitely above and beyond party. It has been declared over and over again by the highest authorities representing both parties in this country, that this is a question upon which there is no difference of opinion, and concerning which the only question that remains for solution is the manner of its accomplishment. Now, I invite my right hon. friend's attention to the renewed pledge that he there gave to the people of Canada that, this impediment having been removed by the abrogation of the Belgian and German treaties, the question was open for discussion, and that he still regarded it as a question of the greatest importance to the people of Canada, and he would not fail on every opportunity in pressing it to a successful conclusion, if possible.

Now, one of the great difficulties that has been presented by a gentleman than whom no other has entered upon this question of preferential trade with greater enthusiasm, has been the fact that the people of England were so wedded to free trade that it was practically impossible to induce them to regard this proposition favourably, and that it was no use for persons to exhaust their efforts in endeavouring to obtain its accomplishment. Now, I want to combat that opinion. Of course, no man can enter upon an arduous effort to accomplish any object if he despairs in the outset of ultimate success. I want to say to hon. gentlemen opposite, who, perhaps, have been too ready to take that view, that there is no ground for the hopelessness that many of them have entertained on this subject. I may say, Mr. Speaker, that a good many things have happened, even since the date of the speech of my right hon. friend, to which I refer. It is well known that about the same period, I think, no less a person than the then Governor General of Canada, Lord Aberdeen, made a speech in Toronto in which he pointed out the uselessness of any effort in this direction, because the action that had recently been taken in England had shown that that country could not be induced to entertain the question of countervailing duties, even where it was very important to colonial interests that it should be entertained. Now, this curious answer has already been given on this question of countervailing duties. I may say at the outset that Lord Salisbury long ago put on record what was practically an official declaration, for it was written by his private secretary at his direction to a gentleman who made an inquiry, declaring that a preference between England and her colonies did not involve any violation of the general principles of free trade; that the principles of free trade had reference to the relations between England and foreign countries, and had no bearing upon such relations and such principles as might be adopted within the Empire; that the imposition of a small duty against foreign countries that imposed very high duties against Great Britain, could not be held as attacking the principles of free trade, because they would not themselves be protective; that it was where a duty is not a revenue duty, but is so high as to prevent the introduction of an article into a country from abroad, that you can treat it as a protective duty. That principle Lord Salisbury laid down with a good deal of force.

We now come to the question of countervailing duties, and I draw the attention of my right hon. friend and of the House to the fact that this question has recently received very important consideration, and one that lies at the very foundation of the objection of some gentlemen who take an interest in the question of preferential trade and who think it impossible or impracticable. Now, every person in this House, I presume, knows that India is governed from London; that while there is a local government composed of the Governor General and a Council assisting him in the government of India, that government is practically in the India Office, presided over by the Secretary of State for India in Great Britain, and that without the imprimatur and sanction of Her Majesty's Government in England, no such principle as the adoption of a countervailing duty could be carried out. Well, the time came when the Indian authorities represented to Her Majesty's Government that in the interests of India countervailing duties ought to be imposed upon France, Germany and other countries sending their products into India in competition with the manufacturers of that country. Now, I need not say that Lord Farrer is, perhaps, recognized everywhere as undoubtedly the ablest supporter of the Cobden school in all its entirety; and as my hon. friend knows, he is the recognized leader of the school; and that hon. gentleman, in the strongest way and with all the vigour that his great abilities allowed him to use, denounced this proposal for the Government of England to go back upon the principles of free trade by permitting the Government of India to introduce these countervailing duties in India against the products of France, Germany and other countries. The question was fought out in the strongest possible manner. The Right Hon. Mr. Fowler, who, perhaps, is one of the ablest men in the Liberal party at present, and who has long been regarded on the floor of the House of Commons of Great Britain as second to no man in ability and in debating power, attacked on the floor of the House of Commons, Lord George Hamilton, the Secretary of State for India, and attacked the Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, Secretary of State for the Colonies on this question of countervailing duties. He denounced it as an utter abandonment of free trade, as simply sweeping away the whole theory upon which free trade in England has been conducted. Now, what was the result? The result was that Lord George Hamilton and the Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, having grappled with the question in emphatic terms, carried the House of Commons with them, and Mr. Fowler's resolutions against countervailing duties in India were voted down by a majority in the House of Commons of no less than 141. I give this as the best possible evidence of the unwisdom of despairing in a question like this, a question in which we know there has been a steady undercurrent of change in all classes of people in England, and, perhaps, in no class more than in the operative and the labouring classes. And as a complete and thorough answer to the speech delivered by Lord Aberdeen in the city of Toronto on this subject, in which he intimated that the House of Commons never would permit anything in the shape of countervailing duties to receive their authority or imprimatur. Permit me, anxious as I am not to take up the time of the House unduly, to read what Mr. Chamberlain said, and this bears directly, in my judgment, upon the whole question. He said:

It is a dangerous thing to teach the people of this country that free trade is inseparable from gross injustice and unfair prejudice to their employments and occupations. The member for Cardiff (Mr. Maclean) dared the members of the Government to go to their constituents and propose countervailing duties. I should not be at all afraid to go to my constituents. On the contrary, I think there is a growing feeling in the country, which to a certain extent alarms me, that the injustices which have attended upon free trade—which are not necessarily incident to free trade, and are not, in my opinion, due to it—the pressure of these injustices produces so great an impression on the working classes, that I am alarmed lest they should go a great deal further than I should, and should be ready not merely to remove abuses but to deny the doctrine and the principle of free trade as a political religion, and it has had the hard fate of all religions. It has been corrupted since it was promulgated in its original purity; it has suffered from commentators, annotators, and false prophets. With some the doctrine of free trade has become a dogma, and the religion has become a fetish. I think we had better go back to the original fountain of inspiration, to clear away from this religion the corruption which has been imposed upon it, and to remove from it the results of the fanaticism of certain subsequent professors. * * * I maintain that there is no justification in the argument or speeches of any of the great free traders for the doctrine that countervailing duties are opposed to free trade. What hon. members opposite desire to do is to buy in the cheapest markets. That is where you stop, but Cobden said "at its natural price," and that is what you have forgotten. The main object of the old free traders was to secure natural sources of production and exchange. Their idea was that each country would produce that which it was naturally best fitted to produce, and exchange it without artificial arrangements. They disapproved of trade being turned into unnatural channels, but they advocated countervailing duties in cases where it was necessary to restore equality.

I have detained the House with this because it puts on record in the clearest and most definite manner a statement that in regard to countervailing duties which were treated by Mr. Fowler as striking at the basis and foundation principle of free trade, in the interest of India and the same thing would apply to the interests of Canada and the great colonial Empire, it would be perfectly right and possible for them to disregard such dogmas as these. I need not remind the House of how great an authority the London "Times" is in Great Britain. This great authority, in my opinion, largely depends, not upon its leading public opinion, but upon its prescience in seeing the trend of public opinion, in knowing where public opinion is going, and while it appears to lead, it is actually, by its thorough knowledge of the condition of the country, often in a position to predict what the trend of public opinion will be and to anticipate it. That is one of the great reasons of the authority which the London "Times" has undoubtedly obtained. Everybody was astounded the morning that the Chancellor of the Exchequer intimated that it would be necessary to find new sources of revenue. The London "Times" astonished the world to a large extent by saying that the time would soon come when the British Government would have to radically consider the question of the sources of revenue, and that in their judgment there was no source of revenue that could be better dealt with than the imposition of a tax upon corn, which includes all our wheat and other grains, and the imposition of a duty on sugar. The London "Times" propounded that, as in its judgment, a position to which Her Majesty's Government would soon have to turn their attention, as not merely a measure to sustain the revenue of the country at that high position that was necessary but to carry on their great defensive measures that were so important to the maintenance of the influence of Great Britain. I hold in my hand a copy of the "Globe" newspaper, of Toronto, of March 6th, in which it is said:

The "Times" points out that it is not merely an expedient to tide over a single year that has to be found. "The mischief goes much deeper than any casual miscalculation of this or that Chancellor of the Exchequer. For at least twenty years back the country has been pursuing a course of financial policy which has disturbed the financial equilibrium, and has tended more and more to alter the centre of gravity of taxation. The danger is that it is so easy to get over a temporary difficulty by the simple expedient of raising by an income tax an additional penny a pound."

A Corn and Sugar Duty.

Its conclusion, which has taken the free trade essayists' breath away, is that "it is mischievous to encourage the idea that a free breakfast-table is the privilege of British subjects like the trial by jury or habeas corpus. The true policy is to extend the scope of indirect taxation by the reimposition of the shilling duty on corn, which was not felt while it was in operation, and which would bring in at present a very large sum. This is one proposed reform. A duty of a half-penny a pound on sugar, which would bring in some six millions a year, is another. If some such measures are not adopted, we will find ourselves confronted by far more serious financial problems in the immediate future."

When this question of preferential trade within the Empire was brought up the London "Times" gave it a large measure of support on the ground that the unity of the Empire would thus be secured. Now, I may say that the Right Hon. Mr. Chamberlain, although somewhat disheartened by not seeing this question of preferential trade pressed more vigorously at the time of the Jubilee, has evidently not given the question up. After the Jubilee he referred to this subject in strong terms. On the 3rd of February, 1898, Mr. Chamberlain said :

In what form I know not—it would be foolish to attempt to predict. It may be in the shape of commercial union—

He spoke of how the unity of the Empire could best be promoted.

—of the Imperial Zollverein, which I do not think to be so absurd as do some political economists.

And he said :

It may be in the shape of some Imperial council, which will represent the federation of the British races, and which has been advocated by men as different in other respects as the late Mr. Forster, Lord Rosebery, and Lord Salisbury ; but, in whatever way it may be represented to us, we shall not be deterred, either by the economic pedantries or the selfishness which is a virtue with some politicians, from giving favourable consideration to any proposals which our brethren across the seas may make to us. And in such a consideration, I for one do not believe the English people will keep a strict account of profit and loss—that they will seek to be assured of a present pecuniary gain in return for so much concession on their part. No, I think they will look, and look wisely, rather to a future time when we shall find our reward ; and that the splendid isolation with which our foreign critics sometimes taunt us, will be transformed into a close alliance of the British race, and when the sons of Britain throughout the world shall stand shoulder to shoulder, to defend our mutual interests, and our common rights.

I give that as an evidence that that right hon. gentleman, Mr. Chamberlain, by no means despairs of taking this question up.

Again, in Liverpool, that right hon. gentleman gave expression to the same sentiments in perhaps even stronger language, and, as late as January, 1899, Mr. Chamberlain spoke on the subject at the annual dinner of the Birmingham Jewellers and Silversmiths' Association. This paper, dated February 2nd, 1899, says :

And, gentlemen, what do these things prove ? They prove conclusively that Britons throughout the world are animated by the same aspiration, and that they are preparing the way for that greater federation which, I believe, is coming within the range of practical politics, and which will have the most beneficent and far-reaching results in promoting the peace and the civilization of the world. I do not think that we at home have been backward in forwarding this movement. We have endeavoured to meet our colonies half-way at least, we have welcomed every project—as, for instance, the Imperial penny post and the proposals for improved steamship and telegraphic communication—

And, Sir, I am delighted to learn that Her Majesty's Government, although hesitating for a moment in regard to the Pacific cable, have finally reached a conclusion to carry out practically, as I understand, the decision arrived at by Lord Selborne's Committee.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That right hon. gentleman, Mr. Chamberlain, continued to say :

—everything, in fact, which will extend and strengthen that invisible organization which, like the nerves of the human body, carries sensation to every part, so that nothing can happen of good or of evil, even to an extremity, which does not send a thrill through the whole of the rest.

Unexampled Activity.

In describing the flourishing condition of the self-governing colonies, Mr. Chamberlain said :

"The Dominion of Canada is passing through at the present time a period of unexampled activity. The manufacturers of the east share this prosperity with the farmers of the west, and the great province of British Columbia, with its untold mineral resources, is rapidly being developed, and will shortly, I believe, be the home of a vast population. It is a startling and almost an astounding fact that Canada, Australia and South Africa, with a population all told at the present time of not much more than thirteen millions of people, are taking from us every year very nearly as much as the three greatest European states—Russia, Germany and France—combined, with a population all told of 220,000,000."

No language that could be used shows better the enormous advantage of drawing the bonds of the Empire more closely together, and of increasing that trade which so undoubtedly follows the flag, as is indicated by such a startling statement, that three sections of the Colonial Empire—Canada, Australia and South Africa—with a population of only 13,000,000, took about as much of the products of British industry as the three greatest European states—Russia, Germany and France—with a population of 220,000,000. That matter is accentuated by the following:—

The "abstract tables" of the trade of the United Kingdom just published in Blue-book form, enforce one fact with all true Imperialists—sane Imperialists, shall we say in deference to Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman—will take due note. During the last five years British exports to British possessions have increased much more rapidly in proportion than to the rest of the world. Here are the aggregate figures:

	1894.	1898.
To foreign countries..	£195,000,000	£204,000,000
To British possessions.	78,000,000	90,000,000

In other words, the trade which follows the flag has increased at the rate of 15 per cent, while trade with other nations has grown only at the rate of  $4\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. What will Lord Farrer have to say to this, we wonder?

That is the comment upon this remarkable statement upon British trade. Let us look now at the Trade Returns of the United States, which make a very remarkable exhibit, and which cannot fail to make an impression on the minds of British statesmen in a direction favourable to the accomplishment of what we wish, viz., the great aim and object of preferential trade, by which colonial products should have a position in the British market that the products of foreign countries have not. The December monthly summary of the commerce and finances of the United States gives a statement showing the value of the merchandise imported into and exported from the United States in each of the last ten calendar months, together with the names of the countries from which, or to which, exported or imported. For the purpose of comparison, the following figures are taken for the calendar year 1898—prior to the McKinley tariff—and for the calendar year 1893. The United Kingdom sent to the United States in the year 1889 $179,566,373 worth, and in 1898 that comparatively small amount sent by the United Kingdom to the United States of America fell to $111,361,617 worth. Contrast for a single moment that with what the United States sent to Great Britain. The United States in 1889 sent to Great Britain $650,616,283 worth, and in 1898 the United States sent to Great Britain $981,134,110 worth. It will thus be seen that while there was a falling off in the imports by the United States from the United Kingdom, from 1889 to 1898, of $68,000,000, there was an increase from the United States to the United Kingdom, in those years, of no less than $331,512,000. It is impossible, in view of these figures, for any British statesman to gainsay the fact that while they are giving to foreign countries all the advantages by taking the products of these countries on precisely the same condition as those from Canada and the other British colonies, not only have they received no equivalent, but, as I have shown in the case of the United States, their exports have largely decreased under the influence of the high American tariff, and this decrease is accompanied by a vast increase in the imports from that country. Take the question of German trade, it is well known that by the system adopted by Germany, of giving large Imperial subsidies to steamers sailing to the Australasian colonies, low transit has been provided for German goods and these are consequently crowding out British goods. That is one of the things recognized by the present Secretary of State for the Colonies as a ground for the Imperial Government giving subsidies for steam communication to Canada and China and Japan on the western coast and contributing a subsidy for a fast service to the British West Indies.

I do not intend to detain the House longer than to say that I quite recognize the step taken by this Government, and taken no doubt with the intention of largely increasing the imports of Great Britain into Canada, but my right hon. friend knows that it has met with a very moderate result, so far as British industry is concerned. In fact, I may say with no result. Having gone further into the calculation, I find that instead of having increased our trade with Great Britain, that trade to-day is smaller than it was in 1896 before the change of Administration. That certainly is not a satisfactory result, but I am perfectly satisfied that with the adoption of a policy of preferential trade, such as that which all parties in this House and out of it in Canada are committed to, which all recognize as one which would be an enormous value to Canada, there will be such increase in the population of Canada and in its productive capacity that will realize our most sanguine expectations. Just imagine, here is Great Britain receiving this enormous import of breadstuffs mainly from the United States of America, while in Canada we have the soil, the climate, the pasturage, and a wheat-producing capacity that would, under a policy of preferential trade, furnish the mother country with all the bread and meat that she requires to consume, over £100,000,000 sterling worth per annum.

I need not say to this House what it would do for Canada. Not only would it develop our prairie lands and all the other resources of Canada, but it would furnish such a vast population as would in turn be able to make a corresponding preferential return to the mother country.

I shall not go into the question of the enormous interest this is to Great Britain. Statisticians of great ability and the highest character have taken that subject up, and have shown that in case of war England will be placed in an extremely delicate and difficult position, probably at no distant day, from the fact that at present she is largely dependent upon Russia and the United States, two foreign countries, for the main portion of her food supply. And she remains thus dependent while she has possessions on the continent of North America alone that, under a policy of preferential trade, would furnish her with all the products of the soil which she is compelled annually for the subsistence of her people to import at present almost entirely from foreign countries.

The advantages are so great and obvious that I do not intend to detain the House, at this late period of the session, by dwelling further on this question, but it is one, in my judgment, of vaster import to Canada and the Empire to which we have the honour to belong than any other question that is engaging the attention of the people of this country. I beg to move :

That in March, 1896, the Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, Secretary of State for the Colonies, suggested that duties favouring the colonies should be imposed by the United Kingdom upon her imported foreign produce, provided the colonies would in return make large preferential concessions in favour of the United Kingdom ; and he asked the colonies to "better" the offer they had previously made ;

That in June, 1896, Mr. Chamberlain said that he found the germs of a satisfactory proposal for such preferential trade within the Empire, in a resolution passed that year by the Toronto Board of Trade ;

That on the 13th of June, 1897, in the presence of the Prime Minister of Canada, the Duke of Devonshire, a former leader of the Liberal party in England, said (while declaring himself still to be a free trader) that "Virtues were given to free trade which it did not possess, and results were predicted which have not followed" ; that "its speedy universal adoption all over the world was prophesied, and that prophecy has been falsified" ; that "the thick and-thin admirers and believers in the Manchester school seek to persuade us that although that prophecy has not been fulfilled, it was the best thing for us that we should be the only free trading country in the world" ; that "very few disciples of free trade of fifty years ago would have believed for a moment that at this time France and Germany would have been carrying on enormous trade under strictly protective conditions" ; that "the world has not become the commercial paradise that was predicted in the early days of free trade opinion" ; that "we have since learned by painful experience that no old or new markets are being thrown open to us by the influence of free trade alone" ; that "if we want to provide for the increasing commerce which is necessary for the support of our increasing population, we must find these markets for ourselves" ; and that "colonial expansion and consolidation are essential to the maintenance of our continued prosperity."

That the speech in which the Duke of Devonshire gave utterance to these views was regarded in England as a foreshadowing of the adoption by Lord Salisbury's Government of the proposal above referred to, made by Mr. Chamberlain in March, 1896.

That in his interview with the Colonial Premiers during the Jubilee celebration of 1897, the Colonial Secretary said :

"In the meanwhile, however, I may say that I note a resolution which appears to have been passed unanimously at the meeting of the Premiers in Hobart, in which the desire was expressed for closer commercial arrangements with the Empire, and I think it was suggested that a commission of inquiry should be created in order to see in what way practical effect might be given to the aspiration. If that be the case, and if it were thought that at the present time you were not prepared to go beyond inquiry, if it were the wish of the other colonies, of Canada and of the South African Colonies, to join in such an inquiry. Her Majesty's Government would be delighted to make arrangements for the purpose, and to accept any suggestions as to the form of the reference and the character and constitution of the commission, and would very gladly take part in it."

That in March, 1898, Mr. Chamberlain once more returned to the subject of this great British policy, and said "he thought he had already convinced the colonies that the Imperial authorities were ready to meet them more than half-way in any proposal they make for closer union" ; that the Imperial authorities "would not be deterred either by economic pedantries or selfishness" from giving favourable considerations to any such proposals, and that "he did not think the English people would keep a strict account of profit and loss, or would seek to be assured of present pecuniary gain, but would look, and look wisely, to the future for their reward."

That in the opinion of this House it is the duty of the Government (in response to these repeated advances made by the Imperial authorities) to endeavour to secure for the produce of Canada that preferential treatment in the markets of the United Kingdom which would be of such inestimable value to the farmers and other producers of Canada competing against foreign rivals in the markets of the United Kingdom, would set in motion a great tide of immigration to our shores, people the vast wheat areas of the Canadian North-west, enhance farm values in the older provinces, promote the unity of our Empire, and speedily deliver it from dangerous dependence upon a foreign food supply.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, I certainly have no fault to find with the manner in which my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) has introduced this motion. On the contrary, I very highly appreciate the moderation with which he has approached the subject. I know that my hon. friend feels very strongly upon the subject on which he has addressed the House this afternoon, and I all the more cordially appreciate the moderation of which he has given us evidence on this occasion, a moderation, I may say also, that highly befits the importance of the subject in hand. If I have one fault to find with my hon. friend, it may be expressed by saying that it seems to me unfortunate that he has waited until this period of the session to bring in this resolution. For, at this moment, when we are all looking for the blessing of a prorogation, the House is hardly in a mood, I believe, to discuss any questions except those which are capable of immediate solution, and that cannot be said of the question in hand. But I will endeavour, without any circumlocution, to come to the main point at once and to meet the motion of my hon. friend directly and squarely. The motion affirms that it is the duty of the Government to endeavour to take steps with a view to obtaining for the products of Canada preferential treatment in the markets of Great Britain. To that proposition I have not a word of dissent to offer; on the contrary, I fully concur in it. I say at once it is the duty of the Government of Canada, by all means in its power and as soon as it is possible to do so, to get preferential treatment in the markets of Great Britain. I am sorry to say, however, that my hon. friend has chosen to base this declaration as to the duty of the Government upon a statement of facts which, for my part, I cannot agree to, and which I believe is absolutely unfounded. The assertion is made in this motion that the Government have received repeatedly from the Imperial authorities invitations and advances to enter into negotiations in order to obtain that which we hope for the products of Canada in the markets of Great Britain. As I say, I cannot accept this statement of fact. I do not believe—I am sorry not to believe—that it can be substantiated at all. I would direct the attention of the House to this fact—that it would be strange indeed if the Government of Great Britain, if the Imperial authorities, to use the language of the motion, have made advances to the Canadian Government or to the colonial governments at large, to give them, if they were so inclined, preferential treatment in the markets of Great Britain—it would be strange indeed, I say, if the Government of Great Britain had not embodied their views in a state document. It is not the habit of the British Government to be coquetting and flirting and, like a blushing maiden, to make advances, to be courted and won half willingly and half unwillingly. It is the tradition of the British Government, on the contrary, to come directly to the purpose, to invite cordiality by cordiality and frankness by frankness. If my hon. friend could state truly that the British Government had made advances to the colonial authorities, as he asserted in this motion, he would have been able to quote a state despatch upon the question. He has not done so. But, Sir, there is a state despatch upon this very question; and, if it has not been quoted, I imagine there can be but one reason, and that is that it does not support the view advanced in this motion that the British Government had repeatedly made advances to us on this subject. There is the despatch written by the predecessor of Mr. Chamberlain in the Colonial Office, the Marquis of Ripon—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Oh, that is ancient history.

The PRIME MINISTER. It is not so ancient history, after all; it was written in

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

1895, and so is only four years old. And I shall show that since that time there has been no departure from the position taken by the Marquis of Ripon, either by Mr. Chamberlain, the Duke of Devonshire, or any other of the Imperial authorities. The Marquis of Ripon was answering the resolution adopted by the Colonial Conference, which met in this city in 1894, and he wrote as follows:—

The resolution does not advocate the establishment of a customs union comprising the whole Empire, whereby all the existing barriers to free commercial intercourse between the various members would be removed, and the aggregate customs revenue equitably apportioned among the different communities. Such an arrangement would be in principle free from objection, and, if it were practicable, would certainly prove effective in cementing the unity of the Empire and promoting its progress and stability. But it was unanimously recognized by the delegates that the circumstances of the colonies make such a union, for the present, at any rate, impossible; and it is, therefore, unnecessary to discuss the practical difficulties which stand in the way of its realization.

Now, before I proceed further, let me call special attention to the opening words of this utterance of the Marquis of Ripon:

The resolution does not advocate the establishment of a customs union comprising the whole Empire, whereby all the existing barriers to free commercial intercourse between the various members would be removed, and the aggregate customs revenue equitably apportioned among the different communities. Such an arrangement would be in principle free from objection.

Sir, if there is anything to be inferred from this it is that the Ottawa resolution, offered a hybrid system, a bastard system, of protection on the one hand and free trade on the other, a system whereby protection would be retained by the colonies and free trade with respect to our products or a preferential tariff by England. But if, instead of that hybrid system, the resolution had offered to the Imperial authorities a system of freedom of customs duties within the Empire, then, Sir, the inference is that the Marquis of Ripon would have been ready to consider that proposition—a proposition to establish free trade within the Empire. I shall show presently that all the quotations made on this occasion from the speeches of Mr. Chamberlain and other distinguished Imperial statesmen, move in the same direction, not in the direction of keeping this hybrid system of protection in Canada while at the same time we give preferential treatment to England, but of establishing a system of freedom of trade within the Empire. I am reminded of a statement made by my hon. friend a moment ago when he referred to the speech of the Duke of Devonshire, speaking of Canadians and people of all the other colonial possessions as citizens of the British Empire. So we are; and I take my stand upon this very proposition, that we in Canada are just as really citizens of the Empire as are Englishmen themselves. But I want to know at once, is it the intention of hon. gentlemen who will not dispute that we are citizens of the same Empire, to say that in any degree at all the citizens of one part of the Empire shall be taxed for the benefit of another part of the Empire? Rather shall not the citizens of the Empire meet each other on common grounds, without any distinction between one part of the Empire and another? That is a question which, I believe, a great many Imperial statesmen of the present day are willing to approach, and I think I can show before I sit down that this is the view taken by all the Imperial statesmen whose opinions have been quoted by my hon. friend from North Bruce (Mr. McNeill), who brought forward this motion. My hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) said a moment ago that the Marquis of Ripon's despatch was ancient history. Well, then, let us put it aside, and let us come to this motion, which is contemporary history. Let us take the statements attributed to the Duke of Devonshire and to Mr. Chamberlain, and we will review them as given in this motion. I shall take first the views attributed to the Duke of Devonshire because in this motion greater prominence seems to be given to them, and in order to do justice to my hon. friend who drew up this motion, and who, I know well from long experience, feels deeply upon it, I shall quote to the House from the language of his motion on this subject. This is how it reads:

That on the 13th of June, 1897, in the presence of the Prime Minister of Canada, the Duke of Devonshire, a former leader of the Liberal party in England said (while declaring himself still to be a free trader) that "Virtues were given to free trade which it did not possess, and results were predicted which have not followed"; that "its speedy universal adoption all over the world was prophesied, and that prophecy has been falsified"; that "the thick-and-thin admirers and believers in the Manchester school seek to persuade us that although that prophecy has not been fulfilled, it was the best thing for us that we should be the only free trading country in the world"; that "very few disciples of free trade of fifty years ago would have believed for a moment that at this time France and Germany would have been carrying on enormous trade under strictly protective conditions"; that "the world has not become the commercial paradise that was predicted in the early days of free trade opinion"; that "we have since learned by painful experience that no old or new markets are being thrown open to us by the influence of free trade alone"; that "if we want to provide for the increasing commerce which is necessary for the support of our increasing population, we must find these markets for ourselves"; and that "colonial expansion and consolidation are essential to the maintenance of our continued prosperity."

Sir, is that all? Is that an invitation given to the Canadian Government and to myself in particular, since I was present when that speech was delivered, to enter into negotiations to obtain for the products of Canada in the markets of Great Britain preferential treatment? I am afraid, Mr. Speaker, that my hon. friend who drew up this motion has dealt a rather severe blow to some members of this House and to the press of this country, and, perhaps, to himself as well; because, if I recollect aright, the statement was made again and again in the press and even on the floor of this House that upon that very occasion, on the 12th of June, 1897, at Liverpool, in my presence, the Duke of Devonshire had offered to me as representing Canada, preferential treatment in the markets of Great Britain for the products of Canada.

Mr. McNEILL. My hon. friend does not say I made that statement?

The PRIME MINISTER. I thought my hon. friend had made it.

Mr. McNEILL. Oh, never.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am glad to accept his statement; but if he did not, others did in this House make the same statement. Now, the only thing that can be inferred from the quotations which have been made here from the speech of the Duke of Devonshire was that, though still a free trader, he had been very much disappointed with the results of free trade in Great Britain, and that, perhaps, he was prepared to consider another condition of things. I have no doubt this is the view which my hon. friend has taken himself of that speech of the Duke of Devonshire. Mr. Speaker, we know very well that it is characteristic of mankind that they readily believe what they wish for. My hon. friend on this occasion has seen the fact in the wish. We know very well that men are apt to deceive themselves, and by dint of repeating a thing, at last they persuade themselves that it has taken place. We have the example of old King John IV., who began by saying that he had been present at the battle of Waterloo, and by dint of repeating it he finally became firmly persuaded that he had been present at that battle. There are other instances of the same kind. It is on record in history that at a time when religious controversy ran very high, men, strong casuists, did not hesitate to manipulate the text of scripture in order to establish a point, and even to make interpolations, to abstract one text and interpolate another, so as to convey the impression they wanted to convey. In old times they used to call such a process a pious fraud. Now, I will not say that my hon. friend who drew this motion has been guilty of a pious fraud. I doubt, Mr. Speaker, that the term fraud would be parliamentary, even if it were qualified by the adjective "pious." But my hon. friend, I am afraid, has not done full justice to the speech of the Duke of Devonshire, he has not quoted it entirely; one sentence in particular he did not quote, and by omitting it he has conveyed an impression of the speech of the Duke of Devonshire which the duke himself had no intention to convey. I again call the attention of the House to the first sentence which is placed in the mouth of the Duke of Devonshire :

That on the 13th of June, 1897, in the presence of the Prime Minister of Canada, the Duke of Devonshire, a former leader of the Liberal party in England, said (while declaring himself still to be a free trader) that "Virtues were given to free trade which it does not possess."

Now, I submit to my hon. friend that the qualification which he places here in the mouth of the Duke of Devonshire as saying that he still proclaims himself a free trader, does not convey the force of the expression which the duke himself used on that occasion; far from it. This is the very text of the words spoken by the Duke of Devonshire upon that occasion, and I quote from an authentic version which my hon. friend has no doubt seen :

I continue, said His Grace, to believe, as I have always believed, that free trade is the best and wisest policy of our country, but virtues were given to it which it did not possess, and results were predicted which did not follow.

Promises were made and results were predicted for free trade which did not follow; still, notwithstanding these misgivings, notwithstanding this condition of things, notwithstanding these failures, the Duke of Devonshire said that free trade still continued to be the best and wisest policy for Great Britain. If that be so, if the Duke of Devonshire believes that free trade is the best and wisest policy for Great Britain, I cannot see that there was any invitation or offer of preferential treatment for the products of Canada in the markets of Great Britain.

I pass from that to the language adopted by the Right Hon. Mr. Chamberlain. The hon. gentleman has quoted from the speech delivered by Mr. Chamberlain in March, 1896, before the Canada Club. My hon. friend summarized what Mr. Chamberlain said on that occasion, in this way :

He suggested that duties favouring the colonies should be imposed by the United Kingdom upon her imported foreign produce, provided the colonies would, in return, make large preferential concessions in favour of the United Kingdom, and he asked the colonies to "better" the offer they had previously made.

I am afraid that the power of analysis of the hon. gentleman is not much more reliable than his memory. The hon. gentleman has neither actually nor accurately summarized the very important language used by Mr. Chamberlain in his speech before the Canada Club. According to the summary which the hon. gentleman has given, Mr. Chamberlain might have been content on that occasion to set out simple disjointed ideas, whereas the truth is, that Mr. Chamberlain laid down the policy and outlined a plan which would gain for Canadian products in the markets of Great Britain that preferential treatment which my hon. friend yearns for. The hon. gentleman put me a question to answer, and I shall put him a question—no, I shall not put him a question, but I shall make a statement at once, and it is this, that my hon. friends on the other side of the House doubt at this moment, and would not accept of, preferential treatment, as it was offered on that occasion by Mr. Chamberlain, upon the condition laid down by Mr. Chamberlain himself, because, as I shall show presently, the condition which was laid down by Mr. Chamberlain, the policy which he outlined, and the plan which he proposed, was free trade within the Empire, with the elimination of duties.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, no.

The PRIME MINISTER. The elimination of all customs duties, in so far as they involved protection, as I shall show presently that Mr. Chamberlain put the question again and again. Every one knows, and the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) by his protest shows, that he is not prepared to accept preferential treatment offered by Mr. Chamberlain with the conditions attached. I will quote from the speech of Mr. Chamberlain to refresh the memory of the hon. gentleman upon this subject. I quote from the "Foreign and Colonial Speeches of Mr. Chamberlain," page 168. But before I go to that, it would be well at this stage to review the offer which had been made by Canada upon that occasion, because the hon. gentleman recalled the fact that Mr. Chamberlain had on that occasion asked the colonies to better the offer they had previously made. It is proper that we should at this moment remind the House of what was the offer made by Canada. Mr. Chamberlain was reviewing the resolution passed by the Colonial Conference at Ottawa in 1894, which declared :

Whereas the stability and progress of the British Empire can be best assured by drawing continually closer the bands that unite the colonies with the mother country, and by the continuous growth of a practical sympathy and co-operation in all that pertains to the common welfare ;

And whereas this co-operation and unity can in no way be more effectually promoted than by the cultivation and extension of the mutual and profitable interchange of their products ;

Therefore resolved,—That this Conference records its belief in the advisability and practical possibility of a customs arrangement between Great Britain and her colonies by which trade within the Empire may be placed on a more favourable footing than that which is carried on with foreign countries ;

And further resolved,—That pending the assent of the mother country to such an arrangement, in which she shall be included, it is desirable that the colonies of Great Britain, or such of them as may be disposed to accede to the view, take immediate steps to place each other's products on a more favourable customs basis than is accorded to the like products of foreign countries.

Now, this was the mother idea ; but it was supplemented, in fact it was supplemented at that very moment by a motion made by the hon. gentleman (Mr. McNeill) himself, who upon more than one occasion, as the House will recollect, has made motions emphasizing the position taken by the Colonial Conference. In 1894 my hon. friend had moved the following motion :—

If and when the Parliament of Great Britain—

Mr. McNEILL. I beg the right hon. gentleman's pardon. That was two years before.

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes. I will show it had been moved before ; but the hon. gentleman has been moving in the same circle ever since.

If and when the Parliament of Great Britain admits Canadian products to the markets of the United Kingdom upon more favourable terms than are accorded to the products of foreign countries, the Parliament of Canada will be prepared to accord corresponding advantages by substantial reductions on the duties imposed upon British manufactured goods.

In 1896, just a few days before the speech delivered by Mr. Chamberlain, the hon. gentleman moved again. The language was not the same, but the idea was absolutely the same :

That it would be to the advantage of Canada and the Empire as a whole that a small duty (irrespective of any existing tariff) be levied by each member of the Empire against foreign products imported by them, and that the proceeds from such duties be devoted to purposes of Imperial intercommunication and defence.

But now, on this latter occasion, my hon. friend proposes to provide at once that duties should be levied, and Mr. Chamberlain, speaking before the Canada Club, reviewed this last proposal of my hon. friend. This is the language he made use of :

I observed in the "Times" this morning a telegram from Canada, which tells us that Mr. McNeill, the gentleman who moved the patriotic resolution to which I have already referred, has moved another resolution in the House of Commons of Canada, by which he proposes to declare that it is desirable in the interests of Great Britain and of the colonies that a moderate ad valorem duty, independent of any existing duty, should be imposed both by the colonies and by the mother country upon all imports from foreign countries.

That was the proposal which was before Mr. Chamberlain. Let us hear the remarks he made upon it :

That, therefore, is the suggestion—for I will call it no more—it is not a formal proposition, but it is the suggestion that has been made to us by our colonies for carrying out a system of commercial union. At any rate, a proposition of that kind is entitled to respectful consideration, and if we object to it, we ought, I think, to propose an alternative, or we ought—and this is the only other thing for us to do—to say at once that all we have said, all that we have thought about Imperial unity, has been thrown away, and that that idea must be abandoned as an empty dream.

Now, Sir, do not let us minimize the proposition we are asked to consider. It would involve—in the case of the United Kingdom—a most serious disturbance of trade ; it would be a great change in the principles which for many years past have guided our commercial policy. It involves the imposition of a duty, it may be a small one, but it is a duty upon food and upon raw material, and whatever may be the result of imposing such a duty, as to which, if I had time, I could discourse for many minutes—whatever may be the actual result—the tendency is to increase the cost of living, which would intensify the pressure upon the working classes of this country, and it would also have a tendency to increase the cost of production, which would put us, of course, in a worse position than now in competition with foreign countries in neutral markets.

After elaborating that idea, Mr. Chamberlain said :

But my first point is that in the proposal and suggestion which has hitherto been made, there is no sufficient 'quid pro quo,' the advantage offered is not enough to induce this country to take the certain loss and the possible risk which would be involved in revising altogether its present commercial policy. Having regard to the amount of the colonial duties which are at present time levied upon British produce, it is evident that a fixed addition such as is suggested would be a much smaller preference in the case of goods going to the colonies than it would be in the case of goods coming from the colonies to this country. In the case of this country, the preference would be given on the present cost price of the goods, but in the colonies the preference would only be reckoned on the cost of the goods plus the heavy duties now imposed. The percentage, therefore, would be much more in favour of the colonies than it would be in favour of the United Kingdom.

The second point, which is much more important, is that our foreign trade is so gigantic in proportion to the foreign trade of the colonies that the burden of an arrangement of this kind would fall with much greater weight on the United Kingdom than upon our fellow subjects in the colonies.

I therefore think we may very fairly ask them to better their offer if, as I believe, they desire to proceed upon those lines, and if those lines do really offer the best direction in which we can proceed.

Now, Sir, there was an invitation to my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) to better his offer. I shall show presently how he responded to that invitation, but before I do, let me further quote from the speech of Mr. Chamberlain, in which after having made the invitation to the colonies to better their offer he gave them their direction and showed them the way how to do it. Mr. Chamberlain then went on to speak as follows :—

I have laid down four propositions, which I think cannot be controverted. The first is that there is a universal desire among all the members of the Empire for a closer union between the several branches, and that, in their opinion, as in ours, this is desirable—nay, it is essential for the existence of the Empire as such. My second proposition is that experience has taught us that this closer union can be most hopefully approached in the first instance from its commercial side.

We all agree to that.

My third proposition is that the suggestions which have hitherto been made to us, although we know them to have been made in good part, are, when considered from the point of view of British interests, not sufficiently favourable to be considered by this country. My fourth proposition is that a true Zollverein for the Empire, that a free trade established throughout the Empire, although it would involve the imposition of duties against foreign countries, and would be in that respect a derogation from the high principles of free trade and from the practice of the United Kingdom up to the present time, would still be a proper subject for discussion, and might probably lead to a satisfactory arrangement, if the colonies on their part were willing to consider it.

Mr. McNEILL. Hear, hear.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

The PRIME MINISTER. Very well, my hon. friend assents to all that. Now, Sir, Mr. Chamberlain after having laid down the different propositions as to how we could bring about the union which we all desire by approaching it from the commercial side, goes on to say:

My second point is that we are dealing with an entirely exceptional state of things, and that we cannot, even if we wished, imitate exactly the German Zollverein. We are not conterminous countries; we are countries, as I have said, separated by thousands of miles, in some cases, and the circumstances of our different countries vary so considerably that it is evident that in any arrangement as to general free trade within the Empire exceptions must be made in the case of articles that are chiefly taxed for revenue purposes. For instance, we cannot admit free trade in spirits or in tobacco, and to any gentleman who has any experience other articles will suggest themselves, which, in one part of the Empire or another, are the subject of strictly revenue duties, and might, by common agreement, be excluded from any such arrangement.

That is the whole question, and I will refer to it later on.

But the principle which I claim must be accepted, if we are to make any, even the slightest, progress, is that within the different parts of the Empire, protection must disappear, and that the duties must be revenue duties, and not protective duties in the sense of protecting the products of one part of the Empire against those of another part.

Now, Sir, this is very plain language, but I am sorry to say that I have to charge it against gentlemen on the other side of the House, that whenever they have approached this subject, instead of approaching it in the frank and open manner indicated by Mr. Chamberlain, they have always equivocated and quibbled about it. I have again to call the attention of my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) to this language of Mr. Chamberlain:

For instance, we cannot admit free trade in spirits or in tobacco, and to any gentleman who has any experience other articles will suggest themselves which, in one part of the Empire or another, are the subject of strictly revenue duties, and might, by common agreement, be excluded from any such arrangement.

What is the purport of this language? The purport of this language is simply, that if we are to have this customs union with Great Britain under which we can have preferential treatment, we must do it in the form of a Zollverein, but Mr. Chamberlain points out exceptions to which we can all agree. In the German Zollverein, as we know, there is an absolute absence of excise or customs duty in one member of the Zollverein as against the other. There are no customs duties within the German Zollverein. Mr. Chamberlain says very frankly: We can have a customs union with Canada; we can have a Zollverein, but if we have that Imperial Zollverein, we must prepare to make exceptions for tobacco, and spirits, and other similar products. Then he goes on to say, that for the general run of the tariff there must be an absence of customs duties; that must be the rule though there might be some exceptions.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, no. "Customs duties for protection."

The PRIME MINISTER. Well, it is impossible to construe this language in any other way:

For instance, we cannot admit free trade in spirits or in tobacco, and to any gentleman who has any experience other articles will suggest themselves which, in one part of the Empire or another, are the subject of strictly revenue duties, and might, by common agreement, be excluded from any such arrangement.

Can anything be clearer than that, if we are to have that Imperial Zollverein, there should be no customs duties except on articles of excise, spirits, wines, tobacco, and certain other articles to be specified. Well, Mr. Chairman, is my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) prepared for that? Is he ready to say: that he is prepared for an Imperial Zollverein removing all customs duties from manufactured products, with perhaps an exception here and there. My hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) knows he is not prepared for that, and there is not an hon. gentleman sitting on the other side of the House who would be prepared for an Imperial Zollverein. These gentlemen opposite have been taunting us during this very session, that we have maintained the principle of protection in the tariff; they have been taunting us that we are not able to remove it. I do not accept the taunt, but I say very sincerely that the condition has not yet arrived in Canada when we can do without a customs tariff. And if we are in that condition, it is no use to argue that we are ready for an Imperial Zollverein. If gentlemen on the other side of the House will propose to respond to the idea of Mr. Chamberlain, they must be prepared to say that they are ready for an Imperial Zollverein which will remove all customs tariffs from Canada, except excise duties, wine, spirits, tobacco, and a few other articles.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, no.

Mr. McNEILL. Mr. Chamberlain does not say "a few other articles."

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) says "no, no," but I rely on the language of Mr. Chamberlain. These gentlemen opposite, then, are ready to maintain the customs duties; they want to have preferential treatment in Great Britain for the products of Canada, and to maintain at the same time a customs duty against manufactured British products. That is the position which they take. I am very glad they do because we know where we are. This is their proposition, that we should have a Zollverein—no, I cannot dignify it by that name—but a system whereby the products of Canada shall be admitted into Great Britain at a preferential tariff while at the same time we maintain our customs tariff against the manufactured products of Great Britain.

Mr. WALLACE. Would the right hon. gentleman tell us the date of that speech of Mr. Chamberlain?

The PRIME MINISTER. March, 1896.

Mr. BERGERON. He has changed his mind since.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend says he has changed his mind since. I would like to know when and where?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. At the meeting of the Chambers of Commerce when he accepted the resolution of the Toronto Board of Trade.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend has spoken too previously. I shall come to that presently, and I shall show that Mr. Chamberlain did not then modify his views, but rather emphasized them. Let me at once refer to the speech of Mr. Chamberlain and show that hon. gentlemen opposite will find in that very speech a condemnation of the system they propose. Mr. Chamberlain, in the speech which I have just quoted, shows the injustice involved against Great Britain for the benefit of Canada in the policy suggested by hon. gentlemen opposite. Mr. Chamberlain said:

Having regard to the amount of the colonial duties which are at the present time levied upon British produce, it is evident that a fixed addition such as is suggested would be a much smaller preference in the case of goods going to the colonies than it would be in the case of goods coming from the colonies to this country.

Let me call particularly the attention of hon. gentlemen to the following sentence:

In the case of this country, the preference would be given on the present cost price of the goods, but in the colonies the preference would only be reckoned on the cost of the goods plus the heavy duties now imposed.

Here you have the answer.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Will my hon. friend allow me to point out that the argument is the very reverse. Mr. Chamberlain there is dealing with the proposal to give an advantage to Great Britain by imposing a duty against foreign goods, and leaving us our present duties against England.

The PRIME MINISTER. Would the arrangement be different? The arrangement would be that a preference would be given to Canadian goods on the cost of the products and given on British goods on the cost plus the duty. There is no parity there. Let the same preference be given to the goods on the one side and the other.

Mr. McNEILL. I just wish to say to my hon. friend that what he is saying now shows us this is but a matter of negotiation and arrangement.

The PRIME MINISTER. It is, but there must be a basis for this negotiation and arrangement, and the basis my hon. friend wants is customs duties imposed on British products and none against Canadian products. So long as he wants that, he cannot hope ever to come to any conclusion with England. I want to put the question to hon. gentlemen opposite. Mr. Chamberlain said: If you are to have preferential treatment in Great Britain, you must abandon protection in Canada. Are hon. gentlemen opposite ready to say now that they will abandon the principle of protection? If so, let them speak, for this is the time. I do not expect them to answer at once, but before this debate is concluded I want them to say whether it is their intention to abandon the principle of protection. If it is, it was not the idea of their leader in 1896, because in his manifesto addressed to the people of Canada in that year, the hon. leader of the Opposition thus gave his views on the question of preferential trade:

With a tariff based on mutual concessions, it is reasonable to expect a still greater development of our trade in that market, and we should, at the same time, be rendering material assistance towards the unity and strengthening of the Empire, without involving a lessening of the protection to our industries.

I want to know how hon. gentlemen can be protectionists and at the same time expect to have preferential treatment from Great Britain. Either one thing or the other. If hon. gentlemen opposite tell us they are ready to abandon the doctrine of protection, we shall know where we are and treat them accordingly. but they will not, even on this occasion, dare tell us that they abandon that policy. They have always maintained it, even during this very session, and even for the purpose of making a point on this occasion, they dare not abandon it.

Mr. SPROULE. Do we not give a preference to England now without giving up protection?

The PRIME MINISTER. What we are discussing is preferential treatment for Canadian products in England, and that we cannot have unless by renouncing the doctrine of protection.

Now, I come to the other part of the motion and the speech delivered by Mr. Chamberlain in 1896, before the assembled Chambers of Commerce of Great Britain. The language of my hon. friend's motion is as follows:—

That in June, 1896, Mr. Chamberlain said that he found the germs of a satisfactory proposal for such preferential trade within the Empire in a resolution passed that year by the Toronto Board of Trade.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That was in June, 1897. The meeting of the Chambers of Commerce of the Empire, at which the Board of Trade of Toronto's resolution was proposed, was held, I think, in June, 1897.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend is mistaken. It was held in June, 1896. Let me quote to the House the resolution of the Toronto Board of Trade, which was moved on this occasion by my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Osler). That occasion was the third congress of the Chambers of Commerce of the Empire, held in the hall of the Grocers' Company, from June 9th to June 12th, 1896. There were about 95 Chambers of Commerce at that meeting, representing all parts of the Empire, Great Britain, Canada, the West Indies, the East Indies, Africa, Australia, &c. The Board of Trade of Toronto had entrusted its delegate, Mr. Osler, with a resolution, which was couched in these words:

Whereas the stability and progress of the British Empire can be best assured by drawing continually closer the bonds that unite the colonies with the mother country, and by the continuous growth of a practical and sympathetic co-operation in all that pertains to the common welfare; and whereas this co-operation and unity can in no way be more effectually promoted than by the cultivation and extension of the mutual and profitable interchange of their products;

Therefore resolved,—That this Congress records its belief in the advisability and practicability of a customs arrangement between Great Britain and her Colonies and India, on the basis of preferential treatment, and recommends that steps be taken by Her Majesty's Government to bring about an interchange of opinions on the subject between the mother country and the other Governments of the Empire.

It is quite true that in the speech delivered by Mr. Chamberlain on this occasion, to which I shall allude later on, he said that he saw in that resolution "the germ of preferential trade." But I call the attention of the House to this fact, that that germ never germinated. The motion was made by my hon. friend from Toronto, but was not accepted. The feeling in England in favour of free trade is so strong that the motion was not accepted. After the motion had been made, and after some discussion had taken place, Sir Donald Smith, who represented Canada, saw clearly that the discussion was going against the motion. Therefore he moved the following amendment. Taking the same preamble, he submitted this resolution:

Therefore resolved,—That this Congress records its belief in the advisability and practicability of a customs arrangement between Great Britain and her Colonies and India on the basis of preferential treatment, and recommends that steps should be taken by Her Majesty's Government to bring about an interchange of opinions on the subject between the mother country and the other Governments of the Empire.

Resolved,—That in the opinion of this Congress the advantages to be obtained by a closer union between the various portions of the British Empire are so great as to justify an arrangement as nearly as possible of the nature of a Zollverein, based upon principles of the freest exchange of commodities within the Empire consistent with the tariff requirements incident to the maintenance of the local government of each Kingdom, Dominion, province or colony, now forming part of the British family of nations.

But again objection was taken, and the president called attention to the fact, and this is the way he spoke:

The latter clause in the amendment was handed me at the time by Sir Donald Smith. I, of course, accepted what he suggested. It appears, however, there is a conflict, and that this latter clause should be erased. Do you agree that I should remove the last clause of the amendment, Sir Donald, which the Congress seems to think is inconsistent?

Sir Donald Smith.—Yes.

The President.—Then the amendment will read as follows:—

"Whereas the stability and progress of the British Empire can be best assured by drawing continually closer the bonds that unite the colonies with the mother country, and by the continuous growth of a practical sympathy and co-operation in all that pertains to the common welfare;

"And whereas this co-operation and unity can in no way be more effectually promoted than by the cultivation and extension of the mutual and profitable interchange of their products;

Therefore resolved,—That this Congress records its belief in the advisability and practicability of a customs arrangement between Great Britain and her Colonies and India, on the basis of preferential treatment—"

Continuing the motion of the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Osler).

This again was amended, and finally the motion was withdrawn, and the following was accepted and carried:—

That this Congress of the Chambers of Commerce of the Empire is of opinion that the establishment of closer commercial relations between the United Kingdom and the colonies and dependencies is an object which deserves and demands prompt and careful consideration. The Congress, therefore, respectfully represents to Her Majesty's Government, that if the suggestion should be made on behalf of the colonies, or some of them, it would be right and expedient to promote such consideration, and the formulation of some practicable plan, by summoning an Imperial conference, thoroughly representative of the interests involved, or by such other means as Her Majesty may be advised to adopt.

So, as I said, the germ contained in the resolution of the Board of Trade of Toronto did not grow. The result of all was this very anodyne proposition, which asked for a conference upon the subject. I have no doubt that all this was a great disappointment to many of the gentlemen there assembled. I have no doubt that a good many had hoped that from the resolution of the Board of Trade of Toronto something would spring which would bring about preferential trade. But the reason why this motion did not carry, I believe, is shown in the speech delivered by Mr. Chamberlain on that occasion, in which he indicated the policy he had formulated in the month of March preceding, when he stated that he was not a pedantic free trader, but was ready to consider free trade within the Empire. Now, let me quote the speech delivered by Mr. Chamberlain at the opening of this Congress of Chambers of Commerce of the Empire. He said:

The establishment of commercial union throughout the Empire would only be the first step, but it would be the main step and the decisive step towards the realization of the most inspiring idea that ever entered into the minds of British statesmen. * * * But up to the present time we have not been agreed as to the methods by which this object may be reached. It appears to me that there are only three lines of progress which have been suggested to accomplish this great object. The first of them is a proposal that the colonies should abandon their own fiscal system and should adopt ours, that they should carry out fully the doctrines of free trade, that they should open their markets not only to us, but to all the world, and that they should abandon entirely the protective duties upon which now they rest very largely for the revenues which they collect.

That is the first thing—that we should abandon our system of protection and of customs tariff. Then he goes on:

That is a proposal which is supported by the Cobden Club, by the extreme, or perhaps I should say by the orthodox free traders, and there is no doubt a good deal to be said for it. I do not deny that possibly it might be for all concerned the best solution: at the same time I am bound to point out that that would not bring about commercial union in the sense in which we have generally understood the word.

Now he comes to the question in point:

Gentlemen, free trade in this country has been developed, no doubt, to the great advantage of this country for a period of half a century, but in spite of that it has made no converts. We do not find—again I am speaking generally, because I know there are exceptions—that there is any considerable approach to our system on the part of the colonies, and there is no approach to it on the part of foreign countries. Well, I pass on to the second proposal which has been laid before a similar congress to this, which found expression at the great Congress at Ottawa a year or two ago—that is a proposal which has been favoured by some of our principal colonies and described with great force and eloquence by leading colonists, and it is the very reverse, in spirit at any rate, of the proposal which I have just been considering; for whereas the first proposal requires that the colonies should abandon their system in favour of ours, this proposal requires that we should abandon our system in favour of theirs. It is, in effect, that while the colonies should be left absolutely free to impose what protective duties they please upon foreign countries and upon British commerce, they should be required to make a small discrimination in favour of British trade, in return for which we are expected to change our own system and to impose duties on food and all raw materials. Well, gentlemen, I express again my own opinion when I say that there is not the slightest chance that in any reasonable time this country, or the Parliament of this country, would adopt so one-sided an agreement. (Hear, hear and cheers). The foreign trade of this country is so large, and the foreign trade of the colonies is comparatively so small, that a small preference given to us upon that foreign trade by the colonies would make so slight a difference, would be so slight a benefit to the total volume of our trade, that I do not believe the working classes of this country would consent to make a revolutionary change for what they would think to be an infinitesimal gain. (Hear, hear.) Well, gentlemen, you will see that, so far, we are only arrived at a deadlock. We have a proposal by British free traders which is rejected by the colonies. We have a proposal by colonial protectionists which is rejected by Great Britain. We have, therefore, if we are to make any progress at all, to seek a third course, a course in which there shall be give and take on both sides, in which neither side will pedantically adhere to preconceived conclusions, in which the good of the whole shall subordinate the separate interest of parts. And I admit that, if I understand it correctly, I find the germs of such a proposal in a resolution which is to be submitted to you on behalf of the Toronto Board of Trade. What is that resolution? I hope I correctly explain it. That resolution I understand to be one for the creation of a British Zollverein or customs union, which would establish at once practically free trade throughout the British Empire, but would leave the contracting parties free to make their own arrangements in regard to duties upon foreign goods; except that this is an essential condition of the proposal that Great Britain shall consent to replace moderate duties upon certain articles which are of large production in the colonies. Now, if I have rightly understood it, these articles would comprise corn, meat, wool and sugar, and perhaps other articles of enormous consumption in this country, which are at present largely produced in the colonies, and which might be under such arrangement wholly produced in the colonies, and wholly produced by British labour. On the other hand, as I have said, the colonies, maintaining their duties upon foreign imports, would agree to a free interchange of commodities with the rest of the Empire and would cease to place protective duties upon any product of British labour. That is the principle of the German Zollverein; that is the principle which underlies the federation of the United States of America; and I do not doubt for a moment that if it were adopted it would be the strongest bond of union between the British race throughout the world. (Cheers.)

I say that such a proposal as that might commend itself even to an orthodox free trader. It would be the greatest advance that free trade has ever made since it was first advocated by Mr. Cobden, to extend its doctrines permanently to more than 300,000,000 of the human race, and to communities, many of which are amongst the most thriving, the most prosperous, and the most rapidly increasing in the world.

Well, Sir, you see the doctrine there laid down by Mr. Chamberlain. He was ready for an arrangement with the colonies, he was ready to depart from the orthodox principle of free trade as advocated by the Cobden Club to the extent that he would limit the application of free trade within the British Empire, even if the British Empire had to impose customs duties against foreign nations. That was a departure from the orthodox principle of the free trade school. At the same time, Mr. Chamberlain defended his course on the authority of Mr. Cobden himself, as I find in a speech which he delivered in the month of March, 1896:

I do not say that merely because a proposal of this kind is contrary to free trade principles; because, although I am myself a convinced free trader in the sense of believing that the theory is undoubtedly the theory on which the world would become most prosperous, yet I have not such a pedantic admiration for it that, if sufficient advantage were offered to me, I would not consider a deviation from the strict doctrine. Mr. Cobden himself took this view, and compromised his principles in making the French treaty; and it cannot be expected that we, his disciples, should be more orthodox than the apostle of free trade himself.

We say, therefore, that our object is free trade within the Empire. The hon. gentleman said a moment ago that we should not make a party question of this, that we should approach it from a broad and patriotic stand-point. I re-echo this sentiment. I do not care whether we are protectionists or free traders in this Parliament; let us consider the question as it stands to-day. Is any man in this Parliament ready to say that at this moment we are able to dispense with a customs tariff even upon British goods? There is not a man who can say that.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No such thing is proposed.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

The PRIME MINISTER. Then I do not understand the English language. What is the meaning of this language? If the colonies which are maintaining duties upon foreign imports were to agree to a free interchange of commodities with the rest of the Empire, would they any longer be putting a protective duty upon the products of British labour? Is that not a sufficient argument in itself? Now, let me call the attention of the House to a speech delivered by Mr. Buxton, a former Colonial Secretary of State, in which he said:

What the colonies will have to face on their part is this: Are they prepared to obtain their revenue in a different way? Are they prepared to obtain it by what I may call internal taxation rather than endeavouring to obtain it from taxation on British goods?

That is the question. Is the hon. gentleman prepared to obtain his revenue to-day by dispensing with the taxation on British goods? If so, how will he replace it? It is no use blinking the facts. We have to consider the question as reasonable and sensible men. It will not do to say this and that at random, to say that we can dispense with duties upon British goods. If the hon. gentleman were to make such promises as that he could not fulfil them.

There was in Mr. Chamberlain's language a grand and noble idea, and I do not despair to see it realized even in our own time. Mr. Chamberlain's idea, repeated many a time by other statesmen of the Imperial school, devoted members of the Cobden school, is that it would be possible, without at all departing from the principles of free trade as laid down by Cobden, to adopt them within the British Empire. There would in that case be a British idea, as there is a French idea, as there is a German idea, as there is an American idea. At the moment that I am speaking, though it is said that free trade has not advanced, I say that it has made immense strides in Europe during the last fifty years. There is free trade to-day amongst 36,000,000 Frenchmen, there is free trade to-day amongst 40,000,000 Germans, there is free trade to-day amongst 75,000,000 Americans; and who will say that the time may not come when we shall have free trade amongst 300,000,000 British subjects all over the world? That is the idea. It is not possible of realization at this moment, but still let us cling to it. We have already moved forward towards that idea when we made a reduction two years ago of 25 per cent on British goods. We are thus preparing the way, and the step which we have taken is not the last step, it will be followed by another at the proper time. And if ever we are to have the blessings of freedom of trade within the British Empire, among 300,000,000 of British subjects all over the world, history will attest that the first step taken towards securing that blessing was taken two years ago when this Government and this Parliament reduced the duty on British goods by 25 per cent.

It being Six o'clock, the Deputy Speaker left the Chair.

Mr. ALEX. McNEILL (North Bruce). Mr. Speaker, in rising to say a few words in support of the resolution before the House, I have, in the first place, to express my regret that the right hon. gentleman opposite (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) did not think it right to accept the proposal which was made by my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), and join hands with us in an earnest attempt to promote and forward this great British policy. I regret also that the right hon. gentleman, in the remarks that he was good enough to address to the House, did not follow the example of my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition. Although he commended the course that he had pursued he did not follow that example, but he allowed himself to speak of those he differed from, in reference to this matter, in terms which, I think, were far from courteous. The right hon. gentleman declared that we on this side of the House had resorted, in reference to this matter, to prevarication and quibbling. These are strong terms to apply to hon. members of this House who are honestly and sincerely endeavouring to promote a policy which they believe to be in the best interests of the country. However, I suppose we must be content to accept these remarks from my right hon. friend, but perhaps before the debate is concluded, the House and the country may be able to decide to which side of the House these terms may be more properly applied. I will not, at the present moment, follow the very ingenious and eloquent special pleading of the right hon. gentleman, but I will take that matter up a little later on. In the meantime, I desire to say that I am rejoiced to know that, in any observations one has to offer in reference to this question, we may take for granted to-day a great deal that was in dispute between the two sides of the House a few years ago. For example, it is no longer necessary that we should endeavour to disprove that, because the United Kingdom is 3,000 miles away and the United States is lying close along our border, in the latter country and not in the former, is to be found our natural market. For a great many years hon. gentlemen held to that view with extraordinary tenacity, I had almost said, audacity. But I am glad to see that they have now abandoned it. We may now venture from this side of the House, without throwing hon. gentlemen into a ferment, to say that it is advisable to cultivate the market of the United Kingdom. We may, from this side of the House, venture to say that in the United Kingdom, we can find a market for our horses without being ridiculed by hon. members from the back benches opposite, and we may even go so far as to say that, in the mother country, we can find a good market for our eggs without being rotten-egged, metaphorically, by the member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), who, on one occasion, told me that I need not attempt to cram any such nonsense down his throat as to suggest that we should ever find a profitable market for our eggs in the mother country. The prescience of that hon. gentleman is shown by the fact that while some eight or nine years ago we sold $83,000 worth of eggs to the mother country, last year we sold $1,250,000 worth, an increase of 1,400 or 1,500 per cent in favour of the mother country in that one article. I think we may say, in short, that hon. gentlemen now admit what they so long strenuously denied, namely, that in the mother country, and not in the United States, is to be found our best market. This is an important advance. There is another question that we do not require to argue in this House; we do not require any longer to argue for the unity of the Empire. I recollect when an hon. member of this House was ridiculed as the member for the Empire, because at times when he found covert or open attacks made upon the fundamental principle in Canadian politics of British connection, he was in the habit, to the best of his humble ability, of repelling these attacks. I am glad to say that to-day every hon. member of this House desires to be regarded as the member for the Empire. I do not think we are obliged to combat any longer the policy of unrestricted reciprocity, continental, free or commercial union. That, I think, has been discarded by hon. gentlemen opposite along with the rest of their anti-Imperial pro-American garments. We have heard a good deal about hon. gentlemen opposite having stolen our clothes. Well, I do not know that "stolen" is altogether a parliamentary term; I would rather say "borrowed." But when our friends on this side of the House complain of that, I think that perhaps after all they are a little hard upon hon. gentlemen opposite, because in view of all the Liberal protestations in favour of economy we must have expected them to practice economy in some regard, and if they borrowed our clothes as a matter of economy, we must give them credit to that extent for this virtue.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. They want it.

Mr. McNEILL. Mr. Speaker, so far as this matter of economy in dress is concerned, I think hon. gentlemen opposite have always been—while they were in Opposition at least—consistent; for they wore their anti-Imperial-pro-American suit, until it was horribly soiled and threadbare. I do not know, Mr. Speaker, whether I am in order or not; I do not know how far one may be in order in speaking disrespectfully of the garments of members of this House; or how far you can separate that from speaking disrespectfully of the gentlemen who wear the garments, but if I am in order I would venture to say that these garments of hon. gentlemen opposite, to which I have referred, were from the first disreputable and ragged and almost falling apart. We all know how it was that they succeeded in keeping them together when they threatened utterly to fall apart; they simply clapped on a patch. Sometimes it was unrestricted reciprocity, and sometimes it was commercial union, and sometimes it was continental free trade, and sometimes it was free trade as they have it in England, and sometimes it was a revenue tariff. We have heard of the shreds and patches of the Dominion from a very high authority; a gentleman whose mind at the time was so imbued with the grandeur of the great republic to the south, that our British Columbia, and Manitoba, and the provinces by the sea, and even our North-west Territories seemed to him to be utterly contemptible. The shreds and patches of the Dominion we have heard of, but if there ever was a suit of shreds and patches, it was the suit to which I have referred and that was for so long worn by hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. BERGERON. It was indecent.

Mr. McNEILL. My hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) says it was even indecent. Well, at all events I remember the first occasion on which hon. gentlemen opposite put it on in this House after they had added the unrestricted reciprocity patch to it. So long as my memory lasts I shall never forget that occasion. I shall never forget the pity and the shame of the occasion when these hon. gentlemen donned that suit with that patch upon it. It was not merely, Mr. Speaker, that the great Liberal party of Canada had been reduced to such a depth as that they were obliged to adopt a policy that was almost falling apart, but it was, as we were told by them, that the very warp and woof of the material they had chosen, the very essence of it was such that any one wearing it must be prepared to discriminate in the markets of Canada against the goods of the mother country. And that was not all; because we were told as an excuse for the adoption of that policy, that we owed very little to the mother country, that we owed very little or nothing, unless it was Christian forgiveness for the mismanagement of our affairs.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). A most correct statement.

Mr. McNEILL. A most correct statement, the hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) says; that we owe nothing to the mother country, nothing whatever to the mother country unless it be Christian forgiveness for her mismanagement of our affairs. And, Sir, the hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) has the audacity to repeat that statement in this House to-night—

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes, I repeat it.

Mr. McNEILL. The hon. gentleman says that we owe nothing to the mother country that has protected us for over one hundred years.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes, I do.

Mr. McNEILL. The hon. gentleman says that we owe nothing to the mother country that was prepared then as she is to-day to send tens of thousands of her sons to shed their blood in our just cause.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. McNeill) if he wants to know, that England owes more to Canada than Canada does to England.

Mr. McNEILL. The hon. gentleman says that we owe nothing to that country, that we owe nothing to the mother country that is ready to bring to our aid the greatest fleet of war that ever the salt sea bore upon its breast, a country that at the very moment the hon. gentleman was making his unnatural proposal to this House—for he himself was the man who made the proposal—had east and west her lions of the sea crouching on guard at the portals of Canada. And, Sir, the hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) says: We owe nothing to that country. He told us then—for he was the spokesman on that occasion—he told us that what we ought to do was to discriminate against the mother country and in favour of the country whose heavy hand had been against us for many a long year. That is the policy that was propounded by the hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) then, and I recollect very well that during the debate I told him, that if he made an appeal to the people of Canada upon that issue, when the people of Canada came to understand what he meant he would have one answer and one answer only from every part of our Dominion, and that answer be: Confound your Yankee politics; God save the Queen.

And, Sir, what have we seen? We have seen these gentlemen who, in 1891, ventured to appeal to the people of Canada on this policy of discrimination against the mother country, we have seen them at the very next election compelled by the irresistible sentiment of the people of Canada, not only to abandon that policy, but to adopt a policy the very reverse—at all events, compelled to declare that they were in favour of a policy the very reverse of the policy on which they appealed to the country in 1891. We see the hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) himself, to-day a member of a Government that appeals to the people of Canada for their continued support largely on the ground that they have adopted a policy which gives preference in the markets of Canada to the mother country against every foreign nation. That is what the course of events has been in regard to this matter, and I am not sorry for the interruptions of the hon. gentleman.

Now, Sir, it is gratifying for us all to see that these hon. gentlemen opposite, to-day admit a number of the principles which they so long denied, and which we so strongly urged upon them at that time. But, although they have recanted to a large extent, and although they have avowed themselves in favour of some courses which I approve, and although they have done some things which make for the unity of the Empire, I say, Sir, that so far as the course of hon. gentlemen opposite in regard to this particular policy of preferential trade is concerned, which the right hon. gentleman told us they have forwarded, the trail of the serpent is over it all. I have never denied that these hon. gentlemen have done certain things which have been favourable to Imperial unity. I admit that my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), in what he did, and still more in what he said with regard to the West Indies, advanced the cause of Imperial unity, for he recognized our Imperial obligations. I admit that the course pursued by the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) in reference to Imperial penny postage went straight as an arrow to that goal, and I believe it was intended by the hon. gentleman to go there. I hold, more perhaps than most of those on my own side of the House the importance of the course which the hon. gentleman pursued on that occasion. I would not for a moment desire to deprive Mr. Henneker Heaton of any share of the credit which belongs to him. As a matter of course, by far the greater share of credit belongs to him for this long years of persistent and able effort. But I do say that notwithstanding all that Mr. Henneker Heaton had done, we might have been many years longer without Imperial penny postage had it not been for the strong and energetic action of the Postmaster General of Canada. I admit also that the Government deserve a certain amount of credit for the denunciation of the Belgian and German treaties. I do not admit that they deserve nearly so much credit for that as they themselves claim. I think that the main reason why we should have desired to have those treaties denounced was in order that they might be able to follow up with this preferential trade policy, and I am sorry to see that the Government have not done that. I admit that the policy which the Government have pursued has resulted in what I might call, with certain reservations, a true British preference; but I deny, Mr. Speaker, that it was the intention of the Government that that should be the result. I say that the speech of the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), and the speech of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), and the resolution itself demonstrated that that was not the intention. I say that the Government stumbled into the British preference, that they set out on a path with which they were unfamiliar, for unfortunately their exertions had been in an altogether different direction heretofore. They set out on a path with which they were not familiar, and they suddenly found themselves entangled in the meshes of the most-favoured-nations treaties. They found that just as soon as one of those nations obtained entry into our markets, because its tariff conformed with the conditions of our statutory offer, every other one of those nations had to come in, because of the most-favoured-nation clause. And so from day to day the Government found themselves more and more entangled, because from day to day one country after another was claiming admission, which the Government could not refuse; and there they lay absolutely helpless, rolled up in this net, if I may so express it, until Mr. Chamberlain came to their relief and pointed out to them how they could honourably escape. He pointed out to them the only means of honourable escape, and that was that they should change their offer of reciprocity to all the world into an offer of preference to the mother country alone. They accepted Mr. Chamberlain's advice, and they escaped with two knighthoods, and I am quite sure that the country was very glad that they had saved so much. That is what occurred exactly. So much with regard to that.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to guard myself. I said that we had a true British preference, but I wish to guard myself against misapprehension. We have theoretically a true British preference against all the world; we have practically a true British preference against every country except the United States. The tariff of 1897, which was introduced with such a blare of trumpets and beating of tom-toms as a great British policy, gave no shadow of advantage to the mother country which it did not give to every other nation in the world conforming to our statutory offer; but while it gave no shadow of advantage to the mother country, it did give, as my hon. friend from West York (Mr. Wallace) was the first to point out, very substantial and material advantages to the old allies and friends of hon. gentlemen opposite in the United States. Of that tariff, I think I may fairly say that it was more ingenious than ingenuous. It was a tariff which was supposed on both sides of the Atlantic to have reduced the duties by 12½ per cent in favour of the mother country as against the duties of 1896. It was supposed to have reduced the duties of 1896 by 12½ per cent. That was the impression sought to be conveyed by the Government at the time. I know that a different explanation has been put forward by the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) this session. He wishes to compare the reduction with the general tariff of 1897, but I will prove to the House that what was intended to be understood by the country was that there had been a reduction in favour of the United Kingdom from the Conservative tariff, from the tariff that existed in 1896 and up to 1897. In the "Globe" of April 28th, 1897, I find this:

The Liberals, at the first opportunity, have endeavoured to put the principles of Mr. Davies's amendment into practice.

Now, what was Mr. Davies's amendment? That was the amendment that he moved to my resolution in 1892:

Inasmuch as Great Britain admits the products of Canada into her ports free of duty, this House is of the opinion that the present scale of duties exacted on goods mainly imported from Great Britain should be reduced.

The "Globe" tells us that the Liberal party took the first opportunity of giving effect to that principle, which was that there should be a reduction in "the present scale of duties," namely, the rate existing before their tariff came into force. Therefore, it is idle to say that that was not the intention. But the "Globe" goes further, and the next day says:

Our Conservative friends talk as if England, having got our tariff walls lowered, would act on the principle of taking all she can get, while not disposed to give anything in return.

Having got our tariff lowered—showing again that the desire was to lead the people of this country to believe that this was a lowering of the tariff in favour of the mother country. Well, we know now very well that it was not so; we know that, in place of this being a lowering of the tariff, it was, in point of fact, a raising of the tariff so far as British goods were concerned, and we found that in point of fact the tariff was nearer 12½ per cent higher than 12½ per cent lower than it had been before. That result was reached by a simple process, which was pointed out at the time by the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace). The duty was raised, in the first place, upon the lines of goods which we mainly imported from the mother country before any reduction took place. Now, I wish to call attention to the fact that this was the very opposite to the principle which was proposed by my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies). My hon. friend from West York was kind enough to hand me a memorandum on this subject. I asked him if he could give it me, as he was more familiar with this subject than I was. This memorandum shows that the tariff was raised on eighteen lines of goods imported from the mother country. The proposal of my hon. friend (Sir Louis Davies) was, that the tariff should be reduced on the goods mainly imported from England; but while they increased the duty on goods which were mainly imported from England, they lowered the duty on twenty-five main lines of goods, I am informed, that we import from the United States. I think I may say frankly that the manipulation of this tariff of 1897 has always seemed to me more like the subtle and expert work of American tricksters than the policy of Canadian statesmen.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say one word personal to myself, if the House will kindly forgive me. After I had given notice of the resolution, the amendment to which we are discussing, a leading article appeared in the organ of hon. gentlemen opposite, which had all the appearance of an inspired article, stating that I had surrendered the Imperialist to the partisan. An observation of that kind does not affect me personally, because it flies altogether wide of the mark. But I have no doubt it was not meant for the purpose of wounding me at all; it was simply meant to create a prejudice in the public mind, and as far as possible to discount what I might say in reference to this matter; and I do not feel inclined to allow that attempt to be successful. Therefore, I wish to state what I told my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) I would state, and what he said I was justified in stating—that I sought interviews with members of the Government, with the right hon. leader of the Government, with the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, with the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) and others, for the express purpose of endeavouring to keep this question beyond the scope of party politics. I endeavoured to reach a conclusion which would be satisfactory to both sides of this House, so that we might be able to send over to the mother country one united message from the Commons of Canada, strengthening the hands of those in the mother country who were endeavouring to fight this great battle for us there, this battle in favour of a great, beneficent, British, Imperial policy. And it is only due to the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) who leads the Opposition to say that he did everything he could to assist me in that regard, although he knew that hon. gentlemen opposite could not play this game better than by opposing this policy. He said he would not allow any party consideration to stand in the way of the promotion of a policy which was of such vital importance to the best interests both of Canada and of the Empire; and, therefore, he did all he could to assist me in this regard. When I introduced the resolution last session, I deliberately chose a resolution of the most general and mildest terms possible; in fact, I took the resolution adopted by the Conference and moved that, in order that we might have something on which both sides could agree. I could scarcely believe that the Government would not allow their followers to support a resolution passed by the great Colonial Conference in 1894. But the Government would not allow their followers to support that resolution. They would not go so far as to say, in the terms of that simple resolution, that it was desirable that we should have preferential treatment in the markets of the United Kingdom for the products of Canada, and they put up one of their ablest supporters in this House to move an amendment. And what was it?

That this House will at all times favour every practical means of developing inter-Imperial trade, and expresses satisfaction with the action already taken by the Government in that direction.

Well, Sir, colourless and ambiguous as the first part of this resolution was, I expressed my willingness to accept it, again instigated by the hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition, and who once more showed his desire that we should unite in support of this policy. But how were we met? We were met with the statement that we must take the resolution as it stood, take it altogether or not at all. I pointed out that it was impossible that we should accept the latter part of the resolution, that it was purely controversial and contrary to our views. But I was told that hon. gentlemen opposite considered the last part of the resolution the most important part. In other words, Mr. Speaker, we were told that hon. gentlemen opposite, as a party, considered it more important that they should declare that they, as a party, had been right in regard to this matter and that we, as a party, had been wrong, than that we should join together here in the House of Commons, Liberals and Conservatives, lay party aside and send one united message over to the mother country to strengthen the hand of those who were labouring for this great policy there. And yet, notwithstanding this, the organ of hon. gentlemen opposite comes out with the statement that I have allowed the Imperialist to surrender to the partisan in reference to this question. I suppose that is all right in party warfare; but I think it is only right that I should make the explanation I have made in reference to the matter.

I have never been able to understand—I think it is something very remarkable—how it is that hon. gentlemen opposite are always prepared to range themselves in line against us, when we propose to obtain a preference in the English markets for Canadian goods. Here we are, five or six millions of people, with a neighbour of over seventy millions, lying along our border. We are both anxious to sell our goods in the markets of the United Kingdom, the great mart of the world. We produce mainly the same class of commodities, and, therefore, we are perforce rivals—I am glad to think to-day, friendly rivals—for the first place in that market. The United States, having been great, and populous, and wealthy before the Dominion of Canada, as such, came into being at all, had secured a great position in that market long before we were able to make any organized effort on our own behalf. Now, let me for a moment call the attention of the House to the immensity of that market. According to the Trade and Navigation Returns of the United Kingdom for 1898, the mother country imported of articles of food and drink, that is, articles duty free, not including tea, tobacco, coffee, and so forth, not less than £166,000,000 sterling worth. Now, you may add ten millions at least to that for cattle and sheep, and you have the enormous sum of £176,000,000 sterling worth of goods imported into the United Kingdom last year. Now, of these articles, Canada could supply about £60,000,000 sterling worth—I mean of articles that we can produce here, say, in round numbers, eight hundred millions dollars worth. That is the market we are striving for. Now let me read to you a list of articles imported into Great Britain in 1898, showing the proportion that Canada furnishes:

Article.	Total Imports.	Imports from Canada.	Imports from United States.
Wheat . . .	$ 130,000,000	$ 9,750,000	$ 76,330,000
Barley . . .	34,000,000	83,300	4,600,000
Oats . . . . .	22,000,000	2,200,000	11,400,000
Flour and Meal . . .	57,750,000	5,000,000	47,000,000
Cattle . . . . .	46,750,000	8,750,000	31,000,000
Bacon . . . . .	51,500,000	5,000,000	32,000,000
Hams . . . . .	19,500,000	1,100,000	18,000,000
Beef (fresh)	29,250,000	60,000 (97)	23,000,000
Butter . . . . .	77,750,000	3,300,000
Eggs . . . . .	22,500,000	1,250,000

It is worthy of remark that though we can produce much better barley than the United States, still the United States sent to Great Britain  $7\frac{1}{2}$  times as much as Canada did. There is a splendid opening in the United Kingdom for our pears, our plums, and, I believe, our grapes; but I am sorry to say we are losing to a large extent that market for our apples, and I am afraid it is largely owing to the fact that some of our Canadian packers are not as careful—to use a very mild term—about the quality of apples they send there as they ought to be. That is a great pity, because, with the exception perhaps of the Newton pippin, we can supply very much better apples to the mother country than the people of the United States. Of pulp and paper they imported \$26,000,000 worth, and we sent them scarcely anything.

Now, I want to call attention to this fact, that this vast market is not a diminishing, but an increasing market. In 1876 they imported one pound of flour per head of the population; in 1896 they imported three pounds of flour per head, although the population had increased greatly during that time. In the last two years they have increased their importation of fresh meat to the extent of no less than $25,000,000 worth. Therefore, I say that this great market is an increasing market.

Now, as I have said, our cousins to the south have secured the lion's share of that market, because they had the incalculable advantage of having been first in the field. We think that we, as British subjects, have a better right to the lion's share of that market than they have. We think that in all British markets in every part of the Empire British goods ought to have preference over foreign goods. Our cousins to the south and every foreign country pursue that policy: they give in their own markets better terms to the goods of their own people than they give to the goods of foreign nations. We say that the time has come when that natural and common-sense principle ought to obtain in the British Empire, and when British subjects ought to receive preferential treatment for their goods in the markets of their own Empire. We say that if the Imperial authorities will only recognize this natural, common-sense principle, and will only carry out the suggestion made by the Colonial Secretary, Mr. Chamberlain, to which my right hon. friend has referred, and which I will refer to shortly, the result will be, that the market of the United Kingdom, in place of being dominated and controlled, as it is to-day, by the foreign rivals of the Empire, will very speedily be supplied by our own British people, as it ought to be. We say that the adoption of that principle will confer a direct and immeasurable benefit upon many classes of producers in Canada, and a great indirect benefit to many classes more. We say that if the settlers of Manitoba and the North-west Territories could get free entry into that market for their wheat, and if the farmers of the older provinces could get free entry for their bacon, hams, butter, cheese, eggs and poultry, fruit, oats, barley and horses—if they could get free entry into that market for these goods that they produce, while a duty were imposed upon goods sent there by their foreign rivals, the result would be, that these commodities produced in Canada would be of greater value than similar commodities produced in the United States. The result will be that a man would be willing to give more for a farm in Canada than he would be willing to give for a farm of otherwise equal value in the United States. The result would be that men coming to settle on this continent would desire to come and settle in that part of it where the produce of the farm was of greater value rather than in that part of the continent where the produce of the farm was of less value. The result would be that the stream of immigration which has, for so many years, flowed south of the line, which carried with it this very year, up to the 24th of May, no less than 56,000 British people, would be diverted to Canada and we would have our territories in the North-west speedily filled with good, loyal British subjects prepared to take up arms, if need be, in defence of the British Empire, rather than with the outcasts of Europe. I say that, for many years, as I have said before, the United States by reason of its enormous wealth and its greatly developed industries, has been acting as a magnet drawing our people south. Just as soon as this policy is adopted the conditions will be absolutely reversed, and Canada will be the magnet drawing the population north. We shall see such a re-peopling of this country by Canadians, who have settled in the United States as no man before has ever dreamed of. I want to know who will wish to farm in the United States when, by coming to Canada, he will get more for all he raises on the farm. That will be the result of this policy. The fisherman, the lumberman, the provision merchant, and every one who has anything to sell in the markets of the United Kingdom will benefit also, and I venture to say that by the adoption of this policy we will see such a development of the latent resources of this half of the continent as will astonish even the most ardent believer in the future of Canada. I say it is most extraordinary, in view of these considerations, to find that hon. gentlemen opposite range themselves in opposition to this policy when we bring it before the attention of the House. As long as they pursued the policy of unrestricted reciprocity, it was natural enough because it is the very antithesis of this policy that I am now advocating. When I say that they have always ranged themselves against it, I wish to correct the statement, because I admit that during the period between the dissolution of the House in 1896 and the reassembling of the House again, hon. gentlemen did not oppose it, but said that they were in favour of it. When we urged them in this House to adopt this policy we were always met with the same argument, and the right hon. Prime Minister has very nearly repeated it to-day. I do not think he would venture to repeat it, but he has very nearly repeated it. We were met with the statement that it was perfectly useless to make such a suggestion because no British statesman would ever dream of putting duties upon foreign articles entering the British market, that that was contrary to the principle of free trade, and that England would never, in any degree, depart from her free trade policy. We pointed out that, by doing this, England would be developing her best markets, that of her colonies; we pointed out that the future of the mother country was with her Empire, that the colonies were only outlying portions of the British soil, that their people were her people, that their prosperity was her prosperity, that every deserving immigrant, drawn from foreign territory and diverted to their shores, was added wealth and strength to the mother country herself, and that by adopting this policy, we would fill up the North-west Territories, people our wheat areas and place the mother country in a position of independence of foreign food supply. To all this we had the one stereotyped answer: You are simply dreamers of dreams. I remember the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), for whom I have a very high regard—I had almost said a very warm affection—almost, if that were possible, exceeded all his former efforts in forensic extravagance in his endeavour to depict the proposal I had made as something utterly impracticable and even grotesque. He said that no Imperial statesman would entertain the idea for one moment. My right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has been obliged somewhat, though not so far as I would have liked, to modify that position to-day. What is the fact? The fact is that this very policy which was declared by my hon. friend opposite and those who sit beside him as something too absurd to imagine that an Imperial statesman could endorse it, is the policy par excellence of the Colonial Secretary himself to-day, and has been so described by leading statesmen and journalists from one end of the United Kingdom to the other ever since the 26th of March, 1896. On that day Mr. Chamberlain, referring to what I may describe as that spontaneous shout of loyalty and affection that went up from the colonies at a time of threatened danger to the mother country, and which Mr. Chamberlain said, reverberated throughout the world Mr. Chamberlain said that the time had come to give practical effect to these high sentiments, and he there and then proposed a policy of preferential trade within the Empire. He there and then proposed that the mother country should impose duties in favour of the colonies as against foreign countries. My right hon. friend has endeavoured to explain away what Mr. Chamberlain said on that occasion, and I listened to his special pleading with very great interest. I want to call the special attention of the House to what Mr. Chamberlain said. The right hon. Prime Minister quoted Mr. Chamberlain quite fairly, but I want to call attention to this, that having said that if they had a Zollverein, such as they have in Germany, he thought the mother country would probably agree to such a proposal if the colonies would agree to it. He went on to say:

My second point is that we are dealing with an entirely exceptional state of things, and that we cannot, even if we wished, imitate exactly the German Zollverein. We are not conterminous countries; we are countries, as I have said, separated by thousands of miles, in some cases, and the circumstances of our different countries vary so considerably that it is evident that in an arrangement as to general free trade within the Empire exceptions must be made in the case of articles——that are chiefly taxed for revenue purposes.

What articles? Articles

Chiefly taxed for revenue purposes, not even taxed only for revenue purposes, but chiefly taxed for revenue purposes. I need not continue to read further from Mr. Chamberlain's speech, because my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has already referred to it, but I wish to say that it is almost inconceivable how any one having read that statement of Mr. Chamberlain that I have now quoted, as well as other statements here, should say or fancy, that Mr. Chamberlain then proposed a Zollverein based on the principle of free trade within the Empire. Before you can arrive at that conclusion you have got to strike out the sentences I have read, as well as several other sentences from Mr. Chamberlain's speech. But the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) himself very clearly and very succinctly explained to the people of London, Ontario, what Mr. Chamberlain's proposal really was. It is useless for the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to speak as he did to-night on the subject, in view of his own recorded words spoken to the electorate of London, Ontario, during the elections of 1896. Here is what the Prime Minister said:

Mr. Chamberlain spoke upon that subject a few weeks ago. I might quote the whole of his speech, but I have not time at such a meeting as this. Let me quote some portions of it. Mr. Chamberlain says: "It seems to me that if the principle of a revenue tariff were to be adopted by the colonies, there would be a reason for calling a council of the Empire, and I cannot but think that something like a satisfactory and workable arrangement might be arrived at."

That is what the Prime Minister told the people of London. Further, speaking of what the people of England might say, the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) said :

We do not ask you to go to the length that we go ; we do not ask you to remove the customs tariff altogether, we only ask you to remove the protective system.

I earnestly ask the House to listen to these sentences :

It can be conceived that you want a customs tariff, but bring it down to a point that it will simply be a revenue tariff—a tariff for your own benefit, but not a tariff hostile to us, and then we will be ready to discuss the principles of preferential trade.

Now, can anything more explicit be imagined than that. The right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has explained in the most absolute and conclusive way to the people of London, Ontario, what Mr. Chamberlain meant, and I say it is idle for the right hon. gentleman to attempt now in this House to give any other interpretation to the speech of Mr. Chamberlain than he gave on that occasion. Then, Sir, what have we got established? We have got established the fact that Mr. Chamberlain proposed a preferential trade within the Empire—that is, established by Mr. Chamberlain's own speech and that is established by the admission of the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). We have got this further fact established on the authority of Mr. Chamberlain's speech, and on the authority of the right hon. gentleman: that the preferential trade which Mr. Chamberlain proposed on that occasion was a preferential trade, not on the basis of free trade, but on the basis of a revenue tariff. Let us remember that we have got these two facts firmly established, and what follows? Following that was the resolution of the Toronto Board of Trade, which Mr. Chamberlain declared had in it "the germs of a satisfactory proposal." And how did the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) deal with the Toronto Board of Trade resolution? He said the germ had not germinated. He said that at the meeting of the Chambers of Commerce of the Empire, that resolution had not been carried. I am not talking about the carrying of that resolution at that meeting, I am talking of what Mr. Chamberlain said about it, and the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has not ventured to answer in the smallest particular what I said Mr. Chamberlain said with regard to it, namely, that it held within it the germs of a satisfactory arrangement. If my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Osler), who moved that resolution, were here, he would tell the right hon. gentleman that had that resolution gone to the convention it would have been carried. However, that is beside the mark, because what I am concerned with, is what Mr. Chamberlain said and what he is prepared to do, and I am confining my remarks to that issue.

Now, the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) accused us of prevarication and quibbling, which I think are somewhat hard terms, and I do not wish to repeat them. But, I cannot help saying that I am sorry the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), when he was quoting from Mr. Chamberlain's speech at the meeting of the chambers of commerce of the Empire, did not continue and quote a little further. He quoted what Mr. Chamberlain said with regard to free trade, but he left this out :

Of course the details of such a scheme would require the most careful examination. There may have to be exceptions made to the principle, although I believe the principle itself must be adopted if any progress is to be made at all ; but I am not going to discuss these exceptions on the present occasion.

In other words, Mr. Chamberlain was referring to his speech before the Canada Club, and to those exceptions of which I have already spoken, when he said: that it was evident that these exceptions must be made. Then, Mr. Chamberlain goes on to say :

I only want to impress upon you my personal conviction, that if a proposal of this kind came to us from the colonies, backed by any considerable support on their part, it would not be met with a blank refusal by the people of this country. I say, gentlemen, if it were proposed to us by the colonies ; because I do not consider that it would be wise or practicable that a proposal of this kind should come in the first instance from the United Kingdom.

But the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) says there has been no advance at all, because there is not a state document, in the face of the statement of Mr. Chamberlain, that he thinks a proposal of this kind should emanate from the colonies. Continuing, Mr. Chamberlain said :

If they desire, as we desire, and as we believe they do, this closer union ; if they are willing to make some sacrifices of their present arrangement,—

That is not a statement, that we are obliged to make the sacrifice of all our present arrangement and adopt free trade.

If they are willing to make some sacrifice of their present arrangement and convictions, in order to secure it, let them say so ; let the offer come voluntarily from them,—

The right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) knew very well these words were here :

—and I believe it will be considered in this country, not in any huckstering spirit, but that it will be entertained as a part of a greater policy which was intended to unite in the closest bonds of affection and interest, all the communities which are under the British flag, and all the subjects of Her Majesty throughout the Empire.

I think it unfortunate that the right hon. gentleman did not quote these sentiments of Mr. Chamberlain when he was reading Mr. Chamberlain's speech.

Now, I think, Mr. Speaker, that I may say that we have reached a point in this matter when it would have been reasonable that some attempt should be made by concession and compromise on the one side and the other, to arrive at a satisfactory arrangement in reference to this great question.

Here is Mr. Chamberlain making a proposal that there should be preferential trade, saying that there must be exceptions to any policy of free trade within the Empire, saying that he finds the germs of such a policy in the resolution of the Board of Trade of Toronto, and telling us that if we simply go forward and ask for this thing we shall be met in no huckstering spirit. I say that the time had then come, at this stage of the history of the question, when it would have been reasonable and right that we should enter into negotiations. But, at the very moment when Mr. Chamberlain was making that speech, we were in the throes of a general election, and of course nothing could then be done. But the leaders of both parties in this country recognized the transcendent importance of this question, and both pledged themselves to do all that in them lay to further this policy. Mr. Chamberlain had proposed, in his speech at the Canada Club, that there should be a commission of inquiry in reference to this matter, and the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), who had evidently very carefully read Mr. Chamberlain's speech, said to the people of Canada that if they would only entrust him with the management of their affairs, one of the very first things he would do would be to set about obtaining the appointment of such a commission of inquiry. Well, the election took place and brought about a change of Government, and there was the short session of 1896. I do not think that any one could very well expect that in that session anything could have been done, but I think we had every reason to expect that the right hon. gentleman would have implemented his promise to the people of Canada before he met the House of Commons for the second time. We had every reason to expect that he would have approached Mr. Chamberlain in reference to this matter before the session of 1897. The session of 1897 came, and there was no intimation in the Speech from the Throne that the right hon. gentleman had done anything whatsoever towards carrying out the policy which he promised the people of Canada, if they entrusted him with the management of their affairs, he would endeavour to carry out. In that session he introduced by his Finance Minister, his tariff, and his Finance Minister explained that tariff as one which was favourable to the mother country. He said that the goods of the mother country would enter every customs port in Canada on preferential terms immediately after that tariff went into force.

Well, that was also the year of the Jubilee. The right hon. gentleman went over to England at that time. He went there when the recollection of the action of this Parliament, in offering armed assistance to the mother country in the time of her peril was still warm in the hearts of the people of England, and when these words of his own Finance Minister declaring that we were giving preferential treatment to England were still ringing in the ears of the English people. He went over there in the white heat of the Jubilee and under the circumstances was almost the hero of the hour; and I think it is not too much for me to say that the right hon. gentleman was in a position of commanding influence at that time to have prosecuted efforts to procure the adoption of this policy by the Imperial authorities. The right hon. gentleman was met at Liverpool by the Duke of Devonshire, and the Duke of Devonshire delivered the speech, from which quotations are made in the third clause of this resolution, and to which the right hon. gentleman has already referred. I confess that I am quite unable to understand the nature of the complaint which he brought against me with reference to the quotations that I had made from the Duke of Devonshire's speech. He quoted the statement of the Duke of Devonshire that he was in favour of free trade for England, that he considered it still the best policy. But in my resolution, I distinctly state that the duke made these other assertions while he was proclaiming himself a free trader. What more did the right hon. gentleman think I could have said? I am quite unable to understand what the purport of his criticism was in that regard. However, the Duke of Devonshire made these most remarkable, and I think it is not too much to say extraordinary statements in that speech. Those statements, coming from a statesman of the Duke of Devonshire's status and antecedents, and from a man of his extreme caution and reticence, were regarded as of extraordinary significance, and were considered of the utmost importance. They brought down upon his head the denunciations of the free trade party in England. So hard were they hit by what he had said that Lord Farrar allowed himself to make use of such terms as these with reference to a statesman who is revered and beloved in England as probably no other statesman in England is to-day. Lord Farrar said:

When the Duke of Devonshire forgets the history and political knowledge he must once have possessed to throw dirt on his former self and on the great colleagues with whom he acted.

The House can understand to what a paroxysm of indignation Lord Farrar must have been wrought when he allowed himself deliberately in an interview with the representative of a newspaper, to make use of such language. I understand that the Radical press accused the Duke of having adopted Mr. Chamberlain's views. I do not know personally if that is so, but I understand it to be so. It is certain, at all events that the Duke of Devonshire considered that we were on the eve of a most important inquest in reference to matters of trade, because in another speech which he made on the evening of that same day, he made use of these very remarkable words, showing that he considered there was very serious business ahead of the colonial Premiers. He said :

The visitors and those who preside over the Colonial Department have a busy time before them. Doubtless they will have many subjects of business to discuss, and if I mistake not, the time of our guests will be occupied, not only by official communications with the Colonial Department, but will be also largely occupied with communications with the leading men of the communities such as this, who are largely interested in the development of the colonies.

Showing that the Duke of Devonshire considered that there was a very busy time before the Premiers, and that there was to be a great inquest in reference to trade matters. It is, therefore not surprising, Mr. Speaker, that we should have this most explicit statement cabled across the Atlantic by a gentleman who could have no possible desire to misrepresent the trend of public opinion in the mother country, but who, on the contrary, had every reason to wish to faithfully state what that opinion was. The correspondent of the New York "Evening Post," a gentleman whose ability I have seen referred to in a cable despatch since this House has been in session, cabled to his readers as follows :—

The Duke of Devonshire's speech at Liverpool on Saturday, following Mr. Chamberlain's lukewarm attitude towards free trade, is interpreted as indicating the readiness of the Imperial Government to make some move in the direction of Imperial customs union when the question comes up in conference between Mr. Chamberlain and the Premiers.

This may include duty on such foreign imports as meat, flour and wheat from America and the Argentine, as competing with Canadian and Australian products.

This is the statement made by the able correspondent of the New York "Post." He says this was the view which was entertained in England at that time of these most remarkable utterances of the Duke of Devonshire, and I do not think that any fair-minded man would suppose that a statesman of the Duke of Devonshire's temperament would deliberately go out of his way to make these extraordinary statements with reference to free trade without an object, and I think that most people will think that the object attributed to him by the people of England, who knew him best, according to this gentleman, was the object that he had in view in making these remarks.

Well, Sir, that is how affairs stood then. We have this fact established—that Mr. Chamberlain offered preferential trade, that he offered it on a basis of a revenue tariff. I see my right hon. friend smiles at that. He himself made that statement, at all events, at London, to the people of Ontario, and Mr. Chamberlain's speech entirely bears out the statement the right hon. gentleman made. We have the fact that the right hon. gentleman said that he was anxious to have a commission of inquiry appointed ; we have the fact that the Duke of Devonshire met the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) in Liverpool with a speech of the most extraordinary kind, which one of the ablest correspondents of the American press said was believed in England to be a foreshadowing of the adoption by the Imperial authorities of Mr. Chamberlain's view. What followed ? An untoward incident which we have discussed in this House before, but which I do not desire to comment upon until I read further from this despatch, in order that the House may know how the right hon. gentleman's course in regard to preferential trade was considered on the spot and at the time. I call the attention of hon. members to this :

Mr. Wilfrid Laurier, the Canadian Premier, has given a new and somewhat dramatic turn to the talk of schemes of Imperial unity and aggrandizement, of which the air in England is very full just now. Every other colonial Premier now here, while overflowing with expressions of loyalty, is assuring England of the dire consequences if she will not barter away her free trade in exchange for tariff preference in colonial markets. The Duke of Devonshire's speech at Liverpool on Saturday, following Mr. Chamberlain's lukewarm attitude towards free trade, is interpreted as indicating the readiness of the Imperial Government to make some move in the direction of Imperial customs union, when the question comes up in conference between Mr. Chamberlain and the Premiers. This may include duties on such foreign imports as wheat, flour and wheat from America, and the Argentine, as competing with Canadian and Australian products.

This was part of Mr. Chamberlain's Zollverein idea. It is at this interesting moment that Mr. Laurier steps forward and declares the Zollverein to be mere protection, and asserts that protection, which has been the curse and bane of Canada, to be the greatest possible mistake for England and the Empire. "By our tariff," says Mr. Laurier, "we in Canada give you preference as a free gift. We ask nothing in return ; we do not desire you to abandon the grand principles of free trade ; we desire rather to follow in your free trade lead, trading where trading is most natural. Protection must weaken you, and so hurt the Empire, and Canada as part of it."

That is a summary of the position taken by the right hon. gentleman in England at that time, as cabled across by this correspondent. It is a most accurate summary of the position taken by the right hon. gentleman at that time. I presume he will not controvert that statement, that he will not venture to say that it is not an accurate summary of the position he took. I have here his speech delivered in Liverpool and also extracts from his interviews according to the "Chronicle," and I say this is an admirable summary of the position the right hon. gentleman took at that time in reference to this policy. It was immediately on his arrival in Liverpool, the very day the Duke of Devonshire had made these statements, which were supposed in England, according to this correspondent's statement, to be the foreshadowing by the English Government of the adoption of Mr. Chamberlain's policy. The right hon. gentleman told the people of England: We do not want a quid pro quo, we do not want to interfere with that free trade policy under which England has prospered so much. And he argued against the policy in his interview with the "Chronicle," and put his case, if possible, stronger there than he did in Liverpool. Now, this position taken by the hon. gentleman was practically a blow struck at preferential trade with all the concentrated force of all the eight self-governing colonies of British North America, these colonies that had been heretofore the principal champions and advocates of this policy. It was a blow, altogether unexpected by Mr. Chamberlain, who had risked his political status in making the declaration he had made in our favour at the Canada Club. I say it was an unexpected blow—it was just as though a modern gladiator engaged in a contest with a formidable opponent, should receive suddenly, in the supreme moment, when victory was within his grasp, a sledgehammer blow behind the ear from his principal second. It was utterly unexpected, it was irresistible, it was a knock-down blow, it was a knock-out blow, and there was no more hope of Mr. Chamberlain's preferential trade policy during the Jubilee celebration of June, 1897. It became for a time a matter of ridicule. Lord Roseberry said in reference to it, that he must speak of it with reverence, for he spoke in the presence of a corpse. Well, Mr. Speaker, I am glad to say, it is a pretty lively corpse to-day, but, if it is so, that is not owing to the good offices of my right hon. friend opposite. Notwithstanding the extraordinary course pursued by my right hon. friend, Mr. Chamberlain did not lose heart. He had declared that this was the greatest of all Imperial policies, and he did not abandon it. He had summoned the Colonial Premiers to a conference, and at that conference he came back to the charge once more, and what did he say? At that conference Mr. Chamberlain returns once more to the Zollverein, and says:

I have said that I believe in sentiment as the greatest of all the forces in the general government of the world; but, at the same time, I should like to bring to the reinforcement of sentiment the motives which are derived from material and personal interest. But undoubtedly the fiscal arrangements of the different colonies differ so much among themselves, and all differ so much from those of the mother country, that it would be a matter of the greatest complication and difficulty to arrive at any conclusion which would unite us commercially in the same sense in which the Zollverein united the Empire of Germany. It may be borne in mind that the history of that Zollverein is most interesting and most instructive.

He calls the attention of the right hon. gentleman to the Zollverein once more, and to the great benefit that the German Empire derived from it, notwithstanding the sledgehammer blow it had received from the right hon. gentleman only a few days before. He says:

It commenced entirely as a commercial convention, dealing, in the first instance, only partially with the trade of the empire; it was rapidly extended to include the whole trade of the empire, and it finally made possible and encouraged the ultimate union of the empire.

But, he says, and very naturally, after what had occurred a few days before—

But this is a matter upon which at the present time, rather than suggest any proposals of my own, I desire to hear the views of the gentlemen present.

In the meanwhile, however, I may say that I note a resolution which appears to have been passed unanimously at the meeting of Premiers in Hobart, in which the desire was expressed for closer commercial arrangements with the Empire, and I think it was suggested that a commission of inquiry should be created in order to see in what way practical effect might be given to the aspiration. If that be the case, and if it were thought that, at the present time, you were not prepared to go beyond inquiry, if it were the wish of the other colonies, of Canada and of the South African Colonies, to join in such an inquiry, Her Majesty's Government would be delighted to make arrangements for the purpose, and to accept any suggestions as to the form of the reference and the character and constitution of the commission, and would very gladly take part in it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it will be remembered that the right hon. gentleman had declared to the people of Canada that he was most anxious to have such a commission of inquiry appointed; and here we have Mr. Chamberlain telling the right hon. gentleman that he can have this commission of inquiry. Not only so, but we have, I think I may say without exaggerating in the slightest degree—we have not only the Colonial Secretary assuring the right hon. gentleman that he can have the very commission of inquiry which he declared he was anxious to have, but we have Mr. Chamberlain earnestly inviting the right hon. gentleman to take part in such a commission of inquiry. I say, earnestly inviting him, because Mr. Chamberlain does not say merely that Her Majesty's Government will take this matter into their favourable consideration, or into their serious consideration, but he says Her Majesty's Government will be delighted to promote such a commission, and will gladly take part in it. Therefore, I say we have the right hon. gentleman earnestly requested by the Colonial Secretary to take part in the very commission he told the people of Canada he wanted to have. Was that an approach on the part of the Imperial authorities, or was it not? The right hon.

gentleman has told this House that there has been no approach on the part of the Imperial authorities. Is not that an approach? I say it is impossible to conceive that a statesman in the position of Mr. Chamberlain could have given a more distinct invitation to the right hon. gentleman and to the Premiers to take up this whole question of preferential trade, and have it investigated, and endeavour to see whether a satisfactory arrangement could not be arrived at.

I think I might safely rest my case here, and say that we have proved enough. But as if it were to make assurance double sure, as if it were to remove every possible ground of quibble—if that is the term my right hon. friend likes to use—Mr. Chamberlain was not content even with that, but last year, just before the meeting of this House, at Liverpool he again returns to the charge, and what do we find him saying at Liverpool? He speaks in terms so plain, so pointed, so unambiguous, so unmistakable, that no hon. gentleman can possibly be at a loss to understand what he means:

What I think we have already accomplished is to convince them—

That is, the colonies.

—that wherever they live, however far their home may be from the centre and from the mother land, we, at any rate, are prepared to meet them more than half way in any approach which they may make to us, in any desire which they may express for their closer union.

“We are ready to meet them more than half way.” Then he goes on to say:

We should not be deterred, either by the economic pedantries or the selfishness which is a virtue with some politicians, from giving favourable consideration to any proposals which our brethren across the sea may make to us. And in such a consideration, I for one do not believe the English people will keep a strict account of profit and loss—that they will seek to be assured of a present pecuniary gain in return for so much concession on their part. No, I think they will look, and look wisely, rather to a future time, when we shall find our reward.

That speech was delivered in January of last year. I may say that I had myself ventured to make a speech in reference to this subject, which had been sent to Mr. Chamberlain, and in that speech I quoted the arguments which had been used in this House, and which were always thrown across the floor of the House at us, namely, the argument that the mother country would not think of imperilling her great foreign trade for the comparatively insignificant trade of the colonies. I will not trouble the House, as I did last session, with reading the passage. I ventured to say that I thought that was a short-sighted policy. I thought that the people of the mother country ought to look to the future, and not to the present condition of colonial trade. Mr. Chamberlain answers the remarks I made on that occasion—if you can take this as an answer—whether he read my speech or not. As he had read speeches of mine delivered previously in this House, and quoted from them, I think I may assume he read this speech, for it was sent to him; and if he had sat down and written me a letter in reply, he could not have answered more satisfactorily, to my mind, than he answered in that speech I have referred to. He deliberately tells any one who has any doubt with regard to this matter, that the Imperial authorities are ready to meet us more than half-way; that if any one is afraid they will only deal on purely trade principles, he tells them: We will allow no economical pedantries to stand in the way. If any one says that they will not imperil their great foreign trade for the trade of the colonies, he tells them that in the mother country they will not weigh the profit and loss of the moment, but they will look, and wisely look, to the future for their reward.

So I do not think, as I have said, that anything more explicit or satisfactory could possibly be imagined. Now, then, I want to ask any reasonable man, who is not overborne with party prejudice, whether he does not feel, in view of the statement I have made and the statements that have been made by my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition, that a government, sincerely desirous of promoting this policy of preferential trade, would at once have closed with Mr. Chamberlain's proposal for a commission of inquiry, and would also at once have hailed with delight Mr. Chamberlain's utterances at Liverpool and taken immediate steps to make it known that Canada, on her part, was ready to meet them more than half way? I ask any man, who regards this question from any other aspect than from a purely party aspect, whether, under these circumstances, he does not believe that if that course had been taken by the Government very substantial progress might have been made already in this direction, and whether we might not now have had an arrangement which would have been of immeasurable benefit to every farmer throughout the whole Dominion of Canada, by giving him a position of commanding superiority in his competition with his foreign rivals in the markets of the United Kingdom? We have been told by the right hon. Prime Minister that we should have had a state document. Mr. Chamberlain has warned us, over and over again, that if we want the mother country to adopt this policy, to make so great a change in her fiscal policy as this policy would demand, we must say that we want it. We must take the initiative. In his Canada Club speech, Mr. Chamberlain said that in one sense, at all events, the colonies must take the initiative in a movement of this kind. In his speech, which I have already quoted from, before the Chambers of Commerce of the Empire, he repeats the same thing. He says:

I say, gentlemen, if it were proposed to us by the colonies, because I do not consider it would be either wise or practical that a proposal of this kind should come in the first instance from the United Kingdom. We know how strenuously the colonies cling to their own independence, and their own initiative. If they desire, as we believe they do, this closer union, if they are willing to make some sacrifice of their present arrangements and convictions in order to secure it, let them say so.

In his speech at Liverpool he says the same thing. He says that they would not urge the colonies; that that would be foolish, but that we would rather follow their lead. Therefore, I say that it is nothing less than trifling with the intelligence of this House for the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to talk to us about there not having been given a state document in regard to this matter. I say that any Government that makes use of such an argument as that, any Government that adopts an excuse so flimsy as a reason why they have not acted in support of this policy, is a Government hostile to this policy, and I say that the Government of the right hon. gentleman is hostile to this policy. I say that it is to the Government of my right hon. friend that the people of Canada owe it, that since they have obtained the reins of power, this policy has made no progress. I say that they have blocked this policy today in this House by refusing to accept the proposal of my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition. Hon. gentlemen opposite have very often, when on this side of the House, been accused of inconsistency; that they have been accused of inconsistency, I believe, often with truth, but I can bear testimony that, from the day that the right hon. gentleman, in violation of his pledges to the people of Canada, made use of his position as the Prime Minister of Canada to strike down in England a policy which he promised the people of Canada he would promote—I say that I can bear testimony that from that day the Government of the right hon. gentleman has been remorselessly consistent in its determination to deprive the people of Canada of any preference in the markets of England, over the right hon. gentleman's old allies and friends in the United States. I say before the right hon. gentleman what I have said when he was not present, because I like to repeat before himself things that I have said behind his back, at the first opportunity. I say that there never was a flock of sheep more helplessly sold to the shambles than the right hon. gentleman sold the confiding people of Canada to their rivals of the United States on that occasion. When I say "sold," I am not speaking of a monetary consideration. I do not know what the consideration or the motive was, but I know that the thing was done. I know that the right hon. gentleman promised the people of Canada to do his utmost to obtain for them that which he described as a great boon, and I know that when he went to England, on the very first occasion that he opened his lips in Liverpool, he told the people that he did not wish them, in order to give Canada that great boon, to interfere with the free trade policy of the people of England. Now, I am afraid that I have wearied the House. I have spoken too long, but there is one observation I should like to make, and it is this: If it be urged that this policy would interfere in any way with the friendly relations which are happily growing up between the United States and Canada, I utterly repudiate that argument. I am a believer in these friendly relations; I believe that these friendly relations will last. When I say that they will last I mean that they are not the result of any mere evanescent impulse. I believe that they will last, but, I believe, that they will be found to obtain chiefly in regard to foreign relations. I think we shall find a co-operation between the mother country and the United States in reference to foreign relations such as we have never seen before, but so far as internal relations or trade matters are concerned, I believe that the ambassador of the United States did his duty merely when he warned the people of England, on his arrival in London, that they would still find the people of the United States their rivals in matters of commerce and trade. And I think, in presence of that friendly warning, it behooves us of the British Empire to put our house in order, and to be prepared to meet this friendly rivalry of the other firm. One of the essential conditions upon which we must enter into that friendly rivalry is, that the people of Canada shall have that preferential treatment in the markets of the Empire which the people of the United States have in the markets of the United States. That is one of the essentials, and I say that no country regarding us with friendly eyes has any right to take offence at a domestic arrangement of that kind. As a free people we are entitled to enter into such an arrangement without causing offence to any country, much less to any country that professes to regard us in a friendly way. I say further, that any Government, colonial or Imperial, that would deprive Her Majesty's subjects of this simple measure of justice in order to gain favour with any foreign power, would pursue a policy which in my opinion would be short-sighted and dangerous, and unworthy the traditions and the dignity of the people of this Empire. But I call the attention of the House to the fact, that if there be an objection from this point of view, that objection is not to be taken by the Government of Canada but by the Imperial Government. It is for us to put forward our claims; it is for the Imperial Government to consider them. I want further to call the attention of the House to this fact, that whatever excuse there might be in connection with this, it does not in any degree hold with regard to the course which has been pursued by the Government in the past, because this proposal of Mr. Chamberlain's for a conference. This speech of the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) at Liverpool and the interview he granted to the "Chronicle," all took place before this rapprochement with the United States—Mr. Chamberlain's speech at Liverpool was delivered in the early part of last year.

I say, as I said before, the simple explanation of the unwillingness of the right hon. gentleman to accept the proposal made to him by my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) to-day, comes from the fact that this Government is hostile to preferential trade. That is the reason of it. It is this Government which is blocking the preferential trade movement. The right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) struck it down in England for the time being. He thought he had destroyed it, but he was unable to do that. The man does not breathe who can do that, because this is a policy which is instinct with the very spirit of the race to which we belong for it appeals at once to the Imperial aspirations, to the impulses of affection, and to the trading capacities of the British people the world over. Therefore, I say, that the man does not breathe who can destroy it. But I say that the man, or the Government, or the party, that seeks to thwart it will be destroyed by it. I say, Sir, that these hon. gentlemen opposite may have dammed back the stream for the moment, but the stream is fast swelling into a mighty river that will pursue its triumphant course in spite of them, and burst their barriers, and sweep to the ocean like the idle foam on its surface, any miserable obstacles they may seek to place in its way.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). Mr. Speaker, at this advanced period of the session, and also having regard to the lateness of the hour, I will not trespass for any length of time upon the indulgence of the House. With reference to the subject of preferential trade with Great Britain, and of matters that make for closer union between the mother country and the Empire, it would be in the direction of that desirable end if all Canadians would forget their party spirit, when dealing with so important a theme. I listened with great pleasure to the remarks of the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), and if I may be permitted to congratulate him, I do so in all sincerity upon the form and manner of his speech this afternoon. I may have to controvert the substance of it, but I certainly admired the improved tone, so different it appeared to me from that which many times he has adopted when addressing the House. In saying that, I do not wish to detract at all from the approbation with which I observed the hon. gentleman's tone to-day. With reference to my hon. friend from North Bruce (Mr. McNeill), I would say that I hardly think he did himself justice. I greatly appreciate the generosity with which he alluded to the doings of some members of the Cabinet, myself included, and I here make public recognition of my gratitude to him. But, Sir, the hon. gentleman (Mr. McNeill) would have better advanced that object which he has at heart, if upon a subject of such Imperial importance as this, he had omitted to suggest that the Canadian Government of the day in seeking to promote a British preference in Canadian markets have done the work of American tricksters. That is an observation which I am sure my hon. friend (Mr. McNeill) regretted as soon as it was uttered.

The hon. gentleman (Mr. McNeill) sought to prove the advantage to Canada of a preference for Canadian products in the Imperial markets. I am not aware that there is any issue upon that point. I think all Canadians would rejoice if we had a preference in Imperial markets for Canadian products. If we had a preference there, all Canadians I am sure would be glad of any advantage we might get over the rest of the world in the markets of Great Britain. I shall address myself to-night simply to the form and the substance of the resolution which we are asked to vote in favour of. If my hon. friend (Mr. McNeill) had desired wisely to secure a unanimous expression of opinion from this House, he perhaps would have been able to have more fortunately expressed his views than in a controversial proposition such as is now in your hands. Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McNEILL. That was hopeless.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend says it is hopeless, and I may say that he is scarcely willing to give us credit for anything. For example, he pointed out that preferential trade with Great Britain has made no advance since the present Administration took office. May I ask him what advance it made during the eighteen years of our predecessors in power? I will not take up ancient history nor will I hold my hon. friend (Mr. McNeill) responsible for the utterance which is correctly attributed to the great organ of his party, but if I sought to retort in kind I would remind the hon. gentleman that the great organ when in 1879, his party adopted a principle of high protection called the National Policy, and when it was pointed out that the adoption of such a policy as that it might endanger British connection, the organ of the Conservative party then, as it is now, said: If the National Policy endangers British connection, so much the worse for British connection.

Mr. McNEILL. It was Mr. Farrer, I think, who wrote that.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I would prefer, however, to try and avoid everything controversial, and to give such reasons as suggest themselves to me why the House cannot adopt the resolution now proposed. This resolution sets forth matters of inducement why we should declare in favour of opening negotiations for preferential trade with Great Britain. What are those matters of inducement? In brief, they are that Mr. Chamberlain, the Colonial Secretary, made the proposal of a preferential tariff, and that His Grace the Duke of Devonshire endorsed it, and that, inasmuch as these two distinguished Imperial statesmen made this alleged proposal, it is our duty to open negotiations. It is perfectly clear, in the first place, that the Parliament of Canada would not be warranted in passing a resolution declaring that, in our judgment, what these gentlemen or what either of them stated amounts to a proposal such as is attributed to them by hon. gentlemen opposite. We certainly would not be warranted in giving a parliamentary interpretation to the utterances of Mr. Chamberlain or the Duke of Devonshire contrary to or not absolutely what they did declare. No Parliament, especially a British Parliament, would be warranted in placing an inaccurate statement upon its journals. I need not deal with the observations of Mr. Chamberlain, for my right hon. friend the First Minister has effectually dealt with them. But taking up the case of the Duke of Devonshire, we have several gentlemen placing their own construction upon his words. We have my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition and my hon. friend the member for North Bruce, and we have my hon. friend's witness, the correspondent of the New York "Evening Post."

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. And you have the London "Times."

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend read extracts from a number of papers, but I fail to find in any one of them any statement going anything like the length that my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition contends they did go. He seems to forget that the proposition of preferential trade involves something absolutely different from a proposition to impose a tariff. It is in one sense protection, and in the other sense free trade. Great Britain, a free trade country, might adopt a protective tariff or a revenue tariff, which would not in itself awaken any hostility to her on the part of foreign countries, but if she should discriminate, even in favour of her own colonies, that might excite new considerations. So that when any one alleges that the Duke of Devonshire or Mr. Chamberlain offered to give to Canada a preference in the markets of Great Britain, he alleges two things. He alleges that these representative men propose, in the first place, to make dutiable what is not dutiable to day, or to increase the duties on what is dutiable to-day in England; and, in the second place, to apply lesser rates on similar articles that come from Canada. These are two distinct propositions. Now, what is there to support the contention that the Duke of Devonshire made the offer he is alleged in this resolution to have made? This resolution contains a quotation from a speech delivered by the Duke of Devonshire on the 12th June, 1897, at Liverpool, and in order to clinch the matter, alleges that it was delivered in the presence of the Prime Minister. The fact, I suppose, that it was delivered in his presence, is to be taken as clear proof that it was intended to go as far as these hon. gentlemen think. This resolution, to which we are asked to assent, declares:

That the speech in which the Duke of Devonshire gave utterance to these views was regarded in England as a fair adoption by the Salisbury Government of a proposal, above referred to, made by Mr. Chamberlain in March, 1896.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend says "hear, hear." Well, the alleged gist of Mr. Chamberlain's utterance, as stated in this resolution, is as follows:—

That in March, 1896, the Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, Secretary of State for the Colonies, suggested that duties favourable to the colonies should be imposed by the United Kingdom upon her imported foreign produce, provided the colonies would in return give preferential concessions in favour of the United Kingdom.

There we have the statement in this resolution that Mr. Chamberlain proposed a preferential tariff between the colonies and Great Britain, and that the Duke of Devonshire endorsed this proposal, and, in the second place, it is alleged that the Duke of Devonshire's utterances of the 12th June, 1897, amounted to an offer of preferential trade. Just think for a moment of the absurdity of the proposition that two statesmen, however eminent, should deliberately propose a reversal of the fiscal policy of Great Britain and the adoption of a new policy, or, in other words, the abandonment of the old doctrine of free trade that had been in existence half a century, and the adoption of a new policy instead—that these two gentlemen should seriously propose, in an informal way, one at the Board of Trade and Commerce in 1896 and the other at Liverpool in 1897, a radical change of policy and that such a change of policy would become law on its acceptance by the Colonial authorities. My hon. friend seems to think that in Great Britain the mass of the people are not going to exercise their own judgment on a great question such as this. He seems to think that a great economic revolution such as is suggested, would not have to be preceded by any expression of public opinion at the polls.

But apart from the absurdity of such a proposition, let us come down to what really took place. I will not, as I have said, allude to the utterances of Mr. Chamberlain, but shall confine my attention to those of the Duke of Devonshire. My hon. friend the leader of the Opposition is never tired of telling us what he considers the meaning of the Duke of Devonshire's utterances. Well Mr. Speaker, there is a journal published in the city of London called "Britannia," which is the organ of the Empire League. Her Majesty is the patron and the Duke of Devonshire is the president of the British Empire League. This interpretation that hon. gentlemen opposite have been placing upon the utterances of the Duke of Devonshire, which did them service in Canada, where it was calculated to mislead the public mind in regard to the meaning of these utterances, found its way to Great Britain, and was referred to in this journal in its issue of August, 1898. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I shall read the article to which I refer, and which is entitled "A Challenge." This is an editorial:

Has not the time come when the Toronto "Mail and Empire" may fairly be called upon to give chapter and verse for its repeated assertion that the Duke of Devonshire made Sir Wilfrid Laurier "an offer" of preferential trade at Liverpool in June, last year, or, in default, to withdraw it once for all. This fable,—

My hon. friend will observe that.

—as it must be called, recently took the following form:—

"The Duke of Devonshire, it will be remembered"—so the "Mail and Empire" wrote on May 19th—"urged the Premier to consider the project favourably and to enter into negotiations." Now we say emphatically, that we challenge contradiction that neither of the Duke's speeches contained any passage which is capable of being represented in this sense. Let it be clearly understood that neither "Britannia" nor the present writer has any concern with the controversy which still rages as to the Canadian Premier's policy or diplomacy in the matter. The "Mail and Empire" is, of course, free to hammer to its heart's content. That is a question of party politics in which the British Empire League, comprising, as it does, many members both in Great Britain and in Canada who dissent from Sir Wilfrid Laurier's action as well as many who cordially approve of it, has no intention of meddling. But for the very reason that the League, having the Queen herself as its patron, is an organization of a national character, it becomes a sheer impropriety to misrepresent its president as having committed himself on a highly disputatious topic, when he has done nothing of the kind.

Now, I ask my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition if, in the face of that utterance by the organ of the British Empire League, of which the Duke of Devonshire is president, he still persists in declaring that the utterance of the Duke of Devonshire amounted to an offer of preferential trade?

Mr. MULOCK.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Will my hon. friend allow me to make an observation?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) has just read, and correctly read, a statement in what he calls the organ of the British Empire League, that members of that league, many of them, dissent strongly from Sir Wilfrid Laurier's views on this question, while many approve them. So the statement that this organization, the British Empire League in London, is composed of parties who hold strongly both opinions is quite true; and I may say at once that the editorial management of that paper is, in my judgment, in the hands of the parties who strongly dissent from the views of the United Empire Trade League, and from preferential trade as we hold it. I do not consider the statement in the slightest degree affects the position of His Grace the Duke of Devonshire, who is the president of the league, although it appears in that paper. They are dealing with a succinct statement taken from the "Mail and Empire," in which, probably, an over statement was made of the duke's position. I have not made that statement, I have quoted the words that the Duke of Devonshire used on that occasion as proving that virtually he had come to the conclusion to endorse the views taken by Mr. Chamberlain. And I give to my hon. friend who is now dealing with this subject the proof that several Premiers who responded to that speech treated it as an offer of preferential trade made by His Grace. And I shall be glad to put the revised publication of the speeches made on that occasion by the representatives of the British Empire League in the hands of my hon. friend. He will find the response of my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Why should the right hon. gentleman go out of his way to repudiate it as an offer of preferential trade, unless it were so. The fact that he treated it as a proposal of preferential trade and answered it in the negative, the fact that several other Premiers treated it in the same way and expressed their approval of it, is strong evidence that the views of the Duke of Devonshire did in fact harmonize with those of Mr. Chamberlain. And what more? The Cobdenite press throughout the British islands denounced the Duke of Devonshire in round terms because he had abandoned in that speech his free trade proclivities in order to meet the views of the colonies who wished preferential trade. I give these as good grounds why it should be said that the Duke of Devonshire's speech might be interpreted, not as a proposal absolutely to be closed without reference to the people, as my hon. friend said, but as a tentative proposal to be discussed. And when my hon. friend takes, in connection with that, the fact that after that speech Mr. Chamberlain, the representative of the British Government, in the paper he laid on the Table in the House of Commons, stated that if Canada and South Africa agreed with the desire expressed by the Australian Premiers at Hobartown, he was prepared to issue a commission, to take part in it, to take this question up and consider whether it could be arranged. I give these facts to my hon. friend in support of what I have said. I am glad he has indulged me with the opportunity to say this much, as, I suppose, I should not have the right to speak again, and I am greatly obliged to the hon. gentleman for the opportunity to make this statement.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have to thank my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) for having assisted me in making a speech. I understand my hon. friend to say that the "Mail and Empire" article referred to in the article I have quoted may be an overstatement of what he said—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think it was a little strongly drawn—

* The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will read a statement of some one else, and we will see if it is rather strongly drawn. This is the report of a speech appearing in the Toronto "Mail and Empire" of the 29th February, 1899. In good big letters it is announced as being "a ringing address by the chieftain" at "the third ward's big smoker." There are several columns of it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Read it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, we have heard it all a good many times in this House. But I will read a portion given under the heading "Inter-Imperial Trade"

Sir Charles Tupper went on to deal with the question of inter-imperial preferential trade, which he held to be the great future policy for Canada. At the time the Conservatives went out of power, matters were ripening for its adoption. Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain had been converted thereto. That policy had been thrown back for years by the base betrayal of Canada's interests by the present Premier of Canada, Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear. I say so now.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (reading)

This language he had used on the floor of Parliament, and this language he was prepared to defend. During the campaign of 1896, Mr. Laurier had gone from hustings to hustings saying he was as much in favour of preferential trade as Sir Charles Tupper.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear; so he did.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We will see if the hon. gentleman says "hear, hear" to the rest of this:

He had given his solemn pledge that if placed in power he would send a commission to England to negotiate with Lord Salisbury for preferential trade. He became Premier, and he went to England in the midst of the glory of the great jubilee.

At the time when everything was favourable to the accomplishment of such a policy, he was met, almost on landing, by the Duke of Devonshire, who made a speech, offering this great boon in unmistakable terms.

Is that an overstatement?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have already stated to my hon. friend that I read the Duke of Devonshire's words, and claimed, as all the Premiers did, that such a construction could be put upon them, that it was an offer of preferential trade.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Then, my hon. friend says this is not an overstatement. I will read it again:

He was met almost on landing by the Duke of Devonshire who made a speech offering in unmistakable terms. In proof of this latter fact the morning after, every Cobdenite, every ultra-free-trade journal in England—

There was not an exception, bear in mind.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Richard is himself again.

Every ultra free-trade journal in England denounced the Duke of Devonshire for having gone over to the other side and for having adopted Imperialistic views. The speeches of the other colonial Premiers delivered at the same time almost showed what the trend of the offer was. But, asks Sir Charles, what did this man, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, do? Why, he turned his back on his solemn pledge and declined the boon.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. In most unmistakable terms.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. So, Mr. Speaker, even the quotation in "Britannia" from the "Mail" is not an overstatement. The hon. gentleman has not discredited his own testimony; his own testimony is strictly accurate, that the Duke of Devonshire made this preferential offer in unmistakable terms at Liverpool, and my hon. friend repudiated it, and turned his back upon it. Now, in this state of affairs, I wonder who is best able to know what was in the mind of the Duke of Devonshire. Is it the correspondent of the New York "Evening Post"? It proves nothing to say that the Cobdenite journals denounced him for having made some heterodox observations on the subject of free trade. Now, Mr. Speaker, in order to settle this question and ascertain what the Duke of Devonshire really did mean, I wrote to His Grace a letter. Perhaps some other persons are anxious to know what construction to put upon his utterances. We are asked tonight to declare by a solemn resolution that the trend of the remarks of the Duke of Devonshire was, as my hon. friend stated at the big smoker in Ward 3, on the 22nd of February last, an unqualified offer of preferential trade. We are asked to interpret his utterances in that way, and to pass a resolution of Parliament saying that was his meaning, and to open negotiations with the British Empire. Well, Sir, I have heard the hon. gentleman on more than one occasion speak as he is reported in the "Mail" to have spoken. I had read and reread every utterance I could find of the Duke of Devonshire upon the subject of preferential trade, and I confess that I had never been able to draw the deduction that my hon. friend has drawn from any of his utterances. At last, in order to relieve myself of my dilemma, and to make clear what was misty, I took the liberty of addressing a communication to His Grace the Duke of Devonshire upon the subject. And, in order to make no mistake, I quoted this interesting article that I have read from the "Mail," and that I have now for ever made lasting by placing it upon the pages of "Hansard." Before reading His Grace's reply, I will read my letter, that the hon. gentleman may see whether or not I presented the case fairly to him :

Ottawa, 1st April, 1899.

My Lord Duke,—

I inclose a copy of the "Mail and Empire," of Toronto, of the date of the 23rd February, 1899, upon page 7 of which you will observe a report of a speech of Sir Charles Tupper, delivered at Toronto the previous evening, wherein Sir Charles is reported as having spoken as follows :—

"During the campaign of 1896, Sir Wilfrid Laurier had gone from hustings to hustings saying that he was as much in favour of preferential trade as Sir Charles Tupper. He had given his solemn pledge that if placed in power he would send a commission to England to negotiate with Lord Salisbury for preferential trade. He became Premier, and went to England in the midst of all the glory of a great Jubilee, at the time when everything was favourable of such a policy. He was met, almost on landing, by the Duke of Devonshire, who made a speech offering this great boon in unmistakable terms. In proof of this latter fact, the morning after, every Cobdenite, every ultra free-trade journal in England denounced the Duke of Devonshire for having gone over to the other side, and of having adopted Imperialistic views. The speeches of the other colonial Premiers delivered at the same time almost showed what the trend of the offer was.

"But," asked Sir Charles, "what did this man (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) do? Why, he turned his back on his solemn pledge and declined the boon."

I take the liberty of inquiring whether you made to Sir Wilfrid such an offer as is stated by Sir Charles, or any offer to give to Canada a preference in the market of Great Britain, and, if so, would you have the goodness to state the particulars of such offer.

Sir Charles states the occasion of the offer being made as almost at the time of Sir Wilfrid Laurier's landing in England, and I presume Sir Charles Tupper's statement is based upon some public utterance of Your Grace about that time. If, on any public occasion during Sir Wilfrid Laurier's visit to England in 1897, Your Grace made any public deliverance upon the subject, might I ask if your remarks were accurately published in the British press, and if so, where I could procure authentic copies of any papers containing reports of your speeches upon the subject?

If not too much trouble, I should be most grateful if Your Grace could cause to be sent to me copies of any public journals containing speeches of Your Grace's having any reference to any offer made to Sir Wilfrid with reference to preferential trade in favour of Canada in the markets of Great Britain.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is incorrect: I made no such statement.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Let me continue reading my letter:

When in England last summer I observed an article in "Britannia" referring to statements published in the Toronto "Mail and Empire" to the effect that Your Grace had made an offer of preferential trade to Canada, and that Sir Wilfrid Laurier had refused it; and "Britannia" challenged the correctness of the "Mail and Empire."

I would be glad to be permitted to make public use of Your Grace's reply.

I am, my Lord Duke,

Your Grace's very obedient servant,

His Grace the Duke of Devonshire, K.G., Devonshire House, 78 Piccadilly West, London, Eng.

Mr. Speaker, I have a reply and I have permission to make use of it in any way I like. I do not think I can make a better use of it, both in the interest of truth, which is a consideration always, and in the interest of fairness to His Grace and fairness to the great subject we are discussing, than to remove doubts and to let us know where we stand upon this question. I think, for these considerations, that it is wise to give publicity to his reply. To propose to solemnly ask the Parliament of Canada to declare that a member of the Imperial Government, as the Duke of Devonshire is, in the name of the Imperial Government, made a certain proposition and to ask this Parliament to make a declaration as to what that hon. Minister may have said, when he did not say it, would be lowering to the dignity of Parliament.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) is misstating the resolution.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) may make any observations he likes afterwards. Let me read the reply of His Grace:

Privy Council Office,

2nd of May, 1899.

My dear Sir,—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of 1st April.

The best answer I can give to your inquiries is to inclose you a copy of the report of the speeches made on the various occasions in the summer of 1897, when I had the pleasure of meeting the colonial Premier, in my capacity as president of the British Empire League.

I do not think that, in any of those speeches, you will find anything to support the view of my opinion on the question of the policy of granting preferential trade to the colonies, which appears to have been held by Sir Charles Tupper, and by some of the journals in this country, which seek to attribute what they term "Protectionist heresies" to members of the Unionist Government.

It was, no doubt, my speech at Liverpool on the 12th June, 1897, which was referred to by Sir Charles Tupper, and my admission that free trade had not done for us all that was once expected, may have been commented on by free traders or opposition journals.

But, while I congratulated Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the Dominion of Canada on the offer which had been made to admit British goods at reduced rates, as compared with those on the goods of other nations, as an important step in the direction of the Imperial Unity, I had no authority to offer, and did not offer to Canada a preference in British markets.

You are at liberty to make what use you please of this letter.

Believe me, my dear sir,
Yours faithfully,
(Sd.) DEVONSHIRE.

The Hon. W. Mulock.

