Mr. CASEY. It was inaugurated during that session. Perhaps it did not come into operation until the next session. I was here before 1874, and I know that the papers did then just as they do now; they reported what they thought their readers would take an interest in, without reference to what importance the matter might have afterwards as to Government policy or individual action. That is not their business; they are not expected to look after that. They would be very foolish to waste their time and space in reporting what they did not think their readers would want. It is absolutely necessary for us to have such a report as "Hansard." In England it is supplied by private enterprise, because the people there want such a report, and I believe the Government there also contribute to the "Hansard" reports. But here it is absolutely necessary for us to maintain such a report, if only for the purpose of enabling public men to have published in the local papers or in the larger papers of the country an account of what they say on important questions. As to the manner in which the reporting is carried on, I do not think there are two opinions in this House. I can hardly suppose that there is anywhere a more perfect report furnished than that which has been furnished by the staff of this House for many years past. I have seen a great deal of copy coming from these gentlemen for revision, and precious little revision in it was needed. My hon. friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot) says he has seen whole columns struck out.

Mr. TALBOT. Parts of columns.

Mr. CASEY. Parts of columns struck out. I have no doubt at all that many of us would like to strike out a great deal of what we said; but it has been my experience that if you struck out anything more than what was reduplications, the editor of "Hansard" would refuse to accede to your striking it out.

Mr. TALBOT. Have you tried?

Mr. CASEY. Yes, I have tried. If your words were misunderstood, you have a perfect right to change them, but if there is a total change of sense attempted to be made by a member, I have found that the change has not been carried out. A man may revise his remarks so as to perhaps put them in somewhat better shape or make them more clear, but no alterations in the sense are allowed. I have every confidence in the perfect fairness of the reports of this House, and I have the highest possible opinion of the honesty and value of this publication, even though it cost as much as it does. The question of economy in the publication is another thing, and if anybody can suggest a way by which the cost can be reduced, without impairing the value of "Hansard," his proposition will have my support.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I shall merely take up the attention of the House for a very few minutes. I wish to refer to what the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot) has said. I am a member of the Debates Committee, and I was very sorry to hear him say that the revised edition was really a farce.

Mr. TALBOT. I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. If what he said were true, it will be worse than a farce, and what he said was that members, in the revision, struck out whole columns. I must say that his statement is utterly unfounded, because so far as my experience goes, members are only allowed to make immaterial alterations by striking out repetitions and improving, perhaps, the phraseology, but if they attempt to do anything more than that, the editor of "Hansard" invariably declines to allow the alterations. With regard to the expense, I am not disposed to cavil at the amount we actually pay for "Hansard" yearly, which I think is some $40,000. That amount I do not consider too large, because I believe we have as excellent a report as could possibly be obtained of the proceedings of this House. I know intimately almost every member of the staff, with some of them I have worked on newspapers in years past, and I know that they are clear-headed, clever newspaper men, with an excellent idea of the politics of the country, and I do not think it would be possible to find in Canada a better staff to do this work. The question of expense is not the issue, as I see it. If the existence of "Hansard" prolongs the sessions two or three weeks or a month, I would feel that we would be better without it. There is no doubt a great deal of matter in "Hansard" that is of no use to the country or to any person in existence, and if we could get rid of that sort of thing, it would be in the best interests of the country. I am disposed to agree in the suggestion of the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) that we should appoint a committee to take this matter up and go fully into it next session, in order to see if some amendment may not be suggested which would have the effect of making it more concise and reducing the expense.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I wish to say that in my remarks I had not the slightest desire to reflect upon the staff, because I believe it is a first-class staff, but simply to discuss the question of the necessity of continuing "Hansard."

Mr. McNEILL. I am quite sure that we have all contributed a good deal of rubbish, as my hon. friend from Elgin (Mr. Casey) says, to the columns of "Hansard," but on the other hand I venture to say that there is to be found in it an immense deal of most valuable information upon questions which are constantly coming up. When hon. members desire to inform themselves with reference to those questions, the most natural mode that suggests itself of getting into the track, if I may say so, of the subject is to refer to the "Hansard" and see what has been said in the past, and I know that in my own case the result has been to throw most valuable light upon many subjects I wished to discuss. As to the opinion that the session will be shortened by the abolition of "Hansard," my own view is that the very opposite would be the result. I think that we would, in that case, have needless discussions as to what any member has said in this House. There would be a statement made from the one side that an hon. member had said so and so, and he would rise to contradict that statement. Another member on the opposite side would corroborate the statement of the first speaker, then members in sympathy with the hon. gentleman whose remark was quoted, would rise in his support, and we would have endless discussions of that kind which would prolong the sessions very much more than they are prolonged by the existence of "Hansard" as it is. It seems to me that the suggestion that the newspaper press can take the place of "Hansard" is simply absurd. It is absolutely absurd to suppose that the press, however desirous of giving as full reports as possible of the proceedings of the House, could possibly give the public the information contained in the columns of "Hansard," and how much that information is valued by the public every member is aware. Because we all know how frequently requests are made to us for copies of "Hansard" which we cannot supply. There is another point of view from which I think we ought to regard this matter. We have at present a most valuable and efficient staff of stenographers for the purpose of producing this report. If we should abolish "Hansard," what would be the result? At the end of a session or two, we would have to re-establish it, and in the meantime our present staff would be scattered to the four winds of heaven, and we would find great difficulty in supplying this House with so valuable and efficient a staff again as the one we have now. I do not think that the proposal to abolish "Hansard" is one that ought to be entertained by this House for a moment.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) asked me about the cost of sessional clerks and messengers. The average session is 100 days, and in the Supplementary Estimates we have added 25 days to that as the additional number for which we will have to pay the sessional clerks and messengers, and the amount in the supplementaries was added on an exact calculation made by the officers of the House of what we require in order to pay these officials for the extra 25 days. That will only bring us up to and include Tuesday next, and there will probably have to be provided an additional small sum for a few days more.

Mr. FOSTER. What about the item with reference to the leather trunks ?

Mr. SPEAKER. A balance of 59 of the whole number of leather trunks to be supplied at the beginning of Parliament was not delivered at the close of the last financial year. The calculation is $22 for each of these 59 trunks allowed. Provision is made for ten new members who have since come in, each to have a trunk.

Mr. FOSTER. I have just one suggestion with reference to that. I think it would be altogether advisable, if the practice is to be continued of members in each Parliament having trunks, to have the whole matter in the hands of the Serjeant-at-Arms and the Speaker instead of in the hands of private members.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not quite understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster).

Mr. FOSTER. The practice has been, I think, that the Printing Committee, or a committee of the Printing Committee, has had control of this matter, until finally, as a matter of practice, it is left in the hands of one man, and he a member of the House, who takes it upon himself to get the business done by contract or in some other way. I do not think that is a kind of business that a member of the House ought to be asked to do. Stationery comes to us through the regular channel of the economy of the House of Commons, and I think this ought to be treated in the same way. I know that the practice is the same as it was in our time, but the practice is not a good one.

Mr. SPEAKER. As I understand, by resolution of the House moved by the right hon. leader of the House last session, the supplying of leather trunks to members ceases with this Parliament.

Mr. FOSTER. That is all right.

Mr. BERGERON. Just before this matter came up, I was going to say a word in support of what my hon. friend from North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) has said as to the briefness of the newspaper report of many important debates of this House. The other day we had a very important discussion upon the remodelling of the judicature of the Dominion. It covers a great many pages of "Hansard," but I find that in one of the most important papers in the Dominion, the Montreal "Gazette," it occupied only half a column. I suppose that other hon. members have the same experience that I have, so it is not too much to say that every day we receive requests from people outside to send them copies of "Hansard." And, Mr. Chairman, it is always the unrevised "Hansard" that is wanted. And, since I am on my feet, I would make the suggestion that we should be allowed more than one copy of the unrevised edition. Sometimes, by applying to a colleague who does not happen to need his copy, we can get two copies of an issue. I would like to propose that we should have at least ten copies each of the unrevised "Hansard." This would not add much to the expense, as we know that, when the type is on the press, extra copies are easily run off, and the paper is not expensive. Many judges and members of the legal profession have applied for copies containing the debate I have referred to, and, already, applications are coming in for copies containing yesterday's debate on the Montreal Harbour Commissioners.

Mr. INGRAM. Are we to understand that no leather trunks will be distributed after this ?

Mr. SPEAKER. My recollection is that that is the effect of a resolution that was passed on motion of the right hon. Premier.

Mr. INGRAM. Did Mr. Speaker say who was the person who contracted for the last leather trunks ?

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not know ; I think they were procured on the authority of one of the committees, and I think that a contract was made. I know that I did not have anything to do with it.

Mr. INGRAM. I wish to say that the leather trunks which were contracted for during last session of Parliament, as well as those of the last Parliament are simply frauds. The prices paid last term and this term are out of all proportion to what the trunks actually cost. The workmanship is inferior, and $22 apiece should buy much better trunks than those supplied.

Mr. McDUGALL. They are not worth $10.

Mr. INGRAM. No ; I have never seen trunks of more inferior manufacture, and I have had some experience where trunks are manufactured. If a contract is to be made again some person with technical knowledge of the matter should have something to say about the prices.

Mr. ELLIS. I am a member of the committee that had the matter in charge, and I am able to say that the hon. gentleman at the head of that committee, the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson) gave personal attention to the matter and endeavoured to get the best trunk that could possibly be got for the money. He gave the matter an amount of attention that, probably, no other man would have given ; and, if the results have not been satisfactory, I am very much surprised. I think there was some trouble with regard to the failure of the contractor. It seemed to me that a very good trunk was furnished.

Mr. McMULLEN. The first leather trunks were contracted for by an hon. member who is not in the House with us, greatly to our regret, the late Dr. Bergin, who was chairman of the Printing and Stationery Committee. The last contract was made by the hon. member for Lincoln and Senator Sir John Carling. As to what has been said, I quite agree with it, at any rate in part. I never saw a greater fraud than the first trunks. I have not examined the second to see how they are made. They look fairly well, but the others also looked fairly well. I agree that great care should be taken in getting the trunks if they are to be continued. But I am glad to know that this giving of trunks will be abolished, because they cost altogether too much.

Mr. BERGERON. I would ask, Mr. Speaker, if every trunk has been taken away by the member to whom it was addressed, or have our Patron friends refused to accept theirs?

Mr. SPEAKER. The Speaker has nothing to do with that matter; it is in the hands of the chairman of the Printing Committee, and the Serjeant-at-Arms certifies before they are paid for. I do not happen to know whether the trunks were taken away or not.

Mr. BERGERON. I desire to call attention to the stationery provided for us, which is really of a very inferior kind. I think it would be just as well not to have any. I do not call it economy to save on an item such as this when we are voting money by the millions.

In the old days we had very good stationery that cost but little more than we are paying now, but the stationery to-day is useless. We might as well not have any at all as to have what is given us in the boxes supplied at the beginning of the session. I think the right hon. gentleman who moved at the commencement of this Parliament that the stationery should not cost so much, might change that rule and give us better stationery again.

Mr. McNEILL. I agree that the stationery at present supplied us is very inferior, not worthy of the stationery which is supposed to come from the House of Commons. Now, I want to make the extravagant proposal, that in place of having that stationery supplied in paste-board boxes which come to pieces in taking them home, it should be put in a plain deal box, such as are used to send us the "Hansard" in, such boxes as we can take home without their going to pieces on the way. May I be allowed to add this to what I said before with regard to the value of "Hansard"? I think we can very often appreciate the value of "Hansard" when we desire to discover what has been said with reference to some important subject which has been discussed in the local legislatures where there are no "Hansards." When we go to the library we find that an abortive attempt has been made to secure a record of the proceedings. We find a few clippings from newspapers pasted into a book which has to take the place of a "Hansard." These newspaper clippings are most meagre and they are unreliable. That example will show us the value of "Hansard" by showing us in what position we should be placed if we had no "Hansard."

Mr. SPROULE. I wish to say one word with regard to these trunks, because the reference made by Mr. Speaker might be misunderstood in the country. The reference might lead to the impression that I had applied for and got an extra trunk.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member misunderstood what I said. I said that one was sent to the hon. member by mistake, and when the mistake was discovered it was sent back.

Mr. SPROULE. That puts a different face on it. I knew nothing about the trunk until it was left in my room, nor did I know there was one coming.

Post Office Department—For clerical assistance, $1,500; for printing and stationery, $3,000; total..... $4,500

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Is that item for clerical assistance necessary?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We have increased the number of money order offices during the year from 1,349 to 1,742. There has been a general expansion in the service. The increase in the number of money order offices involves further books and accounts, and further stationery. There has been an increase of nearly 33 per cent in the number of offices opened during the year. I have all the details of the clerical assistance, if the hon. gentleman desires them.

Post Office..... $732

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The explanation of that is that a temporary clerk only has $360 a year, and when he becomes permanent, he is entitled to a larger salary, $480.

Mr. MONTAGUE. In regard to this $100 for Mr. B. F. Shephard, third-class clerk in the Victoria post office, there is an item for him in the Supplementaries for 1899.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Mr. B. F. Shephard is a clerk in the Victoria post office who goes out to meet the steamers from Japan when they are in quarantine. He is obliged to supply himself with a special suit of clothing, and it is a very disagreeable task.

Mr. MONTAGUE. But there is no fumigation going on now.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, every vessel is quarantined for a time. The hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Prior) brought this case to my notice, and I think it is a very meritorious case, and this gentleman is entitled to indemnity. This $100 is probably not more than enough to indemnify him for the destruction of his clothing. The item my hon. friend refers to in the other Estimates is to increase his salary by the sum of $50, and it is for the next year. This is for the current year.

Mr. INGRAM. Has not the hon. gentleman several temporary railway mail clerks that have been in the employ of the department for years? How long must they serve to be considered permanent?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There are a good many temporaries. I have not increased the number of permanents. This Mr. C. J. Hollister, who is made permanent, has been an officer on the temporary list for some time. We cannot put them all on.

Mr. INGRAM. I know there are many temporary railway mail clerks that are engaged every day they run, and it seems unfair to keep those gentlemen as temporary when they should be appointed as permanent, and when they actually have become permanent.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We cannot get over that difficulty all at once. As vacancies occur, I suppose the temporaries will gradually be transferred into the permanent list.

Mr. INGRAM. How much longer will these gentlemen have to serve to be made permanent?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We cannot deal with them faster than vacancies occur.

Mr. INGRAM. They are now filling the position of railway mail clerks and have been for years; the only difference is that they are not permanent. They are quoted as temporary mail clerks, and by that means are deprived of any increase of salary.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is a state of affairs I found in the department. I am meeting the hon. gentleman's views to some extent in transferring this gentleman to the permanent list.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman is going to subject the mail clerks to an examination; what is to be the standard?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We have not adopted any standard. The plan I contemplate is this: Some of the mail clerks did not understand the distribution, and we would have to put three clerks into a car to do the work that one good man could do. One of the mail clerks who underwent an examination recently failed, I understand, to get a single mark, did not seem to know where to put one single letter without having to turn up his directory. The inconvenience to the public in letters going astray is considerable. The system of examination, which I hope will be approved of, simply requires them to know the work in which they are engaged, to know where the letters are to be despatched.

While perhaps it would not be fair all at once to subject the present appointees to a system of promotion solely on the results of the examination, at the same time I trust such examination will in time come to be regarded as the sole ground for promotion. There occurs to me the case of an old officer, who is nearly sixty years of age, and he complains very much at being subjected to a competitive examination for promotion. Whilst I wish the result of the examination ultimately to be the sole test of the right of promotion, I do not think I can apply it fully during the next year or two. Taking the maximum of marks as 100, any one coming within a reasonable range of the maximum would be eligible.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Take a mail clerk who has obtained a low percentage: is it the understanding that he will be required to go up again?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That would be a very proper regulation. These matters, however, are left with the Controller.

Mr. INGRAM. Take a man who has been a number of years in the service, would it not be unjust to compel him to pass the examination and obtain, say, 90 per cent?

Mr. MONTAGUE. The examination is partly on the distribution of mail matter in the cars.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Largely so.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It is hardly fair to examine a man who is on the main line of the Grand Trunk or Canadian Pacific Railway, and who gains experience every day, and at the same time examine a man whose experience has been on a local line.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think all the employees in the different classes should be subjected to the test of that class. Some regard should be had, however, for the opportunities possessed by men to qualify themselves.

Mr. CLARKE. Is it the Postmaster General's intention to give the statutory increases to junior clerks and letter carriers? I understand a saving has been made by reducing the number of clerks employed.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There has been a reduction in the number of mail clerks, there being now thirty-six less than formerly; but I do not suppose that doing away with the services of these men should have an effect otherwise than the application of the money to meet the proper needs of the service. In the main Estimates, there is an item to increase the salaries of a large number of the staff clerks and letter carriers, all drawing less than $480 a year.

Mr. CLARKE. I suppose that will apply to letter carriers drawing less than that sum. Will they get the statutory increase?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They will receive $30 increase. It happens to be the same sum as was formerly called "statutory increase."

Mr. HUGHES. I desire to inquire if a temporary clerk would have to serve six months before he could commence to be on the permanent list. Suppose a competent mail clerk, who is now temporarily employed in the service, desired to become permanent, would he have to serve six months on probation at the rate of $300 before he could be placed on the permanent list? In such a case would the Postmaster General be prepared to afford such man an opportunity of being placed on the permanent list?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There has been no change in the law of late. I understand the law is this. If a man is appointed as a probationary mail clerk, at the expiration of six months he can be made permanent, at $480 a year. If he commences as a temporary clerk, his years of service does not count technically as probationary service for permanent appointment. That is the rule laid down by the Auditor General, and it is a very illogical rule. My hon. friend from North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) brought to my attention such a case as he now refers to, and I am looking into it. If the Auditor General continues to hold that view, it will probably suggest the desirability of the Act being amended.

Mr. HUGHES. No doubt the Postmaster General is aware that the Government of New Zealand has a right to place a mail clerk on steamers running from there to Canada.

Resolutions to be reported.

The PRIME MINISTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 1.10 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Second Sitting.

SATURDAY, 4th June, 1898.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The House will probably close in the coming week, and, unless some provision is made for the private Bills on the paper, and those coming from the Senate with amendments, it will be impossible for any private legislation to be carried on. Therefore I beg to move:

That an hour be devoted to private Bills on Monday next, from 8 p.m. until 9 p.m., as on Wednesdays and Fridays under rule 19.

Motion agreed to.

A JUDGE FOR SASKATCHEWAN DISTRICT.

Mr. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the Government if anything is going to be done about appointing a judge for the Saskatchewan district, or is Judge McGuire going to return there? We have been now ten months without a judge, and as we are 250 miles from Regina, all our business has to be done through agents. The consequence is that the expense of people having business is doubled, and the people are anxious to know whether Judge McGuire is coming back, or whether anybody else is to be appointed in his place?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am sorry I cannot give my hon. friend an answer at the present moment. The Solicitor General is not in his seat, and I shall have to call the attention of the Minister of Justice to the matter.

REPRESENTATION OF NORTH SIMCOE AND WEST HURON.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to ask the First Minister if any arrangements have been made for holding elections in North Simcoe and in West Huron, which have become vacant—the former by the death of the late member, and the latter by the appointment of the late member to office.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The Government have not made any provision in that respect, and my hon. friend will realize at once for a very obvious reason—because no official notice of these vacancies has yet been given to the Speaker.

Mr. SPROULE. I suppose this might be accepted as an official notice.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not know that a conversation across the House can be accepted as a proper official notice.

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman will have to give notice.

Mr. SPROULE. I now give notice, then, that these two constituencies are vacant, and I ask that the usual course be adopted of filling them at a convenient date.

Mr. SPEAKER. What constituencies?

Mr. SPROULE. North Simcoe and West Huron.

Mr. SPEAKER. Will the hon. member state the cause of the vacancies?

Mr. SPROULE. North Simcoe was rendered vacant by the death of the late member, Mr. McCarthy, and West Huron was rendered vacant by the appointment of the late member, Mr. Cameron, as Lieutenant-Governor of the North-west Territories.

Mr. SPEAKER. The notice which has been given will be entered on the Minutes, so that the warrant of the Speaker will issue.

JUDGES OF PROVINCIAL COURTS.

On the Order,

Third reading Bill (No. 150) an Act further to amend the Act respecting the Judges of Provincial Courts.—(Mr. Fitzpatrick.)

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am sorry to say that the Solicitor General has had to leave suddenly for Quebec; but I bring this order at once, so as to give my hon. friend from Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), who I understand is not to remain very long in the city, an opportunity of making the remarks he intends to make. I may say that the Government have come to the conclusion to propose this amendment to the Bill:

Provided that any judge now holding office who shall, by reason only of his having completed the seventy-fifth year of his age, be or become disqualified to hold or retain his office, shall be entitled to a pension under section 15 of this Act, although he may not have continued in office for the number of years mentioned in that section.

I give notice of that amendment, as I am not sure that we can move it now. I think we shall have to move it by resolution.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The announcement of the right hon. Prime Minister is, of course, satisfactory, so far as it meets the point raised by the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton); but it does not, of course, touch the question I myself raised when we were in committee. I do not propose to repeat the argument I made in support of my contention, and I only call attention to the fact that the amendment, while gratifying as far as it goes, shows the importance of the amendment I propose to put in your hands. The Solicitor General, after that discussion, gave notice that he would move the following proposed resolution:—

Resolved, That it is expedient further to amend the Act respecting the judges of provincial courts by providing that in the case of any judge of a county court in any province and who now holds office and who becomes disqualified by reason only of his having completed the seventy-fifth year of his age, such judge shall, notwithstanding anything in the said Act, be entitled to a pension, during his natural life, equal to the amount of his annual salary at the time of his ceasing to hold office.

That, however, has been dropped, and the Government have apparently decided not to adopt what would have made the Bill more acceptable, and have removed it from a considerable part of the criticism I offered. The action of the Solicitor General, I say, is satisfactory as far as it goes; although I think it would involve probably a larger discussion than we had a few nights ago, as to whether there was wisdom in adding so much as that would add to the expense of the country for the purpose the Government had in view—getting rid of the judges at the age of seventy-five years. Without repeating the arguments I urged, whether that resolution had been proceeded with or not, my objection would still remain, that by this retroactive section of the Bill we are entering the thin end of the wedge of the destruction of the independence of the judiciary in this country, because to my mind the moment the county judges understand that the Government may ruthlessly interfere with their tenure of office by making the age limit seventy-five years, they will also understand that the party, or the Government in power, or the Parliament for that matter, may reduce the age to 70 years, to 65 years or 60 years, and consequently they are absolutely at the mercy of the Executive, and so independence is gone. I think in my argument the other night I was successfully able to show that no such legislation had ever occurred in England or in this country up to the present time, and this statement was not contradicted by the hon. the Solicitor General. Indeed, he seemed to sympathize considerably with the view I have put forward and yielded to the extent of putting on the notice paper the resolution which I have read, and which has been dropped. I should explain that I object to the provision of the Bill which increases the number of Superior Court judges in the province of Quebec, so long as the official statistics which were given in the House, and the opinion of the late Attorney General (Mr. Casgrain) are unanswered. The reason is, that there are a large number of Superior Court judges in that province with comparatively nothing to do, while the congestion of business is in one or two districts only. The remedy is in that case not an increase of the judges, but a re-arrangement of the judicial districts, and of the duties of the judges. The same argument, however, does not apply to the increase of the salaries of the county court judges of the province of Ontario, and I have not at any time questioned the propriety of the Bill so far as that is concerned. I move, therefore :

That the Bill be referred back to Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of amending section 1 by adding the words "hereafter appointed" after the word "person" on the eleventh line of the first page, and by striking out of the fifteenth and sixteenth lines the words "as well to judges now holding office as," and also to strike out clause 3 of the Bill.

I move that, seconded by my hon. friend (Mr. Ingram).

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). This subject has been so often debated that I do not think my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) expects any answer to the arguments which he has advanced. I would simply remark that he made an argument in reference to his proposed amendment which is not at all warranted, when he stated that the words "superannuated judges of seventy-five years of age" was practically an interference with the independence of the judges, and that henceforth the judges would be at the mercy of the Executive. My hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) will see that his argument is untenable. The judges cannot be at the mercy of the Executive even if Parliament decides that they are to be superannuated at the age of seventy-five years. The judges cannot be and are not above the law; they cannot be and are not above Parliament, for Parliament can always alter the law upon which judges have their tenure of office. They may be dependent on Parliament in that respect, but they are not dependent upon the Executive; the two things are different.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. One word of explanation; my point is this. I do not deny that Parliament can fix the age as proposed in this Bill, but while Parliament is doing this, and not the Governor in Council, as the right hon. gentleman says, still I have shown that hitherto in Canada, as in Great Britain, the independence of the judges was so regarded that Parliament would not, and was never advised, to let it be supposed by the judges that Parliament would be asked to interfere with the tenure of office as created by the appointment.

Amendment (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) negatived on a division.

Mr. SPEAKER. The question is now on the third reading of the Bill.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I move that the debate on the third reading be adjourned; the right hon. gentleman has given notice of amendment.

Mr. ANGERS. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I am of opinion that section 9 ought to be amended, so as to give effect to the provincial statute, which provides that the judges from the rural districts may be called upon to sit in review by turns. The judges ought to be called upon to sit in review whether the judges residing in Montreal or Quebec are able to sit or not. And if that section is not amended, the travelling allowances will be paid to them, only when the chief justice has deemed it necessary to call them to sit in review, that is to say, by reason of illness, absence or incapacity of one of the judges resident at Montreal or Quebec.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). (Translation.) The object of the motion now before us is that the debate on this question be adjourned from now till to-morrow or after to-morrow. Meanwhile, the Government will take into consideration the suggestions which have been made by my hon. friend, the member for Charlevoix (Mr. Angers).

In the meantime, I may say that, for my part, I am not very partial to the provincial legislation on that subject; accordingly, I intend to ask the hon. Minister of Justice to call the attention of the Attorney General of the province of Quebec to the character of that legislation. It enacts that the judges of the Court of Review are taken from all the judges of the Superior Court of the province indiscriminately; that is to say, that not only is that court composed of the judges of the Superior Court residing in Montreal or in Quebec, but that the judges of the other districts are called upon by turns to sit at Quebec and at Montreal, whether they be able to perform their duties as members of that Court of Review or no. I fail to understand the reason why this enactment was passed by the legislature. A judge of Quebec or of Montreal who is unoccupied, may sit in the Court of Review, and I do not understand why the other judges should be called upon to leave their districts, in order to come and take the place of those judges, when the latter can perform that duty. As I said, I fail to see why the judges of the rural districts should be called upon to come and sit in review at Quebec or at Montreal, in the place of the residing judges, when the latter are able to fulfil that duty, a course which involves a useless expenditure. The remarks fallen from my hon. friend are worthy of consideration and I propose to give them my attention before the debate comes up again.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

SUPPLY—THE TRUNK CONTRACT.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. GIBSON. Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I ask your permission to make a personal explanation with regard to the supply of trunks to members of the House of Commons. I understand that some reflections were made by the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) about the manner in which the trunks were supplied to the members of the House of Commons, and I wish to say, at the outset, that the committee which had charge of this matter, received a very gratifying letter from the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) in which he held that, in his opinion, the trunk supplied to him was better than what he expected and far better than those supplied to the members of this House in 1891. May I be permitted to say the reflections which were cast on the late chairman of the Printing Committee (Mr. Bergin) from 1891 until the end of that Parliament, to the effect that he had been a party to condoning a fraud that was perpetrated upon the House of Commons by the contractors supplying trunks that were not worth what the House of Commons paid for them, were utterly unfounded. If I remember correctly, the Government was charged $25 for each trunk in 1891, and the late Mr. Bergin, who was then the chairman of the Printing Committee, was called upon to go to Montreal and certify to the number and value of the trunks supplied. When he went there, he found how the whole matter stood and explained it in committee. He found that the trunks were not worth the money and refused to certify the contractors' account, and stated so to the committee, and I am glad to be able this afternoon to vindicate the memory of my good friend, the late Dr. Bergin, from this unfounded aspersion on his good name. My hon. friend from Haldimand will bear me out when I say that Dr. Bergin stood convicted, so to speak, for five years, under the lash of the criticism of members of this House, of having allowed the Government to be defrauded by having consented to trunks being supplied by the contractors to members of the House of Commons, which were not worth the money the Government paid for them, and no doubt the same criticisms would have been made in this Parliament if the committee had not taken the precaution of calling on members on both sides to examine the trunks for themselves and see whether they were worth the value represented. At the time when the late Dr. Bergin was chairman of the Printing Committee, the trunks were ordered by the Speaker of the House of Commons, Dr. Bergin refused to certify to them, and it was not on his certificate or order, but on the motion of the then Speaker (Mr. Oulmet) that the late Government paid the contractors $25 apiece for the trunks which the members of this House declared were not worth the money, and for the inferior value of which Dr. Bergin was held responsible. In the present instance, before the committee came to any decision as to the quality of the trunks submitted to them for approval, they decided that samples should be sent to members representing both sides and examined by the members on both sides of the House, and I may say, Mr. Speaker, that if that committee had had any idea of defrauding the country, they had ample opportunity for doing so, because some of the contractors were willing to subscribe from $1,200 to $1,500 if the contract were awarded to them. I am not speaking in any vain glorious way when I say that I told the gentleman who made that proposition, that I would be ashamed, as a chairman of that committee which had authorized me to buy the trunks for the members, to have ever even entertained for a moment such a proposition. I told him further that if a ten-dollar bill was to be given with each trunk, I wanted it put into the value of the trunk and not into my pocket. Members on both sides were consulted with reference to the tenders submitted to the committee, and they unanimously decided to accept the trunk that we bought. Unfortunately, for myself, the contractors failed, and I became surety and carried the contractor through the Bank of Commerce until such time as other contractors came forward and filled the balance of the contract. I did this, knowing full well that Parliament would see me through. I wish no better testimony as to the value of the article supplied by McLeod, Hawthorne & Company than that which the committee received from the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague), and I only want to draw the attention of my hon. friend from York (Mr. Foster) to the facts of the case. Without casting any reflections on the present Speaker, whom we all admire, the reason why the matter was not left in his hands was because in 1891 it was in the hands of the Speaker at that time (Mr. Oulmet), and Dr. Bergin felt that he had been made a catspaw of by him. I therefore felt that the new contract ought to be in the hands of the Printing Committee, through its chairman, and not as before in the hands of the Speaker. One member in Dr. Bergin's time left his trunk in the store of Mr. Borbridge, the contractor for the Senate, but not for the House of Commons, and told him to sell it for $10, but that trunk, I believe, is still in the hands there. The member to whom I refer paid Mr. Borbridge $15, and left with him his House of Commons trunk, receiving in return a trunk equal to those supplied by Mr. Borbridge to the Senate, and as I have said, that trunk still remains in Mr. Borbridge's store, as no one would give $10 for it. I think it is only fair to say, without casting any reflection on our Speaker, that the committee—whether wisely or unwisely, it is for the House to judge—left the matter to be dealt with by myself, and I felt that I would not undertake the responsibility of making a choice without consulting members on both sides. I therefore consulted Mr. Taylor, the Conservative whip and Mr. Sutherland, the Government whip, and we decided on a trunk which, I think has met with the approval of the members, or at all events, whether it has or not, whatever the trunk may have cost, the contract has not put anything into the hands of the committee or any member of it.

Mr. McDOUGALL. What did those trunks cost?

Mr. GIBSON. $22 a piece.

Mr. McDOUGALL. The hon. gentleman has spoken about the trunks which the members received in the last Parliament. I may say that I received one of them, and examined it to see what it was made of and how it compared with those which the Senators were getting. Having examined it, I went down to Mr. Borbridge, who had the contract for the Senate, and offered him the trunk which I had received from the contractor for the House of Commons and $10 in addition, if he would give me in return one similar to the kind furnished the Senate. He refused, and, therefore, I kept the trunk. That was in 1891. This Parliament I took occasion to examine one of the trunks at the Russell House delivered to members of this House, and I came to the conclusion that there was very little difference between it and the one I had got in the previous Parliament. I made up my mind that one trunk of that kind was enough and would not take another. Then there was some delay, on account of failure or some other reason, in getting the trunks, and a few days before I left the House last year I was in Montreal and went into the store of the contractors. I understood that the next supply would not be delivered for some time, but having found what kind of trunks they were, I said to the gentleman in charge that I did not care to accept one of that kind again, because I had one like it already. I would rather take a valise or something of the kind instead. I took the value of the trunk in what I could buy there for $10, or $12 at the very most, in preference to taking an inferior trunk. The hon. member (Mr. Gibson) says that the members were consulted and were asked to examine samples of the trunks before the order was given. This is the first I have heard of it, and am as constant in my attendance as any other member.

Mr. GIBSON. I would like to inform the hon. gentleman (Mr. McDougall) that the samples were in the Tower Room for two weeks before the contract was given.

Mr. McDOUGALL. The same samples might be in this House for two years and members know nothing about it. A few members may have examined them, but what the hon. member now says hardly justifies the sweeping statement he previously made that the members all satisfied themselves as to the trunks before the order was given. I heard nothing of it, and the hon. members about me here say the same. I, for one, do not consider that the trunk was worth one dollar more than the trunks we got at the previous Parliament—both were bad.

Mr. LISTER. Members had better buy their own trunks

Mr. McDOUGALL. I was about to say—I am not in favour of accepting trunks under circumstances of that kind. Better do without them than defraud the country in the way it has been defrauded. We are charged with getting a benefit from this which we did not get, and it would be far better that we should not accept anything of the kind than have it done in that way.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not know who gave the contract in the last Parliament for the trunks for this House, but the contract for the Senate was given by the late Senator Reid. I saw the trunk he got as a sample. My attention was drawn to those supplied for the Senate and those supplied for the Commons. The ones that Senator Reid got for the Senate for the same money as ours cost, were worth $8 or $10 more than the ones we got. At the time I offered to exchange mine and take a Senate trunk and give, I think, $6 or $8 more, but I could not get it. The Senate trunk was made differently from ours. It had rows of large headed nails up the corners on both sides and over the top, and, between two layers of leather it had the steel band-wire, which keeps the trunk from breaking in. The Senator used an awl in several places to prove that the steel was there, and it was found in every part. As to the second batch of trunks, I do not see any difference between them and the first, even to the locks. As to samples having been submitted for the inspection of members, this is the first I heard of it. I saw no sample before the trunks were delivered. If I had, I should have refused my consent to the purchase of trunks like those we received.

Motion agreed to, and the House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). I would like to ask the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) what progress is being made by him in preparation for giving us an accelerated service in the city for drop letters specially posted. I think he said that steps were being taken to establish an accelerated service in large centres of population.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). What I intended to say was that we were introducing a system of immediate delivery, not of drop letters specially, but of letters from any point; and that that system would probably come into operation about the 1st of July. There is a special sum for that purpose, and the letters will be delivered up to a late hour at night.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I presume that the intention is to deliver drop letters in this way also.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Any letter that has an "immediate delivery" stamp on it will be treated as an "immediate delivery" letter; but I do not fancy that in cities, where there is a pretty frequent delivery, advantage will be taken of it for drop letters, though the system will apply to drop letters as well as to others.

Mr. ELLIS. In places of what size does the hon. gentleman intend to introduce this system?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In all cities where there is a letter delivery system.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Would the Postmaster General allow me on this item to refer to the closing of a post office in Nova Scotia?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have no objection. But, of course, I am not able to carry in my memory, probably, the facts as to the matter to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. McDougall) desires to refer. If he would prefer it, and will give me memo. of the subject, we can take it up on the Supplementary Estimates for 1899.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I may not have an opportunity to be here then. Sir Charles Tupper, on leaving, left some papers in my hands with the request that I should bring the matter to the attention of the Postmaster General. The papers were forwarded by the parties who complain in this case. The subject referred to is the closing of a post office at a place called Pirate Harbour, in Guysborough, N.S. The following letter was addressed to Sir Charles Tupper:—

Pirate Harbour, March 2nd, 1898.

Sir Charles Tupper, M.P., Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—Inclosed you will please find petition from the people of this place to the Postmaster General, protesting against the closing of the Pirate Harbour post office, with the correspondence in the matter. The petition, which was forwarded on the 11th of March last, and also my letter to Mr. Fraser concerning it, have been treated with silent contempt. I am informed by Mr. Robert Peeples, ex-postmaster here, and am pleased to hear, that you are going to make inquiry concerning the grievous imposition by the Government on the followers of their own party here. They have had my support in the past previous to the last local election in Nova Scotia, but I promise you not in future.

I am, yours truly,
(Sgd.) ALFRED F. PEEPLES.

The following is the letter addressed to the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser):—

April 5th, 1897.

D. C. Fraser, Esq., M.P.

My dear Sir,—I wish to bring to your notice that the people of Pirate Harbour sent a petition to the Postmaster General a month ago protesting against the closing of the Pirate Harbour post office. No reply has yet been received. The Liberal committee here say it is the intention of the Government to open a post office again at Pirate Harbour.

Please see Mr. Mulock and ascertain what he intends to do in the matter. The post office was closed on the first instant in the midst of a community who are three-fourths your supporters, and they feel very indignant over the post office deal.

I remain, yours truly,
(Sgd.) ALFRED F. PEEPLES.

Here is the first petition:

To the Honourable Postmaster General,
Ottawa.

The petition of the undersigned residents of Pirate Harbour, in the county of Guysborough and adjoining districts of Steep Creek and Middle Melford, respectfully sheweth:

That there is a scheme now on foot among a few people living at Mulgrave Station to cancel the Pirate Harbour post office and carry the mails one and a half miles further north to Mulgrave Station, against which your petitioners most earnestly protest.

Your petitioners sheweth that the people of Pirate Harbour have enjoyed the undisputed right of their post office for over forty years, and from the convenience afforded by the train touching at Point Harbour platform on arrival and departure from Mulgrave we have been served with a daily mail from the east and west for the last seventeen years.

Your petitioners further sheweth that from the fact of the train on arrival and departure from Mulgrave touching at the platform at Pirate Harbour, makes it convenient and appropriate to exchange a daily mail at this point. The residents of Steep Creek and Middle Medford, who are served tri-weekly only, have a decided advantage also in tapping the Pirate Harbour office on arrival of the train for their mails. Another advantage your petitioners fully appreciate is that the Pirate Harbour office is open or accessible at all hours from 6 a.m. to 9 p.m., a privilege which we would not have under the rules of the Mulgrave post office. Your petitioners herein wish to express their confidence in the present postmaster at Pirate Harbour, who holds the reputation of discharging the duties of his office in a strictly impartial manner. The advice and prayer of your petitioners, therefore, will be to leave the Pirate Harbour office and continue the forwarding duties from the said office as in the past.

Signed by seventy names. This is the letter accompanying the petition:

To the Honourable Postmaster General,
Ottawa.

Sir,—Inclosed please find petition with 75 names. The majority of those petitioners are supporters of Mr. D. C. Fraser, M. P. for Guysborough, who supports your Government. The Pirate Harbour post office costs the Government nothing for rent, fuel, light, twine or sealing wax. Consequently the removal of the office to Mulgrave would not save anything for the Government, while it would entail a hardship on the people of Pirate Harbour without giving any additional benefit to the people of Mulgrave. I inclose for your information a rough sketch showing you how the train approaches Pirate Harbour on arrival and departure from Mulgrave. The location of the Pirate Harbour post office suits the people here very well, and I have never heard any complaints against the postmaster, and can see no reason why the office should be shifted.

I may say, while writing, that if you inquire from Mr. D. C. Fraser you will find that myself and my brother, and Thos. H. Peeples, my father, have always supported Mr. Fraser with our votes, and I hope and trust you will give this petition your favourable consideration.

(Sgd.) ALFRED F. PEEPLES.

That is the condition of the matter of the closing of that post office. I would like to remind the Postmaster General that a great many of those petitioners are fishermen who, during the season, are away from their homes the most of the day, and it is a great inconvenience for them when they return to have to go to a more distant post office, and at an hour when perhaps they would not be admitted to that post office. This convenience would cost little or nothing to the department. I cannot see, for my part, what reasons the Postmaster General could have for closing that office and depriving that large number of people of this convenience.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I take all responsibility in that matter. I found, for example, at Mulgrave three post offices within a distance of two miles, when the change of Government took place; and as I found in my county that there were fishing sections six or eight miles away from a post office, and I did not wish to entail any more expense upon the department than was necessary, I said: Close these three offices and open one central office. There is no person from Pirate Harbour up to the Cove that has to travel two miles to get his letters. And that is not more than we have to do in the town of Canso, having 3,000 of a population. At Canso, the people all round about as far even as the Direct Cable Company, have to go to one office; they have to travel as far at Canso as at Mulgrave. As I wanted to open up offices among the fishermen who had no office at all, I said: One good office here is better than three, especially as I knew that they had been opened for political purposes.

Mr. McDOUGALL. This one was open for 40 years.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I don't care if it was 500 years ago. That was the first office; the two others were opened for political purposes. The people there, both sides of politics, are satisfied that the right thing was done.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Notwithstanding this petition?

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). That means nothing. I can get up a petition to behead the hon. gentleman. I do not heed these things.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Try it.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I do not need to try it. I would have to keep them away if I gave notice that I wanted to do such a thing. The offices of Port Mulgrave and Mulgrave Station were within less than a mile of each other, and mistakes frequently occurred in sending letters to one office that belonged to the other, and I did the same thing there. I did not think it right to keep a post office open when it was not in the interest of the country. I did the same thing in Caledonia. There were three offices in a country district within two miles of each other, and I closed one of them. One of them was opened just to satisfy a political chap that wanted to get an office. I do not think it is too much for people who live near each other to go two miles for their mail, as they do in the town of New Glasgow, a town of over 4,000. There people have to travel just as far to get their mail as they do at Port Mulgrave.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Oh, no. I have seen it.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I know what the distance is better than the hon. gentleman's eyes. I tell the hon. gentleman that there is no person at Pirate Cove who has to go further for his letters than people have to go at New Glasgow, where the post office serves 4,000 people. While I am willing to give every possible convenience to people to get their mail, I say it is a scandal to have three post offices within two miles. I know that some Liberals wanted the third office kept open, and the hon. gentleman is surprised because he happens to find a Liberal name on his petition. The people of that district who understand it, are one upon this matter. I know that some of my friends thought that it should not be done, but I explained it to them, and they are perfectly satisfied. I am satisfied, and I will take all the risks.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Because the hon. gentleman don't intend to go back to his constituents.

Mr. FRASER. The hon. gentleman thinks he is smart. I say if I want to go back there there is no person can prevent me from going back. I am ready to go back at any time against the hon. gentleman and all their forces, and more than that, I am ready to go into their constituencies. I say I take the whole responsibility of that, and I will do it again. I obtained a good post office in my county by closing two post offices, and I will do it again, even if some Liberals object. In my county post offices were formerly established and opened to serve the purposes of political charlatans. If the hon. gentleman thinks by having a large number of post offices unnecessarily, I may say to him that I would advise the Postmaster General to act as he has acted already, and as I have advised him to act in two or three instances. I have explained to my constituents the benefits derived from having one good post office rather than two or three, for it must be remembered that fishermen have sometimes to travel six or eight miles for their mail. I take all responsibility for this action, and if the hon. gentleman thinks he can make political capital out of it, I am satisfied to let him hold that opinion.

Mr. MILLS. I rather think the cat was let out of the bag when the hon. gentleman made the statement. He said he wanted to open up post offices in order to get political followers into office.

Mr. FRASER. I said no such thing. I said I wanted to close two or three post offices and open in place one good one.

Mr. MILLS. The same as was done in Annapolis County. I referred to the cases last session and incidentally this session. In Lower Granville there were three offices on one line of mail route. I take exception to the statement of the hon. member that a number of post offices is not conducive to the business welfare of the community. When they are on the same route they can be established at a cheaper rate and have better facilities than if there is to be a separate mail route for an individual office. Between Lower Granville and Victoria Beach there is a daily mail route. On that line there were two post offices, one in charge of the ex-Warden of the county, J. H. Thorne, and the other in charge of Capt. David Covert. They were informed that complaints had been made against them of partisanship at the last elections, and they were brought before the post office inspector. An investigation was made, the charges were not sustained in any way, and the inspector then informed these postmasters that they had better resign, but they refused to do so. What did the Government do to get these men out of their positions? They abolished the two post offices at Karsdale and Thorneville, and established one office between them, and put in as postmaster the man who made the charges against them. They put in a self-confessed forger, and self-confessed perjurer, who was a ward-heeler and who appeared before Judge Savory in connection with the revision of the election tests of 1890. That man was a self-confessed forger and a self-confessed perjurer, and he admitted himself to be in the pay of the Attorney General of Nova Scotia for the purpose of getting names of voters placed upon the lists in 1890. That is the way these things are done. From the manner in which the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) assumed responsibility, one would imagine he was the Postmaster General. But will he take the responsibility of these acts? I do not think he will; and I doubt whether the Postmaster General himself will be willing to assume the responsibility for such an outrage as was perpetrated on the people of Lower Granville. The Liberals of Lower Granville, as well as the Conservatives, are in arms about the action of the Post Office Department. The case brought forward by the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. McDougall) is on all fours with the case to which I have referred. The Government were determined to assist somebody and they succeeded.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Who is this officer, Major Cartwright?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Major Cartwright was brought here from the permanent force in Toronto. He has taken the position of Assistant Adjutant General.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Then he is not a relative of the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. His son.

Mr. CLARKE. My hon. friend from East Toronto (Mr. Robertson) has on the Order paper some questions respecting the militia, and I doubt there will be any further opportunity of asking them before prorogation. As we are now discussing militia items, I desire to ask for my hon. friend the information he desires to obtain. He wants to know as follows:—

1. How many of the subaltern officers appointed to the permanent force since 10th July, 1896, were in possession of long course certificates when appointed?

2. How many of the officers so appointed have since obtained long course certificates?

3. How many of these officers are not in possession of long course certificates?

Will the Minister answer that question?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am unable to answer the question at the moment. I will, however, furnish the information when the further Supplementaries are considered by the committee.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Will the Minister state the rules on which young men are admitted to the military school at Fredericton, and on what grounds they are discharged after being there a short period? I am acquainted with the case of a young man who went to the military school at Fredericton at great expense, and after he had been there a few weeks or a month was ordered home. The reason given to me for this action was that the young man was a Conservative.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Nothing could be more untrue and unjust than to make a statement of that kind. I do not charge it against the hon. gentleman; but it would have been only fair if the hon. gentleman had sent me notice that he would make a charge of this kind. I can assure him that if he will send me the name and the particulars, I will investigate the matter. But there is not the slightest particle of political partisanship in connection with the administration of the military schools. We never inquire as to a man's politics at all. I presume the hon. gentleman is referring to the men who are sent from the different militia battalions throughout the country to these schools of instruction.

Mr. McDOUGALL. This man was never under instruction in any way until he went to Fredericton. The man's name was McKenzie. I forget his christian name now.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. But he was not a member of the active militia.

Mr. McDOUGALL. No.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Then he had no business to go there.

Mr. McDOUGALL. There were a number of young men from the neighbourhood who went there, but it happened that their politics were different and the others got not only one term but two terms.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I do not know that the hon. gentleman (Mr. McDougall) understands what he is saying, but I am sure I do not understand what he means. No man can enter these schools unless he has joined one of the militia corps of the country. We provide schools at the different depots to teach non-commissioned officers and officers of the active militia. The colonel in command of a battalion makes a request through the proper channel to have some of his officers or men received at a given school, and in the maritime provinces that is at Fredericton. If there is room there these men are received and in all cases they are received in the order in which the names are sent in. No question is made as to politics. We know nothing whatever of their politics. As a matter of fact four-fifths of the commanding officers of the militia are Conservatives, but the department does not know any difference between a Conservative or a Liberal. We receive in these schools every man who is properly recommended and is a member of the active militia, in the order in which application is made, and if there is room for them.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I know personally these young men about whom I speak, as they are from my neighbourhood. Two brothers, one Archibald McDougall and the other, Daniel McDougall, attended the military school at Fredericton and before they went there they were never under one single hour's instruction in their life. They were never members of any corps.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. They could not go there without belonging to a corps.

Mr. McDOUGALL. They never had any connection with any corps belonging to the militia, and the other young man was precisely in the same position in that regard.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. McDougall) give me their names?

Mr. McDOUGALL. Daniel McDougall and Archibald McDougall; they served their time one or two terms.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). Were they Conservatives?

Mr. McDOUGALL. These two were Liberals. The man who was sent home after a short time was John McKenzie, I think.

Mr. MILLS. Was he a member of any corps?

Mr. McDOUGALL. No.

Mr. MILLS. Was he a Tory?

Mr. McDOUGALL. Yes. The three young men lived within a mile of my place, and I might say my authority is the father of this young man McKenzie who complained to me about how his son was treated, and he could not understand it except that the young man gave away that he was a Conservative.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Could the hon. gentleman give me about the date McKenzie went there?

Mr. McDOUGALL. As near as I can remember it was September or October last.

Mr. CLARKE. In this item there is $100,000 to provide for supplies and transportation for the Yukon militia force? Is it a fact that the heavy guns for the contingent were sent over the all-American route via Seattle?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. My information is that most of the guns, not all, are being sent over the Stikine River route. There are no heavy guns.

Mr. CLARKE. The rapid-firing guns.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. They are taken apart and not heavy in that way. They were taken over the Glenora route.

Mr. CLARKE. How did they get to the Pacific Coast?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. By the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. CLARKE. That is what I want to know, and I asked that information some time ago.

Mr. MILLS. Who has been appointed caretaker of Fort Ann at Annapolis?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. A gentleman by the name of Owen has been appointed to take charge without any pay. He agreed to exercise an oversight there, but is not under any salary. A man by the name of Amberman, I think, has been put into one of the houses on the ground and he is the direct caretaker, but he reports to Mr. Owen.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. J. M. Owen?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, I think so.

Mr. MILLS. Is that a permanent arrangement?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No, a temporary arrangement.

Mr. FOSTER. Where are the papers asked for with reference to this $100,000 item?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I gave them to the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) two days ago.

Mr. FOSTER. Have they been brought down to the House? Were they laid on the Table?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) read a telegram the other morning and at the afternoon sitting of the House he complained to me that he had not received the papers. I was not in the House at the time, but I said they were in my desk and at his request I handed the papers to him. He has not sent them back, but I suppose he can lay them on the Table of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. He cannot and have them incorporated in the records of the House. That must be done by the Minister. I am informed that the papers in reference to the supplies have not been brought down.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. All I was asked to give was information in regard to the contract for transportation, and I gave the fullest information I could in regard to it. As to the supplies I have here the fullest information with regard to them, from whom we purchased them, and the prices paid, and I will give them now or any other convenient time.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend may not have understood it; but I am quite sure that both the hon. member for Pictou and myself asked for all the papers. I remember suggesting to the hon. member for Pictou to ask as well for any that might be in the Department of the Interior. The whole question of supplies came up. It is very well for my hon. friend who has the papers, and understands them, to state their contents; but we would like to have the papers themselves.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There are no "papers" in the proper sense of the term. The contract was entered into, after a certain number of tradesmen had been communicated with by Colonel Lake, the Quartermaster General of the department, and I asked him to prepare a memorandum with regard to the whole question, and I have it here, it gives all the information which I am able to give. We did not ask for tenders by advertisement, and I am prepared to state the reasons why we did not. I am prepared to give the names of all who submitted tenders, and the prices at which the goods were purchased, either now or when the corresponding item in the next Supplementary Estimates is being considered.

Mr. FOSTER. We might as well have the statement now.

Mr. TISDALE. What system did the hon. Minister pursue? Did he ask a certain number of gentlemen to make offers, did he send a circular out, or did he deal with one individual?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). I want to say, in reply to what was said by my hon. friend from York, that I was here when the discussion took place, and my understanding certainly was not that we were asked to bring down any papers relating to the purchase of supplies. I did not understand that that was the subject of discussion at all. I understood that the subject of discussion was simply the question of transportation. Accordingly, when I gave directions respecting the preparation of the papers, like my hon. friend the Minister of Militia. I gave directions for the preparation of those relating to the transport contract, and I laid them on the Table of the House. If my hon. friend wants the papers relating to the purchase of supplies, there is no objection at all to bringing them down. It was simply a misunderstanding.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. This is the statement of the quartermaster general, and it will give all the information I have :

The points to be noted with regard to the allotment of tenders for stores for the Yukon force to the successful tenderers appear to me to be as follows :—

The first order given for the preparation of the force contemplated that the force should start in ten days' time from the giving of the order. As every detail had to be worked out, from the settling of the uniform to be worn, the amount and nature of the daily ration each day, down to the actual detail of the men to compose the force, it is evident that we were very much pressed for time, and that practically it was all but impossible to advertise in the press for tenders for these supplies to be submitted in the usual way. As a matter of fact, several firms were invited and did submit tenders. For instance, Messrs. H. N. Bate & Sons, the Hudson's Bay Company, Mr. J. Strachan, of Montreal, the Ogilvie Milling Company, Harris Brothers, Hamilton, Mr. J. Jamieson, of Ottawa, the Bovril Co. (Ltd.), and one or two others.

Secondly, in allotting these contracts, considerable attention had to be paid to the uncertainty of the conditions of the route and the means of transport. For instance, it was for some time uncertain whether the stores would be conveyed by sleighs, by toboggans, by pack transport or by men. Further, we were constantly receiving additional information about the route. It was, therefore, most desirable, it may be said essential, that we should have our contractors close at hand in order that we might direct them as to the method of packing, and answer the numerous questions of detail which arose in the course of the fulfilment of the contracts. I may say that from the time that the contract was allotted to Messrs. H. N. Bate & Sons to the time the goods were delivered to the railway company for transport, we were in almost daily communication with their representative, as to the manner in which the stores were to be packed and preserved for keeping, &c. In the case of the Hudson Bay Company, to whom a considerable portion of the contract was allotted, we had personal instructions given to them by the officer commanding the force, and we were, in addition, fortified by our knowledge of the vast experience of this company in packing.

At the same time, that it may be seen that the prices paid by us to our contractors were not excessive, a list of the more important articles, and the price for each, is attached, together with a list of the prices current in the wholesale market at the present time. It may also be remarked that it was a matter of common knowledge from newspapers that a force of men would be sent to the Yukon district, and that they would, of course, require supplies ; and it may be stated that the Hudson Bay Company submitted their tender solely on information derived from the press. It was, therefore, open to any other contractors to have adopted the same course.

It is true that the expedition did not start until May, although ordered early in March ; but it must be borne in mind that throughout the whole of the period it was impossible to say how soon the force might be required to move, and it was, therefore, necessary to be prepared with our arrangements without loss of time.

It will be remembered that there were two main supplies of stores : first, the supplies actually taken with the detachment itself for its use ; secondly the reserve supplies for delivery by sea, and via the mouth of the Yukon River. Having arranged for the delivery of the first consignment by certain contractors, and having explained to them all the conditions attending the transaction, there was evident advantage in giving the further contracts to the same people, and avoiding a repetition of process of giving instructions. Further, these contractors were in a position to secure us, as they did secure us, against the extra expense which would otherwise have been incurred consequent upon the great rise in the wholesale prices of all provisions, which was brought about early in April by the war between the United States and Spain.

In addition to what is said there, I may state that when the decision was first come to to send a force into that country, we expected that it would go forward on the ice up the Stikine River. The time was very limited. As stated by Colonel Lake, if the force had started at the time we originally expected, there were only about ten days. It turned out differently. We found that, owing to the water on the ice at the mouth of the river, it was necessary to wait. We might possibly have asked for tenders by advertisement in the newspapers, but I think the reasons stated by Colonel Lake ought to be sufficient to justify us in the course we pursued. In any case, we made contracts of a much more favourable character than could have been made a few weeks later. As a matter of fact, the goods have been purchased at probably 20 per cent less than they could be purchased now. I may say further that at the outset we took occasion to ascertain the difference between the prices here and the prices on the coast, and we satisfied ourselves, through our district officer commanding at Victoria, B.C., Colonel Peters, that the prices here plus the freight to Victoria were lower than the prices on the coast.

Mr. CLARKE. I notice by the statement the hon. Minister has read, that tenders were asked from firms in Montreal, in this city, and in Hamilton. Was there an opportunity given to any of the Toronto produce dealers to put in bids ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am not aware that there was.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the amount of the actually used supplies, the amount of the reserved supplies, and the value of each ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think the first supplies were in quantity about eighty tons.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the amount of money involved in the actually used supplies and what in the reserve supplies?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am not able to separate them in that way. The total cost of the supplies is about $32,000 or $33,000.

Mr. FOSTER. It is absolutely necessary for discussion that we should know what the actually used supplies and what the reserve supplies cost. The hon. gentleman pleads that exigency prevented his calling for tenders for the actually used supplies, but he can have no such plea for the reserve supplies.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I can tell the hon. gentleman approximately. Between $20,000 and $22,000 for the reserve supplies, and $10,000 and $12,000 for the used supplies.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Why did not the hon. gentleman ask for tenders in Toronto? It seems extraordinary that he should go to Hamilton and London and other cities much smaller than Toronto and pass Toronto by. I have no objection to his calling for tenders from the business men in these smaller cities, but it does seem extraordinary that these supplies should have been asked for only in cities represented by Liberals.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There is no reason. This matter was left to my officers, and no one who asked for the opportunity of tendering was refused.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What public notice was given?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There was no public notice given.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How did the hon. Minister expect people to ask for an opportunity of tendering when no public notice was given that the supplies were required?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It was currently known and spoken of in the newspapers, and some of the tenders that were received were due to the fact that it was publicly known that we were purchasing supplies.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Does not the hon. Minister see that he has himself shown that there was quite sufficient time to call for tenders? He says that it was a matter of current report in the newspapers. It seems that there was plenty of time for the newspapers to discuss it, but not sufficient time to advertise for tenders.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have read the statement of Col. Lake. This was a kind of business requiring very special care with reference to packing, and it was important that the officers here should, as far as possible, have the matter under their control. Col. Lake gave that as a reason, and any one who knows Col. Lake will agree that he would not make that statement unless he deemed the matter of first importance.

Mr. MONTAGUE. For my part, I cannot conceive of an officer of the intelligence of Col. Lake passing by the great city of Toronto without having some reason for doing so. When the hon. Minister throws the whole responsibility upon Col. Lake, he throws a responsibility upon him which it is not at all pleasant, I fancy, for him to assume. I think we ought to have further explanation as to why parties in Toronto were not asked for tenders.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I do not throw any responsibility on Col. Lake, but have simply read what he has written in his own report. I am not able to give any further reason, and there is no reason—I do not know what the hon. gentleman means by a reason.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The reason is this. The city of Toronto, with a population of nearly 200,000, undoubtedly must have men much better equipped to supply the requirements, if experience, capital and extent of business are to be taken into account, than can be found in the city of London, with a population of 45,000, and that is no discredit to the city of London. There must be some reason why this is done.

Mr. TISDALE. I think it is hardly fair to Col. Lake to shift all the responsibility on him. The purchase of supplies must be made under the responsibility of the Minister.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Of course it is. My hon. friend misunderstands me, if he thinks I do not accept full responsibility.

Mr. TISDALE. I quite understand that he must, but still the question is whether he ought not to have exercised his responsibility by taking the course suggested. The hon. gentleman says that he did so because it is a case of exigency, but if he had time to correspond with Kingston, London and other cities, he had equal time to correspond with a larger city like Toronto. There can be no doubt that Toronto is well equipped with firms in a position to tender, because we all know that large contracts for supplies for the Klondike and Yukon are made there, and that there is scarcely a mining company which does not get circulars from Toronto firms offering to furnish supplies. There are other establishments in British Columbia besides the Hudson Bay store. The hon. gentleman's reply is hardly satisfactory, when he confines himself to saying that Col. Lake did so and so because the exigencies did not allow him to do more.

I submit that the precedent is not a good one. The Minister ought not to have confined himself to simply telling the quartermaster general to procure the supplies, but he should have asked: What supplies do you want? and then see that opportunities were given to business firms to tender by advertising for tenders, or if there was not time to advertise, by sending out circulars. Had the Minister done this, he would have secured the best supplies at the cheapest rates, and have put himself in the position of not being open to the charge of favouring any particular firms or localities.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. My hon. friend knows that the quartermaster general is specially charged with this branch of the work, and I think it is quite proper that the Minister should be advised by him in a matter of this kind. It is the duty of the quartermaster general to see that these men are supplied with food, to see that they are supplied with it at the proper time, that the food is of proper quality, and that it is in proper quantity. These are very important considerations, when you are sending a body of men into a district such as these men have gone into. Colonel Lake conscientiously believed that he was pursuing the best course. The time was limited to ten days, in the first place, so that there was no time to advertise generally in the newspapers. And when a second supply had to be got, as these parties had proved satisfactory, and it was thought that the experience they had gained would be an advantage and enable them to fill the second contract better than if we began anew with others. Now, with regard to the parties from whom we bought the supplies, while I am on my feet, I would like to read the names. First, I have here a list of persons from whom the purchases were made or from whom applications were received, and the names of those who have been recommended for patronage but were not asked to supply:—

We have purchased more from W. E. Sanford & Co. than from any other clothing firm. We found them able to do the work in the time, and their work was satisfactory.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What was their politics?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. We did not take the politics into consideration in purchasing.

Tower & Lyon, hand-cuffs, New York.
 James W. Woods, blankets, stoves, general supplies, Ottawa.
 The Harold A. Wilson Co., athletic supplies, Toronto.

Mr. CLARKE. What was purchased from the Harold A. Wilson Company?

 W. C. Caldwell & Co., blankets, Lanark.

Mr. EARLE. Have you purchased from all these people?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No.

Mr. EARLE. There is no information, then, in that list.

Mr. FOSTER. Of what benefit is that list if the hon. Minister does not distinguish between those who supplied and those who did not supply? Again, how much did each supply? Again, at what price? Again, where was the competition? If only one firm was asked for groceries and another firm for boots, there would be no competition.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am going to give the hon. gentleman the prices:—

Flour, per barrel—First order, $5.65; second order, $6.10.

Mr. WALLACE. Delivered where?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. At Vancouver.

Mr. EARLE. What flour was that?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I suppose the hon. gentleman refers to the brand. I cannot give that.

Mr. EARLE. That makes a great difference. If the hon. Minister asked for flour on the Pacific Coast, we could give him very good flour, regardless of brand, at a much lower figure, had we had an opportunity to offer.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I can assure the hon. gentleman (Mr. Earle) that the goods we have bought are the best of their class, without exception.

Mr. EARLE. But that does not say what the class is. I speak from knowledge of the provision trade, being in that trade myself. When the Minister uses the argument that it is necessary to buy here because the merchants are experienced in packing goods, he should know that that is a specialty with the people of the Pacific Coast; that they are accustomed to pack for mining camps, and that there are not more experienced merchants in the Dominion in that particular line of business. I think it is regrettable that they have not had an opportunity of offering at least for the supply of these goods. I feel satisfied, quality for quality, purchases could be made at a lower figure on the Pacific Coast than the cost of purchasing here and sending to the Pacific Coast. The Hudson Bay Company and many other large firms who are in a position to buy goods to the very best advantage laid in immense stocks of staple goods for the purpose of supplying the Yukon trade, purchasing last fall when the markets were very much lower than they are at the present time, and securing many lines of goods that it is almost impossible to purchase now. I am satisfied as I can be about anything that if we had an opportunity—I do not say myself, for of course I could not take part—that on the coast they would be able to compete successfully for that trade. The Government has had experience in purchasing for the mounted police. The coast merchants have been able to supply goods at short notice. The Government have an agent who supervises the shipment of these goods. He is on the spot and devotes his time to looking after supplies to be sent to the mounted police. So, there would be no difficulty on that score. On the score of experience, there is no place in the Dominion where they have had the experience they have had on the Pacific Coast, in the packing and preparation of supplies to go into that country, either by pack train, by men, or sleighs, or in any other manner. I regret very much that the Government have not seen fit to give our people at least an opportunity of competing for so large an amount of supplies as are going forward at the present time.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. All I can say is that means were taken to ascertain the relative prices, and I was informed that the prices of goods supplied in the east delivered at Vancouver, were better than the prices quoted at Vancouver.

Mr. EARLE. Will the Minister tell us how that comparison was made? Was it a mere statement of the officer he mentioned who possibly dropped into a place and inquired the price? That was not competition.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think a gentleman occupying the position that Colonel Peters occupies, who has to do work of that kind, would do it properly.

Mr. COCHRANE. It appears to me very strange that this officer should be charged, without any suggestion from the Minister, with all the responsibility of purchasing these enormous supplies that were to be provided for the maintenance of the militia in the Yukon district. He says that he has unbounded faith in his officers. I do not doubt it, we all have faith in his officers. But there is a little suspicion in my mind, perhaps not well founded, that notwithstanding all that confidence, perhaps, there were some friends that the Government wanted to favour, and the Minister might have given an intimation.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. All I can say to the hon. member is that as for giving any of these contracts to political friends of the Government, nothing would give me greater pleasure than to give a good contract to a political friend, provided he was able to discharge the work, and at as good prices as anybody else, and supply as good goods as anybody else. I venture to say that when the prices we have had to pay are critically examined, and the quality of the goods examined, it will be found that the country has made a most excellent bargain, and we have saved a good many thousand dollars in purchasing the goods at the time we did.

Mr. CLARKE. Without tender ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, without tender. With regard to the remarks of the hon. member for Victoria, B.C. (Mr. Earle), I may say that in addition to correspondence with parties in British Columbia, we got a list of prices early in March which were being paid by the North-west Mounted Police in British Columbia for goods, and we found that the prices at which we were offered the same goods here, delivered on the coast, were better than the prices which had actually been paid up to that time by the North-west Mounted Police.

Mr. EARLE. I may say that all the supplies that have been purchased for the mounted police have been purchased in exactly the same manner. The order has been taken to the house which filled the order, and there has been no competition in any shape of form. To my knowledge, one firm there has filled all the orders for provisions that have gone to the mounted police, and I have heard others of the same political faith complaining that they had not an opportunity of offering for those goods. It is quite possible the hon. Minister may have paid more than he would have paid after inviting competition.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I did not know that the goods were not bought by tender. But it is a fact that the prices which were quoted to us here were better than the prices which were being paid there. Now, as to the other goods. Flour per barrel, the best quality of flour, and which, by the way, is supplied by the Ogilvies—

Mr. EARLE. Ogilvie makes two grades of flour, both of them are good. One is the Strong Baker's, and the other is the Hungarian flour that sells for very much more. If a man came into our place and asked me for the best brand of Ogilvie's flour, I would give him the Hungarian, though orders have been filled up here by what they call Strong Baker's, that is worth some 40 or 50 cents a barrel less. It is good flour, but it is not first-class flour, as the Minister of Customs can tell him. So that when you get goods purchased by a gentleman like Colonel Lake, who knows nothing at all about them, you do not know, unless you have an opportunity of comparing the quality and prices, whether you are buying to advantage or not.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Now that the hon. gentleman reminds me, I know that the Hungarian was the brand. The prices are $5.65 and $6.10, delivered in Vancouver. Butter per pound, 25 cents. The present price of the same flour, as I find here, is $7 to-day.

Mr. EARLE. That is simply absurd. That is the highest retail price, where they sell by the sack.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I mean in both cases. I asked for a statement of the prices we paid, and I have here, prepared by my officers, the prices paid by us and the prices to-day. The first order of flour was $5.65, the second order, $6.10. Price of the equivalent on the 10th of May, $6.50; on the 20th of May, $7.

Mr. CLANCY. Why does the hon. gentleman make a comparison with the prices to-day ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It is not altogether upon the principle that I have heard comparisons made in this House for many years as to the increase or reduction in price owing to the high taxation being put on goods; but it is because I wish to show that the country, as a matter of fact, has saved a good many thousand dollars because we took action when we did and bought our goods promptly. Whatever else may be said, it has not resulted in loss but it has resulted in a decided saving.

Mr. FOSTER. What has that to do with the principle of buying by tender and contract ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Whether it has anything to do with the principle or not, I have endeavoured to give the reasons why I pursued that course. As an effort is being made to make a point against the department in this matter, it is only fair that the country should know that, as a matter of fact, we have saved money to the country by the course we have pursued.

Mr. FOSTER. In my opinion there is no connection at all between them. The only test of whether the country could have saved money by the hon. gentleman's peculiar proceeding is to have proved it at the time when he made his purchase, by the principle of tender. He bought by private contract. He would have given the country the best possible proof as to whether he saved or lost money, if he had asked for tenders and bought by public competition. That is the way we would have tested whether there was a saving or otherwise to the country. But to say by comparing prices of a private contract made in a certain month with the market rates two months afterwards is unsatisfactory, especially when in the meantime there has been, for example, a great rise in the price of flour.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The hon. gentleman can take it in any way he pleases. It is the fact I stated, and the country will be interested in it. I was not making an argument on it.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman did more than state the fact; he based an argument on it.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The prices paid were as follows:—

STATEMENT showing prices paid for supplies for the Yukon Detachment, also what the market prices have been since for the same description of supplies.

Except for butter, all these prices have been firm or advancing since first purchased by the department.

Mr. EARLE. I should like to ask the Minister how the officer on the Pacific Coast arrived at the conclusion that the prices there were excessive, higher than those for which the goods could be laid down on the coast by merchants in the eastern provinces.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. We asked merchants for current prices there and we asked for current prices here, and we compared the two rates. We did not ask the district officer on the coast to make a comparison, but we simply asked merchants there for a list of prices.

Mr. CLANCY. It is perfectly clear that the hon. gentleman gave an intimation to his own friends to send in offers. The hon. Minister has not stated how any merchants came to make an offer. Perhaps the Minister will tell the committee how it occurred that any person came to give an offer, obtained a description of the goods wanted, what intimation they had, and if there was any day fixed when the offers would be considered. No reliable trader would send in an offer on a newspaper report; before doing so he must have information of the quantities and classes of goods required. What intimation was given, general or particular, to merchants to send in offers?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I thought I had already told the committee that certain firms were corresponded with and asked to send samples. In every case the department asked for samples of goods which firms proposed to supply together with the prices.

Mr. CLANCY. Was it a general circular?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No, it was addressed to certain selected firms.

Mr. CLANCY. Has the hon. gentleman given the names?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. I understand the document contained the names of those to whom letters were written asking for tenders for supplies, and also the names of persons who applied to be given an opportunity of furnishing supplies. Will the hon. Minister give the names of those to whom communications were sent from his department.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I will supply the list when the further items in the next Supplementary Estimates come up for consideration.

Mr. CLARKE. Upon whom would devolve the responsibility, when the answers had been received, of selecting the goods and materials to be supplied?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There is a board of officers in the department that examines samples sent in.

Mr. CLARKE. Can the hon. gentleman give the names of the officers who examined the flour, for example?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think Colonel Lake, Colonel Macdonald and Captain Benoit.

Mr. EARLE. When the hon. Minister speaks of the Hudson Bay Company, does he mean the company at the coast or at Winnipeg?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. At Winnipeg.

Mr. EARLE. Were any circulars sent to merchants and traders on the Pacific Coast?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No.

Mr. EARLE. And they had no opportunity of making offers, or any knowledge of the quantities of goods required?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think the Hudson Bay Company had the knowledge of the quantities.

Mr. EARLE. The Hudson Bay Company only?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. So far as I know now.

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister has given no satisfactory explanation to the committee.