The Duke of Devonshire probably knew what he said. I have read his letter here. In the face of these words I ask my hon. friend if he thinks it would be in harmony with fairness, or with the fitness of things, that we should here make a solemn declaration, and place upon the Journals of the House, the opinion of the Canadian Parliament that the Duke of Devonshire made to Canada on the 12th of June, 1897, or at any other period in his life, an offer of preferential trade.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Will the hon. gentleman allow me?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, I am going to finish now.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to answer the question that he has asked?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will allow the hon. gentleman if he will not make a speech.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will not make a speech, I will call my hon. friend's attention to the fact that he is misstating the resolution, and that the resolution contains no such statement as he has made. The resolution gives, verbatim, the expression of the Duke of Devonshire and it adds that the speech in which the Duke of Devonshire gives utterance to these views was regarded in England as a foreshadowing of the adoption by Her Majesty's Government of the proposal above referred to, made by Mr. Chamberlain in March, 1896. The Duke of Devonshire's letter says that this is true. He says that a number of papers did give that construction to these expressions. That is what the resolution says.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It suggests that speech, in which the Duke of Devonshire gives utterance to these views, received a certain interpretation in England. Is that a statement which should appear in the Journals of the House after what I have said? After what we know, even assuming that the technicality that my hon. friend would resort to were good and sound after we know now that the view, as it appears in this resolution which is said to have prevailed in England is, incorrect, I ask the hon. gentleman if we should endorse a rumour that he says is flying about here and there in England, and predicate upon that the statement that Great Britain is prepared for a great commercial revolution. Should we, in justice to the Duke of Devonshire, endorse a view which the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) says is in existence, but which His Grace says is incorrect?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, he does not. He does not deny the truth of Mr. Chamberlain's statements.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Mr. Speaker, I think I have effectually shown that if my hon. friends opposite had started out in a wiser way to secure an expression of opinion from this House in reference to preferential trade, I believe a resolution could have been framed that would have met the unanimous opinion of Parliament; but, Sir, a resolution has been framed here partly aiming at preferential trade, I will admit, but partly and chiefly aiming at the right hon. Prime Minister and at the Government of Canada. Under the guise and cloak of patriotism the hon. gentlemen are attempting to make a party question out of a question that should be superior to Canadian party politics, and they are seeking to divide the people upon a subject upon which we should all be united. For these reasons I submit that the resolution should not receive the endorsement of the Canadian Parliament.

Mr. A. H. MOORE (Stanstead). Mr. Speaker, it is with very great diffidence that I rise to express my views upon this important question, partly from the fact that it is an intricate subject, partly from the fact that it has been discussed so ably by those who have preceded me, and partly from the fact that owing to the lateness of the hour and the advanced stage of the session even an important question does not receive the consideration and respect it would command at an earlier period. This is a very important subject, and I think, Sir, that no one will dispute the statement when I say that no question or subject has been presented to this Parliament that is of so great importance to all classes of the people as the one which has been presented for the consideration of hon. members of this House. It has been said that the restless spirit of man permeating the nations of the world, is ever seeking for new methods, new inventions, and new channels in which they can place themselves in a more favourable position than their competitors. It has been said, too, that the sentiments of nations are undergoing great changes. At one time nations rose to great power and magnificence by conquering others adding their domain to their own, and reducing the conquered people to a state of vassalage. We will not have to delve very deeply into the pages of history to come to that time, when successful warriors and ambitious rulers, as the poet said :

Unsheathed the sword, dipped it in blood,
And wrote their names on lands and cities desolate.

But the nations of the present day have come to the conclusion that a country at peace grows faster and stronger than a nation at war. The plough, the loom and the forge are looked upon as mightier implements than the sword. And to-day one of the most important conventions that has ever been held in the world is convened for the purpose of devising means by which international disputes may be settled by peaceable and diplomatic measures, without resorting to the sword. The great struggle of nations then, is not as it was in former times, to add to their domain, their importance and their influence by conquest; the great struggle to-day is for commercial and industrial supremacy. Each nation is struggling to capture the greatest possible portion of the world's trade, and in consequence of her commercial supremacy the envious eyes of all the nations are now directed towards Great Britain. Our mother country has grown in wealth, and its population has increased to such a great extent and her territory is so small that she cannot support the forty millions of her inhabitants by the products of her own soil. In that little sea-girt isle, only about half the size of the province of Quebec, only about half the size of the province of Ontario, and only about one-third the size of the province of British Columbia, they can raise only enough food to support 17,000,000 of their people, leaving the other 23,000,000 to depend entirely upon outside countries for their food. To-day there is a great struggle among the food-producing countries of the world to secure the largest possible portion of these supplies. England, we have heard to-night, imports and consumes $900,000,000 worth of food annually, and we find from statistics that she imports annually of wheat, barley, oats, flour, animals for food, preserved meats, cheese, butter, eggs, fruit, fish, lard, condensed milk and potatoes, poultry and game, amounting to $600,296,366 worth. These, you will observe are articles of production which Canada can supply to the best advantage. It is, then, a matter of great importance that we should be permitted to enter into the markets of Great Britain upon more favourable terms than the foreign food-producing nations of which we are rivals. The value of the imports from Canada in 1896 was $6,000,000 worth to the United States, and $40,000,000 worth to the United Kingdom. In 1897 we exported to the United States $7,000,000 worth and to the United Kingdom $46,000,000. In 1898 we exported to the United States $5,000,000 worth and to the United Kingdom $66,000,000 worth. In 1898 for every dollar's worth we sent to the United States, we sent to England $13.10 worth. Therefore, it strikes me that if the present Government would make the same effort to secure the markets of Great Britain that they have made to secure the markets of the United States, the farming industry of Canada would be very much more benefited. I believe, too, that their efforts in the direction of securing the British market would meet with greater success, because if they were successful in securing reciprocity with the United States, it will only be on such terms as will work injury instead of benefit to the people of Canada. In the next place, Sir, we might consider for a moment the magnitude of the great Empire to which we belong, and in which we take great pride in belonging. I have here the figures giving the population of the 38 colonies, dependencies and protectorates belonging to Great Britain, and that population amounts to 381,404,960. The area of British territory is 11,473,408 square miles, and so we have within the British Empire one-fourth of the population of the world, and one-fourth of the earth's surface. Therefore, we can truly say that the British Empire to which we belong is the grandest Empire the world has ever seen. In regard to the trade of that Empire, we find that in all her possessions she imported $80,000,000, and exported $85,000,000 worth in 1897. The total trade of England amounts to: imports, $3,639,464,555, and exports, $2,246,225,040, showing a balance of trade against the Empire of many hundreds of millions of dollars. This question of the competition of Canada with the different food-producing countries of the world in the British market is therefore a very important one. It is, therefore, important that we should ascertain, if possible, the cost of raising wheat in the different countries with which we have to compete. I have here statements which were made by Mr. James Long and by Sir John Lawes, men competent to judge, and excellent authorities upon that question. Mr. Long says, quoting from Sir John Lawes, an authority of unexceptionable worth on agricultural questions, a statement made in 1879 :

The whole question, however, turns upon price, and in recent years the rates obtainable for cereals have fallen so seriously that British arable land continues to be laid down in grass. Farmers will not grow what does not pay. He then gives some figures as to wheat production. In 1877 the average price per quarter in the year was 56s. 9d. ; in the winter of 1894-95 it fell to 20s.

Twenty years ago the export from the United States reached only 76,000,000 bushels; in 1891 it rose to 227,000,000 bushels. Between 1880 and 1899 the wheat area in the Canadian North-west increased to 953,000 acres, while the production in the Dominion increased by 10,000,000 bushels. In 1880 India exported less than half a million bushels; now her average export is 30,000,000—in some years rising to 50,000,000 bushels. In 1861 Australia's wheat area was 733,000 acres; in 1892 it had risen to 3,822,000 acres. The export of Argentina in 1889 was only 680,000 bushels; in 1894 it had grown to 61,800,000. Needless to say that to put so much extra grain—annually increasing—is equivalent to a material reduction of prices. Save on a diminished area of the best lands, the production of wheat in England is a thing of the past. Taking England as 100, the relative cost of the production of wheat is (as Mr. Crawford recently showed before the Royal Statistical Society) in Dakota, 57; in Russia, 54; in India, 66; and in the United States, 70. Farmers in Kansas profess to raise wheat at 1s. a bushel, and Mr. Long has conversed with farmers in Dakota, Manitoba, and Assinibola, who could pay their way if they obtained an average yield of 15 bushels to the acre, and a price of 50 cents, or 2s. 1d. In England it is difficult to produce a crop of wheat for less than 85s. an acre, where a rent of 20s. is paid. As for distance and freight, the ocean is scarcely a barrier, as wheat can be carried from Chicago to Liverpool for 6½ cents a bushel, or 9s. 9d. a ton. Mr. Long has, himself, on the other hand, paid 11s. 11d. a ton for grain conveyed in four-ton lots a distance of a hundred miles, and for barley offal, from Burton to Hertfordshire, no less than 16s. 8d. If an Englishman has to live by farming, therefore, it is positively an advantage, where transit is necessary, to farm in the United States or Canada.

We have heard discussed to-night pretty freely what preferential trade would do for Canada. We have between 200,000,000 and 300,000,000 acres of arable land in Manitoba and the North-west Territories that have never been touched by the spade, scratched by the plough, or tickled by the hoe, and that are awaiting immigrants from other countries to settle upon them. This land is capable of raising large quantities of cereals, sufficient to supply the whole English market. If that were occupied, it would increase our population to an enormous extent, which is one of the great objects that this Government should have in view. Nothing would attract immigrants to a greater extent than a preference in the English markets for our products, and, inasmuch as the farmers in that country cannot raise grain in competition with the grain-growers in this country, and cannot obtain a living on their land, they would immigrate to this country, and in that way our population and material wealth would be largely increased, and this increase of population would furnish customers for the manufacturing industries of the east. Thus the one industry would develop the others, and the time would come when we would have much greater title than we have even to-day to consider ourselves the most important colony of any belonging to the British Crown. From the point of view of what this improvement in our condition would do for the mother country, we must keep in mind the fact that the time may come when England may be at war with some of the important nations of the earth. At present, if a nation like Russia and some other foreign nations were to join together and place an embargo upon wheat, they could starve out England in a very short time. But if England would give us a preference in her markets, that would be a great encouragement to immigration to this country, and we would then be enabled to raise all the wheat and cattle that England requires, so that she would be absolutely independent of any other nation under any circumstances whatever. Mr. Long gives 233,400,000 bushels of wheat as the quantity required to supply the population of Great Britain. The home production of Great Britain he estimated as 64,000,000 bushels, raised on 1,980,228 acres, so that it is necessary for Great Britain to import from outside countries 169,400,000 bushels, with some 3,000,000 bushels for seed. Are the British colonies equal to the production of this quantity? Canada's wheat acreage Mr. Long estimates at 50,000,000 bushels, raised from 2,875,814 acres. Australasia produces 39,719,489 bushels from 4,165,494 acres. Deduct for home consumption 54,275,000 bushels, and the Indian surplus of 90,728,509 bushels added, if exported to England, would fall short about 100,000,000 bushels. Looking to Canada for the solution of this difficulty, we find that, at 18 bushels to the acre, 5,555,000 acres would furnish what we require. In Canada 55,550 farmers, each occupying a quarter section of land and growing 100 acres of wheat, would suffice for the purpose; and it is estimated that we have over 200,000,000 acres of land uncultivated, suitable for raising wheat and other grain in our great North-west. Therefore, we see that if England would take this matter up and give us a preference in her markets, farmers from the old world would take up these lands and make England in a short time independent of all the nations in the world as regards her food supply.

In times past we heard great complaints made with regard to the public debt of this country. It used to be said that the country was being ruined by the Liberal-Conservative party, owing to the great national debt which had been incurred by them. It was further urged that that party was much more favourable to the manufacturing industries than to the farmers, and prejudice was sought to be raised against us on that score. Well, if you will take the opportunity of looking at the amount that has been expended on railways and canals and the improvement of the navigation of our waters.

It will be found that we have built over 16,500 miles of railway, with ordinary share capital of $255,807,476; preference share capital, $105,267,864 ; bonded debt, $336,137,001. The Dominion Government has spent on railways $149,413,309 ; the provincial governments, $30,055,147 ; the municipalities, $14,494,757 ; and individuals, $8,640,952, making a total invested in railways of $389,817,900. The figures concerning our canals are as follows. First, the number of miles:—

St. Lawrence system.....	71
Ottawa and Richelieu system.....	29½

Total No. of miles..... 100½

The figures of expenditure on canals show :

Amount expended on canals to 1896...	$36,992,736
For renewals, repairs, &c., and staff...	13,932,786

Total expenditures..... $50,925,522

So, we have a total expenditure on railways and canals of $980,743,422, and on public works, $212,130,002. In 1896, there were steamers and vessels numbering 7,277, with a tonnage of 789,299 tons. Of these vessels 1,762 were steamers with a tonnage of 251,176.

Now, what has been the object of this great investment but to open up the distant portions of the country to colonization and settlement and to furnish cheap transportation for the farmers and other producers, so that they may lay down their products in the English market at as low a cost as other food-producing nations with which we come into competition. And if England would only give us a preference in her markets over foreign nations who are not commercially friendly to this country, it would make this great outlay of money in Canada, designed to give rapid and cheap transportation, of additional value. It strikes me that it is well worth while to make an effort to secure this preferential trade, whatever the contentions may be in regard to the different opinions and views held by the different individuals in this country and in England. Canada wants preferential trade ; Canada can get it if she pushes hard enough and continues to press for it. The Liberal party of Canada seem to be very weak and timid in regard to preferential trade. They exhibited the same timidity between 1874 and 1878 in regard to the National Policy. They said that that policy would endanger British connection, and they were afraid that if it were put into operation it would injure this country in the estimation of the people of England. They further said that the Liberal-Conservative party would never put that policy into operation. They said that even after the policy had been submitted to the people in the elections of 1878 and had been supported by an overwhelming majority at the polls. But the Liberal-Conservative party had promised the people of this country the National Policy, and they carried out to the very letter the promise they had made. Had all the Reformers of the world been as timid as the Liberal party seem to be with reference to preferential trade, a very few reforms would have been carried out in the past. In reading history, we find the record of the efforts to abolish the British slave trade, and we see how long Wilberforce, Clarkson and others were pleading with the British Government and how their supplications and petitions were disregarded. But the time came when the people of England were converted to the idea of these reformers, and the slave trade was abolished. Had these men been as timid as this Government, the slave trade would have been continued until the present day. We have read something of the great efforts made to secure freedom of trade in England. It was many years before Richard Cobden, John Bright, Villiers and others were able, by discussion and agitation, to secure the reform they advocated. Had they taken the first "no" for an answer and discontinued their work, the hon. Premier of this country would not have had his breast decorated with a Cobden medal as he has had, and the system of protection would have been continued in England. I say that the National Policy was feared by hon. gentlemen opposite because they thought it would injure British connection. Protection was half the policy, we may say. It was carried out in 1878, to give control of the Canadian markets to the Canadian producer. But the other half, for which we are contending now, is to get control of the English markets for the Canadian producer ; and when that is carried out it will be a great boon to the people of this country, it will make this country indeed bud and blossom like the rose. The effect of this policy will be to give to this country something of the power that, according to the legend, the magic mittens and the enchanted moccasins gave to Hiawatha. With the magic mittens, he could break asunder the hardest rock, and with the enchanted moccasins he could outstrip the wind in fleetness. And so, with the National Policy as adopted in 1878 and carried out by this Government, securing control of the Canadian markets for the Canadian producers, and, as we now propose, securing control of the English market for Canadian producers, we break down all opposition to the progress and prosperity of this country and enable her to outstrip every nation in her advancement. I will not take up more time discussing this important question, but will close with the lines of the poet :

There is a land of every land the pride,
Beloved by Heaven o'er all the world beside,
Where brighter scenes dispense serener light,
And milder moons imparadise the night.
Ho ! all ye pilgrims, wherever you may roam,
That spot this country, that land our home.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). At this late hour, I do not propose to occupy the time of the House at great length in dealing with this subject, though I regard it as one of such great importance that any member would be justified in devoting a good deal of time to it. I was pleased to hear the statement made by the leader of the Government in the beginning of his speech that we were all agreed as to the desirability of preferential trade. So, it is reasonable to assume that the only point of difference is that the Government believe preferential trade is not obtainable, while the leader of the Opposition and the Conservative party believe that it is obtainable.

The Postmaster General rather complained that his resolution was moved when we were going into Committee of Supply, and that an effort had not been made to frame a resolution which would be acceptable to both sides of the House. He forgot that only a year ago an effort was made to frame a resolution that would voice the sentiments of both political parties in Canada, and at that time the Postmaster General's friends moved an amendment to that resolution, deliberately burking the aim of the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill), and his friends. Sir, I have always regarded it as a matter of great importance that we should agree upon some resolution embodying the views of both sides of the House upon this important question. Every effort which has been made on this side of the House has been met either by a refusal from the other side or by such an amendment as would prevent it from giving expression to our united views. The importance of the principle involved in this resolution is so great that it scarcely requires any time to prove it to the Canadian people. Its importance will be realized when we think for a moment that our aim is to obtain an advantage in the greatest market of the world over all foreign competitors. The British market is above all markets the most important one to us. It is a market that is growing rapidly, and as time goes on it will become more and more important to us. Now, if we could so arrange our trade relations with the mother country that we should have an advantage over the United States and over other foreign countries now competing with us in that market, it is plain to every Canadian what immense benefits we should reap from that state of affairs. Therefore, I am sure that I am but voicing the sentiment of the Canadian people when I say that the leader of the Opposition and my hon. friend from North Bruce, who have on every possible occasion given expression to the opinion of the Conservative party of the desirability of this arrangement, are deserving of the gratitude of the Canadian people and their eternal thanks for their efforts in that direction. We regard this as the best means of impressing upon the people of Great Britain the importance of such an arrangement for both the mother country and her colonies. From no deliberative assembly in Canada could a voice go up more likely to be heard with respect, and more likely to be heeded by the British Parliament, than from this Canadian Parliament. This is the place where we should express the wishes of the Canadian people. The present leader of the Opposition and the Conservative party have invariably availed themselves of the opportunity to express their desire of bringing about these commercial relations with the mother country. That is the admitted policy of the Conservative party. We have always endeavoured to accomplish that object by cultivating a Canadian sentiment in that direction, and we have endeavoured to impress upon the mother country the wisdom of giving us that special consideration in her market. The action of the present Government, in our judgment, in making a reduction of the duty on goods coming from the mother country, was regrettable and detrimental to the interest of Canada, because it was done at a time above all others when there was the very best opportunity of advancing the principle of preferential trade that had been advocated by the Conservative party for many years. That was in the year of Jubilee when the Premier of Canada was there along with the other colonial Premiers, but the speeches of the Premier of Canada were strongly calculated to deter the mother country from making any advances or any offers in that direction at present, and for a long time to come. Why do I say so? Because when I read in one of the British papers a report of his speech, I find the Premier is credited with saying, when speaking of the preferential offer they had given to England:

This we have done voluntarily, not asking any compensation.

That is in contradiction to what the Conservative party were always asking. Whenever we made a concession in the interest of the mother country, we asked for a quid pro quo.

There is a class of our fellow citizens who ask that all such concessions should be made for a 'quid pro quo.'

He might have said that that class are the Conservative party in Canada. They have always held that it is the duty of public men, being the custodians of the rights of the people and the trustees of the people's money, to give away nothing belonging to Canada without getting something in return for it. That is a principle which is held by the Conservative party, and this is the class of whom the right hon. Prime Minister is referring when he speaks of a class of people in Canada who ask that all such concessions should be made for a quid pro quo.

The Canadian Government has ignored all such sentiments.

The Canadian Government, as represented by the right hon. Prime Minister, has ig nored all such sentiments. We are prepared to give away what is regarded by the other class in Canada as a valuable interest belonging to Canada without asking anything in return. We have ignored all such financial sentiment, all such commercial sentiment, all such selfishness, in the interest of the Canadian people, and we have given away liberally of Canada's rights and interests, but we have not asked anything in return for them.

We have done it because we owe a debt of gratitude to Great Britain. We have done it because it is no intention of ours to disturb in any way the system of free trade which has done so much for England. But we are told that this policy, which has been adopted by the Canadian Government, cannot last, because it is coming into conflict with existing treaties. Let me tell you this, the Canadian people are willing to give this preference to Great Britain; they are not willing to extend it to other countries at the present time.

I merely refer to this for the purpose of drawing the attention of the Canadian people to the statement of the right hon. Prime Minister that we have given away these concessions without asking anything in return for them. The sentiment prevailing in England at that time was such that, if a united effort on our part were made conjointly with the Premiers of all the other colonies we might get some concessions in the British markets that foreign countries cannot get, but we have ignored all that. We voluntarily give away this right of Canada; we ask nothing for it in return. This marks distinctly and plainly the difference between the two political parties in Canada. The Conservative party have ever held that a party charged with the duty of governing the country are not entitled to give away anything belonging to Canada without getting something in return for it. The Reform party say: We believe we are justified in giving away this great consideration and concession to England, and we do it voluntarily without asking or accepting anything in return. The time at which the Prime Minister made that statement was the time, above all others, when there was a sentiment which would justify the belief that, if a reasonable effort had been made by Canada, as the premier colony in the Empire, we were most likely to accomplish what both parties hold is desirable in the interest of Canada. But at the very time that there was hope of accomplishing this object, when there was an invitation to make an offer and to endeavour to get preferential trade the Prime Minister of Canada does not ask anything, but gives the great concession that he has given by the preferential tariff and asks for nothing in return. I am justified in holding that the action of the Prime Minister was most unfortunate having in view the interest of Canada. It was unfortunate in regard to the time he made the statement and it was unfortunate, as well, in regard to the action. I believe that this is one of the surest ways of securing and perpetuating Imperial federation, because the establishment and carrying out of the principles of commerce and trade, mutually beneficial to two countries, is the surest way of binding these countries together. When we establish relations that will be mutually beneficial to both countries for all time to come, we bind these countries together by a tie that appeals to the selfishness of human nature in both. If we can accomplish this, it is the surest way to advance Imperial federation. The Reform party join with us in the ambition to advance Imperial federation. They are members of the Imperial Federation League, and they express their desire, as well as we do, for closer relations with the mother country. In my judgment, it is one of the ways by which we can establish closer relations with the mother country and by which we can forge an indissoluble chain binding us to the mother country. The time, above all others, was the most appropriate time for pressing this claim upon the attention of the mother country. It was the Jubilee time, when the Premiers of the various colonies were all in England, and when they, in response to the invitation of England, expressed their views upon this important question. Yet the Prime Minister of the great colony of Canada did not avail himself of the opportunity of saying a word in the interest of Canada in connection with this very important question. He says that there is no difference of opinion between the two political parties as to the wisdom of this policy if we can obtain it. That is exactly what he told the people of Canada before 1896, when he went through the country proclaiming that his party were as anxious for Imperial federation and preferential trade with the mother country as the Conservative party. If the people of Canada entrust us with the duty of governing the country, we will go over to the mother country and endeavour, as far as it is in our power, to promote those better trade relations with the mother country which we all regard as desirable. Immediately after being entrusted with the government of the country, the right hon. Prime Minister went over to England, and, instead of carrying out that pledge, instead of carrying out consistently the policy that he enunciated before the Canadian people, he said: We give these concessions voluntarily without asking anything in return. We do not ask England to disturb the principles of trade that she has carried out for so many years in the past. We do not ask her to give anything in return, but we voluntarily give her a preference for which we ask nothing in return, although he had told the people of Canada that it was desirable that we should have a preference in the markets of the United Kingdom. He comes back and admits to-day that it is desirable that we should have it, but, when a favourable opportunity presented itself he did not move a hand, he did not utter one word in furtherance of that desire. If preferential trade is desirable, as they say, why are not the right hon. gentleman and his friends making an effort to obtain it? Sir, they never have made such an effort, and they are not making that effort to-day. They avail themselves of every opportunity to discredit the assumption that it is possible to attain it. Their whole argument, both here and in England, is, that in the first place, it is impossible to obtain it, and in the second place, it would not be in the interests of the country, if it were obtained. They say, if it were obtained, it would result in a fiscal policy which, in the judgment of the right hon. gentleman, is not in the best interests of the country, and it would be inimical to the policy of free trade, which governs the mother country. In the next breath, the right hon. gentleman says it is desirable that we should have preferential trade. How inconsistent he is. He must be a living enigma to the Canadian people, if he does not make an effort to obtain this boon, which he says is so desirable. He tells us that we cannot have preferential trade with England unless we abandon protection, but in the same sentence he tells us that his Government has given us a substantial preferential trade with England, in advance of what any other Government has given to Canada. He tells us that the preferential trade which he has obtained is of advantage to Canada, and of advantage to the mother country, and at the same time he tells us that we cannot have preferential trade with England unless we do away with protection. But if the hon. gentleman has preferential trade with England, as he claims, he has it without lowering the protective duty, because he has left the principle of protection the same in the Canadian tariff as it was before. What is there in the proposition which would necessitate our doing away with the right which we enjoy of imposing duties upon goods coming from every other country in the world except England and her colonies, or imposing a higher duty on goods coming from every other country than upon English goods? In my judgment, there is nothing incompatible in the situation. We could just as well have the preferential trade which this resolution calls for, as the preferential trade which the Prime Minister tells us we have to-day. We could have it without any interference with the principle of protection, which we are carrying out in our tariff at the present time. The preferential trade which the Liberal party has given to Canada, has proved delusive in the highest degree as to any beneficial results accruing to Canadians. The right hon. gentleman told us that it was intended to develop trade between Canada and the mother country, but the Trade and Navigation Returns prove that, while it is true that in some few lines trade has increased slightly, the undeniable fact remains that we are increasing our trade with the United States to a larger extent since the introduction of this new system than before. If the Liberal preferential trade had worked as it was prophesied it would, it would have reduced our trade with the United States and increased our trade with the mother country, but it has worked in the very opposite direction. We are reducing our trade with the mother country generally speaking, and we are increasing our trade with the United States, and, therefore, I say that this preferential trade which the Liberal Government inaugurated, is a delusion and a snare. Not only that, but, in my judgment, it is distinctly detrimental to the interests of Canada, and why? Because it destroyed whatever chance we had of getting a proper preferential trade with England. There is no doubt whatever that on account of the educational forces that were kept up all along the line, the sentiment of the British people was in favour of giving Canadians a preference in the British market, but the action of the present Government destroyed our chance of getting that preference. They have given England what England desired, namely, access to our markets with a lower rate of duty than they impose on other countries, and they got from England nothing in return. When we ask England to give us an advantage in her markets over other countries, her answer will be: What are you going to give us in return? We have given away for nothing what would have brought us a quid pro quo, and now we have nothing to offer England in return for a preference in her market. Therefore, I say that the preferential trade of this Government was distinctly detrimental to Canadians. Let me ask, Sir, is it probable, or possible, that preferential trade could be secured with the mother country, as aimed at in this resolution? The difference between the two political parties in this House seems to be, that the Conservative party believes that it is not only possible, but that it is very probable, we could secure this preferential trade, if a proper effort were made; but the present Government either believes that it cannot be obtained, or else they do not desire to obtain it. The difference between the two parties was similarly exemplified with regard to the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The Reform party of that day held that the resources of Canada were not equal to cope with the building of that road, and, therefore, that it could not be built. On the other hand, the Conservative party said that the road could be built, and that if they had an opportunity, they would prove that it could be built within the resources of Canada. The Conservative party got that opportunity, and they proved to the world that the Canadian Pacific Railway could be built. The difference between the two political parties in Canada to-day on the question of preferential trade is exactly parallel to that. The Reform party say that preferential trade with the mother country cannot be secured, and, therefore, they do not make an effort to secure it. If that is their conscientious conviction, they might be justified in not making the effort; but if, on the other hand, they say it is desirable to secure it, and they do not make the effort, then they show that they have not the same hope in the future of this country that the Conservatives have. The Conservative party in Canada to-day not only claim that it is possible, but more than possible, and highly probable, that preferential trade can be secured, if a proper effort is made. So long as the party which controls the destinies of the country does not make an effort for preferential trade, so long will the country be without that great boon. We are, therefore, justified in coming to the conclusion that it is possible preferential trade could be secured, judging by the pronouncements of public men in England on that question.

We had to-night the argument presented to this House by the hon. Postmaster General that the sentiment of the British people is opposed to preferential trade, and he based that argument on a letter from the Duke of Devonshire written to him in reply to one of his own, asking His Grace what he meant by certain public enunciations which he had delivered on this question. That letter he gave as conclusive evidence that English sentiment was not in favour of this policy. But I contend that the quotations which were made to this House by the hon. leader of the Opposition and by the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) from the speeches of Mr. Chamberlain and the Duke of Devonshire justify us in coming to the conclusion that, in their opinion, if the colonies desired preferential trade and asked for it, the mother country will be prepared to meet them more than half way. That being the case, I am warranted in saying that it is possible for the Canadian people to obtain preferential trade, if they will only try to get it. But so long as we never make the attempt, we are not likely to get it, and the present Government not only will not ask for it but declare to the Canadian people that the reason they will not is because it could not be had even if they did.

I had intended to touch on a few other subjects in connection with this question, but considering the lateness of the hour, I think it the part of wisdom to refrain, and shall confine myself to saying in conclusion that I think I am voicing the sentiment and the policy of the Conservative party when I say that, in the judgment of that party, preferential trade is a policy which would be beneficial to Canada and which we should endeavour to obtain. We pretend further that not only is that policy desirable, but that it is obtainable if proper efforts were made. So long, however, as the present Government remain in power, it is impossible for the Canadian people to obtain this desirable object; and as time goes on and both parties lay their political platforms before the people, the distinction between the two will become more and more apparent. It is the policy of the Conservative party that we should have preferential trade with the mother country based upon the principles enunciated in this resolution, and the sooner the Conservative party returns to power the nearer we will be to the day when this desirable boon will be secured for the Canadian people.

But we are told by the hon. Postmaster General that there is something inconsistent in this resolution, because it is not in harmony with the sentiments expressed by the Duke of Devonshire and Mr. Chamberlain. Well, I have read the resolution very carefully, and do not see a single word in it that is inconsistent with the public utterances of these gentlemen on this question. The resolution merely recites what they have said, and then goes on to say that, in the opinion of this House, it is the duty of the Government, in response to the repeated advances of the Imperial authorities, to make an attempt to secure for the produce of Canada preferential treatment in the markets of the United Kingdom. Have the Imperial authorities not made advances when Mr. Chamberlain said: We are prepared to go even more than half way, we are prepared to do more than would be expected of us, we are not going to be even economical or niggardly in our treatment of the colonies on these lines should they express a desire for preferential treatment. When we have such public announcements made, are we not justified in saying that this resolution is entirely in harmony with their utterances, and that in response to such declarations we should make an effort in the direction indicated. It is the opinion of the Conservative party that we should make the effort, but the Government will not make the slightest move in the matter. On the contrary, they tell the Canadian people that although preferential trade is desirable, they will not make the slightest effort to get it. That plainly shows the difference between the two political parties. The Conservative party is in favour of such a preferential trade with the mother country as will give us an advantage in the home market over our foreign competitors. The Conservative party is in favour of better trade relations with the mother country, and are asking her to give something in return for what we are prepared to offer. We are in favour of preferential trade relations with the mother country of such a nature that we will always get something in return for what we give, so that we will not be giving away what is valuable to us without getting anything in return. That is the platform of the Conservative party in contradistinction to that of the Reform party, and in my judgment, therefore, I consider this resolution a proper one. It is one that could be accepted by the leader of the Government without doing any injustice to his own party or his own public pronouncements on this question or to his conduct of affairs in this House. This is not a motion of want of confidence in the Government, and that notwithstanding the fact that it is made in amendment to the motion to go into Committee of Supply they can accept it. Why do not the Government accept it since its right hon. leader says such a preferential trade is desirable? If it be desirable in his view, why does he not accept it in the wording of this resolution? The reason is he is not prepared to obtain it. But if the Canadian people think it is desirable, then we say to them: When you are given the opportunity to express your views, we ask you to do so, and to return that party into power which not only claims that this policy is a desirable one, but that it can be put into effect, if a proper effort be made by the Canadian people to acquire it in the interests of the country.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Before we proceed further, I would like to ask my right hon. friend, as it is now late and we are to resume our session at eleven o'clock to-morrow, and will not, therefore, be able to conclude this debate to-night, whether it would not be desirable now to adjourn.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend tells me that a number of his friends want to speak, I do not want to press him unduly, but I think we might hear my hon. friend (Mr. McMillan) and then we can adjourn.

Mr. JOHN McMILLAN (South Huron). This is a very large question, Mr. Speaker, indeed, and one that has occupied the attention of this country for a considerable length of time. I am astonished that the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) and other members of the Conservative party should blame the Reform Government in such strong terms for not taking steps to obtain a preferential trade with Great Britain. Why, when they were in office seventeen or eighteen years, what steps did they take? How far did they advance the prospect of our obtaining preferential trade during all the time they were in office? We know that in 1894 an interesting provincial commission sat here in Ottawa. We know that the ex-Finance Minister (Mr. Foster) drew up a resolution to the effect that it was desirable to have preferential trade between Great Britain and her colonies. We know, moreover, that that commission examined very carefully into this question. And Lord Jersey, the commissioner sent out from Great Britain said:

England would have to consider what effect any great change in her fiscal policy would have on this enormous trade, this over 76 per cent of trade, which she carries on with the world; and as has been pointed out by the figures, a good deal of that trade consists of articles which are manufactured from the raw products of the colonies.

Sir Charles Mills has handed me a paper which I will ask you to allow me to read:

"It may be useful to recall the figures of the trade of the United Kingdom, as summarized by Sir Rawson Rawson for the year 1890 (and they are essentially the same for 1893), and to avoid the use of totals, which convey very little to the mind, we may avail ourselves of the figures representing the percentage proportions. Adopting this method, we find that the colonies—excluding India, the Straits Settlement and Hong Kong—represent 15.1 per cent of the total trade of the United Kingdom, of which 2.7 represents the trade with North America, 7.5 the trade with Australasia, 2.2 the trade with South Africa (Cape of Good Hope and Natal), and 2.7 that with all our other colonies."

And what is the position of Great Britain to-day with respect to this trade. I had the last agricultural returns of Great Britain placed in my hand the other day, and I find that of grain and breadstuffs, she imports 179,762,948 hundredweight. Of this, Canada sends 13,945,870 hundredweight, or 7½ per cent of the whole grain and breadstuffs imported into Great Britain. The other colonies send only 806,340 hundredweight, or 9-20th of 1 per cent of the whole import. So we see that Great Britain imported from her colonies a fraction over 8 per cent of the whole amount of breadstuffs. Consider what it would mean for Great Britain to pay a duty upon 92 per cent of the enormous quantity of breadstuffs imported into that country which would be necessary if preferential trade were adopted, as hon. gentlemen opposite propose. Now, of the trade of Great Britain that with the colonies is 25 per cent of the whole, that with the United States 19 per cent of the whole, with France 10 per cent, with Germany 8 per cent, and with various other countries 38 per cent. So we see, 25 per cent of the whole of Great Britain's trade is carried on with the colonies. And to give a preference to that, it is proposed to injure the 75 per cent with other countries by levying a preferential duty upon it. Why, Sir, the United States sends 102,873,290 hundredweight of the grain and breadstuffs imported by Great Britain or 57.3 per cent of the whole. Think of passing a law to tax that trade, particularly in view of the fact that the United States probably buys more of England's manufactured goods than any other country in the world. Will Great Britain endanger her trade with the whole world in order that she may protect 8 per cent of her breadstuff trade which comes from the colonies?

We have heard a good deal about Canada discriminating against Great Britain and about the election that took place in 1891.

The hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) told us that that election was run under such conditions that the result was a declaration in favour of granting special trade privileges to the United States. I wonder if the hon. gentleman forgets the pretext made before the people for dissolving the House and calling on the election. Was it not in order that the representatives of the Government could go to Washington and discuss reciprocity with the United States? I think that the leader of the Government declared that they had been asked to go to the United States and discuss reciprocity.

Mr. GIBSON. And the hon. member for North Bruce swallowed that.

Mr. McMILLAN. So he did, and so did the rest of his party. But the statement was not correct that they had been asked to go to Washington; the fact was that they had asked to be allowed to go to Washington, and the Government there had agreed that the representatives of Canada should go to Washington for a private conversation—not a discussion by commissioners, but a strictly private interview to see if arrangements could be made for the sending of commissioners to negotiate a treaty. And was that kept private by the Government of Canada? No. The present leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) declared that they were going to Washington at the instance of the United States Government to discuss reciprocity. But when he went to Washington and saw Secretary Blaine, the first thing he had to do was to admit that he had stated what was not correct, and that it was at the instance of the Canadian Government that they went there. Further, Mr. Blaine said that he was astonished that the Canadian Government had announced throughout the length and breadth of the land an arrangement which was in reality confidential. If Canada ever was disgraced by her public men, she was disgraced by the present leader of the Opposition at that time in making to the country the statements that he did. Newfoundland at that time had entered into a reciprocity treaty with the United States, and the Canadian Government acting the part of the dog in the manger, not having got reciprocity themselves thought to prevent Newfoundland from getting it. They appealed to the British Government and said that it would injure Canada to have a reciprocity treaty between United States and Newfoundland from which Canada was excluded. They must have felt that Canada would be benefited by reciprocity with the United States or why did they apply to the British Government to be taken in along with Newfoundland? We have heard it stated that the United States is not our best market but that Great Britain is our best market, but we still hold that we should be very much benefited if we could get so near a market as that of the United States. I beg to submit some evidence for making such a statement. I have here a statement showing some of the exports from Canada and the duties paid:

Mr. Speaker, will any gentleman tell me that it would not be a benefit to the Canadian farmer to have the United States market if we could get it upon honourable terms? We have always found that whenever we had two customers coming to our markets we could get better prices. Now, potatoes and turnips are perishable goods that we cannot take to the old country, so that for these goods the United States would be our best market. But let me say that the farmers of Canada are more independent of the market of the United States to-day than they ever were since Canada was a country, simply because we have been brought more prominently before the people of Great Britain, and we have sent them more of our products. The present Prime Minister of Canada, surrounded by the noble band of men forming his Cabinet, has formulated a policy that has galled the Conservatives to the very quick. They see now that during the eighteen years they were in power they did nothing of any real benefit to the country. Their jealousy is enormous, because this Government has been able to formulate a policy that has benefited this country beyond any policy that ever was adopted. Why, Sir, the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite during the last seventeen years had reduced the value of farm property in the province of Ontario by $100,000,000; and it has only begun to take a rise since the present Government came into power.

Now, Sir, of animals and their products, in 1889, we exported a total of $23,854,707. Of these Great Britain took $16,227,000, and the United States took $71,370. But in 1898 we find that our exports of animals and their products amounted to $44,301,470, of which Great Britain took $39,739,089, showing that our exports in that line are rapidly increasing to the mother country. Then, in agricultural products, in 1889, we exported $13,404,011, of which Great Britain took $3,674,055 and the United States took $9,125,707. But in 1899 we exported, of agricultural products, $33,063,285, of which Great Britain took $27,747,140, and the United States only took $1,133,293. That is an enormous increase, both of animals and their produce, and of agricultural products going to Great Britain. Now, let me state that in manufactured goods also there has been an increase of our exports to Great Britain under the present policy, something that did not take place under the policy of the late Government. In 1889, of manufactured goods, we exported $4,434,949, of which Great Britain took $1,679,359, and the United States took $1,822,948. But when we come to 1898, we exported of manufactured goods, $10,678,316, of which Great Britain took $4,900,806, and the United States only took $2,829,510. So that even in manufactured goods we are exporting a larger quantity to the British market than we did during the reign of the National Policy. "Canada for the Canadians" was the cry of the Conservative party. I say "Canada for the Canadians," but let Canadians secure access as far as possible to the markets of other countries. Although hon. gentlemen opposite declared that the National Policy was going to benefit the farmers of Canada, as a farmer, I say that the farmers have been injured by that policy. Neither in the prices of their animals nor in the prices of their agricultural products have they received any benefit because they have always found, and I speak from experience of my own county, which raises a larger number of horses and cattle than any other county in Ontario, that United States buyers have come in to buy horses which has given us a much better market than we otherwise would have had, and that the National Policy has been no benefit to us. We have found that, as a rule, prices in the United States were higher than those which prevailed in Great Britain.

While I am on my feet I may just say a word in reference to the question of free corn in regard to which, a great deal has been said in this House. I have been astonished at the ignorance displayed by a great many hon. gentlemen on the floor of this House in respect to the importation of corn. We imported 19,700,000 bushels of Indian corn during last year, according to the Trade and Navigation Returns. We re-exported of that 14,332,000 bushels of corn, leaving 5,368,000 bushels to be consumed in Canada. With what result to the farmers of Canada? Mr. Speaker, I will tell you. We had 5,368,000 bushels of corn in the winter of 1897-98, and corn was purchased at 21 cents per bushel. Oats were selling at 21 cents a bushel. I have placed both at 22 cents a bushel. Take for granted that you would sell of oats 5,368,000 bushels at 22 cents a bushel, it would bring in the same amount as the same number of bushels of corn brought in at 22 cents. But you would gain in quantity inasmuch as corn is 22 pounds heavier to the bushel than oats. You would gain 2,008,857 bushels of corn which at 22 cents a bushel would make a gain of $401,771. This is the amount of money by which, at that price, the farmers of Canada would be benefited by selling their oats and purchasing corn. Now, we will take the larger price at which oats were selling in Toronto and make another comparison. Oats were selling in Toronto on the 11th of May at 38½ cents. No. 2 yellow at 39 cents, and No. 3 yellow at 38½ cents. By purchasing that quantity of corn, 5,368 bushels, and selling that quantity of oats, at the price which I have quoted, there would be a saving to the farmers of Canada of $763,365. Yet hon. gentlemen will get up in this House and declare that the farmers of this country have been injured by the action of the Government in allowing corn to come in free of duty. In regard to the importation of corn I may say that the price of oats in the United States is not as high as in Canada, although they have the competition of the whole of the corn that is raised in the United States. This is the way that hon. gentlemen opposite try to delude the farmers of this country into believing that an injury has been done them, when, in fact, they are benefited by the action of the Government. Now, the farmers know who their friends are, and they know whether they are benefited or not. Hon. gentlemen may call aloud and try to mislead the farmers of the country, but I say that this is one of the greatest benefits that was ever conferred upon the farmers.

The next question I will take up is that of cordage. A good deal has been said about binder twine and about the effect that the removal of the duty upon binder twine has upon the farmers. We have been told that the rise in the price of binder twine was caused by the Government of the day removing the duty upon that article. If the removal of the duty brought about the rise in the price of binder twine I would like to know how it was that the price was higher in the United States than in Canada. I may be allowed to state, that what I stated the other day, that all the binder twine sold by the late Government is not yet paid for. I have made inquiry upon that point and I find that of the amount agreed to be paid for binder twine, there is still $7,000 not in the hands of the Government. I may say that I made a mistake in my statement the other day when I said that raw material could have been sold at a price 3 per cent higher than it was purchased at. I meant to say 3 cents per pound as the advanced price at which raw material could have been sold at by a certain binder twine company. The Binder Twine Company of Brantford could have sold their raw material at from 3 cents to 4 cents per pound higher than they purchased it for at the railway station. It has been said that the taking off the duty from the binder twine has closed up a great many of the establishments of this country. What was the cause of the closing up of these establishments? In view of the past history of the Consumers' Cordage Company this petition was sent to the Government of the Dominion of Canada asking them not to again impose the duty upon binder twine:

That in view of the past history of the Consumer's Cordage Company, your petitioners feel assured that the replacing of any duty upon binder twine would simply have the effect of putting the Canadian farmers and consumers at the mercy of this combine, as they have been for years past. Under the former tariff of twenty-five per cent duty on binder twine, it is a matter of common knowledge that the Consumers' Cordage Company were able to subsidize and purchase the following binder twine industries at that time in existence in Canada:—

Bannerman Bros., of Lachute, Quebec, whose mill has been closed for seven years, during which time they have received the sum of about $3,000 per annum from the Consumers' Cordage Company for keeping the mill idle.

John Brown & Co., of Quebec, whose mill was bought up by the Consumers' Cordage Company for about $140,000, double the actual value, and has been closed ever since the purchase, over six years ago.

Thomas Connor & Sons, of St. John, N.B., whose business was bought up by the same combine about seven years ago, at a very large figure, and has been closed during the whole of that period.

James Lochrie's mill, at Toronto, which has been kept idle for about six years at an expense to the Consumers' Cordage Company of about $6,000 per annum.

Ferguson Bros., of Kingston, whose mill has been closed for about three years, at a compensation of about $1,800 per annum.

A. Main & Son, of Hamilton, who received the sum of about $3,000 per annum from the same combine for keeping their mill idle, while other factories controlled by this combine have been kept idle for long periods during the past few years, that were formerly in full operation.

Let me say to hon. gentlemen opposite that this was the result of their policy. My hon. friend who sits opposite said that he was astonished that I should stand up and defend the action of the Government. I do not stand up to defend the action of any Government, but I wonder that he would favour a system that would produce the results that are shown in this petition, the formation of combines to compel the consumers to pay three times the amount for their binder twine that they otherwise would have to pay.

That your petitioners feel assured that there is no reason in the interest of the consuming class of this country, or in the interest of any legitimately conducted binder twine industry, that calls for the re-imposition of any duty, and that it is unfair that the farmers and consumers of this country should, in addition to the twenty-five per cent duty on rope and cordage, be further taxed to pay dividends upon the enormous subsidies and largely watered stock of this giant combination.

Your petitioners desire also to repudiate the representations made on behalf of the Farmers' Binder Twine Company, of Brantford, whose name might be taken as an indication that it represented the views of the farmers in this country, while we are satisfied that inquiry would show that the controlling interest in the Company is held by men who are not farmers.

Your petitioners therefore pray that your Honourable House may not pass any legislation taking binder twine off the free list, and that the amendment of the session of 1897 may have a fair test in the interest of the farmers of Canada before it is in any way interfered with.

And your petitioners will ever pray as in duty bound.

Let me tell the House that the Consumers Cordage Company last year paid a dividend of 40 per cent, besides putting a sum to the rest account, and the Brantford Cordage Company paid a dividend of 60 per cent, besides lying by a large rest account, showing the ability of the farmers to conduct their business on even better principles than the Consumers Cordage Company could. I believe and know that these cordage companies to-day would impose on the farmers in the same manner as they did before, if they had a chance, but I hope they will never again have an opportunity of doing anything of the kind.

Mr. CLANCY. Would the hon. gentleman say what he is reading from?

Mr. McMILLAN. That petition was from a number of farmers and was sent to the Government of Canada.

Mr. CLANCY. When?

Mr. McMILLAN. In 1897.

Mr. HENDERSON. Might I ask if these farmers were shareholders in the Brantford Cordage Company, which pays a dividend of 60 per cent. ?

Mr. McMILLAN. I am not posted in the inward working of the Brantford Cordage Company, and I never stick my nose in other people's business that I am not interested in. Now, Sir, with respect to the tariff, let me say that in the tariff as it exists to-day, the most aggravating items of the old tariff have been entirely abolished. I refer to combined specific and ad valorem duties. There is not an article of prime importance of consumption by the farmers and workmen of this country upon which there is to-day both a specific and ad valorem duty. There are twenty-one articles in the present tariff upon which there is both a specific and an ad valorem duty, and these are they :

ARTICLES IN THE TARIFF, WITH AD VALOREM AND SPECIFIC DUTIES.

	Specific.	Ad valorem
		Cts.
Almond paste confectionery. . .	½c. p. lb.	35
Candied peel, lemon, orange and citron. . . . .	½c. "	35

Wines of all kinds, except sparkling wines, including orange, lemon, strawberry, raspberry, elder and currant, containing 26 p. c. or less of spirits. . . . .	25c. p. gal.	30

There is not a single article in that list, except, perhaps, bolts and rivets, that is of prime importance to any class in the community, and these are the articles upon which specific and ad valorem duties are at present levied. Let me remind the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) that on one occasion in this House, which I remember very well, the hon. member for East Huron (Mr. Macdonald) proved to him that in connection with these specific and ad valorem duties under the former Government the farmer paid 100 per cent. Does not he remember that the hon. member for East Huron took a shoddy blanket weighing eight pounds and proved to him that the farmer paid 100 per cent on that blanket, under the obnoxious system of specific and ad valorem duties. You cannot show one article in the tariff to-day in woollen or cotton goods which cost over 35 per cent duty, and that is a great advantage to the farmers and consumers of this country. The duties that were imposed on these goods under the old tariff of the Conservative Government were something enormous. Let me say that if the present Government had made no other change in the tariff except to abolish ad valorem and specific duties on articles of prime consumption, they would have conferred a great benefit upon both the workingmen and the farmers of Canada. Let me give here a number of articles showing the difference in the old duty and the new, as well as the duty under the preferential rate, and of those articles a great many are imported :

	Old.	New.	Pref. Tariff.
	p. c.	p. c.	p. c.

I have still another list that I want to submit to the House, a list of agricultural implements that have been reduced in price, and I have heard hon. gentlemen opposite state that there has been no reduction in the duty on agricultural implements. Let me say that the present Government had reduced the duties upon a very large number and a more valuable number of agricultural implements than the late Government reduced the duty upon. The late Government only reduced the duty upon eight implements, and did they reduce the duty from 35 per cent to 20 per cent? Not at all, because when that question was before the House I asked the late Finance Minister whether or not he intended to retain the power then in his hands of making a re-valuation of the goods over their invoice value, and he said that he intended to do in the future as he had done in the past. Often 10, 15 and as high as 20 per cent was added to the invoice value for the purpose of the duty, and this did away with a great deal of the apparent reduction of the duty. But I dare hon. gentlemen opposite to show a single case now in which the invoiced value of the goods, when that value was honestly given, has been added to for the purposes of imposing duties. We are thus giving the farmers a far greater advantage than they were given under the late Government, by not insisting on a re-valuation of the goods imported and for which honest invoices were furnished. I have another list here of cotton fabrics.

That is a list of goods on which the farmers have obtained considerable reduction, and yet hon. gentlemen opposite would attempt to make them believe that these goods are not in reality reduced in price under the present tariff. I can remember the time when they attempted to make the farmers believe that they paid no duty on agricultural implements, and when they declared that these implements were all made out of the timber that grew upon their own farms. They did their best really to impose on the ignorance of the farmers and make them believe that their agricultural implements were all made out of timber, but they found that they were in a Rip Van Winkle sleep and woke up as they left the Treasury benches to realize what a great mistake they had made.

We have heard a great deal about the civil servants and the increased expenditure of the present Government, and I just wish to go through the Public Accounts and show what a considerable reduction has been effected in this department.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon gentleman must confine himself to the motion before the Chair unless with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Let him go on.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am merely trying to show the benefit that the preferential tariff has been to the farmers of this country, and how it has enabled the Government to reduce the number of civil servants and the salaries paid them. In 1896 we had 4,109 civil servants, and in 1898, 3,857, showing a reduction of 252, according to the Public Accounts. Their total salaries in 1896 amounted to $3,537,059, and in 1897, $3,373,028, showing a reduction of $164,000 under the present Administration. This is a considerable reduction, with which the country will be very much pleased. I am astonished that hon. gentlemen opposite did not notice that large reduction and find fault with the Government for dismissing so many public officers. The trade with Germany, France and Belgium under the reciprocal tariff has not been reduced, as was prophesied. Let us compare the trade of these countries with Canada for 1896 and 1898:

	Old tariff.	General.	To 30th June, 1898.	From 1st August, 1898.

Comparing the first nine months of 1898 with the first nine months of 1896, we find that there is a reduction on the whole of the goods imported into this country of nearly 2½ per cent, yet hon. gentlemen opposite make the statement that there is no change in the tariff.

Here is a list of implements that have been reduced to the farmers. Windmills have been reduced from 30 per cent to 25 per cent. I have been watching windmills run water when I looked across the House and saw hon. gentlemen opposite fortifying themselves with tumbler after tumbler of water as they went on making the extraordinary statements they did. The following is the list, showing the reductions in the present compared with the old tariff:

Mr. McMILLAN.

EXPORTS FROM CANADA.

	To France.	To Germany.	To Belgium.
1896... ..	$ 581,540	$ 757,531	$ 98,031
1898.....	1,025,262	1,837,448	973,994

IMPORTS INTO CANADA.

	From France.	From Germany.	From Belgium
1896. ...	$2,810,942	$5,931,459	$ 920,755
1898... ..	3,795,351	5,584,014	1,230,660

This shows an increase in our trade with these countries. Now, there is another question I want to touch upon. I do not know whether I shall be in order in doing so, but I think it is pertinent to the resolution. I desire to show that wages have increased in this country under the preferential tariff. Under the old tariff wages went down. In 1882 the average farmer of Ontario, with a farm of 100 acres, received $789. In 1896 the average was $400. In 1897, the first year of the preferential tariff, the receipts of a farmer with 100 acres of land went up to $477. Farm servants, with board, received in 1896 $144; in 1896, without board, $243 per year; 1897, $236; 1882 to 1897, $251; 1897, $144, and in 1898, $148 by the year.

Mr. PRIOR. I think this is going a little too far. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McMILLAN) is not in order.

Mr. McMILLAN. I wish to make only one other statement, and that is as to the expenditure of the Government. This Government might have expended $1,300,000 more during the last financial year for which we have an account, and not have spent more per capita than the late Government spent during the space of thirteen years. As it is growing late, I shall not weary the House further. I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and hon. members for their kind indulgence.

Mr. DAVIN moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 20th July, 1899.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PRAYERS.

SUPPLY—PREFERENTIAL TRADE.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Fielding: That the Deputy Speaker do leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee of Supply, and on the motion of Sir Charles Tupper in amendment thereto.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia). I had not intended to speak on this question, owing to the late period of the session, and also to the fact that it had been so exhaustively and powerfully debated by those who have taken part. But when I heard the Postmaster General, I felt that it was necessary to make a few remarks in regard to his speech, which was of a somewhat extraordinary character. It is quite clear from the tenor of the Postmaster General's speech that it was made for the purpose of merely introducing a letter of the Duke of Devonshire, the purport of which he not only misapprehends, but almost amusingly, Mr. Speaker, misapprehends and misinterprets—of course unconsciously. Now I wish to say a few words as to the state of opinion in Canada and in the United Kingdom prior to the summer of 1897. I intend to be very brief, and I ask the attention, and I hope the close attention, of hon. gentlemen who may take an interest in this question. It is a matter known to the whole world that for many years there was a strong party in England, originally founded and headed by the Right Hon. W. E. Forster, having for its object the bringing about of some form of Imperial federation. First, you had in England the Imperial Federation League, and subsequently, and a very short time before the year 1897, that became defunct, and then you had the British Empire League. The difference between these two combinations may be stated, I think, generally, in a sentence, to be this: That the one that had been founded by the Right Hon. W. E. Forster aimed at political union, and at first laid down the lines even of union. This was found to divide persons who were very anxious to unite on the broader ground of trade, and the league was dissolved, and the British Empire League was established in its stead. The head of the British Empire League in 1897 was the Duke of Devonshire, and so far back as 1887, the Duke of Devonshire made a speech which led him to be hailed by the Imperial Federation League as having come over to them. In the Imperial Federation Journal of April 1st, 1887, over ten years before June, 1897, you have an article headed: "Lord Hartington converted to federation," and he is thus quoted:

We are all proud of our colonial dependencies and our Indian empire. But some of us are anxious that the political union which exists between these colonies and the mother country should be still further increased and strengthened, and that we should be brought into more direct political communication with those great nations which are rising up around us, and which are our children and our own relations.

In 1897 he was the president of the British Empire League, one of whose main objects was closer commercial union. What happened in Canada? In Canada my hon. friend from North Bruce (Mr. McNeill), always being in the forefront, there had been going on a movement partly for the purpose of educating Canadian sentiment and partly for the purpose of bringing Canadian sentiment to bear upon sentiment in the United Kingdom. So successful had that effort been, so successful had the twin movement in England and in Canada been, that we find the two leaders of the great parties here in 1896, standing squarely on the platform of mutual preferential trade between England and Canada. It is not necessary for me to quote my right hon. friend at London, or at Toronto, in 1896; but I will just quote one sentence from what he said in St. John, where, as in Toronto and in London, he professed himself a believer in mutual preferential trade, just as we had the leader of the Opposition, then the Prime Minister, going all over the country proclaiming that he was in favour of mutual preferential trade. This is the language of the right hon. gentlemen:

Yet it is possible for us to make an arrangement by which England will give us a market for our products if we give something like reciprocity to certain English products. I am for that policy.

Under no possible straining of interpretation can you construe these words as meaning anything but that my right hon. friend at that time looked for some favour not vouchsafed to other nations in the British market. What had taken place in free trade England? Why, in 1896, a meeting was held at the Bath Arms Hotel, in Wiltshire, at which Mr. T. K. Harding presided, and among those present was Viscount Folkstone, M.P., and a number of notables. But what was still more impressive was the fact that leading farmers were present, leading citizens were present. What happened there? You find a gentleman making a speech quoting first the Right Hon. Arthur Balfour, the present leader in the House of Commons, in England, of the Conservative party.

The Right Hon. Arthur Balfour has given his views as follows:—"Should the colonies desire to adopt the policy of customs union, and the treaties between Great Britain and Belgium and the Zollverein interpose obstacles in the way of the realization of such a desire, it would be the duty of Her Majesty's Government to consider how to remove those treaty restrictions, and to shape their course accordingly."

Mr. McNEILL. That was in 1896.

Mr. DAVIN. Yes, in 1896. As far back as 1887 this present colleague, this free trader, the Marquis of Hartington, now the Duke of Devonshire, had given his adhesion to the principles of the Imperial Federation League and had been hailed as a convert. The present Prime Minister, Lord Salisbury, in a deliberate letter, in which, of course, the utterance would be more reserved than in a speech wrote on April 5th, 1887:

He did not imagine that differential duties in favour of our colonies, whatever might be said for or against them, can be properly described in the term "protection."

I call special attention to that language, and I will tell hon. gentlemen why. Lord Salisbury, writing in 1887, in favour of a proposal for preferential duties, wants to guard against being stigmatized as a protectionist. I entreat the attention of hon. gentlemen to that. Here is the resolution passed at that great meeting of the South Wilts Chamber of Agriculture:

That in the opinion of this Chamber a commercial federation of Great Britain with all her colonies and possessions on a trade basis, giving preferential treatment to all within the Empire, is of the most supreme importance.

That passed unanimously. So that I have proved that in England, on the eve of 1897, you had, not merely the utterances of statesmen, but you had large bodies of men giving their adhesion to mutual preferential trade. Before my hon. friend the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) came in, I read from a speech of the Duke of Devonshire, delivered in 1887, in which he professed his adhesion to the doctrines of the Imperial Federation League, and he was hailed as a convert in regard to that. I dwell on that, because, what I am coming to, is most important. As far back as 1887 the Duke of Devonshire was a convert to the doctrines of the Imperial Federation League. What was the natural state of mind of the Duke of Devonshire and of Mr. Chamberlain in 1897? They had read, of course, what the right hon. Prime Minister, then as they knew him, Mr. Laurier, had stated in London, in Toronto and in St. Johns, as I have read it. They had read what the then leader of the Government, now the hon. leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), had stated on every hustings where he had spoken, and they had been familiar with the strenuous utterances of the present hon. leader of the Opposition, when he occupied the position of High Commissioner in London. Surely my hon. friend will not question for one moment, that it must have been in the minds of these English statesmen, with their knowledge of colonial affairs, that, when the Canadian Prime Minister went across the Atlantic, he would be ready to state his views in favour of preferential trade. Not only that, but Mr. Chamberlain said: We are in favour of the movement, we are in favour of closer trade relations, but we cannot make a proposal, we cannot lay down lines, we invite you to lay down lines, and when you lay down lines, even though they may jar with some of our cherished opinions, we will not meet you as hucksters.

Mr. McNEILL. He was ready to meet us more than half way.

Mr. DAVIN. That was the state of feeling. Let me come to what occurred. The right hon. Prime Minister went over to Liverpool, and with the other colonial premiers, was entertained there. It will be found, and I will prove, that there was actually this expectancy in the minds of the English statesmen which we would naturally conclude, would be there. I will prove it, and I will show, too, Sir, that there was that expectancy in the minds of the journals that had been worshippers at the feet of the fetish of free trade ever since free trade came into existence in England. I will show that the "Times" newspaper expected that something would be proposed, and I will show that the "Times" newspaper was very much surprised when something was not proposed. There was first a gathering; there was a dinner and there were luncheons and speeches. The Duke of Devonshire spoke two or three times, but he made a considered and reasoned speech at Liverpool. In regard to that speech the present hon. leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), spoke in Toronto, in February, 1899. Evidently he referred to that speech as a speech holding out before the Canadian delegate, before the present Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), before the other premiers, that England was ready to do something, in fact, holding out what we may fairly call an offer, not a formal proposal, not a proposal coming from a Minister representing a government that had passed an Order in Council or come to a resolution, or who was fortified by a resolution passed in the House of Commons, but such a proposal as we might expect from a gentleman, with the history of the Duke of Devonshire, associated with Mr. Chamberlain, the man who had said: We expect you to lay down lines on which this closer union will be built and framed. I do not believe my hon. friend (Mr. Mulock), considered what he did when he wrote that letter to the Duke of Devonshire, because I am going to tell him that he was guilty of a very great indiscretion. I do not believe he intended it; he did it impulsively, but, the moment I point out to him what he did, I think he will say that he was guilty of a great indiscretion and when I show him the character of the Duke of Devonshire's reply, he will see that His Grace politely, as an English gentleman would do—I do not want to say it rudely—snubs the hon. gentleman. Not only that, but it actually gives the hon. gentleman point blank, the very answer that would have been desired by the hon. leader of the Opposition and the contrary answer to that which my hon. friend seems to think the letter contains. I will prove it to the hon. gentleman, and I am taking a different course to what I usually do in discussions in this House. My tendency is towards disquisition, but on this occasion I will just argue the matter as I would argue a case in banc. I have in my hands, the report of the meeting which my hon. friend (Mr. Mulock), sent to the Duke of Devonshire. What is that report? It is a report in the third person, that is to say, it is a mere summary. But suppose it was a verbatim report, surely the Postmaster General, who has read the repudiations made by the leader of the Government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) of reports of his speeches, reported verbatim, surely the Postmaster General ought to have pondered a little before taking the action he did. Here is a speech of the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) which lasted over two hours and does not extend over three columns, all reported in the third person, and summarized, and yet the Postmaster General sends it to the Duke of Devonshire as the utterance of my hon. friend and he asks the Duke respecting that.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The leader of the Opposition endorsed it last night.

Mr. DAVIN. No, he did not. On the contrary, the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) repudiated it, and I can further tell the Postmaster General, that not only did my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) repudiate it last night, but I am in a position to say that no sooner did he see it on the morning it was published, than he repudiated it to the editor of the paper and said he was misrepresented. But suppose that report had been in the first person, even then, with the precedent before him of his leader (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) repudiating professedly verbatim reports he is inexcusable. Before the Postmaster General sent that speech to the Duke of Devonshire to ask him what his view was with regard to it, he should have sent that report to the leader of the Opposition and asked him: Will you tell me is this a correct report?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIN. Let me read to you the way the speech is reported, to show that it is in the third person:

He (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) had given a solemn pledge that if placed in power he would send a commission to England to negotiate with Lord Salisbury for preferential trade. He became Premier and he went to England in the midst of all the glory of a great jubilee, at a time when everything was favourable to the accomplishment of such a policy. He was met almost on landing by the Duke of Devonshire, who made a speech offering this great boon in unmistakable terms. In proof of this latter fact, the morning after every Cobdenite, every ultra free-trade journal in England denounced the Duke of Devonshire for having gone over to the other side and of having adopted Imperialistic views. The speeches of the other colonial Premiers delivered at the time almost showed what the trend of the offer was. But, asked Sir Charles, what did this man (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) do? Why he turned his back on his solemn pledge and declined the boon.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think that answer is given in italics.

Mr. DAVIN. You mean it is given in quotation marks.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. DAVIN. Very well, but what I want to point out is that the language of the leader of the Opposition is not given. But suppose it were a professedly verbatim report, the Postmaster General if he had sent it to the Duke of Devonshire as he did would be guilty of an indiscretion, and "a fortiori" he is guilty of indiscretion in sending it when it was a third person report and without having the endorsement of the leader of the Opposition. But let me point out that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) committed a greater indiscretion towards himself by telling us anything about what he did, because I am going to show that the answer given by the Duke of Devonshire endorses every statement made by the leader of the Opposition. The Duke of Devonshire is said to be of all the dukes in England—I quote the "Spectator"—the most You-be-damndest of them all; this was written when the "Spectator" was praising him. Another eulogy of the Duke of Devonshire is, that like Lord Palmerston he is a nasty horse to go up to in the stable, and every one who knows anything of English horses knows what that means. Whatever the reason is, our horses are not so hard to go up to in the stable, but the English high-spirited horse is under the circumstances rather an unpleasant animal for any one but his groom. The Postmaster General writes this letter to the Duke of Devonshire:

My Lord Duke,

I inclose a copy of the "Mail and Empire," of Toronto, of the date of the 23rd February, 1899, upon page 7 of which you will observe a report of a speech of Sir Charles Tupper, delivered at Toronto the previous evening, therein Sir Charles is reported as having spoken as follows:

"During the campaign of 1896, Sir Wilfrid had gone from hustings to hustings saying that he was as much in favour of preferential trade as Sir Charles Tupper. He had given his solemn pledge that if placed in power he would send a commission to England to negotiate with Lord

Mr. DAVIN.

Salisbury for preferential trade. He became Premier and went to England in the midst of all the glory of a great jubilee, at the time when everything was favourable of such a policy. He was met, almost on landing, by the Duke of Devonshire, who made a speech offering this great boon in unmistakable terms. In proof of this latter fact the morning after every Cobdenite, every ultra free-trade journal in England denounced the Duke of Devonshire for having gone over to the other side, and of having adopted Imperialistic views. The speeches of the other colonial Premiers delivered at the same time, almost showed what the trend of the offer was.

"But," asked Sir Charles, "what did this man (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) do? Why, he turned his back on his solemn pledge, and declined the boon."

I take the liberty of inquiring whether you made to Sir Wilfrid such an offer as is stated by Sir Charles,—

Is it to be supposed for one minute that the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) speaking on the events that were known to every one, would describe them as a formal offer made personally to Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

or any offer to give to Canada a preference in the market of Great Britain, and, if so, would you have the goodness to state the particulars of such offer.

Sir Charles states the occasion of the offer being made as almost at the time of Sir Wilfrid Laurier's landing in England, and I presume Sir Charles Tupper's statement is based upon some public utterance of Your Grace about that time. If on any public occasion during Sir Wilfrid Laurier's visit to England in 1897 Your Grace made any public deliverance upon the subject, might I ask if your remarks were accurately published in the British press, and if so, where I could procure authentic copies of any papers containing reports of your speeches upon the subject.

If not too much trouble I should be most grateful if Your Grace could cause to be sent to me copies of any public journals containing speeches of Your Grace's having any reference to any offer made to Sir Wilfrid with reference to preferential trade in favour of Canada in the markets of Great Britain.

When in England last summer I observed an article in "Britannia," referring to the statements published in the Toronto "Mail and Empire" to the effect that Your Grace had made an offer of preferential trade to Canada, and that Sir Wilfrid Laurier had refused it; and "Britannia" challenged the correctness of the "Mail and Empire."

I would be glad to be permitted to make public use of Your Grace's reply.

I can easily fancy the way the Duke of Devonshire would receive that letter. He would say: This colonial politician wants to drag me into a colonial squabble; what interest have I in it? And then the Duke of Devonshire would only have two objects in his mind in answering that letter. First, he would want to behave like a gentleman and answer it politely, and next he would want to guard himself, as the letter was to be published, just as some years before his present leader, the Prime Minister of England, guarded himself when he declared his adhesion to mutual preferential trade, to differential duties in favour of the colonies, by saying : this is not protectionism. So we should expect that the Duke of Devonshire, a one time free-trader and follower of Mr. Gladstone, would guard himself against the stain—as it would be supposed by many of his supporters—of protectionism. Now, what is the answer of the Duke of Devonshire—and I do not know that my hon. friend (Mr. Mulock) has not been impolite to the Duke, because he has not given to the House the answer of the Duke of Devonshire. I am going to read the letter, and I will show the House that the Postmaster General has not given the answer of the Duke of Devonshire, which, however, I intend to give :

Privy Council Office,
2nd May, 1899.

My dear Sir,—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of April 1st.

The best answer I can give to your inquiries is to inclose you a copy of the report of these speeches made on the various occasions in the summer of 1897, when I had the pleasure of meeting the colonial Premier, in my capacity as president of the British Empire League.

Therefore, the best answer to the inquiry of the Postmaster General were these speeches which have not been read to the House.

Mr. COCHRANE. And which we did not hear.

Mr. DAVIN. But which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cochrane) is going to hear, and they will interest him immensely.

I do not think that in any of these speeches you will find anything to support the view of my opinion.

Mark this :

I do not think that in any of these speeches you will find anything to support the view of my opinion on the question of the policy of granting preferential trade to the colonies which appears to have been held by Sir Charles Tupper and by some of the journals in this country, which seek to attribute what they term "protectionist heresies" to members of the Unionist government.

What is the meaning of that? "I do not think you will find anything in my utterances on mutual preferential trade that will countenance the construction of those ultra free trade journals that I am tainted with the heresy of protectionist views." He is on the same base precisely as his leader was twelve years before, when he said, "While I am in favour of differential duties for the colonies, I am not going to admit that that is protection." The letter goes on :

It was, no doubt, my speech at Liverpool on the 12th of June, 1897, which was referred to by Sir Charles Tupper ; and my admission that free trade had not done for us all that was once expected may have been commented on by free trade or opposition journals.

But, while I congratulated Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the Dominion of Canada on the offer which had been made to admit British goods at reduced rates, as compared with those on the goods of other nations, as an important step in the direction of Imperial unity,—

Does that say that he regarded it as a final or conclusive or satisfying solution ?

—as an important step in the direction of Imperial unity,—

Does he say : "I did not give opinions of my own ?" No ; he says :

—I had no authority to offer, and did not offer, to Canada a preference in British markets.

Why ? Because, Sir, they had all the time been waiting for proposals from Canada and the other colonies, in order that they might then be in a position to say : "We may probably be able to do so," and would have a meeting of Council, and would go before Parliament and see if Parliament would sanction the policy. So that if my hon. friend had read that letter with the careful eye of scrutiny which his legal studies ought to have given him, he would have thought ten times before reading it to this House ; because—to use the phrase of the London "Spectator," which was at that time edited by so cultivated a man as the late Mr. Hutton—there is a great deal of "you-be-damned" in that note. Now, Sir, I am going to show the House what is the real answer. If you turn to page 7 of these speeches, you will find that the Duke of Devonshire, as the President of the British Empire League, lays down what are its objects in these words :

This League, then, has been founded as a successor of the Imperial Federation League, with all the general objects of doing everything in our power to bring about closer commercial and other connections between the colonies and ourselves, but on the principle of a complete elimination of any attempt at the present time to bring about any political or organic change in our relations.

That would refer, of course, to the political or constitutional relations, so that by implication it means bringing about grave changes in other respects—for instance, grave changes in our commercial relations—

All we, who are members of the League, are at liberty to hold our own opinions and to advocate this or the other form of political or organic change ; but as an association our aim is to bring about closer connection with the colonies, by means of better commercial relations, by means of improved communications, by means of increased sympathy with each other, of increased knowledge of each other, and for the present, at all events, we abstain from offering any suggestions, still more do we abstain from any appearance of dictating as to what form, if ever it should come about at all, a closer connection between us and them is to take.

Now, you can easily see why he uses the word "step" in that letter to my hon. friend. If the only change in the commercial relations is to be such changes as were made by this Government in 1897, what would they want to do in bringing about anything ? They have no control over such things at all. If you turn to pages 10 and 11, you will find what was regarded in England at the time as rather a politico-economic recantation of the Duke of Devonshire; and not only in England, but as I shall show, by some colonial Premiers themselves who listened to him. Why, they actually took the same view as the press and the same view as the hon. leader of the Opposition, that there was in this speech a proposal, or offer, or shadowing out or suggestion of something to be done:

I continue to believe, as I have always believed, that free trade is the best and wisest policy for our country, but virtues were given to it which it did not possess, and results were predicted which have not followed. Its speedy universal adoption all over the world was prophesied, and that prophecy has been falsified, and the thick-and-thin admirers and believers in the Manchester school seek to persuade us that, although that prophecy has not been fulfilled, it was the best thing for us that we should be the only free trading country in the world. Very few disciples of free trade fifty years ago would have believed for a moment that at this time France and Germany would be carrying on an enormous trade under strictly protective conditions, and not only that they would not have opened their markets to us, but they would be competing with us for the possession of as large a portion as possible of the surface of the earth, not for the purpose of opening it out for the universal benefit of the trade, but for the purpose of excluding from those portions English trade. The world has not become the commercial paradise which was predicted in the early days of free trade opinion, when it was hoped that free trade would bind all the nations of earth so closely together that it would be a matter of comparatively little importance by whom they were ruled or under what influence they were governed. We have since learned by painful experience that no old or new markets are being thrown open to us by the influence of free trade alone, and that if we want to provide for the increasing commerce which is necessary for the support of our increasing population, we must find those markets for ourselves.—

How? He says, not by free trade. He is pointing out that they have not been able to do it by free trade, that they cannot do it by free trade. Then it must be by something that is different from free trade; and what more natural than that commercial union which was in the air and which was talked about and advocated by the league of which he was president, and it must be remembered that at that time they were meeting under the auspices of that league——and must use every opportunity either of expanding or of consolidating our colonial possessions. I hope that it may be understood that in these observations I am not consciously speaking in any spirit of disloyalty to those who were to a great extent my own political leaders, although even at that time I was frequently obliged to find myself in opposition to them upon various Imperial questions.

There is a palpable, direct reference to Mr. Gladstone, and a clear reference also, but more remote, to Mr. Cobden—

Mr. DAVIN.

I am only seeking to show you what has been done, of the causes why a great change has come over public opinion in these matters, and why colonial expansion and colonial consolidation are now regarded, not, as they were then, as a policy of doubtful principle, as a policy which was perhaps to be shunned, but as a policy which is essential to the maintenance of our continued prosperity.

Now, Sir, has that any sense whatever—is it not the ravings of a maniac, unless in the speaker's mind there was as we contend an advocacy of mutual preferential trade? Turn to page 19 of this pamphlet, where we have the speech of Sir George Turner, the Premier of Victoria:—

I do not desire to follow His Grace with regard to the remarks which have been made in respect of free trade with Great Britain. I represent perhaps the most protective colony of the whole group, and were I to enter upon contentious matter perhaps I would throw the apple of discord into this gallery.

Is that not proof clear that he considered that the Duke of Devonshire had uttered views hostile to absolute free trade?

But while free trade may suit Great Britain, there is no doubt that young colonies, struggling against competition, it is absolutely necessary at some period of their existence, they should have protection against the outside world, and that is the feeling which actuates us. But although we may be protected, although we may feel it is absolutely necessary in the interests of our struggling manufacturers, that we should have that protection, if proposals be made to us which will show us that the whole of our trade, the whole of our dealings can be on fair, just and equitable terms, conducted with Great Britain, we will be only too willing to enter into that bargain, because we know that that will be manifestly for the benefit and advantage of all of us who are part of this great empire.

Thus we have this Prime Minister of one of the colonies under the southern cross uttering the view which the "Times" and other newspapers took, and saying further that he was there expecting a proposal to be made, no doubt in answer to suggestions from them. And he goes on:

The task which has been allotted to me this afternoon is indeed a pleasant one. We have heard the admirable address couched in the kindest terms to our colonies, in which His Grace has pointed out his past faults and misdemeanours.

What were his past faults and misdemeanours? No doubt his unqualified adherence at an earlier period in his political life, to free trade.

Evidently showing that the years which have passed have convinced him of the error of his ways.

The error of what ways? Evidently the error of his free trade ways. I come now to Mr. Seddon, the Premier of New Zealand. For what I am doing my hon. friend the Postmaster General should thank me, because I am doing what he should have done. The Duke of Devonshire said:

The pamphlet of speeches I inclose to you is the best answer.

And our hon. friend never quoted that pamphlet, but I am doing it for him, and I hope he is appropriately grateful to me. I hope he is appropriately grateful. This is what Mr. Seddon said :

Since thirty years ago, when this matter was first discussed, there has gone forward a movement which will increase in strength and volume until all doubts will be removed and that instead of that which you all require.

Mark this.

Going to foreign nations.

It is clear that he is misreported there. It is clear that what he meant to say is coming from foreign nations.

We can give you that help ; and we desire to do so. Help us to do it. We asked the Duke of Devonshire, we ask Mr. Chamberlain : Help us to do it.

To do what ? To supply you with what you are supplied now with foreign nations.

And you are doing your duty to the great empire to-day to which we all have the honour to belong. Let me remind you of what took place at the conference in London last June. There the thinking men of our nation, those who command our manufactures, those who command the commerce and trade of our country, showed that they desired to put to the world and to put to those in charge of Imperial affairs what their views honestly were on this subject.

We know what they were, and he adds :

And who is at the present moment the head of colonial affairs—I allude to Right Hon. Mr. Chamberlain—said : Let the colonies come to us with a proposal or proposals, and it shall not be treated in any huckstering spirit.

What would you think of a man who should say : I will not treat with you in a huckstering spirit if you do not ask anything from me. You would look upon him as a mocker or maniac. That invitation evidently meant, we expect you to make proposals ; and Mr. Seddon quotes it as having the same meaning which the hon. leader of the Opposition attaches to it, and which any man of sense must attach to it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. And which the English press attached to it.

Mr. DAVIN. And which the English press attached to it. Mr. Seddon goes on :

Later on, in answer to Mr. Chamberlain's suggestion, Canada made her proposal unconditionally.

That was not what he expected.

It was such as to startle the whole civilized world.

He did not expect it ; the whole civilized world did not expect it, but expected something very different. Then, the same Premier says on page 28 :

We have an augury that the opportunity furnished by the present Diamond Jubilee will be taken advantage of.

What did he expect ? Did he expect mere academic utterances and eloquent platitudes ? Was that all expected ? Clearly not. Mr. Seddon evidently is a very practical man.

We belong to a vast and glorious empire, we are the dominant people, as has been proved in the past and will be continued in the future. I trust that the league under whose auspices we have met will be the instrument in promoting closer trade relationships between every part of the world in which the English tongue is spoken.

Were they not crazy, were they not lunatics, if they were not looking for some action on the part of England ? If they meant free trade, they had it. England's ports were open. But it is perfectly clear that Mr. Seddon looked for some action on the part of England to meet action on the part of her colonies.

And I would advise that in all the colonies, branches of this league should be established.

I want now, as my hon. friend was anxious to get the opinion of the Duke of Devonshire by letter, to give you what the Duke said at the close of that very interesting afternoon. A vote of thanks was moved and in reply, this is what he said :

I entirely share with you in the anxiety to hear what the Canadian Premier has to say. And I wish that my place in these proceedings this afternoon had been allotted to him.

The Canadian Premier had just been asked to speak, but being desirous of reserving himself for the banquet, declined. The Duke of Devonshire said he was anxious to hear the Canadian Premier, and he gave the reason why. It was because the Canadian Premier was not merely the Premier of a colony, but of a federation of colonies and of course wielding the weight of the eight colonies behind him.

I will show you by and by what a cold douche the Canadian Premier's speech was. It is a curious thing, Sir, that you actually have within the pages of this pamphlet the evidence—the evidence ? you have the demonstration—that, for the time being, a deadly blow was dealt at mutual preferential trade by the Canadian Premier. Now, turn to page 26, where you have the Duke of Devonshire again, speaking at the banquet that took place in the evening, and at which the Prime Minister of Canada was the principal guest :

Ladies and gentlemen, I should rather like to take this opportunity of impressing upon others that which I feel very strongly myself—that we have at present an opportunity which may not, within any very short time recur, of hearing that which we ought to know respecting the feelings and the wants and the wishes and the views of our fellow-countrymen in the colonies, and that we shall better utilize that opportunity by endeavouring to learn from them rather than to impress upon them our own views.

Still looking to proposals from the colonies. And, Sir, fancy a man, the President of the Privy Council of an Empire, saying, that if all he expected were the fireworks of well-turned phrases and pleasant little fanfares of rhetoric. I turn again to page 28, and I find him saying :

I will only, before I sit down, once more express my opinion that the present time and the weeks which are to succeed to it may be a time of momentous importance to the British Empire.

Maintenance of the British Empire! And this to be replied to by a gentleman saying : We do not want anything from you ; we love you so much and are so exceedingly grateful that we do not ask any reward for what we have done ; we will do everything for you in the abounding kindness of our hearts. On the same page :

The unity which we desire will not be brought about, such unity as we possess will not be maintained, unless both parties feel that it is to their mutual interest and advantage.

He contradistinguishes the present unity from the prospective, and he says that even the present cannot be maintained unless with mutual considerations of advantage, and, above all, that the prospective unity that, with great, ambitious patriotism, they were looking forward to—that could not be maintained without mutual interest and advantage.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would ask my hon. friend to read down to "cheers." It is very important.

Mr. DAVIN (reading) :

And I do not believe that even the ties of mutual advantage would be strong enough to cement the union of the Empire as we hope to see it, unless those considerations were supplemented by others of a more imaginative character. The proceedings of the next few weeks will, I think, afford material of both these characters.

That is, the embodiment in noble phrases of the sentiments of loyalty and patriotism and the embodiment in careful language of terms for interchange of goods between England and her colonies. That, clearly, is what was on his mind.

And I think we and our guests will both hear and say much which will strengthen the conviction that the continued and increased unity of the Empire is to the material advantage of both the United Kingdom and the colonies.

My hon. friend the hon. leader of the Opposition suggests that I should anticipate an extract from Mr. Chamberlain, speaking, I think, at Birmingham, who said :

My Lord Mayor, if our self-governing colonies desire now, or at any future time, to take their share in the glories and in the responsibilities of the Empire, they will find that we are ready to meet them more than half way.

Mr. DAVIN.

More than half way.

And that we will make it our duty to establish firmly that principle of our connection—"each for all and all for each other,"—

That is no jug-handled policy—

—upon which alone the stability and the prosperity of the Empire can depend—and if they are wishful to draw closer the commercial relations between themselves and us, now or at any future time, again I say we will meet them, and in no huckstering spirit.

He repeats what he had already said and which had been quoted by the Australian Premier :

We will not treat this as a transaction in a ledger to be weighed in proportion to the exact balance of profit and loss. No, there is a principle, and, as I have said, a sentiment behind it which will carry all before it, because we see in such tightening of Imperial bonds a guarantee for security and for continued unity.

I want to show what the Prime Minister said at the banquet. I quote from page 36 :

To-day the sentiment exists in Canada in favour of a closer union with the mother land.

Then, at page 38 :

There is a colonial aspiration for a closer union, for a broader citizenship.

Then, at page 38 :

I claim for the present Government of Canada that they have passed a resolution by which the products of Great Britain are admitted on the rate of their tariff at 12½ per cent, and next year at 25 per cent reduction. This we have done, not asking any compensation. There is a class of our fellow-citizens who ask that all such concessions should be made for a quid pro quo. The Canadian Government has ignored all such sentiments. We have done it because we owe a debt of gratitude to Great Britain. We have done it because it is no intention of ours to disturb in any way the system of free trade which has done so much for England.

That is the way he met the held-out hand of the Duke of Devonshire and the hand of Mr. Chamberlain. They said : Tell us what you want, tell us your proposal, we are ready to meet you half way. And the Premier replies : We do not want anything from you ; and brushes the Imperial hand aside with graceful scorn.

We have done it because it is no intention of ours to disturb in any way the system of free trade which has done so much for England.

And this, although, that very morning the Duke of Devonshire had declared that free trade was a disappointment, and they must look to other means for extending their markets. I want to turn to the utterance of another Premier, Mr. Nelson, of Queensland, reported at pages 41 and 42 ;

He was one of those who believed that free trade was best for the whole world—but it was to be coupled with the most important condition, and that was that the whole world should accept it—because it was the case with that principle as with many others—that they may be made a hobby of and may be ridden to death, and occasionally act in a way contrary to what was intended when those principles were established. With regard to protection, he must say that his sentiments and the sentiments of the people he represented amounted to this, that protection also was a policy that must be entertained with the greatest caution. When they found themselves surrounded with other nations who would not deal fairly with them, they must do something to protect themselves to a degree that was necessary to obtain fair and equitable trading conditions. Taking a concrete example, for instance, in the matter of sugar. They were now enjoying the privilege of using sugar as at a price somewhat less than the cost of production.

That was accomplished by means of protection in foreign countries, but it was worthy of consideration whether we might not be living in a fool's paradise, and might not ultimately have to pay more for our sugar than we should if other countries were acting in a fair and straightforward manner. Could they afford to allow the sugar industries of the West Indies, the Mauritius, the Fiji Islands, Queensland and other Australian colonies to be destroyed, as they must be if the present policy was pursued?

What present policy, Mr. Speaker? The present policy of free trade as they have it in England?

In such case the Empire must inevitably suffer, and he was therefore strongly in favour of the scheme shadowed forth by the Colonial Secretary.

He is, therefore although a free trader, strongly in favour of a mutual arrangement in which we should find that the Imperial authorities were no hucksters.

Some scheme should be devised whereby the mother country would draw her supplies of raw products from her own colonies instead of being dependent upon foreign nations. He need hardly say that if any scheme could be formulated which would effect that object, it would have the entire sympathy of the whole of Australia.

Here we have an Australian Premier declaring that if that scheme can be formulated, a scheme of preferential trade between the Empire and her colonies, a scheme of preferential duties—if such a scheme can be formulated, although he is a free trader, the whole of Australia will go with him. That great Empire of colonies below the southern cross was ready as this Premier declares, to go on the lines suggested by Mr. Chamberlain and the Duke of Devonshire; and you will see by and by who set that all back.

He could answer, at any rate, for the colony that he represented. The effect of such a policy would be an immediate benefit to the colonies, a benefit to the Empire, and to the home country in particular.

Then, Sir, we have Mr. Kingston, the Premier of South Australia, and here is what he says:

They, he believed, were equally desirous of similar outlets for their manufactures. If some scheme—

Not words.

—could be happily arrived at between the mother country and her colonies by which those objects could be achieved, they in South Australia would be only too glad. They had been told that it was their duty to feed the hungry—

I call your attention to this.

They had been told it was their duty to feed the hungry; they would be only too glad to discharge that duty with Australian meat. They had been told it was their duty to give drink to the thirsty; might they also entertain the pious aspiration that the day might come when the thirst of Great Britain might be more largely assuaged by the use of Australian wines?

What does that mean? Why, he means a preferential duty in favour of the wines of the colonies of the Empire. Turn to page 47, where we have a speech of the present Prime Minister of Canada, made at Edinburgh on June 14th, 1897, and this is what he says:

The time will come when the present relations of the colonies to the mother land, satisfactory though they are to-day, will not be satisfactory; and when that time comes, my fellow-countrymen, the relations must become one of two things—either they must break altogether, or they must become closer.

But he himself says they cannot become closer on commercial lines, and he indicates elsewhere the political lines, for which he has been brought to task in the press of his own province. He is not in favour of commercial lines. Well, Sir, it is a very ominous thing to have the Prime Minister of Canada saying that he thought we must disrupt unless there is some closer political relations which is a heresy that Canadians will not endorse for one minute. At page 52 we have Sir George Turner speaking at this banquet, and what does he say?

Whatever the results of our visit may be, I feel perfectly certain of this, that they will enable us to go back and tell those whom we represent here that it is your desire, as it is our desire, that that bond of union which exists between us may be strengthened, and year by year may become stronger and stronger.

What is the meaning of that? How are you going to strengthen it? Mutual preferential trade was in the air; it is clear they were all thinking of the same subject. Then, at page 57 we have Mr. Seddon again. He is a Scotchman, and he is speaking at Glasgow, and this is what he says:

And then when I make inquiries as to where your food comes from, where your greatest trade lies, it pains me to think that we who are your own flesh and blood, anxious and willing, while barred by these nations—

Pointing contemptuously to the foreign nations—those nations being protectionist——cannot help you as we desire to do.

That is to say, that we cannot have that preferential trade which would enable us to help you.

This brings me to the question of closer trade relationship with the British Empire, and as level-headed Scotsmen, you want to know something of what can be done, and be done on lines beneficial to you, and at the same time, helpful to the colonies. We must not for a moment urge a departure from the policy which has been mentioned here to-day and laid down. It is not now for us to go into details or to raise anything of a controversial character, but it is for us to prove and to show to you that it is to your advantage, outside altogether the ties of affection, outside altogether the ties of tradition, to cultivate that trade.

What he means is this: He is looking forward to the conferences that were soon to take place, secret conferences in which those gentlemen would show Mr. Chamberlain and his colleagues what would be the advantage to the Empire of a preferential trade arrangement. Then we turn to page 64, to the Manchester function, at which we find Mr. Kingston speaking again:

And surely it would be better for this country to draw her food supplies when she could, from the colonies rather than from foreign countries with whom at any day England might be at war.

How is it to be done? England cannot do anything to secure that by having a free trade and an open port for all, but only by giving a preference.

In these circumstances could not something be done to effect closer commercial relations between the colonies and the mother country?

In what circumstances? In the circumstances that at present we are not supplying you with as much food as we would like to do.

The question had engaged a good deal of attention in the Australian colonies, and a resolution had been arrived at to do what they fairly could to encourage British enterprise and commerce. It was time to have done with high-flown sentiment—

Mark this. I hope there is no slight satire in it.

—and to approach the matter in a business spirit.

I have already read to you what Mr. Chamberlain said in his admirable speech. Now, I want to show you what Mr. Sprigg said, which you will find on page 77, at one of the numerous functions.

I was rejoiced indeed to hear the speech of the right hon. gentleman the Secretary of State for the Colonies, when he announced that the Government of which he is so distinguished a member, was prepared to meet us even more than half way in all our applications and desires for a united Empire, and I can only assure the right hon. gentleman that, let him stand by—and I feel thoroughly convinced that he will stand by—the policy which, on behalf of Her Majesty's Government, he has announced as the policy which it is intended to pursue with regard to the colonies generally, and especially with regard to the colony which I represent here to-day, I can assure him, I say, that if he stands by us we shall, as a united people, stand manfully by him.

The meaning is, that they interpret Mr. Chamberlain's language in this way; they expect negotiations will eventuate in secret conferences, and that probably before they left England, or the following year, they would have been crystallized into an Imperial statute, and that at the time when we are now speaking, we should have a preference that would have flooded this country with wealth and done the greatest good to every farmer and tradesman throughout the Dominion, I turn to page 84, and I find what the Duke of Devonshire said again:

We feel that this sentiment, the existence of which no one can doubt, will have missed its mark if, in the future, these nations of which I have spoken shall not grow up into one empire, which shall be connected with us by ties which may be more or less close, more or less uniform, more or less definite, but still which shall be substantial ties connecting us together in everything which connects our Government, our general policy, our commercial relations, and our general defence. The lesson which has been impressed upon us more than ever in these last few weeks—the idea which we have grasped more perfectly than at any previous period—is, I think, that the unity of the Empire is an equal privilege and advantage to every part of the Empire. We know that while our colonies and our dependencies can, by strengthening unity greatly enlarge and enhance our power and influence in the world, yet, at the same time, we have much which we can offer to them, and which we do offer to them; and it is not in the interest of these islands alone—it is in the interest of the whole English-speaking race—that we advocate the idea of unity, and we urge upon you to take every measure that it is in your power to take to cement and strengthen it.

Now, I ask the attention of hon. gentlemen to this:

But, ladies and gentlemen, we believe ourselves the British race both here and abroad, that we are not only a sentimental people but a practical people, and the idea which must have occurred to many of us, after witnessing the demonstrations at home and abroad, which we have witnessed in these recent times, is, what is to be the practical outcome of it all.

Evidently looking again to the negotiations. He is referring now to the meetings that had been taking place, and he says:

The opportunity has been taken of the presence of the distinguished colonial statesmen among us, some of whom we are able to welcome here to-day—the opportunity has been taken by the Minister who is responsible of our colonial relations, not only to have interviews with each one of them individually, interviews necessarily of a confidential character upon matters relating to their own especial country—but also to hold meetings of them collectively—meetings which also, up to the present time, have been of a confidential nature, but at which questions of a more general character affecting the whole range of our relations, have been considered and discussed. As I have said, up to the present time those meetings have been entirely confidential.

And again :

Whether this is to be so or not, I did not think I am violating any confidence when I say that the subject which these colonial statesmen have been invited to discuss with Mr. Chamberlain are to a very great extent similar to, if not absolutely identical with, those contained in the constitution of the British Empire League—the extension of our trade with the colonies, the effect of existing laws and treaties upon our commercial relations with each other, the subject of communication between the mother country and her colonies, or between the colonies themselves, by means of steamships or telegraphs, the subject of postal communications—above all, the subject of Imperial naval and military defence. Those are the practical questions which our guests have been invited to discuss and are now discussing with Mr. Chamberlain, all in the sense of leading up to, tending to an ultimate discussion of the greater, but perhaps more distinct object of a closer political and constitutional connection.

Again he says :

I would also ask these gentlemen to remember that it is for promoting a knowledge of and encouraging discussion upon these very questions which they are now discussing with the colonial ministers that the British Empire League exists, and when they return to their colonies, I hope they will remember that they can do us no greater service, they can confer no greater honour or favour upon us than by making use, in any degree to which they may think expedient, of the services and the organization of this league for making better known and for promoting the discussion of questions in which they may happen to feel an interest. We can assure them on behalf of this league that we have no preconceived schemes, either political or commercial, either naval or military, to advocate. Our object is simply to help to discover, and when discovered to make known, what are the opinions of those of our fellow-countrymen abroad who are most concerned in these matters.

I have done what the hon. Postmaster General should have done : I have read the answer of the Duke of Devonshire to his letter. What was the view of these negotiations, and what was the effect of my right hon. friend's course in these matters ? The "Times" of June 14th, commenting on those now historic proceedings at Liverpool, said :

It would be strange and disappointing if, when these warm and generous feelings prevail in all quarters, it should be found impossible to draw closer the bonds of union between the mother country and her daughter nations. The recent tariff legislation in Canada and the discussions upon the question of Australasian confederation seem to indicate that we may be on the eve of some remarkable developments. But both in Mr. Laurier's remarks and in those of some of the Australian ministers on Saturday there were signs that all is not quite plain sailing.

In fact, as we saw, the right hon. gentleman threw a cold douche on the aspirations for closer commercial relations :

To overcome such obstacles as exist is a work that will confer an abiding fame on the statesmen who are able and fortunate enough to achieve it.

On July 5th, the same paper said :

These communities are now ready to draw closer the ties that bind them into one Empire, as soon as the wisdom of statesmen, the maturing of public opinion, the growth of material links shall enable effect to be given to the wishes shared by all.

I might have read these extracts from the "Times" at an earlier part of my remarks to show that the "Times" had precisely the same view of the utterances of the Duke of Devonshire and of Mr. Chamberlain that the hon. leader of the Opposition has always taken. I read them now to show, at the close of these proceedings, what the "Times'" view of the subject matter of discussion was, and also its view of the effect of the manner, the words and the actions of the right hon. Prime Minister of Canada on that occasion was. I do not intend to go further in this question ; I have confined myself to showing that the answer made by the Duke of Devonshire to the question of the hon. Postmaster General, proves that the hon. leader of the Opposition, in the course he has always taken in speaking of that transaction at Liverpool, has been in entire accord with the utterances of the Duke of Devonshire and Mr. Chamberlain.

Mr. J. H. BELL (East Prince, P.E.I.) Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to go profoundly into this question, chiefly for the reason that I am unable to do so. Any remarks of mine will be directed at the fringe of the subject, rather than into the heart of it. Permit me to say, in the first place, that there are some sentiments to which expression has been given with which I am in entire accord. I rejoice, as a Canadian, at the change of sentiment that I see manifested on both sides of the Atlantic—manifested between England and her colonies throughout the world. There was a time, scarcely thirty years ago, when a different condition of sentiment prevailed. In England at that period, we had Gladstone, and Granville, and Kimberly advocating the independence of the colonies viewing with equanimity and satisfaction the separation of the last link which bound the colonies to the mother land. In 1869, Earl Grey wrote to the "Times" :

The breaking up of the great colonial Empire would in my opinion be a calamity to the colonies, to this country, and to the world, and I cannot doubt you are right in believing this to be the result which must be looked for from the policy distinctly declared by Her Majesty's Government.

That policy, so far as Canada was concerned, was semi-officially announced to us. It consisted, first, in the withdrawal of British troops, second, in the cessation of the Imperial guarantee, and, third, in the declaration of the independence of Canada at the earliest possible moment. That was the condition of affairs thirty years ago when Lord Granville dominated the Colonial

Office. In Canada we had a similar condition of things. We had statesmen like Sir Alexander Galt, L. S. Huntingdon, the Hon. John Young, and others, advocating independence for Canada. I refer to this to show that a different condition of things now happily exists. The dismemberment craze has passed away, and in its place we find a broad and abiding Imperial spirit looking to the consolidation of the Empire. What has brought all this about? The causes are varied. The discovery of Watt and the improvements in steam navigation have bridged the oceans and brought the colonies into more immediate association and contact with the motherland. But there are other causes. That condition of isolation created in recent years, when the nations of Europe arrayed themselves against the motherland. That isolation and danger evoked the sympathy of her children—rallied them to her side—they would stand or fall together. There are other reasons of still more recent birth. They bear the date of the year 1897, when the colonies and independencies were represented at the capital of the Empire, and when the British people first realized their greatness, and took advantage of the pageant to shout and manifest the Imperial spirit that was abroad. But no other single cause operated with greater effect than the reduction of 25 per cent on British imports. That policy inaugurated by this Government, went straight home to the hearts of the English people. It is a policy which the other colonies now propose to follow, and it has contributed more than any other towards the creation and spread of Imperial sentiment.

I recognize the fact suggested by the leader of the Opposition and by my hon. friend from North Bruce (Mr. McNeill), that one of the difficulties we have to surmount before we can bring about Imperial federation in its entirety, is in connection with our trade relations. Some of the strands of Empire have been already woven. One of the most important of all has been the creation of an Imperial settlement. Another is, the institution of Imperial penny postage. Another, that which has recently come to a successful issue, the construction of the Pacific cable. These have been already woven, but others remain to be completed. One, the Fast Atlantic service, another improvement in sending our products to the Home market, and another, the teaching of our people that in future we will have to bear more than we have borne in the past of the cost of the British fleet, in view of the protection it affords to Canada. But, Sir, our main difficulty lies with our trade relations. We have to devise some means by which we can harmonize the two opposite systems of trade that exist in the colonies, and in the mother country. The question is, in what manner shall that be done? The leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) have made certain propositions, and I have been trying in my humble way to understand exactly what these are. I find in the first place that the propositions made by these two hon. gentlemen differ the one from the other. The leader of the Opposition says: Leave the system of protection in Canada as it stands, but let an arrangement be made by which the colonies would get the benefit of a duty of, say, ten per cent in the English market as against the world. In that event he would, I think, be prepared to make some reduction upon goods imported from England. The proposition of my hon. friend from North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) is essentially different. He says: Leave the present import duties in Canada as they are, but in addition, let the colonies and the motherland be considered as one unit, and let that unit place say ten per cent on all the products of all other countries, and let the proceeds of that tax be devoted to improving the intercommunication between England and her colonies, and to the protection of the Empire. These are the two propositions, as I understand them. Both involve the element of protection, so far as England is concerned. Both involve the idea of England placing a tax of say 10 per cent upon breadstuffs and other articles of consumption used by her people. These proposals do not appear to me to be practicable. Neither the British Government nor the British people are prepared, under present conditions, to enter into an arrangement by which a tax would be imposed upon the masses of the English people for the benefit of the colonies. The proof of that is not so clearly manifested in the declarations of English statesmen as in the recent action of the British Parliament. The question came up for consideration when the wine duty was before Parliament. A request was made on the part of the people of Australia that while those duties should be imposed as against the world, they should be remitted as against that colony. That was a proposition for the benefit of a British colony. That proposition was made to the English Parliament. Mr. Balfour, who spoke on behalf of the British Government, stated distinctly in the Commons that a preference to Australia was tantamount to a tax on the English consumers and therefore the proposition could not be entertained. It was voted down—only 27 voting in its favour. We have here the best proof of the condition of British sentiment.

The hon. member (Mr. Davin) has referred to the fact that British statesmen have always been suggesting to the colonies to make an offer. That statement is true. British statesmen have studiously avoided making any offer to Canada or to any of the colonies—why? Because had they done so, it would have looked like dictation on the part of the Imperial authorities. British statesmen know that if they would be successful, they may suggest but not dictate. They desire any proposition to come voluntarily and spontaneously from the colonies. They desire that the proposition should emanate from the good sense and the generous heart of the colonies themselves. No Imperial federation scheme, unless it emanates from that source, can possibly be successful or permanent. That very consideration proves to me more clearly than anything else, that the Duke of Devonshire never made an offer to Canada, because to have done so would have been contrary to the policy of the British Government. What British statesmen did do was to invite offers from the colonies.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear hear; that is the whole case.

Mr. BELL (East Prince). They had before them what they regarded and treated as an offer from Canada in the shape of a resolution submitted by my hon. friend from North Bruce (Mr. McNeill). That offer embodied that hon. gentleman's policy as I have outlined it. That offer was considered by the statesmen of England, and notably by Mr. Chamberlain, and it was distinctly repudiated.

Now, Sir, I take the ground—different from that taken by my hon. friend from North Bruce and the leader of the Opposition—different also to a slight extent from that taken by the leader of the Government. I contend that we have no right to ask England, under present conditions, to give us what is called preferential treatment—in other words, to put a tax upon her labourers and artisans for the benefit of her colonies. I am aware that this perhaps may not be considered a very popular contention. Nevertheless, I consider it a righteous one—why? Because I think we have a right to look at this matter from a broader stand-point than merely the interests of Canada. We have to consider ourselves as being not only at the present, but, more especially in the future, integral parts of the British Empire. We should be ashamed to make, and ought never to make a proposition to the Empire for the benefit of Canada alone. Let me give an illustration of what I mean. Down in Prince Edward Island we raise a great quantity of oats. Now, I might make a proposition to this Parliament in this form; give us a bonus upon the export of oats, and what would be the effect on Prince Edward Island? The necessary result would be that you would increase the value of the land, you would promote immigration, you would encourage the introduction of English capital, and you would have a greatly increased production of oats, which in case of war would be of great advantage to Canada. I might argue strongly along that line. But why do I not make a proposition of that character? The benefit of it to the Island must be obvious. I say, nevertheless, I have no right, as representing a constituency in Prince Edward Island, to propound such an argument, simply because such a policy, though beneficial to Prince Edward Island, would be prejudicial to the rest of the confederation. The same reasoning applies to the proposition of preferential trade which these gentlemen have now submitted to the House. It is a proposition which involves this: Benefit to Canada? Yes, I admit that the effect of preferential trade, as these gentlemen advocate it, would be of advantage to Canada. It would tend to increase the stream of population which now is flowing towards our North-west country. It would have the effect of attracting to our country British capital. It would increase the value of the lands of our North-west. It would increase the value of the products of these lands. If England were to impose a tax of 10 per cent on foreign food products, that would add the like amount to our agricultural products. I admit all that and more. But I say, in the face of that, we have no right to make a proposition to the English people that would be inconsistent with the general benefit, and advantage, nay, that would be a menace to the very existence of the Empire. That is what the proposition of hon. gentlemen opposite involves. It involves such a change in the fiscal system of Great Britain as would injure, if it would not imperil the Empire. Why, what does it mean? It means this, if it means anything. It means that the people of England, especially the poorer classes, will have to pay 10 per cent more for their food supplies, if this proposition goes into effect. It means the increasing of the burden of taxation upon the artisans and labourers of England. That is contrary, in the first place, to British policy, because in England the tendency has been since 1845 to shift the burden of taxation from the shoulders of the poorer classes. But this proposition asks Great Britain to reverse that wise policy and to increase the taxes of the artisans and labouring classes of England, that are the least able to bear it. We ought to hesitate before asking the English people to accept any such proposition.

There is more than that involved in it. I read with interest the speech of my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition, made two or three years ago, on this very subject. He argued that England ought to adopt Imperial federation, because that would give a stimulus to her declining industries. He saw a decline manifested in English industry, manufactures and commerce. I have never been able yet to see any indications of that decline. I hold in my hand the latest returns showing the total value of the import and export trade of the United Kingdom, in recent years, and I find the following figures, as indicating the volume of trade for the respective years:—

1895 .....	707,000,000

1896 .....	£738,000,000
1897 .....	745,000,000
1898 .....	761,000,000

The volume of trade makes a steady increase and is the best indication of continuing prosperity. I do not see, therefore, any cause in the present condition of things why the British people should reverse their policy. But if there were a cause I do not see how the proposition made by the hon. leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) is going to help matters. Why, the hon. leader of the Opposition argues that England is now being pushed to the wall that her manufactures cannot successfully withstand competition with those of the United States, Belgium, Germany, and other countries. Yes, she is being pushed to the wall. Their panacea is: Let us have Imperial federation; let us have preferential trade, that will rectify the condition of things and restore prosperity to the motherland. In the first place, I say that prosperity does not need to be restored, it exists already. But I say more: The effect of putting an increased tax upon the breadstuffs of the English artisan—making him pay more for the necessities of life, will inevitably be to increase the cost of English manufactures by the amount of additional tax which we impose upon these food products. If to-day England, as they say, cannot stand competition in manufactures, what condition of things will result, if you increase the cost of those manufactures? If England is pushed now to the wall, the time of her dissolution would be hastened by the injurious specifics these hon. gentlemen would administer.

But this is not all. I can plainly foresee other calamitous results in putting a tax on English imports in favour of the colonies. You will thereby, in the first place, create dissatisfaction and discontent among the colonies themselves, who will find fault with each other and with the mother country as to the extent and effect of that preferential tariff. More than that, you are going to create dissatisfaction in Ireland, because the people of Ireland will say that they have as much right to favoured treatment with regard to their products as the people of the colonies. You are going to create difficulty with regard to countries already hostile to England, because if England should impose preferential duties in favour of the colonies, you may provoke a spirit of retaliation. I do not say this would necessarily result.

I do not believe it would result, but at the same time, there is a danger that it would result. The colonies have, therefore, no right to ask Great Britain to place her transcendent interests in peril and jeopardize her superiority among the nations. There is more involved in this than my hon. friend from North Bruce and the leader of the Opposition seem to suppose; there is involved the national welfare—nay the very existence of the Empire. As there is so much at stake, we ought to hesitate before we make a proposition to the mother country which might prejudice her predominance in manufactures or upon the seas. If she declines, we go down with her.

It being One o'clock, Mr. Deputy Speaker left the Chair.

House resumed at Three o'clock.

Mr. BELL (East Prince, P.E.I.). Before the House rose at one o'clock, I was endeavouring to point out the reasons why Canada, as a colony and as a partner of Great Britain should hesitate to ask the mother country, for the benefit of the colonies, to impose a duty on foreign food products. Now, even if we should decide to ask that, it seems to me we should still be a long way from obtaining it. In a matter that affects the manufactures of Great Britain in the most vital manner, in a matter which concerns the interests and the general welfare of the mother country, in a matter which involves her national existence and ours, the statesmen of England would not attempt to make any such radical change of policy without first referring the question to the British electorate. I think I read somewhere that recently a deputation waited on Lord Salisbury to ask him to promote Imperial federation by imposing a duty on foreign breadstuffs of the benefit of the colonies. What was his answer? He replied substantially: "Go forth and educate the English people, and as soon as public sentiment is ripe and ready for the measure, I am ready to enact it." His answer was akin to that given by this and past Governments to the prohibitionists of Canada, "Go forth and do missionary work among the people. Educate the masses to your views and as soon as the temperance sentiment of the people of Canada is ready for the measure, we are ready to enact it. Neither Lord Salisbury, nor Mr. Chamberlain, nor Mr. Balfour, nor any other English statesman would be ready to make a proposition of this kind involving such tremendous consequences to the colonies and to the Empire without consulting the electors of England. Suppose the electorate of England were consulted, what would be their answer? We must look at it from the stand-point of the people of England as well as from our own. They would be inclined to say, in the first place: We pay too much already toward the support and protection of the colonies. There are mutterings among them even to-day. Our fleet means for England an annual expenditure of thirty-five millions of pounds sterling. Expended for what? Not necessarily for the protection of England, because she needs none, but for the protection and benefit of the colonies. And, Sir, the people of England, the labourers and artisans, the people who would be most interested, would naturally say : We pay enough already, we pay too much already, toward the support and protection of the colonies without paying an additional ten per cent for their benefit upon the food products that we import from foreign countries. The masses would say further : If you want to increase the tax, do not increase it upon the food of the poorer classes—that is contrary to British policy—but lay it upon the shoulders of those who are best able to bear it. They would have still another answer : Look at the system we have had in force in this country for the last fifty years to govern our fiscal affairs. What has that fiscal policy accomplished for England ? They would point with pride to the fact that during that period the result of that fiscal policy has been first, that population has increased one and a half times; or, if we take into account the population that has gone to the colonies, it has doubled. The revenues have also doubled under that system. The wealth of England has increased three-fold. The hardware manufactures have increased in that period six-fold; commerce has increased seven-fold; the volume of trade has multiplied from one hundred and fifteen millions in 1840 to seven hundred and sixty-four millions in 1898. The people of England would be able to point to the fact that in the past fifty years their free trade policy has accomplished all these results, and they would naturally ask the question : Why do you want us to change a fiscal policy that has been productive of such results ? They would go further, and they would point to a condition of things prior to the passage of the corn laws, to a period in English history when trade was stagnant, and when a system of extreme protection prevailed. More than that, they would point to the condition of things that obtain in this country. They would probably say to the leader of our Opposition and to the representative from North Bruce : Why, look at the results of your own policy. You have had protection in Canada for eighteen years, and what has it done for you ? But the moment that a freer trade system was introduced, that moment an impetus was given to the volume of trade and to the general prosperity of Canada. Now, then, how can you come over to this side of the Atlantic and expect us to adopt a system that in your own country has manifestly wrought such injurious results ? They would probably wage another argument. The common people of England would speak out, and after all, it is with the common people that the controlling power of England really rests ; it is not with the aristocracy. In consequence of the extension of the franchise the great voting power of England to-day rests with the labouring and the artisan classes. These classes would naturally say : Why, you are making a proposition that involves a charge of 10 per cent more upon our bread and upon our food. Therefore, you can hardly expect that the people of England or those especially interested would consent to any proposition of this kind. They would emphasize the fact that increased cost of food means increased cost of manufactures and that nothing could be more injurious to Britain's interest. These would be some of the reasons the people of England would naturally urge, and which would inevitably lead them to the conclusion that so far as this proposition was concerned they were not ready for its acceptance and never would be. And I think that these considerations ought to induce the conclusion in the minds of hon. gentlemen opposite that it is utterly hopeless to expect to persuade the English people to accept their views in the face of such arguments.

Now, Sir, the leader of the Opposition and other gentlemen who have spoken upon this question, have endeavoured to show that the signs of the times in England are in the direction of a system of protection. What are those signs ? They have referred to the West Indies and to India ; they have referred to the countervailing duties that the British Government has consented to have imposed with regard to those two colonies. I do not propose to go into the question of countervailing duties. I am aware that there is in the minds of many free traders a doubt upon this question. Some of them argue that countervailing duties are not inconsistent with the principles of free trade, that it is perfectly right to impose these duties in order to place Great Britain and her colonies upon a fair footing with regard to the products of the world. There are others who say that the principle of protection is involved. I am not going to argue that point, I merely want to point out that there never has been any breath of a proposition to put on countervailing duties in any place except English colonies. There has never been a proposition to adopt them in England. The proposition has been applied to India, not because Great Britain was of the opinion that countervailing duties were best for India, but because Great Britain has dealt towards India as she has always dealt towards her colonies—in the most generous possible spirit ; she has given to them absolute discretion to say and do what they think best for their own interests. She has invariably adopted whatever principle the colonies have suggested, or dictated, as best suited for their conditions. So that so far as countervailing duties are concerned, there is not much satisfaction to be had by those who contend that they indicate conversion to protective theories. Then, again, my hon. friend has stated that a number of prominent English statesmen have recently advocated protectionist principles. They have expressed dissatisfaction with free trade principles. They have said that the nations of the world have not become free traders as was anticipated when that policy was first inaugurated in England. But they have never gone yet to the length of making any suggestion favouring the adoption of the system of protection in England.

I want now to refer to a matter suggested by the leader of the Opposition last evening, when he pointed to the "Times" newspaper as advocating what he called a system of protection. He rejoiced that the "Times" had diagnosed public opinion in England and foreshadowed an approaching era of protection.

Now, Sir, I have read somewhere that the "Times" newspaper advocated, at one time, that British Columbia should not join hands with the confederation of Canada, but should enter into union with the United States of America. That proposition was made deliberately by that newspaper; that was the extraordinary forecast the London "Times" made not 30 years ago. I have read also that the "Times" newspaper deliberately advised the people of Canada to prepare for the inevitable result that was ahead of them, namely, their independence of and separation from the motherland. If my hon. friend examines these political forecasts made by the "Times" in past years, he will find little to congratulate himself upon so far as regards the capacity of that newspaper to foretell the adoption by England of protectionist fallacies. Now, Sir, I have concluded that I cannot see anything to justify the hope that England will consent to put a tax on her food products for the benefit of her colonies, and it is idle and useless to look for Imperial federation in that direction. In what direction should we look for the consummation of Imperial federation? It seems to me that, although Mr. Chamberlain has not made any distinct offer to the colonies, yet, nevertheless, he has made a suggestion which it might be well for us to seriously consider. He stated that the first and primary condition upon which we might have Imperial federation is that free trade must obtain as between the colonies and the mother country. The element of protection must be eliminated from the fiscal policy of the Empire. What does that mean? We have a different idea in Canada from what they have in England as to what free trade actually means. It means in England an entirely different thing from what it means here. What was Mr. Chamberlain's idea? Free trade in England implies this—putting a tax, for instance, upon tea, which is entirely imported from abroad and which is, in no way, produced in England. Free trade in England implies that, where you manufacture certain goods, as, for instance, liquors, you put a duty upon the importation of that article to place all people upon the same footing. No protection is extended to the manufacturer of that article in England. The excise duty and the import duty exactly counterbalance each other. That is what Mr. Chamberlain implied by free trade in England, and that is what he suggested as the first pre-requisite upon which the colonies might enter into the federation of the Empire. Now, the question is: Are we ready for the acceptance of that offer? Are the Liberal party of Canada ready for it? The Liberals have said substantially that they are not ready for it at the present time, but they will be, and they have gone a long distance, they have already gone one-fourth of the distance in the direction of a compliance with the condition laid down by Mr. Chamberlain. What about the Conservative party? The Conservative party say that they are not now ready to comply with the condition and never will be. That is the manifest interpretation and effect of their protectionist policy. They are not only not ready to comply, on the contrary, if I interpret aright the proposition of the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill), it goes in the direction of increasing protection rather than of diminishing it. So that, I look upon the position taken by the Conservative party as an absolute bar to the accomplishment of our hopes for Imperial federation. It cannot be consummated along that line. What suggestion or advice would I offer to the Conservative party?

It is their duty as it is ours to make all reasonable financial sacrifices. That they are prepared to do. They have joined hands with the Liberal party in Canada and indicated to England their readiness to make concessions—sacrifices to promote Imperial federation. I hold that they as well as we have the right to go further—to make further sacrifices—sacrifices of political principles, or, if you like, of protectionist policy, if we find, as I believe we will, that it is impossible for England to accept and adopt the protectionist theories and principles of the colonies. If it be found that the mountain will not come to Mahomet, it is the duty of Mahomet to go to the mountain. That is what I suggest is the proper course which the Conservative party of this country ought to take with a view to promote Imperial federation. If they want to accomplish anything in that direction—and I believe that they are all sincerely desirous of accomplishing it—they must accommodate themselves, they must subordinate protection to the British fiscal policy.

I will conclude with a reference to the manner in which this debate was inaugurated. I have to compliment the hon. leader of the Opposition upon the manner in which he opened up and entered upon the discussion of this important question—upon the broad and statesmanlike views that he manifested in his address. I am sorry, however, that I cannot pass the same compliment upon my hon. friend from North Bruce (Mr. McNeill). If I did not know that hon. gentleman as well as I do, I would say that he has given ample proof in the statements he has made of the charge that has been preferred against him in some of the newspapers of this country, namely, that he has subordinated his Imperialism to his partisanship. What did he say: He said with regard to the Liberal party that they had stolen the policy of the Opposition with respect to Imperial federation; he said that they were now disloyal and always had been; he said, with respect to their policy, that they had blundered into their 25 per cent reduction on British imports; he said that over every effort that they had made towards preferential trade the trail of the serpent was manifest. He said: The Liberals were like a helpless flock of sheep sold in the shambles. I say, Sir, that in the discussion of such a question as is now before the House—a question that should be kept above party politics—the man who makes statements of that kind is open to the charge of having subordinated his Imperialism to his partisanship. Nay, more, I say that charges of that kind have no influence towards promoting Imperial sentiment, but, on the contrary, they have the necessary effect of retarding the progress and development of that grand ideal which is now beginning to dominate both England and her colonies.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). The hon. member for Prince (Mr. Bell) has eulogized the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) for his moderation and patriotism in proposing the resolution; but he was unfortunate enough to state that the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) instead of adhering to that high ideal, subordinated his imperialism to his partisanship. Sir, no imputation could be more ill-founded than that. There is no member in this House on either side who has shown a greater devotedness to the imperialistic idea than has the representative of North Bruce. In season and out of season, even when the idea was not so popular as it is to-day, the hon. gentleman (Mr. McNeill) was the stoutest champion and advocate of imperialism, and in view of the action of the Liberal party on this question, it ill-becomes a supporter of the Government to make such a charge against the hon. gentleman (Mr. McNeill). We remember that last year the hon. member (Mr. McNeill) proposed a resolution that might very well have been endorsed by the unanimous vote of this House. It was a resolution so impartial in its tone, that it was an exact copy of that which had been passed by the Imperial Trade League and endorsed by both political parties, outside of this House and in Great Britain. And when the hon. gentleman (Mr. McNeill) moved that resolution, the partisans on the other side of the House brought in an amendment which was untrue in its assertions, partisan in every letter of it, and which the members on this side of the House could not vote for. Although the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) and the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) magnanimously agreed to accept that amendment if they omitted the offensive and incorrect statement attributing to the Liberal party all that had been accomplished in the line of preferential trade, the gentlemen on the other side of the House rejected that concession. We are in the judgment of the House and of the country when we say that the Imperial idea was not originated and was not promoted by these gentlemen opposite. They always gave it the cold shoulder, until they found that its popularity was growing in the country, and then they did as they have done in connection with other policies of the Conservative party; they adopted it in a half-hearted way in spite of themselves. Let me point out that the hon. member for Prince (Mr. Bell) has made statements directly contrary to the statements made by his hon. leader. Yesterday the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) said to us: Why, you cannot produce any document from the Imperial Government endorsing this principle, for there is no such state document. To-day the hon. member for Prince (Mr. Bell) tells us that the proposition must emanate from the colonies, and, Sir, that is exactly our contention, and it is a contention in direct opposition to that propounded by the Prime Minister yesterday. Did not the Duke of Devonshire and did not Mr. Chamberlain say: We are ready to receive proposals from the colonies; we wish you to say what you want, and we will receive your proposals in no niggardly spirit. That was the statement reaffirmed at every meeting by the leaders of the British Government in England. And when the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) says that no document on this question has emanated from the British Government, he is begging the question. He knows, because he was there, that he was invited to make proposals, but the whole burden of his speech was devoted to arguing that the Imperial statesmen had not committed themselves to any policy on this question. Take the statement of the Duke of Devonshire, and take the comments on it by the leading English newspapers. Every one got the idea, and no one got any other idea, from the Duke of Devonshire's speech at Liverpool, but that he advocated preferential trade with the colonies. All the English newspapers, both Liberal and Conservative, construed the Duke of Devonshire's speech in the same sense as did the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper). Commenting on that speech the day after it was delivered, the London "Times" says:

This silent, gradual process of awakening throughout the country on the trade question has brought about an astonishing change which is now beyond all controversy. The recent tariff legislation in Canada, and the discussion as to Australian federation seem to indicate that we may be on the eve of some remarkable development; but the remarks of Mr. Laurier, and those of some of the Australian Ministers show signs that not all is plain sailing.

What does that mean? It means that the British Ministers had held out an invitation and a helping hand, but as the London "Times" says in effect, Mr. Laurier had discouraged the idea and had shown that all was not plain sailing. What does the London "Morning Chronicle," the leading Liberal organ, say?

It must be admitted that the Duke of Devonshire represents a good deal of floating opinion, but we shall do our colonial friends ill service if we lead them to suppose that England will ever join in the protectionist ring.

That is good sound doctrine from the Cobden organ, one of the most extreme of free trade papers.

We think it is very doubtful policy to denounce the treaties with Germany and Belgium,—

This was said on the 14th June, and yet six weeks after the Government of England denounced these treaties, in opposition to the desire of the London "Morning Chronicle."

We think it is very doubtful policy to denounce the treaties with Germany and Belgium, and thereby risk losing a far greater volume of trade, in order to gain a slight advantage with Canada, whose trade must sooner or later by the laws of nature be largely concerned with American markets.

Of course, the Liberal organ in England had got its inspiration from hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, who were then parading the opinion that our trade was to be gobbled up by the United States, and now, as a matter of fact, we know that our exports to England are increasing enormously, and that our exports to the United States are shrinking in the same proportion.

Let me refer now to the statement made by the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) yesterday. I have never yet heard a more humiliating statement made with such ostentation. The Postmaster General spent an hour of the time of this House in trying to demonstrate that the Duke of Devonshire had repudiated the statements made by the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), and in attempting that the Postmaster General made an absolute failure. Sir, as the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) has shown, this letter of the Duke of Devonshire demonstrated the contrary of the contention of the Postmaster General. What are the facts with regard to that? On the 1st day of April the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) sitting in his seat, where he is to-day, writes a letter to the Duke of Devonshire, attributing certain statements to the leader of the Opposition. He knew that those statements were not a verbatim report; he knew that they were not an accurate report. I had the honour of being present and hearing the address delivered on that occasion by the leader of the Opposition. I was in company with the leader of the Opposition the next day, when he saw that report in the "Mail and Empire," and when he denounced it as a most inaccurate report of the speech, and it was.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). Did he get it corrected?

Mr. WALLACE. Did he get a whole speech corrected?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). Did not the hon. gentleman say last night that it was correct?

Mr. WALLACE. I say that the report of the speech in the "Mail and Empire" was denounced by the leader of the Opposition the next day, in my presence, as a most inaccurate report of his speech.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He endorsed it last night.

Mr. WALLACE. But what do we see the Postmaster General doing? Sitting at his desk and writing a letter. He could do it in such magnificent terms! Did he not buy a copy of Debrett's "Peerage" at the country's expense, so as to be able to address the Duke of Devonshire as "Your Grace," and "My Lord the Duke"? But, Sir, would it not have been a manly part, demanded by that courtesy which every gentleman in this House is entitled to expect from another, that he should have gone across the floor and said to the leader of the Opposition: Is that report in the "Mail and Empire" a correct report of what you stated on the 23rd of February? He did not do so. Do we not know that the leader of the Government has time and again repudiated speeches attributed to him on important matters, though they were verbatim reports in the newspapers? Here is a matter which the Postmaster General thought of sufficient importance to write to the Duke of Devonshire about, and he does not consult the leader of the Opposition to ascertain whether or not it is an accurate report; but in order to influence, and to influence improperly, as I consider, the course and the language of the Duke of Devonshire, he sends off that report. Such a thing is unknown in my recollection in this House. But, Sir, what may we expect from an hon. Postmaster General who did not think it beneath his dignity, or an improper course on his part, to take all the private and confidential letters that he could find in his department, addressed to his predecessor, and have them published in blue-book form, ignoring all those unwritten laws which are supposed to guide gentlemen in their intercourse with one another? I say that the Postmaster General, in this instance, has just followed the course which he had previously taken with regard to the private correspondence of members of Parliament and others, which he found in his department when he entered office, and which had been left there by a previous Postmaster General.

Now, with reference to the question itself, what is its history? In my opinion, it stands just in this way. When the Liberal party came into power in 1896, in the first session their business was simply passing the Estimates, and they refused to transact any other business. Of that I do not complain. They wanted sufficient time to mature their policy. They met Parliament again in the early part of the year 1897. They were confronted with difficulties because of the mistakes they had made and the pledges they had given while in Opposition. They could not adopt a free trade policy, to which they had pledged themselves; they could not adopt a revenue tariff policy, to which they had pledged themselves, because a revenue tariff policy, pure and simple, has never been attempted to be put in force, either by hon. gentlemen opposite or by any other political party in this country, at any rate in recent years. They could not destroy the National Policy, because that policy was too strongly engrafted in the affections and the interests of the people of this country. It is true, in the first draft of the tariff which they submitted to this House in April, 1897, they injured, and would have destroyed, many Canadian industries; but, Sir, they were compelled by the force of public opinion, and by having a more accurate knowledge of the business and manufacturing affairs of this country, to adopt an entirely different fiscal policy in the tariff which they brought down a month later. That tariff came nearer to the National Policy than the previous one, which in many lines would have utterly destroyed the manufacturing industries of this country. They were confronted, I say, with a difficulty. They could not carry out the pledges they had made to the people. They could not destroy the National Policy, which they had threatened to do. What were they to do? They had to meet Parliament and have the appearance of doing something. Well, Sir, they met Parliament. They found in Great Britain and in Canada the Imperialistic idea, the Imperial sentiment, was growing. The idea of a closer conjunction between Great Britain and all her colonial possessions was gaining strength and power, not only here, but in the old land. Here was the Jubilee year, the culmination of those forces, and sentiments, and interests, which had been growing year by year; and these gentlemen said: Now is the time for preferential trade; preferential trade means a trade that will be reciprocally preferential; we will give advantages to Great Britain in our markets, and Great Britain will give advantages to us in her markets. Sir, that sentiment was growing, and would have culminated in practical effects of usefulness, by which we would, I believe, by this time have secured a preference for our cereals, our provisions, our meats, in the markets of Great Britain. But, Sir, that did not suit these hon. gentlemen. Something had to be done during the session of 1897, and done quickly. Public sentiment was not sufficiently advanced in England, and the negotiations could not be started and carried into completion before the session of Parliament. So, they conceived the idea of riding on the wave of popular sentiment and saying: We will give to Great Britain a preference in the markets of Canada to the amount of one-fourth the duty, and we will not ask any preference from her. No greater mistake, Sir, could have been made. Nothing more suicidal to the interests of Canada could have been proposed than what the Premier suggested. He had just received the Cobden medal, and he said: "We do not ask or want any preference in your markets; we believe in free trade; what we are doing we are doing out of love and good-will to the motherland." These are his words:

I claim for the present Government of Canada that they have passed a resolution by which the products of Great Britain are admitted on the rate of their tariff at 12½ per cent, and next year at 25 per cent, reduction. This we have done, not asking any compensation. There is a class of our fellow citizens who ask that all such concessions should be made for a 'quid pro quo.' The Canadian Government has ignored all such sentiments. We have done it because we owe a debt of gratitude to Great Britain.

But, Sir, the Imperial Government had invited them to take a different course. It had said to them: "No suggestion will come from our side; but you say what you want, and we will meet you in no niggardly spirit." And, having read the speech of the right hon. the First Minister which was delivered in London in June, 1896, they were quite justified in coming to that conclusion. What did he say on that occasion? He said:

But I want to point out to you, my fellow countrymen, upon this occasion, that in addition to the many reasons which we have had up to the present time, there is now another reason which must strongly appeal to the sense of the Canadian people at large—preferential trade. That is a new idea having within the British Empire a preferential trade in all parts of that Empire.

It was not so very new; but it was new to Sir Wilfrid Laurier and to the party of which he was the leader, because they had always either opposed it openly, or given it the cold shoulder. But, Sir, it was endorsed by the Government of that day, by the Conservative party, and was not to them a new theory at all. He says:

Goods of English make would be admitted free to this country,—

You see, he was a free trader at that date. And, further, he says :

—and our goods would be admitted free to England as they are now, but in addition to that we would have for our goods a preference which would not be given to the goods of any other nation.

That is what the right hon. gentleman said in June, 1896, when asking the people to elect him to power. He was in duty bound to carry out, when he got into power, the very proposition upon which he based his right to govern the people of Canada. But he totally forgot the position he had taken. He went back on it because he found he could not adopt free trade, he could not destroy the National Policy. These hon. gentlemen said that preferential trade was popular in this country and Great Britain, and then they deliberately sacrificed the interests of the people of Canada in order to obtain a temporary advantage for themselves politically. The right hon. First Minister said then :

Now, the statesmen of Great Britain have thought that the Governments of the colonies have come to a time when a new step can be taken in their development. What is that? That there shall be a commercial agreement between England and the colonies. That practical statesman, Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, has come to the conclusion that the time has come when it is possible to have within the bounds of the Empire a new step taken, which will give to the colonies in England a preference for their products over the products of other nations. What would be the possibilities of such a step if it was taken? We sell our goods in England. We send our wheat, our butter, our cheese, all our natural products, but there we have to compete with similar products from the United States, from Russia, and from other nations. Just see what a great advantage it would be to Canada, if the wheat, cheese and butter which we send to England, should be met in England with a preference over similar products of other nations. The possibilities are immense.

Well, Sir, the possibilities would be immense for Canada, because, as we need hardly point out, if the English Government will give a preference to the colonial products in the markets of Great Britain, even the smallest preference would give us an enormous advantage over the rival markets of the United States and all other foreign countries. Therefore, I say that the possibilities are so enormous that the Government should have strained every nerve to obtain this preference. But what do we find? We find the right hon. First Minister getting up and spending an hour or more in trying to demonstrate that the thing is impossible. He said in 1896 that the thing could be done and pledged himself to use his best efforts to have it done and that it was just in the line of Imperial policy. We find that the hon. Postmaster General and the hon. member for Prince Edward Island (Mr. Bell) take the same line as the right hon. First Minister, although the hon. member for Prince Edward Island did not go quite so far in that direction. But all these gentlemen, who are the only gentlemen who have spoken on this question on the opposite side, have endeavoured to demonstrate that nothing can be done. Three years have elapsed since the First Minister made that speech to the people of Canada; two years have passed since the preferential tariff was introduced. I would like to ask the members of the Government where they have uttered a single word or written a single line or made the slightest effort for the promotion of this preferential trade between Great Britain and the Dominion? They cannot point to a single effort made by them in those two years. Why? Because they are not enamoured of the idea, because they are still looking to the country to the south of us, because they have still apparently that hostile feeling towards British trade.

Mr. FEATHERSTON. Oh, no.

Mr. WALLACE. The Prime Minister said he would prefer the Yankee dollar to a British shilling. That expressed the feeling of the Prime Minister then, and we have never heard him repudiate that sentiment since. And when the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Featherston) gets up and says "Oh, no," he seems to have forgotten the facts of history. I say that these gentlemen are not able to point to a single line or a single act in favour of this policy. They were to have had a conference, to go on a commission, to do something to promote this preferential trade. The right hon. First Minister said in Toronto: We cannot get everything at once, we must go step by step at a time, we have given preferential trade, we have got them to denounce the German and Belgian treaties, and he added that if we had asked for more at that time, we would not have got it but must advance step by step. I would ask him to state what further step they have taken, what effort they have made? They cannot mention a single effort, and they do not appear to want to make any effort to get preferential trade with Great Britain. But they are making attempts to get reciprocity with the United States. Is it possible that for this they are sacrificing the interests of Canada, the interests of that Imperial trade, which would be of most enormous advantage to Canada, because put it alongside of any reciprocity treaty you could possibly get from the United States it would not compare in comparison with the preference in the British markets, as that would mean increasing the value of every acre of land in Canada and the cultivation of millions of acres of our Canadian North-west that to-day are lying idle? The possibilities are so enormous that it staggers one to contemplate them. Yet in their vain efforts to obtain reciprocity with the United States, these gentlemen are not only neglecting our interests with Great Britain, they are not only failing to grasp that British trade which we ought to make every effort to get hold of, but they are pursuing a will-o'-the-wisp in attempting to get reciprocity with the United States. I have no hesitation in saying that the people of the United States are never going to give us a reciprocity treaty that will be beneficial to the country.

There are loyal men in the ranks of the Government, there are men in those ranks who believe, as we do, that an effort to obtain preferential trade with Great Britain should be made. I have here a speech delivered by the Hon. Geo. W. Ross, the Minister of Education for Ontario. His speech has the right ring. It has the patriot sentiment. It has that sentiment that the Conservative party believed in. Here is what he says :

I see no reason why Canadians should hesitate to look to Great Britain for some encouragement and response on her part. True she admits our products free of duty, but then she confers a similar favour upon foreign nations.

Have we not a right to expect that her own subjects, though living abroad, will be treated more favourably than the Magyar or the Russian, or the citizen of the United States? The personal and political privileges of her subjects, even under a foreign flag, are protected against encroachments. Why should not the commercial interests of her own subjects under the same flag, though separated by a few leagues of water, be equally the subjects of her protection?

He says further :

There was still more significant evidence, in the denunciation of the German and Belgian treaties, of the desire of Great Britain to improve and further colonial trade, particularly with Canada. It declared that the question could only be made an important issue, and thus separated from all commercial complications. The watchword would not be "free trade" or "protection," but the unification and the consolidation of the Empire, and on this view of the question it is not hard to predict what the attitude of the British Empire League should be.

I shall not dilate to-day upon the bonds that should draw the various portions of the Empire closer together, but shall simply point to the commercial aspect of the question, and point to the fact that you cannot do anything more likely to draw two countries together, politically and sentimentally, than by cultivating between them a commerce reciprocally advantageous to both and injurious to neither.

But the hon. member for East Prince (Mr. Bell) said—and so does the right hon. the First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier)—Do you suppose that Great Britain is going to impose a duty on her corn and increase the price of the loaf to the consumer in Great Britain? Well, Sir, public opinion is changing in Great Britain. A few years ago free trade was accepted without question as the policy of both political parties. To-day, what do we find? The hon. member for East Prince says that Great Britain has never, in recent years, adopted any protectionist idea. I beg to differ. The hon. gentleman mentions the case of the countervailing duties. Why, Mr. Speaker, a committee of the House of Commons, of which Baron de Worms was chairman, reported in favour of these countervailing duties on sugar. This was manifestly in accordance with the sentiment of the British people. The hon. member for East Prince says that these duties were adopted in India, it is true, and were authorized by the Imperial authorities in England because it is the policy of Great Britain to allow her dependencies to take their own course. But nothing could be done with regard to these countervailing duties without Great Britain's consent, and the very fact that the House of Commons recognized that it was to the advantage of her great eastern dependency that these countervailing duties should be imposed, was an acquiescence in a protectionist scheme and a proof that the protectionist spirit is growing. The old Cobdenite theories are utterly vanishing in Great Britain. They are judging every question that comes up to-day by the standard of what is best for the people of the Empire. And to-day the people of England see with dismay that Germany is bringing in her manufactured goods, and that the United States, perhaps the most highly protected country in the world, has been supplying Great Britain with large quantities of iron and manufactures of iron, and that although they do not supply so much to-day it is only for the reason that they are utterly unable to supply their own home market. The demand has grown so enormously that they cannot supply it, and so they do not seek to compete in Great Britain for the prices offered in that country. Take just one example. About a year ago, pig iron was selling for $11 a ton; to-day it has gone up to $20 a ton. And yet the cost of production is about the same; there can be very little difference, because the wages and the cost of the raw material are both about what they were. But this increase in price shows the enormous demand. The manufacturers of the United States are working to supply their own market, when, a year or two ago, they were invading the markets of Great Britain. I say that Great Britain is looking with dismay upon the invasion of their market in woollen goods, cotton goods, silks, manufactures of iron and many other manufactures, by the producers of countries that are highly protected, such as the United States, Germany, France and Belgium. The duty of this Government is plain—it is to adopt the resolution proposed by the leader of the Opposition, and not merely to be satisfied with the adoption of the formal resolution, but to go on and carry out the spirit of it, to use their best efforts to bring about preferential trade. This they have failed to do for the past two years. They have been supinely resting on their oars. They have been hostile or indifferent to the best interests of the country; they have been engaged in plundering this country, in putting through deals of the most iniquitous character, in bulldozing electors in the various constituencies, in increasing the expenditure until now it is far over fifty millions of dollars, and exceeds by more than ten millions that in any year under their predecessors. This Government which has been doing these things, which has thus been neglecting the welfare of Canada, should give place to a Government that is loyal, that is patriotic, that is economical and devoted to the best interests of the country.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). Mr. Speaker, as I am an ardent protectionist at all times, it may seem strange to hon. gentlemen opposite that I should rise to support the present motion, especially as, from the remarks made by hon. gentlemen on the other side, they seem to think that preferential trade and protection could not be made to work together. Though we have arrived at a late period of the session, yet I realize that, under the present circumstances, the time of this House is well spent in discussing the important motion which has been placed in your hand by the hon. leader of the Opposition. The Liberal party have placed upon the statute-books of this country a policy of preferential trade, but it is not the kind of preferential trade that we on this side of the House have been asking for and that we desire. What we want is a preferential trade that will be mutual as between Canada and the mother country. I may say I have no special love for even a mutual preferential tariff, but if the Government insists on retaining the existing preferential duty, then I think the proposition before the House is a self-evident one. Its importance is so apparent that I do not consider argument necessary to convince this House or this country of the propriety of introducing it. We are told by hon. gentlemen opposite that we now have a preferential tariff; the right hon. leader of this House has said that we have "touched the heart of John Bull."

But we want to do more than touch his heart, we want to get something in return for what we have given. We want a mutual preference, one that will benefit this country as well as one that will benefit Great Britain. In return for the preference that we are giving Great Britain now, we ask in this resolution, and nothing less will be satisfactory to this side of the House, nor, I believe, to the people of this country—we ask that in return we be given a preference on the agricultural products of this country. We want a preference on our wheat, on our oats, on our barley, on our beef, and on all other products of the farm, in return for what we are giving. We want something that will enhance the value of our farms, something that will promote immigration, something that will enable us to people the vast wheat areas of the west, in the words of the resolution moved by the hon. leader of the Opposition. The kind of preference we want is the kind of preference that the First Minister, when courting the electors of Ontario two or three years ago, advocated in London, Toronto, and elsewhere, not the kind of preference that was advocated or approved by the First Minister when he set his foot upon the shores of England. He tells us that we have touched the heart of John Bull, but the pockets of the farmers of Canada, of the working people of Canada, by reason of the preferential tariff, have been touched injuriously. Duties have been increased on many articles that are of every day requirement and consumption by the people of this country. Our markets have been invaded by free agricultural products from a foreign country. Free corn to the extent of 19,770,000 bushels, was admitted into this country last year, to the immense injury of the farming community, who, in the province of Ontario, of corn alone, produced $10,198,452 worth in 1897. Our country has been invaded by wheat at a reduced duty, it has been invaded by flour at a reduced duty to the injury of our agriculturists, and nothing of advantage is coming to us in return. Besides this, our German market has been destroyed by reason of the discriminating duties imposed by that country on account of the action of Canada in giving a preference to Great Britain. On our pease they have placed a discriminative duty of 3 3-10 cents, on oats 4 4-10 cents, on wheat 9 7-10 cents per bushel, almost absolutely excluding from the German market these products of our farmers. We say that the farmer's burdens have not been reduced by the preferential tariff, that on the contrary, they have been increased. We were told by the First Minister last night that we cannot have preferential trade and retain protection. I ask why? Canada has given preferential trade to Great Britain, and still we have retained the protective principle. On the other hand, Great Britain does not need to give up protection to obtain preferential trade, because protection does not prevail in England. Some years ago we had a preference in the English market, where protection did not prevail, in the shape of allowing our cattle to be imported freely into that country, whilst cattle from the United States and other foreign countries were scheduled. Why could not the same thing be given us to-day? A small duty on the natural products of foreign countries imposed by Great Britain would give an immense advantage to the people of Canada and the other British colonies. I care not how this preference is given by Great Britain so long as it is given; but when we have given a preference to the people of Great Britain in the markets of Canada, I say we have a right to demand in return a preference to the producing classes of this country. Great Britain is spending year by year millions upon millions of treasure, and the blood of her best sons, in order to find markets in the uncivilized parts of the world. Great Britain, if she chose, instead of putting a duty on food supplies, might give a bonus to the products of Canada, thus giving us a preference without enhancing the value of those commodities to the people of Great Britain. We say Canada has no preference in Great Britain at the present time; and therefore if the preferential tariff that we have enacted does not give us advantages at home by enabling us to purchase our supplies cheaper than we did before, then we have no preference whatever. I purpose to examine into this phase of the question, and in doing so I will be obliged to quote considerably from the Trade and Navigation Returns; because I consider that if our farmers are not relieved by the enactment of the preferential tariff, which we have upon our statute-book, then it is our duty at once to adopt this resolution and urge upon our Government to endeavour to secure from the British Government such a preference in their markets as will grant us the relief we are entitled to, and enable us to settle up our wheat areas in the western country, to promote immigration, and advance the value of the farms in this country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I intend to quote from the Trade and Navigation Returns to show that the people of this country are not benefited by the preferential tariff which we have at the present time, and in doing so I will take as examples some of the most common articles of consumption in this country, something that enters into the consumption of every household, articles like cotton goods. Under the general tariff last year we imported cotton fabrics, printed, dyed or coloured, of the value of \$709,596, paying a duty of \$248,368. Under the preferential tariff, we imported \$1,719,515 worth, paying a duty of \$526,610, showing a total duty of \$774,978. Now, had these goods come in under the tariff that existed prior to the adoption of this preferential tariff, the duty, instead of being \$774,978, would only have been \$728,733; or, in one year, on the article of coloured cotton fabrics alone, we paid an increased duty of \$46,245, an increase of 6 per cent in the duty instead of a decrease of 12½ per cent on the duty, as we were promised by the advocates of this preferential tariff. But hon. gentlemen opposite tell us that the preferential tariff was not in full force. Had the full 25 per cent reduction been in force, what would have been the result? We would have paid under the general tariff \$35,480, and under the preferential tariff \$64,481, or a decrease for that year of \$29,001. The decrease is only 4 per cent, instead of a decrease of 25 per cent, as we were promised by the advocates of this preferential tariff. We must bear in mind that there were other countries exporting to this country under the preferential tariff besides Great Britain, and if we were to take the imports from these countries into consideration, it would only show a decrease of 3 per cent, instead of 25 per cent. Taking the first two years of the operation of this tariff into consideration, we find that the increase of duty in the first year is \$46,245, and the decrease in the second year on the same imports would be \$29,001, showing an increase in the two years of \$17,243, or 2½ per cent of an increase in duty, instead of a decrease of 25 per cent, as was promised by hon. gentlemen in introducing this tariff. Practically, it would be three years before the people of Canada derived any benefit whatever from the preferential tariff as applied to cottons, printed, dyed or coloured. Of the article of cotton clothing under the general tariff we imported \$178,382 worth, and paid a duty of \$62,431. Under the preferential tariff we imported \$120,927 worth, and paid a duty of \$33,031, or a total duty of \$99,462. Had these goods come in under the former duty, we would have paid \$95,779, thereby increasing the duty under the preferential tariff by \$3,683, an increase of 3¾ per cent, and not a decrease, as was promised by hon. gentlemen opposite, of 12½ per cent. Had the full preferential tariff been in force, we would have paid under the general tariff \$4,459 of an increase, and a decrease under the preferential tariff of \$7,558, showing, on the whole, a decrease of \$3,098, or a simple decrease of 3 per cent of the duty, and not of 25 per cent, as claimed by hon. gentlemen opposite. Assuming, as I have said before, that the imports of 1898-99 would be the same as those of 1897-98, we would have an increase still for the two years of \$585 on the article of cotton clothing alone, an increase of nearly 1 per cent of the duty, instead of a decrease of 25 per cent. What I contend is, that the advantages that we gain under the preferential tariff do not at all compensate us for the loss we sustain by reason of the loss of employment, the loss to the farmers of this country in supplying those who labour in the factories in producing what they require. In gray unbleached cotton fabrics in 1897-98 we imported under the general tariff \$29,892 worth, paying a duty of \$7,472. Under the preferential tariff we imported \$14,839 worth, paying a duty of \$3,248, or a total duty on gray unbleached cottons of \$10,720. The duty under the old tariff would have been only \$10,004, showing an increase actually paid on gray unbleached cottons, an article entering into the consumption of every household, rich or poor, of \$656, or an increase of 6 per cent, instead of a decrease of 12½ per cent. We are told that the full preferential tariff was not in force. Had it been, the increase under the general tariff would have been \$747, and the decrease under the preferential tariff \$556, showing an actual increase, with the full preferential tariff in force, of \$191. Therefore, in the article of gray cottons, which is an article of clothing for the people of this country, an article that enters perhaps as largely into the consumption of every household as any article that we could think of, there was an increase of  $1\frac{1}{2}$  per cent in the duty, and not a decrease of 25 per cent. Yet hon. gentlemen would tell us that we have the preferential tariff already, and that nothing more is necessary. The preferential tariff that we have operates against the best interests of the people; it discriminates against the consuming population and the workingmen of this country, who are compelled to pay higher duties under that tariff on such articles of clothing than under the old tariff, without getting any advantage in return. We are taxed above and beyond what we were when, according to hon. gentlemen opposite, we were bled white with taxation. The same thing applies to cotton batting. I have taken several articles entering into the daily consumption of the farmer and the workingmen. Under the general tariff we paid in duties on cotton batting, bats and wadding, and goods of that kind, \$1,917, while under the preferential tariff we paid \$40, making a total duty of \$1,957. Under the former tariff we would have paid \$1,767, or an increased duty of \$190, an increase of 10 per cent duty, and not a decrease of  $12\frac{1}{2}$  per cent, as was promised by hon. gentlemen opposite. Had the full preferential tariff been in force at that time, the increase under the general tariff on cotton batting, bats and wadding would have been \$192, and the decrease under the preferential only \$7, or an increase of  $9\frac{1}{2}$  per cent, if the full preferential tariff had been in force, instead of a decrease of 25 per cent. I will give another illustration. I have dealt with lines of cheap goods. I will now take an article of a more expensive character. In a country like Canada, where we have to wear light clothing in the summer and warm clothing in the winter, furs are just as essential amongst the farming community in the colder season as cheaper and lighter clothing is in the summer. Under the general tariff we imported in 1897-98 \$29,870 worth of furs, comprising caps, muffs, coats, cloaks, &c., on which we paid a duty of \$8,962. Under the preferential tariff we imported \$35,219 worth of furs, paying a duty of \$9,245, or a total duty of \$18,207. Had these been imported under the tariff of the former Government that was in force before this preferential tariff was introduced, we would have paid only \$16,272, showing an increased duty of \$1,935 on furs alone, or an increase of  $10\frac{1}{2}$  per cent duty, and not a reduction of  $12\frac{1}{2}$  per cent, as promised by hon. gentlemen opposite. But they say that the full preferential tariff was not in force. If the preferential tariff had been in force, we would have paid under the general tariff \$1,493 of an increase, and a decrease under the preferential tariff of \$880, making an increase, all told, under the preferential tariff on furs alone of \$613, or an increase of  $3\frac{1}{2}$  per cent in the duty, and not a reduction of 25 per cent, as was promised by the advocates of a preferential tariff. Should we not demand a mitigation of this loss to the people of this country, and insist that they should be entitled to secure from Great Britain something in return for the preference that we have given them in our markets, under which, instead of being an advantage to us, we are actually sustaining a loss? Now, who gets the benefit of the preferential duty? We are told that the consumer does, and the Minister of Customs has told us time and again of the large amount he has saved to the consumers of this country. Let me inquire into that for a moment. I contend, Sir, that the consumer does not get the benefit of the duty on low-priced goods, and neither does it go into the treasury of this country. To my mind, the only man who gets the benefit of the preferential tariff under this law is the exporter from Great Britain, or the importer or trader in this country. I say, Sir, that it will remain a standing blunder on the part of the Government that they ever enacted this preferential clause. Let me illustrate. Take one yard of print, an article of common use, which costs in England 3 pence 3 farthings per yard, and which, when laid down in this country, would cost about 10 cents at the ordinary rate of 60 per cent advance on the sterling. The reduction of duty on 3 pence 3 farthings would be a shade over one-quarter of a cent on a yard of print. This was formerly sold at, say, 12 cents a yard, and do hon. gentlemen opposite claim that that yard of cloth would be sold any cheaper under the preferential rate? No, Sir; that article, which was sold three years ago at 12 cents, to-day is sold at 12 cents, and not at  $11\frac{1}{2}$  cents. Take gray cotton, sold in England at 2 pence 1 farthing per yard, and laid down in this country, duty and all other expenses paid, at 6 cents per yard. The reduction on 2 pence farthing at  $3\frac{1}{2}$  per cent would be one-sixth of 1 per cent, and does any one suppose for a moment that the consumer of gray cotton in Canada is going to buy his cotton at one-sixth of a cent less per yard than he paid before? No; if the former price was 7 cents per yard, the present price is 7 cents. The consumer gets no benefit from such a preferential rate, and the only man who is benefited is the importer or the middleman on the large amount of their importations. The Canadian manufacturer is a loser, inasmuch as he loses the profits on manufacturing these goods; the Canadian artisan is a loser, inasmuch as he loses his wages to the extent of the increased goods which are imported into this country; the Canadian farmer loses the supply of his products to the workingman employed in our Canadian manufactures; and, consequently, it is only the importer who benefits to any degree by the preferential law which we have now on our statute-books. This preferential tariff was intended, no doubt, originally to discriminate in favour of Great Britain, but as it discriminates against Canadian workmen and Canadian farmers, it must either be wiped from the statute-book or we must do something to counteract its evil effects, by getting for the people of Canada a preference in the markets of Great Britain, which will, in the words of the resolution, enable us to people the vast wheat areas of the great Northwest, enhance our farm values, promote immigration, and increase the value of the products of the country.

Now, Sir, so much for the character of the preferential clause at present enacted in our tariff. I realize keenly that the masses of our people do not receive from it the benefits which they ought to receive, and I hold it to be the duty of this Government to seize upon the opportunity which now offers, to support the resolution before the House, and to endeavour to give effect to that resolution by getting our products a preference in the markets of Great Britain, in order to compensate for the loss we have sustained by reason of the present preferential clause. This we ask, and this, if granted, will without doubt be of benefit to the country. Last night we had an hon. gentleman put up in this House to endeavour to prove that an advantage had accrued to the farmers of Canada by reason of the preferential tariff. I do not believe that I would have spoken in this debate, had it not been for the broad statements made by the hon. member for Huron (Mr. McMillan), but I feel it my duty to point out to this House, and through this House to the country, that so far as the agricultural classes are concerned, in enabling them to purchase their implements and necessities of life at a cheaper rate than before, the preferential tariff is simply a delusion. I shall illustrate that by a few quotations from the Trade and Navigation Returns. When the farmer in the spring of the year buys a plough to plough his land, he finds that the duty on his plough has not been reduced—20 per cent before, 20 per cent now; $32,315 paid in duty on ploughs last year. There is no preferential reduction on ploughs, but spades and shovels were reduced from 38 per cent to 35 per cent, and the farmer only by adopting the methods of a hundred years ago, and digging his land with a spade, instead of ploughing it can get the advantage of the preferential tariff or reduction of 3 per cent. The plough, an indispensable article to the farmer, has not been reduced in duty, and it does not come under the preferential rate, because last year only seven ploughs were imported into Canada under the preferential tariff. Harrows are 20 per cent now, and were 20 per cent before; and we paid last year $7,232 duty on harrows. Cultivators, 20 per cent before, and 20 per cent now; we paid $2,829 duty on cultivators last year, and only fourteen came in under the preferential tariff. Seed-drills, 20 per cent now, and 20 per cent before; we paid in duty on them $10,876, and none came in under the preferential tariff. On the harrow, the cultivator and the seed-drill the farmer received no benefit from the preferential tariff, a tariff which gives him no countervailing advantage in the markets of Great Britain. But garden rakes and hoes have been reduced from 35 to 25 per cent, and if the farmer adopts the method of putting in his grain with garden rakes and hoes, he can have a slight advantage. There has been no reduction in the duty on mowing machines, an article that the farmer wants, not only in Ontario, but largely in the province of Manitoba and the Northwest Territories. But, says the advocate of preferential trade, you do not look at the whole question. You must remember that although mowing machines were 20 per cent before and 20 per cent now, scythes and snaths have been reduced 10 per cent. But these hon. gentlemen opposite who argue so, are under a wrong impression, if they think that farmers nowadays cut their hay with scythes. If they want to give the farmer any benefit, they must give him that benefit on the mowing machine, which he uses now, and not on the scythe, which went out of use many years ago. As if the Government were determined that the farmers should have no benefit from the reduction of duty on scythes and snaths, they actually increased the duty on grindstones from 12½ per cent to 25 per cent. The same applies to self-binders, on which the duty was 20 per cent then and it is 20 per cent now—no reduction whatever. Only 15 self-binders came into Canada last year under the preferential tariff. On binders $81,464 of duty was paid. But the farmers were told that the duty on sickles and reaping-hooks was reduced 10 per cent, as if they cut their grain with reaping-hooks, instead of self-binders. What a farce it is to speak of the farmers being benefited under this preferential tariff simply because the duty on sickles and reaping-hooks has been reduced from 35 per cent to 25 per cent. We find the same thing all through the tariff. Take the horse-rake, a modern instrument used by the farmer; last year we imported 1,973 horse rakes, not one of which came in under the preferential tariff, and on these the duty is the same now as it was before; whereas on hand rakes, costing 7 cents apiece, the duty has been reduced from 35 per cent to 25 per cent. Then, the duty on lawn mowers was 35 per cent before and it is 35 per cent now. There is no reduction on the article which the farmer wants to buy to trim his lawn, while there is 10 per cent reduction on the sickle, which he does not want to buy. If the farmer wants the modern implement he is obliged to pay the same duty as before. We were told last night in a boasting way, that barbed wire was put on the free list. I grant it; but with farmers of this country barbed wire has largely gone out of use; no good farmer uses it. While the Government takes the duty off the kind of fencing the farmer does not use, they retain the duty on the kind he does use. All through this preferential tariff, from beginning to end, the great agricultural classes of the country have not been considered; and hon. gentlemen opposite oppose a proposition which asks for a preference to be given to the products of Canada in the mother country in return for the loss the people of this country are put to every year by reason of this preferential tariff. The same thing applies to articles of household use. For instance, a clothes-wringer, which costs $2.50, formerly paid 30 per cent, now it pays 35 per cent, while the old washtub and board are allowed to remain at the old rate, 20 per cent. The modern article, which is wanted, is increased in duty, and the article which has largely gone out of use is reduced or allowed to remain at the old rate. Almost every farmer uses a cutter, not only for pleasure, but as an actual necessity. In the North-west, I fancy, nearly every farmer requires a cutter for driving over the prairie. He also requires to be clothed in furs; his wife requires a fur cloak; he needs fur mitts and fur robes to protect him from the cold. I cannot fancy a farmer of that country supporting the Government opposite, who have put on his cutter a 5 per cent increase, on his fur coat and his mitts a 5 per cent increase, on his wife's fur cloak a 5 per cent increase, and on his fur robes a 5 per cent increase. This is what they call a preferential tariff; but this is not the kind of preferential tariff we on this side of the House want. We want a preferential tariff that will help Canada—not one that will impose additional burdens on the people of this country for the benefit of the artisans and workmen of England. The farmer in Manitoba who drives into town in his cutter on which the duty is increased 5 per cent, with robes on which the duty is increased 5 per cent, and with an overcoat and mitts on which the duty is increased 5 per cent, perhaps sees a bank clerk walking down the street bent on pleasure with a pair of skates slung over his shoulder on which the duty has been reduced from 40 per cent down to 35 per cent, with a further reduction under the preferential tariff. Fur goods are higher to-day under the preferential tariff, even with the full 25 per cent reduction, than they were before. Not a single cutter came in last year under the preferential tariff. Go into a farmer's household and see how this one-sided preferential tariff works. An organ is an instrument which you will see in nearly every farmhouse, but pianos not so frequently, as they are a luxury more largely confined to people in cities and towns. On the organ the duty is 30 per cent, as it was before, whereas the duty on the piano of the rich man in the city, is reduced from 35 per cent to 30 per cent. Take the matter of transportation, and see how the preferential tariff applies. Every farmer wants a wagon; he cannot do without it; it is his means of transportation. I am not aware that any wagons came into Canada last year under the preferential tariff. The Government knew quite well that wagons would not come in under that tariff, so that the farmer still pays 25 per cent on his wagons the same as before. On the other hand, how do the Government treat the railways? We have had complaints session after session that the great railway monopolies are grinding the hearts out of the people of this country; but while this paternal Government, which professes to be looking after the interest of the farmer, imposes 25 per cent duty on his wagons, the same as before, they came down handsomely to the railway companies, allowing them to import their fish-plates and tie-plates at a reduction of 20 per cent on what they paid before and their spikes at a reduction of 33½ per cent from the previous duty. Engines and boilers are put at a reduced duty, and so on. The railway companies can obtain a reduction, but the poor farmer who must have a wagon is told that he must not benefit by any reduction on it by reason of the preferential tariff. I would not find so much fault if we had a preference on the other side. If we had a preference in England in return for the disadvantages under which we labour, I would be willing to put up with a great deal of the inconsistencies of the present preferential tariff; but we see how carefully the Government have overlooked the interests of the great producing classes of this country. Take a list of the articles, for instance, that are an absolute necessity in every farmer's household:

Tinware—25 per cent under the old tariff; 25 per cent now.

Wooden pails—20 per cent under the old tariff; 20 per cent now.

Tubs and churns—20 per cent under the old tariff; 20 per cent now.

Brooms—20 per cent under the old tariff; 20 per cent now.

Cotton bags—20 per cent under the old tariff; 20 per cent now.

Wheelbarrows—30 per cent under the old tariff; 30 per cent now.

Furniture—30 per cent under the old tariff; 30 per cent now.

Road-scrappers—30 per cent under the old tariff; 30 per cent now.

Even take the boots and shoes that the farmer wears, and the rate is the same now as before, 25 per cent. So that on articles of absolute necessity in every farmer's household, there is no reduction, and on few indeed of these is there any advantage to the farmer by reason of the preferential tariff.

Now, take other articles that are of absolute necessity, and we find the reduction so small that no perceptible advantage can accrue to the consumer :

	Old. p.c.	New. p.c.
Table cutlery—
A reduction of 2½ per cent....	32½	30
Saws—
A reduction of 2½ per cent....	32½	30
Locks—
A reduction of 2½ per cent....	32½	30
Curry combs—
A reduction of 2½ per cent....	32½	30
Butts and hinges—
A reduction of 2½ per cent....	32½	30
Stoves—
A reduction of 2½ per cent....	32½	30

The wall paper which adorns the walls of the farmer's house is reduced by 4 per cent. On such common articles of common daily use, as hammers, picks, and axes, the reduction is from 35 per cent to 30 per cent—the smallest possible reduction that the Government could make on articles that come under the preferential tariff. Take saws, for example, on which there is a reduction of 2½ per cent, we imported last year $81,148 worth, of which only $3,613 worth came in under the preferential tariff, the United States alone sending to this country $76,643 worth. Axes, on which there is a reduction of 10 per cent, we only imported $8 worth from Great Britain, while we imported $36,579 worth from the United States which paid the full duty. On locks, of which we imported $97,168 worth, only $8,868 worth came from Great Britain, and $85,233 worth from the United States. The same remark applies to adzes, picks, hammers, and other tools. Of these goods $37,032 were imported under the general tariff, but only $565 worth came under the preferential clause. Of stoves, we imported $88,778 worth, and only $679 worth came under the preferential clause. Butts and hinges we imported to the extent of $14,368 worth, and of these only $323 worth came under the preferential clause. Boots and shoes we imported $360,194 worth under the general tariff, and $14,685 worth got the benefit of the preferential tariff. Harness leather, an article required by every farmer, we imported to the extent of $5,443 worth under the general tariff, and $359 worth came under the preferential tariff. Pronged forks, an article of every-day requirements, we imported to the number of 58,098, and only 50 came under the preferential clause. Wire nails, an article of every-day consumption, we imported under the general tariff $6,907 worth, and not a dollar's worth under the preferential tariff, showing that the smallest advantage possible comes to the consumer of those articles under the preferential tariff, whereas the reduction on many of them, under the ordinary clause of the tariff, is very small indeed. Who gets the benefit? Does the consumer gain anything on the reduction of these articles even in the general tariff? Take a saw which costs 60 cents, the reduction in duty would be a cent and a half. Would that saw be sold at 73½ cents instead of 75 cents? I do not think it would. Take curry combs, the reduction in duty is half a cent, would that article be sold at 24½ instead of 25 cents? Hammers cost 40 cents and the reduction in duty is only two cents. No one will say they are sold any cheaper because of that reduction. On a stove which cost $25, the reduction of duty of 2½ per cent by this paternal Government which claims to be a friend of the farmer, would be 50 cents. It would still be sold at $25 as before. The reduction of duty on all these articles, whether they come under the preferential clause or not, is so small indeed that it is no advantage to the consumer, but is a great injury to the manufacturing industries of the country. Every farmer has to buy a wagon, and on that the duty remains the same, but every farmer does not want to buy a potato digger, yet this is one of the articles that is being held aloft to us as an evidence of the great reduction in duty under the new tariff. One of the great advantages claimed for this preferential tariff is that a reduction has been made on potato diggers, post hole diggers, manure spreaders, weeders, hay-tedders, and a number of other articles. Last night we had a list repeated over and over again to show the immense advantage accruing to the farmers by reason of the reductions in duty. But while every farmer needs a wagon, on which there is no reduction of duty, every farmer does not use a potato digger. Last year only ten were imported under the general tariff and not one under the preferential tariff. Perhaps on an average only one implement of this kind is used for every two counties. Then there is the post hole digger, an article which costs about 60 cents. How the Minister of Customs and the Minister of Finance and other hon. gentlemen on that side have boasted of the great advantage to farmers by reason of the reduction of duty on post hole diggers. Well, as I said before, one of these implements cost 60 cents, and last year we imported under the general tariff 231 of them and none under the preferential tariff. Then we have had held out to us the immense advantages that have accrued to the farmers under the one-sided preferential tariff, from the fact that manure spreaders were reduced in duty from 25 per cent to 20 per cent. But I find that last year we imported only two manure spreaders under the general tariff and none under the preferential tariff. I have lived in an agricultural county all my life, and I never saw one. Very few of these implements are used in the province of Ontario, and perhaps you would not find more than one in the province of Quebec. Weeders is another of these articles. We imported last year 88 under the general tariff and none under the preferential tariff. Where then is the saving to the farmer on that article? In fact scarcely any of these articles, on which there is a reduction, is used. The duty under this preferential tariff, is reduced on the articles which the farmer does not use, but those which he must have, on his wagons, and cutters and so on, the Government have carefully picked out and not included in the reduction of duty, and only on the articles that our farmers use in a very limited way is there any reduction. On articles of every-day consumption, such as cottons, woollens, the farming implements I have spoken of such, as ploughs, drills, cultivators, mowing machines, reaping machines, and all these more costly implements the Government were careful to give no relief. The latter do not come in under the preferential tariff, and consequently there is not relief as regards them to the farmers. Are we wrong then in saying that when this country is invaded by millions of bushels of foreign grain placed on the free list when the duty on flour is reduced, when the farmer is robbed of his farm, are we wrong in asking the Government to stand by the great producing classes of this country and demand from the mother country a preference in her markets in return for the preference we give her.

Hay-tedders are reduced from 35 per cent to 25 per cent. Last year there were imported under the general tariff 1,793 hay-tedders, and under the preferential tariff, none. I suppose there would be an average of one of these implements, costing about 44 cents, for every two townships. As I said before, this being an article not in general use, this Government very generously reduced the duty 10 per cent. Grain crushers were reduced from 35 per cent to 25 per cent. One of these implements costs about $18.50. Under the general tariff last year we imported two, and under the preferential tariff, we imported none. You can see how much advantage accrued to the farmers by the reductions on grain crushers. Then we come to the windmills. We heard the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan) last night telling about the immense advantage to the farmers in the reduction on windmills from 30 per cent to 25 per cent. One would suppose from what the hon. gentleman said that every farmer had a windmill. Last year 378 were imported under the general tariff, and none under the preferential tariff. How many farmers have windmills? One in every twenty. I doubt if there is more than one in every thirty. The use of them is very limited indeed. But the old rule applies, and the article that the farmer does not buy or that is not in general use is reduced by five or ten per cent, but the farm wagon is not reduced, the mowing machine is not reduced, while the scythe is reduced, the binder is not—and the reaping-hook is reduced, an article that the farmer does not want, that has gone out of use fifty years ago, just as this Government will soon go out of use—these are the articles on which this paternal Government are giving the preference and not the articles required for every-day consumption. The time has come, I say, when we should raise our voice and demand that some redress should be obtained for the great producing classes of this country; and if they are to be taxed, if they are to be “bled white” by increasing the duties on cottons and woollens and furs, on agricultural implements and cutters, articles, that are used by farmers generally, while there is a trifling reduction on what they do not buy except in limited quantities—if that is the kind of law we are to have in this country, if that is the preferential tariff we are to have, the time has come for the people to rise in their might and demand that the Government of this country should at once insist that the mother country should give us a preference in return for the preference we give to her. Feed cutters were reduced from 35 per cent to 25 per cent. Last year we imported $12 worth under the general tariff, and none under the preferential tariff. What a boon to the farmers of this country the preferential tariff is.

Now, I propose to look for a moment at the other side of the shield. We have seen how this affects the farmers. The list of articles used by the farmers has been very carefully gone over. I am surprised the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Rogers) can approve of it. Let us see now what consideration is shown to other people, not the great producing classes of this country. For instance, tower clocks are reduced from 30 per cent to 25 per cent. Electric light carbons are reduced from 44 per cent to 35 per cent, the larger ones from 25 per cent to 15 per cent. The farmers do not use electricity, and that accounts for the reduction. Then, you take seamless tubing for bicycles, reduced from 15 per cent to 10 per cent. The farmers have got a little the start of the Government in this, because they are beginning to use bicycles. I suppose, however, the Government did not know this two years ago, otherwise this material for bicycles would not have been reduced. Then, we find a reduction on nitro-glycerine of from 4 cents to 3 cents. Why, even the safe-cracker gets an advantage under this Government; every class gets consideration except the farmers. Composition metal for the manufacture of jewellery is reduced from 25 per cent to 10 per cent, a reduction of 60 per cent. I do not mean to say that the farmers' wives in this country do not wear jewellery, I am glad to know they do, notwithstanding the extortion of this preferential tariff. But the Government are very careful to see that this composition metal is reduced by this large percentage. Then we come to salad oil. I am a farmer's son, and I never saw any salad oil in the house in which I was brought up. We did not indulge in these luxuries, and I do not think they are indulged in as a rule by farmers. The farmers live as comfortably and as happily as other classes of the community, but they do not have salad oil on the table at every meal—that is rather for the dinners given by Ministers of the Crown. This is reduced from 30 per cent to 20 per cent. But the poor farmer's cutter is raised from 30 per cent to 35 per cent, the fur coat that protects him in the winter is raised from 30 per cent to 35 per cent, the fur mitts he wears—even his wife's cloak—they would not allow even her to escape—must bear an extra tax under this tariff. This Government is always ready to consider the luxuries, The duty on the labels put on the cigar boxes is reduced—and I do not know but they reduced the duty on the cigars—

An hon. MEMBER. No.

Mr. HENDERSON. At any rate, the label on the cigar box is reduced from 46 per cent to 35 per cent. And the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), ever mindful of his own interest, takes mighty good care that the labels on confectionery boxes or biscuit boxes are reduced from 46 per cent to 35 per cent. Nothing for the farmer. His wagon was 25 per cent before, it is 25 per cent now; but the label on the confectionery box or on the biscuit box is reduced from 46 down to 35 per cent. I say it is a hardship to the people of this country to have to submit to this tariff. Let us look a little further. They ask us to look at their free list. Take asphalt; it is put on the free list. Now, I believe that the farmers of this country do not use asphalt at all. In the cities that article is used to a very large extent, and it is on the free list. Then, we come to quebracho. Is that used by farmers? No, if it was, it would not be on the free list. That is a sufficient definition of it, to my mind. Then, you come to extract of nut galls. Is that an article used by the farmers to any extent? It was reduced from 20 per cent down to nothing. Then, powdered rubber—I do not know what that is, but I am satisfied it is something that the farmer does not use, or you would not find it on the free list. Oleostearine is reduced from 20 per cent down to nothing. What is oleostearine? Why, Sir, it is an article that is produced largely by such men as Swift and Armour, of Chicago, and is brought into this country free to compete against the farmer's tallow. I confess that I was instrumental myself, under the former Government, in having that article put upon the free list for the purpose of a dressing in making harness leather. But I was careful to protect the farmer. I said to the then Minister of Finance: I will undertake to say that if oleostearine is placed upon the free list to be used by tanners in the production of harness leather they will use more tallow for mixing in the dressing than they use now; and that result took place. But this Government undid what I did at that time. They not only allowed it to remain on the free list for that purpose, but they put it on the free list for all purposes, so that for any purpose whatever now oleostearine comes into competition with the farmer's tallow and tends to depreciate its value. Then we have another article placed on the free list for the benefit of the farmer, Russian hair skins, an article that farmers did not use very much, they are content with a cheaper kind of fur goods.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is for the benefit of the Doukhobors.

Mr. HENDERSON. It may be; perhaps they had in mind the importation of the Doukhobors when they placed Russian hair skins on the free list from 15 per cent. I find that China goat rugs are placed upon the free list. For the benefit of the farmer? How many farmers buy China goat rugs for their houses? I am sure that is not the kind of rugs you will find in farmers' houses, you can be sure of that. Mr. Speaker, otherwise they would not have placed it upon the free list. Then finally, in order to give a boon to the farmers of this country, to show that they are the farmers' friends, they come down at the end of the list and put mushroom spawn on the free list. How many farmers benefit by putting mushroom spawn on the free list?

Now, Sir, I have given you these illustrations to show that the existing tariff is a one-sided tariff. This preferential tariff strikes at every industry in this country. It strikes hardest at the producing classes of this country. It strikes the workingman, because the more you increase the importation of manufactured goods from Great Britain, the more you reduce the value of the labour of the workingman in this country. It strikes him not only in his work, but it strikes him in his wages. We were told last night that farm servants and others never got better wages than they have received since this paternal Government enacted the preferential tariff. What mean all the strikes we hear of? What means the strike on the Grand Trunk Railway for the advance in wages that was asked for? What mean the strikes all over the country, if this preferential tariff is bringing back prosperity and happiness to the workingman? It is because it is not doing so that we on this side of the House are asking for some compensation. As we have no power to get rid of that preferential tariff, being unable to persuade the Government to repeal the enactment to which they are wedded, all we can do is to rise in our places, and in our might to demand that some counteractive, some antidote, should be given, and that, if we are compelled to submit to the injustice of the preferential duties given in the tariff legislation of two years ago, then we ought, on the other hand, to be allowed a preference in the British markets for the products of this country which would enable the great producing classes of this country to find not only a more ready market, but a more profitable market, for the articles they produce; and in that way in the words of the resolution which has been proposed by the leader of the Opposition, great and inestimable advantages would accrue to the farmers and other producers of Canada competing against foreign rivals in the United Kingdom. In that way it would tend to set in motion a great tide of immigration to our shores, and help to people the vast wheat areas of the North-west, while enhancing the farm values in the older portions of this country.

Mr. D. D. ROGERS (Frontenac). I pray the indulgence of the House for a short time to reply to some of the remarks of the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson), who has just given us a repetition of a portion of a former speech. I have not hitherto trespassed on the patience of this House in speaking either in the debate on the Address, nor upon the Budget. If I had known I would be allowed the privilege which has been granted to others, probably I would have taken more pains to prepare the matter which I wish to speak about. The subject under discussion is preferential trade with England, and I notice that our hon. friends on the Opposition side have suddenly become deeply interested in this question. We never heard anything about it from them in the past, until the present Government introduced their legislation giving a preference to British goods coming into this country. In the past we have not tried to obtain preferential trade with the old country but unfortunately the present Opposition, who were then in power, were too much wedded to their protection idol to think of such a thing. Of course, preferential trade with England would be a slap to the principle of protection. I will admit that I was a protectionist myself in my younger days. In the seventies the farmers felt that something was necessary to improve the condition of the country. I suppose that in my youthful days I thought that protection would remove the evil which existed. And so, with many other good patriots who were farmers, I endorsed the principle, believing that it would be a desirable change. In this connection, I may say that there is no class of the community more loyal and patriotic than the farmers. They are willing on all occasions to bear their share of the burdens of the country; in fact, they are willing to bear an extra share of the country's burdens if it is necessary for the good of the country that they should do so. I remember that that late Right Hon. Sir John Macdonald said that protection was only a means to an end. It was never intended that it should be continued for any great length of time, but it was only designed to give our manufacturers a foothold in the country, so that they might be able to hold their own with the manufacturers of other countries. That same view was expressed by other politicians at that time. One of the eye-openers to me was the speech delivered by the late lamented Mr. Dalton McCarthy, who condemned the National Policy, on the ground that it had not produced the results which it was designed to bring about. He took the ground that it was time to commence to retrench and take the heavy burdens from the shoulders of the farmers. But it appears that the Conservative party were so firmly tied to the chariot of protection that instead of reducing the burdens of the farmers, they were determined to continue them. I will admit that they did reduce the duty a little on agricultural implements, cutting it down from 35 per cent to 20 per cent. This was due to the agitation of the farmers throughout the country, and it showed one result of the activity of the Patron organization. The late Government found that something was necessary. Farmers belonging to the Conservative party were breaking away from the ranks and joining the Patron organization, and the agitation became so strong that the Government felt obliged to do something in that direction. I am not at all satisfied with the reductions made by the present Government along the line approaching the principle of tariff for revenue, but I do say, as I said when I addressed the House upon this matter before, that while I feel that they have not done as much as they should have done, I am convinced that there is some good in the preferential tariff. I believe it will have some effect in reducing the burdens of the farmers. Hon. gentlemen opposite, I find, from the utterances which have come from that side of the House time and time again, are as strongly protectionists as ever they were. The late hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Montague) said once in this House—and I was rather surprised to hear him—that if this Government raised the duty to the old standard, it would receive the hearty support of the Opposition. I am sure such a statement as that does not encourage the farmers to expect from those hon. gentlemen a removal of the burdens of protection. I do not care, even if there were only 1 per cent reduction of protection, but I claim there is a much greater reduction. I have come to this conclusion from conviction, as the result of my observation and sad experience, and not owing to any favour from any party which, it has been suggested, that I have asked for, that I cannot con-scientifically support a policy of that kind any longer. I may say that since I have entered this House three years ago, I have been further weaned away from the principle of protection than ever.

Mr. WALLACE. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Rogers) allow me to ask him a question? He says that he is against the principle of protection. Was he opposed to taking the duty off meats of 3 cents a pound; mutton and lamb, 35 per cent; cheese, 3 cents per pound, which is about 40 per cent; eggs, 3 cents per dozen, or butter, 4 cents per pound?

Mr. ROGERS. Give the farmers a fair field, and they ask no favours from any one.

Mr. WALLACE. These duties are from 35 to 40 per cent, while the duty on agricultural implements is 20 per cent.

Mr. ROGERS. As long as the principle of protection is in existence, we naturally claim our little share; but I say that I do not believe in that principle. It would be very foolish to say that as long as protection lasts, we should not apply the principle to the farmers, although it cannot be said with any truth that home consumption materially affects the price of articles we have to sell. The price of every article of farm produce that we have to sell is regulated in England. I propose to take up the question of corn in a little while, if hon. gentlemen will give me time. Wherein has the policy of protection benefited the farmers? Wherein has a protection of 35 or 40 per cent on agricultural implements been of any advantage to the farmer? Upon an average farm in the province of Ontario it will take $1,000 to $1,200 to provide the farmer with agricultural implements. The annual outlay would be from $150 to $200 a year for repairs, wear and tear and such new implements as may be required. The original outlay would involve an addition for duty of $300 or $400, and you would have to expend in duty on account of repairs from $75 to $80 a year. I cannot see in what way the principle of protection can benefit the farmers. Judging from our experience and from the statistics we have, there must be something radically wrong in Canada, if protection has not produced the results promised for it. We have had protection for the last seventeen or eighteen years, and we look in vain at the statistics for proof that it has been of any advantage to the farmers. Unfortunately, we have not statistics so fully prepared for the other provinces as we have for the province of Ontario. In the year 1898 in what condition do we find the farming population of Ontario? It was represented to us that we were going to retire at the end of a certain number of years with our pockets full of money. I will show what protection has done, as the results are indicated by the annual statistics for 1898 of the province of Ontario.

We know that the population improved in the cities and towns, but the misfortune is that it decreased in the agricultural portion of the country. The population of the rural district of Ontario in 1887 was 1,140,138, but in 1897 it was 1,113,530, a decrease of 35,326 in the rural population of that great province. The natural increase should be 40 per cent for the decade, and that being the case we should have 100,000 greater population instead of 35,000 less. And what about immigration? It is computed that from the year 1893 an average of about 80,000 a year came into the Dominion. The returns brought down show for the year the number of immigrants for 1882, 112,458; 1883, 133,624; 1894, 103,824, in the three subsequent years about an average of 80,000 a year. Surely Ontario, the garden of Canada, should have a portion of these immigrants remain with them, but we find that in our rural districts we lost not only the natural increase, but over 35,000 on the actual count, and together with our share of emigration. The total expenditure by the Dominion Government on immigration, from confederation down to 1892, was $6,347,629, and it is also computed that about $1,500,000 was, in addition, expended by the provinces for the same purpose. Surely, in view of the expenditure in immigration and the decrease of our rural population, protection has not done much for the country. These facts cannot be disputed, and it, therefore, remains undeniable that there is something radically wrong in the principle of protection. The cities and towns increased their population by 279,656, but they grew at the expense of the rural districts, taking away our young men, the real source of wealth, and creating a condition of things which is not a healthy sign in any nation. Under this marvellous system of protection the assessed value of our lands, in the province of Ontario, decreased to the extent of $11,387,085, whereas the assessed value of the cities and towns of the Dominion increased by $103,010,607. That is an extraordinary way to make an agricultural country prosperous. Surely, in view of these facts, the policy of protection cannot be endorsed by an agricultural people. The amount of taxes gathered from the rural districts was $181,396 less than ten years previously, and, of course, the depreciation of farm values could not help but bring about that result. Now, during that period, the cities increased their taxes by $2,922,522, and we know that the citizens must get that money to pay their taxes, indirectly, from the farmers of the country. In the end it all comes out of the farmers, notwithstanding, as I have said, that the assessed value of their lands has decreased by $11,000,000. I am glad to say that the province of Ontario decreased its bonded indebtedness to the extent of $1,597,909. The farmers of Ontario bore direct taxation for the purpose of having the bonded debt reduced, and in doing that they deprived themselves and their families of many necessaries and comforts of life. I say here that the willingness of the farmers to bear direct taxation to wipe out the bonded indebtedness proves to this Government, or any other government, that the farmers do not like an increased debt. I hope it will be a warning to this, and to every other government, not to increase the debt. It is to the credit of the farmers that they did reduce their bonded indebtedness, and it shows that they are ready to do business in a business way. But we must remember that in the same period, the towns increased their bonded indebtedness by $5,680,908, and the cities increased their bonded indebtedness by $17,390,308. Let me ask, where do the cities and towns get the money to pay this indebtedness and the interest on this indebtedness? It must come out of the farmers of this country, and any system that taxes the rising generation of the country, and takes them from the rural districts to the cities, must be a disadvantage. But the worst feature of the thing is that in the last ten years the chattel mortgage indebtedness of Ontario has increased by $1,300,000, and the total chattel mortgages of Ontario to-day is $3,933,600 on the farmers. This is the prosperous condition in which the National Policy has left the country.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. ROGERS. It is all very well for some gentlemen to laugh, but they will have to be very serious about it when they appeal to the farmers of this country. The principle of protection has injured our country, and I say that it is a curse to any agricultural country on the face of the earth. Now, let us look at the United States. By the census of 1890 there were 12,000,000 families living on farms, and of that 12,000,000 there were about 6,000,000 who owned their own farms, but 30 per cent of these owning their farms were encumbered. There were 6,628,735 families living on rented farms in that great protected country. That is what protection has done for the American farmers; and if the farmers are not prosperous we all know that the rest of the country cannot be. In the United States 47·80 per cent of the farmers own their own farms and 52·20 per cent hire their farms. Now, let us see what the condition of the farmers is in the states close to the border. The hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) a short time ago said that after a visit across the border, he had found that our farmers in Canada were as well off or better off than the farmers in the States. I am sure that is no argument for protection, so far as it affects the farmers. In the great state of New York the total number of families on farms is 1,308,015. Of that number 290,025 farms are free, 201,258 are encumbered, and 816,732 are hired. That is how protection has benefited the farmers of that great state. In the state of Ohio there are 785,291 families living on farms, of these 302,943 own their own farms, 123,423 farms are encumbered, and 358,925 are rented farms. If you call that prosperity, I do not. It shows what protection has done for the farmers of that state. The same thing is true of the state of Illinois, which we all know is a very fine farming country. In that state 778,015 families are living on farms, of that number 260,124 own their farms, 126,250 farms are encumbered, and 391,641 are hired. In the state of Maine, another border state, the whole number of families living on farms is 150,355, of whom 78,040 are living on free farms, 21,721 are on encumbered farms, and 50,594 are on hired farms. Then take the state of Massachusetts, which is in the very midst of those great city markets which we hear so much about. In that state the number of families living on farms is 479,790, of whom 108,804 are living on free farms, 66,249 on encumbered farms, and 304,737 on rented farms. That shows what protection has done for that country.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the hon. gentleman be kind enough to say where he gathered these statistics?

Mr. ROGERS. I got them from the American census of 1890. We have not any later reports, which I am sure would make a very much worse showing. I am not speaking from hearsay. Anything I state in this House I generally try to corroborate by figures. As I said before, one great objection to protection is that it has built up the cities at the expense of the farmers. It has also taken the best of our young men away from the farms.

An hon. MEMBER. Where have they gone?

Mr. ROGERS. To the big manufacturing centres. If that is prosperity, it is not the kind of prosperity that I like to see.

Mr. TAYLOR. Who is feeding them?

Mr. ROGERS. I do not believe in sacrificing the great interests of this country even for the sake of building up large cities. The cities and towns in Canada do not materially affect the prices of farm products. The prices of all agricultural products, not only those of Canada, but also those of the United States, are regulated in England. When we can send cheese and butter to England at a cost of less than half a cent a pound, we can see how little the distance counts, and how accessible that market is to our farmers. We want a home market when we can get it at a fair and reasonable cost, and when it does not grind the lifeblood out of our people.

As regards the preferential tariff between this country and the old country, all that I have said leads to that indirectly. The late-

Government could not very well say much to England on that subject; but we find that the exports of farm products to Great Britain have grown from about $48,000,000 in 1895-96 to $75,000,000 in 1897-98. Such an increase in three years gives us good hope for the future. The farmers of this country in past years have been looking too much to the interests of "the other fellow," the manufacturer, instead of looking after their own. There was a market for our produce in England in the past, even 30 per cent better than now, there were the same waters to carry our produce, there was the same opportunity, and why did we not get the market? It was because we were building up towns and cities in Canada at the expense of the farmers, and neglecting to develop our trade with England. To give an illustration of how we have been looking after the interests of "the other fellow" instead of the interests of the farmer, I may say that in the year 1880 we exported about 16,000,000 pounds of butter, whereas in 1889 our exports of butter had dwindled down to only 902,000 pounds. What were other countries doing at the same time? Denmark improved its system of butter-making, its government aiding in every possible way, until its exports into Great Britain increased from 42,289,632 pounds in 1885 to 130,230,240 pounds in 1895. What did Australia do at the same time? In 1890 Australia exported to England only 4,535,776 pounds of butter, whereas in 1895 it exported 35,083,664 pounds. What was the reason of this great increase? It was because Australia had a business Government, which looked after the interests of the farmers of the country, providing cold storage and good accommodation by both land and water, carrying their goods 6,000 miles, part of the way under the torrid zone.

The late Government say that they have looked after the cold storage for our produce. I want just to refer to the meeting held in Montreal in 1896, at the instigation of the Patrons. There has been an agitation for a fast line of steamships, and a subsidy has been offered of $750,000 a year for ten years, and $500,000 for ten years more, for that purpose. Well, there was something talked about cold storage in connection with that fast service, but everybody must admit that if we should have the cold storage accommodation it must be at the expense of speed, for you cannot provide that accommodation in those steamers and enable them to run at 20 knots an hour. The Patrons were very much opposed to this subsidy for a fast steamship service, and made their opposition known by means of resolutions and deputations to the Government, and in my opinion, it is to that agitation we are indebted for the cold storage accommodation we now enjoy instead of a fast service. I believe that it was that agitation which prevented the consummation of a scheme for a fast line of steamers. What we require is better cold storage accommodation, better freight accommodation, both by land and water, cheaper freights, and the fast service may come afterwards. In the fall of 1896 not much had been done, and this large meeting of the Butter and Cheese Association of Montreal was held at the instance of the Patrons. It was explained at that meeting that Denmark, Australia and every other country had provided cold storage accommodation, had agents in Great Britain looking after their interests, and that if we wished to compete with those countries we would have to follow their example. The large steamship representatives were there, and to show you how they thought on the subject, Mr. Torrance, the representative of one of the large lines, claimed that the steamship companies had no interest in providing it. He said that some years ago they had spent $10,000 to provide cold storage accommodation in one of their vessels, and could not get enough freight of that kind to make it pay. The railway companies had not furnished refrigerator cars or cold storage accommodation, nor was there any at Montreal, and the company, not being able to obtain sufficient freight, had to tear out the facilities they had provided, and Mr. Torrance declared that unless they had some substantial encouragement they would not attempt the experiment again.

A resolution was moved by Mr. Arthur Hodgson, seconded by Mr. John McKernan, and carried unanimously:

That this association approves of the importance of providing increased refrigerator accommodation, and that a committee of at least ten members be appointed by the association to work with the Central Board of the Patrons of Industry and Live Stock Association, to wait upon the Premier of Canada and place before him the absolute necessity of such accommodation being provided, and to procure complete information with regard to the facilities afforded by other countries for the exportation of agricultural products to the British markets.

That resolution was carried unanimously. Another resolution along the same lines was moved by Mr. D. McFagan, and seconded by Mr. D. M. McPherson:

That all the different interests of producers, manufacturers and shippers of perishable food products of Canada be invited by this association to send representatives to join this association in a deputation to meet the Hon. Mr. Laurier with reference to the obtaining of improved means of transportation to the consuming markets.

At that meeting there was not a word said about this fast steamship line, but a great deal said about better freight accommodation. And we know the result. Cold storage accommodation was afforded, and our export of butter a short time ago had increased from 4,000,000 pounds to 11,000,000 pounds in less than three years, and other perishable goods in like proportion. It is in that direction that this Government should work—the direction of providing better markets for our products and cheaper and better freight accommodation, so that we may be better able to meet competition in the English market, and had there been more farmers in our Governments, this matter would have been attended to before this.

It being Six o'clock, the Deputy Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. ROGERS. Speaking of the effects of protection upon a country, I had, before recess, just touched upon the fact that one of the greatest injuries that protection had done to the agricultural community was in taking away our brightest young men into other callings in life. The effect of protection has been to increase the incomes of those living in the cities, to increase the profits of the manufacturers and improve the wages of the artisan and tradesmen, and to such an extent has it succeeded in doing this that it has drawn away from the farms our young men who, of course, seek occupations that afford the best remuneration. A marked instance of that has been the enormous exodus of our best and brightest young men to the United States. No doubt, protection there was rather overdone, and while for a time they were able to pay higher wages, the hard times of recent years have had a tendency the other way. There is no doubt that, if left to itself, protection will work its own cure. Production goes on and the natural effect of competition is to lower prices. But then comes in the curse of corporations, monopolies and trusts. It is hardly necessary to illustrate—the example of the United States is sufficient, where the whole country is ruled by trusts. Unfortunately our own people have been following in the footsteps of our neighbours to the south of us, and the great trusts of the United States have been reaching over and forming branches in this country. On the other hand, the agriculturists cannot form a trust even if they would, and are, therefore, at the mercy of monopolists. Unfortunately also we have too few representatives of the great labouring masses to take places in this House and fight for them. I am sorry to say that in this country, as in any other country, it is too often party first, the great tolling masses being left out of consideration. To show how combines are promoted by the protectionist policy, I will read a summary of an article here quoting the evidence of the representative of probably the greatest monopoly of them all—Mr. H. O. Havemeyer, the representative of the great sugar trust. I think this pretty well fills the bill as applied to this country as well as the United States:

The chief owner and promoter of the American Sugar Trust has made statements before an investigation commission to the effect that these combinations could not exist without the aid of the tariff which permits them to plunder the people. Under free trade it would be quite possible for all the sugar refineries in the United States to organize a trust and cut down the cost of management and manufacture by combining their business under a single head. But it would be impossible for them to charge the consumers more than the natural price for their product. The existence of the trust does not depend on the tariff, but its evil effects do. Without the aid of the tariff the trust could cut down expenses, but could not advance prices. It could not levy a price sufficient to pay dividends on watered stock, for outside competition would make that impossible. In Britain an attempt at the American method of fictitious capitalization has resulted in a failure, because there was no protective tariff to aid in the securing of inordinate profits.

One of the great evils of protection in any country is the power it gives to raise the prices and so oppress the people. The hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) spoke about the effect of the preferential tariff. It is quite true, as the hon. member was able to tell us, that the returns do not show a great deal of increase of imports. But he cannot measure the effect of this tariff in reducing prices by the mere quantity imported. We know and feel every day by observation and inquiry that prices are lower. Our manufacturers feel that they must reduce prices or else face the competition of imported goods. It is not necessary that the goods should actually come in in order to compel the reduction of prices—the goods are there to be brought in, and even though returns show no increase of imports, the object is achieved just the same. It is not to be forgotten also that the effect of such a tariff is not immediate. One of the leading importers of the country said that it would have a marked effect in the future, that many of the merchants had a large stock on hand, and they were obliged to hold up prices as well as they could in order to avoid loss; but the next importations would show the effect of the tariff in the reduction of the prices of goods. In woollen goods, there has been a very considerable reduction. If these results had not followed to a certain extent at any rate, the Conservatives would have been shown to be very bad prophets. The first year they declared that this tariff would close up all our factories. It could not do that except by reducing goods to prices below what our own factories could produce them for and pay dividends. If the tariff were to have no effect in reducing prices, why did the Conservatives raise that howl? But in a short time, they gave that up and said that the Government had adopted the Conservative policy. It is quite true, and I repeat it, that we have too much protection. We are not satisfied with the tariff as it is, but we are thankful for the reform that has been effected, so far as it has gone, and we live in hopes, from the promises made, that it will go further. And I feel confident that at the next election the Government will hear of this so strongly that they will be compelled to make further reductions. The movement has been in the right direction, even if it has not been so rapid or has not carried us so far as we desired. A great deal has been said about binder twine, so much that one would think there was nothing more to say. But the hon. member for Halton in a former speech spoke about the abolition of the duty, saying this was actually the cause of the increase of the price. It has been said that the effect was to close our factories and throw the manufacture of binder twine into the hands of a few. But the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan) showed that the factories were closed, not because of the abolition of the duty but because, from three to four years before the abolition of the duty, these factories had been bought or leased and closed. The hon. member for South Huron mentioned the different factories—there is no use going over the list again—and the annual cost of keeping these factories closed was about $30,000. This the Cordage Company paid in order to secure a monopoly of the business. Then the Farmers' Binder Twine Company of Brantford is sometimes dragged into this discussion. Last year this company issued a circular to the farmers of the country, a copy of which I have here. They claimed that they had kept down the price of binder twine by fixing their own prices at a comparatively low scale compelling the others to come to them. I do not say that they would not go into a combine if they could not make ends meet otherwise. But this is what is shown by their circular: The price of binder twine in 1892, made by that company, was 12½ and 14½ per cent; in 1893 it was 8½ and 9½ cents; in 1894 it was 7 and 8 cents; in 1896 it was 7 and 8 cents; in 1897 it was 6½ and 7½ cents; and last year it was offered to the farmers of this country at 6½ and 7½ cents. Here is what they say in their circular:

This company again setting their figures on binder twine, good to the 20th of June next, is intended to assist the farmers in getting the benefit of low prices on all binder twine in the hands of the opposition, and preclude the possibility of exorbitant rates being exacted as against them.

A large deputation waited upon the Minister of Finance asking him to put a duty of 25 per cent on binder twine. They said they could not live, that their factories would be closed up if they were not protected. At the same time the Farmers Binder Twine Company were selling their output last year at 7½ cents retail. It has been published broadcast, and never denied that they made 60 per cent on their capital. Now, the average amount consumed in Canada of binder twine, is about 7,000 tons, of which the Kingston Penitentiary manufacture about 500 tons, Central Prison 1,000 tons, and about 1,000 tons were imported. That left about 3,500 tons to be manufactured by the cordage company. The cordage company had a protection of 25 per cent on all other cordage they manufactured. Still they had the audacity to come to the Minister of Finance to clamour for more protection. As for the prison work, some means should be taken, if possible, so that it would regulate the price, so that this very necessary commodity, which the farmers have to use, should not be allowed to get into the hands of a combine. A deputation waited upon the provincial government in 1897 asking that the binder twine factory of the Central Prison be closed up, on the ground that it caused them an unfair competition; and still they were making 60 per cent all the time. If they could make 60 per cent on a thousand tons they ought to make 300 per cent on 3,500 tons and a protection on all other cordage they manufactured. Still a request was made to the Dominion Government to close the factories in connection with the Kingston Penitentiary and the Central Prison. I myself have bought binder twine in the latter part of August at 7 cents, after the contract had run out. I say the Government should take some strong steps as regards this prison binder twine, to prevent a recurrence of its getting into the hands of a combine.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. May I interrupt my hon. friend for a moment? I am sure we can hardly afford, at this stage of the session, to spend two or three hours talking against time. Since the hon. gentleman got up he has spent scarcely fifteen minutes in dealing with the motion that is before the Chair. At this period of the session we are all anxious to get on, and I presume the Government are desirous of going on with their Estimates. I see no reason why this debate should not be brought to a rapid close, provided you have the goodness to keep the speakers to the question of preferential trade.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I would remind my hon. friend opposite that our excellent friend from Frontenac (Mr. Rogers) is a very infrequent speaker.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I know he is, and therefore I hesitated on that ground.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I do not think that all the speeches that are made on the other side of the House bear any more on the question of preferential trade as contained in my hon. friend's motion than this discussion, which, I think, by the way, was provoked a good deal by what was said on the other side.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER. I may remind the hon. member for Frontenac that the discussion should be strictly confined to the question of preferential trade, which is now before the Chair. If the hon. gentleman wishes to discuss the general question of the tariff, he can find an opportunity of doing so after this motion is disposed of.

Mr. ROGERS. I wish to remind the leader of the Opposition that no objection was taken to the long harangue of the hon. member for Halton, which was but a repetition of a portion of a former speech, and I claim the same freedom of discussion. The hon. member for West York spoke about the Canadian Pacific Railway and a lot of other things, and he was allowed to go on. But it is all right. Of course, I bow to your decision, Mr. Speaker, but the more I am stopped the more I will hammer at these things. I think I must have been hitting pretty hard or there would not be so much objection taken; however, I will abide by your objection, Mr. Speaker. In regard to the preferential clause of the tariff, in the sense in which the present Government have brought it in, I may say that I heartily endorse it, as I think the country does, and I am sure that the results will be of great benefit to Canada. I am only sorry, however, that at the conclusion of the speech of the right hon. leader of the Government, he did not intimate that the Government were so well satisfied with the working of the preferential clause that it was their intention to make another reduction of 25 per cent. As to the effect of preferential treatment of British goods, I am bound to say that I believe that we have not yet attained to that position that we can bargain with the mother country for concessions in her market for our products. In the future the time may come when we have attained to such dimensions, commercially and in other respects, that we will exert such an influence upon the mother country and improving and increasing the volume of the goods that we send to her, that we may expect her to approach us with a view to larger trade relations, as well as us approaching her. I believe it is the duty of Great Britain to approach the colonies, instead of it being the duty of the colonies to approach Great Britain. I cannot see on what ground we can expect Great Britain to give us a preference, unless we share in the glories of the Empire. I believe that what Mr. Chamberlain meant, when he spoke of sharing in the glories of the Empire, was, that we should bear a part of the expense of maintaining the Imperial army and navy. It is doubtful whether what we would gain by preferential trade would compensate us for this responsibility, should it be imposed upon us, although I am free to say that if Great Britain were in need of assistance, she would find Canada prepared to bear her share. I cannot see any particular harm in this resolution. If there is anything to be gained by making an approach to the mother country, there is no harm in passing such a resolution, and I did not get up with the idea of objecting to the resolution. I feel that some good may come out of it in the future. It may encourage the people of Great Britain to take more interest in Canada by bringing us more prominently to their attention, and for this reason I do not see any possible harm in it. It may have good result in the near future. But I do feel that there is no reason why we should not show our good-will on every possible occasion. Perhaps it is better, Mr. Speaker, for the patience of the House that you did not permit me to go into some of the questions that I had proposed bringing up, but I just felt that there was no need for the little check that I received, and which I think was not called for.

Mr. OSLER. Mr. Speaker, at this hour of the night and at this stage of the discussion, I propose to say a very few words. I fancy that nine-tenths of the people of this country, and perhaps hon. gentlemen on both sides of this House, agree, that if we can get preferential trade between the Empire, it would be a good thing for us, at all events. There is only one way to obtain preferential trade, and that is by persistently working for it, and by getting the people of Great Britain to see that it is a benefit to them as well as a benefit to us. I had the honour to represent the Board of Trade of Toronto at the meeting of the Chambers of Commerce in 1896, and that is the only reason why I feel called upon to make a few observations on this subject this evening. The Toronto Board of Trade resolution, suggesting preferential trade within the Empire, was thoroughly debated. There were objections to the resolution as it was presented, but had it been pressed to its final stage, the majority of the members of the chamber would have voted for it. Of course, a large number would have been against it, a great many out-and-out free traders. The only objection that we hear raised against preferential trade is the one objection, that Great Britain is so thoroughly free trade that she could never be induced to adopt any such plan. Surely, hon. gentlemen opposite have shown that free trade has not so many virtues that they must live up to it. Having changed their minds, surely they cannot assume to say that it is not possible, quietly and in time, to change the minds of the English free traders. We cannot expect them to change wholesale, as has been the case with our hon. friends on the Government benches, but we can expect to gradually show them that preferential trade within the Empire, while perhaps more beneficial to us colonists, will eventually be more beneficial to the parent country, because, as we produce more of the food supplies which they want, so much more will they get the benefit, and so much more will the country generally profit. Trade with the colonies is always more profitable to the mother country than trade with foreign countries, so that preferential trade, by developing the colonies, will secure more profit to Great Britain. I do not propose to go into the arguments, because this question has been fully discussed. I merely rose to make these few remarks to show that I am thoroughly and entirely in sympathy with this movement, and that I believe that, if we persistently give evidence of our desire for preferential trade within the Empire, the day is not very far distant when the goal will be reached, and when we will have preferential trade within the Empire, to the great benefit of Canada and of all parts of the Empire, and in time to the greater benefit of the mother country.

Mr. MacPHERSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire, in a very few words, to express the opinion which I have entertained for a great many years, and I may say that I very much regret that I cannot agree with my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Osler). The impression I have had for many years is, that we cannot by any possibility bring about preferential trade within the Empire until we can show that the trade between Great Britain and the rest of the world is less than she can attain within the borders of her own colonies and her own dependencies. There is no question about that, so far as I can come to a conclusion from the facts and figures. Until we can show that there is a possibility of such a state of affairs existing, it is idle and a waste of time for this House and this country to discuss the question. I believe that when we can show that, we will get down to a basis where it will be worth while considering the question. As far as I am concerned, I do not think there is any possibility of reaching that position during the lifetime of the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill), with all respect to him, and with every desire that he shall have a long life and prosperity. I simply say that he and I—and I do not wish him that fate—will be in our graves for many years before it can be proved that the trade between Great Britain and her colonies and dependencies has increased to such an extent that it would be greater than her trade with the rest of the world, so that it would be worth the while of Great Britain to consider this question of Imperial inter-commerce. The thing to my mind is altogether beyond doubt, that we are never going to attain it. It has been said by the great Napoleon that the English are a nation of shopkeepers. So long as they are a nation of shopkeepers they will consider the balance of trade, and if they can do more trade with the people outside of their dependencies, they will never consider the question which we are now discussing. I think we are really losing time in discussing a matter of this kind. It has been brought up over and over again without any benefit to us, and, in fact, I believe, to the discredit of the intelligence of the people of this colony. I entirely disapprove of continuing debates of this sort. We ought to get down to business and settle the affairs of Canada, and by discussing practical questions pay more respect to the common sense of the people who sent us here. My hon. friend the leader of the Opposition must realize the condition of commerce in the old country, and the way people look at these matters there. The English people think of nothing else except what will enure to the benefit of the old country. They look upon these matters in a purely business point of view, and we, knowing that, it is a pity to waste time year after year and session after session discussing this question, which I believe has been brought up too often. If there were any possible chance of bringing about any advantage to Canada, or if there were any possible chance of bringing about this so-called preferential trade, I would go hand in hand with hon. gentlemen opposite, but from my knowledge, and I have studied the question for over twenty-five years, I am convinced that the discussion of this thing is utterly useless, and that, therefore, it ought to be dropped.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I must express my regret that the very genial member for Hamilton (Mr. MacPherson) has thrown cold water upon the question which is now being discussed upon the motion of the hon. leader of the Opposition. So far from agreeing with my hon. friend that the time taken up in discussing this question is wasted, I beg to submit to him, and to this House, that at the present stage of the history of Canada this is the most important question which the public of Canada have to consider. It is a question which, if agitated to success, will do more for the prosperity of the Dominion, whose prosperity, I am sure, the hon. gentleman (Mr. MacPherson), as well as all of us, desires, than any other question which has for many a day been discussed in this Parliament. I was rather astonished that the hon. gentleman (Mr. MacPherson) was so faint-hearted as to ask us to give up the struggle in which we are engaged, though he himself admitted that if that struggle could be carried on to success it would be a boon to us. The Canadian people have carried on struggles in the past amidst the expression of just such discouraging sentiments as have fallen from the hon. gentleman to-night. Only twenty-eight years ago, in this Parliament and out of this Parliament, the question of the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway was looked upon as a useless expenditure of time when it was discussed. Men looked upon it as a dream when they discussed it first in the old Parliament of Canada, and so was the confederation of the provinces looked upon as a dream, but those dreamers, in both cases, many of them, fortunately lived to see their dream become a reality. So, Sir, I trust that the member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill), who has given such devoted services to this question, to which he has paid such great attention, may live to see his fond dream a reality, and a reality that will confer a great boon upon the Canadian confederation.

Now, Sir, so far as the statement is concerned, that we will never be able to secure Imperial and colonial preferential trade without we first win the hearts of the British people, I quite agree with that sentiment, and I fancy every one in this House agrees with it. There has been no proposition to coerce the people of the United Kingdom into this proposition, but the whole effort of the hon. member for North Bruce, the whole energy of the leader of the Opposition, here and elsewhere, in connection with this question, was to educate public opinion in Great Britain, and to educate it colonial-wards for the purpose of creating and arousing sympathy in connection with this great problem. It is true that the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) has been from year to year called a faddist. It is true that when he first introduced his resolution on these lines into the Parliament of Canada, he had scarcely a listener in this Parliament, and only a few sympathizers, because there were only a few in all Canada who were au fait with the question. And yet, Sir, the hon. gentleman (Mr. McNeill) stuck to his task, and he stuck to it with such ability, and he stuck to it with such determination, that his speeches have not only been read throughout the Dominion of Canada, but, as I can personally testify, they have been read in the wider field of Great Britain, and have influenced public opinion there to no small extent. It was for me a pleasure when I heard the right hon. the Secretary of State for the Colonies, Mr. Chamberlain, deliver his celebrated speech at the Canada Club dinner; it was for me a pleasure to hear that Imperial statesman, who has done so much for the promotion of colonial interests, quote a member of the Canadian Parliament (Mr. McNeill), and quote him approvingly as one of the warmest friends that the Empire had, either at home or abroad. Some reference has also been made to the leader of the Opposition, and this much ought to be said in this Parliament: That the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) during the time that he represented Canada in London, did more to arouse public sentiment upon the importance of this question than any other agency which has been used for that purpose. In every portion of Great Britain the leader of the Opposition, who was then serving Canada in his capacity as High Commissioner, addressed meetings; and if public opinion is to-day alive upon that question in the various portions of the three kingdoms, I repeat, and I repeat advisedly, that it is due largely—more largely than to any other agency—to the patriotic efforts of the present leader of the Opposition in arousing that public sentiment by his great speeches, and by his interviews with public men and leaders of public thought in the wider field of Imperial politics.

Mr. MacPHERSON.

Now, Sir, there are two or three things in connection with this debate which I had hoped to say were absolutely admitted; yet I am afraid, after some of the sentiments I have heard expressed, that I shall have to make one or two exceptions. I was going to say that there was no difference of opinion throughout the length and breadth of Canada at the present moment, that it would be of immense importance to Canadian interests if we could secure this boon in the markets of Great Britain; and I am astonished, as I think every other member of this House is astonished, to hear some of the sentiments that have been expressed by some hon. gentlemen who have addressed this House. Is there a man in the Parliament who, after looking thoroughly into the question, will deny that if to-morrow or the next day or at any time in the future, we should be able to secure the very smallest preference in the markets of Great Britain, it would be a better immigration agent than all the expenditures which can be made by this Government or by any other Government for the purpose of securing settlers for our North-west fields which at present are untilled? I go still further, Sir, and say that if we were able to obtain that Imperial concession, we should find the north-west of the United States emptying to our advantage; for farming there would not be on a par with farming in the Canadian North-west if we were recognized, as I have no hesitation in saying we ought to be recognized, by the sympathetic ear of Great Britain. Well, Sir, I thought that every party in Canada were agreed upon this question until we came to this debate. There was another point on which I thought we were agreed. I thought we were all anxious to do whatever we could to secure that boon; and I was rather astonished at the answer given by the members of the Government who have addressed the House on this question. What was the answer of the hon. the Postmaster General last night? He dealt with one portion of the resolution of my hon. friend, and his objection was that a technical error had been made in stating what had been the meaning of the statement made by the Duke of Devonshire in his speech which has been so much quoted in this House. Well, Sir, if that were the only point in that resolution to which the Postmaster General and the Prime Minister objected, I am sure that the leader of the Opposition, and I am equally sure that my hon. friend from North Bruce (Mr. McNeill), who introduced this resolution, are not wedded to the form of it.

Mr. McNEILL. Hear, hear.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What they wanted was a declaration from this Parliament—a declaration which would have been of immense value and importance to our friends in the Imperial sphere, who are fighting this fight, and struggling for this boon; a unanimous declaration that the Parliament of Canada, representing all classes and every province of Canada, was anxious to draw close and closer the ties of Imperial and colonial preferential trade, to gain for the colonies the sympathetic ear of the centre of the Empire in trade matters, and to give our sympathetic ear to the centre of the Empire in return; and if the objection raised is the only objection, it can, I am sure, be easily remedied. If the declaration as to the Duke of Devonshire is the only objection from hon. gentlemen opposite—and it is practically the only one that has been urged—that clause can be expunged from the resolution, and this Parliament, if it is so minded, can pass a unanimous resolution looking to the main end in view, namely, the influencing of public opinion in the old country.

Now, Sir, as regards the very much discussed question as to what the Duke of Devonshire said, I am not going to deal with that further than to say that the meaning which was taken from the words of the Duke of Devonshire by the leader of the Opposition, and so expressed in his public utterances in this country, was the meaning which was taken from them, as the hon. Minister himself explained, by the colonial Prime Ministers who heard him, and it was the meaning taken from them, as the Duke of Devonshire, in his epistle to the Postmaster General himself admits, by the press of Great Britain who criticised him as abandoning the policy of free trade and espousing the policy of protection in favour of the colonial position. But, Sir, if there is a dispute as to the opinion expressed by the Duke of Devonshire, there can be no dispute as to the opinion expressed by the Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain. Nor can there be a single scintilla of doubt as to what Mr. Chamberlain meant to say when he made that speech at the Canada Club dinner which I had the pleasure of listening to. I am not at liberty now to enter into a discussion of the conversations which I had with Mr. Chamberlain on that subject, but I am here to say this—and Mr. Chamberlain I am sure would give the words a hearty echo if he heard them—that Mr. Chamberlain looked upon it as one of the grandest themes which loomed up for discussion before the great British people. He looked upon it as one of the great saving policies of the Empire, and I am sure that he would ask no better reward in the public life of his nation than to have it said of him when he is gone that he had promoted imperial and colonial preferential trade, and had brought it to a successful issue. So whatever doubt may be expressed as to what the Duke of Devonshire said, I know what the policy of Mr. Chamberlain was, and I know that the desire of Mr. Chamberlain was to receive suggestions and encouragement of every sort from the colonial portions of the Empire, in order that he might be the better able to carry on that struggle to a successful issue in Imperial circles. And, Sir, that is the point at which I conceive that the Government of the day made a mistake in their preferential work, and it is the point at which I consider they are making a still greater mistake when they refuse to accept the proposition of the hon. leader of the Opposition as to a unanimous expression of the opinion of this House in favour of this great policy. This much must be depended upon. The colonies for a number of years were exceedingly underrated in the British mind. England was at one time asleep as to the importance of her colonial possessions. But, Sir, a new race of public men have sprung up in Great Britain. They are a race who look to the glories of the Empire in the future being won in her colonial fields, and with that feeling abroad, with the newer race of public men in Great Britain, there is a determination to help the colonies in every possible way to achieve the destiny which is in store for them as a part of the Empire. And among these men I have no hesitation in saying that the principal one is the Right Hon. Mr. Chamberlain, the Colonial Secretary, whose efforts have always tended towards drawing the colonies closer, and the one thread, the one cord which he desired strengthened and made more vigorous for that purpose is this very tie of colonial and Imperial trade, and I only rise to express my regret that the other side of the House, instead of combatting the idea, instead of opposing it on technicalities, have not joined with the leader of the Opposition in passing a unanimous resolution, which would have done much to encourage those who are trying to help us in the circles of Imperial politics.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois.) As the seconder of this resolution, I claim the indulgence of the House, Mr. Speaker, only for a few moments. I am afraid that we have wandered a little away from the question since the debate began. Some gentlemen have been discussing free trade and protection. As one gentleman said a few moments ago, that might have been germane to the discussion, but I think it was very far away from the motive of those who put that motion into your hands. My impression is that to discuss this matter thoroughly, we must go a few years back and recall the time when Canada, both under Liberal rule and Conservative administration, had been trying to obtain better commercial relations with the United States. We all know that in 1877 Mr. Brown was sent by a Liberal Administration to Washington to try and effect a renewal of our former commercial relations with the United States.

Mr. WALLACE. In 1874.

Mr. BERGERON. Twice then, in 1874 and 1877. Similar efforts were made again by Conservative administrations from 1878 down to 1891, which, I believe, was the last time when members of this side went to Washington for that purpose, under the Administration of the present leader of the Opposition. Even at that time, the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill), who, we all know, has been working ever since he has occupied a seat in this Parliament for the attainment of this great object, and whose zeal we all acknowledge is only surpassed by his patriotism, had taken up this great question. But when he first approached this subject, he had few people to assist him and very few sympathizers. Public opinion, however, through his persistency and on account of the circumstances, began to side with him and to conclude that if we could not have the commercial relations we desired with the United States, we might turn our eyes to the mother land. Thus it was that public opinion was turned strongly in favour of that policy, and the leader of the Opposition, when First Minister of Canada, went to the province of Ontario and there preached this policy of closer commercial relations with the mother country. So much did public opinion sympathize with his views that the right hon. gentleman who now leads the Government determined to follow his lead and use the wind which seemed to be filling his sails. In the city of London and in the city of Toronto he declared that he also was in favour of commercial relations with the mother land just as much as was Sir Charles Tupper the then leader of the Government. We need not enter into any very long discussion to find out why the right hon. gentleman and those who are following him have since changed their mind. In 1897 the right hon. gentleman went to England to represent Canada at the Queen's Jubilee. At that time some of the broadest-minded politicians in England, the Right Hon. Mr. Chamberlain, the Duke of Devonshire, and others, were preparing public opinion in the mother country to favour closer commercial relations with the colonies. We all know how conservative the English nation is and how hard it is to change public opinion in that country. We all know how hard it is to make free trade England appreciate any movement in the direction, I will not say of protection, but even fair trade. Still the good work was going on, and when the right hon. gentleman arrived in England in 1897, with the other Premiers of the different colonies of the Empire it had made considerable progress. I was astonished the other night to hear the right hon. gentleman say that in England it was useless to speak of such a policy because any commercial relations that might take place between the colonies and the mother country would have to be on a free trade basis. He seemed to have forgotten that when he arrived in Liverpool, even before he had time to meet the Duke of Devonshire or Mr. Chamberlain or any others of the leading men of England, he immediately knocked the whole scheme on the head by declaring that Canada was not prepared to do anything in the direction of this policy, because Canada did not want to touch the free trade policy of England, which was the best policy. No doubt it was that speech of his which earned for him the Cobden Medal. In that speech he declared that the policy of his Government was in the direction of free trade, but that he had not yet arrived at that goal, and that consequently he could not be expected to give in his adhesion to the policy of preferential trade. That declaration of the right hon. gentleman put a stop to the movement. It was no use talking about it any more. Lord Rosebery declared that he was afraid to talk about the matter because it seemed like a corpse, and Mr. Chamberlain said he would not touch it with a ten-foot pole. It was dead. What were the reasons given last night by the right hon. gentleman for opposing this resolution? I was surprised at his not accepting it because it is framed in such a way that he could have accepted it, and it would then have gone forth to the world that the Parliament of Canada was in favour of such a policy. What were the reasons he gave? They were, first, that Canada has a protective policy. Why, during the past three years we have heard hon. gentlemen opposite declare that their policy is not protective but that we had a revenue tariff. The right hon. gentleman, however, to-day declares that his policy is one of protection and that there could be no closer commercial relations with the Empire except on the bases of free trade. I was astonished, a few moments ago, when I heard the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Rogers) declare quite the reverse. He is opposed to this resolution because he is in favour of free trade. I do not know how the right hon. gentleman who leads the Government and his supporter from Frontenac can agree in voting both alike on the same question, when both oppose this motion from a completely different stand-point and for exactly opposite reasons.

The hon. Postmaster General last night seemed to think he was giving a blow to the whole scheme when he read a letter from the Duke of Devonshire. The hon. gentleman's proceeding seemed to me to rather lack courtesy. He had sent to the Duke of Devonshire a newspaper from Canada purporting to contain a report of a speech made by the hon. leader of the Opposition, and it seems to me it would have been more courteous on his part to have first asked the hon. leader of the Opposition if he had been correctly reported in that paper. Still he sends to the Duke of Devonshire what is supposed to have been the utterance of the leader of the Opposition, but which the leader of the Opposition has declared since were not correctly reported—

Mr. MONTAGUE.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, I did not say that. I may say that the statement my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) made, that the speech was very incorrectly reported, was quite true. I took occasion to call the attention of the editor of the "Mail and Empire" of the very imperfect report that was made of my speech, and he explained that owing to the sickness of the reporter who was to have attended the meeting, a very inferior reporter had to be sent to take his place. While the report was an imperfect one, I did not complain of the statement made so far as referred to by the Postmaster General.

Mr. BERGERON. What I heard the Postmaster General say was this: That he sent to the Duke of Devonshire a paper in which an utterance to this effect was printed—that an offer had been made by the Duke of Devonshire to the right hon. gentleman—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I did not say that.

Mr. BERGERON. That is what I was saying, that the leader of the Opposition had declared that he had not used such language.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. My hon. friend will allow me still to explain. The position that the Postmaster General put the question in was not correct, because my reference was to what the Duke of Devonshire had said to the assembled Premiers at the meeting. I did not say that the Duke of Devonshire had made a definite proposal to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and that is what I took exception to in the letter of the Postmaster General, and in the answer of the Duke of Devonshire.

Mr. BERGERON. The whole thing is here in "Hansard." The Postmaster General brought to the knowledge of the Duke of Devonshire that it had been said that he had made offers to the Premier of Canada. It was not true; this had not been said in that way. What had been said was that the Imperial authorities had gone very far towards helping such a policy—and that is perfectly correct. But the Duke of Devonshire, in his answer, does not say anything which could give to any man in this House a pretext to vote down this resolution, as has been declared by some of the hon. gentlemen opposite. The Duke of Devonshire admits that his utterances were heralded in the papers as something against free trade, although he says he did not do it for that purpose. But one thing is clear in all this, and that is, that the Imperial authorities, the Duke of Devonshire with the United Empire League, the Right Hon. Mr. Chamberlain, and Mr. Vincent—he was Mr. Vincent when he was here a few years ago, but I am informed that he is now Sir Howard Vincent—advocated drawing closer the relations between the mother country and the colonies.

Then, the right hon. Premier (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) immediately on arriving in England, for what reason we do not know, but surely not for the reason that he gave last night, poured cold water upon the whole scheme. But that did not prevent him obtaining the Cobden medal, and to-day he is back in Canada at the head of a protectionist Administration. And in spite of his utterances he refuses—what? The terms of this resolution are very clear, and this is what he refuses:

To do anything to secure for the produce of Canada that preferential treatment in the markets of the United Kingdom which would be of such inestimable value to the farmers and other producers of Canada.

That is the whole case. Does my hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) assume his present attitude because he expects to meet in a few days or in a few weeks the American commissioners? If so, my impression is that he is putting his case in a worse position. If he refuses to do anything to thus obtain better commercial relations with the mother country, and if he does not succeed—and it is my impression he will not succeed—with the American commissioners, where does he stand? As has been well said in the speech of my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson—a fine speech and one containing every possible reason why this House should unanimously support this resolution—Canada has everything to make her great in every possible way. Canada has now a little over 5,000,000 of inhabitants. We are perfectly well satisfied with the position we occupy. We are perfectly satisfied with the protection we have had under the British flag. Every part of this Dominion is satisfied, and, if I may speak more particularly for the province of Quebec, I would say that in no other province of the Dominion are there more devoted and loyal subjects, or subjects better satisfied with the system under which we live than in that province. The people of Great Britain import over $600,000,000 worth of goods every year, the greater part of them of such classes as we could furnish. What is our share in this $600,000,000 worth of goods? About $50,000,000. The greater portion of these products come from Russia, France, Germany, Belgium and the United States. Why should we not help on the policy which has been promoted in England by men of such importance as the Duke of Devonshire and Mr. Chamberlain to bring about closer relations between England and the mother country? Under such a policy we could use more of the goods manufactured in England, and we could send to England much more of what is produced in Canada. I was surprised to hear the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Rogers), considering that he spoke particularly in the name of the farmers. If there is one class more than another that would benefit with such a policy as we advocate, it would be the farmers of Canada. My hon. friend from Frontenac, in his long discourse, spoke about direct taxation. If the Minister of Trade and Commerce would speak openly, I believe he would speak in the same sense. That is a matter to be debated. Some gentlemen are in favour of direct taxation as being in accord with sound political economy, while others favour the system that we have today. It has been the boast of some of the Liberal chiefs in the old times that they were in favour of direct taxation. The right hon. Premier, when he discussed the matter at Liverpool, never mentioned that. If he is a free trader as he pretends; if he is worthy to have the Cobden medal which he wears, he should be in favour of direct taxation, as they are in England; and if he is not, I say he is not sincere. He comes here and stands at the head of a protectionist administration, and refuses, as by the declaration made last night—and I suppose he will carry with him the whole of his party—to do anything toward the realization of the hope of a great many people in England and of a great many people in this country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I will not say any more on this subject. It is the last shred, I believe, which has been thrown to the winds by the right hon. gentleman and his party of all the promises they made before the election. They have been false to their promises upon the tariff question, they have been false to their promises upon the economic question, they have been false to all the promises made when on this side of the House, and the right hon. gentleman has even been false to the position which he took not earlier than 1896. Is that an explanation of these immense Estimates which have been brought down by the Minister of Finance this session? We are now called upon to vote nearly $55,000,000 this year, and afterwards, I suppose, hon. gentlemen opposite are going to the country to try and induce the electors to support them, in spite of the fact that they have been false to their promises. We know that they have been successful in some by-elections, but how, Mr. Speaker? The machine has been working hard and we are seeing into the way it works in some other part of this building. But let me tell the hon. gentlemen opposite that though they have been able to succeed in a few counties, through the worst elements of those counties, when the great electorate of the Dominion of Canada has an opportunity to pronounce its voice, it will send those hon. gentlemen back to occupy the position which they occupied before and from which they never should have emerged.

Mr. A. C. BELL (Pictou). I would not think it necessary to make any remarks upon this occasion were it not for the short but pithy speech of the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. MacPherson); and when a gentleman in this House feels so strongly upon the subject that he declares this House of Commons is wasting time in discussing this question, I really think that every person in the House who differs with him, and who looks upon this as a live question, as a very important question, should in some way express himself to that effect. Now, I think I may say this much, that there is no other question at present before the Canadian people which is more generally thought of than preferential trade. It may be that the hon. member for Hamilton is perfectly right when he says that this is an entirely unattainable object; but I think that a great number of the electors of Canada know pretty nearly what preferential trade means, and I think a large percentage of them hope to see it realized. I know, for my own part, that the farmers, so far as I have met them, are anxious indeed to see the markets of Great Britain opened to us on better terms. There is no question as to the importance and value to the farmers of Canada of obtaining, if necessary, a preferential position in the British market. That has been adverted to upon a great many platforms throughout the country. I think it is perfectly understood everywhere that if we could obtain a preferential position in the markets of Great Britain, it would be, as was expressed here to-night, a force more potent for the advantage of Canada than anything that could be devised by any expenditure of ingenuity or outlay of money.

Mr. BERGERON.

There are other reasons, it strikes me, that tend to assist this movement. Not only do our farmers hope to reach the markets of England, but there is a large school of people who hold that the most important and dearest of all Britain's interest, her security and safety, require that she should as fast as possible develop the trade of her colonies, that she may be able to feed herself from friendly countries, from her own colonies if necessary. It is realized in England, as I think it is probably realized by the enemies of England outside, that a country with her enormous population, which has only about six weeks provisions on hand, and which, being an island, is liable to be cut off from communication with the rest of the world, is in a condition that would be really desperate if by any accident the two great countries that at present feed her, Russia and the United States, should refuse to send her supplies, or if an enemy could command her ports so as to blockade them. Every person who has considered this subject, agrees at once that that danger which some people seem to think may threaten England, is of such magnitude that there ought to be an effort made to secure such a state of affairs as would enable Canada to supply England. Canada is the nearest portion of British territory which is in a position to supply her with food, and furthermore, the route across the north Atlantic, by which supplies could be carried from Canada to England, is one which the great naval power of England could make absolutely secure. Even in time of war, it is unassailable from the northern side, and controlling the Atlantic as Great Britain does, the development of the farming interest of Canada to such an extent as to guarantee the satisfactory feeding of the British population would, coupled with the power of Great Britain, make her position not only independent, but absolutely secure.

But, Mr. Speaker, I think, although the member for Hamilton does not think so, that throughout the English-speaking world, not only in Great Britain, but in all her colonies as well, there is a strong tendency at work to draw the people of British blood and British origin closer and closer together. There is an idea now, I think, universally felt that Great Britain is not the whole British Empire. I think that all the great self-governing colonies, and indeed all the possessions of Great Britain, are gradually coming together and being welded into one great politically united government. This tendency will, at a very early period, make necessary such changes in the form of government as will result in the aggregation of the various provinces and dependencies of the Empire with a consolidated central government, and unquestionably it will be one by which the power and strength and resources of every portion of the Empire can be brought together for purposes of defence or for purposes of attack. The first object, I believe, that is going to be realized, is to consolidate the different parts of the Empire in a form in which they can present the whole British Empire as a united front against the rest of the world, though not in a hostile sense at present.

Now, there are some features about this discussion which, I think, must have struck any person hearing it. In the first place, instead of discussing the question of trade between Great Britain and her dependencies, one that we would naturally expect to occupy the first importance in the discussion of this question, it will be found that all the earlier speeches in this debate dwelt altogether upon a different subject; they dealt entirely with the question as to what was the real attitude of certain British politicians and statesmen. Nearly the whole speech of my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition, the speech of the leader of the Government, the speech of the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill), as well as that of the member for West Assinibola (Mr. Davin), were entirely devoted to trying to make clear what was the precise attitude and what were the real opinions held by certain prominent British statesmen. Now, that may seem a little strange, still I think it was the proper course to be followed in this discussion, because when we come together to settle this question, as some time not very late, I believe we will, it will be found that the opinions which will have to be considered, the opinions which were referred to by the member for Hamilton, the opinions of free trade England, England being the senior partner in the concern, must necessarily have a controlling influence. It will be necessary to know what is the attitude of the great public men of England, without which it will be impossible to take a step or to have the slightest idea as to what lies before us.

Now, I think that, as far as this discussion has gone, the facts elicited and opinions developed as being held by the leading public men of England, are of a character certainly not to discourage those who are in favour of preferential trade, but rather to encourage them. The opinion of Lord Salisbury, as expressed some years ago, when the question of the German and Belgian treaties, which were even at that day realized as being stumbling-blocks in the way of preferential trade, was discussed, was in favour of the abrogation of these treaties, he going so far as to say that they should never have been drawn. The expressions quoted from the Duke of Devonshire go to show that, so far as he is concerned, the strong and fixed attachment to free trade as the only system calculated to meet the requirements of Great Britain, is not held by him, as by some political economists, so strongly as to be an obstacle in the way of preferential trade. When we consider the position of Mr. Chamberlain, the Secretary of State for the Colonies, as set forth in the different quotations which have been made from him, we find that there is but one sentiment pervading the whole of his utterances, and that is, that he looks upon the question as one ripe for discussion. He does not refuse to discuss it, but he takes the ground that it is a question which must be discussed, not upon a proposition made by Great Britain, but made by the colonies, and he deliberately invites the colonies to an expression of opinion, and assures them that they will be met in a generous spirit by the mother country. That being the case, I think that, instead of feeling discouraged, instead of looking upon it as a perfectly hopeless thing, the colonies should continue to make advances to the British Government in this direction. It seems to me that the time is ripe for a full and free discussion of this great question, and I believe that, while it is the duty of the representatives of the people of Canada, as represented in this Parliament, to confirm that fact, and to urge the Government to take that course, it is for the Government, as a body charged with the business of government, to make advances, either directly to the British Government, or by conference with the representatives of the other colonies, so that they may all unitedly approach the British Government. I believe that the British Government expect that, and I feel satisfied that a consideration of what has been done in this direction should not discourage the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. MacPherson), but rather ought to encourage him to believe that he may live—and I do not think it will be many years hence—to see this hope, indulged in by so many people in Canada, realized. This matter has already been brought in official fashion to the notice of the British public. At the Conference of the Colonial Premiers, held in Ottawa in 1894, a resolution was passed which was submitted to the Home Government and replied to by the Marquis of Ripon, as representing that Government. This reply was distinctly unfavourable, but upon what points, let us see. In the first place, the existence of the Belgian and German treaties was urged against the adoption of the plan. In addition to that, it was argued that a preference given in the colonial markets could not be weighed fairly against the disadvantage that might result in foreign markets, because it was shown by statistical authority that the trade of the British colonies only represented about one-fourth of the foreign trade of Great Britain. Now, there is nothing discouraging in that. It is a reason and in consequence a matter with which you can deal, because when you have a person opposed to you advancing reasonable arguments, you are in a position to consider his arguments, and if you can show that they are unsound, or that circumstances and the passage of time are bringing about different conditions, you may hope to persuade your opponent to take a different position and to come to a different conclusion. It will be found, when we examine the trade of Great Britain, that to-day we do not meet exactly the same state of affairs which was met by these colonial Premiers, to which the Marquis of Ripon replies. Within four years these two treaties which, as he pointed out, were plainly stumbling blocks of a most serious character to any negotiation, have been removed absolutely. During the sixteen years preceding 1897, from 1881, the question of the denunciation of these treaties had engaged the attention of the Government of Canada, but it was not until the tariff of 1897 had been passed that at last the British Government gave way and these treaties, which were a stumbling block to preferential trade, were removed. They were removed in consequence of steady and persistent efforts, supported by logical reasons and facts. I believe that the other difficulties which stand in the way, and the other reasons advanced by the Marquis of Ripon, in a similar way will be disposed of, and that we will have perhaps a complete solution of this matter, because, whereas the Marquis of Ripon was perfectly right in saying that the whole trade of the British colonies only bears a proportion of one-quarter to the whole foreign trade of Great Britain, it will be found, in addition to that, when we come to consider the total export trade of Great Britain, as between her colonies and foreign countries, that instead of it being 25 per cent, the British colonies represent 32 per cent of the trade. The consequence is, that every day, and every year, the trade of the British colonies, British possessions, and British dependencies is becoming a more important trade to that enormous class, that influential and powerful class, which I presume to-day controls the politics of Great Britain, the great manufacturing and exporting business class, the merchant class of which the hon. member for Hamilton spoke. The trade of these dependencies and colonies is becoming a great trade, and is becoming more important to the British people. I maintain that, instead of having any reason to be discouraged, when we consider the utterances of Lord Salisbury and of the other public men which have been cited, when we consider the result that is following these constant efforts to-day, when we consider the tendency of Great Britain's trade at this moment, I think that every one will see that we have reason to feel satisfied that all that is required to carry to a satisfactory conclusion at an early day our effort to see a greater Britain and a greater Empire consolidated, with preferential trade arrangements established throughout all these colonies, is steady, persistent action on the part of the several dependencies concerned. There is one objection that may be urged to the programme so long and so ably advocated by the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill), and it is, that he has not submitted a plan, that no person is in a position to submit a perfected plan. Even that is in sight, because the utterance of Mr. Chamberlain almost exactly indicates the line and direction upon which action must be taken, and indicates it in the most liberal sense, because he says that the British public and British Government, instead of binding themselves to a strong adherence to free trade theories and doctrines, are perfectly willing to give the colonies a great deal of latitude in the establishment of customs tariffs for the several portions of the Empire, and in the maintenance of revenue tariffs as between one portion of the Empire and another. We might expect that from Great Britain, because, although we are always in the habit of speaking of Great Britain as a free trade country, we should speak of her as a free trade country with great limitations. A large amount of the revenue of Great Britain is derived from a customs tariff upon the same articles that are taxed in this country, and I think that for the necessary services of the greater Empire, which would result from this consolidation, a greater latitude would be allowed the component parts of the Empire to impose duties to sustain their revenues. I think the language will go to show plainly, that a certain amount of even protective tariff might be allowed as against the outside parts of the world. The complaint of those who oppose our contention is that we are not able to show any vestige of a plan for our scheme. I appeal to those in this House and in the country who have been imperial federationists in the past, and there are many of them here, to remember how fifteen or twenty years ago the name of Imperial federationist was derided, how those of us who believed in this term, which I may say is now almost realized, were scoffed at. The great argument of the enemies of Imperial Federation was then to say to us: You have no plan; and, Sir, when we spoke in reply to that, we said that the strongest ground for the faith that was in us was that we had no plan, that we expected Imperial Federation when accomplished not to be the device of any one man's mind, but a growth, as that great country of which we are citizens was the growth, of a people who had the instincts of government, and the capacity to found states and to develop them. We maintained that in the very fact that we had no plan lay our greatest strength, for we felt we were parts of a great movement which had gone on to great things in the past and would go on to greater things in the future. I believe that this great question of preferential trade, which is only one of the subordinate questions in connection with the greater Britain, will be worked out in the same way. We know that the Anglo-Saxon people of which we form part have while showing themselves tenacious in adhering to everything good in their past, tenacious of respect for their traditions and established institutions, possessed at the same time that higher and greater virtue of not being tied to these traditions, but ready when the time came to change and shape them and conform them to the conditions existing under which they could work out greater and greater things than had been accomplished in the past.

Mr. A. BRODER (Dundas). I do not care to give a silent vote on this question, but I shall claim the indulgence of the House for only a few moments. I shall take the opportunity of referring to some remarks addressed to the House by hon. gentlemen opposite who spoke against the motion now in your hands, Mr. Speaker. In the first place, let me deal with my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Macpherson), who, I think, has taken a very peculiar position on this question. He seems to think that the English people will deal with this matter only from a business stand-point. I admit that to a very considerable extent, but I point out that that statement does away altogether with all that these hon. gentlemen have claimed for their Premier, in giving to England a preference under this system, viz., that with one stroke of his statesmanship, he changed the whole sentiment of the English public in reference to Canada. And by what means did he do it? By giving a preference in our market of 12½ per cent, and if public sentiment in England could be changed by that, then I think the English public did not look from a business stand-point upon the action of the Premier of Canada in that respect. I venture to say that if my hon. friend (Mr. Macpherson) will look into the matter, he will find that while it is true the English people do in a practical commonsense way look upon those matters from a business stand-point, that is the strongest reason why we can approach them to obtain the preferential trade sought by this resolution. Did not Mr. Chamberlain state a short time ago in England, that Canada, Australia and South Africa with 13,000,000 of people, take as much in value of goods from Great Britain as do Germany, France and Russia, with a population of 220,000,000. I fear my hon. friend (Mr. Macpherson) did not look on this question in all its bearings when he reached the conclusion he did, as to the remoteness of our chance of obtaining this preference in England, because of the smallness of our population and the comparatively small business we are doing in the English market. I wish further to say, Mr. Speaker, that this is a question which is more important than many hon. gentlemen in this House seems to think it is. If you look at the English market for the last twenty years you will find that it has been substantially a stationary market. What I mean is, that its importation of agricultural food products has only increased as the population of the country has increased. I do not speak of all the natural products that England imports, but I speak of the agricultural food products which the English people buy from foreign countries including the colonies. If you look from the year 1878 down to the present, you will find that the importation of this class of goods into England has only increased as the population has increased. I wish to make the point, that that market being stationary, there is very little elasticity in it, and therefore it is most important that the colonies should secure a foothold through preferential trade in that market if possible, before it is still more closely occupied by other countries than Canada. If we go into the English market sitting in the front seat, rather than in the hind one, to use a common expression, it would be a great boon not only to the farmers of this country but to all the producers of Canada. It is a great deal better for us to go into the English market on a clear road, than to go in as a country, that would, so to speak, have to jump hurdles to get there. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that hon. gentlemen opposite take a serious responsibility if they vote against this motion. There can be no greater danger in the interests of this country, than that on a motion like this hon. gentlemen opposite should vote against it. The significance of this House of Commons composed of 213 members, by a solid vote asking this advantage from the mother country, would have a moral weight on the British mind that is almost incalculable. If we in Canada and the other colonies could approach England as a unit on this question, the treatment we now receive at the hands of other countries would be modified before two years. The responsibility that hon. gentlemen opposite take, in keeping the position of things as they are, so far as other country's treatment of us and of England is concerned, must rest with these hon. gentlemen. I assert here, that if it once entered into the minds of the American people, for instance, that the colonies and Great Britain were sitting down in Council together to decide upon a policy in reference to their trade with each other, a policy that would give to each of them a preference over outside countries, the policy of the United States towards this country and towards England would be modified before two years. That same argument applies to every country that exports goods into England. I make that statement for the reason that the great carrying trade of the world is largely in the hands of England and her colonies. You may go to any seaport you like, and nearly every vessel that is going or coming thence is either going to a British port or coming from her shores. And, Sir, the gentlemen opposite, who take the responsibility of saying to England: We do not want this preferential trade from your hands, take a responsibility that no patriotic Canadian ought to take.

Now, Sir, I wish to deal with this question for a moment or two from the farmer's stand-point, and I do that simply for the reason that some might take the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Rogers) as an exponent of that class of the community. That gentleman (Mr. Rogers) has made statements which cannot be accepted by any man who claims to belong to that humble class of individuals in this country.

Mr. EDWARDS. Noble class.

Mr. BRODER. Noble class, if you like, but they are badly represented sometimes. I say that no class of the community is so much interested in this preferential trade movement as is the farming class. What does it mean to the farmer? It means to him that not only the possibilities of a great development immediately within his reach in this country, but it means to him a preference in the vast English market over other countries. And, Sir, when you hold out to the farmer the inducement of increasing his products by improved means of agriculture the corresponding responsibility rests upon the public men of this country to find him a market for these products. When hon. gentlemen look over this country and consider its great possibilities, as any class of public men ought to do, the corresponding possibilities must rest upon them of endeavouring to secure for Canada a foothold in that market to which the world has to look for the disposal of its surplus products. The farmers of this country have a right to expect at the hands of hon. gentlemen opposite, if we take their past promises into account, something more than stone when the people ask for bread. The people have got nothing but stone from hon. gentlemen opposite; they have got promises, but in reality nothing more. While the hearts of these hon. gentlemen were bleeding for eighteen years while they were in Opposition for that particular class of people who they declared were abused at the hands of the Conservative party when it was in power, do we find their hearts bleeding to-day? No, they are to-day after a different class of people; they are giving their attention to the manufacturers and the great corporations. I was surprised to hear the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Rogers) condemn the proposition before the House. I was surprised to hear that hon. gentleman, who claims to stand here as the exponent of the farmers and producers of this country, condemn this attempt to assist that particular class. The farmers of this country, however, will be a unit in endorsing the effort of that part of this House which is supporting this movement on their behalf; for the farmers of this country are alive to their interests in this matter. While they are alive to improved methods of farming, they are equally alive to the best markets for their products. Hon. gentlemen opposite claim that the English public are not ready to accept any such proposition as this; yet they, as leading public men, followed by the whole rank and file of their party, were willing to commit this country to a shadow, and to hand its fortunes over, not to England, but to a foreign country, without any official recognition on the part of that country, or any indication that they would accept what hon. gentlemen opposite offered to give. Those hon. gentlemen asked the people to take them on trust, and they were willing to entrust to the American nation all the interests of this country; but they are not willing to-night to trust England. These hon. gentlemen have condemned themselves in this respect, that if there is anybody under heaven we can approach in this matter, it is England. If the colonies approach England, England will be very slow to say no to a proposition from her own colonies. The English public mind to-day is in touch with the colonies, so far as the unity of the Empire is concerned. Only a few years ago the significance of that position was strongly brought to the front by the position of the colonies in reference to England, when, as an American Senator said, "She stood with her back to the wall, facing a world in arms, undaunted and unafraid." When she stood in that position, her colonies showed a disposition to stand together in her defence. That sentiment is still alive to-day.

Yet the hon. gentlemen on the Government side are willing to attempt to stifle that sentiment in the interests of their party. As the leader of the Opposition has shown a disposition to meet hon. gentlemen opposite with a resolution without a sting of condemnation in it, but only expressing the hope that something might be done in the interest of preferential trade, those hon. gentlemen are not willing to stand with him in expressing the hope that something may be done to promote this great movement which every Canadian ought to endorse.

House divided on amendment of Sir Charles Tupper.

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Bowmanville, Ont., harbour..... $5,000

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is required to complete the repairs to the pier at Bowmanville Harbour.

Mr. FOSTER. Will this finish the work ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. Is it being done by the department ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Bruce Mines Wharf, Ont..... $10,000

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. A vote was taken last year which proved insufficient, and this is to be applied towards the construction of a public wharf at the foot of Market Street. The estimated cost is $15,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this the commencement of the work ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. There has been a wharf there for twenty-five years, and it must be open to the public.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is a private wharf there which has been recently acquired by the mining company, and is not open to the public. This is to be a Government wharf.

Mr. BENNETT. We ought to know what the policy of the Government is with respect to construction of docks in the different provinces. I have not been at Bruce Mines within the past three or four years, but when I was there, there was a very considerable dock at that place at which all the boats on the lake called. As I understand it, the Government have not commenced, but are about to undertake the construction of a wharf which will cost $15,000; is that correct?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. I think it only fair to the House and the country that the Government should announce their policy with regard to such works. Are they to be constructed only in ridings which are represented by friends of the Administration? Are they to be constructed irrespective of the trade to be done? Are they to be constructed without any assistance from the municipalities? This vote seems to be unfair, because other towns have been forced by the Government to contribute towards the construction of docks before the work was undertaken, as was pointed out by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) the other evening.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not think there is anything new in the policy with regard to such votes as this, nor does the vote call for any explanation except to say to what particular purpose the money is to be applied. It has not always been the practice heretofore to insist on municipal contributions towards such works. In some cases municipal grants have been given, but I am informed that in many other cases, not in one province alone, but throughout the Dominion generally, public works of this kind have been constructed by the Government without any municipal contributions. There may be special circumstances in cases where the work is expensive, or where the people particularly desire to have the work completed and are ready to contribute; but I do not think the Government is in a position to insist that this should always be done. I do not think they should insist on contributions in Ontario, when in other provinces they have built such works without that, and even in Ontario, I am informed, municipal contributions have not always been given. As to the political side of the case, it is quite true that there should be no distinction, but that wherever they are required these works ought to be constructed. But I suppose there is a little human nature in party politics. It is alleged that during all the years the Conservative party were in power, they gave a preference to counties represented by their friends. I do not discuss how far that is correct. If it is so and for a time some of the counties that were overlooked received a little consideration, perhaps in course of time, matters will be evened up.

Mr. BENNETT. May I ask if there are any cases of docks built by the Government on Georgian Bay and also what is the population of Bruce Mines and its business?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Bruce Mines has a population of 600, I understand. I do not think that the question of population is a vital one in connection with the construction of a wharf.

Mr. FOSTER. Perhaps my hon. friend would give us some idea of the business.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. A memorandum furnished me gives the following information:—

Bruce Mines, a village in the district of Algoma, situated on the north shore of Lake Huron, opposite the east end of the Island of St. Joseph, on the location of the Bruce, Wellington and Huron Copper Bay mines; 387 miles from Collingwood and 45 miles south-east of Sault Ste. Marie. It contains four churches, one hotel and four stores. The copper mines, which are very extensive, are worked by Messrs. John Taylor & Sons, of London, Eng. Steamers from Collingwood and Sarnia touch at this place en route for Thunder Bay, Fort William and Duluth. Population, 600.

Mr. FOSTER. What railway communication has it?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am informed that the Sault line of the Canadian Pacific Railway runs in the vicinity.

Mr. FOSTER. "In the vicinity"—what does that mean?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not know how closely it runs.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman is not able to say that there is any commercial communication between the Sault line and Bruce Mines now?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Most of the trade, I am informed, is taken by water—by boat from Collingwood.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think the hon. Minister told us that there was a wharf there, but it had been secured by private parties and was not open to general trade.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am so informed.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is an extraordinary state of affairs. The only people who have a business there, apparently, own the wharf. I cannot conceive of them not allowing boats belonging to other lines to call at the wharf, and so get a revenue from it. Can the Minister tell us who this wharf was built by?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am advised that it was built by the former owners of the copper mines and the company which now operates the mines has recently purchased the wharf.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What evidence has the hon. Minister that other people cannot use the wharf.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have only the information given me by the officials of the department.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not think that information is correct, because I have called at it often, and I never understood that any vessel going up the lakes was not at perfect liberty to call at the wharf. I am aware that the old Bruce Mines Copper Company built that wharf originally, but every boat that went up the lake usually called at it. I am aware that a wharf is very much needed there, but the question is whether the present wharf could not be repaired and utilized, thus avoiding the expenditure of building a new wharf. Otherwise there will be two wharfs at a place where one is quite sufficient. On the other hand, I do not understand why the Government take over that wharf and refuse to take over many others. Take Spanish River, for instance, or Little Current; there are no Government wharfs, as I understand, at either, but there are wharfs available to all boats going up or down. The same is true of Sault Ste. Marie. There is one belonging to Marks and the other to the Government. Owners of wharfs are glad to have boats call in order to get a revenue.

Mr. BENNETT. What was the cost of the dock built at Thessalon, a village near Bruce Mines?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The contract was $11,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Is it finished?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. Thessalon is even smaller than Bruce Mines. But they have a saw-mill, something that Bruce Mines does not possess. Will the hon. Minister assure the House that this work will be done by contract?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am advised that that is the Minister's intention, but I would not like to give any absolute undertaking.

Mr. FOSTER. Will not the Minister of Finance, in accordance with the custom which has prevailed, say whether or not tenders will be asked for for this dock? Has the Government really undertaken to set aside the principle of tender and contract entirely? I think we have a right to ask the question and get the policy of the Government upon it. To my mind, this was a surprising vote. I cannot help saying so. Here is a little village of 600 people. There is a wharf there. The country near it is not a farming country, it is rocky and barren. Almost the only business done there is done by these mines, and the mine company have their own wharf commodious enough for themselves. There is no railway communication for this town. And the Government proposes to expend $15,000 to build a wharf which is not necessary, because the present wharf is quite sufficient for the use of the place.

Now, I would like to hear the report of the engineer of the department as to why this was necessary. I must say that it is an astounding thing, and then the Minister, on top of it all, is not disposed to tell this House that the usual rule should be carried out, and that the contract shall be made upon tenders asked. It looks simply like an election job. It is one of the rankest small things I have known in this House for some time.

Mr. BENNETT. May I ask if the site has been acquired for the location of the dock, and if so, from whom was it purchased, and at what price has the contract been entered into?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No site has yet been acquired. With reference to the statement of the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster), the Minister, of course, is governed by the statute in regard to public works, and that will have to be followed.

Mr. FOSTER. He is not governed by the statute, he has openly again and again violated the statute, and violated it in the face of long-established rules, and he has been supported by the Minister of Finance in doing it, I understand. There was no question more frequently asked, when the former Government brought votes down, than this: Are you going to follow the usual rule? Will this work be done by tender and contract? And we had to answer, and did answer, that they would be so done. Here, in instance after instance, we are told, not only that it is not contemplated to do it in that way, but that before the money is voted the work has been commenced. I think the House ought to know at once, when we entrust the Government with money, whether they are going to job it out, or do it on the square plan of tender and contract. This country is being demoralized, and the Government is responsible for it, in the developments this year and last year with reference to the disposal of public money which is placed in their hands. Not only do they go to work and order expenditures before they have a vote, but they entirely set aside the salutary rule that tenders shall be called for, and that there shall be competition in these matters.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If it was the only correct rule, I do not think the predecessor of the present Minister set the example in his department of following that rule. We have had this question threshed out in the absence of the hon. gentleman, and cases have been cited where the Government of which the hon. gentleman was a member, spent large sums of money without tender and contract; but I would not reach the conclusion that it was necessarily spent corruptly, I would rather assume that it might have been spent quite legitimately. My hon. friend stating that the Government has set the laws at defiance, does not, by any means prove that they have, that is his opinion. But, on the other hand, we have the opinion of other gentlemen who think that in all substantial particulars the law has been complied with. I have no doubt that in this matter the law will be followed. My own opinion is that the law regarding the construction of such works will be carried out. But I am frank enough to say that, in the absence of the Minister of Public Works, although I do not make any engagements on his behalf in matters which I have not had an opportunity of discussing with him—and I ask the hon. gentleman to consider that fact—it would be absurd that I should undertake on his behalf to give an absolute promise in matters of detail. Whatever the law requires must of necessity be carried out.

Mr. FOSTER. Surely you have not come to this pass, that all you have to do is to send the Minister away and then the Government is entirely irresponsible as to how the money shall be spent. The hon. gentleman represents the Minister of Public Works, and the Government is there to say what shall be done. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that because the Minister of Public Works is not here, therefore, nobody can promise that the law will be carried out?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. On the contrary, I say the law will be carried out. I did not need to promise that the law will be carried out, because the Government are bound by the law and must carry it out.

Mr. FOSTER. The Government is bound by no law. There was a law as express as English words could make it that the voters' lists were to be printed by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and there is a Minister in another House who interposed his length between that officer and the written statute, and did not print, and has not up to this date printed, what this House declared by solemn statute should be printed. And yet the Government carries out the law!

Mr. SPROULE. We have some anxiety with regard to this, because we have an example in that same district where, in my judgment, the law has not been carried out.

Mr. FOSTER.

There was a lighthouse to be built there a short time ago. The Government asked for tenders, but some authority interposed after the tenders had been received for the building of that work, I am informed, at a very moderate cost. The tenders were cancelled, and it was built, not by contract, but men were sent on to build that lighthouse, and we find the result was that it cost several hundred dollars more than it would have cost if the tender had been accepted. We find afterwards that it was done through the instructions of the member of the riding, and that the timber which went into that work was bought from the member's book-keeper, not from the member himself, because it would have had to appear in his name; but the timber was sold by the member's book-keeper, it was taken out of the member's mill yard, and was paid for by the Government at a much higher price than, I am told, the same lumber could have been bought for in Owen Sound, and taken up there and put into that lighthouse. Now, when we know that has been done, we are justified in suspecting that this work may be done in the same way. The Minister reserves the power of doing it otherwise than by contract, and he can buy the materials from some friend of the Government, probably from the member for the riding who owns large mills in that part of the country, and who has cut timber. Therefore, it may be supplied in the same way that that lighthouse was supplied. There is another feature to this case. There is a dock there already. True, it is owned by a private corporation, but it is in the interest of that corporation that as many vessels shall call at that dock as possible. Yet, there is no overcrowding, there is ample room for the vessels to call there. It might require a little additional expenditure to give the convenience necessary for all classes of vessels to call, a small expenditure may have to be incurred, but if they undertake the erection of a new dock in that locality, it will mean much more money. How many docks have they taken over on Manitoulin Island and on Georgian Bay? Why have they taken over this dock, when in almost every harbour along that shore the docks are either owned by the municipality or by a private corporation? The business is done over these docks, and the country is saved the expense of constructing new ones. There is just ground for suspicion that this is another job, which is going to be perpetrated upon the same lines as was done in connection with the building of the lighthouse up there. I see that there is a proposal in the supplementary Estimates to make a grant for a dock at Providence Bay. I do not want to be understood as saying that the expenditure is not necessary there. I believe the expenditure is necessary and that it is justifiable. I do not know that there is a dock to accommodate the public at that point, but I do say that where there is a dock already built, whether owned by a private corporation or an individual, or the municipality, the country is not justified in incurring the large expenditure which must be incurred to build a new dock for the requirements of the travelling public.

Mr. WALLACE. In my opinion, this expenditure is utterly unjustifiable. The Government have not, apparently, considered the matter. The hon. Minister of Finance pleaded, that, because the hon. Minister of Public Works is not here, he did not have the information asked for.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What is the information that, according to the hon. gentleman's statement, I said I did not have?

Mr. WALLACE. What did the hon. Minister tell us?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What is it that I said I did not have?

Mr. WALLACE. The first question asked was, whether this work was to be built by tender.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is a question for the future; that is not information.

Mr. WALLACE. That is something that we are entitled to know, when we are called upon to appropriate that money, and that is the information which the hon. gentleman refused to give us. We are entitled to know whether the Government propose to follow the precedent, as mentioned by the hon. member for East Grey, established in the case of the building of a lighthouse in the same constituency, when an hon. member's book-keeper was interested in the scheme. We have not been furnished with any information as to whether a wharf is necessary there or not. The Government ought to be prepared, as the hon. Minister of Finance was not prepared, to give every particle of information in regard to this work. He says that the old wharf, belonging to a private corporation, was locked up. Just imagine a man keeping a hotel, or a man keeping a store, on Sparks street, locking it up and refusing to allow his customers to go in. On public waters they have no power to lock up a wharf. These properties are under the control or regulation of the municipal corporation or the Government, and there is no power to lock them up. The hon. Minister of Finance has utterly failed to justify this expenditure of $15,000 for a harbour at Bruce Mines.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I suppose the hon. Minister of Finance knows enough of the construction of public works to know that there are always difficulties in getting them constructed. It usually takes deputations and a strong presentation of the case to secure the construction of a work. I would ask the hon. Minister to tell us whether he has had any request from any board of trade, or any associated business interests, of Bruce Mines, or any corporation there, in connection with it?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, I cannot assure the hon. member (Mr. Montague) that such associations have made these representations. This work has been urged upon the hon. Minister of Public Works by the representative of the riding. I regret very much that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Dymont) is not here to-night, because, if he were here, I have no doubt that he would be able to give a satisfactory answer to all the questions asked.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it would be well to allow this man to stand until he is here.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think that he has gone away, and he may not be back at this advanced stage of the session.

Mr. WALLACE. We will wait.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) may be willing to wait, but others may not be willing.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. Finance Minister said that he would be willing to stay here until the snow flies.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did, but I do not want to remain here all alone.

Mr. MONTAGUE. At whose request has this work been undertaken?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. At the request of the hon. member for the riding (Mr. Dymont). If there was anything wrong with the book-keeper of the hon. member for Algoma, the hon. gentleman, instead of waiting to this period of the session, when the hon. member for Algoma has gone away, should have brought it before a committee of the House, and taken means to discover it.

Mr. WALLACE. It was brought up by the hon. member for East Grey, when the hon. member for Algoma was in his place, and he did not reply.

Mr. SPROULE. If the hon. member for Algoma did not reply, the reason was, that he could not. I am credibly informed, and I believe it is true, that these were the facts: that he had so manipulated the building of that lighthouse that his book-keeper sold the lumber that went into it, and charged for it a higher price than it could have been purchased for elsewhere, and that the lighthouse cost several hundred dollars more than a respectable man in that locality would have been willing to erect it for. The hon. Minister of Finance, who is acting for the hon. Minister of Public Works, will not give a guarantee to this committee that the work will be done by tender. In view of what took place in regard to this other transaction, we are justified in being suspicious that this is only another election job. If the hon. Minister of Finance is doing the work of the hon. Minister of Public Works he ought to be prepared to give a guarantee that the usual course in constructing public works will be followed in this case, if he expects the committee to grant this money. If we were convinced that we were only voting this money for the purpose of carrying on political jobbery, the committee should not be expected to vote it.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. Minister of Finance, or the Government, must take the responsibility. We are going to vote hundreds of items for public works in these and in the supplementary Estimates. What we do want to know, when these items are up, is, whether the usual course established in connection with new public works will be adopted. There is no reason in the world, in the case of new public works of these dimensions, why tenders should not be called for and a contract based upon tenders let. If there is any reason in this case, let the hon. Minister of Finance tell us what it is. We are going to meet hundreds of cases of this kind, and the Government must take the responsibility of saying whether or not they are going to carry out the rule of having tenders called for and a contract made upon tender. They cannot escape from this responsibility by saying that the hon. Minister of Public Works is not here, and that they dare not promise for the Minister. Therefore, they must take the responsibility of saying that they will, or that they will not; the committee is entitled to a positive answer one way or the other. If they are not going to call for tenders, they must say so, and we will know what we are doing. Over and above that, I want to ask the hon. Minister of Finance for the grounds for building a $15,000 wharf at this place. Is it business or is it not? As I have represented, this is a small village that is perfectly isolated from all business outside. There is no farming country about it, but it is a rocky place, with no railway running into it. The only business that is done of any extent is the business of the mines. The mine-owners have their own wharf, and that wharf is quite sufficient for any little extra business in that town of 600 people. Six hundred people means only a little more than one hundred families, and there cannot be much other business.

I know and the Minister of Finance knows, dozens of places in the maritime provinces and on the lakes where there is large traffic, and where there is no wharf built by the Government, and where they have asked for a wharf and where they could not get it. $15,000 is a tidy sum of money and it is too much to give away for the building of a wharf where there is no necessity for it. Surely, simply because Mr. Dymont asks for the expenditure of $15,000, the Department of Public Works does not grant it without reports from their officers which set out the reasons for the building of this wharf, and states the possible business that will be served by it. Are these reports in existence?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I entirely differ from my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) that it is customary to place on the Table of the House the engineer's reports and detailed plans regarding every item. Under exceptional circumstances that information is brought down, but it is entirely unusual to do so on every item.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) is wrong. When Sir Hector Langevin was Minister of Public Works he came to this House with his plans, his measurements, his reports, and everything in hand. Then it was always considered necessary and proper to give that information. This House is the custodian of the people's money, and this House should know that the people's money is not spent without good reasons. It is no answer to say that Mr. Dymont wants it, and, therefore, it ought to be done. That is the last answer in the world, but if there is a commercial basis for it then perhaps the money should be expended.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I agree that the House is entitled to all information, but I ask the House to bear witness that I have given that as far as any human being could give it, and if the Minister (Mr. Tarte) were here he could not do more. I have given the memoranda of the officers, and in this vast country the Minister cannot be expected to personally visit and have personal knowledge of every public work. I know it is a good trick for hon. gentlemen opposite to say that we refuse to give information; that is part of the game.

Mr. WALLACE. Order; no imputation of trickery.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is entirely in order. There is a little plan here, and I will send it to my hon. friend (Mr. Foster), but I do not think it will help him much after all the information I have given, and I have given all the information in the department.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend has given all the information in the department, he has furnished the best reason why this vote should not pass. If the department has only that little plan and the little information the Minister gives us, they never should have asked for this vote of $15,000. There is no game in asking for this information. It is an expenditure which is altogether unusual and we should have a better basis than we have now for voting this money.

Mr. WALLACE. The information which the Minister of Finance gave us was taken from the Ontario Directory and not from the departmental report.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did not happen to have that document.

Mr. WALLACE. Whether you had or not, it is nevertheless the information that is contained in the Ontario Directory, and I can add a little more information to it. This is a customs port, and the revenue collected from Bruce Mines last year was $336.15, and the revenues from all other sources were $21.50. That is the sum total of the business done at this place for which you ask an appropriation of $15,000 to build a wharf.

Mr. FOSTER. How much do they pay the customs officer there ?

Mr. WALLACE. I presume they pay him about $300 a year.

Mr. CLARKE. Is that for the winter, too ?

Mr. WALLACE. Only for the summer months, he has nothing to do in the winter. The Minister tells us this vote is asked at the request of the member for Algoma (Mr. Dymont). Well, Sir, we are entitled to have the reasons that induced the Minister to comply with the request of that hon. gentleman (Mr. Dymont) and to report to Council that $15,000 was needed for a wharf at Bruce Mines. That information converted the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Finance, and it might convert us too. But, Sir, that information will not be presented to the House, because here is what the information supplied by the hon. member for Algoma was : It is going to help me in my elections, so give me $15,000 for that corrupt purpose.

Mr. McDOUGALL. And provide a market for his timber.

Mr. WALLACE. No, provide a market for the timber of his book-keeper as in the case of the lighthouse.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is this the first wharf the Government has ever undertaken to build on the shores of the Georgian Bay ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There are no others on the north shore.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then this is a new department ? How much is the Minister going to pay for the site on which he is going to erect a wharf, and how much will the entire work cost when completed ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have already given all that information, but perhaps the hon. gentleman was not in the House. The site has not yet been acquired and consequently nothing has been paid. The estimated cost is $15,000, and I have all the details of the work for that.

Mr. FOSTER. What are the large items ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The largest item in the $15,000 is : part of approach from shore 600 feet to be built of stone and earth, 4,560 cubic yards estimated at 75 cents a yard, $3,420. Balance of approach 500 feet long, to be built on piles, 6 piles each bent, 12 feet 6 inch span, $3,000 ; cribwork, front of landing block, 20 feet x 90 feet, 30,600 cubic feet at 7 cents, $2,142 ; balance of landing block, 70 feet x 90 feet, on piles, $1,600 ; dredging approach to proposed landing, 14,000 cubic yards, at 20 cents, $2,800 ; construction of a freight shed, 50 feet x 20 feet, $500 ; superintendence and contingencies, $1,538, making the amount of the estimate $15,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. That information is very valuable. I want to ask the hon. Minister where else in Ontario, either on the north shore of the Georgian Bay or on any other shore of the lakes the Government have built a pier and erected a warehouse for the accommodation of the public ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The officers tell me that they cannot name a place.

Mr. TAYLOR. In my experience, on all the lakes in Ontario, and at Bruce Mines—and I have been there—where there is business to be done, private enterprise builds wharfs, piers and warehouses, and keeps them up. I know of no other place where the Government has gone into a business of this kind ; and at this little village, which has a population of only 500 or 600, with a revenue of only $300 all told, and that all paid to the revenue officer to collect it, why the Government should expend this $15,000 I cannot understand. I would like to know what the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) thinks of this. He used to talk of the late Government perpetrating jobs in constituencies. I would like to know what he and the hon. member for North Brant (Mr. Somerville) think of the Government branching out into a business of this kind, simply to help one of their supporters to carry an election which they see looming up in the distance. Surely the Minister will drop this item, and not ask his friends to back up a job of this kind. He cannot expect the Opposition to consent to it.

Mr. BENNETT. May I ask the Minister if he estimates for a dock of a certain length, how does he know, if he has not got the site, what the depth of water will be at the end of the dock ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am told that the site is at the end of a street, and the plan is based upon the depth of water at that point.

Mr. CLARKE. Was any petition received from the inhabitants of the place asking this expenditure to be made ? If so, will the Minister read the petition, and give us the names of those who signed it ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have already stated that there was no petition, but that representations were made to the department personally by the member for Algoma (Mr. Dymont).

Mr. SPROULE. Who owns that property ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is the end of a public street, I am told, and not private property.

Mr. BENNETT. The water lot may have been acquired by a private party.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, I am informed it is a public water lot.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the Government require to purchase this property ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, it is not the intention of the Government to purchase the property.

Mr. TAYLOR. Can the Minister explain what the warehouse is to be for ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The warehouse to be placed on the wharf is for steamboat freight, to keep it in out of the wet.

Mr. FOSTER. I see that this is worse than we supposed. There is a customs officer here whose salary is $400, while the collections amount to only $300. Is it proposed out of this to make up the deficiency in the salary ? I must beg hon. gentlemen not to press a vote like this. It ought not to be pressed. There is not the least thing to found it on, except the request of the member, and he is not here to press his request. I do appeal to hon. gentlemen opposite not to press such votes as that in this House.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). There is something else for the customs officer to do besides collecting a revenue. This officer, I fancy, has been there a good many years, and there seems to be a good deal of trade going on there. There are to-day 86 arrivals of vessels and 210 departures.

Mr. TAYLOR. They are little fishing smacks.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Where did they call if there was no wharf ? I think the Minister of Customs has given away his case. If these vessels call there, there must have been a wharf at which they were accommodated ; and if so, why should there be a new wharf ?

Mr. SPROULE. On what data does the Minister base the cost of this wharf ? He tells us that there is so much cribwork and so much piling to be done. On what information does he base this ? Was there a survey made of the locality by the Government ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. A survey was made by the resident engineer of the

Mr. CLARKE.

Government. The information I have been reading is the substance of his report.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Is the street built at the end of which the Government propose to build this wharf, or is it only a reserve for a street ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The street runs right to the water. I am informed that it is a street. I am told that it is at the foot of a street known as Marks Street, and that it runs off Taylor Street.

Mr. TAYLOR. Do the Government intend going into a forwarding business, putting up a warehouse, and receiving and shipping freight ? If so, do they intend to appoint an officer to take charge of this warehouse and wharf ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The general practice of the Government is to appoint a wharfinger, who collects fees, and out of them receives a percentage for his services.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The hon. gentleman will remember that this is not the first time that a wharf has been built in that country. I do not know how far this locality is from Sault Ste. Marie.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Thirty-seven miles.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The late Government, of which the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster) was Finance Minister, spent many thousands of dollars in buying the nucleus of a wharf from Mr. Plummer of Sault Ste. Marie, and then having purchased the wharf on consideration that Mr. Plummer should be made the wharfinger at a certain salary, they proceeded to spend many thousands of dollars in extending it into the channel, and on the end of it they spent a large sum building a very large freight shed. There is an enormous traffic there, so large that the Government had to pay a very large sum every year, out of all proportion to what is usually paid wharfingers, to the wharfinger at that wharf. There was a dispute between the Government and Mr. Plummer because he was not paid $600 or $700 a year and he sent in a claim. The Deputy Minister of Marine was sent to hold an investigation, and after a lengthy investigation he reported that an enormous amount of work had to be done by the wharfinger that he had to stay up all night receiving packages, and the result was the Government determined not to pay as high a sum as he demanded for having sold the wharf. He put in a claim for what the wharf originally cost, which the Government afterwards had to pay. This is not the first wharf built in that locality, and I do not think that any hon. gentleman who has been there and seen the business done would complain. Wherever a trade requires to be developed, the people have as much right to the construction of wharfs in that part of the country as we have in the maritime provinces.