I have seldom seen a Minister who has received three or four weeks' warning as to what information is required, come down and endeavour to get voted $100,000 on the incomplete and scrappy information volunteered to the committee this afternoon. The hon. gentleman's stand is a peculiar one. Here are $32,000 worth of supplies wanted. It is admitted by hon. gentleman opposite that for only $10,000 worth there can be any plea of urgency; the other $22,000 worth is going to be sent by the summer route to the Yukon. Two things remain for the Minister to do. He has to show to the satisfaction of the committee why, even if there was actual urgency for a portion of the supplies, he should not have asked for tenders. The very fact that the hon. gentleman wrote as far as London, as far as Halifax, as far as Kentville, is proof positive that he had plenty of time to ask for tenders. On a matter of this kind, the information travels very quickly. What was the hon. gentleman's excuse? Let the members of the Government just think of it: the principle of asking for tenders for supplies in order that the public may know, is ignored. The hon. gentleman, when asked how the public was to know that these supplies were wanted, simply answers that it was current talk in the newspapers. So that is the policy of this Government; when great contracts are to be given, involving $32,000 worth of supplies, all that is necessary is that there should be a little talk in the newspapers, and if any one does not hear of it, it is his own fault. Did any one ever hear of the doctrine of giving contracts by tender reduced to such an absurdity? Is that to be the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite? It is the policy in this case. The Minister should have a complete statement of the correspondence, the prices, the firms that competed, the relative prices of the firms that competed; and he should have laid that statement on the Table of the House, or at least he should have the information tabulated so as to be able to give it to the committee this afternoon. I take the liberty to say that, so far as I am concerned, this $100,000 is not going to be voted without information. It is a duty I owe to this committee to ask, and to persist in asking, for that information before this item is passed. Will the hon. gentleman tell us of what firms he asked for grocery supplies?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Bate & Co., I think.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there any competition in that? There is no competition unless you ask for tenders for similar articles from firms that may compete with each other. The tenor of the scrappy information which the hon. gentleman has given us that when he wanted boots he went to some one, when he wanted groceries he went to some one, when he wanted clothing he went to some one, when he wanted butter he went to some one; but the essence of competition is that you shall get tenders from several persons dealing in the same kind of goods. I say this is a gross abuse of the principle of asking for supplies on tender. The Minister did not take the first step he ought to have taken. He had $32,000 to put somewhere. He did not consult the interests of the country; he did not have any regard to the principles on which he should have asked for tenders for these supplies. He simply asked for supplies from his friends, whoever they might be, by a private letter, and without competition, as I understand, because he did not ask competing firms in the same lines of articles to tender. If there was any urgency at all, with regard to the $10,000 worth of supplies, what position is the hon. gentleman in with reference to the $22,000 worth? They were supplies which were not to go away from Vancouver until probably the last of June, and with regard to them he had no excuse at all. The excuse he gave to the House was this. Having asked Mr. Bate privately for a lot of goods at his own prices, and finding that Mr. Bate could supply those goods, he came to the conclusion, when the actually used supplies were exhausted, that he should get from Mr. Bate the general supplies in the same line, making up the $22,000. There was no idea of urgency. There was ample time to find for what other grocery firms could supply these goods. The hon. gentleman says they must be scientifically packed. Well, the statement of my hon. friend is complete on that point. If there are any people in the world who know the business of packing such goods, it is the people of the Pacific Coast. They advertise to the world their ability in that respect. I ask the hon. Minister if he obtained a report from his officers as to what supplies would be necessary, and as to the general method by which these supplies might be obtained. He brings a statement made by Col. Lake, after all the work has been done, that statement having been evidently prepared for the consumption of this House. But surely there must have been some plan. A general does not start out to supply its commissariat without having a reasoned plan for its proper officer, and surely my hon. friend did not start out to supply $32,000 worth of goods for his troops without having had a thorough report from his officers as to the plan on which they should be obtained, the quantities necessary, the qualities, and all that sort of thing. Where is that report? The circulars the hon. gentleman issued—where are they? The House asked for them. We have not one of them. Where is the comparative statement of prices? We have not one of them. In the matter of groceries, and I suppose in other things, there were none. The hon.

gentleman has not treated this committee as he should have treated it.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I want to say to the hon. gentleman that there were other firms that tendered for groceries besides Bate & Co. A Montreal firm, and I think the Hudson Bay Company, also tendered for groceries. There were at least three, and perhaps four.

Mr. FOSTER. I took my hon. friend's word, when I asked him if any other firm besides Bate & Co. tendered for groceries, and he said no. Did he ask Bate & Co. for a certain line of articles and the Hudson Bay Company for another line of articles? We do not know. We have nothing before us to inform us, and the hon. gentleman himself cannot inform us. The hon. gentleman had better let this item stand, and he will have time enough between this and Monday to get these papers in order and give them to the House; for, so far as I am concerned, I will not consent to this vote passing on the amount of information we have.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am quite willing to let the item stand, but might it not be as well to have the discussion on the next item?

Mr. FOSTER. After the man is dead, there is no use getting the apothecaries together to find out what is the best medicine. In the case of the Estimates for railways, we have succumbed to the bland influences of the hon. Minister, and allowed some items to go through without sufficient criticism. In this case, we will try to find out the best medicine before the sick man dies.

Mr. CLARKE. If this item is to stand, would it be too much to ask the Minister to bring down the information as to the methods of getting tenders for the transportation of the supplies? I understand that 500 or 600 tons have gone by the American route. I would like to know why that is done, and whether or not tenders were asked from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and other transportation companies?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The item stands.

Lominion Cartridge Factory—Further sum required to meet wages and general expenses	$10,000
--	----------

Mr. FOSTER. What is that for? What is the total amount?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It is due to the superior quality and increased cost of the ammunition. It amounts in all to $65,000.

Mr. TISDALE. Does the $25,000 cover any increased pay to officers of the permanent schools?

Mr. FOSTER.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That item is owing to the fact that a larger number of the militia and non-commissioned officers and men are attending the schools.

Mr. FOSTER. Does that item for which $1,050 is asked, include a statutory increase?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Is this a new office?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There was always an assistant adjutant general up to 1896, and when I came into office the present adjutant general held the position of assistant adjutant general, there being no adjutant general at that time. The then assistant adjutant general was promoted and we did not fill that position until Major Cartwright was appointed. But just prior to the change of Government a new position had been created, known as the deputy assistant adjutant general. As long as that officer held his position I did not think it necessary to have an assistant adjutant general, but that officer resigned in November last, and the adjutant general complained he could not get along without another officer, and so instead of appointing a deputy assistant adjutant general we abolished that office by Order in Council and went back to the old system of having an assistant adjutant general.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not quite understand what the Minister's new plan is with reference to the retirement of officers in the army at a certain age or after a certain length of service.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The former age limit of a lieutenant colonel was 63 years, and that limit has been reduced to 60. The late Government limited the term of office to five years with the power to extend it to eight years. We have made that provision retroactive. When the order was first made it only applied to future appointments, but the present general and staff recommended very strongly that it was desirable to make it applicable to the whole force and this was done. I myself believe it to be in the interest of the force to give opportunity for promotion as rapidly as possible. We have had men holding the position of colonels for twenty or thirty years and that was no encouragement to men of the right stamp to enter the militia force.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know much about military matters, but I think that is a good principle. Do I understand that no colonel can be in command according to this rule after he is sixty years of age?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. And no colonel can remain in command of his regiment longer than eight years? Does the Minister propose to carry that rule out strictly, or is it merely at his will?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Oh, no; the intention is to carry it out as strictly as possible. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) will understand that owing to the system which has been in existence so many years, and in rural battalions, it is not always easy to get a commanding officer right off. In any case where it is reported there are good reasons to the contrary the commanding officer is retained. We hope that by carrying out this rule young men of the right stamp will enter the militia with the idea of promotion. We are experiencing some difficulty in carrying out this regulation because we do not always find an officer of the right calibre to command a battalion to succeed the commanding officer, and, therefore, exceptions will be made.

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister's statement is qualified only by this, that if in any regiment the colonel has served eight years or is more than 60 years of age, he will be retired if there is a competent man to take charge of the force? Is that the rule?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, that is the intention.

Mr. FOSTER. The exception is where the Minister is not able to get a suitable commanding officer?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, I think the exception to the order states: "under special circumstances."

Mr. FOSTER. I hope my hon. friend will carry the rule out in that sense.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. We are trying to.

Mr. TISDALE. I presume the rule depends on the Minister and the Major general commanding, and that is the only possible way it can be arranged. If it is carried out in that spirit it will be an excellent rule, but if not it will be the duty of the Opposition to criticise it, and so long as I am in the House I shall do so. I tell the hon. Minister (Mr. Borden) that so long as he keeps party politics out of the militia I shall be glad to support him, and I am sure gentlemen on this side of the House who take an interest in militia affairs will be glad to do the same thing. I have hopes that the hon. gentleman will carry out the rule. It is in that spirit that we rely upon him to support this regulation, and in order to keep faith with the militia and with the country. While it is a rule that can be very easily abused yet it is a necessary rule to trust to the Minister of Militia for the time being if we want to have an efficient force. I believe that the hon. Minister will do his best in that regard. If he does I can assure him that we will do our utmost to strengthen his hands to make the force what it should be and what we all hope it will be.

Intercolonial Railway—To pay for land claims and damages and engineers' and other charges in connection with Indiantown Branch $4,000

Mr. FOSTER. What are these damages?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The item covers the land damage respecting the claim made by Mr. Knight on the Indiantown Bridge, and it also covers a portion of the expenses and costs in connection with the reference made by the late Government in the Snowball claim.

Mr. FOSTER. Did that go before the Exchequer Court?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it decided?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, there is a distinct award made by the judge against the Crown, and a reference, at the same time, to other items, in respect of which the judge felt, under the distinct terms of the reference, he could not make a legal award, but recommended to the favourable consideration of the Crown. That portion is under the consideration of the department and no decision has been come to.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the amount of the award?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not remember. The amount of the award was not large, but the sum which the judge thought might properly be allowed by grace of the Crown would bring the amount of principal and interest up to $100,000.

Mr. CLARKE. I do not know whether any other opportunity will be afforded of drawing the attention of the committee to a matter that has been already referred to in the House in connection with the administration of the Intercolonial Railway. It will be remembered that about a month or six weeks ago, attention was drawn by the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell) to an article which appeared in one of the Chatham papers, the Chatham "Planet," respecting the dismissal of coloured porters from the sleeping car service of the Intercolonial. The hon. gentleman read a report which had been presented by a Mr. Archibald, one of the officials of the Intercolonial, denying the statement made by the newspaper above referred to. My hon. friend from Kent, after reading Mr. Archibald's statement, said:

You will see by the facts that there is not one tittle of evidence for the statements made. They are made out of the whole cloth, without any evidence at all. That is usually all the foundation there is for statements emanating from that source.

The hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Fraser) also took part in the discussion. He said :

I trust that hereafter those who publish these statements will understand, what the country understands, that there must be a terrific dearth of any ground of attack upon the Government, when they are compelled to fall back upon an attempt to raise the prejudices of the coloured population of Canada.

The hon. Minister of Railways, in his comments on the incident, said :

I wish to add that to-day there are really more coloured porters in the employ of the Intercolonial Railway than there have been at any previous period.

In the report of Mr. Archibald, which was read to the House by the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell), the name of Mr. Chas. T. Dixon, one of the porters dismissed, was mentioned. Mr. Dixon is now a resident of Toronto, and has written me the following letter :—

I see in the papers a denial that any of the porters of the Intercolonial Railway have been discharged. Out of the six porters formerly employed on the sleeping cars of the Intercolonial, none are at present employed in the same capacity, and only three of those porters are employed in any capacity by that company. There is not a coloured porter on any of the sleeping cars of the Intercolonial. I spoke above of the three men, formerly porters, being employed now in a different capacity. Those men are Joseph Berry, Thomas Arthurs and James Daniel. They are employed at lunch counters, and receive a salary of $20 a month and board, with no chance of tips, whereas they had received, as sleeping-car porters, $35 with tips. Their present positions are merely temporary, and they are men who have spent 12 and 15 years in the service of the Intercolonial. The other three men who are not in the service of the company in any capacity are C. Dixon, C. Pinhero and R. L. Johnson. The first of these men was discharged in the following manner :—After his last trip of March 8th, he was informed by Mr. Archibald's assistant that only one man was to be run on the cars, and that man was to be the conductor. He was told to work around the office for a day or two. On March 10 he was put on lunch counters, with wages of $20 per month, or a cut of $15 from his former wages. I have a family, and so have all the other porters. After this dealing, Mr. Archibald's assistant gave the following reason for dismissing me, after six years' service, during which there had never been the slightest complaint against me. He claimed that the porters "were not proficient to run the cars." On account of the low wages and the prejudice and meanness underlying this treatment, I have left the Intercolonial and got a position as porter elsewhere, where I have given every satisfaction. The second man, C. Pinhero, was offered a position as second cook, but refused it on these grounds : He is a first-class cook, has been on the private cars of this company for nine or ten months, and would be entitled to the position of head cook in preference to second. He did not refuse on the ground of being physically weak, as alleged by Mr. Archibald. The matter is plainly and simply this. All the coloured porters of the Intercolonial have been coolly discharged, long and faithful service counting for nothing. No notice of dismissal was given, nor were the men given any preference as to remaining or going. They were summarily discharged without a shadow of complaint against them, notwithstanding anything Mr. Archibald may say to the contrary. The conclusion is that shameful prejudice is at the root of the matter, and that, to its disgrace, the coloured line has been drawn by the present Government.

I am, sir, yours respectfully,
(Sgd.) CHAS. T. DIXON.

This is one of the porters referred to in the statement made by Mr. Archibald, and which was read to the House on the 6th of April last. I thought it was only due to the Minister of Railways, in view of the statement he made, that I should read this letter. I hope the hon. gentleman will look into the matter, for he must admit that if the statements contained in this letter be true, they constitute a substantial grievance which should be remedied.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not heard anything further since the discussion of some weeks ago, and supposed that the matter had been satisfactorily adjusted, and all difficulties removed. Since, however, the hon. gentleman now draws my attention to it, I shall make further inquiries. I remember very well that on the particular occasion when my hon. friend from Kent read to the House the letter which was sent to him by Mr. Archibald, Mr. Pottinger wrote me at the same time and inclosed a copy of the same letter. He concluded his communication by stating that, in point of fact there were more coloured porters in the employ of the Intercolonial now than for some time previous. I can only repeat the assurance that there is not any disposition at all, I am sure, on Mr. Pottinger's part, and certainly not on mine, to draw any such distinction. But I may add that in the readjustment of the sleeping car service, which must necessarily take place at a very early date, if there be any foundation for any such complaint as to the coloured porters and waiters every opportunity will be taken advantage of to have it all rectified, because we have in the opening of the spring service necessarily to put on a very large addition to the sleeping car accommodation. I will see that the matter receives attention.

Mr. CLARKE. And that the men who have been on the road for many years will be replaced ?

Mr. FOSTER. I shall not carry the subject further now in view of what the hon. Minister has said, but I hope he will give us information before the Supplementary Estimates are through, of the existing state of facts. Those I have heard of and which have come to the notice of the committee to-day, through the letter read by my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Clarke), seem to indicate that there has been a real displacement of the coloured porters, and my hon. friend owes it to all to look thoroughly into that matter and give us definite information before we leave. The impression is that the coloured porters have simply been fired, that they have gone out and are actually out, and the service goes on without their being in it or without other coloured men being put in their places. Of course, if coloured men are discharged because they have been guilty of some misconduct, nothing can be said, but it does appear that from lack of instruction or misapprehension, or from intention, the colour line has been drawn, and that would be very unfortunate.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The difficulty arose in this way. When the winter service was established the design of the management was, if possible, to reduce the force in each of the cars, and, instead of having two, where that could be arranged to have one person do the work that had been done by two. I can imagine that some trouble would necessarily arise in selecting which of the men should go and which remain; but I had the assurance, which was confirmed by the statement furnished by Mr. Archibald, that any of those which had to be, for the time being, set aside, were getting employment in other branches of the railway service, so that they were not actually losing their appointments.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Were not some new men put on?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I beg the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Blair's) pardon. I am sure there was one.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I can say with all confidence that one of the older employees were set aside for the purpose of making way for new men. We have been carefully keeping that in view, and I am sure that Mr. Pottinger would have no disposition to depart from the custom.

Mr. McDOUGALL. There was a young man from Antigonish put on since the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) took charge of the department, and he has been permanently employed since, although some of the older ones have been only temporarily employed.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I desire to call the Minister's attention to a question with regard to which I shall ask for information when we discuss the Supplementary Estimates for 1899. It is with regard to a new bridge across Sulphur Creek at Dunnville, erected last year. The question is: "Why was a large quantity of stone thrown into the stream beneath the bridge, and upon whose report was it done?" 2. What quantity of stone was used there? 3. From whom was it purchased and at what price? 4. Was any other stone purchased from the same parties or other parties in connection with the public works at Dunnville in 1897 and thus far in 1898, and at what prices have such purchases been made?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Montague) is making inquiry of the wrong department, for I have not the slightest knowledge of the subject referred to, nor has my deputy.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am quite sure I am correct. This is done under the superintendent of the canal service at Dunnville. The bridge is over a waste weir, the construction of which was made necessary by the dam.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will inquire into the matter.

Mr. CLANCY. I should like to ask the Minister if he will be able to furnish the information upon which he stated that there were more coloured men employed by the Intercolonial Railway now than formerly. The statement has been made that, while there were six porters employed, there are none employed now. If they are not employed in that capacity, what capacity are they employed in? It is quite certain that these have been displaced by some means or they have been given positions amounting to a process of freezing out. Which it is, of course I do not know. I will not charge the Minister with drawing the coloured line because, perhaps, he can furnish a satisfactory explanation, and it would be unfair to prejudge him. But the hon. gentleman and members generally will realize that the opportunities open to coloured men are very limited. All employments are not open to them, practically they are almost driven to one. If they are deprived of that, it is a very serious matter. Owing, I am very sorry to say to prejudice, they are not tolerated in many lines of employment. When the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) furnishes information it should be of the definite kind that will enable us to feel that he has fairly met the charge that is, inferentially at least, made against him.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Hon. members will understand that my personal knowledge of these matters is extremely limited. It is impossible for any Minister of Railways and Canals to keep within his own knowledge the minor details of the management of the railway. Whatever may be necessary in the interest of the service in the way of putting a man on this car or that car must of necessity be left to the discretion of the management; and I cannot pretend to be informed as to thousands of changes that may take place in the detail of administration. If the hon.

gentleman (Mr. Clancy) would like me to ascertain how many coloured people there are in the service, I shall take steps to do so. Let me add that it is one of the difficulties which, I suppose, must inevitably attend the management of the Government railway that people of all classes, Englishmen, Irishmen, Scotchmen, Frenchmen, Orangemen, Freemasons and every other class keep watch as to whether the numbers of their class employed in the railway are increasing or diminishing. If a man drops out there is a racket because, he was, let us say, a Freemason, and there is no Freemason put in his place. It involves difficulties, and makes it impossible to do what is really in the interest of the road. I know that my hon. friend does not wish to add to those difficulties, but I mention these circumstances to show how impossible it is to avoid little complaints being made that are, after all, not very material and which don't touch the proper administration of the railway.

Mr. INGRAM. Are you in the habit of having special conductors between Halifax and Montreal to have charge of what is called Pullman cars in which these porters were engaged?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, I understand that has always been the custom.

Mr. INGRAM. Then I call attention to this letter which was read some time ago by the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell):

At the first of last month, when the dining-cars were put on, we had only five sleeping-car porters regularly employed, and they were running between Halifax and Montreal.

Then again he says:

Owing to the buffets in the sleeping-cars between Halifax and Montreal being discontinued, it was decided to run only one man on each sleeping-car, the conductor.

Will the hon. gentleman tell me if they are running buffets in Pullman cars?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In some they have, but not in all.

Mr. INGRAM. If they run buffet cars in connection with sleeping cars, and if you have special conductors in place of the five men employed as porters, are they doing the work of porters in that respect also?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They have been doing it up to this date.

Mr. INGRAM. Since the dismissal of these porters?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. One person is doing the work formerly done by two in the car service.

Mr. BLAIR.

Mr. INGRAM. That is to say that the conductor collects the tickets, provides the meals, does the cooking, looks after the berths, and keeps the car clean. Is that what the present conductor does?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There has been heretofore so little travel on the sleepers during what is called the winter service, that one man is all that has been needed.

Mr. INGRAM. If this letter that I have quoted is correct, then as a practical railway man I know nothing about it. In the first place it says:

Owing to the buffets in the sleeping-cars between Halifax and Montreal being discontinued, it was decided to run only one man on each sleeping-car, the conductor.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. A buffet is put on most of those cars for the purpose of accommodating passengers.

Mr. INGRAM. Then according to this letter written by your official, each sleeper must be a buffet car, or be used as a buffet car. There is mentioned here a connection with the sleeping car. A buffet has nothing to do with a sleeping car. I want to know if it is a coloured man who has charge of it, or is it a white man?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He is a white man.

Mr. INGRAM. He performs the duty of a coloured man and a white man?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

To pay for improvements to Dalhousie wharf

$3,600

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is an extension of the wharf accommodation there. One of the two grants that I found, asked for and required by the department when I came in, was for the purpose of extending and enlarging the wharf in connection with the railway. The lumber business there is growing rapidly, and I presume the ex-Minister thought it was necessary to enlarge the wharf accommodation at that point. But he did not ask for quite enough to complete the work. He asked for $3,000, and the work will cost $6,600.

Increased accommodation at Moncton....

$40,000

Mr. POWELL. Is that for the station?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. POWELL. There was a different course of procedure adopted by the late Government in regard to this expenditure. In place of charging it to capital, they were going to divide it between capital and income. There was a very fair building there for general offices which was burnt down and replaced by a building that cost about $30,000, and that new building was charged entirely to income account.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think my hon. friend will say that it was intended by the late Government that any portion of that should be charged to income.

Mr. POWELL. Yes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What evidence have you?

Mr. POWELL. The only evidence was that it was at my instigation the station was built, and that is the arrangement that was made, that about $40,000 should go to capital account, and the balance be charged to revenue account.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My department never heard of any such proposition, and never approved of it.

To pay for replacing a wooden trestle by masonry culvert and solid embankments. $2,450

Mr. POWELL. In respect to that grant, there is a very large embankment on the Intercolonial Railway between St. John and Moncton where the trestle was replaced by earth filling, costing from $10,000 to $13,000, and that was charged to income account and not to capital. Here is a departure in that respect.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In this case there was a wooden trestle that had stood for a great many years and finally required to be renewed. The cost of replacing it by another wooden trestle would be about $1,500; the cost of making a permanent embankment there is $3,950. The cost of replacing the trestle as it was before is to be deducted from the whole cost.

Mr. POWELL. That is not the point. I say this wooden trestle was replaced by earth filling. The wooden trestle could be replaced for from $400 to $500, and by earth filling for upwards of $1,000. The earth filling was charged to income account and not to capital account. That is on the line between St. John and Moncton.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend has called attention to another of the many cases which are this year being shown of a change in the methods of distributing expenditures upon the Intercolonial Railway. I stated this very fully on the vote of $50,000 for strengthening bridges on the Intercolonial. It was shown in that case that the Minister of Railways was charging to capital similar expenditures to those which had been charged to revenue by the late Government. That was admitted by the Minister of Railways. The same course is pursued throughout the Estimates.

Mr. GIBSON. You charged renewal of rails on the Intercolonial to capital account.

Mr. FOSTER. I ask the Finance Minister if it is true that when we changed the fifty-six pound rail for sixty-seven pound rail on the Intercolonial Railway, the expenditure was charged to capital?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think the hon. member for Lincoln is in error in that respect.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Dickey admitted it was.

Mr. FOSTER. This rather discounts the statement of the hon. gentleman on this point. He, like the rest of us, is sometimes wrong.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I should like the hon. gentleman to correct his own errors. He was in error when he said that I acknowledged this was the same class, that I was charging to capital expenditure which had formerly been charged to income, because I made no such statement. I clearly discriminated between the classes of expenditure.

Mr. FOSTER. I am very much mistaken if, in the course of the debate the other evening, the Minister did not acknowledge the expenditure came within the class formerly charged to income.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I should like to go as far as possible to meet the view of the hon. gentleman; but I cannot go against the facts.

Mr. FOSTER. Then we shall have to discuss it again.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The discussion can stand over, I think, till Monday.

Resolutions to be reported.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 164)—from the Senate—to amend the Companies Act.—(Mr. Fielding.)

Bill (No. 165)—from the Senate—respecting Loan Companies.—(Mr. Fielding.)

The PRIME MINISTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 6.10 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 6th June, 1898.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PRAYERS.

REPRESENTATION OF NORTH SIMCOE AND WEST HURON.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that my attention having been called by the hon. member for the East Riding of the county of Grey, in his place, to the fact of the demise of Dalton McCarthy, Esq., member for the electoral district of the North Riding of the county of Simcoe, and of the acceptance of an office of emolument under the Crown, to wit, the office of Lieutenant-Governor of the North-west Territories, by Malcolm Colin Cameron, Esq., member for the electoral district of the West Riding of the county of Huron, I have, in accordance with section 8 of chapter 13 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, issued my warrants to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to make out new writs of election for the said electoral districts.

JUDGES OF PROVINCIAL COURTS.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick) moved that the House, at its next sitting, resolve itself into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:—

Resolved, That it is expedient to provide that any judge now holding office who shall by reason only of his having completed the seventy-fifth year of his age be or become disqualified to hold or retain his office, shall be entitled to a pension under section fifteen of Chapter 138 of the Revised Statutes of Canada although he may not have continued in office for the number of years mentioned in that section.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Further amount required to pay expenses in connection with the Quebec Land Slide Commission, and the payment of claims thereunder, 1897..... $187 45

Mr. FOSTER. What are the details of this expense?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). After the award had been made, it became necessary to make the payments.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

We sent the money down to the Messrs. Cook, of Quebec, the legal agents of the department, and they charged $100 for their services in connection with the payment of the award, amounting to something like $47,000. The other items are: advertising the payment of the award in the "Daily Telegram" newspaper, $5; and stenographers' accounts, $82.45; making in all $187.45.

Mr. FOSTER. What were the preceding expenses?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. They amounted in the vicinity of $1,300. The House voted something like $50,000 to meet the claims, and we kept something like $3,000 within the amount voted.

Mr. FOSTER. You had to put that in the hands of legal agents, had you?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. We had to pay over the cheques. In some of the cases a father and mother had been killed, and the payments had to be paid to minors, and we had to have a tutor appointed. We had to get legal discharges, and therefore had to get our legal agents to attend to the matter.

Legal expenses in re Belgian and German treaties..... $3,569 61

Mr. FOSTER. Give us the items of this?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The payments are: Hon. Edward Blake, who acted as counsel in the case with the Minister of Marine and Fisheries for the Government before the law officers, 500 guineas; Mr. Vesey Knok, junior counsel, 120 guineas; and A. Russell & Co., solicitors, £82 9s. 3d.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the amount, or part of the amount, we pay for the blunder of the Government?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). For the triumph of the Government.

To assist in publication of Vol. V, "Cases on the British North America Act," by J. R. Cartwright..... $ 250

Mr. FOSTER. Is this Sir Richard Cartwright?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. This is simply carrying out the precedent established by my hon. friend from York (Mr. Foster).

Contribution for Canadian Law Library, London, England..... $ 250

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. This is our contribution to the library for the use of Canadian lawyers who are in England on law business. Each province contributes a certain amount, and we have agreed to give an equal amount.

Mr. FOSTER. How much do the provinces contribute?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Ontario and Quebec are the two I know most about. They contribute an amount equal to what we do.

Mr. FOSTER. Where are the books kept?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. In the same building as the Canadian Agency—over the Canadian Offices, in the library room.

Mr. FOSTER. Does this cover the rent?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think it is expected to cover the cost of the books only. We do not pay any rent unless it is included in this amount.

Expenses of Chief Justice Strong in connection with sittings of Judicial Committee of the Privy Council..... $1,000

Mr. FOSTER. How many times did he sit?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. All last summer, and he rendered considerable service, as far as Canadian cases are concerned.

To assist toward the relief of the sufferers by the forest fires in the counties of Prescott and Russell during the summer of 1897..... $10,000

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend will see that this is an unusual vote.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There has been a precedent, I think, in former years. The fire in St. John's, Newfoundland, is a notable case, and I think there have been contributions in the cases of fires within the Dominion, though I do not remember any. This was an exceptional case, owing to the fact that the country was very sparsely settled, and there was an absence consequently of concentrated charity.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend will see what a grave precedent he is setting by this. With the suffering and destitution of the poor people who were burnt out in the vicinity of Ottawa everybody, of course, has the fullest sympathy, but when we once set the precedent of the Dominion Parliament contributing to the relief of those who have suffered from fires in rural districts, or even in town districts, the Government will see that they are venturing upon a course which may lead to endless trouble and very large outlay. It will give room for the exercise of great political pressure. The Government will be urged to give something in respect of such and such fires because it will help their friends. Fires take place in rural districts every once in a while, and in such cases there is usually very little insurance. In large cities fires frequently occur, but the insurance almost always, to a certain extent, covers the loss, and while it is not pleasant for anybody to appear to oppose a vote intended to relieve the necessities of these people, at the same time Government and Parliament have to be very careful lest we open the door to numerous demands.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I quite appreciate the force of the remarks of my hon. friend, and still more the spirit in which he gave utterance to them. I must say, he approached the subject free from any bitterness or party spirit, and addressed himself to the calm consideration of the House. In this question we are not establishing any precedent. Some ten years ago, a conflagration took place in the city of Hull while the House was in session, and the following day, owing to representations from both sides, it was resolved to vote an appropriation to relieve the sufferers. Each case must be taken by itself. The reasons which induced Parliament to come to the relief of the population of Hull were that the population which suffered from that conflagration was composed of labouring men whose little holdings had been swept away, and who had no capital or resource of any kind. The ground on which their houses stood was not even their own, and they were absolutely destitute and unable to provide for themselves. Every year there are conflagrations in different parts of the country, but, as a rule, these can be attended to, and are attended to by their own neighbours. Two years ago a conflagration took place at Tignish, in Prince Edward Island, and our attention was called to it by the member who then represented that constituency. We looked into the matter, and were told by the people in the neighbourhood that they were able to provide themselves all that was needed for the relief of the sufferers. But this case was different. The conflagration raged for days in a newly-settled community. It took place in the early part of October, and all the labours of the year of these new settlers were swept away in a few hours. Their crops and houses were destroyed, and they were made absolutely destitute just at the opening of the winter. A committee was appointed to provide relief, and the committee appealed to us, and told us that with all the assistance they had from Ottawa and other parts of the country, private charity was not equal to the task of affording anything like adequate relief. Under the circumstances, we thought it our duty to ask Parliament for a small appropriation, and I may say that it is smaller than the one the Government were asked for; but we thought we could not do more than give a moderate, compassionate allowance to those who had to start life over again at the beginning of a severe winter. I would not like the case to stand as a precedent. I quite agree with my hon. friend that such votes are dangerous, but it is absolutely impossible to lay down a hard and fast line, and you must take every case as it presents itself.

Mr. HUGHES. To whom was the money paid?

The PRIME MINISTER. To the relief committee through Mr. George Perley.

Mr. HUGHES. A few years ago a very disastrous fire occurred, which destroyed not only the homes of settlers, but the Barnardo Home for boys. The Government is, in a sense, responsible for permitting the Barnardo Home for Boys to come into the country.

The PRIME MINISTER. To which Government does my hon. friend (Mr. Hughes) refer?

Mr. HUGHES. To the Federal Government—they control immigration.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). What power have we to prohibit British subjects from coming into Canada?

Mr. HUGHES. At all events these fires occurred. Application was made by the then member for North Victoria, as I was informed by that gentleman. It is only a few months ago that there occurred in that same district another fire caused by one of these same boys. Now, though I do not object to assistance to relieve distress, the Government will see at once that if they are going to assist the poor who are left homeless in a fire in Russell or Hull, they will have to do the same in case of a fire occurring in any part of this Dominion. I think that the Government will find that they have set a precedent which they will be asked to follow up in many parts of the country.

Mr. FOSTER. I remember that when I was a member of the late Government, these requests were not infrequent. I recall particularly one very distressing instance, that of the town of Alliston, Ont., which, my hon. friend may recollect, was almost entirely destroyed by a fire some five or six years ago. The circumstances were quite as distressing as in this case. It is true that it did not involve the cases of new settlers, though this was a comparatively new town also. It was not a rural but a village population. The poor people were swept out of their homes and lost everything they had. The strongest pressure was brought to bear upon the Government on the plea of charity; and, I must say, our friends pressed it very strongly as well. We felt that it was impossible to accede to the request made, and, although there had been one or two cases before, notably the case of Hull, we felt that we must decline the request, and we did decline it. Now the town of Windsor, N.S., suffered a terrible disaster last year. Poor people by the thousand had everything belonging to them swept away, and numbers of them had no insurance whatever. While the statement of my hon. friend is good in one respect, it is rather bad in another. He seemed to say that, granted the conditions of a sparse population and new settlement, where the people had everything swept away, the Government felt they ought to give a compassionate allowance. Well, we have a great deal of new country opening up in Canada, and fires will occur in the North-west and in Manitoba and all that great region; and I do not see with what force the Government can refuse to assist settlers there who have everything burnt up by prairie fires, which fires often threaten and which burn up immense values of property every year. I am afraid these two cases of Hull and Prescott and Russell were acceded to because of the propinquity of the places. Probably had they been distant they would not have appealed so strongly to the sympathies of the Government, and such relief would not have been granted. I hope my hon. friend will make a very strong statement with regard to this matter, as to the question of precedent, otherwise I am afraid we shall either cause great dissatisfaction and sense of injustice or greatly burden the resources of the country.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am glad the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has brought this question up. Personally, I am in accord with nearly everything he has said. I can see that intolerable evil would be before us in the future if this case viewed as a precedent were not carefully guarded. This is not a case in which the Government acted at all hastily. We refused to act until charitable relief had been exhausted. In the first place, we put it to those who applied that it was a matter for the provincial government to attend to. They applied to the provincial Government and got a grant from that Government—I speak under correction—of $10,000, at first $5,000 and subsequently $5,000. Then we told them their duty was to appeal to the charitable public, that surely a case of this kind would appeal most strongly to the wealthy people of Montreal and Ottawa. It was only when they came back saying they had exhausted in every conceivable way their means of obtaining relief, and the question had to be faced what the poor people were going to do for the coming winter that we took the matter into consideration. It was very reluctantly and after a strong case had been made out that we yielded as far as we did, and then only to supplement the relief given by the Provincial Government and the charitable public. My right hon. leader has referred to the case of Tignish. The Government refused to interfere in that case, because we felt that it would create a bad precedent and that it was a case with which the charitable public and the Provincial Government ought to deal. In every other case, we have refused to interfere on the same principle. I think that this, without being made a precedent, might be allowed on the ground that we really only supplemented the aid given by the Provincial Government and the charitable public, and then only after the assistance from these sources had been exhausted and there was much still to be done to prevent a large number of people from being without homes during the coming winter.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The discussion will serve a very useful purpose if it draws attention on the part of the public at large to the necessity of having some line governing these things. I do not mean to say, of course, that there could be an absolute line, for circumstances will arise which will justify the Government and Parliament in departing from a rule laid down. This may be such a case. But I think it would be a pity if the idea got abroad that it was the duty of the Dominion Government to make such grants in every case. Before the grant was made we had to consider the difference between this case and another which might seem, at first glance, to be on all fours with it. For instance, there was the case of the town of Windsor, N.S., the destruction of which was accompanied with great distress. It may be because it was a town and that a disaster of that kind makes greater impression on the world at large than the destruction of a rural community, but the fact was that there was a most liberal response on the part of private charity to the demands of the town of Windsor. And when we found on looking into the case that the contributions were so generous, we decided that it would not be right for us to act in the matter.

Mr. FOSTER. But if there is an impression that the Government will give, that dries up the sources of private charity.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is a good deal in that. I think it should be understood that, subject to possible exception, which must be very strong cases indeed, grants of this character should not be made by the Dominion Parliament, but should be attended to by the municipal and provincial authorities in any case where the need exists. Though I justify the grant made on the ground stated by the Prime Minister, I think it would have been better if the Provincial Government had given all the money necessary. If they had to deal with the matter over again, I think they would realize that that would be the correct course. Though glad to join in giving this aid, I am likewise glad that this matter was brought up so that we may not have a precedent that may be dangerous hereafter.

Amount required to pay balances due to the "Hansard" reporters who reported the evidence given before the Royal Commission on the Liquor Traffic, in accordance with the rate agreed upon by the chairman of the commission, confirmed by the judgment of the Exchequer Court in the case of Bradley vs. The Queen; also to pay Messrs. Horton and Owens for their services during the time they acted as secretaries to the Commission, as follows:—

S. A. Abbott	396 15
A. Horton	483 45

Mr. FOSTER. This is all in pursuance of the judgment?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In consequence of the judgment.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it all rendered necessary by the judgment?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I understand, speaking from memory, there is no judgment on these particular items, but judgment was given in one particular case, and these being of a similar character, we accepted the consequence of the judgment.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would like to know the total cost of that Royal Commission, if it can be given.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am afraid my hon. friend will have to put a notice on the paper.

Further amount required for Hudson Bay Expedition—Printing reports, &c..... $4,000

Mr. FOSTER. What is the total cost of the Hudson Bay Expedition?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Twenty thousand dollars was voted in 1897-98, $19,585.79 was spent, and a supplementary vote is now required of $4,000 to meet the deficiency. That means that the whole cost will be about $24,000. That pays for the preliminary arrangements, vessel, season's work, and everything.

Mr. FOSTER. Now will my hon. friend state briefly what he got out of it?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not know whether my hon. friend saw the report of Commander Wakeham, which has been published, and copies of which have been given to nearly all the members. It is a very valuable document. The instructions given to Commander Wakeham were to proceed to the mouth of the Hudson Bay Straits at a period prior to there being a possibility of a vessel getting through, to be there the first moment of time when a vessel could get through the straits. He was then to force his way gradually through the straits, and having done so to return again immediately, so as to be sure that it was not by mere accident that he happened to squeeze through—to return to the mouth of the straits and to go back and forward, while the ice was floating in the straits, to a degree which would prevent commercial navigation. The "Diana," the vessel that he had charge of, proved to be in every way a most efficient boat, a remarkably good boat, and discharged her duties well. Although there were a good many complaints before the "Diana" was chartered about her inability to do the work, complaints which were based on a misunderstanding, very largely, of the vessel itself, the results have proved that Commander Wakeham was singularly happy in his choice of a vessel. He could not have got a better vessel, he tells me, than the "Diana" turned out to be. After cruising in and out of the straits for some time in order as far as possible to establish the first point of time during which these straits were navigable—

Mr. FOSTER. When was that?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have not got the date before me at the moment, my hon. friend will see it in the report which is printed. I may say that on this expedition Commander Wakeham was accompanied by a skilled photographer, and we are not confined simply to the printed page to show what were the conditions of the straits; but at different times the condition of the straits and the ice of the straits were photographed, and you have on the page opposite to the printed page, the photographic view of the condition of the straits through which the vessel passed from time to time; so that a person can form a very fair idea of the condition of the ice in those straits at the several periods when the photographs were taken. After he had established the feasibility of the navigation of the straits of the Hudson Bay, then he proceeded into the bay itself, landing, I may remark en passant, the two bodies of men sent from the Geological Survey and who were carried by the "Diana" up to the mouth of the Hudson Bay, landing one upon the north side of the bay and one upon the south, for the purpose of pursuing their summer's work of geological investigation. Then the "Diana" proceeded into the bay and remained there during the summer months, testing how far that bay was rich or otherwise in fish. The results were not satisfactory so far as fish were concerned; they were in fact distinctly disappointing in that particular object of the expedition. The instructions Commander Wakeham had before he left, were to take back the geological parties to St. John's, Newfoundland, early in September, at which time they desired to return, but in no event to be absent from the mouth of the straits at the period when the ice began again to take, so that we might determine definitely the latest period during which the straits were navigable in the autumn. After leaving the surveying parties at St. John's, Newfoundland, he returned and kept passing up and down the straits until stopped by the ice and fog. Commander Wakeham concluded that he had remained as long as it was possible for a vessel to remain for the purpose of commercial navigation, and then he returned home. He gives us a careful diary of every day's proceedings; and his report of the condition of the straits in reference to the ice at the various periods, confirms, to a large extent, Commander Gordon's conclusions. I do not understand from a careful comparison of Commander Gordon's conclusions with those of Commander Wakeham, that there is any substantial difference between them; and I think now the fact may be accepted, and will be accepted generally, by the people of Canada, both east and west that Commander Gordon's conclusions were about as nearly accurate as they could be. The book is very interesting reading, and the information he gathered there more than justifies the expenditure which the Government undertook. At any rate, it will settle, in my humble judgment, any agitation which might be raised by the people of the west on the ground that there was a possibility of navigation for commercial purposes through those straits for any longer time than Commander Gordon reported.

Mr. FOSTER. This is very satisfactory in one respect, and not very satisfactory in another. I do not see what my hon. friend could have expected to gain over and above what Commander Gordon gained. Commander Gordon was, to say nothing in disparagement of Commander Wakeham, a very excellent man, fully as good, I think, to say nothing more. He spent three times as much time as Commander Wakeham, and his expedition did not confine itself to one year, and his observations were made during the whole of the winter season, two seasons, I think. It was as exhaustive an investigation as could be made, and much more exhaustive than that attempted to be made under the direction of hon. gentlemen opposite in one season. So that I do not think my hon. friend could have expected anything more should have been done in that short season than in a poor way to confirm what Commander Gordon had previously found as the result of his more extended observations. But the Premier, when at Winnipeg, made a promise; so there had to be an investigation set on foot, and an investigation was set on foot. No less than $23,000 or $24,000 of the people's money has been spent, and nothing has been gained except a fragmentary endorsement, such as it must necessarily be when an expedition is confined to one short season, of the exhaustive investigation made by Commander Gordon. I suppose the matter will now rest until just before another election, when a demand will be made for another investigation, and another crew will be sent out to tide over a very critical moment in party affairs.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman is not quite fair in this matter, because the motion made for the expedition was received with great cordiality and unanimity on both sides of the House. The hon. leader of the Opposition challenged the conclusions arrived at by Commander Gordon, and before I had the honour of holding a portfolio, he carried in Council, as the hon. gentleman certainly said in this House, a proposition to bring down the very vote which I afterwards brought down. The leader of the Opposition contended, on the authority of Admiral Markham, that the conclusions arrived at by Commander Gordon were not to be accepted as conclusive. At all events, I am correct in saying that the hon. gentleman intended to bring down a similar vote, and when he made such an outcry about the matter and held that the conclusions arrived at by Commander Gordon should not be accepted, when a large number of the western members who were interested in the construction of the railway north challenged and criticised Commander Gordon's conclusions, when a large body of the people contended that the value of the fisheries in Hudson Bay was enormous and illimitable, when men east and west contended, backed up by the authority of the Arctic explorer, Admiral Markham, that if another expedition were sent out, the reports would show that the straits were open one month longer than Commander Gordon reported—all these contentions were such as to compel the Government to endeavour to put the matter at rest; and although Commander Wakeham was not able to change the seasons, he was able to make a report which would be satisfactory for all time, or at all events, in our time.

Mr. FOSTER. That will not be long.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It will be satisfactory, at all events, until better methods of navigation are discovered, for perhaps steamers in the near future will be able to force their way through ice 10 or 12 feet thick.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend has not quite rightly interpreted the remarks of the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster), for his complaint was that we had not spent enough money. He said we had not obtained sufficient experience in one season, but that such could only be obtained from several seasons' work, and therefore the hon. gentleman's criticism amounts to an invitation to spend more money under this head.

Mr. FOSTER. The point of my criticism was that when the former Government sent a thoroughly capable man, properly equipped, with an expedition which spent two or three seasons in making a thorough investigation, the present Government cannot be expected to secure equal results by an expedition of one season. Next session any member of the House may rise and say the Government should send another expedition there, and allow it to remain three or four seasons.

Mr. SPROULE. The weakness of the argument of the Minister of Marine was that by sending an expedition for one year he proposed to set matters at rest for ever. The former expedition was for a longer time, and the report was much more exhaustive in many respects. If an investigation continued for three years did not settle the controversy, an expedition for one year certainly could not do so, and if full information was needed, an expedition should continue during several seasons.

To pay J. C. Roland, wharfinger at Sault Ste. Marie, balance salary for 1896.... $291 66

Mr. GILLIES. I draw the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to the fact that some days ago he promised to bring down a report respecting two officers in my county who have been dismissed, Lenoir and Cameron. The hon. gentleman told me they had been dismissed on the report of the Fishery Commissioner. I have learnt since that there is no report in the hon. gentleman's department from that official. Communications have been made to me since, alleging that their dismissals were entirely for political reasons and made on the representations of political partisans. I should like to know on whose report those men were dismissed, and if the hon. gentleman is not in the position to do so, let the item stand until he brings down the papers.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I remember the promise I made, and carried it out. I prepared a statement for the hon. gentleman, and gave it to the Finance Minister just before I went to Washington, the statement to be handed to the hon. gentleman. I will give him any information he wants in regard to the matter.

Mr. GILLIES. Certain information was furnished me, but it was on another matter. I wish the report of the officer on whose recommendation these men were dismissed.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Cameron was dismissed by the department because he was convicted of selling liquor in violation of the law, and without a license. I will not keep in the public service a man who has been convicted by the judiciary of the province of breaking the law.

Mr. GILLIES. There was no report respecting Cameron.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There was a report by the inspector. I had information that Cameron was engaged in the illicit sale of liquor. I wrote the inspector, asking him if that was the case. He reported that the man had been convicted several times of that offence; whereupon I dismissed him.

Mr. GILLIES. That settles the case of Cameron. What about the case of Lenoir?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That case was brought up in the Senate by Senator Miller, and the papers were brought down. When I entered office, I asked the Commissioner of Fisheries to make a report on each fishery overseer, classifying him as to his abilities, whether first-class, fair or bad, and whether he would advise the retention of the officer or his dismissal. Among those reported by the Commissioner as inefficient officers whose services need not, or should not, be retained, was that of Lenoir, of Richmond County. Lenoir was removed from office on that report.

Mr. GILLIES. I have now so much information furnished by the Minister from that report, that I want him to bring it down. The report is a public document, and I ask the Minister to bring it down.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will bring it down. It has already been brought down to the Senate. If the hon. gentleman had moved for it, I would have brought it down. Surely, however, the statement made by a Minister is sufficient.

Mr. GILLIES. The Minister has stated that he dismissed Lenoir on the report made by the Commissioner of Fisheries. It is in his department, and I am entitled to it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Then, the hon. gentleman can move for it.

Mr. GILLIES. I have asked for the information.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The report has already been brought down, and is in the Senate. Surely, the hon. gentleman does not want two returns made. The Senator for Cape Breton seemed to think there is something behind this matter, and he asked if there was not a recommendation from the Inspector of Fisheries. There is no such report from Mr. Bertram, and he did not ask for this man's dismissal.

Mr. GILLIES. The hon. gentleman is mistaken, if he attributes to me any motive except that of acting in the public interest. I did not insinuate that there was anything behind this matter. The hon. Minister made the statement that Lenoir, who had been in office for many years and was, to my knowledge, a very efficient officer, had been dismissed, and he had not been dismissed on the complaint of Mr. Bertram. Then, I understand there is no complaint from Mr. Bertram.

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

The hon. gentleman has, purposely or otherwise—I hope it is otherwise—done Mr. Lenoir a very grave wrong. To my own knowledge, Mr. Lenoir was a very efficient officer—so much so that complaints were made broadcast over the county that he was constantly interfering unduly with people by enforcing the law and departmental fishery regulations. If he had not been an efficient officer, would not Mr. Bertram, the inspector for the Island of Cape Breton, under whom Mr. Lenoir was acting, have reported him to the department as inefficient? Until that was done, was it not the duty of the Minister to assume that he was an efficient officer? The hon. gentleman will search the records of his department in vain, and will not find any report, or even a hint, from Mr. Bertram that Mr. Lenoir was inefficient. The hon. gentleman gets his commissioner, Mr. Prince, to make a report upon his officers, and to classify them; and because Mr. Lenoir does not come up to the standard set by the Minister of Marine, he is dismissed without a moment's notice. My information is that Mr. Lenoir, who was an efficient officer, against whom no complaint of any kind was made by his inspector, but who was, in fact, commended several times by his inspector, was dismissed through the urgency of parties in the county of Richmond, who implored the Minister to dismiss him. If there is a report in the department with regard to Mr. Lenoir, it should be laid on the Table at my request. If there is no report, and I am assured there is not, then the Minister may as well own up to it, that Mr. Lenoir was dismissed at the urgent and unreasonable request of parties in the county, who are really doing the hon. gentleman's party no good by the way they are acting, but are getting him into hot water and inducing him to commit acts which he would not commit in his cool moments if he had the proper information.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am sorry my hon. friend should feel so warmly about this. I do not know Mr. Lenoir, and I know nothing about him. I had no reports from the officers in Cape Breton about him at all. Senator Miller, at an early period of this session, asked questions about Mr. Lenoir in the Senate, and these questions were answered as I am answering them now. Senator Miller then moved for the papers, that motion was passed, the papers were brought down, and they have been down for a month. My hon. friend is misinformed if he says my commissioner did not make the report to me in the words I have stated. It is quite impossible for me personally to keep the run of all these fishery officers. I have to depend very largely on the Commissioner of Fisheries, and when the commissioner reports to me that a man is inefficient and that his services ought not to be retained, I act upon his report.

Mr. GILLIES. I did not say that the report was otherwise than what the hon. gentleman stated. But what I do complain of is this, that there is no report whatever in this department from Mr. Bertram, the inspector of the district, from whom reports of complaints should come in the first instance, and who is the only person capable of judging of the efficiency of Mr. Lenoir. That officer being on the ground, the Minister had no right to apply to an officer in his department, who was never in Cape Breton in his life, who knows nothing of the district in which Mr. Lenoir operated and who knows nothing of Mr. Lenoir except what he heard or learned officially from Mr. Bertram. The Minister was wrong in going to him and asking him for a tabulated statement of the different officers in the outside service. Whether Mr. Lenoir came up to the rank the Minister set down in his own mind that he should come up to, is another thing. It appears that he did not come up to that standard, and, by a sweep of the pen, he is discharged from office, and another person, a partisan, is appointed in his place. I do not know what standard the hon. Minister set up in his own mind that an officer should come up to and maintain before he could be retained in office; and it is only fair that I should know, that the committee should know, that the injured officer should know, and that his friends should know, what inefficiency he was guilty of before the Minister was justified in dismissing him summarily from office, particularly in view of the fact that his efficiency was constantly being reported to the department by the only person who was competent to judge—that was Mr. Bertram, the inspector for the district.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. As I have already explained to my hon. friend, Mr. Bertram made no report in his favour or against Mr. Lenoir, and to say that Mr. Bertram reported in favour of his efficiency is not correct. The hon. gentleman says that there was some standard which I set up, and that if a man did not come up to that standard, I dismissed him. My hon. friend is wrong in that. I thought I made myself plain—I requested the Commissioner of Fisheries to report to me as to the officers under him.

Mr. GILLIES. What report did he make of Mr. Lenoir?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I told the hon. gentleman twice, that he reported that he was inefficient, and that his services ought to be dispensed with.

Mr. GILLIES. Did the Commissioner of Fisheries make that report to you—that he was inefficient and that his services should be dispensed with?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. GILLIES. I would like to see that report.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have told the hon. gentleman that it has been brought down, and that it has been in the Senate for a month.

Mr. GILLIES. No.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is no use of our contradicting one another. All the hon. gentleman has to do is to go to the Senate and get it.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's). I understood the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries to say that one of these gentlemen referred to by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Gillies) was dismissed because he was convicted of contravening the Canada Temperance Act.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Not the Canada Temperance Act, but the laws in force with regard to the sale of liquors, whatever they are.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's). Might I ask the hon. gentleman if one of his appointees has not been found guilty of the same thing?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We will deal with every case on its own merits. I have not known of one. If the hon. gentleman will report any such case, we will inquire into it.

Mr. MILLS. I was going to make the same remark with regard to the Post Office Department.

To pay expenses of investigation in connection with the pilotage matters in the district of Montreal $2,500

Mr. FOSTER. Who was the commission?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It will be recollected that last year, before the House prorogued, there was a strike of the pilots of the Montreal district, which threw the whole commercial community into a state of confusion. The pilots sent a memorandum to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, submitting the grounds of their complaints, and they submitted a Bill to Parliament for their incorporation, thinking that if they got that, they would have sufficient power to remedy the grievances of which they complained. The Bill came before the Miscellaneous Private Bills Committee, and I had it amended in many respects. It went to the Senate, and was there thrown out. When that was done, the pilots went on strike, everything was thrown into confusion, and the commercial interests were jeopardized. After consultation with the Minister of Public Works, we promised the pilots that if they would resume work, I would have an impartial commission appointed to inquire into their grievances. I appointed a commission for that purpose, composed of Judge Lavergne, chairman, the Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and Commander Wakeham. They sat in Montreal a large number of days, and heard evidence from the pilots, from the Montreal Harbour Commission, and from the owners of steamships, and made a report, which was presented to me a short time ago. I have it in my desk now, but I have not had time to study it and come to a conclusion as to whether I would carry out the recommendations made by the commission or not. I have read it over one or twice, but rather perfunctorily—not with that care that I would wish to give it before coming to a conclusion which I could recommend to my colleagues.

Mr. FOSTER. Had they the power to inquire into the whole system?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, and to make what recommendations they desired.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will that report be printed?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If the House thinks it of sufficient importance to justify the expense, I will have it printed.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it is of that importance if the commission made an inquiry into the whole pilotage system and made recommendations. We all know that it is a pretty close corporation.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The report does not deal with the whole system of pilotage, but with the system between Montreal and Quebec. It will throw no light on the pilotage system of Halifax or St. John.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There was an investigation into the pilotage system of St. John.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There was, but I would not undertake to print the report of that commission, because it is very voluminous. It may be that the importance of the pilotage system will some day justify the printing of that report. However, I shall be glad to place it in the hands of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden) if he wishes to study it. My hon. friends from St. John have both read it, and returned it to the department.

Mr. FOSTER. If the evidence in the Quebec case is voluminous, it might be sufficient, in the first place, to print the findings or recommendations of the commission, without the evidence, and afterwards, if the House thinks it necessary, the evidence might be printed.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I think my hon. friend is right. The evidence is voluminous, while the report is condensed. Mr. Justice Lavergne put the questions, and Mr. Wakeham and Mr. Gourdeau were men of very accurate knowledge; and they knew what evidence to discard, and what was pertinent.

Mr. INGRAM. Will the hon. Minister say whether the striking pilots were re-employed?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The Minister of Public Works tells me that there were three or four who were not re-employed?

Mr. FOSTER. What were the commissioners paid?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They were paid nothing but their expenses. To Judge Lavergne I had, of course, to allow liberal allowances, but in the case of my own affairs, they had just their actual disbursements.

Mr. CLARKE. I understand that three or four of the pilots went out on strike and were not reinstated. Why were they not reinstated?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I made the statement I did on the authority of my hon. friend behind me. I was not aware that any had not been reinstated. My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works is not in the House just now, but I shall get the information from him.

Mr. HUGHES. If an officer went out on strike and did not submit, that would be a good reason for dismissing him.

Mr. CLARKE. I hold the opposite view. I think that if a man is of the opinion that he is not well used, he has a right to go out on strike.

The PRIME MINISTER. Without being able to give positive information, I think I may say that the men who were not re-employed were left out because they went out on strike. My hon. colleague the Minister of Public Works will give the particulars when he comes in.

Mr. McDougall. Can the hon. Minister give us any information with regard to the application respecting pilotage regulations in the harbour of Louisbourg?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There was an investigation also in that case by Captain Bloomfield

Douglas, and after going thoroughly into it he was of opinion that compulsory pilotage there should be abolished entirely. He also made a similar report in the case of St. John, N.B. I have not yet seen my way to act upon it. I am in communication with mercantile and other men in the community, and if I find that the consensus of opinion of the shipping interest supports the view of Captain Douglas, I will be inclined to adopt his suggestion.

Mr. McDOUGALL. If the hon. Minister decides upon doing away with the present compulsory pilotage regulations for that port, he will make a great mistake. That port was not frequented by a very large number of ships until within the last two or three years, and I think it would be advisable, under the circumstances, for the Minister to continue the present regulations, because it is of the greatest possible importance to the port that there should be as efficient a pilotage service there as possible. The result of doing away with the compulsory pilotage would be to exempt a large number of shipping, such as steamers, from the payment of pilotage, another class of shipping would have to pay pilotage, and there would not be revenue enough from the business of pilotage to support it. For that reason, I think it would be advisable for the hon. Minister to stay his hand in making any change in the present regulations at present or for a few years at least.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I promise my hon. friend to go slow.

Sault Ste. Marie Canal.—To pay Messrs. Hugh Ryan & Co., contractors, for the construction of Sault Ste. Marie Canal, the difference between the amount of $4.50 per cubic yard, paid on account of the construction of a masonry revetment wall built of sandstone and the contract price $7.50 per cubic yard for the said wall of limestone..... $27,525

Mr. McMULLEN. How is it this additional sum has been paid in connection with this matter. I understand that Mr. Ryan first contracted to supply sandstone at $7.50 per cubic yard. Afterwards the contract was changed, and he was allowed to use the stone taken from the bed of the canal, and the previous Government allowed him $4.50 per cubic yard for that stone.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). My hon. friend starts out by saying that he would like to know how it is this additional sum has been paid. It has not been paid, and will not be paid unless the House consents to the vote. The contract which was entered into between Mr. Ryan and the Government was for the construction of a revetment wall of limestone, and, according to the specification he was to be allowed $7.50 per cubic yard for that wall. After he had opened a quarry, and made all preparations for getting his limestone, it was asserted that the sandstone which he was excavating from the prism of the canal was of very excellent quality and would make as good a wall as limestone. He therefore applied and got permission from the department to substitute sandstone for limestone. When the final estimates came to be made by the officers of the department for this work, the engineer advised and the chief engineer approved of $4.50 being allowed by reason of the fact that the contractor was not putting in limestone but sandstone, leaving the question of balance of $300 to be considered. Mr. Ryan objected to any reduction, claiming that the sandstone was admitted to be as good by the officers of the department, that it made as good work, that the department had consented to the substitution, and that therefore he was entitled to be allowed the contract price. The matter was looked into. The officers of my department and Mr. Ryan discussed it with me, and the conclusion we came to was that, under all the circumstances, seeing that the stone was just as good as that which had been originally stipulated for, and that permission was given to substitute one for the other without any condition at all, without any stipulation for a lower price, and seeing that if such a condition had been annexed at the time it would have been quite open to Mr. Ryan to have gone on with the use of limestone, without any extra expenses, because the distance he had to carry it was inconsiderable, and seeing therefore that there was no reason why he should have preferred to use this sandstone at reduced price, especially as he had all his arrangements made, his quarry opened, the work started, the derricks constructed and everything in shape to get out the limestone—in view of all these considerations I came to the conclusion that I would put the matter before Parliament, and if Parliament concurred, the amount would be paid, otherwise Mr. Ryan would be left to his remedy, whatever that might be. But it seems to me, upon careful consideration of all the facts and circumstances, that there was no good reason why Mr. Ryan should not be allowed the amount he originally contracted for, because the department had consented to the change from limestone to sandstone.

Mr. HAGGART. I would ask the hon. Minister if he has the specifications at hand?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not.

Mr. HAGGART. I would like, before this item goes through or on some other item, to discuss this matter. If I remember rightly, the Minister said last year that he had a final estimate and that the sum he asked for was for the payment of it. The hon. Minister must know for the inquiry of a committee was directed to this very item. If I remember rightly the question was as to the classification. It was not a question where the material was taken from. I would ask the hon. Minister what engineer has reported in favour of this $7.50 per cubic yard? Did the engineer in charge or the deputy report in favour of this?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have already stated that Mr. Ryan, the Deputy Minister and myself met, and that the Deputy Minister agreed in the view that, under all the circumstances, $7.50 would be the proper allowance to make. I certainly would never have presented the matter to Parliament in this way and asked for the appropriation in the absence of concurrence of that kind.

Mr. HAGGART. But the hon. gentleman must know that a final estimate was passed, and on that estimate we had the certificate of the engineer in charge and of the Deputy Minister. There must have been a change in the specification, and the hon. Minister ought to have it in writing.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The final estimate I referred to was made by the Deputy Minister and contained this very sum.

Mr. HAGGART. Then, why did not the Minister ask this vote when he made the statement that it was to pay the final estimate?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not remember the statement made at that time.

Mr. McMULLEN. The proposition to pay this increased price is a surprise to me. It appears that Mr. Ryan entered into a contract for this canal on specifications calling for a certain kind of stone, which stone was found at a considerable distance from the canal. Now, after proceeding with the work, they found that they were able to take stone out of the bottom of the canal itself quite as good if not better than the stone which it was specified should be taken from the quarry at a distance. He used this stone on the permission which he applied for, and with the sanction of the engineer in charge, quarrying it out of the bottom of the canal and using it in construction. To pay him the same price as he would have been paid for stone quarried at some distance and carried to the works, I think, would be unfair. I do not think that any man would do that in his own business. If I contracted with a man to build me a house, using stone of a quality to be found some considerable distance from the work, and if after beginning the work, he found that stone of as good quality could be got on the site of the house itself, I do not think I would pay him the same price as if he had brought the stone from a distance. I do not see why we should be asked to pay this additional price. The explanation given by the Minister, I must confess, is not satisfactory to me. I think we should have some other explanations.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is no other explanation. I have stated the facts fully, and it is for the House to judge whether or not they will concur in the view that this claim is a reasonable and just one. The view I took of it when the facts were presented to me was that if the department saw fit to allow Mr. Ryan to substitute one class of stone for another on the ground that the stone was just as good and the work would be just as good, the department ought to have made some stipulation at the time when consent for the use of the stone was given as to a reduction in price so that Mr. Ryan might judge whether it would be more to his advantage to continue to use the stone specified in the original contract, or whether he would use the other. When a contractor asks the department to consent to the substitution of one article for another, it is quite open to the department to say: We will consent to the substitution, but we will not pay the price we originally agreed to. It is not easy for the head of a department, when a question of that kind arises, to say to the contractor that he must take a lower price, when no stipulation of that kind was made at the time. There is no fair play about that, it appears to me: and it was because the claim seemed to me a strong and reasonable claim that I bring it before the committee. It does not strike me as a matter of consequence to the Government, so long as they get precisely the same value and quality of work, where the material was taken from—that is speaking for one point of view. The price agreed upon was $7.50 per cubic yard for a certain quality of work. The work is done and the contractor seeks to be paid that price. I cannot for the life of me see why objection should be taken to the payment of an amount which is no greater than the sum the Government originally agreed to pay. There is another point, which is being lost sight of. The committee will understand that the main cost in connection with the supplying of stone is the quarrying, particularly the opening up of the quarry and the getting in place of the plant and machinery necessary for working it. What allowance will be made to the contractor for that, I would ask my hon. friend (Mr. McMullen)? It is true that the stone, under the original arrangement, would have to be brought a greater distance than if it were allowed to be taken out of the bottom of the canal. But I, inquired into that and I learned that the expense of transporting the stone would not be very large. The quarry was on Manitoulin Island and the stone could be brought from there all the way by water, so that the expense of carriage would not be very heavy. However, those are the facts, and with those facts it is entirely for the committee to deal.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman has entirely mistaken the point. It is not as to where the stone was taken, it is in regard to the classification of the work. There were two items, for one of which he was entitled to $7.50 and for the other $4.50. The officers of the department classified the work at $4.50, and it was on that classification that he was paid. I remember it perfectly well. I remember that the price to which he was entitled under the classification was fixed at $4.50 by the engineer in charge of the work and by the engineer of the department. The question was thoroughly inquired into by a committee who investigated the whole matter. One of the charges against the late Government was the payment of that sum to Mr. Ryan of $4.50 per yard. The late Government was attacked by all the members of the Opposition, headed by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson), an expert, and the majority of the committee found that we had paid too much. But what I complain of is that the deduction was not made because he got the material on the ground in substitution for stone which he could either have got on the Manitoulin Island, or for limestone which, as the hon. gentleman says, he got down near Amherstburg. The payment was made on the classification of the work, and as I understand it, he was paid for all he was entitled under that classification; whether he got the stone at the Manitoulin or down at Amherstburg, it did not make any difference. He got the classification he was entitled to by the report of the engineer in charge of the work and the engineer in charge of the department. Neither changed the classification, and on those grounds I want to see the certificate, either of the engineer in charge of the work or of the deputy of his department, that there is a change from a payment of $4.50 per yard to one of $7.50.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This class of work continued for a long time to be valued and estimated by the engineer of the department at $7.50. Then there was a contention made, I do not know whether there was some trouble made in the investigation or what the reason was, but it was reduced to $4.50, and my chief engineer says it was on the later estimate that it was cut down to $4.50, but marked for later consideration. It was not allowed under a classification, as the hon. gentleman has said, at $4.50, that was not the intention. There never was any fixed or settled allowance at $4.50 under any classification in the schedule, but at first payments were made at $7.50 until the action which I have referred to, when it was reduced to $4.50, and stood at that subject to further consideration. I felt this was a matter which I was responsible for settling in one way or the other either that the matter should come up in this form, or that it should be left to be litigated. I made up my mind that as I had to determine upon it, I would reach the best conclusion I could on the facts, and I have done so. I have presented the matter to Parliament, and I thought that the hon. gentlemen opposite, particularly the hon. gentleman who has presided over this department, would be acquainted with the facts, but since he has raised an objection to the payment of this amount, I have no hesitation in allowing the item to drop, and let the subject be litigated with the department in the usual way.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think that is the best course to pursue. There is no question that Mr. Ryan applied for the privilege of using the sandstone that he was taking out of the bottom of the canal, in place of limestone. Now, having got that liberty, there might be some doubt as to what he should be entitled to receive. But he applied to the department and liberty was given, and as a result, the responsibility, of course, rested upon the late Government.

Crow's Nest Pass Railway—

To pay salary and expenses of superintending engineer $2,500

Mr. FOSTER. Who is superintending engineer?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Mr. Fellowes of Ottawa. He was suggested to me by the chief engineer of my department.

Mr. HUGHES. Is he the officer who was employed on the Trent Canal under the late Government?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I believe so. There were no politics in it, so far as I know.

Mr. SPROULE. You ask for $2,000 to pay salary and expenses of inspecting engineer on the Drummond County Railway. Is that the gentleman who reported on the Drummond County Railway last year, so hurriedly?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We did not have the same engineer on that railway during the whole of this work. In the first place we had Mr. Kingsford for a short time. He was not able to give close attention to the work on account of some historical labours he was engaged in, and we substituted Mr. H. A. MacLeod.

Mr. FOSTER. With reference to the Crow's Nest Pass, how is it that we have to pay for a superintending engineer? That is not a Government road, it is a road for which an immense subsidy was given. I suppose my hon. friend wants to secure that the road shall be built according to contract, but why is it that in a road built by a company and for which an immense subsidy was given, we should pay for the inspecting engineer? Why should not the company pay for that report?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Can my hon. friend suggest any instance in all the past in which the contracting company paid for the cost of the engineer's reports and inspection?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know whether there has been any such instance or not, I want to know what the reason is. It seems to me that the company itself ought to pay all the expenses of construction, the same as in the Customs Department where importers have to pay a certain amount of the cost of inspection in certain cases.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If we did pursue that course, it would be of course entirely unprecedented, and one that never has been adopted in the past.

Mr. FOSTER. That may be.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I know in my own province when contracts with railway companies necessitated certain inspections being done, the Government had always to pay the cost of that inspection. It will necessarily have to be borne by the Government, unless the contract provided that the company should bear the expense. I am not prepared at this moment to say that it would be advisable for us to adopt the new plan. It is a very trifling sum, and it is scarcely necessary to insert a special clause in each contract making the company liable for this expense. In this instance the amount is $2,500, but it will not continue very long, and even this expenditure will scarcely justify the Government in pursuing a different course than they have followed in the past. In the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Government had a permanent inspector on the work and we did the same on the Crow's Nest Pass line, this being a heavy and important work.

Mr. CASEY. No doubt the duties of the engineers on the Canadian Pacific Railway are to see that the standard established by the Government is maintained. General surprise was expressed at finding that large and important bridges on the Crow's Nest Pass road were constructed of wood instead of iron, and that second-hand rails were being laid down instead of the new rails supposed to be imported for that road. No doubt the company showed reason for being allowed to build wooden bridges and lay down second-hand rails, and I hope the Minister will tell the committee on what grounds those arrangements were made.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No doubt the hon. gentleman has referred to a matter of considerable importance. We are doing exactly as was done when the Canadian Pacific Railway was first constructed. On account of urgency it was found impossible to get the necessary material there, and so it was necessary that the trestle work should be constructed of wood.

Mr. CASEY. I am not referring to the trestle work, but to bridges over important rivers, the bridge over the St. Mary, and two bridges across Old Man River.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They are of wood, but they are equally strong and are as suitable for the purpose as iron. It was not possible to get those bridges built of iron in the time, and it will be in the interest of the road itself to have them subsequently replaced by more durable structures.

Mr. CASEY. In the interest of the country the bridges should be constructed of more durable material. I had a conversation with the manager of the works there, and he said there was some difficulty about getting the iron. I bring the matter up now merely to get official information in regard to it. I was, however, rather surprised to find some old acquaintances laid down on the road, namely, the celebrated Mackenzie steel rails of 1878, instead of the new rails supposed to be imported for the purpose. I am glad at this late date to be able to bear testimony to the excellent quality of the Mackenzie rails, for when I spoke to Mr. Haney, the contractor, in regard to them, he said that after twelve or fourteen years they were as good as new rails, and they were the best steel rails that had ever been imported into Canada.

Mr. CLARKE. Why were they taken up and relaid elsewhere?

Mr. CASEY. In regard to the road, the company received sufficient subsidy to lay substantial new rails. I am not speaking in a spirit of hostility to the railway, which of course carries out every expenditure in the most economical manner. Was the Government, however, notified of the use of those rails and permission asked to lay down second-hand rails instead of new rails?

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman is evidently endeavouring to show the enduring powers of the Mackenzie steel rails, but he also wants the Minister to offer certain explanations.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. As regards a portion of the main line, we allowed the company to transfer the rails from the main line to the Crow's Nest Pass road, putting down heavy new rails in place of those removed. The main line, where there is the passenger travel, gets the benefit of the new rails, while the other rails spoken of serve a useful purpose on the Crow's Nest Pass road.

Mr. CASEY. I thought the understanding was that new rails of certain weight should be laid on the new road ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The company has been allowed to replace the old line with new heavy rails instead of the new line. They were allowed to do this because the rails taken up were serviceable rails and would do for the business over the Crow's Nest Pass road, and at the same time an improvement is made on the main line.

Mr. CASEY. I do not wish to find fault in respect to this matter, but I call the attention of the Minister very seriously to it for the reason that the company should have been compelled to live up to their contract in respect to the new road. They were receiving sufficient subsidy to build it and complete it with new rails, according to the terms of the contract, while at the same time the company should be compelled to keep the main line in good and satisfactory order. The two things cannot be mixed up. There were certain specifications prepared in regard to the new road, and those specifications should have been carried out.

Resolutions to be reported.

The PRIME MINISTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 1.05 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Second Sitting.

MONDAY, 6th June, 1898.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

DRUMMOND COUNTY RAILWAY—REPORT OF INVESTIGATION COMMITTEE.

Mr. LISTER. I beg to give notice that to-morrow I will move :

That the report of the special committee appointed to inquire into the subsidies granted in aid of the Drummond County Railway, and into all negotiations relating to the acquiring of the said road by the Government, be adopted.

Mr. BERGERON. Does that comprise the evidence and everything ?

Mr. LISTER. Everything.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is it the intention to have a discussion on this matter ?

Mr. LISTER. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think there was a tacit understanding that the matter should not be discussed just at present, and on that understanding some of the members of the committee from this side of the House have gone home.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). My hon. friend has given notice, and if there is any objection to take the matter up to-morrow, we will be very willing to meet the views of the gentlemen on the other side of the House. However, for the present notice has been given for to-morrow.

Mr. MONTAGUE. We have no objection to a discussion of the matter, but on the tacit understanding I have referred to, one member of the committee especially acquainted with the facts has gone home.

Mr. LISTER. There was hardly an understanding. It was talked about, and I said that I would consult the Government about the matter, and I informed the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden), a day or two ago, that the report would have to be adopted, and I also saw him to-day about it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). As far as the committee are concerned, I think there was a pretty clear understanding that it would not be desirable at this late date of the session to discuss the question because it is inevitable that the debate would extend over a very considerable period. While it was not understood in any such way as to bind the Government, I think my hon. friend (Mr. Lister) will agree with me, it was recognized, as far as the committee were concerned that it would be better to postpone the discussion until the beginning of next session. I think that was pretty clearly understood. I did not hear anything inconsistent with that in any way until, I think, Saturday morning, when my hon. friend (Mr. Lister) mentioned to me that the matter was likely to be discussed. I pointed out to him the view that had already been taken by the committee, and I understood from him that he was to consult again with the gentlemen on that side of the House, and consequently I did not take any steps to detain Mr. Powell. In fact, I knew it would be useless at that stage to attempt to detain him, because he had a professional engagement which made it absolutely necessary that he should be in Moncton to-day. Then the matter was mentioned to me again to-day by my hon. friend for West Lambton (Mr. Lister), when I made the same suggestion. As far as the discussion is concerned, it is a mere matter of convenience as to when it shall take place. If we had the time we are as ready to discuss it now as at any time, but generally at the commencement of a session there is more or less time lost—at least that is the way it would seem to me—by lack of work being ready. I do not say that is not necessary, but whether necessary or not it is usually so, and it seemed to me it would be a saving of time, and better in every way to deal with this matter at the commencement of next session, when more time is available than would be available now, unless we propose to sit longer than most of the members have anticipated.