Mr. FOSTER. What has all this to do with the item under discussion?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Because the hon. gentleman said this is a new departure and the first wharf built on that north shore.

Mr. FOSTER. The Finance Minister has told us that this is the first instance of such a work having been done on the north shore of the Georgian Bay. Here is the Minister of Customs, than whom no man sitting in this House was so loud-mouthed and strong-voiced and vehement against unnecessary and over-expenditures, and a good second to him is the present Minister of Marine. These two men to-night have not a word to say in favour of a job of that kind.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is no job.

Mr. FOSTER. Neither has given one iota of reason why $15,000 of the people's money should be spent at that place. They do not pretend to show that there is a shadow of a commercial reason for it. Let us be honest with ourselves and the country. Have we the right to put $15,000 of the people's money in that place. This is one of the most shameless votes I have ever seen brought down. I am not blaming the Minister of Finance because he found these things ready made, and it is his duty to put them through in the absence of the Minister of Public Works, but the Government must take the responsibility. The best way would be simply to withdraw that vote or let it stand until Mr. Pymont is in his place and can give us some reason.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries is wrong with reference to the wharf at Sault Ste. Marie. That was built by the Plummers themselves.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It was begun by the Plummers and bought by this Government.

Mr. WALLACE. It was built by the Plummers alone, and completed and utilized by them for many years. Then the Government had to acquire it for the construction of the "Soo" Canal.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Not at all.

Mr. WALLACE. The Government then took it over from the Plummers and a dispute arose as to the terms.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It had nothing to do with the Sault Ste. Marie Canal. I have been at the wharf and examined the evidence, and found that the Plummers had been urging their claim, and there was a report from the Public Works and Justice Departments concerning this claim of $7,000 for the purchase of the wharf. It had nothing to do with the Sault Ste. Marie Canal!

Mr. McDOUGALL. Did not the building of the Sault Ste. Marie Canal have to do with the providing of business for that wharf? The hon. gentleman said that I knew nothing about the place or the work.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Were you ever there?

Mr. McDOUGALL. I was.

Mr. FOSTER. Was the Minister of Marine and Fisheries ever at Bruce Mines?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am not talking about that.

Mr. McDOUGALL. The Minister of Finance said the population was 600. The best authority gives it as only 450. The Minister could not tell how far it was from Sault Ste. Marie, and I was able to tell him it was 37 miles. I can tell him more, if he is not willing to take the advice of hon. gentlemen on this side, let me read him a little advice from the Montreal "Witness," a strong Liberal newspaper supporting the Government, on items such as this:

The votes are not, perhaps, excessive in any individual case, but the objects of expenditure are extremely numerous, and it is more than doubtful whether many of them are justifiable from any point of view. A great deal of money is being frittered away upon projects which will yield no adequate return, but the expenditures will please the constituencies. Numerous small sums—three, seven, ten and twenty thousand dollars—are to be expended upon building wharfs and dredging streams, which even small steamers will not use above once a week, if that often.

In the past, under the late Government, it was customary, when application was made for public works of this kind, to obtain information, in the first instance, before making any move in the matter, as to what business was to be done, for what the public wharf or breakwater was required, how many people were likely to use it, what class of business was to be done. The hon. Minister is unable to tell us what class of business is to be done at this wharf even after it is constructed. We have no reason to believe that any business at all will be done. There is only a population of 450 people at this point and we have evidence to the effect that the customs business done there in the past has only reached the sum of $300 per year, although the expenditure in maintaining that customs point amounts to $400 a year. Are we going to saddle the country with further expenditure and get nothing in return? We have no proof that it will ever yield a return to the value of a hundred dollars to the country. If the department has such information it should be given to us. The Minister is unable to assure us that the money will be spent by tender and contract, his reason being that the Minister of Public Works is not here. In my opinion that is no reason at all. The Minister who is in charge of these Estimates should give the information required by the House. It appears that this never went before Council, or if it did, that they were without information as we are. But if Council acted recklessly that is no reason why we should act recklessly. It is our duty to demand necessary information, and to insist that the conditions upon which the money is voted shall be such as are satisfactory to the House.

Mr. TAYLOR. I asked if this was the first wharf and warehouse ever constructed by the Government on the north shore of Georgian Bay, and the Minister of Finance told me it was. Then the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) contradicted that statement and said one had been built at Sault Ste. Marie. Now, at the Georgian Bay ports of Owen Sound, Collingwood and Midland, wharfs and warehouses have been constructed for the traffic. Some years ago all freights passing from the west went by the Sault Ste. Marie Canal. The Plummers had a wharf and warehouse erected there and collected a toll. The Canadian Government, in its wisdom decided to build a canal on the Canadian side, and in carrying out their policy they had to acquire Plummer's wharf. And this is made the excuse for building this wharf which should be left to private enterprise. This is merely throwing so much money into the constituency for election purposes, because this wharf is not needed for the business to be done. If this is carried out as a Government enterprise, we cannot treat other places worse than we treat Bruce Mines, and we shall be expected to acquire all the wharfs at these other ports and put men in charge of them to collect tolls. But, if we leave this to private enterprise it will do all that is necessary to be done. I was going to ask the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton) to explain how wharf accommodation was provided at Gananoque, where I live. His late father built the first wharf, ever built there, and private enterprise has always been trusted to provide accommodation for the traffic, not only at Gananoque but at all the other places, so far as I know, along the St. Lawrence. Why, then, should the Government undertake such a work as this at Bruce Mines? I move that the item be struck out.

Mr. SPROULE. There is another objection, Mr. Chairman, to this proposal. We not only incur the expense of building the wharf, but we saddle the country for all time with the salary of a wharfinger. If the business will not yield the sum necessary to pay the salary, it must come from some other source. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries has spoken of the wharfinger at Sault Ste. Marie. What surprises me was that that hon. gentleman should make such a comparison.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I did not make a comparison: I was removing a false impression that no money had been spent there in building public wharfs. I thought it was information that the committee ought to have that many thousands had been spent by the Government in extending the wharf and building a freight shed.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the Minister to say that we did the same thing at Sault Ste. Marie that it is proposed to do here. But he forgets that Sault Ste. Marie is one of the important towns of the country. One of the largest pulp mills on the continent is there; there are stores by the dozen, the Canadian Sault canal is there; an immense trade is done and a railway is being commenced. It is the gateway between Lake Superior and the lower lakes and Georgian Bay. And what is Bruce Mines? For twenty years it has been a deserted village, you may say. The hon. Minister said there were about 600 people. When I was there some time ago, I doubt if there were 150 people. If they are opening up the mines, there will be more labourers there, and the population, no doubt, will be larger. It is one of the calling places of the boats, but if trade is being done, it must be done by the corporation owning the mines, because there is no settlement in the locality nor anything to make trade. The company owning the mines have a wharf. I called at it twenty years ago, and I am sure that boats have called at it as long as thirty years ago. At the end of the wharf was a building for receiving freight. I know that a new company have purchased the mines and contemplate opening them; but if they do, they will provide accommodation not only for themselves but for the public as well. If the necessary accommodation will be provided by private enterprise, as it assuredly will be, there is no excuse for the Government entailing this expense upon the country. There is this other feature about it. We will not only be subject to the expenditure of building a new work, and in all probability of purchasing the land from some political friend at an exorbitant price—

Mr. DOMVILLE. That is simply rubbish. No land will have to be purchased; it runs right out to the wharf.

Mr. SPROULE. Have you been there?

Mr. DOMVILLE. Yes, and I know more about it than you do.

Mr. SPROULE. I tell the hon. gentleman he knows nothing at all about it. He cannot tell me to-night whether there is a town site or not. The Minister cannot tell whether they will be obliged to purchase that property, or whether they have a right to occupy one foot of it without purchase. It is not only entailing an expense for building a new work that is not required, but it is saddling upon the country for all time to come the expense of keeping a wharfinger there. Now, these mines may fail after a time; then there would be no settlement there, and no one to use the wharf. The expense which is contemplated now of $15,000 will in all probability increase in a few years to $20,000, $30,000, $40,000 or $50,000. I know it will increase, because the water is very shallow there; you have got to do a lot of dredging, and from the nature of the soil I would assume that the harbour will fill up again. Then, a breakwater may be required. This is only the commencement of an expense which will be very large in future years.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I have listened with a great deal of pleasure to my hon. friend during this session. I think in every committee we have had at least four speeches from him. If you turn up the "Hansard," you will find that he has taken up, perhaps not quite half the space, but a large percentage of it. He seems to break out on every subject; possibly he may be the next leader, and so he must have some latitude. I know something about Sault Ste. Marie and about the Bruce Mines. The hon. gentleman says he has been there; then, he knows that at least thirteen or fourteen copper mines were in operation there, and I think there are three churches if not more.

Mr. SPROULE. Are there thirteen or fourteen copper mines in operation to-day? Where is there one?

Mr. DOMVILLE. My hon. friend does not seem to catch on. I said there were at one time thirteen in operation, and the works are there to-day, or were there. There are large possibilities in the Bruce Mines. The Canadian Pacific Railway runs 30 or 40 miles back of the Bruce Mines. There have been new discoveries of metal. There is a large shipment of fish; every steamer that stops at that wharf loads boxes packed with fish in ice to go to Duluth and other places.

Mr. SPROULE. The fish goes down to Buffalo.

Mr. DOMVILLE. No matter where it goes. You could not run that steamer onto the bank of the river; you must have a wharf.

Mr. SPROULE. There is a wharf already.

Mr. DOMVILLE. Well, if a wharf is there, that is all right; but the wharf does not remain for ever, does it? It has to be repaired. Now, my hon. friend knows there are great possibilities there. When these mines were opened, copper was found on the other side of the lake, on American territory, and it was so much more valuable to work that they abandoned these mines. To-day, with the price of copper so high, many people are there prospecting for copper.

Mr. BENNETT. For coppers.

Mr. DOMVILLE. Well, perhaps my hon. friends want more than coppers over there; I think they do. They have got lots of brass. If they have not got coppers. Then, my hon. friend endeavours to lead this House to believe that there is no necessity for a wharf. I think he is entirely mistaken. I have not been there lately, but there are many buildings there, and there will be more when those mines will be opened up. I do not see what my hon. friend wants a breakwater for. Where are you going to put the breakwater? The channel is not very broad.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman has given this House a great deal of information. I never said there was no need for a wharf. I admit there is need for a wharf, but I said there was one there already.

Mr. DOMVILLE. How long ago?

Mr. SPROULE. Forty years ago, thirty years ago, twenty-five years ago. I was there fifteen years ago.

Mr. DOMVILLE. It is a pity you did not stop there.

Mr. SPROULE. It is a pity the hon. gentleman could not give us some information about it.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Ellis). The hon. gentlemen should address the Chair.

Mr. SPROULE. I know there are great possibilities there, but they do not justify the expenditure of money before it is known there is need for it. He says many mines have been worked there. I admit that, but they have been lying dead for many years; for nearly a quarter of a century they have not been worked at all.

Mr. DOMVILLE. They could not lie, if they were dead.

Mr. SPROULE. Some things lie when they are not dead. But the fact is, they have been abandoned for a long time. It is true, that since the revival of copper mining, that a new company have purchased these mines, and they may turn out valuable in the future, or they may not. If the mines turn out valuable, then we may have a property that will bring us a return. But my contention is, that there is already accommodation there, provided by private enterprise, and why go to this expense for a work which can only come into competition with what has been provided by the company? There is no urgent need for a wharf of any description there at this time.

It is true, that they land their little fishing boats.

An hon. MEMBER. Question, question.

Mr. SPROULE. I am talking to the question. Is the hon. gentleman in such a condition that he does not know what the question is? If so, it would be creditable to him either to hold his tongue or get out.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. SPROULE. I say that I am talking to the question.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Ellis). I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) is in order.

Mr. SPROULE. I am talking directly to the question, and I have a right to take the line that I am taking at the present time. If it be found that these mines have no value, the expenditure of that money will be useless. It is true that this is a little fishing station where they land their small boats, skiffs and row boats, but they have been doing that for twenty-five or thirty years. If the Government have no information in regard to this expenditure, in my judgment, they are not justified in asking us to vote the money.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Finance if he has thought of a question which follows this. If you give to the hon. member for Algoma $15,000 for a wharf in a place like this, with no commercial reason at all, how can you avoid giving the same to other members? Is the Government setting up the precedent of building $15,000 wharfs in villages inhabited by 450 people, where there is no industry but mining, and where the mining industry has its own wharf, that is quite sufficient for all purposes? All over this country private wharfs have been built by private means. Private enterprise will say: We have just as much political influence as the hon. member for Algoma. There is no use in paying our money, because the Government will do the work, and there is no end to the tremendous expenditure that follows in the wake of such a precedent as this. It is a matter which business men on both sides of the House ought to think about. Does the hon. member for Russell (Mr. Edwards), who is a good business man, justify an expenditure of $15,000 in this place, where they have a population of 450, where the whole of the customs collection, last year, was only $300, where there is only the business which is conducted by mining men, who have their own wharf sufficient for the purposes of the place, where there is no railway communication in the town, and where there are no surroundings to the town but broken, rocky, bleak country? I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if he thinks this is a businesslike expenditure. There is no justification for it. We have talked about it and now the Government must take the responsibility before the country if they think that they can justify it, and they will have to justify it before the country. For my part, I move that the item be struck out.

Mr. EDWARDS. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) challenges me to give my opinion, I may say that I know nothing at all of the situation. In general terms, I may say that I do not believe in the Government building wharfs that private enterprise might build, but there are situations and situations, and while, in this locality, there may be only 400 people, the position possibly may be that it is quite justifiable to build a wharf there. Whether it is or not, I am not in a position to say: I can only say that we have wharfs ourselves that are built by ourselves, but I think, in a general way, that wharfs, such as we own, are built by private enterprise. As to this situation, it is one which can be discussed by those who understand it, which, as far as I am concerned, I may say, I do not.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if he has not a right to know the reasons for this expenditure? Has he not been sent here by the people to see that their money is properly expended, and is he going without a shred of information, because the hon. Minister has not given one bit of information, further than that which I have given, to show that there is any commercial basis for this expenditure, to support this vote? Is the hon. gentleman justified in standing by this vote without asking the hon. Minister for information?

Mr. EDWARDS. I simply say, in reply to the hon. gentleman, that I am not sent here by Algoma. I suppose that the responsibility in regard to this matter will rest upon the hon. member for Algoma. If the wharf was one in this district I certainly would be prepared to state frankly my opinion upon it. But in so far as this wharf which is being erected in Algoma, I know nothing about it, and it would be a great impertinence on my part to offer any opinion upon it at all. In general terms, I think that Ministers who are responsible for expenditures of this kind should give explanations, and I do not think that I am called upon to give any explanation. I have not heard any explanation by the hon. Minister upon it, but I have no doubt that the responsible Minister is quite qualified to give an explanation upon the subject.

Mr. FOSTER. That is about the oddest statement of parliamentary responsibility that I have heard in a long while. Here is a level-headed business man, who represents an intelligent constituency, who is an intelligent man himself, who rises at this period in the history of parliamentary institutions, and says, from his place in the House, that he would consider it an impertinence for him to say anything in reference to a proposal to expend money in another man's constituency.

Mr. EDWARDS. I did not say that at all.

Mr. FOSTER. It comes to that. The hon. gentleman's statement was that because it was another man's constituency he thought it would be an impertinence for him to express an opinion, and so he abrogated his duties and placed them upon the hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. EDWARDS. That is a very ingenious way of putting it.

Mr. FOSTER. It cannot be put in any other way.

Mr. EDWARDS. That is not correct. Notwithstanding that it is in another constituency, if I knew anything of the situation, I would be prepared to offer an opinion upon it, but I say that it would be an impertinence for me to offer an opinion upon a question I know nothing at all about. If it were in my own locality, I would be supposed to know something about it, and if I happened to be at Bruce Mines I might know something about it, but I know nothing of the question at all, except from the discussion I have heard here to-night. I leave it to the common sense of the House if it would not be imprudent as well as ridiculous on my part, to offer an opinion on a question I know nothing about.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that the doctrine of parliamentary duty and responsibility? The hon. gentleman (Mr. Edwards) is sent here to know about these things, and if he does not know he is sent here to obtain the information. He is sent here as a member to ask, and the Minister is there as a Minister to give the information. My hon. friend (Mr. Edwards) is just as responsible for every dollar of public money that it is proposed to expend in Algoma, as he is for the money proposed to be expended in his own county. He cannot excuse himself because he says: I have not taken the diligence to make myself acquainted with this. The people of my county and of his county sent us here in order that we might make ourselves acquainted with these things and see that any money taken out of the common fund of the people is properly expended in all constituencies. To carry out any other doctrine would leave a man irresponsible for everything that did not take place in his own county. Under such circumstances there could be no parliamentary responsibility. This is a case in which I even yet hope that the Minister will withdraw the item, or let it stand until he gets further information.

Mr. McCLURE. Whatever may be my vote on this question, I am very glad to know that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has at last become a convert to the doctrine that no money should be spent unless there is a commercial necessity for it. If he will come down to the province of Nova Scotia, I will take him to a dozen wharfs built under his own administration that do not come within that category. I will take him to fifty other places in the province of Nova Scotia—

Mr. McDOUGALL. Name.

Mr. McCLURE. Yes, and I will give him the names if he wishes of places in my county and other counties, where wharfs were refused when there were good commercial reasons for building them, and they were refused for no other reason than that it did not suit his (Mr. Foster's) political views.

Mr. FOSTER. Might I ask my hon. friend what argument he founds on that?

Mr. McCLURE. I found no argument upon it; I simply congratulate the House that my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) has become a convert to a sound doctrine which he did not practise when he was in power.

Mr. FOSTER. I congratulate my hon. friend (Mr. McClure) on supporting that doctrine in this House.

Mr. McCLURE. I shall support any right doctrine, even though the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) should propose it.

Mr. McGREGOR. When I was a small boy some fifty years ago, I had the pleasure of seeing three or four vessels loading at that dock with copper, but of course they had to load the copper in barrels and it was very troublesome. Copper went down in price and it was found that it could be produced much cheaper in Michigan and other states as well as in South America. Bruce Mines were then abandoned because they did not pay, but we know that within the last few years, copper has advanced greatly in price and mines which did not pay a few years ago are paying well to-day. I am informed that the old Bruce Mines are being re-opened, and they expect to have an immense revival in trade there. There is no better copper ore in America than there is at Bruce Mines, and with the new facilities for taking out the ore and smelting it, I have no doubt that it will pay well and that this place so long dead will come to life and be of great value to Ontario.

Mr. TAYLOR. They have a wharf there now.

Mr. McGREGOR. How do you know?

Mr. TAYLOR. Because I was at Bruce Mines and saw it.

Mr. MACKIE. There seems to be some misunderstanding on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite with regard to the necessity of this wharf at Bruce Mines. The mines died out some years ago and a great many people left there, but lately they have sprung up again, and I know myself that over ten different mines have been found there lately and some of them are working. There is quite a settlement going in there from the Ottawa valley as well as from other places.

Mr. FOSTER. A settlement going in where?

Mr. MACKIE. To Bruce Mines.

Mr. FOSTER. Into the town?

Mr. MACKIE. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. On farming land?

Mr. MACKIE. Yes. The wharf that is there now is practically useless and is rotting down.

Mr. BENNETT. Not at all, the boats call there every day.

Mr. MACKIE. But the wharf is rotten and the boat is not able to land at it. I know myself that there are agricultural settlers going in to that locality, and a great many people are going in to work the mines, so that I believe the wharf will be required for the accommodation of these people.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. member for Colchester (Mr. McClure) complained that the late Government had spent money on some ten or twelve wharfs in Nova Scotia that were not needed. Now, even supposing that to be true, why does that hon. gentleman to-night support a Government which is doing exactly the same thing? Why not speak of things as they are? When these gentlemen now in power were in opposition they sometimes spent nights discussing items of this kind, and denouncing them as something very corrupt and extravagant. Now I will take it for granted, for the sake of argument, that in 1896 the people of the country turned the Conservatives out of power because they believed the statements of the Liberals with regard to extravagant expenditure. But does not the hon. member for Colchester and his friends see that the Government which they support are now spending more money and with less reason than the Conservatives ever spent? It seems to me that if these gentlemen on the other side had any respect at all for their professions in the past they would vote against this useless and wasteful expenditure of the people's money.

Mr. McCLURE. If the hon. gentleman will give as good reasons for voting against this item as we gave for voting against Conservative extravagance, I have no doubt he will make converts on this side of the House. I am yet waiting to hear a reason why I should vote against this appropriation.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I cannot agree in the theory that the building of wharfs anywhere depends on the commercial necessity, or the earning power of these wharfs. It has been found expedient in the past to erect wharfs where the probabilities of trade were moderate, but which were necessary to accommodate a large number of people. If you have a large settlement and an extensive trade in a place, private enterprise would probably provide wharfs, but it is in places where the population is limited that the Government may be reasonably called upon to grant aid in order that the people may be accommodated.

I think that is a sound and sensible reason. As to this particular wharf, it is unfortunate that my hon. friend from Algoma is not here. It is unfortunate that the Minister of Public Works is not here. Both these gentlemen have discussed this matter fully. I am bound to believe that the hon. member for Algoma has asked for this wharf for a legitimate purpose. I regret to see that hon. gentlemen opposite, in anything of this kind, can only see a job, a trick or an election dodge. It is strange that the minds of these hon. gentlemen should dwell on things of this kind. It seems that they cannot imagine a public work to be constructed on any other basis. One would suppose that they had experience of that sort of thing—that suspicion haunts the guilty mind. It appears, from information furnished to the department, that the wharf which exists at Bruce Mines is owned by a private company, that the mail boat calls there, and that the company object to the wharf being used by the public. I am advised that the department had some negotiations with the company through their engineer, with the view of purchasing that wharf in order that it might be made available to the public, and that the owners of the mines declined to consider its sale, declaring that they wanted it for their own private purposes. Thereupon, the hon. member for Algoma asked the Government to provide a wharf for the public. Its cost is large, because I am informed that the water is very shallow, and the wharf must be built out a great distance. I think the explanation is a reasonable one, and the hon. member for Algoma, who is a respectable member of this House, is unfairly attacked in connection with the matter. The Minister of Public Works was satisfied, from his representations, that it was a fair and proper demand, and I think we may ask the House to pass this vote, with the assurance that the work will be done in accordance with the law, and that there will be nothing in the transaction that will not be creditable to the member for Algoma and to the Department of Public Works.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). It seems to me that this is a very expensive piece of work for a place the size of Bruce Mines. If it is done for a political reason, it is expensive on that ground also, because I find that only 97 votes were polled there at the last election. If this work is being done for the purpose of influencing votes, you are paying from $160 to $200 for every vote polled. If votes cost that much all through the country, I am not at all surprised at the extravagance of the present Government.

Mr. SPROULE. There was a vote last year of $5,000 to commence this work. Will the Minister tell us why that was not expended ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It was found that the work would be more expensive, and it was thought better to wait until they had a larger appropriation.

Mr. GUILLET. Despite the statement made by the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. McClure), I have no recollection of any proposition similar to this being made by the late Government. If there was one, I am sure it would have been strongly denounced from the Opposition side of the House. I know that no such case has occurred with regard to the harbours of Ontario. When I urged strongly on the Government to make an appropriation to improve the harbour of Lakeport, which is a very important harbour, being the outport of the village of Colborne, a large village of some thousand inhabitants, where a customs officer receives a salary of $700 and collects twice or three times the amount of his salary, I was refused point blank an appropriation for that purpose. The Government pointed out to me that it would be absolutely impossible for them to expend large sums of money to improve small ports. They pointed out that there were a large number of small ports in the maritime provinces, in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, and on the Pacific, and that private enterprise had to be relied upon to improve these small harbours. I know of no instance in which the late Government made appropriations of similar character to this, and I challenge any hon. gentleman to point out a case.

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance what he thinks of the statement made by the hon. member for Colchester, following the little bit of bad temper which that hon. gentleman showed a few days ago with regard to the expenditure in Nova Scotia. The hon. gentleman says he knows of dozens of cases where money was spent by the late Government to no purpose; but he did not name them or any of them. We had better settle that question. The Minister gave us to understand that there was no expenditure in that province that could not be justified on any ground whatever, and I think we ought to have the matter settled between the Minister of Finance and the hon. member for Colchester. If the hon. gentleman is silent, we will conclude that he made a statement which was without foundation. I want to ask if there are not two other wharfs proposed to be built in the same constituency in close proximity to the one under consideration. I think one is at Providence Bay and the other at Sheguindah.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There are wharfs proposed on Manitoulin Island.

Mr. PRIOR. I want to ask the Minister of Finance whether I understood him to say that in sparsely populated districts it was right that the Government should build wharfs at places where private enterprise could not be got to build them. Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say so ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I said such cases might arise, and the fact that the investment was not a paying one would be no argument against it. I did not lay down any general principle at all.

Mr. PRIOR. That has been the policy of the Government.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It has been in no respect a departure from the policy of our predecessors.

Mr. PRIOR. I do not ask whether that was the policy of the late Government or not, but if the present Government have money to spend on such places, there is no reason why British Columbia should not have some of that money. There are dozens of places on the coast where there is a small population, and the people cannot get any wharf from the provincial government or private enterprise. We have always understood it was the duty of the provincial government to build wharfs, and that it was not the duty of the Dominion Government. I am glad to hear that it is.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. You are in favour of it.

Mr. PRIOR. No, I am not. I consider it an outrage to build a public wharf at a place where there is already a private one and no occasion for a Government wharf; but if the Government are going to expend money in building wharfs at places such as this, then I say we are entitled to a similar expenditure in British Columbia.

Motion of Mr. Foster negatived: Yeas, 22; Nays, 33.

Mr. FOSTER. Will tenders be called for?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is as well we should have a general understanding. It is the practice of the department, in most cases, with new works, and especially works of any considerable size, to invite public tender. I think that is a sound policy. This work is of more than ordinary size, and in general I would approve of the policy of asking for tenders. The law places certain restrictions on the Minister of Public Works with regard to the construction of such work, and the law will be complied with; but if my hon. friend asks me to give a guarantee that every certain work will be let by public tender, regardless of the circumstances, I do not think that is a reasonable request.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to know whether public tenders will be invited for the construction of this work.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I believe that the practice will be carried out of inviting tenders, but I cannot, in the name of the Minister of Public Works, give that guarantee. I have only undertaken to look after his estimates, and not to manage his department generally.

Mr. FOSTER. I have been in the House of Commons a considerable number of years, and never heard an answer like that before. It is unworthy of any Government. Simply because the Minister of Public Works is not here, the Government abdicates its responsibility and refuses to tell the House what it has a right to know. It slides out of the responsibility.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am not sliding out of the responsibility, but accept it.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman sits there as a Minister putting through the Estimates, and dare not say whether the Government will or will not call for tenders. That is treating the House with contempt. The hon. gentleman simply rises in his place and says: I do not know what the Minister of Public Works will do. There is a law; he may obey it, or he may not.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We will obey the law, and whatever restraint the law places on the department will be observed; and, since the law defines the power of the Minister of Public Works in this matter, the request of the hon. gentleman for information is really not necessary.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the hon. gentleman think he is treating the House fairly, or himself?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think so.

Mr. FOSTER. I have never yet heard a Minister, when putting through his estimates, refuse to say whether or not he would call for tenders on a particular work. If the Minister of Public Works were here, he would be frank enough to say what he would do. When putting through his estimates last year, he told us whether he would call for tenders or not. And, when he thought it was better to do the work by day's labour, he would do so, and give his reasons. We have the right to know, when we are putting $15,000 into the hands of the department, whether the Minister is going to ask for tenders or not.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The law says that the Minister of Public Works will do this work by public tender and contract, unless, in his judgment, he believes that it would be advantageous to the public to pursue a different course. My hon. friend should not press for an answer further than this. I believe the policy of calling for tenders a proper one. But the hon. gentleman has asked me to enter into a hard-and-fast contract as to whether this work shall be put up to tender.

Mr. FOSTER. I call the members of this House to witness that in no instance—and I think my memory is pretty good—has a Minister, when asked a similar question before, sheltered himself behind a simple recitation of the law. He has been sufficiently manly to say whether he would call for tenders or not. The hon. gentleman is contemplating a special expenditure, and he had no business to ask us to vote it, unless he knows the circumstances, and he must be assumed to have known them, before he asked us to pass this item. He ought to be able to tell us whether it is new work or old work; he ought to have his plans ready, and to be able to give all information. He has the distinction of being the first man in a ministerial position that I can remember who has refused to answer the House fairly and squarely. Can he give any reason why this work should not be put up to tender?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. None.

Mr. FOSTER. Has it not been the rule to do so?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not remember.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it not the law?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In some cases it is.

Mr. FOSTER. I have asked the hon. gentleman to tell us whether there is any reason for departing in this instance from the custom and law. Are we not to have an answer with reference to this special case?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I thought I gave an answer.

Mr. FOSTER. And is the hon. gentleman satisfied with that answer?

Mr. BERGERON. I think the Minister of Finance is very prudent. He knows that last year the Minister of Public Works promised the House, when his Estimates were passed, that all such works should be done by tender and contract. But he did not carry out that promise. The Minister of Finance will not make a promise, because he knows it is impossible to keep the Minister of Public Works within the law.

Mr. BENNETT. In accordance with the statute providing that, in the case of any expenditure of $5,000 or over, on such works as this, there shall be a contract given after tenders are called for, I move:

That the expenditure of $15,000 for the construction of a dock at Bruce Mines shall be made under contract, for which tenders shall be publicly asked.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is no statute such as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) refers to. It was discussed the other night, and we know what it is. I am quite content to take the responsibility of asking the committee not to accept the hon. gentleman's motion.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman's (Mr. Bennett's) statement may be controverted or not, but the resolution stands by itself.

Mr. BENNETT. As the Minister of Finance has taken me to task, I may reply that when the statute was debated the other night it was admitted that it was only in the case of works of urgency, and in cases of necessity suddenly arising, that contracts should not be called. That cannot be pleaded in this case.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Ellis). Of course, I have not had a great deal of experience, but I doubt whether I can accept a resolution of this kind referring to one amount in the item before us. I would suggest that it might be better to have the resolution come at the end of the item.

Mr. BENNETT. The item has not been passed.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That which appears before the Chairman is the whole item, No. 168, and the amendment refers to only one of the amounts of which it is composed. I think it would be better to have such a motion at the end of the whole item.

Mr. FOSTER. The item being before us as a whole, and it seems to me that is the proper way to look at it—this is an amendment to the item as a whole, and I believe it to be in order.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. But we are not discussing the item as a whole.

Mr. FOSTER. But, as I understand, the item as a whole is before us.

Mr. BERGERON. It was understood that we should proceed by items, which is a matter in the discretion of the committee. Under the circumstances, my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) is perfectly in order in moving that a special item shall only be passed on certain conditions.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. It is quite in order to move to strike out an item or to reduce it.

Mr. BERGERON. Or to pass it with certain conditions.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not wish to be technical, otherwise I might point out that the word "dock" is not in the item, nor is there a vote here for $15,000; but I wish to avoid technicalities and to push on with the business.

Amendment negatived: Yeas, 18; nays, 39.

Harbours and Rivers—Ontario—

Burlington Channel—Repairs to piers. $40,000

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am glad to see this amount here, but I think there will be considerable disappointment in the city of Hamilton that the sum is not considerably larger. It seems to me that this amount is small compared with some others. Take, for instance, the item we have just passed—$10,000 for a work in a town of 450 souls. This item relates to the city of Hamilton, which, I need not remind the House, is one of the most important centres in the Dominion. The city of Hamilton has been hampered, there can be no doubt, by reason of the poor arrangements in connection with its harbour. I think, perhaps, the hon. Minister of Finance was one of the members of the Government who received a deputation a short time ago in connection with this work. The hon. gentleman knows that recently private enterprise in the city of Hamilton erected large smelting works, which, I am very glad to be able to say, have been exceedingly successful. Quite lately consolidation has taken place of the smelting works and the rolling mills. These smelting works are of so much importance that, I am told, they will have need of, perhaps, 200,000 tons of ore, a great part of which will have to come in at the Hamilton harbour.

The deputation which waited upon the Government represented that they desired three things done, if I remember correctly. First, of all they desired the piers rebuilt, next, they desired the channel of the canal deepened, and next, they desired some light-houses to be built, or some lights to be put in place in order to make a harbour of refuge as well as to increase the commercial advantages of the port. I think the information given by the deputation to the committee of council was that the work would cost something like $300,000. I have here a plan of the work. I have no doubt the hon. gentleman who is in charge of the estimate has a plan also. This is the Burlington Canal, and what the deputation desired and what I think is really necessary, was that this should be extended on both sides in order to lengthen the course, and that this channel here should be very materially deepened. The hon. gentleman must be aware that $40,000 will not begin to do the work which is being asked to be done in the city of Hamilton. I notice by the item that it is for repairs to old piers. I think it is a question as to whether much money should be spent in connection with the repair of these old piers. I see the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson) before me, who knows more of this work than I do, and I think he will agree with me, as well as the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) that these piers are 60 or 65 years old, and it would be better to construct new ones than to spend money in repairing them. Then I see there is no vote apparently for deepening the channel. Now, if the work is to be carried out in the way that is asked, the channel must be deepened. I am told, and I think those facts were given to the Government, that the parties whose vessels come into Hamilton are unable to get them insured by reason of the slight depth of water, and by reason also of the want of lighthouses and other conveniences which should exist in such a port. I should like to have looked over the supplementary Estimates, and I am surprised to see that a further sum has not been placed in the Estimates for the work of deepening the channel as well as the construction of lighthouses. I would ask the Minister what this $43,000 is to be spent for, and whether it is the intention of the Government to confine the work simply to repairing the old piers, or whether it is the intention to deepen the channel. Might I also ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries whether it is the intention to erect any lighthouses there as asked for by the deputation from Hamilton?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This vote of $40,000 is for Burlington Bay. It is proposed to repair the old work on an estimate of about $44,000. It is quite true that a petition was sent in for deepening the water, but there is a serious difficulty there. The old piers are only 12 or 15 feet deep, and if the surrounding section were dredged to the depth of 20 feet the whole work would tumble. I am told the construction of the work on the large scale contemplated by some of those who approached the Government, would cost upwards of $400,000. That was a larger sum than we felt justified in appropriating, and it was deemed expedient to repair the old works on an estimate of $44,000.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think an estimate was made by the local engineer, and I think he reported that the works as proposed by the deputation, namely, the extension of these piers and the deepening, and I am informed the lighthouse work as well, would only cost something like $225,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Was that by the departmental engineer?

Mr. MONTAGUE. No, I think, perhaps, by the city engineer. Does the hon. gentleman intend to extend the piers?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, for the present this vote does not contemplate an extension, it is simply to repair the work.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am sorry the hon. gentleman, in this year of abundance and of enormous estimates, could not find a larger sum for an important city like Hamilton. The Minister of Railways and Canals found a way of dredging the side of an old wharf and fixing it up down in the city of St. John, and, perhaps, it might be done here. But the hon. gentleman sees it is a very small vote. Here we are spending $15,000 at Bruce Mines, where there are 450 people, where no one has asked for it except the member for Algoma (Mr. Dymont), and I recognize he has a perfect right to try and get public improvements for his constituency. But I say here we are spending $15,000 for a wharf where there is one already, and we are not to spend three times as much in the great city of Hamilton, notwithstanding that it has been pressed upon the hon. gentleman by the Board of Trade, by those whose money is invested in enterprises there, enterprises which I am told are hampered a great deal by reason of the want of these improvements.

Mr. BAIN. I may be allowed to say a word about this matter, as it happens to lie in my county, and I have some information with respect to it. A year ago I discussed this matter pretty fully with the department here, and the feeling then was that the repairs that were made on the piers at that time were sufficient for the temporary preservation and maintenance of the works in their present condition. But at the same time the feeling was that, as the Minister has said, the channel was deeper than the foundations of the existing piers that were put down long ago when conditions were very different.

Mr. MONTAGUE. They are about 60 years old, are they not?

Mr. BAIN. Over 40 years, at least. It was felt at the time that it would not be economical to spend any more money in repairs. At that time there was an item of $10,000 standing in the Estimates, and the conclusion we then reached was that it would be desirable to make provision for deepening that channel by commencing new piers and sinking the foundations lower. Since then the Hamilton people have asked for the extension of the pier on the inner side, on the bay side, further into the bay, for the sake of giving vessels a better opportunity to take the mouth of the channel in going outwards when the wind was unfavourable. They asked for the extension of that side, and there was a small light placed on the extremity in connection with the existing lighthouse on the lake end of the pier. To make economically useful now an expenditure of $40,000, you would require to commence to replace one of these piers, sinking it sufficiently to allow for dredging just as soon as the work is carried out. The Hamilton people ask for $75,000, and I see an item of $40,000 in the Estimates, but, if the money is economically expended, it will be expended in that way. There are no temporary repairs except of the most trifling character, that can be economically applied to the maintenance of the present works, beyond the process of making provision for a deeper channel. I think we all agree that with the amount of traffic that is involved with the city of Hamilton and with the additional traffic that will naturally come upon the extension of the smelting works by the erection of the new steel plant, this is one of those works that every one believes it is in the general public interest should be commenced and carried on to completion with a reasonable degree of attention and urgency. There is always necessarily a large trade with the city of Hamilton, and with the addition to the smelters and on account of the fact that their traffic is over the lake in boats of the large size which they are using, it is desirable that this work should receive attention; and it will be found that the only economical way of spending that money is by commencing new permanent piers and sinking the works to a depth so as to permit of a deeper channel.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How is it contemplated to expend this money?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It will be practically a renewal of the large portion of the old piers, and if the extension be continued later on the work that is now done will be a part of it. This vote is for repairs.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Of course, if there is to be no extension the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries does not propose to do anything in the way of a light.

Mr. BAIN. The south pier will be the one that will engage attention first in the expenditure of this money, because that is the side that the traffic goes to, and that is the side where the difficulty has been found.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the hon. Minister tell us which pier it is proposed to attend to first?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The chief engineer informs me that the first pier to be attended to will be the south pier, but practically the whole work is in a bad state and the renewals will have to be pretty general.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Which end of the pier will be attended to?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Hamilton end.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think the work is constructed into the harbour. Is it the intention to extend the pier?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not at present; this does not provide for an extension.

Mr. MONTAGUE. There is no extension provided for?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not in this vote; that will probably have to follow, judging from what has been said this evening. This vote only provides for renewals.

Mr. MONTAGUE. There is to be another vote in the supplementary Estimates?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We all hope to see another year.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What I understand is that the hon. Minister intends to renew the whole work.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We intend to renew it as far as the present estimate of $44,000 is concerned.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is a beginning.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I recognize the work as one which is likely to make further demands upon the treasury, and I have no doubt that these demands will be met in a generous spirit, but I am not prepared to say anything will now be done beyond what is contemplated under the appropriation of $44,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am pleased that this item appears in the Estimates but I am rather surprised that the amount is not larger than is asked for. I am quite aware that $44,000 is not at all sufficient for the amount of work that is contemplated or required there, but, from the remarks dropped by the hon. Minister, I apprehend that this is only the beginning of a work which may take years to complete. I am sure it is a matter of necessity to the people of Hamilton and of the country all around that part of Lake Ontario that this channel should be put in the best condition possible, and that the best access to the city of Hamilton should be obtained that the Government can provide. If all the Estimates that were asked were of such a meritorious character as this one, we would not take very long to pass the Estimates, and we would not be called upon to hold these late sittings.

Collingwood Harbour—Improvement..... $60,000

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This vote of $60,000 is required for the purpose of continuing the deepening of a portion of the harbour of Collingwood to a depth of eighteen feet below low water, and also deepening the 20-foot channel leading to the harbour. The work is estimated to cost $150,000 which includes the sum expended during the past year.

Mr. FOSTER. How is this work being done?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. By contract, the contractors being Boone & Armstrong, of Toronto and Collingwood.

Mr. FOSTER. Were tenders asked?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Were these contractors the lowest?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How much has the town contributed?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. $25,000.

Mr. SPROULE. That was the town and railway both.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The town did a certain portion of the work and contributed money for the balance, representing altogether $25,000.

Mr. BENNETT. I did not catch aright what the hon. Minister said. May I ask him now what the present contract with Boone & Armstrong is for? What depth of water will be provided?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This money is voted to deepen a portion of the harbour to 18 feet below low water mark, and also for the deepening to 20 feet of the channel leading to the harbour. The contract with Boone & Armstrong is for $144,966. The total expended up to the 1st March, 1899, on the whole work, which includes past expenditures as well as those involved in the present operations, is $282,898.34. The total contract with Boone & Armstrong is for $144,966. They have performed seven-thirteenths of the work, and have been paid in proportion, excepting the drawbacks.

Mr. BENNETT. How much would that be?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. $60,201.

Mr. BENNETT. What depth of water has been secured by the expenditure so far, and over what area?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The channel is not completed yet. The available depth at present is 17 feet.

Mr. CLARKE. What will be the width of channel?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. From 250 to 300 feet.

Mr. BENNETT. What area has now been completed for that expenditure of $60,210?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The officials cannot give the information off-hand. It is a bulk sum, and they have not all the quantities.

Mr. GANONG. Is it all rock work?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is partly rock and partly mud.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How much do they get per yard for the mud?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The contract is for a lump sum.

Mr. BENNETT. How many yards of area does this contract of $144,000 cover. I understand that there is a channel 250 feet wide. How far out is that channel of 250 feet made for this contract price of $144,000?

Mr. MONTAGUE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The total length of the channel is about 6,000 feet, as the engineer hurriedly estimates from the plan.

Mr. BENNETT. Will 6,000 feet go out beyond the lighthouse?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. About 1,200 feet beyond the lighthouse.

Mr. BENNETT. Do I understand the Minister to say there is a uniform depth of 17 feet of water in a channel 250 feet wide?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is not uniform.

Mr. BENNETT. Is it the intention of the Government, when this $144,000 has been spent on this channel of 250 feet to 300 feet in width—will there then be a uniform depth of 17 feet of water from this distance out to the lighthouse?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The contract requires the depth inside to be 18 feet, and the depth outside 20 feet.

Mr. SPROULE. And this expenditure will give that depth?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is the requirement of the contract.

Mr. BENNETT. Two years ago, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) stated:

The estimated cost of the work is about $200,000; we intend to begin the work as soon as possible.

Is it the intention of the Government, after they have spent this $150,000, to make a further large grant in order to secure this uniform depth of 18 or 20 feet of water? In view of the fact that over a quarter million dollars has already been expended in Collingwood harbour, it is proper that the House and the country should know what the intentions of the Government are in respect to it.

Mr. McCARTHY. Before the Minister answers that question, I wish to call his attention to some particulars in regard to the Collingwood harbour, of which perhaps he may not be aware. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) will remember that when this matter was discussed in 1896 and 1897, it was then brought to the attention of the House that the Conservative Administration had asked for tenders and had had their engineers make an estimate of this work. That engineer's estimate stated that it would require an expenditure of $200,000. Upon that estimate tenders were asked and received, and the subsequent acceptance of the tenders was carried out by the present Administration. Therefore, the estimate of the late Government, when they commenced and intended to carry out the work, was, that it would cost $200,000. The present contract was only for $144,000. I, therefore, desire to call the attention of the Minister to that fact before he answers the question.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The question of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) is, as to what may be done by the Government in future years, and the House will see that that is a matter which cannot very well be gone into.

Mr. BENNETT. In view of the fact that this expenditure will provide but a narrow channel, it is an important consideration for the Government and the House, whether or not a large expenditure of this kind should be undertaken. It must be patent to every one who has a knowledge of the trade of the upper lakes, that there are very large steamers plying there now, and it is a question for us to consider, whether it is wise to enter on such a large expenditure, $150,000, without knowing where that may lead us to.

Mr. McCARTHY. The hon. gentleman knows very well that the Minister can hardly answer that question at the present time, for the reason that the water in the Georgian Bay rises and falls. He will know that from his own harbour at Midland. This year the water is higher than it was last year, and it will depend to a large extent upon what Providence does, whether any further expenditure will be necessary by the Government. If Providence decrees that the water shall be higher, then a further expenditure will not be asked; but if Providence decrees that the water shall be lower, then a larger expenditure will be necessary. As most hon. gentlemen know, Collingwood is an important and growing town. It has now 7,000 inhabitants, has a great many enterprises, and has a number of people who are ready to invest capital to aid the progress of the town. It is hardly a fair question to ask the Government whether it proposes to expend any further money there, for it will depend largely upon the requirements after the present contract is completed. It may be that no further expenditure will be required, and it may be that further expenditure will be necessary. However that may be, the House will be able to judge in the future whether we should make a further grant to carry out this work. It is more important than ever that this work should be promptly concluded. There is no doubt that it is the policy of hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House that Collingwood harbour should be made suitable for accommodating the increased transportation of freight from our western country. I enlarged somewhat upon this question during the debate on the Address, and I will not now weary the House with further reference to it. The object of deepening Collingwood harbour commends itself to all, and the policy founded upon that object was initiated by hon. gentlemen opposite, when they were in power, and it has been, I am glad to say, adopted by the present Government.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). The Minister (Mr. Fielding) says that the contract is for a lump sum. Is there any schedule of quantities upon which to base your estimates?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am informed, not.

Mr. McLELLAN (Glengarry). On what do you base your progress estimates?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They take the total amount, and, having ascertained the actual amount for dredging, for instance, they pay the proportion to the whole.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). But they must have some estimate made before letting out the contract, and they must have based it on certain scheduled quantities. At what price do they estimate the earth and rock excavation for progressive estimates?

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. Minister stated a moment ago that a certain fraction of the work was done. How could he tell what fraction was done if he had no estimate of the total work?

Mr. GIBSON. That is a matter that can be very easily ascertained. If the length of the harbour is 6,000 feet, and if 3,000 feet of that work is done, it is quite easy for the Government engineers to ascertain what the Government should pay. I understand that the answer given by the engineer was that seven-thirteenths of the work had been already done. On that it is very easy to ascertain with this difference, that the Government would not require to have an inspector to measure the work done. In this case the tender is for a bulk sum, and on that basis the engineer would arrive at the amount of the work done.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). That might be done; but before letting this contract at all it would be necessary to estimate the quantities, and I want to know how they arrived at the quantities, and what price they estimated for rock, and what price for earth.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There has been no price per yard, so far as the department is concerned. The department originally had an estimate as to the quantity of the work involved, and the proportion of the work done to the whole work, is ascertained by soundings. The contractors tendered, not on a price per yard, but on a bulk sum.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). You did not estimate on quantities. You estimate according to the nature of the work to be done, as some soil is easier than others to work, and some rock is twice as hard as others. There must have been some estimates in the first place as to the value of the work for which the contract was made, and I want to know on what basis per yard you made the estimates.

Mr. McCARTHY. I may say to the hon. gentleman that the estimated cost of this work prior to 1896 was $200,000, and that the late Government advertised for tenders on that basis. In answer to that advertisement this tender of $144,000 came in.

Mr. BENNETT. What depth of water ?

Mr. McCARTHY. By that contract it was 18 feet outside and 20 feet inside, or vice versa.

Mr. GIBSON. No one knows better than the hon. member for Glengarry that before that work was submitted to the Government for approval, cross-sections had been taken, the depth of the soil had been found, and the quantities of silt, sand, clay and rock ascertained. The estimate was based on observations taken in that way, and the engineers estimated that the work was worth $200,000. My hon. friend knows that an engineer, in estimating for a large work of this kind, is always liberal in his quantities and prices, so that sufficient money may be provided to cover all contingencies. The contractor then takes the same trouble as the engineer did in ascertaining for himself the quantities of the different materials he has to encounter in the work. The point lost sight of and referred to by the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) is, to my mind, more important than the estimated amount of work. The suggestion he throws out is that arrangements should be made to have this harbour made of a sufficient depth to admit of the entrance of the largest craft that sails on the upper lakes. No doubt the water rises and falls almost daily on the upper lakes as well as elsewhere. If I might be pardoned for giving an experience which I had, at the town of Oakville, in sinking a pier under water at a depth of 13 feet, some 90 or 100 piles had to be cut, and we found, on taking our levels every day, that the water in Lake Ontario varied in level, being an inch higher or an inch lower on one day than on another. I have no doubt the same thing happens in the Georgian Bay. Apart from that, there is a fixed bench mark or datum, as the engineers call it, from which measurements are taken, and whether the water is high or low does not affect the depth of dredging which has to be done. What the hon. member for Glengarry wants is not a difficult matter for the engineer or the inspector or the clerk of works to arrive at in sending in his report from month to month to the Government of how much work has been done. I think it is more important to the Government, when taking charge of a piece of work of this kind, to put it beyond peradventure that the harbour will be deep and wide enough for the largest class of vessels that ply on the upper lakes.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). I have no desire to place any obstacle in the way of passing this item. What I particularly wish is to get some idea of how the Government made up their estimates of the quantity and price per yard of rock and earth. Surely they never let the contract without going over every detail so as to see what the work was worth. I want to know how the hon. Minister arrived at his approximation of the estimates and how he estimated rock per yard and earth per yard ? I want to know what the progressive estimates are for rock or earth as the case may be, and the price the Government placed upon these before calling for tenders and letting the work ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am informed that progress estimates are not made up in the way the hon. gentleman suggests. The contract being a lump sum and there being an estimate of the quantity in the whole work, it is simply a sum in proportion to determine what amount we should pay for the work done. There is no question of the price per yard entering into it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. In order to make up that estimate of $200,000, the engineer must have figured up how many yards of rock and earth there were and the price. When you are making progress estimates, you must figure the number of yards of earth and rock to be taken out at a certain price.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). You would never let a contract without knowing what you were letting—without making estimates and having some idea what it was worth.

Mr. GIBSON. I understand that the hon. gentleman is building a number of houses. No doubt he is building them by contract and for a lump sum, and his architect would tell him every week, when paying for the building how much he should pay.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). If I let a contract for a house or anything else, I get a detailed statement as to the value of everything that goes into the work in order to make progressive estimates. Surely you are in a position of knowing exactly what you are doing. There was never a work let of that description without the department having some knowledge of its quantity and character. If this Government let a contract without knowing anything about the value, they certainly did not act in a business way.

Mr. SPROULE. I believe the understanding was, when this work was undertaken, to complete it, no matter what the cost, so as to give a depth of water of 18 feet in the inside of the channel and the channel itself 20 feet. The town of Collingwood represented that this work would cost about $150,000, but the Government engineer said it would cost $200,000. The town of Colling-wood offered to give $15,000 and the Grand Trunk Railway $10,000, provided the Dominion Government undertook the work. The estimate of the Government engineer was that the work would cost $200,000, and the Government called for tenders to ascertain what it could be done for, and I believe the intention was that if it could be done for the price estimated by the town of Collingwood, the work would be gone on with but if it would cost a larger sum the Government would consider whether it was wise or not to undertake it. Tenders were invited, and one tender was as low as the town of Collingwood estimated the work would cost, and the succeeding Government coming in let the contract upon this tender. Therefore, the town of Collingwood can reasonably claim that no matter what the work cost, it must be completed on the understanding which was arrived at when the $25,000 were given.

Mr. BENNETT. When was this work to be completed?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. 30th June, 1899.

Mr. GANONG. Are we to understand that Collingwood in this work shall be represented by a trench 2,000 feet long and 250 feet wide with a variation of 14 to 18 feet of water.

Mr. McCARTHY. That represents only the channel. The harbour is a great deal wider. The water outside the channel is from 9 to 14 feet deep.

Mr. SPROULE. It is said that the contractor has failed or is failing to carry out his contract. Is there anything in that rumour?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There have been some difficulties and delays owing to his not having the proper machinery, but I am informed that the work is going on all right now.

Mr. SPROULE. I am glad to know that, because it brings up a very important question on which the hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. McLennan) was trying to get information. The work was to be finished by this June, but I am told that it is a long way from completion yet. If the contractor has been paid a greater sum than a fair proportion for the work completed, it is most unlikely he will be able to carry out his contract. It would be important to know what payments have been made and what proportion of the work has been done.

Mr. CAMPBELL. You have been told how much money has been paid.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, but not how much work has been done.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Seventeenth.

Mr. McCARTHY. The hon. gentleman will know, as he lives in close proximity to where this work is being carried on, that the contractor found a great deal more hard-pan than he expected, and this caused the dredges to break more frequently than was anticipated. He has realized that stronger dredges are necessary; and with these, I believe the work is proceeding satisfactorily.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Has the contractor given notice that he will claim extras?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is no question of extras known to the department.

Mr. MONTAGUE. May I revert to the item for Burlington channel for a moment? I suppose that that work will be let by tender?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The engineer tells me that the work is practically repair work and can hardly be done conveniently by contract.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will it be done by day's labour?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, the engineer thinks it probable.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). During election time?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Of course, we would not stop the work on account of the elections.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I fear that the hope of my hon. friend from South Wentworth (Mr. Bain) that the money, if economically spent, will do much good will be largely blasted.

Harbours and Rivers—Ontario—
Goderich—Reconstruction of breakwater and repairs to piers..... $46,500

Mr. FOSTER. What is this for?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This vote is required to continue the construction of the breakwater at Goderich and for diverting the course of the Maitland River and effecting repairs upon the entrance piers. The contract was awarded on the 11th of August last to F. C. Smith and D. McGillicuddy for the breakwater, at a lump sum of $56,700. The total amount of which estimated is $65,500.

Mr. FOSTER. How many tenders were asked?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Public tenders were invited on two occasions. The deputy tells me that about six or seven tenders were received.

Mr. FOSTER. Was this the lowest tender?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, on the second call. After the first call for tenders a contract was made, but the contractor broke down and the work had to be re-let.

Mr. SPROULE. Who was the contractor?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Mr. Luke Madigan.

Mr. SPROULE. Which of this present firm of contractors has the plant and experience to engage in this work? One of them runs a newspaper.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The man who can run a newspaper successfully can do any work. I know it; I have run one myself.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me we should get some more information about this, especially in view of the rumours in regard to it. Although it has been repeatedly stated that tenders were called for, the rumour is persistent that there were no real tenders, but, by some kind of private negotiation, the contract was given to this firm and that one of the reasons why it was given was to appease Mr. McGillicuddy, who was opposing the Government on account of some appointment made which did not meet his approval. If that was the object, it appears to have accomplished it, because his paper, so far as I know, has not said a word against the Government since.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. Minister bring down the tenders?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The deputy thinks that they have been brought down; but, if not, they shall be brought down.

Mr. HOLMES. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) is unfair to one of the contractors in saying that this contract was given to him to appease him because he was against the Government. He was never against the Government. There was a personal difference between himself and the late member for the riding, but Mr. McGillicuddy never took issue with the Government. If the hon. member will turn up "Hansard" he will find that the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson), I think it was, asked for an explanation when the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) was present, and the hon. Minister replied stating that tenders were advertised for in a number of newspapers, and that the contract was awarded to the lowest tenderer. No special consideration has been shown Mr. McGillicuddy. He happened to interest a moneyed man in the work, and they put in a tender. And the opinion of the department is that they will not make much money on their contract.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the hon. member (Mr. Holmes) is hardly correct, for I remember seeing some of the criticisms in Mr. McGillicuddy's paper, and I think he found fault with the Government for making certain appointments.

Mr. HOLMES. I still maintain that I am thoroughly correct. I am familiar with the matter, for it is in my own locality. Mr. McGillicuddy did not take issue with the Government for the appointment made; he took issue with the member.

Mr. SPROULE. The articles were there for anybody to read; and I read them and certainly understood them to be in criticism of the Government for the way in which the appointments were made. But I did not refer to this matter so much because of information possessed of myself, as because of the rumours that are circulating. The interesting question to people in the west was whether a man in that capacity was prepared to do this kind of work, or whether it was not a cinch for him especially.

Mr. HOLMES. I object to the statement that there was any cinch at all. The matter was thoroughly threshed out in this House when the hon. member for Halton asked the question across the floor, and the Minister of Public Works gave a full explanation. If the hon. gentleman will consult "Hansard" he will find that a full explanation was given in connection with that particular contract. I entirely repudiate the insinuation that there was any cinch about it. The matter was dealt with as a departmental work, which was left to the lowest tenderer, and there was no favouritism. So far as Mr. McGillicuddy is concerned, I presume the contract is being filled to the satisfaction of the department. As the Minister of Finance says, a man who can run a newspaper can do any kind of work.

Mr. CLARKE. How much money has been paid upon this contract entered into with Mr. McGillicuddy?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My memorandum does not show anything. The chief engineer's opinion is that nothing has been paid. They are working now.

Goderich Harbour—

Dredging ..... $20,000

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This dredging is being done by the Malton Dredging Company of Goderich. They receive $18 a day of ten hours, and their average day's work is 600 yards. It was not let by tender. There is some rock which has to be blasted out by the department separately, but the material on which the dredge is working is of a pretty uniform character.

Mr. SPROULE. I presume the Government have an inspector there looking after this work.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes. The instructions are that the inspector is to remain all the time on the dredge during working hours. Mr. William Watson is the inspector. He makes a return once a week, giving the number of hours the dredge has worked and the amount taken out.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What is Mr. Watson's business?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The deputy informs me that he does not know what his occupation was ?

Mr. SPROULE. I have been told that at Owen Sound the inspector was not steadily on the dredge, and it is found that the water is not of a uniform depth in portions of the harbour gone over : that whenever they got into a soft place they took out as much as possible, and when they got into a hard place they took out much less, so that the bottom of the harbour is very uneven and a uniform depth of water is not given. In some places it is found that where the depth was to be 18 or 19 feet, they have dredged it to 21 or 22 feet, because the material was soft, and in other places they have only taken out enough to give 15 or 16 feet because the material was hard.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I understand that at Goderich there is not only an inspector who is constantly present, but there is an engineer in charge of the works of the harbour.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Perhaps the member for West Huron (Mr. Holmes) could tell us what this man's business is.

Mr. HOLMES. I cannot say. I know the name, but I do not know anything about him.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is he a resident engineer ? Because I observed on a former occasion, when improvements were being made in Goderich harbour, that an engineer from Toronto was employed, and he was paid $165 for travelling expenses. Surely a town of the size of Goderich has an engineer of sufficient ability to take charge of these works. I would draw attention to another item of expenditure in Burlington channel last year. I find that an engineer from Toronto was employed who charged 50 cents cab-hire from his house to the railway station, he charged his fare from Toronto to Hamilton, he then charged his fare from Hamilton out to Burlington, with cab-fare between the stations and the city of Hamilton, and then again cab-fare from the Union Station at Toronto back to his residence, making altogether, with board, a sum of about $200, which, to my mind, is money thrown away. I think that in a case of this kind, if possible, the resident engineer should be obtained, and thus the expenditure would be very much reduced.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The engineer now engaged is a resident engineer. Mr. Brough, but formerly a Toronto engineer was employed.

General repairs and improvements to harbour, river and bridge works..... $15,000

Mr. BENNETT. I would like to ask the hon. Minister where the dredge "Challenger" is now working.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. At Thornbury.

Mr. BENNETT. Is it intended to dredge the shoal, upon which work was done some years ago, on the north shore of the bay at Midland ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. A survey is being made with regard to Midland, but I am not in a position at present to answer the question of the hon. gentleman.

Kingston Harbour—

Dredging ..... $10,000

Mr. MONTAGUE. How is that work being done ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The work is being done at Kingston by one of the Government dredges.

Little Bear Creek—

Dredging ..... $2,000

Mr. CLANCY. What is the extent of the work to be done there ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is in Kent county. This vote is required for dredging Little Bear Creek for the accommodation of vessels navigating three miles from the Channel Ecarte, to a landing, pier and basin on the creek. This creek was dredged to 8 feet of water in 1883-86. Since that the banks having fallen in some places, the above sum is required to clear out the stream again so as to give vessels a chance to use the creek.

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to ask the hon. Minister why this work is not gone on with. That vote has been in the Estimates for a long time, and if hon. gentlemen are going to put it in merely as a sort of sign, they had better strike it out or go on with the work. I would like to ask what the department intends to do about it ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The only difficulty in doing a work of that character is getting dredges. It is not always possible to get dredges.

Mr. CLANCY. There is another work for which a vote appears in connection with the Sydenham River, and it is absolutely useless to vote Estimates if there is no dredge in sight for the purpose of doing the work. I expected a strong protest from my hon. friend from Kent (Mr. Campbell).

Mr. CAMPBELL. Do you want it struck out ?

Mr. CLANCY. I would infinitely rather see it struck out than see it put in there for no purpose. If the hon. Minister says that he does not propose to go on with the work, I will vote to strike it out.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will you move to strike it out ?

Mr. CLANCY. No ; I want to see the work done.

Mr. CAMPBELL. You need not fret about it.

Mr. CLANCY. I am as much concerned as the hon. gentleman is. I know a great deal more about that work than he does, so that the hon. gentleman need not say that I need not fret about it. The hon. gentleman need not be quite so fresh over this matter. I think it is fair that we should have at least some statement as to whether the work will be done this year or not. It is an important work to the people there.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We want to do the work, and if we can get a dredge it will be done.

Mr. CLANCY. Can the department not find enough dredges to do a work that is required?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Dredges are rather scarce.

Mr. MCGREGOR. You can get all the dredges you require up there. The work will be done.

Mr. CLANCY. You can get all the dredges you want. The Martin Dredging Company have three or four dredges and they are good ones too. One of them did some work for the department on a former occasion. There is no excuse for not going on with the work. We never will get it done if we wait for the Sydenham work to be done.

Mr. MCGREGOR. It will be all right.

Mr. CLANCY. My hon. friend's assurance is not satisfactory, and I would rather ask the Minister. Since there are dredges that can be procured, will the hon. Minister say that, in the event of the Government dredge not being available, a local dredge will be employed to do the work?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I should almost think that if a dredge can be obtained the work will be done. I have no personal knowledge of the locality, but I will say to the hon. gentleman that if there are dredges to spare I would thank the hon. gentleman to send some of them down to the maritime provinces where we could employ them. I am glad to know that dredges are so plentiful, because I understood that they were not easily available.

Mr. CLANCY. If the hon. Minister will show a little anxiety about our work up there, I will try to induce some of these dredges to go down to the maritime provinces.

Oakville—

Repairs to piers and dredging..... $4,500

Mr. HENDERSON. Last year the work at Oakville was commenced by dredging the harbour which had been filled in in consequence of a break in the pier. The break in the pier was not repaired, is not yet repaired and consequently the work done last year was destroyed inasmuch as the gravel and sand was again, by the storm, forced through the break in the pier and the harbour has, to a certain extent, again become filled up. The people of Oakville are very anxious that this work should be completed at once. The town has expended money in building a temporary pier outside of the break and it has also spent money, as well as the vessel owners, in dredging the harbour to make it at all useful for the purpose of a harbour until such time as the Government could get to work and complete it. The people of Oakville will feel thankful if the Government will push the work forward, and I do not think there is any reason why they should not do so. I understand that the timbers are on the ground and if the work is put in operation and completed as speedily as possible, there will be no fault found with the Government by myself or by the people of Oakville.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The materials have been purchased for the work, and there is no reason why it should not be gone on with.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think I can take the hon. gentleman's statement to mean that this work will be proceeded with.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, that is the intention.

Owen Sound—

Dredging, renewal and extension of pile protection works ..... $19,600

Mr. BENNETT. Is that a contract?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, it is an arrangement with the Owen Sound Dredging Company, the same as in the case of Goderich, to do the work at so much per day.

Mr. SPROULE. If this is the work in reference to which I had the information with regard to the inspector, I think it would be desirable that the Minister should make inquiries to ascertain whether the allegations are correct or not, and if they are correct, the Minister should have instructions given him to be there steadily at his work.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will promise to see that instructions are given to the engineer to inquire into that.

Rainy River—

Improvement of navigable channel.... $15,000

Mr. FOSTER. Why was not some work done on this last year? I do not suppose that there is an improvement anywhere so absolutely necessary as this. Every boat that goes up there has to be hauled up by means of a rope and a steam winch, or the hands of the Indians. The trade of that country is now very considerable. An immense amount of machinery is going in there, and I do not see any reason in the world why, when the money was granted and the necessity so pressing, the work was not carried out.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There were some differences of opinion as to the best methods of proceeding with the work, and the Minister was not satisfied, and hence the delay.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the position now ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The acting chief engineer informs me that he has no instructions from the Minister, but I do not see why the work should not go on, if the vote is taken and the conditions are as stated by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. FOSTER. It is impossible that it should go on, unless the department has a plan. Although the department had a vote of $15,000 last year, it does not appear yet to have a plan.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The chief engineer informs me that he had no instructions from the Minister before he left, but that he has prepared the plans.

Mr. FOSTER. Does he propose to build a lock ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The portion affecting the lock is a separate vote in the supplementary Estimates. This work contemplates the removal of boulders and sandbars in the channel above the Manitou Rapids.

Mr. FOSTER. That is just where the difficult part of navigation is, and that is where the work should be done, and done at once.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is suggested to me by the engineer that the building of the lock may change the situation somewhat, as it may flood these rapids. There will be a dam in connection with the lock, which may change the conditions.

Mr. FOSTER. If you are going to build a lock and a dam there, you will want more than $100,000. I am not an expert, but I believe that a reasonable amount of money properly expended there would aid navigation, so as to overcome the difficulties and render it easier for boats to get up. But there is the department, and there is the money, but somehow or other they did not do the work.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think they will proceed at once and do something. What is done there now is this. In the centre of the stream, just above the rapids, there is a crib put down, and on that is a big rope and a place to tie the rope, and when a vessel comes up, she has to wait until the whole tribe of Indians come out, and get that rope attached from the vessel to that point, and then the vessel is hauled up by the Indians by means of that rope. Every vessel has to go over that obstruction in that way. It is the only way in which it can be done.

Mr. GIBSON. What is the depth of water ?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know. There is plenty of depth for the "Keenora." The trouble is not in the want of depth, but in the strength of the current. I very much doubt whether the amount of navigation would justify the construction of a dam and lock ; but I would like to have an assurance that the department will get a hustle on.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The question of improvements at this point and the question of the lock seem to be so blended together that they will have to be considered together. The engineers are strongly of opinion that the completing of the lock will flood this place, and that it would not be necessary to make any other improvements in the river. However, I think the hon. member may rely that as soon as the Minister returns, that matter will be looked into.

Mr. FOSTER. So far as the other improvements in the river are concerned, the people do not care a button for them. This is the one they want.

Sydenham River—

Dredging ..... $5,000

Mr. CLANCY. What work is contemplated here, and how much has been expended ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is a revote of $5,000 towards dredging the north and south branches of the Sydenham River. I understand that no work is going on at present.

Mr. CLANCY. I understand that only $1,600 has been expended out of the vote that was taken last year of $5,000. What is the extent of the work contemplated ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Some dredging has been done there. In the south branch of the river two cuts of 1,050 feet long, giving a width of 50 feet, were made to a depth of 10 feet. On the north branch three cuts were made, of 1,000 feet, 600 feet and 300 feet respectively, to a depth of 9 feet. A large number of snags and sunken logs were also removed from the channel. The total cost of the work done was $1,700.

Mr. CLANCY. At Dresden, which is an important town, I am informed by the business men there, the dredging which has been done so far is practically of no benefit whatever ; and if the work is left in its present condition it might just as well be left alone and no work done at all. I am surprised at the statement that a cut of the description given by the Finance Minister has been made there. I think it would be difficult to find any one in the locality to discover that any work of value has been done. I am informed that the people there have had the promise of the Minister of Public Works that a dredge would be sent there to finish the work at once. Is it the intention to get some dredge this year to go and do this work? It is very important that it should be done this year. It is hardly fair to put the vote in the Estimates and not go on with the work. It is not difficult at all to get dredges in the locality. They will be available if the Minister will order them to go on and do the work. I think the Minister should make some definite statement on the subject.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am not in a position to give my hon. friend any further assurance. I am sure that the Minister of Public Works did not put the vote in the Estimates without intending to do the work, but what particular plan he may have in view I cannot tell.

Mr. CLANCY. I am not asking about the plan. I am asking whether it will be done at all this year.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I cannot say that it will be done, but I hope it will.

Mr. CLANCY. If I promise to get a dredge, will the Minister promise that the work will go on?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will promise to submit that proposal to the favourable consideration of my colleague the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. HENDERSON. I wish to ask the acting Minister of Public Works if he has a record of any requisition for a pier to be built, and dredging to be done, at the village of Bronte, in the county of Halton, about 12 miles east of Hamilton? This is a somewhat important place, as the home of the cisco fishing industry, which employs a considerable number of people and a considerable number of small vessels. This harbour belonged to a private individual up to a short time ago; but in order to have public money expended on it, the municipal township of the township of Trafalgar, in which township the village is situated, purchased the harbour, and a deputation was sent to Ottawa with the view of securing a grant of money for the purpose of improving the pier and dredging the harbour. In urging a liberal grant I would ask the Minister if any promise has been made to this deputation that something will be done to assist these people at Bronte in the way of improving the harbour?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I understand that a deputation did come and a petition was forwarded, but I am not aware that any promise was made. This was one of the many works pressed on the department which they were not able to go on with at once. The fact that no promise was made does not imply that any adverse decision was arrived at.

Committee rose and reported progress.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 2.20 a.m. (Friday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 21st July, 1899.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PRAYERS.

SUPPLY—ADMINISTRATION OF THE YUKON.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair I would like to call attention to a very peculiar despatch that has been sent from Ottawa to the "North British Daily Mail."

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Where is that published?

Mr. DAVIN. In England. You have heard, Mr. Speaker, of the press bureau which exists in Ottawa and which sends out to all parts of the country from, it is supposed, one of the departments, in fact, it is confidently so alleged. Some of the papers in the Northwest Territories have received letters from the gentleman in charge of this inclosing a leading article cracking up a certain honourable member of the Government and making out that everything is couleur de rose, that large expenditure is economy, in fact, that the obverse is the reverse, and so on. It will be remembered that, in regard to the motion that was made in this House by the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), and voted down, the "Times" newspaper, while speaking in the early part of the article, somewhat eulogistically of the Government of Canada took the view that it was a regrettable thing that the Government should not take the course of having a searching inquiry into the charges made, respecting the maladministration and corruption of every kind in the Yukon, by an independent commission. Any aspersion that was cast on the "Times" was without any foundation whatever, because, I have read to the House the reserved, the cautious telegram, well within the truth, that had been sent to the "Times" newspaper as to the proceedings that had taken place here. When I read that report, an hon. gentleman of the highest standing in this House flouted the "Times," and said that the "Times" was deceived by a slanderer, that the "Times" had been hoaxed, and so on. Not only that, but one of the newspapers has held me up to the vengeance of a large portion of the community of Canada because I showed so much reverence for the "Times," and actually went on to say that, if I dared endorse the "Times," that paper which did not approve of the Liberal Government would be found supporting it. I do not dwell upon the logic. The reason that I refer to it at all is that it shows the legitimate effect that has been produced by reading the criticism of the impartial, or, at all events, disinterested journal of the standing of the "Times"; it was the opinion, judging by the action of the "Times" for the last three years, of a friend of the present Government. An opinion from so influential an organ as the "Times" newspaper produces an effect, and in order to counteract it, we find another telegram sent from Ottawa, dated July 6th, in the following terms:—

Reuter's agent is requested to publish the following—

This is not a spontaneous act of Reuter's agent, sitting in the gallery. He is requested to publish the following. By whom could he be requested? Certainly he could not be requested by any person on this side of the House, or by a man in the street; he must have been requested by a Minister of the Crown, and what Minister of the Crown was it that requested him? The Minister of the Crown in whose department we find that bureau for the distribution of truthful political literature, which sends broadcast throughout this country leading articles—identically the same articles—to appear in a dozen or more papers professing to be the opinion of the locality, but conceived, written, composed and gotten up here in Ottawa. This, therefore must be the source of the suggestion to Reuter's agency. Here is what was suggested:

The "Times" editorial references to Sir Hibbert Tupper's motion for further investigation into the administration of the Yukon have caused some surprise in Canada.

I do not think they caused any surprise. Everybody who read them endorsed them. They produced an effect in Canada, and the reason they produced such an effect was because it was a judgment of a perfectly disinterested man. The editor of the "Times," because that is the man writing the leading article, is not interested in our politics. It is of no consequence to him whether the Conservative party in Canada are in opposition or in power, or whether the Liberal party are in opposition or in power. It was, therefore, the deliberate opinion not only of a man perfectly disinterested, but of a man perfectly informed, because, not only had he before him all that had taken place in this House, but he had before him the correspondence of one of the most enlightened journalists living, that is the colonial editor of the "Times," Miss Shaw.

Mr. CHARLTON. I would suggest to the hon. gentleman that he read the article through so that we can get the thread of it, and make his comments afterwards. These comments, interspersed through the reading, throw one off, and we are not able to follow the thread of the article.

Mr. DAVIN. I would not for the world not oblige the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton). I will read it through and then comment on it.

Ottawa, 6th July.

Reuter's agent is requested to publish the following:—The "Times" editorial references to Sir Hibbert Tupper's motion for further investigation into the administration of the Yukon have caused some surprise in Canada. The facts are as follows:—The motion was very largely a repetition of Sir Hibbert Tupper's charges made two months ago. Most of these charges referred to Commissioner Ogilvie, and an investigation was held. Part of the evidence and of the report had been received at the time the motion was made, and the remainder was on its way. The motion made by Sir Hibbert Tupper was one of want of confidence and as an amendment to going into Supply, in order, presumably, to prevent any amendment. No personal charges were made against any member of the Government, but Mr. Sifton, the Minister of the Interior, was charged with favouritism and partiality in granting licenses. These charges professed to be based upon an official return which the Government brought down, which was quoted as proving the charge. Mr. Sifton replied, and read the return, which proved the facts to be directly contrary to the allegations in the resolution. Sir Hibbert Tupper was compelled publicly to admit that these charges were without foundation. Mr. Sifton then challenged Sir Hibbert Tupper to make a personal charge, and declared that an immediate investigation would be ordered if such charges were made. The challenge was refused. The resolution also embraced charges of malfeasance against Judge Dugas's violating the constitutional rule requiring the examination of charges against judges to be made in the Superior Courts. The Government opposed the resolution on grounds that its most serious statements were admitted to be false, that it was impossible to refer the charges against a judge to a commission and ignore the practice long constitutional usage provided, that only part of the evidence taken and of the report made by Mr. Ogilvie had been received, and that until it was shown that the investigation had not been thorough it would be absurd to order another. The Government's reply was generally considered satisfactory, and only 29 Conservative members voted for the resolution. Sir Wilfrid Laurier announced that if, when Mr. Ogilvie's report was received, it did not appear thorough and complete a further investigation would be held, and nothing left undone to bring all the facts to light.

Now, Mr. Speaker. I have read that, and I think my hon. friend from Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) will agree with me that it is a tissue of fabrications. There is hardly a sentence there in regard to which any man within my hearing would not be ready to say: Well, that is not true. What is the meaning of that? What is the meaning of somebody in the interest of the Government, some member of the Government presumably; what is the meaning of that man suggesting to Reuter's agent here to send a telegram of this kind over to England? It is palpable that the blow of that disinterested and informed critic in the "Times" newspaper struck hard here and struck hard in England, and this is an attempt—the language I am about to use is the only language that will describe it—this is an attempt to throw dust in the eyes of the people of England.

Mr. McGREGOR. I am afraid the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) is trying to do that with us; wasting our valuable time.

Mr. DAVIN. My hon. friend (Mr. McGregor) thinks I am trying to throw dust in his eyes. It would be superfluous, because so much dust is there already that he is purblind. We might draw a mountain into this Chamber, and if that mountain was in any way opposed to the present Government, the hon. gentleman (Mr. McGregor) would put on his spectacles, he would take a microscope or a telescope and look at it, or he would use both, and then say that it was nothing but a mole hill.

Mr. McGREGOR. That is not smart.

Mr. DAVIN. The despatch says:

The "Times" editorial references to Sir Hibbert Tupper's motion for further investigation into the administration of the Yukon have caused some surprise in Canada.

They caused no surprise in Canada. Caused surprise in Canada! when you find three members of the Ministerial side voting against the Government and in favour of the motion of the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper). Fancy such a statement as that being sent to England; when the "Times" says there should have been an impartial inquiry by an authoritative body and by a body that the public would have confidence in. I cannot go into matters that would bear on this at the present moment, but, Sir, we have plenty of evidence here of what a farce it would be to refer an inquiry of that kind to a committee of this House. There would be no use in doing it. We have plenty of evidence here of how useless that would be; the evidence is ringing in our ears at this moment. Now mark this, Mr. Speaker. The facts are as follows:—

The motion was very largely a repetition of Sir Hibbert Tupper's charges made two months ago. And, they were very properly a repetition. What was said when the member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) referred to these matters two months before? It was said: that he had not the courage of his convictions, that he would not pledge his personal honour or his position. Then the hon. member (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) comes and says: "Very well, I will accept that challenge, and I will pledge my position and my personal honour; and he makes charges and he fulfils the conditions, and then the Government try to quibble out of it."

Most of these charges referred to Commissioner Ogilvie.

That is not true. Most of the charges referred to the management of his department in the Yukon by the Minister of the Interior. That is what the charges referred to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Does it not seem from the context that the word "were" is omitted there: "most of the charges were referred to Commissioner Ogilvie."

Mr. DAVIN. Well I will accept that if you wish.

—and an investigation was held. Part of the evidence and of the report had been received at the time the motion was made and the remainder was on its way. The motion was made by Sir Hibbert Tupper one of want of confidence and as an amendment to going into Supply, in order, presumably, to prevent any amendment. No personal charges were made against any member of the Government, but Mr. Sifton, the Minister of the Interior, was charged with favouritism and partiality in granting licenses.

He was charged with favouritism, with incompetence, with partiality in granting licenses, and there were special cases mentioned in regard to these licenses, cases that were so near the Minister, that were so close to the Minister, that a man of spirit would not have hesitated for a minute but would have said: We must have an inquiry; that is, if he felt conscious that the inquiry would remove the cloud that had settled with such darkness upon him and his department.

These charges professed to be based upon an official return the Government had brought down, which was quoted as proving the charge.

They were not all based on it, but to some extent they were based on it. The reliance that was placed upon the return was to show, that the report of Mr. Ogilvie confirmed all the charges that had been made, who complained that the commission that was given to him was quite inadequate for the purpose of the inquiry. Could anything be a better or stronger argument in the mouth of a man moving for a judicial inquiry, than to quote the language of the Commissioner who had been chosen by the Government of the day in which he says: Unfortunately my commission is inadequate: I am not able to make a thorough inquiry that I would like to make, and further powers should be given. Mr. Speaker, I want to call your attention to this—

Mr. Sifton replied, and read the Return, which proved the facts to be directly contrary to the allegations in the resolution.

Of course this is a palpable falsehood ; there is no truth in any form in it. It is altogether untrue, and that is all that need be said as to that. What was done—and of course I am only able to describe it—what was done was to make a special-pleading reply ; what was done was to avoid the real issue by raising trifling issues.

Sir Hibbert Tupper was compelled publicly to admit that these charges were without foundation.

Utterly untrue again. Not only did that hon member (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) not admit anything of the kind, but he reiterated the charges in another place, and pointed out how completely the Minister of the Interior had failed to touch them in his defence. And here in this House, when in regard to what was a minor charge, a slight inaccuracy not amounting to more than a verbal inaccuracy was brought forward, and he was asked by the Postmaster General what he would do if he had to formulate the charges again, the member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) took the official documents and showed that the facts actually bore out in substance every charge that was in the indictment. This statement in Reuter's despatch is therefore a pure fabrication.

Mr. Sifton then challenged Sir Hibbert Tupper to make a personal charge and declared that an immediate investigation would be ordered if such charges were made.

Well, Sir, when the hon. member for Pictou made his original charge, he was told that if he pledged his honour and his position, the charges would be inquired into. He came and did it, and then they said : "We thought you would make a personal charge against a member of the Government." It is not enough to point out that Major Walsh did this, that, and the other ; it is not enough to point out that your servants up there have been plundering the Government and the public ; it is not enough to point out that there has been the grossest maladministration and corruption in that district ; it is not enough to make 50 or 60 charges of the gravest sort. They say, "you have not pledged your position and your honour ;" and when the hon. member for Pictou comes and says, "I will forfeit my position in Parliament and my right to any position in the Government of Canada if I cannot establish these charges, the answer is, "Oh, can't you make a personal charge against myself ? If you do, we will send it to a committee of this House." What would be the use of sending it to a committee of this House ? If you did so, you would have one of the most lamentable spectacles which could be presented to a free people ; you would have every lawyer on the Government side using every means he could devise to burk inquiry. As I once said once before—it is a strong phrase—it would be like going to law with the devil in the court of hell.

The challenge was refused. The resolution also embraced charges of malfeasance against Judge Dugas's violating the constitutional rule requiring the examination of charges against judges to be made in the Superior Courts.

There were charges made against Judge Dugas ; and what has happened since ? You, Sir, as a reader of the French press, are familiar with what appears in those papers, and you know that Judge Dugas has actually written over his own signature, saying that he has been doing the very things which the hon. member for Pictou charged him with. We showed in that debate that there was no such constitutional rule as is here referred to. I quoted the Prime Minister's own language at the time the then member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) now the Minister of Public Works, made charges of the grossest kind against Judge Bossé and others ; and when I cited the constitutional rule in this House, the hon. member who answered me was the present Prime Minister, and he declared in the broadest terms that we could make any charges in this House against whomsoever. The constitutional rule refers to charges looking to the impeachment or removal of a judge. But to suppose that a judge, no matter to what court he belongs or how high his position is, can break the law and do what is wrong, be false to his position, and that a member of this High Court of Parliament cannot mention it, is preposterous. Of course, the proper place to make charges of the kind I mention is in this House.

The Government opposed the resolution on grounds that its most serious statements were admitted to be false—

There is an utter falsehood. Who admitted that a single serious statement in the resolution was false ? Nobody. To this hour every man on this side of the House, aye, and three men belonging to the other side, and hundreds of Liberals throughout the country, say these are charges that have not been properly inquired into :

—that it was impossible to refer the charges against a judge to a commission, and ignore the practise long constitutional usage provided—

The charge against Judge Dugas was only one detail in that long indictment——that only part of the evidence taken and of the report made by Mr. Ogilvie had been received, and that until it was shown that the investigation had not been thorough it would be absurd to order another.

The answer to that is this, that Mr. Ogilvie himself tells us that it is impossible that his inquiry can be final ; and when Mr. Ogilvie himself tells us that by the very terms of his commission he cannot make a thorough inquiry then it is wholly unnecessary to wait for the second instalment of his report.

The Government's reply was generally considered satisfactory, and only twenty-nine Conservative members voted for the resolution.

Is there a great point in that? We know very well that there are times when a vote is taken in this House which will affect both sides of the House, and when a larger number of members belonging to one side will be away than at another time. There is nothing in that. The real point is that in addition to these twenty-nine Conservatives—in addition to every Conservative in the House—three Liberal members voted for the resolution, and those three Liberal members were from the west, from those portions of the country where men are in touch with what has been going on in the Yukon. What is the significance of their so voting? We say these three members will go a great way in swallowing what comes from the Treasury benches, and we may be quite certain it was not for love of the bright eyes of the Conservative party that they voted with us on that occasion. The real reason why they voted that way was this: They represent by that vote hundreds and hundreds of Liberals in their constituencies, and they dare not go back to seek election if they had to stand on the hustings and say, "We refused an inquiry into those charges which the people of this country know should be thoroughly investigated."

Sir Wilfrid Laurier announced that if when Mr. Ogilvie's report was received, it did not appear thorough and complete, a further investigation would be held, and nothing left undone to bring all the facts to light.

Even in England to-day a statement like that about my right hon. friend must certainly sound amusing; because in England they must understand, though not so well as we do here, what the soft and sunny smiles and the gentle words and promises of my right hon. friend amount to. Suppose this meant that we were to have an inquiry. Is it not a monstrous thing to have said that if the second instalment of Mr. Ogilvie's report is not a satisfactory and thorough one, then we will have another inquiry. Is not that a perfect insult to the intelligence of Parliament and the intelligence of the people of Canada, in the face of the fact that Mr. Ogilvie himself stated that he could not possibly make a thorough inquiry? The evidence shows that from beginning to end—and I think my hon. friend from Norfolk will agree with me—this telegram made by Reuter's agent here, at the suggestion no doubt of a Minister of the Crown, is not merely a tissue of fabrications, but so absurd that it has only to be read to be laughed at. This is a very serious matter because not merely have this Government committed political crimes of a magnitude and number unequalled in the history of Governments in Canada, but they have reduced to a system the manufacture of public opinion, and when the people are called on to express their opinion by electing a representative to this House, this Government put their forefinger and thumb on the jugular of the political liberty of Canada and deify the threshing machine. You must have read that in Rome the Temple of Fame was placed behind the Temple of Virtue. That was to indicate to the young Roman that in order to arrive at the Temple of Fame he must pass through the Temple of Virtue.

Mr. MCGREGOR. What would be your choice?

Mr. DAVIN. I did not catch what the hon. gentleman said, but I know that he is not interested because into the Temple of Fame or the Temple of Virtue he will never enter. The Temple of Fame was so placed in order to indicate to the young Roman that it was only by good service to the commonwealth and noble deeds he could enter it. But to-day we find that the hierarchy of the party opposite have placed before the Temple of Fame the threshing machine, and the young Liberal is taught to-day that if he desires to enter the high court of Parliament, he must hug the machine. A highly paid missionary of this Government, whom we have sent across the Atlantic to represent us, has given this memorable advice to the candidates of the party opposite for parliamentary honours: You are to hug the Threshing Machine.

Serious as is the individual case of wrongdoing to which I have referred, what it indicates is still more serious, namely, that in Ottawa we have a systematic machine for the manufacture of public opinion here and which actually dares, by misrepresentation, false statements and wholesale fabrication, to also manufacture public opinion in England too.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). I am much surprised that no hon. gentleman on the Treasury benches has risen to meet the formidable indictment preferred by the hon. member for West Assinibola (Mr. Davin). It will be impossible to place on record more completely and thoroughly the deplorable position in which the Government of Canada finds itself. It is an admission on the part of the Government of Canada that they occupy such a position in the presence of the English public as to oblige them to resort to the fabrication of lying telegrams for the purpose of changing English public opinion. My hon. friend (Mr. Davin) has charged distinctly that the Reuter's agency has been made use of in this city to send the message which he read to the House, and which I do not hesitate to say has more palpable falsehoods condensed in it than it is possible to conceive could be placed in a similar number of lines. Reuter protected himself by not sending this message as a Reuter's telegram but by saying he had been requested to send it. It was sent for the purpose of counteracting the action of one of the strongest friends and supporters in Great Britain of this Government, the London "Times," which has given this Government every possible assistance, as it is its custom to give to the Governments of the day. The "Times" deplored the fact that the Government of Canada had allowed the name of Canada to be tarnished throughout three continents by voting down the reference of these charges to a judicial and independent commission. The Government found their position so utterly indefensible that they dared not consent to the appointment of an independent commission, but referred the charges for investigation to a dependent official of their own and a relative of the Minister mainly responsible. The "Times" found it impossible to endorse such a course and gave its imprimatur, and a very important imprimatur it was, to the declaration that the Government had failed in what it owed to itself and to Canada, when, after having challenged any member of this House to formulate charges on his personal responsibility and after having voted down the first motion for reference to a commission on the ground that no charge had been made on such a personal responsibility, they subsequently, even after one of the leading members of this House made the charges and declared his readiness to establish them before a judicial commission and staked his own seat in this House and position in the country upon his ability to establish the charges he had made, still voted down any reference to an independent commission. They got their supporters brought up to vote for the first proposition. And then, Sir, when they are taken at their word, and challenged on the floor of this House by an independent member who staked his position in this House and in this country upon his ability to prove these charges, they fell back upon the most paltry, the most insignificant, the most contemptible pretenses as reasons for asking their friends to vote down that proposition. But they could not get them to do it. Three gentlemen, supporters of the Government, left their ranks and voted with the solid Opposition. They talk of 29 members only supporting this resolution. Why, Sir, the man who induced Reuter to send such a telegram, by the payment, as I believe, of the public money of this country—I have not a doubt about it—knows and every person knows that a more monstrous policy could not be uttered than that only 29 members of the Conservative party could be found to vote for that resolution. They challenged two gentlemen as having refused to vote for it, and both of them declared that they were unaware that the Government intended to force the question to an issue that night, and, wishing to speak upon it, and expecting an adjournment, they had left the House. They were confronted with the fact, as everybody knows, that every Conservative sitting on these benches—not only the solid Conservative party, but those who claim to be independent Conservatives—voted, every man of them who was in this House, solidly in favour of this resolution, while every Conservative who was out of the House would have been glad to vote for it. Why, you might as well tell us that because the Government, at a late hour last night could muster only 33 votes in their support upon an important question, therefore they had only 33 men to sustain them in this House. They know that that would be as base a falsehood as men could utter. And yet this monstrous fabrication, this monstrous lie is attempted to be choked down the throat of the intelligent British public by this Government as a means of controverting the position the "Times" has taken and rehabilitating themselves in the opinion of the British people. I am glad to know that the British press, as I understand, have treated this telegram with the contempt it deserved; that, except the "North British Daily Mail," to which it was sent, not a single London paper has given it admission to its columns so completely transparent was this miserable attempt by a broken-down Government, convicted out of their own mouths and by their own actions of being unable to defend themselves here or anywhere.

Reuter's telegram has had a high character. The foundation of this great system of telegraphic communication throughout the world was laid by Baron Reuter, a gentleman of high character and high standing; and his energy and enterprise have made Reuter's telegram a great institution, not only in England and in America, but throughout the civilized world wherever telegrams go. But I remember the time, Sir, when, owing to just such acts as this, Dalziel's telegrams came to be known as Dalziel's lies, because Dalziel permitted their telegram system to be used as Reuter's agent has permitted Reuter's system to be used, not in the service of the public, but in the service of parties and individuals.

My hon. friend (Mr. Davin) has brought before this House a matter of the utmost importance. And if this Government had wished to convict themselves out of their own mouths of having no defence, they could not adopt a better course than to send these falsehoods for the purpose of imposing on the British public and leading them to suppose that they were not in that miserable broken-down, thoroughly defenceless position that they stand in before this House and before the people of this country.

And what about Judge Dugas? It is stated here that the Government could not permit that commission to be issued, because, under the Canadian system, Judge Dugas could only be tried by the Superior courts. Such a word was never uttered in this House; no man on the Treasury benches was found daring enough to make a statement so utterly at variance with the facts.

Judges in this country are not tried by the Superior Courts, and everybody knows it. When a judge is to be tried at all, he must be tried by Parliament; he is impeached on the floor of this House and here he stands his trial, and not before the courts, as this lying telegram in the defence of this Government seeks to make the public believe. The flimsy, futile arguments the Government gave to show that they could not permit the commission were brushed away as a mass of cobwebs. What was their defence? First, that the Government could not be put on trial before judges. And, by the way, this telegram says there was no charge against any member of the Government; yet the Minister of the Interior defends himself on the ground that the accusation was a proposal to impeach the Government and bring them before a judicial bar to be dealt with. That was an utterly preposterous statement. No one ever proposed that this judicial commission should deal with the Government of Canada. That commission was moved for for the purpose of obtaining reliable, independent testimony, to be reported to this House, where the Government would have to stand their trial. And so the whole fabric that the First Minister proposed as ground upon which his friends could stand in voting down this resolution were shown to be an utterly idle fallacy that no rational man would for a moment entertain. As I say, this telegram would have the British public believe that there were no charges against the Government. Why, three Ministers had grave charges preferred against them, by an hon. member of this House, who staked his seat in this House and his character in the country upon his ability to prove the accusation that these three Ministers had been guilty of gross maladministration of their departments:—First, the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) whose incapacity, whose neglect, whose maladministration had led to a carnival of corruption that had disgraced Canada throughout the world; next, the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) who was charged with utter maladministration of his department; and next, the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) who was charged with having committed a gross fraud against Canadian and British rights by permitting a vessel worth $60,000 to be entered in the customs at a value of $10,000 and to come into competition with British vessels. Here were three Ministers charged with grave maladministration, and yet this lying telegram undertakes to say that no Minister was charged. The Minister of the Interior took up the time of this House and asked this House to regard it as a matter of great moment that a typewriter had written "six" instead of "eight." That was one of the most substantial grounds that the Government were able to present to this House when they called upon their followers to vote down the resolution for that commission. Fortunately for the character of the Liberal party, three men were found of sufficient independence to say to the Government: After your solemn pledge that, if it were found that Mr. Ogilvie's commission was insufficient, you would issue a judicial commission to investigate these charges, and after Mr. Ogilvie himself has declared in his own court that he was utterly incapable of doing justice to this subject, and has asked for enlarged powers, we cannot stand by you, but demand that you shall carry out the declaration upon which you obtained our votes on a previous occasion.

There were three independent members left that side of the House, and with a solid opposition, fortified by three members supporting the Government, this lying declaration is sent to England that only 29 Conservatives voted for the motion, without the slightest reference to the action of the three Liberal members associated with them. Yet they knew there was not a Conservative member in this House of Commons that would not have been glad and proud to record his vote, if the Government, knowing their weakness, feeling their inability to sustain this debate, had not forced this measure through at an early hour in the morning in the absence of the great body of the members of this House. I say my hon. friend has done a service to Canada, and I feel it right to call the attention of that great institution of Reuter's telegraphic communication throughout the world to the fact that their reputation will be compromised if their agents permit Cabinet Ministers or anybody else, however high and influential, to induce them, by the payment of public money, as I believe was done in this case, to send such a tissue of misrepresentations across the water, because they feel that otherwise there will be but one sentiment in the British public, and that is that this Government stands in such an utterly indefensible position that it has no other means of protecting itself. I do not hesitate to say, Sir, that they were wise in their day, ruinous as it is to their own character, ruinous as it is to the character of Canada, for them to have voted down this independent commission. They were confronted with the horns of this dilemma: If they granted the commission, the Government would be driven out of power; proof would have been given of the most dastardly and most widespread corruption so brought home to the Government themselves that they would have been driven out of power, and they knew it. Therefore, they either had to resist that commission, or take the consequences of being driven from the Treasury benches.

Now, Sir, the Minister of the Interior put forth a statement that a mistake had been made in this long indictment respecting the granting of leases in the Yukon. What did he tell this House? He pretended to read from a report, but he read what was not in the report. He read the names of the parties that the member for Pictou had indicated as the late partners, if not the present partners, of the Minister of the Interior, and he endeavoured to lead the public to believe that the late partners, with all kinds of aliases, with all kinds of alibis—one day so and so was at Brandon, another day so and so was at Vancouver, another day so and so was at Ottawa—to lead the public to believe they were different parties who had entered their names for a large number of dredging leases in the Yukon, and he undertook to read from this report "granted, none." There is no such word in the report. He added a word which does not exist there. What took place was this: They were allowed to enter their names for leases, and I believe to-day that were this investigation held, those men would stand in the position of having put in their claim wherever they wanted a lease, for the purpose of hawking them about the country, as they had been in the habit of doing the last two years, and then do as they did in this case, which I have under my hand, which the Minister of the Interior seems strangely to have overlooked: A. E. Philp, Klondike, another alias; because this is the same as the A. E. Philp of Brandon, the same as the A. E. Philp of Vancouver; and yet here we find their names entered for a number of those leases, names of people who were concealed under those names. Then they could hawk them about and give, as the member for Pictou was prepared to prove they had given, declarations that the Minister of the Interior and Major Walsh were both interested in these leases, for the purpose of selling them. That was the position. And when they could make a sale, as they evidently did, of these 20 miles in one of the richest gold rivers in the world, though the Minister of the Interior found it convenient to declare that not a lease had been issued to one of these people, I believe all these leases would have been given wherever they could trade them off, as they were able to trade this one off. The member for Pictou pledged himself to prove:

That the said Philp, heretofore a partner of the said Minister, represented in writing that he was engaged in a dredging venture in the Yukon—

20 miles of the richest gold river in the world.

—and in endeavouring to induce another to join him, represented in writing that Mr. Sifton, the said Minister, and Major Walsh, were also interested with him, but their names did not appear as he wrote "for obvious reasons."

Is that a charge that ought to have been voted down? Is a proposal to investigate it by somebody besides Mr. Sifton's uncle, one that ought to have been voted down, and the parties prevented from bringing their proof? Why, the hon. gentleman knew that their colleague would have been driven ignominiously from the seat he occupies if that evidence was established and the proof was given that the member for Pictou had pledged himself to give. And yet the right hon. gentleman declared that his party would stand by the Minister of the Interior, declared that he was an admirable Minister, and all that was necessary to cause him to be hugged as the West Elgin machine was invited to be hugged, was for Conservative members to attack him. That is the way in which the First Minister defended his colleague. He said, Those attacks by his opponents have so endeared himself to us that we clasp him to our bosoms, just as Mr. Preston urged Mr. Macnish, whom he had succeeded in electing for West Elgin, to hug the electoral machine by which he had secured his election. And this page, as I say, the Minister of the Interior held in his hand when he declared that not a lease had been issued to one of these parties that were formerly connected with him. Why, he had these words under his hand: A. E. Philp, Klondike, 20 miles on the Klondike River, $2,000 paid. And so the rest would have been filled up in the same way provided that, by hawking them around the country, this former if not present partner of the Minister of the Interior, could have got the parties to join him in the venture. They had better read the "Free Press" of three days ago, stating that a gentleman is suing Philp for $4,000 for having induced him to go in with him for the purpose of taking up one of those leases, and he now demands this sum for his services. I say that my hon. friend the member for West Assiniboia has done a service to the country by bringing to the light of day this miserable, unworthy attempt of a helpless broken down Government to sustain itself in the presence of the British public. I say he has done a service to the Reuter telegraph agents and to every other telegraph agent in the world that operates in Canada; he has shown these gentlemen how dangerous it will be even at the suggestion of a Minister of the Crown, backed with what influences they have, to accept a message, saying, "We have been requested." I must do the Reuters' agent the justice to say that he had undoubtedly refused to send this lying message except as stated, at the request of the party who presented it to him. I say again that we owe our thanks to the member for Assiniboia for dragging this occurrence to the light, and exposing it in the terse manner he has done in order to awaken the slumbering conscience of the people of Canada in regard to these dishonest and dishonourable means by which the Government are endeavouring to hoodwink not only the people of Canada, but the people of the mother country as well.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). Mr. Speaker, I think the helpless and broken-down Government, if they are helpless and broken down, would ask no better friend than the hon. leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper). When an hon. gentleman, in his position, will persist in occupying—I will not say wasting the time of the House—with a repetition of charges which have been brought forward twice at enormous length, twice discussed, twice refuted, twice disposed of and voted down by an overwhelming majority in this House, when, in the very last days of the session he will persist in repeating these charges, I am bound to say that he could give very few better illustrations of the fact that, so long as he continues to be the leader of Her Majesty's loyal Opposition, so long will the helpless broken down Government continue to occupy these benches. I had not the pleasure of being present at the last discussion of these charges, but I was present at the first. I was a patient victim of the seven-hour speech delivered by the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), and I heard not merely his charges—charges, perhaps, is not the proper word to use—I heard not merely his rambling and incoherent assertions, but I heard the reply of the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), and if it will gratify the hon. gentleman opposite (Sir Charles Tupper), I can tell him that I think no hon. member ever rendered a greater service to another than did the hon. member for Pictou in the attack which he made on the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton). And I may add for the further information of the hon. gentleman that if he chose to consult his own supporters behind him, he would find that a large percentage of them would entertain the opinion that I do as to the contrast presented by the hon. member for Pictou and the hon. Minister of the Interior.

Mr. COCHRANE. Not one.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I am afraid the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cochrane) speaks for himself only. As I say I did not hear the last effort in which, I believe, the hon. member for Pictou surpassed himself in the ratio of nine hours to seven, but I did peruse the charges themselves, and I have to say this to the hon. gentleman that I, as a member of the House of Commons, utterly and entirely repudiate the doctrine that this House of Commons is not the place wherein to try charges preferred against the Government of Canada. We are here, Sir, by right of the support we obtain from the hon. members of this House, and it is a gross libel, a gross slander on the Parliament of Canada to say, as the hon. leader of the Opposition and his friends have insinuated, that they can obtain no justice from a select committee of this House, a committee on which they have themselves

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

the right of having something like two-fifths of the whole membership. What did we do under similar circumstances? We were not afraid to go before committees of this House when we had charges to prefer. What did Mr. Huntington do when he had occasion to impeach the hon. gentleman's colleagues, and the hon. gentleman himself for the gross scandals which initiated the first attempt to construct the Canadian Pacific Railway? Did he ask for a judicial commission? Was he unwilling to trust his fate to a committee of the House, although he knew that the majority of the members of that committee would necessarily be adverse to him? Mr. Huntington came forward, made his charges specifically, staked his reputation on them and proposed to investigate them before a committee of the House. What did our present hon. Speaker do under somewhat similar circumstances? Did he ask for a judicial commission? No, he was perfectly willing to go before a committee of the House to support and maintain the charges that he had made. What did Mr. Lister propose to do when he brought certain charges against another member of the late Government? Was he afraid? Did he cower at the thought of appearing before a committee of the House, although it was composed of a majority of hostile members? What did the hon. gentleman's friends do on that occasion? They refused to allow these charges to be tried either in the case of Sir James Edgar or Mr. Lister. The hon. gentleman tells us that it was with difficulty that our supporters were brought up to the mark to vote down these charges. There was a difference between our supporters and the supporters of the hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman will not deny that but a small proportion of his supporters were brought up to the mark to support these charges. This was not a snap vote; this was the conclusion of a formal charge preferred by a prominent member of the Opposition, the hon. member for Pictou, after days and days of discussion and the hon. gentleman's friends had a perfect right and were perfectly able to have appeared in the House and voted in support of these charges if they had been so disposed to do. I think it is worse than useless, after these charges have been twice repeated and twice disposed of, and that it is contrary to the rules of debate, for the hon. gentleman to come forward now and repeat all these allegations which have been made and refuted. I will say one thing, as the hon. gentleman appears to think that a charge is possible to be brought against the hon. Minister of the Interior. The hon. gentleman says that the hon. member for Pictou made a charge that the hon. Minister of the Interior was interested in the disposal of certain mines. Does the hon. leader of the Opposition say that he means to substantiate such a charge?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I say that the hon. member for Pictou submitted to the House that he was prepared to prove that the late partner of the hon. Minister of the Interior, who had received a lease of twenty miles of the Klondike River, had, in writing, declared that the Minister of the Interior and Major Walsh were both interested with him, and that writing can be produced.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. A very different thing, Sir. If the hon. gentleman himself, or the hon. member for Pictou will rise in his place and say that he is informed and believes that the hon. Minister of the Interior was interested in the sale, or the proceeds, of any mining location, he will receive at once every facility for the proof of his charges if he can prove them, as our friends proved their charges in the case of Sir Hector Langevin and in the case of others that I have mentioned before a committee of this House.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman had better go up-stairs; he had better spend an hour up-stairs.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The very last committee they asked for, the very last committee they obtained. If hon. gentlemen have any confidence in any charges they can make they will rise in their places; they will not shelter themselves behind anonymous communications—the authors of which they dare not give, but they will come forward and ask for a committee of the House, and if they do so they will have a committee of the House at once. They are in the full face of day; the whole press of Canada is standing by, and they will have an opportunity of showing on what substantial grounds they prefer charges against members of the Government. But if they will not do that, for very shame, they should hold their peace. It is not creditable to this House, or to the records of Parliament, that the hon. gentleman himself, or the hon. member for Pictou should rise in this House and shelter themselves behind hearsay statements and anonymous communications. Their duty is, if they think these charges are true, to say so and to ask for a committee of investigation. They will get full justice; they will have every opportunity; they will have an opportunity to summon witnesses from the ends of the earth, as they have done on more than one occasion; they will have all the publicity that they desire; they will have the press beside them, and if there has been wrong-doing, I will stand beside hon. gentlemen in punishing wrong-doing as quickly as any other hon. member of this House. I deprecate this idle and senseless waste of time, this repetition of charges that have been preferred, that have been formally adjudicated upon by this House. There is one way known to English history, known to constitutional usage, and there is a way sanctioned by our practice and precedents in this House, and it is to do as I have said the hon. member for Huntingdon did, as Sir James Edgar and Mr. Lister were prepared to do, as was done by Mr. Tarte, in the case of those inquiries which culminated in the expulsion of Sir Hector Langevin from public life, make these charges, ask for a committee to investigate them, and if they do so they will have every possible publicity and the press and the public will be able to judge between the accuser and the accused.

Mr. GEO. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) The hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) seems, with a curious abnegation of the intelligence that he generally shows to have steered entirely clear of the question that my hon. friend from West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) brought up. I have no doubt that he saw the point, I have no doubt that he listened intently as it was being developed by both gentlemen who have spoken, and when he rose to his feet he may have had some faint idea of alluding to it, but he has been entirely successful in sitting down after a fifteen-minute speech without one single sentence of allusion to the question which was brought up. The hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) congratulates himself that he and his party have a very steady and very valuable friend in the person of the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper). I am quite willing to join my congratulations with the hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright). I hope he may long continue to have such a friend, and so long as the sins of the hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) himself, and of his colleagues appeal to high Heaven and to an honest electorate as they do, I hope we shall have the leader of the Opposition in his place to point them out and to keep these hon. gentlemen, at least, in remembrance of them—Lest they forget, lest they forget. Well, Sir, there is another great friend also to one of the special members of the Government. As the leader of the Opposition is a great friend in a sort of wholesale way to the Government, so the member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) is a special friend to the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton). And my hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright) gives his congratulations to the member for Pictou because of the great friendship evinced in his attack upon the Minister. I hope he may long live to enjoy that kind of friendship as well. But Sir, I want to say to the hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) that the country will have a very different opinion on the charges made on the Yukon matter, and on the way the Government has met them; a little different view, I think, from what my friend himself takes, and I think my hon. friend and his colleagues will find it out before he is many years older.

The fact is that the hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) has within the last three years diligently, from day to day, from month to month, from year to year, been engaged in stripping from himself every vestige of the reputation which he formerly held in this country.

Mr. DAVIN. He is as naked as Adam was the day he was created.

Mr. FOSTER. At this moment he has pretty well succeeded in showing his utter nakedness in that respect to the people of this country.

Mr. DAVIN. He has not even a fig leaf.

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot congratulate a clever man, an old politician, a man of intelligence, I cannot congratulate him, very strongly, either on behalf of the public life of this country, or on behalf of the intelligence of this country, or on behalf of the hon. gentleman himself, on the success which has undoubtedly attended his efforts in that respect. Can the hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) name to this House a single position that he took during the seventeen years he was in Opposition; can he name to me a single position that he took on great points of policy during that time, that within three short years he has not entirely traversed, repudiated, and thrown from himself. I may tell the hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright), and he can have that to take with him day and night if it is any solace: that the solid-minded, reputable people of this country are looking at him this day with a good deal of pity, and from time to time it is being mingled with something which is not so elevating and so refreshing for a public man as pity is. Why, the hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) will recognize himself in this picture which I show him; a remarkable good picture; not quite as jovial as he appeared in the edition of the Bytown Coons as from week to week they delighted the people of this country and provoked good-natured humour, and did more—provoked more deep conviction than possibly anything else that has appeared in that line in this country. "I cannot sing the old songs." How true is it? And with what infinite pity we look upon the countenance of my hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright) as he sits tranquilly and peaceably before us. With what infinite pity we look upon him and sympathize with him, that his good old, strong, well-modulated and well-pitched songs of eight or ten years ago have entirely passed into the limbo of the forgotten; and he can never—yes, he can recall them, but he can never honestly sing them again. What did he say just five years ago when he struck exactly that characteristic attitude which we see in the picture here? What did he say in March, 1894—and the same thing, but stronger, he said down to June, 1896:

Sir, Canada had no business, and never had, to spend thirty-six millions or thirty-seven millions a year. It is a monstrous thing, properly understood, wholly apart from the amount of real taxation paid by us, that an expenditure of thirty-six millions or thirty-seven millions a year should be saddled on 5,000,000 of people in the position of the people of Canada.

That was one of the old songs; my hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright) cannot sing it to-day. He, to-day, has to dance to the nimble jig of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte). He, to-day, has to model his aged limbs in motion to the agile member who represents the province of New Brunswick in that Ministry. The old songs! Oh, no; they cannot be sung by my hon. friend. It is the new, and alien, and high-pitched tunes of my hon. friend, which he, parrot-like, has to sing after and to the accompaniment of his more ambitious and more enterprising, and more daring, and I am bound to say, less scrupulous colleagues in the Government, of which he is not at the present moment by any means an important member.

Well, Sir, to come back to the question. They, if you will make charges, they will give you a committee. You had committees and you have held investigations before, and every man in this country knows, that when Sir John Thompson sat with that committee on the Langevin charges, as they were called, there never was a fairer judicial tribunal in this country than Sir John Thompson gave to these gentlemen, and never a more unfettered and untrammelled access to all the evidence and all the information in the case.

Mr. BERGERON. Their own lawyer was paid by the Government.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, their own lawyers were provided and paid by the Government. "No commissions," says the hon. gentlemen opposite. Why, the Caron charges were carried on before a commission, as my hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright) knows right well. Nay, it does seem that this Government constantly is bound to try to, and to attain if possible, its ends by a crooked rather than by the straight way. This morning Reuter's telegram is read from a British paper. Reuter has the instinct of self-preservation well developed, and although Reuter succumbed to influence and to the pay of the telegram, Reuter tries to preserve itself by saying, that, in this case, "it is published by request." Well, if anything could damn the despatch in the eyes of intelligent reading men in the old country, that would. You might just as well try to convince men by setting before them an advertisement for Pears soap, or St. Jacob's Oil, or anything of that kind which is put in by request and paid for and does not voice the editorial sentiment. There may have been payment for this despatch or there may not, but this was published "by request," and the very end so ingeniously sought by the gentleman whom we have often seen and whom we shall see yet in this House; the very end sought by him was discounted by the fact that before the honourable Reuter would insert that telegram in that way, he prefaces it by saying: This is "put in by request," and we are not responsible for the truth or the falsity of it. Now, Sir, what appears in this? It appears that the same crooked means are taken by the Government to support themselves with public opinion in Great Britain; the very same crooked means by which they got into power in this country and are today keeping themselves in power. Will any gentleman who has an ounce of common sense in his brain—and I am going to except some gentlemen from that category—read that telegram as it was read here to-day, and having been seated in this House when these transactions were going on, will he say that was in any way a fair representation of what took place in this House?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, let him get up and produce his statement and argument, and show this House how it is a fair statement. Why, Sir, it is as unfair and garbled a statement as could possibly be manufactured without defeating its whole object, to convey absolute unverity and deception. Do you not know that the skilful prevaricator succeeds where the blunt one does not, and it is the skilful prevaricator whose hand is shown in that telegram, which by request was transmitted through Reuter's agency to the public press of Great Britain. But no man who values his reputation for common sense and veracity will attempt to show in this House that that is at all a fair representation of the facts with reference to these Yukon charges. Not one. If he did, he would soon find that a very large discount would be attached to it in the public mind. When these gentlemen are cornered, when there are charges made, and when the status, and prospects, and reputation of one of the most reputable gentlemen, who has been, and is to-day, in this House, is staked on the proving of those charges, these hon. gentlemen shelter themselves by saying that they are not going to abnegate their functions and transfer them to a royal commission—that they are not going to have a Government tried by royal commission. Some second-rate men did advance that argument in this House; but I never expected the Minister of Trade and Commerce would reiterate an argument of that kind. How does this House come to its conclusions? I am not going to say how it sometimes does come to its conclusions; but I am going to say, what no man will controvert, that this House ought to come to its conclusions on full and correct information; and what was the royal commission to do? Was it ever suggested in this House or in the country that the royal commission was to try the Ministers, judge the Ministers, apportion the penalty to the Ministers? Never once. That is what a court does in a judicial way; but the only and sole object of a judicial commission was to insure that neither party should have an advantage, but that a commission of cool, uninterested men should do—what? Not try the Government, but sift the facts and present them to the members of this House, so that on full, and impartial, and as perfect information as possible, this House could make up its mind whether the Ministry was culpable or not. Does any one object to that? No Ministry that feels confident of its strength, its standing and its purity, ought to object to a course of that kind, or to information being laid on the Table of this House by a commission of that kind. But that is what my hon. friend objects to; and the very fact that this statement appears by request in Reuter's telegrams shows that these hon. gentlemen feel the sting, and feel it keenly. They feel that the enlightened public opinion of Canada and of the world, as shadowed forth by the "Times," condemns them for not going as far as a Government that was well convinced of its innocence ought to go under the circumstances. They feel that the verdict is against them; it rankles in them; and so, by this crooked way, somebody high in the ministerial ranks by request sent this telegram to the British public—what for? To counteract that verdict and the impression, which they feel is being made against them, and which is voiced by the editorial in the "Times." And so this crooked, indirect, prevaricating method of putting themselves right before the British public throws a lurid light on the birth, the genesis, the nurture and the present maintenance of this Government. They were born in deception, and they know it. They went to the electoral community of this country for five years—to go no further back—before the time they took office, and they were either grossly ignorant of the state of feeling of this country, or they were deceiving the people of this country in order to get power. For what they have done is the exact opposite of what they declared they would do; what they have embraced is the exact opposite of what they denounced; what they now declare to be their policy and are carrying out, is the exact opposite of what they declared would be their policy. If there is any crooked way of doing a thing, this Government will do it in that way. If they want to make an extraordinary expenditure in the Yukon, through a tool and servant of one of the Ministers, they ignore the foundation of parliamentary appropriations that they shall have money granted before they spend it. They filch from honest votes for an illegal purpose money which was never granted to them, to put it into the pockets of Charleson, to send him west to operate, without a vote of Parliament; and they do it in the face of what? They do it in the face of two Acts of Parliament, passed under the supervision of the Ministers themselves, incorporating companies and granting them the franchise for building a telegraph line into the Yukon. They do it in the face of a correspondence in which a member of this House had a prominent part, but as to which he has not yet opened his mouth in this House, because he does not wish to condemn his friends; for he feels that he could not speak on that subject unless he did condemn them. They do it in the face of six months of a correspondence, persisted in and continued, which bore the imprimatur of the Government and of a member of the Government—which went further, which gave the secret and confidential assurance of one member of the Government that he was heart and soul with them, and that he would watch for them against a rival company in the field. In spite of all that, and up to the very time these negotiations were going on, this company, shielded by what they supposed was the good faith of the Government and of a particular Minister, went on with their work, organizing and getting their material ready. In the face of all that, this Charleson business was got up; and to-day we have in the Estimates an item of $400,000 for a telegraph line into the Yukon, not one cent of which ought to have been spent by this Government, and not one cent of which was necessary to have been spent. All the Government had to do was simply to recognize the franchise they had allowed to be granted, to carry out in good faith what they had pledged themselves to this company to do, and to demand, as a result of that, that preference should be given to Government telegrams into the Yukon, and they would have had all they wanted. Thus the people's half million dollars, which will be spent before this business is over, would have been kept in their pockets and every service of the country would have been as adequately carried on; but the Minister of Public Works would not have had his little cinch, and his dependents would not have had their greater cinch, and the Government would not have had its patronage to bestow, and, above all, the hard-earned money of the taxpayers would not have been squandered worse than uselessly, as it is being squandered to-day. But what can we do? The peculiar efforts of hon. gentlemen opposite must be taken into account. The Bourassian method is the specific basis of their action. But last night we had an explication of it from a hard-headed business man, who declared, in so many words, that, representing one county, it would be the height of impertinence for him to attempt to criticise any proposed expenditure within the limits of another man's county. Consequently, half a million dollars may be wasted in the Yukon, a million dollars may be spent on public works, given without tenders being called for, and given at a double price, but not a word must be said by an independent member, working on the Bourassian method. It is none of his business, because it is not spent within the precincts of his own county.

But there is still another development. These hon. gentlemen are going still further. Not content with the deception which is written on their brows, from first to last, in their political career for this last five or six years, they go still further. They have ruthlessly, with one sweep of the hand, taken away what has hitherto been the principle guiding the expenditure of public money in this country since confederation—the principle of contract with open and public competition and tender. To show how far they have gone, last night the hon. Minister of Finance did not dare, when bringing in a vote, to say what he was going to do with the money. Why? Because the master of the Administration was not present, and he did not know what the master of the Administration would choose to do when he came back, and he did not like to risk his position in the Government by attempting to declare its policy while the master of the Administration was absent. Was anything ever heard like that in this Parliament before? Take those supplementary Estimates, take the Estimates through and through. Some we have passed already and some we will have yet to come to, and I do not hesitate to say that they are redolent of that kind of corruption in the constituencies about which the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), in the old days, when he struck that heroic attitude with which we are all so familiar, and was singing the old songs, used the strongest and most vehement language as regards economical principles.

But that is not enough. The new Liberalism goes further. They have deceived, they will bribe and corrupt, and now they are stealing. This is a new phase. Now, the honest elector, who is impervious to the seduction of public works and private bribes, and who deposits his ballot as an honest elector, finds, when the ballots are counted, that his vote has been stolen from him by the enemy. There it lies in the black record that these hon. gentlemen have got to face in this country, in the West Elgin McNish confession. There it lies in lines which are every hour being written in blacker ink, in the committee of members of this House now sitting. The same practice that went on under the management of the local Liberals in West Elgin was continued under the Dominion Liberals in West Huron. One of the Liberal papers, in its buoyant joy when Mr. Holmes was elected, bowed down in lowly admiration before the wonderful genius and wonderful organizing power and the persuasive persistence of the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock), who was in the riding conducting the campaign. "Hug the machine." Let the old Liberalism give place to the new from this time forward. Now we have the Bourassian method adopted—the principle of limited liability as applied to members of Parliament, according to which every member is simply to be liable and responsible only what goes on in the precincts of his own county. They are a limited liability company. The Department of Public Works is a limited liability concern, and the hon. Finance Minister showed last night very clearly that he was only a limited liability. Yes, and the good old chorister, the singer of the good old songs (Sir Richard Cartwright) is himself but a sadly limited liability. They do that, and then what do they do? As though not content with deception, bribery, thievery of the poll boxes, they take the next and final step in their degradation, and reward by a fat salary the men who invented and run and are responsible for the machine. Where is Preston to-day? He is the man who, more than any other, built and ran the threshing machine in West Elgin? He did it, Sir, by his own admission. He did it in the mighty province of Ontario, and so gloried in it that when the news came that McNish was elected by means of the stolen ballots of honest men, he wrote, overflowing and over-bubbling with joy:

Dear Donald McNish,
St. Thomas, Ont.

Hearty congratulations. Sorry from the bottom of my heart that I cannot be with you to-night. To be supported by such a noble army of workers should make you the proudest man in Ontario.

The noble army of workers have been unmasked—partly, partly. By what? By the most abject confession a public man ever made—the confession made by McNish in West Elgin, a confession that will live in the annals of corruption and of hypocrisy on the part of the Liberal party in the province of Ontario.

"Noble band of workers." Capt. Sullivan was one. Duncan Boles was another, and who are the others? Their name is legion. McNish says that Smith and Preston sent these men into the constituency. I am innocent, he says, I did not know anything about it. All he did was to write out recommendations for every one of those persons who are implicated, and give them access to the places where they could work their fraudulent methods. McNish throws the onus on the men who were sent in by the organizers, Smith and Preston, the men who flooded his constituency with these people, who, as McNish acknowledges, personated, stole and manipulated the votes in the ballot boxes.

A noble army of workers. Shake hands with the boys.

Mr. DOMVILLE. And the girls.

Mr. FOSTER. I leave that to the hon. gentleman.

Shake hands with the boys, and hug the machine.

What for?

Auld Lang Syne.

It was not a new thing; it had been done before. I could understand that the thing would have quite a different aspect if it were something new, if it were entirely unprecedented. But that is not the case. When he thinks there is no danger, Preston says: "Hug them." Because they did it for the first time? No. "For Auld Lang Syne." If Preston had been that night with his boon companions, unbosoming himself to them in confidence, we can easily understand that something like a conversation of this kind would have taken place: Ah, boys; the threshing machine did well in this case. Ah, boys; how often have we done it before. Ah, boys; the mystic circle of hands joined, the loving cup and the chanting of Auld Lang Syne has gone on before in many constituencies—down in Cornwall, for instance, and in many others. For Auld Lang Syne, hug the same boys of the same old threshing machine. And where is Preston to-day? Taken hold of by these purists, given $3,000 a year and a roving commission and travelling expenses. Devlin was not treated so well, Devlin! He was an old-time supporter, but, on one occasion a little too frank; and he has to be satisfied with $2,000 a year and live in Ireland. But Preston, who hugged the machine that he made, who, for Auld Lang Syne, hugged the machine that had done its business often and often before—he is not confined to the Emerald Isle, but is free to go among the Galicians, to sail upon the beautiful blue Danube, to sweep down the lordly Rhine, and now and then, to show that even he can be pent up to take a row upon the Thames. The world is his field, and $3,000 a year, with the plaudits of a supporting Government and travelling expenses galore—all this for the maker and operator of the old threshing machine in this prosperous period of Liberalism. The McNish confession has come; the Holmes confession is still to come—but it will come—and if the light of day can be let into these other constituencies, the same things may be shown. For shame, Sir, that my hon. friend, who, of old times, stood in this House and in the country for honest principles and pure government and economical administration, should allow himself to repudiate all his principles, become a mere item in a limited liability company.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). Mr. Speaker, when the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin), who began this debate, commenced his address, I was at a loss to understand what possible purpose he could have in view. I had supposed that we had reached a stage of the session when there was a somewhat general understanding that we wished to push the business through as rapidly as possible; and why, in this morning session, when we had assembled with the intention of carrying on the immediate business of the House, the hon. gentleman should rise and enter upon a lengthy address upon the Yukon question was, at the beginning, one of those things that no fellow could understand. But after the hon. gentleman had concluded his address and the hon. leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) and the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster) had also addressed the House in the manner they have done, I think we could easily see the purport of it all. There has been no lack of opportunities to discuss the Yukon question, heaven knows well. We have had it hour after hour, day after day, week after week; and hon. gentlemen have, to their hearts' content, occupied the time of this House and filled the pages of "Hansard" until they have made that document almost a burden to those of future generations who may be tempted to read it. But, after two long discussions, initiated with speeches surpassing in length, I believe, anything ever known before in the history of the Parliament of Canada, and after the whole thing has been threshed out as fine as it could have been, even by the threshing machine that the hon. gentlemen are so much interested in, what do we find? They have made their appeal to Canada, they have made their appeal to the wide Empire, which they say has been stirred up on this question; and, after it all, they discovered that they had failed to make any impression upon the public opinion of Canada or the public opinion of Great Britain; and so they come back again with the hope that by some further talk, when the House is tired and weary of the whole subject, they may possibly mislead some people whom they have failed to mislead in the former discussions. Such, and such alone, can be the purpose of hon. gentlemen.

May I say a word or two as to the side issues introduced by the hon. member for York? He went at some length into the question of the Estimates. My hon. friend has rather anticipated the discussion. If he wishes discussion on these Estimates, at a later stage and at the proper time, we shall be glad to oblige him; and if he finds in these Estimates one single item large enough to perceptibly affect the total—for it is the total that they are talking about—let him move to have it struck out. But I venture to say he will not have the courage to move to strike out these items, unless he adopts a new policy. In fact, the hon. gentleman and his friends, year after year, wall in the country about the magnitude of the Estimates; but when the time comes in this Parliament to deal with Estimates, except for an item of a few hundred or a few thousand dollars here or there, they have never mustered up the courage to vote against them. More than that, the hon. gentleman and his friends have assailed the fiscal policy of the Government. The hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson), in the long speech which he delivered only a few hours ago, attacked the Government and the tariff policy. But, from the moment that question was submitted to the House down to this present time, not one of these hon. gentlemen has ever dared to challenge a vote upon it. I wish the House to take note of that, in view of all that has been said.

The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) introduced this debate with a reference to a despatch which had appeared in a British newspaper. I never had the pleasure of reading the despatch or of hearing it until the hon. gentleman read it in the House. I speak of it as I have heard it from the hon. gentleman; and, as I heard it, subject to a verbal alteration here or there which would be almost manifest from the reading, that telegram contained a substantially fair and true statement of the facts of the case. But what worries the hon. gentlemen is that they have been endeavouring to mislead the country with statements that were not true, and they thought they could accomplish something by using for their purposes quotations from the London "Times." I have the greatest respect for the "Times" newspaper. I am perfectly satisfied that the able and distinguished lady who went to the Klondike as correspondent of the "Times" acted in a conscientious manner, and with every desire to do her duty to the "Times"; but I think she failed to obtain information in the short visit she made which would enable her to form an intelligent judgment. I think her conclusions were unwarranted, but I am satisfied she desired to be fair and just, and that the "Times" also desired to be fair and just. Unfortunately, with respect to the "Times" for the present, and until something better on the subject can be learned, we are not able to regard the "Times" as being well advised on Canadian affairs. I regret to call attention to the fact that the "Times" has for its correspondent a gentleman who occupies a dual position; and, while I believe he would like to do his duty, yet, after he has spent hours in getting up acceptable literature for the Toronto "Mail and Empire," we can well understand that it is not easy for him to turn around and assume that attitude of dispassionate fairness that should characterize a gentleman filling the position of correspondent of the "Times." Let it be known that the "Times" correspondent, who telegraphs from Ottawa, is at one moment engaged in furnishing information to the "Times," and in the next in supplying the delectable articles that we find in the Toronto "Mail and Empire." I think it is unfortunate that that dual position should be occupied, because even though the gentleman would like to do his duty faithfully, yet the fact remains that you cannot serve God and mammon—you cannot work for the Toronto "Mail and Empire" and give correct information to the London "Times" at the same time.

It being One o'clock, the Deputy Speaker left the Chair.

House resumed at Three o'clock.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). When the House rose for recess, I was referring to a newspaper despatch which had been brought forward by the member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) as the basis of the present discussion. That despatch, published in an English paper, contains certain statements regarding a debate that had occurred in this House on the question of the Yukon district. Hon. gentlemen opposite seem to take exception to one or two things that that despatch contains. I had to remark that I had not the pleasure of reading the despatch, I never saw it nor heard of it before I heard it read in the House. I had no opportunity of analysing it, but judging entirely from hearing it read in this House, I formed the impression that, subject to some mere verbal errors and omissions, which might be almost seen from an ordinary reading of the despatch, I regarded its statements as substantially true and correct, and as fairly describing the condition of affairs to which the despatch referred. There were two things stated in that despatch which seemed to give offence to the hon. gentlemen opposite, not because they were untrue, but because they were absolutely true, and truths of very considerable importance. One of them was a truth of the utmost importance, and that was the statement that throughout the whole discussion of this Yukon business no charge whatever had been made against any Minister of the Crown, that is to say, no charge affecting his integrity, his honour or his position as a member of this House. It cannot be too strongly emphasized that such is the fact. We have had long speeches and many insinuations, but it is true now as it was true from the beginning, that the hon. gentlemen who discussed the question failed from beginning to end to make any charge whatever affecting the position, the honour, the integrity or the seat in this House of the hon. the Minister of the Interior, or of any other member of the Administration. That that fact was so clearly and forcibly brought out in the despatch, seemed to give great offence to hon. gentlemen opposite.

Then there was another fact stated in the despatch to which hon. gentlemen took great exception, not because the statement was untrue, as I said before, but because the statement was absolutely correct, and that was the statement that only 26 members of the Conservative party took interest enough in the matter to remain in the House and vote for the motion of the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper). There is no question as to the fact; why, then, should hon. gentlemen be so indignant because the writer of the despatch, whoever he may have been, mentioned that which the Journals of the House of Commons will prove to be correct? But, said the leader of the Opposition, it was a mere accident, it was a mere snap vote, it was an accident such as occurred last evening when we had a vote in Committee of Supply in which only a few members cast their votes. Sir, as pointed out by my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce, there is no comparison between the two cases. A vote in Committee of Supply at a late hour is something which nobody can expect; no member is aware whether a particular vote is coming up. But that was not the case with regard to the Yukon matter. We had had that matter before the House in many shapes and forms from the beginning of the session. The hon. member for Pictou had formally placed his views before the House in a most elaborate resolution, and in a much more elaborate speech he had discussed the subject, others had followed, and everybody was looking forward to that division as one of the most important of the session. Every hon. member on the other side of the House who was interested in the matter, therefore, had the amplest opportunity to cast his vote if he desired to do so; and the fact that only 26 of them remained for the purpose is a fact of some interest. I do not attach as much importance to it as, perhaps, others may; still, it is a matter of fact, and since it was stated in the despatch, I do not see why hon. gentlemen should concern themselves very much about it. I think the inference that hon. gentlemen opposite were not, as a rule, very deeply interested in the matter was a fair and natural inference, and I think it is not unfair to say that the hon. gentleman who promoted that discussion failed to make any impression upon the House, failed to make any impression in the country, and what seems more strange, he actually failed to make any great impression upon his own followers, since he could not prevail upon more of them to remain in the House and cast their votes for his resolution.

The hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster), who is not in his place, had very much to say in the course of his speech with respect to the public works of the country, and to discussions which had recently taken place. He referred to some remarks that were made last night by the hon. member for Russell (Mr. Edwards). No greater misstatement of the position occupied by the member for Russell could have been made than that which was contained in the observations of the hon. member for York today. Now, what were the facts? A number of hon. gentlemen opposite, exercising their undoubted rights of criticising any item, had made observations regarding certain public works, of which they could not be expected to know anything, and when the member for Russell was appealed to as to what he thought of this particular matter, he was candid enough to say that as he had no knowledge of the facts of the case, he was not prepared to express any opinion, but he was content to accept the view taken by the Minister of Public Works when he agreed to put that item in the Estimates. Now, that is a vote of confidence in the Government, particularly in the Minister of Public Works. If hon. gentlemen say that this is too generous a vote and too generous a confidence, that is fair criticism; but to say that the member for Russell should be censured because he declined to occupy the House in talking of things about which he was frank enough to confess he knew nothing, is, to my mind, a very strange method of dealing with an opponent's remarks.

Then my hon. friend from York had very much to say about the absence of the Minister of Public Works, and the policy of the Government in relation to public works in his absence, and here again the whole matter was most unfairly stated. What are the facts here? The hon. Minister of Public Works, who has been most assiduous in the discharge of his duties, is broken down in health. He remained at his post as long as possible. Then at the last moment, up to the time when he had hoped to remain in the House and take charge of these Estimates, he was ordered away by his physician and had to go to Europe in search of health. That produced a certain difficulty. I agreed with him at the time of his departure, not to undertake the management of his department generally, as the important duties of my own department would not permit me to do that, but that I would undertake the management of his Estimates in the House. When I came to the House I frankly told the House the circumstances under which these Estimates were presented; and I had to confess, although it was not necessary to confess, that I could only give to the House information on those matters which I could obtain from the officials. I do not think there was anything in that which indicated a want of any confidence on my part, or unwillingness on my part to take the House into my confidence. But hon. gentlemen say, again and again, that because I would not, in the name of the Minister of Public Works, who is absent for a few weeks and who will be here very soon again—because I would not agree to pledge the Minister of Public Works to do something as respects every particular item of these Estimates, therefore, the Government are shirking their responsibility.

Mr. FIELDING.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, that is unfair and unreasonable discussion. I think the explanations which I gave in the matter of those Estimates, so far as I understood the votes, should have been accepted by the House, and I think they were accepted as fair and reasonable.

But, says my hon. friend from York, we are setting at defiance all the laws respecting the letting of works by tender and contract. He stands up and with a vast amount of virtuous indignation, proclaims himself as the champion of tender and of contract as against doing work by day labour. Why, Sir, if there ever was a burlesque in this House it was the idea of any member of the Government to which he belonged, championing the system of doing public works by tender and contract. Did they apply the principle of tender and contract to the Curran bridge, in the very heart of the great city of Montreal? He knows they did not, but they applied the principle of day labour. The principle itself is capable of being applied intelligently and successfully, but by the abuse of that principle, and the neglect of their duty, they allowed the public treasury to be plundered, and a great scandal to be perpetrated to the dishonour of Canada, as everybody knows. Tender and contract, forsooth, and those gentlemen its champions! Look over the records of the Public Works Department and you will find year after year the testimony that they have done work in total neglect of that principle. Did they take tender and contract for the work on the Sheik's Island dam? Did they take tender and contract when they spent $174,000 for the hon. gentleman himself, under his own special knowledge, in his own city of St. John?