The PRIME MINISTER. I would remind my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) that I doubt if we can take up this report next session. I do not think we can, but at all events, as my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) has stated, it is a matter of convenience, and my hon. friend (Mr. Lister) has given notice that he would take it up to-morrow. If it does not suit my hon. friends on the other side to discuss the matter at this advanced period of the session, I think we may, perhaps, find it possible to meet their wishes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. May I be permitted to ask the Prime Minister a question? What we understand is that the notice stands for to-morrow, and that if it is found to meet the convenience of the members on this side of the House to lay it over, the right hon. gentleman would do that?

The PRIME MINISTER. The notice will stand until to-morrow. In the meantime, there might be a private conference to see what are the views of gentlemen on both sides of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. I should hope that the suggestion would not be seriously entertained that a report of that importance should be adopted without debate.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We would not insist on that.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand from what has been said that it must inevitably occur that if the adoption of this report is to be moved, we shall have to recall our members, many of whom have gone home with the understanding that it was not necessary for them to come back. An important report like that cannot be adopted without serious debate. I know my right hon. friend will consider the matter.

SAW-DUST IN RIVERS.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 166) further to amend the Fisheries Act. He said: Mr. Speaker, this amendment has sole reference to the dumping of saw-dust in navigable rivers. Last year, I introduced a Bill to extend the time for one year, so as to give the mill-owners another year's time in which to provide for the destruction of the saw-dust or its disposal in some other way than by dumping it in the rivers. Six months ago, I sent a circular to each of them, warning them that they need not hope for any further extension, and that they must prepare themselves for the enforcement of the Act; and I met the House with that full understanding. Since the meeting of the House, I have been waited upon by some of those who are largely interested in this business. They stated to me that about a year ago they entered into negotiation with a gentleman who thought he had discovered a process by which the saw-dust could not only be consumed, but utilized and a very important manufacture introduced into this country. They submitted statements to me, and brought to me the gentleman who has the matter in hand, the construction of the apparatus for the purpose of testing the efficiency of his device. After that was done, I said that after the statement I had made across the House and publicly, I did not feel justified in introducing a Bill further to extend the time, unless it was with pretty general consent. I submitted the statements to my predecessor in office (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), and he said, speaking for himself personally, that the circumstances more than justified the extension. He saw me about it, and said that so far as he was concerned personally, if I introduced the Bill, it would have his support. I then said that a feeling was abroad in the community that one of the largest mill-owners was adopting devices of one kind or another for the purpose of evading the law, and that I would require, for my own personal satisfaction at least, a statement from him to the effect that he was not desirous of evading the law, but that he was prepared unreservedly to submit to the law if it came into operation. I said that I would further require, in order to place the matter fairly before the House, a statement of what proceedings had been taken, and at what stage the proceedings now were, in relation to this alleged discovery and experiment. I have received from Mr. J. R. Booth and Mr. W. C. Edwards, the two gentlemen who are most prominent in this matter, a letter dated the 23rd of May, 1898, in which they make the following statement of fact:—

We beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 20th instant, and in reply thereto have to say that the process for the conversion of saw-dust and mill refuse into commercial products has been under investigation by us for the past two years.

The process has been demonstrated in laboratory form, and Prof. Ruttan, of Montreal, has investigated it so far as he was at present able to, and he has pronounced favourably upon it. In verification of this statement, we inclose herewith his letter. We are now building an initial or illustrative plant, and expect that it will be in operation within six weeks. If it is successful, as we expect the foundation will be laid of a large industry, which will include the manufacture upon a large scale of calcium carbide, thus utilizing commercially and profitably all the refuse from the Ottawa River mills.

In view of the progress attending this scheme, we think it is reasonable to ask Parliament for an extension of the time limited by recent statute, whereby the mill-owners have been compelled to discontinue throwing saw-dust and mill refuse into the river for want of better disposition of it. Our present idea is that six months will be sufficient time to demonstrate the possibilities of this scheme, but as the undertaking is large and involves a considerable expenditure, as well as the overcoming of unforeseen difficulties, we submit that it is only reasonable that Parliament should grant extension of the time asked for to eighteen months.

We are deeply in earnest in this undertaking, which touches our interests very dearly, and we are governed by the best advice we have been able to obtain, and we have every confidence in the success of our scheme, and that the benefit we achieve will redound to the advantage of all the mill-owners of Canada.

Attached to that letter is a letter, which I need not read to the House, from Professor Ruttan, confirming the statements made in the letter so far as he is concerned. I have received a supplementary letter from Mr. J. R. Booth, in which he states that he will cheerfully submit to such rules, regulations or restrictions as the Government of Canada may deem fit to impose respecting the disposition of mill refuse. I quote that to remove an impression which exists in Ottawa that Mr. J. R. Booth has been able for a number of years to control the actions of the Government of Canada for the time being; and I think I may fairly say that I have been converted to the view that it is in the public interest that these gentlemen should have a little further extension of time in order to test the experiment which they have entered upon. They have already laid out a large amount of money on the mill for the experiment is in process of being carried on, and, if successful, it will be of great advantage, not only to the mill-owners of Canada, but to the people of Canada, for it will bring into existence a very large and profitable industry, which will give employment to a large number of people. Under these circumstances, I consulted with a number of gentlemen in the Senate and elsewhere who are personally interested in this matter, and I find that the general feeling is in favour of giving these gentlemen this opportunity—that it is reasonable and proper to do so. Although this is contrary to the statement I made in my circular letter to them, that I would not introduce such legislation this session, I may say that these facts were not then brought to my attention. I do not think, however, that there is any possibility of getting the Senate of Canada to consent to a two years' extension, as is suggested in this letter—for eighteen months practically means two years; and the Bill I propose to introduce extends the time for one year only, to the first of May next.

Mr. FOSTER. That ought to be long enough.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I think so. With this explanation I beg to introduce the Bill.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It is about time we had a new speech from the Throne.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS BY MEMBERS.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Before we take up the Orders of the Day, I think we ought to proceed with the questions.

Mr. SPEAKER. By the unanimous consent of the House, we will proceed with the questions put by members.

STORM SIGNALS IN CAPE BRETON.

Mr. BETHUNE asked.

How many storm signals are there in the counties of Cape Breton, Victoria and Inverness respectively? Where is each of them?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The number of storm signals in the county of Cape Breton is four, in the county of Victoria one, and in the county of Inverness three. Those in Cape Breton are at Sydney, Port Morien, Louisburg and Little Glace Bay; that in Victoria is at Ingonish; and those in Inverness are at Cheticamp, Port Hood and Port Hastings.

APPROVAL OF RAILWAY REGULATIONS.

Mr. CASEY (by Mr. Ingram) asked,

Is the approval of the Governor General in Council, or of the Minister of Railways, necessary to the legal adoption and enforcement by a railway company of rules and regulations for the operation of its railway?

If so,—1. Have any such rules and regulations been adopted and submitted for approval by any railway company since 1st January, 1898; and by what companies? 2. Were such rules and regulations approved in all, or in which cases? 3. Did representatives of the employees of such railway companies applied to be heard by the Governor General in Council or the Minister of Railways, in regard to the approval of such rules and regulations? 4. Were they so heard previous to the approval of such rules and regulations?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I thought this matter had been pretty well disposed of; but I may add to what I stated before that I communicated with the Grand Trunk Railway management, pointing out to them that, as far as I had been able to learn, the chief objection to the rules which have been approved was that they were called into operation at an earlier date than the employees of the road, or the association represented by the gentlemen who have been communicating with hon. members, though it was possible for them to become trained and experienced, as the time was too short for that purpose. As a result they have advised me that they have postponed the date until it would be satisfactorily ascertained that the men were sufficiently experienced and had learned the new signal methods so that there would be no difficulty.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend did not answer the question.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I stated the other day, or the other afternoon, that a body of new regulations was approved on the dates stated here, and that it was necessary such approval should take place before they went into operation.

Mr. INGRAM. Were the employees consulted?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think the hon. member must have failed to recollect what I said the other day. I had not the faintest recollection, nor had the right hon. Premier, of having been asked by the employees to communicate with them. There is no record whatever in my department of any such request. The ex-Minister stated that they waited on him and made such a request, and that he had caused a minute to be made of it, so that when the Grand Trunk Railway filed an application of that kind, there would be a record in the department showing there was objection to it. My officials say there is no such record, the Deputy Minister has not the faintest recollection of such a request, and I did not communicate with the employees before the regulations were approved for the reasons I have already stated.

DR. LAVOIE.

Mr. BERGERON asked.

1. Has Dr. Lavoie, of L'Islet, been appointed by the Government to a position of any kind?
2. What is the position?
3. What is the salary attached thereto?
4. Is Dr. Lavoie performing the duties of his office, and how long has he been doing so?
5. What place has been fixed upon for the residence of Dr. Lavoie while he holds the said office?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). When Commander Wakeham, who had charge of the gulf fisheries for a good many years, was sent in command of the Hudson Bay expedition, it became necessary to appoint some one in his place, and Dr. Lavoie was appointed by Order in Council of the 1st of July, to take the place of Commander Wakeham during his absence. Dr. Lavoie has remained in that position ever since. Had I not gone to Washington the other day, I would have been prepared to make a regular recommendation to Council fixing his position and salary for the future, but have not been able to do so yet.

Mr. BLAIR.

PUBLIC BUILDING, ARTHABASKA.

Mr. LAVERGNE asked.

Is it the intention of the Government to construct a public building in the town of Victoriaville, in the county of Arthabaska, with a view to accommodating therein the post office and the offices of the customs and excise and militia?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The intention of the Government will be determined by the amount of revenue obtained from the post office, customs and excise.

DISMISSAL OF W. A. KING.

Mr. FOSTER asked.

When was W. A. King, station agent, Antigonish, Nova Scotia, dismissed? What were the charges against him and was there an investigation? If so, what was the report of the commissioner and the result of the investigation? Who has been appointed in Mr. King's place?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Station agent King was dismissed. The charge preferred against him was offensive partisanship. A commissioner held an investigation, and the result was his dismissal. I cannot say who was appointed in his place, as I have mislaid the information, but will let the hon. gentleman know to-morrow.

Mr. FOSTER. Were the result and the report of the commissioner in unison?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Quite so.

DISMISSAL OF H. W. WOODS.

Mr. FOSTER asked.

Has H. W. Woods, postmaster of Welsford, New Brunswick, been dismissed? Was there any investigation held in his case?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Mr. Woods, postmaster, was also dismissed. There was not any investigation held in his case as one was really not considered necessary.

Mr. H. H. NORWOOD.

Mr. FOSTER asked.

Is H. H. Norwood in the employ of the Government in the Yukon district, and if so, in what capacity?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). H. H. Norwood is in the employ of the Government in the Yukon district, in the capacity of inspector of supplies.

LINE OF STEAMERS TO GASPE.

Mr. BERGERON asked.

1. Have the Government promised any subsidy to a line of steamers or to any company or person for a line of steamers to run between Montreal, Quebec and ports in the county of Gaspé ?

2. If so, to what company, person or persons ?
3. What is the amount of said subsidy ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). In the absence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, I may say that last year a line of steamers was subsidized between Quebec and Gaspé. I cannot say positively now, but I believe that the subsidy has been continued this year.

ST. JACQUES MODEL FARM.

Mr. DUGAS asked,

Whether it is the intention of the Government to give effect to the request made by the member for Montcalm and place in the Supplementary Estimates a sum sufficient to provide for the establishment of a model farm at St. Jacques, where the cultivation of Canadian tobacco is made a specialty ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). This is a subject which has engaged the attention of the Government, but they have not come to a conclusion.

MR. JOHN D. MATHESON.

Mr. GILLIES asked,

1. When was John D. Matheson, late lockmaster of the St. Peter's Canal, appointed to that position ?
2. Was he appointed under an Order in Council ?
3. Were his duties performed efficiently ?
4. Was he dismissed, and if so, why ?
5. Were any complaints or charges laid against him, and if so, by whom ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). In reply to the hon. gentleman I beg to say : 1. John D. Matheson, late lockmaster of the St. Peter's Canal, was appointed to that position on the 30th November, 1892. 2. He was appointed under an Order in Council. 3. His duties were performed efficiently. 4. He was dismissed on account of political partisanship. 5. Charges were laid against him of political partisanship by Mr. E. P. Flynn, of Arichat.

INFANTRY SCHOOLS, FREDERICTON AND LONDON.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON (by Mr. Clarke) asked,

What was the cost of lighting the permanent Infantry Schools at Fredericton and London respectively, for the financial year 1896-97, and the relative strength of the militia at each station ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). The cost of lighting the permanent infantry schools at Fredericton, N.B., and London, Ont., respectively, for the financial years 1892-93, 1893-94, 1894-95, 1895-96 and 1896-97, was as follows:—

	London.	Fredericton.
1892-93.....	$ 190 47	$2,019 98
1893-94.....	190 80	2,125 23
1894-95.....	204 50	1,980 80
1895-96.....	198 60	2,025 89
1896-97.....	199 05	1,757 37

I may explain that the excessive cost at Fredericton seems to be due to the very high charge made there for the use of gas. When I discovered in September last that such large amounts were being charged, I stopped at once the use of gas at that school, so that during this year the expense will be probably very much lower. We are negotiating now with the gas company with the view of making some arrangement for a reasonable sum per year for the use of the gas. The strength of the militia at the two stations is as follows:—

SUBALTERN OFFICERS. PERMANENT FORCE.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON asked,

1. How many of the subaltern officers appointed to the permanent force since 10th July, 1896, were in possession of long course certificates when appointed ?
2. How many of the officers so appointed have since obtained long course certificates ?
3. How many of these officers are not in possession of long course certificates ?
4. Within what date must a permanent corps officer not in possession of long course certificate obtain it, and are their appointments provisional pending acquirement of such qualifying certificate ?
5. Is it to continue to be the policy of the Militia Department to appoint officers to the permanent force without their first being in possession of the qualifying long course certificate ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). 1. One. Another being a graduate of the Royal Military College does not require any other certificate. 2. None. Three—Van Straubenzie, Nagle and Lister are now undergoing a course. 3. Eight. Thirteen officers were appointed to the force. Of these three were surgeons not requiring L. C. certificate ; one was a Royal Military College graduate and one had a certificate. 4. No date specified. Officers are not appointed provisionally to the permanent corps. 5. No. On and after 1st July next the new regulations with regard to qualifications will come into force. They are as follows:—

A candidate for appointment to a unit of the permanent corps will be required—

- (a) To be unmarried, and to be between the ages of 18 and 25 on the 1st of January of the then current year ;

(b) To undergo an inspection by a medical board as to his physical fitness in every respect for military service;

(c) To be in possession of a diploma of graduation from the Royal Military College of Canada, or

(d) To have served not less than 15 months as a commissioned officer in the active militia of Canada, and to have attended at least two annual trainings, or to have seen active service in the field, and to have passed the matriculation examination of a chartered university of Canada, or the entrance examination to the Royal Military College of Canada, and to be in possession of a long course grade "A" certificate in the arm of the service to which he is seeking appointment.

TELEGRAPH LINE ON THE NORTH SHORE OF THE ST. LAWRENCE.

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Bergeron) asked,

1. Did the Government call for tenders before awarding to Mr. DeCourval the contract for the erection of the telegraph line on the north shore of the St. Lawrence?

2. If so, who were the parties who tendered, and what were the prices named in several tenders?

3. Did the Government by an Order in Council relieve Mr. DeCourval of the condition of using none but cedar posts, and authorize the using by him of timber growing along the line?

4. If so, on what date and for what reasons?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). 1 and 2. No. The contract, which was only for a portion of the line, was awarded to Mr. DeCourval upon a tender made by him, which was examined by the superintendent of the telegraph service, and in favour of the acceptance of which that officer reported to the Minister. 3 and 4. The specification for the construction of the line did not contain the condition of using none but cedar posts, consequently no Order in Council was required in the matter as no change was made.

THE CASE OF P. COUILLARD DUPUIS.

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Bergeron) asked,

1. Are the Government aware that P. Couillard Dupuis was sentenced to pay a fine of $75 and costs, for selling liquor to the Indians on the Roberval reserve, in the county of Chicoutimi?

2. Has the amount of the fine been paid?

3. Have efforts been, or are they now being made to obtain from the Government a remission or a delay; if so, by whom?

4. Is it, in such case, the intention of the Government to grant such remission?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). 1. Yes. 2. No. 3 and 4. Representations were made by the member for the district in favour of Mr. Dupuis; action was stayed to admit of my going into the matter; and, after giving it consideration, I directed that, in so far as the Department of Indian Affairs was concerned, the law should be allowed to take its course, and the local agent was so instructed on the 4th ultimo.

Mr. BORDEN (King's).

UNIVERSITY OF MANITOBA AND THE "DRIVING PARK."

Mr. LaRIVIERE asked,

1. Has the Government agreed to grant to the University of Manitoba the parcel of land in the city of Winnipeg commonly known as the "Driving Park"?

2. If so, upon what terms and conditions?

3. Has the Hudson Bay Company any unextinguished title to said land, or is the disposal of the same subject to the consent or approval of the said company?

4. Has that consent or approval been obtained, and upon what conditions or restrictions?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). The Government has agreed to allow a portion of the land in the city of Winnipeg, known as the "Driving Park," to be used as a site for university buildings. The terms and conditions have not been settled. The original deed from the Hudson Bay Company is not an absolute deed, but provides that the land must be used for public purposes. No consent of the Hudson Bay Company has been obtained. It is not intended to make any grant which will be inconsistent with the terms of the original lease.

RETIREMENT OF COUNTY COURT JUDGES AT 75 YEARS.

Mr. INGRAM asked,

Was any correspondence addressed to the Government in reference to the propriety of legislating with a view to retiring county court judges from their positions as such officials on their arriving at the age of seventy-five years? If so, by whom was such correspondence addressed?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am not aware that there is any such correspondence.

QUALIFICATION OF OFFICERS—MILITIA GENERAL ORDERS.

Mr. TYRWITT asked,

Were Militia General Orders No. 29 of 1897 and No. 22 of 1898, relative to certificates of qualification of officers, approved of by Order in Council?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). In answer to the hon. gentleman, I beg to say: No, such approval is not necessary under the Militia Act.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH CARDINAL RAMPOLLA.

Mr. McDOUGALL asked,

Has the Right Honourable the First Minister addressed a letter or any communication to His Eminence Cardinal Rampolla at Rome with statement contained therein to the following effect:—

"Ottawa, 30th October, 1897.

"Eminence,—I made known to you in the month of August last, when Your Eminence did me the honour to grant me an audience, the happy result which the mission of Monseigneur Merry del Val had accomplished among the Catholics of Canada, and the profound impression which his high Christian virtues and his talents as a statesman—I say statesman, and the expression is not too strong—had created in all classes of our population.

"Having now returned to my country for several months, I wish to make known to Your Eminence that, if these happy results are to remain permanent and efficacious, it is desirable, if not necessary, that the mission of Monseigneur Merry del Val should be renewed, or rather continued, and that he should be present in the midst of us for a more or less prolonged time as the accredited representative of the Holy See.

"I have established, since my return, that there is among a certain class of Catholics an underhand agitation against the work accomplished by Monseigneur Merry del Val, a work of pacification, concord and union.

"The same reason of state which inspired His Holiness in the affairs of France, and which caused him to prescribe to the Catholics of this country the duty of abandoning the old strifes of the past and to accept the state of things agreed upon, has quite as much force in Canada as in France.

"Such is the opinion of a great number of the Catholics among us. I admit that it is not the unanimous opinion; this very divergence of opinion only renders more necessary among us the presence of a man at once firm and conciliatory like Monseigneur Merry del Val, and of one above all would understand all the danger there is of exasperating the men who are sincere, convinced, and who wish to be faithful to their duty as Catholics, while remaining faithful to what they believe to be their duties as citizens.

"May I be permitted to ask Your Eminence to be good enough to lay these considerations before His Holiness, while assuring him at the same time of my profound respect and of my filial attachment.

"Accept, Eminence, the expression of the high consideration with which I remain, &c., &c."

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I beg to say to my hon. friend (Mr. McDougall) that I have no answer to make to any inquiry as to private and confidential correspondence not on public matters. I would further say to my hon. friend that if he wants to know whether or not I wrote such a letter, he should at least produce the letter in its entirety. In the copy on the Order paper there is a line of asterisks, showing plainly that a portion has been suppressed and the letter has been garbled.

THE PACIFIC CABLE.

Mr. McNEILL. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I should like to ask the right hon. leader of the House (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) if he will be kind enough to give me some information with regard to the proposed Pacific Cable. In view of the discussion which took place on this subject the other night, an impression has gone abroad that Canada was expected to guarantee one-third part of the cost. Was it not the understanding that certain of the Australian Colonies should guarantee one-third, the mother country one-third, and Canada and New Zealand between them one-third.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am not aware that any definite scheme has ever been arranged or understanding come to. There has been some discussion as to the apportionment of the cost between the mother country and the different colonies, but I am not prepared at this moment to say what was proposed and finally accepted. In fact, I do not think that anything was finally accepted.

Mr. McNEILL. May I ask if that was not the basis of the discussion which has taken place on this subject?

The PRIME MINISTER. That is not my impression. My impression was that Canada was to furnish one-third, but I cannot speak positively. It is a matter which more concerns the Minister of Department of the Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) who is not present this afternoon, but who will be here this evening. If my hon. friend will renew his question to-morrow, no doubt the information will be given him.

ENFORCEMENT OF THE ALIEN LABOUR LAW.

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to ask the First Minister if he is able to say whether an officer will be appointed at Wallaceburg to enforce the Alien Labour Law?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I suppose there will be no objection to that; on the contrary, I am satisfied that there will be every wish to meet the views of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy).

Mr. McCORMICK. I would ask if an officer has been appointed at Parry Sound to enforce the Alien Labour Law?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes, that has been done. I understand also, from information I have just received, that an officer has been appointed at Wallaceburg as well.

BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY'S RATES.

Mr. CLARKE. I would ask if any decision has yet been reached by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council on the application by the Bell Telephone Company for permission to increase their rates?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). No decision has yet been given.

JUDGES OF PROVINCIAL COURTS.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL moved that the order for third reading of Bill (No. 150) further to amend the Act respecting the Judges of Provincial Courts be discharged, and that the Bill be referred back to Committee of the Whole this day for the purpose of further consideration.

Motion agreed to.

PENSIONS TO JUDGES.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolution :—

Resolved, That it is expedient to provide that any judge now holding office who shall by reason only of his having completed the seventy-fifth year of his age be or become disqualified to hold or retain his office, shall be entitled to a pension under section 15 of chapter 138 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, although he may not have continued in office for the number of years mentioned in that section.

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. INGRAM. I would like to know on what principle judges of county courts who arrive at the age of 75 years should be legislated out of their position, and that Superior Court judges, even when they arrive at a greater age, are not interfered with ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The judges of the Superior Courts are appointed under the constitution, the British North America Act, and we have, therefore, no right to legislate in this manner with regard to them; whereas, judges of the county court are simply statutory appointments, and under statutes passed by ourselves, and we have a constitutional right to legislate in this manner with regard to them.

Mr. INGRAM. I observe that a resolution in respect to judges found its way on the Order paper last Saturday, and when it was reached the leader of the House asked that it should be dropped. If there were good reasons for placing it on the Order paper, those reasons must still hold good. I say it is a great injustice to legislate judges out of their positions, whether they are county court or supreme court judges. I cannot but believe, notwithstanding the answer I received from the First Minister, that the judge in my own county was particularly aimed at by the legislation that was introduced and withdrawn, and by this legislation. I have it on the best authority that some aspirants who are looking for that gentleman's shoes, are now in the city trying their best to secure the position.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not quite understand the provision about superannuation.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The position now is that a gentleman who is retired merely because he has reached his 75th year, is entitled to superannuation exactly the same as if he had only served five years.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It is possible under this clause to appoint men who are 55, 60 or 70 years of age to the bench, and then retire them at 75.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Then they get nothing. This applies simply to those who now hold office. In the future if we appoint a man 70 years of age and he goes out at 75 he is not entitled to anything.

Mr. INGRAM. Will the Government promise for the next two years that they will not undertake to reduce the age limit ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I would advise my hon. friend not to borrow any trouble for the future. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I desire to enter my protest against fixing an age of arbitrary retirement. I want to point out to the Solicitor General and also to the Prime Minister, that there does not seem to be any greater reason for a time limit to county court judges than for a time limit in respect to the age of the members of the Government, or of the members of this House. I observe, from consulting the Parliamentary Companion, that one of the members of the right hon. gentleman's Government is in his 74th year, another one is in his 69th year. The late Minister of Justice was appointed in his 77th year, and he was in his 79th year when he was appointed Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario. I also observe that the hon. leader of the Opposition, who has not been noted as particularly inactive, or as distinguished by any want of energy during the present session, is in his 77th year; and that the leader of the Opposition in the Senate is vigorous in mind and body in his 75th year. I also observe that one member who occupies a seat on the Government side, is in his 75th year, two others are in their 73rd year and one in his 70th year. I do not know much about the other provinces, but in the province of Nova Scotia the president of the legislative council, a good Liberal and a very worthy gentleman, is in his 76th year, another gentleman who has been known as the leader of the Opposition is in his 77th year; and two members on the Government side of the House there, who are very active both physically and mentally, are in their 74th and 76th year respectively. Now I have a long list here of English judges with which I will not weary the House, but I refer the Solicitor General to the names of Lord St. Leonards, Lord Brougham, Lord Campbell, Lord Chelmsford, Baron Parke afterwards Lord Wensleydale, Lord Cranworth and Lord Lyndhurst, all of whom not only did active work after they arrived at the age of 75 years, but in many cases were appointed to the very highest positions after attaining that age. Some of them were appointed to the position of Lord Chancellor after they had attained the age at which it is proposed to drive county court judges summarily off the bench.

For instance, Lord Cranworth, who was born in 1790, was given by Lord Palmerston the position of Chancellor of England when he was of the age of 75 years. It is perfectly clear that apart from the proposed enactment, there is power to dispense with the services of any of the judges who have attained the age of 75 years, and who are not competent to perform their duties; and in my opinion there is no greater reason for fixing the age for the retirement of county court judges than in the case of members of Parliament or members of the Government or members of the Senate. It is bad legislation; there is no logical reason for it whatever. My hon. friend beside me (Mr. Bergeron) suggests there is some reason for it, which I hope does not really exist. I must take it for granted that the Government in putting forward this legislation are sincere and think it is right. That being so, I think it is my duty to point out these instances, which indicate that men in many other walks of life perform most important functions, just as important as those of county court judges, after they have reached 75 years. There is no greater reason for restricting by a time limit the performance of duty by county court judges than by members of Parliament, members of the Government or members of the Senate.

The PRIME MINISTER. I must say to the hon. gentleman that having the honour to occupy a very prominent position at the bar in his province, he should have met the suggestion in a different spirit from that which he has exhibited to the House. My hon. friend has taken a line of argument which he knows well as a lawyer is a very unsafe one, to argue from exception in order to establish a general rule. My hon. friend has cited the case of the leader of the Opposition, who being 76 years, has discharged and discharged with unabated vigour and ability his important functions, functions as important as those of a county judge. But my hon. friend also knows, and for my part I know, that the case of the leader of the Opposition is a very exceptional one. I do not know a man of 76 years endowed with the same vigour as happily for his party and for the country too as is the case with Sir Charles Tupper. But because Sir Charles Tupper and a few other men have been able to show at the age of 76 years unabated vigour, does it follow that a rule should prevail that the same conditions should be expected in all cases. There is a greater authority than his or mine which says that the span of life of man is three score years and ten. When a man reaches that age the presumption is that he is no longer fit to discharge important duties. The hon. gentleman has cited the cases of Lord Chancellors. I was somewhat surprised to find him compare county court judges with Lords Brougham and Lyndhurst and others.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I was doing so only in point of physical vigour.

The PRIME MINISTER. The Lord Chancellor of England discharges duties of far greater importance than county court judges, but in point of physical vigour perhaps it requires greater energy, stamina and endurance to discharge the duties of a county court judge, to go on circuit over harduroy roads, sleep in bad hotels, hear division court cases, a class of work which is most taxing on the energies and resources of any man. I shall be very much surprised if my hon. friend has not met in his own province judges of 75 years whom he thought it would be better in the public interest should be superannuated. I appeal to the hon. gentleman's experience whether in taking the power to limit the period of usefulness of some of the old judges, we are not consulting the best interests of those who are compelled to go before the county courts in Ontario especially and in some of the other provinces. There is no politics in that, and I would be sorry if it should be considered from that point of view. But I appeal with confidence to legal gentlemen on both sides of the House, for I believe they will sustain the action taken by the Government in this matter.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I may mention to the right hon. gentleman that there is one judge in Canada at the present time who at the age of nearly 85 years is discharging his judicial duties and discharging them with undiminished activity, with very great ability, and with apparently as vigorous an intellect as ever he possessed. Of course as the right hon. gentleman says, that is an exception, but I think that possibly the right hon. gentleman misunderstood me. My suggestion was that if you now have means to get rid of a judge who is not capable when he attains the age of 75, why should you fix an arbitrary time limit which will exclude some men at least who at that age are fully capable of performing their judicial duties with universal satisfaction.

The PRIME MINISTER. This law would not apply to the judge the hon. gentleman refers to.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am quite aware of that.

Mr. TISDALE. I presume the Government have decided upon this course, and if so they should certainly do justice to those judges who are already appointed, and who when they took office had the right to believe that so long as they were capable of filling the position they would get full salary. These gentlemen who now occupy the position of judges have for a long time been retired from other walks of life; they are in consequence unable to earn any emolument beyond their pay, and surely the least that should be done would be to give them their full pay on retirement. This proposed legislation is ex poste facto legislation, and is, I think, of a very unfair character. I appeal to the right hon. gentleman that if this argument is good when applied to the judges of the inferior courts, it is stronger still when applied to judges of the Superior Courts, and many are in favour of retiring all judges under similar circumstances on full pay. Every argument that could be advanced to apply this law to county court judges certainly could be used with stronger force to the judges of the Superior Court, who are charged with greater responsibilities. I protest against changing the conditions of the law which these gentlemen believed they would be under when they accepted office. They are now, it seems, to be summarily dismissed by Act of Parliament at a less rate of pay than was guaranteed them by the law when they were appointed. I protest in regard to that. Speaking for myself I do not feel so strongly about the other part of the law as I do about this provision. Surely this country can afford to be fair to its judiciary. The judiciary of Canada, from the county court judges through to the judges of the highest courts are a credit to Canada, and under all circumstances whether, from a political point of view or otherwise, they have as a general rule so conducted themselves as to meet with the universal approval of the people. So far as I am concerned I probably would have raised no objection to the resolution which was withdrawn the other day giving these judges the same rate of pay on retirement as they have at present, but I do protest respectfully and strongly against this change being forced upon them, by which, after they have served the country for long years they are summarily dispensed with at a decreased rate of pay. In all my parliamentary experience, although other gentlemen who have made a close study of the subject may know better, I do not remember that Parliament has ever passed such a law affecting a large body of public servants, but more especially so in regard to a class who hold such a high record in this country as do the county court judges. I regret very much that the Government saw fit to introduce this legislation, and I protest against it.

Mr. McNEILL. I was so much gratified at the course the Government took in introducing this measure, and taking upon themselves the responsibility of doing something which perhaps was not a very popular thing to do, because I believe they thought in doing so they were simply doing what was right and just; I say I was so much gratified with their course in that instance that I am sorry to be obliged to differ from them now in regard to any part of this measure. I feel with regard to this proposal just as I did with regard to the civil service: that it is setting a very bad precedent. It is setting the example of holding as of no weight or value explicit and implied contracts in this country. It is not a precedent which will redound to the good of this country in the long run. It is not a precedent which can be held down fast to this particular matter; it is in point of fact letting loose the forces of anarchy in Canada. If you strike at the root of the sanctity of contract you strike at the root of the rights of property. That is really what this amounts to, and if the Government set the example of legislation of this kind in one case and another, the day will come when the people of Canada will be very sorry for it. That is my opinion, and it is because I hold that opinion so strongly that I feel it absolutely necessary to differ from the Government on this point. I had hoped that when the existing judges were being obliged to retire they would be allowed to retire on their full pay, and I am very sorry there has been any change in the policy of the Government in that respect. So far as the matter of age is concerned, it seems to me that the question is, as to whether it be true that it is an exception to find a judge of 75 years who is able to discharge his duties. My impression is that the very reverse is the case. I am quite satisfied that hon. members of this House who have been in the habit of practicing at the bar, would very much prefer as a rule to argue before and have their cases tried by a judge of 75 years, than a judge of 35 years. I think it does not matter how able a young man newly appointed to the bench may be, he cannot have the knowledge, he cannot have the experience, he cannot have the matured judgment that a judge of 75 years has. If it be true that it is only the exception to find a judge of 75 years who is able to discharge his functions properly, then that is another matter, but I do not think it is so at all. If my right hon. friend will look at the record in England he will find that it is not merely the exception that a judge of 75 years is able to discharge his functions. If I am not very much mistaken the present Lord Chancellor was over 75 years old when he was appointed Lord Chancellor. I believe that Lord Westbury was much over 75 years when he was sitting in Appeals in the House of Lords, and I should like to have seen any member of this House attempt to cross swords with Lord Westbury at that time, under the impression that his intellect was in any way impaired.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not think that your example is a very good one.

Mr. McNEILL. Was not Lord Westbury, when over 75 years of age, a man of great ability and force ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He was a marked failure as to his mental qualities after the age of 75 years.

Mr. McNEILL. It is for the first time that I ever heard that suggested. I have had the pleasure of sitting and hearing Lord Westbury deliver judgment; I have had the pleasure of hearing him cross swords in argument with the ablest advocates of the bar, at a time when I am satisfied he was over 75 years, and I never heard the suggestion made by any one that he was not then a perfect giant in intellect. At the same time there were sitting with Lord Westbury in the same court, Lord Chelmsford, who was also over that age, and Page Wood, then Lord Chancellor who also, I am satisfied, was more than 75 years.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Lord Hatherly.

Mr. McNEILL. Yes, Lord Hatherly. I know that Lord Colonsay was over 80 when he was sitting in the same court at the same time. I question very much if there was any single judge, except Lord Cairns, and the Lord Chancellor of Ireland, who sometimes sat there; I question if there were any of the judges who sat there, from day to day, who were not over 75 years, and that was the highest court of the Empire. I do not think it is correct to assume that it is only the exception, when you find a judge of 75 years who is able to discharge his functions. I repeat, that if a judge of 75 years is as bright as these men I have referred to, or as the present High Commissioner of Canada to London, whose appointment was confirmed by this Government when he was over 75 years; I repeat that I for my part would infinitely prefer if I had a case to have it tried by a judge of experience and matured judgment, rather than by a young judge.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend (Mr. McNeill) has given us such a fair support upon this Bill up to the present, that I am very sorry indeed that in this last disposition of it we have not been able equally well to meet his wishes. I must remind my hon. friend (Mr. McNeill) that perfection is not of this world; there are spots on the sun, and so he must expect to find even little specks on this Government. But I want to impress my hon. friend (Mr. McNeill) with this: that when a judge has reached 75 years of age it is not so much his mind which may have become infirm as it is his body. I appeal to the experience of legal gentlemen who practice in the rural courts of all the provinces and have to deal with the county judges, if it is not a fact that after a judge has come to be 70 years, or 72 years, and more especially 75 years old, that though his mind may be as bright as a dollar, and though he may preserve all his mental qualities he is most reluctant very often to undertake the physical duties which fall to his office. They are most reluctant to go on circuit in winter, on account of bad roads, cold weather, and so on. They refuse to do that on one pretense or another, consequently the interests of suitors suffer. There are many judges, who, at the age of seventy-five, are just as bright and as able mentally to discharge their duties as any others, but who would not be able to go through the same physical exertions as they were when they were only forty or fifty years of age. That is the reason why it has become imperative on us to introduce this legislation. It is no pleasure to us to do so, quite otherwise; and if very old judges were able to travel, there would be no reason for introducing it.

Mr. McNEILL. There is a great deal of force in what the right hon. gentleman has said, and I believe it is much the strongest argument which has been offered on this subject. Of course, where a judge is found to be too infirm to discharge his duties, there is at present power to retire him.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Where ?

Mr. McNEILL. I supposed it was not disputed. Does the hon. gentleman deny it ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There must be a public scandal before a judge can be removed from the bench.

Mr. McNEILL. Waiving that point for the moment, would it not be right and just to these men who accepted a position on the bench, and gave up their practice with certain prospects in view, that they should have their full salary in the event of their being compelled to retire ? It would not make a great deal of difference to the country in the cost, and it would certainly prevent a very bad precedent being established.

Mr. INGRAM. The right hon. gentleman has just advanced a reason why this resolution has been introduced into this House; and I take it that he has done so because those who represented the junior judges, when they came to this Parliament to interview the Government, as well as several private members of this House, stated that the reason they wanted an increase of salary was that the senior judges did not do their share of travelling and perform their share of the duties. I was not aware that this provision was to apply to county judges over 75 years of age. If it is to apply to them, I can speak for one county judge over 75 years of age, Judge Hughes, the senior judge of the county of Elgin, that he performs his duties and takes his share of the travelling; and, unlike other senior judges, he has divided the surrogate court fees with the junior judge. His other duties he performs, in my opinion, and in the opinion of the gentlemen who practice before him, as satisfactorily as does the junior judge. Listening to the arguments of the right hon. gentleman, and to the arguments of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden), I would suppose that the Government had no power in their hands to remove a county court judge who happened to be incapable. If my memory serves me correctly, a few years ago there was a certain county court judge in the province of Ontario as to whom the rumour went abroad that he was troubled with softening of the brain, and the Government were at a loss how to remove him. I understand that Sir John Thompson amended the Act, and a Superior Court judge was appointed to inquire whether the judge was able to perform his duties. The Superior Court judge did inquire, and made a report to the effect that the county court judge was incapable of performing his duties, but, whether fortunately or unfortunately, the county court judge died in a short time and was removed in that way. So I say that if the Act as it stands at present provides a means by which incompetent or incapable judges can be removed, what is the necessity of introducing a resolution of this kind, and preventing a man such as the judge of the county of Elgin from remaining on the bench, though able to perform his duties to the satisfaction of those who practice before him and the public generally? I think it is a great injustice, and I rise for the purpose of protesting against it.

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to ask the Solicitor General, what would be the retiring allowance of a judge appointed, say, at the age of 66, having served ten years?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. He would be entitled to his full two-thirds.

Mr. CLARKE. May I ask the Solicitor General if in any other part of the British Empire there is an enactment in force similar to the one he proposes here?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am not aware that there is; but I would remind my hon. friend that one or two years ago there was an outcry in England because of the advanced age of the judges on the bench; and a series of articles were published at the time drawing attention to the matter, and asking for a remedy. I am quite sure these articles were written in 1893 and 1894, and I have sent for them so as to have them before this debate closes. At the same time, I would draw my hon. friend's attention to this, that under the English system a judge is appointed under the Constitutional Act during life; but with us there is a distinction between the judges of the Superior Courts, who are appointed and hold their offices under the British North America Act, and the judges of the county courts who hold their offices merely under a statute; and there is no principle of law more firmly established than that there is no vested right in an office as against the public.

Mr. INGRAM. Suppose a change of Government takes place, what is to prevent the incoming Government from introducing a resolution to remove all county judges who have arrived at the age of seventy?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It would absolutely have the right to do so.

Mr. INGRAM. Would it not be interfering with the independence of the bench?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. As to the county court judges, their tenure of office is merely statutory, and no tenure that depends on a statute can be considered as permanent. That is a broad principle of law. Their tenure is necessarily subject to the caprice of the legislature. The only brake on that is a due regard for the public interest. I beg to call the hon. gentleman's attention to the case of Lord Fitzjames Stephen, who tried the Maybrick case. It was freely asserted at the time that he was utterly incompetent to try that case.

Mr. McNEILL. He was an exception.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That may be, but it was in consequence of it that an agitation arose in England as to the necessity of limiting the period of years during which a judge may sit on the bench.

Mr. INGRAM. Can you not remove a county court judge now?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. What my hon. friend has stated is absolutely correct and in accord with the terms of the statute.

Mr. INGRAM. Why not leave it that way?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That would not enable us to meet all the cases. I do not think it is quite fair for me to refer to individual cases, but I may say that there are two, in one of which the judge is 92 and admittedly incompetent, and in the other the judge is over 80 and utterly incompetent because of age. I suppose it might be possible for us to meet such cases by way of investigation, but if every time it is well ascertained and publicly known that a man has become incapable of performing his duties because of advanced years, we must appoint a committee to investigate his record, where are you going to stop? It is far better to have a limit of years fixed beyond which a man cannot go. Reference has been made by the hon. member for Halifax to a judge of a High Court. There is a limit reached in the lives of the whole of us when, because of our physical infirmities, however bright our mental faculties may continue, we are not able to give to the public that full measure of work which the public are entitled to expect. I know whereof I speak, because I have occasion personally to see the many disadvantages which result from men of advanced years being obliged to sit from day to day in court, whose minds are sufficiently bright, but whose physical powers cannot stand the strain. I have heard the bar appealed to not to proceed with cases beyond a certain hour, because of the condition of one of the judges.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the hon. gentleman mean that when a county court judge reaches 75 years, he will have to retire by reason of his age, irrespective of his mental capacities?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. When a man has completed his 75th year, he will be retired, no matter what his mental condition may be. And even if a judge is not 75 years of age, the statute will still apply if he should become incompetent by reason of some infirmity.

Mr. BERGERON. How many county court judges will fall under this new law?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think the limit will be five or six.

Mr. BERGERON. Why has the hon. gentleman restricted this to the county court judges? In the Revised Statutes of Canada of 1886, I find that all the judges are put on the same footing in the clause dealing with superannuation, except that in the case of Superior Court judges all over the Dominion, when they have sat 15 years and are incapacitated, they can claim two-thirds of their salary as superannuation, but in the case of county court judges, they must have sat 25 years before they can make a similar claim. The two classes of judges seem, therefore, in that Act, to be put on the same footing.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Under section 96 of the British North America Act, the Governor General in Council has the exclusive power of appointing judges of the Superior, district and county courts in each province. Section 99 provides that the judges of the Superior Court shall hold office during good behaviour. There is no provision at all as to the term of office of a county court judge. As the constitution provides that the Superior Court judges shall hold office during good behaviour, we cannot interfere with them. That is a constitutional appointment, but as this section of the British North America Act does not apply to county court judges, whose tenure of office is fixed by statute, we have the right in their case to interfere.

Mr. HAGGART. Is there no power to alter that as regards Superior Court judges?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There is not. We cannot appeal to the English practice for guidance, because there the judges are appointed under a constitutional Act—the Act of Settlement—but if we go to the United States, where they have exactly the same condition of things as here, where they have judges appointed under the constitution and judges appointed under statute, you find that a long series of decisions has settled this principle: "It is a general rule that where an office is created by statutory, as distinguished from constitutional legislation, it is wholly within the control of the legislature which created it."

Mr. HAGGART. I have heard that discussed before, and I have an idea that the majority of lawyers, especially some of the Ministers of Justice whom I have had the pleasure of hearing discuss the matter, looked upon it as a statutory appointment and that we have the power of altering it and fixing the tenure of office. I can understand your position if your power is limited under the British North America Act, and there is no provision at all in the Act itself which gives you the power of amending that particular part of the Act, but I had an idea that there was power given under the Act and that you could exercise the right by statute of fixing the age of retirement of judges and also the time at which they could be superannuated.

Mr. BERGERON. I understand that the constitutional objection is the only one raised to the putting of all the judges on the same footing. In reply to that objection I might say that Sir John Thompson, when Minister of Justice, and in the session before the last that he was here, I think, had decided that the Supreme Court Act should be amended, and this was one of the clauses of the new Act—that at 80 years of age a judge should ipso facto be on the retired list and receive full pay. I do not quite appreciate the argument of my hon. friend the Solicitor General when he says he stands entirely upon the fact that the judges of the Superior Court are appointed during good behaviour, because I believe the Supreme Court judges are appointed in the same way. If the Minister of Justice decided to do this in the case of the Supreme Court judges, I do not see why we should not do that same thing here. With all deference to the opinion of my hon. friend, I do not see why we should make such a distinction between the two classes of judges. If we are to do this in the case of the county court judges I would propose that we fix the age at 80 instead of 75, because I cannot hide from myself the idea that a great many judges will be found to be sick and incapacitated, making new creations necessary, and saddling the treasury of the country with the expense of eight or ten new judges.

The PRIME MINISTER. If I rightly apprehend the remarks of my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron), his idea would be that if the provision of the Bill is to be passed which makes it compulsory for county court judges to be retired at 75 years of age, the same principle should be extended to other judges.

Mr. BERGERON. I say that I am surprised that it is not so.

The PRIME MINISTER. But does my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) advocate it?

Mr. BERGERON. I say, put it at 80 years, and I would advocate it being applied to all the judges.

Mr. ERB. May I ask upon what grounds James P. Woods, late judge of the county of Perth, was retired, and whether he was entitled to superannuation allowance according to the Act in force at the time and, if not, upon what grounds did he receive a superannuation allowance?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. In the case of Judge Woods there was an investigation. I cannot give the grounds of it, but, as a result, it was found that he should receive a superannuation grant. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Erb) would like more particulars, I shall be glad to get them for him. But I should like to refresh my memory as to the points, because one does not like to speak of a judge without being absolutely sure of his facts.

Mr. CLARKE. I would like to ask how many judges affected by this law are now over 75 years of age?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I said a moment ago that I had not made such an examination as would enable me to answer very accurately, but I thought five or six would be the limit.

Mr. CLARKE. Including county court judges?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, this applies exclusively to county court judges. I can appreciate what my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) said about the constitutional opinion of the late Sir John Thompson. But I would rather argue on the statute that on an opinion that I have never heard.

Mr. HAGGART. Does the hon. gentleman say that the British North America Act ranks the judges of the Supreme Court differently from those of the Superior Court?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is a nice question. Of course I do not know the Act by heart, therefore I give my opinion for what it may be worth. The Act provides that we shall have the right to appoint judges of the Supreme Court and that the federal authority has the right to create the Supreme Court. We did create it, and we fixed a term of office. More than that, I am not prepared to say.

Mr. HAGGART. Perhaps, then, my argument was incorrect in regard to the Superior Court. I contended that they could fix a time for the Superior Court judges.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

The PRIME MINISTER. Who were "they?"

Mr. HAGGART. Perhaps there is no written opinion in the matter. But I have heard different Ministers of Justice argue that. I am inclined to the opinion that Sir John Thompson held the idea that it might apply to Superior Court judges.

Mr. INGRAM. I move that the word "seventy-fifth" be struck out and the word "eightieth" be inserted instead, seconded by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule).

Mr. SPROULE. I think this ought to be accepted. If before his eightieth year a judge is incapacitated from performing his duties, he can be retired, and if he is not, it is unreasonable that he should be retired.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think the Government should accept this proposition. I do not see any reason why a man capable of discharging his duties at 75 should be retired.

The PRIME MINISTER. I will tell my hon. friend the reason. If this were applied to judges of the Superior Court in certain parts of the Dominion, not in Ontario but in Quebec where the judges reside, each in his own district and administer justice there, I could understand it. But my hon. friend (Mr. Fitzpatrick) stated a moment ago the reason why this has become absolutely necessary, not because the mental faculties of the judge is impaired, but because his physical powers are not equal to those of a stronger man. He is obliged to go on circuit—

Mr. INGRAM. I beg to say—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

The PRIME MINISTER—and judges of that age are more reluctant to go on circuit than younger men would be. Take a judge whose mental faculties are vigorous at 75 years of age, he is still not able to undergo the same physical exertion as a man at 40 or 50.

Mr. INGRAM. Do I understand the Prime Minister to say that I said that, or did he refer to the Solicitor General?

The PRIME MINISTER. I was answering my hon. friend from Haldimand (Mr. Montague).

Mr. MONTAGUE. I quite understand the strength of the point that the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) makes. But, I am sure, the hon. gentleman knows there are a number of judges in the province of Ontario appointed for an individual county in whose case the physical endurance required is very small indeed. These judges in certain counties have junior judges. I am quite satisfied that, so far as the province of Ontario is concerned, men will be taken from the bench and retired on pensions who are perfectly able both intellectually and physically to do the work required of them.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I know there has been a good deal of discussion upon this point for some years past. But I fear that the clause as it now stands will be opposed to the public interest in some cases. There are judges in my own province—I know one, at least—who will have to retire if this becomes law, and in that gentleman one of the most efficient county court judges we have will be retired simply because he has reached the age of 75.

Therefore, I think that not only would it be hard on the judge himself, but it would be hard on the district that he serves, a very large district. Now, I would make this suggestion it has been proposed to extend the age to 80 years, but I do not approve of that. Let the Government, if it will, lay down the rule that 75 years is the age at which a county court judge is expected to retire, but let the rule only be called into operation by Order in Council, so that in case he still remains efficient he will be allowed to retain his seat. Parliament having now freely given the power to the Government, the law would only be put into force and such judges retired as might be considered no longer able to discharge their duties properly, after reaching the age of 75 years. In that case no judge would be taken from the public service so long as he is able to perform his duties efficiently.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The suggestion made by my hon. friend has some plausibility about it, and at first blush it would appear as if it might be accepted with advantage to the public. But I think the hon. gentleman will see that his suggestion permits the introduction of the very element he wants to exclude, that is, it permits the element of political influence being introduced. The Government, for the time being, might force one man to retire and let another man remain on. It is open to that objection.

Mr. MONTAGUE. This Government is like Cæsar's wife.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Of course, both sides of the House assume that this Government will always do what is right; still, although this Government may be here for a great many years, we are legislating for all time. The other objection to it is that it would affect the independence of the judiciary; they would then be more or less dependent upon the action taken by the executive for the time being. I think my hon. friend will see that whatever age we adopt it is necessary to make the limit an arbitrary one, one under which a judge would be obliged to go out on reaching that age, irrespective of the wish of the executive for the time being.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not know whether it is usual to do it, but I think there ought to be a provision that all the facts with regard to the retirement should be placed before Parliament.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. When it depends exclusively upon age, he goes out as a matter of course.

Mr. TISDALE. I think this would put the judiciary in a position to be suspected, at all events, of being under the control of the Government of the day. It would be unfortunate if the judges were to be put in that position, as it would weaken their influence and reputation.

Amendment (Mr. Ingram) negatived.

Mr. INGRAM moved that all the words after the word "to" in the third line be struck out, and the following be inserted in lieu thereof: "Full pay during the balance of his lifetime."

Mr. SPROULE. I would strongly oppose that, because if you do that—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I consider the amendment would be out of order, because it could only be made upon the recommendation of the Governor General.

Resolution reported, read the second time, concurred in, and referred to committee on Bill (No. 150).

JUDGES OF PROVINCIAL COURTS.

Bill (No. 150) further to amend the Act respecting the Judges of Provincial Courts, was again considered in committee, amended, and reported.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL moved third reading of the Bill.

Mr. ERB. I would ask that the third reading of this Bill be deferred until the Solicitor General has had an opportunity of giving the information that I asked for.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend will have many opportunities, if he so chooses, to bring that question up again, either on motion to go into Supply, or on other occasions. It is important that this Bill should go to the Senate as soon as possible.

Mr. ERB. In that case I withdraw my objection.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time on division, and passed.

MONTREAL HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House resolve itself into committee on Bill (No. 163) to grant further aid to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal.

Mr. FOSTER. I am obliged to occupy a few moments in speaking on the question of the principle upon which the hon. gentleman is proceeding. I think the statement the Minister of Public Works made to the House which was most depended upon to influence hon. members, was, among others, that there was a perfect agreement upon plan 12a, and on the ground of that agreement, the Minister urged the adoption of that portion of this Bill. The objection which I made, and which others made, was as to the condition which the hon. gentleman imports into this loan. He simply says to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal: I have initiated a plan, which consists of two branches; 12a is a plan which has originated from my department, and I have presented it to you; I first put it to you in the shape of a plan called the three piers plan, and then, as modified, it became known as 12a; that 12a plan was assented to and practically agreed to by all the bodies concerned in the harbour commission. Then, in connection with that, the Minister says, in order to do justice to all parties—whatever he may mean by that—he has determined what the Harbour Commissioners never determined, what the Board of Trade never determined, what the other constituents of the harbour commission never determined, that of the loan made to the commission, $750,000 at least be diverted to a project for work in a different part of the city from where the central work is to be carried on, and in carrying through this loan to the Harbour Commissioners he made it an essential condition that this other work should be carried out pari passu together with the plan 12a. It will be well to see what is the other version of that matter. Let me go back a little. In 1867 the new harbour commission was organized under the auspices of Sir George Cartier, upon application for that purpose by the business people of Montreal. They had before that time done a large amount of work in the St. Lawrence. That board was organized at that time and given existence by virtue of Act of Parliament, and the constituency of the harbour commission was made up of appointees of the Government, appointees by the Board of Trade, the Corn Exchange and the shipping interest of Montreal. In the first place, I believe those different interests combined, outside the Government interest, had a majority on the board. Afterwards it was so changed that the Government appointees numbered five, or at least a majority, that being done on the ground that the Government, supplying the funds by way of loan, should have the supervising power. I am satisfied that from the first it never was the intention, nor in 1896, that the Government should do more than approve of the plans which originated with the Harbour Commissioners themselves, who were conversant with the port and who had grown up with the gradual progress of the work. What I complain of at the present time is that the Minister of Public Works, under virtue of that clause, is actually not only withholding his approval of plans which the Harbour Commissioners have approved and declared were the best, but the hon. gentleman has originated plans of his own and forced them on the Harbour Commissioners against their wish and better judgment, and he is now using a very strong leverage in the forcing process by informing the parties that a loan could only be obtained by assenting to the proposals of the Government. I have before me the 55th annual report of the council of the Montreal Board of Trade, and I propose to take up a little time while I read sections culled from that report. I find that Messrs. McLennan and Thompson were the representatives of the board of trade council on the harbour commission. Mr. McLennan went off the board for business reasons, which he explained, and on April 21st, 1897, in a letter to the Board of Trade, he gave a very lucid survey of what had been done by the Board of Harbour Commissioners, and notes especially late developments with respect to the progress of the work. He notes this fact, that as a result of a conference between the Government and the Harbour Commissioners at a certain time, plan No. 6 was agreed upon, and the guard pier, I believe, is part of that plan, and it was almost immediately commenced and carried forward. In 1894, the petition from the harbour commission was placed before the Government, which my hon. friend has read, calling for $2,000,000 for the execution of the plan known as No. 6, calling for $1,000,000 to build an inland basin at such place at the east end as might be found most advantageous, and $1,000,000 to complete the basin at Windmill Point and other portions of the harbour not included in plan No. 6. On receipt of that petition there was a commission appointed by the Government, and it is well to note what the Government commission actually recommended. That was an able commission too. Thomas Monro, Louis Coste and W. P. Anderson were members of it, all of them skilled men in their various departments, and the result of that commission was to recommend:

First, plan No. 6 should be first proceeded with, but, as above shown, the average surplus revenue for the immediate future would not warrant an expenditure of more than $2,000,000, and the plan as originally designed could not be completed for that sum. The guard pier, which is an essential feature of the scheme, should first be completed, but the accommodation which the proposed wharfs will give is proportionately greater than could be handled, in a part of the city where the approaches are congested, and where access by railways must always be difficult; and the undersigned therefore recommend that the Harbour Commissioners be requested to modify that part of plan No. 6 involving the construction of wharfs in such a manner as to give only one-half of the wharf frontage now proposed and, further, that the question of building high level wharfs be considered, as there appears to be little demand for permanent sheds on the wharfs, in consequence of the proximity of the city warehouses.

Bear in mind that that commission recommended, after careful examination, that plan No. 6 be proceeded with, but on account of the lack of funds should be proceeded with in a modified and careful way. The report then goes on to make another reference with regard to the future trade and the necessity of a central location for the purpose of carrying on that trade, where a different kind of business would be done, as the storage of heavy freight, and for lumber, cattle and grain and the like of that. What is the reference of the commission with regard to that. The recommendation is: That this shall be a future work undertaken; that it must be looked forward to, and they make an express recommendation that that part of the work should not be a burden upon the revenues of the harbour commission in order to avoid overloading the port with heavy charges; but that the dock and the facilities which in the future might be constructed there should be at the expense of the Government itself, and not at the expense of the harbour commission. What they say is:

The undersigned consider that in the event of their construction the cost should be borne by the Dominion Government, and the work placed under its control, not because the revenues of the harbour of Montreal should prevent the commissioners from undertaking them, but because the national importance of the trade to be provided for warrants the Government in assuming this as a Dominion work, with a view to preparing for commerce reaching Montreal as a terminal ocean port for transshipment inland; and they respectfully suggest that a thorough survey of the river and shore be made so that the best and cheapest plan can be designed as a preliminary to this work of extension.

I think it important that the House should know just exactly what this commission recommended and the lines on which they recommended it. Mr. David G. Thompson on the 5th January, 1898, he being the representative of the council of the Board of Trade on the harbour commission, also wrote a letter to the Board of Trade, and he makes this statement:

During the summer months a number of plans were discussed by the commissioners, the council of the Board of Trade and the shipping interests, resulting in the adoption of what is known as plan 12a, the construction of said plan to be undertaken by and at the expense of the Government.

I want to emphasize that point as appearing in Mr. Thompson's report to the Board of Trade. This again is from the report of the council of the Board of Trade; on page 16 I read:

And while the Harbour Commissioners have recently approved the three-pier plan known as 12a as a compromise likely to be acceptable to the Government, your council is still of the opinion that the modification of plan No. 6, known as plan No. 19, is the best plan, in that it utilizes the limited space between the entrance to the Lachine Canal and the Victoria pier to the best advantage.

That was the opinion of the council of the Board of Trade, and although at one time they were favourable to a compromise on 12a, they were favourable to it simply under the compulsion of the Government; that is, under the idea they say they had, that that work was to be undertaken by and at the expense of the Dominion Government.

On March 26th a letter was addressed to the Minister of Public Works expressing the council's anxiety that the long-delayed work of harbour improvement here should now be vigorously prosecuted, and intreating the Minister to forthwith give such orders as would ensure the immediate construction of at least one of the piers provided in the plan which formed the basis of an agreement between the Harbour Commissioners and the city corporation, and had been sanctioned by Order in Council and by Parliament.

That was plan No. 6. At the conclusion of that meeting at the request of several members a deputation was sent to Ottawa and they waited upon the Minister of Public Works, and the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries; and the Minister of Public Works replied:

That he was not prepared to accept the plan submitted (that is, plan No. 6), that he would have a plan prepared in his own department, and would shortly come to Montreal and discuss it with your council.

Then a special general meeting of the board was held on the 13th of May, 1897, to elect a harbour commissioner, and the following resolution was passed:—

That the members of the Montreal Board of Trade hereby respectfully urge on the harbour commission and the Government the immediate and energetic pushing forward of the harbour improvements as previously confirmed by this board, and known as plan No. 6; and they express the hope that no interference in the direction of an alteration of that plan will come from the Government that may delay the giving to the port of the much-needed improvements.

Still, the council of the Board of Trade adheres to plan No. 6. On the 19th of May the question of harbour improvements was considered with the following gentlemen present. Hugh McLennan, Edgar Judge, President of the Corn Exchange Association, Hugh A. Allan, Robert Reford, Thomas Harling, H. G. Johnston, and D. A. Watt. The report goes on:

A deputation went to Ottawa, and this deputation met the Cabinet on the 26th of May, and presented a memorial urging that the Government would not place any restriction on the Harbour Commissioners that would hinder them from speedily and energetically going on with the work of central harbour improvement, and that no portion of the harbour revenue, whether derived from regular income or the proceeds of bonds, should be permitted to be diverted to other works in other parts of the harbour until the completion of that work.

The report says further :

Hon. Mr. Tarte, in reply, expressed his desire to provide further accommodation for the greatly increased trade which he believed Montreal would enjoy in the future, but he emphatically declined to proceed with the work under present financial arrangements, as the revenue of the harbour would, in his opinion, be insufficient to provide for the cost thereof.

Now, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte) thinks that the revenues of the harbour commission will be sufficient not only to provide "the cost thereof" of plan No. 6, but the cost of $750,000 for a dock besides. The report says :

Informal interviews obtained with the members of the Government by the members of the deputation, left the impression that the plan would not be carried out without considerable alteration to meet the Minister's views, but that the Government was disposed to spend a considerable sum of money in connection with harbour works at this port.

This is an important point.

A few days subsequent to that interview a plan emanating from the Department of Public Works, was received through Alderman Préfontaine, M.P., who intimated that if approved the Government was willing to assume the cost of the works it provided for.

That was the hon. gentleman's three-pier plan.

That plan, which is now known as the Hon. Mr. Tarte's three-pier plan, was submitted at a conference meeting of the council, the Corn Exchange committee of management and the shipping interest, held on the 31st of May. While it was evident that the four-pier plan was preferred to the three-pier plan submitted, the meeting, being desirous to avoid opposing the Minister, adopted a resolution approving the carrying out of the three-pier plan, with a lengthening of the piers, provided this work was done at the cost of the Dominion Government, the resolution also urging that the Government should relieve the trade of the Dominion by making Montreal a free port. That resolution was presented to the Minister of Public Works at Ottawa on the 1st June by a deputation of the council and the shipping interest, which explained the modifications they desired to the three-pier plan, which modifications were promised by the Minister.

These modifications were subsequently made, and the plan became known as the 12a plan. The important point of that is this, that the unanimity of the different bodies on the 12a plan was brought about by Mr. Préfontaine's suggestion and by the intimations which they had from certain members of the Government, that if this were agreed to as a compromise, the Government would stand the expenditure. It was by that bait, and under that compulsion that the different interests agreed to the compromise. Well, Sir, what do we find next? We find next a petition to the Governor General in Council dated the 7th of June, 1897, in which among other things, the council of the Board of Trade pray :

Your petitioners humbly pray Your Excellency in Council that the Dominion Government will undertake and energetically prosecute such works in the central portion of the harbour as will provide the increased wharfage accommodation so urgently needed, and also construct at some convenient point dry dock facilities, in order that the port may be enabled to handle the greatly increased trade that is looked for in the near future ; and your petitioners further pray that, considering the national character and importance of such works, and the need for cheapened transportation and terminal charges, your Government will assume their entire cost, and also keep in view the necessity of making Montreal a free port at an early date.

Well, Sir, the negotiations went on until at last the Minister's 12a plan came out, with the proposition such as is presented to us to-day. The report goes on to say :

The council was greatly disappointed at the outcome of this interview, for it had been given to understand informally that the Government would assume the cost of the new works, and, for that reason, as before stated, the council had accepted the Minister's three-pier plan, although not entirely approving it.

Then they took another step. They got another meeting of the council, the Corn Exchange Committee of Management and the shipping interest, and they passed a resolution approving plan No. 19, which was plan No. 6 altered ; so that all these three bodies were thus, with the Harbour Commissioners, agreed in favour of that plan, when they found that the Government were not proposing to shoulder the cost. On the 11th October, the council was represented at a conference meeting held at the Harbour Commissioner's office attended by the delegates from the different constituencies of the harbour commission, and also by the Premier, the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Agriculture. Of that interview, the report says :

The proceedings on that occasion were very unsatisfactory, for while the delegates from this board, the Corn Exchange Association and the ocean shipping interest supported plan No. 19, La Chambre de Commerce and the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company endorsed the Minister's three-pier plan, so that an aspect of division was presented which did not really exist among those most concerned. At council meeting of 3rd November, another plan was submitted, being a four-pier plan sent to the council by the Minister.

Whatever else may be said, the Minister is most prolific in plans.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I did not send that plan.

Mr. FOSTER :

But as the piers thereon were short, and placed at such an angle as would render impossible their lengthening in future, it was not approved.

Then, on the 15th of November, the commissioners adopted this further and final resolution :

Resolved, 1st. That plan No. 12a, now submitted, drawn up by the commissioners' chief engineer, at the direction of the president of the board (being a modification of the three-pier plan of 21st July, submitted by the Government), which said plan No. 12a the president expects will be approved by the Minister of Public Works, is hereby accepted and approved by this board, it being understood that no portion of the cost of carrying out the said plan will be borne by the Harbour Commissioners (that is, that the cost will be borne by the Government), and that the plan be on the high level.

2nd. That a copy of said plan and this resolution be sent by the secretary to the Department of Public Works at Ottawa for the information of the Minister of Public Works.

The report of the Board of Trade continues :

In communicating this resolution the Harbour Commissioners said that the plan was known as plan No. 12a, and was a compromise prepared by the harbour engineer under the chairman's instructions upon the line of the Hon. Mr. Tarte's three-pier plan.

It will be seen from the foregoing résumé that your council made, in the first place, as instructed by your board, strenuous efforts to obtain the prosecution by the Dominion Government of plan No. 6a. When this was found impossible, the plan of the Government engineer (modified as to length of piers) was accepted on the condition that the Government would defray the cost of the works therein provided ; and finally, failing to obtain any definite assurance that the Government would assume the cost of carrying out the plan it favoured, the council, with the other interests most concerned, agreed upon a plan (No. 19), which, in their estimation, provides the largest possible amount of accommodation in the harbour where it is most needed.

Your council deeply regrets the meagre and unsatisfactory result obtained after the expenditure of so much labour and time upon this important matter. In all its negotiations and efforts, the council has striven to meet the conflicting views of the shipping interest and the Minister of Public Works, with a sincere desire to see a commencement of the important work of harbour improvement, even if such were confined at first to one or two new piers.

I think I have read sufficient to show the position of these gentlemen, who are characterized by the Minister of Public Works before this House as men working from prejudiced and narrow, selfish interests. It is impossible to say that an important body like the Board of Works of the city of Montreal is a clique, or is acting simply from prejudice, in view of the fact that their opinion is coincided in by the Corn Exchange and the shipping interest almost unanimously. Now, Sir, it appears from these representations that the unanimity as to plan 12a which the hon. gentleman talked so much about, is a unanimity which was purchased by a promise conveyed by Mr. Préfontaine and others, and understood as such by the harbour commission and all the other bodies, that if plan 12a were accepted as a compromise, the Government would provide the money and carry out these works at their own expense. But what these bodies do protest against is this, that you shall give them this loan, for which they shall pay you a rate of interest greater than the rate you get your money for, and be responsible for it out of the harbour revenues, and make it an indispensable condition of their using that money and getting the needed central improvements, that they shall build what they do not want to build at the present time, and what they say the harbour revenues will not support at the present time, namely, this $750,000 improvement in the other part of the city. I do not believe it was ever intended, so long as there was a harbour commission, and so long as it simply borrowed the money from the Government, or got it elsewhere, that the Government supervision was ever to be more than to see that the money was expended for harbour improvements. If a plan that was submitted by the Harbour Commissioners was shown by expert testimony to be unsuitable, the Government could withhold its approval. But the Government went beyond that. The Minister of Public Works submitted plan after plan to the Harbour Commissioners and ultimately compelled them to take his plan or nothing. What Montreal is suffering for is not the extension work, the dock and the like of that in the eastern part of the city. What it wants is that if the Government is going to give it a loan, that it shall let this 12a plan or 19 plan and go on with that even though the other waited for a time, if the Government did not feel disposed to take that other part up themselves and provide their own money for it. This House must acknowledge that it is not simply a little clique of nobodies in the city of Montreal, who are actuated by most selfish motives and mere prejudices, that is pursuing this plan of improvements in contradistinction to the plan proposed by my hon. friend. They are men who have grown up with the city, who have immense business interests in the city, who have money involved in the city's progress, and consistently take this line and urge it. The only reason why they have compromised even to the extent of 12a plan is because of the inducement held out to them that if they compromised on that, the Government would be at the expense of the improvements, which the Government now do not propose to do. Consequently, their argument is that you refuse us the needed improvements, unless we carry on what we consider is not pressing at present. You make us pay for the whole of it out of the revenue of the port, and by this additional work you impose on us, you will overburden the revenues of the port and make it a dear instead of a cheap port. The Montreal "Witness" returns to its position with reference to this matter. The Montreal "Gazette" has very strong articles from men who are not nobodies. I am quite sure, on the same line, and it might not be uninteresting to the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce to read the "Witness" further—not an anonymous article but an editorial:

Two or three years ago, who would have assaulted a Government so effectively as Sir Richard Cartwright had it proposed at the fag end of a session to force a loan of $750,000 upon an unwilling commercial community, to be spent upon a project which has never been designed, the cost of which has never been estimated carefully by engineers, the desirability of which in the form proposed is denied by the very commercial interests which it is supposed to serve, against which the Board of Trade, the Corn Exchange and the shipping interests have all publicly protested? The men who favour this scheme are two politicians, Messrs. Tarte and Préfontaine, interested in the vote of the constituency in which the expenditure is to be made. Who, two years ago, would have opposed such a project brought forward in such a manner so strongly as Sir Richard Cartwright? Why does he pretend to treat with scorn and to insinuate slander against those who oppose such a scheme and methods now? Is it because he is a member of the Government which now does these things, because he is a colleague of the Minister who forces such methods upon the Government, because, in other words, he is in office? The responsibility of the "Witness" for its utterances is an individual and it just as gravely realizes the responsibility of the utterances of Sir Richard Cartwright, and his insinuations of animosity against the editorial articles of this paper are unworthy of Sir Richard Cartwright.

My hon. friend on the other side and the Postmaster General, in the most approved ante bellum style—a style he seldom puts on now, but in which he used to indulge, when flinging insinuations across the floor, with great freedom, that he never dared to back—now wants cowardly villains on our side of the House, who read newspaper articles to inform the members, to have the courage of their convictions and make charges. Is he looking for charges? Has it come to this that current public opinion must not be read before this House and enter as a factor into the decisions we make? We are not legislating for the localities in which we live, and we need to learn the views of those deeply interested, and whose interests are voiced by the public prints in those communities; and it is part of the duty of public men to bring the voice of the outside public, as represented in the public prints, into the discussions in this House, on the necessity or feasibility of any scheme submitted to us. It surely is not against good parliamentary methods that we should bring public opinion to bear on our deliberations; and it does not follow that because I read an editorial and responsible article I am making an insinuation or charge. I read it for the information of the legislating body, so that they may know that there is also this shade of public opinion in contradistinction to the phase of public opinion which the hon. gentleman gives in support of his scheme.

If we were the Government and on that side of the House and we had endeavoured to bring in a thing like this at the fag end of the session, not only Sir Richard Cartwright and the Postmaster General, but every man who is now a Minister and had then a seat in this House, would have hurled his strongest and deepest invective against us, and rightly too. It is next to politically indecent that at this time of the session we should be asked to vote $2,000,000 for any purpose on which a state of divided opinion is shown by the public press in the very locality interested. I appeal to my hon. friend: You have secured by methods which are not of the best, an agreement on plan 12a; you will get your interest on the amount; the harbour of Montreal has paid every dollar it ever owed the Government and has expended money of its own in cases where, in other localities and in less important matters, the Government has made the expenditure, the Montreal Harbour Commissioners are not beggars but men who pay their way as they go; when you give your money you get good interest from them—therefore, do not put upon them this absolute condition compelling them to carry out a pet scheme of your own, which, to say the least, has very strong opponents amongst the commercial classes, whom this loan is intended presumably to benefit. It is better to drop that for a year at least, and give to the commission the power to go on and expend upon the 12a plan, which is admitted useful and urgent, and take away from them this arbitrary and unwise condition of making them responsible for a work in the east end of which they would have to shoulder the expense. As regards the charge of corruption or the like, I will put one thing straight to my hon. friend. Will he deny that there is a large and influential speculative interest in this matter, which is following this with the keenest eye, which is backing with the strongest arguments, which is pulling every political wire which can be pulled. Will he deny it?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Let the hon. gentleman go, and I will answer the question when he is through.

Mr. FOSTER. Will he deny that when the Government comes down, and in advance of having a single plan, a single estimate, a single preparation made by which they can tell us the cost of expropriating the land, the cost of getting all that is necessary whereon to build, the cost of building—will he deny that when they come down and say that they are going to make it incumbent upon the Harbour Commissioners to put a dock and wharfs and the like in a certain part of the city, they are not taking the very best plan possible to make speculation rife in that part of the city. These two things are undoubted. Now, my hon. friend may feel as hardly with reference to myself and others as he chooses. I say there is this speculative element which might well be called a selfish interest, which will be immensely benefited if these works go on in that part of the city, and that the whole influence of this element is pulling for these works. Put with that the fact that the commercial interests, as represented by these bodies that I have mentioned here who are opposed to it. Take, in conjunction with that further fact that these dry docks and graving docks in other parts of the country have been built by the Government out of Government funds.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). There is an exception to that—the dry dock of Halifax.

Mr. FOSTER. It costs this country $10,000 every year.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The citizens of Halifax had to contribute $10,000 a year for twenty years. The Government of Canada contributed the smallest part of the subsidy.

Mr. FOSTER. But the Government contributes $10,000 each year for the graving dock, has done so for years past, and will do so for years to come.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It has been said and repeated that the Government of Canada builds these dry docks elsewhere.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) is wrong if he says that I said these Governments built these docks elsewhere.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) said so this moment.

Mr. FOSTER. No. If the hon. gentleman refers to the speech, he will find that I named the cases—the dock at Kingston, the dock at Quebec, and I think I mentioned the dock at Victoria built by the Government. I knew quite well, for I happened to be in the Government at the time, and this transaction went through my own department, that under the Act a company had built the Halifax dock, and that the Government of the Dominion was paying a large sum of money each year toward its support.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Will my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) allow me? Does he say that the dock at Victoria was built by the Dominion Government?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. As a whole?

Mr. FOSTER. No, not as a whole. The British Government, on certain conditions and for certain reasons, helped and assisted in completing that dock, but the major part of it was built by the Dominion of Canada, and it is a Government work—that is what I am speaking about. The city of Montreal has actually shouldered the expenditure which in other sections of the Dominion has been done by the Government entirely. It would be a slight thing for this Government—and if the proposition were made I do not think it would encounter any opposition worth speaking of—after all that has been done by the city of Montreal, and having regard to its national character, to construct such a work with its own funds if it be necessary. The cardinal objection of the commercial men of Montreal is that this is forced upon them against their will, and it is a matter which, if carried out at all, ought, in justice and fairness, to be carried out by the Dominion Government. I am sorry to have been obliged to take so much time, but I thought it important that what I consider to be the views of these great commercial bodies should be laid before this House.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am glad that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has brought this question up again, because it affords me an opportunity to answer some arguments which have been used elsewhere, and which he has repeated here. There are in Montreal a certain number of people who believe there is no necessity whatever for any other improvements; and knowing the position as I do, I do not hesitate to say that the opposition that is manifested to-day comes from this very quarter—from men who shelter themselves under one pretext or another, but who, in the bottom of their hearts, do not want any improvements in the port of Montreal. And the best evidence of the truth of what I say is that plan No. 6, though approved in 1890, has never been carried out, and these men have been the real masters of the harbour of Montreal during that time. These gentlemen do not realize that there has been a change. They believe that they are still masters, that the same Government over which they had such influence is in power. They are making a mistake; there is no doubt about that. I have a great deal of respect for these gentlemen as commercial men; but I cannot forget two things—first, that these gentlemen are foremost political opponents of ours, nearly every one of them, and, second—a thing upon which I will speak my mind freely on the floor of Parliament—these gentlemen, as Harbour Commissioners, came to the Department of Public Works in 1890, and asked to be authorized to carry out what is currently called plan No. 6. Now, I call the attention of every hon. member to this fact, that instead of carrying out plan No. 6, Messrs. McLennan, Thompson and Ogilvie have simply built, with the funds of the harbour commission, the Windmill basin in their own personal interest. Everybody in Montreal knows that. I hope every hon. gentleman pays attention to what I say, the ex-Finance Minister especially. I say that the Harbour Commissioners applied to be authorized to carry out plan No. 6, and, instead of carrying out that plan, these gentlemen simply built out of the harbour commission funds the Windmill basin, which basin, I say it again, when it is completed will cost one million dollars—and they dare to speak of speculation. Let any member of the House come to Montreal to-morrow, and he will find that the Windmill basin has been built simply with the object of digging a canal in the interest of Messrs. Ogilvie and McLennan. These men were members of the harbour commission. Mr. Thompson is still a member. They are fighting the battles of the past. As I said, there has been a change, and this Government is bound to no clique and to no personal interest. I found plan No. 6, approved in 1890, unfulfilled, not executed. I found, more than that, that the harbour commission themselves, in applying later on for help from this Government, went back on this same plan No. 6. I have in my hand a petition forwarded by them in 1894, in which I find the declaration that since the arrangement was made to carry out plan No. 6, which had received the formal sanction of the Government, the conditions and requirements of the trade had changed, and that an inland basin and enlarged dock facilities were necessary. So, in 1894, as we see, these gentlemen recognized the fact that conditions had changed.

What were they asking? Let the ex-Minister of Finance follow me closely here. What were they asking in 1894? The amount of money necessary to carry out plan No. 6, and at the same time to build an inland basin in the eastern part of Montreal. The same men who were then pressing the Government to give the money for that project, come to us now and say they don't want any improvement in the eastern part of Montreal. The very same men who were then asking for one million dollars do not want anything to-day. Why? Because they have other plans for their own personal purposes, and because they do not want any other part of the city to have any improvements. Well, Sir, I am here to protest against the selfishness of those men, I am here to protest against the selfishness of some of those men in Montreal who think that the whole trade of this broad Dominion can be accommodated in 3,600 feet of harbour. My hon. friend has gone over all the phases of the long struggle which has taken place in regard to those harbour improvements. It appears that since 1890 those men have been steadily opposing any improvement which was not made in their own personal interest. Plan No. 6 has not been carried out. The harbour of Montreal is one of the worst equipped ports in the world, and yet they would like us to stand still. Plan No. 12, which has been adopted, which has been forwarded to me, is the result of long negotiations.

Mr. TARTE.

When I took office I soon discovered that plan No. 6 would not be accepted. As a matter of fact, I do not know in Montreal and business men who would stand by that plan now. This plan, I say, was the result of compromise, of negotiations. I met the Harbour Commissioners and the members of the Board of Trade at the last important conference that took place in Montreal in the month of November. The right hon. the Prime Minister was kind enough to come to Montreal, and my colleague the Minister of Agriculture also accompanied us. What took place that day? All the representative men were present. Mr. Thompson was there, Mr. McLennan was there; and the result of the conference was the adoption of a motion, unanimously carried, accepting this plan 12a, and asking me to build two piers, to begin with two wharfs. As a matter of fact, I do not hesitate to say that this plan No. 12a is the result of all the conferences that took place. Of course, those who do not want any improvement, will oppose any plan, they will oppose plan No. 12. Having failed to carry their plan No. 6, they will oppose any other plan. But we are not bound to stand idle when we see the trade coming down to our port. My hon. friend is under a great misapprehension if he thinks that it has been intimated to the Harbour Commissioners that if they accepted this plan No. 12 it would be constructed out of the public funds. Why should any member of this Government take such a position? Plan No. 12a is less expensive than plan No. 6. Those gentlemen were ready, as they said in 1894, to have plan No. 6 constructed with the funds of the Harbour Commissioners. Here is a plan which is much less expensive. Trade has vastly increased. Why should we ask the people of Canada to assume the burden of carrying out this plan at the public expense? Does my hon. friend advocate such a policy? I am sure he will not. But, Sir, I am very much surprised to hear my hon. friend say: Well, you are simply loading Montreal with the interest on that sum of money. The harbour of Montreal does not belong to anybody in the city of Montreal, to a few people who live in that city; the harbour of Montreal belongs to this great Dominion. It is the trade of Canada which pays the interest on every cent which is spent there. I do not see why half a dozen men should have the right to dictate to this Parliament what we shall do. I am always ready to listen to representations made to us by business men of standing; but when we are threatened, when we are told that we must do this and we must not do that, there I draw the line. I say that the improvements in the eastern part of the harbour of Montreal are just as important as those in the centre of the harbour. What we are aiming at is to carry out a plan which will give satisfaction to all parties concerned, and which will give the needed accommodation to trade. If my hon. friend would consider the great increase of the grain trade, he would not take the position he takes to-day. He knows the harbour of Montreal, I hope. Is he in a position to rise in his place and say that permanent grain elevators could be erected in the centre of the harbour? There is no man who can say that. I am sorry the hon. senior member for Ottawa (Mr. Hutchison) is not in his place. He has an interest in the Prescott elevator, and he has represented to me time and again that we should build in the eastern part of the city wharfs on which, or near which, elevators could be erected. Wharfs built in the centre of the city will be of great importance, and will be very useful; but I say that if we want accommodation for the grain trade and we expect next year to ship 100 million bushels of grain from Montreal, we must necessarily equip the eastern part of the city. But I am told that we are loading the port of Montreal with a debt she will not be able to pay. I am surprised to hear such language. The harbour of Montreal has always had a pretty large revenue, although I am bound to say there is no corporation which has been administered in a more loose way than the port of Montreal. Since the new commissioners took office, they have decreased the expenditure; but all those who know the state of affairs, are justified in saying that $20,000 or $25,000 a year could be saved by making reforms. Moreover, is it not a fact that the trade is increasing every year? Those works are not going to be executed all in a day, it will take two or three years to complete them; but when those works are completed, if the trade is not increased to such an extent that the revenues of the harbour will be sufficient to pay the increased expenditure, I shall be very much surprised indeed. Now, Sir, a good deal has been said because in the Bill there is a condition providing that a dry dock shall be built. I read to the House two or three days ago, the petitions that were sent to the Government for many years back insisting on the urgent necessity of building a dry dock in Montreal. Well, that dry dock, I make this prophecy, will be the best paying business of the whole harbour of Montreal. We have a dry dock in Lévis, and in looking at the result of its operations last year, I find that my department has realized a revenue of $6,000 a year over and above expenditure. I do not see why a dry dock located in the port of Montreal should not more than pay its expenses. My hon. friend the ex-Minister of Finance has insisted very strongly that there is a large speculative interest which is waiting the result of this Bill. Montreal is a city where large speculation is carried on, there is no doubt about that. There is speculation in both the east and west end of the city. The virtuous commercial gentlemen who caused Windmill basin to be constructed in their personal interest, at a cost of over $1,000,000, had the element of speculation in them. There will not be an inch of land bought for carrying out the work in the east end of the city from a syndicate, consisting of men of both political parties.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not say there was.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There was an insinuation.

Mr. FOSTER. I neither said it nor insinuated it. I suppose the quantity of land required is not more than sixteen or seventeen acres. The purchase of that small quantity of land from the syndicate is not what the syndicate is after; it is the appreciation of property in the vicinity of these public works there.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. According to that argument, because some men, of both political parties, bought property there ten years ago, there should never be any improvement in that part of the city. That is a fine argument, that is a broad argument for the hon. gentleman opposite to use. If the hon. gentleman would do me the pleasure of visiting the harbour of Montreal after the session, I prophesy that when he returns he will be of my own opinion. Where would the hon. gentleman establish grain elevators except in the eastern part of the harbour? There is no other locality suitable. Then the hon. gentleman would not have us compete for the grain trade because fifteen years ago half a dozen individuals bought property there. Is it reasonable to present such an argument before Parliament?

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

IN COMMITTEE.

Bill (No. 99) to incorporate the Lake Champlain and River St. Lawrence Ship Canal Company.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 118) to incorporate the Dawson City Electric Railway and Tramway Company.—(Mr. Morrison.)

DAWSON CITY ELECTRIC COMPANY.

The House resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 123) respecting the Dawson City Electric Company, Limited.—(Mr. Morrison.)

(In the Committee.)

On section 8,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I called the attention of the committee, when the other Bill was under consideration, to the fact that it gave power to construct tramways within a radius of fifteen miles of Dawson City, without any limitation other than the Governor in Council might impose. On my objection to that provision, it was struck out. I have the same objection to the similar clause in this Bill, which is perhaps open to more serious objection than the other, inasmuch as the other authorized the construction of only one tramway, while this authorizes the construction of an unlimited number within a radius of fifty miles. I move that this clause be struck out. This company is obtaining large powers. There is no provision at all in the Bill under which any of the provisions of the Railway Act can apply.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). Yes, there is.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There was not in the Bill as I saw it. The powers of this company are very large. It has the power to sell electric light and electric power, and to construct telegraph and telephone lines, and I think it is rather making a farce of this thing to invest the company with the additional power of building railways and tramways wherever they choose. I think we ought not to pass legislation in this way. To test the sense of the committee, I move that this clause be struck out.

Mr. MORRISON. With the greatest respect, I submit that the clause is perfectly safeguarded. As a condition precedent to commencing the construction of any tramway, the company must have the consent of the Governor in Council. Then, if the consent of the Governor in Council is granted, subsection 2 provides that the company shall not commence the construction of any such line of tramway until the proposed route shall have been approved by the Governor in Council. When the section is safeguarded in that way, I cannot see what possible objection there is to it. With all due respect to the hon. Minister, I think it is rather hard to have an amendment introduced in this Bill, after it has run the gauntlet of the two committees. If the amendment had been proposed in committee, the promoters would have been prepared to meet it, but I submit that it ought not to be pressed now. The power to build tramways is sufficiently hedged in by other conditions in the Bill and the public sufficiently protected, and there is no question that Dawson is a growing city and that a tramway there will shortly be an absolute necessity.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Before the hon. Minister presses his motion, I would point out to him that the object of the Bill which has just passed through committee was electric lighting, and in that Bill there was a clause providing for an electric tramway; but the main object of this Bill is electric tramways, which is quite a different thing.

Mr. BLAIR.

While it has, in certain cases, power to build electric works as well, its principal object is electric tramways.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that the objection to both these Bills is simply this. While the approval of the Governor in Council must be had before the road can be built, His Excellency in Council will have to keep in view the fact that law was passed for the purpose of giving the company the right to build.

Mr. MORRISON. Let me read the amendment—"with the consent of the Governor in Council first had and obtained, and subject to such regulations and restrictions as he imposes and directs, and so that the navigation of such rivers and streams and creeks shall not thereby be injuriously interrupted."

Mr. SPROULE. That is what I say—subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, but he must always keep in view that this law contemplates the right to build.

Mr. MORRISON. What objection is there to building a tramway in Dawson City?

Mr. SPROULE. Taking this Bill and the other together, it seems to me that any company holding them both can control the electric lighting, tramway building and all the water powers around that city and leave it practically impossible for any one to compete with them in these lines of business.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. While the other Bill was under consideration, I pointed out the same objections and made a motion that the sub-clause which authorized the construction of tramways should be struck out, and I have no doubt that was done. The same reason which led the committee to follow that course in the other Bill would make it imperative on us to strike this power out of the present Bill. I know it appears very ungracious to oppose the hon. gentleman's Bill, but I feel that I am not opposing it as respects its general purposes. It is not entitled a Bill to incorporate a company for the construction of tramways, but simply an electric company Bill. The railway comes in apparently as a subordinate matter. I did feel that when the clause was struck out of the other Bill, there ought to be hesitation in striking it out of this. By and by, after things have taken more definite shape in Dawson City, after it shall have had municipal organization and the people have had a chance to make up their minds as to what they want, it will be time to incorporate tramway companies, and subject them to some sort of regulations, and know what we are doing. We do not now. This may turn out to be a great mistake. While I do not feel like pressing the motion, I do submit to my hon. friend whether it is not only reasonable and fair that the power which was excluded from the other company should also be excluded from this.

Mr. MORRISON. Of course, it is no personal concern of mine, but I contend the power should not have been struck out in the other. As my hon. friend from Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) has stated, the substance of the other, in any case, is electric lighting particularly, but the main object of this is to build a tramway. You will take the life out of the whole Bill if you take out the tramway power. Transmission by tramway is as essential there as light by electricity, and I submit that this clause should not be struck out through the fear of some remote contingency. There could be no harm done by passing the clause, as it is hedged around by so many restrictions that the Government have the thing entirely in their own hands.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We do not know anything about it.

Mr. MORRISON. We ought to get the benefit of the doubt when our object is to benefit the country. I cannot see where there is any public interest invaded or principle violated, and I would therefore respectfully suggest to the Minister not to press this motion.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The whole matter is subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, and it seems to me it is in the hon. gentleman's own hands, and no doubt he would be very careful.

Mr. SPROULE. It must be remembered that it is subject to the approval of the Governor General in Council, but on the assumption that the railway is to be built. All that the Governor in Council can do is to put on such restrictions as he sees fit. If he were to say that in his judgment the railway should not be built, its promoters would contend that Parliament had already decided that question. I thought the principle was wrong when it was before the committee, and I think it is wrong now that it is before the House.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think that the view which was presented by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) is really the sound view. The question is whether power conferred and made subject to the consent of the Governor in Council does not indicate the intention of Parliament to be that the powers shall be exercised, and that the only question for the Governor in Council to consider is which is the preferable mode of exercising that power—that the Governor in Council is only intended to have the power of regulation. Under such a section the Governor in Council could not properly refuse to act upon the ground that the power ought never to have been conferred. It places upon the Governor in Council a responsibility which I do not think there is any great anxiety to assume. I am sure, as Minister who, under present arrangements, will be more largely charged with responsibility in this regard, I shall be very sorry to be called upon to exercise such responsibility. However, Mr. Chairman, as my view does not seem to find favour with the committee I have no wish to force it upon hon. members, and I have no desire to press my amendment.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I think that the committee ought to act consistently. I have no preconceived or determined opposition to this clause whatever. But a Bill came before the House last Friday, I think, to incorporate the Dawson City Electric Lighting and Tramway Company, having a similar provision in it and almost similar powers as is given under a previous clause in this Bill with regard to tramway construction. But the committee struck out a similar clause to this, and here we pass a similar Bill leaving it in. If that is to be done, I think the clause in the other Bill ought to be reinstated.

Mr. SPROULE. I think that it ought to be struck out in this.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Do you not think that you ought to have the same in both?

Mr. TISDALE. Do I understand the hon. member to wish that they shall not have the power to build an electric railway?

Mr. MORRISON. The Minister of Railways does not press his objection.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Does the hon. promoter of the Bill (Mr. Morrison) remember if I was right in saying a clause similar to this was struck out of the other Bill?

Mr. MORRISON. Not the subsection. The subsection was passed, but the original clause was taken away. They have not the power to build tramways.

An hon. MEMBER. Then this should be struck out.

Mr. MORRISON. I think the better way would be to pass this, and reinstate it in the other one.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My view is different from that of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. In my opinion the clause should not be in either Bill. It is rather unreasonable that we should set up two companies with unlimited powers to build tramways wherever they please in that locality.

Mr. FOSTER. Although the Minister feels that way so strongly, he says: If you do not like my amendment, I will withdraw it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I feel just as strongly as before. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) cannot fail to observe that I do not find very much support. I do not think at all that I should carry the whole responsibility in this thing.

On section 10,

Mr. HAGGART. Is there any clause which allows them to build on property belonging to the Crown? Because if it is only an empowering Act, it is of no use except under the consent of the Government, for they cannot expropriate against the Crown, and if I am well informed all that land belongs to the Crown.

Mr. SPROULE. Before the Bill is reported, I wish to say one word with regard to it, which will apply to the other as well. It is much to be regretted that hon. members having such Bills on the Order paper should allow them to remain until the dying days of the session, so that they go through without that careful watching and consideration which we usually give to Bills that are passed through this House earlier in the session. Nearly one-half of the members have now gone home, and the rest of us are anxious to get away as early as possible, therefore, the business of the House is rushed through with much greater haste than is the case earlier in the session. The hon. member who is promoting this Bill has had this and the other Bill on the paper since early in the session. What reason was there in keeping them back until this late date?

An hon. MEMBER. To rush the business.

Mr. SPROULE. No, because when they were called they were held back by the promoter, not by the Government. Suspicion naturally attaches to these Bills when they are brought forward in the dying days of the session.

Mr. MORRISON. It is not our fault that they were held over repeatedly. That Bill ought to have been considered some time ago.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

ALBERTA AND YUKON RAILWAY, NAVIGATION AND MINING COMPANY.

The House resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 124)—from the Senate—incorporating the Alberta and Yukon Railway, Navigation and Mining Company.—(Mr. Casey.)

(In the Committee.)

On section 8,

Mr. FOSTER. If ever there was an omnibus Bill, this is one. There is no power under heaven nor on earth that this Bill does not ask for and does not get.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. CASEY. It was understood in the Railway Committee that very special powers should be given to all railways operating in these totally new countries for bringing in and supplying their men and all that sort of thing. These powers have been given to every railway operating in those parts, and it was agreed by the Minister of Railway and Canals and everybody else that these powers should be left in, since they have been given to other companies.

Mr. FOSTER. The powers given in this Bill are enormous. In the first place the Bill is remarkably bold in its title, the title claims three separate and distinct fields of work. It is to be a railway company, a navigation company, and a mining company, you combine three great lines of operation. Now, when you come to the powers they have, those powers are excessive. It has power to construct, equip, acquire, charter, navigate and dispose of steam and other vessels upon rivers. It is not a navigation company simply, it is a ship-building company, it is a steamer-building company. It has power to construct, to equip, to acquire, to charter, to navigate, to dispose of steam and other vessels upon rivers, lakes and streams, in territory served by said railway or tributary thereto, or connecting therewith, and upon the inland waters of the North-west Territories and British Columbia. It is not confined to the Yukon.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman evidently did not catch my explanation. The railway is chartered only to run from the international boundary as far north as the Saskatchewan.

Mr. FOSTER. I find the company may :

(a) Construct, equip, acquire, charter, navigate and dispose of steam and other vessels upon the rivers, lakes and streams in the territory served by the said railway or tributary thereto, or connecting therewith, and upon other inland waters of the North-west Territories and British Columbia connecting therewith or adjacent to the proposed line of railway, and may carry on generally the business of transportation in connection with the said railway and vessels.

Mr. CASEY. There is no navigation available on the route of the railway.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not like a mining company, which has to go to work and get capital subscribed and pay $1,000 to the British Columbia treasury, but the company simply comes here and pays the parliamentary fees.

In the Bill the company seeks power to :

(b) acquire and work mines, mineral and mining rights in British Columbia and the North-west Territories, and crush, smelt, reduce and amalgamate ore to render marketable the produce, and may develop such mines, and crush, smelt, reduce and amalgamate the ores and products of any mines, whether belonging to the company or not.

So it is a general smelting company, not, however, for its own ores, but for any ores—it seeks powers to do work for the world. It is to :

(c) Construct, or aid in, and subscribe towards the construction, maintenance and improvement of roads,—

It is a road-building company. But it has also the right to build :

—tramways, docks, piers, wharfs, viaducts, aqueducts, flumes, ditches, quartz-mills, ore-houses, smelters, saw-mills and other buildings and works which are necessary or convenient for the purposes of the company.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Bill has been very materially amended.

Mr. FOSTER. It has not been amended. Not satisfied with being a general railway company, the incorporators also desire to be a general navigation company, a mining company, a ship-building company, and a smelting company. It also seeks to :

(d) Erect, use and manage works, machinery and plant for the generation and distribution of electric power and energy.

For the purposes in the title of the Bill? No, for all purposes. The company seeks power to :

(e) Acquire and utilize water and steam power for the purpose of compressing air or generating electricity for lighting, heating and motor purposes in connection with the railways, vessels and works of the company, and may also sell or otherwise dispose of surplus electricity or other power generated by the company's works and not required for operating its railway or other works.

Here are further powers asked to :

(f) Carry on in the province of British Columbia, and in the North-west Territories, the business of carriers, forwarders and transportation agents, and all other business incident thereto or connected therewith.

They may also take up —the business of wharfingers, shippers and vessel owners ; and may, for all or any of the said purposes, purchase, hold, lease or otherwise acquire timber, lands, buildings, docks, works, boats, vessels, vehicles, goods, wares or merchandise and other property, real and personal, movable and immovable.

The company may also —improve, extend, manage, develop, lease, mortgage, exchange, sell, dispose of, or turn to account the same ; and may establish shops or stores on the said lands ; and may purchase and vend general merchandise, clothing, provisions, stores, machinery and supplies, and may deal in mineral products, ores, mines and precious metals, and generally may do all such other things as are incidental or conducive to the attainments of the above objects.

The Bill mentions every thing under the sun. It is the most absurd Bill I ever read.

Mr. CASEY. I am obliged to rise to a point of order. I want to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the hon. gentleman is quoting a section which has already been passed.

Mr. FOSTER. That is not all. I think when such a Bill as this is submitted, all the sections should be read by the Chairman.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman has probably accomplished his purpose in talking this Bill out. I hold, however, that he has no right to discuss section 5 when it has been passed, as well as two or three intervening sections. I want the Chairman's ruling on this point.

Mr. FOSTER. Before you give your ruling, Mr. Chairman, I want to call your attention to the fact that I asked to have the sections read, but you paid no attention to my request. I had no idea that such powers were asked in the Bill, and as soon as I got the Bill and examined them, I rose to discuss them.

The PRIME MINISTER. On the point of order, I wish to say that the hon. member was not discussing section 5, but the merits of the Bill, and was pointing out the immense powers conferred by the Bill.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bain). To my mind in all these matters we have always afforded very wide latitude in discussions in committee. It would be exceedingly undesirable to attempt to limit the freedom of discussion.

Mr. FOSTER. Then I will go on and recount the powers asked by the company. The company seek to

(g) Acquire by lease, purchase or otherwise, any rights in letters patent, franchises or patent rights for the purposes of the undertaking and again dispose of such rights.

The Bill contains one streak of modesty, and it is put in the last clause :

(h) Subject to all such regulations as are imposed by the Governor in Council, construct, purchase, lease or otherwise acquire and hold lands, buildings and other erections for the purpose of supplying water for the use of its works, railways and branches.

I call the attention of the Government, and especially of the Minister of Railways, to this Bill. If legislation like this is permitted to go through the House without being looked into, it is making a farce of legislation. The powers of this company extend over the whole North-west of Canada.

The hour of private Bills having expired, the House proceeded to Government business.

MONTREAL HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House resolve itself into committee on Bill (No. 163) to grant further aid to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). When the House adjourned at six o'clock, I was discussing different points raised by the ex-Finance Minister. He has tried to make a point by stating that plan No. 6 was approved some years ago, and the commercial bodies of Montreal still favoured that plan. The hon. gentleman is mistaken as to the fact. At the last conference which was held in the city of Montreal on the 10th of October last, the whole question was fully discussed, and a full report of the conference was published in the Montreal "Gazette" of the following day. Perhaps the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) who seems to take a great interest in this question would like to hear what the Montreal "Gazette" said in an editorial article on the result of that conference. On the 11th October the Montreal "Gazette" wrote as follows:—

The conference on the harbour improvements has been held. It has resulted in the passage of a resolution utterly meaningless as an expression of view as to what plans should be finally adopted, but from its very vacancy, a legitimate outcome of the gathering, every interest and every fad had its interest. It would be very difficult to say which received the most general support. All that was evident was that if the greatest good is to be had from the expenditure made on the harbour the advice of an engineer who understands the river and the traffic and the conditions under which the traffic has to be carried out, must be taken and adhered to. Boards of trade and chambers of commerce, and even harbour commissioners, only seemed capable of coming to a disagreement and of muddling those who would approach the subject with an unbiassed mind. In plain English, the meeting was not creditable to the Montreal business community.

As the Montreal "Gazette" very properly said there was a great difference of opinion expressed, although it was very clear that the consensus of opinion was that the Government should have a free hand, and that was shown by the adoption of the resolution urging us to go on with the erection of two works, the size of these works to be decided by me. As a matter of fact entire confidence was expressed at that time in the Department of Public Works. Well, Sir, what is the difference between plan No. 6 and plan No. 12a. Plan No. 6 which was adopted nearly ten years ago provided for the erection of four wharfs varying from 900 to 1,500 feet long, with a breadth of 230 feet, and between basins 300 feet wide. Plan No. 12a provides for the erection of wharfs 300 feet wide, between basins respectively 590 feet and 570 feet wide, or in other words, plan No. 6 has been changed so as to accommodate the largest class of ships which are now coming to Montreal. This plan is not my plan; this plan is the plan which has been adopted by the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal after all the discussions to which allusion has been made, and it is because of that fact that instead of erecting four narrow wharfs we are going to erect three wide wharfs. It is on account of that fact I have lost the friendship and the confidence of the Montreal "Witness." Well, upon my soul, I am ready to lose their confidence over and over again on account of such a thing as that.

Now, Sir, the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) should not be surprised at the opposition to this plan which he has read. The improvements we are going to carry out in the harbour of Montreal will interfere with a great many private interests, and these private interests, as I said this afternoon, have so far controlled the Board of Trade and the Harbour Commissioners. Let nobody suppose that the Board of Trade is unanimous on this point. There is a great deal of division about it. I know every one who is opposed to the improvements and I know those who are favourable to them. Take such men as Mr. Torrance, take such men as Mr. Andrew Allan, take such men as Mr. Thompson; they are members of the harbour commission. Mr. Thompson is well known as being the manager of a fleet of old-fashioned floating elevators in Montreal, elevators twenty and twenty-five years old. Mr. Thompson understands right well that if permanent elevators are built his small fleet of old-fashioned elevators are gone. He understands all that, and no man understands that better than Mr. Thompson. Now, Sir, I have nothing to say against the Allan Company surely. They have rendered very great service to the trade of Canada in the past, but it must not be forgotten that the Allans have allowed themselves to be outdistanced in the race for trade. The Allans have opposed the fast line. Why? Because they had no ships able to do that service. Instead of moving on in the race of progress—well they have not gone as rapidly as they should have gone. I am very sorry indeed that the old spirit of Sir Hugh Allan is no more in some of the representatives of the Allan Company, and I may add at once that I trust that the young element in the Allan Company will go back to the old traditions. So it is, Sir, that some business men who have followed carefully the movements of the trade in Montreal are not surprised at the opposition which is raised against these harbour improvements. What has been done? Last year in order to control the freight rates for the trade of the lakes, some of the men who are opposing the improvements in the port of Montreal managed to exclude from being insured, what are called Pinflats. And why? Because these Pinflats were competing with them. They have played the very same game now; they are fighting every one who comes in to the race of trade against them. I do not see in his seat to-night my hon. friend from Ottawa (Mr. Hutchison), but when the Prescott elevator was built some of these men that are opposing the improvements in the harbour of Montreal did everything they could to prevent Mr. Hutchison and his friends carrying their grain to Montreal at reasonable rates, and the Prescott Elevator Company have been forced to build steel barges to bring their grain to Montreal. Well, Sir, it is time that that monopoly which has retarded the progress of the port of Montreal shall be broken down. I know that I have taken risks; I know that I have taken great risks. Those men are strong and powerful, but the people of this country are stronger than any monopoly. Sir, I stand here as representing the great interests of Canada. We are deepening our canals; we are going to spend ten or twelve millions in this great work; and when we are providing all the necessary means for bringing the trade of the west by the St. Lawrence route, these men are trying to prevent the Montreal improvements which are absolutely necessary for the accommodation of that great trade. I protest against their action; I protest against it in the interest of Canada. It is not very surprising, indeed, to find that Mr. Allan and Mr. Torrance do not want any improvement; it is not surprising to those of us who know how things are handled in the port of Montreal. Would you believe me, Sir, when I say that these two companies, the Allan and the Dominion, have monopolized two-thirds of the space in the port of Montreal. They are very well provided for, and they do not care for others. So much is this the case that three years ago, when the Elder-Dempster Company came to Montreal with three ships, they had any amount of trouble to find accommodation; and last summer, when the same company had sixteen ships, they had still more trouble to find accommodation, because these two companies who had the control of the Harbour Commissioners, and who have a great influence in the Board of Trade, have monopolized so much of the harbour. I do not blame them; they are working in their own interest. But it seems to me that they should have more reason; they should allow everybody to live, and they should not set themselves against progress. This plan is a most reasonable one. It provides for accommodation in the centre of the harbour. When the guard pier is completed, the Grand Trunk Railway Company, as I stated the other day, will not fail to take advantage of that work. I expect to see elevators built on that guard pier as soon as it is completed. So far as the centre portion of the harbour is concerned, the plan which I hold in my hand will provide great accommodation. The works for which we provide in the eastern part of the harbour are as necessary as those in the centre, if not more so—why? The grain trade can only be handled properly by means of permanent elevators; there can be no dispute about that; and I want to know where you can locate elevators in the centre of the harbour except on the guard pier. The only place where permanent grain elevators, permanent storage, and permanent warehouses can be erected is in the eastern part of the city. That is the reason why, in 1894, when the Harbour Commissioners applied for additional aid, they insisted, as a condition of that aid being granted, that $1,000,000 should be spent in the eastern part of the city. But now that the famous Windmill basin is built, they do not want any more improvements; now that they have provided for themselves, they do not want anybody else to live. I do not want to detain this committee much longer. I will resume my seat after calling the attention of the committee to these two main points: we have provided in this Bill for the centre portion of the harbour; we have provided at the same time for accommodation in the eastern part of the harbour. The two interests are placated and served. The great interest of the grain trade is secured, and it could not be secured otherwise than by the erection of these works in the eastern part of the harbour. Now, perhaps I should say one word on the financial aspect of the scheme. The harbour of Montreal has always had a large surplus. In spite of the fact that two years ago the Harbour Commissioners reduced their rates by 25 per cent, they had a surplus last year of over $30,000. Is there any man in this House who will say that the trade will not increase, and largely increase, in the coming years? Is it not a fact that these very works will help to increase that trade? And increase of trade means increase of revenue. It seems to me that there is no ground for fear on that point. The improvements which will be made will result in bringing to the port of Montreal the largest class of ships. Last year I had a correspondence with Sir William Van Horne. After having gone over the lakes, after having inspected the St. Lawrence, and after having found that so small proportion of the western trade was coming by the St. Lawrence, I wrote to Sir William Van Horne asking him: "How is it that the people of Canada, who have spent so many millions in building railways and in deepening the canals, have got so small a return?" Sir William answered in a letter which was published in the press: "Bring to the harbour of Montreal large ships, which mean cheap rates, and you will have any amount of freight. What has been lacking in the harbour of Montreal has been ships." Well, Sir, I want to equip the port of Montreal and deepen the St. Lawrence, so as to secure the coming of ships the whole year round, with Halifax and St. John as winter ports. In what condition are we to-day? Even during the summer months one company will not send its best ships to Montreal. The Dominion Line do not send to us their best ships. During the winter months, the Allan Company are fighting for an American port against the Canadian port. I say it again, let us equip the port of Montreal, the port of Quebec, the port of St. John, and the port of Halifax. Let us then secure the presence in Canadian waters of ships which will carry our trade. That is the object I have in view. As I said a moment ago, you cannot break a monopoly without fighting hard. I have fought to the best of my ability. In a few months even those who have opposed these plans, will be obliged to come to reason. My hon. friend the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) has spoken with disdain of the swamp lands that are going to be sold in the east. I make this prophesy, that on the lands of which he spoke with such disdain, before a few years have passed there will be an immense trade, elevators to handle that trade, and large wharfs and ships as there are in Boston and other rival ports. I do not see any reason why every bushel of grain raised in the west should not be taken by the St. Lawrence route, and the cheapest rate that will be secured in the port of Montreal will be the best price for the producer of the west. I am sorry to have taken up so much time, but I think the subject is one of great importance, and that is why I may be pardoned for having been longer than I intended.

Mr. CHAUVIN. (Translation.) If the hon. Minister of Public Works will allow me, I would like to put a few questions to him. Who has paid for the building of the dry docks and other harbour works in the other cities of Canada, for instance, at Quebec, Kingston, Esquimaux and Halifax?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). (Translation.) At Halifax, the expenditure was partly borne by the Imperial Government. At Esquimaux, the dry dock was built partly by the Imperial Government, and partly by the provincial government, which had commenced the works, which were completed by the Dominion Government. At Quebec, the Lévis graving dock was built out of the moneys voted by the Dominion Parliament; but the harbour works at Quebec were built out of the moneys of the Harbour Commissioners.

Mr. BERGERON. (Translation.) At Halifax, we make a yearly outlay of $10,000.

Mr. CHAUVIN. (Translation.) Could the Minister tell me in an approximate manner what sums have been contributed by the Dominion Government since confederation to the works of the harbour of Montreal?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. (Translation.) The Dominion Government did not directly contribute to the works carried out in the harbour of Montreal. It is, no doubt, within the recollection of my hon. friend that, in 1888, the Government assumed the whole debt of the Montreal Harbour Commission, which then reached three million and some hundred thousand dollars. My hon. friend will also recollect that, since that time, we have advanced a sum of money out of which further improvements have been made.

Mr. TARTE.

Mr. BERGERON. (Translation.) That was only a loan.

Mr. CHAUVIN. (Translation.) If I put those questions to the Minister, it is not because I find fault with what the hon. gentleman intends to do in favour of the harbour of Montreal; on the contrary, I only wish to point out to Parliament and to the country that Montreal has not had its fair share of the public moneys, for the extension of the harbour. The old Government having come to the conclusion of granting public moneys for the building and extension of public works in the various ports of the Dominion, I do not see why this Government of the day should not also vote a considerable sum of money for the extension and improvement of the harbour of Montreal.

Mr. BERGERON. (Translation.) Hear, hear,

Mr. CHAUVIN. (Translation.) Because the Government have not thought it desirable to build out of public moneys—

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. (Translation.) For the time being.

Mr. CHAUVIN. (Translation.) For the time being, the contemplated works in the harbour of Montreal, this is no reason why we should refuse our concurrence to the Government who have just decided, at the request and with the approval of the Harbour Commissioners, to advance to the latter the money necessary for the extension of the harbour. I will go even further, and tell the Government that they have not gone far enough in the step taken by them in the interest of Montreal. Montreal is not wont to go a-begging, like so many other cities of the Dominion; it is an opulent and self-reliant city, with great spirit of enterprise and progress; but it is the most important city of the Dominion, by its geographical position and its maritime trade, and it is entitled to receive still more than it is receiving from the Government.

I do not wish to oppose the resolution now under consideration; on the contrary, I heartily approve of the efforts put forth by the hon. Minister of Public Works and by the mayor of Montreal, the member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Préfontaine). I congratulate them on having secured those advantages for the harbour of Montreal. It would not be fair on our part to blame them for the opposition and difficulties they may have met with at the hands of their colleagues. On the contrary, the Minister of Public Works is to be congratulated on the fact that he was strong-handed enough to silence the opposition of his colleagues in the Cabinet and to secure what the Government now propose to give. The French Canadian Chamber of Commerce, of Montreal, which represents half the trade of Montreal, and the majority of the French trade of the province of Quebec, has endorsed in the most formal manner the stand taken by the Government on that point, and I deem it my duty, as a taxpayer residing in Montreal, and in my capacity of representative of a neighbouring constituency, to support this measure, because it is calculated to contribute not only to the progress of Montreal, but also to the development of the country at large. The province of Ontario, for one, is the most directly interested in the extension and improvement of the harbour of Montreal, and in the works which the Government of the day propose to carry out. I say that it is in the general interest of Canada that the Government should carry out those works and give the Harbour Commissioners all the money necessary to that effect. I would have been happy to see the Government, out of gratitude for the confidence placed in them by the population of our people, who gave them such a large majority in the province of Quebec and in the district of Montreal, avail themselves of this opportunity to equip the harbour of Montreal with all the improvements it stands in need of and which it is entitled. Meanwhile, I entirely endorse the measure now under consideration, and I am glad to lend my concurrence to the Government, notwithstanding the fact that they have not seen their way clear to do more, for the time being. I am delighted to find that by the step they have taken, the Government are showing their good-will towards the city of Montreal. I am satisfied with the action taken by the Government in advancing this sum of money to the Harbour Commissioners. I deem it my duty to support their policy and to tell them on the floor of the House that their action is entitled to the support and endorsement of all the hon. members, because it tends to the development of interests of considerable importance. While promoting the interests of Montreal, they are, at the same time, promoting the interests of the Dominion at large, whose prosperity is intimately linked with the commercial expansion of Montreal.

Mr. SPROULE. I object to this, first, because it is too late in the session to ask Parliament to deal with such a large sum of money and to give it into the hands of either the Government or any one member of the Government, to have it spent subject to his will or approval, and that is practically what it is. We have reached a stage in the session when there are not more than one-third or one-half the members present. The others have gone home. This matter has been held back until the dying days of the session when it is most unlikely that it will receive the careful attention which Parliament ought to give so important a subject. I object to it because it will impose an additional tax upon the people, and run the debt of Canada up to the extent of the $2,000,000 more which is to be lent to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal, provided they spend the money according to the will of the Minister of Public Works. I object to it because it is forced upon an unwilling people who have protested against it in every possible way. They have brought to bear on the Minister of Public Works every argument they could advance. Every interest involved in the harbour of Montreal, the Board of Trade, which I submit is a very wide and powerful interest in Montreal, the Corn Exchange, the City Council, the shipping interests, the Underwriters' Association, and the people of Montreal—all have protested against using this money according to the dictates and will of the Minister of Public Works, but nevertheless he is bound to force this through Parliament in the dying days of the session and compel his followers to swallow their convictions and give him license to spend that money where he pleases.

The Harbour Commissioners of Montreal, have not only managed that harbour but the channel between there and Quebec so successfully that it is 27 feet deep. They succeeded in doing that without running into debt, and have paid the interest on every dollar put into that improvement. Let me quote from the "Witness" to show that what they have done they did wisely and well:

The harbour commission of Montreal, which has not only managed the harbour, but the channel to Quebec, has regularly, in good years and in bad, paid punctually every cent of interest and even put by a surplus. There has never been any suspicion that it would not in the future, as it has in the past, make its plans and manage its expenditure so as to be able to pay the interest. This commission had plans of improvement designed by the best engineers, approved by its own experienced engineer, approved by the experienced city engineer, approved by the City Council, approved by the Board of Trade, by the Corn Exchange, by the shipping interests, by the underwriters' associations, a plan long considered over, pondered and debated, and not hastily arrived at. The Minister of Public Works, under the power obtained above, refuses to sanction the plan which was the result of such long and united consideration and experience, and plan after plan, some of them too absurd to stand examination, and all allowing the one thing in common, and affording less space for berthing ships in the central portion of the harbour than the plan of the commission. By false promises, conveyed through Mr. Préfontaine, Mr. Mackie and others, that the Government would assume the cost of this plan, a modification of it was on that condition accepted by the trade associations and the harbour commission.

But the hon. Minister went back on that promise. In the face of the interests involved can the hon. Minister of Public Works say that he is justified in asking Parliament to give him the control of two million dollars, to spend according to his own sweet will and where he thinks best. The hon. gentleman said he had no respect for the judgment of these men, and, therefore, would follow his own. But whose opinion ought to have the most weight. That of the Minister of Public Works, who has never been engaged in shipping, who has no interest that we know of in vessels or transportation companies, nor steamship line, or railways or grain elevators. And he places his judgment against that of the men who have helped to build up the harbour of Montreal, who have assisted in making the channel between Montreal and Quebec 27 feet deep, who have assisted in building up great steamship lines running between that port and almost every great port in the world.

Mr. PENNY. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) if he is aware that there is a block of several hundred thousand bushels of wheat in Montreal, owing to the lack of capacity to handle it and ship it?

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, and I understand that if the Harbour Commissioners had been allowed to exercise their own will, there would have been proper provision long ago for handling the grain; but that they are hampered by the Minister of Public Works, who will not allow them to provide accommodation that in their opinion is necessary. I say that the Minister is putting his judgment against that of these men who have built up that trade, who control the railway and shipping corporations, and he objects to allow them to map out the work according to their judgment in the interest of the trade. He says that those who do not want improvements will oppose any plan. Who does he mean when he speaks of those who do not want improvements? Do not the shipping interests want them, the railway companies and the transportation companies? They are not opposing improvement but they are opposing the unwise expenditure of money, because the plan now proposed is not, in their judgment the best.

The hon. gentleman said a short time ago that he was always prepared to listen to men whose interests are of importance. Is the interest represented by the Board of Trade of no importance? Are the shipping interest and the underwriters' interest of no importance. Do the representatives of the city council speak on behalf of interests that are of no importance? Now, let me see what interests of importance are represented. Here is a letter. I will read it and let it speak for itself:

Dear Sir,—We, the undersigned members of the shipping interest, hereby enter our protest against the proposals for harbour extension, laid before the harbour board by Mr. Préfontaine, and call upon you as their representative on the commission, to oppose the same by every means in your power.

Mr. SPROULE.

We are of opinion that the plan No. 12a, if built at the expense of the harbour, will afford additional berth room for shipping and revenue from dues to an extent altogether inadequate to meet the cost for interest and maintenance, and will thus become a burden upon the trade of the port rather than a benefit.

We also demand, as a common right due to Montreal, that the graving dock proposed by the Government be built and managed as other graving docks are built throughout the Dominion, and that no portion of harbour moneys be used for this purpose.

And we further declare our preference for the discontinuance of all extensive harbour enlargement by the commissioners, otherwise than on the former undertaking, that the works are to be constructed at the public cost with the view of hereafter opening the harbour to the commerce of the Dominion free of all tolls and charges whatsoever.

We are,

Are these men and the interests they represent of no importance? The hon. gentleman cannot deny that these are fair representatives of men of standing in Montreal. But he pays no attention to the representations of these men; and in open defiance of their opinion he puts forward a plan to spend this money according to his own judgment. He says elevators are wanted; the shipping interest do not want elevators.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
They want their floating elevators.

Mr. SPROULE. Do not the vessels carry the grain, and do not the railways bring it to Montreal? Do not the parties who control the steamship companies and the railway companies want elevators? I think they do. They must be as desirous and as anxious as the Minister can be to have these elevators built, but they want them built in the locality, where, in their judgment, they will best serve the interest of the trade and afford the conveniences necessary for carrying on the trade of that great port. I contend that this should not be forced on, because it is being forced on against the opinion of those who are most directly interested, the great representatives of the steamship lines, the railway lines, the Board of Trade and the Underwriters Association.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
There is not a railway opposed to this.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there a railway in favour of it?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Have we a single word from any of them; have we a scratch of the pen from any railway manager supporting the hon. gentleman? Not one. Therefore, I take it for granted that they cannot be interested in supporting this proposal or they would have spoken in its favour. I oppose this scheme, and I think the House should oppose it. I think it a most unheard thing that this Parliament should vote so much money and put it under the control of any Minister, which we are practically doing, if we give the Minister power to loan that amount of money and have it subject to his own will—for that is practically what is proposed. The hon. Minister said that, in reply to the remark of the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) as to there being property that will be enhanced in value, that that is bound to occur in any case. No doubt. But if it is true that a syndicate has control of the property and may be influenced largely in what they are doing by the locality in which this money is spent, they are largely helping to benefit themselves. I desire to say, so far as I know, the Minister of Public Works is not interested in this property. I do not wish to be understood to say that he is influenced by such considerations in doing what he has done. But when men own properties they are generally willing to have the expenditure of public money upon property in close proximity to their own, because it enhances the value of their own. Is it not probable that the corporation or syndicate who control the property are urging very strongly that the Minister should have the expenditure made there so that their property may be enhanced in value? I think it is the most natural assumption in the world. But even though that land was not owned by interested parties who are urging the Minister to make an expenditure there, I would object to it all the same upon other grounds, namely, that he is doing it in opposition to the judgment of those who have successfully controlled and made the harbour of Montreal what it is. Their representations should always obtain favourable consideration at his hands. They, above all others, must know best the needs of the city, and how the money could be best spent, and if it is not so spent, they above all others ought to receive the blame.

The PRIME MINISTER. It is quite evident that my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) did not hear the remarks this afternoon of the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster). The hon. member for York has taken an attitude quite the reverse. In many respects, of that which has just been taken by the hon. member for East Grey. He objects, first of all, to these resolutions because, as he says, they are going to increase the public debt to the amount of about two million dollars. Now, my hon. friend is too old and too experienced a member of this House to use such language. I believe he knows better, and if he had reflected at all, he would not have made that statement.

Mr. SPROULE. I objected to forcing it through the House at this late stage of the session, not to the expenditure if properly made.

The PRIME MINISTER. That is one of the objections taken by my hon. friend, and I will let it pass for what it is worth. But he stated this would increase the public debt by two million dollars.

Mr. SPROULE. Certainly.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend ought to know better. He knows very well the public debt is not increased by two million dollars when the Dominion of Canada borrows two million dollars with one hand and with the other hand receives bonds fully equal to the outlay so made. Therefore the debt will not be increased by one dollar. My hon. friend should not so far forget himself not have made that statement.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the hon. gentleman propose to loan the two millions dollars?

The PRIME MINISTER. Certainly.

Mr. SPROULE. Where is it to come from if it is not to go against the debt of the country?

The PRIME MINISTER. When we speak of debt we always speak of the net debt; and if we borrow two million dollars with one hand and loan two million dollars with the other hand, we are just in the same position as we were before. But I will call his attention to something more; I will call his attention to the remarks which were made by the hon. member for York this afternoon. One of the objections which were taken by the hon. member for York this afternoon was in reference to the improvements in the eastern portion of Montreal. That is all. As to the rest, everybody is agreed. But the objection is made in the city of Montreal that the improvements contemplated in the eastern portion of the harbour should not be charged to the harbour commission, but that the money should be advanced by the Government. There is no contention that the improvements are not required, that they would not be beneficial to the country, that they would not be beneficial to the city of Montreal; because again and again these improvements have been petitioned for. The only objection which is taken in Montreal is that the character of these improvements is national, that as similar expenditures have been made in other parts of the country by the Dominion, a similar aid should be granted to the harbour of Montreal; the contention is that the harbour of Montreal should not be burdened with that expenditure, but that it should be assumed by the Federal Government. Well, my hon. friend from York stated this afternoon that he was almost a believer in that proposition himself; he stated, in fact, that if these improvements had to be made they should be made at the expense of the country, and not at the expense of the harbour of Montreal, that the burden should fall upon the whole trade of the country, and not upon the trade of Montreal alone. Well, so far so good. That disposes of that argument of hon. gentlemen opposite. There are before the House to-day two propositions, we have to choose at this moment between two propositions, either to put the burden of these improvements on the harbour of Montreal, or put it on the whole Dominion. My hon. friend has to make his choice between two alternatives, because he will not find a single authority in Montreal stating that these improvements are not needed there. He may search the press, he may examine the resolutions passed by the different bodies to which he has alluded, and the speeches made upon this question, and he must come to the conclusion that the only objection made in the city of Montreal is that the harbour should not be burdened with these improvements. On the other hand, while the hon. member for York has taken the position I have described, later on in his speech he made this remark, and it is a remark that has just been endorsed by the member for East Grey, that there is speculation in connection with these harbour improvements. Well, I have only this answer to make to that argument. If there is speculation to take advantage of these improvements in the eastern part of the city, would there be any less speculation if they were made by the harbour commission? Will there not be just as much speculation if they are made by one body as by the other? I think that disposes of the suggestion of boodling and speculation of which we have heard so much, it is all in the air, there is no foundation for it, so far as I am able to find. The last argument he made was that we should refrain from making these improvements, though they might be needed, because certain parties would benefit by the increase in the value of the property. Such an argument is not worth answering. Were we to heed that argument, we should never make improvements in any part of the country because certain parties would always benefit therefrom. Wherever we spend money, whether in Montreal, St. John or Halifax, the adjacent property will benefit by that expenditure. Will the hon. gentleman tell me, or will anybody on that side of the House contend, that we should allow the trade of the country to suffer because somebody is going to reap an advantage out of the expenditure? Such an argument is not worth being uttered on the floor of this House. But my hon. friend has another objection, he says that several bodies object to these improvements, he says the shipping interests object to them, that the Board of Trade objects to them, that the Corn Exchange objects to them. But on the other hand, let me remind my hon. friend that the Chambre de Commerce has pronounced in their favour, my hon. friend from Terrebonne (Mr. Chauvin) has pronounced in their favour, and the Hon. Mr. Desjardins, at one time a Minister whom the hon. gentleman supported in the late Government, has declared himself in favour of these improvements. If there are arguments on one side, there are arguments on the other side. If some parties ask that this should be done, what ought the Government to do except to exercise its best judgment in the matter? And so in bringing this proposition before the House, the Government are ignoring these jarring interests in the city of Montreal, and are keeping in view the best interests of the whole country. We have already delayed too long in taking action on account of the conflicting representations made to us from Montreal, and the conflicting interests which have been unable to agree; we have lost time, trade is flowing into the harbour of Montreal, and that harbour is not sufficiently equipped to meet the demands upon it. The trade is suffering, and we must take action at once. We have lost too much time already, we have concluded to take action, and we propose that these works shall be commenced within the next month. Within a month or so men will be at work in the city of Montreal on these proposed improvements. Now, if my hon. friend has any more objections to make, I have one more answer to give which will cover them all. We had better make a mistake than do nothing at all, we had better make a mistake than to lose another year. I think the policy that we are inaugurating will meet not only the favour of this House, but of the whole country as well.

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into committee.

On section 1,

Mr. SPROULE. I desire to say a few words in answer to the right hon. Premier. His contention was that the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal objected to the expenditure of this money only because it was not given gratuitously by the country for the construction of the harbour works, or, in other words, because it was proposed to be a loan to them.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. They did not object to that.

Mr. SPROULE. The right hon. Premier made that statement. The Premier said their contention was—and the hon. member for York assented to the statement—that the money should be spent by the whole country and not be a loan to the Montreal Harbour Commissioners, that they should not be compelled to take it as a loan. Really, the Harbour Commissioners objected on two grounds. The first objection was, that the money should be spent by the Dominion Government and should not be borrowed by the Harbour Commissioners, and whatever accommodation the shipping interests required, the necessary expenditure should be made on that harbour as on any other harbour in the country. Their second and equally important objection was, that the money should not be spent as the Minister of Public Works wanted it expended. If the Harbour Commissioners objected to the loan on one ground alone, why did they make this statement :

This commission had plans of improvement designed by the best engineers, approved by its own experienced engineer, approved by the experienced city engineer, approved by the City Council, approved by the Board of Trade, by the Corn Exchange, by the shipping interests, by the underwriters' associations, a plan long considered over, pondered and debated, and not hastily arrived at. The Minister of Public Works under the power obtained as above, refuses to sanction the plan which was the resultant of such long and united consideration and experience.—

They objected to the expenditure, also on the following grounds :—

—and presents plan after plan, some of them too absurd to stand examination,—

The Premier said the only objection offered was because the money was not spent there as in other places. But another objection they offered was this :

—and all having this one thing in common, all affording less space for berthing ships in the central portion of the harbour than the plan of the commission.

The commissioners objected to the expenditure being made according to the will and whim of the Minister of Public Works, and against their best judgment, and not on the plan they had adopted and according to what they believed was desirable in the interest of the harbour of Montreal and the trade that must pass through it.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Crow's Nest Pass Railway—To pay salary and expenses of superintending engineer $2,500

Mr. FOSTER. When we were on this item before, two singular facts were brought out. One was that the Crow's Nest Pass road trestles were being put in where iron bridges should have been built; and the other was, that old rails were taken from a portion of the Canadian Pacific Railway main line and placed on the Crow's Nest Pass road. Are there not specifications according to which the road was to be built; and if so, has the work been carried out according to these specifications? What did the specifications provide?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The road is being built according to the specification. The hon. gentleman mentioned the fact that some of the bridges are being built of wood. That is true; we do not require them to be built of iron. We are building the road exactly according to the specification prepared for the main trunk line of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the weight of the rails required?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Fifty-six pounds.

Mr. FOSTER. Are the rails on the Crow's Nest Pass road of that weight?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. What were the duties of the officer to whom $2,500 was to be paid, the supervising engineer?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. His duties were to inspect the work; he is continuously employed on the work, going from place to place.

Mr. CLARKE. Was it any part of his duty to report the methods adopted by the contractors; did he make any report as to the way in which the workmen were treated during the period of construction.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, we have received no report from the engineer on that subject. He had no instructions to that effect, it is not usual to give instructions of that kind. If we had anticipated any difficulty we might have required him to report; but we did not anticipate any difficulty and did not give him such instructions.

Rideau Canal—

To pay J. K. Read, late lockmaster at Hog's Back, for certain outbuildings and improvements to lock-house done by him at his own expense	$ 200
To rebuild sill of Lock No. 2 at Long Island	750
To take down and rebuild upper wing wall at Burritt's.....	30
To repair bulkhead at Old Sly's.....	450
To complete payment for land damages at Kingston Mills.....	350

Mr. BRITTON. Can the Minister tell me to whom the land damages at Kingston Mills were paid?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We made an offer to settle; the offer was not accepted, litigation ensued, and the claimant recovered with costs, as is very usual. I have not a memorandum with me of the name of the person to whom the amount was paid.

Mr. BRITTON. Are there any more claims as to land damages in that vicinity?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not aware of any more, but I am afraid the time will never come when there will be no claims for such damages.

Mr. BRITTON. I understood that the settlement made some years ago included an absolute release as to past damages and future damages?

Mr. HAGGART. Is Mr. J. K. Read superannuated?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He had at his own expense erected a building which we found convenient to use for the new man, and we had it valued and this is the valuation placed on the building. I do not know whether Mr. Read has been superannuated or received a gratuity.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What became of Old Slys?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Old Slys fell into decay and we had to fix him up.

Intercolonial Railway—To pay the estate of the late Mr. A. Kirk for damages by fire $689 37

Mr. CLANCY. What Mr. Kirk is that?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Adam Kirk, I think.

Mr. McDOUGALL. What is the nature of the claim?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. A claim was originally made by a man named W. B. Chisholm. He was occupying these premises, and this building and he made his claim to department in the usual way, and it was sent to the Justice Department, and the Justice Department sent it down to their agent. It was admitted that the fire had been caused by the Intercolonial Railway, and that the owner was entitled to damages, and a report came back to the effect that the damages to be paid to Mr. Chisholm amounted to about $900, and the amount was paid. Subsequently, it came out that Mr. Kirk was really the owner of the property, that he had the legal title to the buildings and to the farm, and that the amount ought to have been paid to Mr. Kirk instead of to Mr. Chisholm. When the matter came to my notice I had the title carefully searched, and I found that Chisholm had not any title to the property at all, had parted with the title to Kirk some time previous to the fire, and that the damages really accrued to Mr. Kirk, and not to Mr. Chisholm. I had Mr. Chisholm communicated with, and he was called upon to explain by what right he had received this amount of damages, and his reply was that although he had given a deed of the property some little time before for a loan to Mr. Kirk, yet that he was occupying the premises at the time and he had a right to the re-conveyance of the property upon paying the amount of the mortgage against him, some $900. Of course, that claim could not be entertained for a moment, and it was thought proper that although the amount had once been paid it should be paid over again, and that we should resort to the best means that were open to us to recover the amount back from the person who had improperly received the same in the first instance. On the strength of the statement which Chisholm made to me in his correspondence, to the effect that he had the right of redemption in this property, I had an officer go to inspect the property and give me an estimate of its value as it stood after the fire. I got such a valuation, and Mr. Kirk having died in the meanwhile, I informed his executors that while I recognized the right to Mr. Kirk to have been paid in the first instance instead of Chisholm, yet inasmuch as it appeared to me that there was an equity of redemption in Chisholm upon payment of the amount of what was in effect a mortgage, though not so upon the face of it, that the executors of Kirk would be entitled from the department only the balance of the loss after the value of the land had been deducted. That was the conclusion which was reached and I am therefore asking for $689 instead of $900, the amount which was originally claimed and paid to Chisholm.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Do we understand there is no money yet paid on the claim?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Although probably the department might pay the amount, I felt it was a proper thing to present it to Parliament and get the authority to pay before any payment has been made. No payment on this has yet been made.

Mr. HAGGART. Do I understand that the fee of the property was in a man named Chisholm?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It does not appear that there was any examination of the title at all at that time, because we had the title examined. In fact, I had the original deed, which showed that some two or three years before the fire occurred a conveyance of the title absolutely in fee had been made by Chisholm to Kirk.

Mr. HAGGART. Surely the money would have been paid through the Department of Justice, and that department would have been entirely responsible for it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My deputy informs me that the first payment was made through Moncton, and not through the Department of Justice.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Will the hon. gentleman tell me when the claim was first made by the Kirk estate?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My deputy says he does not exactly remember when the claim was first made by Kirk.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). It is apparent that the claim was first made by Chisholm, although some years before that time, he had conveyed the property to Kirk; but afterwards Kirk, having got the property, put forward a claim himself.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What explanation does Kirk make of not having made a claim before?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My communications have always been with Kirk, through the hon. member for Antigonish (Mr. McIsaac). The first knowledge I had of it was shortly after coming into the department. Mr. McIsaac communicated with me for the executors, who were then preferring the claim. Whether Kirk had died shortly before, I cannot say.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). This item had better stand until we see the report of the Minister of Justice in the case. I think the Minister will agree with me that there is something very suspicious about it, although it may be quite capable of explanation. The owner of the property stands by and sees the tenant make a claim which the owner is entitled to make, and he does not make that claim until long after. Then it appears that he is paid as well as Chisholm.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not see that it can be quite in that position. The claimant Kirk was not in his lifetime a resident of this locality at all, as I understand, and would not probably be cognizant of what was going on. He may not have heard, until just previous to the time he gave notice to the department, that any amount had been paid to Chisholm in respect of this claim. I have not any evidence that he did have any such knowledge.

Mr. MONTAGUE. There is evidence that the gentleman died without ever having made a claim. I am told by gentlemen on this side of the House that Mr. Kirk did live in that vicinity. It is an extraordinary thing that a man should own a farm, with a tenant on it, that the tenant should put in a claim for compensation for buildings that were burnt, and that the man who owned those buildings should go to his rest without having made a claim.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Is the hon. gentleman informed when Mr. Kirk died?

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister who wants us to pass the vote should know that, and tell the committee. As it appears to the committee, it is a wrong proceeding. If the claim made in the first instance, was investigated by the Minister of Justice, we ought to have his report. I think the suggestion made by my hon. friend from Brockville (Mr. Wood) is the best, that the item should stand until we have the report of the Minister of Justice on that first case.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is no doubt that the title to the property was in Kirk anterior to the fire.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Was it a mortgage or a deed?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It was a deed. I had the deed, and I am not sure but that it is now in the department. There was, I am informed by my deputy, no report from the Justice Department in respect to the payment in the first instance. I have no objection to let the item stand if there is any information in the Department that I have not brought down.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Was the property that was burned in the county of Antigonish?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not really sure, but that is my impression; but I thought Mr. Kirk resided in another county.

Mr. McDOUGALL. If Mr. Kirk resided in the county of Antigonish, no building of that kind could have been burned in that county without Mr. Kirk or those in his employment knowing it within a few hours.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman know when Mr. Kirk died?

Mr. McDOUGALL. I think within the last two or three years. I cannot understand why the claims should have been paid to Mr. Chisholm if it is true that he gave an absolute deed to Mr. Kirk. I can well understand that if Mr. Kirk only held a mortgage, the money might properly be paid to Chisholm.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot see how anybody else could be entitled to the money except the owner of the property.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Did not the Minister say that the tenant would have a right to redeem?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). That would be virtually equivalent to a deed ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend is making a misapplication of a well-known principle. The position of the claim, as I understand, is this. The absolute title passed to Kirk from Chisholm before this fire occurred. When the matter was presented to my notice by the hon. member for Antigonish (Mr. McIsaac) I caused an investigation to be made. I told Mr. Chisholm that he had received his money, that he had no title to the property at the time he received it, and I asked him on what authority he claimed for and received it. His reply was that although he had not the legal title, yet he had a right to the money, under his understanding with Kirk, though there was nothing in writing. On the payment of the $800 or $900, which Chisholm had borrowed from Kirk, Chisholm would be entitled to a reconveyance of the property. It was virtually mortgaged, although if it had been mortgaged and appeared so on the record, the mortgagee would be entitled to the money.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Does not the hon. Minister see this ? A man may mortgage his farm, which is not worth $3,000, for $1,000. When the fire occurred, an arrangement may have been come to between the parties, whereby the man who really owned the farm, subject to the payment of the mortgage debt, should collect the insurance money or damages.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I should imagine that Chisholm who was called on to make an explanation and appeared to be anxious to make as good a showing in his own behalf as possible, would have put that forward if it could have been alleged with any show of justification, but he did not. The value of this property, with the building on it, never exceeded the amount of the claim that Kirk had upon it. The value that was put upon the building destroyed—and we know that Governments are not usually allowed to undervalue property they destroy—did not exceed the amount of the loan. If there had been a very large value in the real estate, sufficient to cover any claim Kirk might have, in excess of the value of the building, I could understand Kirk saying : Well, it does not make much difference whether I or Chisholm gets the money, as I have ample security for my claim in the farm property. But that was not the case in this instance.

When we are called upon by persons whose property is destroyed to pay damages, we can only deal properly with the owner of the property. To say now that Kirk stood by and allowed the money to be paid Chisholm would compel the Crown to establish that there was an understanding which would entitle Chisholm to get the money and preclude Kirk from afterward setting up a claim for it. We are not in a position to establish any such fact. There is not a title of evidence to show any such understanding, and when Chisholm is called upon to explain why he demanded and received this money from the Crown, as though he were the person who sustained the loss, he does not suggest any consent or agreement between himself and Kirk. On the contrary, he says that his position was practically that of a mortgagor and he was entitled to the money as a mortgagor.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. Minister has said that Chisholm has some equity in the property. He sent an officer down to value the equity, and the officer found out that the difference between the amount paid by the Crown to Chisholm and the value of Chisholm's equity was $689.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. How are you to get that money ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is not the question we have to determine.

Mr. HAGGART. Surely the Crown is entitled to the equity.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Has the hon. Minister any correspondence to show that Kirk made any claim for damages from the Government before the Minister had charge of the department, or any objections made by Kirk to the payment of the money to Chisholm ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think there is any objection of that kind.

Mr. MONTAGUE. If the man Chisholm has an equity in the property, surely the Crown has a right to that equity. What is the property worth ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In the neighbourhood of $200.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And there was $1,000 owing on it ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. $900.

Mr. MONTAGUE. So that the man who has the mortgage is $700 out.

Mr. INGRAM. Surely the hon. Minister has a claim agent employed on the Intercolonial whose duty it is to investigate when a fire occurs and see what the actual damage is.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) really misunderstands the situation. There was a building on this property but it was burnt down by the Intercolonial and was valued between $800 and $900 by the railway department of that day. Now, I felt that, before being called upon to pay over again the value of that building to another person, I should be justified in ascertaining the value of the property which this man still held—that is to say, which the estate of Kirk held in their own hands which would go in reduction of this mortgage claim.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. Minister must have misunderstood my question. What was the whole farm worth, buildings and all?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know, but the farm buildings were valued at between $800 and $900. But the farm without the building was valued at $200. The dwelling house, the house, the barn and contents and crop were destroyed at this time, and the farm now—whether it is only a small plot or not I cannot say—conveyed by this is valued at about $200.

Item allowed to stand.

Beauharnois Canal—Contingencies and repairs $4,700

Mr. BERGERON. Would the Minister be good enough to give us the reason for this appropriation, which is not in the Estimates of last year?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am advised that we were under the impression last year that it would be possible for us to reduce the staff, and we did not estimate for as much as we usually obtain for that purpose. But it was afterwards found that it was absolutely necessary to restore the staff to about the original strength, and this sum is to cover the sum short-estimated on the year's service.

Mr. BERGERON. I know that my hon. friend (Mr. Blair) dismissed a great many employees, but they were replaced immediately.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not immediately—not until the session of Parliament was over and we had strong pressure brought to bear on us because of the shortness of the staff.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend seems not to understand me. They were replaced as soon as they were dismissed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) is wrong.

Mr. BERGERON. Not at all. The hon. Minister, I have no doubt, refers to others, such as lockmen and so on, who are discharged in the fall because it is not necessary that they should be employed in the winter, but remain until the spring, and, in the ordinary way are re-engaged. Is this the only reason that the Minister has for this amount for contingencies and repairs?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is the reason and the only reason.

Mr. BERGERON. Since we are on the subject of this canal, I would like to ask the hon. Minister another question. There is a wharf at Valleyfield which was leased to the St. Francis Towboat Company. The lessees, I am told, are Cossette and Deschenes. Does the hon. Minister know how the change was made and the amount of money the new lessees paid the Government for the wharf?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My deputy does not know of any change. And for my part, I have heard nothing about the point.

Mr. BERGERON. There is no use discussing it longer then. But will the hon. gentleman take a note of it, and, before we go into concurrence, give me the information about it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman will please give me a memorandum, and I shall be glad to get the information.

Mr. BERGERON. Now, there has been a change in the first lock at Valleyfield. The lockmaster Loiselle, appointed lately, since the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) came into office, has been sent to lock No. 7, and the lockmaster at No. 7, Bertrand, has been brought back to Valleyfield. Can the hon. gentleman explain that?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will inquire, and get the hon. gentleman any information I can on this important subject.

Mr. BERGERON. I imagine what the reason is, but I want to know it from the hon. Minister. I fancy that this nomination of the Minister has turned out so badly that a change had to be made. The superintendent of the Beauharnois Canal has been changed also. The man appointed by the late Government was Boyer, and Beique had been superannuated. The present administration has dismissed the new superintendent and reinstated the old one. Mr. Beique lives at Valleyfield. I want to know if it is with the permission of the Government that he does live at Valleyfield, and does not occupy the house built by the Government there at considerable cost, and whether the Government deducts from the salary of the superintendent the $300 which is usually deducted for the very nice lodging they furnish him?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am informed that he is paid the same salary as when he was in the service before.

Mr. BERGERON. What about the lease of the house. My hon. friend will find that $300 is, or used to be, kept out of the salary of the superintendent for the use of the house furnished by the Government. There is a house built at Millersville at considerable expense, as that place was looked upon as the best for a superintendent because it is opposite the Government shops. Now, Mr. Beique lives in Valleyfield, and the other house is unoccupied.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He is not allowed anything for the house. He gets the same salary as he did before.

Mr. BERGERON. The superintendent, whoever he is, is allowed $300 for that house; that is to say, instead of having a salary of $1,700, he gets $1,400 and a house.

Mr. SCRIVER. He is charged $300.

Mr. BERGERON. The superintendent does not live in the house, it is unoccupied today. He lives in his own house in Valleyfield. I want to know whether he is allowed to live in Valleyfield by permission of the Minister.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He must be allowed, or else he would not do it.

Mr. BERGERON. Then what becomes of the house which was built for the superintendent?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The house is there still.

Mr. BERGERON. What about the rent which is generally charged to the superintendent for that house?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the hon. gentleman wants me to say whether there is a probability of Mr. Beique returning to this House at an early day, I would rather be inclined to think that he may do so. He had a house of his own after his removal. He naturally looked up a place of residence, and if he was living in a house when we reappointed him, he was living in the house he had removed to after his dismissal, and he continued there, and I believe he is there now. But I would not be surprised if he moved into the new house in Valleyfield; and if he does so, I presume that will be agreeable to my hon. friend.

Mr. BERGERON. No, I have no interest in it. I am not in charge of the canal. I am only asking whether this $300 which are retained from the superintendent's salary for a house, is made up to him.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think it is likely he will occupy it.

Mr. BERGERON. When he was appointed it must have been understood that he would remain in his own house.

Mr. BERGERON.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is no arrangement that he must permanently remain there.

Mr. BERGERON. What is his salary today?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. $1,400.

Williamsburg Canal—To provide for a gratuity, equal to three months' salary as collector of canal tolls, to George Reid, late collector, whose services were dispensed with..... $187 50

Mr. BRODER. Is there another person appointed to the position formerly occupied by Mr. Reid? I understand Dr. Williams was appointed as collector and paymaster. I would like to know at what salary.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There were two persons employed on that canal, and the services of Mr. Reid were dispensed with. No one has been appointed in his place. I am not aware of any one named Williams being appointed. If he is employed there, it is not by the department.

Mr. BRODER. I want to ask the Minister about the lockmaster at Morrisburg lock, Mr. Casselman. He was appointed in 1873, and was dismissed last fall very summarily. Afterwards he received a letter from the department saying he was reinstated, although there was another man put in his place. He went back to the lock, and was informed from the department that he was to be under the control of the newly appointed lockmaster, but that he would be at the same salary he had been drawing as lockmaster. Since then they have put him in as lock labourer, and while they claimed he was too old to be a lockmaster, they put him in as a lock labourer, and have given him a third man as assistant. There are now three men on the lock as labourers. This man so far has had no satisfactory reply from the department as to his superannuation. Is it the intention of the department to deprive this man of his rights of superannuation after he has paid into the fund since 1873? Or is he to be lowered to the rank of lock labourer and lose his rights of superannuation? I think this man has been harshly dealt with. I would like to know that his rights will be properly respected. Perhaps the Minister is not aware of all the facts.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I had a good deal of correspondence with Mr. Casselman, in which he is asking for superannuation. I have no wish to deprive him of the right of superannuation when the time comes that it may be necessary to superannuate him, but we have not thought it necessary to superannuate him yet.