They rebuilt the customs-house, the public building, in the city of St. John; they spent not $10,000, not $15,000, but the enormous sum of $170,000 by day labour. Then the hon. gentleman comes into this House and puts on an air of virtuous indignation because the Government would not pledge itself to do a work of $10,000 or $15,000 by tender or contract. I think my hon. friend will see that the public understand that and that anything that he, at least, may say in defence of the principle of contract is not likely to be regarded with very great favour by the public. But, Sir, let me return for a moment again to the question which was raised by the speech of the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), and that is the question of the Yukon charges. As I said a moment ago, what the hon. gentleman complained of was that a despatch had been published in the English newspapers telling some very important, but to him, unpalatable truths. That despatch told the story that, from beginning to end, no charge whatever had been made by the hon. member for Pictou against the Minister of the Interior, or any other member of this Administration. By long speeches and by editorials in the newspapers, the Conservative press and the Conservative party have done their utmost to convey the impression that the hon. member for Pictou had made some grave charges against the Government, but, if you read the speech of the hon. member, you will discover that, beside insinuations of the vaguest character, no charge is made against the hon. Minister of the Interior, or any other member of the Government. True, hon. gentlemen did make a charge of favouritism. Well, what does favouritism mean? I suppose that, if a Liberal and a Conservative were, at the same time, seeking employment from the hon. Minister of the Interior, he would exercise enough favouritism to prefer his own political friend, and who could object to that, provided he employed a competent and qualified man? Are we going to employ a commission of judges of the Supreme Court to inquire into questions of favouritism, or anything of that kind? The hon. member for Pictou said that he was prepared to maintain his charges, that he was prepared to resign his seat if he failed to prove them—what? Not a charge of wrong-doing against the hon. Minister of the Interior; no—analyse his statement and all you will find is that he undertook to prove that somebody else had lied about the hon. Minister of the Interior. That is the whole story. The point of the whole complaint, so far as it seemed to have a personal character as against the hon. Minister of the Interior, was in relation to a man named Philp, who appears to have been a partner of the hon. Minister some years ago before he entered the Ministry, and before he entered this House. What was the charge? Is it that the hon. Minister of the Interior had had any improper relations with Mr. Philp? If the hon. member for Pictou believed that he had, if he had been in a position to prove that he had, he would have stood up in this House and said: Mr. Speaker, I have reason to believe and I do believe, and I am prepared to prove, before a committee of this House, that the hon. Minister of the Interior was improperly connected with Mr. Philp in that transaction. But he did not do anything of the kind. All that he was going to prove, the great thing that he was going to prove, or forfeit his seat, was that somebody else had said that Mr. Philp and the hon. Minister of the Interior was connected in this matter. It was a most ridiculous thing, and the hon. member for Pictou and other hon. members who repeat it, who get despatches sent across the water with the object of giving that colour to it, are not going to conceal from the people of Canada the great fact that no charge was ever made against the hon. Minister of the Interior by any one of the hon. gentlemen in this House who discussed the question. They made great efforts to convey that impression, but they failed to give any evidence and they failed to make a charge that for one moment is deserving of the consideration of a Royal commission. A Royal commission, forsooth! Against whom were the charges made? With the exception, if you like to make that one exception, of Major Walsh, all the charges were made against what might be described as the minor officials of the Interior Department. Let us suppose, for the sake of argument, that Major Walsh could have been proved guilty of some wrong-doing. What penalty could have been imposed upon him? I do not admit that there was any wrong-doing on the part of that gentleman, but if you take the worst view of the case and suppose that, as a result of an inquiry something should be proved against him, what could have been done? Major Walsh is no longer in the employ of the Government. He had passed out of the employ of the Government a year ago or more; he was no more than a private citizen, and, therefore, all that could have resulted from an investigation, assuming that he was in the wrong, has already happened, that is, he has ceased to be a member of the public service of Canada. I would like to emphasize the fact that, as against Major Walsh, an investigation could have served no good purpose at all, as he had already ceased to be a member of the public service. I would also emphasize the fact that there was no charge made against Mr. Ogilvie. From the moment that Mr. Ogilvie entered upon his duties as commissioner of the Yukon territory down to the present moment, the universal testimony is that the public affairs of the Yukon have been administered with great vigour and intelligence and beyond a suspicion of wrong-doing. If that is the condition to-day; if the commissioner who was appointed to the Yukon territory has, by his character, by his reputation, by the attention he has given to his work, created such a condition of affairs in that country that the public are entirely satisfied with his administration, what is there to investigate so far as he is concerned? It should be remembered that Mr. Ogilvie was not interested in any of the charges. All the charges, as I have said, had relation to the administration of his predecessors, to the minor officials of the Interior Department, or to the administration of Major Walsh. Therefore, Mr. Ogilvie was a perfectly disinterested person to conduct an investigation. But we are told that this investigation should not be conducted by officials of the Government. Why, Mr. Speaker, who other than officials of the Government are usually appointed to conduct investigations? In speaking in the previous discussion, I pointed out, and I repeat it again, that there is nothing in these Yukon charges as respects the hon. Minister of the Interior, because there was no charge which was really a charge as against him; and there is nothing in the situation as respects these minor officials which differs from a charge against any other public official, for instance, against an officer of the department of the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), or an officer of the department of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair). Suppose that a charge were made to-day that an officer of the Customs Department had, in Vancouver, or in St. John, or Halifax, or Quebec, been guilty of some wrong-doing, what would be the course? Appoint a Royal commission? Apparently that is what the member for Pictou, and other hon. gentlemen opposite think should be done, but what the hon. Minister of Customs would do would be send one of the higher officers of his own department, a man in whom he had confidence, a man in whom he thought the public had confidence, to investigate the matter just as is done every day in the public service of Canada. If there is a charge against subordinate officials the proper person to investigate that charge is one of the higher officials. This is what is done again and again, and it is the only way that you can carry on the public business. But it is not the only way when you come to a Minister of the Crown, and if these hon. gentlemen had the courage to make any charge in this House affecting the integrity and the honour of the hon. Minister of the Interior, they were told, over and over again, and I tell them now, that they have only to make the charge and they will get a committee, and that committee will take it up.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. "Hear, hear," says my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper).

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. A packed jury.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), whom they are so ready to abuse in his absence, did not make the miserable plea of a packed jury when he levelled his charges against Sir Hector Langevin. That hon. gentleman had the true constitutional idea of parliamentary government that the House of Commons of Canada is the proper tribunal to inquire into a charge against a Minister of the Crown. And though with a packed jury and a prejudiced committee, the hon. member for Montmorency of that day, the hon. Minister of Public Works now, was perfectly satisfied to accept the constitutional principle and appeal to a committee of the highest tribunal in Canada, the Commons House of this Dominion. It will be well if hon. gentlemen opposite should follow the same example. They have a supreme contempt for committees at some times, and a supreme regard for courts at other times, but now, we have discovered that they are manifesting a supreme contempt for courts and a supreme regard to committees. In this particular matter they demanded a judicial inquiry. They wanted the judges, chiefly because they knew it was a preposterous claim, and that they never would be allowed to conduct the public business in that way. But what happened later? We had an election in West Huron, not long ago, and which is now occupying some attention. The press of hon. gentlemen opposite, the day after that election, claimed that they were able to prove fraud and corruption. But why did they not go to the courts? They had the courts open to them, they had the judicial inquiry—which they are so anxious to have in another case—open to them. All they had to do was to put out their hands and touch the button, and the courts would do the rest. But when they had a chance of having a judicial inquiry there, they slunk away from it, and they afterwards come to this House and they demand—what? What the hon. gentleman opposite has just called a packed jury. A judicial commission is demanded by these gentlemen to investigate the case of an Indian dog-driver who perhaps takes a tip for admitting a man into the side door of the Dawson post office. But after they have at the first ignored and despised the judicial authority, they are ready to come into this House and submit the West Huron election to a committee. These hon. gentlemen can demand a committee, when they believe they are not going to get a committee; but when they think they are going to get a committee, they are not likely to be in a hurry to ask for it. There is another point in connection with the Yukon matter to which perhaps I might refer. The attempt to connect, by insinuation, without following it up by a charge, the name of Mr. Philp with the name of the Minister of the Interior, was a mean and miserable thing, unworthy of any member of the House of Commons. But, Sir, if there was one thing that was meaner than that, it was the miserable attempt that has been made again and again to prove that my hon. friend (Mr. Sifton) had some improper motive in sending Mr. Ogilvie into the Yukon, because, forsooth, they found that Mr. Ogilvie was a distant relation of the hon. Minister's wife. These gentlemen opposite have done their utmost to convey the impression that Mr. Ogilvie was chosen by the Minister of the Interior to go into the Yukon because of his relationship, because of some undue interest he had in him. They have by that line of argument attempted to conceal from the public the great and important fact that Mr. Ogilvie was never appointed to the civil service of Canada by my hon. friend (Mr. Sifton), and that Mr. Ogilvie was a member of the civil service of Canada and engaged in the Yukon years before the Minister came into office. But they say: Oh, Mr. Ogilvie is a relative of the Minister. Well, Sir, it appears that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) never saw Mr. Ogilvie until after he became a Minister, and was introduced to him as one of the officials of the Dominion Government. Mr. Ogilvie married an aunt of the Minister of the Interior.

Mr. FIELDING.

Some hon. MEMBERS. His wife's aunt.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, Mr. Ogilvie married an aunt of the wife of the Minister of the Interior, and I think I am correct in stating that the hon. Minister never even saw the aunt, and certainly never saw Mr. Ogilvie for years. I believe I am correct in stating the further fact that that estimable lady passed away to Heaven many years ago.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Oh, they will never see her.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, the chances are very remote of these hon. gentlemen opposite seeing that estimable lady. Because, forsooth, that under these circumstances there is that distant relationship through the dead aunt of Mr. Sifton's wife; because that good lady was the wife of Mr. Ogilvie, notwithstanding that Mr. Ogilvie was then a public officer of the Dominion of Canada, tried and trusted, and honoured by these gentlemen opposite; then, because he was continued in the public service by the Minister (Mr. Sifton) and given a higher position, in which his ability could be used for the good government of the Yukon territory, these hon. gentlemen opposite make out the miserable insinuation that there has been some improper action on the part of the Minister in appointing Mr. Ogilvie. With these remarks, Mr. Speaker, I think that subject may be dismissed.

I wish before concluding to say something more with reference to the West Huron election, about which hon. gentlemen opposite have said very much to-day. In view of the fact that this matter is now before a committee of the House, it would, I believe, have been more seemly for hon. gentlemen opposite to have made no reference to it. Considering that they are only at the beginning of this inquiry, it was most unjust that they should treat that investigation as if it were closed, and as if all the facts had been laid before the House. We may fairly ask this House, we may ask the country, to reserve its judgment on that matter until all the facts are laid before us. And these hon. gentlemen opposite had much to say about Mr. Preston. Well, Sir, I have read what has appeared in the press regarding Mr. Preston, and I have no desire to apologize for him, if he has done anything wrong, but I say, as a reader of the newspapers, and taking all that appeared on the subject, I have yet to see the first word in the press which reflects on Mr. Preston, and which shows that he has done anything wrong.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. These gentlemen opposite have been able to quote a somewhat ridiculous telegram which Mr. Preston, it is said, sent on the night of the election, when he was exulting at the victory. They give all sorts of tortuous interpretations to the expression about "hugging the machine."

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. These gentlemen opposite seem to know more about hugging the machine than I do.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I confess that I do not know what it means, and unless some information is laid before the House in regard to it, it would be the part of decency and fair-play not to put any interpretation upon that telegram which the telegram itself does not bear. I am informed that there is to-day on the bulletin board of one of the newspapers of this town a statement that Mr. Preston has brought an action for libel against the people who slandered him outside of this House, and I suppose he will have cause to deeply regret that the penalties of the law cannot be visited on hon. gentlemen in this House who are ready to speak of him as they have before the question has even been considered.

But suppose you do find some things in connection with the West Huron election that are not right, suppose you do find in one county, or in more than one county, some evidence that there has been wrongdoing in connection with the elections; what then? The Liberal party of Canada will demand that the men who have done the wrong shall be punished. But let not these gentlemen opposite lay the flattering unction to their souls that on that account the people of Canada are going to trust them. I say, Sir, that it will take a large amount of corruption—a much larger amount than is ever likely to be found in any Ontario constituency, or, I trust and hope, in any constituency in any other part of the Dominion—it will take a much larger volume of corruption than is ever likely to exist, to lead the people of Canada to again trust the leader of the Opposition and his friends with the management of the affairs of this country. The people of Canada know that, though they may not find perfection in the Liberal party, they are likely to find perfection in a much smaller degree in the party of hon. gentlemen opposite. If the time shall come when the honest people of this country cease to have faith in the Liberal party, they will hesitate a long time before they will give their confidence to the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) and those associated with him. The people of Canada know that you cannot take grapes from thorns, or figs from thistles, or virtues from hon. gentlemen opposite.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The late Right Hon. Sir John Macdonald once said that there was this great difference between the two parties: that the Tories would never believe anything wrong against the leaders, but that the Liberals were ready to believe everything wrong against their leaders. That statement, unjust as it was, nevertheless contained a compliment to the Liberal party, because it testified to the great principle, that the mass of Liberals do expect to get honest, and virtuous, and good government from their leaders, and that they will insist upon it.

Mr. LANDERKIN. And they have got it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is true that the people of Canada expect more from the Liberal party than they expect from the Conservatives, and I believe, Sir, that experience will show that the people of Canada are justified in that expectation, and that the reasonable wishes of the people will be honestly met by this Government. I would like to remind my hon. friend from York (Mr. Foster) that when the question was raised in this House respecting the West Huron election, instantly—although we might have very well taken the point that they had had an opportunity of proving their case in the courts, and that it should have been sent to the courts—yet, so desirous was the right hon. Prime Minister that there should be no shadow of doubt of the desire of the Liberal party to give the country pure elections and honest government, that he instantly consented to have that matter referred to a committee of this House; and nobody was more surprised than the hon. members opposite, who never wanted the inquiry at all. And in this connection I would like to point out that among those who assented to that motion, none did so more readily than my hon. friend the member for West Huron (Mr. Holmes), whose seat was affected, but who instantly said he desired to have the fullest and fairest investigation. That, Sir, is an example which I would commend to my hon. friend from York, N.B. (Mr. Foster). I would ask him if he remembers anything about ballot-stuffing and wrong-doing in elections in by-gone years in his own province of New Brunswick? I would ask him if he ever heard of the rascalities of the Queen's county election?

Mr. FOSTER. Do you mean the last?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I mean the Queen's county election, in which a Tory was sent to a seat in this House which he never honestly won. And I would ask my hon. friend if he remembers when his own election was challenged in 1891, when there was a suspicion of ballot-box stuffing in his own county, and when he had not the manliness to stand fire like my hon. friend from West Huron, but ran away from his county. If the hon. member has forgotten, I want to tell him that the public are not going to forget, that on the night of that election, he found that he was virtually beaten, and he had thrown up the sponge; but at the last moment there came in news that a certain poll, from which he had no reason to expect anything of the sort legitimately, had given him a considerable majority. Two or three days afterwards the ballot-box was mysteriously missing; it could not be found. There was delay and a demand for a recount, when the hon. gentleman, fearing investigation into the ballot stuffing, ran away from the county; and when the hon. gentleman's seat was called in question by an attempt to have a recount, the hon. gentleman, by his solicitor pleaded that inasmuch as he had not been personally served he was not liable to answer to the summons; and he sat through that Parliament in this Commons of Canada as the representative of a constituency which in all probability he never honestly carried, and which he was only able to represent in this House by pleading a miserable, petty plea against an investigation, that the papers has not been served upon him at the proper time.

Mr. FOSTER. All I wish to say with reference to that, for fear silence might lead to the opinion anywhere that the hon. gentleman is stating what I consider to be the truth, is that to my mind there is not a word of fact upon which the assertion which my hon. friend has just made can be fairly based.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am amazed that my hon. friend should meet my statement by that blank denial, because I would have supposed that his ingenuity, which is sometimes remarkable, would have enabled him to plead something that would be a little more plausible.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will the hon. gentleman say whether or not in 1891 or 1892 he got rid of an election petition on the ground of insufficient service, or some similar technical ground?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I should be delighted to answer my hon. friend. In the year 1890 something—I forget the year—I was told that an election petition was going to be filed against me. I was going out of town, but I took the trouble to remain in town and send a message to the sheriff to bring along his petition.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Might I ask the hon. gentleman whether or not the petition was not dismissed on the ground of defective service?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It certainly could not have been dismissed on the ground of defective service on me, for I hunted up the sheriff to serve the petition, as the hon. gentleman will find if he refers to the sheriff of Halifax. I want, in conclusion, to repeat what I said a moment ago, that the thousands of honest Liberals throughout Canada do believe that they will get from the Liberal party cleaner government and better government and purer elections than they will get from the other party. The Liberal party are not going to be content to say that two wrongs make a right. They are not going to be content to have any man in the Liberal party plead that because another did wrong, that is an excuse for the Liberal party doing wrong. That doctrine will not be accepted, and should not be accepted by the Liberal party of Canada. They demand, and they have a right to demand, that their leaders in power shall, in respect of the management of public affairs, be above suspicion; and when the moment comes when the Liberal leaders can no longer maintain that position before the party and the country, then the Liberals of this Dominion are not going to sustain them. But if the time shall come when the people of Canada cease to have confidence in this Government, by reason of losing faith in the leaders of the Liberal party, they will still hesitate a long while before they will take the extreme step of giving their confidence to hon. gentlemen opposite. When that moment comes, intelligent men will look back to the record of the Conservative party. They will find that in 1872, at the very first opportunity after the union, when the Conservative party, after a short period of office had occasion to appeal to the country, they had to resort to the grossest bribery and corruption. What was the situation? If ever there was a moment when there should have been an appeal to all the patriotic instincts of the Conservative leaders, that was the moment. They had brought about the union of the provinces, which they regarded as a great step in advance; and undoubtedly it was, particularly as respects the upper provinces, which were enthusiastically in favour of it. They had brought about a coalition of the leading Liberals and the leading Conservatives of the old province of Canada. They had virtually broken up party lines. There was practically no opposition in the first Parliament of Canada. One would have thought that in such circumstances they would have had an easy mind in approaching the elections. But so little faith had they in their own resources and in their own policy, that in these very early years of the union they dare not approach the people without producing a grand corruption fund to demoralize the electors of Canada. And so we had at that very early period of the country's history that miserable story of the Pacific scandal, which led the London "Standard," the great Conservative organ of England, to declare that the men of the Government of that day should never again be permitted to enter office in Canada. The people of Canada will remember that when they are called upon to condemn the Liberal party; and they will remember the Public Works scandals of 1891; they will remember the Curran bridge; they will remember the whole record of Tory corruption; and while they may deeply regret to find evidence of wrong-doing in the Liberal ranks they are not going to be in a hurry, because of some small wrong-doing in certain districts, to hand over their confidence to the hon. gentlemen opposite, who during all those years, in the way I have described, squandered the money of the people of Canada, betrayed their interests, dragged their honour in the dust, and in going to their dishonoured political graves, had not even the small comfort that they were loyal to their own colleagues and their own leader. The hon. gentleman said that this Government was born in deception. I tell him that his Government died in treason.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). Mr. Speaker, the House has just listened to a rather strong disquisition on public affairs at the hands of the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding), and I cannot help feeling that the remarks that he has addressed to the House on the Yukon question are probably the same remarks that he addressed in private to the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson), the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. McInnes), and the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver), all three staunch supporters of hon. gentlemen opposite, but every one of whom failed to respond to the party crack, and voted that there should be an investigation into the Yukon charges. Why, the hon. gentleman cannot claim that the Government, with all their strong defence, could hold their own friends, much less win votes from this side of the House. And even the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), whose allegiance to hon. gentlemen opposite nobody will deny, saw fit on that occasion to depart from the House without recording his vote in favour of these hon. gentlemen. Let me ask the Government, how can we expect to get the votes of honest Liberal electors, when they cannot hold their own party followers in this House?

The hon. gentleman asks why did we go to a committee of the House for an investigation. But he knows very well that owing to the number of charges made and owing to the fact that the witnesses are thousands of miles away, it would be preposterous to talk of bringing them from the Yukon district before a committee of this House. The hon. gentleman is very brave, but he did not dare, nor did the Minister of the Interior dare, to appoint a judge of their own selection to go into the Yukon district and permit these men to come before him.

How anxious they are to be judges in some cases. They had a Redistribution Bill, and they were eager to seek the solace which the judges might afford them in that matter. They were not afraid to go before the judges then. Why? Because they thought they had a tolerably good case, but they were afraid to appoint a judge to go into the Yukon district and hold an investigation into the Yukon charges, because they knew that these charges would be proved.

I am astonished that the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) should have dared to do what the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) had not the effrontery to do, and what the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) or any other Minister had not the face to do, namely, to stand up in this House and condone the keeping in the public service of this man Preston. The hon. gentleman talks of Mr. Preston going into the courts. Well, Mr. Preston would no more be seen inside a court than would the hon. gentleman under similar circumstances. Where is Preston to-day? He is in the employ of this Government, and where is the criminal law of Ontario to-day. In the face of the admission made by Mr. McNish, that every kind of rascality had been perpetrated, that every kind of wrongful act had been committed in the county of West Huron, where is the criminal law to-day in the province of Ontario? It is paralyzed, Mr. Speaker. The county attorney, who is paid by the people of this country to prosecute criminals, actually stood up at the police court at St. Thomas, and asked that the accused should be admitted to bail for a month, and succeeded in having him admitted to bail by a friendly police magistrate. Where is Mr. Duncan Bole to-day? These are the hon. gentlemen who talk about respect for law and justice in this country. Why, their own provincial government, through its own officers, actually connived to get criminals out of the country. Then, the hon. gentleman exclaimed: Look at the constitution of the country how could such investigations be conducted by referring such matters to judges. Will the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), who sits behind him, tell me that when he had investigations in the province of Ontario, he did not employ judicial officers to hold the inquiry. The hon. gentleman sits there and acquiesces in the statement that he had. The hon. Minister of Customs is the very man who would call in the officials of the court when he has inquiries to make. In a case at Parry Sound, where he held an investigation into the conduct of an officer, he did not appoint one of his own officers to hold it, but sent a judicial officer from Brantford to hold the investigation. I am not going into the whole question of the Yukon. That is to-day within the knowledge of the people of the whole Dominion, whether on the Atlantic or Pacific coast, and when the Government cannot hold under the party whip their own supporters—for three of them voted against them on that occasion and another supporter, the hon. member for North Simcoe, would not even stand up and vote—what can be the opinion of the people throughout the country. When the electorate pronounce on that, and on all the other matters for which this Government is responsible, then the result will be known.

Mr. BENNETT.

What did the hon. Minister say in conclusion. He said that the Conservative party was rank with corruption from the time of confederation, more particularly in the election of 1872. I am not going to resurrect the ancient history of this country, but will tell him that from 1873 to 1878 there was a Liberal party in power in this country, and God knows, compared with the men who sit opposite us to-day, they were honest men. But when the electorate got the chance at the polls, they speedily dispensed with the services of these men. And so I believe, when the time comes for an appeal to the electorate, the Conservative party will not have any reason to be afraid of the result.

Mr. JAMES DOMVILLE (King's, N.B.) I hardly thought it was worth while to make any statement in the House, but when I saw my hon. friend from York, N.B. (Mr. Foster) exhibiting such wild indignation, I was struck by his versatility and assurance. One would almost think he was immaculate. One would almost think that in his own province and county he enjoys the reputation of being the kind of man which he once described himself to be. At that time he was not a Conservative, but was backing and filling on both sides, in one locality a Liberal and somewhere else a Conservative. He then talked temperance to the people and promised them legislation which he never carried out. It was then that in describing the ideal to which he aspired, he said he wanted to emulate the great man who had gone before him, Sir Leonard Tilley, so that when he walked along the streets, even the small boys would point at him and say: There goes a great and good man. I heard him say this himself. Will he deny it now. Perhaps the reason why he did not present himself in King's County last election was because these little boys, who were to speak of him so favourably as he went along the road, would have hooted at him. Every man has a right to do as he thinks best, and it is not my business to pitch into anybody for his private acts, but I have a right to do so as regards public acts. When the hon. gentleman undertook to say that he did not believe in this electorate corruption, what was he posing before the country as? He was posing as a purist of the first water. The country has been flooded with his speeches—the speeches of the Hon. Geo. E. Foster. But what do the people think, knowing him as they do? Does the hon. gentleman think he can play Hyde and Jekyll with them. He has played this double character for all he is worth, and I do not hesitate to say that if there ever had been a fair election run in King's County he would never have been elected. After the first election he was unseated for corruption. But although he had to admit it in open court, the next day his paper came out and said he had been acquitted.

Now, that was tantamount to saying that there was nothing wrong at all. The last election, as my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) said, he bolted. It was a deplorable scene. Here was a man not knowing whether his leader would abandon him as he was ready to abandon his friends in the Cabinet, and anticipating what would be done to him from what he was willing to do to others. He had lost all that pluck and nerve we see him display here, and he telegraphed to Sir John Macdonald: I am defeated; what is to be done? And Sir John telegraphed back: Never mind; come up and we will see about it. He did not know whether Sir John would stand by him or if he would tell him his usefulness was gone. And his private secretary—the hon. gentleman talks about the relations of the Minister of the Interior, why he himself had a relation as his private secretary, and that poor disturbed mortal walked up and down in the Royal Hotel's, saying: Oh, what is to become of Jenkins. And when the Conservative party met at their headquarters to talk over the results, where was their leader, where was the man who speaks in this House to-day as one in authority? He abandoned these gentlemen, sent his telegram to Sir John Macdonald and went to bed. Will the hon. gentleman deny that?

Mr. FOSTER. No, Mr. Speaker, I will not deny that I went to bed; but I will emphatically deny that I sent such a telegram.

Mr. DOMVILLE. You did send it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. In such a case the hon. gentleman (Mr. Domville) is bound to accept the statement made by an hon. member of the House.

Mr. DOMVILLE. Mr. Speaker, am I to accept the statement when I know to the contrary?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. member is bound to accept the statement.

Mr. DOMVILLE. In that case, I accept the statement; and I am sure it will astonish my constituents to know that I would accept it. Now, reference had been made to ballot-box stuffing. It has gone on so long among the hon. gentleman's friends and they were so accustomed to it, that they thought it nothing wrong. I have an affidavit here somewhere from one of these men who says he was present when there were 100 ballots put in the ballot-box.

Mr. FOSTER. We would like to hear that affidavit.

Mr. DOMVILLE. You ought to have heard it at the time, and you would have heard it if you had not cleared out. The hon. gentleman's own newspaper, the "Sun," with his name published as one of its editors, came out after the election and gave the minorities for every parish, acknowledged defeat and apologized for it. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) say that that is not true? He should never have got the seat. He always understood that, for he never went back. He brought out three different candidates, and each one of them had to get out of the road. It was very much as it was when he came down to Westmorland before the last provincial election. He says that the country will turn this Government out of power, that it has no confidence in anybody except himself. And yet in New Brunswick, after all his boasting in Westmorland, the province gave him hardly a single supporter in the provincial legislature. What does that indicate? It indicates that they have had enough of him. They have had enough of him in King's—he would not dare to get back again. They have enough of him in York—he will not appeal to the people there again. I pledge myself to this House that he will not try it again in York or King's because he knows better. The time came for contesting his election, in order that there might be fair-play—for that was all that was asked. But his agent, carpet-bag in hand, went out one night and the hon. gentleman himself had disappeared by morning. As my hon. friend said, he was not served. We served him in Ottawa through a legal firm, but it was decided not to be sufficient, and so he, like the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. G. F. Baird) held a seat that he never won. He knew that he had never won it. The telephone was set going and the message sent to his friends in one parish: What have you done with my money? Will he deny that?

Mr. FOSTER. What, telephone in King's in 1891?

Mr. DOMVILLE. There was a telephone.

Mr. FOSTER. Where?

Mr. DOMVILLE. It ran from Norton to Springfield.

Mr. FOSTER. Where at Springfield?

Mr. DOMVILLE. It was a store opposite and not very far George Scovil, and the hon. gentleman knows it well.

Mr. FOSTER. I know the store well, but I do not know of any telephone that was set going.

Mr. DOMVILLE. The House must accept my statement or the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Foster), and I think that my statement will be as reasonably accepted as his. I should hope so, at any rate. I state as a fact and one that I know, that a message was sent: What have you done with my money; you have given me no votes for it?

Mr. FOSTER. No such telephone message was sent between Norton and Springfield or between any other two points.

Mr. DOMVILLE. Then how did the hon. member send it?

Mr. FOSTER. Well, I will leave that to the ingenuity of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Domville).

Mr. DOMVILLE. My hon. friend is right to deny it. I know I should be ashamed of such a thing myself. I should be ashamed to call them to account when they had gone back on me. My money being gone, I should swallow the indignity, there would be the end of it. Will the hon. gentleman deny that when they were calling upon people to rally around the flag of prohibition and temperance and to support the hon. gentleman as a temperance candidate at Rothesay, there was a booth overflowing with liquor placed there in his name and in his interest?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know anything about it; but I should judge my hon. friend (Mr. Domville) would know, if anybody.

Mr. DOMVILLE. That is right, and if I had got any of it, that is about the only thing that anybody ever got of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster).

Mr. FOSTER. I am glad my hon. friend acknowledges that.

Mr. DOMVILLE. My hon. friend went down to a place called Westfield to canvass a widow woman for three or four votes in the House.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, that is serious. I want to know the name of that widow woman?

Mr. DOMVILLE. I can give my hon. friend her name.

Mr. FOSTER. I should like to have her name.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I will give it to the hon. gentleman privately.

Mr. FOSTER. I would just as soon have it publicly.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I know my hon. friend likes these things in private, and I think he is right. Well, Mr. Speaker, I was saying—

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend has not given the name. This is a grave question, you know.

Mr. DOMVILLE. My hon. friend, I am sure, is aware of the name. I was going to say—

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman give the name of the woman—

Mr. DOMVILLE. What woman do you want me to tell you about?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I want to know about the widow woman that my hon. friend is talking about and whom, he says, I canvassed.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. DOMVILLE. Let it be a widow woman or any other kind of woman; it makes little difference. The story I am telling is correct and can be corroborated. She entertained my hon. friend, and he was grateful for the board and lodging he got. He said to her: I must leave early, and I do not want you to have the trouble of seeing me off. Leave some bread and milk on the table, and when I get up I will get it myself. That was all the poor widow woman shared out of the hon. gentleman's generosity. I could give the hon. gentleman some more instances a little nearer home, if he liked; I do not want to do it. I heard him talk about hugging machines. I really hardly know what he meant by it, and I turned up Webster's dictionary afterwards to see how he explained a machine, and I found there were so many explanations that I did not know which machine the hon. member for York meant, when he spoke of hugging a machine. Well, I want to say that when my hon. friend gets up in this House and assumes this rôle of honesty, of morality, the people do not take that stock in him that he thinks they do, or that he wishes they would do. I believe myself that if you show a little courtesy to your fellow members, it is not necessary to pound your hands right and left in order to make the people of this country think that you are important. Everybody knows that my hon. friend is wordy. We all know that he is a fair speaker. I think Sir John A. Macdonald once referred to my hon. friend as a windmill run by water-power, or something of that kind. If hon. gentlemen on this side, who are quite as good as they are, quite as good as my hon. friend, can show quite as good a record at home or abroad—if they were to be as personal on this side and imitate the hon. member for West York in throwing out personalities against members opposite, where would it tend? If he was a courageous man, Mr. Speaker, if we were living in the days of courage, why, there would be a duel out in the lobby. But my hon. friend knows that he is protected in this House, he is protected from a suit at law, he is protected by his seat in Parliament from anybody bestowing on him that physical influence, we will call it, which might be brought to bear upon him. He sits in this House, under the privilege of Parliament, and casts all these slurs against our people in the Yukon, and everywhere else, and attacks the Minister of the Interior without daring to make a charge against him. When it was first brought up in this House, I told the House that I had been to Dawson City, and although there were things done there that the Government could hardly be responsible for, I said that if hon. gentlemen on the other side would make a charge against the Minister of the Interior, a charge that had anything in it, I would vote with them for an investigation. Now, why did not they do it, then?

They cannot say that we on this side would not have given them a fair tribunal. I am satisfied that other gentlemen on this side would have done the same as I offered to do. I am satisfied that the Minister himself would have asked for it. He would not be satisfied to sit here and allow anybody on the other side to charge him, and not refute it. Now, why do not they do it? It is still open to them. But that is not the custom of the hon. member for York. His custom is to vilify everybody. I have been on the hustings with him in New Brunswick, I have followed him inch by inch, and I am prepared to meet him to-morrow in King's County, or any other county in New Brunswick, and assist the Minister of Railways and Canals to chase him and his friends out of that province. They shall never show their face there again successfully. And that is what makes my hon. friend so vituperative, so mad, in this House—if I may use that expression—because he knows the county he came from has had enough of him. He boasted of being a King's County boy. It was in all the papers: He is a son of King's County; hold up King's County's son. But King's County would not hold their son up any longer, and he cannot go back, and he feels sad about it. I, who have lived thirty odd years in that county, have had to put up with all the villainy that took place in all the elections there, such as the robbing of those ballot-boxes, and I am able to stand here to-day and see him and his party in that position to which the country have relegated them. But my hon. friend will make nothing in this House, or in King's County, or anywhere else in New Brunswick, or in Ontario, or anywhere else, by flinging out these aspersions, because, after all, when the people get home and think the matter over, they will say: It is only George Eulas Foster, and we know him.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). The hon. member for King's, N.B., (Mr. Domville) has treated the House to a delectable entertainment upon the morality and honesty of the hon. member for York, N.B., (Mr. Foster). It is quite refreshing to hear it, because of the source from which it comes. It is somewhat a matter of surprise to strangers in this House, why it is that the member for King's can never listen to anything coming from the member for York without getting excited over it; but to those who have been in this House for any length of time, the explanation is quite plain. Since the little incident that took place in the Public Accounts Committee, in which the member for King's was one of the actors, the disclosures that were brought out by the member for York were quite sufficient to make the member for King's his eternal enemy. But I think it will be well for the member for King's, before criticising either the integrity or the honesty of any other hon. gentleman in this House, to square himself with the Militia Department in regard to his connection with it for the last few years.

The hon. Minister of Finance gave us quite an entertainment this afternoon with regard to the Yukon charges and other things connected with the party of which he is an interested member. He started out by telling us that it was no matter of surprise that the vote was so small on the Opposition side in support of the Yukon charges that were made by the member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper). He forgot to tell the House that he and his friends forced that vote on at the close of the second day, when the discussion would otherwise have lasted three or four days. Many supporters of the Government intended to take part in that debate and to vote in favour of the resolution moved by the member for Pictou, but they were unable to do so, because the debate was concluded much sooner than they expected. I speak as one knowing the situation, and as one who did not vote on that question, although I intended both to speak and to vote upon it, had there been an opportunity given. It was not believed that the debate would close that night, and it would not have closed but for the fact that the Government forced a vote before half the members on this side of the House had spoken on it who wished to speak. But I can tell him, for his information, and for the information of the country, that had that debate gone on for the length of time that was expected, and that the nature of the charges required, a large number of members on this side of the House would have spoken out plainly in condemnation of the nefarious mismanagement of affairs by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) in the Yukon district.

Had an opportunity been given, I know, and I think I know what the voice and sentiments of hon. members on this side of the House was, there is not a single member of the Opposition but who would have voted in support of the proposal that was made in these resolutions for the appointment of a commission. There were no dissensions on this side of the House, but it was not so on the other side of the House. Hon. gentlemen opposite were quite unable to keep their own friends together, and three of their most independent supporters voted against them and in favour of the resolution that there should be an investigation before an independent tribunal. The hon. Minister of Finance does not do justice to himself, or to this House when he says that the debate of these resolutions was a lengthy one. I say that had the debate been allowed to run its usual length, to which a debate of this importance should have extended, three or four days, an opportunity would have been given to several hon. members on this side of the House to speak, and not only that, but many hon. members were unavoidably absent who would otherwise have been here and would have voted in support of the resolutions. Everybody, he says, was free to cast his vote upon this question. On the contrary, a large number of hon. members, due to the action of the Government, backed by the force of their majority in forcing the vote on that night, were prevented from casting their votes. The hon. Minister says that no charge was made against any Minister of the Crown. I deny that statement. I say that two or three Ministers of the Crown were included in the charge of incompetence and mismanagement. A charge of incompetence and of mismanagement was made against the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), against the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), against the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson). I say distinctly that the resolutions contained these charges as plainly and strongly as the English language could make them. Yet, we are told that no charges have been made. Could the hon. gentleman imagine that the memory of the country is so short, that the people are so forgetful, that those who have read these charges which were made so plainly, so forcibly and so directly in this House will not remember what was charged? After challenging the hon. member for Pictou to make these charges, and promising that an investigation would take place, though the charges were made, a commission was not given for their investigation because hon. gentlemen dare not give it, and all that was said by the hon. Minister of the Interior, with that bravado of his, in challenging the Opposition to make the charges, was simply, if the expression is not unparliamentary, a sheer bluff and nothing else. When charges were made hon. gentlemen opposite dared not consent to the appointment of the commission. The hon. Minister of Finance says that the people of the country expect honest government from the Reform party. He says that thousands and hundreds of thousands of honest Reformers expect honest government. I say that they did expect honest government, but you have only to look at the state of affairs to-day to see how they have been deceived. Have they had honest government; have they had consistent government? The records up to the present show the reverse. Has honest government been exemplified in the conduct of their friends in West Elgin, where we have the humiliating admission from Mr. McNish of the corruption that took place. I am told that these campaigns were engineered largely by the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock), that he assisted Preston to engineer the campaign in West Huron, which was conducted by the same class of men who had it in hand in

Mr. SPROULE.

West Elgin, yet, the statement was made by the hon. Minister of Finance that the Reformers expect honest government. If they expect honest government they have been deceived and disappointed by the conduct of hon. gentlemen opposite. If they had had honest government there would be a different record from that which is presented to-day. The hon. Minister of Finance said that we had referred to West Huron, and that it would be to our credit to say nothing about it as it was before the Committee on Privileges and Elections. Yet, he goes into the conduct of this case and refers to West Huron himself. He does not require to go to West Huron for evidence of bribery, of corruption, of rascality and scandal. He could have found it if he had gone to South Ontario, where Mr. Dryden was obliged to resign on account of it. The same class of men who were in charge of the machine in West Elgin, and the same nefarious practices enabled hon. gentlemen to carry other elections. The hon. Minister of Finance asks us why we do not go into the courts. What is the result when we do go into the courts? Witnesses are sent off; they are handed money and tickets to go away; some are in Detroit and some are in Kansas, and when we go to the courts it is impossible to find these witnesses with a search warrant and a hundred constables. Money was supplied them by people, some of whom we believe are here and that it was furnished them for the purpose of sending them away, and I am told and I believe it to be correct, that the same thing is going on at the present time in connection with the same men who have been doing this nefarious work in West Huron. Men like Duncan Bole or Linklater are let out on bail, and when they are called in court they are not to be found. The court has called their names time and time again, and it was obliged to adjourn because such men had gone out of the country and could not be obtained.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). The matter to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) is referring is before the Privileges and Election Committee. It is almost unnecessary to refer to the fact that it is improper to discuss the question as to what may or may not be the result of the inquiry. If I am able to understand the hon. gentleman, he is striving to create the impression, in fact, he is very close indeed to making the direct and positive charge that friends of the Liberal party and friends of the Government are here in Ottawa raising money for the purpose of burking that inquiry by sending certain witnesses out of the country. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if I understand him correctly, and if he has evidence in support of that charge.

Mr. SPROULE. I was only referring to West Huron in reply to the statement made by the hon. Minister of Finance.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Let the hon. gentleman answer the question as to what I have referred to. I understood the charge to be very clearly expressed by him that friends of the Liberal party, in Ottawa at the present time, were raising money for the purpose of sending witnesses required in connection with the inquiry out of the country. Does the hon. gentleman mean to charge that?

Mr. SPROULE. I made my statement; it is in "Hansard," and the hon. gentleman can put what construction he likes upon it.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman will not say whether he intends to make that charge or not.

Mr. SPROULE. I will tell the hon. gentleman what I spoke of. After the election in West Huron the hon. Postmaster General was complimented as the Minister representing the Government who engineered the campaign up there. Preston was there, Smith, the organizer, was there, Bole was there, McDonald was there; they had lots of money; they bought up the constituency, and it is coming out by degrees. Because of that the hon. Postmaster General was complimented, and the question arises as to where the funds came from. I say I believe they came from the same source and were raised directly or indirectly through the same men.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say, while the inquiry is pending before the committee, that members of this Government were guilty of complicity in the corruption that is alleged to have taken place?

Mr. SPROULE. I did not hear what the hon. gentleman said.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman is discussing the West Huron election.

Mr. SPROULE. I am not discussing the West Huron election, I am discussing the West Elgin election, and I mentioned the West Huron election incidentally because it had been referred to by the hon. Minister of Finance.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It does not make any difference as to whether it was done incidentally or not.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. SPROULE. If the hon. gentleman wants to make a speech he may do so after I am done.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) does not want to give way.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. May I be permitted to say, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPROULE. No, no.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. member (Mr. Sproule) has the floor and does not want to give way.

Mr. SPROULE. I would not have mentioned the West Huron affair were it not that the Minister (Mr. Fielding) referred to it, and criticised my hon. friend from York (Mr. Foster) for speaking of it. But we need not have referred to West Huron, for we could have referred to South Ontario and to West Elgin where the same crowd of men were carrying on the same class of work. I stated that I believed they were engineered by the same parties, and I believe still that the money to carry on their operations came largely from the same source. I remember, too, that the Postmaster General was complimented by the "Globe" for his success at the head of that crowd in carrying the elections, and I am justly entitled to believe that there is a connection between the whole crowd, and that in all probability, how they carried on their nefarious work there was not unknown to some members of this Government. That is what I said and I wish it to carry whatever force can attach to it. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) told us that he yet failed to see the first word in the press of the country that reflected upon Mr. Preston. Well, it would seem that the Minister has not lived long in this country. Preston who was engineering the party machine, stood up in the court once, and twelve honest yeomen of Canada swore they would not believe him on his oath. That is the man who is doing the work of the machine, and against whom the Minister of Finance has failed to find one single word. He (Mr. Fielding) told us that he was informed that it was published on the bulletin boards, that Mr. Preston was taking some one into court for making these statements. Well, I can tell the Finance Minister that Mr. Preston is not likely to take any one into court. He would be the last man in the world to attempt that. He had one trial of the courts and that satisfied him. It will be a long time before he goes to the court again, for he fears a repetition of what occurred last time when twelve honest yeoman who knew him well, and had business transactions with him, swore they would not believe Preston under oath. This is the man whom the Finance Minister holds up as an honest man against whom there never was a word said. The indignation of the Minister of Finance in criticising what is said against Preston will be amusing to men who know Preston and his system. The honest Reformers of Canada expected honest government from these gentlemen opposite, but they know they are not getting it, and they are speaking out their minds freely. We saw supporters of this Government turn against them and vote in favour of the resolution of Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper which contains the most specific and direct charges I have ever heard made against Ministers of the Crown in this House or outside of this House.

Mr. BERGERON. Hug the machine.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, hug the machine. The Minister of Finance asked us if we remember anything about the Pacific scandal, and I would ask the Minister, if he remembers what the country did to the party who made these charges, on the first opportunity the country had of dealing with them? What became of the Liberals in 1878, when they thought they had discredited the Conservative party, and when it was said of the Right Hon. Sir John Macdonald that he was gone down like Lucifer never to rise again? Why, Sir, at the very first opportunity, Sir John Macdonald did rise again, and after the people of the country had an experience of five years of the Liberal Government, they accorded them one of the most ignominious defeats that any party ever experienced in this country. And did not the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie tell us when he was leaving public life, that he had to lie on his arms night and day to protect the treasury against his own friends. That was a sad acknowledgment to come from the leader of the Liberal party, who was respected from one end of the country to the other. The Finance Minister talked about honest government to-day but he never mentioned the name of Alexander Mackenzie. I can tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) that the people are sadly disappointed because he and his friends have failed to give them honest government, and I believe that when they appeal to the country they will have a repetition of their Waterloo of 1878. The honest people of Canada will say to them: We took you for honest men judging by your words; we gave you an opportunity of showing your worth and integrity, but in every respect you have disappointed our expectations, and as we did in 1878 we will turn you out of power and keep you in Opposition for eighteen years; we will give you the same schooling as the children of Israel got in the wilderness for forty years.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the House goes into Committee of Supply, I want to ask the Minister of the Interior to give me a little additional information. I have here a return of copies of correspondence with any parties in connection with the granting of permits for the taking of liquor into the Yukon territory. I find that the return is incomplete. I find that there is a letter here on page 438, an application from R. H. Patterson for a permit, and in connection with that application he says that he writes on the advice of Mr. G. R. Maxwell, M.P., and he forwards a letter from Mr. G. R. Maxwell, M.P. The other letters referred to are brought down, but the letter of Mr. Maxwell, which accompanied that of Mr. Patterson's, is not brought down. I would like that letter.

Similarly there is a letter referred to here as from Mr. Copp, M.P., but the letter of Mr. Copp is not here, and I would like a copy of that letter.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. On what pages in the return are those referred to?

Mr. FOSTER. Pages 428, 445, 446, 447 and 490.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I will have them looked up.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, again, I asked for a return on the 26th of June from the Minister of Railways and Canals, with reference to the Michaud-Belanger matter of Trois Pistoles. The order was passed by this House, but it has not yet been brought down, and I would like very much that it should be. The Minister is not here, but I may state that this information is to form the subject of discussion and the sooner it will be brought down the sooner we will get over it. It will be impossible to get through unless we do have these papers.

In order to facilitate business, I want to ask the Minister of Finance to have brought down all the papers in connection with the following votes:—(1) Item No. 23, the payment of Walter Shanley's award to the Hon. J. Snowball. (2) Item 26 in reference to the payment of $211,505 to Messrs. H. Ryan & Co., and (3) Item No. 30, the papers and reports in reference to the payment to Heney & Borthwick of extras. Although we want information on all these items we want this particularly.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They are all in railways?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. And we want the specifications and the tenders for the new wharf at St. John, which the Minister promised to bring down.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I want to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Customs to a motion which I made on the 8th of May last: "for a copy of the commission issued to investigate into the charges made against W. A. Hogg, landing-walter at the port of Collingwood, the evidence taken by the said commission, the report made by the commission, the Order in Council made thereon, and all correspondence and papers in connection therewith." This return has not yet been brought down, and I would ask the hon. Minister to have it brought down as soon as he conveniently can.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). I will take note of the matter and inquire. I dare say it is ready. At any rate, I will see that it is brought down.

Mr. KAULBACH. I desire to solicit information with respect to the trade of the British and the late Spanish West India Islands; but as the right hon. leader of the Government is not in his place, I shall defer it to some other time.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Harbours and Rivers—Manitoba—Lake Manitoba—

Opening of additional outlets to prevent overflow of lake, and maintenance of same at proper level for navigation purposes..... $25,000

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to know exactly what has been done, what is being done, and what the total cost will be?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The appropriation is required to make provision for opening a supplementary outlet consisting of a straight trench or canal about 1,300 feet in length, and the bottom width 200 feet, with side slopes of one foot vertical to one foot horizontal, to be excavated from a point in the line of a half foot depth at normal low water in Lake Manitoba, near the south-west end of the bush road opened between Lake Manitoba and the Fairford mission and Hudson Bay Company's post to a point on the east side of Fairford River, about 1,000 feet below or north-east of its exit from the lake on the east side of Portage Bay. The amount of the contract is $27,500; for superintendence and contingencies, $3,000; making the estimated total cost, $30,500. It is under contract.

Mr. FOSTER. Were tenders asked for this?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, tenders were taken and the lowest accepted.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the general result that will be effected when this $27,000 is spent?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). The purpose of the work referred to is as follows. Lake Manitoba is a shallow lake surrounded by a very swampy country. After a series of wet seasons, the water in the lake rises from one to four feet, and overflows the lower portions of the country known as the north part of the Portage Plain. Miles of the country have been flooded. The floods are very disastrous when a strong north-west wind blows. I may say that for years past this work has been strongly advocated.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the land settled land?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Oh, yes, there are settlers all around, and they have been flooded out year after year. Some have been driven back, in dry seasons, they have returned, and afterwards they have been driven back again. Before the change of Government took place in 1896, the local government had surveys made for this work; but the Department of Public Works here and the local government were unable to agree about the details. I do not know the particular nature of the difficulty that arose between the two Governments. It was some question about the navigation of the lake. I impressed the necessity of the work very strongly on my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works. The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Macdonell) has a more accurate knowledge of the whole matter than I have; but I know that there has been a strong agitation among the settlers to get the work done. The purpose is to make an additional outlet for the river that connects Lake Manitoba and Lake Winnipeg. The main channel is large enough to carry off the water, but the mouth of the river becomes choked up, and the result is that the level of the lake rises. By making an additional channel at the mouth, the water of the lake would be lowered and kept at a permanent level.

Mr. FOSTER. Is this in any way for the purpose of navigation, or is it only for the purpose of drainage?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is to prevent the lands of the settlers being flooded.

Mr. FOSTER. What co-operation is there between the local government and the Dominion Government?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think there is any. The work is being done wholly by the Dominion Government.

Mr. HAGGART. Was there not an amount expended before for deepening the river?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No. There was a survey made in former years, but no work was done.

Mr. HAGGART. But there was another plan for draining the water from Lake Manitoba?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There was another plan, a very much more expensive one. I think it would ultimately have cost $200,000 or $300,000. I did not approve of that.

Mr. HAGGART. Does the Minister remember the difference between the level of Lake Manitoba and the level of the Assiniboine River? I believe that sometimes the waters of Lake Manitoba get so high that they flow over to the Assiniboine River. Does the hon. member know the difference between the levels of the two?

Mr. MACDONELL (Selkirk). The Assiniboine is 14½ feet lower. When a strong north wind blows, and at times of extreme high water, the waters of the lake have overflowed at the south end across the farming country into the Assiniboine River.

Mr. HAGGART. Was it ever considered that it would be better to drain Lake Manitoba of the water that overflows into the Assiniboine River?

Mr. MACDONELL (Selkirk). The channel of the Assiniboine is not now sufficient to carry its own high water. The lands adjoining the Assiniboine River are lower than the immediate banks of the river, and some of these lands are flooded at time of high water, and if the waters of Lake Manitoba were added would be flooded even down to the city of Winnipeg.

Mr. CLANCY. There was a good deal of discussion last year on this same matter. The Minister of Public Works then had no estimate of the cost, and we have now the statement that it is intended for the purpose of draining. Hon. gentlemen opposite are departing from a sound principle, when they undertake to construct works of drainage. In Ontario such works are entirely undertaken by the local municipalities. If the municipalities are unable to undertake the work, it is the duty of the local government to do it, rather than the Dominion. Is there an estimate of the cost, and is it proposed to do the work by tender?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The amount of the contract is $27,500, and the contingencies will bring that amount up to $35,500. The work is under contract, and the contractor is Mr. Lemoine, of Montreal.

Wharf on Lake Winnipeg..... $9,000

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is to construct a wharf on Lake Winnipeg in the Icelandic settlement of Gimli. There was a wharf constructed for another settlement, costing $9,000. This is estimated to cost the same, and will be built on substantially the same plan.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it commenced?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No.

Mr. FOSTER. How is it to be done—by contract?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The other one was done by contract, and no doubt this will be.

Mr. WILSON. How can the hon. gentleman determine what wharfs should be built by the Dominion, and what by the municipalities?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is a navigable water, and it is the practice of the Dominion Government to build wharfs on navigable streams. As regards private enterprise, I presume that in this, as in other cases, if private enterprise would undertake the work, the Government would not.

Mr. MACDONELL (Selkirk). Within a year this will be one of the most important harbours of Lake Winnipeg, the terminus of one of the branch lines of the Canadian Pacific Railway. There is a population in that district of about 3,000.

Mr. WILSON. I never heard of such a thing as the Government building a wharf, or giving any assistance to build a wharf, such as this. The Government will have applications from localities everywhere to build wharfs. If they do it for these people, why not do it for Lennox and other places?

Mr. MCGREGOR. That wharf would be used by the fishermen in that district. Thirty-five steamers ply on the lake, which is most dangerous, and there is no place today in Canada where there are as many fresh fish as in that neighbourhood. Lake Winnipeg abounds with the finest fish in America. There is another reason. These Icelanders are a most industrious and frugal people. No settlers that have come to Canada have made the progress that they have done. They have become Canadians almost at once. They are industrious, and are first-class fishermen and farmers. If there is any way possible to encourage any people in Canada, the Icelanders should get a fair share of that encouragement.

Mr. WILSON. The reasons advanced are very good ones why private enterprise should build such a wharf. Where there is lots of business, wharfs will be built, and, where there is not, they are not needed. It is entirely a new departure for the Dominion Government to build wharfs simply because strangers have settled in a locality. They are doing things for new-comers that they never did for the old settlers.

Mr. MCGREGOR. Some of those settlers have been there for twenty-five years, and have struggled against poverty and many difficulties. I am satisfied, from my knowledge of the country, that this is a good investment for the Dominion to make. It will help those people and encourage business on the lake.

Mr. MACDONELL (Selkirk). Lake Winnipeg is over 300 miles long and 40 to 100 miles wide. This is the second dock the Government have undertaken to build. The population of that country depends very largely upon fish, and there are some thirty-five steamers traversing the lake. There is no point in the Dominion where the Government would be more strongly justified in affording such conveniences and facilities to the people as on Lake Winnipeg.

Mr. CLANCY. Who are the owners of the steamers?

Mr. MACDONELL (Selkirk). Who are they anywhere? They are private individuals.

Mr. BENNETT. Last night the officials of the department informed the Minister that, although to-day they proposed to build at Bruce Mines, an unimportant village, an important dock to cost $15,000, and although they were going to build two more in the same constituency of Algoma, the department could not produce a single instance where they ever built a dock on Georgian Bay. And they were quite right, except for one case, and that was the case of a dock that was built in the same constituency last year at the small village of Thessalon. Now, let the Minister frankly admit that in this there is no line of precedent, so far as Ontario is concerned. The reason for such a vote is simply to help the member for the riding, particularly if he supports hon. gentlemen opposite. Now, all along the shores of the Georgian Bay, at Midland, Collingwood, Parry Sound and other important towns, docks have been constructed; and the Minister was forced to admit that at not one of these points—

Mr. MCGREGOR. But they are dredging all the time.

Mr. BENNETT. Has there been a single dock constructed by the department? The hon. member for North Essex (Mr. McGregor) says, quite truly, that they are dredging at these points. Certainly, and so the Government should dredge. When private enterprise constructs docks, and by the receding of the waters there is too limited a depth of water, it certainly is the duty of the Government to intervene and do the necessary dredging. I do not know anything of the particular circumstances of this, except what has been stated this afternoon; but from what has been stated, it seems to me there is no reason why the grant should be made, having regard to the line of precedent so far as Georgian Bay is concerned. If there are steamboat companies doing business on the lake surely they have docks at the present time. If there are growing places, surely private capital will come in and construct docks. But if this is another case, such as was frankly admitted last night in the case of the Bruce Mines dock, where $15,000 was to be spent in a place of 450 people simply to help the member of the constituency, as the Minister practically confessed was done—

Mr. MACDONELL (Selkirk). Will my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) permit me to make a statement? This work was originally provided for by the previous Government. The grant has not been availed of up to the present time, but the principle of constructing a wharf and the utility of it in the public interest was first declared by hon. gentlemen opposite when they were on the Treasury benches.

Mr. BENNETT. Was the money voted?

Mr. MACDONELL (Selkirk). Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. I do not know the facts, and of course I accept the hon. gentleman's statement. But even though the late Government were prepared to build a dock there, I am not going to admit that it is right, because I do not believe in the principle of a constituency having a dock erected simply to please the people who may reside in the neighbourhood. It will be another matter if they do as has been done in the case of different points on the Georgian Bay, where the people have come and said to the Government: We have so much money and we want to build a dock—and then let it be a question with the department whether they shall assist in the construction of that dock. But no more glaring case could be shown than was shown last night of the construction or intended construction of these three docks in the constituency of Algoma. Of course, I except the docks contemplated in the constituency of the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding). I find I did that hon. gentleman an injustice last night, and I wish to set him right to-day. I pointed out some eight or ten votes for docks to be constructed this year in his constituency. I have since looked over the list, and I see that I did him the injustice of leaving out four others that have been provided for. Of course a Minister is to have docks galore constructed in his county, it is to be expected that the members who support him will look for an extension of the principle to their counties as well. If this is such a case as that of Bruce Mines last night, I, for one, enter my protest against it.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it intended to handle this as a Government wharf, charging tolls and having a public wharfinger?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, in the usual way.

Mr. FOSTER. Of course, the criticism of my hon. friend from Lennox (Mr. Wilson) is perfectly just. There is no doubt that constitutionally and according to the usual practice the Government should look after the navigable watercourses, but it never was contemplated that in the inland navigable waters the Government should provide wharfs. The Government were supposed to see that the navigable watercourses were kept open, and to build any dams or carry on any other works that might be necessary for that purpose. But the building of docks was supposed to be a matter for private enterprise, for the municipalities and the local government. But gradually there came, first, one case and then another, where a grant would be given for some interior lake or river wharf. Take the case referred to by my hon. friend from Lennox—wharfs are not built to the accommodation of business along these lake shores. If any harbour is taken as a harbour of refuge, of course the waterways are deepened and made navigable and whatever is necessary for the protection of the harbour is done. Take the case of the St. John River, a great navigable stream. Until lately the Dominion Government gave no help, and all the wharfs were built by private enterprise assisted by the local government. In my time, examples arose of building wharfs in other places, and I said: The people of the St. John River have as good right as have those of Lake St. John or Lake Winnipeg to these works; and the scheme that was carried out in my time, was, wherever it was found necessary to build a wharf on the St. John River if the local government approved of it and would pay half of the cost the Dominion Government would contribute half. And so there was co-operation between the two Governments, and that is the extent of the small aid which has been given on that large navigable stream. On the river St. Lawrence it has not been the custom of the Government to build these wharfs. Everyone knows to what an interminable length it may go if the Dominion Government provides funds for doing all that private enterprise and the municipalities ought to do—and that they will do in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred if they are allowed to do it. But once you set the example of constructing these works by a strong central Government with a large fund, you will find that the area will widen, and the expense which may be incurred will grow actually alarming. Let it be understood that in passing a vote for a particular locality—and I call the attention of the Minister of Finance to this, the Minister of Public Works is not present—this principle of local aid should be adopted. I think it would be well for the Government to take great care how far they allow themselves to drift in this matter. I know it was a matter that the late Government had many an argument about, and it was my constant endeavour to prevent that line of expenditure from growing. I do not say you cannot find examples—you can. But I think they should rather be exceptions than examples of the rule.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). There is a good deal in what my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) says; no doubt, the practice of constructing local wharfs or piers may be carried to a very dangerous extent. In the little province which I come from there was a clause in the terms of union providing that the Dominion Government should take over the piers—the same clause as applies to the other provinces.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the salt-water piers?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. After the province had entered—
Mr. FOSTER.

ed confederation, a formal demand was made that these piers should be taken over and paid for, and a commission was sent out by the Government to determine what were piers within the meaning of the statute and what were mere local wharfs. I cannot exactly recollect at the moment the principle on which we proceeded. I know one of the principles on which we acted was that no wharfs or piers which were of merely local use, for the local accommodation of the people, should be taken over at all, that it should only be done when the wharf or pier was used for interprovincial and commercial purposes. That was the principle acted upon and the principle we have introduced in our discussion at the Council board on most of those piers and wharfs which are being discussed here. The question is constantly asked: Is this a wharf for local purposes? If so, it must be built by the municipality or by the provincial government. If, on the contrary, it is a large work useful for interprovincial trade, or a large current of trade, then it may be justified as being built by this Government. But I acknowledge that the line is a very shadowy one between the two, and it is a matter that has to be very carefully watched and guarded.

Mr. BENNETT. I would ask the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Macdonell) if the Buffalo Fishing Company are fishing on this lake?

Mr. MACDONELL (Selkirk). To my knowledge there is no private fishing company wharf upon Lake Winnipeg. There may be some temporary landings, but they are very small, because the shore line is deep in places. At the south end of the lake that is not the case. The lake shelves out gradually to a shallow beach, and you probably go out 600 to 1,000 feet before you can reach water deep enough for a steamer to come up to a dock. The former practice has been for steamers to run in as close to the shore as possible, and use small boats to land passengers and freights. With reference to the initiation of this policy of which my hon. friend has spoken, the first dock on Lake Winnipeg was built by hon. gentlemen opposite when they occupied the Treasury benches; and there was not one-tenth the justification in the public interest for the construction of that dock that there is for the present dock. So that, as far as the principle is concerned, of the construction of the present dock, I cannot see that my hon. friends opposite have anything to complain of.

North-west Territories—

General repairs and improvements to harbour, river and bridge works, including approaches..... $5,000

Mr. FOSTER. Will the Minister tell us where this sum is to be expended?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is required for general repairs and works in the North-west Territories under the control of the Public Works Department. I have here the details of the expenditure last year. The practice, I am told, is to take an annual vote for this purpose.

Mr. FOSTER. That is a very convenient way of estimating. The department should know for what it wants the money, what works require to be repaired, and it should have from its officers the necessary estimates for repairs, and then you could now tell Parliament what you want the money for. I think the preferable way would be to have your officers throughout the North-west send in their reports as to what repairs are necessary and the cost.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I understand that in the case of large and important works a special vote is taken. The practice is to take a small vote for small repairs which are not foreseen, but which are likely to arise at any time.

Public Works—British Columbia—
Columbia River—Improvements above
Golden ..... $4,000

Mr. PRIOR. What are the improvements?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This money is required to continue the improvements of the Columbia River above Golden, to dredge a portion of the river where the recent revival of mining development has caused a considerable trade, and where steamers are now running.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it taking out rock or taking out drift?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The work consists in repairing and extending dams in order to confine the river to the main channel.

Mr. FOSTER. Will this finish the work which is necessary to allow boats to run up?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, it will not finish it.

Mr. FOSTER. While taking sums of money to the extent of $15,000 for Bruce Mines and the like of that, does not the department think that in a case of that kind it is better to have a sufficient amount of money to complete the business? The country is opening up there, and it is becoming very important from a mining point of view, and it seems to me the best thing to do would be to take a sufficient sum of money to make that really navigable, and to finish it at once instead of doing it by driblets.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The difficulty is that with the facilities available for dredging, it would be difficult to use the money any more rapidly. If we had a larger vote we could not use it.

Columbia River—

Improvements on narrows between Upper and Lower Arrow Lakes..... $3,000

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is to make provision for carrying on dredging operations during the fiscal year. The estimated cost of the proposed work is $25,000, made up as follows: Construction of a stern-wheel dredge, $15,000; running expenses of the dredge, $6,000; material, wire, iron and timber for mattress work, $4,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Where is that work to be done, particularly?

Mr. BOSTOCK. This work is to be done in what is called the Narrows on the Columbia River between the Upper and Lower Arrow Lake. Work of this kind has been done for a number of years now, and has greatly improved the channel. The object of the work is to enable steamers to run all the year round between Robson and Arrow Head on the Canadian Pacific Railway. The difficulty has been to shipping in winter in the low water. The water gets so low that steamers have great difficulty in getting up. Last year Mr. Roy, engineer of the Public Works Department, drove in piles and did work there which greatly improved navigation, and now it is necessary to have this dredging done to keep the channel in proper shape.

Mr. FOSTER. I am awfully afraid that the machinery will absorb nine-tenths of the money, and that the real work that is to be done will be the minimum. A dredge is expensive. For that there is to be an initial outlay of $15,000, and then there is the running expenses of the dredge. What I see is the disparity between the large expense for machinery and the small amount that is put on the river.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. You could not dredge without machinery.

Mr. FOSTER. I have a great suspicion about these Government dredges. I never believed in them; I do not believe in them now, and I do not believe I will ever believe in them. I believe that they are perfect moths of expenditure. I believe that far more would be done for the river interests of the country if the whole amount of the money were put in the actual work. The answer to that is that somebody must provide the machinery. My answer to that is that Government machinery for this machinery is far more expensive than if it were in private hands. If any one will take the trouble to look through the accounts, from year to year, showing the whole dredging operations under the superintendence of the Government, he will be simply astonished by the immense amount of money that goes into the organization and maintenance generally of this work. I believe private individuals would be found to do the work far more cheaply. However, the hon. Minister of Public Works has satisfied himself that dredges he must have; and dredges are being built and will be built. Has there been taken into consideration the improvement of the navigation from Robson down to Trail, so as to permit boats to run the whole distance? Is that possible?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That has not been dealt with in this estimate.

Mr. PRIOR. It seems to me that this vote is not exactly in order. Why does the hon. gentleman take $15,000 in this vote for dredging plant? It seems to me that new dredging plant should go under the head of dredging plant. I see on the next page an item of $60,000 for dredging plant. Fifteen thousand dollars does not seem to be sufficient to make a good dredge, and if it were put in the other vote, and not under the head of dredging, as in this item, we would understand it better.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There may be something in my hon. friend's criticism that this vote should be under the head of dredging. It is not a material point as it does not affect the merits of the vote.

Mr. FOSTER. Why should you have a distinction at all? This is not for work, it is for dredging plant.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The officers of the department inform me that they have followed the form of the estimate that has been adopted for some time. There is no novelty in it, although there is something to be said in favour of consolidating the votes under one head. In regard to the main question as to the utility of Government dredges, the hon. gentleman's colleagues, charged with that matter, must have been under the impression that Government dredges are useful and economical, otherwise they would have changed their policy in that regard.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the main point was that they had them and they could not get rid of them.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If that were so, they would not have got more. The officials assure me that, after careful inquiry, there is no doubt that Government dredges are cheaper. I am inclined to think that if we were to abolish Government dredges, we would find that the work would not be effectually performed.

Mr. WILSON. I do not think it is fair to charge to one work the whole cost of a dredge, as it is proposed under this vote. I think that when we come to have a dredge built it should be built out of the regular vote for that purpose. In this case you are going to pay $15,000 for a dredge, and a small balance for the work. I think we ought to know what we are paying for the dredging, so that we will know whether we are getting value or not.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am so impressed with the criticism of the hon. gentleman that I have suggested to the officials that, in future, they separate their vote for dredging plant from dredging work.

Fraser River—

Improvement of ship channel..... $25,000

Mr. PRIOR. Is that below New Westminster?

Mr. MORRISON. Yes.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is to continue the improvement of the ship channel of the Fraser River, and to protect the banks from further erosion. The estimated cost of the work is $156,000. The expenditure on the Fraser River during the last year was $49,997. The total expenditure, extending over many years, is $402,149.

Mr. FOSTER. What may be said generally as to the permanent result of an expenditure of nearly half a million dollars?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The officials inform me that a very considerable portion of the old works are gone and that the results have not been as satisfactory as were hoped for. Still, I suppose, we will be obliged to go on and construct new ones.

Mr. FOSTER. On the same plan?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The old work was pile work and they are now making brush mattress work.

Mr. PRIOR. Was not the resident engineer, Mr. Roy, engaged for the last year making a plan for the improvement of the whole of the river to keep the banks from wearing away, as well as to protect the channel?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I believe that the engineer has prepared some plans in that connection, but unfortunately, they were all burnt up in the New Westminster fire.

Mr. FOSTER. No one doubts that the Fraser River ought to be looked after. It is not a general commercial river, but it is a river out of which a great deal of most valuable lumber goes. Nobody criticises the expenditure of an amount of money that will make it navigable, but when, after an expenditure of nearly half a million dollars in the last fifteen years, speaking plainly, one year carries away what has been done in the preceding year—they may vary in a year, but you take a few years' operations, and it has been stated that it would be taken away, and you would have to go through the same operation again and again—I think it would be for the department to inquire whether or not these plans would be the best for the improvement of that river. Although I do not want to say anything against the ability of our Public Works Department in that respect, I think the circumstances of this case would justify us in getting the very best advice we can in this country, or in this world for that matter. Otherwise, if you go on with this business from year to year, you will be spending your thirty or forty thousand dollars a year, and you will have no better results than you have now. It may be that this is a very difficult river to put into permanent shape, but that is all the greater reason why means should be taken to get the very best expert opinion and proceed upon the basis of permanence. You may have to spend a larger amount of money to do it, but if you can get it done, and it will stay done, you will save money in the long run.

Mr. MORRISON. I am very pleased that the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) has spoken on the necessity for an expert examination of the Fraser River. The Minister of Public Works in 1897 went up the river, and he formed exactly the opinion which, apparently, the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) has: that a great deal of money had been expended on the conservancy of the river, and that a great deal of money would necessarily have to be expended from year to year, if the then existing system were to be continued. The Minister (Mr. Tarte) at once took steps to have a special survey of the river made. The river was then under the jurisdiction of the agent of the Public Works Department, Mr. Gamble, and the Minister appointed a special engineer to make a special survey and to traverse this river from its source to its mouth. A corps of competent engineers was employed upon that work, and they were getting their notes in line and their plans were about finished, when, unfortunately, the whole thing went up in smoke in the New Westminster fire, although these plans were put in a presumably fire-proof vault. The intention of the Minister was to have these plans submitted to the best available experts. I suppose, until the engineers get their notes together again and ready to be submitted to expert engineers, nothing can be done towards suggesting what other system can be followed. The river banks are alluvial deposit, very susceptible to erosion, and the practice has been to try to prevent the erosion by sinking mattresses, but the floods would come, and, by the time the next appropriation would be made, these mattresses would be covered with silt and one thing and another, and so there was found great difficulty. The Fraser River is a commercial river, and the revenue last year from New Westminster alone, on the one item of salmon licenses, amounted to as much, if not more, than the appropriation for this work. This year the revenue from salmon licenses alone will double the amount that has been appropriated.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not mean to state that the Fraser was not a commercial river, for I knew of its lumber and fisheries.

Mr. MORRISON. Quite so. But I wish to mention that lumber is only one item, and that the revenue from fishery licenses exceeds this appropriation, which is a very small amount indeed. I again express my satisfaction at the ex-Minister of Finance appreciating the necessity for some expert examination of this river, and I trust that when the time shall come to discuss this matter in the House, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) will give it his hearty support.

Mr. FOSTER. Most certainly, I will support that.

Kootenay River ..... $5,000

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This will be spent chiefly in increasing the depth of water, so as to give navigation during eight months, instead of, as at present, five months.

Mr. FOSTER. How much was spent last year for the same kind of work?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Two thousand two hundred and eighty-seven dollars.

Mr. FOSTER. That is not enough.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am glad to hear my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) say that.

Mr. FOSTER. If you take $10,000 from the Bruce Mines vote and put it on the Kootenay River, you will be doing more public good.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am beginning to think my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) is interested in the Kootenay.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, I am interested in it for the development of the country. I have no money interest in it, but I have travelled over it, and I believe it is perhaps the most difficult piece of river navigation in the Dominion of Canada.

William's Head Quarantine Station..... $4,000

Mr. PRIOR. I do not see the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) in the House just now, but whilst we are on this quarantine matter, I wish to mention that I hear the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) is likely to make a tour in British Columbia this year. If he does, I would suggest that he should take Dr. Montizambert, the head of the quarantine service, with him. I have two or three letters from friends out there, suggesting that the Minister should bring Dr. Montizambert with him, as the people there are nervous about the danger on the Pacific coast of the Bubonic Plague and other Asiatic diseases being introduced. They would like to have the expert opinion of Dr. Montizambert as to whether all is being done that can be done to safeguard the health of the people in British Columbia. I trust the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) will convey this request to his colleague the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher).

Before this vote passes I have some remarks to make in reference to the fact that so far as I can see there is nothing in either the main Estimates or the supplementary Estimates for the harbour of Victoria. I am very much disappointed indeed to see this neglect on the part of the Government, because my colleague and I have made application to the department for some work in that harbour that is necessary, and we would like to know what the reason is that there is no vote in the Estimates. I know that it is late in the session to make any lengthened remarks, but I cannot sit in my place without raising my voice when I see the constituency which I have the honour to represent neglected in this manner. Since this Government came into power, I do not know that a single dollar has been put in the Estimates for the harbour of Victoria. When the Conservatives were in power there was a little work done in that harbour—not as much as should have been done, but still we managed to get a little.

Mr. MILLS. Follow Bethune, and you will get it.

Mr. PRIOR. I do not know what the reason is, but last night when the committee was voting money for wharfs and breakwaters in Nova Scotia, the hon. Minister of Finance made this remark:

As to the political side of the case, it is quite true that there should be no distinction, but that wherever these works are required they ought to be constructed.

I quite agree with the hon. gentleman as to what should be done, but he went on to say:

But I suppose there is a little human nature in party politics.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Read on.

Mr. PRIOR. I will read on:

It is alleged that during all the years the Conservative party were in power, they gave a preference to counties represented by their friends. I do not discuss how far that is correct. If it is so, and for a time some of the counties that were overlooked received a little consideration, perhaps, in course of time, matters will be evened up.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is good logic.

Mr. PRIOR. It may be, from your standpoint. But I do hope sincerely that that is not the reason the Minister of Public Works has neglected the harbour of Victoria. If it is, I can say most emphatically and most distinctly that it will not work. The people of Victoria are not going to be starved into subjection to the wishes of the Minister of Public Works. They have a little more independence than that. I can hardly believe that this is the reason. If there was no work needed in the harbour of Victoria, I should be the last man in the world to ask for money to be expended there; but with a harbour of that importance and the amount of shipping there is there, it is disgraceful that the Government cannot afford to spend $10,000 or $15,000 or $20,000 on that harbour. I firmly believe that if British Columbia had justice done to her by having a representative in the Cabinet, such neglect would never have taken place, because there would have been some one to watch the Estimates when they were put through Council, and he would have made his voice heard on behalf of his province. It cannot be because no business is done in the harbour of Victoria, for before I sit down I will give the House some figures showing the amount of shipping and the amount of business done in British Columbia, and in the port of Victoria in particular. I am sorry the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Ross Robertson) is not here, because some time ago I saw a little article in the paper he owns, the "Evening Telegram," which stated that Victoria was asleep six days in the week. Well, I think the House will agree with me, when it hears the statistics that I shall read, that it is a good thing for the country if that is the case, because if Victoria worked seven days in the week instead of one the rest of the country would have very little business left it to do. Now, I do not wish to be sectional or to run down the rest of the Dominion. I do not wish to see the votes for other provinces reduced; but I do say that British Columbia should have a share. I am not sectional myself, but I think the Government is showing its sectionalism in the present Estimates. In looking over them, we see that millions on millions are expended everywhere except in British Columbia, and that there is practically nothing for the port of Victoria. Yesterday we saw that the province of Nova Scotia had votes for no less than 91 wharfs and breakwaters, aggregating nearly $250,000, while a very few thousand dollars are granted to the whole of British Columbia, although the shipping of that province in sea-going vessels, both inwards and outwards, as you will see, is far larger than that of the province of Nova Scotia. I find from the blue-books that the province of British Columbia heads the list. The figures are as follows:—

Province.	Tons.
British Columbia .....	3,833,906
Quebec .....	3,477,253
Nova Scotia .....	3,294,358
New Brunswick .....	1,837,837
Prince Edward Island.....	142,145

Now, let us look at the tonnage of sea-going vessels, both inwards and outwards, for the different ports :

	Tons.
Montreal .....	2,181,148
Victoria .....	1,914,672
Halifax .....	1,239,478
Quebec .....	1,066,312
St. John, N.B.....	997,165
Vancouver, B.C.....	835,573
Nanaimo, B.C.....	717,119

From these figures we see that the shipping of Montreal is only about 1½ per cent more than that of Victoria, or 266,476 tons. The sea-going shipping of Victoria is 50 per cent more than that of Halifax, and that of the city of Quebec is only a little more than half of that of Victoria.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). Would my hon. friend permit me to ask him whether in these figures he includes all the lines that go and come, such as the Canadian Pacific ?

Mr. PRIOR. I include all that is given in the Trade and Navigation Returns.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The hon. gentleman is just giving the gross amount of the tonnage in and out ?

Mr. PRIOR. Yes, the sea-going tonnage in and out. We find that although the shipping of Quebec is only a little more than half that of Victoria, a loan of over $3,000,000 has been made to Quebec, and that port now owes the Government over $1,000,000 in interest and the loan as well, whereas Victoria cannot get the expenditure of even $15,000. The next statistics I will give to the House are the customs duties, exports and imports, by provinces in 1897-98 :

CUSTOMS DUTIES.

British Columbia .....	$2,215,899
Nova Scotia .....	1,249,524
New Brunswick .....	918,594
Prince Edward Island.....	136,993

Of this sum of $2,215,899 paid by British Columbia, $1,078,611 was paid by the port of Victoria.

EXPORTS.

British Columbia .....	$16,919,717
New Brunswick .....	11,166,218
Nova Scotia .....	10,930,936
Prince Edward Island .....	1,389,674

IMPORTS.

British Columbia .....	$8,690,263
Nova Scotia .....	6,949,216
New Brunswick .....	4,925,662
Prince Edward Island.....	486,681

Of this $8,690,263 imported to British Columbia, we find that $3,460,164 came into the port of Victoria—a port that must be held in very low estimation by the Government if they cannot spend a few dollars on improvements there. You see from that table that British Columbia imports were one-third more than those of New Brunswick and twice as much as those of Nova Scotia.

Just to show how the trade of the province is increasing, let me give you the exports, imports and the customs duties paid in 1888, 1893 and 1898. The exports from British Columbia were :

In 1888 .....	$ 3,928,077
1893 .....	6,574,989
1898 .....	16,919,871

showing an increase in 1898 of 257 per cent over 1893 and 430 per cent over 1888. The imports from British Columbia were :

In 1888 .....	$3,509,951
1893 .....	6,358,976
1898 .....	8,690,263

or an increase of 37 per cent over 1893 and 119 per cent over 1888. The customs duties paid were as follows :

1888 .....	$ 861,465
1893 .....	1,412,878
1898 .....	2,213,593

or an increase of 56 per cent over 1893 and 157 per cent over 1888. And this year, 1899, the increase will be much larger. Excise and post office revenues in 1897-98 show the following returns in the different provinces. The Excise is as follows :

British Columbia .....	$421,711
New Brunswick .....	210,289
Nova Scotia .....	173,403
Prince Edward Island.....	52,694

We find from these statistics that British Columbia paid in 1897-98 twice as much Excise as New Brunswick, which paid the largest amount of the other three provinces.

The post office, gross postal revenue, in 1897-98, shows the following results :—

Nova Scotia.....	$346,985
British Columbia .....	247,282
New Brunswick .....	237,757
Prince Edward Island.....	47,548

I have a statement here that I went to a great deal of trouble in working out. I did the same some years ago, and some hon. gentlemen said it was not a fair comparison of the amount paid by the different provinces per head into the revenue, because Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick used a great deal of goods on which the duties were paid in Ontario and Quebec. But that also applies to British Columbia, for British Columbia uses a great many goods on which the duties are paid in these two provinces.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. To the same extent ?

Mr. PRIOR. I think so. British Columbia does not now import anything like the amount of goods from England that she used to in comparison to her imports from other countries. In this list I have taken everything that I could possibly divide up among the different provinces—customs,

Chinese immigration, excise, post office, revenues from public works, revenue from minor public works, canals, casual, fines and forfeitures, mariner's fund, electric light inspection, steamboat inspection, gas inspection, weights and measures, cullers' fees, penitentiaries and fisheries. The total revenue from all these sources received by the Dominion in 1897-98 from all the provinces amounts to $35,733,610.24. I have left out altogether, railways, $3,313,847.10; ordnance lands, premiums, discount and exchange, $191,559.52; superannuation fund, $45,643; Dominion lands, $975,792.34, because I could not divide them up.

The total revenue contributed by each province during 1897-98, the population of each province, and the amount contributed per head, is shown by the following statements :

Province.	Revenue.	Population.	Per Head.
Ontario .....	$14,002,206 30	2,261,500	6·19
Quebec .....	13,296,002 15	1,590,094	8·36
Nova Scotia...	1,815,430 23	457,663	3·96
N. Brunswick.	1,409,819 32	321,285	4·39
P. E. Island..	244,174 29	109,215	2·23
Manitoba and N. W. T.....	1,911,958 06	380,000	5·03
B. Columbia...	3,054,019 89	161,451	18·91
Total .....	$35,733,610 24	5,281,208	6·76

These figures for population I got from the Statistician, Mr. Johnston, who said they were just the same as had been given to the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Customs, on which to base their calculations at the beginning of the session.

Mr. MILLS. How much revenue on the Chinese ?

Mr. PRIOR. I will give the hon. gentleman that if he wishes. The Chinese tax in British Columbia amounted to $80,202.

If any hon. gentleman thinks that the division I have made is not a fair one, I will give him the amount paid per head by the whole population of Canada, excluding British Columbia, and I find that that is $6.38. That takes in Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, Manitoba and the Northwest. Taking the revenue and dividing it by the population in those provinces, I get a per capita payment of $6.38. That is just one-third what the people of the province of British Columbia pay into the Dominion treasury, and of the amount they pay, over $3,000,000, I defy any hon. gentleman to show that the Government pays more than half that back again in the shape of public works or subsidies or anything else. So that you see British Columbia is gradually being bled to the tune of some $1,500,000 per year for which she gets no return.

In 1898 I find that the amount of coal raised in British Columbia was 1,135,865 tons. Her lode mines gave 6,529,420 tons, and you will realize what a tremendous increase that is when I tell you that in 1890 only 4,000 tons were produced. Therefore, the production of the lode mines has increased from 4,000 tons in 1890 to 6,529,420 tons in 1898.

Mr. PRIOR.

The lumber cut increased 19,000,000 feet over 1897. Yet, we find, when we make application to this Government for a small sum to be expended on improvements in dredging, in removing rock from the port of Victoria, the capital of the province, we cannot get one dollar. Neither has the Government seen fit to give a province of that importance, a growing province—for it is a growing time in British Columbia—a representative in the Cabinet. I consider, as everybody in British Columbia does, that this is manifestly unjust to British Columbia. It is not even decent treatment.

It being Six o'clock, the Deputy Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. PRIOR. When you left the Chair at six o'clock, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I had been attempting to show how necessary it was that the Government should give a proper expenditure to British Columbia, and should also give that province representation in the Cabinet. When the late Government was in power, they saw fit to give British Columbia a representative in the Cabinet, and I cannot see any reason why the present Government should not do so. The interests of British Columbia are to-day much larger, and she is even more entitled to representation than she was then. Surely, it is not because the Ministry cannot find anybody to take the position. They have gentlemen representing British Columbia constituencies on their side of the House—four of them—any one of whom, I think, would make a good representative. I would ask : What is the matter with the hon. member for Yale and Cariboo (Mr. Bostock) ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He's all right.

Mr. PRIOR. He is all right, as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) remarks. He would be a most useful member, I think. He owns about the whole of the press in British Columbia. He is a man of wealth. Any one who knows him, I am sure, will say he is a man of good personal appearance. I do not see why they cannot satisfy his longings, and take him in. If rumour speaks true, he would not be averse to it. Then, there is the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Morrison), a gentleman who is learned in the law, and who would be able to keep some of his colleagues straight, if they were inclined to run out of the right groove. The hon. member for Burrard (Mr. Maxwell) has had his character given to the House by the Premier lately, so I need say nothing more about him. The hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. McInnes) would be most tractable. When he came into this House, he started with a great flourish of trumpets, but the interviews he has had with members of the Cabinet have toned him down, until now he is quite amenable to the party whip. I have here a list of the Cabinet, as it is composed to-day. I find that there are seventeen Ministers—that is, sixteen and the Solicitor General. I find that Quebec has six Ministers and the Solicitor General—or, rather, had, for Quebec has just lost one of her representatives, a man, I take this opportunity of saying, whom Canada could ill afford to lose. Ontario has five representatives, Nova Scotia two, New Brunswick one, Prince Edward Island one, and Manitoba and the North-west Territories one.

Now, I think that British Columbia is entitled to representation in the Cabinet on every ground you can bring forward. In the first place, her distance from the capital is, I think, a great reason why she should have a representative in the Cabinet who is thoroughly au fait with the province, who knows exactly its wants and can place those wants before his colleagues in the Council. The interests of British Columbia include mining, lumbering and fishing, which makes her totally different from Manitoba and the North-west. So, although some gentlemen may say that the Minister of the Interior represents British Columbia, I say it is impossible for him to do so. Let us take any ground of comparison—customs, shipping, imports, exports, excise, post office revenue, revenue per capita and population. If we take sea-going shipping as a standard, if Quebec is entitled to seven members in the Cabinet, British Columbia is entitled to seven. Judged by our customs receipts, if Nova Scotia is entitled to two members in the Cabinet, British Columbia, from the amount she pays, is entitled to four; if Prince Edward Island is entitled to one, British Columbia is entitled to eighteen. On the basis of exports, if New Brunswick is entitled to one, British Columbia is entitled to one; if Prince Edward Island is entitled to one, British Columbia is entitled to fifteen. Now, let us take imports as a ground of comparison. On this basis, if Nova Scotia ought to have two representatives in the Cabinet, British Columbia ought to have nearly three; and if New Brunswick ought to have one, British Columbia ought to have two; while, if Prince Edward Island is entitled to one, British Columbia is entitled to seventeen. Then, take excise. On this basis, if New Brunswick is entitled to one member in the Cabinet, British Columbia is entitled to two; if Nova Scotia is entitled to two, British Columbia is entitled to four; and, if Prince Edward Island is entitled to one, British Columbia is entitled to eight. If we judge by the total revenue from post office, then, if we should give New Brunswick one member in the Cabinet, we should give British Columbia one; and, if we give Prince Edward Island one, British Columbia should be represented by seven. On the basis of revenue per capita, if Ontario is entitled to four representatives, British Columbia is entitled to fifteen; and, if Quebec is entitled to six, British Columbia is entitled to thirteen. On this basis, if Nova Scotia should have two representatives in the Cabinet, British Columbia should have nine; if New Brunswick should have one, British Columbia should have nearly four; and, if Prince Edward Island should have one, British Columbia should have nearly eight. If representation in the Cabinet is to be proportioned to population, and Prince Edward Island is entitled to one member, British Columbia is entitled to between one and two. So, I think that it will be plain to the House that, on any ground of comparison that may be taken, British Columbia is entitled to at least one representative in the Cabinet. Before the last election, in 1896, the Liberals of British Columbia for years had been very busy calling the Conservative Government to account for not giving British Columbia a representative in the Cabinet. I desire to quote an article from the "Times" newspaper, of Victoria, the Liberal organ, owned by a gentleman who was three times rejected by the people of Victoria, and because the people did not want him as a representative, the Government put him in a higher House. I find that on the 29th July, 1895, after the "News-Advertiser," a Conservative organ in British Columbia, had been writing some letters about Cabinet representation, the "Times" said:

One very important fact which the "News-Advertiser" chooses to ignore is that the system which he deprecates has already been adopted as regards all parts of the country except British Columbia. No impartial man can look at the Cabinet and say honestly that the "territorial distribution of offices" is not already in force everywhere to the east of the Rockies. It is a notorious fact that Mr. Daly was taken into the Cabinet because he represented a Manitoba district, and not because of his personal fitness. Senator Ferguson was made a Cabinet Minister without portfolio simply and solely to give Prince Edward Island representation. If any one of the four provinces, Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, were represented in Parliament by a brainless band of noodles, still at least one of those noodles would be found a seat in the Cabinet on the "territorial" principle. This "territorial" rule has already been adopted; if it is the wrong one, as the "Advertiser" contends, our contemporary should demand its abandonment; if, on the other hand, it is right, British Columbia is most unjustly treated in being left out in its operation. We suppose the "News-Advertiser" is aware of the inference which its arguments imply, that all the British Columbia representatives are inferior in point of ability to all the present Cabinet Ministers. That estimate is not very flattering, coming from a professed friend. If it is to be taken as correct, then the sooner British Columbia sets about improving the character of its representatives the better.

Then, in regard to the "News-Advertiser" also, it says:

It is beside the fact, as we have shown, to talk against establishing the principle of "geographical distribution." The principle is already established in all parts of the country except British Columbia, while those who know the facts understand quite clearly that if the rule had not already been established, the situation of this province would require for it exceptional treatment in the other direction. British Columbians' interests have been grossly maltreated in the absence of a Cabinet representative—a fact which the "News-Advertiser" cannot gainsay.

The hon. gentleman who owns this paper used to speak very strongly in those days against the Government for not giving Cabinet representation to British Columbia. But since his own party went into power, not one word has his paper said in regard to the matter, and not one word has he said to try to get the Government to give British Columbia representation. In fact, in the same article I find this:

Our Vancouver contemporary, like Rip Van Winkle, has the happy faculty of dropping off to sleep and remaining undisturbed by current events.

That is what has happened to the hon. gentleman himself, I think. Then, also, in another place, I find that the hon. gentleman who was then a Senator for British Columbia and who is now at Government House, spoke as follows on the 4th of July, 1895:—

It is a downright shame to leave them unrepresented, and I can assure you the people will not submit to it any longer. That is pretty strong language to make use of, but I can tell hon. gentlemen that such a feeling exists in British Columbia, that they will not submit to it, and probably when another election takes place this House and the Government will realize the fact. I care not, as I said before, whether it is a Liberal or a Conservative Government is in power. We want to have a representative in the Cabinet that we can hold responsible, and that we can appeal to, and see that he carries out or tries to carry out what is in the best interest of that particular province. That is the object we have in view. I feel it; every British Columbian feels—no matter whether he is a Liberal or a Conservative—that we have been badly used.

That is what was stated by the Senator for British Columbia who is now Lieutenant Governor of British Columbia, and whose son sits in this House. I have not heard the hon. gentleman for Vancouver (Mr. McInnes), following the example of his august father, saying one word since he came here in favour of representation being given to that province. This is about all I am going to say upon the subject. I think I have made out a good case; I think I have shown that it behooves the Government to give British Columbia representation in the Cabinet. Even if hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House from British Columbia choose to keep their mouths closed for fear of offending the party which they support, I do not intend to sit in silence and see this injustice done. I take this occasion to enter my most empathic and earnest protest against this studied neglect of British Columbia, both in regard to expenditure on public works and also in regard to that province not being represented in the Cabinet.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I would like to ask what work in Victoria did my hon. friend (Mr. Prior) desire to have done? I do not think he mentioned it.

Mr. PRIOR. No, I did not, because I felt that the hon. gentlemen or his colleagues would have known from the report of the engineer. If the engineer has not reported, he should have reported. There is dredging required, because it silts up, and a good deal of rock to be taken out from the bottom of the harbour to increase the depth. There is a lot of dredging required in the outer harbour also.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I asked the question of the hon. gentleman in order that I might just remind him that the work of dredging which he desires us to do would be enormously expensive, although I would not say, for that reason, that it should not be done. But to do effective work, on the lines suggested by the hon. member for Victoria, would cost a large sum of money indeed, and the Government would not feel able, in view of the already, as some persons say, large amount of the Estimates, to make an immediate advance in that direction. But if the port of Victoria is as important as the hon. gentleman thinks it is, and I am not going to dispute his statement, I think that the Government would be disposed to do what is necessary. I regret that the hon. gentleman has discussed the question of Cabinet representation from a provincial stand-point. I had thought that we were gradually getting away from the idea of provincialism in regard to Cabinet representation. At the time of the union it was inevitable that the provinces should be represented when there were so many interests to be considered, and it must be a considerable time before we can get away from the provincial idea, but I think we ought all to look forward to the time when the spirit of unity will have made such an advance that we will not be talking so much about the idea of representation of particular provinces. If that cannot be done, then all the advance in the direction of unity we have been talking about is a delusion. I think that although we have to recognize provincial interests, the time is coming when a representative taken from one province will have the respect and confidence of another province. However, we have to recognize provincial interests, and it is not surprising that British Columbia thinks it ought to have representation in the Cabinet. My hon. friend will permit me to remind him that it was 25 years after British Columbia was taken into confederation, and during which time British Columbia gave an almost unanimous support to the Conservative party before the Conservative Government gave British Columbia representation. Yet the hon. gentleman thinks that a Liberal Government should instantly give representation in the Cabinet to that province. The hon. gentleman will remember that he sat in this House from 1888 to 1896, and he occupied a seat as a member for British Columbia during all these years before he was called to be a member of the Cabinet. The hon. gentleman pays his fellow-members on the Liberal side from British Columbia a compliment when he tells them that, in the very first Parliament in which they have sat, they are worthy of taking their place in the Cabinet. That is a compliment paid to the hon. members for British Columbia which they well deserve, but when the hon. gentleman remembers the years he served in the ranks before he was elevated to a Cabinet position, he may be more moderate in his demands. I am not disposed for a moment, to quarrel with what the hon. gentleman has said regarding British Columbia. I am not disposed to dispute the statistics that he gave, although I think they are open to criticism, but instead of disputing them, I prefer to recognize the fact that British Columbia is a great and growing province, and that the future of the Dominion is going to be largely built up by the development of the mining resources of that great province. The hon. gentleman will find, in regard to Cabinet representation and all other things that British Columbia desires, that with a little patience, the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) will be prepared to give the utmost consideration and fair-play to that great and growing province. Though some of the statistics that the hon. gentleman quoted are open to criticism, I prefer not to criticise them, but I join with him as warmly as I can and I wish to congratulate British Columbia upon the progress it has made and upon the prospects before it, and, I think, that with a little patience he will find that the claims of that province will be recognized.

Mr. PRIOR. Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) has said that because British Columbia was left twenty-five years without Cabinet representation, that is a good reason why we should still continue to do without it. To give one first is a very different thing to cutting off one. The hon. gentleman knows that when they came into power British Columbia had a representative in the Cabinet, and they left that province out in the cold. They might just as well have left Prince Edward Island out, indeed it is less important than British Columbia. Then, again, with reference to the expenditure, the hon. gentleman says the estimate was so big that they thought they could not put anything down for Victoria harbour.

They might just as well make that excuse apply to any other province.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. British Columbia is getting its fair share.

Mr. PRIOR. It is not getting its fair share. With regard to the provincial idea, the hon. gentleman says it ought to be done away with, and that a good man should be chosen no matter where he comes from. Well, apply that argument to Nova Scotia and New Brunswick who are as tenacious to have their own men in the Cabinet as they can be, and the same with Ontario and Quebec. I think it will be a long time before those provinces will be willing to give up their representatives.

Harbours and Rivers generally..... $5,000

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is the usual general vote, and the sum is the usual sum. It is for services which are not particularly specified, and is called for to cover during the fiscal year amounts required for travelling expenses, instruments, &c., which cannot be conveniently charged against any one in particular of the general appropriations for repairs in each province. There is a memorandum here of the expenditure last year amounting to $4,949. The items are: Travelling expenses, $952; services, $517; stationery and printing, $2,302; instruments, $642; sundries, $152; telegrams, $323; compensation for damage to barge, $60.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that not an odd kind of vote to have amongst expenditures on harbours and rivers, not a single cent of which has gone into the improvement of a single harbour or river in the Dominion. It is simply a vote used for contingencies. That vote has been had from time to time. I remember that for two or three years I was able to cut that vote out, because I thought it was not a vote which ought to be there in that capacity. I do not object to travelling expenses, instruments, &c., being paid for, but the vote ought to show what you are going to do with it. Anybody taking the public accounts of the expenditures believes that money is spent in the improvement of harbours and rivers, or things that are unprovided for by special votes, but in reality it is to pay for whatever the Minister chooses to pay in the way of telegrams, extra expenses and clerical work, instruments, &c.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think the hon. gentleman is slightly mistaken when he says there was a vote of that kind, and that he got rid of it. There was another vote of a miscellaneous character that he did drop out; but this vote, I am advised, is a continuing vote for years. I do not quite agree that there is any impropriety in it. Everybody knows that to build harbours, one requires to pay for travelling expenses of engineers, to purchase instruments, and there are various incidental expenses of that kind.

Mr. FOSTER. For every work that you are building, you should charge against that particular work its proportion of the engineering expenses, instruments or whatever you may choose, but this is a general vote for contingencies.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In that branch of the service only. The vote has been going on for a good many years in this way. Would the hon. gentleman have me transfer it to the contingent account of the department?

Mr. FOSTER. I would have it put where it would signify what it was meant for.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am afraid my hon. friend and myself are equally responsible for that. If I follow his example I cannot be supposed to go very far astray.

Mr. FOSTER. The reason why we put a vote in the Estimates is to designate what the vote is for. This is a vote for harbours and rivers generally, but that does not indicate the uses to which it is actually put.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is for incidental expenses properly charged to harbours and rivers generally, and distributed over them all.

Mr. FOSTER. No, it is a vote which is not distributed anywhere, but it gives the Minister a right to expend it for anything he likes.

Harbours and Rivers—Quebec—

Anse à Beaufile—Improvement of entrance to harbour ..... $7,000

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This vote is required for improvements to that harbour to enable fishing and other vessels to enter the same for shelter during stormy weather. The harbour is in the county of Gaspé.

Mr. BERGERON. Over $500 was spent last year, was that spent out of the $1,000 of the estimate of 1898?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The expenditure on the work up to this time is $1,520. It is for extending seawardly the retaining wall built on the west side of the river. It is a fishing settlement. I have no information as to the number of the population; I only know that it is a fishing population.

Anse aux Gascons (Port Daniel East) breakwater ..... $4,500

Mr. BERGERON. Where is that?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). It is in Bonaventure county, in the Baie des Chaleurs. Port Daniel is a very well known harbour, one of the most important in the Baie des Chaleurs.

Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. McALISTER. Anse aux Gascons is three or four miles below Port Daniel.

Mr. FOSTER. What is there at Port Daniel East?

The PRIME MINISTER. Port Daniel is a pretty large harbour, at least two miles wide. There are settlers on each side, one side being called Port Daniel East, and the other side Port Daniel West. I imagine that Port Daniel East is the name of the municipality, which includes Anse aux Gascons.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the population of Anse aux Gascons?

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not really know. The population is not very large. It is one of the fishing settlements of the coast. There has been a settlement at Paspébiac for many years, and there were several small harbours more or less important around the coast which supplied fish to the inhabitants at Paspébiac. The population is not very large, but it covers a pretty large territory.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the estimated cost of that, how much has been spent, and how much is to be spent?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The total cost has been $12,129. The work is finished, and this vote will pay the balance to the contractor.

Mr. McALISTER. If I remember rightly, the wharf was completed last year. I think this breakwater is largely intended for the accommodation of fishing boats; but the steamer running between Dalhousie and Gaspé calls there.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The memorandum furnished me states that before the construction of the breakwater, during southerly gales there was no protection for fishing boats, many of which were consequently broken up and damaged. The number of boats now engaged in catching codfish is 60 in the summer and 100 in the fall; the catch amounts to 400 or 500 quintals every season.

Mr. FOSTER. Is this work done by contract?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Baie St. Paul—Cap aux Corbeaux—
Extension and repairs to wharf..... $10,000

Mr. BERGERON. Is that the wharf at Baie St. Paul?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes. There has been a wharf there some twenty years. My hon. friend is quite familiar with it. The boats of the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company call there, but it is very difficult to moor a boat at that wharf.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the whole cost?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The total probable cost of the extension is $13,750.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the work being done by contract ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Cap Santé—

Removal of boulders..... $800

Mr. BERGERON. Could not that be done in the ordinary work of the channel ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). I am well acquainted with the locality, as I live opposite it, and I can say that there is such an accumulation of boulders there that it is very difficult for the steamboats and market boats to reach the wharf. By removing these boulders easy access can be secured to the wharf, but as long as they are there, the place is most dangerous.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is in the St. Lawrence River, but not in the ship channel, and, therefore, the work cannot be charged to that.

General repairs and improvements to harbour, river and bridge works..... $10,000

Mr. BERGERON. That is a very dangerous vote, it is spread over so much. What is it for ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That also is a general vote, similar in character to one or two others we were discussing. It is for the purpose of making repairs to piers, breakwaters, bridges and other public works, as well as for travelling expenses and other expenses. The details are mostly small items.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it all for repairs ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, except an item at the close called general, $3,600.

Mr. FOSTER. What is that for ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That will be found in the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. FOSTER. I find on page Q—10 that it is largely expended for salaries in the department at Ottawa. There is an item to pay J. W. Fraser, who is he ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He is an engineer, not on the permanent staff.

Mr. FOSTER. There is another item to pay Alfred Gauvreau for services in cement-testing laboratory, twelve months at $45.62, $547.44. He is evidently employed the whole year in testing cement. This opens up a criticism that I think is a fair one. We have two classes of labourers. There is the establishment here and the temporary permanent help, that is, those who are permanently employed, but only on the temporary list. We add these all up and we see that here in Ottawa at the departments, temporary permanent cost so much, and so many are employed. But when we look into the vote, we find other people employed all the time at Ottawa, who are paid out of a vote like this, for harbours and rivers down at Quebec. There are two injustices in this. One is the injustice of charging the salary of a man who is employed by the year in testing cement against the province of Quebec, when it should be distributed over all the provinces. Then, we cover up in these votes any number of men who may be employed in Ottawa, and who are paid out of different votes—one out of the vote for harbours and rivers, and another out of another vote, and so on. Then, the travelling expenses of the Ottawa officials—Q—245—are charged against harbours and rivers generally, province of Quebec, to the extent of $2,323. These Ottawa officials go everywhere and are paid out of everything. One lot got paid out of the West Block construction, another out of the St. Lawrence ship canal, another out of the St. Lawrence hydrographic survey, another out of the Kaminiqtiquia River expenditure, another out of the renewals to maritime provinces buildings, and so on, until you come to the harbours and rivers of Quebec, against which you find this amount charged of $2,323. Then there is the freight and express and departmental telegrams. It seems that the travels of the Ottawa officials is all taken out of these different votes and distributed in that way; I do not know by what rule. If you have an item for travelling expenses for the officials you could take your vote for it, and when you expend it we could have some check on it, but there is no possible check under this system.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I was at first disposed to agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Foster), that if this was a charge against the province of Quebec, where the man is doing work in Ottawa for the whole Dominion, it would be misleading. I am told the practice is not to charge in that way, but to divide his salary and expenses amongst the various public works he is called upon to visit. If he goes to another province, the charge for that is made against the particular province.

Mr. FOSTER. This gentleman is in the cement-testing laboratory here, and his salary is $547 a year. The Customs Department has its laboratory in Ottawa, and it takes its vote for the officials in that laboratory, but it does not charge it to customs vote generally. I find here that the celebrated Mr. Charleson figures in the Ottawa officials travelling accounts for "nine trips, $645.50." I would like to have information on this. Where did he travel? I find that Mr. Charleson is so poorly paid that he charges up his 5 cents every time he gets into the Ottawa street cars.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He is, apparently, a very exact man.

Mr. FOSTER. He must be a very exact man, but I imagine the exactness comes in when he calls on the department to pay his bill, rather than in keeping an exact account of every street-car ticket. Here is street car to Ottawa station, 5 cents; remarkably exact. Anyway, if you are going to trot Mr. Charleson around on the street cars, you should give him a bundle of tickets, and they would come to less than 5 cents each in that way. Here is another charge: "Victoria, B.C., street cars, 50 cents;" another, "cabs to Ottawa station, $3.50." Mr. Charleson is ubiquitous. He travels in the street car for 5 cents, and he travels in a cab, or several cabs, for 350 cents; and his cabs from Ottawa station are a little more than they are to Ottawa station, for they are $3.75. Here we have some other charges from Mr. Charleson: "stations to hotels, $9.50"; "hotels to stations, $9.75"; "sundries, $10.25"; "single fares, Ottawa to Vancouver and Vancouver to Ottawa." Why should Mr. Charleson charge the department with a single fare each way? Why does he not buy his return fare, as other travellers do when they are going to Vancouver and back? I would like to know whether Mr. Charleson had last year a pass on the Canadian Pacific Railway, because this same Mr. Charleson was busy a part of that year in hiring labourers for the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. The Minister (Mr. Tarte) admitted that last session. It was stated, and stated, I think, without contradiction, that Mr. Charleson was once over the Crow's Nest Pass, looking after and arranging with reference to these labourers. Was it this same trip for which he charges the Government a single fare to Vancouver at $87, and a single fare back at $87? Then, when he goes between Ottawa and Montreal, it is a single fare each way he charges. "Ottawa to Montreal, eleven trips at $3.50"; "Ottawa to Toronto, one trip, $7.85"; "Ottawa to Quebec, two trips at $7"; "Montreal to Quebec, two at $3.50," and so on. When he goes to Quebec, he has got to come back, and why does he charge a single fare? Again, I want to know whether or not last year Mr. Charleson had a pass from the Canadian Pacific Railway? I think the chances would be in favour too of his having a pass.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The officials of the department tell me they are not aware whether he has a pass or not.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose they could find out.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, by asking Mr. Charleson.

Mr. BERGERON. By asking the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. FOSTER.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not know that we have the right to ask the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) will agree with me, that if Mr. Charleson had his pass and travels free, he should not charge the Government.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If Mr. Charleson got a pass and charges his travelling expenses, I certainly would not defend it.

Mr. FOSTER. That is a fair basis, then, for my asking the question.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not think we should assume that he has.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) will see that he is practically charging fraud on this party, and, unless he has some evidence, he should not do that.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright) has great faith in human nature—when the human nature is on his own side of the House.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) know, of his own knowledge, that Mr. Charleson has a pass?

Mr. FOSTER. No, and that is why I want the information. Will the Minister (Sir Richard Cartwright) say it is unfair that we should ask for that information?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Unless the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has some reason to believe this party, whoever he is, had a pass, it is hardly fair to accuse the man.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not accusing him at all, but I think it would be a fair assumption that he had a pass last year.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Why?

Mr. FOSTER. Because he was hiring labourers for the Canadian Pacific Railway both last year and the year before, and I think it would be a fair assumption that he had a pass. If he has not, all right; but if he has, these expenses ought not to have been charged.

Mr. BERGERON. We had a case last year of a Government employee having a pass and charging his travelling expenses.

Mr. FOSTER. We have had several cases, and my hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright) knows it has been done.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I think it is not at all impossible in the case of the hon. gentleman's officials during his administration.

Mr. FOSTER. Then Mr. Charleson charges $7 for carpenters, and for steamers, $14.50. The ferry he puts down with great minuteness at 6 cents and steward 25 cents. For board in Montreal, he charges board $60.75, and so on, and so on. There are pages and pages of these items from Q-239, on where all these travelling expenses are given. There is absolutely no check.

Mr. BERGERON. Should there not be in every department a person whose duty it would be to check these expenditures? They amount to a great deal of money. I call my hon. friend's attention to an item I referred to the other day, which will be found at page Q-83. To pay the men at work at Rideau Hall, the Public Works Department pay $20 at $1 per trip—Côté, seven trips and St. Laurent, Jr., thirteen trips. There is $20 a month to go and pay the employees at Rideau Hall, when the street cars will carry a person there for five cents. There should be somebody in the department who has the public interest enough at heart to check anything of that kind. It would not be allowed in any private concern; it would not be allowed anywhere except in the public departments at Ottawa. If it has been going on in the past, it is deplorable and it should be changed. As to officials travelling on passes and then charging their railway expenses, the hon. Minister of Finance will remember that we had a case of that kind before the Public Accounts Committee last year.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davles). He returned the money.

Mr. BERGERON. He did?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, do him justice; he returned it.

Mr. BERGERON. That is one case, then. I may be wrong, but my impression is that, from the close relations existing between Mr. Charleson and the company for whom he was sending out men to the North-west he probably had a pass over the Canadian Pacific Railway, and probably over the Grand Trunk as well.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. As to the Rideau Hall item the hon. gentleman is quite right in saying that he alluded to it the other day. I asked an explanation with regard to it. I am informed that one or two of the officials claim that Rideau Hall is some distance away from the street car line, and in unpleasant weather they must take a cab. But the Deputy Minister has called attention to this as an improper charge and says that it must not occur again.

Mr. BERGERON. But should there be twenty trips? Are men paid every two days?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They are paid fortnightly. That would be 26 trips a year.

Mr. FOSTER. What about the custom of charging single fare?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am told that instructions are given to the officials to purchase return-trip tickets where they can do so. Of course in that case they are limited to the number of days and as to the route by which they shall return. I agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) that where it is possible a return-trip ticket should be bought.

Mr. FOSTER. I should like if the Minister would have an inquiry made in the department in reference to Mr. Charleson and a pass. As the matter has been brought up, the fact should be ascertained. If Mr. Charleson has not a pass, he should not be allowed to lie under the assumption that he had, and if he had we should not pay his transportation.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The Canadian Pacific Railway would not tell you whether they had issued a pass.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, the Canadian Pacific Railway will give a return of the officials in the department to whom they have issued passes—they have done it before.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They did it before the Public Accounts Committee, but I think they did it with some regret, as they considered the matter a personal one between themselves and the persons to whom passes were given.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not a personal matter when it refers to our own employees. We are interested.

Mr. BERGERON. I understand that under the old regime, a civil service employee was forbidden to accept a pass from a railway company without a letter from the Minister.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think the hon. gentleman has misunderstood the case. I am informed by the Deputy Minister of Public Works that he is not aware of such a rule. However, there is no dispute among us that if an official has a pass the public should not be called upon to pay his transportation expenses. If we have any means of getting the information referred to, I shall be glad to get it. I confess I should rather hesitate to ask the Canadian Pacific Railway to give us information as to what they may regard as their private business. However, we can consider that.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman promised to get me some information with regard to a charge appearing in the Auditor General's Report, an item for Japanese lanterns, torches and other things.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. When the hon. member (Mr. Taylor) brought this item up, I told him frankly I did not know what was the occasion for the purchase of these goods. I have since found an explanation. These were purchased for an occasion when honour was being done to the Prime Minister of Canada. But not in a party sense. When he returned from the Jubilee he was welcomed in the city of Montreal with a magnificent demonstration which was in no sense a party one. The Conservative Mayor of Montreal led in that demonstration, and in one of the great centres of the city presented an address to the distinguished gentleman in the name of the people of Montreal without regard to party, class or creed. Not only in Montreal, but up and down the river, as we passed, there was a magnificent display which was the subject of comment throughout the Dominion. Every vessel and the end of every pier was decorated that night, and every village showed its bonfires, welcoming the Premier of Canada, not merely as the head of the Government, but because he was returning to Canada after having so creditably represented Canada at the Jubilee. It was in no sense a party occasion. And when every ship along the riverside, every little tug and vessel showed its lanterns and exploded its fireworks, I do not think that anybody will complain because the dredges, tugs, and other craft along the river belonging to the Dominion did their share by throwing out their rockets and showing their lanterns in welcoming home Canada's representative from the great Jubilee ceremonial.

Mr. FOSTER. This is really quite affecting. My hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) should not spring such a thing on the committee without notice. I should have had at least five minutes to prepare myself. As it is, what can I say?

Mr. TAYLOR. After the Minister's explanation about Chinese lanterns and torches, now what about sundries?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I was reserving the sundries for the special benefit of the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) who, I know, is deeply interested in everything of that kind. He will be, I am afraid, disappointed when he finds what sundries mean, because I do not believe there is any question which has occupied the mind of the hon. member for South Leeds so largely as this question of Chinese lanterns and sundries. I have here the account rendered by R. K. Holland, Montreal, of the articles sent.

Mr. FOSTER. Hollands, did you say?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am surprised my hon. friend should recognize the word Hollands so readily. One would almost suppose he had strayed away from the old faith. I fancy there are not many gentlemen in this House who would so readily recognize that word. This is the account:

6 doz. bengolas at $1.25.....	$ 7 50
10 doz. torches at 90c.....	9 00
10 lbs. coloured fire at 50c.....	5 00
1 doz. rockets at $4.50.....	4 50
½ doz. rockets .....	7 90
5 doz. rockets (exhibition) at $1.....	5 00
125 only lanterns at 17½c.....	21 88
206 only candles at 1½c.....	3 24
6 bombs at $2.50.....	15 00

	<hr/>
	80 02

	<hr/>
	$46 83

Mr. FOSTER. What are bengolas?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Minister of Inland Revenue (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière) says they are Bengal lights.

Mr. FOSTER. Were they all bought by tender?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think not; I think that was a job.

Mr. FOSTER. That is very peculiar, that some of those bengolas should be returned. Did the enthusiasm suddenly cool off?

Mr. BERGERON. It must have been raining. The total is $186.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. But that includes the sundries. My hon. friend is mixing up that large amount with sundries. The item in the Auditor General's Report sets forth the Japanese lanterns, &c., with great detail to the amount of $132.17. Then, there are the sundries, $46.83.

Mr. BERGERON. How is it that the hon. gentleman had to go to all that trouble to explain what might have been explained at once in the Auditor General's Report? That seems to be an afterthought.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am bound to say we cannot accuse the Auditor General of any lack of fulness in his report. It is pretty elaborate as it is.

Mr. SPROULE. It is interesting, after all the magnificent articles which came out in "La Patrie," and other Montreal papers, concerning the spontaneous celebration given to the Premier when he came home, to find out now that it was paid for at the country's expense.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Is that the hon. gentleman's complaint of a demonstration which only cost $125?

Mr. BERGERON. In spite of these bombshells, we have not yet got that fast service with England.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is satisfactory to know that the hon. member for Leeds is silenced, at any rate.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am not silenced. I think the people of this country will condemn an expenditure of $186 without the consent of Parliament or anybody else, simply to get up a demonstration in honour of the Prime Minister of this country. Talk about its not being a political demonstration. It took that tone throughout the press at that time. If they wanted to get up a political demonstration, why did they not put their hands into their own pockets and pay for the Chinese lanterns and sundries, and not ask the people of this country from British Columbia down to Prince Edward Island to contribute to a demonstration got up by the Minister of Public Works simply to please his fancy and to honour the Prime Minister?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am sorry the hon. gentleman has such a poor conception of the Conservatives of Montreal as to stand up in this House and charge them with having paid for this demonstration out of the public treasury. I want to say in fairness to those gentlemen who did themselves and their city so great honour when they joined in that demonstration to the Prime Minister, that I have no doubt that demonstration on the St. Lawrence that night cost tens of thousands of dollars, which were paid for by the private citizens of Montreal and the villages on the river; and if the Government steamers put up Chinese lanterns to the extent of $170, I do not think that, outside of the hon. member for Leeds, there is another man in the whole of Canada would object to it.

Mr. FOSTER. In reference to this question of single fares, I see an item in the Auditor General's Report that I would like to have explained. I want to know who Mr. Cowie is.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He is an engineer of the department who travels through the country.

Mr. FOSTER. I find his bill is very large, and his fares are nearly all single fares. His whole amount comes to $1,275.68. He made thirteen trips between Ottawa and Montreal, nearly all single trips, at $3.50 a trip. Between Ottawa and Kingston, the same way. He has here only three return fares from Ottawa to Montreal, and it is impossible that he should have been more than thirty days absent. These are samples of the single fare carried beyond what ought to be allowed.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am bound to say in reference to Mr. Cowie that I am informed he is away a good deal from Ottawa and does not always return, but is ordered by telegram to go to some other point. But I subscribe to the principle the hon. gentleman has referred to.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Gobeil, the Deputy Minister, is also down for railway fares, and others will take pattern from the deputy, eleven trips, Ottawa and Montreal, at $3.50 each. Mr. Gobeil could not be spared for any great length of time, and it seems to me that these tickets might be made return.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Deputy Minister explains that he is required to travel to Montreal often with the Minister, and in the rush of business the Minister sometimes goes down by one train and returns by another, going by the Canada Atlantic and returning by the Canadian Pacific Railway. While the Minister has a pass the Deputy Minister has to buy single tickets. There is a statement of return fares also.

Mr. FOSTER. There are some return fares, but most of these seem to be single fares.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) wanted to know something about Iberville. The work is estimated to cost $8,000, of which $6,000 has been spent, and the balance of $2,000 is now required to make provision for the completion of the construction and piling of the wharf. The wharf is 210 feet long by 24 feet wide, with a wing 150 feet long by 40 feet wide. It is on the east side of the Richelieu River.

Mr. BERGERON. That will be the end of it?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Can my hon. friend tell me whether any petitions were received from the municipal authorities of Iberville, or St. John, or from any private parties, asking for the construction of this wharf?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The deputy says that he cannot remember any such correspondence, but we will inquire. He has not got any petitions, but the Minister may have them.

Mr. BERGERON. I know there was some correspondence, and it is an extraordinary proceeding that the Minister should carry these papers in his pocket if they belong to the department. Not only have petitions been sent, but there has been a very serious quarrel going on between the municipal council of Iberville and the Department of Public Works. It has been published in the newspapers, and it is most astonishing that these papers should not be in the department. I am informed that this wharf has been built on the property of a public employee, who is a friend of the hon. Minister of Public Works. It is said that the wharf is built in the wrong place altogether, at a different place from that suggested by the council, and that it has been located at a place where it can only be useful for the private yachts of a few gentlemen of St. John, and not at all useful to the general public. I am giving the hon. gentleman the information as I have heard it, and surely he will be able to find in the department something to show whether it is true or not.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I understand the hon. gentleman to make the statement that he does not know this of his own knowledge, but that this is some information that has reached him. We will look into the matter.

Mr. BERGERON. The department will be able to find that there was some correspondence between the mayor, Mr. Nadeau, and the Department of Public Works. The whole thing has been in the newspapers.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Now that the hon. gentleman mentions it the deputy recollects that there was such a question raised, but we will have the correspondence looked up.

Mr. BERGERON. Who was the proprietor of the land on the shore?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This property was purchased from Mr. James Black, at a cost of $200.

Mr. BERGERON. Is there not an employee of the Government who has property near by? I am told that there is a public employee who is a friend of the hon. Minister of Public Works who is just near this place where the wharf is being built, and that it has been located here contrary to the expectation and demands of the great majority of the people of Iberville.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What my hon. friend wants to know is whether there is a Government employee living near where this wharf was built.

Mr. BERGERON. I want to find out whether the information I am giving is correct or not.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We will look it up and see what we can find about it.

Mr. FOSTER. I think I must really, once again, speak of these travelling expenses. I find in the Auditor General's Report that the travelling expenses of the Deputy Minister, and I take his case, not because he is deputy, but because he is on the establishment, are charged to and taken out of different works. That is clearly not what should be done. I do not know how many of these are on the establishment, but it is very likely others are on the establishment as well. Every hon. member here knows that civil government contingencies are for the travelling expenses of the Minister and of the officers. Here we have the Deputy Minister of Public Works, instead of charging his travelling expenses, amounting to $693, to contingencies, charging them to these general public works. The travelling expenses of the civil servant, as well as of the Minister, must be paid out of contingencies. Attention was called to that a year ago, and a discussion arose. The Auditor General had written demanding that, according to the Order in Council, the charges should be transferred, and pointing out that they ought to be made against contingencies, and not taken out of general votes. The hon. Minister of Public Works agreed that the Auditor General was right, and yet they have gone on this year and they are charging large sums which ought to be charged to contingencies, to these general votes. Here is the letter of the Auditor General on the subject:

Audit Office, Ottawa, May 12, 1898.

Sir,—Let me acknowledge receipt of an application from your department for a transfer entry, crediting "Harbours Generally" and debiting "Public Buildings Generally" with $150, the amount of cheque 24964, in favour of Deputy Minister Gobell, for travelling expenses.

There is only one place for charging the travel of civil Government officers, namely in "Civil Government Contingencies." See the ruling of the Treasury Board in the case of Mr. Van-koughnet, shown at page A—8 of my report for 1889-90; and my letter to your department of January 12, 1898, shown at page Q—215 of my report for 1896-97.

Please apply for a transfer to "Civil Government Contingencies" of all travelling expense of your civil government officers now charged against outside votes in 1897-98.

The element of a possible over-expenditure does not enter into this discussion as an objection, since the payments have already been made, and must be charged where they belong.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

J. L. McDUGALL, A.G.

The Secretary, Public Works Department.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That has since been done. In the year just closed, the blue-book for which is not yet out, it will be found in it that the request of the Auditor General has been carried out.

Mr. FOSTER. I am very glad of that, for it certainly ought to be done.

Lake St. John—

Piers, including improvements of approaches ..... $2,500

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The amount expended up to June 30th, 1898, was $11,539.81.

Mr. FOSTER. Do the Government own these piers?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Rivière à la Pipe—

Wharf on Lake St. John, near mouth of river ..... $2,500

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This vote is to complete the construction of a wharf on the southern side of the river; total estimated cost is $8,500.

Mr. FOSTER. Where is Rivière à la Pipe?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is a small village on the north shore of Lake St. John, at the mouth of the river of the same name. It has a Roman Catholic church, two saw-mills and other establishments, and has a population of 400. It is in the county of Chicoutimi and Saguenay.

Mr. FOSTER. These are examples of what we were discussing this afternoon. It seems that every little village on these inland waters must be provided with a wharf at the expense of this Government. That is carrying this thing to a very large extent. These inland waters there are dotted with expensive wharfs, built for the local needs of the people in these little villages.

An hon. MEMBER. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, that must be so. In other parts of the Dominion the municipalities and private enterprise do this work. Lake St. John, it is true, is a new country, and I would be quite willing to see something of Dominion effort given—

Mr. BERGERON. This is a closed lake.

Mr. FOSTER. It has no outlet for general navigation.

The PRIME MINISTER. It is an inland sea.

Mr. BERGERON. The wharfs belonging to the company at Roberval belong to the company itself, and even the Trappists there built their wharfs.

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) knows that Lake St. John is an inland sea. Immigration is going in there rapidly, and it is the centre of a vast, developing country. There are a number of rivers emptying into the lake, and the settlers there are not yet in a condition to do this work themselves. This is really colonization work which the Government is doing in giving them harbours.

Mr. FOSTER. But this is not giving them a harbour. There might be some shadow of excuse, if it was to give them a harbour, but this is to build a wharf. Is there a customs officer there?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I cannot say.

Mr. FOSTER. Surely, the Department of Public Works has not undertaken an expenditure here of $8,500 without knowing something about the place.

Mr. P. V. SAVARD (Chicoutimi and Saguenay). (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, this appropriation is for the building of a wharf on the River à la Pipe, in the Lake St. John region. I have not the least doubt that the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) and chiefly the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) who is well acquainted with this locality, will make it a point, with a view to fostering the interests of colonization and the progress of the country, not to object to the building of a wharf calculated to develop the territory through which flows the Lake St. John. Should the ex-Minister of Finance say that it is a bad policy,—and I am not ready to agree with him on that point—my answer is that it was initiated by the old Government. Let it be put on record, to the credit of the preceding Administration that the first wharf that was built in the Lake St. John region was built by the Conservative Government at Roberval, in 1895. Roberval is a thriving and picturesque village; and as a matter of fact, it is one of the finest localities that can be found in Canada, being a favourite resort with all tourists, Americans as well as Canadians, coming from the maritime provinces and other parts of the Dominion. Every one, on landing there, is delighted to find a wharf which was built there for the accommodation of the passengers who come and take the boats plying between the different localities on Lake St. John.

That wharf on River à la Pipe was begun a year ago and so far a sum of $4,000 has been expended on those works. I extend here an invitation to the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) and to the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron), to come and visit the Lake St. John region, and if they accept my invitation they will be delighted, on reaching that locality to land on a fine wharf. The locality I refer to is a new settlement which is progressing very rapidly. It is called River à la Pipe, and such a name, no doubt, is open to criticism. However, it must not be inferred from it that the people living there have nothing to do but to smoke away the time; far from it, and here is the reason why that locality was so called: as the hon. gentlemen are aware, the Lake St. John region is a part of the county where colonization progressed very slowly at first, despite the fact that it offers many inducements to intending settlers, and possesses advantages unparalleled in another portion of our territory. Years ago, there were shanties at that place, and the men who worked in those shanties used to while away the time, on Sundays, smoking the pipe on the bank of that river, and that is the reason why it was called River à la Pipe. As a matter of fact, those poor people had little else to do on Sundays as there was no church near at hand. And if I refer to that incident, it is in order to show the hon. gentlemen that it ought not to be inferred from the name of that river that the people there have nothing to do but smoking the pipe, on the contrary, they are very busy and hard-working settlers, bent upon developing that part of the country.

There is a very fine parish there, and one of the most promising in the county of Chicoutimi and throughout the whole Lake St. John valley. Three years ago, there were to be found only from 35 to 40 settlers at that place, the true name of which is St. Henri de Taillon, and I hope it will not grate upon the ears of the hon. gentlemen when I tell them that it is one of the few places, in the province of Quebec, which are decorated with that name. The hon. Mr. Taillon, is the former Prime Minister of Quebec and he bequeathed his name to that locality which is a credit to French Canadians and to the province of Quebec.

There are now from 125 to 130 settlers in that parish, with a residing parish priest. There are two or three stores and two cheese factories; in short, it is one of the most promising parishes in the Lake St. John region. A wharf is being built there, and I may call the attention to the fact that it is not on the banks of the river that it is being built but on the shore of Lake St. John, which is a lake 45 miles long by 30 miles wide, and along the shores of which are to be found 10 or 12 flourishing parishes through which also flow many rivers which empty themselves into that inland sea. A great deal is said nowadays about the Northwest, but there is more to be said in favour of the northern portion of the province of Quebec. There are to be found in the Lake St. John region a great many promising parishes, and I trust my hon. friends will not raise any objection if, in the supplementary Estimates which will soon be brought down, they find several sums for the building of wharfs in the Lake St. John region.

I may avail myself of this opportunity to record here, to the everlasting credit of the Conservative party here and in Quebec, that it was they who first planned and created that system of navigation on Lake St. John. We have now five or six wharfs at various points in that country: but we need three or four more, for which provision has been made by the Government in the supplementary Estimates, which will be brought down during the session. Therefore, I trust that with their wonted liberality and with that broad-minded patriotism which characterizes the hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House, not one single hon. gentleman will hesitate to vote even more considerable appropriations for the encouragement of colonization in that portion of the country. There exists, as I said, a good system of inland navigation, and we have good steamboats, which have been subsidized by both Conservative Governments here and in Quebec, and which starting from Roberval ply around on the lake and accommodate the various parishes on their route. It is, therefore, necessary to build wharfs, in order to enable those parishes to fully benefit by that navigation. I hope that, with the good will exhibited so far by the Government of the day, and I say without hesitation, with the liberality which characterizes the hon. gentlemen opposite, whenever an appeal is made in favour of the Lake St. John region and for the encouragement of the numerous settlers who are taking up lands in that country, I hope, I say, that no hon. gentleman will object to the votes proposed this year again in that connection either for the works at River à la Pipe, or for any other locality mentioned in the Estimates. I may add, without fear of contradiction, that no better use could be made of the people's money than expending it in the Saguenay region. It is a new country, but one full of promise, and I hope it will, before long, deserve to be known, as formerly, under the name of the "Kingdom of Saguenay."

Mr. BERGERON. (Translation.) As there was expended a sum of $4,000 last year on that wharf, and as $2,500 more will bring those works to completion, I have no doubt that, after what we have heard from my hon. friend from Chicoutimi (Mr. Savard) nobody will object to this vote.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the hon. member for North Wentworth (Mr. Somerville) what he thinks of this expenditure, viewed in the light of the reasons just given for it. If he is well satisfied with it and thinks it is done on business principles, I do not know but I should withdraw my opposition to it. But, translated into plain English, this vote means this. Lake St. John is a closed lake, and this little Rivière à la Pipe has 130 persons living in it—

Mr. McDOUGALL. Babies and all.

Mr. FOSTER. Babies and all. It has no general trade, and scarcely any local trade, and this Government, with overflowing generosity, as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Savard) has said, is putting down an $8,000 wharf.

The PRIME MINISTER. In plain English it is simply following a precedent established by my hon. friend himself. There is not so much difference between building a wharf at Rivière à la Pipe and building one at Roberval.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there any difference in business or population?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not know that there is very much. All these places around Lake St. John are increasing, and I do not know that there was more population at Roberval ten years ago than there is to-day at Rivière à la Pipe. Roberval has increased, owing largely to the generosity of the hon. gentleman himself, who put the vote in the estimates for a wharf at that place.

Mr. SPROULE. Will there be a wharf appointed when the wharf is finished?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is the usual practice, and I presume that it will be followed in this case.

Mr. SPROULE. How will he be paid?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The usual practice is to pay the wharfinger a commission of 25 per cent on the fees.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose there are no fees ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Then, I do not know that he would get very much.

Mr. SPROULE. I have been told that where there are not enough fees to pay the wharfinger a percentage, he is sometimes paid from another source. I would like to know whether that is the case or not.

Mr. BERGERON. I believe that under the new Administration wharfingers are appointed, but under the old Administration there was no such thing done. The wharf was generally handed over to the municipality to use it and take care of it, and the navigation companies would arrange with the municipality. But the new Administration has changed all that, and appoints wharfingers ; and at some places, like Isle Perrot, trouble is caused in consequence.

The PRIME MINISTER. Isle Perrot has nothing to do with this vote.

Mr. BERGERON. But I am talking of the principle of appointing wharfingers. Under the old regime there were none.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. No new rules in this respect have been introduced at all. The same principle which was adopted by the late Government is carried out by myself. Wharfingers are appointed here and there ; but at some places people, prompted, I am sorry to say, by politicians, have objected to pay wharfage, and trouble has been caused in consequence. If wharfage is exacted at one place, it must be exacted everywhere else, and those politicians are not friends of the state who are prompting people to resist the payment of wharfage. In some cases politicians have even tried to get people to refuse to act as wharfingers in the hope that they would escape the payment of wharfage altogether.

Mr. BERGERON. I differ from my hon. friend entirely. If it was the law under the old Administration to have wharfage fees, it was never put in practice ; but the practice has been introduced by my hon. friend. In Beauharnois, on Lake St. Francis, there was no such thing as a wharfinger before the hon. gentleman appointed one. I believe he has also appointed a wharfinger at St. Timothée ; but I believe there is none at Valleyfield, at Cedars or at Coteau du Lac. My hon. friend has introduced that practice, but as a matter of fact it was never done before.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. All I have to tell the hon. gentleman is that in most cases it was done. All through the maritime provinces it was done. If there are some places in the province of Quebec where this salutary rule was not applied, it must have been from political influence or from ignorance on the part of the head of the department ; for the rule of the department is to appoint a wharfinger wherever one can be got to act ; and it is obviously fair that it should be done. Why should people in one section of the country pay wharfage and people in another section escape ? You must either collect wharfage everywhere or let all go free. There can be no system of political favouritism in the matter.

Mr. SPROULE. The trouble which the hon. gentleman encounters is owing to his way of doing business, because there is no need of it whatever. Let him do as is done in Ontario, hand the wharfs over to the municipalities, who will collect the fees and keep the wharfs in repair.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. What wharf has the hon. gentleman in his mind ?

Mr. SPROULE. Collingwood, Thornberry, Meaford.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Wharfs handed over to the municipalities by this Government ?

Mr. SPROULE. Yes.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Under what authority ?

Mr. SPROULE. By statutory law.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, that cannot be. The statute was introduced by myself last year for the first time, and I handed over no such wharfs.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman may live and learn, because I got the statute for the wharf at Thornberry. It was before the hon. gentleman was a Minister.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. A special statute ?

Mr. SPROULE. A special statute to give the municipality the right to charge fees. The wharf was handed over before. I got the statute drawn by one of the officers of the hon. gentleman's department, but it was before he was a Minister. There is another advantage in this, because if the Government owns the wharf and an accident takes place, there is a suit against the country, whereas if the municipality owns it, the municipality must be responsible. Then, the country will not have to appoint wharfingers. As soon as you appoint an officer, he becomes a political agent.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Nonsense.

Mr. SPROULE. Would the hon. gentleman allow a wharfinger to be appointed who did not suit himself politically ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Certainly.

Mr. SPROULE. If he did, he would adopt a different principle from what he does in other lines; but in my judgment the best principle is to hand these wharfs over to the municipalities, which will collect the fees and expend them to keep up the wharf, and at the same time make the charge for wharfage dues as low as possible. And then the wharfs are taken from political control entirely.

Mr. McDOUGALL. My hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) referred to the general principle. Whatever may be the rule in the province of Quebec, I know that the general rule in the province of Nova Scotia has been to appoint wharfingers, though I know that there have been a few exceptions in the case of small inland wharfs. But I know that I myself, during a period of seven or eight years, paid several thousand dollars in wharfage on a wharf that did not cost more than $4,000 or $5,000 to construct. I know that the Government invariably, with very few exceptions, appointed wharfingers, as the returns of the blue-books will show.

Mr. BRITTON. I think the object lesson we have to-night, in the long list of grants for Quebec wharfs, and the discussion that took place last night in reference to the wharf to be built at Bruce Mines, ought to put us on our guard as to how these works are given to particular localities by the Government, instead of being left to private enterprise. Living in the province of Ontario, I am not at all jealous of any other province, and therefore would not be in favour of striving to get a wharf for any particular locality merely because some other one was granted it. It is certainly quite a new departure to have wharfs built such as those provided for by the grants last night, and we see now in the province of Quebec the continual expenditure which these wharfs entail. It is not only the expenditure of building them, which may, in certain cases, be quite proper, but the expense of maintaining them, and then the pressure to build other and larger ones. I think that the discussion has not been without great good if it will induce the Government to hesitate before granting these concessions, at all events, to certain places in the province of Ontario, where they really cannot be said to be, to any great extent, of public benefit, though, no doubt, they are a benefit to the particular localities.

Mr. McALISTER. Has the Government any regular rates for top wharfage dues?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is a regular scale of fees furnished each wharfinger, which he has to collect.

Mr. BERGERON. I never heard of such a thing done, at any rate, with regard to the wharfs in my district. If this is to be the rule, what is the object?

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The object is to collect sufficient money to keep the wharfs in repair.

Mr. BERGERON. We have to pay a man for that.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The wharfinger does all the small repairs to the wharf.

Mr. BERGERON. As my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) said a moment ago, the system followed by the old Administration was the best. Wherever the Government built a wharf the municipality paid its share. When the wharf was finished it was handed over to the municipality to be taken care of, and the Government was relieved of any further expense. I would ask my hon. friend whether he ever collected enough money out of any of these wharfs to pay expenses.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Certainly, if the hon. gentleman will turn to the wharfs in the maritime provinces, he will see that large sums have been collected.

Mr. BERGERON. I am not talking of the maritime provinces, but of the province of Quebec.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There may be some wharfs where no wharfinger was appointed by the late Government and where no fees were collected, and which may have escaped my notice.

Mr. BERGERON. Let the hon. gentleman turn up K-163 to 165 in the Auditor General's Report, and he will find that in the province of Quebec there are many wharfs which give no return at all. I find the wharf at St. Agnes, L. A. Roy, wharfinger, no return at all. What became of the fees, and did the wharfinger ever do any repairs? St. Anicet, S. Dupuis, wharfinger, no return. What became of the money? St. Jean Port Joli, no return. Anse St. Jean, $35.77. What repairs could have been done to that wharf, after the man who collected those fees had been paid his wages?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is the money sent to the Government. There was a total of $47.65 collected, out of which the wharfinger's remuneration was $11.88.

Mr. BERGERON. There is the Cascades wharf, no return, and the Cedars, of which a man named Seguin is wharfinger, no return. Chicoutimi, Juste Ouellette, wharfinger, no return. Coteau du Lac, St. Amour, wharfinger, $33.38 returned. Coteau Landing, no return.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The repairs do not appear there.

Mr. BERGERON. I know that. It is only since the new Administration has been in power that such a system has been in force.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Nothing of the kind. The hon. gentleman is entirely wrong.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend can make an investigation, and I will prove it to him.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. All my predecessors carried out the same rule.

Mr. BERGERON. It was never done, but the object is to appoint partisans as wharfingers. At St. Anicet they appointed a man named Dupuis, the brother of a lawyer in Montreal, who is one of the worst political heelers in the province. The same thing was done at Isle Perrot. The man appointed there was a strong partisan and conducted himself as if he owned the whole wharf. Before any Conservative dared to put his foot on it, he had to take off his shoes and take a bath. He was a perfect tyrant. The hon. gentleman has put little kings on these wharfs, apparently to help the Grits and hunt Conservatives off them.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman is talking of matters about which he knows absolutely nothing. I have hardly appointed any wharfinger since I came to power at all. They are nearly all the same men that were there when I came in. If the hon. gentleman wants to find out how very silly his remarks are, let him turn to page K-163, and he will find that in Ontario $1,246 were collected for top wharfage dues. One wharf at Sault Ste. Marie returned $1,304 in dues. From the wharfs in the province of Quebec there was $1,303 received for top wharfage dues; Nova Scotia, $3,015; New Brunswick, $1,217; Prince Edward Island, $1,011.

Mr. McDOUGALL. While on this subject, there is a matter to which my attention was called some time ago, and which I intended to bring up. I find some correspondence between the Auditor General and the department of which my hon. friend is the head, the Department of Marine and Fisheries. On the 23rd March, 1898, the Auditor General wrote as follows to the Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries, as my hon. friend will find at page K-172 of the Auditor General's Report:

Audit Office, Ottawa, March 23, 1898.

Sir,—I have to call your attention to the falling off in the receipts from wharfs and piers during the present fiscal year. The net receipts last year were $9,096.23, from wharfs and piers, and $395.50 from harbours. The net receipts so far brought to account this year are, from wharfs and piers, $4,116.50, and from harbours, $285.50. There are 19 wharfs from which the receipts for 1896-97 were $1,369.25, from which nothing has, so far, been received for the present year. There are also 59 wharfs from which nothing has come to account this year, nor for years past.

Please give explanations.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

J. L. McDOUGALL, A.G.

The Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Now, I am aware personally of the looseness with which the duties of wharfingers are performed by appointees of my hon. friend, and I can understand that a great deal of money is not accounted for that should be accounted for, by reason of this looseness. And the facts are right here. Further on, the Auditor General draws the attention of the department to one or two wharfingers in particular, and further on again we find the following letter:—

Audit Office, Ottawa, August 24, 1898.

Sir,—I wrote you on March 23rd, calling attention to the falling off in the receipts from wharfs and piers.

There are now eleven wharfs from which no revenue has come to account for 1897-98, from which $772.33 was received in 1896-97. These are referred to in a separate letter.

I have also to call your attention to the reduction in the receipts from the following wharfs for 1897-98, as compared with the previous year:—

Mr. BERGERON. Hear, hear. Under Conservative rule.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Year 1896-97 was under our rule.

Mr. BERGERON. You had not time to dismiss them then—they were Conservative wharfingers.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They were not dismissed. Can the hon. gentleman show a case where one was dismissed?

Mr. McDOUGALL. I have a case right at my own door.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. What was the name?

Mr. McDOUGALL. E. A. McNeill was dismissed, and Neil McNeill was appointed.

Mr. BERGERON. I can give you another—Masson, of St. Anicet.

Mr. McDOUGALL (reading):

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Both years the hon. gentleman is quoting are under the present Government's rule.

Mr. BERGERON. Why have the receipts gone down?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. How can I tell.

Mr. McDOUGALL. The wharfingers are not the same. I know that to be the case at Grand Narrows.

Mr. BRITTON. May I ask what my hon. friend (Mr. McDougall) is complaining about?

Mr. McDOUGALL. I complain that the wharfingers appointed under the present Government are not making the same returns as those under the previous Government did.

Mr. BRITTON. But if the hon. gentleman will look at the items he is quoting, he will find that the amount of remuneration they have kept is very little. The gross receipts are less, and so, of course, the returns to the Government are less.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I understand that, but the same rule applies now that applied before.

Mr. BRITTON. Surely the Government is not responsible for the falling off of the business at these wharfs.

Mr. McDOUGALL. But it is responsible for the looseness of its officials. I am a witness to one case of that kind. I am a witness to the fact that I pay my top wharfage, but my neighbour does not pay a cent because he is a Grit. He is using the wharf the year around and pays nothing for it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Then the hon. gentleman (Mr. McDougall) is guilty before this House and this country. If he knows of a fraud of this kind committed by his neighbour, it was his duty to report it to the proper officer instead of standing up here and making a reckless charge in this House behind the man's back.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I am making a charge I can prove. Let the hon. gentleman (Sir

Mr. McDOUGALL.

Louis Davies) bring his papers to this House and I can prove it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Why did you not report the man?

Mr. McDOUGALL. Because I could not get the papers.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Did you ever ask for them?

Mr. McDOUGALL. No; I have asked for papers before and did not get them. I asked for papers three months ago, and have not got them yet.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Asked for these papers?

Mr. McDOUGALL. No, for other papers. A man must make a slave of himself in this House before he can get a return brought down.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. What papers did you ask for that were refused?

Mr. McDOUGALL. Papers from the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair). I have asked for them three or four times.

In those cases in which the falling off is considerable, the wharfinger should be asked to explain, unless you are already in possession of the reasons.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,
J. L. McDOUGALL, A.G.

The Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Audit Office, Ottawa, August 24, 1898.

Sir,—I have to call your attention to the following list of wharfs from which no revenue has come to account for the fiscal year 1897-98, the amount opposite each being the collections for 1896-97 :—

I have written separately about the wharfs at Rivière du Loup and Coteau Landing.

I have to ask for explanation of the absence of revenue from these wharfs for 1897-98.

Have the wharfingers and other collecting officers of your department been recently reminded of the serious position they place themselves in when they do not promptly account for their collections? Are the wharfingers required to give security?

I am, sir, your obedient servant,
J. L. McDOUGALL, A.G.

This correspondence goes to show that there is the recklessness I speak of in connection with the performance of the duties of these wharfingers under the present régime. I know it to be the case that certain people are allowed to use these wharfs without paying a cent, while other people are compelled to pay.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If the hon. gentleman will give me the names, we will soon put a stop to that.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I will give you the name of the wharfinger in my own county. His name is McNeill, a leading Liberal, who has the patronage of that district under my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, and who uses that wharf from one end of the year to the other without paying for it. If he and others of the Government's friends paid what they ought to pay for the use of that wharf, they would pay more than the whole return now shows to be paid.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I want to say this, as one who is particularly interested in what goes on in Nova Scotia, that the statement the hon. gentleman makes is a surprise to me. I cannot contradict it, because I know nothing about it, but it is certainly a subject the Minister of Railways and Canals should look into, and I shall be astonished to find that the hon. gentleman's statement proves to be correct.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I am willing to prove the statement I make, any time the Minister will afford me an opportunity.

Mr. COCHRANE. I do not care where money is expended, if it is spent for the benefit of the country. But I want to draw your attention, Mr. Chairman, to this fact, and it bears out the contention of the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton). I think the Government of the day, and perhaps the old Government, too, but especially this Government, are launching out into a business that is going to be very detrimental to the best interests of the country. When we look over the returns, we find that in Ontario there are eleven wharfs, which return a revenue of $1,246.21. When we come to Quebec, we find returns from thirty-seven wharfs, producing a revenue of $1,303.50, or about the same revenue as is produced by the eleven wharfs in Ontario. Now, that proves to my mind that more wharfs have been constructed than were necessary for the requirements of the people.

An hon. MEMBER. They are building more.

Mr. COCHRANE. If they are building more, then, if the same thing goes on, the condition will be still worse. Now, why should they build wharfs where the returns are nil? It must be evident to the Minister of Finance that it costs considerable to build a wharf, and, if there is no revenue derived from that wharf, there must be something wrong. Either the wharfinger must be taking all the money himself, or, if he does not get any, he is not charging the people what he should charge for the use of the wharf. The fact, to my mind, cannot be contradicted, that if the Government builds a wharf that costs a large sum of money, and there are little or no returns from it, the wharfinger cannot be doing his duty, or that wharf did not require to be built. I think no man can get round that statement. I suppose these eleven wharfs in Ontario were built where they were wanted, and they produce a revenue. I do not object to Quebec having thirty-seven wharfs, if they are built for the accommodation of the people and if the people use them for their exports and imports. Now, we find the same thing in Nova Scotia. If it is true, that thirty or forty more wharfs are to be constructed with the money the Government are taking this year, what will be the result in another year? I think the Government ought to take in sail, and not expend so much money where it is not required. It is evident, from the discussion that took place some time ago in this House—if I may be permitted to refer to it—that a good many wharfs are built where the people do not require them, and the returns under our hands prove conclusively that either they were not required, or that the wharfingers are not doing their duty.

Mr. BERGERON. I find in K-172 a letter from R. C. Desrochers, in answer to a demand on the part of the Auditor General regarding the transfer of wharfs and piers to the Marine Department from the Public Works Department.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They do that every year. As they build a wharf, they transfer it.

Mr. BERGERON. That may be the law, but I know it was not done, at least in some cases. This Mr. Desrochers, clerk of the Department of Public Works, says they have transferred wharfs and piers to the Marine Department as rapidly as practicable after construction, and that the department does not collect fees from persons using these wharfs or piers. It is a hard thing to make them pay fees. If a steamboat company pays fees, it gets them out of the farmers. Now, my hon. friend behind me (Mr. McDougall) has been reading a list of all the wharfs which do not pay revenue.

Mr. BERGERON. I find here about ten wharfs that have sent in no returns at all. What is the use of a law if it is not enforced?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There are wharfs that have been washed away entirely.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend was asking me if there were any dismissals. There was a gentleman named Masson of St. Anicet, a respectable public spirited man who was doing the work free, pro bono publico.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Was he charging fees?

Mr. BERGERON. No, there were no fees charged at all. He was dismissed because he was a strong Conservative, and a Liberal was appointed in his place. How much money has my hon. friend collected from that Liberal? He will find out by reading these letters in the Auditor General's Report, which are too long to read now, that there has nothing been sent in during the first or second year.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). He is acting like Mr. Masson, pro bono publico.

Mr. BERGERON. No, this man does not work for nothing.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Ellis). I would like to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the discussion has taken a very wide range:

Sometimes there are a number of items in a vote or resolution, and then these may be generally discussed as forming part of a single question. Each item may then, if the committee think proper, be taken up as a distinct question, and so discussed and amended. The debate in such a case must be confined to the item, and when it has been disposed of, no reference can again be made to it when the subsequent items are under discussion.

Mr. BERGERON. We are on the Rivière à la Pipe, and when we go to "La Pipe" we go to have a good long talk, and that is the cause of our getting astray.

Mr. TAYLOR. The main and supplementary Estimates which we have now before us are on such a large scale that I would suggest to the hon. Minister the advisability of doing business on business principles. By the Auditor General's Report for last year I find that, where the Government built wharfs, they pay four or five prices for nails and iron that went into the construction of these wharfs. Why cannot the Government buy their supplies at wholesale prices? Why was $5 per 100 pounds paid for bolt iron to cut up and make into bolts? I find that the Government bought from Henry Brassard 4,376 pounds of bolt iron at 5 cents, and 867½ pounds of spikes at 5 cents. Why should the Government pay these prices? All through the accounts you will find that they bought kegs of nails at $3 and at $2.50, 8-inch nails for planking, when the price of these was $1.85 last year. Why pay $2.50 and $3 per keg for nails when you can buy for $1.85? My hon. friend from Kingston (Mr. Britton) referred to the fact, which I know to be a fact, that we deal differently with Ontario as compared with Quebec, Nova Scotia and the other provinces. There are three or four islands at the end of Lake Ontario, Garden Island, Howe Island and Wolfe Island. The farmers on Howe Island, many of them French Canadians and who have been there for one hundred years or more, built the wharf themselves. I wonder that the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Rogers), when he finds Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island getting wharfs by the score, does not get wharfs for Howe Island and Garden Island, where wharfs have been built by private enterprise. Why should these municipalities be taxed for building their own wharfs while the Government come to the rescue of other provinces? I think it is very unfair to treat Ontario in that way when the Government are building wharfs everywhere else. I protest again against paying 5 cents a pound for iron and $3 a keg for nails, when you could get them for $1.85 last year and when iron could be bought for $1.25. I think the money voted by Parliament should go into the wharfs themselves and not into the pockets of some friends of the Government who want to make three or four dollars a keg on iron.

Mr. BERGERON. I was talking about St. Anicet. At page Q-147 of the Auditor General's Report, the hon. Minister will find that there seems to be a contract given to Joseph Ed. Dupuis, of Montreal, a brother of the lawyer, who is the prospective candidate down there, at $1,519. Beside that there were other amounts paid out, and I cannot make out whether, after giving the contract to Dupuis, the Government paid for materials that went into the work, such as hemlock, stones and bolts. The conductor of the work is Stanislas Dupuis. The postmaster at St. Heart is named Dupuis, I am not sure whether it is Stanislas or not, but I think it is. He was conducting these works forty or fifty miles away from Montreal at $2.50 a day, and he received $29 in one account and $87.50 in another. He may never have gone upon the works at all, but said to his cousin: Look after the work, and I will get $2.50. It was a family affair. This may be a small matter; it is a matter of a little over $100, but the principle is bad.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to ask the hon. Minister if these wharfingers give security for the money collected?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No; the moneys are returned quarterly, and a close account is kept.

Mr. SPROULE. It is not to be wondered at that we find these things which are disclosed in the Auditor General's Report—cases where no money is returned at all.

Lower St. Lawrence—

Removal of rocks ..... $3,000

Mr. BERGERON. Where is that?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This is to provide a safe landing place for the fishermen in the St. Lawrence below Matane.

Magdalen Islands—

Breakwater ..... $10,000

Mr. BERGERON. What is this for?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is to afford facilities for the fishing boats of the islands and for those employed on the coasts of the lower St. Lawrence. It is for the construction of a causeway, 1,250 feet long, estimated cost, $11,000, forming a harbour of refuge at Amherst; pile work, 1,200 feet long, and breakwater, 1,800 feet long, $16,000; dredging, $10,000; total estimated cost, $37,000.

Maria—

Wharf ..... $10,000

Mr. BERGERON. What is this for?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This vote of $10,000 is to be applied towards the construction of a wharf at Maria, 2,040 feet long, to reach 10½ feet of water at low water spring tide; the outer 1,200 feet to be constructed of solid cribwork, 30 feet wide, and the inner 840 will be built of alternate blocks and open spans, 20 feet wide; height of wharf at outer end, 24 feet at bottom, and the flooring of wharf to stand 6 feet above high water spring tides; total estimated cost of wharf placed by the acting chief engineer at $70,000.

Mr. BERGERON. What did the Minister say the estimated cost was?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Seventy thousand dollars.

Mr. BERGERON. Seventy thousand dollars! Did the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Guite) take back his resignation, when he got that?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I know nothing about that.

Mr. FOSTER. We must have a full explanation of the basis upon which the Department of Public Works proposes to spend $70,000 on that place.

Mr. BERGERON. It is an open scandal.

Mr. McALISTER. I think the estimate of $70,000 is correct. I have personal knowledge of the location of this wharf, and it will cost $70,000, if not twice $70,000, to make a wharf to 10 feet of water.

Mr. BERGERON. And for what?

Mr. McALISTER. For nothing at all.

Mr. BERGERON. There is no sense in this at all. It is the most indefensible thing that was ever brought before Parliament. What is the population of the village?

Mr. McALISTER. There is no village there at all to speak of.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have not the details of the population. The engineer tells me this is a class of work that may be done from year to year, a piece may be done this year, and a piece later on, as is done for many of these works.

Mr. FOSTER. In the very inception of this thing, I ask the Minister to let this vote stand until he can give some information about it. I want to get the full information as to why the Government should come to this House and ask us to undertake an expenditure of $70,000 at this place. This is altogether too much.

Mr. BERGERON. There is hardly any water there. It is a bay. You can hardly see the village from where the boat stops. I do not think that even a light steamer, like the "Admiral," can get within half a mile of it.

Mr. McALISTER. They have to anchor out half a mile from the shore.

Mr. BERGERON. This is an extraordinary proposition from the Government. There is no more sense in building a wharf at Maria than there is in building a wharf down here on Sparks street.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I agree to the suggestion that this item should stand.

Mr. McALISTER. Why the revenue from the post office there is only about $100.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That would not necessarily prove anything.

Mr. McALISTER. It would show that it is a very small place.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The total cost of the work is large, and the request is reasonable, that hon. gentlemen should have the fullest information. The item can stand.

Mr. FOSTER. In what county is Maria?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is in Bonaventure.

Mr. TAYLOR. This is the worst proposal yet, and we never should allow it to pass.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there any correspondence in the department leading up to the initiation of this vote, and if there is, we ought to have that brought down.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I shall see what additional information there is.

The PRIME MINISTER. This is not a new vote; $5,000 was voted last year.

Mr. FOSTER. But not spent.

The PRIME MINISTER. That may be, but the policy was inaugurated last year.

Mr. TAYLOR. We were never told last year the cost would be $70,000.

The PRIME MINISTER. In view of the statement that it is to cost $70,000, I think the committee is entitled to all the information possible, and there is no objection to let the item stand.

Rivière du Loup (en haut)—

Dredging channel from Lake St. Peter to Louiseville ..... $6,000

Mr. BERGERON. What is the use of that?

The PRIME MINISTER. I am surprised that my hon. friend should ask what is the use of that. It is to dredge the channel of the river, so as to permit the steamboats to come into Louiseville. My hon. friend knows that some distance from the river, and just a little below the village, there is a large saw-mill, and he knows that the town of Louiseville is a growing one. That is the reason for the vote.

Mr. BERGERON. Then, if it is so important, will the right hon. gentleman explain why this vote has been in the Estimates for three years, and has not been spent?

The PRIME MINISTER. That is more than I can say, but I gave the reason for the work.

Mr. BERGERON. I believe that the bridges which are built on that river are solid, and that they cannot be opened for steamboats to pass.

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman must know that the bridges are both above the town.

Mr. BERGERON. The only vessels that come there are small barges, and this is the first time I ever heard that steamboats could go to Louiseville unless they are yachts.

The PRIME MINISTER. They do not come now, but they will come when this channel is made.

Mr. BERGERON. It is just carrying out the principle of the Government giving expenditures to all their friends. The fact that this $6,000 has been three years in the Estimates, and nothing done, proves to me that it is an election vote.

The PRIME MINISTER. If it were an election vote, I suppose it would be expended long before.

Mr. BERGERON. There was no reason before, but there will be this fall.

The PRIME MINISTER. There is just the same reason this fall as there was last fall and the fall before.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. McALISTER. What line of steamers go there?

The PRIME MINISTER. They are market boats.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the estimate of the total cost, and what amount of work has been done?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The estimated cost is $14,000.

Rivière Richelieu—Belœil Channel—

Guide piers ..... $4,000

Mr. BERGERON. Will that finish that work?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Rivière Saguenay (below Chicoutimi)—

Dredging ..... $8,000

Mr. BERGERON. Will that put the channel in proper shape?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is expected so by the officials.

The PRIME MINISTER. It is expected that it will give sufficient water to enable vessels to go to the wharf.

Mr. BERGERON. That is money well spent, if it will accomplish it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This $8,000 will remove two shoals, which will improve the navigation very much. It will not, however, do all that is desired.

St. Alexis—Bale de Ha! Ha!—

Pier ..... $4,000

Mr. BENNETT. Is this a new work?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, this is to complete.

Sillery Cove—

Wharf at Pointe à Pizeau ..... $5,000

Mr. BENNETT. Is that to complete?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Lighting Dominion Public Buildings.... $45,000

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This item was held over at the request of the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster).

Mr. FOSTER. Is there anything in the supplementary Estimates for this?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will allow this item to pass, and have the discussion on the item in the supplementaries.

Mr. CLARKE. When this item was up before, the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Ross Robertson) asked whether it was the intention of the Government to put an electric elevator in the Toronto custom-house. I thought this might be the proper time to ask that question.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think no present determination has been come to on that question.

New dredging plant ..... $60,000

Mr. BENNETT. How many dredges are intended to be constructed in the coming year for that amount?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. For the maritime provinces three new scows and two new boats for the dredge "New Dominion," one new dredge bucket, two boats, one scow and one dredge bucket for the "Prince Edward," one dredge bucket and one scow for the "George Mackenzie," chains for the several dredges, three scows and pile driver; for Quebec and Ontario, two new 80-yards scows for the dredge "Challenge," new hull for the dredge "Ontario," and new hull for steam stone-lifter; for Manitoba, renewal and addition to dredging plant; for British Columbia, renewal and addition to dredging plant; and additional plant not yet determined.

Mr. BENNETT. Are tenders asked for the construction of these scows?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is probable these will be built at the Government establishment at Sorel—at any rate, those for Quebec and Ontario.

Mr. BENNETT. As these scows are to go to the upper lakes, I think that in all fairness they should be constructed in Ontario by tender. The other night it was shown that when it was necessary to build a scow or tug down there, some timber for the work had to be taken down from Ontario.

Mr. BERGERON. How far has the Co-teau dredging gone on—the contract given to Mr. Gauthier? How much has been paid to him, and how was the work done?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The deputy informs me that he has not the information, but that he will get it before the supplementary Estimates are considered, as they contain an item relating to the same subject.

Mr. BERGERON. I also want to know the amount of money that has been spent, how it has been spent, with what plant the work was done, to whom the dredges belonged, how they were employed, what price per hour they were paid, how many cubic yards were taken out, and at what price.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We will get the information for the hon. gentleman before the supplementary Estimates are discussed. I think part of the information has already been submitted to the House in answer to a question.

Mr. BERGERON. There has been some, and I notify my hon. friend that when it comes, I want to bring up some other matters in connection with that subject.

Mr. SPROULE. Where are these scows and dredges to be built?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. At Sorel, in the Government workshops, no doubt, but no special arrangements have been made.

Mr. SPROULE. Would it not be cheaper to build them at Midland than build them at Sorel, and then have to tow them to Georgian Bay via the Welland Canal?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. These scows are built of British Columbia wood, which can be brought to Sorel at a hardly greater cost than to any point in Ontario. I shall make a note of what the hon. gentleman suggests, but the officials think the work can be done cheaper at Sorel than elsewhere by private arrangement.

Mr. BENNETT. There was an opportunity furnished the other evening, on the vote for the construction of the tug "Trudeau," to make a comparison of the cost, and that tug could have been built for much less money at Midland than at Sorel. How many men are employed at Sorel?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The number is 272.

Mr. BENNETT. It was stated the other night that the number had been as high as 450. If the construction of these scows is undertaken, it means a large number of men employed. I do not profess to put my opinion against that of the engineers of the department as to the kind of wood to be used, but I do know that scows much larger in size than those used with the dredge "Challenge" are being built in the Georgian Bay at all times for the carriage of lumber and other commodities. It is not fair to the friends of hon. gentlemen opposite and the public generally that some opportunity should not be afforded them of tendering for and constructing these scows at Georgian Bay, Lake Ontario or any other point. They are not the property of Quebec exclusively, but are used in Ontario, and it is only fair to that province that some part of this money should be expended there.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Whether or not it is good policy to have the Government workshops at Sorel is legitimate matter for difference of opinion, but when we have the facilities at Sorel for doing this work, it is only reasonable that we should send it there. It would be foolish, when we have expensive workshops at Sorel, to send work elsewhere. Of course, if there was any great saving to be effected by building them elsewhere that should be done.

Mr. SPROULE. These scows can be built much cheaper by contract than by day's work down at Sorel. It is very costly to tow them from Sorel to the Georgian Bay. The cost of taking these scows from one locality to another even in the Georgian Bay is quite a large item. If you have to bring them up from Sorel, all the way round by the Welland Canal to Georgian Bay, and if you build them by day's work, I am quite sure that will cost more than if you were to build them by contract after inviting tenders. I see that a great deal of tamarack and rock elm is being used in building boats and tugs, and you could get as good quality of that kind of wood in Ontario as in any part of the Dominion. Right from the station where I live, that kind of wood is being shipped to the state of Maine for the purpose of building boats there. If tenders were invited, these scows could be built much cheaper than by day's work by the Government.

Mr. BERGERON. Will the Minister make an effort to ascertain whether these could not be built cheaper by contract and public tender than down at Sorel?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to this. He may be expected back in a very short time.

Mr. BERGERON. Where is the new scow for Fraser River, B.C., being built?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Probably built on the coast of Victoria under the superintendence of our engineer.

Mr. BERGERON. The Conservative Government were very much abused by hon. gentlemen opposite, but when Sir Hector Langevin was Minister of Public Works there was not a question put from this side which he could not answer immediately when putting through his estimates. He had a book in his hand prepared by the department under his supervision, which contained all the particulars. I am sorry the department have lost the good habit of putting all details in the hands of the Minister so that he could answer every question. I know my hon. friend cannot do better—it is not his fault, but he will understand our position. When we take concurrence I cannot remember all these questions, so the matter will go through, whereas, if my hon. friend had had the facts before him he could give us the information to which we are entitled.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Without any disposition to disparage Sir Hector Langevin, who was known, in some lines, as an excellent administrator, the information I get from some of the older members of the House does not correspond with that which my hon. friend gives. I am told that it was not the practice of Sir Hector Langevin to answer such questions off-hand. Any hon. member can take up the Auditor General's Report and ask innumerable questions concerning the items that no Minister could answer off-hand. They are a proper subject of inquiry, but if we had Sir Hector Langevin himself here he could not answer at once such questions as those put by my hon. friend.

Mr. BERGERON. I am sure Sir Hector Langevin could not answer for many of these expenditures under the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. SPROULE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He had to answer for many in which he did not do as well as the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. GANONG. I would like to ask if any survey has been made of the upper entrance of St. Andrew's harbour. I believe the Minister of Public Works did send an engineer there. Can the acting Minister give me the estimate of the cost of dredging so as to open the upper passage?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Did an engineer go, and if so, when?

Mr. GANONG. Some time within a year. He called on me on the way down and told me that he was going to make a survey.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The officials tell me that they cannot recall such a report; but I will have the matter inquired into.

Mr. GANONG. If the survey has not been made, it is essential that it should be made. There is a great deal of traffic on the river by the boats of three or four steamboat lines, and, except at high water, every vessel has to go around the lower end of St. Andrew's Island, a point at which the current runs strong, especially at flood tide.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) The hon. Minister gave some information with regard to the dredge "Prince Edward." If this is the proper time to do so, I would like to ask what has been done during the past year by this dredge, and also where she is likely to work for the coming season?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The dredge "Prince Edward" during the past year worked at Charlottetown at the ferry slip, and at the Steam Navigation Company's wharf. At Summerside she worked near Holman's wharf. She is now at Charlottetown and is likely to be there for some time.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) Where will she be working during the coming season?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is no arrangement for her work except at Charlottetown.

Mr. KAULBACH. Can the hon. Minister inform me if we are to have any portion of this amount named in the Estimates for dredging spent in Lunenburg Harbour and in the La Have River, near Bridgewater. I need hardly remind the hon. Minister of the necessity for dredging Lunenburg harbour and La Have River. We have more vessels passing in and out of these harbours than pass in and out of any other harbour in the province outside of Halifax. And Lunenburg is a port open the year round and frequented every day. When the hon. Minister visited Lunenburg last year in company with the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), although they had only a small boat, still, at low tide, they could see the mud stirred up by the working of the screw, proving its shallowness. The necessity for this work is known to the Minister of Public Works, because I have represented it to him in letters I have written him. When I look at the amount of work done in Yarmouth Harbour every season—I might almost say they have a dredge there from one year's end to the other—I feel that when an appeal is made for work of the character I describe, we should not be told: Well, the dredge is wanted in another quarter, and your turn will come later. That has been told me by the Minister of Public Works until he saw the necessity for this dredging. And the Finance Minister may remember that when he was leaving the port after his visit last summer, he promised me openly in the presence of quite a gathering on the pier, that the work would be attended to this summer. I asked him particularly: "Will it be attended to this summer?" And he replied, "Yes, Kaulbach, that will be all right."

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Who promised that?

Mr. KAULBACH. The Minister of Public Works, and in the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Fielding's) hearing.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not recollect it; it may be so.

Mr. KAULBACH. The dredging at LaHave River is a work much needed also. A great deal of debris has fallen in the channel of the river, and prevents vessels reaching the town of Bridgewater. I think that a dredge would manage, in a very short time, to cut off the corners of the channel so as to make it straight, and thus enable vessels to get up with the greatest ease by the use of a tug. At present, it is impossible to reach the town, because the channel is too winding, for vessels of deep draught to reach within a mile or two of the town. I strongly urge that these two works be attended to, and, if possible, this summer. I think that Lunenburg is entitled to the largest portion of this expenditure.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I hope my hon. friend (Mr. Kaulbach) will be able to convince some of the gentlemen around him of the great need of these maritime sections, notably the south shore of Nova Scotia, in the way of breakwaters, harbours, dredging, and so on, which are the subject of criticism. His remarks are a fair illustration of the needs of that coast. The hon. gentleman has stated, not unfairly, the importance of the harbour of Lunenburg. He has also mentioned Bridgewater. If he wishes to be impartial I think he had better include Mahone Bay, because we have urgent appeals from that place as well as from Bridgewater and Lunenburg. Each of them is an important place. Lunenburg, the shire town; Bridgewater, a thriving place, and the centre of a large trade; and Mahone Bay, also a thriving and important centre. The one that seemed to press most strongly upon us was Bridgewater, but we were not able to do the dredging there because we could not get dredges for the work. We have put in the supplementary Estimates for this year an appropriation for dredging at Bridgewater, which we hope to be able to do, and if it is not done, it will not be because of our unwillingness to spend the money, but because of our inability to obtain dredges to do the work. I appreciate the importance of the work which my hon. friend has referred to, and while Bridgewater may have the priority, I do not wish to say that other works are not equally deserving and that they may not at a later date have a claim upon us. But I do not anticipate that we will be able to do any dredging in Lunenburg this year. If we can do anything in the county in the way of dredging, we shall endeavour to do the work at Bridgewater, and later on we hope to deal with the other cases.

Mr. KAULBACH. I am happy to hear the Minister refer to Mahone Bay. I put in an application a year ago and several times previous to that, asking for a dredge for that port. That port has a large number of vessels as well, and I would be only too happy if Mahone Bay could be recognized and placed on an equal footing with Lunenburg. I observe an amount for dredging the LaHave River, but the difficulty with me is to know whether that is going to be expended this summer. It is certainly much needed. I hope it is not an appropriation in the Estimates that is intended for another purpose, which has often been the case. I will look hopefully forward to see that the dredging of the LaHave is done this summer, and that Lunenburg and Mahone Bay are not neglected and overlooked.

Mr. ELLIS. Could the Minister give us an idea as to what the Department of Public Works is likely to do with reference to obtaining dredges of an entirely different character, such as are absolutely necessary for the Atlantic coast? This is an old story with me, because under the late Government I always brought it under the notice of the then Minister of Public Works, Sir Hector Langevin, and he always promised to take it into consideration, assuring me he was all right upon the subject, but it was his wicked partners who stood in the way. The dredges on the Atlantic coast are not equal to the service demanded of them. The department needs there dredges of an entirely different character, of a modern type. Dredges are now made in England of the most modern style, having ten times the ca-capacity of the dredges which we are using. I do not wish to depreciate in any way Canadian manufactures, but it cannot be denied that it is utterly impossible to make dredges in Canada of the English type which are now used for dredging great harbours.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the cost of those English dredges?

Mr. ELLIS. I suppose something like half a million dollars, probably would fit up a good dredge. In saying that, I am really guessing, but some of those dredges are capable of steaming across the Atlantic. They are used in the great harbours of Europe, on the Dutch coast, and on the United States coast, and are used at the mouth of the Mississippi. They are well known, no doubt, to the Department of Public Works. If you go into the business of dredging harbours, and if you want to do an extensive work that will accommodate ships of the modern type, you must have these dredges. If the Acting Minister of Public Works is not able to make any statement to-day, still I would like to have from him some assurance that he will fit out dredges to some extent at least on the best modern plan. If there is to be good work done on the St. Lawrence, at least one great suction dredge of the most approved modern type should be obtained. I would like the Minister to make at least some consoling statement about it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am afraid I am in a measure responsible myself for the failure of the Minister of Public Works to provide for these dredges in the present Estimates. The Minister of Public Works fully appreciates the importance of what my hon. friend has said, he realizes that our dredging plant needs to be largely improved. But these large dredges of modern character cost a great deal of money.

Mr. WILSON. About how much?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Ellis) says half a million. I think that is probably too much.

Mr. ELLIS. No, I think about £100,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They have very expensive machinery. No doubt the member for St. John is better informed than I am. The Minister of Public Works was anxious to have inserted in the Estimates something for that purpose, and I have to plead guilty to striking out the items, because we were cutting and pruning in order to bring those Estimates within moderate bounds, and I did not feel at liberty to support the application of the Department of Public Works for the increased apparatus, which I admit is much needed, and which, at no distant day, the Department of Public Works will have to attend to.

Mr. ELLIS.

Mr. CLARKE. Has the Minister any idea of the capacity of those dredges?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am told one of those great dredges will raise from 10,000 to 12,000 yards per day, of soft material. I have no doubt it would be economical, and would be a real saving of money to get better dredging plant. But it costs a great deal of money, and we hesitate to impose so large a charge this year.

Mr. WILSON. Can you do it with your own dredges cheaper than by hiring?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Generally speaking, Government dredges can do work cheaper than any we can hire.

Mr. McALISTER. Can the Minister of Finance say if any dredging is to be done below Campbellton?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I understand the "St. Lawrence" is now at Pictou, and from that she will go to Traverse below Campbellton.

Mr. CLANCY. The Minister of Finance made a statement that rather startled me when he said that he opposed a provision for better dredges on the ground of economy. I was quite curious to know just how the hon. gentleman was going to end. There is a good deal of work that must be done by dredges for which we are voting money, and we find now there are to be no dredges to do the work. It is not difficult to conclude what the outcome will be. I was anxious to hear the hon. gentleman say that they were going to increase their dredging plant.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We are increasing it somewhat, but we cannot think of buying these half million dollar dredges.

Mr. CLANCY. I suppose you do not want dredges of that capacity for work in Ontario.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The dredges to which my hon. friend from St. John referred to would only be suitable on the Atlantic coast.

Mr. CLARKE. I see an item of $75,000 in the supplementary Estimates for dredging in Ontario and Quebec. I would like to know what progress has been made with the dredging in the eastern channel of Toronto harbour, and what the intention is respecting further dredging for which this appropriation is made in the supplementary Estimates?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Dredges have been at work for a couple of months in Toronto, and have made only moderate progress, but it is intended that they shall continue dredging there till the required depth is reached between the two piers.

Mr. CLARKE. Is that work being done by contract, and if so, who is the contractor?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, it is being done by a dredge which is hired and paid for by the hour. It is hired from W. E. Phin at $8 per hour.

Mr. CLARKE. I think I am correct in saying that the greater part of the dredging in connection with the eastern channel was done by contract, prior to two or three years ago, at so much per yard. Why was that method changed and Mr. Phin given the work, although he did not have a dredge at all?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I believe there was a contract for large works in Toronto in which dredging was an incident.

Mr. CLARKE. There was a vast amount of dredging done in connection with the contract, and the Auditor General's statement for 1896, or 1897, shows that the dredging work, under contract, cost a great deal less than the dredging that is being done now. What is the reason that no contract was entered into for this dredging? This gentleman does not go dredging at all, but he got $8 an hour to do the work and then farmed it out.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I cannot tell the hon. gentleman any particular reason why this plan was adopted, but I am assured that the cost of the dredging under this arrangement is reasonable and fair.

Mr. CLARKE. I know it is not fair to ask the hon. Minister for this information at this stage, but when the supplementary Estimates, in which, I see, there is an item of $75,000 for Toronto harbour, are up, I would ask him to give the information.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. As to the cost?

Mr. CLARKE. Under this method of doing the work as compared with doing it by contract.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I can give the hon. gentleman the cost, but I am afraid I cannot give him the reason that entered into the hon. Minister's mind. I will give him all the information I can.

Mr. CLANCY. I understand that the dredge that was used on this work last year has a capacity of about 500 yards per day. I remember that the hon. Minister of Public Works stated that this dredging was done in connection with some cribwork and that it could not be let by tender. I think that Phin employed a dredge belonging to somebody else. He drew a prize by way of the Liberals coming into power. Mr. Cargill's dredge then ceased to be of much value and it became available to be hired to the Government at $8 per day. Phin got it at a less sum and pocketed the difference. I am told that the capacity of the dredge is not more than 500 yards a day and that would become very expensive. Has any change been made in the arrangement, because I understand that Phin was only doing the work last year?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I understand that the average capacity of these dredges is about 600 yards per day, instead of 500 yards. As to the price, I understand that where dredges have been hired, and that is frequently, in no case have they been obtained at less than $8 an hour, and in some cases there were even higher rates paid.

Mr. CLARKE. I think I am correct in saying that a bid was put in to do the work at $6 an hour, and the person who put in the bid found that the work had already been awarded at $8 per hour, not only for 1897-98, but for 1898-99. I would be obliged to the hon. Minister if he would get the information as to what bids were put in, in response to public advertisement, and the prices at which the parties tendered. I am perfectly satisfied that the hon. Minister will find that a bid was put in to do the work at $2 per hour less, and if I am correctly advised, I should like to know why the public should be asked to pay $20 extra per day to Mr. Phin to do this work.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say an offer was sent in to the department to do the work at $6 per hour?

Mr. CLARKE. I am so advised.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The officials say that they have no knowledge of any such offer.

Mr. CLARKE. It is hardly fair to ask the hon. Minister for this information at this time, but if the Minister will look himself fully into the facts, I think he will find that what I have said is correct. When this item of $75,000 comes up to be discussed, I hope he will be able to give me the information.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the department has the information I will obtain it.

Mr. CLANCY. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will tell me the name of the dredge that did the work in the Sydenham River last year?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The dredge employed was named the "Ontario."

Mr. CLARKE. Is dredging work going on in the harbour of Owen Sound at present?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. Is the work being done by contract or by the hour?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is being done by an arrangement at so much per hour, the same as in the other case, by the Owen Sound Dredging Company.

Roads and bridges..... $82,500

Mr. DAVIN. There is an item here of $13,000 for the Edmonton, N.W.T., bridge across the Saskatchewan. That item will have to be discussed, and as I do not think it would be proper to discuss it when the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) is not here, I will ask that it be reserved.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the hon. gentleman wishes it to be reserved I will not object, but I suggest that, as by reserving this item you would reserve the whole vote, he allow the item to go through on the understanding that on the supplementary Estimates he shall have the fullest opportunity, and I promise that he shall.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman may carry the other items and reserve this one.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. All right, I am quite willing.

Ottawa City—

Bridges over the River Ottawa, the slides and the Rideau Canal and approaches thereto—Ordinary repairs.. $7,000

Mr. WILSON (Lennox). I thought there was some arrangement entered into with the city of Ottawa whereby we were to give $60,000, and that was to cover most everything.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No arrangement has yet been entered into with the city of Ottawa on this subject, but the Government has made a proposal, which is now in the form of a notice before the House, and it will come up in due course. It will not, however, affect this item, which is under an arrangement made some years ago by the late Government.

Ottawa—Maria Street Bridge over the Rideau Canal—

Reconstruction ..... $40,000

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is practically a similar case to the last. There was an arrangement made some years ago whereby the Government agreed to maintain certain bridges, chiefly over slides and booms, and canals, and Dominion works. We do not propose to alter that arrangement in the new plan, if it should be adopted by the House. The Maria Street bridge is rather an important work, which has been delayed, owing to negotiations which have been in progress between the Department of Public Works and Mr. Booth, representing the interests of the Canada Atlantic Railway. The bridge crosses his tracks, and it was deemed expedient that his railway interests should contribute a share of the costs. It has been the subject of negotiation, causing some delay, but an arrangement has now been come to, and the plans are about complete, and at a very early date tenders will be invited.

Mr. CLARKE. And this $60,000 will be given, in addition to the Government maintaining these bridges?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes. Of course, the bridges over canals in any part of the Dominion have to be maintained by the Government.

Mr. DAVIN.

Mr. SPROULE. What percentage is it understood Mr. Booth should contribute in regard to this bridge.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The understanding is, that it is about half and half.

Mr. CLANCY. Are these bridges maintained altogether by the Government, or does the city contribute anything?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not think the city contributes, nor do I think municipalities anywhere contribute to the maintenance of bridges over the canals.

Mr. CLANCY. In view of the proposal to give the city of Ottawa $60,000 a year, I ask, for information, if the city contributes anything towards these bridges?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My understanding is, that the city does not contribute to the maintenance of these bridges across the canal.

Ottawa—Sappers' Bridge—

Extraordinary repairs..... $1,000

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the Minister to say that the Government maintains both the Sappers' and the Dufferin bridges.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The general rule is, that the Government has to construct and maintain the bridges over all the canals, but in certain cases a bridge is more extensive than would be necessary as a highway over the canal, and, as it affords increased traffic, there may be some contribution from the municipality. Perhaps the Sappers' bridge is one of these.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood there was some arrangement formerly entered into by which the city paid for the maintenance of at least one of these bridges. In view of the proposal to give the city of Ottawa $60,000, it would be well to know that, so that we may see what the total benefit of the expenditure by Government is to the city.

Mr. TAYLOR. My impression is, that the city was to maintain Sparks Street bridge, and the Government to maintain Wellington Street bridge.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am informed that the arrangement made in the time of Sir Hector Langevin was, that both these bridges should be maintained by the Dominion Government.

Mr. CLARKE. Does the Government pay for the pavement also?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The scoria blocks at either end of the Sappers' bridge were laid down under an arrangement between the city and the Government.

Mr. CLANCY. What are these extraordinary repairs ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The bridge has been widened, and this is to complete the sidewalks on both sides of it.

Telegraph line—North shore, St. Lawrence—Extension from Point aux Esquimaux eastward to Belleisle Island—To complete ..... $70,000

Mr. CLARKE. Is this work being done by contract ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Tenders are about being invited.

Mr. CLARKE. Is $70,000 the total cost ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, the estimated total cost.

Miscellaneous—

Surveys and inspections.....,..... $25,000

Mr. CLANCY. What is the nature of this ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is the usual general vote. It is estimated as follows :—Surveys, maritime provinces, $6,000 ; Quebec, $10,000 ; Ontario, $4,500 ; Manitoba, $1,000 ; North-west Territories, $1,000 ; British Columbia, $2,500 ; total, $25,000 ; expended last year, $24,959.

Mr. CLANCY. Where are these hydrographic surveys being done—on the lakes ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No. These are the surveys of engineers of the department who were sent to examine the various works which were undertaken or projected.

National Art Gallery, Ottawa..... $2,000

Mr. CLARKE. The other day I received a letter from the president of the Canadian Institute, Mr. B. E. Walker, a gentleman, I believe, well known to the Minister of Finance. He writes to me as follows :—

It is hoped that in the supplementary Estimates a reasonable sum would be placed to begin the erection of a national museum at Ottawa. Personally, I believe the Government only need to feel that the country demands a proper building in which to exploit the resources of this country to do their duty by the Geological Survey. I venture to write to you, hoping that when the item comes up in the Estimates you will say a few vigorous words in favour of it.

I do not know whether this is the place to say the words or not. I would like to ask the Minister for some information about it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have in contemplation—and some of us entertained the hope that it might be done this year—the erection of a building in Ottawa for the purposes of a geological museum and other purposes of a like character. A work of that kind ought not to be undertaken unless we can have a handsome structure which would reflect credit on the Dominion, and although the Government are cordially in sympathy with it, it would call for such a very large expenditure of money that I frankly say I did not myself feel like recommending it. The present Geological Survey building is in a very unsatisfactory state, and there is a pressing need for a new and suitable building ; but in view of the many demands on the Treasury this year and in view of the other things we are doing in the way of constructing public buildings and making grants to Ottawa, we are obliged to let this matter stand. Although it does not form a definite part of the plan, I entertain the hope that when that building is erected we shall have a nucleus of an art gallery that will not be unworthy of the country. The suggestion of Mr. Walker is a worthy one, and I hope it may be realized.

Mr. CLARKE. But there is no hope for action this year ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, it is not in the Estimates of the present year.

Statue of Her Majesty the Queen in celebration of the Diamond Jubilee .. $12,500

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The contract for this was awarded to L. P. Hébert, sculptor, Montreal, the sculptor of the statues of Sir George Cartier and Sir John Macdonald now on the grounds.

Mr. CLARKE. Where is this to be erected ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The particular point of the location has not yet been determined.

Mr. SPROULE. What class of work is this to be ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. A bronze statue on a granite pedestal.

Mr. SPROULE. How much is it to cost ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The amount of the contract is $18,500. The total cost, with all incidentals, is $19,000.

Monument of the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie ..... $8,000

Mr. SPROULE. Is the contract for this let ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes. The contract has been given to two gentlemen—Mr. Hébert and Mr. Hamilton McCarthy. The exact location of the monument has not yet been determined, but it will be somewhere on the grounds in connection with this building.

Mr. SPROULE. What sort of work will it be ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It will be of the same character as the other. The total estimated cost is $14,500.

Mr. CLARKE. I would like to ask the Minister if anything has been done with regard to procuring oil paintings of the late

Hon. Alexander Mackenzie and Sir John Thompson. There are paintings of these gentlemen now in the reading room of the House, and I had an intimation that they are to be removed. Is it the intention of the Government to procure other paintings or to allow these to remain.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am not quite sure that the remark I am about to make will apply to both of these works; but I understood that these were the work of an artist who desired to place them there on exhibition, and that they were never acquired by the Government. That is the information I have received. The Government have formed no determination with regard to them.

Mr. CLARKE. They are allowed to remain in the meantime?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have no information on that point. The question has not been raised.

Mr. CLANCY. I am told that these are meritorious works of art, and that some negotiations have taken place between the parties who placed them there and the Government, and that there was some dispute about the price. Will the hon. gentleman say whether the Government have considered the question of purchasing these paintings?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have not heard of any negotiations on the subject. It is quite possible that the Minister of Public Works may have discussed the subject with some persons interested.

Mr. CLARKE. There have been no instructions given to any other artists to make paintings of those gentlemen?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think not. I have not heard anything of the sort.

Committee rose and reported progress.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned 12.05 a.m. (Saturday).

ROADS AND ROAD ALLOWANCES IN MANITOBA.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton) moved for leave to introduce Bill
Mr. CLARKE.

(No. 175) respecting roads and road allowances in the province of Manitoba.

He said: Perhaps I had better explain what this Bill is. In the province of Manitoba some difficulty has been experienced with regard to the plans of towns and cities; the boundary lines of the different plans having been subject to dispute. Some years ago they provided a certain method whereby new plans might be prepared under the direction of the municipal councils, and providing also that any one not satisfied with the boundary lines as set out in these plans should have an opportunity of contesting them. That method has proven very satisfactory. In the case of the city of Winnipeg, however, the plans which have been prepared under the direction of the city council and approved by the local government are not absolutely effective, because the property in some of the streets of the city has never been transferred to the province, and therefore the legislation of the province is not sufficient to confirm the operation of the plans so far as regards those streets respecting which the title has never passed from the Crown as represented by the Dominion. In 1895 or 1896, an Act was passed for the purpose of confirming certain portions of this municipal plan. One portion of the plan respecting which there was a dispute comprised a street called Water Street, which has been the subject of litigation for some years, and that portion of the plan was exempted from the Act I have referred to. Neither the city council nor the local government felt disposed to take any action in view of the fact that litigation was pending. The litigation, however, has now been settled, and the city of Winnipeg and all the parties to the dispute have advised my department through their solicitors, that they are desirous that the plans should now be confirmed. This Act is simply for the purpose of confirming that plan.

Mr. DAVIN. There are no suits now pending that would be affected by this litigation.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Certainly not.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

THE INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION— THE ALASKAN BOUNDARY.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to make a few remarks to the House on what I consider to be a very grave and important question, and a question which I am sure is regarded as such by the First Minister, by the Government, and by hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House. I refer to the Alaskan boundary question and the position in which Canada stands in relation to that matter at the present time. After giving the subject the most careful consideration that I could, I have arrived at the conclusion that it is my duty to bring it before the Parliament of Canada. The House will recollect that when the commission closed its labours at Washington a communiqué was given out by authority of the right hon. the leader of the Canadian Government, and the chairman of the American Commissioners. Although it is familiar to every member of this House, it will not, I think, be unwise for me to recall it to their attention. It is as follows :—

On behalf of their respective commissions, Senator Fairbanks, the chairman of the American body, and Sir Wilfrid Laurier, acting chairman in the absence of Lord Herschell, of the Canadian body, made the following public statement respecting the action taken to-day : "The commission adjourned to meet at Quebec, August 2, unless the chairmen of the respective commissions shall agree upon another date.

"The Commission has made very substantial progress in the settlement and adjustment of many of the questions upon which it has been earnestly engaged. But it has been unable to agree upon the settlement of the Alaskan boundary. This problem has been a complicated and difficult one, but the commissioners, acting in the utmost friendliness and cordiality, have been unable to agree upon a satisfactory adjustment. The difficulties, apart from the immediate delimitation of this boundary, by the commission itself, arises from the conditions under which it might be referred to arbitration.

"The British commissioners desired that the whole question should be referred on terms similar to those provided in the reference of the Venezuelan boundary line, and which by providing an umpire would ensure certainty and finality.

"The United States commissioners, on the other hand, thought the local conditions in Alaska so different that some modification of the Venezuelan boundary reference should be introduced. They thought the reference should be made to six eminent jurists, three chosen by each of the high contracting parties without providing for an umpire, they believing that finality would be secured by a majority vote of the jurists so chosen. They did not see any present prospect of agreeing to a European umpire to be selected in the manner proposed by the British commissioners, while the British commissioners were unwilling to agree to the selection of an American umpire in the manner suggested by the United States commissioners. The United States commissioners further contended that special stipulations should be made in any reference to arbitration that the existing settlements on the tide waters of the coast should in any event continue to belong to the United States. To this contention the British commissioners refused to agree.

"It was therefore deemed advisable to adjourn to a convenient date, in order to enable the respective governments to further consider the subject with respect to which no conclusion yet has been reached."

I may say that I felt extremely indignant at the action taken and the position assumed by the United States on that occasion the moment I read what I regard as the most unreasonable attitude that it was possible for any government to assume on a question of that kind. And, having occasion to address a large audience in the city of Toronto a short time afterwards, I used the following language in reference to what had been done :—

But I say this : They have forgotten what is due to Canada, they have forgotten what is due to the great empire of which we form a part, and I do not hesitate to say that under these circumstances I feel bound, as representing Her Majesty's loyal and constitutional Opposition in the Parliament of Canada, to enter my solemn protest in the face of the people of this country, and in the presence of the electors of this country, against such a proceeding as has now been taken. What does it mean ? It means that the United States of America have taken possession of a strip of coast on the Pacific Ocean bounding for a considerable distance the territory of Canada, and say that if an international tribunal of judicial experts, the highest international authorities the world can produce, were to declare they are in wrongful possession and that the territory belongs to us and not to them, they will not give it up. What does that mean ? It means that they intend to hold on to the means of subordinating the great Canadian Yukon gold country to the interests of the United States of America, despite treaties ; whether the treaty with Russia gives them the right or not, they intend to hold that line of communication as a means of compelling Canada to allow them to plunder the Canadian Yukon at their pleasure for the next ten or twenty years.

Now, Sir, I am in a position to withdraw a large portion of the censure which I uttered on that occasion, after having heard not very long ago the statement made by the right hon. First Minister that it was perfectly understood by the commission that they would not meet at all unless that difficulty were removed out of the way. That statement places the position of the Government of Canada in a much better light than it appeared to be at that time, and I feel it my duty to my right hon. friend and to the gentlemen engaged with him on that commission, to frankly say that I had not so understood the matter, or I would not have expressed myself with regard to the action of the Government of Canada in the strong way in which I did. I think, however, that the concluding portion of my remarks will find an echo in the mind of every gentleman in this House, to whatever party he may belong, and I believe it will also find an echo in the minds of all the intelligent people of Canada who have given any attention to this question and have at all understood it. I believe I am correctly informed when I say that it has been decided, that at present that convention shall not meet, and it shall not meet because the Government of Canada have found that all their efforts to obtain a satisfactory reference and settlement of the Alaskan boundary question have failed. I therefore desire to draw the attention of the House for a few moments to the position in which this question now stands. Those who have read the American papers, and those who have read the London "Times," know that a great deal of misapprehension has existed with regard to this question, and that the steady and persistent efforts of the press of the United States of America to mislead the public mind on the question have been eminently successful in that country, and I regret to say too successful in Great Britain. The London "Times," very unfortunately in my judgment, permitted a correspondent holding a high and influential position—I think a Philadelphia correspondent of the press, who stated that he had been in close and intimate association with the American commissioners during the sittings at Quebec, and the subsequent sittings at Washington—to use the columns of that paper to put forth in most authentic form the statement that the position which the Government of Canada had assumed in regard to that question, was just the same as if France were to claim that the Channel Islands belonged to her—that, in fact, the grounds taken by the Government of Canada for opposing the proposals of the United States of America could only be paralleled by such an act as France undertaking to claim the Channel Islands as a part of her possessions because they were not remote from France itself. Now, I am especially induced to make a few observations on this matter to-day because I find the feeling of the United States declared by this correspondent, who had obtained access to the columns of the London "Times," to be most friendly towards Great Britain, but very far from feeling the same friendliness towards Canada. The whole aim and object of the press of the United States and the Government—for I am sorry to say that I am unable to confine this remark to the United States press—has been from the outset to lead the world to suppose that England was quite prepared to make such a settlement of this Alaskan boundary question as they desired, but that the difficulty was caused by Canada; and the press of the United States have even gone further, and have said that my right hon. friend was not unwilling to make a fair and just settlement with the United States, but that he was restrained by the fact, that Sir Charles Tupper and the Conservative Opposition in Canada were hanging on his flank and embarrassing him in dealing with the question. Now, I think my right hon. friend will acquit me to the fullest extent of having taken at any period since these negotiations were first undertaken, any course which I believed was not calculated to strengthen the hands of the Canadian Government in defending the undoubted rights of Canada. I might refer even to my perhaps somewhat aggressive speech on this subject, at the opening of this session; but it will be found, on examining that speech, that the charge which I brought against the Government in relation to the negotiations was that they had conceded too much, and had shown too great a desire to do everything that was possible to meet the views, commercial and otherwise of the United States of America. My principal object, in rising to-day, is that at this critical moment in these most important negotiations, it should be understood that my right hon. friend does not represent the Government of Canada and the Liberal party of Canada, but that he represents Canada in regard to this question.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. And that on whatever side of the House we may sit, we are only too ready to do anything and everything in our power to strengthen the hands of my right hon. friend and the Government which he leads, in taking such a course as will preserve and secure the rights of Canada against what I consider the most unfair and unjustifiable course of the United States on this most important question. When my right hon. friend and his fellow commissioners representing Great Britain, both British and Canadian, made the proposal to the United States commissioners that they were prepared, in regard to the Alaskan boundary, to adopt a similar reference to that which was made in regard to the Venezuelan controversy, which is now being dealt with by an international commission in Paris, I think they went to the very verge, perhaps even beyond the verge of what they were justified in doing, in order to show the United States that Canada and the British commissioners were willing to adopt the policy which the United States had urged and which had been accepted by Lord Salisbury in a somewhat similar case. Now, Sir, what is this question? It is simply the question of a treaty made by Russia and Great Britain in 1825, in which a boundary line was described—not delimited, but in which the indications of where the delimitations should be made were laid down. A controversy has arisen between the United States and Great Britain, in which Canada supports the British contention to the utmost extent, that is, that the term "shore" used in that treaty, and which indicates that strip of territory from Mount St. Elias down to the Portland Channel, should be fixed and delimited at 10 leagues from the shore. I will not go minutely into the question as it is not necessary, but in general terms that is the indication of the treaty. The contention always has been, on the part of Great Britain and Canada, that the term "shore" meant along the headland.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). It may be just as well, in making an important statement of this kind, to observe that that treaty indicates a maximum distance of ten leagues.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Quite so, and I am much obliged to my hon. friend for the correction. It indicates a maximum distance of ten leagues, but it is to be from the shore and to the crest of certain lines of mountains. That is the position. The United States of America cannot own anything, nothing can belong to them, except that which the treaty of Russia gave them—they purchased the rights of Russia in all their completeness but those rights alone. In view of that fact, it can hardly be believed that any correspondent, any gentleman declaring that he was expressing the views and sentiments which he had acquired from intimate association with the American commissioners, should be permitted, in that great organ of public opinion in England, to say to the British public that the claim which Canada was setting up was so untenable and unjust that it could only be paralleled by the claim of France that the Channel Islands belong to her. How can the United States adopt such a contention in face of the fact that my Right Hon. friend Lord Herschell, representing Great Britain and British interests, conceded so much as to say: We will take your own case, the case in which you have set the terms on which a delimitation between the British possessions and the Venezuelan possessions shall be made, we will take your own plan, and we simply require that this question shall be referred to a body of international arbitrators, composed of experts, and if the experts of Great Britain and the United States cannot agree, it will be determined by the umpire, a high international authority, possessing all the knowledge of such subjects, one of the ablest men that can be found. What was the answer? They said: No, that which has been customary for all time throughout the world as the means of settling disputes as to the delimitation of boundaries under treaties, we will refuse to agree to. We will refuse even our own model for such a delimitation. We will refuse anything, except that there shall be three commissioners named on each side and no umpire, that is to say, that we shall be in a position to prevent any decision whatever. That is the position undoubtedly taken by the United States. Or, they say, you must allow us to name as umpire the representative of some country whose position is so subservient to the United States as to make it absolutely certain that we shall get everything in our favour. They even went further. They said: In case such an international tribunal is agreed to by us, on any terms, we require as a sine qua non that you will agree that if that international tribunal decides that Skagway and Dyea and the Lynn Canal belong to Canada, you must give them up and we shall retain them. No more monstrous, and I do not hesitate to use a stronger word and say, more insulting proposition, in my judgment, could be made on the part of the United States. The position I take is this, that the Government of the United States know, that the commissioners representing the United States know enough of this subject to have satisfied themselves that a fair decision by an international tribunal of where that boundary is—and that is all that Canada has ever asked, or that England has ever asked—would be a decision on the principles that have always been applied in the settlement of such questions. I am satisfied that we can find no parallel in any country in the world for such a course as the United States have taken, namely, that in the delimitation of the boundary under a treaty, no regard shall be had to what that treaty means, but that if it be found to hold a meaning that would deprive them of the places that they have already taken possession of without right, and that belong to Canada, these places shall not belong to Canada but to the United States of America. There was no possible course left for the British Commissioners, under such circumstances, but to absolutely repudiate recognizing any such position or any such terms. I was glad to learn some short time ago, from my right hon. friend that the commission did not adjourn to meet on the 2nd August, except under the perfect understanding that these questions must be, by diplomatic means, removed to a just settlement that will be recognized by England and Canada, and I am glad to know I am able to include Canada. It is now shown that Great Britain has not been willing, notwithstanding all these efforts on the part of the United States, to overrule the just claims of Canada; and so far as I am able to learn, so far as my right hon. friend has been good enough to keep me, as a Privy Councillor, informed of the position of the Government, I have no hesitation in saying that I have assured my right hon. friend that the course his Government were pursuing had my entire support and that I believed they were taking the only course they could in justice to Canadian interests.

But I now come to a very important question, and that is the reluctance on the part of Her Majesty's Government to do that with the United States that they would do with any other country in the world. I speak from intimate knowledge, and from my personal acquaintance and official association with both the great governing parties in England—because there were many changes of Government while I held the position of High Commissioner, and I was necessarily thrown, in relation to these matters, into intimate association with both—when I say that from 1868, when I had occasion to deal with an important question relating to Canadian interests with Her Majesty's Government, down to the present hour, I have been struck very forcibly with the unwillingness on the part of Her Majesty's Government to allow any circumstance whatever to even threaten a collision with the United States. There is every reason in the world why Great Britain should be most unwilling to have such a collision. While she would feel that perhaps the most terrible event that the civilized world could witness would be armed collision between Great Britain and the United States, apart from that the natural feeling, the feeling that they are of our own blood to a large extent, that feeling, accentuated by the closely interwoven commercial relations between Great Britain and the United States, has produced a strong impression upon the minds of the governing parties, and I do not refer to the present Government alone but to whatever party is in power in England. But I do not believe they understand the position of the United States as well in England as we do. There is no country in the world that relies more upon a determined attitude of a most inflexible character when its interests are at stake, but in my judgment there is no country in the world that will be less ready to court the national arbitrament of a struggle with any great power than the United States, provided their opponents are standing upon admitted just rights and claims, and I believe that where the diplomacy of England has failed, as in my judgment it has failed to some extent in this instance, is in not allowing the United States to understand that they must adopt the same course with them that they would with any other civilized country in the world, and that where they attempt to prevent undoubted British rights from being secured, there is a limit to human endurance, and there is a limit to the extent to which the British Government may go in surrendering or in leaving in abeyance rights that demand prompt settlement.

When the Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain and Lord Sackville and myself were commissioned to negotiate certain questions with the United States of America, the Alaskan boundary was one of them, and we at once brought that subject before the then Secretary of State, the late Hon. Senator Bayard, who was the leader of the commission on the part of the United States. And he said: There is no difficulty about this question, but it is not ready for settlement. Russia made a treaty with Great Britain, and the United States has purchased the rights that Russia enjoyed under that treaty. But we have not the knowledge on either side that is absolutely necessary to a settlement. And he proposed that the United States and Canada, as representing Great Britain, should appoint gentlemen to get information, to study the treaty, to study the character of the coast lines, to get all the facts with reference to the course of mountains and everything else covered by the treaty. The moment these facts were ascertained and the report made, he said, the question could be settled without difficulty. That is the reason that question went over. But, not long afterwards, this question came to be one of vital importance by reason of the discovery of gold in the Canadian Yukon. That was a sufficient reason why the United States Government, the British Government and the Canadian Government should have felt it absolutely necessary to bring that matter to as prompt a conclusion as possible, because questions arose of the greatest possible magnitude, not only as affecting these great gold discoveries in the Yukon, but also as affecting the immense volume of trade that was to spring into existence in connection with the mining industry. Now, my own opinion is this—and I give it to the House unhesitatingly, because I feel that the time has come when we must frankly recognize what the position is and, if possible, devise some means of retaining and maintaining Canada's just rights—that the Government of the United States and the commissioners representing the United States have discovered that a fair interpretation of the treaty by international experts, who would have no interest whatever in the subject, would be fatal to their claims; and they have lost confidence in their claim and in their power to retain that portion of the strip of territory of which they are now making such admirable use in the interest of their Government and their people. And, having lost confidence in their claims, they feel compelled to resort to the unworthy means of adopting an attitude that will prevent any settlement at all. No British or Canadian Government that had the slightest regard for its character or for the great interests committed to its charge should for a moment consent to the settlement of the question upon the only terms that the United States commissioners have declared they were prepared to settle it. In saying that, I think I am saying what every person will recognize as just and reasonable. But, knowing the immense solicitude of the Government of Great Britain to avoid any controversy or collision with the United States of America, the representatives of that Government are trading upon that sentiment and are simply taking a course that, on the very face of it, absolutely forbids any just settlement of the question, in order that there shall be no settlement at all. And why? Because they are in the possession of the only avenues to that great Canadian Yukon at the present time. I read with great astonishment what I regard as a most impudent insult to the common sense of the Canadian people in the "Globe" newspaper the other day. That newspaper declared that a great wrong had been done to Canadian trade and Canadian interests by the rejection of the Yukon measure. Why, Sir, they ought to know that the Yukon measure has not a friend in the world to-day.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Oh, oh.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, Sir; has not a friend in the world to-day among men who will look at the subject dispassionately and in the light of the facts. It was no sooner introduced than we saw—what? We saw a Bill introduced into the Congress of the United States that would exact duties on the Canadian products passing Wrangel. Every person knows that the United States are in the same position at Wrangel as they are at other ports, owing to the interpretation they have given to the treaty—an interpretation that, I believe, is not justified by its terms. Instead of having the free navigation of the Stikine as the United States of America as well as Russia had agreed that Great Britain had, they have actually established a customs-house, and allow nothing to enter the mouth of that river because, for a certain distance, the waters run through what may possibly be decided to be United States territory. I am not now speaking of the difficulties that have since been learned as existing in this Stikine River route. The Government's own engineers sent to report upon it, have condemned the route as utterly impracticable. But I will not go into that, because it is aside from the question in hand. I only allude to the utterances of the "Globe" newspaper because in its attempt to throw odium upon the Senate of Canada for having rejected the Yukon Bill, they are placing too much confidence in the want of intelligence on the part of their readers. I merely wish to dispose of that point in passing. Under these circumstances we have no avenue into the gold country except what is claimed and held by the United States of America. Well, Sir, what is the position? The position is what I say—that all the United States of America had to do is to resist any settlement of the question, to resist, as they have been resisting, every proposal made by my right hon. friend for an international boundary that in the meantime would relieve the difficulty, to take an attitude of utter hostility to any delimitation by competent and independent international experts—all that they have to do is simply to do what they are doing, to turn the trade, and not only the trade but the gold of the Yukon to the benefit of the people of the United States. And, while they retain that uncompromising attitude, that indefensible attitude that they are maintaining to-day, they benefit by the existing position. I think the Minister of the Interior said that 90 per cent of the miners in the Canadian Yukon were Americans. That, I hope, is very much over-estimated. But, suppose that 60 per cent of them are American citizens, where are we then? We are in the position of having the most magnificent gold territory that has in late years been discovered exploited by a majority of the citizens of the United States, to the exclusion of Canadians and other British subjects. And even that is not the worst, as matters stand, you have all the avenues of trade into that country so hampered as to give to the cities of the American coast, a practical monopoly, a monopoly to a very large extent, of the trade of the Yukon territory.

Now, Sir, I want to make a suggestion to my right hon. friend. After thinking this matter over and considering its gravity, I have come to the conclusion that we must take some vigorous means by which Canada can place herself in a position to defend Canadian interests against this laissez faire policy which is, I am sorry to see, permitted by Great Britain to be pursued by the United States. But let me make another remark here. If England had treated France as she is treating the United States of America to-day, the Nile would not now be in our possession, French interests would have been maintained on an important portion of the Nile, and the great efforts made by Great Britain in reference to that conflict in the Soudan would have been lost to England. Had England been dealing with France in this matter, it would have been settled long ago. Great Britain would have said: You must agree to do that which every civilized country is bound to do, you must agree to an honourable, fair and rational settlement, a settlement for which many precedents have been adopted as a mode by which it could be arrived at, otherwise we shall ignore the attitude you have taken in regard to this narrow strip of coast so important to Canada at the present moment. The policy my right hon. friend has pursued up to the present is one to which I have given my hearty endorsement. The Government have only done what it was their absolute duty to do in the interests of Canada, in maintaining inflexibly, and against the pressure of England, I am afraid, the attitude it has assumed against the contentions of the United States. I say that in dealing with Canadian interests in that way my right hon. friend and the Government have adopted an attitude that will meet with the sanction and approval of the Canadian people. But it will not do simply to allow matters to rest as they are. We are in the position of standing with our hands hanging helplessly at our side, looking on while the enormous gold regions of Canada in that great Yukon territory are stripped by a foreign people at the same time that they are enjoying the rights conceded to them with unexampled liberality by Canada, a liberality that they have not the slightest conception of emulating. We are standing and looking helplessly on while the gold is being taken out of that country by a foreign people, and while the trade of that country that belongs to Canada is monopolized by a foreign people.

Now, let me recall to my right hon. friend a very curious incident. I had the honour, on the floor of this House, of propounding the policy of adopting the laws of the United States in regard to Canada as concerns mining, and of proposing that unless they changed their law in regard to mining we should, in justice to our own people, adopt their laws. Well, within a month a Bill was introduced into the American Congress which everybody in this country regarded as a complete concession, providing that British subjects and Canadians should have the same rights on the American side in Alaska as the people of the United States have. That was very satisfactory. Was it done? No, Sir. The law of the United States enables a high official of the Government to make regulations under which the mining laws shall be carried out, and they fall back upon the miserable, untenable expedient that they had not power, that while their law conceded to British subjects all the rights the Canadian law gave to Americans in Canada, they were precluded from doing anything because their system was a mode of granting mining rights in the land in fee simple, while ours was a license. Well, Sir, with the authority that Congress had given to the official who had charge of that department, it would have been a question of half an hour to pass regulations that would have given us all the rights that the law professed to give which had been passed by the Congress of the United States. But those regulations have never been made, they have gone on shutting out as by a Chinese wall every Canadian, every British subject from holding a mining license, or from doing anything in that country, while at the same time they are sending their people by tens of thousands into the Canadian Yukon to strip the country of its gold, and they declare that no settlement shall be arrived at as long as there is an ounce of gold left in that country. That, in my judgment, is a position of things that requires that we should look at this matter, not from a party stand-point, not from a view of weakening the hands of the Government, but with a view of adopting a policy that will show to the Government of the United States that it is not Sir Charles Tupper and the Opposition who are hanging on the flanks of the First Minister, who would otherwise be disposed to do them justice; but that there is only one opinion in this country as to the utterly indefensible attitude the United States have assumed in regard to this question. We should show them that there is a determination in this Parliament to take such action as will entirely counteract these efforts that are being made to take an unfair advantage of the fact that there has been no delimitation of this boundary, nor will the United States permit one to be made. Therefore, I would propose to my hon. friend that before this House rises we should adopt such measures as will convince this whole country, as will convince the great republic to the south of us, as will convince England as well, that Canada is determined to use all the powers that she may possess under the constitution in order to protect the indefeasible and unquestionable rights of Canada. I would, therefore, suggest that my hon. friend should introduce two Bills for the purpose of meeting this case, and let those Bills be passed by the unanimous vote of this Parliament. Let one Bill authorize the Government to provide for the construction of a railway from Kitimat Arm to Dawson, and let that Bill provide that it shall only go into effect on a proclamation by the Governor in Council, the moment our Government finds that this unreasonable determination on the part of our great neighbours is persisted in. I have no doubt such a measure would commend itself to the judgment of my hon. friend. It is known that the country from Kitimat Arm in British Columbia running up to Telegraph Creek, is a very good country. Two charters, I believe, have already been given by the Government of British Columbia for building a railway, and I think a subsidy of some $4,000 per mile has been granted by British Columbia to construct a road from Kitimat Arm to Teslin Lake, provided it is found that there are no insuperable engineering difficulties. The very fact that there is water communication from Teslin Lake shows that there is a valley where it would be comparatively easy to run a line of railway down to Dawson.

It would only be a light railway that would be required to be constructed, any description of railway, however light, that would give us access, from a Canadian port in British Columbia, about which there can be no question, to Dawson. I am quite certain that if the right hon. gentleman were to call, as he could tentatively, for tenders, for the construction of such a work, with the present position existing, it would involve no very heavy cost. I would have the work constructed and owned by the parties who constructed it, and I would have the rates over the line controlled by the Governor in Council. I would put a clause in the Bill providing that this Act should only be brought into operation by proclamation of the Governor in Council. I am quite satisfied that the right hon. gentleman will find, as he will find, at an early day, if this proposed legislation does not effect a change of attitude, as I hope it may, that public opinion will thoroughly justify him in this course in so far as it would give ingress and egress to and from the great Canadian gold country to all British subjects, and in fact, to every person who desires to use it. I would add to that another Bill, and, in the same way, a Bill passed by the unanimous vote of this House, providing that, while existing rights must be respected, because neither England nor Canada would ever consent to anything like an act of repudiation or confiscation, for the protection of Canadian and British rights, from the time the proclamation of the Governor in Council brought it into operation no license to mine in the Yukon, no permission to obtain any facilities in that country should be granted to any but British subjects. I do not propose to detain the House further than to offer these suggestions to the right hon. Prime Minister with the view of bringing the entire support of the country to the aid of the Government at what I regard as a most important crisis. In making these suggestions to the right hon. Prime Minister, I venture to hope that they will, at all events, be accepted in the spirit in which they are offered. I beg to move that this House do now adjourn.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, there are many things, in the observations which my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) has offered to the House this morning, with which I am disposed to agree, but there are some things to which I will have to take some exception. In the first place, I am glad to say to my hon. friend that, barring the speech he made in Toronto, and the remarks he made on the floor of this House in the debate on the Address, I think he is entitled to the credit of having offered no opposition at all, but rather of having done his best to facilitate the negotiations at Washington for the settlement of the question in dispute between Canada and the United States. My hon. friend acknowledges to-day that the remarks he made in Toronto were altogether uncalled for by the events as he now knows them.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. So far as they referred to acts of the Government.

The PRIME MINISTER. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have this admission from my hon. friend, and it shows what we have, from long experience, known, that while negotiations are under discussion, it is impossible to arrive at any correct judgment in reference to them until the tenor of the negotiations has been laid before us. The tenor of the negotiations that have taken place at Washington has been placed before the House, and my hon. friend, being now correctly informed, comes frankly to the conclusion that he was not justified in making the remarks he did make at Toronto concerning our course. In regard to what is stated as to the attitude of the United States, the hon. gentleman feels himself more at liberty than I do to speak.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I quite admit that.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have only to say this, however, that the attitude which we have taken has the approbation of the people of Canada generally, and it is an attitude which we must and will maintain to the end. At the present time, whilst I would be disposed to feel strongly, still, on the other hand, it behooves me, in the position which I occupy as the leader of the Government and as a member of the commission, to be very reticent upon the policy and conduct of the negotiations, and especially upon my appreciation of the attitude taken by the United States upon the Alaskan boundary question. I agree with the hon. gentleman that the case of Canada seems to be impregnable in this, that it rests upon what appeals to the sense of fairness and the sense of justice of every man who will approach this subject with a fair mind. The terms of the Treaty of 1825, upon which the three questions rests, and upon which has to be determined the ownership of the strip of territory in dispute, are, unfortunately, not so clear as to admit of a ready interpretation. In fact, they are of such a character that lawyers will differ very much upon what they really mean and as to what extent of territory is to be given to one nation and what is to be given to another. Under such circumstances there are only three methods of settling the difficulty on fair and honourable terms; one is by a compromise, by giving and taking, Canada surrendering a little of her pretensions and the United States surrendering a little of her pretensions, but I have no hope, up to this moment, or very little hope, that we can settle the question by any compromise at all. If we have no hope that we can settle the dispute by compromise, there are only two other ways in which we can settle it. One would be by arbitration, and the other would be by war. I am sure that no one would think of war, and everybody would agree that though sometimes our patience would be sorely tried, though sometimes we might believe that our opponents were taking undue liberties with us, and undue advantage over us, still, everybody will agree that we must exhaust all peaceful means of reaching a settlement by arbitration. In the negotiations at Washington, we have not been able to come to terms of arbitration. Both parties are agreed that there should be arbitration, but who should be the arbitrators, and what would be the questions submitted for reference, are questions upon which we could not come to an understanding. The matter has been referred by the commissioners to their respective Governments, and as we have seen from the reports in the press from day to day, the matter has been engaging the attention of Lord Salisbury and the Foreign Office, and of Mr. Choate, the American ambassador at London. I am sorry to say that, at this moment, in the last days of the month of July, the question is not, perhaps, any more advanced towards settlement than it was in February. The high parties to the controversy have not been able yet to come to the point of agreement, but if we have not yet reached the point of agreement, we must still have patience for a little while, at least for a few months more, until, should such be the event, we have to come to the painful conclusion that there are no more hopes to be entertained of arriving at a basis of arbitration. I do not give up hope. I am quite sure that, between two such nations as the United States and Great Britain, even if there were not the ties that exist between these countries, there must come some honourable determination of the question. But, until we have reached that point, I must invite the House, and it is a matter that will not be difficult for any of us, to defer a little and to wait a little longer until we have to come to the conclusion which I have not come to, that we cannot hope for anything from arbitration. I will not believe, because it would be too painful to believe for a moment, that we cannot settle this question. In the meantime, what are we to do? My hon. friend commends a policy to the Government. He made a proposal, first, that we should adopt means to build a railway immediately—the second point I shall discuss later.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That you should take power to build a railway.

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes, to take the power to build a railway. In a debate of this kind, it is not my wish to raise any controversial point, because on the whole I appreciate the fairness of some of the remarks of the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper), although I am sorry to say that I cannot altogether agree with him in his conclusion. The hon. gentleman, in the course of his address, stated that no one believes now in the Yukon Railway measure which we proposed last session. I have only to say this: It is my deliberate conviction at this moment, and after the further knowledge which I have obtained of all the facts, that if ever a crime was committed against the interests of Canada, it was committed by the rejection of the Yukon Railway Bill by the Senate of Canada. There are only two means of access to the Yukon. One by the Lynn Canal, and the other by one of the lower ports which we have in our own territory. If we had the Lynn Canal under our control, we would have a shorter way of access to the Yukon, but unfortunately at the present time it is in the possession of our rivals in business and our opponents in this controversy; it is in the hands of the Americans. Of course, if we had the water stretch of the Lynn Canal, we would have the best means of all to enter the Yukon, but we have not, and, having it not, we thought the best thing we could do was to make use at once of the Stikine River, which is not ours, but which under the terms of the treaty we have a right of access to for commercial purposes. We thought to use that at first as the basis of operation to put a railway into the Yukon country, and then afterwards extending it to this very Kitimat

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Harbour, which my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) now proposes as the terminal. Sir, let me ask my hon. friend, can he now denounce our Yukon Railway Bill? If there ever was a justification for the policy which we proposed last year, we have it now from the mouth of the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper), who proposes that we should take power to do what he prevented us from doing last year. If we had been able last year to pass our Bill, which provided for the immediate construction of a railway from the Stikine River to the waters of the Yukon, we would have constructed that line, and this year we would have been able to prolong it down to Kitimat Harbour. By this time, or at all events at the end of this season, we would have had a line of railway of our own extending all the way from Kitimat Harbour to the water system of the Yukon. It would be a longer route, I admit, than a railway which would connect the Lynn Canal with the waters of the Yukon, but one thing is certain, and that is, that the railway built last year from Skagway to the waters of the Yukon would not have been built. This proposition of the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) I hail with pleasure, in the light that it is the best vindication we ever had of our policy in that respect. There are other reasons why we should have built a railway along that route, for there is every reason to expect that in that territory we would have found valuable mineral deposits, similar to those we have in the Yukon, and it is reasonable to suppose that at no distant date we would have a populous territory extending all the way from Kitimat Harbour to the Yukon. Sir, I will not say at present what we shall do with regard to this matter; but I may say at once that we shall take the proposition of the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) into very serious consideration.

As to the other matter which my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) has brought to our attention, namely, that we should take power to exclude American miners from the Yukon, that is a proposition which must be very seriously considered before we agree to it. It is only last winter that the British Columbia legislature passed a Bill excluding American miners from the Atlin district in British Columbia. The legislature of British Columbia was within its rights when it excluded American miners from working the mines of British Columbia in the Atlin district—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Will my hon. friend allow me to say that under that Bill they confiscated existing rights, and that is the great charge against them?

The PRIME MINISTER. I admit there may be something in that, but since that time I have seen the proposition urged, that such legislation was of doubtful benefit to the province of British Columbia. I know there are two sides to that controversy. There are those in British Columbia who hold that the legislation was right, but there are also those who hold, as the hon. gentleman knows, that British Columbia will lose more than she will gain by that law. There are those who think that the people of British Columbia would have been far more benefited by the trade of the American miners, if they had been allowed to mine in the Atlin district, than they otherwise would. In the face of the controversy which is now going on in British Columbia, would it be wise that we should do the same thing as they have done? That is a question we have seriously to consider before we agree to it. It is less than a week ago since the hon. gentleman from Victoria (Mr. Prior) asked whether the Government were prepared to disallow that measure of the British Columbia legislature, and the meaning of that interpellation undoubtedly is, that the public opinion of British Columbia is coming to the conclusion that it would perhaps be better to allow the American miners to invest in the Atlin district, to bring trade and commerce there, which would inure to the benefit of the merchants of Victoria, Vancouver, and the other cities of the Pacific province. My hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) himself told us last year, when we were discussing the Yukon Bill, that every dollar's worth of gold extracted from the ground cost $1 in labour to get it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is desirable to be exact. I did not say, in the Yukon particularly; I said, in the world.

The PRIME MINISTER. Then, if that be the general condition of things in the world, it appears to me that every dollar's worth of gold that comes from the Yukon costs $2 to those who procure it. Now, if every miner who comes to the Yukon and takes out one dollar's worth of gold, spends a dollar to get that gold, I do not know that we would have any benefit from excluding American miners.

But there is another view. At this moment I express no opinion at all on the suggestion made by my hon. friend in that respect, but I desire to point out to him some of the difficulties I see in the way. Let him remember that at the present time we have no railway into the Yukon, and let him further remember that for the six months of winter the Yukon is absolutely shut out from communication from the civilized world, except via Skagway harbour and the railway over the pass from Skagway to Lake Bennett. Under such circumstances, would my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) advise us to proclaim non-intercourse with the Americans by excluding them from our Yukon mines, and possibly inviting retaliation at Skagway, by which they would refuse our goods access by that route, and thus leaving the Yukon practically without any communication in the winter months? If my hon. friend would advise us to take such a step, it is a very serious matter indeed.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The right hon. gentleman must not forget that I proposed that the law should only be brought into operation by the proclamation of the Governor General in Council, so that the right hon. gentleman would have the power in his own hands to select the time at which that law would come into operation.

The PRIME MINISTER. That may be. But is it wise at this moment, when we have not given up all hope of negotiation, when we do not want to make our relations any more difficult than they are at the present time—is it wise to invite the Parliament of Canada to give the Government power to proclaim a measure of non-intercourse of that kind, and to announce to the world that at a certain time we are prepared to exclude Americans from our territory?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is desirable to be exact in this matter. I have not proposed non-intercourse in any shape or form. I have simply proposed that our mining laws should correspond to those of the great republic to the south. That is all.

The PRIME MINISTER. For my part I would be disposed to agree with my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) in many ways, but, as I stated a moment ago to my hon. friend, on this very question he can speak with greater freedom than I can myself. Occupying the position I do, I must point out to him the great difficulty I see in the way of the proposition he makes. My hon. friend does not propose non-intercourse in so many words; but what other construction can be put upon his language? Instead of proclaiming non-intercourse, I would rather appeal to the Americans once more, and today we are having negotiations with Washington, which are far advanced, with the view of having reciprocity in mining laws, and if those negotiations are successful, of which I do not by any means despair, whatever privileges in the way of mining are given to the citizens of one country shall be extended to the citizens of the other. That is not the proposition submitted by my hon. friend. His proposition is rather that we should at once take power by legislation of this Parliament, at any time if we so choose, to exclude American miners from the privileges they now have in the Yukon territory. In an economic point of view there are many difficulties in the way of that proposal; but in a political point of view there are greater difficulties, which my hon. friend himself cannot be oblivious to. Under the circumstances, I have only to say, in regard to the last proposition of my hon. friend, that it is of such serious consequence that before the Government could determine to give it their assent, they would have to weigh it carefully and at great length. As I have said, I appreciate very fully the spirit in which my hon. friend has offered his remarks. In whatever he said in regard to our negotiations I fully concur. I maintain the position that he has expressed to-day, that we cannot give up the rights of Canada; we have to maintain them as they are; but the rights of Canada are limited by the rights of the United States in this matter. There is a hazy point where the rights of the United States begin and the rights of Canada end; but as befits honourable men, as befits honourable and friendly nations, there is only one solution—to have the case referred to impartial, unbiassed, unprejudiced men, who will give to it the best judgment they are able to give.

Motion to adjourn the House, negatived.

THE QUEEN vs. SKELTON ET AL.

Mr. DAVIN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), in regard to the case of the Queen vs. Skelton, whether the report of the Minister of Justice recommending that Skelton and the others should be released from prison will be brought down?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I rather gathered from the conversation that took place across the House the other day that we had reached the conclusion that it would be better for the hon. gentleman to make a motion specifying the papers he desired. I do not mean that he should put the motion on the Order paper and wait till it comes up; but if he would put his request in the form of a motion, I have no doubt my right hon. friend would facilitate it being moved by consent. I told the hon. gentleman that I had a conversation with the Minister of Justice, who was kind enough to show me the file of papers, and it appeared to me quite plain that the hon. member would probably require more than the report, and I thought it would be better for him to move in that direction.

Mr. DAVIN. I did not understand it in that way; but I will give notice now that on Monday I will move for the papers I want in the case of the Queen vs. Skelton.

CRIMINAL JUSTICE IN THE NORTH-EAST TERRITORY.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton) moved second reading of Bill Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

(No. 167)—from the Senate—to provide for the administration of criminal justice in the territory east of Manitoba and Keewatin and north of Ontario and Quebec. He said: This is a Bill introduced by the Minister of Justice in the Senate to provide for the jurisdiction and venue in criminal cases which arise east of the province of Manitoba and the district of Keewatin, and north of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. It is practically no man's land, it is almost an uninhabited territory, and the most convenient place to try any offence committed in it is the nearest court, whether that court be in the province of Quebec, or Ontario, or Manitoba. This is to declare that all offences committed in that territory may be tried before the properly constituted courts of any province.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY—COMMERCIAL TREATIES WITH THE BRITISH WEST IN- DIES, CUBA AND PORTO RICO.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. KAULBACH. I desire to ask the right hon. the leader of the Government, or any one of the Government representing him, for the information of the mercantile marine and fishermen of the maritime provinces, more particularly Nova Scotia, largely engaged in shipping, what stage negotiations have reached in the proposed reciprocal trade between the United States and the British West Indies, the names of the islands it is proposed to include, the nature of the treaty, and its effect as respects the trade of Canada.

Considering the close relation we Canadians bear to the British West Indies as a sister colony, may I be permitted to ask what approaches have been made by the Canadian Government in the interest of Canada for trade relations between us and the British West Indies, also as to whether the right hon. leader has advised the Imperial Government to exact as one of the conditions in ratification of a treaty between the United States and the British West Indies, that Canada is not to be interfered with by any adverse tariff in these islands, beyond that that would affect the United States, that is, I mean that Canada and the United States should stand alike, and that a proviso be made that Porto Rico and Cuba, as respects trade with Canada, be also placed on an equal footing with the United States the same as at present, and that these two islands, Cuba and Porto Rico, do not, as respects Canadian shipping, come under the coastal regulations of the United States.

The trade of the British West Indies in which eastern Canada is greatly interested, particularly Nova Scotia, is in my opinion in imminent danger of slipping away from Canada, and from British connection, unless precautions are used to prevent it.

In case anything of this sort should occur, the loss to Canada would be irreparable, as these islands serve very largely as a market for our fish, lumber, and other products.

Has the Government been on the alert? Has the Government weighed the perilous position into which we would be drifting, if not watched? Has the Imperial Government been advised, and has the Dominion Government made any effort to avert such a calamity as is threatened by this treaty?

In my opinion, and I hope I will be pardoned for saying so, the Government, I fear, from its apparent reticence, has not been properly taking in the situation, and has not apparently exercised that care and diligence, to guard, foster, and protect the trade between our maritime provinces and British West Indies, as was their duty, and which our joint trade so justly merits—so vital to our fishing industry on the Atlantic coast, particularly in Nova Scotia, and our other interests so synonymous to both countries.

I would like the right hon. leader to be impressed with what I have just stated, and to advise his associates in the Cabinet to give it their official care and thought, and indeed to make it their study, as the success in shipbuilding, which is our important industry in the county I have the honour to represent, which gives employment to hundreds of timbermen, lumbermen and mechanics, and to thousands of able fishermen, and through them indirectly to thousands of others, depends mainly upon the prudent and proper care and interest that is given it on the part of this Government.

This is a crucial point and very vital, as I have said, to the shipbuilding and fishing industry, as well as the general trade of the maritime provinces, particularly Nova Scotia. Lunenburg, as one of its counties, represents alone in round numbers in commercial value, about one-fourth of all the fisheries of Canada. This fact alone will prove how important, or at least will give a slight idea of the value of this trade to Nova Scotia. I may perhaps have exceeded the bounds of propriety in speaking at this length on a question, but I think the House will agree with me that the trade of the country and the importance of the subject is a sufficient apology.

I will be pleased if the right hon. leader will give the House some information on this important subject.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). We can all realize, as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Kaulbach) suggests, the importance of our doing whatever is in our power to maintain and extend our trade with the British West Indies, and, for the matter of that, with the West Indian Islands generally. However, it would be difficult for me to make any lengthy statement on behalf of the Government on the basis of my hon. friend's remarks. First, as to Porto Rico, I had the pleasure of announcing in the Budget speech what arrangements were made—and how long they are to continue, of course, I cannot say—whereby the trade of the lower provinces with the Island of Porto Rico would not be interfered with, that is, that the coasting laws would not be enforced against us. I think I am correct in stating that, as to Cuba, the coasting laws are not enforced. But that stands in a different position.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. And as to the Philippines—that is very important?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My attention has not been directed to the Philippines; that has not been a subject of discussion. As to the general question with regard to trade with the British West Indies, as hon. gentlemen are aware, we had the pleasure of having a visit here in Ottawa from two deputations, the first from British Guiana and the second from the island of Jamaica. We have had some informal negotiations with these gentlemen, but they hardly went beyond the expression of a desire on either side for the extension of our trade relations. Our hope is that this will be followed by more formal and extended negotiations that may lead to something more substantial. One point to which my hon. friend drew attention was of great importance, and that was as to whether the arrangements that these colonies and islands in the West Indies are making with the United States might not be prejudicial to our interests. That subject received our attention at an early stage, and I am glad to be in a position to state that whatever arrangements are made with the United States by these colonies will not be allowed to interfere with the admission of our products to the markets of the West Indies, but that whatever concessions are granted to the United States will be granted, as a matter of course, to the products of Canada. To that extent I am able to give my hon. friend definite information which, I am sure, will be satisfactory. As to other points, we hope, as I say, that negotiations will result in something more definite. But I am not in a position to speak more definitely at present.

Mr. KAULBACH. Will the hon. gentleman kindly inform me what colonies are embraced in the treaty?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. So far as we have official information, British Guiana and Jamaica. I believe that treaties with other islands are contemplated. I see by the newspapers that some arrangements are in progress respecting Bermuda. No doubt the islands generally are looking for trade relations with the United States. The movement attracted our attention early, and we made representations so as to make sure that the position of Canada should not be prejudiced so far as the arrangements already made are concerned.

Mr. KAULBACH. Are the Barbados Islands included?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, not up to the present time.

Mr. DAVIN. Do I understand that the hon. Minister made representations to the Imperial Government respecting the sugar trade in Jamaica?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The statement I made was that the outcome of our negotiations on the subject was that whatever advantages might be given in the markets of the West Indies to the products of the United States should be extended in like manner to the products of Canada. To that extent, I can speak with certainty, but beyond that, nothing definite has been done.

Mr. DAVIN. The reason I ask is this: The hon. Minister will remember that last year, in his Budget speech, he gave an Imperial reason for his own action looking to the amelioration of the conditions in Jamaica; and, if I may ask, I would like to know if he has made any suggestions to the Colonial Minister, on whose mind, as everybody knows, this question lays. Did my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) make any suggestion to the Colonial Minister?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. To what end?

Mr. DAVIN. To the end of improving the condition of the sugar-growers in Jamaica. The hon. gentleman will remember that last year he gave as a reason for the course taken by himself in this House, not merely that it might help the trade between Canada and Jamaica, but that it might be of Imperial advantage in helping Jamaica. Under the circumstances, his attention having been called to this aspect of the case, I should not be surprised if he had made representations to the Colonial Minister. For instance, his attention was called to the fact that apparently Mr. Chamberlain had been checkmated in the Imperial Cabinet in carrying out a policy which evidently he had contemplated at one time, of imposing countervailing duties so as to aid the Jamaica sugar-growers, and had fallen back upon the temporary and wholly unsatisfactory expedient of a grant; and a reason given in authoritative quarters in England why the hand of the Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain was stayed was this—that to put on countervailing duties would have been to tax a great food commodity in England.

Mr. FIELDING.

The hon. gentleman knows that the amount of duty imposed on sugar which would have equalized matters as against the bonused sugars of the continent, some nineteen million dollars, was nearly the exact amount that is at present received from tea in England; and if when such duties were imposed on sugar the duty on tea to that amount were remitted, then there would be a complete answer to those who contended that the food of the people would be taxed. In fact it would be more advantageous to the people of England that tea should be admitted free and sugar taxed, because if tea were made much cheaper, then the drinking of tea under conditions which we know to be inimical to health and destructive to stamina, would fall into desuetude. What I want to ask the Minister is, having been led last year from an Imperial stand-point to take action in regard to this colony, whether he brought these views of the case before Mr. Chamberlain?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am afraid that I have still failed to catch the precise point which my hon. friend thought the Government should have brought to the notice of Mr. Chamberlain. It is quite true that last year we proposed a change in our tariff, in the making of which I did suggest that it would be perhaps a means of helping the Imperial Government in the settlement of the difficult problem of how best to aid the West Indies, and when we granted a preference of 25 per cent, without any return—for which, by the way, we were called to severe account by one or two gentlemen—when we granted that preference to the West India sugar as compared with the beet sugars of the continent, we certainly to that extent were doing something for the encouragement of West India trade, and while the results have not been all we might desire, I am glad to know we have been somewhat helpful. But if my hon. friend means that it was the duty of this Government to advise Mr. Chamberlain as to the imposition of countervailing duties in Great Britain, I am afraid we could hardly undertake to tender advice on so grave a subject as that, nor could we proceed to discuss the matter with Mr. Chamberlain on the basis which the hon. gentleman does, that is to say, that Mr. Chamberlain had been "checkmated" in the Imperial Cabinet. I am not prepared to admit that Mr. Chamberlain is in the habit of being checkmated, and he would hardly thank us for proceeding to discuss public questions simply on the assumption that he had been, to use my hon. friend's phrase "turned down by his colleagues." We are bound to believe that whatever is done by the British Cabinet is done by all the Cabinet, with the full knowledge and consent of Mr. Chamberlain. The whole question of countervailing duties is a large and important one, one of the gravest problems in the political economy of the day, and while we may all have opinions upon it, I do not think any good purpose could be served by our Government advising Mr. Chamberlain on that particular phase of the subject.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I only rise for the purpose of asking my hon. friend the Minister of Finance what changes, if any, the West India Islands made in their arrangements with the United States of America as to duties upon United States goods going into those islands. I was very glad to learn that there were no differential duties, and it would be satisfactory to know that whatever the tariff of those islands would be upon American goods in connection with their treaty with the United States, which I believe has not yet been made public, Great Britain and the British colonies would have access to their markets on the same terms. But the point I want to ask my hon. friend is whether he knows if any reductions have been made in their tariff.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have some information on the subject, but for reasons which my hon. friend, from his experience, will readily understand, it came to me confidentially and I would not be free to communicate it.

Mr. KAULBACH. In view of the fact that Cuba and Porto Rico have come into trade relations with the United States, has the Government done anything to protect our trade interests in those islands, so as to place us on an equal footing with the United States?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am afraid they have come into pretty close relations with the United States, and I do not see how we can help it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am quite sure that the Government will make every effort in their power to have the present arrangement continued, as it would be most injurious to Canadian interests if the trade between Canada and Porto Rico were placed at a disadvantage as regards their trade with the United States.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I may say that, to our certain knowledge, that matter is engaging the most earnest attention of the Imperial Government and of the British Ambassador at Washington. However, the hon. gentleman will understand that it is not in our hands, it is an Imperial matter and must be dealt with by the Imperial authorities. But there is not the slightest doubt that they were very keenly alive to all the questions that have been mentioned.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

It being One o'clock, the Deputy Speaker left the Chair.

The House resumed at Three o'clock.

(In the Committee.)

Public Works—

Collection of slide and boom dues, including salaries of clerks in connection with this service..... $5,000

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is a vote of $5,000 for the collection of slide and boom dues, including salaries and expenses connected with the service. There is one clerk for the Ottawa district, and two boatmen whose salaries, together with travelling expenses and contingencies, amount to $5,000.

Repairs and working expenses—

Harbours, docks and slides..... $96,400

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is the same vote exactly as last year.

Mr. FOSTER. What are the expenses and receipts of the Lévis graving dock?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The receipts for 1898, as shown in the report, were $19,839.97. The items, as shown in the statement of details, are all the expenses of management.

Mr. FOSTER. There is no additional work paid for out of this?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, there is a proposal in the supplementary Estimates to extend the dock.

Mr. FOSTER. Can you give me the revenue of the Yamaska lock?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Last year it was $355.40.

Mr. FOSTER. What do you get revenue for?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is a tariff of fees for boats passing through the locks.

Mr. FOSTER. What were the receipts from the Rivière du Lièvre lock?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. $246.84.

Mr. FOSTER. How much did the construction cost?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. About $245,000, I think. It was finished by my hon. friend in 1892 or 1893. I presume these are the results of my hon. friend's good investments.

Mr. FOSTER. Does my hon. friend think that Maria wharf will bring in anything like these immense revenues to the Government?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think it will bring in a satisfactory return for what we expect to expend upon it.

Mr. FOSTER. Would the hon. gentleman give the revenue of the Kingston graving dock?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. $7,448.31.

Mr. FOSTER. And the Esquimalt dock ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. $6,227.92.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there the same scale of fees for the Lévis, Kingston and Esquimalt docks ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, the fees are not the same. The fees at the Lévis dock are higher. Those of the Kingston dock, the Deputy Minister thinks, come next, and the fees at the Esquimalt dock have recently been reduced.

Mr. FOSTER. When were they reduced at Esquimalt ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. About two months ago.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the reason ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There was quite an agitation in favour of it. It was alleged that in consequence of the fees being too high the dock was not receiving its fair share of business. There is a private dock, or marine railway, which was built after the Government dock was built, so that the Government did not exactly undertake to compete with private enterprise, but private enterprise undertook to compete with the Government. Thus, it was deemed advisable to reduce the rates. It has been a matter of controversy, some of the petitions, to which the hon. member for Victoria has called attention, which we received, asked that the fees be reduced, while another petition was received asking that no reduction be made. When the matter came before me I determined not to deal with it until the return of the Minister.

Mr. FOSTER. What did the reduction amount to ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. On smaller vessels the reduction was considerable.

Mr. FOSTER. Would it be 50 per cent ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The reduction, I believe, was very considerable.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. Minister has the two sets of rates I would be glad to have them.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I cannot tell the hon. gentleman what they are, but I will look, and when I obtain them I will send them to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BERGERON. Do these graving docks pay anything to the country ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have just read from the report a statement of the revenue of the several docks. They do pay something, but if you ask me if they pay in the sense of paying on the capital invested, that is a different matter.

Mr. BERGERON. Do they pay anything to the country ?

Mr. FIELDING.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There are dock charges, and they contribute to the revenues of the country.

Telegraph between Prince Edward Island and the mainland..... $2,000

Mr. FOSTER. This telegraph line is operated by the Government, is it not ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The deputy thinks it is owned by the Prince Edward Island Government, but I think it is owned by the Anglo-American Cable Company.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, it is a company that owns it. This is a subsidy.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, a subsidy has been paid from the time of confederation.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it to be a perpetual subsidy ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The deputy thinks this is one of the terms of union. At all events, it has always been paid.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the hon. Minister know whether there has been any reduction in telegraph rates ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There has been some agitation for a reduction, but we have no information that a reduction has been made.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it would be well for the Government to make some inquiries about that and see whether or not these rates are reasonable. I have heard they were not. I have never done much telegraphing there, but I have done some. It is a cable, and, of course, it is somewhat expensive, but we are giving a subsidy to the company, and it may be that the company's rates, having regard to increased business, are not commensurate with the commercial needs of the day. Telegraph rates are constantly being reduced, and I think the department ought to give the House some information as to the general reduction of rates by other companies so that we can see how the rates of this company compare with those of other companies.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will have this done. I noticed myself when I was through the island that the business of the company seemed to be conducted in a somewhat rural way. The hours of opening and closing seemed to be peculiar, and the people felt that they were not getting a sufficient service. I will have the matter looked into.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) I hope the Government will lose no opportunity of exerting any influence they can bring to bear on the Anglo-American Telegraph Company in respect to the monopoly they hold of the telegraph business of the province of Prince Edward Island. Before we came into confederation that company, unfortunately, obtained a monopoly for all time for the landing of a cable on Prince Edward Island. They have used that monopoly in a very harsh way, extorting rates from the people of that province which I believe are paid in no other part of this continent. We have to pay double the rates paid anywhere else. Besides, the company carry on their business in a very old-fashioned way. They will never keep their office open at night beyond eight or nine o'clock. Altogether it is a very unsatisfactory service indeed. If there is any possible way in which the Government can bring pressure to bear on that company, I hope they will not lose sight of the matter, for it is a hardship to the province of Prince Edward Island.

Mr. BELL (East Prince, P.E.I.) If the Government will look closely into the terms of the contract, they will find that they have the power of dictating terms to the company, and that they can make them give an all-day service, and can also exercise an influence in the direction of lowering the rates. That is the only way in which this matter can be remedied, and I trust, as has been suggested, that the Government will look into the matter and give it their best consideration. I may say that if the Canadian Pacific Railway had an opportunity of extending their line from Sackville across the straits to Prince Edward Island, they would do so immediately, and without charging an additional rate. If the Government use the powers they have under the Act, and under the contract, they can bring this company to time, and I trust they will do it immediately.

Land and cable telegraph lines of the sea-coasts and islands of the lower rivers and Gulf of St. Lawrence and maritime provinces, including cost of working steamer "Newfield" or other vessels when required for cable service.. $32,000

Mr. FOSTER. What has caused the increase of $4,000 ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is in consequence of an increased mileage of the line on the north shore of the St. Lawrence.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the length of the increased mileage ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We increased it by 176 miles last year, and it is proposed to make a further increase.

Mr. FOSTER. It goes now to what point ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is now as far as River Romaine, and it is proposed to extend it as far as Belle Isle. The distance from River Romaine to the Straits of Belle Isle is 315 miles.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the length of the line the Government are now operating ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Government line begins at Murray Bay and extends about 700 miles to River Romaine. The line from Quebec to Murray Bay is operated by the Great North-western Company.

Mr. FOSTER. Are there any side lines ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is a branch line to Chicoutimi.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the total cost of operating that one line last year ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Six thousand four hundred and fifty dollars for maintenance and operation.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the revenue ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The probable revenue expected was $1,100. The accounts are not yet complete.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose that is mostly derived from this end of the line ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, probably.

Mr. FOSTER. Have you any arrangement with the company that operates down to Murray Bay, for a participation in the receipts ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have not the information at the moment, but I will get it for the hon. gentleman.

Mr. FOSTER. At what distance apart have you operators ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. At a distance of about 40 miles. The distance below is much longer.

Mr. FOSTER. Can you give me the whole cost of the line from Murray Bay to the River Romaine ? I would like also to know the number of messages sent each way.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will have notes taken of the hon. gentleman's question, and on some telegraphic vote in the supplementary Estimates all this information will be given to him.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand that these lines are used for the weather service ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That was the chief purpose for which they were established ; but, of course, they are also used for all commercial business. They are in parts of the country where the telegraph companies would not build lines.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there much benefit derived from them ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think, for the purpose of saving life and property and ascertaining the movements of shipping, these lines are very necessary. They do not pay, in the commercial sense ; but we need them for the protection of life and property, and it would be very unsafe to abandon them.

Mr. SPROULE. I am not proposing to abandon them, but it would be useful to have some information on which to base a judgment as to what they are costing the country.

Telegraph Lines—

North-west Territories ..... $20,000

Mr. DAVIN. Who is the superintendent of these lines?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Mr. J. McDonald.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the hon. gentleman inform the House whether or not he considers that out of these votes he is authorized in taking any amount of money for the construction of new telegraph lines?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend is aware that an amount was taken out of that by the Minister for that purpose, and I suppose it is a debatable question. No doubt my colleague thought he had a very good case. I think it is desirable to confine these votes to the services designated.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think it is a debatable question for a single moment. I would like to ask the right hon. First Minister whether he thinks that in a vote for the operation and maintenance of telegraph lines, slides and booms and the like, which is as definite a vote as can be made, the policy of Government would allow, in his opinion, the taking of any portion of this money for the construction of new lines.

The PRIME MINISTER. No; I would not think so, except under very exceptional circumstances.

Mr. FOSTER. Are there any circumstances?

The PRIME MINISTER. I think there may be.

Mr. FOSTER. Will my right hon. friend point out one?

The PRIME MINISTER. I can point out the case we had this year which was one of immediate absolute necessity, in which the work had to be built during the present season, and under the circumstances I think Parliament should sanction a technical departure from the absolute construction of the vote.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the hon. gentleman not know that there are only two ways of getting the money. One is out of a parliamentary vote for the purpose and to be used solely for that purpose, and the other is by a Governor General's warrant to meet any particular contingency. Can the hon. gentleman quote any authority in law or in practice of getting money on any other lines than these two?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes, I know the case where Pitt, in a very celebrated circumstance, called a meeting of the Council even on a Sunday to pledge the credit of England and thereby save the credit of the country and probably England from bankruptcy. My hon. friend himself has gone out of his way to say that if a certain work was gone on with he would see that Parliament voted an appropriation the next session.

Mr. SPROULE.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend does not seem to get the point of my question. Pitt had a perfect right to save the credit of England, not by filching from another vote, but by pledging the credit of England.

The PRIME MINISTER. Without an appropriation.

Mr. FOSTER. If a question of exigency should arise and public money has to be expended, for which there is no parliamentary vote, my right hon. friend can have recourse to the legal method of a Governor General's warrant, but has he any right and is he going to say to this House and the country that he will, if he wants the money, filch from a vote which was given for one specific purpose and use the money for an entirely different purpose. This has been done, and my hon. friend acknowledges it, and we have had our discussion about it, but for pity's sake do not let us, because it has been done in one particular instance, raise it to the rank of precedent.

The PRIME MINISTER. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. Do not let the Government, for the sake of getting over a difficulty a little easier than otherwise, think they have a right to do it.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have no objection to say to my hon. friend that we will not do it again.

Telegraph Lines—

British Columbia ..... $12,000

Mr. PRIOR. Where is this money to be spent?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is to pay the expenses of managing the lines in British Columbia. It is the usual vote. There are several lines.

Mr. FOSTER. What are the receipts from those?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The revenue from the North-west lines was $2,129.91, and from the British Columbia lines, $1,830.

Mr. FOSTER. What are the lines in the North-west?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Qu'Appelle and Edmonton and Wood Mountain lines. The total mileage is 698.

Mr. FOSTER. Does not that strike my hon. friend as being a very small revenue?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It certainly is.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the rate charged?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Fifty cents is the general rate. Where you have a large population, you can often increase your revenue by reducing the rate, but I am not sure that that applies in a scattered population.

Mr. FOSTER. These lines run through quite a lot of settled territories and towns, and it seems to me the population is large enough to give a better revenue.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It would seem that the revenue ought to be larger.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there any return of the number of messages?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Of course, Government messages are free?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Are there many dead-head franks?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not one, there is no frank at all.

Mr. FOSTER. It looks very small for such an extended country. Between some of these places there is no competition, it seems to me; the Government lines are the only lines. What are the rates?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The rates vary; 15 cents, ten words, and one cent each additional word; 25 cents and two cents, and 50 cents, three cents for from ten miles to 600 miles.

Mr. FOSTER. These are not inordinate rates. How is it that it cost $20,000 to operate a telegraph line of 600 miles? Surely that cannot be so; it would build the line.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The staff expenses are $21,000. These people live in out-of-the-way places, and they are paid more than elsewhere.

Mr. FOSTER. I have not the slightest hesitation in saying that $20,000 is an enormous amount to pay for the operation of a line like that. Is there any statement which shows the salaries of the operators?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. You will find that in the report of the Minister of Public Works for 1898, page 23 of Part V.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish the Minister would look into this, because I certainly, and other members of the House, will inquire about it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The deputy informs me that the Minister (Mr. Tarte) quite recently expressed the same opinion as it struck him the expenses were higher than they should be. Of course, they are practically the same expenses as in the past, but if they are extravagant that is no reason why they should be continued.

Mr. FOSTER. If it is going to cost $20,000 to operate 600 miles—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Six hundred and ninety-eight miles.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes. If it is going to cost that to operate 698 miles, the sooner we get rid of that the better.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I fear that this is a kind of white elephant, and you might have difficulty in getting any one to take it over.

Mr. FOSTER. A number of the lines built there by the Government have been taken over, and this might be brought into the hands of a private company with reservation for Government messages. This throws rather a lurid light on what we may expect with the Yukon telegraph business which the Government have undertaken. If in a comparatively settled portion of the country like the North-west, it costs so much for the Government to operate these telegraph lines I am afraid that the Yukon line will be a very expensive undertaking for the Government.

Mr. SPROULE. Do you pay your operators a regular salary or pay them by percentage?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In the North-west they are paid a percentage of 25 per cent provided they are guaranteed at least $50.

Mr. HAGGART. The Minister must see that even allowing one operator for each forty miles, and suppose the salary of each operator is $500 a year that would be only $7,500 for fifteen operators.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They are paid more than $500 a year.

Mr. HAGGART. Impossible.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, I find from this report of the Public Works Department to which I have referred that the superintendent is paid $1,200; another person $420; others, $600, $300, $600, $600, $720, $720, $600, $720, so that quite a number of them are paid more than $500 a year.

Mr. FOSTER. Where is the $720 one?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Repairer W. McKay, at Edmonton.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the operator paid?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I presume that in the absence of any statement to the contrary they are operators; for instance, there is $600 here for Miss Johnston, and I presume she is an operator.

Mr. FOSTER. Are they night and day operators?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They practically live in their offices, and they work at all times.

Mr. FOSTER. Have you houses built for them by the Government?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am informed we build huts for them.

Mr. FOSTER. They must be more than huts for they live there in the winter.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They are usually, I am told, old-fashioned log houses such as the first settlers use.

Mr. FOSTER. So that they receive those salaries as well as their lodgings?

Mr. HAGGART. Are any of these stations worked by the Mounted Police?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No. There is one place in the report marked "Special connection for Mounted Police," and the department informs me that means that the Mounted Police have an additional operator of their own.

Mr. FOSTER. It seems to me that with care it might be possible to make that service much cheaper. Telegraphy is not the abstruse art it used to be considered, and I should think that in these places which are fairly populated you could get some person who, in addition to his other employment, would attend to whatever little telegraph work there must be. What is the length of the line in British Columbia and between all the points?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. On page 24 of Part V of the Minister's report, the details are given of the British Columbia service. The mileage from Ashcroft to Barkerville is 276½; from Ashcroft to Lillooet, 62; from Victoria to Cape Beale, 118; Nanaimo and Comox, 81; Parksville and Alberni, 29½.

Mr. FOSTER. The income is a little less, in proportion, than the other. I think that both of these are well worth looking into.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I must say that the service seems rather expensive in proportion to the work done. The deputy tells me that the Minister's attention has been called to the matter, and that he is looking into it.

Mr. FOSTER. I should think that the Minister of Public Works, now that he is becoming a great adept in these things and travelling so extensively—from which I hope he will greatly benefit—would be able to make some improvements and might adopt the wireless system. It would be a great coup to the Public Works Department. Of course, the patronage would be less. I see my hon. friend from Yale and Cariboo (Mr. Bostock) looking at me very hard, and he might object. At the same time, it would be a great thing to have a wireless telegraphy.

Mr. BOSTOCK. I understood the Minister to say that the revenues from the British Columbia offices amounted to $1,800. According to the Auditor General's Report, I see that the revenue on the line from Ashcroft to Barkerville was $3,739, and on the Lillooet branch, $790.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have given the receipts as they have appeared at page 10, part 5, of the report of the Minister of Public Works, $1,830.40. There is a note respecting the Barkerville and Cape Beale lines:

The Canadian Pacific Railway, operating these two lines, retains the revenue, and the Government reimburses them the excess of expenditure over revenue.

Mr. FOSTER. That is a new element.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In our discussion—but not in the case, because it has continued for years.

Mr. FOSTER. How do you adjust these accounts?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The superintendent adjusts them every three months between the Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. FOSTER. Have you a superintendent of telegraphs in British Columbia?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I speak of the superintendent at Ottawa, Mr. Keeley.

Mr. FOSTER. But you have a superintendent in the North-west.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, the arrangements in British Columbia are of a joint character, and the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Government each contribute to the cost of the superintendent there.

Mr. FOSTER. With the improved means of communication by wire and railway, it seems to me that if you have intelligent operators and an intelligent repairer, you do not need a superintendent. That should be considered.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will see to it that the attention of the Minister is drawn to the matter.

Public Works—Collection of Revenue—
Telegraph and signal service generally. $2,750

Mr. FOSTER. What does this queer little vote cover?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This covers working expenses of Pelee Island telegraph line; telegrams, printing blank forms and other stationery; telegraph instruments and batteries; travelling expenses of staff at headquarters; petty cash disbursements; Quebec Harbour, rent and agent's salary and supplies, and allowances to officers of steamship "Newfield," re cable service.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the revenue of the Pelee Island line and what is the length of it?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The revenue is $136.68, and the length 34 miles.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the population of Pelee Island?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will have to give it up. If my hon. friend from South Essex (Mr. Cowan) was here—

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. member for North Essex (Mr. McGregor) can tell.

Mr. McGREGOR. The population is about 700. It is in South Essex.

Mr. FOSTER. What province is South Essex in?

Mr. McGREGOR. It is pretty nearly in the province of Ontario. Mr. Chairman, there is not a finer spot on the face of the earth than that county. They have 5,000 acres of grapes, 5,000 acres of peaches, and 4,000 acres of tobacco in that little county.

Mr. FOSTER. Are there any other means of telegraphic communication with Pelee Island than this?

Mr. McGREGOR. No.

Mr. FOSTER. One would think that with a population of 700 progressive and intelligent people, there would be more than $136 of a revenue from the only telegraph line.

Mr. McGREGOR. Most of the people are farmers and do not have much need for the telegraph, particularly as they have steamers coming to their dock every day, one from the Canadian side and two from the American. They are a peculiar people, and get their living largely by fruit growing, and also by fishing, for this is a grand fishing section. They do not require any communication with people outside, except to sell their products to the vessels that come there, especially those vessels that come from the United States.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the tariff there about the same as in other places?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Between local offices between Leamington and Point Pelee, the rate is 15 cents for ten words and 1 cent for each extra word; between the mainland and the island, 25 cents and 1 cent, and between offices on the island, 15 cents and 1 cent.

Mr. HAGGART. How many offices are there?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There are eight offices.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the cost of operating?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is $1,061.98.

Mr. FOSTER. What is it for salaries of staff?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They are paid on commission. The salary is very small. The sum set down for salaries is $100. In answer to my hon. friend from Essex, I may say that the deputy has a map here which shows the distance from the mainland to Pelee Island.

Mr. McGREGOR. It is seven miles from point to point.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) I would ask the Minister if the rate which he quoted of 15 cents is for a message from the island to the mainland?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, 25 cents from the mainland to the island. That is merely the rate over the one line. Then they would probably have to pay another rate on the Canadian Pacific Railway line to Ottawa. But so far as that line extends, it is 25 cents.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) The real distance is about the same across the mainland. They just about double that.

Mr. FOSTER. Have you the gross revenue from that?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is the gross revenue, and they are paid by direct cheques from Ottawa.

Mr. FOSTER. Does that gross revenue pay all the salaries?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is only $100 salary paid in that case.

Mr. FOSTER. The eight officers only get $100?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They are paid on commission.

Mr. FOSTER. There is a good thing to put into operation in British Columbia and the North-west. There is a sad lack of business enterprise. You cannot get a Christian people 700 in number that won't expend more than $136 in a whole year in telegraphic messages from the island to the mainland, when they are fishermen and the like of that. They do not patronize your line.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We shall have to look into these things. They are legacies that we have not been able to overtake.

Public Works—

Agency—British Columbia .....$2,500

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is described as a vote to make provision for travelling expenses of staff, stationery, fuel, and temporary clerical assistance of Public Works agency, British Columbia. The items are as follows:—Temporary clerical assistance, $500 ; caretaker, $200 ; travelling expenses of staff, $1,200 ; stationery and printing, $200 ; contingencies, $400.

Mr. BERGERON. Before we leave public works, I want to bring to the attention of the Minister the letters of credit which I find mentioned on Q-249. Let me tell my hon. friend that letters of credit are an invention of the Mercier government. It is a scheme for obtaining money without the assent of Parliament, or without any advice from Council. It has been the source of the greatest rascalities in Quebec that we have heard of since confederation, and it brought down the Prime Minister of that province to a criminal court, and brought his government to discredit and dishonour. I see this has been commenced here by the Minister of Public Works. How far it will go, I do not know. If you look at the Auditor General's Report you will find a long correspondence between the Minister of Public Works and the Auditor General. I need not say that anything that can be done to prevent the adoption of that system in the Dominion Government would be in the interest of the country. Can my hon. friend give any reasons for a letter of credit for $100,000 after Parliament had risen, after Parliament had voted everything that was wanted by that department, and without going to Council to ask for the money? The Minister of Public Works obtained a letter of credit for that amount, which astonished the Auditor General and caused a long correspondence between the Minister and himself. I want to bring the matter to the notice of the hon. gentleman and to ask him if he can promise—I know he cannot keep the Minister of Public Works to the law—but so far as he can, and so far as he is responsible for anything that man does, will he promise that such a thing will not happen again?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, I could not promise that, because it would stop the wheels of Government if I did. The hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken when he says the Minister of Public Works has introduced a system of letters of credit. His friend beside him (Mr. Foster) will tell him that the system of letters of credit is part of the ordinary machinery of Government which has been recognized for years, and which is deemed necessary.

Mr. BERGERON. I have never seen it before in the Federal Government.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman is dealing with two distinct things. A letter of credit in the sense in which he speaks of it, is a letter of credit for which there is no parliamentary authority, and that would be a very objectionable thing, only extraordinary circumstances would justify it. But where a large spending department has a large sum of money to its credit, it is allowed to take a vote of credit for a certain sum, and it is at liberty then to draw against the credit. But it must then render account to the Auditor General as to its appropriation of that money. Sometimes it happens that the Auditor General thinks the vouchers submitted are not entirely satisfactory ; he thinks this, that and the other item requires to be further explained, and correspondence is had with the Minister. My hon. friend will find it is not confined to the Minister of Public Works. He will find questions arising out of all the letters of credit which are discussed by the Auditor General. If a voucher is sent in for a particular expenditure, and the Auditor General thinks that on some particular point the information is not sufficient, he desires it to be put in a fuller way. I am sure the letter of credit my hon. friend has in his mind, and the letter of credit referred to here, are entirely different things. This is a part of the ordinary routine of Government and is eminently proper and necessary.

Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. PRIOR. I would like to ask the hon. Minister if he can say how much has been spent in removing the rocks at Five Finger Rapids?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The men are working there now, and we cannot state what has been spent.

Mr. BERGERON. Who is the engineer who made all these reports?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Mr. Taché.

Mr. BERGERON. Of the Public Works Department?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. PRIOR. If I remember rightly the report of Mr. Coste stated that the work could be best done in the winter time for from $3,000 to $5,000 at the Five Finger Rapids, when the ice was on the water and when the men could work much better with dynamite. I am informed that the work was not done in the winter time, that Mr. Charleson is in charge of the work, which is being done in summer time, and that it is far more expensive. I have heard also, from a man up there, that half of his staff were off looking for gold claims instead of looking after their work.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have no knowledge of that.

Mr. PRIOR. What is the amount expended on the Five Finger Rapids up to the present time?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We are not in a position to give the hon. gentleman the definite sum as the returns up to the 30th of June are not yet in.

Mr. PRIOR. Could the hon. gentleman remember what Mr. Coste's report said in regard to the expense? I think the hon. gentleman will find that he states what I say.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. These estimates were all based on Mr. Coste's report. Do you mean as to the time and season that the work should be done?

Mr. PRIOR. Yes, and the amount required for the work.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The later experience of the department is against the work being done in the winter. One of these rivers does not freeze at all.

Mr. PRIOR. Not the Five Finger Rapids.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Thirty-Mile River does not freeze at all, and the later judgment of the department is that the work cannot be so well done in winter as it was at first supposed. It is all based on the report of Mr. Coste.

Mr. BERGERON. Did any person go with Mr. Taché?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, Mr. Boyer.

Mr. BERGERON. Was Mr. Charleson there too with the party?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, Mr. Charleson is in charge of the party.

Mr. HAGGART. Is he in charge of these works besides building the telegraph line?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. McDOUGALL. The hon. gentleman speaks of building wharfs at Dawson City. Are they to be on Government or private property?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They will be built on Government land.

Mr. FOSTER. These works were all reported on by Mr. Coste, as I understand it. Mr. Coste was sent up and made a thorough examination and report on all the works covered by these expenditures.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. And after that report had been received Mr. Taché was sent up?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Mr. Taché is the engineer in charge of the work. He is on the ground now.

Mr. FOSTER. And in charge of Mr. Taché and Mr. Boyer is Mr. Charleson?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. And Charleson, under that famous letter, has absolute authority over Taché and Boyer, not only in business matters, but in engineering matters as well. He can discharge them; he can do just as he pleases. That letter was perfectly wide in these respects. He had supreme authority to say just what work should be done, how it should be done, and all these others were placed under his command. You have a certain amount of money which was indicated by the department to go to certain places on the basis of Mr. Coste's report. Is that right?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Boyer and Mr. Taché have gone there to see that these estimates are expended in these places?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They are not instructed absolutely and fully. They are not to be bound absolutely to Mr. Coste's report.

Mr. FOSTER. Are they bound by the engineer's opinion simply?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In the first place, they will be limited by the amount of money at their disposal, but if they had reason to depart from Mr. Coste's report in any particular manner, they would be free to do so if they thought it was for the benefit of the service.

Mr. FOSTER. With the authority of Mr. Charleson?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Mr. Charleson has a general business view of the operations, just as the Deputy Minister, who is not an engineer, has a general command of the department. Mr. Charleson would have a general superintendence over the business.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand that there is $35,000 put under his control, without instructions, for anything, probably, that he might consider ought to be done which has not been discussed and indicated by the department, which has not been settled upon any basis by the department here, but which has been sent out to him generally at his disposal.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He has to remove the obstacles and improve the navigation between these points, and of course Mr. Coste's report would be valuable to him. But if Mr. Charleson and the engineer of the department think it necessary, I presume they may vary it. It will, of course, be impossible to give definite instructions to them at that distance.

Mr. FOSTER. And this sum is given to them generally?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, there is the specified amount for the wharfs at Dawson.

Mr. FOSTER. Some one has said, it is a matter of hearsay, but the House ought to be pretty well assured, that this is not a gold exploring party that is out; it ought to be understood that it is a working party for the Government. The statement is made here that letters came down from that portion of the country, saying that at a certain time these gentlemen were after gold mines, rather than after rocks in the Hootalinqua River. That is a matter which the department should take note of and make the necessary inquiries whether it is true or not. I do not say it is true, but it has been so stated.

Mr. PRIOR. I do not say it is true but I do state that it has been mentioned to me.

Mr. FOSTER. That being the case, the Minister should take immediate steps to ascertain it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I quite agree that Mr. Charleson should have his attention drawn to the fact that these statements have been made in the House of Commons, and they are worth investigating. Mr. Charleson and Mr. Taché and others are aware that an Order in Council has been passed that no official who goes into that district can, under pain of dismissal, engage in mining speculations. It is quite possible that such a distance from Ottawa, officials might violate that rule, but our attention being called to it, it should be made a matter of inquiry.

Mr. FOSTER. That Order in Council, I suppose, was passed after Major Walsh and his brothers had entered into that arrangement which had been made with Carboneau and others to exploit the mines. This is an afterthought to which the Minister was driven by the strength of public opinion.

Mr. FIELDING.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It was a conclusion reached after the subject had been brought to the notice of the department, when it was alleged that certain officials had been engaged in certain mining speculations. That was a matter of common report and the Government determined that to be on the side of safety no officials should do that. It is well known in the service that the order has been issued, and Mr. Charleson and his party must know if they violate it they do so at their peril.

Mr. HAGGART. Was this Order in Council issued after Mr. Charleson went up or is he aware of it?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It was issued before he left. I presume he is aware of it. I have not got the date of the order, but I could find it if I had time.

Mr. HAGGART. Is there any arrangement that the foremen of Mr. Charleson should come down here in October next?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They have no orders at present respecting their return.

Mr. HAGGART. None whatever?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No.

Item agreed to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We will take up the item with regard to the Edmonton bridge, which was postponed at the request of the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) last night.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it the intention of the Government to have a session after six o'clock to-night?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). That, I presume will depend upon what amount of work we can do.

Mr. FOSTER. The work is going on all right. I think my hon. friends opposite need a few hours to prepare for the Sabbath.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Bearing in mind the necessities of my hon. friend in that respect, we will say that the House shall adjourn at six o'clock.

Edmonton, N.W.T.—

Bridge over the Saskatchewan..... $13,000

Mr. DAVIN. Now, what is the explanation of this vote?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is to complete the superstructure of the Edmonton bridge across the Saskatchewan River. The amount of the contract is $46,- 332; freight from Montreal to Edmonton, $11,000; superintendence, contingencies, $2,668; total, $60,000. Deduct estimated expenditure up to 30th June, 1899, $22,000; contribution of the municipality of Edmonton, $25,000; total, $47,000, which deducted from $60,000, makes the balance required, as per estimate, $13,000. The contract with the Dominion Bridge Company of Montreal, was made in March, 1899, the completion to take place on the 1st of December of the present year.

Mr. DAVIN. Does that cover the piers?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The pier work, I am advised, is completed and nothing remains but to complete the superstructure which is covered by this item.

Mr. DAVIN. Has the Minister (Mr. Fielding) now any explanation of what I brought before the House last year, as to the extraordinary conduct of the Department of Public Works in changing the character of the work after they had called for tenders. The information which I have received since has justified entirely the criticism I made last year upon that work. The Department of Public Works called for tenders to build three piers and embankments of masonry, and tenders were sent in to the department by, I think, four contractors, and one tender was accepted while the Minister of Public Works was in Montreal, and on the very day that the tenders arrived in the department at Ottawa. The gentleman who got the contract proceeded at once to Edmonton, and visited the quarry there; he comes back from the quarry to Edmonton, he leaves Edmonton and inspects the quarries at Calgary, he comes to Ottawa, he goes into the department and tells them that he cannot build it of the stone from the quarry at Edmonton nor from the stone at Calgary. Then the department sends an engineer, Mr. St. Laurent, to report on the statement of the contractor, and Mr. St. Laurent reports, endorsing what the contractor, Mr. Lemoine, said. Now, the first thing to which I call the attention of the Minister—and I think that after twelve months he ought to be able to explain it—is this, that, taking the time-table of the Canadian Pacific Railway, it will be seen that if the contractor, the moment he got the contract, left Montreal, went to Calgary, went from Calgary to Edmonton, hurried from Edmonton to the quarry, hurried from the quarry back to Edmonton, then hurried to Calgary and inspected the quarry there, then hurried to the railway station, and then hurried to Ottawa, the trip could not have been made in the time that the figures in the department say it was made. The reason I call the attention of the hon. gentleman to that is this: Without calling for tenders, without giving the rivals of this contractor an opportunity to tender, the department allowed him to change the character of the work from ashlar masonry to concrete. It was a new contract, to all intents and purposes, that was made with this man. Not only was that contract given to him without tender, but everybody knows that the cost of concrete is about half the cost of ashlar masonry.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is not admitted.

Mr. DAVIN. It may not be admitted by the department, but there is not a contractor in Canada who will give an impartial opinion on the subject, who will not say that that is the case.

Mr. MCGREGOR. It would not be there, because you have to take the water line so far.

Mr. DAVIN. I think the hon. gentleman who interrupts knows more about grapes than he does about ashlar masonry.

Mr. MCGREGOR. I know about that also.

Mr. DAVIN. We did not get a satisfactory explanation of this matter last year, and I would like to get the explanation now. We have here the Finance Minister, who is the guardian of the public purse, and we would like to know how it came to pass that this man, in defiance of the law, and in defiance of economy, was allowed to change ashlar masonry to concrete?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend is, I think, threshing out one of last year's debates again. My recollection is, that this matter was brought up when the Minister of Public Works was in the House, and was thoroughly discussed. The hon. gentleman has raised no new point, and I can hardly see any reason why we should go over it again. I think the hon. gentleman is mistaken when he says that the cost of concrete is only half the cost of ashlar masonry. I am advised that the cost to the contractor out there was substantially the same as the cost of the masonry would have been, and, so far as the efficiency of the work for the country is concerned, the engineers are thoroughly satisfied that the Government had as good a job with the concrete as they would have had with the masonry. Indeed, many engineers prefer concrete, and it is a fact that many of the piers of great bridges are to-day built of concrete, where the best workmanship and materials are required. The hon. gentleman must remember that, in estimating the cost of concrete at Edmonton, it is necessary to take into consideration the heavy cost of hauling the cement from the East to that point, so that the cost of concrete at some other point should not be compared with the cost at such a distant point as Edmonton. From the little opportunity I have had to look over the papers, I am satisfied that the contractor has given, with the concrete pier, as good, or a better, piece of work than he could have given, if he had used the stone out there. As a matter of fact, he has not profited by the change, because the concrete has cost him just as much as the stone would.