Mr. BRODER. I understand he occupies a lower position now and is no longer lockmaster.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He is receiving the same salary.

Mr. BRODER. He is no longer lockmaster, and I believe obtains a less salary, and that will affect his superannuation.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He is getting exactly the same salary as before. If there has been anything done that would affect his superannuation rights to which he is entitled, I will see that it is adjusted.

Mr. BRODER. I am glad to hear that statement made by the hon. Minister. The man is ready to take superannuation, as he is no longer lockmaster, but is acting under a newly appointed lockmaster, and he cannot find out the reason of his removal from his old position. He has not been receiving lockmaster's pay recently; whether he has been reinstated or not I do not know, but I accept the statement made by the hon. Minister. I desire to call the hon. Minister's attention to another case. Certain lands belonging to Thomas and Charles Corley and Mrs. Morrison have been expropriated along the canal. I understand the parties have been offered a very small compensation by the Government. Access to the St. Lawrence River from their farms has been cut off, and any person can understand what that means when the people have a large herd of cattle which hitherto had been able to go to the river and drink at leisure. In my opinion and in the opinion of the people in the locality, they have not been offered sufficient compensation for their land. The offer made by the department was in such form that it must either be accepted by them, or they must fight the Government. The Minister will, I hope, treat them fairly, and I bring the matter to his attention and hope their claim will be fairly met.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have no disposition to keep from these people anything to which they are entitled. The valuator of the department has been employed in this locality for many years, and his instructions are whenever reasonable terms can be obtained to come to an understanding with the owners. I have always found that he has treated the people reasonably and even liberally, and I do not think he is likely to overlook the special position of these men. The people usually are not contented with the valuator's estimate unless it is a liberal one. No inference can be drawn that because the offer has been refused, a liberal offer has not been made to these people, but I will ask the valuator whether he has taken into account the water front privileges to which my attention has been drawn.

Mr. BRODER. I have not stated that these people were unfairly dealt with, but I think, taking into consideration the circumstances, they deserve more liberal treatment than some other cases.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I desire to refer for a moment again to the Reid case. I should like the Minister of Railways and Canals to give me a definite answer tomorrow on two points: first, whether Dr. Williams has not been actually engaged in collecting canal tolls; and second, whether it is the intention of the Minister to fill the place Reid formerly held?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I may say now that no appointment has been made in Reid's place; Dr. Williams, I am informed, is not on the pay roll.

Mr. BRITTON. In regard to the case of Reid and Ross, the principle seems to have been adopted by the Minister of Railways that three months' gratuity is to be given when services are dispensed with. Last year I called attention to the case of Dickey, superintendent of one of the divisions of the canal, and my recollection is that he did not receive the amount of the gratuity.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He was allowed it.

Expenses of investigations on Government railways and canals..... $2,500

Mr. INGRAM. Perhaps the hon. Minister will explain this item.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The item is to cover expenses connected with investigations. It is required to cover expenses incurred, although the amounts are not fully adjusted. I think the amount will not all be required.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). What were the investigations?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There were cases of employees interfering in elections.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). And these investigations have cost $2,500.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not quite. I am asking for this sum to settle claims when they have been adjusted by the Department of Justice.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). It seems very strange that the Minister has not concluded these investigations.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They are not all concluded.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). If so, they will probably be continued two or three years longer. I think we ought to have full particulars of the amount already expended in that direction when we are asked to pay this $2,500 to compensate persons who in many cases I fear the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) thinks he is indebted to for political services rendered.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Can the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) tell the names of those who conducted the investigations?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Hon. gentlemen opposite I think are in possession of returns which give all the information and the returns will show that quite a number of investigations have necessarily been held. Under our arrangement with the association of employees on the railway we were to hold those investigations in a somewhat formal way. I do not mean "our" arrangement, but I mean a Government arrangement entered into as early as 1893. It was then agreed between the department on the one hand and the associated employees on the other, that removals would not take place of officials in certain classes until after an investigation had taken place and a report of the evidence made showing the result of the inquiry. Charges have been preferred against quite a few employees in the service for active interference in elections in various parts of the country through which the Intercolonial Railway runs, and investigations have been held in order to meet the requirements of the arrangement I have referred to. One or two of these are still pending, there is certainly one which is pending, if I recollect aright, and there is one which has only recently been concluded, and the bills have gone to the Department of Justice. Some of the bills have not been fully closed and I require this amount to close the matter up.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I do not in any sense wish to waste time, but I am sorry that I cannot consider that a satisfactory answer. The Minister must know that we are not supposed to carry around reports of returns brought down to the House, as to a number of officials into whose conduct investigation has been held. The case he cited as to the arrangement in 1893 between the employees and the Government could have no connection with investigations held by the Department in the case of officials against whom charges of a partisan character have been made.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Oh, yes.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Well, I have no doubt the hon. gentleman has appointed his own political friends to conduct this investigation.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I certainly have not appointed my political opponents.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I do not think you would. Therefore, his political friends must be paid, and we have a right to know how they are to be paid.

Mr. INGRAM. This to my mind is a most extraordinary item. As I understand it the general manager and superintendent of that railway are paid high salaries for the purpose of conducting the business of the railway, and a portion of their duties would be to see that the employees carry out the instructions of the company, and if they fail to carry out the instructions of the company, the railway company, whether controlled by the Government or by officials subject to the orders of the Government, have the duty to investigate the misconduct of employees. I do not see why $2,500 should be paid for that purpose. When the employees disobey any regulation of the railway company they are called to headquarters to have their cases investigated. There is no cost attached at all, and if they have not done their duty they are simply dismissed. If this item is for the purpose of paying political partisans to hold investigations in order that they may receive $10 a day in compensation for being political heelers, then it is not in the interests of the Government or the railway. I never heard a worse defence of an item in the Estimates than the Minister has given to the House. If these men were dismissed for partisan purposes let the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) say so, if they were dismissed for violating the rules of the company let us know it, and we will be able to distinguish the difference between the two.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Was there a man named Ross employed to investigate these charges against these employees?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes; there was a gentleman of that name.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Is any of this amount to pay him or to pay the witnesses, or to pay those who were employed in connection with the evidence?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think a portion of it would probably go in that way.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Was anything paid Mr. Ross or the witnesses, or those employed in connection with the evidence?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not a particle of doubt that there have been payments made to Mr. Ross.

Mr. McDOUGALL. How much?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot speak from memory.

An hon. MEMBER. Who is Ross?

Mr. McDOUGALL. I do not know the man at all; but I am informed that he gave a roaming commission to some party heelers to go around the country and see if they could get any evidence against employees, and cheques were sent from the railway authorities to pay these people $5 a day, I believe, for going around the country to hunt up evidence. One man in particular I know who did this, succeeded in getting evidence to remove another man, and he got his position.

Mr. MONTAGUE. This is one of the items with respect to which we should have the details. If it were a vote for 1898-99 I could understand the Minister giving an indefinite answer, but he does not pretend that any large proportion of this is going to be spent during the present month of June at the end of which these Estimates expire. This money has been expended and in all fairness the Minister ought to be able to give us the details for which the money is required.

An hon. MEMBER. And the object.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The object will be seen from the items. The investigation of the conduct of employees in connection with the ordinary running of the railway does not cost any cash, for the employees case is investigated at the headquarters of the superintendent, and there is no cost, except, perhaps, the loss of time of the man should he be found innocent of the charge. This is evidently for investigations into partisan conduct. This is a very disputed point in the House, and it is one on which the Minister should be prepared to give information in detail.

Mr. HAGGART. Particularly as it is altogether unnecessary. The Minister does not require the report of a commission for the purpose of discharging an offensive partisan, nor do any of his colleagues in the House. All they require is the statement of a member of Parliament on his honour, that a certain person has been guilty of offensive partisanship, and the person is dismissed at once. There is no inquiry made into the man's conduct, to ascertain whether he is guilty or not. Is it because there are not sufficient accusations against parties from the supporters of the hon. gentleman behind him, that he must appoint a commission for the purpose of fishing out others?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the hon. gentleman allow this item to stand, and give particulars as to what parties these sums are to be paid to, how much is to be paid to each per day, what expenses are to be paid, and what business each is engaged in?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think it is unreasonable for the hon. gentleman to ask me to furnish particulars of the expenditures that have been made this year, and I shall be glad to furnish that information. But there are some accounts which have not yet been paid, some which are coming in. One rather important account is going before the Justice Department now.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman can give us these details, and we will be satisfied.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not want to treat these claims or accounts as settled, as though I was going to pay them in full, so that I am not able to state what these bills amount to.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How much has been paid?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. $865 this year.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And $1,700 is to be paid?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, may be paid.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How much are the total claims that are now in?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There are claims amounting to over $1,200, and there is one more that I know of coming in this year.

Mr. FOSTER. How much has been paid from the beginning altogether?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The accounts will show.

Mr. FOSTER. There is another question which I think the hon. gentleman should be prepared to answer, that is, whether he proposes to change the system of employing these men and certifying to his own accounts. When, for instance, accounts are sent into the proper certifying officers, and they report that they cannot pay them because there are no certificates attached, does the Minister propose to solve the difficulty by writing his own order to pay, and dispensing with the proper vouchers? This is the way it was done in the case of Mr. Wilson, who was a friend and heeler for the hon. gentleman for many years.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. You must be more respectful to the judges.

Mr. FOSTER. That is not my fault; the appointers of judges should be more careful as to whom they place on the bench. Mr. Wilson was an old worker for my hon. friend, and he was appointed as a commissioner. The hon. gentleman left himself plenty of leeway when he put his Order in Council through the Council. He did not put it through as the other Ministers did, saying how much he proposed to pay to his commissioners; but he put through a peculiar kind of Order in Council, which allowed him to pay not more than $25 per day—giving him as Minister not a definite instruction from Council; but giving him a range between $1 per day and $25 per day that he could pay his commissioners. The hon. gentleman appointed Mr. Wilson as one of his commissioners, and Mr. Wilson went to work and did the business, he was required to do. Mr. Wilson sent in no accounts in detail at all. He gave no intimation as to where he sat or what cases he tried. He simply sent in an account for a lump sum for his pay at $20 per day, and for certain expenses, to the amount of $800 or thereabouts. In the regular order of things, his account went to the proper certifying officer. There was nothing to which the officer could certify. There were no attendant vouchers, and no items as to the work he did or the days on which he did the work. The certifying officer, of course, could not certify to the account. It was paid, however, because the Minister cut the gordian knot by simply writing his initials across the bill, and Mr. Wilson's account was paid. That is not the way in which accounts are certified; that has never been the rule, and is not the rule in the departments at the present time. The amount that was paid to Mr. Wilson at last was not $20 a day, which he thought he ought to have, but $15, which the Minister thought was a very good wage for him, and it was. The Minister employed other lawyers, and he used his right of selection as to the salary to be paid them per day, paying them $10 per day. They were obliged, however, to give the items in their accounts—the days on which they held investigations, the places where they held them, the witnesses they employed, the fees they paid the witnesses with the vouchers of the witnesses who had received those fees. In Mr. Wilson's case, although he tried a great many cases, I am told, we do not know the number of cases he tried, nor do we know anything about the witnesses. We had no vouchers from him; there was nothing of details from him; there was nothing at all but a lump sum and the certificate of the Minister himself. I say that as long as you attempt to run things in that way, you are open to just and fair criticism; and, so far as I am concerned, if this sum of $2,500 is to be paid in that way, without vouchers, certificates, or anything of the kind, I do not think this House ought to vote it. The Minister had a case before him in which he ought to have been especially careful to have the vouchers—the case of his own appointee, his own intimate friend and political worker, whom he paid in that way, by appointing him on a commission. He should have been especially careful, when it was a matter all in the family, to require this man to have his vouchers like other workers. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) and the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) had investigations, and in those cases there were vouchers, showing the dates, the payments to witnesses and constables, and so forth. These men worked under the common rule, which is the only safe rule; but with Mr. Wilson, the Minister's own particular pet, the hon. gentleman did not require him to put in any vouchers, but paid him a lump sum. This may be a business Government, but there is not a man on that side who can say that that is a proper way in which business should be done. The Minister would have consulted his own interests if he had carried out the wholesome rule which requires vouchers.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The statement which the hon. gentleman has just made would be more valuable as a criticism if he had given a full statement of the facts and had adhered to such facts. In the first place, the hon. gentleman displayed a degree of questionable taste in referring to Mr. Wilson as a party heeler. Of course, the expression could only be used in a contemptuous way, and I think it was quite unfitting in the hon. gentleman, who would himself claim to be treated with respect, to withhold the same measure of respect from a gentleman who stands in every particular just as well among the people who know him as does the hon. gentleman himself. Mr. Wilson is a gentleman who occupies a very reputable position in the community where he resides. He is a large practitioner in the law. He has for many years been a member of the provincial legislature, and in every way has always conducted himself so as to merit the esteem and confidence of the community, and because he is a follower of the Liberal party, and a colleague and supporter of mine in politics, is no reason why the hon. gentleman should assume to refer to him in these contemptuous terms. I think, therefore, that the hon. gentleman's criticism with regard to Mr. Wilson was, at the outset, tinctured with a bias and prejudice which would essentially colour any conclusion he would arrive at. Mr. Wilson's claim did not go to the Department of Justice, if my memory serves me right, and was not refused by that department at all. It was the first case which arose in relation to these investigations. He was deputed by me as a gentleman in every way qualified to go to Moncton and hold a series of inquiries it was necessary to hold there. The condition of things which existed at Moncton with regard to the Intercolonial Railway was a scandal and a disgrace, and it became necessary that the facts be ascertained in the most formal manner and on oath, and Mr. Wilson went there and discharged that duty. I do not know that any person who was present during the examination that took place had reason to reflect upon the manner in which Mr. Wilson conducted the investigation. When his reports came before me, they simply confirmed my knowledge of the facts as to the length of time he was occupied in the investigations. He was at Moncton away from Home and business for many days. The evidence was taken down in shorthand by an officer whose name was Robb, I think, and who was a reliable person. That examination is in the department, and the record shows the time and occasions when Mr. Wilson was engaged in Moncton on these inquiries. I did not require to have any more evidence than these documents to prove the correctness of Mr. Wilson's bill. I felt that $15 a day was a reasonable amount to allow him. It was a matter largely in my discretion, because I could form the better judgment as to what his services were worth. Knowing the time he was there, I allowed him his Bill less $5 per day, which I deducted from the charge he made. There was another item, and only one, which was open at all to criticism in any way, and that was $55 for his hotel board while there. I knew that in all reason that was a fair and proper Bill. In strictness it might have been as well for him to send the Bill along, but I knew that $55 for the length of time he was there attending the investigations was not an excessive sum, and therefore did not require him to send the bill. There was a small sum of $4 paid for one railway fare, which I did happen to know that he himself paid. I procured passes on the Intercolonial for the other trip, and as to the fare to and from Fredericton, where he resides, that amount was properly stated in the bill, and he could not have had vouchers for it, if I had gone the length of insisting that he should furnish vouchers to establish facts with which I was already familiar.

Mr. INGRAM. As I understand, the customs Department, the Post Office Department and every other department of this Government, a person can get into by performing political work. But I had yet to learn that that was to be a qualification for employment on the Intercolonial. There has been an agitation in this country in favour of the Government owning the railways and controlling the telegraph lines, but if the policy of the Government is to be on the lines stated by the hon. gentleman, then the sooner the people abandon the idea of Government control of railways and telegraph lines the better. I find here that Mr. Wilson was called to Moncton to investigate into the partisan conduct of employees of the Intercolonial, for which he was to receive the sum of $20 or $25 a day. Moncton is the headquarters of the Intercolonial, where Mr. Pottinger and other officers are stationed, and it seems to me that if there is an order given to the employees on the Government railways forbidding them taking part in any political work, then it is within the power of the officials at Moncton to enforce that order and dispense with the services of the men who have broken it. You will never conduct a railway properly if you will bring in outsiders to hold investigations into the conduct of employees. What practical knowledge can a lawyer have of the requirements of a railway employee? If you want to get rid of the expense of holding such investigations and you have not the kind of rule I have mentioned in the rule-book, then insert such a rule, that any employee engaged in party politics will be dismissed. Your manager and superintendents will then be in a position to dismiss the men who violate the rule, and it will not cost the country a cent. Neither the present nor any other head of the department can control the Intercolonial to the advantage of the country, if you are going to continue the course you are now pursuing. I am not condemning the Minister for inaugurating a new idea, but I am condemning the system as it has existed for years. I believe that partisanship has been an influence on the railway for years to the disadvantage of the people and of those who are charged to conduct the Government railways. If you take away from the officers their right to control the men, the moment you restrict them in the management of the affairs of the road, you begin upon a course that is not in the interest of the country. I find here that Mr. William Wilson has put in his bill:

To 36 days' inquiry under commission to examine into and report upon cases of partisanship against officials of the Intercolonial Railway at Moncton, at $20 per day	$720
---	-------

I can imagine superintendents and managers of railways throughout the country meeting a statement of that kind—that a lawyer who has no practical knowledge of railway matters is engaged at $20 a day to inquire into the conduct of employees on the railway. The further items of this Bill are:

Expenses at hotel at Moncton.....	$55
Railway fare to and from St. John, 6 trips at $3.....	18

Imagine a gentleman being engaged for the purpose of going to Moncton to investigate matters connected with the railway, and he paying his fare over that very railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman is astray. If he was better acquainted with the geography of that country he would know that the Intercolonial does not run from St. John to Fredericton.

Mr. INGRAM. And I want to tell my hon. friend (Mr. Blair)—whether he has had railway experience or not I do not know—that among railway companies, if they require to send a man for their own purposes over a neighbouring railway, they ask for transportation.

One fare, Moncton and return.....	$ 4 00
Coaching	3 50
Hotel expenses in St. John.....	5 50
Drafting two reports, $50 each.....	100 00

The total is $906.05. Imagine other railway companies conducting their business on that line. They would not have a dividend once in twenty years. I am not surprised that the Government railways are going behind from year to year. I want to tell my hon. friend, as one who has had some opportunities of observing how other railways are conducted in this country as well as some of the railways of the United States, that this is really the worst I have ever noticed. I would ask the hon. gentleman to take courage and inaugurate a different system. Let him entrust his officials with greater power, and if they do not discharge their duty satisfactorily, let him dismiss them and get others who will. I am not speaking as a partisan in this case, but I am stating what I believe to be in the interest of the people as a whole and pointing out a policy that will bring about thorough discipline on the railway. The other evening I spoke about gentlemen representing constituencies through which this railway runs. I know that they must be annoyed by these people asking employment on the road, and I can imagine one of these gentlemen going to the officials and begging them to give John Brown a position, because Brown is pestering him to death. Then, again, perhaps my hon. friend from Inverness (Mr. McLennan), if the road runs through his constituency, goes to the superintendent or general manager and says that John Brown has been a partisan and has been doing all he could against him and he wants him dismissed. These influences at present work from the Liberal side. But suppose we have a change of Government and the Conservatives, returning to power do the same thing. I say it would be wrong, and you will never have discipline so long as the road is managed on that basis. Let the hon. gentleman issue a rule instructing the officials that, so long as an employee is capable he shall be retained in the service of the department while his services are required and there is work for him to do, and that in future letters of recommendation outside of the officials of the company will receive no attention. If he will do this he will save himself trouble, and, he may have the satisfaction, after the new system has had time to show its benefits, of showing a surplus on the year's operations.

Mr. BERGERON. Although it is not quite in line with my hon. friend's (Mr. Ingram's) speech, I desire to make one or two observations. Not much of this money used for paying a commission of investigation has been spent in my county. I do not complain of that, as it has meant a saving to the country. Officials are dismissed anyhow, and the investigation commission is merely an additional expense. But, in the county of Beauharnois there was an employee, a very able man who had the best certificates from his superiors at the department at Ottawa, and who received a very high salary, and he was dismissed purely and simply upon the ipse dixit of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte). I refer to the case of Mr. Danis. He was dismissed on the ground of being an offensive partisan and he was refused an investigation. He was replaced by a gentleman by the name of Brodeur. This gentleman acts for the Department of Railways and Canals, for the Department of Customs and for the Department of Inland Revenue. I have it upon very reliable authority that Mr. Brodeur is the editor of "Le Progres de Valleyfield," a Liberal paper. I do not complain of the paper, because it has been fighting me for twenty years and has never done me any harm. But I desire to draw the attention of the Minister of Railways and Canals to the fact that, having dismissed one man on the ground of offensive partisanship, he employs a partisan to replace him.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) is wrong.

Mr. BERGERON. I would ask the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals to take a note of this and let me know at the first sitting whether this man is editing this paper or not.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Oh, oh.

Mr. BERGERON. That is a fair question.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am afraid I cannot undertake to do that.

Mr. BERGERON. Here was a man dismissed for offensive partisanship, although I denied it. An investigation was refused. The man who takes his place is acting in a most offensively partisan way. If the hon. Minister could read the articles that appear against me in the paper he would know that I do not characterize the case too strongly. The hon. gentleman says he cannot do what I ask. He can do it if he wants to.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Let the hon. gentleman make a statement.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works may be sincere in what he says, but he does not know. Now, I have put the matter before the Minister of Railways and Canals and the House in a very fair way, and I will take the means of proving that this man is doing what I accuse him of doing.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am sure my hon. friend is mistaken. Somebody told me a short time ago that Mr. Brodeur was editing the "Progrès de Valleyfield." I inquired about it, and was told that it was not the case at all. If my hon. friend is in a position to give evidence, he had better do so.

Mr. BERGERON. I will make this offer to my hon. friend. If I prove to him that this man is editing that paper, will the hon. gentleman treat him as he treated his predecessor?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will answer my hon. friend when he has made his proof. The hon. gentleman is not in a position to prove what he says.

Mr. BERGERON. I ask the same question of the Minister of Railways and Canals.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have no hesitation in saying that if the hon. gentleman furnishes to me clear evidence that this gentleman is editing the "Progrès de Valleyfield," I will feel it my duty to consider the case.

Mr. HAGGART. I would ask the Minister of Railways and Canals, when his department comes up for consideration again, to bring down to the House any correspondence between His Excellency the Governor in Council and any member of the Council in reference to dismissals for political partisanship, or any recommendation that has been made by the Council to his Excellency.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. So far as my knowledge goes, I can furnish the hon. gentleman now all the information I have. It is to the effect that there has been no correspondence, I have had none, seen none, and heard of none.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Before we pass from this department, I would like to call the attention of the Minister to a return which was brought down a short time ago giving the names of employees relieved from duty by dismissal or otherwise from the Welland Canal and the Welland Canal feeder, from the 1st of July, 1896, to the 1st of March, 1898, giving years of service, retiring allowance, and names of newly appointed employees. I see by that return, which bears the signature of the Secretary of State, that the hon. gentleman has removed no less than 147 individuals who were employed there under the late Minister of Railways and Canals, and he has lessened the burden to the public by appointing in their place, 159. I congratulate the hon. gentleman upon the master stroke of economy which he has exercised in this regard.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I feel much flattered that I should have earned the encomiums of the hon. gentleman. I may say at the same time that if there are names of 159 men, I think it will be found that some names have been entered twice. It cannot be that 159 are employed to do the work that 114 were doing.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am astonished that this list was not a little larger. I know there are three or four where there used to be only one.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My deputy says there is no difference.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Well, I know better than the deputy. I know when the hon. gentleman was constructing the bridge last year, and when the main road was blocked for a few days and it was necessary to adopt a roundabout road through a little piece of woods, the hon. gentleman was exceedingly kind to us, and I appreciate it very much, because at one point when we did not know where to turn, he had two men at the corner to tell us, and they did their duty manfully and well.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Will the hon. gentleman tell me what point that was?

Mr. MONTAGUE. That was in connection with the erection of the Silver Creek bridge. I may say that we have a spectacle there that we never had before in the history of public works in connection with the Welland Canal feeder. We have had a superintendent there who is a very excellent man, he is not only a good workman and a conscientious man in every particular—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Do you mean Mr. Thompson?

Mr. MONTAGUE. No, I mean Mr. Scott; I would say the same in regard to Mr. Thompson. Mr. Scott is in charge of the work there, he has had a large number of men engaged by the day doing work in connection with repairs. He has always selected his men, year after year, without any interference from any man. Mr. Scott is in sympathy with hon. gentlemen opposite, he voted against me, or he opposed me, I do not know whether he voted at all. But we now have the spectacle presented of no man being able to secure employment on the Welland Canal feeder or construction gang, without he has the signature of three Liberals who form the Liberal committee in that district. I am stating what I know positively. I do not get this from Mr. Scott, I do not get it from any Conservative who was ever employed on the works. It is as common talk as the debates are in this House.

Mr. McCLEARY. I want to remind the Minister of Railways and Canals of a discussion he and I had last session in reference to dismissals on the Welland Canal. When I intimated that 100 men had been dismissed from the canal, the hon. gentleman said there was not half that number. The return says there were 147. Not only ought there to be some explanation made for dismissing these men, but I think the Minister of Railways and Canals has not been at all careful as to the men who have been appointed to take the important places of the officials that have been dismissed on the Welland Canal. Although there were 147 men dismissed, I venture to say but one investigation was held as to the reasons for dismissals. That investigation was held in connection with the foreman mechanic, Mr. Walton. The only charge, I believe, proved against him was that his daughter, in company with a number of ladies in the town in which I live, during the election of 1896, was on a platform when the then Premier of the Dominion, Sir Charles Tupper, was there, and she read an address that was presented by the ladies of the town. I am sure he was dismissed not because of any partisan action of his, but simply because the political heelers in the county of Welland had been pestering the Minister for months to do what he did. That he was an efficient man no one could doubt; that his place was filled by a man not fit for it in any way whatever can not be denied. A change has been made since, and a better man has been placed in the position. One man appointed as divisional superintendent whose qualification is that he was an ex-hotel-keeper. I know one case where a young man was placed in an important position who had never done anything but run a liquor store. In another case, where the foreman mechanic at Port Dalhousie was dismissed, the man sent to fill his place was a horse-shoer. Imagine a man appointed to take charge of thirty-five or forty mechanics, with a large planing mill and all the requisite machinery in the building, without any more ability to perform the work than a page in this House. I do not so much blame the Minister, but I blame the practice under which this can be done. I want to remind the Minister of a little debate we had last session, when he denied that upwards of 100 men had been dismissed. I looked upon the return, and I found that 159 men took the place formerly filled by 147, and I know of my own knowledge of several men who have been employed whose names did not appear on the list.

Mr. GILLIES. The Minister will remember that I asked him a question respecting a man employed as lockmaster on the St. Peter's Canal. The question I put to the Minister was :

1. When was John D. Matheson, late lockmaster of the St. Peter's Canal, appointed to that position ?

His answer was that he was appointed in December, 1892.

2. Was he appointed under an Order in Council ?

The Minister's answer was, Yes.

3. Were his duties performed efficiently ?

The Minister's answer was, Yes.

4. Was he dismissed, and if so, why ?

Mr. McCLEARY.

The Minister's answer was that he was dismissed for political partisanship.

5. Were any complaints or charges made against him ; and if so, by whom ?

The Minister's answer was that complaints were laid by E. T. Flynn. The Minister should have looked very carefully into the case when the complaint came before him from this particular source. Mr. Flynn was the Liberal candidate at the last election. He conducted a petition against me in a most partisan manner, although he was at the time an officer of the present Government. Last April he was appointed collector of customs at Arichat at $800 a year. He worked on the case for months against me, as he deposed at the time of the petition, although at that time he was engaged as a Government officer. The Minister dismissed John D. Matheson, one of the best officers in the service. To this statement every officer in his own department will agree and subscribe. He is no doubt aware from the slight evidence produced against Matheson that there was no ground for the complaint nor any cause for his dismissal. He took the responsibility of dismissing Matheson, although there was no more efficient public servant in the service, and this man from his appointment in 1892 down to the day of his dismissal had never taken part in politics. The Minister sent a gentleman named Patterson into the county to investigate complaints made against Matheson. I desire to know whether any part of this sum of $2,500 is intended to pay Patterson for services rendered in holding the investigation, and if so, what amount. I give the Minister notice now that I will deal with this matter again in the manner that it deserves. On the St. Peter's Canal there were seven hands employed, besides the lockmaster. They were Daniel B. Stone, Neil McMullen, Edward Linloff and K. D. Mackenzie, whose positions were permanent. The others did not occupy the same positions, but were temporarily employed, their names being Neil Mackenzie, Kenneth McKay and Damien Beranger. I asked the Minister if any complaints had been made against Stone. He replied that Stone was laid off and another man had taken his place as the service was being reorganized. That was not the case. The Minister's answer was incorrect, because the man was not laid off but was dismissed. He was a most efficient man; there were complaints made against him, but they emanated from political partisan sources. The same remark applies to McMullen. Linloff was dismissed without a moment's notice; he is a man with a large family, who was appointed in 1882 or 1883, and had built a small home there. He is a man well qualified for the position of lockmaster. He is able, honest, sober and trustworthy. I think the man voted for me; but when I ran my last election I never asked a single man employed on the canal how he was going to vote. Linloff was a permanent employee. When I asked about his removal, the Minister told me that Linloff was simply laid off, and Murphy took his place. These three permanent employees were dismissed without any investigation being held and a gross injustice was done them. As to the other three men who were temporarily appointed, it was very wrong to lay them off, because they were efficient, sober and attentive in every respect, but they were not appointed by Order in Council, and were simply on during the navigation season. The others were very harshly dealt with and how the Minister came to dismiss them I do not understand. I ask: Is any portion of this vote intended to pay the investigator, and if so, how much? Why were Stone, McMullen and Linloff dismissed in the summary manner they were?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will look a little more fully into the matter but subject to correction my answer is, that no portion of this sum will go in that way. If on further inquiry by my deputy he finds I am in error in that I will correct it to-morrow. As to the other question the answers I gave to my hon. friend (Mr. Gillies) were given as received by me, and the hon. gentleman is wrong in assuming that they were in a permanent position.

Mr. GILLIES. I am right.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The Deputy Minister says to the contrary. He says they are dropped off for a while and a period intervenes and we may or may not continue them when the canal is open.

Mr. GILLIES. The Minister will find that I am absolutely correct, and that he is entirely wrong, and that the Deputy Minister should consult his record more carefully if he gave the information now stated to the House. Stone, McMullen and Linloff, as well as those who took their places were permanently on the canal from the first of January right up to the 31st of December. They were there to attend the locks and to keep the ice clear, and to attend to other matters during the winter. The Minister should know all this before attempting to deal with this question. Neil McKenzie, Kenneth McKay and Damien Beranger were on temporarily during the summer or navigation season. I cannot imagine why the Minister treated these men as he did. If the Minister looked into the matter with the care that a gentleman of his experience and position should, he would have hesitated a long time to deal with these men as he did. The treatment of Mr. Matheson, the lockmaster, was so harsh that I cannot do justice to it at the present, but will refer to it at a future time. The Minister will yet find out that this outrageous wrong will not be permitted to go unexposed. Upon this he can rely, and he knows me well enough to know that the undertaking will be carried out. I believe that the Minister acted in this way on information communicated to him too impulsively by E. P. Flynn and other irresponsible persons who never did any good whatever to the party of which he is so distinguished an ornament.

Mr. CLARKE. In view of the disposition shown to-night by the Minister (Mr. Blair) to investigate the case presented to him by the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) may we not appeal to him, in view of the statements made by the members for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) and Welland (Mr. McCleary) to cause an investigation to be made into the Welland Canal? It is a perfect farce to have reports made to this House from time to time that men have been discharged from the public service because they have been alleged to be violent partisans, if it is a fact that no men can get employment on these public works unless they are recommended as violent partisans by supporters of hon. gentlemen opposite. It is a disgrace to the administration of affairs in Canada if the statements made by the hon. members for Haldimand and Welland cannot be contradicted. It has not been alleged so far as I have heard that the labourers who were employed from year to year on the Welland Canal acted as violent partisans. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Montague) is prepared to substantiate his statement that no person can get employment on that canal, no matter how capable he may be, unless his recommendation is signed by three well-known Liberal partisans. I appeal to the sense of fair-play of the Minister, that if there is any of this $2,500 left after paying the claims already put in, he will devote it to paying a commissioner to ascertain whether this disgraceful state of things exists on the Welland Canal, that has been related to-night.

Mr. INGRAM. Is it not a fact that the officials of the Intercolonial Railway have complained to the Minister or his deputy on account of their freedom of action being interfered with in the matter of politics?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not informed if there has been anything very marked or very recent in that direction.

Mr. INGRAM. Has there been any such complaint to the Minister or his deputy since the Minister took office?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The officers of the Intercolonial Railway?

Mr. INGRAM. Yes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There have been no such complaint. There is one thing that I have insisted upon and that is that upon the Intercolonial Railway the men and the officers should not be restrained in their freedom of action in any way. I have given the employees of the road to understand, in the most clear manner, doing so particularly during the by-elections which have taken place in those districts which are traversed by the Intercolonial Railway, that the department would not permit, sanction, or countenance, in any shape or form, any interference with their freedom of action. I have done that in the most explicit way.

Mr. INGRAM. Or the officials ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Or the officials either.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I suppose you have given the same orders on the Welland Canal ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have not had any by-elections there.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Because, having dismissed all Conservatives, you ought to give to the gentlemen who have been appointed freedom of action.

Mr. McDUGALL. The hon. Minister, I understand, created a new position on the railway last season in the work of ballasting. I know of my own knowledge two instances in which the men had nothing to do but to select men according to their politics for employment on the repairing of the track. That was on the Cape Breton branch of the Intercolonial Railway. These men were employed for no other purpose, and did nothing but go around with their hands in their pockets, pointing their fingers at the men who ought to be refused employment because they were not supporters of the Liberal party, and those who ought to be employed because they were.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What are the names of these men ?

Mr. McDUGALL. The name of one of them is Neil McNeill. He was employed in the county of Victoria. The name of the other is Daniel McDougall, filling the same kind of position in the county of Cape Breton. On the very work where he was employed, the foreman had to do the work with an insufficient staff, because they could not get Liberals enough in that particular district, and they would not take Tories. A whole train was employed doing half work, because they could not get enough Liberals.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In what district is that ?

Mr. McDUGALL. That is the district between Grand Narrows and Sydney.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is getting better now.

Mr. BLAIR.

Mr. FOSTER. I have a very sad case, which came under my notice to-day. This is the case of a railway porter named Pierre Michaud, who has been employed as such at the station of Trois Pistoles for twenty-five years—in fact, ever since the road has been built. He has used up the greater part of his strength in the company's service, and last winter he had his leg broken while unloading freight from the cars. This accident laid him up and has made him very poor. The only thing against him is that he objected to the station being turned into a political committee room. He has been thrown out without any consideration. The other case is that of Fred. Belanger, track foreman on this section. He has been in that position for twelve years, and was recommended to the place by the Grand Trunk Railway because of his experience. He has been dismissed, and his place has been taken by a lad eighteen years of age, who never worked on a railway. I hope my hon. friend will take note of these two cases. Before I sit down, I will make one protest against the labouring men in the employ of the Minister on Canals or on railroads being intimidated from any exercise of their political rights as voters. I do not think that is fair to the labouring men.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We all agree to that.

Mr. FOSTER. I believe that the labouring men have a grievance in that respect. Men who are wealthy and have a position can protect themselves, but the great mass of labourers in the country are intimidated by the fear of losing their situations, and consequently their freedom of political action is interfered with.

Mr. CLANCY. Perhaps the Minister of Railways and Canals can give the information which he promised the other evening with regard to the dismissal of these coloured porters on the Intercolonial Railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I can give the information up to date. I have a letter which I received this morning from Mr. Archibald, who is in Montreal. Mr. Archibald states that there was one, and only one, of the coloured porters who was not continued in or had not the offer of being continued in the employ, and that was one who had not given satisfaction in the service, and who could not be retained. I presume that Mr. Archibald will not be accused of having any political bias in his conduct. He has been in the service a long time, and is known not to be in sympathy with the present Government or the Liberal party, and I take it that the statement which he makes in this regard will be accepted by my hon. friends opposite. He gives the names of the different porters, and states that when it became necessary to reduce the staff in connection with the sleeping car service, and to employ one person instead of two when the slack time came on, instead of the coloured porters being dismissed, they were retained in the employ, and were given practically as good salaries as they had been receiving before. A coloured man who is taken into the service, if he has had no experience, starts at $20 a month; if he has had some experience before, he starts at $25; and $35 is the maximum salary allowed. When their services as porters was not necessary in connection with the sleeping cars, they were offered, and most of them accepted, employment as waiters or otherwise, and were offered salaries of $20 a month and their board; so that they were doing very well.

They are down for re-employment as soon as we take on the summer service, when we shall require two men in a car instead of one as during the winter season. There was one coloured man whose name has been mentioned here, Mr. Dickson, I think. He was taken in but only remained a short time in the new employment. He assured me he could do better elsewhere and he had gone elsewhere. He is now in Toronto and it was from him the letter was read the other day. The real trouble with these coloured porters is that they are in the habit of getting tips while on the sleeping car service, and their tips amount to more than their salary, so that they are better paid than any of the employees on the train. When they drop out of that they lose the tips, and their salary does not count.

Mr. McDougall. Is there not another difference, that some of them have homes of their own, and when at home the board allowance they get is of no advantage to them at all.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There would be no doubt a little difference in that respect. On the service between Halifax and Montreal they might be home a day or a good part of the day in a week, so that that would not amount to a great deal. There is no disposition on the part of Mr. Archibald or Mr. Pottinger or anybody else to pass over coloured porters, but there is every disposition to give them reasonable opportunity of employment, and when the service takes on its summer strength, some of them will be reinstated. One will not go back, but the others probably may if they desire.

Mr. CLANCY. In the meantime, the hon. Minister has not explained the statement he made the other day, that there were more coloured men employed on the Intercolonial now than at any former period. Here is something that appears rather strange. Six of those porters were employed, and in the fall, they were all either dismissed or given positions equivalent to dismissal, by that freezing out system to which my hon. friend referred. It is a well known fact that the salary of $20 per month, where they are at their own homes a great part of the time, is a very small salary, and that the men in those positions depend largely on their tips. In other words, their salaries are paid by the travelling public rather than by the railway company. It is rather strange that five out of the six—men against whom there was no complaint—were dismissed from the car service and found themselves without employment or had to take a kind of employment at such reduced rates that they were unable to live. It is unfair to say that they were offered positions, unless the positions offered were as good as the one they lost. I am afraid the hon. gentleman will have to give a better explanation than he has given so far from what appears to have been a case of drawing the coloured line. Men of that kind when dismissed find it very difficult to get employment again, because of the strong feeling against them on account of their colour. They have not the same chance in the race that other men have, and, therefore, the Government should be the more careful not to act unjustly towards them.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The item stands.

Nova Scotia—

Halifax Dominion Building—Remodelling present system of electric lighting, overhauling gas pipes, &c., re- vate of lapsed amount	$ 1,000
Windsor Public Building—Reconstruction of building destroyed by fire on 17th October, 1897 (Governor General's warrant).....	15,000
Windsor Drill Shed—Reconstruction of building destroyed by fire on 17th October, 1897 (Governor General's warrant)	3,000

Mr. FOSTER. What will the Windsor public building cost?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Fifteen thousand dollars.

Mr. FOSTER. And the Windsor drill shed?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. About $6,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Both let by contract?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, the first one by day's labour. We could not do otherwise. We were repairing walls that had been destroyed.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the population of Windsor?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. About 4,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the whole building to be built by day's labour?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have not yet made up my mind. In a month

I will see whether it is better to ask for tenders or do the work by day's labour. I have no strong leaning one way or the other.

Mr. FOSTER. This is another of the many cases in which the hon. gentleman says he does not propose or does not know that he will propose to let these things by contract. Some time or other we will have to come to the point of knowing whether the Government is going to give up the principle of building by contract.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is no use in taking that stand. If the hon. gentleman would go back to the past, he would find that the St. John's court-house, which was destroyed, was rebuilt by day's labour at an expense of $200,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Not at all.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Do not say no. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) is wrong. He paid $200,000 for the construction of a building done by day's work.

Mr. FOSTER. No.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not say no, I have the figures here. I will give them.

Mr. FOSTER. Do not get cross.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Not at all, I am very cheerful. I have a good case.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not wonder that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte) is delighted if he has a good case, for he has had a bad one for so long.

Mr. FOSTER. While my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) is looking over these figures, perhaps he will allow me to ask him a question. In what condition was this Windsor building left by the fire?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It was destroyed. Only the walls were left standing and two-thirds of the walls have to be rebuilt.

Mr. CLARKE. Was it not possible to get tenders for the reconstruction of those walls?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No.

Mr. CLARKE. Why not?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Because it was not found feasible.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) is very hard to please if he is not perfectly satisfied.

Mr. FOSTER. Did my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) want to do this work in this way in order to give work to the people of Windsor who had been burnt out?

Mr. TARTE.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We started the work as soon as possible after the fire in order to give work to them.

Mr. FOSTER. That is a reason.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. But that is not the reason for doing the work in this way. The building was destroyed to such an extent that it would be impossible to ask for tenders, because it would be impossible to ascertain the amount of damage. I sent down a very old employee of the department, an experienced man, and who reported to this effect.

Mr. MILLS. That building was entirely destroyed. I do not believe that there was one brick left upon another. The work is not a matter of repair, or even of reconstruction—it is the putting up of a new building. The giving employment to the people of which the hon. Minister has spoken was a good thing in itself, and I dare say that this House would warrant him in undertaking a part of the work by day's labour on that ground; but to say that tenders could not be asked for because proper specifications could not be made out is perfectly absurd.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Mills) knows that section of country, and, no doubt was over the ruins very shortly after the fire. He said the building was totally destroyed while the Minister would lead the committee to suppose that the building remained but needed to be rearranged, consequently, tenders could not be asked for.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I did not say that, I said the greater part had been destroyed, and there is no doubt about that. That is the reason I am asking $15,000.

Mr. FOSTER. If the building is destroyed, it is not a class of building for which he cannot give a contract if he wishes. I see he got a Governor General's warrant for a part of the cost of this building. If he did this in order to give the people employment, that would be a very good reason, but surely, the hon. gentleman will not upon reflection say that it was a class of work that he could not easily get contracts for.

Mr. TAYLOR. I see that the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Ellis) is in the House. I suppose he would be able to either sustain what the Minister says or uphold the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Mills).

Mr. ELLIS. No, I did not go over it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He would tell about the St. John custom-house.

Mr. MILLS. The injury to the Government building in the St. John fire is slight as compared with that at Windsor. This was a case of almost total destruction, but in St. John's it was not so bad as that.

Quebec—

Rimouski—Post office and custom-house, &c., to complete payments.. $1,500

Mr. FOSTER. This completes the thing ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. I see there is not much for Quebec here. Is there nothing for a public building at Valleyfield, which has been promised ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) should not forget that these estimates are for this year. Valleyfield is very dear to me, and I will make it all right there.

Mr. BERGERON. But I would like it to be done as soon as possible. The hon. gentleman has promised Valleyfield a post office building, and they are relying upon his promises. I do not see anything in the estimates for next year.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The people of Valleyfield are highly pleased with me.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. gentleman has given them something, but he has promised them more.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. And I always keep my promises.

Ontario—

Toronto Inland Revenue Building—To pay Toronto city corporation the Dominion Government's share of the cost of paving the lanes around this building with asphalt, as per agreement $ 534 29

Toronto Post Office—For fitting up rented rooms at Grand Trunk Railway Union Station..... 1,000 00

Public Building, Ottawa—Scoria block pavement in tramway to boiler-house, Parliament Building, &c.... 2,033 50

Mr. FOSTER. What is the proportion paid for the asphalting about the inland revenue building ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The total cost is $2,326. Our proportion is paid as agreed with the municipal council.

Mr. CLARKE. What about this item of $1,000 for the Toronto post office ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The Postmaster General had not enough room to handle his mail matter at the Union Station in Toronto, and we either had to erect a new building or to make an addition to the post office. We rented a room there for $450, and this is required to fit it up.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. With regard to this expenditure of $1,000 for fitting up this room at the Union Station and renting it for $450, I think that the money could not have been better spent by the Government. The selection of that room at the Union Station has enabled the post office department in Toronto to make considerable progress in facilitating the transmission of both papers and letters. The mail matter received from the east and west and north early in the evening is now sent out on the evening trains instead of being sent up to the Toronto post office and perhaps lying there from twelve to twenty hours, as it has sometimes done, owing to the press of business at the central post office. This expenditure on the part of the postal department has given a great deal of satisfaction to merchants and the business community in Ontario who are interested in the prompt delivery of the mails.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I wish to say a word in behalf of the gentlemen who congregate in No. 6, a large and important element in this House. The furniture of No. 6 came in with confederation, and the carpet at the same time. We do not speak for ourselves so much, because we hope to leave there shortly, and it will be in the interest of hon. gentlemen opposite to put down a decent carpet and to get new chairs.

Mr. TARTE: I will have this room fixed up.

French translators' office, Sussex Street—
Additional accommodation..... $300

Mr. BERGERON. I am glad to see the hon. gentleman making some repairs to these offices on Sussex street. They were in a terrible state. I wish to mention to the hon. Minister that the translators have no telephone, and when we want a translator we have to send a messenger down there. If we could talk to them by telephone it would be very handy.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman is right, but unfortunately I am already short in my telephone appropriation.

Summer-house—Repairing and painting, &c. $600

Mr. TAYLOR. I want to ask the Minister how it is possible to expend $600 in repairing and painting that summer-house ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Only a portion of the $600 has been spent, and some of it is now being spent. I have here the details of the whole thing.

Mr. FOSTER. How in the world could you spend $600 ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will give the explanations which have been furnished me. We have in our department a very good carpenter, Mr. Breton, who has been employed there for twenty-five years. He is a really capable man. He made an estimate of the work, and told me it was necessary to spend $600 in repairs. I referred his estimate to the chief architect, who confirmed and signed it. There was a new foundation made among the repairs. I have complete details of the work which I would like to show to my hon. friend.

Mr. FOSTER. You can build that house for $600.

Mr. McCLEARY. It is not worth $300.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman is quite mistaken.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. member for Welland (Mr. McCleary) is a builder.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If there is a builder on the other side of the House, I am prepared to send him the estimates.

Mr. TAYLOR. If that is the kind of work done by day's work, the sooner the Minister of Public Works throws up his portfolio and gives out every job by tender the better. Any hon. member who looks at the job will say that it could be built from foundation to roof for $300. I will furnish a contractor who will put up a prettier building than this for that sum. If the hon. gentleman wants the building duplicated at the other corner, I am prepared to get the work done for $300. If that is a sample of work done under the Government it is a scandal. I was out there several times and saw a dozen men loafing and putting in time there. But it is just a sample of the way the Government is now building a fence and rebuilding the Parliament buildings, by doing work at three or four times the proper cost, in fact, simply squandering the public money. It is a most outrageous job to pay $600 for repairing this summer-house. I think one half should be struck off; $150 would be an ample sum to pay for the work done, and there is not a contractor in town who would not have taken the work of repairing it at that amount.

Mr. MILLS. We would like to know the size of the summer-house.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) has been talking in his usual way. We know he is a clever cabinet maker and clever in parliamentary affairs, and he now turns out to be a carpenter, and of course he knows all about it. I have, however, more confidence in the officers of my department than in the hon. gentleman. My chief architect is a more able man even than the hon. member for Leeds, and when the chief architect submits an estimate I accept his statement. The size of the summer-house is 40 x 40.

Mr. TAYLOR. Perhaps the foundations may have those dimensions. I have every confidence in the chief architect, but will he say that it has cost $600 to make his repairs?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. He will say so.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. Minister endeavours to throw all responsibility on the officers of the department, and especially on the chief architect. My word is as good as that of the Minister. I make this statement that if the hon. gentleman wants the building duplicated I will have it erected for $300.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am perfectly prepared to take my hon. friend at his word. There may be some good Tory friends who would be willing to put up the job. I heard that the hon. gentleman had been around the summer-house. A few days ago I asked my chief architect if he would revise his estimates and he went over them again. Mr. Ewart has told me within the last few minutes that every cent of the $600 is required. I do not shelter myself behind my officers, but as I am not an expert I accept the estimates submitted to me by the chief architect.

Mr. McDOUGALL. What wages have been paid to the men employed?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The same rate of wages as prevails in the city; some men have received $1.50, and others $2 a day.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Was the material prepared at the factory or by hand?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Some at the factory and some by hand.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Any private individual who would do the work by day's work, would buy the material at the factory.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Here is another carpenter.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I know a good deal about carpentering, and I have had enough experience to speak on it. It is well known that at the present time all this material can be purchased at the factory at half the price it can be made by hand.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have said that some parts were made at the factory and others by hand.

Mr. DAVIS. This is a very extraordinary discussion. It appears to me that the word of a Minister should be taken in this case, especially when it is supported by the statement of the chief architect. Here are gentlemen discussing this matter who are not practical men. The chief architect says that $600 is not too much.

Mr. TAYLOR. He says nothing of the kind.

Mr. DAVIS. The Minister says he says so. There are times when things do cost a great deal of money. I know that during the regime of hon. gentlemen opposite, out in my county a flagpole thirty feet high cost $150. Hon. gentlemen opposite are getting very particular now.

Mr. HENDERSON. It seems to me that throwing the responsibility of the expenditures on the chief architect is about played out. I for one do not intend to take the word of the chief architect. I for one think the members of this House are responsible for the expenditures, and not the chief architect. I think the time has come when the Minister should cease to make that an excuse for an extravagant expenditure. Does the chief architect represent the people of this country? If he does, there would be some excuse for it, but he does not. He is simply an officer of this Government. He may be right, or he may be wrong. There are men in this House who are just as competent as the chief architect to say whether that building is worth $300 or $600. I am not a carpenter, although the Minister threw out the insinuation that any gentleman who spoke on this side of the House was a carpenter. I do not know whether he intended to imply that a carpenter's was a dishonourable occupation. To my mind, a carpenter's is a very honourable occupation.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We all know that.

Mr. HENDERSON. A week or two ago I chanced to be in the neighbourhood of this summer-house, and counted the number of painters at work there. There were half a dozen that day. I smiled and remarked, "These men know how to spend money." The men winked and smiled back and said, "Yes, they can do it." They were putting in a very pleasant time. It was utterly absurd to send half a dozen painters to work on that job. If this is the result of day's work, I think the Minister had better give up the idea as soon as possible, and adopt some other plan.

Mr. CLANCY. If the hon. Minister of Public Works defends that as a sample of the expenditure in this country and shifts the responsibility for it on his architect, I am sure this country will hesitate before they willingly believe any other statement the hon. gentleman makes. It does not require the ability of an architect or even of a carpenter to judge of this matter. A man possessed of plain common sense can see on the face of it that it is absolutely absurd that these repairs should have cost $600. I am afraid the hon. gentleman has cast a reflection upon his own officer. The people of this country will have little confidence in any one who states that the repairs on that building would cost anything like $600. I have no doubt that the money has been spent, but that it has been badly spent, there can be no doubt.

Mr. TAYLOR. I will make this statement. Let the Minister put a notice in the papers calling for tenders for the work that has been done there—and it can be easily pointed out—simply putting in a new floor around the outside of the walk, a new sill and a new railing, and painting, and if it is not done for $150, I will pay the cost of calling for the tenders.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman is altogether mistaken.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am not mistaken. I know what I am talking about. I have done as much work as the hon. gentleman, and probably a great deal more. I have erected a great many buildings, and I say that if the hon. gentleman brings a commission of three carpenters to-morrow, and they do not say that $150 is the outside price for doing those repairs, I do not know anything about the matter.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If my hon. friend is right there is no other conclusion for me to draw than that the officers of my department do not know what they are about. I am not expected to be a carpenter and I do not know anything about it. If my hon. friend is right, Mr. Ewart should not keep the position he is in now, for a man who would deceive me or make such a blunder would not deserve to be where he is. Mr. Breton is another practical carpenter and these two men have made that estimate for me. I did not make the mistake myself, if there is a mistake, because as you know I do not know a word about carpentering.

Mr. McDUGALL. The Minister has got the political shackles on his officers and they have got to go to a certain place to get the work done and a certain place to get the lumber. Let the Minister tell his officers to get the work and the supplies wherever they like, and he will get it done cheaply.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The truth is that the men who do this work are men who have been employed for years and years in the workshops that I would not dismiss. They are old Conservatives, and I have let a lot of good old men stay there.

Mr. TAYLOR. If the Minister had gone to his chief architect and said that he wanted to call for tenders the architect would have given him the figures it could be done for by tender. But I have no doubt the Minister went to his chief architect and said I want that report and what it cost by day's work. The chief architect no doubt knew the class of men the Minister would employ.

Mr. DAVIS. That is very far-fetched.

Mr. TAYLOR. Not a bit of it. My hon. friend beside me counted six painters out there and I counted eight walking about at $2 a day.

An hon. MEMBER. Where were you before you counted them?

Mr. TAYLOR. If these hon. gentlemen opposite want to get this item or any other item through they will respect gentlemen on this side of the House. We pay them every respect when they are speaking, but from the commencement of the session gentlemen on this side of the House have been interrupted by three or four gentlemen opposite, whose names I will not mention, although I could. We have just as much lung power on this side of the House as they have, and can sit up just as late at night. I say for the chief architect that he no doubt framed his estimate based on the idea that the Minister would do it as he is accustomed to, by day's work, employing three or four men to do one man's work. Let the Minister call for tenders, and I will pay the expenses for these tenders if the tender exceeds $150.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. All right, I will take my hon. friend at his word. I will ask for tenders during the recess.

Mr. TAYLOR. No, no. Do it while the members are here. Call to-morrow for tenders, and it won't take any time.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Oh, that is ridiculous.

Mr. TAYLOR. You can do it easily in a couple of days. I say there is not an hon. gentleman on the opposite side of the House who will say that this is a cheap job at $600. Go out and look at the work, any of you. Is the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) in the House?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR. Let him look at that job out there, and see if he would pay $600 for it. I ask hon. gentlemen on that side of the House to justify the expenditure if he will not reply. Is there any gentleman opposite who would give $300 to have a duplicate of that summer-house built on his own grounds? I understood from a carpenter at work out there that under the late Government nearly all the work was prepared by machinery, but now the Minister has adopted the new plan of getting it done by hand.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have not. There is no use saying that.

Mr. TAYLOR. Well, that is what some of the men told me.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. They have not told my hon. friend that.

Mr. TAYLOR. I want the Minister to take that statement back. My word is just as good as his in this House. I saw a carpenter there boring holes with an augur—

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Would the hon. gentleman give me the name of the man who told him that?

Mr. TAYLOR. I will tell you as near as I can, but I want the Minister to first take back his statement.

Mr. TAYLOR.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Very well, if I have said anything which is not correct I will take it back. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) tell me the name of the man who told him what he says he was told?

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Well, then I will accept his statement, and I will take back the expression.

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not know the man's name, but I will describe him. I asked him how long he was employed and he told me he came on so many months ago and came under the new Government, so that he is one of the Minister's own employees. He was boring holes by hand in these newell posts that are going around the railing. The Minister will know who the man was who was doing that work.

Mr. MILLS. He was a Grit.

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, I am pretty sure he was a Grit. I asked him why he had not the work done by machinery, and he told me the department had changed their system; that the old Government had it all done by machinery, but that the present Government had it done by hand. So it costs ten times as much. That is the new system.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Why do you say that, when it is not true?

Mr. TAYLOR. That is a sample of how the vast amount of money is spent all over the country by day's work. I would like to see the details or have them read to the House so that they may go on "Hansard," that the people may know the money that has been expended on that summer-house.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will read the details, they are as follows:—

110 lineal feet of balustrade at 50c....	$ 55
2 large posts.....	15
20 small posts	20
1,650 ft. (B.M.) flooring, moulding and bases	60
Labour	125
Scraping roof, painting it and all wood-work, 1,200 square yds., two coats at 15c.....	180
Painting 80 lawn seats, two coats.....	80
Cedar	10
Unforeseen	55

Hon. gentlemen will see that it was not the building alone that was done for this, but all the surroundings and seats were painted. All those who have seen the work and who want to speak in good faith will agree that it is not expensive, if I can judge by the opinions of such men as Mr. Ewart and Mr. Breton.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. Minister has accused his officers of not being competent. He says again that his architect is a thoroughly competent man, and he winds up by saying that if he is so incompetent he should displace him.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I never said that in my life.

Mr. INGRAM. I draw the hon. gentleman's attention to this, that it is nothing better than what is going on in the Western block. Not later than the other day I heard a responsible gentleman say that he watched these men raising a stone there and that from the time they took hold of the stone raised it and placed it finally, it took them one and a half hours. If that is the method pursued in performing work I can understand why it has cost so much; if the hon. gentleman instructed an architect to see that the work was properly done, no doubt it could have been done for much less.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The work was under the direction and immediate supervision of Mr. Adams who has supervised public works for the last twenty years. It was he who had charge of the custom-house of St. John, under the hon. gentlemen opposite which was built by day's labour. My hon. friend speaks of the men which were employed on that building. All the workmen there are union men, and if my hon. friend thinks I did wrong in engaging union men, let him say so. I made it a point that all union men would be engaged there so that I would be sure of having picked men.

Mr. INGRAM. That was not my statement at all but of supporters of the hon. gentleman who made that statement to me.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS The hon. gentleman should repeat a statement he has not verified. It is altogether inaccurate. The men who are working there are union men and the man who is supervising them is Mr. Adams, a man of ability and push. It is unfair for the hon. member to repeat tales which are of a nature to injure men who are doing their duty to the best of their ability. I am surprised that my hon. friend, who is himself a member of a union and takes some interest in union men, would make statements like that in the House.

Mr. INGRAM. If the hon. gentleman presses me too close, I may name my informant and he will rise behind the hon. gentleman. He did not tell it in confidence, and to-morrow, when the item comes up again, I will, with his consent, make the statement. While I like to see men fairly paid for a fair day's work, whether employed on a Government or a private building, my duty here is not that of a representative of any labour union but of a constituency comprising different classes of people, and when I see work done by employees of the Government that is not properly done, I deem it my duty to call attention to the fact. Not only one but two or three supporters of the Government can tell the hon. gentleman that a great many of these men are not given a fair day's work for a fair day's pay.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS They are wrong.

Mr. INGRAM. What about the $600 for the fire escape in the Langevin Block?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS It was not built to be habitable, and last year the Department of the Interior moved up there. There is a very large number of people employed there, and the Deputy Minister of the Interior and the Minister requested me to give them a fire escape.

Mr. CLARKE. Was that by day's labour?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS It is done by contract. Mr. Bailey had the contract.

Coteau Landing—Dredging..... $11,000

Mr. BERGERON. What does the hon. Minister intend to do in the way of dredging at Coteau Landing?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Mr. Gauthier has the work. It was not given by contract as I am paying $8 an hour, and if I get good dredges of the same quality all the time, I would pay that amount.

Mr. BERGERON. What Gauthier is that?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS Thomas Gauthier.

Mr. BERGERON. Is he doing the work himself?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS He supplied us with the dredge and also a second dredge a few days ago.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. gentleman knows that Gauthier is not doing that work at all but has given it to Macdonald, the contractor, who has already got work at the entrance of the Soulanges Canal.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I know that Mr. Gauthier supplied me with the dredges and when they do the work, I care not whether he works them himself or not.

Mr. BERGERON. Where did Mr. Gauthier get dredges?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not know.

Mr. BERGERON. Mr. Gauthier is a real estate agent and a very respectable man but he has never done any dredging in his life. He has purely and simply been given by the Minister of Public Works that job, and he transferred it to the contractors on the Soulanges Canal, Macdonald & Co.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Gauthier does not own the dredge?

Mr. BERGERON. No, he never had a dredge in his life and never saw the place in his life. I do not think there is in these estimates anything that shows so plainly of plain jobbery as the item we have now before us.

Mr. CLARKE. Were tenders called for in this case?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There were no tenders. I followed the custom that I found established in the department. Perhaps I have not been right. While I am on my feet I may say since criticism has been directed against this method, I have been going fully into the dredging work of the past. I have found that the work of the department dredges cost about the same as the hired dredges, and I suppose it is on account of that fact that the price was established. During the coming year, I shall try another method which may cost a little less, though I am not sure of it. I propose to try the hiring of the dredges only, we to engage the crew. As to asking for tenders, it may be as well that we should discuss that now. On many occasions it is altogether impossible to ask for tenders. The reason is obvious. Dredging work is very unequal. At times the dredge will only have to take off six inches or a foot of material at the top, while at times the dredge will have to work on a solid face of ground. In the latter case, of course, the dredge will do a great deal more than the former. In this case at Coteau Landing, the dredging will cost about 8 cents per yard—let us say between 8 cents and ten cents. It is very cheap indeed. If my hon. friend will look up the accounts of the past, he will find that they have paid at times as high as 35 cents per yard; and to-day there are very few dredges in the Department of Public Works which can do the work for less than 10 cents or 15 cents per cubic yard. For instance, dredge No. 9 which was working in the Kaministiquia River—

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is she getting a new hull?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. She will have a new one, and I intend to leave her for work in Ontario. When I am obliged to use some antiquated, old-fashioned dredges, of course, we cannot do as much work. My officers have prepared statements and I intend to investigate the question in order to see whether the system can be changed to advantage.

Mr. FOSTER. I think this is a case which ought to attract the attention of the committee. I do not know that I ever came across a case which seemed worse than this on the face of it. In the first place, where is this place at which $20,000 worth of dredging is being done. At what wharf?

Mr. BERGERON.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The work, as I said, is at Coteau Landing, the terminus of the Ottawa, Arnprior and Parry Sound Railway. There are 300,000 tons of freight at Parry Sound to be sent over this line. Mr. Booth has built an elevator at Coteau Landing. The Department of Public Works are doing here what they are doing everywhere else.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the Department of Public Works dredging at the terminus of every railway in the country?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We are dredging at Midland, where the Grand Trunk Railway has an elevator; and we are spending $40,000 at the port of Collingwood—that work being undertaken under the hon. gentleman's regime. We are doing dredging of that kind everywhere.

Mr. FOSTER. In these cases the hon. gentleman has named he is making harbours for towns. But here you have simply a railway running down to the water carrying its own trade. The hon. gentleman is simply doing dredging for the railway company, that is all.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is to accommodate trade, as in the other cases.

Mr. FOSTER. That is only one of the points that struck me. The question naturally arises whether we are to dredge the end of every railway track that debouches on a river or lake. I remember that in my time we refused to do any dredging for the private wharfs in the city of St. John.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is not a private wharf.

Mr. FOSTER. If we did have a dredge near a private wharf we charged the owner so much a day. The main question is as to whether the public funds can stand the strain upon them if every corporation that wants facilities at the debouching point of its railway is to have dredging done. That is only one point. If there is a case in which a contract should be asked for and the Government allow tenders so that the country may get the benefit of the competition, surely it is where there is a large expenditure of money on work of this kind. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte) does not even go to dredging men. He goes to an independent gentleman in the city of Montreal, Mr. Gauthier, who does not follow the business of dredging and does not own a dredge, and says to him: I am going to get $20,000 worth of dredging done and I will give you $8 per hour, and you furnish the dredges. Then all Mr. Gauthier has to do is to hunt up the men who have the dredging plants and make a contract with them. Now, does he get a percentage or does he not? If he gets a dollar an hour or even fifty cents an hour it means just so much that the Government pay to him, a friend of its own, for acting as middleman. What is the hon. gentleman's department for, with his deputies, his engineers, his assistants and officers, hundreds upon hundreds of them? Are they paid for such work as that? It seems to me they are. Where are we going to stop if all these contracts are to be farmed out this way? I am not criticising this now from a party point of view. I do not care whether it was done cheaply or not, it is the farming out system against which every public spirited man protests, and must protest if he does his duty. The harbour of Toronto was bad enough, but the harbour of Toronto was done in scraps. But after all there is about $20,000 of dredging that was to be done, and Mr. Phin is middleman in that case.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No, he is not.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. He owns a dredge.

Mr. FOSTER. But here is $20,000 worth being done at Coteau Landing, and a gentleman from Montreal is farming it out.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Well, what difference does it make whether the gentleman is from Montreal or from Toronto?

Mr. FOSTER. It does not make any difference. But does my hon. friend seriously argue that that is a proper way of doing the public works of this country?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is no use for the hon. gentleman to put on virtuous airs; I am simply following the system which he followed himself for many years.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). But the late Government never appointed middlemen.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I found the price established. I have Public Accounts showing the figures where dredging was done for the very same price I am paying here. Whether I have been right or wrong, I have simply followed the precedent that had been established for years and years. The hon. gentleman asks if we are going to build harbours for private companies. In this case I am not doing the work for a private company, I am simply dredging a channel so as to allow the barges to take freight there. I am doing at Coteau Landing what I am doing in other ports of Ontario, what I am doing at Midland, at Owen Sound, at Collingwood, at Belleville, at Picton. The dredging at Coteau Landing will cost the country 8 cents a yard, and I want to know if it is possible to get dredging done for less than that.

Mr. FOSTER. I will answer that question. By whatever amount per hour Mr. Gauthier gets his fee, by that much you will pay more per hour than you ought to pay.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman does not know that.

Mr. FOSTER. Does my hon. friend seriously state that Mr. Gauthier does that work out of pure love for him, or the Government, and that he does not have his profit upon every hour of work?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not know that at all.

Mr. FOSTER. Will my hon. friend state that he does not think Mr. Gauthier does?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am not going to inquire into Mr. Gauthier's private affairs.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman tell us why he went to Mr. Gauthier; he knew he was not a dredger?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Mr. Gauthier came to me as he had a perfect right to do, and as every other man has a right to do. He offered me a dredge, and I asked him how much he wanted. Well he says, what is the usual price? and I told him. I asked him how much his dredge could do. Now, this dredge is doing 800 to 1,000 yards a day, and I say that dredging which costs 8 cents per yard is very cheap dredging indeed. No man who knows anything about dredging will dispute that. The ex-Minister of Railways and Canals will testify that he has paid as high as 20 and 25 cents; they are paying that to-day.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How many yards are to be dredged out here?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. About 200,000 yards, I think. What was the position? Here was a railway company which had about 300,000 tons of freight. If we had not been able to supply accommodation at Coteau Landing, they would simply have shipped all that freight to Boston and New York instead of sending it down by the St. Lawrence route to Montreal. I did not do that alone, I was authorized by Council. I think I have made a very good thing of it indeed.

Mr. FOSTER. What I find fault with is that the hon. gentleman is farming out this dredging business at $8 per hour. It is a most vicious system. My hon. friend knew well when Mr. Gauthier came to him, that he was not the owner of a dredge and was not dredging. He knew that Mr. Gauthier proposed to find a dredge somewhere, and to make his profit upon the transaction.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Does my hon. friend think that Mr. McDonald would have asked less? Mr. McDonald knew the prices very well, and he would have asked the very same price. Of course, the hon. gentlemen are pleading for their own political friends.

Mr. FOSTER. That is a bit of unfairness that don't go down at all. Cannot we argue this now just on the merits of the case? I want to know whether this Liberal Government proposes to adopt that system. It is a vicious system, it is a system that honest men ought not to carry out. It is open to all kinds of corruption, and the hon. gentleman is advertising to this country that he is going to farm out the public works. That is what it means, that is what destroyed the Roman Empire more than anything else, the internal corruption that took place on account of the farming-out system. My hon. friend gets up in the face of his colleagues and actually argues for a system of that kind.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. And I rise in the face of my colleagues and in the face of Parliament to say that I am doing for 8 cents an hour dredging for which my hon. friend paid in the past as high as 35 cents.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman must be aware that dredging at one place is quite different from another. But that is not the question. The point is, that the hon. gentleman is picking out his friends and giving them contracts for dredging to the amount of ten thousand or twenty thousand dollars.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have no information in regard to this particular dredging in question, but I desire to say a word in regard to the assertion respecting farming out this work at Toronto to Mr. Phin. This was not the case, to my personal knowledge.

Mr. CLARKE. Were tenders asked for the work at Toronto harbour?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not know whether the rate is too high or too low, but it has been established by the department for many years. In regard to the point about farming out the work, I say this: if Mr. Clarke wanted to do dredging work, and I knew he had a good dredge and was capable of doing it and did the work to the satisfaction of the inspector and took out the number of yards indicated, I would not ask him to make an affidavit as to whether he owned a dredge himself or had partners. Much time of the committee is spent by hon. gentlemen opposite in making assertions that are not correct. In the present case there is no question of farming out. In this particular case the contractor works on the dredge and owns the plant.

Mr. CLARKE. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman is prepared to substantiate the statement he has made. I assert that the contract was given to Mr. Phin and that he did not at the time own a dredge. He went to Mr. Coghill and hired a dredge at $22 per day; he employed his own help and received $8 per hour for every day it was there. I do not know Mr. Phin or what claim he has on hon. gentleman opposite. I contend that where there is dredging to do it should be given out by public tender, and the way dredging is done to-day is most unfair and unsatisfactory and unbusiness-like. The Minister of Public Works admitted that dredging done under the Phin contract cost 14½ cents per cubic yard. I turn to the Auditor General's Report for 1897, and I find that the dredging at Toronto was done by Murray & Cleveland at a cost of 12 cents per cubic yard. How is it that we are called upon to give Mr. Phin 2½ cents per yard more than was paid by the late Government? Why should Mr. Phin average an additional profit of $15 a day? It is a scandal and a shame that when dredging to the value of $6,000 or $10,000 is required tenders are not called for. It used to be a cardinal principle of hon. gentlemen opposite that tenders should be asked for, and I understand an Order in Council requires that if any work exceeds $5,000 public tenders should be called for. If tenders are received I have no objection to hon. gentlemen opposite, other things being equal, giving their own friends the preference, but it is not fair to the people that Mr. Phin or any other gentleman should be given the contract for dredging in Toronto when he has no plant and is a regular middleman, because he hired the dredge from Coghill and received $8 per hour when it could be done for $6, and paid 14½ cents per cubic yard when 12 cents was previously paid. The hon. Minister says that he has dredging done at 8 cents, and I ask him why then does he pay 14½ cents to Mr. Phin? Would it not be safer and would it not disarm criticism if tenders were called for the thousands of dollars of dredging, and have the work done under the superintendence of efficient officers? There would be no criticisms from this side of the House if that plan were adopted. Objection is not made because the political friends of hon. gentlemen opposite obtain the work, but because others are not afforded any opportunity to compete. It is a vicious system, and the sooner the people understand it and Government take action to remedy it the better. If I made any statement that is not true, I am prepared at any time to withdraw it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. To my personal knowledge the hon. gentleman was misinformed. I believe Mr. Coghill never owned a dredge; if he did it was many years ago.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the Minister of Customs say whether Mr. Phin owned a dredge when the contract was given to him.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I understand he has a dredge.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Had he a dredge at the time of contract?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I understood so. The other night I listened for a long time to Mr. Phin being described as a painter and tailor and other trades. I knew that he was a member of a contracting firm, that he was a practical man and had been engaged on large works such as the approaches of the Sarnia Tunnel. I believe Mr. Phin owns his plant; at all events, he is doing the work. I suppose some companies own plant, and I do not expect every member of that company to be on a dredge but some attending to business elsewhere. I consider that 8 cents for dredging is very cheap. The member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) has pointed out that Cleveland & Murray received 12 cents and Mr. Phin 14½ cents per cubic yard. I do not know everything about that, but I presume that in Toronto harbour it will be just as the Minister says, one place will be very much more costly to dredge than other places. That very illustration at Coteau Landing is a proof of it. If the Minister says that dredging is being done at Coteau Landing at 8 cents a yard, that does not make me believe that dredging at 14 cents in another place is money wasted, any more than it does when he says that work done under the late Government cost 30 cents. That would not lead me to believe that 30 cents was an improvident payment, because the presumption is that the work was much more difficult, and I can quite understand that, although I am not a practical man. Hon. gentlemen opposite have proceeded so long and so far upon assumptions that I knew were incorrect in reference to other points, that it makes me doubt the information they get as to all points.

Mr. CLARKE. I am prepared to make good all the information I have given to the House, and so that remark does not refer to me. I had the documents in my possession to read to the House, but I sent them home on Saturday. However, I can get them down again before the House closes and give the source of my information. I assert that Mr. Phin was given that contract without tender. He leased a dredge last year from Mr. Coghill, in Toronto, and he tried to beat Coghill down this year to a much lower figure than he paid him last year; and Coghill would not comply with that and Mr. Phin procured another dredge. I am informed that Mr. Coghill tendered to do that work to the Minister or to an officer of the department at $6 per hour, rather than the $8 per hour which Mr. Phin is receiving.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) has no intention to be unfair, but when he makes a comparison between the dredging work done by Murray & Cleveland and the dredging which is now going on in the Toronto harbour he is unwittingly unfair. My hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) must not forget that Murray & Cleveland had a contract amounting to about $300,000 in which there was a certain amount of dredging, but there was also included the erection of two long jetties. There could be no comparison between their work and the work now being done. They simply asked 12 cents or 12½ cents for that dredging in connection with all their other works, so that no comparison can be made. The only point remaining is this: The ex-Finance Minister (Mr. Foster) tells me: You have no right to hire a dredge from a man who does not own a dredge, and my answer is this: I found the precedent established; my predecessors were hiring dredges at $8 an hour, and I thought I was perfectly safe in hiring dredges on the same conditions, and then whether a man owns or does not own a dredge himself does not matter much for me.

Mr. FOSTER. If that is the policy of the Government then we understand it and we need not debate it any longer.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Will my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) permit me to finish, and then we will understand each other. I quite admit that the system which has been in existence for years and years needs revision. Since I was criticised in the House I went fully into the whole thing with my officers, and for the incoming year I will try to change the system. I cannot do more than that. I am still a new Minister. I found the system in vogue and I thought I was perfectly safe.

Mr. FOSTER. I rise to ask again: What system did the Minister find established? Did he find the system established and in operation in this country, of farming out this dredging work?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I find the system established that in 1891-92, 1893-94, and up to 1895-96 my friends were hiring dredges at $8 an hour.

Mr. FOSTER. What friends? Who were hiring dredges?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The Department of Public Works.

Mr. FOSTER. We do not understand each other yet.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am very sorry.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) is intelligent enough to understand, just as my hon. friend (Mr. Paterson) is intelligent enough to meet the point without quibbling around every side of it and never meeting it at all. That is not the question between us. My hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) says he found the department hiring dredges at $8 an hour. I never disputed that. I never found fault with him on that ground alone. What I find fault with him for is that in this particular case before us, not that my hon. friend is hiring dredges at $8 an hour—although I will take it upon myself to say that whether it is this Government or any other Government, they should call for tenders in the hiring of these dredges—

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is not always possible.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, that should be the rule, and I believe it is possible if the Minister wants to make it possible. But what I want to come to is this: The hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte), I do not think did find the system in vogue of farming out this matter of contracting for $8 an hour, of giving it to a man who is not a contractor, of going to a man who does not own dredges, going to a man who has nothing to do with the dredging business, but who simply undertakes the commission of hunting around and finding a dredge for the Minister, and the Minister paying, not the man who does the dredging, but the middleman who does the hunting around for him. That is what I call farming out. Here he takes Mr. Gauthier, against whom I have nothing. Mr. Gauthier is not in that business at all, as I understand it, and the Minister gives it out and Mr. Gauthier farms it and takes his percentage or profit upon it. Without doubt Mr. Gauthier does that. We are not children here; we know Mr. Gauthier won't take that trouble unless he gets something for his pains and if we had him here he would no doubt tell us what he did get, and that he had a right to it. Here is a $20,000 job without any contract, but Mr. Gauthier farms it out. Is that a system which we ought to carry on? That is not the system the Minister found. That is a system which he is taking up himself. If that is the statement of the Minister, and if that is the position of the Government, I will never rest until the people of this country know that system thoroughly from one end to the other. In season and out of season, that bad, and miserable, and vicious system shall be attacked just as strongly as I and those who are with me can do it, and until the country knows this thing is going on.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am perfectly prepared to take issue with my hon. friend before the country.

Mr. FOSTER. Very well.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) is pleading for his own political friends.

Mr. FOSTER. I tell the Minister that I am not pleading for my political friends.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Practically my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) is.

Mr. FOSTER. I say I am not. I say that during the late hour while we have been discussing this question, I have not thought of my own political friends, nor have I thought of party at all.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Very well; I accept the statement.

Mr. FOSTER. I am honest in my statement, I am protesting against this system, and I detest the system.

Mr. FOSTER.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. What I mean to say was that practically speaking my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) was speaking for his political friends.

Mr. FOSTER. I was not.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not mean to say that his criticism is willingly unfair, but I repeat that the system which has been followed in the past, of hiring dredges at $8 an hour ought to be revised. Let us take the case of Coteau Landing as an instance. I am doing dredging there for 8 cents a yard. My hon. friend is practically speaking for his own political friends. The Conservative party was in power for twenty-five years, and all the dredges in the country, I suppose, belonged to friends of my friends on the other side. Provided that I do not pay one cent more, I do not see why my political friends should not have their share of the work.

Mr. FOSTER. Now we have it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend knows that I am not in the habit of hiding my views. My hon. friend has been in the habit of paying as much as twenty-five cents a yard for dredging. When I do not pay anything more, I do not see why a political friend of mine should not have the same right as a friend of hon. gentlemen opposite. We are not in power simply to give everything to my hon. friends on the other side, provided public interest is served. I say again that the system has lived long enough; conditions have changed; and I think the best thing for the Department of Public Works to do is to equip itself with dredging plant, and that is why I am building this year two additional dredges. I claim that with dredge No. 9, for which a new hull is being built, I shall be able to dredge for four or five cents a yard, what hon. gentlemen opposite in the past paid from 15 to 20 cents for. The system has to be changed; but I claim that I have committed no wrong. In this case, I went before my colleagues and obtained an Order in Council. I did not ask for tenders—first, because there was no time to do it; and, second, because I was following a precedent already established. But I repeat. I will revise the system, after going carefully into the figures with my officers.

Mr. CLARKE. May I ask, how many yards have been dredged at eight cents a yard at Coteau Landing?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am told that there have been about 10,000 yards, but I would not pledge myself to that.

Mr. CLARKE. As the hon. gentleman has frankly admitted that he has come to the conclusion that the system is wrong, may I ask him if there will be time to call for tenders at Kingston?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend forgets that we are doing our work with our own dredge there.

Mr. CLARKE. I am glad to hear that. If the hon. Minister would keep dredges and do the work himself, he would save the expense of the middlemen. I understood his arguments to be that his political opponents had been in power so long that their friends had all the dredges, and his political friends who got the work had not dredges, and would have to rent them from political opponents.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Some of them have dredges.

Mr. CLARKE. I do not find fault with the hon. gentleman giving work to his political friends if their tenders are equally low with others. What I protest against is giving this work out without calling for tenders.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It was done in that way in the past.

Mr. CLARKE. If that is the only justification the hon. gentleman has to offer, I have nothing to say but this, that I would be very pleased if for the future he would either call for tenders or have the Government dredges do the work.

Mr. HAGGART. Is there any necessity for dredging there at all? If I remember rightly, the steamers of the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company go to the wharf. What depth are you going to dredge?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Fourteen feet. I am dredging the channel to enable the boats to come and take the freight there.

Mr. BERGERON. These barges have to go through the Beauharnois Canal, which has only nine feet of water.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Now that we are deepening the canals, it is better to dredge the channel there.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I understand that the point raised by the hon. ex-Minister of Finance is in regard to the status of the parties to whom dredging is let. I think it only fair that the Minister should bring down the names of the parties to whom dredging was let by the late Government. From personal knowledge I do not think many of them had a knowledge of dredging.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. Minister says that Mr. Gauthier came to him and offered dredges. I would like to know who gave Mr. Gauthier the information that a large amount of dredging was to be done, and how he came to offer a dredge when he did not own one? I would like to know if any of the hon. gentleman's officers approached Mr. Macdonald, who had dredges and was doing work.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I never approached Mr. Macdonald.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like to know how Mr. Gauthier knew that this large amount of dredging was to be done. I would also like to know if Mr. Gauthier, besides being a political friend, is not a relative of the hon. Minister.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am not a relative of his at all.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is not the hon. Minister's son married to Mr. Gauthier's daughter?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I could not help that surely.

Mr. TAYLOR. Surely this is farming out in the family, if this be the case. I have received this information, and it certainly shows a case of farming-out in the hon. gentleman's own family.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. This is a question in the public interest put by the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster). The public interest, of course, is not served, but on the contrary, it is injured if higher prices are paid than were paid before. He had not found fault with what was done before.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend is not representing me rightly. I have stated over and over again, that contracts ought to be called for. Now, I want to argue this question fairly, and I put it to my hon. friend, whose moral sense ought to be strong, whether he is willing to stand up to-night and to argue in favour of the system of farming-out this dredging work. I thought that the position of the Minister of Public Works was bad enough before, but his last attempt at explanation makes it ten times worse. He acknowledges the whole thing. It is a little piece of political acuteness. All the Tories have the dredges, and there was no chance for the Liberals to make anything. Therefore, the hon. gentleman did not call for tenders, but gave the contract to his friends, and let them farm it out to the Tory who had the dredges. We cannot, as a Parliament, subscribe to that condition of things.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The point I wanted to make, when the hon. gentleman interrupted me, was this. He used the term farming-out. Eight dollars an hour is being paid now. I understand the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) to admit that that is precisely what was paid by the late Government. If that be the case, and there is the same supervision by the same Government officers, the country is not losing unless the price has fallen in the meanwhile. The hon. gentleman admits that we are getting the same work done for the same money as the old Government did.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, suppose you do.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. But he says the country loses the difference between what the man who runs the dredge charges and what the other man gets. That does not follow, because the owner of the dredge, in the other case, would get precisely the same money. I think the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) is unfair when he seeks to show that the country is losing money whereas it does not lose any money.

Mr. CLARKE. With reference to what the hon. Minister has said, so far as I am personally concerned, I differ entirely from him as to whether the country is losing money or not by adopting the plan followed by the Minister of Public Works. The argument of the hon. Minister is that the present Government are doing exactly the same as the last Government did, and the country is not losing anything because we are pursuing the same course. Well, if the system is wrong it ought to be remedied. I repeat that my information is that Mr. Phin did not own a dredge when given a contract in Toronto harbour. He paid $20 and $22 per day to Mr. Cargill for the use of a dredge. No matter what course was adopted by the late Government, if that course were not in the public interest, it ought not to be adopted by this Government. I think it is in the public interest to call for tenders for dredging work, and am pleased to hear the Minister of Public Works say he would press the Government to change the present system.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman should extend the system of tender to everything he buys. When I was controlling the Railways and Canals Department of the Government, I made it a point not even to buy a pound of nails or a gallon of oil without public tender. I required requisitions from the officers, and in case of any dispute as to the standard of the materials furnished, I always referred it to the school of science at McGill, Montreal. There is no reason why every bit of material from one end of the country to the other should not be got by tender. Not a pound of nails, not a gallon of oil, not a single bit of material used by the Government should be bought in any other way. Let there be free and open competition.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) is mistaken; he forgets facts that he ought not to forget.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not forget anything—not even the Curran Bridge.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In that case it was not given out by contract, the work was simply farmed out. The day's labour was farmed out, to the knowledge of the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) himself. And yet the hon.

Mr. PATERSON.

gentleman says that he never did anything as a minister except by public tender.

Mr. HAGGART. Nor did I. Not even in the Curran Bridge.

Mr. TALBOT. You farmed out the labour.

Mr. HAGGART. The labour was received by tender. The material was furnished by tender, every bit of it.

Mr. DYMENT. If the hon. member (Mr. Haggart) called for tenders for all the work done under his control he was most unfortunate in some of the tenders he received. Contracts on the Sault Ste. Marie Canal were sublet for just half of what he paid.

Mr. HAGGART. But it was let by tender. If the gentleman farmed it out, it was no fault of mine. The contract was let by open competition.

Mr. DYMENT. And the work was done at half price.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not know about that. The contract was made by my predecessor, but I know that the gentleman who got the contract tendered.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The result of the tender system must be bad if the hon. gentleman as Minister could let a contract at, say, $1 and have it sublet to an American contractor for 50 cents.

Mr. FOSTER. Then the hon. gentleman is opposed to the tender system?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. What I say is that the facts given by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) seemed to be against it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not wish to discuss the system of tenders generally; but when the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) says that he adopted the tender and contract system for all the supplies on the Intercolonial Railway, I can only say that he is mistaken. I know Liberal firms in Halifax and other places in the maritime provinces who were not permitted to sell a dollars worth of material to the Intercolonial Railway. I am not saying now what is right and what is wrong, but when the hon. gentleman says that he adopted that system I can only tell him that he is utterly mistaken.

Mr. HAGGART. I am not mistaken, I found some persons in Halifax and some in St. John who were in the habit of furnishing some things to the Intercolonial Railway. The system was all changed and a new one was established from end to end of the system, extending to even the small purchases.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not know that any good object is to be obtained by our contradicting each other across the floor. But if the hon. gentleman will look into the facts and inquire of the officials, I am confident he will find that he is wrong.

Down to the change of Government in 1896, full supplies were got without public tender, and leading firms in Halifax had no opportunity to tender for this business.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The Deputy Minister stated that when he was on the floor of the House the other day.

Mr. CLARKE. I understand that the Minister of Public Works has agreed, at the suggestion of the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) to bring down the names of all the parties competing down to 1896. Will the hon. Minister bring the facts down to the present day?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Resolutions to be reported.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 2.45 a. m. (Tuesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 7th June, 1898.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PRAYERS.

EXPENDITURE ON PRIVATE PIERS AND WHARFS.

Mr. MARTIN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would ask the hon. Minister of Public Works when the return he promised of the expenditure by the Federal Government on private piers and wharfs will be down.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I promised my hon. friend to bring that down to-day. I will take a note of it, and as soon as my deputy is here, I will instruct him to have it brought down.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 163) to grant further aid to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal (Mr. Fielding).

SUPPLY.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Kingston Harbour—Dredging $6,000

Mr. FOSTER. In the last discussion the hon. Minister promised to give the cost of the ordinary dredging.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If my hon. friend would kindly wait until the Supplementary Estimates are being voted and my deputy is here, I shall give him the information. I have had a full statement prepared, but have not got it under my hand.

Stikine River—Examination, &c..... $14,000

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Mr. Coste has gone up with the boat "Sampson," which was employed on the Fraser River to remove snags. He has brought out all the material necessary to improve the channels and make a survey. My intention is to give him a credit of $30,000 for a survey of the Stikine River and for improvements on the Stikine and the Hootalinqua and Lewes Rivers. He is starting from the Stikine River en route to Dawson in order to make a survey of the navigable rivers and the most urgent improvements.

Mr. FOSTER. You have practically given him carte blanche.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, I could not do otherwise. We are working in an unknown country, and I gave him carte blanche recommending him to be very careful.

Mr. SPROULE. By this vote you could only use the money for the Stikine River?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend is right. The wording should be changed to make it read "on the Stikine and other rivers in the Yukon district."

Mr. EARLE. I know something of the Stikine River; $14,000 will do all the work necessary on that river. Fourteen thousand dollars will pay for all the work that is necessary to be done on the Stikine River this year. The work is not heavy, but it is expensive work, and certainly work necessary to be done.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I thought so.

Dredging—Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick..... $10,000
Dredging—Quebec and Ontario..... $10,000

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I move that the first item be reduced to $8,000 and the second to $3,000. Having looked into the matter, I find that with this we shall have enough to work our dredges.

Mr. HUGHES. Where is this $3,000, appropriated for Ontario and Quebec, to be spent?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is for dredges already at work. One of them is at Midland. I cannot recall the names of the other places at the moment.

To pay W. C. Harris, architect, for professional services rendered, 1887 to 1894, in connection with the construction and maintenance of Public Buildings, Harbour Works, &c., in Prince Edward Island..... $142 05

Mr. FOSTER. How is it this was not paid before? There was a vote.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I went to the then architect, Mr. Fuller, at Mr. Harris' request and he told me that the bill was all right and he had been trying to get it through the Estimates. When, last year, my hon. friend asked me to look into it, I was able to say that I knew all about it; that I had been trying to get it for Mr. Harris.

Mr. FOSTER. It is all right, is it?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, he is a good Tory.

Excise—

Further amount required for contingencies.....	$4,500
Further amount required for preventive service.....	3,000

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). This appears to be a very large amount for contingencies. Will the hon. Minister kindly explain.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). I am glad my hon. friend (Mr. Wood, Brockville) has asked for an explanation, as I would not like to take up the time otherwise, but I desire to lay the facts before the committee.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. There is no deficiency in the department—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I suppose it is all right.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Still, I would like the explanation.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. It will only take one minute. We have a number of temporary employees who cannot be put on the salary of permanent officers and we have been obliged to take from contingencies in order to pay them. But though this has to be voted there is no deficiency but, on the contrary, a surplus in the department, as we have not expended the sums voted by Parliament. I hope I shall be able to have the temporary officers pass the examination and be appointed as permanent officers, so that we shall no longer have to pay them in this way.

Mr. TARTE.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). It is very evident that hon. members do not want to get away and if they are willing to stay, I am. But the hon. Minister has only gone over the revenue and expenditure of his department. How many temporary officers are there?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. There are 22 in the excise branch; 11 appointed by my hon. friend (Mr. Wood, Brockville) when he was head of the department, and 11 by myself. We cannot get these officers appointed permanently as the examination, which they must pass is held only in November of each year. I was going to notify them that if they will not qualify themselves by passing an examination next fall, they will have to look for some other employment.

Mr. MILLS. The Minister and the House being in such a good humour, I think I should not allow this opportunity to pass without pressing upon the Minister something to which I have already called his attention, that is, the appointment of an excise officer at Springfield, by the name of Lambert McNayr. I know very well that a recommendation coming from me will meet with the approbation of the Minister, and no doubt he will accede to my request.

The PRIME MINISTER. Hear, hear.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I would like to know how this $3,000 for preventive service is paid.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. As my hon. friend knows, the raising of the tariff, both on spirituous liquors and on tobacco, has given rise to a great increase in smuggling. We have been obliged to act with much more activity than heretofore, and this is the reason why we have been obliged to ask for this extra amount. When one compares the number of seizures made during this last year with the number that are generally made, one can see the ground for this increase. I may add that in 1894-95 the amount voted for the preventive service was $15,800, which is $800 more than we are asking this year, with this additional sum of $3,000. The difficulties we have to encounter are so much greater, that the House will understand why we have felt obliged to ask for this sum.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I am not altogether satisfied with the explanation the Minister has just given. When the duties were increased upon tobacco, it was pointed out from this side of the House what the result would likely be. I have no doubt it has to some extent led to an increase in smuggling that article, without a corresponding increase in the revenue. That was pointed out. I think the hon. Minister will find that this vote in 1895-96 was reduced down to about $7,000 or $8,000, and it would have been just as well if the Minister had said that in 1895-96, under the old regime, that vote stood at about $7,500. Now, in the last session of this Parliament the hon. gentleman raised that to $10,000, and he gave the very same reason for the increase he has given to-day, that is, that, owing to the increased duties upon tobacco, there was an increase in smuggling. In the main Estimates an additional vote of $2,000 has been asked for, bringing the vote for the preventive service up to $15,000. Now, I do not think myself that this vote ought to be adopted by the committee, because it forms a very convenient fund for the Minister to avail himself of in order to supply the pressing demand of political friends for appointments. Persons appointed to do that work are not required to pass any examination. I wish to point out to the Minister that the policy of the department at the time the old Government resigned was to impress upon the permanent staff in each of the inland revenue districts the necessity for acting in the interests of the service in the way of detecting smugglers. It is as much the duty of the permanent staff to do that as it is of the preventive officers. A circular was sent to all the officers notifying them to that effect, when the vote was reduced in 1895-96, and I think, with very good results. The committee will understand that in the matter of smuggling tobacco and of illicit distillation, there is seldom a case detected. But it comes down to this, that it is only to protect the department in enforcing the regulations regarding the importation of tobacco in packages, that this work is necessary. I think the increased vote since the hon. gentleman assumed office is larger than necessary for the proper protection of the revenue service.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I will not try to exculpate myself from the charge of employing those votes for political purposes; I think it would be perfectly useless to try to do so. When, last year, in good faith, I asked for an increase, it was because last year the duties were raised both on tobacco and on liquors; therefore, I foresaw that we would eventually have much more work to do in order to protect the revenue. Since then we find the work we have to do is in excess even of what we anticipated, and that is why we are obliged to ask for this increased amount. I need not say that I have tried to the best of my ability to do my duty fairly, and to serve the country. I am sorry that we have had to exceed the amount which was allowed to us last year. I would like to notice, however, that notwithstanding the increased smuggling of tobacco and liquors, the revenue has actually increased on tobacco especially, owing to the increase in the tariff on tobacco from 10 to 14 cents. We have actually collected more on tobacco than we collected the year before. We have about $150,000 collected on tobacco more than the year before, notwithstanding the smuggling incident upon the increased duty.

Mr. WALLACE. Would the Minister give us the figures for the two periods?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I have a statement up to the end of March, because it will be remembered that this question came before the House early in the month of April, and my hon. friends mentioned the great deficiency we must expect in the collection on tobacco, so these figures are only for the first nine months. I have taken three years, beginning with the first nine months from the 1st of July, 1895, to the 31st of March, 1896. The collections on tobacco, cigars and cigarettes were $2,230,000. For the same nine months in 1896-97, the collections were $2,308,000. For the nine months of the current year, we got $2,634,000 on tobacco and cigars. Furthermore, we got $100,000 through the customs collected on tobacco in virtue of the new tax, so that altogether, for the first nine months of the current year, we got $2,735,000. So the excess of the collections this year on tobacco and cigars over 1895-96 is $502,000.

Mr. WALLACE. Would the Minister give us tobacco alone, separate from the cigars?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I have got them together. I would have to make a new circulation. I may explain why the difference now is not so great as it was then. In May the revenue fell very much as compared with the revenue for the preceding nine months. So that at the end of last month, including cigars and tobacco, the revenue only exceeded that of last month by $133,000. The idea of raising the tariff was not only in the hope of getting a higher revenue, but in order to meet the wishes of the agricultural class and encourage the growth and cultivation of tobacco. To give an idea of the results, I may say that for the first nine months of last year only 300,000 pounds of Canadian tobacco were manufactured, while the quantity for the last nine months exceeded 1,200,000 pounds. The result has been an increase four-fold in the production of Canadian tobacco, and not only Canadian tobacco consumed by the farmers, but the quantity manufactured in factories. It may be said that this increased quantity of Canadian tobacco will reduce the revenue from imported tobacco. It will no doubt displace 900,000 pounds of imported tobacco, on which a duty is collected of 35 cents, compared with 5 cents on the Canadian article.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I wish to refer to a matter left over in the main estimates in relation to the establishment of wheat standards in Manitoba and the North-west. Has the department made any changes in the standards as they found them when they assumed office?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The principal change is in regard to excluding frozen and smutty wheat from the third class. When I entered the department I was carried away by the enthusiasm of some hon. members of the House who wished the department to raise the standard of wheat, first class from 60 to 62 pounds and second class from 50 to 60 pounds. Fortunately before the project was carried into effect I realized that it would be a mistake, so we left the standard and classification as we found them, and only strengthened the restrictions in relation to smutty and frozen wheat.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I regret that time does not allow the committee to go into this important subject which has caused much agitation among the farmers in Manitoba and the North-west for many years, a difficulty which the Minister apprehends more now than when he assumed charge of the department. Smutty wheat was never allowed in Manitoba No. 1 hard. Is it the intention of the department to sanction any changes being made at the meeting of the Board of Standards at Winnipeg? Has the Minister had any correspondence with the Winnipeg Board of Trade on the subject?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. It is not the intention of the department, unless very good cause is shown, to sanction any change in the standards. In my opinion they are high enough already. I tried to make them higher, but fortunately I stopped in time, and acknowledged the mistake I made. It is important there should not be too much red-tape in matters of this kind. Providence has given such bountiful harvests and rewarded the work of our farmers by giving them such good prices for their produce that I would be very sorry to do anything that would interfere with the success they have achieved. About six weeks ago a deputation called at my department and they suggested that we should appoint a commission in order to investigate the whole question, but after consulting with my officers I hesitated in view of the cost that a commission would entail, and more especially as we know pretty well where the difficulty lies. The principal complaint is about mixing the grain after it leaves the elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur, but when once the grain is inspected we cannot help the mixing of it and in many cases the grain is shipped without being inspected. I do not think it right to meddle with the standard of weight without having very strong cause. I nearly burned my fingers by meddling with it the first year and prudence dictates that I should look into the matter very carefully before taking action.

Mr. McDOUGALL. What about this weights and measures vote?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The Auditor General refuses to pay temporary officers out of the salaries voted for permanent officers and so we have to pay them out of contingencies.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). We will assume that the total amount voted by Parliament last session was not expected by the hon. gentleman on the general administration of the department, as happened every year I had any thing to do with the department. There is always a large surplus, comparatively speaking, over and above the general expenditure which Parliament voted for the Inland Revenue Department. I want to point out that during my time we always estimated in such a way that we never required so large an amount as this to be voted for contingencies. Is this large excess required to meet the expenditure necessitated by the appointment of new officials?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. It will be seen from the accounts of the weights and measures branch that our receipts this year were considerably higher than last year, and, as my hon. friend (Mr. Wood) knows if you want to swell your receipts in that department you have to increase your expenditure. You are obliged to send your officers, travelling into the remotest parts of the country in order to inspect. As my hon. friend (Mr. Wood) did, we have not exceeded the total vote of that department.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). It means that this large addition to the contingencies account is caused by the addition of extra men, because the hon. gentleman (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière) estimated sufficiently at the last session of this Parliament to meet the general expenditure of that branch. I would like to know how many extra men have been added to this branch since the last session?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. We have not got extra men. We have the same temporary men we had last year but we have extra expenditure. Those temporary men are paid out of the contingencies and their salaries amount to about $4,500, and the remainder is for the expenditure in connection with the revenue. In last year's Estimates the salaries of the weights and measures branch were $7,000 less than the last year. In last year's Estimates we asked $49,010 while this year we are asking only $42,010. We are doing our best to reduce the expenditure in the department, but it is not so easy to make reductions as in other departments which are carrying on considerable work and making great outlay. All our outlay in the Inland Revenue Department is to pay salaries or travelling expenses and matters of that kind. Last year we superannuated 11 officers in the department of weights and measures, and this accounts for the diminution in the vote.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). A year ago the hon. Minister asked for a reduced amount for his branch on the ground that he was saving expenses by lessening the number of officials. The increase this year is caused by an increase in the number of officials.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. No. There is another decrease of $7,000 this year. Last year I asked for $49,010, while this year I ask for $42,010. So we are continuing to decrease the expenses. If I had been allowed to take from the money voted for salaries the amount required to pay the temporary officers and the extra expenditure required on account of our more active inspection of weights and measures, I would not have required to ask for this vote, but I could not mix the two things together; and since we have borrowed from contingencies in order to pay our temporary officers, I am obliged to ask that this money be recouped. At the same time, deducting this $6,000 from the amount allowed us, it still leaves a balance in favour of the department.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I wish to call the attention of the hon. Minister to a vacancy in the weights and measures inspectorship for the district of Cape Breton.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I have undertaken to replace Mr. Tremaine; but there have been some difficulties in the way, and in the meantime I send an officer from Pictou in order to make the inspection of the scales at the coal mines. According to law the inspection is to be made only once in two years? But I think it is perfectly ridiculous to inspect only once in two years the scales of coal mines which are so severely tried by enormous weights being dumped upon them every day. Last year I took upon myself to send an officer to inspect those scales, and in the Weights and Measures Bill this year I have provided for a more frequent inspection of all scales subject to severe strains, such as those used in elevators, at coal mines, and in connection with railways.

Culling timber $1,345

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I am very sorry to observe that the expenditure in this very effete and useless department shows an upward tendency. It has been, I think, well understood by this House for many years that the expenditure of that department should be decreased, to say the least. Four or five years ago, we introduced some very important changes, largely reducing the expenditure of this branch. It is an expenditure which I have never hesitated to say ought not to exist. The people of this country ought not to pay all the expenses of keeping up a culling branch for the benefit of the exporters of square timber going down to Quebec, because that is what it amounts to. There was a period in the history of the country when there might have been some necessity for its existence; but like everything else that obtains a strong foothold, it has been easier to establish it and continue it than to uproot it. The late Government, finding a strong opposition to the abolition of that branch, undertook to place it on a better footing by decreasing the expenditure all round, with the view of very soon doing away with it; but I see here an increase in the expenditure, especially in the item of contingencies.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. My hon. friend is sorry to find that increase of expenditure, and I would feel very sorry too if I were not glad; because I have the best reason in the world for explaining it. During the first nine months of last year the revenue was $6,380. This year, during the same time, the revenue has been $12,372, double what it was the year before. The second point is this: Perhaps my hon. friend has forgotten a detail which I mentioned to the House last year when I asked for the increase of this branch by getting two new cullers appointed. We received petitions from all the leading houses connected with the timber trade, representing that there were only four cullers left by the late Government, who were quite unequal to the extra work that had to be done, and offering to tax themselves 25 per cent more in the fees they paid for culling if we would appoint two cullers named by themselves. One was O'Brien and the other Kelly, two men who were so favourably known to the timber trade that they actually proposed to increase the fees they paid for culling in order to meet the salaries of these two cullers.

Mr. POUPORE. Would the Minister say whether the office is self-sustaining under the new provisions?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The office would be much more than self-sustaining this year but for the fact that the revenues have to pay not only all the working expenses, but $6,200 for the retiring allowances of the twenty-two cullers who have been removed.

Mr. POUPORE. Does the Minister expect that under this arrangement the office will be self-sustaining in the future? Because the square timber and deal trade had diminished so much in Quebec that it was thought unnecessary to have so large an expenditure for this service, and that the office should be made self-sustaining.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. There are only six cullers now, after the addition of the two I have mentioned. Those two are paid for by the timber men, and my hon. friend must be aware of the petition for their appointment, and no doubt signed it himself. In the first nine months of this year we have collected $12,372, and if it were not for the retiring allowances of $6,200 which we have to pay, the institution would be self-supporting.

To provide for the printing of law stamps.. $500

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. There has been no expenditure for law stamps since 1892. The revenue is from $4,000 to $5,000 annually, and the stock now purchased will last several years.

Mr. McMULLEN. I find that the clerks of the Supreme and Exchequer Courts get a commission for selling law stamps. I should like to know why that is allowed. The registrar of the Supreme Court gets $2,600 a year and $600 a year as editor of the reports, and a commission of $132 on the sale of law stamps. The registrar of the Exchequer Court gets a salary of $2,000, and an additional $225, and a commission on law stamps sold last year of $174.85.

Mr. HAGGART. There should be no commission paid an officer who receives a salary.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend will have to renew his question when the Solicitor General is in his place.

Amount required to cover the expense of fencing, &c., in the Rocky Mountain Park of Canada $25,000

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This is for the purpose of keeping in a herd of buffalo. The range is 400 or 500 acres, fenced partially by the mountain, partially by water, and the balance by this fencing. We have three buffaloes there, presented by Mr. Blackstock, of Toronto, and there is a herd of seventeen or eighteen presented by Lord Strathcona, which is at present at Winnipeg, and fourteen of which are to be moved to the park.

To provide for expenses of commission in Crow's Nest Pass Railway Inquiry.... $6,500

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. I had intended to speak last week, when my hon. friend the junior member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) raised the question of the Crow's Nest Pass work; but I am not notoriously friendly to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and I thought I would give careful reading to the report of the commission, and thus escape the charge of prejudging the case. I have read the report of the commission very carefully, and, as the Government is apparently not contemplating any immediate action, I am going to say what I have to say here and now. I suppose that this House will be asked to accept the theory that the sufferings of these unfortunate men on the Crow's Nest Pass work were unavoidable accidents.

Sir HENRI JOLY DE LOTBINIERE.

I am convinced that the outrages which the report of the commissioner records were not accidents. These outrages were incidents in a conspiracy to steal the labour of hundreds of our fellow countrymen for the benefit of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Apologists for the Canadian Pacific Railway can talk as they please about Mr. Haney and the sub-contractors of the Crow's Nest Pass road; Mr. Haney and his understrappers may be more or less responsible agents of that conspiracy, but the real authors of that conspiracy are the rulers of the Canadian Pacific Railway. What have we to do with Mr. Haney and his understrappers? The Government did not negotiate with Mr. Haney, but dealt with Sir William Van Horne and Mr. Vice-President Shaughnessy. It is all right for these gentlemen to hide themselves and their corporation behind Mr. Haney and his assistants. The Canadian Pacific Railway did not hide itself behind Mr. Haney last session, when it was trying to tap the treasury for enough money to build this railway. Parliament has to accept the responsibility of giving that money to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and Parliament has the right to ask that the Canadian Pacific Railway, including its president, Sir William Van Horne, and Mr. Vice-President Shaughnessy, yes, and every director of the road—shall accept responsibility for the crimes and outrages which have marked their use, or rather cruel misuse, of this country's money. If these men were underpaid, and starved, and in some cases left to die, they were wronged as a result of the policy adopted for the construction of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. This policy which doomed its unfortunate victims to starvation and death was not the work of Mr. Haney or his assistants. They were merely the hands entrusted with the work of carrying out the policy which originated in the greed of the Canadian Pacific Railway government at Montreal. I cannot believe for one instant that Mr. Haney was sent out to the Crow's Nest Pass road to improvise a system of stealing enough labour to build that railway. I am persuaded that he had to accept a ready-made system of tyranny, cruelty and oppression. Mr. Haney had to look for his orders to the men who employed him, and, in this Crow's Nest Pass work, Mr. Haney with the other tools of the company was simply working out the plans of those who sent them. I find in the report of this commission proof that the Canadian Pacific Railway proposed to take the labour of human beings at wages which would allow a hard working man to pay his own way, without one single cent for his wife or children, and, at the end of a year's hard work, he would have a profit of something less than $6 over and above all expenses. I maintain that when the Canadian Pacific Railway decoyed, enticed and entrapped men to the Crow's Nest Pass work on these terms, its proceedings amounted to a conspiracy to steal the labour of helpless men. I only use the word conspiracy to describe the method of the Canadian Pacific Railway because I cannot find any stronger word in any dictionary in the Parliamentary library. I am not, however, interested in Mr. Haney or humbler individuals. It seems to me that they simply carried out a system of oppression, tyranny and robbery. They seem to have worked the system to the very limit; but I do not believe that they created that system. That system was created by the magnates and rulers of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Let me say again that the Government of this country did not make any agreement with Mr. Haney or his hired help. The Government dealt with Sir William Van Horne and Mr. Vice-President Shaughnessy; and the Parliament which voted such an enormous subsidy to the Canadian Pacific Railway which these men represent has a right to fasten full responsibility, yes, the fullest responsibility upon them for the terrible wrongs and atrocities that have been done by their agents.

The Crow's Nest Pass road bargain, Mr. Chairman, ought to have satisfied even the gluttonous greed of the Canadian Pacific Railway, apart from the coal lands which Messrs. Cox & Jaffray and other friends of the Canadian Pacific Railway grabbed from British Columbia. The Canadian Pacific Railway itself got over three million dollars of cold cash from the treasury of this country to build a railway for its own profit and, incidentally, for the benefit of the country. The Canadian Pacific Railway got the price of the road from the country, and yet it must start in to plunder the poor, helpless labourer. That great corporation puts one hand in the national treasury and the other in the pockets of its victims. The Canadian Pacific Railway is big enough to snatch the dollars of the country, and is small enough, contemptible enough to steal the pennies of the workingmen. It is as clear as daylight; it is perfectly clear to me that the plunder, the swindling of the workingmen was the head and front of the Canadian Pacific Railway programme for the building of the Crow's Nest Pass road. I suppose that the Government is to blame, but how could the Government be expected to know that the Canadian Pacific Railway would be guilty of the crimes and atrocities that are disclosed in the report of the Crow's Nest Pass Commission. I have never shared the admiration for the Canadian Pacific Railway which inspires both political parties in this House, but until I was confronted with evidence from which there was no escape, I was not prepared to believe that so great a corporation could be so short-sighted as to adopt a policy which forced its agents to do what has been done for the benefit of the Canadian Pacific Railway in this Crow's Nest Pass work.

There seems to be no limit to the grasping greed of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The country has gorged it with money until it has accumulated power to rob the country; and it appears to me, after reading the evidence that it has accumulated power to murder the citizens of this country. I suppose the only satisfaction this country will get will be that, some day or other, we shall see Sir William Van Horne in the attitude of the late Boss Tweed asking "What are you going to do about it?" That is the question—What are we going to do about it? I appeal to the Government, to every honest member of the Government, to act in regard to this matter in such a way that the people of this Dominion, the people of this continent—yes, the people of the world at large, may know that the Parliament of Canada has a care for the humblest of Her Majesty's subjects. I have read carefully of the sufferings of my two young fellow-countrymen of Nova Scotia, and I felt humiliated as a Canadian that Canada should be disgraced by such barbarity. As a member of this House I feel humiliated that Her Majesty's Government through the apathy of the Deputy Minister of Justice should sit with folded arms while the agents of the Canadian Pacific Railway were using the technicalities of the law to browbeat and silence the honest men who were trying to expose the cruel neglect by which these young men were done to death. I am strongly in favour of economy in the expenditure of every department of Government, but, Mr. Chairman, I am prepared to vote for any appropriation that may be necessary to track down the perpetrators of these crimes of the Crow's Nest Pass. I hope that this Government will make and quickly make a searching and drastic inquiry into the question of the responsibility of the Deputy Minister of Justice for suppressing the inquiry into the death of these young Nova Scotians; and, if he has failed in his duty, I for one shall be prepared to vote for his instant dismissal. I trust that the Government will act courageously in the whole matter regarding what has already been done, having given this report my most careful consideration I am surprised that the commissioners have not suggested some definite means of bringing the offenders to justice. I am not singular in holding this view, there is a considerable amount of criticism in the country, that the report of the commission is lacking in this particular. I should look, Mr. Chairman, for the real criminals at the head office of the Canadian Pacific Railway, at the Windsor station in Montreal, some day when the board of directors is in session. And if justice were done, the president and vice-president and every single director would, at the very least, be brought before this House to answer to the question why the country's children should be robbed and murdered by their greedy handling of this country's money. If any hon. gentleman thinks that robbery and murder are words too strong to be used in this connection, I can only say that my belief is founded on the evidence I have read that the way the Canadian Pacific Railway paid these men was robbery and the way it used these men was murder.

I find that there are precedents in the records of the Imperial House of Commons which would justify Parliament in calling on the Canadian Pacific Railway directors to account for the wrong done under their auspices.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I would suggest to my hon. friend (Mr. Ross Robertson) that there generally sits beside him a director of the Canadian Pacific Railway. He might begin with him.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. I do not bar any director of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. But the hon. gentleman ought to begin with the gentleman beside him.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. The director of the Canadian Pacific Railway who sits in this House is amenable to you as well as he is to me, and he is as open to criticism by me as he is to the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce. In 1881 a Select Committee of the British House of Commons was appointed to inquire into the question of the hours of labour in the railway service. The committee took the evidence of a man named Hood, station master on the Cambrian Railway. This station master in his evidence stated, as to the work of signalmen on the road, in connection with an accident that occurred, and that he had to work for thirty-six hours at a stretch.

The select committee adjourned for recess, I suppose that means prorogation, and in May, 1892, the attention of the committee was called to the fact that Hood had been dismissed from his position as station master on the Cambrian Railway. His dismissal was summary, and he had served this company faithfully for over twenty years, the select committee decided that his dismissal was in consequence of the evidence given by him before the commission at the session of 1891. The select committee decided to report the entire matter to the House of Commons. The chairman of the select committee, Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, presented the report of the committee, and it was agreed that the dismissal of this man Hood constituted a breach of the privileges of Parliament, and the directors of the Cambrian Railway were summoned before the bar of the House to receive a reprimand at the hands of Mr. Speaker. You will find these facts in the diary of the Salisbury Government 1886 to 1892, by Henry W. Lucy. I do not know, Mr. Chairman, much about the technicalities of constitutional or parliamentary law: but it seems to me that if the Imperial Parliament could call the directors of the Cambrian Railway to account for the dismissal of one employee this Dominion Parliament ought to have something to say to the directors of the Canadian Pacific Railway for the robbery, for the death and murder of so many of its employees in the work on the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. Their method of spending the money so freely voted to the Canadian Pacific Railway by Parliament, constitutes, to my mind, as grave a breach of parliamentary privilege as was committed by the officials of the Cambrian Railway, who dismissed the station master Hood because of the evidence he gave before the parliamentary committee. I would sooner see the authors, the perpetrators of these crimes on the Crow's Nest Pass road serve a term in jail at the hardest kind of hard labour than receive a reprimand at the hands of the Speaker, but if the arm of the criminal law is not long enough to reach them, I think that at the very least they ought to be brought to the Bar of this House.

Mr. CLARKE. I will occupy the time of the House for but a few minutes, recognizing the desirability of expediting the business of the House as much as possible. Unlike my hon. friend from East Toronto (Mr. Ross Robertson), I have not had the opportunity or advantage of reading the report which has been presented by the commission appointed by the Government to investigate the methods adopted in the construction of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway; and I have had to depend upon a synopsis which has appeared in one of the papers of the report which was presented to the House. I cannot, therefore, speak as definitely or as positively as my hon. friend who has just addressed the committee can speak, but I am bold to make this assertion, Mr. Chairman, that if the analysis of the report which I have read correctly epitomises the report itself, the methods adopted on that work are the most disgraceful that have ever been written in the history of the development of this country. I have no hesitation in saying that the record which has been presented to the public in the report of the royal commission discloses a condition of affairs in connection with the construction of this railway that is a disgrace to Canada that is a disgrace to civilization. Why, Sir, the hon. gentleman who has just spoken has told us what the net result would be on an able-bodied man working on that road for twelve months. According to the synopsis which appears in one of the papers, if I may be permitted to quote two or three lines from it :

A man living in this city, Ottawa, and working the average number of days per month that it is possible to work, 21½, and receiving $1.50 per day for every day which he worked, would, at the end of 12 months, when he returned to Ottawa, have only the miserable pittance of $5.19 left.

This is the condition of affairs brought about by a system of tyranny introduced and practiced by the contractors and sub-contractors that is an abomination and a disgrace. The findings of the commissioners are of themselves sufficient to justify the Government and Parliament in taking the most drastic measures that are possible or that can be devised, to compel the contractors and sub-contractors to recoup those poor workingmen and their families for some at least of the losses which they have sustained by the treatment which has been meted out to them. The commissioners' findings, as I see in this report, are practically as follows :—

The company and its contractors have not lived up to their agreement with the workingmen.

No arrangements were made to receive the men upon their arrival at Fort Macleod.

The men were compelled to sleep on frozen ground in the open air without blankets or shanties, open cars or tents, without fire of any kind.

No measures were taken to keep the men clean—in fact, the surroundings were simply disgusting. They were kept in filthy hovels, swarming with lice and vermin, and without ventilation or light.

The contractors were undoubtedly to blame for having allowed the men to sleep under tents in January, with thermometer down to 30° and 40° below zero.

The food given to the men was in many cases frozen, and in any case bad.

The men were subjected to all kinds of bad treatment when they dared complain.

The men were charged for the transportation of mail which they never received.

The men were left at Fort Macleod many weeks without work, and when put to work were charged for board during the time they were idle.

They were made to pay railway fare both from and back to the east, in contravention of the contract by the agents.

Some of the contractors and sub-contractors charged exorbitant rates for the food and goods furnished the men.

It is clearly established that the men were deprived of medical care when sick.

The men were dismissed without any reason given, and were left hungry, cold and moneyless to find their way home.

Sick workingmen were refused food, and in some cases sub-contractors, when they refused to work when ill, dismissed them.

The wages paid the men were not high enough to meet their expenses.

Now, surely, Mr. Chairman, that is a finding on the part of the royal commission that justifies the use of the strongest possible language with regard to the treatment which has been meted out to these men. I think the finding of the commission will justify the Government of Canada in taking prompt and energetic measures to correct the abuses and the evils which have characterized the construction of this road up to the present time. I say that whatever action the Government takes they would be heartily supported by both sides of this House, and by the people of this country, although I suppose that nothing that can be done will wholly right the wrongs which have been perpetrated on hundreds, if not thousands of the people of Canada who have not been able to make their voice heard as potently as it ought to be heard, and whose grievances remain up to the present time unredressed. I do not wish to prolong this debate, but I desire to emphasize the view that the Government would be justified in resorting to almost any measure, not only against those who have been the authors of those grievous wrongs upon those poor labourers, but against any official of the Government who has been so negligent in his duty as to have made no effort to prevent these wrongs being perpetrated, and by whom no inquiry has been made up to the present time into the sad circumstances surrounding the death of those two young men from Nova Scotia, who were allowed to die like dogs without medical attendance and without fire, in the depth of a Northwest winter. It is a sad and disgraceful story, Mr. Chairman, and I repeat that I hope every power that is available to the Government will at once be put forth to redress the wrongs of those who have been so grievously outraged. The Government may rely, I repeat, upon the hearty support of members on both sides of this House in bringing to speedy justice those whose conduct has been so reprehensible.

Mr. INGRAM. I think that the Government ought to appoint a commission for the purpose of inquiring into the general management of railways throughout this country. I heard a statement made by the Minister of Railways and Canals yesterday that is not in accordance with the facts. Some discussion has arisen with respect to the rules and regulations that are about to be enforced on the Grand Trunk Railway system throughout the country. He stated that the only objection the men had to these rules and regulations coming into force was that they had not had sufficient time to understand them. Now, I know, as a practical man who has had experience with the different railways of this country that certain of those rules and regulations are inhuman. I would like to ask any hon. gentleman in this House how he would like to stand on a box car for miles in cold winter weather, when there is no necessity for doing so. I know that men are forced to do so on the Grand Trunk Railway, the Canadian Pacific Railway, and other leading railways in this country; they are compelled to do two men's work in place of one, and if they decline to do so, they are dismissed from the service. I know, as a fact, that in years gone by men were employed as baggage men and express men, each having a separate department; but to-day the same man does both express work and baggage work, and it is impossible for any one man to do that work satisfactorily.

They make mistakes with respect to express packages and are held responsible, having in many cases to pay for losses, the result of the men being overworked. A commission should be appointed to inquire as to the excessive amount of work these companies are compelling the men to perform. Reference has been made to the Crow's Nest Pass road and to recent occurrences there, and no doubt every hon. member has received letters complaining of the way the labourers employed on that road were treated. As, however, the matter has been fully explained by the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Ross Robertson), I have nothing further to say on that point. But I desire to ask the Government, if they are aware that rules and regulations respecting the railways are changed almost from day to day. Even men who have been employed twenty or twenty-five years on a road are not able to carry out the rules and regulations of any company. Certain rules are placed in the rule book that the company knows no practical man can carry out; in fact, if he attempted to carry them out he would be dismissed from the service. They are put there for the purpose of protecting officials of the company from actions for damages, and so on. It is impracticable to carry them out. So I say that when the Governor in Council is called on to approve the rules of a railway company, the persons who are to carry out those rules and regulations should be consulted, as well as the railway corporation, before the Governor in Council sanctions them.

Mr. WALLACE. I think this is a matter that involves the most serious and prompt attention of the Parliament of Canada. The hon. member for East Toronto said the Government should see the directors of the company about this matter. I think we should rather see the Government direct, it being responsible to Parliament, and the Government, having the facts before them, because the commission went west many months since and made an investigation and returned long ago. The very day they returned they were able to give the salient facts of the case and a general statement of the case to the Government, and the Government were bound to take immediate action and protect the lives of our citizens there and give justice to those men who have been so inhumanly treated. When we remember that for the construction of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has been given the enormous bonus of $11,000 per mile, and the Government when they proposed to Parliament that amount were aware the contract would be given to another company or to some middlemen, and when, by its charter, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company obtained the control and ownership not only of the timber lands and such agricultural lands as might lie in the locality, but also enormous coal areas unequalled on the continent of America, the property being subsequently acquired by a syndicate composed of Cox, Jaffray & Co., and their colleagues, it is evident that the Government should have safeguarded the public interest. From statements brought out in the committees and in the newspapers it appears that the Canadian Pacific Railway and this syndicate which acquired the coal lands obtained property far more than sufficient to build the Crow's Nest Pass line. Men went out there and became sick; it was considered the best thing to do was to allow them to die and be buried and then they could no longer be troublesome. I hold the Canadian Pacific Railway Company directly responsible as well as the Government, which well knew these facts months ago, and yet they made no effort to protect the lives of the men working on the road. We have all heard statements of the ill-treatment to which these men were subjected. Every hon. member no doubt has received correspondence with respect to the matter, but until the report of the commission was published by authority, we were not in a position to realize the cruel barbarity perpetrated on these workingmen. We can fairly demand from the Government that steps be taken to remedy the gross injustice done to these men who have been lured out west to build this road, many of them going at a time of the year when the greatest precautions ought to have been taken to protect them in the arduous work they were called upon to perform. But we have received no information from the Government in respect to this matter. I should like to hear from the right hon. First Minister what steps have been taken or are proposed to be taken in order to remedy a state of affairs that has proved a disgrace to the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. INGRAM.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am exceedingly sorry to think that the men sent out to the Crow's Nest Pass road have been treated in the very barbarous manner stated and proved by the investigation which has taken place. In justice to the Canadian Pacific Railway I am bound to make a statement. I wrote to Mr. Shaughnessy, the vice-president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, asking him if a number of men from my constituency went out to work on the road he would give them employment. He said he would ask Mr. Haney to do so, and stated what wages were being paid. He sent instructions that enabled them to get out there at the rate of 1 cent per mile, with the understanding that they would give them a return ticket at the same rate. I forget the arrangement in detail. After arriving out there within a few days they telegraphed to me that they could not stand the work, that the general treatment was not at all what they expected. I immediately wired Mr. Shaughnessy and asked him to immediately forward instructions to the manager to have these men sent home and give them free transportation. He complied with my request at once. He telegraphed Mr. Haney to give free transportation to the men as were not satisfied. He furnished it, and the men returned. I cannot say whether the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have been fully cognizant of all the wrongs perpetrated there or not. I would hardly think they would be, but certainly the man who has been guilty of the inhumanity that has been outlined by that report deserves some punishment. There is no question about that. It is hardly fair to load the officials of the Canadian Pacific Railway with the entire responsibility. They may not have been aware of all that has taken place. I know that in my case Mr. Shaughnessy treated the men I sent out most liberally. They were not satisfied with the work and with the board, and he immediately ordered that they should have free transportation home.

Mr. WALLACE. All the workmen have not a prominent supporter of the Government at their backs.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. The speeches which we have heard from hon. gentlemen this morning are worthy of the most earnest attention of this House. That this great Canadian Pacific Railway corporation, which has for long been made almost free of the public purse of Canada, which has been so largely bonused and endowed by the people of this country, and which for the building of the Crow's Nest Railway received such munificent assistance from the Parliament of Canada, that this corporation should have been guilty of such conduct as has been proven by the report of the commission to investigate the grievances of the men employed, is, to me, beyond comprehension. I do not wish to dilate upon this subject, but it certainly appears to me to be very remarkable that there is not a remedy in view, and I hope that the Government and the members of this House will not allow the matter to drop.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. I trust that there will be a full and free investigation so that the responsibility may be placed upon the proper shoulders. If there is no legal punishment that can be inflicted upon the men who are guilty, I trust that they will be held up to the obloquy and the contempt of all the people of Canada.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I think that the House will at least be of the opinion that the Government have not been dilatory in this matter, and that they have proceeded as hastily as it was possible for them to do. Complaints were made some time last fall of the treatment which the men were receiving on the Crow's Nest Pass Railway construction work, and the Government at that time thought it advisable without losing a moment's time, to have a commission appointed to proceed to the Rocky Mountains and to investigate the matter. The selection of the commissioners, I think, gave universal satisfaction, and judging from their report they acquitted themselves efficiently. I must observe to my hon. friend (Mr. Wallace) that when the commissioners came back from the west they had not completed their labours but continued their investigation here, and examined witnesses in Ottawa, Hull and Montreal. It is only a couple of weeks ago that the Government received the report of the commissioners. Now, I believe everybody will admit that in the pressure of business incidental to the closing of the session, the Government has had no time to look into this report and to take action. But, it must be one of the earliest duties which will engage the attention of the Government as soon as the session is over to consider this report, and to see what steps can be taken to further the ends of justice. Unfortunately whatever may be done at the present time, yet as is always the case under similar circumstances, there are wrongs which are beyond the power of being remedied; there are wrongs which must ever stand against the good name of Canada. For these, I cannot see any possible remedy whatever. In some cases, however, it may be possible to bring the culprits to justice, and if that duty devolves upon the Government certainly the Government should not hesitate one minute to perform it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The PRIME MINISTER. I had not the opportunity of hearing all this discussion, but as I came into the Chamber I understood that I heard the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Clarke) imputing blame to some officer of the Government, I do not know to which officer he particularly referred. The words I took from the hon. gentleman were: He hoped that if any officer of the Government had been instrumental in preventing justice from being done that officer would be dealt with. I can assure the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) that that is a duty which is in the hands of the Government. I can assure the hon. gentleman

(Mr. Clarke) that if any officer of the Government has in any way contributed to the ill-treatment which was inflicted upon these men, or contributed to prevent justice from being meted out to the guilty parties, that officer can expect no mercy at the hands of the Government and he must be treated as he treated others in this respect. I would like to have from my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) or from any other gentleman who has given attention to this matter, some particulars, and I would like to know if they can tell me where the blame lies, which is the officer of the Government who has been guilty, which is the officer of the Government who has been negligent in this matter.

Mr. CLARKE. If the right hon. gentleman refers to the discussion in this House a few days ago and which was introduced by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell), I think he will find some remarks made by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) in relation to his efforts to get an investigation into the death of these two young men.

The PRIME MINISTER. So far as I understood the discussion the other day, I understood some blame was attached to Mr. Justice Rouleau for having interfered with the coroner holding the investigation.

Mr. FOSTER. That was not stated by the hon. member for Pictou, because in the conversation I had with that hon. gentleman, he intimated to me that as a matter of law he would not be prepared to say that Judge Rouleau had not done his duty.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not say that the statement was made by the hon. member for Pictou, but I said that from the discussion which took place on that occasion I inferred that blame was attached to Judge Rouleau, for having issued an injunction against the coroner. Judge Rouleau has acted in the discharge of his duty and I do not see that we can interfere with him, and in a sense Judge Rouleau is not an officer of the Government; he is not responsible to us. If there is any other officer of the Government implicated I would like to have my hon. friend tell me.

Mr. CLARKE. The officer of the Government so far as I have referred to him, is an officer in the Department of Justice. A recital of the facts in the House the other day related here that efforts had been made by a gentleman in this House to have an investigation take place and the paltry information that he got was that there was no appropriation for the purpose.

Mr. OLIVER. As reference has been made to the discussion which took place the other day, and as there has been a reference to my action in this matter, I say that I am not in a position to state what are the duties of the officers of this Government, but I will say that in my humble estimation—and I make the charge on my fullest responsibility as a member of this House—that the reason that justice was not done in the case of the two men, Macdonald and Fraser, was because the Deputy Minister of Justice, Mr. Newcombe, refused to put the machinery of justice in motion in that behalf, although requested to do so by myself repeatedly.

Mr. INGRAM. Will the right hon. the Premier give a promise to this House that in future commissions appointed to inquire into matters concerning railways, he will appoint some practical man on the commission. I will state my reasons for this request. I have a case in point now of an engineer on one of our leading railways who was a great many hours on duty, and when he asked to be relieved from duty he was refused permission, and in consequence of refusing to go out was dismissed from the service. We must all recognize that when employees, especially engineers, are a great many hours working on a railway they are liable to fall asleep, and thus not only endanger their own lives, but the lives of the travelling public. For that reason I think it is only fair that a practical man should be put on such a commission. Judge Dugas or Mr. Pedley were certainly not practical men, and it would have been very serviceable to them if they had associated with them a third party who understood something about the construction of railways, and the way in which men ought to be treated in the construction of railways.

The PRIME MINISTER. Perhaps it would be well to dispose of one item of the discussion before we go to another. I may say, in answer to the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram), that the Government, in the commission they appointed on this subject, endeavoured to carry out the very suggestion which the hon. gentleman now offers to the House. The commission was presided over by Mr. Justice Dugas, and everybody will admit, I suppose, that to carry on an investigation of this kind, a judicial gentleman, with legal training and accustomed to such work, is most acceptable. Then we asked the labour organization to have a representative to represent them; and on their representation we appointed Mr. Appleton to look after the interests of the organization, as this was chiefly an investigation into an alleged wrong committed on labouring men. Coming back to the question put by my hon. friend, I understood that the party he had in his mind and whose name he did not utter, is the very officer who has been just named and designated by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver)—the Deputy Minister of Justice. Do I correctly understand the hon. gentleman?

Mr. CLARKE. That is quite right.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am not prepared to say at this moment, as I have already said, that we shall be in a position to deal with this question in the dying days of the session; but, as I have said, this is one of the subjects that must engage our attention as soon as the session is over, and, of course, the first duty of the Government, before any other is undertaken, will be to call the Deputy Minister of Justice and make him acquainted with the grave charges which have been made against him today on the floor of this House.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I may be allowed to say one word appropriate to what the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) has brought to the attention of the House. I am in receipt of a communication, which to my mind is of very great importance on that subject, and one which ought to be brought to the immediate attention of the hon. Minister of Railways. It appears that in the old rules the following rule or regulation was inserted:—

No excuse for neglect of duty on the ground of overwork can be accepted. No man is compelled or expected to work if he reports himself as unfit for duty, either from want of sleep or from any other cause. But when trainmen report themselves for duty and take out a train, they are expected to keep wide awake and continually on the alert, and it must be distinctly understood that a violation of the rules or failure of duty cannot be excused on the ground of want of rest.

It appears that in the new rules, which have received the sanction of the Government, that rule, so important to the public safety, is omitted. I have discharged my duty in drawing the attention of the Government to that fact, so that they may take prompt action to see that that very important rule, the most important to my mind of all the rules governing the train service of the men, is re-inserted.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). In bringing this matter before the House, I did not intend to reflect at all on Judge Rouleau. I merely pointed out the fact that he had delayed his decision for two months. I did not attribute any motive to him for this delay, because I have no right to do that; but the result of his delaying his decision for two months was to make it impossible that the inquest should be continued. Another coroner, two months after the death of those men, could not ask a jury to view the bodies, so that the interruption of the action of Coroner Mead practically put a stop to the inquest. Where I think the responsibility lies is in the Department of Justice. I do not at all mean to say that I am going to blame the Deputy Minister of Justice. I think the Minister of Justice is responsible. It is rather extraordinary that this House should be asked to believe that the Department of Justice are going to throw the responsibility of their neglect, if neglect has occurred, upon their deputy. I will briefly recite the facts of the case. Early in March I put on the paper a notice of motion for all the papers in connection with this matter. I waited a month in order to get an opportunity to make that motion. At last I formally made the motion. A month afterwards, I called the attention of the Government to the fact that I had not received the papers, and I gave the Premier a memorandum in regard to them. Two or three weeks afterwards I repeated that I had not received the papers and again sent a memorandum to the Premier. A fortnight afterwards I wrote a letter to the Minister of Justice, saying that I had moved for these papers and that I was very anxious to get them. I have never received the papers, and I have never even had the courtesy of a reply from the Minister of Justice. It is evident that the effect of all this conduct on the part of some one connected with the Department of Justice, has been absolutely to quash this inquest. It has absolutely destroyed all the evidence on which the friends of the men who were murdered—I do not think that is too strong a term—could secure redress in some form. The great object on the part of the Canadian Pacific Railway, or Mr. Haney, their contractor, was to protect the company from money damages, and they have succeeded, largely in consequence of the inaction of the Department of Justice. The cardinal moment was when Judge Rouleau took the very proper course of telegraphing to the department for assistance. That assistance was never received, and in the presence of the hon. member for Alberta was refused. There is great blame attaching to somebody connected with the Department of Justice.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). Is it not fair that Mr. Newcombe should be heard before he is absolutely condemned?

Mr. BELL (Pictou). I am not charging Mr. Newcombe. I am not, nor is any person in this House, disposed to charge anyone but the Minister of Justice and the Government of which he is a member.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). That is not correct. Mr. Newcombe was expressly charged and named by one hon. member.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). I am not charging him.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) did.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. And the hon. member for Toronto.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). I am sure it is not creditable to the Government to try to shoulder the blame for this upon the deputy. That is not what we are disposed to do. We have nothing to do with the deputies. My remarks with regard to my attempt to secure information from the Department of Justice did not apply to the deputy. I have never spoken to the deputy at all. I dealt entirely with the Department of Justice through the Government, and so far I have never had even the courtesy of a reply.

Mr. MONTAGUE. No one has been attacking the Deputy Minister of Justice, and all the little anger shown by the members of the Government on that score, if not assumed, comes in virtually in defence of their Minister of Justice. No one in this House supposes for a moment that the Minister of Justice was not acquainted with the facts. When telegrams were sent to the Minister of Justice on such an important matter, the deputy would undoubtedly consult his Minister, and the Minister is responsible for the acts of his deputy in such matters.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce said that I made charges against the Deputy Minister of Justice.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I did not refer to the hon. gentleman at all. I referred to the other member for Toronto. The hon. gentleman is not the only member for Toronto.

Mr. CLARKE. I mentioned the name of the Deputy Minister of Justice, and I do not desire to recede from the responsibility of having done so. Unfortunately, I was not present at the discussion on the motion of the hon. member from Pictou (Mr. Bell), and had to depend on the report in "Hansard" of the proceedings on that occasion. What I did say, when I was addressing the committee, and when the right hon. First Minister came into the Chamber, was that if any dereliction was shown on the part of any officer, I hoped that the Government would not be slow in meting out justice to the offender. I repeat that now with all the emphasis of which I am capable, in the hope that if the Deputy Minister of Justice or the Minister of Justice himself, or both, were derelict in their duty, the Government and the country will punish them roundly and mete out to them the justice they deserve.

Resolutions to be reported.

The PRIME MINISTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. CLARKE. Before we rise, might I ask the right hon. First Minister if any information or request has been received by the Government, during the past 48 hours, from the Imperial authorities, respecting the deportation of Senor Carrenza and Senor Du Bosc.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am sure my hon. friend will admit that any communica-

(In the Committee.)

To provide for expenses of commission in Crow's Nest Pass Railway inquiry.... $6,500

Mr. BERTRAM. Before this item is passed, I wish to say a word in connection with this commission of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. I have read the report of the commission, and there is one thing that the finding has established beyond doubt, and that is that a great wrong has been perpetrated upon a large number of men who were working on the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. That wrong is something that reflects dishonour on Canada, and whoever may be responsible for it—whether it be the contractors, the general manager of construction, or the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, they ought to be made to suffer for that wrong. I am sure that the Government and the Parliament of this country will not tolerate such a state of things in this Dominion. I cannot help thinking, on looking over the report, perhaps rather hurriedly, that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company did not exercise that due care they ought to have exercised in the construction of a work of this kind, more particularly when a large amount of the public money of Canada was going into its construction. I think it was the bounden duty of the Canadian Pacific Railway to see to it that the men who went up to work in that region should at least be properly fed and properly housed. They do not appear to have been properly fed and housed; and there appears also to have been great opportunity for disagreement as to what they were expected to receive in the way of wages. It is certainly a fact that cannot be denied that men who were working for a considerable length of time after paying their board and transportation charges and other charges deducted from their wages, had practically nothing left. I do not wish to detain the committee, but I must say that I trust the Government will see that it is their duty to do everything that lies in their power to bring in some remedy, so that such a condition of things cannot exist in the future and that some one shall be made to suffer for the wrongs already done. When I read the report, I felt that I should like to hear at least the reply of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I say that any employer of labour with such a damaging statement made against him as is made by the commission against the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, should see it to be his duty to set himself right, if he could, to show that his name was not tarnished. So, I believe it would be the duty of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to try to meet this very serious charge brought against them—because it is a very serious charge. I was glad to hear the words of the leader of the House that he would consider it to be the duty of the Government to take steps immediately after the close of the session to see what can be done in this matter. Language cannot be too strong in speaking of a report of this kind. I admit that it might make some change in one's feeling on the matter if we had the complete reply of the company to some of the statements made, but, as I have said, enough has been established by the commission to show that grievous wrongs have been perpetrated upon a large number of Canadian working-people. Therefore, I hope that the expression of opinion in this House with reference to this important question will have a deep effect upon the Government and will show that this Parliament will not stand idly by while wrongs of this kind are being perpetrated.

Mr. JAMESON. I have much pleasure in endorsing the opinion of the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Bertram), who has just resumed his seat. I had, perhaps, more opportunities than many members of this House to learn some of the facts, living as I do so close to the scene of action. I knew, perhaps seven or eight months ago, how the Canadian Pacific Railway Company had been treating their men, and I think there is no question that this is one of the most disgraceful episodes in Canadian history. I believe in no other case has a great railway corporation taken advantage of its immense power to oppress the people under its control to the extent that the Canadian Pacific Railway has done. I must say that I am not surprised at it. I have lived in the North-west for seventeen years, and the course that this company has adopted towards the settlers there has been quite in line with their action in this matter. The people of Canada are beginning to realize that it is about time that something should be done to prove that the people are the masters and not the servants of this railway corporation. As we hope so soon to be free to go home, I do not intend to take up much time; but I have here a brief synopsis of what has been proved by the commission as to the action taken by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in this matter. This is taken from the "Voice," the labour organ in the city in which I live:

Exorbitant prices have been charged to the men for overalls, shirts, tobacco and other things. Overalls were charged for from $1.25 to $1.50, and prices paid for them in Winnipeg by contractors were from 55c. to 63c.

You can see from that, Mr. Chairman, that the systematic robbery was going on by the authority and under the direction of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Complaints of the cost of transportation from Macleod to the works were loud and frequent.

Working the possible average number of days, labourers paid at the rate of $1.50 a day would, after deducting his expenses, have at the end of the year $5 each. Working 26 days in the month, he would have $86, and if paid $1.75 and charged $5 a week for board, and working 21½ days per month he would have $21 at the end of the year.

The men found that after working two, three or four months they were not in a position to provide the necessaries of life for their families, and having to pay his fare home it was impossible ever to see his family under these conditions. Under such conditions, the commissioners say, the labourer felt like a prisoner in a strange land, and many of them started for home on foot, to walk from 1,000 to 2,500 miles, and instances were found where remnants of food, orange peel, and so forth, thrown by passengers from the passing coaches were used to satisfy the hunger of these men.

Now, I do not wish to detain the committee. I rose, in the first place, to express my sympathy with the statements made by most of the members who have preceded me. I wish also to make a suggestion to the Government. The Government should do something. We are giving to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company the sum of $3,500,000 for building this railway. Now, the workingmen on this road have undoubtedly suffered grievances. There have been violations of contracts with these men; there have been deaths caused by the negligence of people under the charge of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Now, though we cannot restore the lives of these men, we can certainly do something to force the Canadian Pacific Railway to pay damages, pecuniary damages, for their sufferings. These outrages occurred where there are no courts practically; and for many other reasons, it is impossible for the wronged men who are still living, to obtain redress from the courts. They cannot sue, they have not the means to sue. What the Government can do is to retain out of the subsidy enough to compensate these men or their relatives for the damages which they have suffered. I think it is the duty of the Government to devise some means by which that can be done.

The people of Canada should not pay this $3,500,000 to this company when it has been proved so conclusively by agents of the Government, by men specially appointed by the Government, that these damages had been incurred, that these violations of contracts have been suffered. Let the Government, by Act of Parliament, or by appointing a commission, or in some other way so provide that sufficient money shall be retained to compensate these men for the grievances they have suffered.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I spoke on this question very briefly the other day, but there is one point to which I wish to direct the attention of the Government. There is a general report throughout the North-west with reference to the superintendent of the construction on this road and how he is paid. I understand that he received a large salary, but it is reported that the Canadian Pacific Railway give him a percentage of all that he can save in construction. It is said that the Canadian Pacific Railway estimated that the road would cost a certain amount of money, and they said to Mr. Haney: If you can reduce the cost below that we will give you a percentage on what you save—possibly the percentage would be 25 or 50 per cent. Now, the Government is going to inquire into this matter, and it is very important that they should take up that phase of the question, because the House will see that the result of such an arrangement is to offer an incentive to the superintendent of construction to take advantage of the men; and I think that every member of this House and every citizen of Canada who has read the report will agree that the poor men who went out there to earn a livelihood have been treated in most brutal fashion from start to finish.

I agree with those who claim that the blame should be located exactly where it lies. I am not disposed to agree with one hon. member who sought an excuse for the Canadian Pacific Railway officials in this matter on the ground that they probably did not know. It was the duty of these people to know; they received $3,500,000 from the Dominion for this work, the Canadian Pacific Railway carried on the work under a superintendent of construction, and the country has been ringing for months with regard to the brutalities practised on those men. The moment the attention of any official of the Canadian Pacific Railway was brought to this matter it was his duty to inquire into these reports. They must not be excused in any respect. If lives have been lost, and it has been proved that they were lost, as a result of gross neglect, then it is the duty of the Government to see that the blame is placed at the door of those responsible for it, and that justice should be done, no matter how high in position the men may be who are guilty.

Mr. ROGERS. I agree with all that has been said with regard to the injustice that is practised by railway corporations, both in western and eastern Canada. It verifies the old saying that corporations have no souls. We see that truth exemplified in many ways in matters that have been brought before this House. I have not thoroughly looked into the report of that commission, but I see by the newspaper articles that the charges are well founded. But what I want to bring out is the great need of a railway commission being appointed by this Government to look into the many grievous wrongs perpetrated by these great corporations upon our people. If that commission had been in existence, possessing the powers that it should possess, these wrongs should never have gone to the extent that they have gone. We ought to have a commission with power to investigate grievances of this kind, and stop them from going any further. It is impossible for the members of the Government oftentimes to look into these matters at once. We have here an item of $6,500 to pay for this Royal Commission, and we know that there have been many other investigating commissions appointed from time to time. Now, if we had a railway commission such as I suggest, it would save all this necessity of appointing special commissions, and it would be in the interests of economy to do so. This railway commission could report to the House in a condensed form the result of its labours. Such a commission would also be able to deal with a great many of those matters that now take up so much time of the Railway Committee and of this House, with the consequent trouble to which we are put. An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, and I believe such a commission would be able to prevent a great deal of the injustice of which we have heard from the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Ingram) and the hon. member for Brockville (Mr. Wood), injustice perpetrated both by the Grand Trunk Railway and other great railways. I know that there is truth in what those hon. gentlemen say. I have some friends working on railways, and I know they have to suffer injustice frequently. We have about 17,000 miles of railway in this country, in aid of which we have given over 100 million dollars, and surely we have a right to say how these great corporations shall expend our money. We know that the railway corporations are the greatest corporations we have in this land. A railway commission would remove from the political arena many of the questions which now creep in here and are treated from a party standpoint, and it would help to settle disputes regarding freight rates, passenger rates and discriminations. All these questions would be controlled by this commission, and this House would not be called upon to investigate them. I hope the Government will see their way to appoint such a commission. I think it would be a great stroke of economy, and the individual rights of the community would be better looked after.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. I would like to say a word with regard to a remark made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce before recess, on a statement of mine concerning the Department of Justice, and alluding to the speech made some days ago by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) and the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver). When I spoke to-day I merely stated that I felt humiliated that Her Majesty's Government in Canada, through the neglect of the Deputy Minister of Justice, should sit with folded arms while the agents of the Canadian Pacific Railway were thwarting the efforts of those who were endeavouring to expose the cruel wrong done to these unfortunate men. We have no proof yet that there was any communication between the deputy of the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Justice. My hon. friend from Pictou communicated with the Minister of Justice, and he did not even get the satisfaction of an answer. Certainly, any one who will read the statement made by the member for Pictou and the member for Alberta—both those gentlemen have the reputation of being not only honest but truthful men—I think would be convinced that there is something materially wrong in the Department of the Minister of Justice, and that there should be a searching inquiry to find out whether the Minister, or the deputy Minister or any other official has endeavoured to aid the Canadian Pacific Railway in its attempt to get out of responsibility for the death of these unfortunate men. There is no doubt that this matter is creating a great deal of comment in the country. I am not alone in my expression of opinion that the people of this country are wondering what influences were brought to bear upon this commission that they did not suggest some means by which the perpetrators and authors of these cruel atrocities could be hunted down. The Minister of Trade and Commerce referred to the suggestion I made with regard to the directors of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and he alluded to the fact that one of the directors of that company was a member of this House. I, for my part, will show no favour to any one, whether inside or outside this House; and if this House should order the directors of the Canadian Pacific Railway to stand at the Bar of this House I hope that they will all stand here manacled or unmanacled, and that the director of the Canadian Pacific Railway who is a member of this House, will stand in his seat as did the Cambrian directors in England, and be then and there admonished by the Speaker of this House.