Mr. DAVIN. I put it to the hon. gentleman: Does that explain the giving of a perfectly new contract without tender? That gentleman got the contract in a very extraordinary manner. We will suppose that it was bona fide, although the story he told was an impossible one. But why is it that his competitors were not allowed again to compete? Why were not fresh tenders called for? It must be remembered that this is not a single case. In this Department of Public Works, instead of the rule being that tenders are called for, the rule seems to be, that tenders are not called for, but that work is given out in an irregular manner and in defiance of the law. I would like to know if there is any explanation why tenders were not called for?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the hon. gentleman could sustain his statement that the change made in the specifications gave the contractor an opportunity to put in concrete at half the cost of ashlar masonry, then he would have a right to complain; but if it be a fact that the change gave the Government an equally good job, and did give the contractor any undue advantage, then I fail to see that the hon. gentleman has made out a case. The whole question turns on whether concrete at Edmonton is cheaper than ashlar masonry, and when cement delivered at Edmonton costs $6.50 a barrel, you have no right to compare the cost of concrete there with the cost at places where it is cheap.

Mr. DAVIN. That is not an answer to my question for an explanation why tenders were not called for.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They were, in the first instance.

Mr. DAVIN. Before the character of the work was entirely changed.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not in value.

Mr. DAVIN. If this was a bona fide transaction, why is an impossible story told? Here is a story that the contractor went to Edmonton, that he examined the stone at Edmonton, that he then went to Calgary and examined the stone there, and then came to Ottawa and reported that he could not get stone fit to build this bridge, and that journey could not have been done in the time he said it was even if he had left the moment he got the contract. But that is not all. We are told that before the change was made, Mr. St. Laurent made a journey and a report, and it is a fortiori impossible that the two journeys could have been made, for that time was too brief for one journey.

Mr. FIELDING.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The only question, I suppose, is whether or not these gentlemen did go out to Edmonton or not. That is a simple question of fact, and my advice is they did go out. If they did, then the whole story tumbles to pieces.

Mr. DAVIN. The story that was told by the contractor was this.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman's story tumbles to pieces.

Mr. DAVIN. I will have to read the report of Mr. Coste, and have sent for it. It is set out in the formidable document that the contractor went to Edmonton and Calgary and came back to the department and reported that the stone at Edmonton and Calgary would not suit. Then we were told that Mr. St. Laurent was ordered to make an examination, and that he went out and made it, and he reported that it was quite true that stone fit for making the piers could not be found. If that were bona fide, it would be perfectly regular, but as I have told the Minister, and as I showed last year, the one trip could not be made in the time much less the two. But I could get no satisfactory explanation. The story told is an impossible one, and if any man told it in a court of justice he would be prosecuted for perjury. It is proof evident that there must be something wrong, and of course there is something wrong when a man is allowed to change the quality of the work from ashlar masonry to concrete.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What is the evidence to show that the journey could not be made?

Mr. DAVIN. The time-table of the Canadian Pacific Railway. If he did not leave the date that I gave, and I assume that he left Montreal the moment he signed the contract, the case is still worse.

Mr. DAVIS. How do you know the time he got back?

Mr. DAVIN. I took the very date of the change.

Mr. McDOUGALL. While the hon. gentleman is looking for the report, I would ask what was the cost of the concrete per cubic yard?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The contract was for a lump sum. Of course we could ascertain the cost of the contract, but that did not affect us in paying the price.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Did the department make an estimate of what the concrete would cost before letting the contract?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, it was estimated that the cost of concrete out there for that work would be $17.43 per cubic yard.

Mr. DAVIN. Who makes that estimate?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Mr. St. Laurent, the Assistant Engineer of Public Works.

Mr. McDUGALL. Is that based on cost of $6.50 per barrel?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman will find in the Auditor General's Report, page Q-272, every item set forth and the thing worked out to the last cent.

Mr. DAVIN. But that report of Mr. St. Laurent is in the nature of a defence. I cannot accept it nor the report of Mr. Coste, because the report of Mr. Coste giving the excuse for this change from ashlar masonry to concrete tells an impossible story. The invitation to tender calls, first, for a lump sum for the whole work, according to plans and specifications. 2. The price per lineal foot per pile. 3. The price per 1,000 feet B.M. for timber laid and spiked in the foundations of the piers and abutments.

The amount paid for the finished work would, therefore, consist of a lump sum. According to sections 14 and 15 of the specifications, the timber was to be of the very best description of the kind required. According to section 17, the piles were to be of white oak or rock elm for the piers and cedar for the abutments, but as may be seen by looking at the plans, there is no white or rock elm in the piers. According to the specification, the masonry was to be rock-faced ashlar, first-class in every respect. The stone must be limestone or granite, and from a quarry accepted by the engineer, and the abutments ashlar masonry. Now, I want to call the attention of the Minister to this. No estimates were to be paid during construction; the work was to be commenced as soon as possible after the signature of the contract and to be completed on or before the 15th of November, 1897. When was that work completed?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. On the 12th June, 1898.

Mr. DAVIN. There was to be a fine of $50 for every day the work was uncompleted after the 15th November, 1897. Was any fine exacted?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No fines have been collected.

Mr. DAVIN. So, that portion of the contract is a dead letter. Nevertheless, to my knowledge, those terms frightened away some contractors. If the contract is signed on the 17th August, there would be less than three months to complete the work. Is it not obvious that if one contractor knew that no penalties were to be proposed, he could tender with a light heart. As a matter of fact, this contractor did slightly underbid his competitors in the masonry, though he was not lower in some of the other details. The peculiar thing is, that the very day that the tenders were to have gone into the Department of Public Works, the contract was signed in Montreal. A telegram is sent, asking which of these gentlemen is the lowest tenderer, and, on a reply being received, the contract is signed. There was never such a way of doing business as that. From the beginning there is something suspicious about this contract. Such a contract, as we know, is usually signed in the department. So, the Minister signed the contract without having seen it, merely on being told by telegram that a certain gentleman had put in the lowest tender. There were four tenders: one from Francis Lemoine, one from Mr. Bourque, one from Mr. Burns, and the other from Messrs. Rourke & Allison, and every one of the tenders arrived in the department on the same day. One contractor in Kingston telegraphed the department to ask whether all these conditions would be rigidly carried out, and receiving a telegram that they would be, was afraid to tender in consequence. Here are the dates: On the 7th Mr. Coste telegraphs from Montreal:

Am instructed by Minister to ask you immediately to notify lowest tenderer for Edmonton bridge masonry his tender is accepted. Minister goes to Quebec to-night. I return to Ottawa by late train to-night.

The tender from Montreal is dated the 6th of August. If sent by mail, it could not have reached Ottawa before the 7th; if personally delivered, not before the 6th. On the 9th Mr. Lemoine telegraphs:

I will be in Ottawa this evening.

The following day he sent a letter, saying he was ready to enter into contract for the building of the pier and abutments for the Edmonton bridge, and asked that he might be addressed at Montreal. On the 11th Auguste R. C. Durocher, assistant secretary, informs Mr. Lemoine by letter that the contract had been sent to Montreal for execution. The contract was dated the 17th August. I have examined the Canadian Pacific time-table, and I find that if a man left on that day, what we are told he did could not be accomplished. Let us suppose that as early as the following day after signing the contract, he leaves for Edmonton. He arrives at Edmonton on the 23rd. How long shall we give him to go 50 miles up the river and inspect the quarries? Let us give him a day to go, a day to inspect the quarry, and a day to return. This will bring him to the 26th. He would require at least five days to go back from Edmonton, provided he got the train at the moment he got back from the quarry. This would bring us to the 1st day of September, when he would arrive at Ottawa. You can test this by the almanac and the Canadian Pacific time-table. The 17th August was Tuesday. Let us suppose that he left that day, the very day the contract was signed. He could not make connection at Calgary before Monday, the 23rd, the trains leaving Wednesday and Monday. Let him leave on Monday and arrive at Edmonton on the 23rd at seven p.m. Could he have made any examination worth anything of a quarry 50 miles up the river, and leave Edmonton before Tuesday, the 26th, the trains leaving Edmonton on Tuesday and Thursday? This would bring him to Calgary on the 26th. Give him a day to examine the quarries and leave Calgary on the night of the 27th or 28th. Suppose we say the 27th, he would arrive at Ottawa on the 31st. But Mr. Coste's report implies that he was back in time. Mr. St. Laurent's report is dated the 30th of August, so that the report of Mr. Coste implies that Mr. St. Laurent had also made a trip—not necessarily from Ottawa, he may have been at Calgary, he may even have been at Edmonton. His report is dated the 30th of August; therefore, we have here solemn documents, archived in the department—well, I do not like to use a stronger expression, but they must be fabrications; they are not honest reports. So this gentleman seems to have signed the contract in Montreal on the 17th of August, to have gone to Edmonton, and to have come back with such celerity to Ottawa, and reported to the department that the stone at that quarry was useless, and the department had time to despatch Mr. St. Laurent, the engineer of the department, to examine the quarry, and to return by the 30th of August, which is impossible, and if impossible there must be some reason that will not bear the light of day for telling that impossible story. With that impossible story before us, we certainly cannot let that item pass at the present moment. Now, Mr. Coste's letter is dated the 22nd of September, 1897, and the next document which will be found in the return is an Order in Council dated the 20th of October. It is based on a memorandum of the Minister of Public Works, dated the 14th of October, and the memorandum is not given. The Order in Council provides for a change, although the letter excusing the change is dated the 22nd of September, one month beforehand. Can the Minister give us any explanation?

THE MINISTER OF FINANCE. I hope my hon. friend will not think me discourteous if I decline to travel over a question which was so fully threshed out a year ago, when the Minister of Public Works himself was here with all the facts, and much better acquainted with them than I am. As to the impossible story the hon. gentleman refers to, I suppose after all the main question is whether the contractor did go out there in the way described, and whether Mr. St. Laurent went out there. I do not suppose we are much concerned as to whether the contractor went out there or not. The question is simply this, whether, in consenting to this change of specification from ashlar masonry to concrete, which I understand to be the main question the hon. gentleman has been discussing—whether the engineer did go out there and make an examination of the quarry and certify that the change was in the public interest. That appears to be the main question. The public records show that the engineer has testified that he examined the quarries out there, and that he was satisfied that the stone was not as well adapted for building and repairs as concrete would be. It appears that when the first movement was made towards the construction of these piers, a small sample of the stone was sent in, which the engineers were satisfied with, but on examination of the quarries, as it may often happen when you compare a large bulk of anything with the small sample furnished, it was found by the engineer that the stone was not of a satisfactory character, and that the public interests would be more advanced by building these piers with concrete in accordance with the practice of the best engineers in dealing with large and important structures. It is also shown that the cost of the concrete is substantially as high as the cost of masonry would have been, and therefore, so far as the contractor was concerned, he had no advantage by the change, but the public did gain by the change, by having a more substantial piece of work done. The hon. gentleman seems flatly to deny that this engineer went out there and examined that stone. Now, if the hon. gentleman suspected that, he could have settled the whole matter by summoning the engineer and the contractor before the Public Accounts Committee, and ascertaining whether or not they made the journeys, or whether the story is impossible. I think that on all the points on which the public are concerned the information given in the discussion last year, and in the reports contained in various blue-books, is all that could be desired. The public only wanted a good job, they have got it, and they have got it at what the engineer certified a fair price. I think if that fact be clearly established my hon. friend has not much to complain of. He may fail to understand it, but as the facts strike me, the hon. gentleman has failed to make out a better case than he did a year ago, and he did not make a good one then.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman takes a very easy view of a very important matter. Now, an hon. gentleman, a supporter of his, when he first began to give his explanation, interrupted by saying that the stone in this quarry is very thin. I suppose if we are to take this statement as evidence, we may conclude that the stone is thin. But I want the hon. gentleman to explain what is the meaning of the Department of Public Works having a specimen of that stone in the department and showing it to the various contractors, and telling them that they are to build with that stone and to take it from a quarry fifty miles from Edmonton. What is the meaning of that? If my hon. friend, who is no expert, knows off-hand that that stone was unfit to build the piers, how much more would an expert of the Public Works Department know it to be unfit? What was the meaning of showing this stone?

Mr. DAVIS. They did not send their experts to examine it.

Mr. DAVIN. I am not dealing with the guffaw of the hon. gentleman. I am dealing with the Minister of the Crown, I am dealing with a matter that has not been explained, and I do not want the mere rude and meaningless interruptions of the hon. gentleman or of any other hon. gentleman. Now, the hon. gentleman asks why I did not go before the Public Accounts Committee.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, I did not ask him that. I said if he had a good case, he would have gone there.

Mr. DAVIN. That is not the position. It was not necessary for me or for the public to go before the Public Accounts Committee and ask questions in regard to this matter, for the very reason that the figures are given by the department, and according to these figures an explanation is called for from the department. Therefore, after the case that was made out last year, if it is capable of being explained, the Government should have had an inquiry, they should have asked questions in the Public Accounts Committee, or they should have asked for further reports. But the thing remains as it remained last year, unexplained, because the hon. gentleman knows very well that there are the dates. Here is Mr. St. Laurent's report, dated the 30th of August, and the contract was signed on the 17th. Under these circumstances, it was not for me to go before the department, it was for the Minister of Public Works, or for the acting Minister, to go before the Public Accounts Committee, or to do what he would have done if there was any explanation possible, get a further report from the engineers. The fact is that no explanation is possible and the truth about this affair, on the face of it, is that the department was determined from the beginning that the contract should go into the hands of Lemoine. If we are to assume that the department is thoroughly informed, the stone shown in the department as a specimen of the quarry, was a part and parcel of these severe conditions in the specifications. Not one of these conditions was fulfilled, not one of the forfeitures enforced, no fine enforced, the bond was not estreated, nothing done, and when that stone was shown in the Public Works Department as representing the quarry it was part and parcel of the whole scheme to throw the contract into the hands of a favourite contractor. That is the only conclusion one can come to, from the adoption of these extraordinary and onerous conditions. Lemoine accepts the contract; he does not fulfil one of the conditions, and although he does not fulfil one of the conditions, not a single penalty is enforced, not a single fine is exacted, not a single penalty that frightened the other contractors from tendering, and that, presumably, other contractors would have had to submit to. When my hon. friend (Mr. McGregor) who knows so much about everything, tells us that this stone was thin, that there was not enough to build piers and embankment, is it not a fair inference to say that this must have been known to the Public Works Department and that the showing of this stone from the quarry, fifty miles away from Edmonton, where it was said plenty of stone could be had, was part and parcel of the same designing arrangement whereby it was arranged that the contract should go into the hands of Francis Lemoine. Then it goes into his hands. He goes to Edmonton. He tells us that he came back and told the department that he could not get stone there from this quarry, and then we are told that Mr. St. Laurent, the engineer, went and examined the quarry. He presents a report dated at Ottawa, on the 30th of August. Now, I will concede that it may have been dated somewhere else; I will concede that it may have been a mistake of the copyist. Suppose I concede that that was done; it does not help them, because Mr. St. Laurent says that he went there. After the contractor had come back and told them in the department here at Ottawa that he could not get the stone that was needed at Edmonton or Calgary, Mr. St. Laurent tells us that acting on instructions from the department, he went up and examined it. I say the story is impossible, that the contract could have been signed at Montreal and that these two gentlemen could have performed that extraordinary feat of travel, that feat of legerdemain which they state they have performed. The hon. Minister of Finance makes an argument that is unworthy of him and unworthy of his high position, unworthy of a man who has held the position of a Prime Minister of his province, the position of editor of a great newspaper and who is the Minister of Finance of Canada? He tells us that if, on the face of it, some of the documents in the department are unverified, that is of no consequence whatever, that the only thing of importance is whether we are to come to the conclusion that concrete is as good as ashlar masonry. Suppose it were, would that relieve the department from the administrative sin of having changed a contract so completely without entering into a new contract, without calling for tenders and seeing whether or not the work could be done cheaper? I need not go into the calculations. The hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. McLennan) and I went into the calculations very fully last year, and we showed that it is not so that the cost of concrete at Edmonton at all approaches the cost of ashlar masonry, so that I say that the department was not at all justified in the course it took. Mr. Coste, in his report, which is a reasoned report, dated the 22nd of September, makes an argument to show that nothing was lost by a change from ashlar to concrete. He makes that argument, and we are told how Mr. Lemoine made these visits to the quarry and how Mr. St. Laurent was instructed to report. Mr. St. Laurent dates his report on the 30th of August, and confirms the statement that the stone could not be found. What is the explanation?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman, of course, is only going over the ground again, but for the fact that it might seem discourteous I would not deem it necessary to reply. The hon. gentleman states that the forfeitures expressed in the contract have not been enforced against the contractor, and, therefore, he assumes that there has been some great wrong in it. While it is the duty of the Government to put in these conditions respecting forfeiture and while they must always be free to enforce them, many cases arise where they are not able to enforce these forfeitures. For example, tenders were taken for the completion of the St. Lawrence canals, and there was a condition made that they should be completed within a given date. That condition was absolutely laid down, yet it was not complied with, and up to the present time, no forfeitures have been enforced against these contractors. The hon. gentleman says that the contractor telegraphed to the department asking if these forfeitures would be enforced. Could you expect the department to do anything else than to answer, yes. The object of putting in these conditions is to have the work pushed on as rapidly as possible, and the Government must be free to enforce these forfeitures, and no such inference as the hon. gentleman suggests is to be drawn from their non-enforcement. The next question is in regard to the inspection made by Mr. St. Laurent. The hon. gentleman undertakes to prove that Mr. St. Laurent did not go up there and examine the quarry before making his report, but he represents Mr. St. Laurent as being at Ottawa at a given date. The explanation made by the hon. Minister of Public Works was that Mr. St. Laurent used the paper bearing the headlines of the Ottawa department, and that the report was written at Edmonton and not at Ottawa.

Mr. DAVIN. Suppose I concede that?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the hon. gentleman concedes that it, of course, knocks the foundation out of his whole story.

Mr. DAVIN. It does not matter a pin.

Mr. DAVIN.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The main point is as to whether or not this change of specification was to the advantage of the public. When the Auditor General, as he has a right to, asked for an explanation of the change in the specification, the Department of Public Works dealt with the question, and this is Mr. St. Laurent's report, page 272 of the Auditor General's Report:

Department of Public Works,

Ottawa, July 26, 1898.

As requested, I have the honour to report herein on the relative cost of masonry and concrete, with reference to the Edmonton Bridge masonry contract, which formed the subject of a discussion in the House of Commons during the last session of Parliament.

Plans were first made for piers and abutments, to be built of ashlar masonry, on apparently reliable information that stone suitable for bridge piers could be found close to Edmonton.

After the contract had been awarded, it was found, after visiting the reported quarries, that these were only lost beds of sandstone, of such a nature that it could not be suitable for bridge work.

Subsequently, a change was allowed from masonry to concrete, the conviction being that good concrete would be better than any masonry of sandstone, which was only available at or near Calgary, and that the cost of the concrete would be about the same as masonry made under ordinary circumstances at Edmonton.

Then follows a close calculation, showing that the cost of concrete at Edmonton would be $17.43 per yard, and in conclusion Mr. St. Laurent, who is a respected officer of the Public Works Department, writes:

I may state that I have no doubt that concrete, in this case, was much better than any masonry made of Calgary or Edmonton stone. It is a fact that this useful material is finding more and more favour every day, as it is better known among engineers and practical men for all kinds of important works.

Against that the one thing the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) sets up is that Mr. St. Laurent could not have gone there, because of the dates on these head lines. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) had a shadow of a belief that Mr. St. Laurent did not go there, or a shadow of a hope that he could prove by competent engineers that concrete was not as good as sandstone, he would have had Mr. St. Laurent and fifty other witnesses before the Public Accounts Committee last year. The fact that he did not do so, and that he brings the matter up in the House, shows that this is merely a dream of his that he wants to give Parliament once more.

Mr. DAVIS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) brings this up in the House simply to bolster up an old campaign speech he made in the territories, and he thinks it is necessary to save himself by talking about this matter in the House. He made a statement in my own town that the Minister of Public Works had stolen a certain amount of money from this bridge, and it is evident that it is in order to try and justify himself in some way that he brings this matter up year after year. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) knew that the Minister of Public Works had stolen a certain amount of money out of this work, it was his duty on the floor of this House to make that assertion on his responsibility as a member and ask for an investigation. But he did not do so, for he knows there is no truth in his wild statement. The fact is that a party who owns the quarry at Edmonton sent a sample of this stone to the Department of Public Works, when he understood the contract was going to be let. This was a first-class sample of stone, and that gentleman informed the department that he had sufficient to build two bridges, and on the strength of that statement, the contractor, when he got the contract, went up there, and when he did so, he discovered that the stone was useless. He came back to Ottawa, and then the change was made from stone to concrete. There is no great difference between the two, as I understand it, and if the hon. member (Mr. Davin) knows anything about the price of stone in the west, he must know that you can build masonry even cheaper than you can build this kind of work. I know that is the case in my own town where we have stone. But surely the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) remembers that changes of this kind have been made in contracts under the late Government, which he supported. Does he not know that in Prince Albert the Conservative Government let a contract for a registry office. Some of the other contractors found that one man was getting the contracts all the time, and they made up their minds that they would tender low, so that if he got this contract he would make nothing out of it. Well, this same man got the contract again, and he proceeded to build the registry office, and when he got about a day's work done, he discovered that a different foundation was required. The Conservative Government changed the contract without calling for new tenders, and the consequence was that this contractor put in a foundation that you could build Windsor Castle on for the tu-penny-ha'-penny registry office which is built in that town. If you hunt up the records you will find that the foundations cost more than the superstructure, and the late Government did that, I believe, not only in the North-west Territories, but all through Canada.

Mr. CAMPBELL. And the hon. member for West Assinibola (Mr. Davin) consented to that.

Mr. DAVIS. Yes, he occupied a seat in the House at the time, and he has never complained of it from that day to this.

Mr. DAVIN. It is quite clear that the Minister has given up all hope of explaining the situation in answer to the questions I have put to him. To show how conscious the acting Minister (Mr. Fielding) is that he cannot explain this transaction, although my words must have been ringing in his ears when I conceded that it would not be necessary, that Ottawa was the head line of the report of St. Laurent, nevertheless; although I stated that did not make against my position, he reiterated it as a strong point in his favour. But, Sir, I need not concede it, because if I wished to insist on it I could easily prove my contention. Last year I said, and I say now, I do not mind where you date it, for here is the report of Mr. Coste:

Department of Public Works, Canada,
(Chief Engineer.)

Ottawa, 22nd September, 1897.

On the 17th of August, 1897, a contract was entered into with Mr. Lemoine for the construction of the piers and abutments of the Edmonton Bridge for an amount of $36,500; the specification calling for masonry of rock-faced ashlar from a limestone or granite quarry accepted by the engineer.

I concede, and, of course, it is conceding a great deal, that on the 17th of August stated there, Lemoine may have left Montreal—of course, it is most unlikely that the moment the contract was signed he rushed off and left Montreal—but pointed out that he could not have performed the feat he did, considering the Canadian Pacific Railway time table and calendar.

Tenders were invited for this work on the 22nd of July, and were received on the 6th of August, the lowest being that of Mr. Lemoine.

This report assumed, as it ought to assume, that the department was bound to call for tenders, where a contract was made; and yet the hon. gentleman is going to excuse the contract being given without tender.

I may say that I was personally under the impression that suitable stone could be found in the neighbourhood of Edmonton. As far back as September, 1894, I had caused an examination of the banks of the river to be made by C. J. Duggan, formerly in the employ of the Canadian Pacific Railway, who reported that he found a quarry fifty miles up the river from Edmonton, with a hard flinty stone, the ledge showing along the bank for about 600 feet, and from 8 to 10 feet thick, from which large pieces could be obtained.

Now, what is to be said of that? We have here two members supporting the Administration, both of whom say that this quarry was of no use whatever.

This opinion of Mr. Duggan was further corroborated by Mr. Alexis Degagné, who, on the 10th June, 1897, forwarded a sample of stone taken from this quarry, situated about fifty miles up the River Saskatchewan, stating that he could contract for any quantity that might be required, and that the stone existed in mass-like granite, and not in layers, and that blocks of any thickness could be obtained. He offered that stone for $14 per cubic yard, dressed.

On the theory of justification put forward by the department, what are we to think of these two paragraphs in the report of the engineer? It is perfectly clear that Mr. Duggan and Mr. Degagné were friends, and that there was a desire to be very kind to friends. I may add, and I say it on the authority of good contractors, that $14 per cubic yard was an enormous price.

The sample was examined in my office, and found to be of excellent quality for bridge-building, and was shown to all contractors who inquired whether or not stone could be procured in the neighbourhood of Edmonton—nothing, however, being guaranteed.

As soon as the contract had been awarded, Mr. Lemoine proceeded to Edmonton, but came back at once and reported that he could not find stone of the dimensions or of the quality required by the specification. He was told to procure it elsewhere, but replied that he had also examined the stone found at Calgary, and was of the opinion that it would not be accepted.

It must have been the 17th at the earliest when the contractor left Montreal the day the contract was awarded. It might have been a day or two later, but we will take it as the 17th. Now, this is where my hon. friend the Minister of Finance sees what a broken reed he leans on, when trying to date the letter from Mr. St. Laurent at Edmonton.

Then Mr. Arthur St. Laurent, engineer of this department, was sent to examine the quarries, and he reported as follows, under date of August 30th, 1897.

Now, if you like, I will suppose that Mr. St. Laurent was at Edmonton, that a telegram was sent to him there, and that, in consequence of that, he went and examined the quarries at Edmonton, and then went and examined the quarries at Calgary. How long would that take? Everybody knows that it would take about a week. But suppose you say it would take two days. The date of the report of St. Laurent was the 30th of August. What was the date of the telegram sent to Mr. St. Laurent? What time will you give Mr. St. Laurent? Suppose he went 50 miles to Edmonton, then went to Calgary and examined the quarries there, then by the next train he went to Edmonton—because the trains did not run daily. Then, suppose he sent his report by telegram, though he does not do that; but I will take the most favourable supposition. Let us suppose he writes his report at Calgary. The very least he would take would be two days, which reduces the time and makes it from the 17th of August to the 28th of August. But that will not help you.

Mr. DAVIS. If the hon. gentleman is satisfied that there is something wrong in that transaction, why does he not have these parties before the committee, and get at the truth of the thing?

Mr. DAVIN. I am not dealing with the hon. gentleman, and I have not given him permission to interrupt me.

Mr. DAVIN.

Mr. DAVIS. I can do that without it.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman cannot do it without my permission. He has been long enough in Parliament to know that.

Mr. DAVIS. The hon. gentleman often interrupts without permission.

Mr. DAVIN. I say, therefore, that on the face of these documents we have a statement made which is absolutely impossible, and therefore untrue; and if it is untrue, there must have been some reason for it. Now, the acting Minister of Public Works says that forfeitures are never enforced.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I never said that. I said it was often found difficult to enforce them.

Mr. DAVIN. There I rest my case in regard to this transaction on these dates. I say that there is palpable falsehood here, and if so, it must be to conceal some wrong. Now, in regard to the gentleman who is interrupting me, contrary to the usage of Parliament, I say that there is hardly a statement that gentleman has made in regard to my utterances outside of this House that I could not characterize in language that would not be parliamentary. For instance, he says that I said that the Minister of Public Works had stolen for his own purposes money in regard to this transaction. He also said that I said that I had put gyves upon his wrists. I said this last. I did not say that he had stolen for his own purposes money in regard to this transaction. If I did, I would say it in this House before the Minister of Public Works himself. Anything I would say outside in regard to any member of this House, I would say here. I would not say behind any man's back what I would not say to his face. A similar statement was made on another occasion by the hon. gentleman, and I may say—it is the strongest expression I can use—that it was incorrect. In regard to any statements that hon. gentleman makes here, I will say that they must be taken by the Government and his own party cum grano salis, because I can show that he is not believable in a court of justice in this country—I am speaking of the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis). If he presses me, I will prove it before this House rises.

Mr. DAVIS. All right, go ahead.

Mr. DAVIN. The report goes on to show that the stone was not suitable. But is it not extraordinary that when one of the engineers of the department reports in this manner on that quarry, the contractors tendering for the building of this bridge were told that they could get suitable stone from it. What is the meaning of that? It is one of the ear-marks of queerness that are over all this transaction. The engineer then goes into reasons to prove that concrete was as good and as dear as ashlar masonry.

But the moment it was found that these piers could not be built of ashlar masonry, that moment the Government were entering upon a perfectly new contract, and should have allowed the competitors of Mr. Lemoine an opportunity of tendering. The Government should not have placed themselves in the position of having engineers in their employ whom they could dismiss, coming forward and making the excuse that concrete was as good as ashlar and as dear. The proper way to ascertain that it was as dear was to call for tenders.

With regard to the price, we have the statements of these two gentlemen, who tell an utterly impossible story. Therefore, I attach no importance to what Mr. St. Laurent says. I have gone into the calculation with my hon. friend from Glengarry (Mr. McLennan), who has experience in this matter, and I do not believe that concrete up there will cost the same as ashlar masonry. Mr. Coste's statement was as follows:—

Stone, dressed, delivered..... $14 00
Which, I may say, is an enormous price.

Cement mortar ..... $ 2 60
Laying scaffolding, &c..... 2 50

Or, in all ..... $19 10

And for the backing the price would have been :

Stone delivered at the site of the bridge.. $ 5 00
Cement mortar ..... 6 00
Laying ..... 2 00

Total ..... $13 00

And as the proportion of ashlar and backing are two to one, the average price of the masonry would have been $17.06.

The price of a cubic yard of concrete I estimate as follows:—

Broken stone, delivered on site of work. $ 3 50
Sand ..... 0 20
Cement mortar ..... 10 80
Laying and scaffolding ..... 2 50

Total ..... $17 00

Which price would be augmented by about 80 cents per cubic yard, if the 80 cubic yards of pure mortar forming the 3-inch coating is taken into consideration, this bringing the estimated cost of the concrete work to a value of $17.80 per cubic yard.

It appears to me, therefore, that owing to the high value of cement in Edmonton, which is $6 per barrel, the prices of concrete and of masonry at that place are about the same; and I, therefore, recommend that the price of the contract be allowed to remain the same, namely, $36,500.

Turn to page 34 of the report, and you will find that Mr. Coste reports :

Under the above circumstances, having ascertained that good clean gravel can be found on the banks of the Saskatchewan for concrete work, I have the honour to strongly recommend that the substitution of concrete for masonry be permitted.

Why, you can get any amount of good, clean gravel on the banks of the Saskatchewan. There is no place in the world where good concrete can be made cheaper or better. It is absurd to suppose that we should have to pay the same price for concrete as for ashlar masonry.

I quoted last year, and my hon. friend from Glengarry (Mr. McLennan) referred to the same sources of information and endorsed them, the prices of bridge masonry under contracts made by the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the cost of cement. Here are the names of the contractors and the prices :

Out of forty-eight tenders there is not a single tender that places concrete as of the same value as masonry, and in nearly every case there is a relationship running from more than double to something like two-thirds to one-third.

Under these circumstances, and taking the extraordinary features of this transaction, how can we avoid the conclusion that a wrong has been done to the public exchequer? I believe that money was taken out of the pockets of the people and that it went into the pocket of Lemoine. By giving him the same price for concrete that he was to get for ashlar masonry, he was enabled to get all the way from one-third to one-half more profit than he would otherwise. In the opinion of some, he would make double the profit he would have made if he had built it of ashlar masonry. And when I bring this before this committee, with the Minister of Finance present, who has been Prime Minister of his own province, and has had a life-training in dealing with questions of this sort, the only defence that can be made is in the first place to ask: Why did you not bring this before the Public Accounts Committee? And, in the second place, admitting that concrete is as good as masonry, what wrong was done? The bare fact that this impossible story is told as to these dates throws suspicion on the transaction. And when a man is allowed to put in comparatively cheap material when the contract called for a dear material, we cannot but come to the conclusion, which certainly will be imbedded in the public mind, that, in a calculated manner, the contract placed advantages in the hands of a public contractor contrary to the interests of the people and to the bona fides of public administration. Is it fair, when a transaction of this kind is brought before the House and no satisfactory explanation given, that it should be asked why we do not go before the Public Accounts Committ-

Mr. DAVIN.

tee? If the Department had been able to vindicate itself, it should have gone before the Public Accounts Committee, declaring that it would show that this impossible feat could be accomplished. How can they defend themselves? Unless they can show that Mr. Lemoine travelled by some more rapid means than the railway, that some miracle of science is known to him that is not known to us, there can be no explanation. I have shown the peculiar circumstances attending the granting of the contract—that the Minister of Public Works, presumably, never saw it, that on learning by telegraph who was the lowest tenderer, he gives the contract and allows his subordinates to go through the steps necessary for the signing of the contract. I say, Sir, the suspicious character of these early transactions, and this impossible story, and then the impudent demand that we should admit that concrete was of as much value as ashlar masonry and costs as much—all this stamps this as one of the worst transactions in the administration of the department under the present Minister. We have had certainly serious cases, cases to make us pause and wonder, cases to alarm the people of Canada and make this committee and this Parliament hang their heads in shame. But there is no case to compare with this Edmonton bridge scandal, which will remain as a monument to the ways that are dark and tricks that are vain, which belongs to the administration of the Public Works Department under the present Minister. I sympathize with my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, the acting Minister of Public Works. Of course he is responsible for them. He has not only to shoulder them now in the way of his usual responsibility, but he has to come here and to defend them; and, Mr. Chairman, you, who must be familiar with the adroitness of my hon. friend, with his great experience, if he can do no more to defend these transactions than he did to-day, why, what must those transactions be? How impossible it must be to defend them when he can give no explanation, and when the only reply he has to make is: Why did you not go before the Public Accounts Committee? Sir, that is not an answer that will satisfy the people of Canada.

The CHAIRMAN. Carried.

Committee rose and reported progress.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would like to ask my right hon. friend if he would be good enough to fix a day when we may expect the resolutions to be moved that he has given notice of with reference to the Senate? As the hon. gentleman knows, it would be convenient to know a little in advance, and I thought, perhaps, Tuesday might do.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). No, on Tuesday we want to take up the Pacific cable. However, I will arrange that matter with my hon. friend on Monday.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 6.00 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 24th July, 1899.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PRAYERS.

THE QUEEN VS. SKELTON.

Mr. DAVIN. In accordance with the notice I gave on Saturday, at the suggestion of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), I beg to move :

That an Order of the House issue for a copy of the report of the hon. the Minister of Justice on which the Order in Council was passed discharging from prison J. M. Skelton and Thomas Dewan, tried for and convicted of perjury before the Hon. Mr. Justice Wetmore at Battleford, in October, 1897, and subsequently sentenced to a term of imprisonment; also copies of affidavits filed in the Department of Justice by those applying for the release of the prisoners.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I must take exception to this notice in the absence of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. My hon. friend may, perhaps, renew it, but if he insists on it now, I will have to take the point of order.

Mr. DAVIN. I may tell the right hon. gentleman that I make the motion at the suggestion of the hon. Minister.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend had better wait until he comes.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 174)—from the Senate—respecting Usury.—(Mr. Rinfret.)

IMPORTS OF INDIAN CORN.

Mr. CLANCY asked :

How much Indian corn has been imported into Canada for home consumption during each of the fiscal years 1896, 1897, 1898 and 1899 respectively?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Pater-son). The total quantity of Indian corn entered at customs for home consumption during the fiscal years 1896, 1897 and 1898, as appears from the Trade and Navigation Returns, is as follows :—

	Dutiable.	Free Ensilage.	Total.
1896.....(bush)	2,763,999	253,631	3,017,630
1897.....(bush)	1,788,147	2,374,912	4,163,059
1898.....(bush)	204,787	19,771,314	19,976,101

I may say that since corn has been put upon the free list, it is all entered as imported for home consumption; but that does not necessarily imply that it is consumed in the country. There are millions of bushels of foreign corn exported, and I prepared the figures of those exports; but I have not read them, as the hon. gentleman's question did not cover that point.

Mr. CLANCY. The figures of the Trade and Navigation Returns in that respect are somewhat misleading, as all the corn appears to have been entered for home consumption, when a large portion of it is exported.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That is the reason I make this explanation. When goods are entered free, as soon as they pass the customs, the department has no more care of them.

IMPORTS OF BINDER TWINE.

Mr. CLANCY asked :

How much twine for harvest binders (or binder twine was imported into Canada for home consumption for the fiscal year ending the 30th June, 1899, and the value thereof?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Pater-son). I regret to say that I cannot give the information at present, as the statistical returns in detail of importations during the past fiscal year have not yet been received from all ports of entry, and I am afraid they will not be received before the House rises.

VALUATION OF VESSELS IN THE YUKON.

Mr. PRIOR asked :

Has the Government received any report from Mr. Oglivie, or any other official in the Yukon, in regard to the alleged undervaluation of the United States vessel "John C. Barr" for Canadian registry?

2. If so, what is the nature of the report?

3. Was the valuation of $10,000 on that vessel a fair one?

4. Is the vessel registered in the name of one Steinhalt?

5. Has the Government been informed that the above vessel is running in Canadian waters under the flag of the North American Trading and Transportation Company, with "Port of St. Michaels" painted on her stern as the port of registry?

6. Has the Government any report of the truth of the alleged undervaluation of the steamers "Pingree" and "Lowe"?

7. Is it true that the collector at Dawson attempted to admit these vessels without any inspection and that the inspector of customs refused to consent to this?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Pater-son). 1. The Government has received a report from Commissioner Ogilvie respecting the alleged undervaluation of the "J. C. Barr." 2. Mr. Ogilvie reports that he considers the hull of the "John C. Barr" worth at least $7,500. The hull was entered at $7,000. Mr. Ogilvie says nothing in respect to the value of the machinery of the vessel. 3. The question as to the fair valuation of the steamers "J. C. Barr," "Pingree" and "Lowe" remains undecided by the Customs Department, pending the report and action of S. W. McMichael, chief inspector of customs, who is investigating the valuation of all foreign-built steamers on the Yukon River, entered on application for registry at the port of Dawson—Mr. McMichael being authorized to deal with these matters under the provisions of the customs laws. 4. John Stinehoff, of Dawson is reported as the British owner of the "J. C. Barr." 5. The Government has not been informed that the "J. C. Barr" is running in Canadian waters under the flag of the North American Trading and Transportation Co., with "Port of St. Michaels" painted on her stern as the port of registry. 6. Commissioner Ogilvie reports, in effect, that he considers there is an undervaluation in the case both of the "Pingree" and "Lowe," but he does not wish to set his judgment up against that of Captain John S. Abbott, formerly of Nova Scotia, and Captain S. S. Danhier, of Dawson, who valued the vessels at the amount at which they were entered. 7. The Government is not aware that the collector at Dawson attempted to admit the "Pingree" and "Lowe" without any inspection and that the inspector of customs refused to consent to this.

Mr. FOSTER. Would the Minister be willing, without a formal motion to lay the report of Mr. Ogilvie on the Table?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, I imagine there can be no objection to that.

THE LAKE ST. LOUIS CHANNEL.

Mr. MONE (by Mr. Bergeron) asked :

Is it the intention of the Government, in accordance with the prayer of the petition of the Royal St. Lawrence Yacht Club, to dredge the channel in Lake St. Louis, leading to the wharf of the said club at Dorval?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). That matter is under the consideration of the Public Works Department, but we are unable to give my hon. friend a definite statement at present.

INSPECTOR MOODY, N.W.T.

Mr. DAVIS asked :

Is Inspector Moody still a member of the North-west Mounted Police Force?

Mr. PRIOR.

Are the Government aware that serious charges were made against him in Battleford in 1895 or 1896?

Have said charges been investigated? If so, what action have the Government taken in regard to same?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) No, we have no information of that character.

B. C. PLACER MINING OR ALIEN ACT.

Mr. PRIOR asked :

Has the Government had any correspondence with the Provincial Government of British Columbia, or any other person, in regard to the Act passed by the Provincial Government, intitled: "An Act to amend the Placer Mining Act" (otherwise known as the Alien Act)?

If so, will the Government bring said correspondence down to the House before the end of the session?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I will have to ask the hon. gentleman to let this stand.

Mr. PRIOR. If there is any correspondence will the hon. gentleman bring it down?

The PRIME MINISTER. I have no objection, but do not think there is any.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

Mr. MARCOTTE (by Mr. Bergeron) asked :

1. Have the Government expended any portion of the $48,000 voted on two several occasions for the improvement of the station of the Intercolonial Railway at Lévis?

2. What amount has been so expended?

3. What are the improvements effected at the said station out of the vote of $48,000?

4. Were the said improvements done by day's work, or under contract?

5. If by day's work, who was the superintendent?

6. If the work was done under contract, who was the contractor, and what was the contract price?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Between $30,000 and $40,000 has been expended in the purchase of land but not in any works.

ESTATE DUTY.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to draw the attention of my right hon. friend to the fact that the return which he was kind enough to lay on the Table in response to a suggestion from myself with reference to the correspondence that had taken place with regard to the Estate Duty, which is a matter of considerable importance and which I think ought not only to be on the Table but published for the information of all the provinces, does not contain the most important part of the correspondence, and that is with regard to the action taken by the Chancellor of the Exchequer on the occasation which settles what should be done. I shall send the correspondence over to my right hon. friend so that he can see for himself that this part has been omitted.

I would like also to draw the attention of my right hon. friend to the fact that at this period it is extremely inconvenient not to answer questions owing to the absence of Ministers. The Ministers should be in their places. Under the present arrangement, nearly all the time is in the hands of the Government, and I think that the slight privilege which remains should not be postponed at the last hours of the session.

I also wish to say to my hon. friend the Finance Minister that I hope he is able to lay on the Table any proposed railway subsidies or any further demands that are to be made on Parliament for grants of any kind. We are in the last hours of the session, and numbers of members are absolutely obliged to leave. We are nearly at the end of July, when it is impossible for hon. members to remain in this House, and I think, under the circumstances, not an hour should be lost in letting Parliament have all information as to any demands to be made upon it for appropriation of money.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). There is much in what my hon. friend says. With regard to the absence of Ministers, the reason is that they are engaged up stairs in an important committee.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Their answer should be placed in the hands of others.

The PRIME MINISTER. I believe the Ministers are not losing any time but are busily employed the whole 24 hours.

Mr. FOSTER. They should work forty-eight hours.

The PRIME MINISTER. We will be able to lay before the House the subsidies required to-morrow evening or Wednesday at the latest.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). We have no intention at the moment of submitting further estimates, except to supply any omission through error or for other reasons, and these will be so small as not to excite any debate.

SUPPLY—PREFERENTIAL TRADE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. McNEILL. I desire to make a motion which I think will meet with the unanimous approval of the House. It is a motion which I said last session I felt that I would have been justified in moving, but which I did not move because I knew positively that it would not be accepted by my right hon. friend and the Government. But having now, I am glad to say, the endorsement of my right hon. friend himself, I can see no objection to my moving it. I therefore beg to move :

That it is the duty of the Government of Canada, by all means in its power and as soon as it can possibly do so, to get preferential trade in the markets of Great Britain for the produce of Canada.

These are 'ipsissima verba' of my right hon. friend which he made use of in the House when this question was being discussed on Wednesday last. I have taken the words from "Hansard," and have merely added "for the produce of Canada." The rest is exactly in the words of my right hon. friend.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I offer no comment at all upon the merits of the motion presented by my hon. friend, but I would have expected of him, before addressing such an important motion, to have given me notice and an opportunity to consult and look at the motion itself. I hope he will not persist in moving it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may say that I quite concur in the reasonableness of the request of the First Minister, and no doubt my hon. friend will at once consent to postpone making such a motion until the Government have an opportunity of looking at it. I regret that the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries are not in their places. After the discussion which took place in the House and after the letter of His Grace the Duke of Devonshire, which was read to the House by the hon. Postmaster General—although I considered there was no conflict whatever in any statement I had made and the answer of His Grace the Duke of Devonshire, because I had never accused him of any protectionist heresies, but, on the other hand, I had taken the view of Lord Salisbury, that preferential trade could be given to the products of the country by the mother country without in any way conflicting with the doctrine of free trade. I do not intend to go into that, however. I went across the House to see the leader of the House. Unfortunately, my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) had been obliged to leave. There was no statement in the resolution that did anything more than affirm what His Grace has confirmed, and that was, that his views had been so accepted by a considerable portion of the press in England. But for the purpose of avoiding the slightest appearance of treating this great question as a party question, and if possible, of removing any difficulties, as I have shown my desire to do—as my right hon. friend knows—by the modification of the resolution, at the last moment I went over and consulted with hon. gentlemen who were leading the House, the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), and suggested to them that I should drop the whole of the preamble and should strike out the references to advances having been made, and simply retain the expression of the hope that the Government would do all that was in their power to bring about preferential trade. But my hon. friends the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries felt that, in the absence of the leader of the Government, they would not be justified in adopting that course. I am quite sure, if my right hon. friend had been here, he would have concurred in the suggestion made, because it did away with all the objections that my right hon. friend had urged to the resolution, and would have enabled us to present a united front on this question. I wished to make that explanation and to say that I agree with my right hon. friend as to the propriety of deferring any action to another day.

Mr. McNEILL. I shall only be too glad to accept the suggestion of my right hon. friend. I think that, in justice to myself, it is only right that I should explain that I did not think it necessary to communicate this to my right hon. friend, because what I was proposing that my right hon. friend should accept was simply the absolute statement, the very statement in the very words, that he had made in the House of Commons, and I did not think it was necessary for me to ask him to accept the statement that he had solemnly made in this House. As my right hon. friend knows—and I am sure he will do me the justice of admitting so much—I did everything I could last session to keep this question clear of party politics—

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Oh, oh.

Mr. McNEILL. One hon. gentleman sneers. I refer him to his leader.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No matter what he says, my opinion is the contrary of that expressed by the hon. gentleman (Mr. McNeill).

Mr. McNEILL. But the right hon. gentleman knows that I did everything in my power in this direction last session. I cannot repeat the private conversations, because they are sacred; but I mentioned to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that I thought I was justified in saying I had communicated with the Government over and over again, with a view to having this matter arranged. I was willing to accept any suggestions from the Government with regard to the matter, and did all I could to keep it clear of party politics, and have done so from the first. And if hon. gentlemen last session treated it from a party point of view—if we were virtually told across the floor of the House by the leader of the House at the time, that it was more important that it should be declared that they, as a party, had been right, and that we, as a party, had been wrong—as the Minister of Trade and Commerce did though not in terms tells us—if they told us that that was more important than that we should send a united message to strengthen the hands of those who were fighting for this policy in England, it was not my fault. It seemed to me absolutely useless to press the matter further upon the Government. I consider that I humiliated myself in going to the Government as often as I did last session. But I was prepared to do even that for such a cause; and I say I am only too glad to give my right hon. friend until to-morrow to think over this matter. What he is asking time to consider is a resolution declaring exactly, word for word, what he himself declared in this House last Wednesday.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

SUPPLY—INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the motion is carried. Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to ask the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) not to forget the two or three returns I have asked for.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I have them here, and will lay them on the Table now.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Arts, Agriculture and Statistics—
Archives ..... $8,000

Mr. FOSTER. Is this the usual vote, and to be disposed of in the usual way?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Is nothing more to be done about that building for the archives for this Washington of the North?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I hope that before long we shall be able to provide a suitable place for the archives.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). My hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) asks for more expenditure of money, and then, when we make it, he blames us for it.

Mr. BERGERON. I want to hold the Prime Minister to his promises, and that is a pretty hard job.

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes, and when I carry out the promises, to blame me for doing so.

Mr. BELCOURT. As one of the members who have taken an interest in this matter, I wish to say a word or two, not to make a speech, but merely to express the great disappointment I feel at not seeing in the supplementary Estimates any provision for the erection at an approximate date of the Geological Museum in Ottawa. I think that the Government might well, even at this stage, include a sum of, say $50,000, or $70,000, or $100,000, with a view to beginning the work. Fifty or seventy-five thousand is about the most which could properly be expended between now and next year. If no provision is made now, it means that there will be a whole year lost in getting the building ready for occupation. The construction of the building, as has often been pointed out by others as well as myself, is an immediate necessity. The work cannot be completed in less than three years, so that, before the end of that time, these valuable collections cannot, in any case, be put beyond danger. It is not necessary that the whole sum required for the building should be put in the Estimates this year; but I urgently ask the Government to consider the matter and put in the Estimates this year such a sum as I have mentioned. As I have said, I do not want to make a speech; but I ask leave to read the letter I have received from the Director of the Geological Survey, which I would like to have placed on record:

Rideau Club, Ottawa, July 19, 1899.

Dear Mr. Belcourt,—You will be as much disappointed as I am (having interested yourself so largely in the matter) to notice that no provision has been made in the supplementary Estimates for the new museum building.

I do not yet, however, altogether abandon the hope that a small sum may be obtained before the end of the session, if merely to affirm the principle and inaugurate the work.

As a matter of fact, the session is so late that a moderate amount might enable as much work as it would be profitable to undertake to be carried out before winter, after the final completion of the plans.

It should be remembered, I think, that about three years will be required after the building is begun, before it can be so far completed and fitted that it will be possible to house the collection in it. All this time we must remain, in any case, subject not only to the present great danger of loss by fire, but also to the disadvantage in opportunity for the adequate display of the mineral resources of the country, which, at a time when so much interest is being taken in their resources, seems to be especially unfortunate.

If the beginning of the work must be postponed for another session, it means another year lost at least.

Yours truly,

GEORGE M. DAWSON.

N. A. Belcourt, Esq., M.P.

I hope the Government will yet make some provision, at least, to begin work on the museum at once. I need not repeat what has been said before. I know the Government is prepared, sooner or later, to build a museum, and that it is only a matter of time when that will be done. I suppose the reason why no provision has been made this year is because of the large demands which have been made on the Government. But it seems to me a small sum of $50,000, such as I have mentioned, might well be spared and might well be employed between this period and next session, and I hope that it will yet be done.

Statistical Year Book..... $3,000

Mr. BERGERON. What is the reason of the decrease in that item? I have always looked upon this book as a very important one.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). We have found that we can do the work at a less price than has been voted for it heretofore. This last year the expenditure has not amounted to $3,000, and consequently we find that we can considerably increase the number of copies printed, and do it for $3,000 instead of the $4,000 or the $5,000 which has been voted heretofore. It will be just as large a book, but a larger number of copies will be issued.

Mr. McNEILL. How is the saving to be effected? It is printed in the same way as before, I suppose?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The book now is not nearly as large as it was the first year I came into office. It had reached such a size that the object of its publication was prejudiced, and it has been compressed in size. A number of tables were being duplicated, for one thing, and after going carefully over it with Dr. Dawson we have been able to eliminate some of the statistics that were appearing more than once. I may say that as a matter of fact, the whole vote has hardly ever been spent. The highest amount spent in any one year was $4,300, in 1897. In 1896 only $3,000 was spent; and from the estimate which has been given this year by the Queen's Printer, I hope to publish the same number that we published last year for $2,544.90. But in consequence of some complaints that enough copies were not issued, I propose to add to the number issued, and so we call for $3,000.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Could not the Minister manage to get a little thinner paper, so as to make the book less heavy?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That might be done, though, perhaps, it would interfere some with the printing, which is already rather fine. Unless the paper was pretty good, the printing might not be sufficiently legible. However, I will discuss the suggestion with the Queen's Printer.

Mr. HENDERSON. How many copies were published last year?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Five thousand five hundred.

Mr. SEMPLE. I am pleased to know that an additional number of that book is to be published. I have received a few during this session, and have sent them out to ministers of the Gospel, high school teachers and inspectors of schools, and they have given their opinion that it is an excellent book, containing nearly everything relating to this country in a convenient form. I think the book is very much appreciated.

Mr. HENDERSON. May I ask the Minister how many copies of this work does he intend to give each member of Parliament, because I can assure him that I have not received anything like the number of copies the hon. member for Centre Wellington (Mr. Semple) has received. I think a sufficient number should be printed to give each member a reasonable number of copies of this book, so that its useful information can be distributed among the people of the country. At any rate, there should be an equitable division to all the members; then, if there are any left, they may be given out to others.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I may say that this book is distributed to various public libraries, and mechanics' institutes, and organizations of that kind, according to a list which is held in the department. But that does not by any means exhaust all the copies that are printed, and the others are available to members. I forget whether they send two copies or more to every member the moment it is issued. An arrangement might be made by which each member should receive five, eight or ten copies.

Mr. HENDERSON. That would be much better, because, on account of the limited number of these books printed, I have felt a delicacy in asking the department for more. I have only received one or two copies, and now I find that others have been receiving a very much larger number. It would be well to have a definite understanding that each member should receive 20 or 30 copies, then, if there were any left, they could be divided up.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There are a good many members who do not make any use of the blue-books and documents that are sent to them. This is rather a valuable book, and rather an expensive book, and I think it would be pity if we sent them out in large numbers and they were stowed away, as is the case with many blue-books which are received by a good many members of the House. Therefore, it has been thought better that members should apply for such number as they wish to make use of. That is the reason why a larger number has not been sent indiscriminately to all the members. I do not think any member has applied for any without getting them.

Mr. FOSTER. That does not act fairly at all. For myself, I have only received one this year, and I only received one last year. When valuable information like this is being printed for distribution, it is not right that it should only be given to members who ask for it. I supposed that with respect to all these public documents there was a certain rule by which so many were distributed to each member, then if there were any left over, the distribution should take place accordingly. A modest man like myself only gets one of these, and my hon. friend from Centre Wellington gets a lot to send to ministers and school teachers. I do not think it should be made simply a matter of application. For my own part I do not propose to run around every year asking for these books. It is the people's money; I am one of the people's representatives, and a certain number should be given to each representative. To assume that a representative will not properly use a book of that kind is not a correct assumption, because it is a most valuable book, probably, of a non-party character that is made up by the Government. I imagine that every hon. member has the same right to it and it should be distributed according to a pro rata basis to hon. members. I do not believe in making a wholesale distribution of any of these books to members of Parliament; I do not believe in furnishing members with campaign literature out of public money because these books are at the Queen's Printer to be bought, and outside of a small number, by courtesy distributed, I think hon. members ought to buy these books if they want them, and the public ought to buy them if they want them. But when we have to print a certain number, and after you have got the non-official distribution completed, I think the remainder ought to be distributed pro rata.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) is somewhat mistaken in regard to the manner that blue-books are distributed. A certain number of all our blue-books are sent to each member, one or two to each member, and they apply for a further distribution if they want additional copies. The report of the Geological Survey is dealt with in this way, and other blue-books are dealt with in this way. I quite appreciate what the hon. gentleman says in regard to the public paying for these books if they want them. We have never sold any of these books; we have always distributed them free, but we try to distribute them to those who really want them, and if an hon. member of the House wants a larger number we try to give them.

Mr. BERGERON. I have never received more than one copy of the book. I have always appreciated it a great deal because it contains a lot of valuable information. I never knew that you could get more than one copy. I would be delighted to have twelve or fifteen copies to give to the people in my county who would be interested in reading the book. After what my hon. friend has said I will try and get as many as can be given to one individual member. It is the first time I have heard that more than one copy can be got, and when I am passing the department of the hon. gentleman I will try and get more.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Not only in connection with this book but in connection with others, the Auditor General's Report, for instance, I think that a definite understanding should be arrived at as to the number of copies that each member may receive, so that when a constituent writes to you to get him a copy of one of these books, you will know whether you can comply with his request or not. I think there should be a definite number of these publications distributed to each member. At present there appears to be a maxim that the man who goes to the Distribution office first will have a greater advantage than anybody else, or, in other words, that the early bird gets the worm. Certainly the early bird gets these documents. I think it would be fairer to have an arrangement by which a member would get a certain number in proportion to the number of constituents he has. One member may have 20,000 constituents and another 40,000, and an arrangement should be made by which so many should be given to each.

Mr. BERGERON There should not be anything like that, under your Redistribution Bill.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). It should be so arranged that the distribution will take place in proportion to the number of voters in the different constituencies. So far as the Auditor General's Report is concerned it should not be distributed simply upon the basis of going and asking for additional copies. I only got two copies, and the one I have up-stairs, and when we go to the Distribution office to ask for more we are told that they are all gone. It is only the hon. member for Centre Wellington (Mr. Semple) who understood all about this. He supplied all the clergymen and other people in his county with this book, and they say: What an excellent member we have in Mr. Semple; he supplies us with all these documents—and when I cannot get them, the people in my county say: What a miserable member we have got; he cannot get us this Year-book. The hon. member who has just spoken says that we are supplied to our heart's content with these copies. I submit that, if there is to be a rule, it should apply to every hon. member so a certain number of copies would be guaranteed to each member whether he asked for them upon the first or the last day of the session. Then he would know how many he could get and he would distribute them to the best advantage. I must bear testimony to the value of this Year-book. It is one of the most important publications in Canada, if properly guarded in the statement of facts, if the facts contained in it are seen to be real facts, although sometimes I have seen that they were a little coloured in a certain direction. I think that each hon. member should get as many as possible consistent with the rule, and that a definite and certain number should go to each hon. member.

Mr. McMULLEN. Mr. Chairman, I entirely agree with what the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) has said. I admit quite willingly that the Year-book is a very valuable production, but I can endorse what he has said to this extent, that I have known hon. members who have received these books and who have allowed them to lie in their offices until there was half a cord, or a cord of books, from which the twine had not even been removed.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). If there are a number of delinquents of that kind, is that a reason why hon. members who do not act in that way should not get them?

Mr. McMULLEN. I think the course the hon. Minister of Agriculture has taken is a proper one. I would suggest that when the Year-book is printed it be sent out with a blank order in the book with a notice that when an hon. member receives the first book each member is entitled to, say, 20 more and that if he will fill out the order and return it to the hon. Minister of Agriculture he will be supplied with that number. If you adopt this method, then hon. gentlemen who do not want them, will not fill out the order and books will not be sent to them to lie in their offices unused. If you send out that blank order each member who wants additional copies of the book will fill it in, return it to the hon. Minister—there is no postage to pay—and he will get the additional number of books. I think that would be a proper rule to follow, because those who do not want the books will not send the order, and money will not be lost in printing books that are not used. I quite agree with the desirability of distributing this book in considerable numbers, because I know a great many people who like to get it, and I think it would be well to place the book in the hands of those members who would distribute it to advantage.

Mr. HUGHES. A number of years ago I brought this matter before the House and I asked that an extra number of copies might be printed. I regret that that request was not complied with. It was at the time when our friends were in power. When I found that a large number of these books was not used I made an application each year for them, and was supplied with copies of them, but last year I was informed that there would not be a continuation of that distribution. There was substituted instead, however, the excellent Hand Book of the Interior Department, and this has been supplemented by the excellent little atlases also furnished by the Department of the Interior. I heartily endorse what has been said in reference to the value of this work if placed in the various schools in the community, in mechanics' institutes and public libraries. I have supplied it to the schools so far as I could get copies, and I found that it was highly appreciated. I can scarcely believe that it is possible that any member of Parliament would allow books like these to lie undistributed in his office. I would be inclined to doubt the statement of the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) that these books have been "laying" around. I do not know what would be hatched from them if they were; but I would be inclined to doubt that they would be lying around without being used. If the Minister of Agriculture has any in stock, he has my address, and I can utilize anywhere from 75 to 150 to very great advantage. They are distributed non-politically. I believe, to the teachers of the country, and to reading rooms, and I would press upon the Minister the necessity of having a sufficient number printed for distribution to each reading room in the educational centres.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. For the information of the House I may say that in 1891 the late Government had 3,600 printed; in 1892 they reduced the number to 2,800, in 1893 to 2,400, in 1894 to 2,400, in 1895 to 2,400. In 1896 I increased the number to 3,000, in 1897 to 4,300, and last year to 5,300, double the number printed under my predecessor, and this year I hope to be able to distribute 6,000, and perhaps more.

Mr. HUGHES. I may say that in those years I got a large number, while at the present time I only get one.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that book translated into French?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Certainly.

Mr. BERGERON. I have never seen it in French.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. As soon as the proof sheets are printed, they are sent to the translator, and when the translation is completed the French edition is at once printed.

Mr. BERGERON. If I go to the department, will my hon. friend allow me to have some of those books in French and English?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Certainly.

The PRIME MINISTER. Is it possible that my hon. friend never applied for any?

Mr. BERGERON. I do not need to ask for any favours from this Government.

Mr. FOSTER. What is to be done about the distribution?

Mr. HUGHES.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think the suggestion of the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) is a good one, that we should send to each member a slip asking him to state how many copies he requires.

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose these applications are sent out, and one member says he wants 100, another 10, and another 75?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The suggestion was that they should be limited to a certain number.

Mr. FOSTER. It seems to me that every man who represents a constituency knows how to make the best use of the five or six books he may get. I have been told that when application has been made by a member for these books, the department asks him to send the names of the parties to whom he wishes them to be sent, and the department will send them. That is not what is wanted. The member represents his constituency, and if the book is to be sent to a mechanics' institute or to a library or to any person in his constituency he wants to send it under his own hand. That is only fair to the constituency and to the member himself. The least you could do would be to give the member his ten copies, and I do not think there is a man in this House representing a constituency who is not able to dispose of ten copies to good advantage. If these books are to be distributed upon application, what will happen will be that some members who have more time than others to besiege the department will receive them as a matter of favour, and some who have not time or will to be continually haunting the department, will not receive them.

Mr. MOORE. I am glad that the Minister of Agriculture appreciates the importance of this work. I do not think a more important work is published by the Government than this Statistical Year-book, and I think it is in very good hands when it is under the supervision of Mr. Johnson. As the Minister has increased the number to 5,500 that would give 25 copies to each member.

Mr. FOSTER. There are a great many distributed unofficially, of course.

Mr. MOORE. If a member gets 25 copies, I think that would be quite sufficient. I have endeavoured for several years to get a bound copy, but have been unable to do so. I would suggest that enough be bound to give each member at least one bound copy.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. A large number of these books are sent to mechanics' institutes and public libraries all over the country; and the only reason members are asked to whom they wish the books to be sent is to avoid duplicating them. I value this book very highly myself, and I think it would be a pity to have it distributed indiscriminately. Mr. Johnson has a list of people specially interested in statistics to whom this book has been distributed for years, and it would be a hardship to these people if they were not to receive it. If the book were distributed wholly through the members, the members might or might not send it to these people; and it is very important to them that they should have the book for a series of years in order to be able to compare data from year to year. I do not think the House would wish to have the public libraries and mechanics' institutes cut off; and if we send it to all these and also supply each member with a certain number of copies, I shall have to ask for more money in order to get a larger number printed. We must also remember that the Senators have to receive these books as well as the members of this House.

Mr. HUGHES. Why?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The Senate is a portion of the Parliament of Canada as well as the House of Commons, and we cannot well refuse them. That means that some 300 must be used as the multiplier for any fixed number which may be decided upon for distribution among the members.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I should think that a bound copy for each member and five for his constituency would be enough.

Mr. McMILLAN. Last year a friend wrote to me asking me to get him a copy of the Statistical Year-book, and I had to reply that I was unable to do so. Now, it is not right that one member should get five or six copies and others should only get one. I think we should know, before we distribute a book of this kind, how many copies we are going to get. Three thousand copies would give ten to each member of the Senate and the House of Commons, and that is not too many for distribution in a constituency. It is a very valuable book, giving more information than any other book issued by the Government, and we ought to have at least ten copies each. I think it should be clearly understood what number each member is to get, so that when we get them we shall know where to send them in order that they may do the most good in the community.

Mr. CLANCOY. Perhaps the hon. Minister of Agriculture could tell us how the distribution has been made in the past year. It has been said that certain numbers went to mechanics' institutes and public libraries, and the hon. gentleman intimated that a certain number went to persons who take a special interest in statistics. The balance,

I suppose, would be left for members. Perhaps the hon. gentleman could state the number reserved for each of these classes.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not the figures under my hand.

Mr. CLANCOY. It is important that we should get that information before we settle the question of the distribution. With regard to the suggestion that some members are so busy or so indolent that they have not made use of the blue-books, including the Statistical Year-book, that is no answer to the proposal that they should be distributed to the members of this House. Each member must answer to his constituents, and to no one else; and if he has failed to send these books to his constituents, that is absolutely his own concern. It seems to me that as far as possible an inflexible rule should be laid down as to how many each member should receive. I do not think that should be left to hap-hazard, because there are not many as lucky as the hon. gentleman who made the disclosure that he was able to supply all the ministers in his constituency.

Mr. SEMPLE. Not all, only a few.

Mr. CLANCOY. Well, I was not so lucky; I only got one. I did not ask for any more. I think the Minister of Agriculture should tell the committee in a general way how many are distributed to mechanics' institutes, public libraries, and outside individuals, as well as to members.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I would have to examine the list in the department, for I have not got the numbers in my mind, before I could give a definite answer to my hon. friend; but I can assure him that the discussion here will be borne in mind, and if this vote passes, I shall be very glad indeed to try and follow the suggestions made. I wish this book to go to those who are interested in it, and who will make good use of it, and I will see that a larger number shall be distributed to the members of Parliament in the way suggested.

Mr. CLANCOY. The hon. gentleman said that he concurred in the suggestion of the hon. member for North Wellington that each members of this House should be required to send a list. I think each member of this House must be left to consult his own inclinations or convenience as to those to whom he will send the book. I hope the Minister will not adopt the plan suggested by the hon. member for North Wellington at all, but that the number which each member is to receive shall be left entirely at his own disposal and that an equal number shall be given to every member, whatever that number may be.

Mr. McMULLEN. My hon. friend quite misunderstands my suggestion. It is that as soon as the Year-book is issued, one copy should be sent to each member of Parliament, with a blank order in the first page, stating that copies of the book would be furnished to each member up to a certain number, and asking him to fill up the blank order and return it to the department stating the number he desired, and that number would be sent to his address. Then he could send them wherever he pleased. I would suggest further that the order should be left open for only three months, and that if the blank is not filled up and returned within that time the matter should be closed. That would leave the balance in hand entirely at the disposal of the Minister of Agriculture to send them to whoever might apply for them. In my humble opinion, that is the best course to pursue. The ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) seems to think that it is a little humiliating for an ex-Minister to fill up an order of that kind and send it to the department. I do not think that it is. The object of not sending ten or twenty copies to each member is to avoid their being wasted; as in some cases members may receive a parcel of the books and may never open it at all. The object is to have them placed in the hands of people who will use them, and to take care that the money spent for printing them is spent to some purpose.

Mr. CLANCY. I do not think we can undertake to direct just how these books shall be used, or what shall become of them after they are sent from the department. It seems to me absurd that we should undertake to see that every book is well read after it is sent, and whether a member distributes the books at once or does not do so for eleven months after receiving them is a matter of his own concern. This committee is not to be a judge of what use a member shall make of the books. It seems to me there is only one way of distributing them, that is, to give an equal number to every member.

Mr. HUGHES. I wish to suggest to the Minister that he should let each member know how many books are sent to mechanics' institutes and libraries in his riding, for I find that in some cases I have been duplicating them. I trust that the Minister, in communicating with members, will not do so by sticking a notice in the front leaf of the book, but will send a letter to each member direct.

Mr. TYRWHITT. The objection I see to the suggestion of the hon. member for North Wellington is that it does not make it compulsory on the Minister of Agriculture to send the books to the applicant. Applications which I have sent have not been complied with.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I agree with the hon. gentleman who has just spoken. I had an application from a friend for one of these books, and I sent it to the department, with the request that if the book could be furnished it should be sent to the applicant; but I am without information whether the book has been sent or not, and I am unable to assure my friend that it will be sent. If I had the same privilege with respect to these books that I have with respect to other blue-books, of getting a certain number, addressed to myself, I could send copies to such of my friends as I thought most required them.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The rule has been that the names should be sent so as to avoid sending duplicates. I shall see that anybody else who writes for a book will be notified at once that the book has been sent.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I do not think that the department should exercise its own will with regard to sending those books to certain places in certain constituencies and not with regard to others. Why is there not a definite understanding what kind of institutions and what number shall receive those books?

Mr. McMILLAN. I have been notified the last two years that a copy of that book was forwarded to me by the Statistician. The Statistician should inform each member how many institutions in his riding gets copies, and how many copies he is entitled to.

Mr. MARTIN. Some years ago there were 2,400 copies of this book printed, and last year there were 5,500, or more than double. As far as the committee is aware, hon. members, with one or two exceptions, do not receive any more copies than they did previously, and I think the committee is entitled to the information as to what became of the additional 2,100 distributed this year.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They were distributed to those who applied for them.

Mr. MARTIN. That is where the injustice comes in. It would be easy for the Minister of Agriculture to give this committee a list of all those to whom the book is sent, or at least the number. After you ascertain the number required for societies and private individuals, the number you have left over for distribution should be fairly distributed among the members.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will do that.

General statistics ..... $3,000

Mr. FOSTER. How is this spent?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In paying certain clerks who assist Mr. Johnson in his statistical work, and also expenditure in obtaining information in different parts of the country. The ordinary salaries amount to $2,600. Mr. Washington made various investigations, with regard to some land values in different parts of the country. Mr. Macdonald was employed in making some investigations into the exports of agricultural products and was paid $164. These are the only items I have here, except stationery and printing.

Mr. HUGHES. Has the hon. gentleman taken any steps to find out the suitability of the vast areas lying in the northern regions of the North-west for agriculture, for instance, the Peace River district, the Athabasca, Upper Saskatchewan districts ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There is no vote under which I could do work of that kind. There is a vote in the Estimates this year out of which, if the House grants, I might be able to do work of that kind.

Mr. FOSTER. General statistics and the Statistical Year-book ought really to go together.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Practically it is a supplementary vote for that purpose.

Mr. FOSTER. Better combine the vote.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The Statistical Year-book vote is practically just the vote for payment of the Printing Bureau for the printing of that book. The other is a vote for the work.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend, another year, had better combine the votes, one for printing and the other for statistical work.

To aid Agricultural Societies..... $7,000

Mr. CLANCY. On what plan is the distribution made ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. A circular is sent to the agricultural societies setting forth that any societies having over fifty members will become eligible to receiving its proportion, which will be distributed on the following principle : Each society of fifty members will receive $150, and will receive a dollar for every additional subscriber up to the number of 150. $250 will be the largest amount paid to any one society. If applications are so numerous as not to allow of the distribution of this basis, a pro rata distribution will be adopted, each society getting a less sum. Each society shall furnish the Department of Agriculture with a statement, giving its name, where elected, the names of its officers, the copy of its list of members, and the subscriptions paid, and must furnish a certificate, in the form of a declaration before a magistrate, that this return is true and that all the subscriptions have been paid.

Experimental Farms..... $80,000

Mr. CLANCY. This is an increase of $5,000. I do not intend complaining of that, but I wish to draw attention to the fact that the stock of cattle at the farm in Ottawa is below the mark in quality. This certainly should not be the case. I do not say that the number should be increased to an enormous rate, but that every animal should be of the highest grade. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman has had communications from his own friends and those who may not be politically in accord with him, but it is commonly stated that it is a disgrace to Canada that the Central Experimental Farm should be so disappointing as regards stock. I do not know whether this increase of $5,000 is for this purpose, but if so, it is a very small increase. But I do hope that the Minister will deem it his duty to make a radical change in the direction I have indicated ; and I think he will be supported by hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House. It will be a benefit to an institution that, I have no hesitation in saying, in the past as far back as my knowledge of it goes, has been starved. I am not able to discover why that should be the case. I am not going to criticise individually the stock there. There are reasons why we should not do so.

Mr. JOHN McMILLAN (South Huron). Before this item goes though, I wish to review the policy followed with regard to this Experimental Farm since it has been in existence. If the Experimental Farm is to be the benefit to the country that we desire to see, of course, the experimental portion can never pay, or anything like pay, expenses. I am glad to be able to say that the farmers have been very considerably benefited by the distribution of seed grain from the Experimental Farm. That is one of the benefits, and, let me say, one of the principal benefits derived by the farmers from this institution. But, in my opinion, there is far too much devoted to arbor-tum and forest work. There must be one hundred and fifty acres devoted to that branch. In my opinion, the giving up of so large a portion of an experimental farm to such a purpose is sheer nonsense. A great part of the farm is in such a condition that it will become an excellent park for the people of Ottawa, but it will not yield the benefit to the farmers that it should. I believe that the buildings should be beautified in the same way as a good farmer would beautify his own buildings, in the most effective but yet in an inexpensive way. But I believe that too much has been spent on mere ornament on the Experimental Farm, considering the way that other features are treated. The agriculture practice is carried on pretty well, but it is not as far advanced as it should be. The condition in which we find the farm, both in respect to stock and buildings, is, in my opinion, the results of gentlemen having the management of the agricultural department who were not thoroughly practical men. As a stock farm the buildings should be arranged in the most convenient manner, so that the work of feeding may be carried on with the least labour, and so as to secure the best conditions on the part of the stock. I have also always held that a portion of the farm should be set apart and worked as a practical man would work it; and if that is not done, it is of little benefit to the farmers of this country. The farmers want a practical demonstration of how science and practice are combined so as to increase the crops while improving their quality and cheapening the cost of production. We need demonstrations of the different systems of feedings in vogue to-day, so as to show what can be done by the application of the most modern ideas. I was in a stable last year where steers were put in in December and kept there for one month. Some were tied. There were others put in loose in box stalls. All these animals were kept there for a month and had the same feeding and the same water. The animals that were in the boxes gained eighteen pounds per month more than those that were tied. That is something that is to the advantage of the farmer to know. There has never been anything of that kind done here. I hope that these ideas in feeding will be followed up. In the report of the farm, we have an account of a certain number of steers put on to be fattened. But we are not told what age they were or where they were purchased, or what was paid for them. There is a description of the manner in which they are fed, but nothing is said as to the price obtained for them when they were sold. All these things the farmers want to know from an experimental station, and it is only by giving such information that the farm in this respect can be made of any advantage to the farmers. It may seem a small matter to people not acquainted with this business, whether the age of the cattle is or is not given, but to me, as a feeder, it is of the utmost importance to know the age of every animal, because I find the younger you can get animals ready for the market, the cheaper is the cost of the production of the beef—and that is what we want to know from beginning to end.

Then, there is the dairy at the Experimental Farm. We want to know what is being done in this department. In the last two reports nothing has been said about the dairy herd. When Prof. Robertson was at the head, there was a dairy upon the farm, and it ought to have been the centre of the dairy interest in Canada and a means of showing the farmers of Canada how to get up a first-class herd of cows, how to rear them, how to feed them, how to manipulate them. At least a portion of the butter made on this farm should be sent to the old country market to show the farmers what really can be done. For, Mr. Chairman, Prof. Robertson was at the head of our dairying industry, and this should have been made the centre of the dairying of the Dominion of Canada. I hope that, in the future, we shall have something about the dairy herd. I hope they will show how a dairy herd can be bred—taking the different breeds and their grades and showing those that are most profitable to the farmers. That is a thing that each farmer cannot do for himself and it was one of the points that an experimental dairy farm should take up. As to the fattening of steers, full information should be given, as to the steers that are bred on the farm and those that are bought and afterwards fattened, giving every point of interest from the time they are dropped from their mothers until they are ready for the block; so that the farmer may be ready to judge whether it is better to breed his own cattle and fatten them for the market or whether it is better to buy and feed. Let me say I have been disgusted every time I went to the farm. I am not going to use moderate language where it will not express my idea. I refer chiefly to the class of animals upon the farm. Only animals of the best description should be put there. When strangers come to Ottawa from distant parts of Canada or from the United States or Great Britain, they want to see what kind of cattle we have in Canada and what sort of example the Experimental Farm is setting, not only to the farmers of Canada, but to farmers of the other countries. We all feel proud of Canada and the progress she is making; but I must say this Experimental Farm has been a slander upon the farmers of the Dominion of Canada, particularly with regard to the kind of stock kept. If we keep stock upon the farm, it should be the best. I am aware that there have been misfortunes with regard to stock; and let me say—and I say it advisedly—a great deal of that has been due to not having practical men in the management of the farm. I excuse my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), because as soon as he took office in 1896, he advertised to get a thoroughly practical man to manage the farm. From my own knowledge of agriculture, I can say that it is not easy to get a thoroughly practical man who has practice both in agriculture as it is carried on and in the purchase and manipulation of stock. He was unable to get a practical individual until this spring. I know myself that he has done his best. He applied three different times to me to see if I could recommend him an individual who would be able to take charge of that farm. He has now got a young man in charge of it who, I hope, will make a great change for the better. Let me say, Mr. Chairman, that it is a very hard matter indeed for any one to take hold of any institution that has been run in the extravagant manner that this farm has been run, as I will show before I take my seat. It is almost impossible to bring it down to a proper basis with the staff that has been there for years, and after it has been run so long in certain ruts. The individual who takes hold of that farm has a very hard work before him.

Now, with respect to the feeding of hogs,

I have said a good deal before the Agricultural Committee. That is another very important industry in Canada to-day. I have always held that instead of using grain and a large quantity of oats in the feeding of cattle and hogs, the farmers would derive more benefit by cheapening the cost of production and increasing the quality of the animals, and I am convinced that where nothing but grain is used that large industry does not pay in the manner it could be made to pay by mixing the grain with roots. Now I hope that all these things are at an end.

I am going to make a little statement now with respect to the management of the farm. I see on page 9 of this year's report, a statement that in 1889-90-91 oats produced per acre 32 bushels and 17 pounds; barley, 31 bushels and 6 pounds; wheat, 15 bushels and 9 pounds. In 1896-97-98 there was an increase in the yield. Oats produced 56 bushels and 6 pounds per acre; barley, 43 bushels and 13 pounds; wheat, 20 bushels and 9 pounds. These figures, therefore, show an increase in the latter period of 23 bushels and 13 pounds per acre for oats; 12 bushels and 7 pounds per acre for barley, and 4 bushels and 5 pounds per acre for wheat. Now, the report goes on to show that this result has been achieved by a moderate use of fertilizers, and the ploughing down of green crops, and good cultivation of the soil. Let me say that any farmer in the country could raise good crops if he was to spend the enormous sum of money that has been spent here in manure and fertilizers. No less than $13,000 has been spent in manure put on that farm, money that has been taken out of the treasury of this country. Each year over $1,100 has been spent in manure, besides the manure that was made upon the farm itself. I say it is not fair to the farmers of this country to tell them that it is by a moderate use of fertilizers and green manure that these results have been achieved when such an enormous sum of money has been spent in buying manure and fertilizers from outside. This farm would have been a greater benefit to the farmers if, when it was first started, we had had a practical individual to take hold of that portion of it that was partly run down, and if he had set himself to renew the fertility of that soil by the manure that was produced on the farm itself. We are told by the professors that that can be done. Why was it not done on this farm? I urged it long ago, but it has not been done. Now, we find this enormous amount of money, $13,656 has been spent upon manure up to July, 1898. I say that the use of manure on that farm should cease except a little to experiment with, and a little quantity of fertilizers to experiment with. Let them take the manure that they make upon that farm, the same as every practical farmer in this country has got to do. But neither this farm nor any other farm run as an example to the farmers of this country, can be of any special benefit to them unless it is run along the lines that a practical farmer runs his own farm. A majority of the farmers of this country have to depend entirely upon the manure that they make in their own stables and the ploughing down of green crops. I hope that from this time on that system will cease.

Now with respect to the number of men employed, and with respect to the taking care of the stock. I have been astonished at many things in going over the farm. I propose to show from the Auditor General's Report, the last one I had at home when I made the examination, a condition of things that I had no idea of, and which I think no other gentleman in this House has any idea of. In 1891 the sales of produce from that farm—and the reason I take 1891 is because I could not get the figures in any previous year—the sale of produce upon that farm amounted to $1,848, and the care of the stock came to $1,770, and the balance, $78, represented the whole revenue from that farm; so that the labour and all other expenses had to come out of the treasury of the country. In 1892 the sales of produce amounted to $2,311, and the care of stock to $2,193, leaving a surplus of $128. In 1893 the sale of produce amounted to $2,040, and the care of stock to $2,120, or $80 more than the whole revenue from the farm. Now, some gentlemen may say: But you forget entirely the large amount of grain that was distributed amongst the farmers from that farm. Mr. Chairman, I do not forget that. Now, I have examined carefully the question of the quantity of grain that was distributed. Reducing all the packages to bushels, and putting it at the market price, and taking out the quantity of grain and bran that was purchased for feeding purposes, and also for seed. I find that they come within $20 of balancing, so that the one goes against the other. When you come to 1894, I find that the revenue was $1,982, and it cost $2,628 to take care of the stock, or $646 more than the whole revenue of the farm. In 1895 the revenue was $2,613 and the care of the stock cost $2,673, leaving a deficit of $60 in that year.

Whenever I have visited that farm I have looked carefully at the stock, and I found that the stock were well cared for, but I must say that the buildings on that farm are in such a condition that no man can take care of stock in those stables as cheaply as a farmer can care for his stock on an ordinary farm. The roots are at some distance from the stable, and have got to be drawn into them. When those buildings were erected there was an excellent opportunity to put a root-house in the rear close to the stables, but that was not done. There are other things in the buildings that are not convenient. I found the stable floor made of blocks. That was the system, perhaps, when the barn was built, but it has since become obsolete, and the best farmers now make their stable floors with gravel and cement; such floors are perfectly level and easily kept clean. The buildings on the whole are not creditable to the Dominion of Canada, and are not such as people would expect to find who come from a distance. Let me say that during the whole of last winter they had to water their cattle out of pails, as they had no proper system of watering the cattle in these stables. That, I say, shows the folly of putting a man who has no practical experience in the care of stock, in charge of an institution such as this. It has cost the country thousands of dollars. In 1896 there was a revenue of $3,785, and the expense of caring for the stock was $2,805, or a revenue of $980 more than cared for the stock. I am going to speak plainly, because I care not who may be affected. Professor Robertson was in charge in 1885, and Professor Saunders took charge in 1896. In one case you have a deficit, in the other a revenue of $980. In 1897 there was a revenue of $3,182, and an expenditure of $2,847, in caring for the stock, or a surplus of $334. When we take the seven years, there is a surplus of $732 of revenue over the cost of caring for the stock, or an annual average of $104 during that period that the revenue exceeds the expenses.

Mr. CLANCY. What are the figures for 1898 ?

Mr. McMILLAN. I have not the figures for 1898, as I did not have the Auditor General's Report when I made up that statement, and I did not want to change the whole calculation.

Mr. McNEILL. What are the figures for 1897 ? I did not catch them.

Mr. McMILLAN. There was a revenue of $3,182, and it cost $2,847 to take care of the cattle, leaving a surplus of $334. Let me explain that, in the list published in the Auditor General's Report of the names of those who are in charge of the cattle, the name of Mr. Elliott, foreman of stock, is not included, but I have included the name of Mr. Elliott and added his salary to those of the other stockmen for these years, because he is entirely engaged in connection with the care of the cattle.

There is an enormous number of people engaged upon this farm, and, to show the cost of the institution, I will just give a few figures. The price paid for the land originally was $72,623. Then, I had a return brought down to the 1st of January, 1896, and it showed that, up to that time, $47,147 had been expended for labour in improving the farm. The buildings, up to the 21st of September, 1896, cost $176,000. The expense of draining has been $10,129. Mr. Chairman, that is another evidence of the incapacity of the individuals who laid out these drains and managed their construction. I saw enough of such work, when I visited the farm two years ago, to convince me that proper methods were not employed. Eleven dollars had been expended for an engineer to lay out these drains that were under construction then, and they were neither straight nor angular, but they were crooked. To go and spend money for an engineer to drain that piece of land, when these labourers were there to do that work was an unnecessary expenditure. To dig a drain that was 2½ feet at the top and very little narrower at the bottom, is to give an exhibition of ignorance in respect to the proper way of constructing drains the like of which I have never seen before in my life. I have had a great deal of experience in draining in the old country and also in this country, and the only proper plan is to make the bottom of the drain the exact size of the tile, so that it will fit in ; but in this case you have a 5 or 6-inch tile put in the bottom of a drain about 2 feet wide. It is an impossibility that a drain constructed in this manner could be constructed in a compact and workmanlike manner, such as would have been possible, if the proper course had been adopted. Although $10,000 has been expended upon drainage, much of this money has been thrown away, because any hon. gentleman who will go to the farm, will see, especially after this wet weather, that there is a large amount of land still under water. I know that these drains should cost from 90 cents to $1 a rod, with a 6-inch tile, from 2½ to 3 feet deep. A 3-inch tile should be put in for from 48 cents to 50 cents a rod, if laid by a practical man.

Mr. McMILLAN.

I find that $10,514 have been spent for cattle on the farm. I took the Auditor General's Report, and I counted up all the sales of cattle and beef, and found that they amounted to $4,275, that the value of cattle in 1897 was $1,403, and that there was a loss upon the cattle up to 1897 of $4,836. In horses, $6,160 worth were purchased. According to the Auditor General's Report, I find the value of horses on the farm in 1897 was $1,065 ; so that there was a loss of $5,095 represented by horses, showing that $9,931 was dropped in the transactions in horses and cattle. These are large amounts of money, and this statement only shows the necessity of placing this farm under proper agricultural management. I say that the farmers of the country have not been benefited by the policy that has been pursued upon this farm since its establishment, because many farmers in the country have excelled the results, using only the manure taken from their own stables, that have been achieved at the Experimental Farm. So that, except in the matter of seed grain, a great deal of the work of this farm has been utterly worthless to the farmers of Canada. The growing expense of this farm is a point that ought to be carefully looked into. I have gone very carefully over the salaries paid, and I find that there are 21 labourers, who have an average salary of $306; there are six workmen who have an average of $308. That would make 27 hands. Then, there are seven teamsters, with an average salary of $321, and six cattlemen also with an average salary of $474. Here is a herd of forty men getting an average of between $300 and $400 a year. I would just say this, in so far as these hands are concerned, that I do not think the farm is being run in a proper manner, because it is my belief that, instead of having these men working by the day, as they appear in the Auditor General's Report to be working—so many days, or half days, or three-quarters, or nine-tenths of a day—they should be hired permanently, so as to avoid a great deal of extra book-keeping. Then, there is a clerk, an accountant and assistant accountant, two clerks and two stenographers. Here is a whole herd of forty men on this experimental farm, and one thing which has struck me most forcibly is the large number of men they have employed there. There is one clerk at $1,850, an accountant at $1,000, an assistant accountant at $541, another clerk, $700, another clerk $800, and two stenographers at $600 each. All these individuals are engaged at book-keeping and correspondence. Now, Sir, I look to the report of the Agricultural College at Guelph to ascertain how many individuals were engaged by the Ontario Government to keep the accounts of that college. Remember that in that college there were 223 regular students that year, and 110 students taking the dairy course. It would require a large amount of book-keeping to keep the accounts of all these, especially when we remember they are all boarded at the college, and that supplies have to be bought for them and a strict account kept. I find at the Guelph college, the bursar gets $1,000, and the shorthand writer $700, making $1,700 in all, to keep the accounts of that college, as against $5,056 spent at the Experimental Farm at Ottawa to keep these accounts. It strikes me that there is something wrong here, and that a great many of these accounts ought to be kept by the individual at the head of each department. Now, I wish to repeat one thing which I have already stated in this House. While Mr. Fixter, the foreman, is a competent foreman, and I have gone over the farm with him, and I know he is a very careful and a very good man, and has done everything to carry out the instructions he gets and has done everything he can to keep the place neat and tidy, but what I want to mention is that he got over $100 as an extra salary for an assistant to take care of bees.

It being One o'clock, the Deputy Speaker left the Chair.

The House resumed at Three o'clock.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, when you left the Chair at one o'clock, I was speaking about the number of hands employed on the Central Experimental Farm, and, perhaps, I should have explained that the number I enumerated as keeping the accounts, looked after all the financial arrangements and correspondence in connection with the farm. As I have stated, there are three clerks, two accountants and two stenographers, and in 1897 there was an "extra clerk of the office," whatever that means. There is a staff of forty men engaged as labourers. There is the manager, Mr. Saunders, four foremen, the Horticulturist, the Botanist and Entomologist, and the manager of the poultry. There are also three gardeners, a bus driver, an engineer, and a certain sum of money is spent every year for carpentering work. That would give us a gang of sixty men engaged on that farm all the year round. I do not want to make any statement that is not entirely correct, but I will say that we have entirely too many foremen. We have a farm foreman, a cattle foreman and a stable foreman, and, in my opinion, the stable foreman should be one of the teamsters to see to feeding the horses, and to see that every man was ready to go out with his team in the morning. I have been on some of the best managed farms in the north of England and Scotland, within the last few years, and I have always found that the farm foreman had charge of the rest of the hands in the same field with him, and was in the field first in the morning. That is how they do on farms in England which are just as good as the Experimental Farm here. Now, I do not believe there has been any money spent on that farm that has not been given a full account of, and I believe that everything has been straightforward and honest, but I see from the Auditor General's Report that $11,000 was spent upon drainage for that farm last year. There should be a practical drainer there to make the drains the exact size of the tile, for this is far better than putting the drains down in a large ditch and then piling the earth in around them. $11,000 would be 11,000 rods at $1 a rod, and yet that farm is not properly drained. It shows the folly of having run an establishment like that with a Minister of Agriculture who was not a practical farmer. We have had professional men up to the present as Ministers of Agriculture, and what do they know about farming? We have had some exhibitions in the House of what that leads to. If you wanted a brewery run, you would not take me as a farmer to run the brewery, nor would you take me into a lawyer's office as a lawyer. Yet, Sir, as farming goes to-day, it requires just as much brains, just as much care, just as much observation and ability, as does any other business in this country. No business to-day requires more mature judgment and keen observation than the business of a practical farmer, in order to enable him to handle stock properly. If this Experimental Farm at Ottawa is to be of any great benefit to the farmers of Canada, it has got to undergo a revolution. While Prof. Saunders is a gentleman that is, perhaps, one of the best we could get to conduct the whole farm, yet, as I have stated to himself and I state it here now, seeing that he is present, he never was a practical farmer. I believe he did everything he could and that he concealed nothing about the operations of the farm, but the great trouble is that we did not get a practical man in the first place to run this farm. We have a young man there now, and I hope he is a practical man.

Mr. CLANCY. To whom does the hon. gentleman refer?

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Grisdale. He is an entire stranger to me, but he was before the Agriculture Committee, and seemed to give very good satisfaction in his address, and in the answers he gave to the questions put to him. I hope he is a thoroughly practical individual. We have to-day the first farmer we ever had in charge of the department, and I hope he (Mr. Fisher) will pay strict attention to this farm. I think it is admitted on all hands that the lasting success of this country depends more upon agriculture, and more so than upon our forests, our gold fields, or our fisheries. That being the case, hon. gentlemen will see how important it is that we should pay the greatest attention to its development. While agriculture is the principal industry in the country, we must remember that agriculture, like everything else in this age, is undergoing rapid changes. The agriculturist of to-day is a very different individual from the agriculturist of twenty years ago. All over the country where the old lines are being followed; raising a little grain and a little stock, and selling the grain and selling the stock, the farmer is not successful. The farmer of to-day must be a thoroughly practical business man, up to the times, if he is to succeed. Now that we have a practical farmer as Minister of Agriculture, I hope he will turn his attention to that particular branch of industry in this country, and that he will make some great changes on the Experimental Farm. My own opinion is that the agriculture pursued at the Experimental Farm, while it might be considered an excellent system six or seven years ago, is not abreast of the times to-day. On a sandy farm like this, it must be to a great extent surface cultivation, and I was glad to hear that the young gentleman who now has charge of the farm is going to turn his attention to that. As it is late in the session, I shall not detain the House further. I have mentioned what I consider the principal shortcomings on this Experimental Farm, and I do hope that changes will take place, and especially that the accounts for each branch of the farm will be kept separate and apart. It appears to me there is no difficulty whatever in keeping the accounts of the experimental branch separate from the accounts of the farm proper. That is done with the Agricultural College farm at Guelph, and there is no reason why it should not be done here.

Mr. McMILLAN.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the hon. gentleman know when they commenced to keep their accounts in that form in the Guelph college?

Mr. McMILLAN. I cannot tell.

Mr. CLANCY. I can tell the hon. gentleman that it is very recently.

Mr. McMILLAN. I believe it is recently, and I will say that up to a few years ago, the farm at Guelph was not conducted upon proper principles, because they had not a practical man as Minister of Agriculture at the head of that farm. Neither had they practical men as managers. I trust the system pursued at the Guelph College will be followed at the Experimental Farm here, so that we as farmers may know what the farm proper costs, and what the experimental plots costs. I wish to state here, as a practical farmer, that the experimental plots, both in roots and grain, will necessitate a great amount of labour, and I admit that the experimental work never can pay expenses. However, if that experimental work is properly done, it will be a great benefit to the farmers all over Canada, and I am free to state, that the farmers have derived great benefit from the new seeds introduced and distributed amongst them. On the other hand, we have too large an orchard on that farm, because the experimental fruit trees here are only useful to this particular locality, and can be of no benefit to the fruit-growers of western Ontario, the lower provinces or the North-west Territories. Now, Sir, I have given a good deal of attention to this matter, and if I make a mistake about it it is unintentional. This Experimental Farm ought to be on such a footing that when a first-class farmer comes here from Great Britain and examines the farm, and the buildings, and the stock, and all the surroundings, any Canadian who might be present will feel proud that we have such an Experimental Farm. I say that the stock kept on this farm should be of the very best kind. We had some good stock there, and we were unfortunate in the losses we sustained, but now that there have been such improvements in veterinary science, it is to be hoped we shall not have such losses in future. One of the great blemishes on that farm is that the cattle buildings were not sufficiently well ventilated, and the barn there is built too low down, and is altogether very inconvenient. I could show you a dozen barns in which one man's work would equal almost two men's work in the barn on the Experimental Farm. That shows the foolishness of having a man as Minister of Agriculture when this farm was being inaugurated, who knew nothing about agriculture or about keeping stock. Let me say in conclusion, that this Experimental Farm here is not a first-class farm, yet it is a farm that might be of some benefit to our farmers if it were properly conducted, as I hope to see it at no distant date. I hope that our present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), who is a practical man, will succeed in thoroughly reorganizing that farm and in placing it upon such a basis that the farming done there will serve as a model to the practical agriculturists of the Dominion of Canada.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). Before this item passes, perhaps, it would be proper that I should make some explanation. My hon. friend from South Huron (Mr. McMillan) has spoken at considerable length upon the various matters connected with the farm, and I want to take this opportunity of thanking him for the spirit in which he has criticised the work done there. The advice and criticism of a man of his experience in a work of this kind cannot fail to be of advantage to any farmer in charge of such an establishment. He has spoken of a number of things there, and in his remarks I can cordially agree. The explanations I would give with regard to some of the work have already been given by him to a great extent, but I cannot refrain from saying a few words on the details with which he has favoured the House.

As regards the experiments of feeding, I trust that he will find in this year's report the full details he has asked for. It is quite true that in the reports heretofore, the value and the character of the animals bought were not detailed and the prices obtained for those animals when sold were not given, but I gave instructions last winter that this information should be put into this year's report.

In justice to my predecessors I must say that in consequence of the discovery of tuberculosis in the herds of the Experimental Farm, the number of cattle there has been very much reduced in number and quality, and my predecessors were not able to obtain the votes which would enable them to replace the original herd that was destroyed by that fell disease some years ago. As time went on, they had been buying a few animals from time to time, but had not been spending such sums as were necessary to place the herds on a proper footing. It is because I wish to do this as rapidly as possible that I am asking for this increased vote. But even without this increased vote, I have been trying, the last year and a half or two years, to do a little in this direction. By my instructions, the officers have bought several thoroughbreds which I think will be found by those capable of judging of the highest quality, but nobody who understands the value of thoroughbred stock and the high prices at which they are held in this country will fail to understand that to at once go out and buy a large herd of thoroughbred animals would involve an investment and expenditure which I do not think would be advisable or necessary in the best interests of the stock-raising people in this country. On the contrary, I think it would be better to show by experiment what an ordinary well-to-do farmer may himself carry on, that is to say, to buy the very best male animals which can possibly be found of any breed it is decided to deal with, and then try and build up, by the use of such an animal, as good a herd as can possibly be got for practical utility and profit. I know that many farmers, who have made the most out of agricultural operations, have done this, and there are instances of this all through the country, but unfortunately these instances are not open to the study and inspection of other farmers who would like to learn. Therefore, I thought an experiment of this kind at the farm in Ottawa would be of the greatest value to the agriculturists and dairymen especially of this country. With that object in view I have consulted with Mr. Grisdale, the agriculturist lately appointed, and have directed him to proceed in this way to buy the required stock, and propose, if this vote is given, to buy them next year.

The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) has asked me about Mr. Grisdale. Let me, in the first place, endorse what the hon. member for Huron has said. Ever since I have been in charge of the department, I have desired to obtain a good, thoroughly trained and equipped agriculturist, a man who has been practically at work on a farm, who knows all about the details of farm work, which can only after all be acquired by a man who has lived on a farm a number of years, and who at the same time has thorough scientific training and is well educated and informed generally. I was fortunate enough to find, after a great deal of search and correspondence with those who I thought were able to inform me, a young man who seems to fill that bill, who seems to have those qualities, and I was very glad indeed to recommend to Council the appointment of Mr. Grisdale as agriculturist. He has now been in that position a few months, and I am glad to know that not only myself but the director of the farm and those who have come in contact with him are very well satisfied indeed with the knowledge and enthusiasm and the capacity he has shown in his work. I wish to say further that this is a very large work, one which means, perhaps, some changes in the management and methods of the farm, as indicated by my hon. friend from West Huron, and is a work that cannot be carried out at one stroke. The changes must be gradually introduced and carefully studied out before their first introduction. Mr. Grisdale has been and is doing this, and I hope that in the near future a thorough systematic treatment of the soil and stock of the farm will be put in force, which may reach the views and objects indicated by my hon. friend.

I would point out that in addition to our work with cattle, which I have just shortly alluded to, we are carrying on at present a very large experiment in the feeding of hogs. Hon. gentlemen will remember that during the last year or two, there has been a good deal of discussion in the press and at agricultural meetings about our bacon trade, some difficulties in the way of which have been found on account of soft bacon. After consulting with the Hogbreeders' Association and the great packers of this country, I have inaugurated an experiment which is now being conducted, in which about 200 hogs are being experimented with, and I hope to be able to throw some light on the question as to what the effect of different feeds is on the quality of bacon. This is an experiment which involves a great deal of labour, thought and care, and some considerable outlay and expense, but I think it is an experiment which the vast importance of the industry will justify; and if we can do anything that will help to guide our hog feeders throughout the country, that will be of the utmost value to our farmers.

With regard to what my hon. friend from South Huron (Mr. McMillan) has said about the bringing up of the condition of the farm by the purchase of large quantity of manure, let me say that, in the first place, that farm when purchased was decidedly a poor one. I am not casting any reflection upon the purchase or upon the judgment of those who bought it. It was probably as good a piece of land as they could have bought in the neighbourhood of Ottawa, but the land itself and the condition in which it was, when first taken over, was very bad indeed, and it has been turned, by labour and the application of manure, into what is at present a rich, cultivated and well-producing farm. This has been accomplished by the expenditure of large quantities of manure. I have lately instructed the director, Mr. Saunders, and Mr. Grisdale, the agriculturist, to set apart a portion of this farm for purely experimental work in experimental plots which will be divided as that kind of work requires. But that some large part of the farm, probably, speaking from memory, about 200 acres, should be set aside to be worked as a stock farm by the agriculturist to see what can be done in the conservation and improvement of the soil by a thorough systematic rotation of crops and the handling of the soil, and also by the feeding of these crops on the farm to the best advantage possible and the return of the manure made on the farm to the land to conserve and improve the fertility of the soil. I have directed Mr. Grisdale, for this purpose, that no further purchases of manure are to be made and no further purchases of feed except to replace any grain that is distributed to the farmers for seed grain, and then with feed that would cost the same amount. I am satisfied, from the experience I have had on my own farm and from what I have seen on other farms that by stock-feeding in Canada not only the fertility of the soil can be maintained, but that it can be increased without the purchase of one dollar's worth of manure or one dollar's worth of feed above what the farm produces. Believing this, and believing that the farm should be treated in this way, I am asking the agriculturist to carry on this work to show what can be done. I need hardly say that a work of this kind will take some years before it can be fairly judged; and I ask some little patience on the part of those who are criticising the farm that we may see the results.

I was struck with what my hon. friend from South Huron (Mr. McMillan) said as to the expenditure laid out entirely for the care of stock. I confess that I had not supposed—I have not gone into every detail of expenditure on the farm, having left that to the officers of the department—that such a large amount of money was being spent every year on the care of stock. I will look into that matter with the greatest care, and unless there is some explanation which I have not yet received, if I find that there is such a large amount spent, I must confess that I think it is an unjustifiable expenditure. But I want to remind my hon. friend from Huron and others who have listened to him, that the care of stock on our Experimental Farm and in experimental feeding is a very different thing from feeding a certain number of animals in the ordinary way. In experimental feeding, the feed for every animal must be specially prepared by itself apart from the others, and it must be weighed and every important fact with regard to it noted; and all this has to be done by the man carrying on the feeding. But where fifty or one hundred animals are to be fed all alike, one man can go along and throw in the feed for the animals without stopping. It can easily be seen that in the experimental feeding it will take three or four men to feed as many animals as could be fed by one man in the ordinary way. I would like to say, too, in explanation of this item, that what my hon. friend from Huron says is very true in regard to the arrangement of the Experimental Farm buildings. There is no doubt that the men there work at a disadvantage. I would like to change that and reorganize these barns; but to do so would require the expenditure of a very considerable sum of money—and while the interior pavements, partitions, are no more worn than at present, I have not felt like tackling the job. I have known that barn from its first building, and I have always felt that it was not well planned for convenience of work in the barn. In course of time, as I get the money to do it, and as I get the time to attend to it, I hope to be able to change that—gradually, as that would be the more economical way to do it. To make the change at one stroke would be an expensive operation, and perhaps hardly justified in the present condition of affairs. I do not know that I need to go into other details, except to answer the question asked by hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) as to the reason for this increased expenditure. In the first place, there is the salary of the agriculturist—a new officer—

Mr. CLANCY. What is his salary?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He is to receive $1,200 a year.

Mr. FOSTER. What are his duties?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. To manage the stock and field work on the Experimental Farm.

Mr. FOSTER. Under whose direction?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Under the direction of the director, Prof. Saunders, who manages all the work of the experimental farms. I may say that all the other officers commenced at $1,200 or more, so that Mr. Grisdale is commencing at the lowest salary at which any other officer of the farm has commenced.

Mr. McMILLAN. Is he to have charge of the experimental plots also?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No. Then, I want to buy some stock. We have had the misfortune to lose a large number of animals through the discovery of tuberculosis there, and these have not been replaced except to a very small extent—not by any means to the extent they should have been. I wish to purchase a few thoroughbred animals of the best and most useful breeds in this part of the country, the animals to be used in building up a herd of grade animals which would be used for profit and business on the farm. This can be done gradually. But even to buy a few thoroughbred animals—three or four of the leading breeds—will cost a considerable amount of money. At present, I am glad to say—and I congratulate the farmers of Canada on the fact—thoroughbred animals are high-priced, there is a great demand for them, and we are importing them constantly from abroad. Therefore, I shall not be able to buy the animals required at a cheap rate. To get the best animals, such as I think should be kept on the farm, some pretty good prices will have to be paid. I intend to get them as cheap as possible; but I do not think it would pay the country or be justified in me to buy second or third-class animals; I want to use the best advice of the agriculturist and stock manager in buying animals that will be a credit to the farm and the beginning of a good herd. Then, I want to buy a few sheep. Mr. Grisdale has bought a few. I want them not only for the purpose of feeding, but having the sheep, to show, on a small piece of rough pasture, the effect of sheep pasturing on land, which, I think, is an important item in the agricultural economy of this country, and one in which work of this kind done would be very valuable to our farmers. I need not go into other items at present. If there are further explanations desired I shall be glad to give them. I think I have said enough to justify the extra vote proposed.

Mr. CLANCY. Where did Mr. Grisdale get his experience as a trained farmer and experimentalist?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Mr. Grisdale was born on a farm in the county of Vaudreuil, between here and Montreal. He lived there until he was a man grown. Then he went through the Normal school and got his teacher's certificate, and taught school for a year or two. He then went to the Guelph Agricultural College and took a course and passed the examinations. He afterwards went, for further investigation and study to the Ames College in Ohio. He was there when I first heard of him. I heard of him quite accidentally from the head of that institution, who was at a meeting at Western Ontario which I attended. He was speaking of the young Canadians studying at the university and told me that this man was one of their best men. I made inquiries and got from Principal Mills, of the Ontario Agricultural College, a most satisfactory report of his work there. I may say further that while at Ames, Mr. Grisdale took part in a competition in judging stock. Last year at Omaha, at the time of the Trans-Mississippi Exposition a prize was offered to young men who would come in and judge stock in the ring. Mr. Grisdale competed and was awarded first prize.

Mr. CLANCY. I do not desire to say anything to reflect upon Mr. Grisdale. He is now on trial, and it is fair to give him a chance. But I may say that Mr. Grisdale appeared before the Agriculture Committee, and I was a little surprised to find that he gave utterance to some sentiments that did not even satisfy my hon. friend from South Huron (Mr. McMillan) on the subject of deep ploughing as against shallow ploughing. When he was asked how he came to that conclusion, if he had tried both systems under the same conditions, he was forced to admit that he had not done so, but, nevertheless, he had come to the conclusion that one was infinitely better than the other. I only mention this to my hon. friend to show that Mr. Grisdale, although he may have learned a good deal in college, has yet a good deal to learn by experience. While speaking on that subject, I desire to call the attention of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) to what I thought was a rather unfortunate circumstance that took place in the Agriculture Committee, when two gentlemen, occupying very high positions, gave their evidence, namely, Mr. Robertson and Professor Saunders. If we are to have any benefit from the experiments made at that farm, we should know that both these high authorities agree upon the nature of, and the lesson taught by, those experiments. If that be not the case, it will show that the farm is being carried on in a somewhat hap-hazard manner. I am not prepared to say myself who is right. As a farmer myself, I am puzzled to know how much weight we ought to give to the testimony of these gentlemen, who speak in precisely opposite directions. One gentleman desires to show, and illustrates it by experiments year by year, that conditions alone are the overruling influence in the production of cereals, and that varieties have little or nothing to do with the yield—I am putting it on the ground of yield. He recognized fully the value of one variety over another, but, for the purpose of getting a yield, he thought one variety had no value over another, and it all depended upon conditions. Professor Saunders took the other ground, and thought that while conditions affected all varieties, there was an absolute and distinct problem worked out in favour of certain varieties. Now, I say that, so far as these gentlemen are concerned, one stands against the other, and the farmers in the House, as well as other, must be somewhat puzzled. That is something that I hope will not occur again. It was a contest of theory against experience, and I confess that I lean to the side of the gentleman who has come to his conclusions from experience. I only call attention to that circumstance because I think it is not in the interest of that great experimental farm that two of its leading officers should hold opposite opinions upon the same subject.

Now, the Minister of Agriculture was grateful to my hon. friend from Huron for the information he gave. I thought there was an implied censure on the Minister of Agriculture this afternoon, and I felt disposed to come to his defence. We have now for Minister of Agriculture a gentleman who is a farmer himself. I admit that is a most essential qualification for a gentleman presiding over the Department of Agriculture. But it seems to me, the bad state of things the hon. gentleman used to complain of, has not been changed, although the present Minister has been presiding over that department for three years. I listened with great anxiety to hear the hon. member for Huron point out some improvement in the administration of the present Minister, but he sat down without having done so, either because he could not point out any, or he forgot to do so. I think my hon. friend gave the Minister of Agriculture rather a severe castigation this afternoon —probably he did it unwittingly, because he always makes a political speech, when he can. I say that the lapses the hon. gentleman has pointed out with regard to that farm, reflect as severely upon the Minister of Agriculture to-day as they ever reflected upon any Minister of Agriculture in Canada, without exception. We find no change has been made except one, which is useless. The hon. gentleman makes a comparison of the care of stock with the receipts of the farm. Surely, my hon. friend knows that there is no sense in making a comparison of that kind. Here is the care of stock included in an item of $33,000. He might as well take any other branch of that item. Why did he take the care of stock, rather than any other item?

Mr. McMILLAN. Because I believe that the amount that has been spent upon the care of that stock is an exorbitant amount, being engaged in stock-keeping myself. While I admit there is truth in what the Minister of Agriculture said, that they have to be more careful in finding the proper food, and being exact in regard to quantities, the expenditure is out of all proportion to the number of stock kept. At Guelph, during the same year, $1,660 was all that was spent for the care of stock, and they had a little more stock than was kept at Ottawa.

Mr. CLANCY. Well, I can tell my hon. friend that if he is depending upon the reports of the Ontario Government, he cannot tell anything about it. I will send over to the hon. gentleman the last report, and ask him if he can tell this committee anything about the care of stock. I have the report of the Agricultural College of the province of Ontario for 1898, and the accounts are so mixed up that it is utterly impossible to separate them so as to tell what any particular service costs. The hon. gentleman made some reference to their being classified. They have nothing charged for implements; they have no charge for seed, and then they go into the feeding branch, and the one is either mixed up with the other, or improperly charged, so that you cannot tell what each service costs. This is not a new thing, and I have no hesitation in saying that they have cooked their system of accounts in order to show that the farm proper paid expenses. I tell the hon. gentleman that if he has no better data for making a comparison than the book-keeping of the agricultural farm of the province of Ontario, he is not able to come to a very correct conclusion. I see that here at Ottawa the salaries are classified; they have adopted a very different system of book-keeping here to what prevails at Guelph, because you can find out what any one service has cost.

But to come back to the hon. gentleman's selection of the item of feeding stock as an indication of the great expense here, I tell him that it has no application. He might just as well take the dairy department as the care of the stock, because the one has no more relation to the revenue than the other, the one is no more an apt illustration than the other. I do not propose to continue this debate any longer on this item. I have only to say that I am glad to hear the hon. Minister say that he proposes to do something in regard to the stock. Of course, this cannot be done in a day, and it seems to me that it would be unwise to overload the farm with a great number of high-class animals at the outset. There is one thing that I want to call attention to, and it is the efforts of the hon. Minister to solve the very important question in regard to our bacon. I understand that the hon. gentleman has something like 200 hogs under experiment in the west.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In the west and in the east.

Mr. CLANCY. I have been informed that this large number is confined to one or two breeds. I am told by pork packers that soft, fatty and undesirable pork arises as much from the breed as from the feeding of hogs. It seems to me that it would be worth the while of the hon. Minister to take hogs of as many breeds as possible and feed them on a class of food that is generally given, namely, a considerable quantity of corn with other grains of that kind and see whether the feed is the only cause of the difficulty that we have to contend with. There is nothing, so far as I understand, and so far as experiments have been made at the farm, to show definitely whether the class of food being used is the sole cause of soft pork, or whether it is the feed and the breed of the hogs combined. I am glad to know that the hon. gentleman has set about that experiment, and I think he could go with advantage a little further than he is going just now in that direction.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am sure I have no desire to unduly criticise the expenditure of the Experimental Farm. I am one of those who do not look for a positive return for every expenditure made on the farm in the shape of money. We get a return in the shape of the experience and the practical knowledge which we regard as being worth more than the money actually expended. I was somewhat amused, however, at the statement of the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan), who claims so much credit for the Government, for having selected a practical farmer to be at the head of the Agriculture Department. I can approve of a practical farmer being at the head of this department, but what I am surprised at is, that this should have been such a new condition of things. In looking back to the Administration of Mr. Mackenzie, in which there were two Ministers of Agriculture, we find that no attempt was made in those days to secure a practical farmer to take the oversight of the Department of Agriculture. First, there was Mr. Letellier, who, I believe, was a lawyer, and then there was Senator Pelletier, who, I believe, was also a lawyer, at all events, neither of these gentlemen was a practical farmer. So that I think the idea of a practical farmer is a more recent one than would appear from the speech of the hon. member for South Huron. One of the things that surprises me is, that when you have a practical farmer at the head of the department, it becomes necessary to increase the staff and to employ a new expert, showing that, although we have a practical farmer additional expense is required in the way of expert knowledge that was not required when the head of the department was not a practical farmer. I do not wish to unduly criticise the expenditure on the farm here, but I think that it is unfair to make comparisons with another institution which we have in Ontario, which, to my mind, were not fairly made, with the view of showing how the Liberal party in Ontario can save so much more money in the Agriculture Department than he saved here. I think it is just as well that the House should know the facts in regard to the Agricultural College and Experimental Farm at Guelph. These have always been a source of expense to that province. I am not complaining about it because the object is to gain knowledge and experience, but I think it is unfair to make a statement which may lead the House to suppose that the Agricultural College and Experimental Farm at Guelph have been paying well and have been giving a good return to the country. I find that in the expenditure on college maintenance, according to the last returns, there was a loss of $34,383.60; on the farm proper, a loss of $3,860.68; on experimental plots and feeding, $6,697.97; on experimental dairying, $2,633.78; on dairy school, $2,830.88; on the poultry department, $752.95. Seven hundred dollars of that loss was paid in salary to the manager of the poultry department. The entire operations of the poultry department, including the salary of the manager, and costing $1,008.21, entailed a loss to the province of $752.95, or about three-quarters of the entire money expended on that department. Then in the horticultural department there was a clear loss financially of $4,819.27, and in the mechanical department there was a loss of $1,484.11. In not one single department in the operation of the college and the farm is there a favourable balance, but in every one there is an adverse balance the sum total being $57,463.23. So that I do not think that if there has been a loss at the Experimental Farm at Ottawa we have anything to boast about by comparing it with the Experimental Farm and Agricultural College at Guelph. To my mind the operations are as economically and profitably conducted at the Central Experimental Farm as they are at the Ontario Experimental Farm. I would like to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Agriculture to the poultry department of the Experimental Farm. I do not think we expend as much money here on the poultry department as the great utility or advantage that might accrue from that department might lead us profitably to expend. I know that there is a lack of what the farmers of the country want from that department. There is a demand from all over the country for eggs, of the very best quality and of the very best stock, for purpose of assisting the people to improve their stock of poultry. I think it is a fact well known to the hon. Minister that a sufficient quantity of eggs for improved breeding cannot be obtained at the farm. During last winter there was a demand, even at $1 a dozen for such eggs, and I am quite sure that the Experimental Farm could afford to produce a great many eggs at that price, and the people of the country are willing to pay that price for these eggs. Even at that price, as the season advanced, the people could not get them. I would be glad if the hon. Minister would propose an increased appropriation for the purpose of assisting the gentleman in charge of that department to provide an additional number of eggs, and that there should not only be an increase of the number of eggs but in the variety of breeds as well, so that, not only the farmers of the country, but the people in the towns and villages, who are desirous of improving their breeds of poultry, and who look to the Experimental Farm to furnish them with eggs, may be provided with the very best stock. I think that some little addition should be made to the expenditure in that department so that the people may have what they want, and if such an expenditure is made I am perfectly satisfied that it will not be a burden on the revenue. As I have said, the price that these people are willing to pay for the eggs they get for hatching purposes, would be quite sufficient to recoup the department for the cost.

Mr. McMILLAN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Henderson), with his usual accuracy, made the statement that the farm proper at Guelph cost the province $8,000. If he had made an honest statement, he would have shown that the revenue was $6,345, so that it really cost the country only $2,476. That is just the sample of the honest criticism that he gives to this House.

Mr. HENDERSON. If I make a statement, I make a statement that I can stand by, and no words that the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMillan) can put in your mouth, Mr. Chairman, or can put in my mouth, will contradict the report from which I am reading, namely, the report of Ontario legislature respecting the Agricultural College at Guelph. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McMillan) may get up and in his slang language tell me I am making false statements to this House. I tell him that when I speak in this House, I speak the truth, and I dare the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMillan) to repeat the statement he has made. The facts mentioned by me are given in this report, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMillan) has given figures that are not given in this report. He has nothing on which he can stand. I quoted the report, figure for figure, and word for word, and I defy the hon. gentleman to contradict me.

Mr. HENDERSON.

Mr. McMILLAN. I hold in my hand the report of the Agricultural College at Guelph, and here is what it says: Entire cost of farm proper, $8,822; deduct the revenue from farm proper, $6,345; balance, $2,476.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Read the whole particulars.

Mr. HENDERSON. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMillan) looks at the public accounts for the province of Ontario, he will find that the statement I have made is correct. I hold in my hand the report for 1897-98, the last one to which we have access, and I do not know that he has access to any later report.

Mr. McMILLAN. I hold in my hand the report for the year 1898.

Mr. HENDERSON. This report tells me that on the farm proper the expenditure was $8,156.23, but the revenue was $4,295.55, making a net deficit over all the revenue of $3,860.68. No contradiction of the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMillan) will change those figures.

Mr. McMILLAN. My contention is proven by the words of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Henderson). He first stated that the cost of the farm to the people of Ontario was $8,000, but now he deducts the revenue, and he finds that the actual cost was only $3,800.

Mr. HENDERSON. Before we pass from this subject, I would like the Minister to say something with regard to the poultry department on the Experimental Farm.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I shall be very glad, if I can get a word in between hon. gentlemen in their discussion of the Guelph Agricultural College. The Experimental Farm does not undertake to raise poultry for distribution throughout the country.

Mr. HENDERSON. Why not? It is a part of the Experimental Farm work.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If we were to undertake that, we would interfere very much with the business of those who make a specialty of poultry raising. It is true that when we have eggs to spare, we sell them to any one who applies for them, and, as a fact, there are only one or two breeds of which we have not been able to supply about all the eggs that have been asked for. We have to keep on the farm a number of different breeds, so as to show the comparison between these breeds. Some of these are popular, and are asked for very largely, while others are not so popular and are not in such demand. Still, we could not give up keeping these latter breeds. We have not enough hens on the farm of certain popular breeds to supply the eggs necessary for the demand. Anyway, I do not think it would be wise for us to make a business of supplying eggs all over the country in competition with private persons who make a livelihood out of it.

Mr. HENDERSON. You might as well not have a poultry branch at the Experimental Farm, unless it is going to be of some practical benefit. If you are only going to supply eggs in a limited way, one-tenth part of what is required, you might as well wipe out the expense in connection with it and allow private persons to do the whole business. Although it may be a fact that there are people outside who are able to supply eggs equal to those they have on the Experimental Farm, yet there is a feeling throughout the country that on the Experimental Farm they have the very best quality of eggs, and so the people desire to get them from the farm. My own experience is, that the eggs supplied by private parties, and very close to Ottawa, were not as good as the eggs obtained from the Experimental Farm. I know one person who last season did not get eggs at all, because he could not get them from the farm, but preferred to wait another year.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I appreciate the encomiums passed by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Henderson) on the poultry stock kept at the farm, but I would not like him to forget the experimental nature of the work that has been carried on in the poultry department. The comparisons of experiments are really what attention is principally devoted to, rather than to supplying eggs.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman from South Huron (Mr. McMillan) is so often astray, when he speaks in this House, that I want to set him right this time. If he will look at pages from 300 to 303 of the Ontario agricultural report in his hand, he will find that the expenditure at Guelph on what is called the farm proper was $8,156.23, and the revenue $4,295.51, leaving a deficit of $3,860.68. But that is not all. Let him turn to pages from 304 to 308, under the heading of plots and feeding, which is just as much a part of the farm proper as the other, and he will find that the expenditure was $7,830.19, and the revenue $1,131.92, leaving a deficit of $6,698.27; so, the two deficits put together which belong to the farm proper, amount to $10,558.87.

Mr. McMILLAN. I have here the report of the Guelph farm for 1898, published in 1899.

Mr. CLANCY. But the hon. gentleman must take the public accounts to get the right figures. I do not wonder at all that he is astray.

Mr. COWAN. He has the departmental report.

Mr. CLANCY. But the hon. gentleman must know that the Public Accounts end there at the end of December, while the reports do not end at the same time, and therefore he must rely on the Public Accounts.

Mr. MOORE. I was about to say before I was interrupted, that it is very gratifying to see the interest which is displayed by hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House in this very important subject of agriculture; and while we on this side of the House may be somewhat critical of the manner in which the public money is expended, I do not think the Minister of Agriculture will have occasion to question our liberality in regard to assisting that very important industry. When we take into consideration that 45 per cent of the population of this country are engaged in agriculture or are connected with it, that one-third of the traffic upon our railroads, one-third of the traffic upon our canals, and one-half the traffic upon our inland steamers, is furnished by the farmers of this country, it will be seen that that industry cannot take a second place in the affections of the patriotic men of this country. Therefore, we cannot have any objection to treating the farmers in the most liberal manner, and encouraging them to press forward the great work in which they are engaged, and upon the success of which depends the prosperity of the country. What I personally object to is the disparity between the appropriations which are being made. I object to the small appropriation of $310,100 for the Minister of Agriculture, while we are asked to appropriate $2,081,520 for the Minister of Militia. I think the agricultural interests are far more important to this country than the militia interests. When we bear in mind that in the last 150 years there have not been a thousand men lost in battle in Canada, that expenditure of over $2,000,000 upon the militia looks to me like spending money in a foolish and unnecessary manner. I think it would be very much better to starve the soldier and stuff the farmer, than to starve the farmer and stuff the soldier, and when the appropriations for the militia are called up, I may have an opportunity of saying something further on that subject.

Mr. BERGERON. Before this item passes, I want to testify—and I am very glad to do so—to the kindness, politeness and courtesy of the employees of the Experimental Farm. I have experienced myself, and farmers from my county who have come here have gone home feeling that they have been received and treated in the most courteous manner. It is my duty to say this to the Minister, and I hope it will continue. If the same could be said of every department of the Government, it would be a good thing for the country. It is the people who pay for the farm, and when they visit it and receive courteous treatment, it seems to come cheaper to them.

Mr. McNEILL. While I agree with a good deal of what fell from my hon. friend from South Huron (Mr. McMILLAN), I think that perhaps he and I suffer somewhat from a similar complaint, a little too much of Keltic impetuosity, and he went a little further in his criticism than I liked to see him go. I agree entirely with his statement that it is a great pity that so many men are employed on the farm by the day. I think it would be very much better if an arrangement could be made to employ some of them by the year. They could, no doubt, be hired cheaper by the year than by the day. But when my hon. friend went so far as to say that the farmers of Canada derived no benefit from the Experimental Farm except in the matter of seed grain, I think he went altogether beyond the limit of accuracy. My hon. friend, in the Committee on Agriculture, has often moved for the printing, in large numbers, of the reports of the evidence given by gentlemen from the farm, because it was of such great benefit to the farmers. I know that my hon. friend would be the last to desire to put the country to needless expense, and if his opinion was that only in the matter of seed grain has the Experimental Farm been beneficial to the farmers, surely he would not put the country to the expense of having those reports printed in large numbers. I think my hon. friend also was a little ungenerous in regard to those who had first to do with the Experimental Farm. At the time Sir John Carling took hold of it and made a magnificent farm out of a wilderness, he had a great many difficulties to contend with, as my hon. friend very well understands, and I think he ought to have made greater allowances than he did for that fact. It is easy to criticise; but I agree with what has been said by my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron), that while an institution of this kind must always be open to criticism, still, in very many respects, it is a most admirable institution, and is of the greatest benefit, not only in the matter of seed grain, but in many other respects, to the farmers of Canada.

Mr. BENNETT. I think it is really too bad that the Minister of Agriculture cannot avail himself of the services of the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMILLAN), because in the province of Ontario he is regarded by the local government as a great authority on agriculture. I do not want my own words simply to go with that statement; but a reference to the Public Accounts of the province of Ontario will show that for travelling expenses and lecturing before farmers' institute meetings the hon. gentleman drew last year the fairly respectable sum of $527. It, therefore, goes without saying that he must be an authority, and it is too bad that the Minister of Agriculture does not avail himself of the hon. gentleman's services.

Mr. McMILLAN. I was not from my own home last year, and did not attend agricultural institutes at all. I was asked to go, but refused.

Mr. BENNETT. Then, all I can say is that they have improperly placed the hon. gentleman's name in the report, as I will read: "J. McMILLAN, $126."

Mr. McMILLAN. That was in the fall of 1897 and the beginning of 1898—not last year.

Mr. BENNETT. Then we find "T. McMILLAN, $122.50." I assume that that is a typographical error—that the "T." should be a "J."

Mr. McMILLAN. No, that is another McMILLAN.

Mr. BENNETT. That is the hon. gentleman's son, as an hon. gentleman informs me. The hon. gentleman develops such a propensity for public money that when he cannot fulfil the engagement himself, he hands it over to his son.

Mr. McMILLAN. When hon. gentlemen have no better argument, I consider it one of the lowest forms of argument to turn round and upbraid a gentleman for any action of that kind. I was urged myself to go and refused. My son was urged for three years to go to the farmers' institutes, and refused. We have both been urged to go next year, and have refused.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask if the Minister calls for tenders when he is getting these lecturers?

Mr. MILLS. It is a tender subject.

Printing and distribution of reports and bulletins of farms ..... $4,000

Mr. FOSTER. I notice that there were 12,000 dairy brochures bought from Mr. Lynch last year.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That was a vote in last year's Estimates to pay Mr. Lynch for some additional copies which were got several years ago. It has nothing whatever to do with this vote.

Mr. FOSTER. When were they distributed?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Before I came into office. It is an old account between him and the Department of Agriculture.

Commissioner's Branch—

For Agriculture and Dairying..... $40,000

Mr. McMILLAN. Will the hon. Minister define the duties of the Commissioner for Agriculture and Dairying?

Mr. FOSTER. Was there not an unfortunate disagreement between the director and the agriculturist on some question of high theory?

Mr. SCRIVER. Not the agriculturist, Prof. Robertson.

Mr. FOSTER. There was some great difference of opinion, and I do not know what we, practical farmer and dairying people, ought to think when the high authorities differ.

Mr. McNEILL. It would be well if my hon. friend could give us some information as to the respective spheres of action of the Dairy Commissioner and the Director, as my hon. friend from Huron has suggested. I have always understood until recently that Prof. Robertson was simply the Dairy Commissioner, and we ought to be informed whether the Dairy Commissioner has really any authority, so far as pure matters of agriculture are concerned, to lay down his views as an official of the farm. It seems to me that if we are to have contradictory statements from officers connected with the farm, some consultation should be had with the Minister of Agriculture before these statements are made public. Otherwise we may find ourselves in a very undesirable position. We may have one officer holding one view and another another view, and both published, which will have a tendency to lead the public to doubt the value of the statements.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Prof. Robertson was appointed a good many years ago as one of the officers of the farm, and was called at the same time the Dairy Commissioner and Agriculturist of the farm. In the autumn of 1895 or spring of 1896, his work was entirely separated from that of the farm, and he has now nothing whatever to do with the farm staff or their work, but at the same time he was appointed not only Dairy Commissioner but Agriculturist and Dairy Commissioner. His work was not very clearly defined, probably, but since the last few years he has been separated from the farm work and has applied himself almost entirely to what I may call the commerce in agricultural products of this country and the development of dairying in different parts of the country, partly in the manufacture alone, but still very largely in questions relating particularly to the commercial aspect. I cannot pretend to define the exact sphere of his working, because he is a man of exceptional ability and energy, and has been mixed up in this country with everything going on in the advancement of agriculture, and his work has been naturally applied to everything in which he thought he could benefit the agricultural interest. His work has been of such a value that anybody would be only too glad to listen to him in expressing his views on an agricultural subject. The difference of opinion with regard to a particular thing, which arose between him and Prof. Saunders in the Agriculture Committee is to be regretted, but anybody who has followed agricultural experiment and research knows well that scientists and experimentalists sometimes reach different conclusions from even the same experiment. It is, therefore, not surprising that such a thing may occur in this country as well as elsewhere. Had either of these gentlemen consulted with me before they spoke, perhaps, the occurrence would not have taken place, but I trust both sufficiently to believe that they will do what is in the interests of agriculture, and I have never required from them a consultation with myself before putting forth their views.

Mr. McNEILL. I quite agree in a great deal my hon. friend has said. Of course, we all understand that not only with regard to agriculture, but every other great and important question, differences of opinion arise among men deeply interested in the matter and of great ability also. I would be one of the first to bear testimony to the value of the work which Prof. Robertson has achieved. I think he has done a very great deal of valuable work for Canada, but my hon. friend will understand that what I refer to is not a mere ordinary case of scientists putting different views on a scientific question. That we are accustomed to always, but what I was referring to, and what I think my hon. friend from Huron was referring to, is the unfortunate circumstance that the work of the farm, which has been carried on by the director, was challenged openly in committee. My hon. friend shakes his head.

Mr. BAIN. My hon. friend is mistaken there.

Mr. McNEILL. I do not say that the statement was made that this work, which is being carried on by the director, is all wrong, but I say that what was said amounted to that. One of the great works Mr. Saunders has been carrying on at the farm has been the creating of new varieties, the breeding of new varieties, and Prof. Robertson's statement was that there was nothing in variety, so far as yield is concerned. If that is not a direct attack on the work carried on by Prof. Saunders, I do not know what the meaning of the language is. Such an occurrence is most unfortunate, because it is calculated to bring into disrepute the work that is being carried on. I do not wish at all to suggest that the director of the farm should consult my hon. friend before making his yearly statement as to the work being conducted upon the farm; but what I did suggest was that any officer connected with the Department of Agriculture who was going to call in question the value of the work carried on by the director of the Experimental Farm should first communicate with the Minister and obtain leave, particularly before making such a startling statement as that I have referred to. I venture to say, as one brought up on a farm and interested in farming all his life, that the statements made with regard to the want of value of manure for grain crops, if I have understood those statements correctly, is, to say the least of it, astounding. I do not think there is any practical farmer in Canada who has ever laboured on a poor summer-fallow when he had not manure to put upon it, who does not know that he would get a precious small crop, much smaller than he would if he had the manure for it. It is something we have proved by experience when we had not manure for a whole field, and at harvest found the part that was manured bearing a good crop and that which was not manured yielding hardly anything at all. And, when that is the experience of every farmer in Canada, I think that the statement made that manure is of no value to grain crops, is an astounding statement. I think that while it is perfectly true that a great deal can be done to improve varieties by selection both in the case of vegetables and in the case of animals, the statement that there is nothing in varieties so far as the yield is concerned is almost as astounding a statement as the one to which I have just referred. If any one will take the facts as they are known to every farmer—take carrots, for an example, and consider what an enormous improvement has been made in the yield of carrots by the substitution in late years of new varieties for those we used to have in the old times—I think he will be thoroughly astonished at such a statement. We know also that Banner oats are among the twelve first varieties—curiously enough, all over the country this has been among the twelve first varieties—whereas others do not show among the twelve first varieties at all, proving how vital it is that the question of variety should be considered. It is not only in the matter of yield, but the variety is valuable as to the time of ripening, &c., we know that some varieties ripen earlier than others—a most important matter to the farmers. I think it is most unfortunate that statements of this kind should be made by gentlemen who have obtained—and justly obtained, because of valuable work they have done—to a great degree the confidence of the people; I say I think it is very unfortunate that statements of this disquieting kind should be made without the gentlemen who make them first having obtained leave to make them publicly.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). I am glad to see that there is an increase in this vote, for the reason that the Minister of Agriculture gave me to understand last year that the dairying industry in Cape Breton would receive encouragement at his hands. I would like to ask whether the increase of $10,000 in this vote is in part for the purpose of improving the dairying industries in that island?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am asking the increased vote partly for the purpose referred to by the hon. gentleman from Inverness (Mr. McLennan), and partly, also, because of some other work which the Dairy and Agricultural Commissioner is proposing to undertake. The vote has been one for $30,000 a year for a number of years to provide for the expenditures connected with the branch of the Commissioner of Agriculture and Dairying. I ask this year for $10,000 more, partly because we have had some expenditures in connection with this department which the $30,000 appropriated has not sufficed to meet. Last year I had to ask a supplementary vote, and this year, up to the 1st July, we have not really paid all the expenditure in connection with the Dairy Commissioner's work. This extra expenditure has been largely due to the establishment of creameries in the North-west Territories. I got a special vote for the purpose of establishing these creameries, to be applied to what I might call the capital account—that is, to pay for establishing creameries. But, in consequence of establishing these creameries the Dairy Commissioner made an agreement to run them also. While some have paid expenses from the beginning, and have done even more than that of late, some of the smaller ones have not met the expenditure necessary, and we have had to spend a considerable sum to meet expenses of their operation, and of a system of inspection—as we have inspectors travelling about seeing to the establishment of these creameries. This has amounted, during the last two or three years, to nearly $9,000 a year.