Mr. CLARKE. I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works, who is disposed to give us information, whether he has in his employment a gentleman named J. B. Charleson, and whether that gentleman was employed for a considerable time in engaging labourers to go up and work on the Crow's Nest Pass Railway?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The first time I heard of Mr. Charleson having anything to do with the engagement of men, was when I read the report. I believe it is his son.

Mr. CLARKE. Will the Minister give us that information at a later stage? I would like to know who the gentleman is, if he is an employee of the Public Works Department, and how many days or weeks he was engaged in procuring labourers?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. He never left the office, I am sure.

Mr. FOSTER. Will my hon. friend say that Mr. Charleson was not on the coast?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I did not say that. I say that Mr. Charleson never left the office on such a mission. He was sent out by me on departmental work.

Mr. POUPORE. I know it is the son of J. B. Charleson who is referred to by the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Clarke).

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I know that Mr. J. B. Charleson employed in my department never had anything to do with it, to my personal knowledge.

Mr. FOSTER. Has his son something to do with it?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I suppose so, because I know that the father never had anything to do with it.

Mr. CLARKE. I am merely asking for information. Was J. B. Charleson, an employee of the Public Works Department, engaged in employing men to work on the Crow's Nest Pass Railway during the period he was an employee in the Public Works Department? How many days was he engaged in that work, and was he paid by the Public Works Department during that period?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. So far as my knowledge goes, J. B. Charleson now employed in my department had nothing to do with that matter; but I am informed by the hon. member for Pontiac that the son of Mr. Charleson was so employed.

Mr. POUPORE. I am aware that the son of Mr. Charleson travelled through our section and engaged batches of men at Pembroke and Renfrew. He had an arrangement with the Canadian Pacific Railway to send forward men to be employed on the work. I know J. B. Charleson had nothing to do with the engagement of those men. It was the son of Mr. Charleson who was employed, and he resides in Mattawa.

Mr. WALLACE. Was there not at that time more than one Charleson engaged in the Department of Public Works? It was a matter of rumour that an employee in the Public Works named Charleston was actively engaged in hiring men for the Canadian Pacific Railway to work on the Crow's Nest Pass road. If such was the case, it was very irregular. If the individual was the son of Mr. Charleston, he had a perfect right to do so, and I am glad the matter has been brought up.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Certainly.

Mr. OLIVER. I wish to correct the impression that might be circulated owing to the remarks made by the hon. member for North Wellington, who stated that in the case of certain men hired in his constituency when they became dissatisfied with the condition of the work, they were given free transportation back to their homes. I wish to point out that that was not the universal condition. I was credibly informed at Fort Macleod that when the men, finding the conditions unsuitable to them, left their employment, they were at once prosecuted under the Territorial Masters' and Servants' ordinance and convictions secured against them, and—I am not certain on this point—I think a number of them were sent to prison.

To provide for expenses in connection with the enforcement of the Alien Labour Law in Manitoba and the North-west Territories	$2,000
---	---------

Mr. CLARKE. Has any appropriation been made for the enforcement of the Alien Labour Law in other parts of the Dominion? I observe this sum of $2,000 is for Manitoba and the North-west Territories.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This is for the present year. There is an appropriation for the coming year under the heading of Department of Justice.

Mr. CLARKE. How long is it since the Alien Labour Law inspectors worked in Manitoba and the North-west Territories, and were they engaged in preventing alien labour being employed on the works on the Crow's Nest Pass road?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Officers connected with the immigration branch were instructed to act under the Alien Labour Law last August. They were given formal authority under the Act by the Minister of Justice, and they worked from Port Arthur through the Rocky Mountains, at various points where attempts were made to bring in American labourers. Attempts were made to bring in large bodies of American labourers, and although the committee will understand that a law of this kind cannot be thoroughly enforced, it was carried out on the whole very successfully.

Mr. CLARKE. I must congratulate the hon. Minister in being able to keep out large bodies of alien labourers seeking employment there. The circumstances under which the Crow's Nest Pass road was built and the conditions under which the labourers worked were not satisfactory. I should like to ask whether any complaints were forwarded to the Interior Department or to members of the Government by the alien labour law inspectors as to the treatment of the Canadian labourers by the contractors or sub-contractors?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The complaints led to the appointment of a commission to make inquiry as to the condition of the labourers.

Mr. CLARKE. Were complaints forwarded by the alien law inspectors?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The commissioner of immigration, who is chief officer of the immigration branch in the west, went, under my instructions to certain points for the purpose of finding out facts in connection with the importation of alien labour. He took with him the superintendent of immigration, and together they endeavoured to ascertain if there was anything in the complaints made in regard to the treatment of labourers, or whether it was merely newspaper talk. I am now speaking from recollection, but the result of the communications which followed after the commissioners visited the neighbourhood of Macleod was that I decided to ask the Government for a commission, because I believed the complaints were well founded.

Mr. FOSTER. What is this expenditure for, and to whom was it paid?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The expenditure comprises the expenses of the officers of the immigration branch who were employed on the work at different points in the west. The amount paid was small, the principal amounts been for expenses while travelling.

Mr. FOSTER. What work did they do?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They travelled from point to point, and obtained information as to the movement of labourers, and also as to efforts made to bring in labourers from across the line. They had considerable difficulty to encounter because agents at that time were endeavouring to bring in a considerable number of foreigners from the United States, and it was difficult to distinguish between labourers and agricultural settlers, as the agents always claimed that the labourers were coming in as agricultural settlers. The immigration officers travelled from place to place and gave instructions to the collectors of customs, and endeavoured generally to enforce the Alien Labour Law. Their efforts were successful, without our agents being compelled to take legal proceedings. I know their efforts had a certain effect, because I received complaints from men who had been stopped, and also from Mr. Gault, of the Gault mines, who complained that labourers had been prevented going in there.

Mr. FOSTER. Do the officers submit any reports of the number of people they deported?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The correspondence from the immigration commissioner in Winnipeg will show pretty fully all he did.

Mr. FOSTER. I call the attention of the Minister of Public Works once more to the question I have put him, and I would like him to inform himself thoroughly. This is a matter which resolves itself into a question of veracity and fact. I am informed most positively that Mr. J. B. Charleson, sr., an employee of the Public Works Department not only employed but shipped men, not one man but many men, did it not one day but many days, and engaged in it from time to time as a regular business, all the time being an employee of the Department. There is some great mistake, either with the Minister or with my informant. More than that, I have seen dozens of the returned men from the Crow's Nest Pass who made their complaints to me, who know Mr. Charleson, know he is an employee of the Public Works Department and say they were employed by him. All these things put together make me ask the Minister to inform himself thoroughly and to take the occasion of letting the House know what is right in this respect.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Mr. Charleson never left the office to my personal knowledge on such a mission as this. I will get the information this afternoon and give it to the House.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not read the report of the commission, but I am informed that it says that Mr. J. B. Charleson engaged hundreds of labourers for the Crow's Nest Pass work.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The first intimation that I had that Mr. J. B. Charleson might be mixed up with that was when I read the report. Since then I am informed that it was his son. In the pressure of business I had not time to make further inquiries.

Mr. SPROULE. Would the Minister of the Interior tell me if these immigration agents who are employed to administer the Alien Labour Law were not paid for their time and travelling expenses from the Immigration Department?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They were salaried officers and did not get anything extra in connection with the Alien labour.

Mr. SPROULE. Were there travelling expenses paid from the same source?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. How then is there an item for travelling expenses?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It will recoup the immigration vote for what has been paid out of it.

Mr. SPROULE. How do you keep an account of what has been spent in one case and what has been spent in the other?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. When the accounts came in they did not distinguish, but when examined they were separated. This vote is taken to recoup the money paid out of the immigration vote, and it is also taken to pay some outstanding accounts.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand you pay certain immigration agents in the States $3 a head for men sent to this country.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Agricultural immigrants.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it true that some of these were deported under the Alien Labour Law, and that the officers were paid first for sending them in and afterwards for sending them out?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Agricultural immigrants not sent in by a salaried agent are paid for at so much a head. We knew that as soon as we undertook to enforce the Alien Labour Law that the labour agents in the States would endeavour to send in railway labourers under the guise of agricultural settlers, and as a matter of fact they tried to do so and our officers at Winnipeg had the greatest difficulty in separating the sheep from the goats. The officers, however, are men of great experience who know pretty well the class of agricultural settlers and they separated them without great difficulty. Some of the people who were sent back raised a cry and claimed they were agricultural settlers, but as a matter of fact I do not think there is a single case in which that is true. I watched the operation of the thing very closely and I believe that to be correct. It is very difficult to enforce a law of this kind. I may mention that the other day I was advised that a carload of Italians had passed Winnipeg. The immigration commissioner boarded the train and found the Italians in the second-class car, and the man in charge, evidently an Italian who could speak English, told him they were going to work on the Crow's Nest Pass. He wired me and I advised him to take the necessary proceedings at Macleod to test the matter. The Canadian Pacific Railway people say that these are Italians who have been working in Canada for a number of years and that we have no right to stop them. On the other hand we thought we had evidence that they had been brought from New York, and the question will be tested before the courts at Macleod. A great deal depends on the discretion and judgment and firmness of the officer in charge, and I think we have a very excellent man in the commissioner of immigration at Winnipeg.

Mr. SPROULE. My information is that the agents in the States took advantage of men being anxious to work on the Crow's Nest Pass Railway and sent them in as men who were to settle in the country, and collected pay for every man they sent in.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They could not possibly do it.

Mr. SPROULE. The Minister admits that the United States agents sent them in, but I understand it was the Government's own agents. Can the Minister tell me how many were deported under this law?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I cannot. The officers stopped a number at the frontier at different times, and that was sufficient without taking legal proceedings to deport.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). How does the Minister ask for this specific amount of $2,000 unless he has had some means of calculating it?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I will get the information and lay it before the House.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The item had better stand.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Very well; let the item stand.

Mr. INGRAM. The amount asked for here is $2,000 for the North-west Territories, while next year's estimate asks $3,000 for the whole Dominion. Does the hon. gentleman expect or intend that the $3,000 which he asks for the coming year will cover the expense of seeing that the Alien Labour Law is properly carried out throughout the Dominion?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. All I can do now is to explain what has been done during the past year. The hon. gentleman will have to apply to the Solicitor General with regard to the Estimates for next year.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The item stands. Classification of old records in the office of the Privy Council, to be paid, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act..... $1,000

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. I understand that this item belongs to the department of the right hon. the First Minister, and I would like to know what these records consist of. As the right hon. gentleman must be aware the records of the Dominion are scattered in three or four different departments. The Privy Council Department has some of the records, the Secretary of State's Department has another portion, and the archives branch of the Department in Agriculture has another portion, and there are not a few in the Library of Parliament. This item brings to my mind the fact, of which I have been informed, that some time last year, when a large number of papers were being removed from the Privy Council Department to the paper mill to be turned into pulp, a number of valuable papers, as they afterwards turned out to be, were lost or dropped by the carters who were taking away the stuff, or were found by the parties to whom the stuff was sold. In one case, a bound volume, being a copy of the "Upper Canada Gazette," which was being carted away from the Privy Council Department, but was fortunately dropped in the street, and was picked up either by one of the carters or by a member of the Dominion police. I need hardly say that that book could not be replaced for less than $500 or $600 to-day. So valuable are some of these volumes of the "Upper Canada Gazette," that a complete set for 1814 or 1815 would bring at least $1,000. It seems to me that there should be no such distribution of valuable documents in half a dozen different places; but that they should be under the care either of the Department of Agriculture or of the gentleman who is styled the Keeper of the Records, or to be placed in the Library of Parliament. There is no complete copy of the "Upper Canada Gazette" either in the Library of Parliament, in any of the departments at Ottawa, in the public library of Toronto, or in the library of the provincial parliament at Toronto; but it is possible that a collection very nearly complete might be made up from the different places where the old and valuable official papers is stored. I think the right hon. First Minister should make an inquiry into what I have stated. I am informed on good authority that the volume of the "Gazette" which was lost and which I refer to was handed by the Dominion policeman to the chief of the Dominion police, Mr. Sherwood. When my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) brings down his Estimates next year, I think he might include in them an appropriation of $30,000 or $40,000 for a building in which all the valuable records of this Dominion might be placed. At present, they are in non-fire-proof buildings; they are scattered through the east and west blocks as well as in the centre buildings and Langevin Block; and if any of these buildings should be destroyed by fire, the country would be deprived of important records of a very valuable character. I may say that I would not look upon it as at all extravagant if such a vote were asked for by the hon. Minister. Any one who visits the Department of Agriculture to-day will see that the room which has been selected there for the archives of this Dominion is not at all suited to the purpose. The room that was originally selected years ago, and was long occupied for this purpose in the west block was a far more suitable one. But if we can have nothing better than the accommodation now provided in the Department of Agriculture, I think that if we are having a classification of the records, I think the right hon. First Minister should see that they are all kept together in one place or another and not scattered, as at present.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am really very much obliged to my hon. friend for having brought this very important subject to the attention of the House. I may say at once that I have felt for a long time that statements such as he has given utterance to are only too well-founded. The archives of the Government—and they are at this time most valuable, reaching far back into the history of the country, in fact, to the French régime—are scattered in different places—the hon. gentleman stated in three or four different places, but I believe there are more than that. For my part, I sincerely agree with him that we should have a custodian of the records, an officer specially charged to look after them, classify them, keep them in order, and be responsible for their safety. Unfortunately, at the present time, they are very much scattered, some being in the Privy Council Office, some in the office of the Secretary of State, and some in the department of the archives under Mr. Brynner. In my judgment, a special department ought to be organized, where all the records from the various departments of the Government, after a certain number of years, say five or ten years, should be sent there to be classified and kept. My hon. friend has also made the offer—and I thank him for the suggestion—that he would support an appropriation of some $40,000 or more for the construction of a building consecrated to that object. I am afraid that $40,000 would be scarcely adequate for a building of that character. I may say to my hon. friend that there is another valuable collection, not of old records, but of scientific objects, in this city, which should also be looked after, that is, the treasures we have in the Geological Museum. Those treasures are very much exposed; they might be destroyed at any moment; and I think we owe it to the country that that valuable collection should be preserved. Perhaps the Government will look into the question of having a special building, which could be divided into two departments, one for the Geological Survey and the other for the old records of Canada. I am very much obliged to my hon. friend for having brought this matter to our attention.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think the hon. gentleman will find in the records of either the Secretary of State Department or his own, some reports which were prepared by the committee appointed by the late Government for the purpose of looking into this matter of the union of all these different branches of the record departments in one department.

Mr. BRITTON. All will agree as to the necessity of the classification of these old records and their preservation. I rise merely to call attention to a matter to which I referred last session. I find that this work is done by those who are in the employ of the Government, and that payment is made to them, notwithstanding anything that may be in the Civil Service Act. I think the Government have gone the full length of giving extra pay to civil servants for work of this kind. No one objects to the civil servants being well paid, but when it is considered that a civil servant cannot go outside the routine work prescribed for him in his department without getting extra pay, although he is well paid already, we ought to cry a halt, except in cases where the circumstance really calls for extra compensation.

Additional amount required to meet expenses of the Canadian International Deep Waterways Commission $959 49

Mr. FOSTER. Will that finish the expenses?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think so.

For a line of steamers to run between St. John, Halifax and London (revote)	$25,000
For a line of steamers to run during the winter season of 1897-98, between St. John and London, Liverpool or Manchester (revote).....	15,000

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I may just explain that these two items are not any additional charge on the revenue. They are merely a subdivision of the vote of $40,000 granted last year.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Has the Minister made any provision for subsidizing the service between Newfoundland and Cape Breton?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The only item is item 53 for steam service between Halifax, St. John, Newfoundland and Liverpool, $15,000.

Mr. McDOUGALL. The service I refer to must be known to the hon. gentleman, because the facts were before his department for several years.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Nothing has been provided for it.

Mr. McDOUGALL. It is the steamer "Bruce" connecting the Newfoundland Railway with the Intercolonial at the harbour of Sydney, Cape Breton. The principle traffic between Nova Scotia and Newfoundland is done over the route twice a week, and after a few days it will run three times a week each way. There is very much traffic being developed there, both freight and passengers. It was expected all along that during this session provision would be made to subsidize that service.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. My impression is that that service has to be provided by Mr. Reed, under his contract with the Government of Newfoundland, whether we do anything or not.

Mr. McDOUGALL. There is a provision in the arrangement between Mr. Reed and the Government of Newfoundland in that direction, but it does not follow that Canada, if we want to benefit by the communication with Newfoundland, should not assist that service.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I am bound to say that my impression is we are paying quite as much as we ought to pay for these various steam connections, and I would require to see an exceedingly good reason before recommending anything more than I now recommend, and there are votes which it sometimes strains my conscience very much to ask for.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Is it not absurd for the hon. gentleman to continue a subsidy to a service between Halifax and St. John, Newfoundland, which only goes once a week or fortnightly, while the other service goes twice a week. The one that goes twice a week is the one that should be subsidized. The proposition originally made to the predecessors of the hon. gentleman was that the subsidies given to the different lines of steamers calling at St. John's, Newfoundland, on their way to Liverpool, should be given to that service which is to connect the Intercolonial and the Newfoundland Railway. I cannot see the propriety of giving $15,000 or $20,000 to a service that the public only get the benefit of once or twice in a fortnight, while a service that people get the benefit of two or three times a week each way gets nothing. That service now is carrying the Canadian mails from Sydney to Newfoundland, and has been since last fall making trips twice a week.

To provide for repairs to steamer "Stanley" $5,000

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. After the "Stanley" came from her winter work, she was found to be a good deal damaged, particularly in the tanks and boilers. I had her inspected by the inspector of hulls and boilers in the maritime provinces, and he reported that she should be put in dock and a certain number of repairs put on her before entering into active service next autumn. It was intended to send her to Glasgow and have the sheathing taken off and straightened and having her generally repaired. That would cost about $50,000, but after it was determined that a special boat had to be provided for the customs protection service in the maritime provinces and the St. Lawrence, it was determined to put the "Stanley" on that work, and she has been repaired sufficiently to enable her to do that work, and is now in the customs protection service. On the first of June she took her place on the station. It was found last year that the small sailing vessel we had was not fitted for the work.

Mr. FOSTER. She should be a costly vessel.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We found that the difference between running her and a vessel such as we proposed to build for the special purpose, is not very much. She is one of the fastest boats in the Dominion service. These $5,000 are taken to provide for these repairs, but I find I will not require it all. I do not know how much I will require. The balance will be spent in the fall after she is through the customs protective service, and goes on the slip to have her tanks and boilers fixed.

Further amount required for winter mail service $3,800

Mr. MARTIN. I would like to ask the Minister if he proposes any improvement in the service, and if so, what?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) knows that we have a sum in the Estimates for the building of a new iron steamship to assist the "Stanley" in carrying the winter mail service. But as to the Cape service, of which he speaks, there is no proposition to alter it at present.

Mr. MARTIN. I have already called the hon. Minister's attention to the baggage and freight rate over that route. The exorbitant rate of 3 cents per pound, or $60 per ton, is charged. I would like to know from the hon. gentleman if anything is to be done about it?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Captain McElhinney, who has made a special study of this service, has gone to Scotland with the specifications of the new ship for the purpose of calling for tenders in case we get the vote from Parliament. The statement of my hon. friend (Mr. Martin) has been submitted to him. Until he returns I cannot make any definite statement on the subject, but the hon. gentleman may depend upon it that the question will be given full consideration.

Scientific Institutions—Amount required for purchase money for land for the new observatory near Toronto..... $400

Mr. FOSTER. Are you building a new observatory?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman will remember that when the British Association were here, they appointed a special committee to examine into the working of our observatory, and they found that owing to the numerous street rails in Toronto, a part of our work was rendered absolutely useless. The committee waited upon me and pointed out that it would be necessary to build an observatory not less than three or four miles from any possible electric railway. Mr. Stupart selected a site which can be purchased for $400. I have asked a vote in the Supplementary Estimates for 1898-99 for the purpose of constructing a building. It is not an expensive matter, but absolutely necessary.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The site is just east of Toronto. I understand.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Additional amount required to pay salaries of officers of the Meteorological service $500

Mr. CLARKE. What is the reason for this?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Mr. Stupart, who has charge of this branch, appoints additional officers here and there during the year, and I found that he had appointed in different parts a number of officers whom the sum previously voted did not enable me to pay.

Fisheries—Amount required for repairs to fishery protection service steamers. $10,000

Mr. FOSTER. What is the explanation of this?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This is to pay for the expenses connected with the repair of the steamer "La Canadienne." As the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) will remember, she was run into by the "Yantic" last year and cut down to the water's edge, and had to be placed in dock and repaired. We had insurance upon her amounting to $11,500, and, of course, I shall be recouped this amount after the repairs have been made. The insurance companies are only awaiting the adjustment to pay the money.

Fisheries—To pay balance legal expenses of fisheries reference appeal to Privy Council $5,608 38

Mr. HAGGART. What is the effect of the judgment?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have not received the full text of the judgment yet, and the hon. gentleman knows as much as I do about it, having read the summary of it in the newspapers. I am waiting anxiously for the text, because this is one of the most important judgments ever pronounced by the Privy Council. I gather that it has been adverse to the contention of the Dominion.

Mr. FOSTER. What were the payments in this case?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The amount I had voted for this appeal was $8,000. Mr. Christopher Robinson, Q.C., was retained and was paid $5,000. Messrs. Day & Russell were paid about $2,000, and there were some small amounts, making a total of $7,446. Then we have the solicitors' accounts in London, $8,108, of which we have paid $1,946. With the balance left over of $553, this amount of $5,608.38 is necessary.

Further amount required for Behring Sea Claims Commission..... $20,000

Mr. FOSTER. Is that ended yet?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes. I had an intimation from the United States Government the other day that the money would be paid, and they hoped, in a day or two. It was introduced originally in a special Bill in Congress, but they found a difficulty in getting the Bill through and they put the amount in the General Appropriation Bill. That Bill is passing through Congress now. It is to be paid before the 17th of this month, and when it is paid over all we have to do is to divide it according to the award.

Mr. FOSTER. Can my hon. friend (Sir Louis Davies) give the total cost of this Behring Sea business?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes. Of course the hon. gentleman understands that we have paid out a good deal, we have to get back some. The British Government have agreed to pay one-half the divisible expenditure, which amounts to $16,000. We had an appropriation of $30,000 in 1896-97, and $20,000 in 1897-98, making a total of $50,000. Of this $49,944 has been paid in expenses, divisible expenses, counsel fees and allowances of Judge King and the balance we have here is required to pay unpaid accounts of the commission. The full amount that it will cost Canada is $70,000. It is a matter to be considered by Council whether the country should bear the entire expense. Provision was made, as the hon. gentleman will recollect, when the claims were originally submitted to arbitration, that the Government should determine what portion, if any, the successful claimants should bear.

Mr. FOSTER. That is, the sealers?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is, when I come to appropriate the award I shall have to go before my colleagues and they will have to determine under that original proposal whether the Government of Canada shall defray the entire cost of all the litigation, or whether the successful litigants who were successful because of the interference of the Dominion Government, will bear a proportional part of it, for instance, whether you take 5 per cent or 4 per cent or 2 per cent, as the case may be, off their award before paying, and so reimburse the Government. But suppose you do not do that the cost will be $70,000 less $8,000 of the divisible expenses which the British Government will return to us. Now the appropriation made by the United States was $75,000 in the original instance, and they got a larger appropriation afterwards: their expenditures were very much in excess of ours. I may say here, I take this opportunity of saying it, that I think we have been peculiarly fortunate in the selection of an arbitrator and in the selection of the counsel and agents who conducted the proceedings before this arbitration commission. It will be a matter for congratulation, I am sure, to the whole Canadian people irrespective of politics, that our conduct of this arbitration has resulted so successfully to Canada.

Mr. BRITTON. May I ask if the private litigants, those who were interested in the result, were represented on this commission by counsel?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. A few private litigants chose to retain extra counsel of their own right, with which we have nothing to do.

Mr. BRITTON. But that might make a difference with the Government in the final result.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is a fact that they did retain our friend, the hon. member for Picton (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), who had great personal knowledge of the matter, to assist the counsel appointed by the Government.

Immigration $68,800

Mr. FOSTER. Here is a very large supplementary vote for which we must have full explanations.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. With regard to the item for salaries of agents and employees in Canada and foreign countries, the expenditure for the last year was conducted, during the first portion of the year, with a view to possibly being able to cut off some of the expenditures during the winter, and while during the early months of the year I expected that a certain portion of the expenditure might be cut off during the latter portion of the year, the expenditure at that time was at the rate of about $200,000 a year, which was the appropriation. But as this year came on the efforts which had been made had resulted in such an interest being taken that I felt I was not justified in cutting off any of the expenditure, but on the contrary incurring a certain amount of increased expenditure in the work of advertising and distributing literature. The clerks, agents and employees that we have in Canada total up, for salaries, $38,729.06; whereas, the appropriation was only $35,000, and we ask for $3,800 more to make up the deficit. The list of agents and employees in foreign countries, for salaries, totals up to $22,155, the appropriation was $17,500, so we ask for an additional vote to make that up. The bulk amount of $60,000 asked for general expenses may be divided in that way, and to the extent of about $20,000 for bonuses for immigrants whom we have received from foreign countries. But in addition to that, we have spent about $8,000 in affording necessary assistance to immigrants in the country during the first month of their stay. The remainder is made up of expenses of agents whom we have sent on special trips to the United States principally, and in literature, which we have been circulating during the latter months of the year. The expenditure, therefore, would be done upon the basis of about $200,000 a year, and on account of what appeared to me to be successful work and the necessities of it in the latter portion of the year, I have expanded the work in almost all lines, but particularly in the line of advertising and printing. The work, therefore, has gone on through the year upon a scale of about $260,000 or $265,000 per year, the increase being largely in the latter months of the year.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend has given what he thinks sufficient reason why, when he had asked for $200,000 and the House granted him that sum, he has increased the work during the year without consultation with the House, but going on his own opinion, he proceeds to expand that by a sum of $68,000. It does not seem as if there was much use in a Minister coming to the House and developing his plans, taking the House into his confidence and getting the House to entrust him with a certain amount of money for the work of the year, if, after the House has turned its back, the hon. gentleman goes to work and expends by more than a third, the large vote which is given to him. He proposes to expend $268,000 when the House authorized him to expend only $200,000. Now, I draw the attention of the Government to this fact: if they are going to get Estimates in that way, and then are going to spend a third more without the money being granted, and without coming to the House again, why, there does not seem to be the least use of calling the House together and going through the farce of making Estimates. There may be occasions in which unforeseen and very urgent circumstances will warrant the Minister in overstepping the bounds of his appropriation. There is a bond of confidence between the Minister and the House. He makes a pledge to the House, and the House takes him on his pledge, and the money is voted on that ground. But here the Minister sits down and says: Well, the House has given me $200,000, but I am going to work to expend $268,000, and I will depend upon a party vote in the House to give me that money. That is, I think, rather a grave practice to be imported into our expenditures. I do not think it proper. I think I can appeal to my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who is an old parliamentarian and who knows something about these things, as to whether that is a correct principle to go upon. Now, what excuse has the hon. gentleman given? He thought things were going along well, and he took it into his head to spend $68,000 more, largely in printing and advertising. I think with the large vote we gave him, he should have confined himself to that expenditure. He could early in the year have laid his plans before the House, and asked the House, if he thought it was a very urgent matter, to grant him this money. But it is now the middle of June, the whole of this money is practically spent, and the Minister simply making estimates for himself and makes expenditures for himself. I am certain this is not a right principle. How can we carry on our financial work if expenditures are to be based on the whim of the Ministers entirely outside the authorization of this Parliament?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think that any person will for an instant deny that the principle laid down by the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) is perfectly sound; and I should be sorry to be held responsible for enunciating the principle, either by statement or by practice, that a Minister might, at his own will, incur large additional expenditure over and above what Parliament had given him. But as the hon. gentleman has himself admitted, there are circumstances which may at times justify a Minister in exceeding the appropriation, although it must be done with the greatest care, I perfectly understand, and with the full knowledge of the facts that he is answerable to Parliament for the results of what he does. I have explained to the committee the circumstances of this case that I thought would justify me in doing what I did, not upon my individual judgment, but upon my judgment and the judgment of my colleagues, because I apprehend that the member for York does not imagine that any Minister would exceed an appropriation of $200,000 by $70,000, without consultation with his colleagues and without their authority. I may say that I had that. The appropriation could have been brought to Parliament very much sooner. From time to time in the early portion of the winter when the question came before me of incurring additional expenditure, I fully expected to be able to get the estimate before Parliament in the early portion of the session so as to get the authorization of Parliament for the expenditure of the money. But my hon. friend, who has been a member of a Government, knows how business sometimes presses, and things that ought to be done are sometimes left undone at the exact time when they ought to be done. So he will perfectly understand how it was that the estimate was not brought down in the early part of the session, but was put off from time to time until it is now found in the Supplementary Estimates for this year. I admit that it was not regular, and were it not for the fact that for the first time since 1883 there has been a large and decided movement of the agricultural class towards this country, I would not consider myself justified in incurring that expenditure; but in view of that large movement of agricultural settlers into Canada, and particularly into Manitoba and the North-west Territories, I would doubtless have been deemed blameworthy if I had not taken the necessary steps to stimulate that movement and take care of the immigrants, as I did when I found the vote was not sufficient. Hon. gentlemen opposite would have said that I had thrown away a golden opportunity if I had neglected to take advantage of this movement. It may be that the Government and myself especially are somewhat to blame for not bringing down the Estimates at an earlier period of the session, but these matters are delayed sometimes on account of more pressing business.

Mr. FOSTER. It does not alter the principle whether an individual Minister or a collection of Ministers, exceed the vote. The Ministers are simply authorized to do what Parliament authorizes them to do; they are authorized to spend the money that Parliament votes. The hon. gentleman tries to make the seat on which he must drop a little easier by padding it, with his colleagues. Is there any report on which the hon. gentleman acted?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. An Order in Council would not alter the case.

Mr. FOSTER. It appears that the hon. gentleman has not even a report to Council to add to the padding to put on the seat on which he must fall. He has not shown a report authorizing him to take $68,000 of the public money on mortgage, and trust to the House to give him a bill of indemnity. What were the special circumstances in question? We have had generalities enough; let us have the special circumstances that were so urgent and imperative as to decide the Minister to permit this great overstepping of what are the well acknowledged rules of executive expenditure of a parliamentary vote. Let the committee have also a statement as to how this amount was expended; let the committee have a statement of the payments that are in the meantime suspended, because this is the middle of June, and there are only about twenty more days left. $68,000 cannot have been expended in this time; where is the $50,000 or $60,000 which must be earned up to this date? Is the hon. gentleman running his department on credit or in what way is he getting along? I hope he is not running notes.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The information required will necessitate an abstract of the expenditure for the year. The item will, under these circumstances, have to stand.

Mr. FOSTER. The item will have to stand, for we cannot give $68,000 to the hon. Minister on his own honest face.

Mr. HENDERSON. This item is a most extraordinary one. Last year the hon. gentleman came down to the House and asked an appropriation for immigration, which was granted. He was authorized to expend that sum and not one dollar more; but without the consent of Parliament, on his own individual whim, contrary to every fixed principle and well established rule of parliamentary expenditure, he spent $68,000 more than he was authorized to do. That is very improper conduct and it should receive the censure of this Parliament. No individual has the right to do so and this House has no right to come forward and make indemnity for such action. I move that the whole item be struck out.

Mr. FOSTER. Let the motion stand, together with the item.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The item stands.

To provide for the repayment, in accordance with an agreement made on 27th September, 1881, to the Seminary of St. Sulpice, the value, at 50 cents an acre of 21,209 acres of land not used for Indian occupation in the township of Gibson, Ontario, with interest from 26th January, 1892, to 30th June, 1898..... $14,696 05

Mr. FOSTER. The committee would like an explanation of this item.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This amount is for the repayment to the Seminary of St. Sulpice of the value of 50 cents per acre, of the land in the township of Gibson, Ont., which has not been used for occupation by the Indians, who were moved from the Oka reserve. It carries interest from 26th January, 1892, to 30th June, 1898, and interest on the above then due to the 30th June, 1898. The amount is paid under an agreement, and the Solicitor General has advised that the Government is liable to pay the money.

Mr. CLANCY. Perhaps this would be a good time for the Minister of the Interior to give the committee some information with regard to Mr. John Beattie, former Indian agent at Highgate, who was dismissed last year. Mr. Beattie was in the service for eighteen years and upon some mere unproved charge—unproved because there was no investigation held—he was summarily dismissed, and without getting his superannuation, was paid the paltry sum of $121 which he paid into the fund.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Where is Highgate?

Mr. CLANCY. It is in the judicial county of Kent, and would have relation, I think, to a band of Moravian Indians. Mr. Beattie communicated with the Minister of Justice on the 3rd of December, 1897, and this is what the Minister said in reply:

I received your communication of the 2nd inst., and do not at all question the accuracy of your statement. I shall discuss the matter with the Minister of the Interior, and shall be pleased if he is able to recommend to Council a retiring allowance for you. So far as I am personally concerned, I see no reason why you should not receive it.

Afterwards Mr. Beattie received $121 and some odd cents from the Department of the Interior, being the amount he paid into the superannuation fund with 5 per cent interest. Mr. Beattie is advanced in years. He had been eighteen years in the service, and to treat him in that way was most extraordinary. No complaint was made as to his efficiency as an officer, but he was dismissed for alleged partisan conduct, and if the Minister is to lay his heavy hand on an old man on an unproved charge like that, I say it is very unjust. I do not propose to say that Mr. Beattie was innocent of the charge, for I know nothing about it, although I do venture to say that I know as much about it as the Minister, and that is absolutely nothing. Although Mr. Beattie may have been guilty of being anxious for his party, whether that charge be right or wrong, it should not have brought upon this man's head the punishment which he received. He was eighteen years in the service. For the first five years his salary was $200, for the next five years $400, and for the last eight years $500, so that he would be entitled to a superannuation of $180 a year.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. How old was he?

Mr. CLANCY. I cannot say, but he was a man quite advanced in years. He is past that period of life when he is able to earn for himself, but I do not say he is a pauper, because he is not at all a man of that class. Even though Mr. Beattie offended in the worst form charged against him, it seems to me he was treated harshly. I hope the Minister will reconsider the question, and will do Mr. Beattie the justice of giving him superannuation, or allowing him a gratuity. I say that the Minister is not possessed of that definite and absolute knowledge that would warrant him in dismissing Mr. Beattie, and while I make that statement I am not saying that Mr. Beattie may not have taken some part in the election. Even if he did, I repeat that this is an exercise of power which a man in private life would disdain to be guilty of. I do not discuss the question that the Minister was pressed by his friends to dismiss Mr. Beattie and give his place to one of their political supporters, but I will say that he is guilty of a manifest act of injustice if he does not give Mr. Beattie the superannuation to which he is entitled.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I must confess that I have not at the moment any personal recollection of the case to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) refers. It appears, however, from my hon. friend's statement that this gentleman was dismissed for political partisanship, and I fancy the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) will admit that from what he himself said, I am justified in drawing the conclusion that Mr. Beattie was guilty of partisanship. The only question is as to whether under the circumstances, this gentleman should have received the superannuation allowance or receive the amount he was entitled to under last year's Act. I have no objection at all to taking what my hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) says into consideration, and to look the matter up, and if the gentleman's age and the circumstances seem to require special consideration, I certainly would not have any objection to give the case whatever consideration it merits.

Indians—Nova Scotia—Additional amount for medical attendance and medicines.. $1,000

Mr. GILLIES. How many Indians are there in Nova Scotia in charge of the department?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have not the information with me.

Mr. GILLIES. Can the Minister say the amount that was paid in Cape Breton for the medical attendance and medicine furnished to the Indians there last year?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I cannot divide the statement to show what was paid in Cape Breton. The expenditure for the whole of Nova Scotia up to the 31st of March was $1,950, and it is expected that it will be about $3,250 altogether during the next year.

Mr. GILLIES. If the Minister would consult the records of his department, he would find that the charge for medical attendance and medicine furnished to the Indians in the province of Nova Scotia is growing at an alarming rate, last year we voted $2,200 for that purpose. That is an extraordinary amount for the small band of Indians now in that province; I do not think they number over 1,200 or 1,500 altogether. One would have thought that sum would have been amply sufficient; but when we find that it is exceeded by $1,000, the figures are sufficiently alarming to cause the Minister to pause when the accounts come in before paying them. I protest against this unnecessary extravagance. If the money were expended in some way that would promote the comfort of the Indians, instead of being squandered on imaginary medical attendance, the Minister would be doing a kindness to the Indians which he is not now doing.

Mr. KAULBACH. I desire the Minister to inform me of the name of the agent now acting in the counties of Queen's and Lunenburg, the late agent having been removed; and also the cause of the removal of the old agent.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I will give the hon. gentleman the particulars a little later.

Indians—New Brunswick—To provide an additional amount for medical attendance and medicines $500

Mr. McALISTER. I would like to ask the Minister of the Interior if an allowance is made to the medical agent for medicine as well as for medical attendance.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The same rule does not apply in every case.

Mr. McALISTER. I would ask whether any charge was preferred against Dr. Venner, the Indian medical attendant at St. Annes, before he was dismissed; and, if any charges were preferred against him, what they were, and whether they were investigated?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I shall look up the correspondence in order to give the hon. gentleman the information. I think the question was put on the Order paper, and I answered it.

Mr. McALISTER. I do not think there was any answer as to whether any charges were preferred against him, and whether there was any investigation.

To provide for the erection of a fence between the Indian reserve, county of Antigonish, N.S., and the lands of D. Chisholm $100

Mr. McDOUGALL. I would like to ask the Minister if he can explain what this expenditure is for?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. A man named Chisholm has land adjoining the Indian reserve, and he made application to the Indian Department to build half of a line fence between the Indian reserve and his property, if he would build the other half. I do not know what the law is in Nova Scotia; but the law in Ontario used to be, and the law in Manitoba is now, that one person has a right to require another to contribute half the cost of building a line fence between their properties. This is what we are doing in this case.

Mr. McDOUGALL. The law in Nova Scotia is that each individual builds one-half of the division fence between them; but I never heard of any other case in which the Department of Indian Affairs provided for the building of a fence between an Indian reserve and the adjoining properties. I know of several Indian reserves in the Island of Cape Breton, and I know that the fences between them and adjoining properties are being kept up, but I never knew that the Government applied a dollar to them.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I suppose the hon. Minister will apply this principle to the other provinces and the other reserves?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I suppose that we shall have to do it if it is shown that there is likely to be difficulty, as there was in this case. It was shown that the farmer was subject to annoyance, and that he had to have a fence or go off his farm. I saw that it was a great injustice to him, and I felt that the department should not perpetrate any injustice on a private individual.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The principle would be the same in every case.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It would, but I would not like to say that the department would agree under all circumstances to put up half of a line fence. If a case of urgency occurred, then I think the department should do it.

Mr. MILLS. In what way was the farmer annoyed by his property being near the reserve?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not remember at present. I think it was by the Indian cattle. But it was shown to me very clearly that he was compelled to have this fence.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Can the hon. gentleman tell me the length of the fence?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Twenty-three chains long.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman has made a special case of this. The hon. gentleman has said it was because an annoyance to the farmer existed. That annoyance would exist in every case in which a fence was constructed by a farmer between his property and an Indian reserve, to which the Indians did not contribute. If the hon. gentleman is going to provide on the part of the department for half a line fence between this reserve and the farmer in Nova Scotia, he must apply the same principle to every reserve in the Dominion, or else we cannot allow this item to pass.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. As a matter of fact, in Ontario, for instance, the farms are practically all fenced, and we would be called on in very few cases to put up fences.

Mr. MONTAGUE. They have all been fenced largely at the expense of the white men, and white men having built their fences in other portions of the Dominion, why should we pay for building half this man's fence? If we vote this, the hon. gentleman cannot resist the claims of parties who have constructed the whole line fence between their farms and Indian reserves in various portions of the Dominion.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think the hon. gentleman will be able to make out a principle that because the Government makes a payment on account of a thing of this kind, we are to pay everybody else. It may seem to be natural justice, but if the hon. gentleman undertook to carry the principle into the finances of Canada, Canada would be bankrupt in a very short time.

Mr. McDOUGALL. There are a great many properties adjoining Indian lands in the province of Nova Scotia. The hon. member for Richmond has property adjoining an Indian reserve near the town of Sydney, and has always been obliged to keep up his fences, and I cannot understand what influences the hon. Minister to provide $100 in this case. Only a few days ago, I brought up the question of providing for the maintenance of an insane Indian who is in the county asylum, and the Minister, who had some weeks or months ago, refused to provide for his maintenance, although it had always been the custom of the Department of Indian Affairs to provide for the maintenance of Indians of that kind, said he could provide for that out of an item in the Estimates. Will the hon. gentleman point me out one item out of which he can pay for the maintenance of this Indian?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. In the main Estimates, page 64, item 208, the hon. gentleman will find that out of the second item, relief and seed grain, $2,000, we can pay that claim.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the fence made of?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Barbed wire.

Mr. SPROULE. For 92 rods of barbed wire, $100 seems an extravagant sum.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Then the hon. Minister is going to take $3,000 or $4,000 out of the relief which should be given to the other Indians, for the purpose of paying this claim. He will be thus depriving the other Indians of their reasonable proportion of seed grain, food and clothing in order to meet this claim. How can he justify that?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is impossible to please the hon. gentleman. He blames me for asking too much and at the same time for asking too little. I did not tell him positively that I would pay this claim, but that I would consider it, and if paid it will be paid out of this vote. I quite agree that if $300 are paid out of this $2,100, there will be that much less left for the rest of the Indians.

Mr. GILLIES. If the hon. gentleman is going to provide $100 for building this fence, I beg to give him notice now that I intend applying to him to furnish an allowance for building a fence that I have been keeping up for years between property I own myself and the Indian reserve at Sydney.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. How many chains?

Mr. GILLIES. It is a considerable stretch of a fence. If it is right for the Minister to make provision for the construction of a fence between the lands of one proprietor and an Indian reserve, it is certainly right he should do so in another and similar cases.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If the hon. gentleman will not let me get this item through, he will have no chance for his fence.

Mr. GILLIES. I wanted no chance so far and never made application. I never assumed that the Government would be so kind as to come in and assist me in building these line of fences.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). When the people of Lochiel, in the county of Annapolis, where there is an Indian reserve, find out that wire fences are being built by the Government to keep out Indians and other annoyances, they will make application to have fences built for them, and these applications will be made by some good Liberal friends as well as Conservatives. There are a few Liberals out in Lochiel, and when they see this vote pass, they will put in similar applications. The only fence they have there now around the Indian reserve is what is known as the Virginia fence, composed of fir poles. I would ask the hon. Minister what the other half of this fence is composed of?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We are not building the other half. I don't think it is built at all yet. I cannot give the hon. gentleman the information; but I hope that next session I shall be able to tell him the exact principles of construction of our half. The arrangement was that we were to build a similar kind of fence to that which the owner built, and the estimate made by the officer of the department was that the twenty-three chains would cost $100. If it costs less than that, I shall be glad of the saving.

Mr. SPROULE. By building the fence, you admit your liability to maintain it, so that this will become a permanent charge.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Not necessarily.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Who is this Mr. Chisholm? Last night we had the case of a

Mr. Chisholm from Antigonish who was paid because another man's house was burnt. Is this the same Chisholm?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not remember.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Chisholms are pretty numerous in that county.

Mr. McDOUGALL. So are Grants.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Evidently the request for this comes from the same source as the other. It is the duty of members to represent the grievances of their constituents. I have no doubt that this comes from the hon. member for Antigonish (Mr. McIsaac); and as we have paid for the house that did not belong to Chisholm, we are helping now to build his fence. It would be better to let the item stand until we know if this is the same Chisholm.

Mr. CLANCY. I would ask the hon. Minister if in other cases of the same kind he will act in the same way? There are many Indian reserves adjoining the land of private individuals. There must be some thing special in this case or the hon. gentleman will have laid down rules which the Government will be expected to follow. Whether the principle is sound or not, I am not arguing at this time, as it is not necessary to do so. But I would like to know if the Minister is prepared to undertake the expense of building a portion of the line fences in other cases in which the circumstances are similar.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I suppose the department must deal practically upon the same principle with everybody. But, as I said to the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague), I would not care to say that in every case the department will build a fence. We shall have to consider each case to see whether there is a hardship in the case of the individual or not.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) find out if this is the same Chisholm who got pay for the burnt house, and let us know to-morrow?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I will.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Shall this item be adopted?—Carried.

An hon. MEMBER. No, that stands.

Indians—New Brunswick—To provide an additional amount for medical attendance and medicines..... $500

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to be informed if there has been an epidemic amongst the Indians of the maritime provinces. There seems to be an increase of $1,800 for medical attendance.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I can only say that the department is constantly struggling to keep down the cost of medical attendance and medicine for the Indians. There is a constant dispute between the department and the medical attendants for the Indians of the maritime provinces, and the records of the department show that there has always been such a dispute. On the 3rd March the expenditure in Nova Scotia was $1,950, from an amount of $2,200, leaving a balance of $250. This expenditure included an amount of $577 for attendance which took place before 30th June last, but the accounts had not come in before the appropriation was spent. The same thing occurred the year before I was in office, and the appropriation has been running behind. I am bringing it even, and that is the cause of the increase. I admit that there is cause of complaint regarding these medical accounts. I have tried two or three different times to make arrangements which I thought would result in diminution of the account, and, so far, not with the success I could desire. I hope to give the matter further attention.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I desire some information with regard to the physician on the Six Nation reserve. The department, at large expense, built a very fine residence in the centre of the reserve for the medical man. I understand now that the medical man is not compelled, as formerly, to reside there, but that he resides in the city of Brantford. I know that the late Government required the medical attendant to reside in the residence on the reserve.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am not aware that I have given any direction that the rule should be changed. I think I am safe in saying that there has been no change in the rule.

Mr. MONTAGUE. If the physician does not reside in the residence on the reserve, the hon. gentleman will require him to reside there, of course?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think so, yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. A man living in Brantford cannot do the work. I think it is fifteen or sixteen miles distant. The work calls for the service of a medical man and his assistant, and the late Government required the medical man to reside in the centre of the reserve, and so he did.

Mr. CLANCY. My information is that the medical man resides in Brantford.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to call the attention of the Minister to a point to which I directed his attention earlier in the session, with reference to the Tyendinaga Indian band. I understand that this is a band that is supported by its own fund. A dispute has evidently arisen between the band and the Minister with reference to the medical attendant. As I understand it, the medical attendant is paid by the Indians themselves out of their own fund. This band had a medical attendant by the name of Dr. Newton, who was their choice. But the Minister, in his reckless haste to dispense patronage, deposed Dr. Newton, and appointed one or two, and I think there were two, other doctors, and attempted to make the Indians pay them out of the funds of the band. Now, the band has over and over again protested against that, and I have here a resolution, though not of late date, passed by the band by a vote of seventy-five to three, asking the department to give them back their Dr. Newton, and pay the salary out of their fund, out of which the department is now paying the other appointee whose name, I believe, is Dr. Hicks. Now, it seems to me that if a band is independent in that way, and has its own funds, administers them under the supervision of the Government, and has a medical attendant in whom it has confidence, who is paid out of their funds, and the band wishes to continue him, the Government is going a long way for a petty bit of patronage to dismiss that man and appoint a partisan in his place, and demand that the Indians shall pay that partisan.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am quite satisfied that the hon. gentleman's statement does not convey a correct impression of the facts. I may say to hon. gentlemen that in case anything is done upon the Indian reserve that does not meet with universal approval, there is usually a petition got up on both sides, sometimes both petitions are signed largely by the same men, and it is exceedingly difficult for anybody to tell whether the Indians are in favour of a certain thing or not. The Indians, like the white men, sometimes sign a petition without paying very much attention to what it is. The difficulty of the department in many cases is to find out really what they want. As to the exact circumstance of this particular case, I cannot at the moment remember, but I am perfectly satisfied I would not have dismissed a medical attendant whom the Indians wished to retain.

Mr. FOSTER. Then my hon. friend will have to revise his own statement, because to the questions put to him, he answered in the affirmative. I have not time to look them up now, but I will call the attention of my hon. friend to them to-morrow, and will ask him to give the information. Surely my hon. friend will not take the ground that when a band have their own physician, and wish to retain him and pay him themselves, the Government is going to step in and dismiss him, unless he is incompetent.

Mr. CLANCY. As the question of medical attendance is before the committee, I want to point out to the Minister the case of Dr. Mitchell, the medical attendant of the Walpole Island band of Indians for many years. The Indians, as the hon. gentleman knows, are a very strange kind of people, and when they have been acquainted for some years with their medical attendant, they were not disposed to part with him. I call this case to the attention of the hon. gentleman, because it is a parallel case. Dr. Mitchell was dismissed on the ground of partisanship, and a political opponent was put in his stead. Now, I have no hesitation in making the statement here, because I live very close to that reserve, that there has been no demand on the part of the Indians for the dismissal of their physician. There can be no fault found with Dr. Mitchell's successor, because he is a very estimable man, but there is an objection to severing the relationship that grows up from long acquaintance with these people. This band have their own moneys, the Government does not contribute a dollar, and it does seem to me a great stretch of partisanship, for the purpose of serving a political friend, that the department should take it into their heads to dispose of the money of these Indians to satisfy their political friends. I have no doubt that if a petition were circulated, the greater number of the Indians would ask that Dr. Mitchell be restored.

Indian Affairs—Manitoba and the North-west Territories $7,900

Mr. DAVIN. Would the hon. gentleman give us some explanation about that?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This item contains, first, the salary of J. H. Antliff, D.L.S., from 1st of July to 30th September, 1897, $300. This gentleman I found in the department when I came in, and I subsequently removed him to the surveyor general's branch. But I found when I came in that the department had not a sufficient appropriation for his salary. A supplementary vote was taken during the last fiscal year, and during this year he was allowed to remain on three months longer than I had anticipated.

Mr. DAVIN. I find in a return that I asked for, that in the Indian Department in the North-west Territories, a regular army of officers, some of whom were known to myself to be good officers, were dismissed, and I cannot understand why. Among them were Mr. D. McCara, Mr. D. McLaughlin, and Mr. W. Pocklington. The latter gentleman was employed in the storekeeper's department in Regina, and I find here it is said that he was superannuated. Would the Minister tell me what superannuation he got?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I cannot tell the hon. gentleman what it was. He can find it in the list.

Mr. DAVIN. I find here Mr. J. J. Campbell, of Moose Mountain, dismissed for political partisanship, on the 31st of May, 1897,

Well, I never heard that Mr. Campbell was guilty of the least partisanship, or showed any political sympathy whatever. Does the hon. gentleman know what his political partisanship consisted in?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Not at the present moment.

Mr. DAVIN. I would like to call the hon. Minister's attention to the case of J. A. Sutherland, of Crooked Lake reserve, who resigned on 31st May. Why was he asked to resign?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Did he resign? I thought he was dismissed?

Mr. DAVIN. I understood he was dismissed.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If the return says he resigned, no doubt he resigned.

Mr. DAVIN. There is not a hint that Sutherland was guilty of partisanship.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No; it is alleged he resigned.

Mr. DAVIN. I am in a position to say he did not resign voluntarily. Since Mr. Sutherland retired or was dismissed from the Crooked Lake reserve, that reserve has gone from had to worse and at this moment is in a miserable condition. The management of Indian affairs there is in the worst possible state of demoralization. I read a letter the other evening from a gentleman who is well informed on the subject, and who says that the Indians are thoroughly demoralized and are leaving the reserve. Then there is Mr. Calder, dismissed for political partisanship on 31st May. If Calder was dismissed for political partisanship, the very nicest apothecary's scale was used to weigh his conduct. P. L. Grasse was also dismissed on May 31st for political partisanship, and D. Pierce, dismissed for political partisanship. What is meant by political partisanship? We were assured by the right hon. Prime Minister in 1896 that no man would be removed for political partisanship, unless he made himself offensive. The hon. gentleman said that a man voting or holding Conservative opinions would not be sufficient to remove him, but he must take an active part in an election, either he must go on the platform or write in the newspapers; and I agree with the Prime Minister that we should then give him an opportunity of becoming a public man. Then there is W. Anderson, clerk, superannuated, office abolished. Then we have Geo. McNabb, of Touchwood, which is in my constituency. If he was active in supporting me I would know of it, but I never heard that he gave me any assistance, and I do not know that he voted for me. Then there is the case of W. Lambert, farm instructor, dismissed for political partisanship, a man who is one of the best farm instructors I know of. Whatever he may have done, he certainly never spoke on the platform or wrote in the press. There were no investigations held in these cases; that is not the way the Minister of the Interior acts. His colleague, the Postmaster General, although I believe he swung the axe with a certain amount of vigour, I commend because in many cases known to myself he investigated the case of these officers of the country and gave them a chance for their lives, and at all events told them what the charges against them were. Then there is T. Baker, of Touchwood, dismissed for political partisanship. I know that Baker never spoke on the platform and never wrote in the press and never made himself active. Then there is J. H. Gordon, of Duck Lake, in the same position. F. C. Cornish, services dispensed with; reasons not given. Then I find the name of H. W. Halpin. It is here stated that on 17th July Halpin's services were dispensed with.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Halpin is still in the service.

Mr. DAVIN. Then there is John Carney, I spoke the other night of C. J. Williams, F. A. D. Bourke, Wilson, DéGear and Taylor. Then there is T. Scott, interpreter on the Piegan reserve, dismissed for political partisanship.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman is a long way from the Piegan reserve.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman must have noticed that I spoke in pianissimo tones. I reiterate my protest against these dismissals and against the unjust, impolitic and foolish dismissal of John Dobin.

Indian Affairs—To provide an additional amount for the travelling expenses of Inspectors McRae and Chitty $500

Mr. WALLACE. I call attention to the dismissal of Wentworth F. Wood, of Kamloops.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. He is in the service of the department of the Interior, I think, and not of Indian Affairs; he is either a land agent or Indian agent. He was removed altogether because of inefficiency in the discharge of his duty. If my hon. friend will make inquiries, he will find there could not be any political motive because he is the son of a strong Liberal and supporter of the Government in the east, who interceded in his behalf. I gave him further trial, but he did not perform his duties properly, and I dismissed him.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman is mistaken in regard to the individual. Mr. Wood is a business man and has had considerable business experience. I know the gentleman very well, and I speak from personal knowledge when I say that the charge of inefficiency was never made against him. Inefficiency was not given as the reason for his removal.

No such reason was ever given until this moment so that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) will need to look up the matter if he thinks it worth while—but the hon. gentleman does not think it worth while to investigate these matters very carefully until he is dismissing a man from the service to make room for somebody else. I know Mr. Wood to be a painstaking, conscientious and good business man who looked after the affairs of the Indian Department carefully, and there was no more efficient Indian agent in the service. The only charge made against him was that he had taken part in politics, which I am informed on the best authority was not at all true. The statement as to his inefficiency is totally inaccurate. However, this is not such a case of hardship as the Minister might intend it to be, because in the case of competent men who are young it is often just as well that they are relieved from Government positions, and I fancy Mr. Wood has done much better since he was dismissed.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) is entirely mistaken, if he says that any charge of political partisanship was made against Mr. Wood. I did not dismiss him because of political partisanship, for my impression was and is now, that Mr. Wood, if he was anything at all, was a Liberal.

Mr. WALLACE. Whose son did the Minister say he was?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The son of a gentleman living in eastern Canada, who is a supporter of the Government.

Mr. WALLACE. Living whereabouts?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think he lives in Montreal, and when it was rumoured this man was to be dismissed his father wrote me a private letter saying he was aggrieved, and referred to the fact that he was a supporter of the Government and claimed the matter should be looked into, although if the son was incompetent he did not wish him retained. This took place more than a year ago, and my impression is that the matter hung fire for a considerable length of time, until finally I considered that in the best interests of the service Mr. Wood should be removed. I state most emphatically to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) that at the time Mr. Wood was removed I believed him to be a Liberal and the son of a Liberal, and he was not removed for any reason except that it was in the public interest he should be.

Mr. WALLACE. I cannot tell the politics of his father and I do not think it is of much consequence, but I can say that this is the first time it has ever been said Mr. Wood was inefficient. I wish the Minister to bring down a copy of the paper dismissing him from the service.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I will do that.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Wood received a letter some time during the middle of the month that his services had been dispensed with on the first of the month previously, and I am quite sure that the reason stated in that letter was not inefficiency. Before these Estimates go through I want to get a copy of the letter written to Mr. Wood dispensing with his services.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I will bring it down.

Further amount required for insane patients in Manitoba asylums..... $6,750

Mr. DAVIN. I renew my appeal to the Minister to get us out of the anomalous position of having to send our insane patients from the North-west Territories to Manitoba. Place us in a position to have an asylum of our own and to keep our insane patients in the North-west Territories, and thus save the cost of sending them away. We are now practically having responsible government and on the threshold of provincial autonomy, and I believe that our insane patients should be kept at home instead of being sent to Manitoba.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I can only repeat that the question of dealing with matters of this kind in the North-west Territories is a difficult problem. We have the case of the insane and of the blind and of the deaf and dumb, and as the hon. gentleman knows the care of these people in the provinces is with the province itself. But the subsidy to the North-west Territories has not been exactly on the same basis as the subsidy to the provinces, and the Territorial Government claims that it ought not to be called on to defray these expenses. Just so soon as the Federal Government commences to defray these expenses the House will see that it means a large capital expenditure for buildings, and a large annual expenditure for taking care of these buildings and the inmates. Nobody realizes more fully than I the difficulty of dealing with these cases, and nobody realizes more than I the necessity of providing better facilities than we have at the present time. The case of the blind and of the deaf and dumb in the Territories is regarded as particularly distressing. I remember that in Manitoba there was considerable agitation before a deaf and dumb institution was provided there, but as soon as it was provided it was filled up and is more than full now. I have applications from persons in the North-west Territories for the accommodation of deaf and dumb children for whom there is no means of providing now. The same can be said with regard to the blind. All these classes of afflicted persons will have to be dealt with together. All I can say at the present moment is that I realize, as fully as the hon. gentleman does, the necessity of dealing with the matter. I do not regard the present arrangement at all as a finality; and as soon as the question can be taken up and fully considered, I hope to present some scheme to the House for dealing with it.

Mr. SPROULE. Can the hon. gentleman tell us how many patients from the North-west Territories have been in the Manitoba asylum in the year, because I see there was an expenditure last year of $36,000?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. In 1896, there were 75 patients. During the past six months there have been an average of 95. It will take this $6,000 to pay what we owe to the province.

Mr. McMULLEN. The fact that there are some 95 patients from the North-west Territories in the insane asylum in Manitoba indicates that it has become a serious question whether it would not be better, and possibly cheaper in the end, to make some provision for that unfortunate class within the Territories themselves. I had no idea that there were so many as the hon. Minister states. Of course, it might necessitate the erection of a building; but when you take into consideration the enormous expense of conveying patients such long distances by rail to Manitoba, and also the expense imposed on relatives who wish to visit them, in my opinion the suggestion of the hon. member for Western Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) is worthy of serious consideration, whether it would not be better to erect something in the way of a home for this unfortunate class in the North-west Territories.

Mr. SPROULE. I think there is a great deal of force in what the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) says. The estimate for the coming year is $50,000 instead of $36,000, as it was last year. That is a very large increase. Even for an average of 95 patients, it seems to me that $50,000 is a very large expenditure. If it is going to grow at that rapid rate, the question arises whether it would not be cheaper to erect buildings for them in the North-west Territories.

Mr. DAVIN. The Minister has referred to an even more serious matter than the treatment of the insane. He has referred to the more distressing fact that in the North-west Territories, we have no provision for deaf and dumb children. I will mention a case, and ask the attention of hon. gentlemen opposite. In the winter of the present year, a man came to me who had a deaf and dumb child, and asked me what he could do. I referred him to a member of the local Government, Mr. Haultain. Mr. Haultain told him he had no funds for that purpose. I then referred him to a leading Liberal friend of mine, who is supposed to have something to do with patronage, and said: "You tell that gentleman to write to the Minister of the Interior, and perhaps he will be able to do something; but it might be even the fact that the Minister of the Interior has no funds for the purpose." Nothing was done. I wrote the Minister myself. The difficulty is this, that we have not yet grappled with the needs of the Territories in regard to our insane patients and deaf mutes, and the sooner it is done the better. The best way to grapple with those needs is to give the North-west Assembly funds for the purpose of providing for them, in proportion to their population and the taxes they pay—on precisely the same basis as you give funds to the provinces; and you will find that the local government will provide for their insane patients and deaf mutes.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Further amount required for surveys, examination of survey returns, printing of plans, &c..... $40,000

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The amount we estimated last year was $90,000, but we expended all that money and are sending out a considerable number of parties this year. Some have gone out and others are remaining behind, because we have not the money to pay their expenses. This will be required to furnish these parties with funds during this fiscal year to get into that country. The amount of work we are doing under this class of expenditure is much larger than of late years, because it is necessary to do a large amount of work to keep ahead of settlement.

Mr. HAGGART. This is a grant for this year's expenditure?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have not overrun the appropriation. This money is required to furnish the parties who are going out now. Some we are holding back and some have started and are waiting at different points in order to get the money to push on this year's work.

Mr. HAGGART. Surely the hon. gentleman does not require $40,000 between now and the first of July?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, we have to advance a considerable sum to the parties as they go out, in order to furnish supplies.

Mr. DAVIN. Where are they going?

Mr. DAVIN.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The parties who have not yet gone to work are the following:—A party for the purpose of making a subdivision survey at or near Whitemouth, consisting of nine men; a party for making subdivision surveys in the Swan River district, nine men; a party for cutting surveys in Prince Albert district, seven men; a party for making subdivision surveys, under Mr. Saunders, in southern Alberta; a party for making subdivision surveys in northern Alberta, under T. K. McLean, eight men; a party for making a subdivision survey of Beaver Hills, nine men, under Mr. Duberger; miscellaneous surveys, British Columbia, under J. E. Ross, eight men. Irrigation surveys are being held back until an appropriation is received in order that we may get the parties started.

Mr. SPROULE. Last year you had $95,000 for these. Is that all spent?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, and we are waiting to get more in order to furnish the parties going out.

Mr. SPROULE. Now you want $40,000 more?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. How much do you advance for each party as it goes out?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It depends on the distance they are going, the number of men they will have, and the supplies they require. The work is all done under the Surveyor General, and this estimate is his estimate of what he requires.

Mr. SPROULE. Do you advance the men enough to get supplies for the whole season? I should think it to be much easier for them to get supplies now than it was years ago.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It does not make any difference how much we advance. If we advance more to-day, we will pay less at the end. It depends on where the survey is to be made. If they are going to some place where you cannot get supplies conveniently, they get a full outfit. These surveyors are experienced men, and a good deal is left to their discretion. I could give the hon. gentleman a list of what each man gets, but I do not think that would be of much use to him.

Mr. SPROULE. It might be used in this way. Sometimes you make advances to men and they do not do the work. Are you sending these men by the day or by contract?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is no contract work at all.

Mr. SPROULE. How much do you give them a day?

Mr. DAVIN. Counting the number of men the hon. gentleman gave us, this makes about $7 a man.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If the hon. gentleman will figure up the number of parties he will find what they receive—that is besides irrigation surveys. It would be about that amount.

Mr. MONTAGUE. When the hon. gentleman took his estimate last year, 1897-98, did he not expect he would have enough?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, I did, but I may say this, that I am guilty of going against the advice of the Surveyor General in the estimates last year. He recommended a much larger amount than I estimated. He recommended about $150,000 or $175,000. I thought we could keep the expenditure down to $90,000 or $95,000, but I find that, from time to time, during the year, we were pressed to make additional surveys in certain places, on the ground that the settlers were there waiting to take up land, and it was difficult to refuse such applications. I have not overrun the appropriation, but if I do not get this appropriation, it means that these men who are now delayed in their work cannot get out. I spent last year all we had and this is required to furnish the men who are going out now.

Mr. MONTAGUE. This should lessen next year's vote.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There will be a similar amount in the appropriation for 1898-99, but next year I hope to get the men started in plenty of time.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman's friends when in Opposition, always contended that there was too much money spent on these surveys, and the amount of land surveyed was not taken up by any means. They said that we surveyed without the land being settled and when there was no need for a survey. But since the hon. gentleman has been in office, the expenditure seems to have jumped up very rapidly. The estimate this year is a good deal over $100,000, including this supplementary estimate, in addition to what was voted last year, and next year the hon. gentleman asks for $150,000. Settlement must be going on very rapidly to justify the expenditure of so much money on additional surveys. How does the hon. gentleman pay those surveyors?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Has the hon. gentleman made any new additions to the staff during the past year?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have added to the parties. When we send out more parties we must have more surveyors. I have discontinued the practice of sending out young men not specially versed in land surveying business as assistants. We now have surveyors as assistants. These assistants get $3 a day and their expenses. The result is, as the Surveyor General reports, that they can do very much more work with surveyors as assistants than under the old system. The hon. gentleman asks what the men in charge of the parties get. I cannot give him the exact figure, but I shall be able to do so in a short time. Some of these men are permanent officers of the department, that is, they have been permanent officers. They work here in the winter and go out in the summer.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). This is a very good arrangement to provide all the Dominion and provincial land surveyors, all who are favourable to the hon. gentleman's Government, with a summer's job. I do not suppose that a provincial land surveyor is any better as a chain-bearer than the young men who were formerly engaged in the work at very much less remuneration. It appears to me that, after the extensive work we have done in the way of surveying in the North-west, we have a right to expect that instead of an increase, the expense would become less year by year. I suppose the hon. gentleman may not argue that the settlement of the habitable lands in the North-west is so rapid as to justify him in coming down to this House and asking for an increased expenditure for the survey.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I would certainly say that, with the exception of the survey in the Yukon district, the surveys have been made upon the pressing application of persons in the district where such surveyors are wanted—subdivision surveys for the purpose of meeting the wants of the settlers. We have had some additional expense owing to the fact that lines had to be re-traced in certain places where the survey marks had been obliterated—posts taken away, and so on. In such cases, to prevent very great confusion, it has been necessary to re-trace the lines in a considerable number of cases. But I can assure the hon. gentleman that, outside of the Yukon district, we are doing no work except such as is necessary for the convenience of the people who are just going in.

Mr. DAVIN. The most of this $40,000 will have to be debited to the year 1898-99, and added, therefore, to the $150,000 the hon. gentleman has mentioned.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Of course, what we do not spend before 1st July lapses.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman has given us a list of surveying parties, containing an average of about eight men, making up altogether fifty-seven men. At $3 a day, and taking the full thirty days to the month, that would only amount to a few thousands and nothing like $40,000. I should think that $10,000 would cover all the hon. gentleman wants.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I explained that it was necessary, in sending out these parties, to equip them, furnish them with money ahead for their expenses and for their outfit.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the hon. Minister a question or two. I have listened very attentively, but I confess I do not understand this case. Have any of the parties yet started?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Not of the ones I mentioned.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) say that the vote he took last year, of $95,000, is sufficient to meet the expenses for the year of these parties' operations.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There are some other parties besides those I have spoken of. They will be out of money in a short time if the appropriation is not passed permitting the department to forward the money. I presume that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) wants to know if the men we have out in the field to-day do not get any further appropriation, would we have to pay them? No, we should have to call them in.

Mr. FOSTER. How many parties have already been sent out?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Ten parties have already been sent out. This, of course, is exclusive of the parties in the Yukon district, the men for which are there and a party for the irrigation survey, who are on the ground.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, when the hon. Minister gets his present number of parties equipped, he will have eighteen parties in all in the field?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, and in addition to that, the men in the Yukon district and on the irrigation survey.

Mr. FOSTER. How many men in each party that is out?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There would be an average of eight.

Mr. FOSTER. How many men in the irrigation party?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Their men are not hired yet. There is the chief, Mr. Wheeler, and the assistant, Mr. Peterson. But my information does not indicate that the other men have been hired yet.

Mr. FOSTER. How many men are there in the Yukon on surveys?

Mr. DAVIN.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The surveyors took up two or three men as assistants, and they will have to hire the other men there. The force will be about two men to each surveyor. One party in exploring the Stewart River, I presume; that is what they are expected to do. The others are all attached to the Gold Commissioner's office, and their instructions are to act under him, and probably they would be engaged in the surveying of mining claims.

Mr. FOSTER. Is my hon. friend charging that to Dominion lands?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. To Dominion lands.

Mr. FOSTER. Explorations, examination of rivers, and the like of that. It does not seem to me that the vote was ever intended for that purpose, it was intended to survey Dominion lands for settlement.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think so, necessarily. The hon. gentleman will find that the surveying that has been done in the Yukon district heretofore has not been for settlement, but it has been charged to this vote.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think it was a proper charge. What Parliament contemplated with that vote was that the money should be used to survey lands in the Northwest for settlement. I do not think it was meant to be used for making surveys of rivers, mining claims, or anything of that kind. I am quite certain of that. I am also quite certain that if you are to use this vote for that now, you are making all comparisons between this and previous years impossible, because you are enlarging the scope of the vote. Take the history of that vote and the debate upon it from time to time, and you will find that was the purpose of the vote. We had settlers coming into this country. It has been a vexed question as to whether this should be paid out of income or capital. The Minister of Trade and Commerce has taken the ground for years that this should go as a charge to income in the usual way for settling up the North-west. The basis of the vote most assuredly was, the one purpose of it was, to survey those lands for the purpose of settlement. Now, if my hon. friend is exploring rivers in the Yukon, and is tracing out mining claims in the Yukon, and doing all that sort of thing, he is doing with this vote what Parliament never intended. Is my hon. friend attaching surveyors to the Gold Commissioner's office in the Yukon to survey out claims of miners?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes. My hon. friend knows, of course, that in the first instance mining claims are generally staked out by the miners themselves. Then it very often happens that disputes arise, and in such cases the surveyor is sent out by the commissioner to make a survey, and he on return files his plans. I said that these men would probably be occupied during the summer largely in that work. They have been doing that work, that is, surveying plots of land and connecting those surveys with the survey of the River Yukon. The hon. gentleman is aware that we have not any township lot survey in the Yukon district. But these men are doing all the survey work that has been done there, including the survey of town sites and plots for purposes for which application may be made. As to the point the hon. gentleman makes in reference to the application of the vote in former years, it may be, possibly, discussions of the kind referred to have taken place. But it is certainly a fact that work of this description, perhaps not surveying mining claims, but similar work to that which I have described, other than surveying mining claims, has been charged to this vote before.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to call the attention of the Government to that, because we are now taking up classes of expenditure and charging them to a vote which is as blind as it can possibly be. I apprehend that the vote for irrigation work has been charged to this vote for surveying.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR
Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. I think that is entirely wrong. How are we going to know the result of a policy which takes up the work of irrigation? It is entirely new work to this country. It is work which we are interested in, and which serves other countries which pattern after our example, just as we take the example of other countries in irrigation. Now, if the hon. gentleman is charging the cost of irrigation to the surveying of Dominion lands, why, there is no basis at all upon which you can estimate by statistics the result of what is an experiment, to a large extent, though successful in many cases. I want to ask the hon. gentleman to separate his irrigation vote and make it for irrigation purposes, and then the House will know exactly what it is spending upon irrigation. But when the House gives you a vote of $150,000 for surveying Dominion lands, and you take the right to spend as much of that vote as you please, without consulting the House, for irrigation purposes, you are doing what the House has not authorized you to do, and the House is certainly working in the dark. The same with reference to mining claims. Surely the hon. gentleman is not going to take the public funds of the country to defray the cost of surveying out mining claims in the Yukon. In British Columbia, if I take up a claim and he takes up a claim, and if there is any clash in respect to the claim, we have to get that settled by getting a Crown grant, after a survey for a Crown grant. We have to pay our own surveyors, the dispute can only be settled when the surveys are made, and the actual bounds are set out, not by the Government, not at the expense of the Government, but at the expense of holders of the claims themselves. The same in the province of Ontario. Provincial money does not survey the claims of the claim holder in Ontario, that is all at the expense of the mine owners, or the claim holder himself. In Ontario you have to pay about $2 an acre for a survey; in British Columbia you have to pay some $500 or $600 in order to get a survey made for a Crown grant. Surely the Dominion, in the Yukon, is not going to take the burden of surveying out individual miners' claims.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It may be perfectly correct to say that it would be more satisfactory to have this irrigation vote separated from the other. There is a good deal in what my hon. friend says in regard to that. But he can hardly blame me or the Government, because in bringing up a vote in this form this year, we are following the practice that has prevailed heretofore. The Surveyor General's estimate comes in in the same form in which it came in other years. I have no objection next year to bring it in in the other form. I think, perhaps, it would be more satisfactory.