Mr. FOSTER. I thought that the agreement was such that the department would not incur any financial responsibility?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The capital expenditure is being paid back under an assessment of 1 cent a pound on the butter turned out. But I have been discussing the expenditure in carrying on the creameries. We have made a charge on the manufacture which pays expenses in the case of the larger creameries, but not in connection with the smaller ones, and we have been spending on these smaller creameries more than we have received.

Mr. FOSTER. I thought you furnished a skilled man and that he took charge of the creamery, operated it and sold the products, giving the farmers a certain percentage before the matter was finally cleared up, and then divided amongst them what was left after paying expenses. On that basis, it would seem, there could not be any loss.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has not understood one point. We charged a fixed amount for the manufacture of the butter—3 cents or 3½ cents, I think.

Mr. CLANCY. Four cents.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In the North-west that may be the figure. Where there is a large run of milk, as we call it, where the work is carried on upon a large scale, that charge covers all the expenses.

Mr. FOSTER. I can understand the point if that is your basis.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is evident the hon. gentleman has misunderstood me. I do not think I ever gave the House to understand that the basis is other than I have just explained. At first I expected that the gain on the large creameries would offset the loss on the small ones. But when we came to discuss that with the men interested in the large ones, they asked to have the profit made in any individual creamery put to the credit of their sinking fund, so that one section of the country should not be charged unfairly for the loss incurred in another section. When I came to debate the matter with these people I thought that was a fair representation on their part.

Mr. FOSTER. That was fair.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. So I did not take advantage of that. Now, for instance, there is a large creamery up in the North-west, in Alberta, at a place called Innisfail, which gave last year about $600 or $700 to the good, after paying all expenses. My first idea was to take that and use it to cover the losses on some of the smaller creameries, but when I came to consider the subject I saw the injustice of that.

Mr. FOSTER. Do you propose to pay the charges of inspection as well as of the making?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, we have done that all along. I have had two inspectors, high class dairymen, who have been in charge of this business in the North-west, and inspecting these factories about the country. When I first took up the thing I thought the expenditure for these two men would be all I would have to meet; but since then I have found that we had a considerable deficit to meet every year, and the result was that last year I spent over $9,000 in that North-west development. I may say this is more than I expected, but at the same time I really think the expenditure is justified by the success of the creameries there. There are sixteen creameries and sixteen skimming stations, or outside subordinate stations. The result has been very satisfactory in every case, except that this last season, in the grain growing districts, the high price of wheat prevented the development of dairying. In the district of Alberta, and in some other parts of the North-west, the development of wheat raising has gone on steadily and rapidly; in the eastern parts of Assinibola, especially, wheat growing, the last couple of years, has been so profitable that dairying has not developed to the same extent, and consequently, this year we are closing down one of the factories there which the people did not care to carry on. Doubtless, whenever wheat is high in price and crops are good, the people will not keep up their dairying. But in that part of the country which is not specially devoted to wheat-growing, this has been a most decided help to the people, at the same time that it has been in no sense a detriment to the eastern dairymen by coming into competition with them, because this season and the last season all the product of those creameries has been consumed in the west, and none of it has gone to England; therefore, it has had no effect whatever upon the English market, where all our eastern dairy produce goes.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it proposed to make these self-sustaining?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Our arrangement was to run them for three years, and at the end of three years to carry on some of the weaker ones a little longer. There are several of them that we hope we may be able to give up at the end of three years, while others we shall have to keep on helping. There are some ten or a dozen which we are obliged to work for the next season, some perhaps longer. Last year we spent $9,700 out of this vote. I dare say it will come to as much this year.

Mr. CLANCY. I think the hon. gentleman has spent more than $9,000; as I understand it, he has spent $25,000 last year.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. That is what I call the capital account; I am speaking of the expenditure out of this vote of $30,000. In addition, I may say that, as the House will remember, some years ago dairying was established in Prince Edward Island with great success, and the people of Nova Scotia, notably on the Island of Cape Breton, have been asking for something similar to be done there. I have felt that the development of agriculture in those eastern provinces was something that we ought to encourage, and that this dairy work was likely to be equally successful in Cape Breton as it was in Prince Edward Island, as least we hope so, and that it would be only fair and wise to inaugurate this work there. That will give us a little more ground.

Then, very strong representations were made to me from various parts of the country and from a large number of organizations, asking for some work to be done in connection with our live stock interests and our live stock export trade, and I propose to devote the sum of $5,000 out of this amount to work in that direction. I cannot say that the work is elaborated in all its details; but I wish to obtain the services of somebody who would work under Prof. Robertson to try and help on our live stock interests and trade. The salary for such an officer, and the expenditure in connection with printing and the distribution of information and so on, probably would amount to a sum in the neighbourhood of $5,000.

Mr. FOSTER. How much was spent in Prince Edward Island last year, and how much this year?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Nothing last year, nor do we propose to expend anything this year.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Would my hon. friend state in a little more precise terms, what it is proposed to do in promoting the live stock trade? It has been indicated in such a general way that I am at a loss to know what is proposed.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There has been a considerable amount of organization in connection with the live stock trade in the province of Ontario. We have there live stock associations which are dealing with different branches of live stock. This kind of organization does not spread over the country at all. But there is no doubt it has been the means of establishing the splendid record of the province of Ontario for live stock, not only in Canada, but all over this continent. I am satisfied that work can be carried on and developed in other parts of the country to the immense advantage of the live stock interests in those parts; while at the same time it will be an immense advantage to the live stock men of the province of Ontario. I will give an instance of a little work that has been done lately, partly through my own representations and partly through the work of another gentleman in Ontario, Mr. Hodson. We have been able to procure from the railroad companies great facilities for the distribution of live stock over the country; they have given special rates for the carriage of thoroughbred animals for the improvement of stock; and the result has been the sending from the province of Ontario, both east and west, but largely into Manitoba and the North-west Territories, and also, lately, in consequence of new arrangements made, into the eastern provinces, of a large number of thoroughbred animals for the improvement of stock. That could not be done before those facilities were granted, and our live stock interests were languishing and were at a serious disadvantage. I instance this as one thing that can be done, and which, I think, ought to be carried on to a much greater extent than we have done already. But I confess that I think it necessary to have some competent man who will give his special time to this work, that is, the work of organizing the live stock interests of the country and helping them on the lines whereon they have been so successfully conducted in other countries as well as in the province of Ontario. This work is indeed very much needed in the other provinces, and I am quite satisfied that a small expenditure of money such as I have been speaking of, will result in great improvement to the live stock interests. My hon. friend, I think, knows very well the importance of those live stock interests in this country.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). The hon. gentleman has forgotten to answer the question I put him concerning the dairying interests on the Island of Cape Breton.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think I answered the hon. gentleman. I told the House that I proposed to try and repeat in Cape Breton, and, perhaps, in some other parts of Nova Scotia, the work that was done in Prince Edward Island a few years ago in helping on the development of the dairy interests. If the hon. gentleman wishes further details, I may say that in discussing this matter with some of the local authorities—when I say local I mean the provincial authorities in Nova Scotia—I found that the people in the Island of Cape Breton and other parts of Nova Scotia were not prepared to do what the people of Prince Edward Island did when this work was established among them, that is, to supply the factories and the machinery, while we undertook to run them. That is what was done in Prince Edward Island. What I had expected was, that something of this kind might have been done there, but the people were not prepared to supply the factories or the machinery to do this work. The local legislature of Nova Scotia last session made an arrangement by which the local authorities are going to advance a sum of money to the localities, who will themselves pay a certain amount to make up the sum necessary for the factories and machinery, and we propose to manage them for them, in the same manner as was done by Professor Robertson in Prince Edward Island, when the system was established there. That is the arrangement that has been made, and which I hope to carry out, if this vote is given to me.

Mr. FOSTER. What was spent in New Brunswick last year under this head?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Two thousand five hundred dollars. That was in assistance to the dairy school at Sussex, in addition to which, Mr. Hopkins has been going around the province lecturing for the local authorities at their farmers' meetings.

Mr. FOSTER. Do you propose to keep that on this year? How much was spent in Nova Scotia?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The Nappan Dairy School was run in connection with—not exactly in connection, but adjacent to the experimental farm at Nappan. That dairy school has been very little availed of up to the present time, and I have not been satisfied with the result.

Mr. FOSTER. At what cost?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. At a very slight cost. They contribute the milk, in the same manner as is done in the North-west Territories at the creameries, and I think there is a small deficit on the working.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). Then, do I understand the hon. Minister of Agriculture to state that in any instance in the Island of Cape Breton, or in any part of Nova Scotia, where the people are prepared to establish a creamery and to put up a building, and in any instance where the government of Nova Scotia provides the machinery, this Government will provide the manager?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I would not like to say, in any instance, because, I suppose, there will be only one creamery in each county.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). That is satisfactory.

Mr. CLANCY. I think the hon. Minister should give us some definite information in regard to the working of the North-west creameries. I understood the hon. gentleman to say, when he introduced this plan, that there were some sixteen creameries, with an equal number of skimming or subsidiary stations, to be included in the scheme. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that they proposed to start seven new ones, and that they proposed taking over nine already in operation, the patrons of which were unable to carry them on. The hon. gentleman shakes his head.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Do you mean now?

Mr. CLANCY. No, that was two years ago.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes; I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I thought he meant now. They numbered sixteen.

Mr. CLANCY. Those that he proposed to start were at Moosomin, White Wood, Grenfell, Wolseley, Qu'Appelle, Maple Creek, Wetaskiwin. He proposed to take over those at Indian Head, Regina, Prince Albert, Moose Jaw, Calgary, Innisfail, Red Deer, Edmonton and Yorkton. The Government were to advance one-half, where new creameries were established, and, in the case of taking over the other creameries already established that were unable to run themselves, the Government were to come to their assistance, and in both cases the capital amount was to be repaid. I think the hon. gentleman, after launching a scheme like this, which is now two years old, ought to be in a position to tell us how these creameries stand, how much has been repaid in each case, and how the accounts stand, not at the end of the fiscal year, because the dairy season does not close with the fiscal year, but ought to be able to state how they stand at the end of the dairy season of 1898, and how much was paid up to that time.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not the figures here, but I can get them very easily in the department, and I will lay them on the Table, if the hon. gentleman desires them.

Mr. CLANCY. If the hon. gentleman would take up another item, this one might stand, because this is an important matter until he can give us the information.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I hope the hon. gentleman will not ask that the item stand. I would be very glad to give him the figures. Speaking from memory, four or five of these creameries have already paid off their debt. The rest are at various stages of their arrears, and I think that perhaps two or three will not be able to pay it off in the three years. I can certainly supply the hon. gentleman with the actual figures, and I would be very glad to supply them, but it will take a clerk in my department one or two days to copy them.

Mr. CLANCY. We ought to have these figures from the hon. gentleman's own mouth. At this stage of the session laying them on the Table is not entirely satisfactory.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will give them to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. CLANCY. It would be well to have a statement coming from the hon. gentleman himself.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will make a statement on concurrence, if the hon. gentleman wishes it.

Mr. CLANCY. If the hon. gentleman gives the information in detail in regard to each and every one of these creameries, we can take it up at a later stage.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. MARTIN. I am very sorry that the hon. Minister of Agriculture has withdrawn the encouragement which has been for some years extended to this industry in Prince Edward Island. Though a great deal of progress has been made there for a number of years, I can tell the hon. gentleman that there are sections still to which that great industry should be extended. He can readily understand that while the encouragement that has been already given, has been taken advantage of by some of the most prosperous sections, and while great progress has been made, there are sections, not so prosperous, that have not gone into this industry at all, and which must be at a great disadvantage if they have to go into the business now without Government assistance and supervision. The hon. Minister is going to extend this encouragement to Cape Breton and Nova Scotia, alongside of the province of Prince Edward Island. I think the hon. Minister would do well to consider whether or not this encouragement may not be continued in some sections of Prince Edward Island that have not taken advantage of it, a little longer. There are some sections which complain that this advantage has been given to the more prosperous sections, and that sections which might take advantage of it now, and which were not ready at the time the aid was given, are debarred from doing so. If the hon. Minister will do that, I think it will remove the prejudice that there is in the minds of a great many of the people in Prince Edward Island in regard to his action in withdrawing this assistance. The Minister will do a great deal to sustain himself in the opinion of the good people of the Island, if he will do that, and it will not involve a large expenditure, because, probably, the same men who look after these stations in Cape Breton, might look after the few that would be established in Prince Edward Island.

Mr. McDOUGALL. What steps has the Minister taken towards establishing creameries in the Island of Cape Breton?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have explained that, but probably the hon. gentleman (Mr. McDougall) was not in the House at the time. The legislature of Nova Scotia last session passed an Act under which, if the people in any locality provide buildings the local government will advance money to provide the equipment, and I have undertaken to run these creameries and supervise them and see to the business management of them for a term of years. We advance no money, but do something similar to what we did in the North-west Territories.

Mr. McDOUGALL: If any body of farmers want to establish a creamery, will they first have to apply to the local government, and then the local government apply to the Department of Agriculture here?

Mr. FISHER.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Our duty only commences when the building is equipped, and when we are assured there are a sufficient number of cows in the neighbourhood to justify the undertaking of such an industry.

Mr. McDOUGALL. If any body of farmers anxious to establish a creamery must communicate with the local government, and suppose the local government refuses, then these farmers are helpless so far as the Department of Agriculture here is concerned.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Last year I tried to find localities in the province which would supply the buildings and equipment, and I was informed that they could not do that without some assistance in the way of capital advances. The local legislature has since made provision for this capital advance. If this vote is passed, I will be able to provide for the loss which would be likely to occur for a few years in the operation of those creameries.

Mr. McDOUGALL. The Minister will see the difficulty in the way of this proposal. The people have first to apply to the local government, and if the local government refuses the people are helpless.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They could provide the buildings and equipment themselves.

Mr. McDOUGALL. As representative of my constituency I heard nothing of any such arrangement between the two Governments, and I am surprised that the Minister made inquiries of other people in my constituency and did not consult me. If I had been informed of that matter, I could have drawn the attention of my constituents, regardless of politics, to it, but this is the first I have ever heard of it, except by hearsay.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. But I am not in a position to do anything until I get this vote.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Does the Minister say, that in advance of getting this vote he communicated with persons in my constituency?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No. The question arose in this way. The Premier of Nova Scotia asked me what I could do to develop the dairy industry in the province, and I told Mr. Murray that I sent Mr. Hopkins and Mr. McFarlane to hold meetings in the province and their report to me was that the people did not seem to be prepared to invest the necessary capital to supply the buildings and equipments, and until something like that was done, as was done in Prince Edward Island, I was not prepared to run the creameries. Mr. Murray said: If I take steps to provide help to the people, for their buildings and equipment, will you run them? I said: I shall ask for a vote from Parliament, and if I can get it I will gladly do so. At the last session of the local legislature an Act was passed authorizing the local government to make these advances.

Mr. McDOUGALL. What counties were visited by the officers of the department?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They were in the province for a couple of weeks. I believe they went to Cape Breton Island and held a number of meetings there, but I cannot give the names of the places to which they went.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Did these officials have authority to communicate with the representatives of other constituencies? I know I heard that there was such communication, but there certainly was no communication with me.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not remember that I gave them any special instructions except that they might consult Mr. Chipman, the Secretary of Agriculture of the province, who, I thought, knew the province better than I did.

Mr. FOSTER. How much is it proposed to spend in each of the provinces this year out of this vote?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Nova Scotia, $3,500, including Cape Breton; Quebec, salary and travelling expenses of Mr. Chapais, Assistant Dairy Commissioner, $3,000; Mr. Chapais's outlay is charged to Quebec, although occasionally he visits other parts to address French-speaking people. There is also $2,000 for the Dairy School at St. Hyacinthe, making $5,000 for Quebec.

Mr. FOSTER. How much in Ontario?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The Dairy Commissioner and his assistants do a considerable amount of work in the province of Ontario, and there is $14,000 for that including the salary of Prof. Robertson. In reference to British Columbia, Mr. Marker's headquarters are at Calgary, and he and his assistants have spent two or three months for several years past lecturing in British Columbia. There is also $300 for Prince Edward Island, which is given to the Dairymen's Association to aid them in employing an inspector. That with the $5,000 provided for live stock makes $40,000.

Mr. FOSTER. On what plan is the Minister proposing to expend $5,000 for live stock? He has not given us any outline of the plan he proposes. He simply says that he is going to do something for live stock, but I think he ought to outline in principle what he proposes to do.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think I can do that better than in the words which Prof. Robertson has put in this memorandum:

To promote live stock interests by collecting and spreading information to bring about a more general use of thoroughbred male animals of the best sorts for the grading up of horses, cattle, swine and sheep, and for the diffusion of knowledge on the most profitable methods of breeding, feeding and marketing live stock.

I expect that perhaps as much as $2,000, or perhaps more, of this $5,000 will be required for the salary of an assistant to Professor Robertson, whose business will be to devote himself specially to that branch of the work. I have not yet fixed the salary. I suppose that will depend on whom I can get to do the work.

Mr. FOSTER. His work will be chiefly lecturing?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Lecturing and investigating the live stock interest, and trying to organize a live stock interest into associations all over the country, as it is now organized in the province of Ontario.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it not organized in the province of Ontario by Ontario mechanism?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. To a certain extent, but not altogether. The live stock interest there was organized very largely by individual free association; but it is a question whether the same kind of work that was done for the dairy interest in the other parts of the Dominion cannot now be done for the live stock interest. When Prof. Robertson started his work as Dairy Commissioner, there was a pretty complete organization of the cheese interest in the province of Ontario, which was reaping great profit for that interest in that province. That organization has spread through all parts of the Dominion, and is now reaping similar profit for the dairy interest in other parts of the Dominion. I think that something similar can be done in organizing the live stock interest, with the view of making that interest as profitable in other parts of the country as it is in the province of Ontario.

Mr. FOSTER. If in the province of New Brunswick they propose to put up a factory and provide machinery, will the Minister be prepared to do the same for that province as he is doing for the province of Nova Scotia, and formerly did for the province of New Brunswick?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not a sufficient vote to cover other ground at present. I think that interest is further advanced in the province of New Brunswick than it is in the province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. FOSTER. In some portions it is, in other portions it is not. But it seems almost invidious to have a plan of work for one province unless the hon. gentleman proposes, to a certain extent, to apply it in some of the other more backward provinces; and New Brunswick is one of these. I think the future of agriculture in New Brunswick depends largely upon dairying and stock-raising, and I think it is as necessary to give that province a helping hand in this respect as it is in Nova Scotia. Of course, co-operation between the Dominion and local government, where that can be had, is desirable; but there is a possible evil in that. If in the province of Nova Scotia the local government does not aid by a vote towards establishing a factory and providing machinery, and if the people themselves undertake to do it, I suppose my hon. friend will aid them just as readily as he would the local government.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Certainly. It was only because the people said they could not do it.

Mr. FOSTER. Otherwise there might be a monopoly.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, I quite agree with the hon. gentleman.

Mr. MARTIN. Will the hon. Minister give me a reply in regard to Prince Edward Island?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman sees that I am doing something for Prince Edward Island.

Mr. MARTIN. I mean in the way of encouraging more factories in that province. The hon. Minister is aware that though the late Government extended its encouragement to the industry in that province, it was almost, I think I might say altogether, self-sustaining.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. $6,000 was spent in one year.

Mr. MARTIN. There were some other years which counterbalanced that.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, a large amount was spent every year.

Mr. MARTIN. I would like the hon. gentleman to give us the figures of the loss.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not got them here, but I can give them. They are in my department.

Mr. MARTIN. The hon. gentleman has not the figures, and is not speaking by the book. The loss of operating those factories was very infinitesimal. The same man who superintends the work in Cape Breton might do the same with regard to a few more factories in Prince Edward Island. The expenditure would not be very large, and a great many sections of the province which have not hitherto taken any advantage of the encouragement given by the late Government might be induced to do so. I would ask the Minister to give that matter his most serious consideration.

Illustration stations ..... $20,000

Mr. FOSTER. What are these?

Mr. FOSTER.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am asking the House to give me this vote in pursuance of a good deal of discussion which took place in the Committee on Agriculture last year. It is for the purpose of establishing in different parts of the country what are called illustration stations, and of course some explanation is called for. We have been carrying on experiments in the cultivation of the soil in the growing of crops for a number of years at our farms in different sections of the country, five of them; but these are not seen by a very large number of people, and it is proposed that we should establish eventually in every county in the Dominion what is called an illustration station. This vote would not nearly do that, but I hope I will get authority to establish a number of these stations as trial stations, and if the scheme is found to work satisfactorily, we shall go on providing other stations, as I have indicated. The system has been carried on very successfully and to a considerable extent in several countries of Europe, and has now been inaugurated to a certain extent in some of the states of the American Union. Our proposition is to secure the co-operation of some good, practical farmer in a chosen locality, one who would be willing to manage and work a small area under instructions, so as to illustrate the difference in results from different working of the soil and the growing of different crops. We are satisfied we can secure the co-operation of first-class farmers in any particular locality. The expenditure would not involve any investment; we will not buy the land, but only ask the individual owner to give up ten or twenty acres of his land on which to make these experiments, and which will illustrate to all those who see it the methods considered to be the best for the management of that soil and the growing of particular crops.

Mr. FOSTER. Who lays out the plan?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The Agricultural Commissioner. The expense would be some little reimbursement to those farmers for the extra work required in managing a thing of that kind, and some little expenditure in the inspection and supervision of the work and the printing and distributing of reports of the results.

Mr. FOSTER. How much for the first?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The expectation is, that the work at each station, including the first year some little work in the establishing and improving of the station, and perhaps putting a wire fence around the land, so as to leave it visible, would be about $250, including the expense of the farms. These farms would be chosen by the wayside in the most conspicuous locality to be found in the county, where the largest number of people would be expected to pass.

Mr. WALLACE. How could results be shown from ten or twenty acres ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Just as well as from a greater acreage. I do not propose to cultivate large fields, but simply to show the different methods in the cultivation, say one-half the field cultivated one way, and the other half cultivated another way. If we do that, and plant several crops in each particular place, that would give a good illustration of what is being discovered by our experimental work to be the best means of cultivation in that particular place of that particular land. We then expect to have to pay inspectors. The estimate Mr. Robertson has made for these expenditures for the ensuing year would be : thirty-three stations at $250 each, $8,250, and three inspectors, whose salaries and expenses would amount to $4,800. It was proposed also to establish two stations especially for tobacco. I think I explained some little time ago that great efforts are being made to grow tobacco, and we propose to have one station in Quebec and one in western Ontario.

Mr. CLANCY. How much in each of these ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Mr. Robertson has put down $2,000 each. I think that only is about one and a half, so to speak, because the one going on in the province of Quebec is being conducted by a gentleman who has given for many years a great deal of study to the growth and curing of tobacco, and is trying some experiments in the curing of tobacco more elaborate than are likely to be tried in any other place. We hope also to try the same experiment with tobacco-growing in western Ontario, and to carry on curing experiments also. Mr. Robertson has an item of $4,950 for the extra expense of starting the scheme, and headquarters, and administration, showing that there will have to be a good deal of collaboration and work. It is a new departure and will require a good deal of careful thought, and working out, and explanations throughout the country.

Mr. FOSTER. Who chooses the farmers and an experimental supervisor ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The department.

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose you had a good Grit and a good Tory farmer, which would you choose ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Other things being equal, I think I am human enough to take the Grit. I do not see really any other way of doing it.

Mr. FOSTER. I do. If you are going to have your inspector who is competent to do the work, just simply say to him : There are no politics in this at all ; get the most eligible place and man, no odds whether he be a Quaker, Grit or Tory, and the department will never interfere or allow any political heelers to interfere.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The first thing to be done will be to lay down certain conditions, namely, that the farm must be of a certain character and in a suitable situation, and carried on by a man well enough educated to do this work, and who is carrying on the rest of his farm sufficiently well to justify a belief that he will do the work satisfactorily. These conditions being laid down, I do not know any other way except to let the Dairy Agricultural Commissioner and the inspector report, and when there are rival claims, they may have to be referred to me individually. But I do not propose to interfere unless absolutely required, for I have quite enough to do in the management of the department, without entering into any more details than is absolutely necessary.

With regard to the experience of other countries, in France this kind of work has been going on for a great many years. They have at present there over 4,000 such illustration stations scattered all over the country, carried on just about in this way, except that there they have a large staff of men who have passed through the agricultural colleges and schools, and, as a general rule, they place the stations under the control of the graduates of the various agricultural schools. We have not yet in this country that class of people in sufficient numbers to enable us to do that. But there these illustration stations have been conducted for a number of years on the lines I have indicated ; and when, last year, I was in Paris and met a number of leading agriculturists and a number of professors of the great agricultural school of Grignon, which is the centre of agricultural education in France, they told me that they considered that these illustration stations had been the most important factors in improving general agriculture in France of all the things they had inaugurated. I find also a most interesting report here of the Board of Agriculture in Great Britain, edited and managed by the secretary, Major Craige, whose name is well known, not only in Great Britain, but in this country as an eminent agricultural authority, in which are described a large number of similar stations in Great Britain, where the results of scientific experiments are shown to the farmers of the neighbourhood ; and in Great Britain also, though it is only two or, possibly, three years since this system was inaugurated, the results have been very satisfactory, and the report refers to this work with the greatest commendation and praise. Last year in England I talked the matter over with a considerable number of farmers and men who are interested in agricultural work there, and I am satisfied that, in this country as in that, the result will be eminently beneficial to agriculture. I am bound to add that, while, in some parts of our country we have a number of excellently managed farms, where the practical farmer is doing as good work as any of his neighbours, and, perhaps, as good work as could be done under the circumstances, and in the conditions of the country, yet there are other parts of the country where our agricultural treatment of the soil is very far behind the best methods, and where a little help of this kind, to show people right before their eyes the practical work of the best methods as conducted in these better farms in parts of the country, I think will do a great deal of good. I trust that the expression of opinion given by the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) last year, when we were discussing the Estimates of the Department of Agriculture, will be endorsed and supported by every member of this House. He then said that he was sorry to see that an item of this kind had not been put in the Estimates of last year. I was sorry myself, but I confess that I had not at that time so thoroughly discussed the matter, and the matter had not been so fully brought to the attention of us all as it has been since. Everything I have been able to find out in regard to the success of this sort of work in the other counties since that time has confirmed what I then believed and what the hon. member for Haldimand expressed. So I trust the House will give me the opportunity to inaugurate this work, which, I am sure, if carried out thoroughly, will result in improved methods in the treatment of the soil of our country.

Mr. CLANCY. I have no hesitation in saying at the outset that this is a wholly visionary scheme, and one without foundation, and, as applied to Canadian agriculture, utterly worthless. What does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) propose to do? He proposes to establish what he calls illustration stations; but he forgets that the best farmers in our country are already carrying on illustration stations. If you go to the neighbourhood of the farm of my hon. friend from Huron (Mr. McMillan) you will find that that hon. gentleman is carrying on an experimental farm and you need not establish one there. It is idle to suppose that men are going to these illustration stations. What does it mean that the farmers are to do? If we take the report of the Dairy Commissioner and consider some of the details with which he deals, you will find that he tells the farmer to keep his grain clean, to keep his corn clean, and things of that kind. It would be as sensible to try to teach people to come in out of the rain as to teach them such things. Everybody knows those things already; the only thing is to get them to act upon their knowledge. Every man who carries on his farm poorly has a near neighbour who is a better farmer. If he will not learn from his neighbour, he will not go ten or fifteen miles to learn from an illustration station. How are you going to provide for those people, if they do go? Is a man to take his dinner with him? How will he get accommodation? It is impossible that any good can come out of this proposal. Consider how the hon. Minister proposes to expend this money, and that will show how worthless the proposal is. In the first place, $4,800 is to go in salaries of men to put this thing in motion. Then he proposes to put $4,950 into the pockets of certain parties—to find employment for men who are not farmers and who will have nothing to do with it. It looks far more like a scheme to help the hon. gentleman's friends than to assist agriculture in Canada. I will venture to say there is not a practical farmer in this House who will rise in his place and declare upon his reputation and experience his opinion that this will bring any good to the farmers. I never knew of a more visionary scheme. The hon. gentleman might as well throw so much money into the Ottawa River—it would do just as much good to the people of this country. I could point out to him where he could spend $20,000 to the real advantage of the people. If he will devote this sum to slaughtering every diseased animal in the country and compensating the farmers whose animals are thus taken, and thus give us clean herds, as far as the money would go, he would do fully $20,000 worth of good. It is idle to bring forward examples of what has been done in France. The conditions there may be very different from ours. We know very little of what is done in Great Britain or France, but we know from practical experience that schemes of this kind cannot work out in this country. He proposes, for instance, to establish illustration stations with regard to tobacco. I appeal to the hon. member for North Essex (Mr. McGregor), who lives in the tobacco district, what will be the advantage of this scheme alongside the experience of the farmers themselves. I have not had much practical experience in growing tobacco, but I did undertake to grow eight acres of it, and what did I find? The same common sense that would apply in growing a field of corn would apply to growing a field of tobacco. As to the curing, that is a different matter, and is a business with which the farmers, after the preliminary stage, have not necessarily, anything to do. The curing that has to be done in the farmers' barns is one to which the hon. gentleman cannot contribute one fraction. I say that private enterprise must find means to solve the difficulties of curing tobacco. I tell the hon. gentleman that I defy him to point out one service that is to be performed in an illustration station that is not being done every day in a common-sense way by practical farmers. There is nothing new in it beyond supplying the neglect of the man who fails to put in practice what he already knows. I venture to think that there is not a farmer in this House who will undertake to say that a station of that kind is of any general use to the farmer beyond pointing out what he sees every day at his own door. You might as well throw the money into the river as to vote it for this purpose.

Mr. McMILLAN. I rise for the purpose of opposing the scheme of illustration stations. I have paid a considerable amount of attention to farming all over the country, and I quite endorse what the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) has said, that go where you will all over the province of Ontario, yes, and in parts of Quebec, you will find some first-class farmers in every locality. Those farmers are not going to be any better off by having illustration stations upon their farms. The examples they are showing each other to-day will be of more practical benefit to the farmers than they can receive from any man who is subsidized by the Government; because the moment the idea spreads that the movement is subsidized by the Government, the general farmer will conclude that it is no example for him. But who are to be the inspectors for these farms? Suppose the illustration stations are established, who is going to tell the farmers that they are all to be conducted upon a uniform system? There is not a thoroughly practical farmer in the province of Ontario to-day, and I have talked with hundreds of them during the last year, who will say that he would have an illustration station upon his farm. I believe that a very large amount of this money would be wasted, thrown away, on a lot of useless officials. I want to do everything I can for the agricultural community, but I am not going to be a party to anything. I care not though it may come from this side of the House, and though it be a Government scheme—I am not going to support anything that is not in the real interests of the agricultural community. I am convinced that all over the province of Ontario you can find within five or six miles of any of these experimental stations ten farms conducted as well as any experimental farm in Canada, and the results from their farming are equal to any results that have been obtained, so far as the yield per acre is concerned. Take, as an illustration, a farmer who cultivates five or six varieties of oats, the same of barley, the same of wheat, the same of spring wheat, and a great number of varieties of corn and of grass, cultivated under different conditions, and that farmer has to cultivate these during the summer, has to keep them apart, he has to weigh them, take them into his barn and thresh them, and if he does not do that, an illustration station is of no avail. We have a slight example of what it is going to cost in the two farms at Ottawa and Guelph, and if it is going to cost $80 or $90 per acre on these farms, can you expect a farmer that has not good barn accommodation to do it for less? That is a system that will never succeed in Ontario. I must say that since the question was up last year I have taken opportunity to converse with a great number of intelligent farmers, and I have got their opinions, freely and intelligently given, and I have not found one yet that was in favour of an illustration station. The time has come when the farmers of this country have got to put forth every effort themselves. If the Government could send amongst them gentlemen who have had more experience, or who could produce more per acre than the farmers can do to-day, I admit that the average of the province might be increased, or the average of any township might be increased. I am opposed to illustration stations, and believe that the money that it is proposed to expend upon them could be used to much better advantage in other directions. That is my opinion, and if the question comes to a vote I shall vote against it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am glad for once to be able to agree with the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan), and I feel that I make no mistake on this matter when I am supported by that hon. gentleman. I would say to the Minister of Agriculture that if he is open to conviction, if he is open to reason, if he is open to receive the opinion more especially of those representing the rural constituencies of western Ontario, he will not go hastily into this scheme. From my stand-point it will be of no material advantage to farmers. As has been so well pointed out by the member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy), such a large sum will be required to pay the salaries of the men to look after these experimental stations, that I think the advantage would be more than counterbalanced by the large expenditure. I do not think it is popular in the country, I do not think it is called for. Where we have farmers of the high standing and high intelligence that we have throughout the province of Ontario—I do not know what may be the condition of agriculture in the lower provinces—but I do think that in the province of Ontario where there is so much rivalry among the farmers in the same neighbourhood to produce the very best crops, to get the very best results, experimental stations will not give any better results than the experiments of the farmers themselves are giving every day.

Mr. COWAN. I regret that I was not in the House to hear the remarks of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) so far as tobacco experimental stages are concerned. In the early part of this session, at the request of the Tobacco Growers' Association of the counties of Essex and Kent, I was asked to impress upon the Minister of Agriculture the strong advisability of starting a tobacco illustration station in western Ontario. In the present year there have been between seven and eight million pounds of tobacco produced in the counties of Essex and Kent, and I know personally whereof I speak when I say that at least one-third of that tobacco was almost or entirely spoiled by reason of the absence of knowledge on the part of the farmers in preparing it and curing it. If there had been an experimental tobacco station in the counties of Essex and Kent which the tobacco growers could have visited and where they could have learned how to cure and handle it after it was cut, it would have saved at least $70,000 to the farmers of those two counties. I must congratulate the Minister of Agriculture on behalf of that particular industry in taking a step in the direction of establishing an experimental tobacco station for the purpose of showing how to prepare, hang properly, cure and handle tobacco after it is cut. If the hon. member for Bothwell has really said anything against the advisability of establishing an illustration tobacco station for the purpose of educating the farmers how to cure tobacco, he is certainly not voicing the sentiment of all his constituents who have, at all events, sent large petitions in connection with other matters concerning the tobacco trade. As for the remarks of the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan) although that hon. gentleman may not need any illustration how to feed cattle, but as he stated in an earlier portion of the debate what was the practical result of the station in Ottawa would not apply to all parts of the Dominion, so I say practical results would be likely to follow from having an illustration station in the counties of Essex and Kent, which is more of a tropical climate, and where they grow more of the finer products than can be grown in some of the more northern counties. I know that, as the result of the establishment of fruit stations, thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars have accrued to the farmers, and I think I am only endorsing the universal opinion, in my county and in other counties of western Ontario, when I say that the farmers are very strongly in favour of having money expended in this direction.

Mr. CLANCY. We have had a striking illustration of an hon. gentleman giving an exhibition of how little he knows about farming and about the wants of the people whom he represents. I think that the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan) knows quite as much about farming as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cowan) knows about law, and I would be inclined to say that he is a little better up in his profession. The hon. gentleman said that we should have money set apart to teach farmers how to hang tobacco. There is no one of common sense in the country who does not know how to hang tobacco. If he has not hung it right the first time he will not require a teacher to show him how to do it the second time, because his experience will teach him, and if it does not, I do not think such a vote as this will be of any use. I have had some slight experience in the growth of tobacco, and I say that if I have hung tobacco too close one year and not enough of air was allowed to get around it, I will surely know that without having a teacher to tell me so. Some people seem to think that the farmers are such dull and stupid people that they must have a man standing over them all the time who has read books. These teachers are invariably men who have not gained their opinions and information in a practical way, but have derived them from books, and therefore they will not be in a position, from past experience, to teach the farmers anything in regard to the proper way of hanging tobacco. If the tobacco-growers of South Essex and North Essex and Kent, after their long experience cannot agree upon some line of action in regard to the growing and curing of tobacco, we had much better take some other course, because there is no sense in this. The hon. gentleman might have had a petition from the Tobacco Growers' Association, but that does not settle the question in any way. There was certainly some bad tobacco grown in that part of the country, but it is said that that came from not growing a good plant, and from planting it in poor soil. I have only this to say, that I am afraid the hon. gentleman, in speaking upon this question, is saying what he has heard rather than what he knows, and I am afraid that he will be unable to tell us what the Tobacco Growers' Association want to have done.

Mr. COWAN. I do not presume that the committee is particularly interested in what my professional standing may be, or how much I may know about law. I may say that I think my standing in my profession is quite as good as the hon. gentleman's standing in the business which he follows. I do not think that this House is particularly interested in that, but I do desire to say that he would not be an idiot who did not know how to hang tobacco. I am not an expert tobacco grower, although I have attended meetings of the Tobacco Growers' Association, and I can tell the hon. gentleman that some of the very best tobacco growers from Kent were present, that the tobacco growers of Essex and of Kent differ as to what is the best way of caring for tobacco, and these were men who had been in the industry for a number of years. If the hon. gentleman knows all about the curing and hanging of tobacco, he is far in advance of the gentlemen who are the leading tobacco growers in his constituency and members of the Tobacco Growers' Association. I am not posing as a tobacco expert. The hon. gentleman seems to pose as an expert farmer, but, if he is an expert farmer, gentlemen from the west have not discovered it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Chairman, I may be permitted to correct a little misapprehension on the part of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cowan), who has just taken his seat. I heard what was said by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy), and I understood him to say that he assumed that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cowan) understood his profession, or the profession of the law, no better than the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan) understood agriculture. All I can say is that I think he was paying him a great compliment, because after what we have heard from the hon. member for South Huron, we have come to the conclusion that he does understand farming thoroughly. Therefore, I think that the hon. member for Bothwell was paying the hon. member for South Essex a great compliment in saying that that hon. gentleman has as great knowledge of the law as the hon. member for South Huron has of farming. I am inclined to think that the hon. member for South Essex ought to have gone further. He says that he attended a meeting of gentlemen who are engaged in tobacco growing, and that there was a conflict between these gentlemen, who had devoted their lives to the raising of tobacco, as to which was the best mode of hanging tobacco, but the hon. gentleman sat down without giving us the information that we require, and so far as his argument goes, it is likely to end in smoke. He has not told us what we are all longing to learn, what was the decision arrived at, and how the hon. gentleman proposed that these young officials, that are to be sent all through the country, will be able to instruct one or other of these bodies of gentlemen who are engaged in raising tobacco, and who have not yet been able to settle the question as to how it should be hung. I do not understand very much about the subject myself, but I am sure the hon. Minister must have arrived at the conclusion, after the discussion which has taken place, that it would not be wise to press this vote in the committee. After so much difference of opinion amongst farmers on both sides of the House as to its inutility, I do not think it requires any great knowledge of tobacco raising to arrive at that conclusion. The amount of money is comparatively small and a large portion of it is going to be expended in the employment of officials, which may enable the Government to find places for a few hungry office-seekers, but I do not believe that the Minister of Agriculture has made out a case that would warrant this committee in voting money for any such purpose. When this land is acquired near the roadside and parties are allowed to go and look at it, it will do them no good. There will be no one to give information; there is no person in charge of the place and they will have to go a mile, or a couple of miles away, to hunt up the farmer and to bring him to explain the experiment to them. Well, he would say, I have got something else to do; I have got to look after my own farm work. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) surely does not pretend that this farmer on whose land this illustration station is, is going to give up his time to explaining everything in connection with the operations. We have undertaken a large expenditure upon what may be called model farms in the various provinces of the Dominion; the Government have provided the best means of giving instructions to farmers, and I do not see what benefit is to be derived from the expenditure of this money for these illustration stations. For the time being I think we will have to be content with what we have done already. After the stringent criticism given to this vote by gentlemen on both sides of the House who understand the subject a great deal better than I do, and at least quite as well as the Minister (Mr. Fisher) does, I would respectfully suggest that this appropriation be withdrawn.

It being Six o'clock, the Deputy Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess

Mr. SEMPLE. I wish to say a few words, Mr. Chairman, with regard to this vote for illustration stations. I remember that it was brought up in the Agricultural Committee last session, and I spoke my mind very freely in reference to it. I considered then that it was a needless waste of public money, and I consider the same thing now. It has been mentioned that these illustration stations have been very successful in France. That is probably true, but the conditions in France are quite different from the conditions in this country. In France everything they produce on the farm is dearer and labour is cheaper than here, and they can afford to enter into this business of illustration stations. I may say that if you take the western portion of Canada, you have not very far to go until you find a number of farmers who can teach the professor some things. They are practical farmers, starting at the occupation when boys and gaining experience continuously, some for 30 or 40 years and making good use of their time. They endeavour to get instructions on every point possible; they go to the fairs and Farmers' Institutes, they consult other farmers, and they use every means within their power to make farming a success. That success is in a great measure due to doing good work, and being as economical as possible. That is the true secret of success in farming. Where there is good farming to be done, give me the practical farmer every time. We may have some very good things in theory, but there is nothing succeeds like the practice. I believe that if this vote is passed, the most of it will be spent by the officials travelling around the country. I cannot conceive of a good farmer, who has a large farm, bothering himself with this small remuneration and having part of his property divided into small sections, and having different variety of seeds sown to make an illustration. Besides, it will detract from the Central Experimental Farm at Ottawa. To-day we voted $80,000 for the Ottawa Experimental Farm, and the farms at Brandon, Agassiz, Nappan and Indian Head, and we ought to have illustrations enough from those farms. They are supposed to be practical men on those farms, and any information that is needed should be obtained there. It is not needed that we should have these little small affairs for illustration purposes in different parts of the country, and I think the Minister would do well to withdraw this item. The sum asked for is not large, it is true, but we have nothing definite stated as to how these experiments will be carried on. I believe that we will get no adequate return out of this $20,000, if we expend it. I believe myself that on the Experimental Farm at Ottawa we could reap all the necessary advantages with a smaller number of men employed. We have illustrations in tree-growing on that farm, and about 150 acres set out in trees, when there is not one farmer in 10,000 who gets any benefit from that. It is only useful for the gentlemen farmers, and not for the thousands of farmers who have to work as hard as they can, and be as careful as they can, in order to make both ends meet. Although numbers of our farmers are improving and are able to settle their sons on farms, still they have very little time to indulge in any of this fancy kind of farming. I hope the Minister will see his way clear to withdraw this vote, and if he does not, I certainly will not uphold it.

Mr. STENSON. I certainly regret to see a farmer, as I suppose the hon. gentleman (Mr. Semple) is, opposing this vote. It may be very true, that in certain parts of Canada, and perhaps in that part of the country whence my hon. friend (Mr. Semple) comes—that may be a regular garden of Paradise—there may be no necessity for these illustration stations. But, although every farmer may be perfect in that section of the country, I would respectfully remind the hon. gentleman that that is not the whole of Canada.

My experience in travelling through Canada, particularly through the province of Quebec, is that these illustration stations would be of immense benefit and would cost very little. My hon. friend says that such stations are very successful in France, but that the conditions there are different from what they are here—that labour is cheaper in France. I would take that as an argument in favour of the illustration stations. We want to produce as cheaply as possible and with the best results, and in order to do so we must have examples of how this is to be done. We want these stations in order to ascertain what results have been attained at the experimental farms, for which we spend a large sum of money—and I believe it is money well spent—and to show those results to the people who have not the means of visiting the experimental farms and seeing for themselves. This is the only way in which those results can be brought to the knowledge of the farmers of the country. It is by ocular demonstration that we can convince them of the best methods to adopt. It is admitted without controversy that when a really good farmer goes into a district where the farmers are rather behind in the science of farming, he does a great deal of good. But we cannot have such men settling in every part of the country, and these illustration stations would represent these good farmers. My hon. friend says that in the western part of Canada there are good farmers who know more than the professors. I do not at all doubt that a really good farmer, who has spent all his life in farming, and who has studied as well as practised agriculture, knows a good deal more of the practical side of the business, in his own section, than most of our professors. But at these illustration stations some of the best farmers in each district would show to the surrounding farmers what can be done on a small piece of ground. Besides the instruction they would get from the Experimental Farm, they would also put into practice their own knowledge and experience. My hon. friend says we have our fairs and farmers' institutes. We have, but to perfect the system we need these illustration stations. At the fairs we show what our farmers have produced, and in the farmers' institutes we discuss methods of farming; but we have no means of showing how these things are done on the land; and the illustration stations would complete the system of which the fairs and farmers' institutes are a part. These illustration stations would be one of the best subjects for discussion at the meetings of the farmers' institutes. They would afford them an opportunity to criticise and to exchange opinions on what they had seen done there. By means of these illustration stations the grains and different cereals best adapted to the soil and climate of the district could be shown better than at a farmers' institute or by a professor or lecturer. My hon. friend says that a great deal of expense would be incurred in travelling around the country. There is no doubt that in order to establish those illustration stations somebody must do some travelling in order to find out where they should be placed. There will be some necessary expense for that purpose; but I believe my hon. friend thinks the expense will be more than it really will be. Once a station is established, the only expense of it will be the indemnity necessary for the farmer who takes care of it. That will be a very small expense, because the crop that will be taken off the station will go a great way towards indemnifying the farmer for taking care of it. My hon. friend says that no benefit has been reaped from the experiment in planting trees at the Experimental farm. I cannot agree with my hon. friend there. But nobody would pretend to follow the example given by the planting of trees on the Experimental Farm. In fact, they are not planted as an example, but as an experiment to see what trees can be most profitably planted. But each farmer who has the advantage of seeing the trees planted at these experimental stations can choose those best suited to his soil and climate. I may say that I spoke of these illustration stations to the farmers of my two counties, and I did not meet with a dissentient voice. On the contrary, every farmer who attended the meetings was not only agreeable to having them established, but when I told them that the sum voted for the purpose would be a small one, and, perhaps, not sufficient to establish a station in each county, they declared that they thought there should be more than one in each county, so that they should be within the reach of every farmer. Therefore, I not only feel determined to vote for this appropriation, but I declare that if it is not granted, the farmers of the province of Quebec, at any rate of my section, will be sadly disappointed.

Mr. MAODONALD (King's, P.E.I.) The matter before us, I believe, is the proposal to establish illustration stations in the different portions of Canada. While there are arguments which can be brought against the proposal, I myself think a great deal of good will come from these stations if they are distributed throughout the different provinces and properly conducted. I understand that it is the intention of the Minister to take an ordinary piece of land, centrally situated, in the different counties, and under the guidance of a practical farmer, to have it cultivated as an object lesson to the farmers of the surrounding district. If that system is properly carried out and kept as free as possibly from political influences, I think it will tend to do much good to the farming population. We all know from observation that the placing of a good farmer in a poor section is sure to bring about good results as the people in his immediate neighbourhood will adopt his methods to a great extent, gradually anyhow, and so improve their farms. Even if these farms be not perhaps conducted better than certain farmers may conduct their operations, yet the fact of their being established by the Government for the purpose of illustrating certain methods of cultivation will attract the attention of farmers and bring more closely home to them facts in connection with their work that otherwise might escape their observation. I think that the step is one in the right direction. We all know that the farming interest is the largest in this country, that there are more depending on that industry than on any other, and that it contributes more largely to the revenues of this country. I think, therefore, that the comparatively small amount of money which will require to be expended on these stations will be appreciated by the farmers. I think that if the Minister carries this out properly, free as far as possible from politics, it will be of practical benefit to the people in whose midst these stations will be situated. With regard to my own province of Prince Edward Island, we know that there was an illustration station established there by Prof. Robertson, under the late Government, for the manufacture of cheese and the result has been that that manufacture has grown into a very large industry, and is now so well established that it can support itself without any aid from the Government. The results have been more than the most sanguine estimated. I have no doubt also that when these stations are carried out by practical farmers, they will also be a means of education that will bring home to the farmers the best means of cultivation in a way you could not possibly hope to do by means of lectures or anything of that kind. If nothing else should come out of it, the fact, as has been stated by hon. gentlemen who have preceded me, that such a system will lead the farmers to discuss the best methods of cultivation among themselves will in itself be of great value. Taking it all through, I very much favour the expenditure of this amount for that purpose.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). Nothing could give a better idea of the importance of those stations than what is taking place in connection with the cultivation of tobacco. Since Parliament imposed ten cents a pound on imported tobacco, there has been such an impulse given to that industry that last year from 8,000,000 to 10,000,000 pounds more or less have been cultivated, a very large quantity of which was grown in the province of Quebec. Two years ago, before that law was introduced, we passed only about 600,000 pounds of Canadian tobacco through our factories, whereas last year we passed through 1,900,000 pounds, and this year the quantity has amounted to 2,500,000 pounds. There is no limit to the amount that would be employed in our factories to the displacement of American tobacco, if we only knew how to cure it. But this is the great difficulty. So far as appearances are concerned, it is difficult to see anything finer than our plant, but we have not the remotest idea how to cure it. As the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) has said, any idiot can hang tobacco, but if any man believes that any idiot can cure tobacco he has not the slightest idea of the care that has to be given to that plant, in order to make it fit for general use. Tobacco is a tropical plant, the cultivation of which and the curing of which has been studied for generations in the south, and there been brought to the highest perfection. But we cannot expect our farmers to be able to go south, and there learn how to grow tobacco and especially how to cure it.

When we think of the hundreds of thousands of dollars that have been spent to show our farmers how to make the best use of their milk, how to best convert it into butter and cheese, and when we see the great results that have accrued from this expenditure, we can easily understand what magnificent results would be accomplished by a much smaller expenditure in educating our people how to cultivate and cure tobacco plant. There is no doubt that it can be grown in this country in our rapidly ripening heat, provided we use the right kind of seed and study the conditions of soil that are best calculated of its growth. Then comes the time when the tobacco must be gathered and cured. I say that it is perfectly impossible for our farmers to divine or to understand the mode of curing tobacco if they are not shown by those who have had practical experience. And it must not be forgotten that tobacco is one of the greatest sources of revenue for the farmers. As we have taught our farmers to make good butter and good cheese, so we must teach them to cure their tobacco, so that it will command a fair price. I would not ask that the same sum of money be devoted to teaching this part of the farmers' vocation as has been devoted to teaching dairying, but now that our farmers have learned to grow tobacco, it is important that they should learn how to cure it. My hon. friend from South Essex (Mr. Cowan), a moment ago, spoke of the enormous amount of tobacco grown in his county, and referred to the difficulty of curing it and to the enormous loss of nearly one-half of the eight millions of tobacco owing to the imperfect way in which it was cured. He was asked if he could show how to cure it; I do not wonder that he said he could not. I do not pretend to be able to show how to cure tobacco. But I have devoted a certain study to the question, and I have learned enough of it to know that it is very difficult. Curing tobacco does not consist in merely hanging it up, which anybody could do. Curing hay does not merely consist in cutting it. Experience and knowledge is necessary in the curing of hay, and the curing of tobacco is infinitely more difficult than the curing of hay. Of all agricultural operations this curing of tobacco is one of the most difficult. Now that our people, with great good-will and great courage have rushed into this new industry, it has become more important than ever that we should teach them how to give such value to their tobacco as to secure to them some return for their labour. I sent samples of our tobacco to Europe, and I have the report here of Lord Strathcona with regard to those samples; and I am sorry to have to admit that the reports from Germany, Hamburg and

Sir HENRI JOLY DE LOTBINIERE.

Denmark show that at present that tobacco is considered on the continent to be perfectly worthless on account of the defective way in which it is cured. Is it not worth while to spend a few thousands—I have forgotten the exact amount of this vote; I think $4,500—

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE.
Two thousand.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE.
Only $2,000? I am much disappointed, and I really think I must vote non-confidence in my hon. friend (Mr. Fisher). I thought it would have been a much larger amount. Considering the advantage to be gained by teaching our farmers how to take care of the immense quantity of tobacco in their storehouses as well as that which they are now growing, I think it would have been worth while to spend a larger sum.

The hon. member for Centre Wellington (Mr. Semple), speaking of the western farmers, said that many of them could teach the professors in agriculture. I think that very possible—that they could, at all events, teach them from a practical point of view. But there is something more than the practical point of view, there is the scientific, the theoretical point of view. In Ontario the art of agriculture is much more advanced than in the province of Quebec. But let me tell you, Mr. Chairman, that in Quebec our farmers will gratefully accept any lessons given to them, and especially when given in the way that will be followed in these illustration stations. Many of the farmers are mistrustful of what they find in books and agricultural papers; but if they can see in practice before their eyes what they read in the agricultural papers, they will be ready to admit the advantage of adopting it. Moreover, many of our farmers, not only in Quebec, but in Ontario as well—if we are to believe the "Farmers' Advocate," the great agricultural paper—do not understand the great truth that what is worth doing is worth doing well. Many of them know how to do a thing, but will not take the trouble to do it, or do not think it worth while to take the trouble. To see a little patch cultivated to the highest perfection to which it can be brought will do more than any amount of lectures and agricultural items that they can read in the papers.

Another argument has been brought forward, one that I scarcely like to notice, because it is one of those painful arguments concerning which one does not know what to say. Some hon. members on the other side have said that the object of the Minister in making this organization is to have the opportunity of appointing some more officers and favouring, more or less, certain farmers. That argument will not have any weight on this side of the House, at all events. Hon. gentlemen on this side know the devotion of the hon. Minister (Mr. Fisher) to the cause of agriculture, and also his thorough knowledge of the art. They know that his sole object is to benefit the agriculture of the Dominion.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the way you used to talk of Li Hung Chang.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Whatever I may have thought of Li Hung Chang, I think the same and more of my hon. friend (Mr. Fisher), and so far I have never had occasion to change my opinion, and I feel certain I never shall have. The hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan) gave his opinion frankly and honestly. He lives in a part of the country where farmers really deserve the title of professors. He is a thorough farmer, and he says he does not want, and his neighbours who have the benefit of his example, do not want these illustration stations. But, in the province of Quebec, it is quite different, and in the rest of the Dominion it is different, and even in many parts of Ontario the farmers will receive very much benefit from the example they will get. I am sure that all the members on this side, and I believe that many on the other side, will be ready to render justice to the honesty of purpose of the Minister of Agriculture and his devotion to his duty as Minister and to the great cause of agriculture.

Mr. CLANCY. I think my hon. friend has not mastered the process of curing tobacco. Let me tell him that all there is in raising tobacco, after the plant is fully grown and ripened, is to hang it in a good and suitable building, and after it is properly hung, the farmer has no more control over the curing process. There always will be some inferior tobacco grown. I admit much can be done in the way of improving the growth of tobacco in Canada, but I warn my hon. friend that it is the easiest matter in the world for the farmers to grow ten times the quantity of leaf tobacco that will be required in Canada. Last year there was grown more tobacco than was required if we had not imported a pound of foreign leaf. Now, what happened? Why, much of the tobacco leaf was never taken down. I know men who have not touched their tobacco, they have simply left it hanging in the barns as it was put up in the first instance. If they had taken it down and stripped off the leaf, they would have had to put it in what is called hands, and then it has to be taken care of in an entirely different process from that the farmer has hitherto used. After it is cured it goes through the sweating process and then goes into the hands of the middlemen who handle it in all the phases it has to undergo after it leaves the farmer's hands. No farmer pretends to take hold of the tobacco and cure it in all stages. Would my hon. friend pretend to say that he intends to have a station with all its outfit, building and everything required, for the purpose of teaching how to put up tobacco in the first instance? After it has been hung up properly in a building with plenty of room, the farmer has no more control over the quality of that tobacco. It is like growing wheat. When a farmer has harvested his wheat properly he has no more control over the quality of that wheat. But who is my hon. friend going to send to teach the farmers? He might find some one who knew more than the farmers generally. That is always the case. But a farmer can get information from his neighbour just as well, and a great deal better. The fact is that the culture of tobacco, like that of all other plants, is a matter of common sense, depending upon the conditions of the soil, the proper harvesting and hanging up of the plant, and no one can lay down any cast-iron rule to guide the farmer. The farmer must be his own judge, he must know his own land, and it would be impossible for a man one mile away who had experience under different conditions to teach him anything about it. There is no inflexible rule for farming, there is no science of farming standing alone by itself, there is no principle involved that will apply under all circumstances. It depends upon local conditions, upon good judgment and common sense, taking it for granted that the farmer always observes certain rules with regard to rotation, and always keeps his land in a good state of cultivation. The hon. gentleman points out that he is going to confer a boon upon the farmers. In the first place, he has to have a great outfit, but as I have pointed out, the farmers have no interest in their tobacco except to get it ready to go into the hands of the middleman, or possibly of the manufacturer in good condition. Tobacco that leaves the farmer in that stage must go through several other stages. I imagine my hon. friend does not want to take the place of private enterprise. I suppose he would not go further than to teach the farmers how to grow the plant and cure it. Common sense is all that is required for that, a man needs only to be told once. It is a kind of thing that does not require a system of teaching.

The hon. gentleman says that thousands and thousands of dollars have been spent in teaching the people how to make cheese. I tell the hon. gentleman there was not one dollar spent in the province of Ontario teaching the people how to make cheese, the farmers taught themselves, and to-day cheese stands in the English market at its highest point, and did stand at its highest point before anything was taught in the Ontario Agricultural College. So that whatever may have been done in the hon. gentleman's own province, in Ontario we did not have a dollar of assistance from either the province or the Dominion to teach people how to make cheese. As for butter making, the work is going on now. The people are taught by the hard school of experience, and that is always the most useful. Whatever argument the hon. gentleman may make on behalf of his own province, I think I can safely say that in the province of Ontario such an expenditure would be of no value whatever. I am perfectly sure that the hon. gentleman is not well advised in going into this scheme. Gentlemen from his own side of the House are condemning it, gentlemen who are not disposed to take ground against the Government, but their sturdy common sense leads them to oppose it. Can any one imagine that the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan) would rise in his place and oppose, upon any narrow grounds, any scheme that was really in the interests of the farmers? There is no man who knows the needs of the small farmer better than one who has passed through the experiences of a small farmer, and there is not an hon. gentleman in this House who knows better than the hon. member for South Huron what the needs of the small farmer are.

Mr. McMILLAN. I would not have risen again, but the hon. gentleman has brought up the question of cheese manufacturing in Ontario. I paid considerable attention to the progress of the manufacture of cheese in Ontario, and I can tell the hon. gentleman that what brought cheese to the condition that it was in, even before the Dominion Government had taken it up at all, was that the government of the province of Ontario engaged Professor Arnold, an American, to come to the province of Ontario. He collected the cheese-makers of as many of the surrounding factories as he could get together, and gave them practical lessons in the manufacture of cheese, and from that day to the present the cheese industry has been established on a solid basis. I admire the enthusiasm of the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue (Sir Henry Joly de Lotbinière), and when he speaks about the honesty and enthusiasm of the hon. Minister of Agriculture, I believe he is perfectly honest; but enthusiasm often leads men astray and often leads them into lines that are not beneficial to the country. If it is a necessity that farmers should be taught how to raise tobacco, I am perfectly willing that the Government should employ one or two experts, who might go through the province of Ontario, or the Dominion of Canada, wherever the tobacco industry is to be established, who could go amongst the people and give them a far better training than could be imparted at illustration stations. You cannot hire an expert to give instruction in the curing of tobacco at every illustration station throughout the country, but you could employ one or two experts to go amongst the people and train them thoroughly in the curing of the weed, and I think that would be of greater advantage than would result from the establishment of illustration stations. You would require a practical man at every illustration station to make its work effective. With the amount that is proposed in this vote, the hon. Minister could get one or two practical men to go through the country and teach the people thoroughly. I am convinced that in Ontario—and I claim to be as well posted on the feelings of the people of that province as any hon. gentleman in this House, that there is not a majority of the farmers who believe in the establishment of any such illustration stations as these. I know the feeling is, that this would be money spent in vain.

Mr. MCGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, it was not my intention to have taken part in this debate in reference to this small amount of money to be given to the farmers of the county which I have the honour to represent. This is a new county. A large number of the farmers there have not had the advantage that the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan) has had, nor have they had the advantage of having a neighbour such as that hon. gentleman is. They are young men who are starting in life, many of whom have hewn out their own homes, and many of whom have purchased their farms from the sale of timber upon them. What we ask the Government to do is to help us to educate these young men and these middle-aged men, who have made their homes there, how best to make the most money out of their farms. The great object of the Government of the country is to teach the people how best to make the most of the products of the country. We want to fill the country with good people, and we want these people to make money as quickly as possible, because 45 per cent of the population are farmers, and unless the farmer makes money, it is impossible for others to make money, because, after all, agriculture is the source of wealth in Canada. We have in this country what few countries have: we have a fine soil, a fine climate, good water, cheap building material, and markets very near to every farm. That being the case, we have the satisfaction of knowing that if we learn the farmer how to make the best use of his farm, there is not the least doubt but what wealth will accrue rapidly in this country. To establish a small plot would not cost much, and the farmer who owns the land would be instructed how to cultivate it to the best advantage. I believe that instruction as to the cultivation of a farm at Ottawa would have but little effect in improving the cultivation of a farm in Essex. Our climate and our soil are entirely different. We have no objection to a large amount of money being expended here, but we feel that we should have a little more than that. While my hon. friend speaks so nobly of what was done for the cheese industry in his district, when they hired men to go through the district and teach the farmers how to conduct factories, I would tell him that this is nothing more than we ask to have done in regard to the tobacco industry. What we want the Government to do is to have a plot of land set aside with good seed, specially adapted for use in each particular district, and so cultivated as to demonstrate what is best suited for the requirements of each district. I was pleased to hear the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) talk so nobly about tobacco. He had the opportunity of growing a lot of tobacco, but he has not told the committee how it turned out. He has not sold his tobacco yet, so that he does not know where he is at. As my young friend from South Essex (Mr. Cowan) said, we have taken from the soil of North and South Essex, and from a portion of Kent, over half a million dollars in tobacco alone. If we do not grow it in this country, the money of this country, Canada, goes to the south of us for the tobacco that is used. If we can grow that tobacco, it is just as good as that grown to the south of us, and I am satisfied that we can grow it and manufacture it in our own country to the best interests of our own people. If you can get 8,000 acres under crop in tobacco, it would mean the establishment of an industry which amounts to $40 or $50 worth of employment on each acre under crop. We do not want a lecture from the hon. member for Bothwell upon this subject, because he does not know where he is at. We want a man who can plant tobacco, take it from the plant, finish it, take it to the old country, and place it in the markets of the world, where it will compete against the product of the south, and put it up in such a shape as to displace a large amount of tobacco that now comes from the south. This is not asking very much from the Government. It is simply to give a very small amount, and it may not be necessary to spend the whole of this appropriation. Let us try it in a few fields. Let us plant 20 acres in a field under an arrangement by which a farmer takes charge of the field under the advice of the department, and which will result in the instruction of the people there. Last year the department appointed a young man named Labelle. He came amongst us and spoke about the packing and the curing of tobacco. He said: Farmers, had I been here, when the tobacco was being grown, before it was cut, and seen it cut and put into the house; if I had arranged the amount of air space, so as to dry the tobacco properly, instead of getting 5 cents, 6 cents or 7 cents a pound for your tobacco, you should have gotten 12 cents or 14 cents for it. This has been a great loss to us. We want these gentlemen to help us to grow better oats and corn, and to teach us how best to turn down green crops. My hon. friend from Bothwell says we have that now, but you can see on the Experimental Farm that turning down at one date and turning down at another makes an important difference in the crop. We want the greatest advantage that it is possible to be given us in reference to these plots. I feel that the very small amount asked for is not very much to be given to the farmers of this country, when you consider that they are half the population of this country, and that, after all, Canada is bound to be an agricultural country before anything else.

Mr. CASEY. The question now before us seems to have caused a difference of opinion among the representatives of the farming community in the House. Permit me, Sir, to give one or two reasons for thinking that the proposal of the Minister of Agriculture to establish illustration stations, is a step in the right direction. We have long complained of the lack of practical results, from a considerable number of years of experimenting on the different experimental farms in Canada. Experiments have been made and the results have been published and circulated pretty widely; but nothing that can be printed is so convincing to the average farmer as the demonstration of an experiment carried out under his own eye. Then, again, there is the point referred to by my hon. friend from Essex (Mr. McGregor), that experiments carried on at the Ottawa farm are absolutely of no value, even to large portions of the province of Ontario; because the difference between the climate here and the climate in Essex, Kent and Elgin, and other Lake Erie counties, is as great as the difference between the climate of Ottawa and that of Virginia. The results that are obtained here—as I have often told whoever was Minister of Agriculture for the time being—are of absolutely no value to the part of the country in which I live. It therefore follows that the results of experiments here should be tested in different parts of the country, and that can only be done by such stations as my hon. friend (Mr. Fisher) proposes to establish. I understand that there will not be an extensive establishment in each place, but that it is intended to enlist the services of enlightened farmers having good clean productive farms; farmers who will do the work under the inspection of the experimental staff who have tried the experiments here; the products of the crops themselves going to these farmers. There is no doubt at all that these practical illustrations of the results obtained, or thought to be obtained, here, must give a good deal of information to those who see the illustrations carried out. Not all the farmers of Canada, not all the farmers even near to these illustration plots can see them, but in what other way are you to bring the results of our costly experiments at Ottawa home to the farming community, except by establishing a number of such illustration plots throughout the country, and thus giving the farmers a chance to see them? Of course, you cannot force the farmers to go, but you can give them an opportunity of doing so; you can have pic-nics two or three times during the season, and you can have a lecturer present at each of these pic-nics to explain the illustrations and the results obtained.

Something has been said about the production of tobacco in Canada, and in my opinion this is one of the most important questions before the agriculturists of this country to-day. Tobacco-growing has taken a great boom in the peninsula of Ontario generally, and the home market is now being largely filled up. Probably in another year the home market will be more than supplied so far as the demand for that kind of tobacco is concerned. The question will then arise as to whether tobacco growing must stop at that point, or whether there is any hope of making it a progressive industry, like cheese-making, or butter-making, or the raising of grain and fruits. My own idea is that it will follow the course of these other industries in all its phases. There will be first that degree of production that will overstock the home market, the surplus tobacco left on the grower's hands, the fall of price; and then the looking around for foreign markets for this tobacco, which, being obtained, will encourage improvement in manufacture, as in the case of the cheese industry and the butter industry, and some others.

To put it briefly, the only future for the tobacco-growing business in Ontario lies in our being able to export that tobacco in competition with Virginia tobacco in the markets of the world. For my part, I do not see why that result cannot be brought about. The climate of the Ontario peninsula, as I have said, very much resembles that of Virginia. The soil in many parts of Essex, Kent and Elgin is identical with the soil of Virginia; the seed can be imported from Virginia of the most popular kinds of tobacco, the tobacco will grow there, I believe, almost identically the same as it grows in Virginia, and at the time it is cut and the curing commences, no chemist or expert can distinguish between the tobacco grown in Kent, Essex or Elgin, and the tobacco grown in Virginia. But, it is in the curing that the valuable properties of the tobacco are brought out. For instance, you may have two samples of milk; one is made roughly and carelessly into cheese, and you obtain a product of no value; the other is made after the latest scientific methods, and you obtain an article for which as is the case with Canadian cheese, you get the highest price in the English market. The very same thing can be done with our tobacco. We have the soil and the climate, we can get the seed, and what we want is to learn how to cure the raw leaf. I regret that I did not hear the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) speak, for undoubtedly I would have got a lot of information, and I only know enough at the present time to be aware that I am ignorant of how to cure tobacco, although I am a very good judge of the article after it is cured. I am satisfied that if properly cured, as good tobacco can be produced in Canada as we now import from Virginia or Kentucky, whence a large proportion of our supply comes. You will have to do with the tobacco industry as you did with the butter and cheese industry—you will have to spend public money in developing it.

I heard a few of the last remarks of the hon. gentleman from Bothwell (Mr. Clancy), and I believe he was astray when he said that cheese-making had reached its highest point, before any public money was spent in developing and improving its manufacture. I can tell him that Canadian cheese has only attained its present high quality within the last few years or so, and not until long after the Government of Ontario had commenced spending public money in teaching the farmers how to make good cheese. During the whole of the last fifteen years and more, public money has been spent continuously; first by the provincial Government, and then by the Dominion Government, in educating our people how to make cheese, and the result of the expenditure of that public money is that to-day Canada sends to the English market the best article of cheese that enters that market from any foreign country.

Mr. CLANCY. Will my hon. friend (Mr. Casey) say that in the province of Ontario and on the Guelph farm, they ever pretended to teach dairying until the last seven or eight years? Is he not aware that even then they did not teach cheese-making at all?

Mr. CASEY. No, Mr. Chairman, I am not aware that there was no teaching of dairying at the Guelph college until the last seven or eight years. I am aware that there was teaching of dairying long before that.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the hon. gentleman say what year?

Mr. CASEY. I cannot give the exact year in which it began, but I know that more than ten years ago they taught dairying, and I know as much about the Guelph College as my hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) does. I know also that before the Guelph College was undertaken in Ontario, public money was spent in getting the cheese makers together and sending lecturers to instruct them on the best methods of making cheese. Of course, the cheese makers may have put up some money of their own at various times, but I am speaking now entirely of the expenditure of public money, which has been going on for fifteen years and more—the hon. member for Essex (Mr. McGregor) says twenty years, and I think he is probably correct—first, by the province of Ontario, and then by the Dominion copying the example first set by the provincial government.

The result has been to bring that trade to perfection.

I ask that the same thing should be done for the tobacco industry. I ask it in the interest of my own county, which is largely concerned in this industry, and in the interest of neighbouring counties. I urge that experts should be brought from Virginia; I urge that Virginia seed should be brought; I urge that Virginia leaf in the process of curing should be brought and experimented on to see if the Canadian leaf could be influenced by being cured along with the Virginia leaf. Our bacteriological experts at Guelph say that they have found it possible to produce the flavour of June butter at any other period of the year by keeping up the cultivation of the bacteria, so to speak, from the June churnings. The same principle has been proven in regard to the fermentation of wine. The flavour of the article does not depend so much on the nature of the raw material as on the nature of the fermentation produced. Tobacco curing involves a certain amount of fermentation of the leaf, and it is worth trying whether the Virginia fermentation could not be produced in the Canadian tobacco with the result of obtaining the Virginia flavour in the finished product. I think these experiments in tobacco culture should be tried at some central point. For that purpose we want not an illustration station, but an experimental station in the centre of the tobacco-growing part of Ontario. The results obtained by experimenting on our raw leaf at that station should be taught at the illustration stations throughout the district in which tobacco can be profitably grown. Of course, I am only speaking of my own district. I am aware that there are other parts of Canada where tobacco is successfully grown, but I claim that in our particular district the climate is most like that of Virginia. There is no doubt that good tobacco is grown in other parts of Canada. I have lately seen and smoked tobacco from the province of Quebec which is hardly distinguishable from the Virginia article. I think that is capable of improvement also, and I am urging that these experiments in regard to the growing and curing of tobacco should be carried on where tobacco is grown most successfully.

Mr. LOUIS E. DUGAS (Montcalm). (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt, as stated in the course of this debate, that the tobacco growing industry is one of the most important industries in this country, and coming as I do from a rural constituency where the cultivation of tobacco is carried on on a very large scale, I think it my duty to congratulate the Government upon what they have done so far, that is to say, for having imposed 10 cents a pound on foreign tobacco.

Mr. CASEY. (Translation.) May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. DUGAS. When I am done, the honourable member will be at liberty to put his question in French if he likes. (Translation.) When the hon. gentleman interrupted me, I was saying that the Government deserved credit for having imposed a customs duty on foreign tobacco, but, on the other hand, I think they are open to censure for having replaced that duty by an excise duty, because, by so doing, they have reduced that duty from 10 cents to six cents and a half or seven cents. Of course, when a manufacturer buys a pound of American tobacco and he pays for it before taking it over the line; but now, he is allowed to keep that tobacco for two years without paying the duty, so long as he has not manufactured and sold it, thus realizing from three to three and a half per cent, owing to the interest accruing from his money in the bank.

The hon. gentlemen opposite who have referred to tobacco-growing in Canada, have spoken in high terms of the good work done by the present Government. I endorse to some extent what they have said in that respect, but I cannot help pointing out to the hon. gentlemen that they made a mistake, when cutting down the duty. Tobacco-growing is the most important industry in the county I have the honour of representing in this House; and that is the reason why I would urge upon the Government the desirability of encouraging still further the cultivation of tobacco. I congratulate the Government upon having established a model farm in my constituency; but I cannot say anything to the credit of that farm, as I do not know how it is run or whether the expert in charge is competent or not. All I can say is that he has not succeeded so far in growing tobacco. Whether that depends on the climate or not, I cannot say. He may have done his best in that regard, and the Government also may perhaps have done all that could reasonably be expected from them; but, be that as it may, they have at least succeeded in paying a salary to one of their friends, and that was no doubt their chief purpose. It would afford me pleasure to give full credit to the Government for what they have done in the interest of that industry, were it not for the fact that they have substituted an excise duty to the customs duty.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). (Translation.) It is almost past belief that I cannot succeed in making the hon. gentleman understand how matters stand in connection with that duty. What the hon. gentleman is complaining about is that we allow those who import foreign leaf tobacco to pay the duty imposed upon it at the very moment when they turn it into use in their factories. That is what was always done in connection with the duty levied on imported tobacco. The importer of tobacco brings in that product from abroad, and then it is warehoused. He is then allowed to manufacture that tobacco and it is only when he is ready to sell that we collect the duty. It is perfectly fair to collect the duty from the manufacturer who imports large quantities of tobacco from abroad, say 10,000 or 20,000 and perhaps as much as 30,000 pounds, which he does not require for immediate use, only at the moment when he places his product upon the market and realizes such large sums as he may have invested in the same. He is allowed to put his tobacco in the bonded warehouses and to pay the excise duty, in proportion as he takes it out—

Mr. DUGAS. (Translation.) It is the interests of the manufacturer you are protecting, to the prejudice of the interests of the farmer.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. (Translation.) The hon. gentleman says that we are fostering the interests of the manufacturer, to the prejudice of the interests of the farming community, and therein he shows that he has not yet grasped the question. He forgets that foreign tobacco has to pay an excise duty of 10 cents a pound, in addition to the twenty-five cents levied on manufactured tobacco, or in all thirty-five cents, over and above an additional tax of 4 cents, when the manufacturer uses stemmed tobacco; that is to say, that the duty reaches 39 cents, while native manufactured tobacco only pays a duty of five cents a pound.

The hon. gentleman wants the Government to call upon the manufacturer to pay the duty before using in his factory the imported tobacco. Such a course would be inconsistent with every principle of justice and right; and ever since the Government have levied a duty on tobacco, they have invariably collected it at the moment when that product was placed upon the market.

Mr. DUGAS. (Translation.) Is it not true that, when you allow the manufacturer to warehouse his tobacco, you protect him?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. (Translation.) If the hon. gentleman is unwilling to admit the services the Government has rendered the farming community, I cannot help it.

Mr. DUGAS. (Translation.) Is it not true that the manufacturer pays the duty only when he offers his tobacco for sale, and that prior to that, the duty was paid, before crossing the line?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. (Translation.) We are not Jews, we are Christians, and we only require the manufacturer to pay the duty, when he realizes by his sales the large sums invested by him in imported tobacco, and that is only fair and reasonable.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). (Translation.) I would remind my
SIR HENRI JOLY DE LOTBINIERE.

hon. friend from Montcalm that the rule followed as to the payment of the duty which is levied on tobacco does not differ at all from that carried out in connection with every other imported article. As my hon. friend knows very well, those who import iron, grain or any other commodity, are allowed to leave those products in the warehouses, and they are only called upon to pay the duty when those goods are offered for sale, and it is only when the goods are taken out of the warehouse to enter into use that the duty is levied.

Mr. DUGAS. (Translation.) I am well aware of what the right hon. gentleman has just stated. It is true that you thus give all the desirable facilities to the manufacturers and to the importers of tobacco. But is it not true that when that duty of ten cents was imposed, the same manufacturer, when importing his tobacco from abroad, had to pay to the customs so much a pound?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. (Translation.) Not at all; he could leave his tobacco in the customs warehouse as long as he pleased. It would remain there one, two or three years, until needed. I hope my hon. friend will explain the matter to his electors.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. Minister of Agriculture, after this discussion, must have arrived at the conclusion that he is without any real support in this House, so far as his proposal to establish illustration stations is concerned. There seems to be a different opinion with regard to tobacco growing. That is an important question, and I think the suggestion of the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan) is deserving of attention, and that is that it would be well to take such a portion of the appropriation as would be necessary to obtain the services of thoroughly skilled experts in tobacco. But so far as the farming stations are concerned, I have heard nothing in their favour approaching to an argument from anybody. The tobacco question is an important one, the model farm will have to do the other work, and the establishing of small illustration stations in various localities will simply mean the expenditure of some $15,000 to $20,000 a year, which will be very satisfactory to the officials appointed by the Government, and who will take the larger portion of the appropriation for their expenses and salaries, but will be of no general utility at all to the country. The speech of my hon. friend from South Huron, who speaks with a thorough knowledge of the subject, ought to be conclusive. He says the vote for such appropriation is altogether unwarranted, because the higher class of farmers afford, by their advanced means of cultivation, much better instruction than could be given by means of these stations, and all that the neighbouring farmers have to do is to go and see what these men are doing and that will cost the country nothing. But the suggestion is well worthy of consideration of getting two or three, or whatever number may be found absolutely necessary, experts who would be able to give the best possible advice to people engaged in the cultivation of tobacco. I hope my hon. friend will see his way clear to drop the other portion of the vote, or else let the committee divide, so as to show who are in favour of and who are opposed to this large and absolutely useless expenditure.

Mr. PRIOR. This tobacco industry is of such great importance, that I do not like to let this discussion go without saying a few words on the subject. The hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) said he knew there was good tobacco grown in Quebec and Ontario, but he seems to have forgotten, if he ever knew, that there is another portion of the country which grows splendid tobacco, and that is British Columbia. The hon. Minister of Inland Revenue will agree with me when I say that we are now growing as good tobacco in British Columbia as can be found anywhere else in the Dominion. There is the large district of Kelowna, at the south of Okanagan Lake, not very far from the boundary line, where tobacco is grown just as successfully as anywhere in Ontario. Some gentlemen there have taken great interest in this industry, and put a great deal of money into it. I do not know whether the curing there is better than anywhere else in Ontario, but I know that the tobacco is very highly appreciated by the Department of Inland Revenue. As the industry is of such importance and there is no end to the extent it may attain, because there is practically an unlimited demand for good tobacco, I should very much like to see the Government bring down a vote either to have experimental stations established for that purpose or getting the best advice procurable, so that our farmers may learn how best to grow and cure the plant. I think $2,000 altogether too small a sum for the whole of Canada to be devoted to such a purpose, and I trust the Government will see its way clear to assist these men who are trying to do their best to advance this industry into the position it ought to attain.

Mr. BRODER. I question the advisability of starting farmers' kindergarten schools in this country. There is one thing the department ought to guard against, and that is being too quick to change their theories and practice. You cannot ask a farmer to change his conditions every year. You cannot expect him to adopt new means and systems of agriculture every year or two in order to follow the advice and suggestions of the Agriculture Department, because his conditions are more permanent than those of any other class, and he cannot change his buildings and surroundings without considerable expense.

Now, in the illustration stations suggested by the Minister of Agriculture, and foreshadowed before the Committee of Agriculture a year ago, if I mistake not, the intention, as I understand, is not to put the farmer under the instruction of some expert, but to get some farmer in the community who is a good farmer and get him to set apart not less than ten and not more than twenty acres of land for the purpose of showing the kind of grain which, in that locality, is most largely grown. For instance, we come to a locality where oats are most largely grown, and the intention is to get him to grow oats of different kinds, in order to show what kind of oats is better for that locality. But who is to give instructions as to the selection of the field or the kind of soil you are to sow this grain upon? If a man goes out and buys a new farm, one with which he has had no previous acquaintance, he can do very little until he learns the nature of the soil in every field of that farm. In arranging for this illustration station, are you going to send out a man from the Experimental Farm to make the inspection? If you do he will have to get information from the man who owns the farm when he gets there. But you must take care that the conditions are such that the experiment will not be a failure. One experiment attempted under the auspices of the Government resulting in failure will do harm that you cannot recover from for years. As suggested by the report of the Agriculture Committee a year ago, the proposal is not to keep that illustration station on one farm continually, but only for a year or two. But in order to make it a success, you have to make what may be called permanent improvements, and these permanent improvements must be abandoned when you move to some other farm. You can go to the farm of my hon. friend from South Huron (Mr. McMillan) and find all these conditions there, but in many sections of the country you can go through a whole township where you will not find a single farm tile drained so that you could raise a crop that would be a credit to the Government undertaking the experiment. If there were a failure, it would bring the Government control of the Experimental Farm at Ottawa into contempt. That is something the hon. Minister ought to think of before undertaking this enterprise. Then you are going to use the schoolhouse. Now, the school system of Ontario unfortunately is educating the young people away from the farm rather than toward it. Next to the schoolhouse which is educating the people away from the farm you are going to start an illustration station to educate them back to it. Is that the idea? You must begin at the foundation and teach the boys not to regard it as a disgrace to work in the fields with their father, to teach the girls that it is no disgrace to work in the kitchen with their mother. This will require something more fundamental than an illustration station. The best educator in this country is the successful farmer, each in his own community. This man has done more than the Government, and he is the man that the people look to. If you ask such a man to appropriate twenty acres of his farm to the growth of certain crops, and to give his time to the care of them—for it will take great care to make sure of the experiment being a success—and to explain the work to the people who come, he cannot afford to do all this for $100. If the people do not go there, no good will be done, and if they do go and are not attended to, they will not feel that they have been fairly treated. We all know that the French Government believe in paternal government, they expect the government to look after them. Is that the condition you want to bring about in Canada? I should say you want to teach the farmers to be more independent so they will be able to look after themselves. It is an absurd idea that the farmer must be kept in leading strings by the hon. Minister. The hon. gentleman will run across many hard-headed men, and he had better be careful what he attempts to teach. Many a young man goes out to teach theology, and if he gets into a schoolhouse in the back districts among a lot of hard-headed Scotchmen, he cannot teach bad doctrine and palm it off half as well as he can in the city. And in the same way, if a professor goes into a farming section and attempts to teach that bad farming doctrine, he will get into bad repute with his audience and will have to come back a sadder but a wiser man. We will have to look this matter squarely in the face. The conditions surrounding our Experimental Farm are such that that institution is of greatest use to the man who has time to read and the means to carry on experiments to adopt what he learns from the farm to the conditions that surround him. But the man who most needs help is the poor struggling farmer, perhaps, with a load of debt, with two or three cows and a very poor building to put them in. But where does he look for help? To the Experimental Farm or the illustration stations? No, he will go to his well-to-do neighbour whom he respects and whom he knows to be a successful man, and from him he will get a little help in the way of an advance of seed grain or a loan of farm implements. If we undertake these experiments and carry them out in every county, it means an enormous expenditure of money, with very little good resulting from it. It is better far to build up your centres, to make your experimental farms in Ontario and other provinces thoroughly successful. If it is necessary to spend more money to accomplish this, take the money. Better this than undertake these little experiments under the criticism of hard-headed farmers. There is lots of work for you to do in these Experimental Farms. It hardly does for a woman who does not keep her own house well to start out to teach her neighbour woman how to keep hers. Apparently they do not care to have the people come and criticise the work at the Experimental Farm. A man who knows anything about trees and orchards can go out and find just about the worst orchard in the country on the Experimental Farm. If a man wants to find things out of order, he can find them out of order at the farm. These things should not be. Make your centres strong, make them that they ought to be a credit to this country and the means of impressing every critic who comes, and if you want to make these centres of use, if you want to spend money on the farmer, give him a free ride—of course I mean about election time—down to the Experimental Farm so that he may see what is going on. Instead of sending the Gospel to him, bring him to the gospel, and let him see the work of a farm in its entirety. What does he care about twenty acres of oats or of four or five different kinds. He will probably see 500 acres of better oats on the way in to look at those of the illustration station. He will pass five better farms on the way to see this. Bring him up where he can see the whole business under proper conditions. The very moment you undertake to show him this station, you discredit the respect he has for what is being done here at Ottawa. It is a kind of familiarity that will breed contempt. You will put this illustration into the hands of a man whom nobody in the community knows much about, and you will find twenty farmers all around that man who know a great deal more than he does. Will that do any good? Why, every one of these men that knows more than he does, will criticise him, and he will be discredited all over that community. The farmer is no novice. Men talk here as though he were not fit to go out into the daylight. You never made a bigger mistake. There is no more inquiring class in this country than the intelligent farmers. They can take an idea just as quickly as any other man, and if you want to find that out, just touch them on matters that interest them. As in this House, some members will get up and talk about something that nobody will listen to, but the moment you strike anything interesting, every man will hear you. So it is with the farming community. You go out into the farming community, and talk about a lot of things the farmers do not care a straw about, and they do not give you much of a hearing; but touch on anything that they are interested in, and you will get a hearing, and you will get criticism, too, perhaps, that will send you back a good deal wiser than when you left home.

There is no doubt the farmers of this country are realizing that they have to stand largely on their own resources, and use the best means within their reach, if they are going to succeed. While they realize that there is a great deal of help given them through suggestions from our farm here, what the Government are now proposing to establish, unless these stations fall into the hands of intelligent men, men who are honest in carrying out the propositions laid down, they are going to be a failure. I was surprised at an idea I saw in the report, on page 45, I think it was. The hon. member for West Toronto made the suggestion that farmers' institutes, instead of holding the meeting up in the hall, should come down on this plot of ground and hold their meeting there. I think it was suggested by a member of the committee. But what if the plot has produced a bad crop? Prof. Robertson said: If it is a bad crop, it will show that there was something wrong either in the seed or in the conditions. But this year he, Prof. Robertson, has got away from that theory; there is nothing wrong in the seed; it is all in the conditions; only a year ago that statement was made. I want to say that we have got to stick to some sound theories and follow them out successfully, if we are going to lead the farmers forward. He cannot change his theories and his practice with a snap of the finger. You have got to pursue some consistent course, settle on the best that it is possible to get, and then attempt to carry it out. The individual farmer in the community who is successful, and whom the people know—he is the man that is influencing the public in reference to this business, he is the man that the people look to, he is the man whom they follow. I know myself men who are good farmers, and who have commenced to follow these new theories, and the whole community will wait three, or four, or five years to find out whether that man is wise or not, and if they find out he is wise, they will begin to follow him. That is the position things are in to-day. The farmers have object lessons all through this country in the successful farmer, and he is a better object lesson than anything that can be got up by this Government.

I think, if I mistake not, the number of these stations in France is said to be about 4,000. What is the cost of them in France? I think it was $60 that each of these stations cost. Does any man pretend to say that you can carry out an illustration station in this country at a cost of $60? No, nor $300. Unless you make these illustration stations permanent in a sense, with proper drainage and all equipments, they will be a failure, they will hurt the whole business in this country. Now, I want to show you one thing. You ask a man to go and raise four or five different kinds of oats on this piece of ground. In order to see what the results are, he has to take them into the barn and thresh them. Are you going to ask a man to have four or five different compartments in his barn in order to store away these different kinds of grain, or is he going to put them indiscriminately into his barn along with his other grain? He cannot do it; he must keep them separate; every kind must be kept separate in his barn. So you see, there will be an outlay necessary, and you will have to incur expenses that you do not foresee. It is all very well to talk about experimental stations all over a country the size of Canada, but the thing is not practicable. The money spent on that can be better used in the interest of the agricultural community in some other direction. As I said before, make your experimental farms a complete success and give the people the results of your experiments; and, if it is necessary to assist them to get to these farms and see what they are like, why, give them some help to go there. It is better than spending money to show them something they will not like. They will not travel across a township to see a few acres of oats; they want to see something bigger than that. The farmer will say to his neighbour: I have been up to Tom Jones to see his 20 acres of oats, and Nicholas Richards up here has a good deal better field of oats, with no money spent on it either, and no inspection from the Government or anybody else. This is the way they will talk; they will look upon these stations as all nonsense. The intelligent farmer will conclude, quite naturally, that if these stations are a failure, the big Experimental Farm must be no better; he will reason from the lesser to the greater, like all theologians do. It is like the boy whom the lady undertook to teach Scripture. She taught him the first day about the whale swallowing Jonah, which he was willing to believe. The next day she tried to make him believe that 5,000 men were fed on five loaves and two fishes. He rebelled at this and he told her: I believed your story yesterday, but now I don't believe either story. That is about the position of the farmer: he is believing your story now about this Experimental Farm up here, but, when he sees these illustration stations at his own door, he will not believe either of them. He is no fool. I tell the Minister of Agriculture that there is not a practical farmer in this House will speak in favour of his scheme. The strongest condemnation of the whole business is, that not a practical farmer in this House believes in the scheme. That is all I have to say about it, and I hope it will die a natural death.

Mr. J. A. C. ETHIER (Two Mountains). (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I am not a farmer, but I live among farmers, and I have the honour of representing here the most essentially agricultural constituency in the province of Quebec.

I am really surprised to see that this vote has elicited so much discussion and that the opposition to this item emanates from hon. members on both sides of the House. The hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) asks the House to give him this vote of $20,000 for the purpose of establishing in different parts of the country what are called illustration stations. This is a new experiment that no Government, in this country had so far, attempted to carry out.

While extravagant expenditures are incurred every year for public works, in the interest of large centres of population, it is, unfortunately, too true that under former Governments, hardly anything was expended for promoting agriculture, and yet, if there is any department of industry which, more than any other, deserves a liberal appropriation, it is that of agriculture, which constitutes the chief source of national wealth.

If I understand aright, the intention of the Minister of Agriculture is that this item of $20,000 be applied to create emulation among farmers in the different portions of the country. Considerable sums of money are voted every year for experimental farms, and in the Estimates under consideration, an appropriation of $80,000 is made for the maintenance of five experimental farms. These institutions are certainly a credit to the country and they are deserving of all our encouragement. Still, I think it would be advisable to have such farms established on a smaller scale throughout the country, and such is the intention of the Minister of Agriculture in asking the House to give him this vote of $20,000 for the establishment of illustration stations. As farmers in general are not able to come to our experimental farms at Ottawa or elsewhere, in order to see what is going on at those farms, a good many are inclined to carp at the expenditures as useless; but I believe that if we had illustration stations established throughout the different provinces, it would be a boon to the farming community.

The hon. member from Dundas (Mr. Broder) and the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan) contend that those illustration stations would be of no practical utility to the farmers in their respective constituencies and that they are not needed. Well, Sir, speaking here in the name of the farmers of the province of Quebec, I may tell the hon. gentlemen that, if they are willing to give up their share of this appropriation, the farmers in the province of Quebec, and especially in the county of Two Mountains will only be too glad to benefit by it.

The hon. member for Montcalm (Mr. Dugas), who represents a tobacco-growing district, spoke, a little while ago, of the cultivation of tobacco as a national industry. Let me tell him that this industry would be immensely benefited by the establishment of those illustration stations. In the county of Joliette, as well as in the county of Montcalm, tobacco-growing has become a well established and paying home industry. But, this year, I am sorry to say, the price of tobacco has fallen, and I think I know why the cultivation of tobacco will not be profitable. It is because the farmers in the province of Quebec do not know how to cure tobacco. The parish of Saint-Jacques, in the county of Montcalm, is the chief tobacco-growing centre.

Mr. DUGAS (Montcalm). (Translation.) If the hon. gentleman will allow me to interrupt him, I did not criticise the establishment of model farms in the various counties of the province, but I did congratulate the Government upon having established one in the county of Montcalm.

Mr. ETHIER. (Translation.) I agree that the hon. gentleman did not criticise the establishment of model farms; but I was referring to the establishment of illustration stations, and I said that it would be a great benefit to the farmers in the county of Two Mountains to have those stations, and we should, I think, all unite in favour of a scheme which would prove a boon to the farming community.

Improved methods of culture is what our farmers mostly need; and nothing would contribute more to their education than the establishment of illustration stations where farmers would get object lessons in farming. As a rule, our farmers are too busy and besides cannot afford to spend five or six dollars to come and visit the Experimental Farm at Ottawa, in order so that they may see the work that is done and find out how it is done. We are going to vote $80,000 for these Experimental Farms and after all that expenditure may not prove as beneficial and useful to the farming community as the contemplated trial stations might prove. The hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) is no doubt conferring a boon upon the farming community and is taking a step in advance, by introducing this measure. It may be said to the credit of the Government of the day that they have done a great deal for the agricultural classes. Under such circumstances, I hope no dissentient voice will be heard in this House against this measure which aims at benefiting the agricultural population.

This is a new proposition in the Estimates. Take, for instance, the district of Terrebonne, which is composed of the counties of Two Mountains, Terrebonne and Argenteuil; I do not think you would find there a single man disposed to offer any objection to this appropriation. Supposing a station were established at St. Scholastique, the county town of Two Mountains, where farmers have to go four or five times a year on judicial, municipal or other business, the Government might spend a thousand dollars at that place, out of this appropriation of $20,000, for establishing an illustration station. Now, does it not stand to reason that such a station would prove a great benefit to the farmers, who would go and see the work carried on at that station? They would go there to acquire some information such as is afforded by these stations, in order to improve their ideas of farming.

Possibly this new system might not result as favourably as is anticipated, but what harm is there in making the trial?

We ought to be thankful to the Government for offering the farming population a means of improving their methods of cultivation. This appropriation means a sum of $20,000 offered by the Government to the farming community, and when we are voting away millions of dollars for wharfs and other public works in large centres, I fail to see why we should oppose this appropriation, which is calculated to benefit the agricultural population. It seems to me that all those who take an interest in the welfare of the agricultural industry should vote, without one dissentient vote, this appropriation, which the Minister of Agriculture asks the House to give him, in order to make this trial.

Mr. GILMOUR. Mr. Chairman, had the Government asked for $20,000 for the purpose of establishing additional experimental stations throughout the country, I would have no objection, but when they go into the illustrating business they are going out of their proper latitude, and they are going where they should not go. This is going to be a very costly way of imparting information. I believe that experimental stations might have been established with profit in this country, because we have such a variety of climates and conditions of soil that experimental stations would serve a good purpose in the testing of seeds suited to different conditions and localities, but as for illustration stations, made up of twenty-acre plots on the roadside, established everywhere throughout the country, I cannot understand how they will be of any practical utility. At what stage would the farmer see them? He would have to see them at the time the crop is put in, and how many farmers could possibly spare the time to go and see them then? What would be the advantage even if it were possible for them to see them? If the farmers of Canada were a people who could not read, if there were no papers printed in this country for the dissemination of information, it might be necessary to carry these illustrations to them and place them before their noses in order to show the results of the experiments which have been carried on at the farms, but when you have the opportunity of testing the seeds and of making the information available through the press, you have the best means of illustrating the results to the farmers. Give them the seed and they will know how to put it in, grow it, and harvest it. This is going to be a very costly undertaking. It has been urged that $20,000 is not much, and that, if you would make a grant, it will show our confidence in the Minister. This is neither a question of $20,000 nor of confidence in the Minister. It should be borne in mind that, while they are only asking for $20,000 to-day, the intention of the Government is to extend this system to every county in the Dominion. It means a large expenditure, and if it were for any purpose that would benefit the farmers of the country, I would have no objection to offer, but no good can result from the establishment of illustration stations in every county in the Dominion. A county is probably forty miles square, and with a twenty-acre plot in the midst of each county, how many farmers are going to see it at the time it should be seen? A great deal has been said in regard to the tobacco industry. If it is necessary to teach the people how to cure and manufacture tobacco, I have no objection to sending experts to show them how to do these things, but I do not see any necessity of establishing an illustration plot in order to show them how to grow it. The farmers of Canada are not so dull as some hon. members would have them to be. They all understand without being shown in that kind of way. I object to this expenditure, and I do not hesitate, as representing an agricultural constituency, to move that the item be struck out.

Mr. CARGILL. Mr. Chairman, I have listened very attentively to the speeches which have been made in this committee upon this appropriation, which has been proposed in the interest of the agricultural community. I may say that there is no member of this committee who would rise with more pleasure to support an appropriation which was in the true interest of the agricultural community of this country, but, after listening to the speeches that have been made this afternoon, I am not yet convinced that the establishment of these illustration farms throughout the country would be likely to advance the welfare of the agricultural community. I happen to be a member of the Committee on Agriculture. This matter was brought up before that committee a year ago, or over a year ago. We had at that committee a gentleman than whom, I have no hesitation in saying, that if I had a proposal that I wished to carry to a successful issue, after having given him the details of it, there is no man in this country I would more readily engage as an advocate, and that gentleman is Prof. Robertson. But upon that occasion he failed to convince the Agricultural Committee that the proposition for the establishment of industrial farms throughout the length and breadth of this country would be in the interest of the farming community of the country. If my memory serves me aright I do not think there was any single member of that committee who approved of the proposition on that occasion. I may be mistaken, but that is my recollection at the present time. I believe that the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) has the interests of the farming community at heart. I believe that he is sincere in asking for this vote, but I do not wonder at his action, because Prof. Robertson will succeed in convincing any man who listens to his persuasive voice, that any proposition which he has made would be about right. I do not say this to reflect upon Prof. Robertson; he is a very capable man; I have no doubt that he has thought this matter out carefully and has come to the conclusion that it would be in the interest of the farming community. But we know that Prof. Robertson has made a proposition to the Agricultural Committee, and that the results which he anticipated and led the people to believe that they would realize, have not materialized. I refer to the question of shipping frozen beef to the old country. The people were led to believe that the adoption of this proposal would bring such a revolution in the beef market that the farmers would be enabled to realize from $8 to $10 per head for each bullock more than they realize by shipping their cattle to the old country alive. The expenditure of this amount of money will not really initiate the matter, because it is proposed to establish illustration farms in every county in the Dominion of Canada, in which there are probably 200 counties, and this appropriation would only give each farm $100. It is a mere trifle, and although the vote is small to commence operations, before we get through, as some of my hon. friends have said, it will be a failure and it will bring the experimental farms at Ottawa and Guelph into disrepute. Is there any necessity for this? We have an experimental farm at Ottawa, one at Guelph, one in each province in the Dominion, dairy reports, agricultural reports and bulletins published at the expense of the country and distributed broadcast. When the farmers of the country have an opportunity of getting hold of these reports and reading them carefully, in their own homes, they can carry out these experiments on their own farms, and I am satisfied that they will receive more benefit in that way than they possibly could by the establishment of these illustration farms in their own neighbourhood. In the county of Huron and the county of Bruce, I am prepared to say that you will find farmers who have a superior practical agricultural knowledge to that possessed by any professor we have at the head of any experimental farm; men who have a practical knowledge, and who are a model and pattern to their neighbours, and their neighbours may benefit by going and visiting them, which they do at present. The idea of a man giving up 20 or 25 acres of the best land he has on his farm to be devoted to experimental plots of different varieties of seed, is absurd. If these stations succeed and the farmer has a number of people coming to visit him his time and attention will be taken away from his own farming and must be devoted to this. No farmer could undertake to carry it out successfully without a remuneration of $400 or $500 a year. The more successful these stations are the more this farmer's neighbours will come to visit him, and he will have to provide stable accommodation for their horses, and probably to take half a dozen in and give them their dinner on the one day. At Ottawa you can take a street car and get to the Experimental Farm for 5 cents and return to your hotel, but in the rural sections there will be no such accommodation for these people, and the man owning this experimental station will have to entertain the visitors. This proposition is, in my opinion, not in the interests of the farming community. If the amount were five times what it is some good might possibly come of it, but I, as representing a rural constituency, feel it my duty to oppose this vote.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think this demands a little explanation from me before allowing the matter to go any further. I can see from the tenor of the discussion that a large number of the members of this House do not understand the proposition as well as I would like them to do before deciding upon it. While this is a new proposition in the Estimates, the principle of it has been adopted by us in other matters. As a matter of fact, the whole outside work of Prof. Robertson as Dairy Commissioner has been really a method of illustration so that the farmers of the country might be able to see what is actually done, and to put into practice the object lessons given them. When first Prof. Robertson was made Dairy Commissioner, he established cheese factories in certain parts of the country where the cheese industry had never been introduced. The people of the neighbourhood saw the successful operation of the cheese factories, and they themselves went to work to reap the advantages to be derived from adopting these methods. Later on, Prof. Robertson undertook in a similar way to demonstrate the advantage of winter dairying in Canada, and having established in the province of Ontario two or three factories, the people learned from them, and the winter dairying industry became an accomplished fact. For years before, the question of winter dairying had been discussed in farmers' institutes and favoured by these institutes, but until the farmers had the object lesson presented to them of successful winter dairying, they did not take up the industry which has now become so profitable. As a matter of fact, the object of this vote is to apply just the same system to the products of the soil. We know that there is no method by which the people will learn so well and so thoroughly as by seeing demonstrated before their eyes, the theories which have been preached to them. If in different sections of the country we are able to show a good crop grown under the new method, alongside a poor crop grown under the old, is it not proper to assume that the farmers will adopt the new method. Although, as I have said, this is a new proposition in this particular application, the principle of it has been for years carried on in this country. I am correct in saying, I think, that in the different parts of the country, and notably in the North-west Territories and Manitoba, the farmers who live in close proximity to the experimental farms, are carrying on their agricultural operations better than in the more remote districts. I venture to say that the farmers in the counties of Wellington and Huron, the representatives of which have said this thing is not necessary, have reaped the advantages of seeing these illustrations worked out on the Guelph Farm. If to-day the farms in Wellington County and that neighbourhood are amongst the best in Ontario, it is, I believe, largely due to the object lessons which the farmers there have had an opportunity of witnessing at the Guelph Experimental Farm. Permit me to say that this is not entirely an experiment, because it has been successfully carried out in other countries. Hon. gentlemen have stated that the conditions existing in this country are different from those existing in France, and therefore that the example of France is of no use to us. It is true that the conditions in France are different, but they are different in the respect that they make these illustration stations of less value in France than they would be in Canada. France is a small country in comparison with this great expanse of the Dominion; in France the distances are small, the means of communication rapid and easy, and the French farmers can visit the agricultural schools and illustration stations with greater facility than can the people living in this vast extent of Canadian territory. But, Sir, it is not only in France that these illustration stations have been successfully carried on. As I said in my opening remarks, illustration stations of a similar character to those we propose have been adopted in England. For a number of years past agriculture has been in a depressed condition in Great Britain, but individual farming in England is the best in the world, and I say with great deference to some of my hon. friends that there is no part of the province of Ontario which is better farmed than the lowlands of Scotland and certain portions of England. Yet, in these districts of England and Scotland, there are illustration stations for the benefit of the best farmers in the world. Although the portion of Ontario which has been referred to contains the best farming land probably on the whole continent of America, yet I would not insult the farmers there by telling them that there is nothing they can learn in connection with their business. Even the best farmers in the province of Ontario can find new things from which they can learn, although I fancy that in that part of Ontario, these illustration stations are not as necessary as in other portions of Canada. Still, I venture to say that in other parts of the country there might be a need of object lessons to show the people the advantages of certain methods and certain systems. I do not wish for a moment to imply or suggest that these illustration stations shall be carried on entirely by theorists or what are called scientific agriculturists. The object is to get practical men to carry on the work, but at the same time to apply to that work the results of the experiments at the experimental stations. If we can do that and show that one crop can be grown to greater advantage than another, or that by a certain method of treatment one field can be made to produce more than an adjoining field of the same character when treated in a different way, that would be of the utmost advantage to the farmers who see it. In this country we are to-day in a transition stage in regard to agriculture. We have been spending vast sums of money on agricultural development and study, as all the people of this continent have been doing. The day is past for any farmer to regard his own individual experience as the only teaching he requires. That was the case to a large extent in past days. It has ceased to be the case amongst farmers as it has in other professions or businesses. To-day the farmer who uses his intelligence and skill for the improvement of his farm and his methods of cultivation, must learn from the experience of other people as well as from his own. To give him the advantage of an object lesson derived from the experience of other people is one of the objects of these illustration stations.

Now, I would refer to one or two points that have been brought up in this discussion. I have been told that no good practical farmer would allow his farm to be used for this purpose. I can only say that since this item appeared first in the Estimates a couple of months ago, I have received a large number of applications from all parts of this country, suggesting localities where these farms might be established, showing that there is a large interest in the question and a large number of people who are willing and even eager to take advantage of this proposal. These applications have come specially from the province of Quebec, the maritime provinces and the great west. Some also have come from the eastern part of the province of Ontario. I do not remember at the moment whether any has come from the western part of Ontario; but even supposing there has not, these applications indicate that in a large portion of this country there is a feeling that this illustration work will aid the farmers to carry on their work better than they have been able to do in the past. Therefore, I think it can fairly be concluded that while there may be some people who think they know sufficient not to require any aid, or that their section of the country is adequately supplied with model farms, there are other large areas where this work would do good and is demanded. One reason why I took up this proposition was in consequence of a large number of applications that were made to me for an extension of the experimental farm system. I have had applications from east and west, Prince Edward Island and from New Brunswick, asking that experimental farm branches should be established in those provinces, where to-day there are none; from the Island of Cape Breton, where the people said that the Nappan experiment did them little good, because the conditions were different; from the Lake St. John district, from the south shore of the St. Lawrence, from the Eastern Townships, and from the valley of the St. Lawrence, saying that the farmers of those sections were not able to come to the Experimental Farm at Ottawa, and see such improved methods as they would like to see, and, therefore, asking me to establish other branch farms; from Western Ontario, near the lakes, saying that the Experimental Farm was too far north to be of any advantage to them; from New Ontario, saying that the work was of no value to them and asking for an experimental farm there; from south-western and eastern Manitoba and from almost every section of the North-west Territories, asking for the establishment of other branches; from Vancouver Island, and the Kootenay country in British Columbia, showing a demand from all parts of the country for an extension of the system of branch farms. I saw that it was impossible to meet that demand by any expenditure which this Parliament would be likely to sanction; but I did feel that by the adoption of a proposition of this kind I would be able to meet it to a certain extent, and accomplish a certain amount of the good that was expected from the establishment of other branch farms; and if the system were found to be a success, it could be extended until there should be one such establishment in every county of the Dominion.

Mr. McDOUGALL. May I ask the hon. Minister a question? In what form were those applications for experimental stations at different points? The hon. gentleman referred to applications from Cape Breton and Prince Edward Island. Did they come from farmers?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In some instances they came from organizations of farmers and in some instances from localities.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I suppose from people who wanted offices and wanted to sell farms?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, I did not receive any such applications that I can remember. Some hon. gentlemen opposite seem to think that this work is proposed entirely to create offices.

Mr. FISHER.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. leader of the Opposition says "hear, hear." I regret to see that spirit displayed by hon. gentlemen opposite, because I can assure them that there is nothing of the kind.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. About $10,000 out of the $20,000 is for offices.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I can assure hon. gentlemen that Prof. Robertson has been carrying on work of a similar kind in the country, and that up to this time no suspicion has been suggested of his being a partisan. This work will be carried on in the same way as we have been carrying on the dairy work. I would ask my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island who spoke about the dairy work there, whether Prof. Robertson carried on that work for political purposes, or accomplished any political ends by it. I would point out, as that hon. member did, that this is simply a continuation of the illustration work in connection with the dairy industry, which was begun in Prince Edward Island. The establishment of the first cheese factory in Prince Edward Island was an illustration for dairy work just as these will be for working the land.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that when people wanted instructions at the dairy, there was no one there to give it to them, but that they found a barbed wire fence with crops growing inside of it, and no person about the place to give them an illustration? That is not the way the dairy work was carried on in Prince Edward Island.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman evidently does not quite understand the whole proposition. The dairy work is carried on in factories, and the people go there and see the work and find out how it is done. In the case of these illustration stations, they will see the crops and the results. If the hon. gentleman will listen, I will explain how the scheme will be worked. I provide for inspectors, who will go and see the work carried on at the different stations. When the inspector visits a station, notice will be given to the farmers of the neighbourhood beforehand that he will be there on a certain day, inviting them to come, and informing them that he will explain the system, with the object lesson of the results before them. These stations are to be situated along the sides of the highway, where people would naturally pass most freely. There would be placards put up, explaining what the crops are and the different treatment and methods, so that the individual farmer would be able to see at a glance the meaning of the illustration, whether the farmer in charge was present at the time or not. One

hon. gentleman opposite explained how efficient the illustration stations are to-day, provided by individual farmers in different parts of the country; how their neighbours could visit their farms at any time and find out for themselves how the work was done. But at the same time he said, in case of the illustration stations, the neighbouring farmers could not possibly find out anything, unless the farmers in charge were there to advise them. So that, in the same breath, he said that the thing that could be done in the case of a private farm could not be done in the case of an illustration station established by this Government. The hon. member for King's, P.E.I., explained the advantage of the illustration work done by the Government in dairying on his island, and how similar work in other branches could be carried on successfully. I value the opinion of this hon. gentleman as that of one who has seen the good effects of these illustration stations in the work of dairying carried on in the Island of Prince Edward. Some remarks have been made with regard to curing tobacco. That question is one which is pretty closely bound up with this illustration work. If it is desirable to give illustrations of the way in which tobacco ought to be grown and cured, it is equally desirable to give illustrations of the way in which other crops should be cultivated. Of course the one work can be done without the other, but at the same time the argument which applies to the one is equally applicable to the other. One gentleman has said that he would like to see experts brought in for the purpose of teaching us how we should cultivate and cure tobacco, but the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) tells us that these experts are not needed, because our farmers are able to find out for themselves by trying a few experiments. That is true, perhaps, with regard to all our farm work. It may be that each individual farmer can find out what he can do best. But we have been carrying on large experimental work at the public expense for the benefit of the individual, and I venture to say that the work begun by hon. gentlemen opposite by the establishment of experimental farms has been of great benefit, though if the hon. gentleman's ideas are correct the Government should never have established anything of the kind, but left it to private enterprise. I do not think that is good reasoning. I believe that our farmers have realized a good many millions more, owing to the establishment of these experimental farms, than if they had been left to their own devices. I believe it is a sound principle that any work which is going to be a public benefit, and which is experimental in its nature, ought to be carried on at the public expense. That principle was adopted years ago by the late Government, and to-day our work in agricultural lines at these experimental farms is held up as an example to be followed, by the people of other countries. It is only yesterday that I read of the introduction in the Imperial House of Commons of a Bill to establish a Board of Agriculture for Ireland, a work which has been brought about by the persistent efforts of the Right Hon. Horace Plunkett, M.P., who came here two years ago and examined into the work which the Department of Agriculture is doing in Canada, and gave the success of that work as his chief argument to induce the Imperial Parliament to adopt the measure he introduced.

However, this vote has elicited very considerable discussion, and hon. gentlemen on both sides have shown some difference of opinion with regard to it. The hon. leader of the Opposition suggested that it be reduced and only applied to one branch of the work I have outlined, the cultivation and curing of tobacco. I am not prepared to accept the suggestion on the whole, but at the same time I can understand that it is possible I might be able to work out a certain reduction in the amount of the vote. I would not like to promise to do so now, but in view of the discussion, if the House will permit me, I shall let the item stand, in order to see if any change can be made, and bring it up at a later date.

Mr. McMILLAN. I wish to say that I disagree with the hon. Minister in his view of the illustration that has been given in establishing dairy stations. Early in my life I had a cheese factory of my own, where I made cheese, and a good many others did the same thing, but we found that we could not make a uniform article, and that our cheese would not go on the British market, unless it were made of a uniform character. The same remark applies to the making of his own butter by every farmer. It cannot be put on the English market and realize the price which butter will realize that is made in a creamery common to all. Every farmer almost in the country was ignorant of the principle of butter and cheese-making and of the advantage of making it on the co-operative principle. We realized that it was an absolute necessity that we should have co-operation, which would enable us to produce a uniform article. But every farmer has to be his own judge of the crops he will grow. Whether you go into a locality in which farming is well advanced, or one in which it lags behind, you have to choose one of the farmers of either locality to carry on your illustration station; and I ask if any reasonable man, whether any farmer in the particular locality is going to farm any better, when he has charge of an illustration station, than he did before. Let me say that these experimental stations which are now established, have benefited as much from the experience of practical farmers as practical farmers have benefited by them. I have heard those high in authority, those who have had the greatest experience in respect to our experimental stations, admit the fact that, until the staff at Guelph turned out and met the farmers throughout the length and breadth of the land, they lagged behind many of the best farmers of the day. I want this clearly understood—I am not against the spending of money whereby, in my opinion, the farmers will be benefited. But I want to know by what system of going into a locality and taking up a small plot on a farm you are going to turn the farm into a better illustration station than it has been where the farmer has been doing his best. Many who have supported this resolution have spoken as though we were going to get some teachers whom we have never had before. I say that in the most forward portions of the Dominion—and I have been all over the southern portion of Ontario and part of the western portion of Quebec—we have farmers as far advanced as any of our experimental stations, and farmers going to these farms and examining them will be more benefited than by going to these experimental stations. One reason is that the grain in the illustration station will be grown in small patches. Any one who has attended our Agriculture Committee will know that when results have been laid before us, we have always asked whether they were secured in small plots or in fields. We know from experience and it is well understood that in small experimental plots better results can be obtained than in a field, because more care can be exercised and more work put on small plots than a farmer can afford to put on a field. For my part, when I go to the Experimental Farm, I do not go to the experimental plots, but go out to the farm proper and see what was going on.

Mr. MORRISON. But may I ask what the farmers outside of the province are to do? No doubt wisdom, agriculturally speaking, will die with the farmers of Ontario; but what about the people farming in British Columbia to-day?

Mr. McMILLAN. I am not acquainted with British Columbia. I have been in the North-west, and I know farmers in the North-west who are farming as successfully and on as advanced lines as the illustration stations. I have seen the crops in the experimental stations, and I have seen farms where they have grown crops equally good. As to British Columbia, I know little or nothing.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am sorry to hear the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Morrison) throwing such discredit on the provinces outside of Ontario. I can tell the hon. gentleman that I can take him to farms in British Columbia that raise a larger amount of grain per acre than any farms in the province of Ontario.

Mr. McMILLAN.

Mr. MORRISON. I am amazed that the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) should distort the interjection I made in regard to the remarks of the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan). Ontario contains farmers who are second to none. But there are people going into British Columbia and taking up farming who are not farmers; and I say that these people ought to have the advantages which are afforded by the Department of Agriculture here at Ottawa. If the Government are going to expend money for the benefit of the farmers, I think it ill-becomes gentlemen on the other side to carp at such expenditure, particularly at such small expenditures as this. The only objection I have to the item is that it is not large enough. If it were ten-fold what it is, the agricultural interests would not be more than fairly treated. I know that the consensus of opinion in British Columbia is that these illustration stations are necessary and would be a boon to the majority of the young, new farmers going into that country, very few of whom have been there for more than a few years. Agriculturally speaking, British Columbia is comparatively new. We are trying to induce people to go in and take up our farming lands. British Columbia has been advertised more largely as a mining than as an agricultural country. There is great misapprehension concerning the agricultural capabilities of that province. The mineral country of British Columbia so vast, so rich and varied, that the agricultural capabilities of the country have been, apparently overlooked. Take the valley of the Fraser River alone. In a distance of fifty miles, from 150,000 to 200,000 acres of land are subject to the overflow of the river. They can afford to have this large area overflowed for it does not materially reduce the area available for agriculture. That gives one an idea of the acreage available in that valley alone for agricultural purposes. Many of the farmers who are there and many who are going in are comparatively inexperienced in agricultural matters; it would be a great benefit to these people to have these illustration stations, and they admit themselves that they require some information such as is afforded by these stations in order to improve their ideas of farming and dispel many of the fallacies under which farmers have been working—and I suppose there are cases of that kind even in the province of Ontario. I notice that the opposition to this item emanates, apparently, from gentlemen interested in farming in Ontario. I have not the presumption to attempt to controvert what has been said by the hon. member for South Huron, and other old and experienced farmers on this matter. But I venture to say that they are speaking altogether from a rather insular stand-point, from the stand-point of a farmer from the province of Ontario, where their great grandfathers have been farming, and where they have every advantage and every means to secure information right at their own doors. That does not apply to the rest of the Dominion, particularly to the western portions, and it is no discredit to the farmers of that portion of the Dominion to say that a great deal of knowledge is required on the part of those who attempt farming in that locality. I do not say there are not good farmers in British Columbia, but the majority of those living on lands which they have got from the Government do not understand farming and are especially in need of the advantages that this system would afford. We have an experimental farm in British Columbia—but the province is so vast and the agricultural portions of it so far apart that the farm is not of so much service to the remote parts as to those immediately contiguous to the farm.

So that the same feeling is there as the Minister said existed in the eastern portions. I know the locality in which that farm is situated in British Columbia, it is on the south side of the Fraser River, and considering the nature of the soil there, it is of no practical use at all, and unless there is an illustration station there the farmers will not have this advantage which they should be afforded by the Government. I contend that if there is any department of industry in Canada which, more than another, deserves a liberal appropriation, it is that of agriculture, and I assume that the object of the Minister in starting these stations is to benefit the agricultural population. Now, I contend that the experiment should be made, and the sum of $20,000 is little enough to make the experiment. I think it is due to the provinces outside of Ontario, even although the scheme may not benefit the farmers of that province, that at least the Government should give some assistance to those who are trying to farm in other provinces of the Dominion. The leader of the Opposition has insinuated that $10,000 will be taken up by the officials. Even if that be the case, I would say increase the vote and give enough to make a thorough experiment, and then we shall see whether the appropriation has been a wise one.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not know what the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Morrison) calls distortion. I think the hon. gentleman had better consider his position before he charges a member of this House with distortion. What did I do, Sir? The hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan) gave a full and lucid illustration of the uselessness of this proposal of the Minister of Agriculture, and he did it in a manner that carried conviction to every member of this House who knows anything of the subject. It carried conviction, it appears, to the mind of the member for New Westminster that, so far as Ontario was concerned, it was absolutely useless, because there were a great many farms carried on in that province by men who have acquired such knowledge of farming operations that they could give better instructions to their neighbours who went and visited their farms, than could be afforded by these illustration stations. That was the argument of the member for South Huron. The member for New Westminster ought to be very much obliged to me for having drawn his attention to the position in which it placed British Columbia. He says: Oh, this is all very well for Ontario where they have good farmers, but not for the provinces outside Ontario. Then I felt there could be but one idea conveyed, and that was that in British Columbia they were so destitute of good farmers that they were in absolute need of instruction, and that this Parliament should vote public money to give illustrations for the purpose of instructing them. There is no other conclusion to which any person could arrive, from the hon. gentleman's language. Then I drew his attention to the fact—and he ought to be very much obliged to me for it, because it has relieved the House of the impression that I am sure was left upon everybody's mind as to the deplorable condition of British Columbia farming—I drew the attention of the hon. member to the fact that in British Columbia he could find farms which produced many kinds of cereals and hay in larger quantity per acre than you could find on any farm in the province of Ontario. I think my hon. friend ought to be very much obliged to me, instead of charging me with distortion.

Mr. CASEY. It is very amusing to see how, from time to time, the truth of the old saying is affirmed, that westward the Star of Empire takes its way. The Star of Empire, within the memory of some of us, used to talk about Nova Scotia being ahead of all the other provinces of the Dominion. But now, Sir, the Star of Empire finds it necessary to boom British Columbia and to defend her farmers against one of their own representatives in a wholly unnecessary and ill-humoured manner. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) could not see that he distorted the remarks of the member for New Westminster (Mr. Morrison). Perhaps it would be more correct to say that he Tupperized those remarks in repeating them; perhaps he may appreciate the choice of one adjective instead of the other. As to the argument that the farmers of Ontario do not need any illustration stations, because they can see good illustrations on the farms of their neighbours, I beg to differ with my hon. friend from Huron (Mr. McMillan). There are excellent examples of farming to be found all over Ontario, and in different parts of almost every county of Ontario; but it is a different thing to have to go round to each one of these farms and see what you want to, from being able to see an illustration of several different specialties all on one farm. Every man is a specialist who cultivates what suits his own taste on his own farm. Then, there is the other argument that the farmer who conducts an illustration station for the Government will do it no better than if he was doing it for himself. I do not think that is a sound theory. A man who takes an illustration station will do it under the direction of the department and for the purpose of illustrating the facts which have already been proven. The difference between the two things is very evident. In one case the man is farming to suit his own whim and in the other he is carrying out the directions of the department of Agriculture, and illustrating what has been shown by the experiments at the experimental farms.

Mr. WALLACE. I want to ask the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) a question, whether, at these illustrating stations, they are to have a threshing machine of the style that was used in West Elgin.

Mr. CASEY. There is no doubt, Mr. Chairman, that the process of using threshing machines will be taught at these illustrating stations, and there is no doubt that our friends on the other side will have, when they go before the people again, a further illustration of what it means to fall into a threshing machine, and a better illustration even than they had in 1896.

Mr. BAIN. Allow me to say one or two words on this important issue. I would like to remind the members that the conditions are different in the province of Ontario from what they are in the other provinces of this Dominion. There the Central Experimental Union is operated by Mr. Zavitts, from the Agricultural College at Guelph. He has a wide series of correspondents over the province of Ontario who are conducting experiments with varieties of grains, roots and other products, and they are bringing together the results of their aggregate labours carefully taken, tabulated and arranged so that these results will be of benefit to the farmers. I think that Ontario is alone in that system disseminating information in respect to the improved varieties of seeds and grains that are being tested there. I would like to remind hon. gentlemen that in the fruit-growing department, the necessity has been felt for a series of experiments scattered over the province in different districts, for the purpose of testing different fruits and varieties of fruits and ascertaining those that are best adapted to the wants of each locality. I am speaking from recollection, but I think that there are thirteen of these fruit experimental stations where different varieties of fruits are tested, from year to year, by competent parties for the purpose of securing these results. The money that we are spending on the experimental farms, as some hon. gentlemen said here to-day, except by the few who live in the direct vicinity, is chiefly valuable from the samples of improved varieties of grain and seeds distributed from those centres, but it does seem to me that there is a good deal to be said in favour of widening and extending that work a little by having three or four or five samples of the very best varieties of the different classes of these grains tested in other localities distant from these farms, showing the culture of them and showing their growth side by side. I think it is a fair subject for the consideration of the committee, whether there is not a field for additional experiments in this direction, so that other parts of the Dominion that have not been able, as Ontario has been, to get the benefit of the existing organization for this purpose, may have an equal opportunity.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bain) seems to lose sight of the fact that we have in British Columbia, in the North-west Territories, in Nova Scotia, and other places, branch experimental farms for the testing grains for the information of the farmers in these various climates.

Mr. BAIN. I do not lose sight of the fact that there are branch farms. I have visited personally the farm at Nappan, but it is a far cry from the farm at Ottawa to the farm at Nappan, and a still further cry to the province of Prince Edward Island. Yet that one farm is all they have for the whole territory between here and there, as a whole, for these experiments. Quebec is admittedly a large province, and I think I am speaking within the knowledge of every hon. member in this House who has taken an interest in these matters, when I say that the efforts that have been put forth by the provincial government at Quebec, and by this Government here, in the one direction of improving the quality of their cheese has brought more money into the pockets of the farmers of that province than any expenditure or any series of experiments, in any series of years, has ever cost. In Ontario we recognize the fact that, while this instruction has helped to produce an article of uniform grade, it has had this additional effect, and every person interested in the making of cheese within range of my voice knows it, that the particular educational system that fits our cheese for the English market would never have been brought to maturity under any other system than under an educative system such as was adopted by Prof. Arnold and subsequently by the colleges.

Mr. CLANCY. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bain) will search in vain for any record of any experiment having been made at the Experimental Farm at Guelph in regard to cheese making.

Mr. BAIN. Unfortunately, probably, the hon. member (Mr. Clancy) has never visited the farm at Guelph and is not aware of the fact that, for a long series of years, this industry was carried on there and that today during the winter season as well this educative process is being vigorously carried on. But these are matters aside from the question. I do not want to be understood as finding fault with the attitude that hon. gentlemen take, but I simply draw the attention of the committee to this series of facts in the progress and growth of this country, and I ask hon. gentlemen to reflect for a moment before they refuse a fair consideration for this proposal. If it is to be turned into a political engine, I say at once that we had better not enter upon it, but I think I can safely and fairly say, that in the Agriculture Committee of this House we have heretofore been pretty successful in steering clear of those questions that sometimes embitter discussion in this House, and that we have been able largely to lay aside our political views and look at these questions from a stand-point that would benefit the community at large. I give my hon. friends opposite as much credit for a desire to advance the cause of the farmers as I would claim for myself and my hon. friends here. But, I say, in order that we shall be in a better position to obtain the benefit of the expenditure we are making at the experimental farms, we want some process to broaden out the results and to bring them more in contact with our farmers.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). Mr. Chairman, if the Government were to ask a larger amount for experimental purposes throughout the country, I have no doubt it would be of great use; but when there is only this amount in the Estimates to be distributed over the whole of the Dominion of Canada, I cannot see what use it will be. It was said a moment ago that it will make room for a larger number of officials. I must say that I believe there will be something in that, and I am in a position to prove to you that such will possibly be the case. There is a grant of $25 made to the farmers' institutes in every county in Ontario, and it costs $11,000 to spend $2,350 amongst these institutions. I find in the Public Accounts of Ontario, page 267, the names of each of the officials who are connected with this service, and who are drawing pay from it. There are something over 75 officials connected with it who receive their pay, as well as travelling expenses and disbursements. Therefore, $80 or $100 expended in every county would certainly be of no use, and it would be a simple waste of money to divide it in this manner amongst the different counties in the Dominion. To give an average of $80 or $100 to each county certainly could be of no possible advantage to the people. I simply draw the attention of the House to the manner in which this money is expended in Ontario. I repeat that it cost $11,000 to expend $2,350. That is a sample of how everything is done by the Government of the province of Ontario, and I hope this Government will not repeat it in the Dominion.

Mr. McMULLEN. I had hoped, from the remarks made by the leader of the Government and the leader of the Opposition this morning that there would be a disposition to hurry through the work of the session.

Mr. TAYLOR. It looks like it.

Mr. McMULLEN. I shall detain the House but for a few moments. My hon. friend (Mr. McLennan) is altogether mistaken when he says that it costs $11,000 to spend $2,350. There is no policy of the Ontario Government so much appreciated by the farmers as the aid given to these farmers' institutes. The Government pay the expenses of practical farmers at probably $2 a day to give lectures throughout the country, and they procure the services of such able and experienced agriculturists as my esteemed friend from South Huron (Mr. McMillan). I can testify that in my own county a great deal of good has resulted from these meetings, and I know the same applies to other constituencies in that province. As to this vote for establishing illustration stations, I am ready to take the risk of supporting it as an experiment. I have a great deal of confidence in any opinion expressed by my hon. friend from South Huron (Mr. McMillan), but at the same time I am willing to support any vote for and support the appropriation which is intended to improve the general condition of the farming community, and in my opinion this experiment will be in that direction. I may say that so far as the hon. member for East Bruce (Mr. Cargill) is concerned, he has an experimental farm of his own, which is highly creditable to him, and the farmers of his section derive great benefit, I have no doubt, from the practical demonstration they have on his farm, both in the raising of crops and for the splendid stock which he keeps. Probably an illustration station would not be so necessary in his vicinity as in other districts. The same remarks would apply to my hon. friend from Huron (Mr. McMillan), but, as the hon. gentleman from Wentworth (Mr. Bain) has said, there are parts of the country which have not such excellent practical farmers as those two gentlemen. I am satisfied that much good may result from those experimental stations, and I hope that we will now get through with the work of the session and let us go home.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). I have the records of the Ontario legislature here to prove that my statement is correct, and before the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) contradicts me he should know what he is talking about. I repeat that the Ontario Government gave $2,350 to the farmers' institutes. I agree that was a good thing to do, but I will not agree that it was a good thing to spend $11,000 in applying that $2,250, as is actually the case, and I repeat it. The exact amount expended was $11,443 to apply this grant of $2,350.

Mr. McMULLEN. The $11,000 is expended in paying men to address meetings and giving them their expenses, and the $2,350 was given to the different farmers' institutes as a contribution to enable them to keep up their organization. The $11,000 is for a different purpose altogether.

Mr. L. A. CHAUVIN (Terrebonne). (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I do not want to let this item pass without expressing my views about it.

The hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) does not seem to be as enthusiastic in asking the House to give him this vote of $20,000 as the hon. member for Two Mountains (Mr. Ethier) himself appears to be, as the Minister is willing, for the present, to let the item stand, in order to see if he might not be able to work out a certain reduction in the amount of the vote.

I have no objection to offer to the adoption of this vote for the establishment of illustration stations in the country, provided that they be established with as much economy as possible.

The Minister of Agriculture has stated in relation to the experience of other countries, that in France this kind of work had been going on for a great many years and that those illustration stations were scattered all over the country; and it is on these same lines, I think, though on a smaller scale, that the Minister of Agriculture wishes those illustration and trial plots to be conducted here.

Nothing should prevent those trial stations being managed with the strictest economy; and with that end in view, seeds could be sent to the farmers in a certain locality, or instructions might be forwarded by mail or given by Government experts, provided those employees do not spend too much of this vote travelling around the country. It seems to me, that under such economical conditions, the result of this vote would be eminently beneficial to agriculture and to the farming population, especially in the province of Quebec.

True, we have the Experimental Farm here, which is supposed to accommodate the province of Quebec and attend to the education of the farmers of that province; but, as stated by the hon. Minister of Agriculture, this farm is too far from the farmers of the province of Quebec to be of any great advantage to them, and when the farmers cannot spare the time to come to the farm, it is but fair that these stations be established for their education, as a substitute for the farms.

That is what the Minister hinted at when referring to the establishment of those illustration stations in the province of Quebec particularly. As a matter of fact, it would be very desirable that the Experimental Farm at Ottawa should try to keep itself in closer touch with the agricultural population of the province of Quebec. And I will avail myself of this opportunity to tell the Minister of Agriculture that we would like, in the province of Quebec, that the French language should be a little more used in the communications and in the intercourse between the authorities of the farm and the farmers. And 'à fortiori' it is desirable that such information as can be afforded by the farm should be spread among the farming community of Quebec under the shape of trials such as proposed by the Minister of Agriculture. However, if the hon. Minister of Agriculture wishes the farming population of Quebec to share in the advantages offered to the country by the Experimental Farm, it follows as a matter of course that he should try to cut down the expenditure of that farm. And the saving thus effected could be utilised in creating the necessary stations for the improvement of agriculture in the province of Quebec. But it does not appear from the Estimates under consideration that the Minister has the intention of cutting down the expenditure in connection with the Experimental Farm. Let me tell him that this appropriation, which in his opinion, is perhaps too large, would be approved of by the province of Quebec, but only on condition it were coupled with a substantial reduction in the expenditure of the Experimental Farm, and under the further condition that the sums thus economised be applied to the improvement of agriculture in that province by the establishment of a system of illustration stations such as he is now proposing to the House.

The hon. member for Two Mountains (Mr. Ethier) seems quite elated over the prospect of being able in the near future to handle the twenty thousand dollars which the hon. Minister is asking the House to vote. He said, a little while ago, that the farmers in his district would only be too glad to share in that appropriation.

I think the hon. member was reckless in giving utterance to those words, because his colleagues on the other side of the House will take umbrage at seeing him thus monopolizing the Government patronage for his district and chiefly for his constituency. It looks as if the general elections were near at hand. I know that the hon. member for Two Mountains has an insatiable appetite for patronage and it is even said that he has taken the lion's share. But that may be owing to the fact, as he candidly stated once on the floor of this House, that he is the spoiled child of the Government.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. (Translation.) That is not our way of distributing patronage.

Mr. CHAUVIN. (Translation.) I hope that this appropriation will be fairly distributed all over the province of Quebec.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. (Translation.) Yes, at the earliest opportunity, if the hon. gentleman supports my motion.

Mr. CHAUVIN. (Translation.) Well, the hon. gentleman can hardly expect me to pledge myself in that way, especially in view of the fact that he has just promised us a certain sum of money as that would amount to bribery; but, on the other hand, I cannot help telling him, that on all measures for the promotion of agricultural interests, especially in the province of Quebec, I promise him my entire support, without any hope of reward. But let me call his attention to the fact that the farmers are often heard to complain about the useless expenditure incurred for agricultural lectures, as they contend that those lecturers, who are party friends, are not practical agriculturists. I do not bring up those charges in order to throw them to the face of the hon. Minister, as I have often attended the lectures of those men sent by the Minister to preach their crusade in favour of agriculture throughout the province of Quebec.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. (Translation.) They were able and competent men.