Mr. FOSTER. In connection with irrigation, the expenditure should be put, not to capital, but to current expenditure. It is a question whether or not this vote should not be charged to income. I have listened often with a great deal of attention to the arguments the present Minister of Trade and Commerce used on that line; but as the item was commenced to be charged to capital, we held to that practice, because, after all, the amount came out of the public chest and comparison could in that way be more easily made. The irrigation vote should be kept by itself and put to income. I protest, if the practice has been begun, against public funds being used for surveying claims of individual miners. Let each man pay for the survey of his claim, as is done in every mining country in the world.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. As to irrigation surveys, I do not know whether they should be charged to capital or not. The hon. gentleman attaches great importance to the statements made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, but they did not change the hon. gentleman's practice of charging surveys to income. In regard to the irrigation service, I have no objection next year to bring it down as a separate vote. I accept the hon. gentleman's suggestion, and perhaps the course he proposes will be more satisfactory. As to the mining claims, I do not want it to be imagined that we propose continuously to employ Dominion surveyors to survey mining claims. In view of the enormous number of claims surveyed we thought difficulty might be obviated by having this work done under the present system until some kind of organized government was established in the Yukon, and that much money and trouble would be saved by having two or three experienced surveyors there who would settle disputes by surveying claims. Mr. Ogilvie told me that on three different occasions he had prevented what threatened to be a serious riot by going and surveying the mining claims in dispute. I do not intend that the present system should be permanent. But I thought it prudent to have these surveyors there until the Government is organized.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the hon. gentleman's idea is a good one, to have some well-known Dominion surveyors there, who would be authorities on the subject of mining rights. But no man starts to the Yukon with the idea of having his claims surveyed at the Government's expense. Although the hon. Minister may have Dominion surveyors there, it would be a good thing to charge a small fee for the survey, which fee would be really paid.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, when the district is organized.

Mr. FOSTER. If the vote of last year was sufficient, the hon. Minister does not need $40,000 to be voted in the Supplementary Estimates. Every day's pay and all provisions must be bought before now and the 1st of July to come within this vote; all work done and provisions purchased after that date will go into next year's vote. So the hon. gentleman can only ask the amount necessary to fit out the survey parties, and $8,000 or $10,000 would be sufficient, provided the hon. gentleman has not over-expended the vote of $95,000, as he did on the immigration vote.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No.

Mr. FOSTER. There is no other reason why this vote should be asked, unless there is a deficiency lurking in the background. If the hon. gentleman has over-expended without the authority of Parliament, let him admit his transgression, but if not, there is no reason for asking for $40,000, which it is impossible to spend between now and the 1st July in fitting out these parties.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice in this item that there is an amount to pay a gratuity to the widow of a surveyor. That is charged to capital. Further down $5,000 is asked to pay a gratuity to William Ogilvie in recognition of his distinguished public services in surveying the Yukon. In both cases the items are for surveys and explorations; yet the first item is charged to capital and the later is charged to income. The book-keeping is defective.

Mr. SIFTON.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman is not correct in regard to the items in question. The annuity to the widow is charged to capital because it properly belongs to the surveys. The latter is charged to income because it is a gratuity to Mr. Ogilvie, and it could not be charged to capital account.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood that the amount voted to Mr. Ogilvie was in connection with surveys. Both the items should be charged in the same way.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think so. Expenses in connection with regular surveys and explorations are charged to capital. When the Government decided to ask Parliament to vote Mr. Ogilvie a gratuity in the nature of a honorarium for distinguished services, that could not be charged to capital account. Still, I have no doubt my hon. friend the Minister of Finance would be willing to do it to oblige the hon. gentleman.

Mr. SPROULE. I am not raising any special objection; but it seems to me that the book-keeping is not done on a proper system because it does not enable you to separate the items, and get an idea of how much is spent for one purpose and how much for another. That is the only objection I raise.

Mr. HAGGART. The item speaks of "printing of plans, &c." You do not need any plans, and what is the "&c.?"

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There will not be anything required for the printing of plans, but this is the form in which the Surveyor General's note was taken, and it is followed; that is all.

Mr. WALLACE. This vote will not be available, say, for two weeks; that is, after the 20th June; so that, from the 20th of June to the 30th of June you are going to spend $40,000. The hon. gentleman cannot do it.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If we do not spend it, the vote will lapse. The hon. gentleman will understand that the memorandum was made up on the 2nd of June, and it was expected at that time that the vote would be available before now. But as soon as the vote is passed, and the moneys become available, they will be forwarded to the parties who are out, and the parties who are not out will be started.

Mr. WALLACE. Then, are we to be told that men are sent on long expeditions without any money, and that the Dominion Government is to tell them, We have no money for this purpose, but we will send the money later on? I think it is a very humiliating position for a Government to be in. I think the Minister of the Interior has got on the soft side of the Minister of Finance and has got him to go down to the bank and say to the bank, Advance some money to the Minister of the Interior, and we will vote the money later on. That would be a highly improper way of doing business—incurring expenditure for $40,000 without a Governor General's warrant, without an estimate having been made beforehand as to the necessity of this expenditure, without Parliament having been consulted in the earlier days of the session. This Parliament met on the 3rd of February, more than four months ago. If this money was required to send out expeditions and gangs of surveyors to distant parts of the Dominion, the hon. gentleman might have come down in the earlier days of the session and have said, This is a specially urgent case, and we ask Parliament to vote this amount. Instead of doing that he comes down in the last hours of the session, and asks in the Supplementary Estimates for $40,000 which cannot be spent legitimately or properly in the ten days that will elapse between the time the Governor General's sanction can be given to it and the 1st of July, when the vote will lapse entirely. I think it is a most extraordinary state of affairs. The Minister has not explained it at all to the satisfaction of the House. He has not told us the particulars that would justify him in asking for this enormous sum in addition to what was voted last year and what was considered adequate—because he presumably made an estimate of the year's work. The House did not prorogue last year till close to the 1st of July, and the hon. gentleman should have then known what his plans were for the year, and should have had them carefully considered and laid before the House, and asked for a vote which would have been sufficient and justifiable. Instead of that, within a few days of the expiration of the fiscal year, he comes here and asks Parliament for a vote of $40,000. If there ever has been a sample of unbusiness-like methods and dealings, this is one. When the Minister of the Interior comes and asks Parliament for this vote, he is bound to give the fullest explanations of the vote, and state the reasons why he did not ask for what was required a year ago. Before this money is voted, the Minister is bound to give Parliament the fullest explanations.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have given the House all the information which the hon. gentleman asks. As to what the hon. gentleman says with regard to the impropriety of the Government incurring obligations before Parliament has sanctioned the expenditure of the money, what I have said in regard to that answers what he says. I say that the money has not been spent; but I am surprised that my hon. friend has only now learned that principle of parliamentary law. If he will look back over the accounts of the Government of which he was a member, he will find that the principle of parliamentary law which he has enunciated was constantly violated. He will find that in the Post Office Department, for instance, the Postmaster General had to take a special appropriation of something like $600,000 to pay the accumulated deficits which had been carried in that department from year to year, the expenditures of one year having been paid out of the votes of another. I would not justify doing that because hon. gentlemen opposite did it when in office; but I should think that the hon. gentleman would remember some of these little facts before making his criticisms. As far as this particular vote is concerned, there has been no exceeding the appropriation. What I am asking the vote for is what I have explained to the committee.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the hon. Minister ought to be prepared to give us some information with regard to the number of the surveying parties he is proposing to send out and how much it will take to equip each of them. Surely he had that estimate before him when he submitted this appropriation to Council, because it was only by means of such an estimate that he could justify asking for the money. How many surveying parties are there, how much is required to equip each party, what is the number of men sent out, and what supplies do they need in the shape of money? I think we are entitled to all these details before we vote the item.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I think the committee is entitled to know from the Minister the particulars of this very large appropriation. It is very unusual to ask a sum of $40,000 in the Supplementary Estimates for the current year. It shows a very great lack of proper information, either on the part of the departmental officers or of the hon. gentleman himself to come to Parliament last session and get a sum to meet the expenses of the surveys for the present year which was not sufficient. The hon. gentleman would never have got his colleagues in Council to consent to such an item unless he could lay before them particulars to make up this sum. He should certainly furnish this information more specifically.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I can give the hon. gentleman the separate items of the work in the different districts.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The Minister will understand, that the main question is as to the particular item he requires for the period between now and the first of July. I understood him to say a moment ago that part of it was for paying the equipment of survey parties that had already gone out. But that does not take up the whole $40,000.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is for some who have gone out and some who are going out. The surveying for the summer of 1898 of course is partly in the fiscal year 1898 and partly in the fiscal year of 1899.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). But the hon. gentleman does not intend any portion of this amount to defray expenses of survey parties which, though it goes out now will extend its operations after 1st July next, which will be in the fiscal year 1899.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. What I was going to explain is that the estimates of the Surveyor General, while they must be made for the fiscal year are yet made with a view of the parties working in the summer partly in one fiscal year and partly in another. The total amount of the survey in contemplation, including what will be done during the spring of this year—that is before the 1st July—is as follows:—For Manitoba and North-west Territories, $128,350; irrigation surveys, $14,340; British Columbia, $6,000; Yukon district, $21,000; office staff and expenses, $26,210. That is a total of $190,000, which is equal to the $150,000 for next year and the $40,000 we are asking for now.

Mr. HAGGART. How much is chargeable to income?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. None of it. The office of the Surveyor General in connection with the survey of Crown lands is chargeable to capital.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not wish to be too persistent, but I think the Minister ought to tell us how many surveying parties he intends to send out that are to be paid out of this sum, and how much he intends to advance each of them for supplies?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There are 22 parties altogether, some of them are out, as I have said, and some of them are not. Those that are not yet out will be supplied with whatever is necessary, varying in the different cases. The Surveyor General exercises discretion in dealing with each particular case. The parties that are out now, will, of course, after the vote is available, have funds forwarded to them.

Mr. SPROULE. How did the hon. Minister equip those he has sent out?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We paid it out of the appropriation we had.

Mr. SPROULE. If this is paid out of the appropriation he had he does not require to pay it again. How much does he propose to advance to each party for supplies?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I could not give the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) the exact amount in each case.

Mr. SPROULE. But the hon. Minister must have had that information before he submitted the item to Council, otherwise he could not have got it through Council. The Surveyor General must have furnished him with an estimate, otherwise he could not have come to any intelligent decision as to what he required.

Mr. SIFTON.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The Surveyor General generally makes up a statement showing a bulk sum for each party.

Mr. SPROULE. Cannot the hon. gentleman give that statement?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have not it under my hand just now.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. Minister stated that he required $190,000 for next year, of which $150,000 is voted, and that virtually this $40,000 is for next year. Then he states that some of this $40,000 is to be applied to surveying parties already out and to those going out. Surely he cannot make these two statements balance. Then the hon. gentleman must know that we are entitled to be informed how much of this money is to be expended on surveying parties already out up to 1st July, and how much does he intend to apply to new surveying parties going out.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I cannot tell the hon. gentleman that, but this will be forwarded to each party to keep them going until 1st July.

Mr. HAGGART. But that may be practically the expenditure for the whole season, including a part of the next fiscal year. Cannot the hon. gentleman state at once that he is not going to apply this money for the starting of new surveys as the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) has shown it is impossible for him to do any practical work in the ten days at his disposal. We are entitled to know the amount by which he has exceeded the estimate and what he requires for a new survey party.

Mr. WALLACE. But another point was this. The hon. gentleman is going to send out 11 parties. How is a party that is sent out when the season is half over going to do a proper season's work? These parties should have been sent out three months ago.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman finds fault with the ones I did send out. He cannot blow hot and cold.

Mr. WALLACE. I think we are quite consistent in our argument. If the hon. gentleman were as consistent in his course, there would not be so many reasons to find fault with him. How can those parties who are going out now do a season's work? If they are to do a proper season's work, they should have been started months ago. How many are there in each party? There will be about $169,000 spent on these survey parties, and 22 are sent out, making about $700 for each. I would like the hon. gentleman to tell us what are the various classes of men that make up a party.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The surveyors, who are on the permanent staff of the Surveyor General, get $125 a month, those who are employed temporarily get $5 a day. The assistants, who are surveyors, get $3 per day, and the chainmen and labouring men get $1 a day, and, of course, their expenses. The average number in each party is eight men.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Does any of this go to pay the expenses of the party that left under Mr. McEvoy about ten days ago, by way of Edmonton?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman is thinking of the Geological Survey, which has nothing to do with this item.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman has given two or three different reasons for this expenditure. He told me that it would be spent on surveying parties that were to go out, and that seven were going out, making a total of 57 of a staff. If you take $3 a day and their rations, and the number of days during which this can be done, by no ingenuity can you make up more than $10,000. That makes $30,000 not accounted for, and he cannot spend that after the 1st of July. The hon. gentleman indicated to my hon. friend on my right that some of it would be spent next year, but when it was pointed out that that could not be done legally, he told us that was to pay some surveyors who were already out. He told us that there were 22 surveying parties, and implied that not only would this go to pay the seven parties who are going out but also to pay some of the money due to a portion of the 22 parties. The hon. gentleman had better make a clean breast of it. He has exceeded his appropriation, he owes the money, and this is to pay his indebtedness.

Mr. FOSTER. How much of the vote of $95,000 is expended at this date?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My information is that it is all expended.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman might just as well acknowledge that what he has done is to over-expend the vote, and he wants $30,000 to make up his over-expenditure. He got authority to spend $95,000, and he spent $30,000 more than he had authority to spend.

Mr. WALLACE. I shall just make a little calculation on the figures given by the hon. Minister of the Interior. $125 a month for the chief, $90 for his assistant, and $1 a day for the six other men—all that makes $295 a month. Say eight months, which will be longer than they will be out, that will make $2,370 for wages. Taking a dollar a day for board, and that is an exaggerated estimate, will give $1,920 for the eight months. Then adding $400 for railway fares, and you have a total of $4,680 for each survey party. Twenty-two parties were sent out, which will make $103,000 for all, and the hon. Minister asks $169,000, or $66,000 more than he can reasonably account for. If matters were looked after properly, this $40,000 would not be required at all, for the appropriation of last year was largely in excess of the demands made upon it.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is possible that the $40,000 will not be spent and will lapse.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman says that 22 parties were sent out. Now, each of these parties cost $4,680 for the season, or $103,000 in round numbers, yet he asks for $169,000 for this service. He is bound to explain why he asks such an enormous amount. He has not given us any details that would justify us in voting this amount.

Mr. HENDERSON. When we reached the item of $68,000 for immigration, I thought perhaps we had touched the last of those acts of maladministration of the Minister of the Interior in spending more money than had been voted by Parliament. But I regret very much that circumstances now brought out disclose another instance of the same character, and from all the information I can get from the admissions of the Minister, this item of $40,000 is really required to cover money that has already been expended, and expended without the authority of Parliament, illegally expended, improperly expended, and, as I said before, expended in a way that deserves the very severest censure of this House. What are we sitting here for away into midsummer? Simply to register and legalize the illegal acts of a Minister of the Crown. I think it is an injustice to ask members of this House to remain here for any such purpose. If the Minister wanted more money last year for surveys than $95,000, he should have come down fairly and squarely and asked for that money. I have no doubt it would have been granted to him if he had told the House that such was necessary in anticipation of the increased requirements of the country. But he did not see fit to do so. In his judgment, $95,000 was then quite sufficient, but as the season went on he discovered there were other means of employing more people and spending more money than Parliament had authorized. It appears to me that he has largely over-expended his estimate, and now, in a covert way, he is endeavouring to cover up his illegal act by getting the committee to vote a Supplementary Estimate. In the first place, he leads the committee to believe that he intended it for the purpose of paying surveyors that were being sent out, but more recent disclosures go to show that that money is not intended to be paid to surveyors going out, but to recoup the department for money that has already been expended. I think we cannot censure the Minister too severely for these acts of maladministration and improper conduct; I hope we have heard the last of this thing, and that it will not come up again. If it does, I think that the committee will be perfectly justified in striking out the item from the Estimates altogether, as I proposed we should do this morning, and I feel like moving that we should be so in the present case.

Mr. WALLACE. I think the Minister had better drop the amount. He has not shown anything to justify him in asking the House for this vote.

Dominion Lands—Chargeable to income. $3,900

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. In this vote we take a sum to pay balance of salaries to John Satchell, Mrs. Norton, Miss Earle, Miss McMaster and Miss Crawford. There are no new appointments.

Yukon Provisional District—Sum required to provide for the salaries and expenses connected with the administration of the Yukon provisional district, to cover Governor General's warrant, $45,000; also, $5,000 for the purpose of paying a gratuity to Wm. Ogilvie, D.L.S., in recognition of his distinguished public services in connection with the survey and exploration of the Yukon district..... $50,000

Mr. MONTAGUE. I want to say a word or two on what I consider was a very improper business method on the part of the Minister of the Interior. I do not object to this vote of $5,000 to Mr. Ogilvie, I do not fancy that there is a man in this House who will object to it. He has been, it seems, an incorruptible and valuable public servant, and I am sure that we all agree with that vote. But I do rise for the purpose of objecting to the manner in which the Minister of the Interior has placed before the country the report that Mr. Ogilvie wrote under the direction of the Minister of the Interior upon the Yukon country. Now, Sir, we have had the various reports issued through all the years in one uniform way, first printed by the public contractors who had regular terms and arrangements between themselves and the Government for printing these reports; afterwards we had them printed when the Printing Bureau was established, under the direct control of the Queen's Printer in the Printing Bureau, which is quite capable of printing all these reports. I think I am quite within the judgment of the House when I say that no public report has ever been issued in Canada which would have found so quick and widespread a circulation as the report which Mr. Ogilvie wrote upon the Klondike gold fields. I am bound to say further that there was no public report, whether issued at home or abroad, that would have done Canada more good and been a better advertisement for Canada among the people to whom we are looking for immigration into our new Canadian territory. It was, therefore, desirable that in the very cheapest possible manner, with a view to its widest possible distribution, that report should have been issued by the Department of the Interior. I am sure there is not a member of this House who did not expect that the Minister of the Interior would have that report issued from the Printing Bureau in the usual way, that thousands of copies would be distributed, not only through Canada, but through other portions of the Empire and in foreign lands, to convey as much information as possible to those people with regard to those gold fields in our Canadian North-west. Well, Sir, I am sure that every one was surprised to find that instead of that report being issued for public distribution by the Department of the Interior, printed at the Printing Bureau at a trifling cost, the work was put into the hands of a private gentleman in the city of Toronto, Mr. D. A. Rose; that Mr. Rose has the exclusive right to issue that book, that he is permitted to charge 50 cents for that book to every person who purchases it, whether at home or abroad. I do not intend to make any lengthy remarks upon it, but I desire to express my condemnation, and in doing so I am sure I am expressing the condemnation of the people of Canada at that method of publishing this important work. In the first place, the book is exceedingly dear at the price of 50 cents. Mr. Rose did not take the work of publishing it for pleasure—he thought he would make a profit out of it. I am told that the work has been retailed at 35 cents, 50 cents being the price on the back of the book, and I am further told by publishers that the work could be supplied for about 20 cents.

Mr. DAVIN. Ten cents.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am giving the outside figure. The work could be published for 20 cents, and I am informed that 300,000 copies were issued in this country, the United States and Great Britain. I estimate that if the book was sold at 50 cents there would be $90,000 of profit made by Mr. D. A. Rose upon a book which is issued under the authority of the Department of the Interior and should have been published at the Printing Bureau at Ottawa. This is the first public report of Canada that has contained advertisements and been made an advertising medium. There are 150 pages of reading matter, and the balance are advertisements which enormously swell the profits of the publishers. The advertisements cover a very wide range from blankets to hemorrhoid cures, Sunlight soap, condensed soups, Klondike sleeping bags, evaporated onions, dog biscuits and fluid beef. All these are authorized by the Department of the Interior and published under the authority of Canada. I do not suppose any one desired the Department of the Interior or any department to make a profit out of its publications, but the whole country desired there should be a very wide circulation of this book, and if it was intended to make a profit, it would have been better, instead of voting this small sum of $5,000 to William Ogilvie, who has been the means of opening up that region, to have given him the profits on this publication rather than given them to Mr. D. A. Rose, of Toronto.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am only surprised that we have not heard the question of the publication of this pamphlet discussed by the other side of the House at an early period of the session, because one would have thought from the large amount of space devoted to it by the press which supports hon. gentlemen opposite that it was one of the issues upon which they were going to defeat the Government as soon as Parliament met. I think hon. gentlemen will find, when they scrutinize the transaction, that it is not one which in any way reflects discredit on the Department of the Interior, but rather the contrary. In the first place, the reports issued by the various departments of the Government in former years have not been noted for being got out very rapidly. If the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) will cast his memory back he will find that Mr. Ogilvie had made reports about the Yukon district before this Government took office, and that those reports were never considered worthy of publication except when published in connection with the report of the Department of the Interior, where nobody would likely find them or pay any attention to them. I took steps the first year I was in office as quickly as possible to collect in proper form the reports of Mr. Ogilvie of the later dates, those reports which seemed to be valuable, and they were published last year. Something like 10,000 copies were distributed. Those 10,000 copies cost the department about $1,350. When Mr. Ogilvie was about to return from the Yukon, I made up my mind that it was necessary there should be available to the public something in the nature of an official guide to that country and an official description of it. I was brought face to face with this difficulty, that nobody could tell how many copies would be required, that except some one specially acquainted with the trade, no one had the faintest idea how many copies would be required or what the expense to the department would be if it undertook to supply them. The conclusion arrived at was, that it was not the duty of the department to furnish gratuitously to intending miners in the Yukon a book of this description when the expense could be defrayed by a small payment, and that the duty of the department to the public would be amply served by securing the proper and prompt execution of the book and placing in the hands of the public a sufficient number of copies for circulation in Canada among those who under ordinary circumstances would be considered entitled to them, and placing on the market a sufficient number of copies so that they could be secured by the public at a reasonable rate. If the book had been published in the ordinary way by the Department of the Interior through the Printing Bureau, 10,000 copies of the book, such as we got later on, to say nothing of the work of translation, would have cost us about $3,500 or $4,000. We got the 10,000 copies for nothing, without the outlay of any money. This estimate of $4,000 is furnished by the Printing Bureau. So what I am entitled to say is practically this: I have secured the publication of the work and obtained 10,000 copies for nothing, and have thus saved the country $4,000, and I do not think hon. gentlemen opposite will be able specially to find fault with the transaction. If the Printing Bureau had been called upon to do the work at the time of the year it was done, the book could not possibly have been got out in the time it was issued or with any reasonable promptitude without seriously interfering with the ordinary printing work of the Government; it would have required an increased or special staff, and possibly some additional appliances, but of that I am not sure. So it was practically necessary to get the work done outside if we wanted it done promptly and the other work of the Government carried on as it ought to be carried on. The question then came up, whether if this should be done in the way suggested, a contract of some kind should be let or not? Then the proposition being made to me by Hunter, Rose & Co., it became possible to secure 10,000 copies without payment by the Government of a single dollar, and accordingly I made the contract which has been laid on the Table. The contract provided that we should get 7,000 copies in English and 3,000 in French, that the maps and photographs used in connection with the work should remain the property of the Government, and we should reprint the maps or photographs at any time we thought fit. In addition, if a large sale of the book took place as anticipated, although I never felt so sanguine about the matter myself as did some other gentlemen, we had this additional arrangement that on all copies over 40,000 we should receive a royalty of 5 cents upon each one. So that if it is true, as the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) says, that 300,000 copies have been sold, the profit of the publishers will not be anything like what the hon. gentleman says, because after deducting the first 40,000 copies, the five cents royalty on the balance would give $13,000 of the profit to the country. I think the hon. member for Haldimand would find it very hard to get practical printers to follow his arithmetic. The last information I got with regard to the circulation of the book was that it had not been anything like as large as was expected.

Mr. DAVIN. What circulation has it ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The last report I got was some weeks ago, and it was that the circulation had not then gone over 40,000. I have not asked for an exact statement. The sale has not been anything like what was expected, for the reason I anticipated, that just as soon as this book was out it was pirated by railway companies, transportation companies, news companies and the publishers of various leaflets and guides. The maps were pirated, the plates were pirated, and the letter press was pirated, and no one would attempt to follow these pirated works, many of them issued by irresponsible institutions. The result was that the sale of this publication was not anything like what was anticipated, and I am perfectly certain that the hon. member for Haldimand must have been imposed upon when he was told that the circulation was 300,000. My hon. friend says that the price was too high. I do not think he will find the average member of this House to agree with him. I think the average member of this House, taking up that book, and looking at the maps, the plates and the letter press, will say that there never was better value given for 50 cents in Canada than was given in that book. The maps were specially prepared. They gave information that had not been theretofore given in many cases, and in addition to the new information, a general map was inserted, which was of great service to those who were not familiar with the general outlines of the country, and I am told that this map has been of the greatest service in showing the relation of that district to other parts of the country.

Mr. FOSTER. Who furnished the maps ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We furnished all the maps, the photographs and the letter press. That we would have done in any event. Whatever the book may be worth, in my judgment the price was not too high. A person buying a book upon that subject, certainly could not complain if he had to pay 50 cents for the information given in the way it was given in this book, with the maps, photographs and general information supplied. The difficulty that was found with this book in England, where it was expected that it would have a very large circulation, was that the price was too low. The persons who took charge of it there, I was told by Mr. Ogilvie, who has just recently returned from England, dropped it altogether, because they said that the price at which they were bound to sell the book was so low that it would not pay them to advertise it.

Mr. SIFTON.

The consequence was that in England, on account of the lowness of the price, the sale of the book almost entirely failed. I do not think the committee will agree with the argument advanced by the hon. member for Haldimand that this country has lost anything because this book was not printed and sent everywhere free. I do not think we have suffered because the Klondike is not known. I think it is widely known, as widely as any circulation of literature could make it known; and when we have placed 10,000 copies of the book for free circulation, I think we have done our duty to the country in that respect. My opinion is that the publishers have made practically nothing out of the book, because the 10,000 copies we got would be a fair profit on the publication of 40,000, and my impression is that when the matter comes to be summed up the publishers will find that although they expected to make a considerable sum of money, they have not succeeded in so doing. The idea has been suggested that the royalty chargeable on the book, if there were any, should have been allowed to Mr. Ogilvie himself. I thought of that; but I concluded that if Mr. Ogilvie's services merited recognition at the hands of the Parliament of Canada, it would be a much more graceful act for us to recommend a straight vote, which Mr. Ogilvie would get without any question, rather than to leave him to depend on the uncertain results of the sale of this book. It is an entirely erroneous idea to suppose that the scientific reports of the Government are all distributed free. The reports of the geological survey, which are of an analagous character, are not distributed free. These reports are charged for, the statutes are charged for, other important documents are charged for, and it does not at all follow, because certain official papers are issued free, that when a publication of this kind is issued by the Government, it is the duty of the Government to supply it to anybody and everybody without their paying for it.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. I suppose the main point of this question is whether the Government and the country got value for the property which the Minister of the Interior gave away to certain favoured gentlemen in Toronto. I understand that 10,000 copies of this report were given to the Government; and if we can find out what the cost of these 10,000 copies was, we can have some idea of the value placed by the Minister of the Interior on this monopoly. I was anxious not to talk at random on this question, and so I obtained from Mr. James Dudley, an expert printer in Toronto, an estimate of the cost of from 10,000 to 50,000 copies of this printed report. He did not give me a mere guess, but he gave me an estimate of the price at which he was prepared to do the work. His offer was to supply 10,000 copies at 13 cents for each copy. This sum included everything—the engraving, the lithographing, the maps, the binding, and the printing, and his figures show that all told, the Toronto publishers gave $1,300 worth of work for all the rights in the publication of this report. The printers' profit would have to be deducted from this $1,300. The firm would probably make at these figures from $150 to $175, or possibly $200 on the 10,000 copies of this report, so that the Minister of the Interior gave away this report, and all that the country gets for this monopoly is less than $1,200 worth of job printing.

Another point is this. What is this Ogilvie report worth? I think it has had an enormous sale, according to the estimate I have received, and an edition of 50,000 copies would only cost 12 cents a copy. There are 200 pages of matter in this report, including the advertisements, and it weighs, including the advertising pages, about 16½ ounces, or, say, a pound, and the paper is worth six cents a pound. Was it in the interests of the country that Canada should be advertised by giving the widest possible circulation to this report. Never was there in the world such a chance for the circulation of a public document. It would have been no great work at all for the Government to have undertaken the distribution of this report at cost price. At 25 cents a copy, the country would have made a handsome profit. Of course, it would not have been wise to issue the report without securing copyright in the United States, for then the American publishers could have issued unauthorized editions. These reports, issued by the Americans, could have been garbled so as to divert travel and immigration to the United States. It was necessary, therefore, to avoid that danger, but the danger could have been avoided without the gift of a valuable monopoly to two or three gentlemen in Toronto, by an expenditure of not over $800 for printing a thousand copies of the report, and we thus could have secured the United States copyright and have headed off the American publishers and prevented their issuing unauthorized editions.

I do not think it was good business to give away all the country's rights in this report for less than $1,200. Considering the cost of producing the work and the price at which it was sold and the receipts from advertising, the publisher will easily make, on an edition of a 100,000 copies, from $16,000 to $18,000. There certainly could not have been less than $8,000 or $9,000, possibly $10,000 worth of advertising in that report. The Minister of the Interior was generous to these Toronto gentlemen, but I do not think he was just either to the country or to the other publishers in Canada, who might have been only too glad to make a legitimate business offer for the job of printing or for this contract which he gave away to certain favoured individuals in Toronto. Suppose that this bargain will be excused on the plea that the Minister of the Interior had to act quickly. I wish he had more time at his disposal. He always seems to be in a hurry when giving away Klondike reports or Yukon property. He is in too much of a hurry to deal with the Government's business as a business man who would deal with his own business. This whole affair is a Yukon job in a small way, and in principle is quite as vicious as the larger transaction.

Mr. CLARKE. I listened with a good deal of attention to the explanations which the hon. Minister of the Interior gave the committee of the reasons why he handed this Klondike report over to Daniel Rose, and I must confess, with no desire to treat the hon. gentleman harshly, that the explanations he gave were not such as would commend themselves to my judgment or to the judgment of the great majority of the members of this House.

The first explanation he gave was that it was a matter of prime importance that this book should be got out quickly. I can readily understand that it was; but I make the assertion that there is no plant in Canada that can do the work as expeditiously, as quickly, or in better shape than the outfit we have within a couple of hundred yards of this House. It was rather a reflection on the staff of that establishment that a work which they could get out in three or four days at the very outside, if urgency was the only consideration, should have been given to an outside publisher. It was rather a reflection on our printing bureau, conducted right under the nose of the hon. Minister, that negotiations should go on for several days in Toronto with Mr. Rose before the deal was closed, and our establishment passed over.

The hon. gentleman says that the estimate of cost he received from the Printing Bureau for getting out the job was $4,000, and he claims that the country has saved that sum because of the arrangement with Mr. Rose. I venture to affirm that the estimate which the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Ross Robertson) has given of 13 cents per copy for this book, on the basis of a 10,000 or 20,000 edition, is much nearer the mark as to the actual value of the book than the estimate the hon. gentleman has given. As the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) has pointed out, this is the first time in the history of Canada that an official blue book, a book of such importance as this, was handed over to a private publisher for publication, and the private publisher given a copyright and allowed to charge a certain sum per copy for it. I have in my hand the civil service list of Canada, which contains 250 pages of tabular matter, with no advertisements and no photographic plates, while the Ogilvie-Rose publication contains about 50 pages of photographs, 50 pages of advertisements, and 100 pages of ordinary letter-press. The Ogilvie book, including the advertisements and photographic plates, does not contain more than 225 pages. Now I notice on the title page of the civil service list that that book can be supplied from the Printing Bureau at 15 cents a copy, while the Ogilvie-Rose book is sold for 50 cents a copy. It seems to me that no graver blunder, in a small way or for a small job, could have been committed than that committed by the Minister of the Interior in tying up the publication of this Klondike report in the hands of one firm in Toronto. There never was a book more eagerly looked for by the Canadian, British and American public than this first authentic report as to the value of that Klondike gold-bearing region, and it does seem to me it was only reasonable to expect that the Minister of the Interior would have made the best possible use of the opportunity which the publication of this much looked for report would have given him to advertise this country from one end of the Dominion to the other, from one end of the United States to the other, and from one end of Europe to the other. Why did he not take advantage of the immigration agencies that have been established in the old country, France and elsewhere on the continent to give the widest possible circulation to this book and issue it at cost price? When my hon. friend from Haldimand (Mr. Montague) said that the book should be got out at 20 cents a copy, he largely exceeded the proper estimate. It could be got out at not more than a York shilling per copy. If advantage had been taken of the opportunity which happily presented itself; and if, instead of 50 pages of quack medicine and other advertisements, practically destroying the character of the book, advantage had been taken to give 50 pages of solid, useful information respecting the resources and capabilities of this country, the advantage to Canada would have been of untold value. I regret very much that the hon. Minister of the Interior felt that it was so important on his part to get this book out within a very short space of time, that he neglected the opportunity afforded to him. It seems to me an unfortunate thing that in every transaction in connection with the opening up or development of the Yukon district, the Minister of the Interior pleads haste. Haste was pleaded in the making of the contract with Mackenzie & Mann; it is pleaded now in the giving over of this book and its copyright to Daniel Rose, and only the other night haste was pleaded for making an arrangement, without calling for public tenders, for the purchase of supplies for the military force being sent to the Yukon. Notwithstanding the desirability of getting the work done as promptly and as expeditiously as possible, there was ample opportunity to make a better job of the book and to get it printed at one-quarter the price charged by Mr. Rose, and to give the book, without cost to the country, a much wider circulation than it has received.

I would have been reasonably satisfied if the information which my hon. friend from Haldimand (Mr. Montague) has given to the committee was substantially correct, that this book had received a circulation of 300,000. But I am perfectly satisfied that the estimate of the Minister of the Interior is more nearly correct. But why should the desire to obtain information respecting the wealth of the Yukon that is shown to have existed be taken advantage of to enable Mr. Rose to make from 25 to 30 cents a copy? Was there any reason except that Mr. Rose was a solid, a substantial supporter of hon. gentlemen opposite, that he should be given a monopoly of the printing of this book? I put it to the committee that the arrangement was not a good one for the country, that it did not reflect advantageously upon the business capacity of the hon. Minister of the Interior. It is one of those jobs on a small scale that we on this side have a right to complain of, and I think we are entirely within our right in drawing attention to what we feel to be a dereliction of duty on the part of the Minister of the Interior, deserving of the condemnation of the committee.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I do not rise to continue the discussion on the line of the hon. gentleman who last spoke, because I think he has been beating the air, considering the fact that the Minister of the Interior gave a complete answer to his criticism with reference to the printing of this book and the propriety of publishing it in the way he did. But I rise to call attention to the extraordinary remark which I understand from the last speaker was made by the hon. member for Haldimand, that this is the first time in the history of Canada when a blue-book was published by the Government at the hands of a private party. Why, the hon. member must have been a member of this House at the time when the late Government gave the Geological Report of the Dominion to the late Thomas White's firm to be published at a cost of $5,000 a year, at a time when this Government had a binding contract with Messrs. Maclean & Roger for the publication of Government blue-books. The result of that was not only that the late Thomas White was paid for the book at what was said to be two or three prices, but the Government actually had to pay damages in a suit brought by Messrs. Maclean & Roger for breach of contract.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am sure that the hon. gentleman does not think I would intentionally misstate a fact, for I did not know anything about the circumstances to which the hon. gentleman refers.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The few remarks of my hon. friend (Sir Louis Davies) are enough to accentuate the spirit that animates the criticism of this transaction. My hon. friend has just told the committee as the fact—that this very thing which these hon. gentlemen condemn, the printing of a public document outside of a place where, under ordinary circumstances, it should be printed, was done by them deliberately, and without palliation, without being able to plead haste or special circumstances; and it was done in such a bungling and unbusiness-like way that they were sued for damages and had to pay damages. I should think, in view of these facts, these hon. gentlemen would have preserved a discreet silence on that phase of the question.

Mr. MONTAGUE. If the hon. Minister will allow me. I am sure he does not wish to misrepresent me, but I have already said that I did not know anything of the circumstances to which the Minister referred, and I am informed that there are differences between the cases.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I accept the statement of my hon. friend from Haldimand. I think we should have come to the conclusion, even if he had not made his statement, that he did not know anything about it, because if he had, if he had known that a violation of the principle he has declared for had been committed by the Government of which he was a supporter, he would not have brought it up. These hon. gentlemen made a failure, no doubt, they violated the law, they rendered themselves liable for damages. I have not done anything of that kind. There may be a question of policy, whether it was, I will not say proper, in the sense of propriety as contrasted with impropriety—but it may be an open question whether it was a wise thing to do. The hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Clarke) said that he did not think it wise. I do think it wise. Having listened to his arguments, I have not changed my opinion. The hon. gentleman probably has a knowledge of the printing business, and is in a position to speak as to the performance of work of that kind; but I know more about the Printing Bureau than he does. And I can tell the hon. gentleman, while he is quite correct in the estimate of the work by the Printing Bureau, he is wrong in what he says as to the speed with which that work is done. I say, not reflecting upon anybody, that it would have been absolutely impossible for the Printing Bureau to have got the work done within any reasonable time in such a way as to have satisfied the demand for it, without interfering with the ordinary work of the Government. I think that every one of my colleagues knows that to be a fact. I say that the difficulty of handling the Government work, even without any special demand of that kind upon the Bureau is engaging the attention of the Government to the extent of causing them to consider very seriously the question whether the facilities and plant of that institution should not be somewhat largely increased in order to enable it more promptly to deal with the work that it has to do. I say most emphatically that the Printing Bureau could not have done that work within the time within which it had to be done to be of use without seriously interfering with and impeding the work of the departments to be done at that time. I regard that as conclusive. So far as the estimate or the value is concerned, I do not know what the friends in the printing business of the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Clarke) may have furnished him with, but I know that the Printing Bureau charged to the Department of the Interior as the cost of the first pamphlet, of which we got out 10,000 copies, $1,352.44. They gave us also an estimate of what 10,000 copies of this new pamphlet would cost—$3,580. So, as against the estimate which the hon. gentleman has presented. I give this estimate of the experts in the Printing Bureau. Now, my hon. friend says, and in this he seems to be quite honest, and I am sure he is honest, as I think he is entirely mistaken about it, that if we had issued this pamphlet free or at a lower price, and had made use of the agencies of the immigration department throughout the world, we could have circulated the book very much more largely. But I wish to tell my hon. friend that a book cannot be circulated in that way. A book must be advertised—and there was the difficulty we had to meet. We should have to engage in the business of advertising the book and placing it on the market as a publisher does, and these advertisements cost an enormous amount of money. Now, I put it to the committee: Would it have been the duty of the department or would it have been wise of the department to advertise this book and place it upon the market and push it and circulate it as publishing firms do? I do not think the committee would regard it as the business of the Government to do that, or would think that the Government or the country would have been better off if we had done so.

I think if we had undertaken to do that we would have largely failed. As a matter of fact I believe that Hunter, Rose & Co. failed. But Hunter, Rose & Co. were much more likely to succeed in circulating this book than we were, because they are a firm of publishers, and there would be a much greater probability of securing a large circulation by putting the book into the hands of a firm who were making a profit to the extent that the book was circulated. This firm was impelled by every principle of self-interest to make a successful transaction, and the book would be very much more likely to obtain a wider circulation that way than if left in the hands of the officials of the Government. I think the argument my hon. friend has addressed to the committee that we could have circulated this book more widely by keeping it in our own hands, is altogether contrary to the experience that we have had. We would have had to expend a large amount of money if we had undertaken to circulate it in that way, and we probably would not have succeeded as well as the present publisher.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to mention one subject that has been brought up by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who is not now present. It was rather a clever ruse of the hon. gentleman, and was followed by the Minister of the Interior, to take away the attention of the committee and of the public from this transaction to another as different from this as any two transactions could be the one from the other. The transaction of the Minister of the Interior was this: having, by means of the Government funds and the expenditure of Government energy, gathered very valuable information, he gave that information to a private firm of printers, they to return books of the value of $1,000 or $1,200, to have the copyright, and the sole right of sale of that book, to use it for an advertising medium as far as they chose to use it, retaining the sole ownership of the book and to have all the profits that came from it. That is one transaction. The transaction with reference to the printing of the Geological Report by the "Gazette" Company in Montreal was an entirely different transaction. Whether it was a wise one or not, it was on an entirely different plane. At that time, instead of the Government Printing Bureau doing the work, which bureau the Government did not have at that time, the Government had a contract with McLean & Roger for doing their printing. The "Gazette" office having, as it was supposed, superior facilities for doing work of that kind, because it was done in a better style than the work which was got out by McLean & Roger of the general blue-books of the department—the Government instead of sending that publication to McLean & Roger to be printed, gave a contract to the "Gazette" office. The Government was getting the major part of its printing done by McLean & Roger, and as McLean & Roger pleaded before the court, it should have got all its printing done there. Instead of doing that, the Government employed the "Gazette" office to print the geological report. But just as all the blue-books belonging to the Government came back to the Government as soon as they were printed by McLean & Roger, so the Geological Report belonging to the Government came back to the Government just as soon as it was printed by the "Gazette." It was the simple question of who should do the printing for the Government, but the "Gazette" had no right in the Geological Report.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. What good are the rights?

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend is a lawyer and a business man, and I will let him figure that out. In this case the Minister of the Interior went to a private firm without any competition at all, and placed the results of Mr. Ogilvie's labours for five or six years, and of the expenditure of the department for a greater series of years, at the disposal of this private firm of printers, gave them the stock-in-trade which had been laboriously gathered together at great cost by this country. He said to this firm of printers: You can have the sole copyright of that work if you will take it, and the sole right to sell it, and to stuff it with advertisements and make as much as you can at the rate of 50 cents a copy. In return for that you give us 10,000 copies which, at 10 or 12 cents each, are worth from $1,000 to $1,200. That is exactly the difference. Now, my hon. friend says the Printing Bureau was not able, was not equipped to bring out that little book. I think I have some knowledge of the Printing Bureau. My hon. friend says the Printing Bureau is slow in some cases. I am not so sure of that. My view of it is that the Printing Bureau is not slow in its operations, but that the slowness comes from the preparation of copy by the departments, and the proof reading by the departments. I know that just as soon as the season commences, the Printing Bureau begins to dun the different departments for copy, and by circular and interview ask them to send in copy earlier so as to keep the printers going. But if the departments do not get their copy ready in time, the result is that at certain seasons the work is not turned out very rapidly. But to say that the Printing Bureau, with its type and presses, and its 50, 60 or 70 men, is not able to get out a book of that size, is simply absurd. If the copy had been placed in their hands and they had been asked to get that out, they could have put that book out just as quickly as any printer in this country. So my hon. friend has no excuse on that point. But if he did not want to take up the work of distributing this book, what was to prevent him from asking for tenders? There was a large commercial value attached to that book at that time, and it would have been the simplest thing in the world, if he had chosen, not to get it done by the Printing Bureau, to ask the printing establishments of this country to tender for the printing of that book, and they would pay for the privilege of having that material put into their hands, by publishing it under certain conditions as to the price. My hon. friend had plenty of time. The first letter he received was of November 11th when he had an offer from them to publish 10,000 copies with certain conditions, and that letter was followed by three others. It was not until some time in January that a contract was finally made between the Minister and this printing firm. There was nearly three months of time which elapsed between the first idea of having it printed by a firm outside the Printing Bureau, and the time when the Minister made the contract. A month would have amply sufficed to procure tenders from every printing establishment in the country who wished to undertake this work. Then there was another way that was suggested. There was no better immigration literature, no better catch for drawing the attention of the world to immigration literature and to Canadian literature from a Government standpoint, than this opportunity thus afforded to my hon. friend. He spends tens of thousands for printing of immigration literature to call attention to Canada. The hon. gentleman would have had the most valuable immigration pamphlet which could have been distributed, at small cost to this country, and it would have attracted attention from every part of the world to Canada. The hon. gentleman's case is not parallel with the "Gazette" printing of the geological report. I do not think his excuse is a fair one, that the Government Bureau could not carry out the work, and if he had come to that conclusion what he should have done was to have called for tenders. But this Government has begun a system of totally ignoring the principle of public tender and advertisement for these contracts. We have come up against one after another of these instances, as glaring and gross as they can possibly be; and yet there is not a member in the ranks of hon. gentlemen opposite who has the honesty to rise and denounce the system as practiced by those Ministers, a system which they denounced for seventeen years when in Opposition, and yet to-day, from the Minister of Public Works, the Minister of Militia and the Minister of the Interior, to say nothing of others, the idea of tender and contract has been dealt a complete and staggering blow; and this Liberal Government goes to the country as a Government which not only violated its pledges with regard to this work, but which adopts the principle of giving these large contracts to private parties, farming them out to friends for the benefit of their own political adherents. What admission had we in the committee this morning? The Minister of Public Works had a $20,000 job for dredging to be done, four times $5,000. How is he doing that dredging? Did he let it out by contract? Not a bit of it. Did he go among his friends who had dredging plants? No. He gave it out to a relation of his own, to farm out; that relation is farming it out to-day and taking his commission and his profits on the proceeds. And what excuse was given by this hon. gentleman? The petty and miserable excuse that with his political foresight he had ascertained that all the dredges in the country were owned by Conservatives, and in order to get even from a party point of view, he proposed to farm out these works, so that a bit of the profits come to men of his party.

Mr. SIFTON.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
At the same price as you paid.

Mr. FOSTER. A more disgraceful admission was never made in any constitutional country. If the Government can stand it, the Opposition can do so. This thing will ring from one end of the country to the other, and business people will understand what is being done by this business Government. The hon. Minister of the Interior showed contempt for Parliament when he rushed through the Yukon scheme on the plea of urgency just before Parliament met. He shows his contempt for Parliament to-day, when after being authorized to spend $200,000 he spent $268,000 and came down during the last month of the fiscal year and asked Parliament, with all the confidence in the world, to vote him $68,000 which he has spent illegally and wrongfully, and the credits for which are hanging up somewhere, but I do not know where at present. That taste had not got out of the mouths of hon. members before we came upon another vote of the same class. The hon. Minister was entrusted with $95,000 to spend during the year, not a cent more. He has spent $40,000 in addition, and now he comes to Parliament to indemnify him. And this is your Liberal Government—it is arrant hypocrisy, that is what it is. Hon. gentlemen opposite have been weighed in the balance already and found wanting; their own consciences condemn them, and every business man in the country, not blinded by partisanship, condemns them as well. Yet the Minister of Militia sits there and smiles when an earnest and honest man tries to put things before him for his own help, for his future salvation and for the good of the country. Well, we must do our duty; we must preach, teach, give line upon line, lesson after lesson; by and by we will drill this into the public mind whether we drill it into the minds of hon. gentlemen opposite or not.

Amount required to maintain a force of Mounted Police in the Yukon Provisional District, including $300,000 by Governor General's warrant.....	$500,000
---	-----------

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Shall this item be adopted?—Carried.

Mr. FOSTER. What; what is that that is being carried?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. This is $500,000 for the Yukon police force.

Mr. FOSTER. And the Minister of the Interior sits there with his hand on his ear and does not give us any explanation.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is not his department.

An hon. MEMBER. He was not asked for an explanation.

Mr. FOSTER. I know I saw the Chairman blush even, when he said it was carried, because he felt that a great outrage was being committed.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order; the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has not the right to make that imputation, when just a moment ago I permitted him to discuss an item which was not under the consideration of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. I take back that the Chairman blushed.

Mr. McMILLAN. An honest man is not always saying things that he has to take back.

The PRIME MINISTER. I would ask this item to stand for a moment as I have sent for the papers, and will then give the explanation.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The item stands. Penitentiaries—

Mr. SPROULE. We must have some information as to the result of these inquiries by commissioners. The reports were presented last year I think, but we have had very little information as to the action taken on these reports.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. As the result of the report of the committee of inquiry into Kingston penitentiary, the deputy warden, the storekeeper and the engineer were dismissed, the surgeon was superannuated, and the services of one or two other officials were dispensed with. My hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) will find that the result of the administration of that penitentiary shows that the expenditure in connection with the commission was perfectly justified.

Mr. SPROULE. Does this cover the amount necessary to pay the whole indebtedness in this respect?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. So far as Kingston penitentiary is concerned, I understand that this will be quite sufficient to cover the expense. I draw my hon. friend's attention to the fact that this expenditure is partly incurred because of the fact that last year serious charges were made against the engineer, and at his request an opportunity was given to him to explain these charges, and as a result we have had a partial investigation of specific charges made against Mr. Devlin, the engineer. The result of that investigation will be placed in the hands of members of Parliament next session, as it is not quite ready to present this year.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. SPROULE. How much did this commission cost?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am not able to say at the present moment, but it is quite in the vicinity of $6,000 as to Kingston alone. I do not want my hon. friend to take these figures as very accurate, because I have not in mind at the present time the exact amount, but will give it to-morrow.

Mr. CLANCY. Has Mr. Noxon concluded his labours as one of the commissioners?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think the labours of all the commissioners are now concluded, except in so far as it may be found necessary to have an investigation into Dorchester, N.B. It has not yet been decided whether we will have an investigation there or not, or into the British Columbia penitentiary. I think it is probable we will be able to dispense with the services of the commissioners in respect to these penitentiaries.

Mr. FOSTER. How many commissioners in the case of St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Mr. Noxon, Fraser and Mr. Lafortune.

Mr. FOSTER. How in the world did they spend $17,727?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I have to state frankly that so far as that expenditure is concerned I have to make myself personally responsible for a large portion of it, and I will explain exactly the circumstances. The commissioners commenced their investigation in to the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary in the month of April, 1897, they proceeded with the investigation and towards the month of August they had practically completed their labours. As the result of the report they made at that time, Mr. Ouimet, the warden, was recommended for dismissal. Mr. Ouimet made representations that the charges which had been made against him, and which certainly would have justified his dismissal, were unfounded and he wanted to have the charges put in a specific form and an opportunity given him to answer them. I took the matter in hands myself personally and am largely responsible for the continued investigation. The specific charges were drawn and submitted to him, and then we had practically a new investigation so far as the warden was concerned. My hon. friends will find by the report that whereas these specific charges were communicated to Mr. Ouimet about the 15th of September, yet because of the absence of his counsel and witnesses, there were numerous delays all resulting from the action of the warden, and I concurred in these delays asked for by him. I have to take the responsibility of that. The investigation was not completed until the end of December and the report was not made until late in January or the beginning of February.

Mr. FOSTER. Were these commissioners paid for every day of that delay?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No, they were not paid for every day of that delay, but frequently it occurred that the commissioners would go to Montreal on a fixed day for the purpose of making the investigation, and instead of their being informed before hand they would be told when they got there that the warden's lawyer was absent or that the witnesses were out of town, and delays occurred during the months of October, November and December, for which no one in reality was responsible, except the warden and his lawyer. There was a great mass of evidence, I think hundreds of folios taking during that time which is absolutely useless and absolutely irrelevant.

Mr. FOSTER. Why did they take irrelevant testimony?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is more than I can really answer for. I looked it over with care since I found a great deal of it had no bearing on the charges submitted. That is my judgment, but I must say, that because charges of a most serious character were made against the warden every possible facility was given him to enable him to prove if he could that these charges were not founded. I thought it better to err on that side than to feel I had done an injustice to a man who really held a high position in the penitentiary for several years, and had been connected with the institution for a very long period.

Mr. FOSTER. Which was the lawyer on the committee?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Messrs. Fraser and Lafortune were both lawyers.

Mr. FOSTER. How much were these paid each?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The Order in Council under which they were appointed fixed the sum at $10 for each per diem.

Mr. DAVIN. Was the Chairman a lawyer?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No, Mr. Noxon is not a lawyer; he is connected with the prison system of Ontario, I believe.

Mr. HAGGART. $6,000 seems an enormous sum for the purpose of inquiring into the conduct of the engineer at the Kingston penitentiary.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Every officer was inquired into.

Mr. HAGGART. I understood the Solicitor General to say that this was an inquiry into the case of a man named Devlin.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Oh, no. There is $1,700 there, and a portion of that will be expended in that connection.

Mr. HAGGART. Have we not an inspector of penitentiaries?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. What is his duty and has he reported on any of these things that the commissioners found out, and if he did not why did he not? We have to pay large sums every year for the inspection of penitentiaries, and one would think it was the duty of the inspector to inquire into the efficiency and discipline of the penitentiary. The inspector may have done his duty and the report may be in the Department of Justice and the fault may be with the department. I wish to know whether the inspector had reported on these breaches of discipline which the commissioners have found to exist in the different penitentiaries?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The inspector certainly did make a report, but it did not at all approach in fullness the report made by the commissioners. I venture to say that the present inspector did not make a report on the line of the commissioners at all. So far as Kingston penitentiary is concerned the commission was appointed immediately after the change of Government. At the same time I think it only fair that I should say that the prison inspector cannot be held responsible for the condition of things that has grown up in the administration of our penitentiaries, because he has only been appointed during the last three years. But we really had a condition of things in the penitentiaries that could not be tolerated, and those who have read the Kingston penitentiary report will bear me out in what I now say. In so far as the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary was concerned the condition of things existing there was even worse than in Kingston. I draw the attention of my hon. friends opposite to the fact that the first Estimates brought down by this Government in connection with the penitentiaries showed a saving of over $80,000 in the administration of the penitentiaries.

Mr. FOSTER. You cannot tell yet, because the Minister of the Interior brought down a saving estimate, too.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. We have ascertained the result by our first year's experience, and have cause to show that we should not criticise too harshly the present inspector. After all he has only been there three years and this condition of things has grown up, not under his administration, but during a long series of years.

Mr. SPROULE. What action was taken on the report of the St. Vincent de Paul commissioners?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The result was that the warden had to leave and the deputy warden also had to be replaced, and the surgeon was replaced and one or two of the other officers.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not want to create the false impression that I was criticising adversely the conduct of the inspector. I do not know anything about that. He may be a very efficient man, and I believe he is, but there must be laxity somewhere or other. Either his instructions were not correct, or he may have made reports to the department which fully justified the appointment of the commission. But if you have an inspector at all he should have, from year to year, made such reports to the department as would have kept the penitentiaries from falling into the disgraceful state the Solicitor General says they are in.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am not prepared to apportion the responsibility, but I am prepared to speak about the conditions that existed when we took charge of the penitentiaries, and those conditions could not be tolerated if we wanted to have an efficient administration of our penitentiaries. I do not want to speak now about the result of the St. Vincent de Paul investigation because the papers are not before the House, and it was agreed between my hon. friend from Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) and myself that this matter would be laid over until next session, and, therefore, it would not be fair for me to make an ex parte statement without having him present, as he has looked into the matter carefully. I venture to say that the House will find that there was such a state of things existing at St. Vincent de Paul as could not possibly be tolerated. There was no discipline, as has been shown by the recent outbreaks; and we were purchasing our flour in the vicinity of Montreal, at half a dollar a barrel more than we were at Kingston, and beef at two cents or three cents a pound more than we were at Kingston. However, I do not want to go into the details at this time.

Mr. SPROULE. Would the hon. gentleman be kind enough to give us information about the result of the inquiry at the Manitoba penitentiary?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The result was that the deputy warden and one or two other officers—I am not prepared to say who they were—were discharged. That is the penitentiary I know least about.

Mr. FOSTER. Who were the commissioners?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Mr. Wade.

Mr. DAVIN. Is that the gentleman who has gone to the Yukon?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Has that report been presented to Parliament?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not think it has been. I am not aware of its having been asked for.

Mr. FOSTER. Probably the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) could inform my hon. friend of something in reference to Mr. Wade. I think I remember reading a very strong stricture upon the appointment by the Government of such a commissioner as Mr. Wade to make an investigation into the Manitoba penitentiary. I think the conclusion of my learned and hon. friend who edits the "Tribune" was that Mr. Wade was, in plain English, utterly unfit to look into such an important and grave matter. I am sorry the hon. gentleman is not here, because I would like to see that matter tried out between the Solicitor General and him.

Mr. SPROULE. Did the commissioner find many irregularities at Manitoba?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I have not read the report, and, therefore, I am not able to answer the hon. gentleman's question.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I have not yet heard anything from the Solicitor General that would in my judgment justify the appointment of this commission; for you have an inspector of these public institutions, a part of whose duty it obviously is to report upon the very occurrences which the Solicitor General has just alluded to. As the hon. gentleman says it was understood between him and the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) that there should be no further discussion on the report of the commission regarding the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary until the next session, just as briefly as he alluded to the mistakes that had taken place in that institution, will I say that not one single fact which he has stated goes beyond the scope of duty of the inspector of penitentiaries. I have not heard anything that would justify the appointment of a commission involving this large expenditure. I would like the Solicitor General to tell me the amounts that were paid to Mr. Fraser, Mr. Noxon and Mr. Lafortune.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I cannot give these figures off-hand. I shall be glad to give them to the hon. gentleman at the early session to-morrow. I will draw my hon. friend's attention to this one fact, that as a result of this investigation at St. Vincent de Paul, we found accounts paid twice, and we have recovered the money back.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I am sure that I am within the hon. gentleman's judgment when I say that even that fact does not constitute the slightest ground for the appointment of the commission.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That fact shows that there was something wrong, and if the hon. gentleman wants to put the responsibility upon the inspector, I cannot help his doing so.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Will the hon. gentleman tell me that that fact ought not to have been investigated by the inspector, and reported to the Minister of Justice?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I cannot say whether it ought or ought not to be; but it was not done.

Mr. BRITTON. I think that the strictures that the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) has made in reference to the duty of the inspector, is a perfectly just one. I do not say that the present inspector is at all responsible for any of the irregularities that were made apparent in the Kingston case; but it is perfectly clear that the state of things that developed on the examination of the commissioners, the former inspector was to a large extent responsible for. There was no inspection. In some instances, there was evidence beyond any controversy of collusion—not perhaps express collusion, but connivance on the part of the inspector with what was done by some officers in the penitentiary and what has been condemned by the commission. The work of the commissioners, if it did nothing else, disclosed that; and made apparent that hereafter the inspector, whoever he may be, must do his duty very differently from the way former inspectors did theirs. As the report has been before the House and has been acted upon, I do not wish to enlarge upon matters which invite discussion, particularly as I do not wish to take up the time of the House at this late period of the session.

Mr. INGRAM. The statement which the hon. Solicitor General will bring down to-morrow will give, I suppose, the amounts paid to each, from the time they started until they finished their duties?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. FORTIN. It is very unfortunate that the motion I made some time ago in this House to have the report of the investigation held at St. Vincent de Paul printed was not carried, in consequence of the objection taken by one member of the House. If the report had been printed, there could be no question as to the utility of the expenditure on the investigation held at St. Vincent de Paul. I have seen a few sheets of that report, and I was amazed at what was brought out by that investigation. I could only state from memory some of the figures, but I remember distinctly that in the construction of the stone wall around the yard of the penitentiary there was such a quantity of stone unaccounted for that it amounts to a value of about $65,000. It is unquestionably something over 200,000 cubic feet paid for by the Government and never accounted for.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I draw the attention of the hon. Solicitor General to the fact that it would be very unfair to have a discussion of what was disclosed by the report of the commissioners, without having the printed report before us. Anything I said was merely in answer to what the hon. Solicitor General stated.

Mr. FORTIN. It is not my fault if the report is not printed, but the fault of an hon. member on the opposite side; and since some discussion has arisen as to the utility of this investigation and expenditure, I may be allowed to state what I have learned from the perusal of some sheets of that report. In the construction of that stone wall, the Government was charged and paid for 1,100 barrels of cement. The commissioners investigated that item, and found it absolutely impossible to account for the use of at least 700 barrels of that cement. No explanation whatever was even attempted to be given for the deficiency. There were many other irregularities. Prisoners in a penitentiary, though paying the penalty of their crimes, are not usually treated as beyond the pale of humanity, but are supposed to have the same affections as people who are free. They are allowed to communicate with their relatives; they are allowed to send letters to and to receive letters from their wives, their children, their other relatives and friends. But in that penitentiary, the commissioners discovered the disgraceful fact that for years the letters addressed to convicts had, without any reason at all, never been delivered to them. They had not even been opened, but lay in a heap on the floor of the vault, and no reason could be given for their non-delivery. Some of the scenes which took place before the commission were very affecting. There were married men in the penitentiary whose wives had written them most affectionate letters, letters containing good advice, evidently coming from good, affectionate women, and the receipt of which could not have failed to exercise a good moral effect on those to whom they were addressed. Yet such letters were never delivered. The first letter was followed by a second, the second by a third, and by a fourth, and even a fifth, and these remained unanswered, for the very good reason that they were never delivered. One of these women, the wife of one of the prisoners, died in despair at the thought that her unfortunate husband, who had committed a crime in a moment of passion, had completely forgotten her, and stopped all communication with her.

I am very sorry that we have not got the full printed report, because it would show that a state of things existed in that penitentiary which was impossible to tolerate. The whole institution was rotten from the cellar to the garret. No law, no rules were observed. The officers trafficked with the convicts, the convicts were allowed to trade in the institution, the most extravagant expenditures were permitted. Why, the warden actually ordered in writing harnesses for his own personal use to be made upon the model of the harnesses furnished the Lieutenant-Governor of the province of Quebec, and this was charged to the Government. The warden had no less than four or five horses specially kept, at the expense of the Government, for his own personal use. Even one of the servant girls, who happened to have been taken from a neighbouring locality, had for her own personal use two or three times a week one special horse and cab, in which she was allowed to visit her relatives. These are only samples of what the report contains. There are some rather amusing transactions related in it. For instance, there was a certain steam yacht constructed at the penitentiary—constructed, of course, with the material of the institution, and at the expense of the Government. That yacht was supposed to be the joint property of two of the officials. One of the officials died, and the survivor wanted to sell the yacht. To this the heirs or legatees of the other objected. They finally came to an agreement to sell the yacht which was lying at anchor opposite the village. The price was $1,200. I think, but, of course, it never cost a cent to the owners. A bargain was entered into and concluded, and the yacht was to have been delivered the next day. But it disappeared, and what became of it it was impossible for the commissioners, holding an investigation under oath, to discover. Nothing was ever seen of it—neither the hull nor the machinery, nor even the funnel! A second yacht was then constructed, but as the story of its construction is related in the report, it may be as well to wait until that report is printed. But it will show that it was constructed on about the same lines as the first, namely, by the officers of the penitentiary, with the material of the Government. It was and is supposed to-day to be the property of a third person who has probably never paid a cent for either the material or the work. I feel certainly satisfied of the utility of this investigation. I had suspected that the institution was not being properly managed owing to the extravagance that was manifested on all sides.

I am sure that when the report is in the hands of the members of the House, no objection will be raised to the expense incurred by the Government holding this investigation. If any investigation ever justified expense by promoting good administration it was that to which reference is now being made. That expense has been partly explained by the remarks of the Solicitor General who has been so generous, I may say perhaps, a little too generous in allowing the warden all possible, and impossible, opportunities to protect himself, even to the extent of contradicting his own evidence.

Mr. SPROULE. I would ask the Solicitor General, what are the duties of the inspector of penitentiaries?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. To look after the discipline and the expenditure connected with the penitentiaries.

Mr. SPROULE. If the inspector had been doing his duty this state of affairs could not have come up without his having reported upon it.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Had the inspector—Mr. Stewart, I think, is his name—made a report to the Government as to the condition of the Kingston and St. Vincent de Paul penitentiaries?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Not on the lines of the report of the commissioners.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Then the department must have acted upon some information they received from others, in that case, did they ask the inspector to report on that information?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. So far as the St. Vincent de Paul is concerned, we had an affidavit setting forth particular charges from a person living in the vicinity of the penitentiary. These charges were referred to the commission.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). And not to the inspector?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). We may well ask that the duty of the inspector be defined, otherwise we may have a commission of investigation every two or three years.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. His duties are defined. They will find it set forth in the Penitentiary Act and in the Order in Council.

Mr. SPROULE. Has nothing been done to the inspector since that? Does he still hold office?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. And is the Government satisfied with that as a faithful discharge of his duty?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. These are conditions which have grown up slowly. For instance, the matters with regard to the stone occurred previous to the appointment of the inspector.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand the Solicitor General to say that the inspector has been in office about three years. Some of this wrong-doing was going on during that time. And he left it without mentioning it in his report.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. To a large extent.

Mr. SPROULE. Would not that suggest that he was unfit for his position?

The PRIME MINISTER. Quite possibly.

Mr. SPROULE. And the wisdom of replacing him and putting some one who would better discharge the duties?

The PRIME MINISTER. Quite possibly.

Mr. SPROULE. If "quite possibly," cannot it be said that the Government have not done their duty in not taking any action.

The PRIME MINISTER. No, because the Government have had this report before them only for a few weeks, and have had no opportunity of looking into it thoroughly and reaching a conclusion on the question.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand the report was in their hands some time ago.

The PRIME MINISTER. No, only since the opening of the session.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I see here an appropriation for a payment "notwithstanding anything in the Penitentiary Act." This seems to be a common practice. There are some half dozen items in these Supplementary Estimates with the proviso added "notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act." I do not speak in a fault-finding way because I understand it is not a practice introduced by this Government; but it seems to me to lead to some anomalous results. You have a statute, the Penitentiary Act, which applies to cases of this kind. That statute has been passed by this House and by the Senate, each having equal and co-ordinate powers of legislation. But we amend that by a resolution of this House and embody the amendment in a Bill, which, we say, the Senate has no right to amend. I should think it possible, though I do not say that it is the case, that some question of constitutional difficulty might arise with regard to a matter of that kind. It is true that this resolution of ours does not become law until it receives the consent of the Senate. But, though the Senate has a technical right to throw the Bill out, yet, as we say, it has no power to amend it. Therefore we amend the substantive law of the country and practically deny to the Senate any voice in that amendment. I think this practice is one which might well be considered by the Solicitor General and the Government with a view to its abandonment.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is quite clear that the class of people who were in charge of this St. Vincent de Paul were, in many cases a disgrace to the institution and the country. They would rob a grave yard, or steal a hot stove, or steal the chimney of a house. It is a most disgraceful exhibition to be made before this Parliament that men appointed to responsible positions such as these men held, should disgrace the country as they did in their conduct in this institution. I am glad to hear the First Minister say that it is owing to the fact that the Government have not yet had time to mete out to these men the measure of punishment that they deserve. But I hope they will make an example in the case of this institution that will be a warning to officials in all other institutions. It is an amazing thing that these irregularities should have been allowed to continue so long without discovery. Letters were addressed to the poor convicts, and they were not permitted the privilege of reading communications from their relatives. It is a disgrace to humanity, and the men who were guilty of such conduct should not remain at large, they ought to have been hung to a post long ago.

Mr. SPROULE. Have the Government suspended the inspector of penitentiaries, Mr. Stewart, or do they intend to prevent him going on with his duties as heretofore, in view of the fact that he has so clearly neglected his duties?

The PRIME MINISTER. No, the Government would have been very chary in taking such action with regard to Mr. Stewart, whose position formerly as private secretary to Sir John Thompson, the late Prime Minister of this Dominion, was a peculiar one. If the Government had been hasty in suspending him, no doubt there would have been a charge against the Government of suspending him for political reasons.

Mr. DAVIN. So far as I have followed the discussion, I do not think any charge has been brought home to Mr. Stewart. The Solicitor General himself says that the practices that were condemned by the commission commenced long ago, and matured in years previous to Mr. Stewart coming to his present office. Everybody knows that when a man in Mr. Stewart's position has to go from penitentiary to penitentiary, it is quite possible and probable that these things might go on without his being able to discover them in his brief visits.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have nothing to say at present against Mr. Stewart, one way or the other. But as I understood the discussion, the sense of right of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) was shocked that Mr. Stewart, the inspector of penitentiaries, making a yearly inspection, should not have discovered the fact, for instance, that there were thousands of letters in the drawers addressed to the convicts, which had never been opened.

Mr. SPROULE. I still express the same astonishment, because the usual course is that when officials are charged with negligence, they are suspended until inquiry discloses whether they have been guilty of the alleged offence. I would naturally suppose the same course would be followed in this instance, I do not care whether Mr. Stewart was secretary of the late Sir John Thompson, or who he was.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Stewart, or any other inspector of a prison, could not possibly find out where the stealing had been going on for years past, unless some one came to him and made a complaint. Take the point that has been brought up by the First Minister. Was Mr. Stewart expected to ransack every drawer and every hole and corner in the penitentiary? If the Government would take these men who have been proven guilty of this wholesale robbery, and send them up for a term as convicts, I am satisfied the country would endorse them in doing so. But that Mr. Stewart should be held responsible for these improper acts, is out of the question.

Amount required to cover unprovided items, as per Auditor General's Report, 1896-97 (page A-2)..... $38,018 61

Mr. SPROULE. We ought to have some explanation of this over-expenditure.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. These are items that appear every session, they are rather a formal vote. There are a number of small items of over-expenditure, and it has become necessary to get a vote of indemnity. The practice has been followed for years. The hon. gentleman has a full list of all the items in the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. McMULLEN. There is a vote like this in every report of the Auditor General. The items are always set out in the first report of the Auditor General.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They are not to be in excess of the total appropriations. There are excesses on particular items, but not on the general grants. The total expenditure is entirely within the appropriation.

Mr. SPROULE. It would be quite as illegal to over-expend on a particular branch as on the whole appropriation. So, the same principle applies either to a part or the whole; but there may be certain circumstances to justify an over-expenditure, and then the Minister should have the information available.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No one Minister can explain these matters. In every department there is liability to be an over-expenditure of a few dollars, for it is impossible to make the estimates correct to a dollar. In the Auditor General's Report there is set out the accounts which are exceeded, and amounts which have not been used. If the hon. gentleman will turn to the Auditor General's Report he will find that many sums are not used, and he will also find certain grants were exceeded. In such cases a bill of indemnity is necessary. The only item that really needs explanation is $19,000 for the mounted police.

Mr. SPROULE. If the hon. gentleman will look at Public Works, he will find a considerable over-expenditure.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman will find several small sums. If there are any large sums over-drawn, I shall be glad to bring down the necessary explanation. These small items are set out in detail in the Auditor General's Report, and it is quite unusual to have a debate on them at this stage.

Mr. HAGGART. The old principle was that the Minister should obtain a vote for a particular work, and it would be expended for that specific purpose.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. A large portion of the expenditure is done through credits issued on the departments, and some of the items come about in that way.

Mr. HAGGART. Take Public Works, I find that the amount granted on capital account was $105,000, and the expenditure was $114,825; grants not used, $2,161; grants exceeded, $11,000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. What book is the hon. gentleman quoting from?

Mr. HAGGART. The Auditor General's Report of 1896.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We are referring to the Auditor General's Report of 1897.

Mr. HAGGART. I thought the new principle adopted was that Parliament voted certain amounts to be applied to particular works, and that this sum should be applied to nothing else.

The PRIME MINISTER. That was in 1896, and not in 1898.

Mr. SPROULE. With respect to the over-expenditure of $19,000, I should like the Minister to make an explanation.

The PRIME MINISTER. The appropriation was not exceeded last year; it remained quite within the amount, although there was some little over-lapping in the items.

That is the reason why we are seeking a bill of indemnity.

Amount required to maintain the force of Mounted Police in the Yukon Provisional District, including $300,000 authorized by Governor General's warrant $500,000

The PRIME MINISTER. This is an item of $500,000 which we ask in excess of the ordinary expenditure with respect to the new development occasioned by the opening up the Yukon district, that is to say, it is required for the payment of the force we have sent to the Yukon. About the month of August last we had forty men of the mounted police in the Yukon. The gold discoveries and the consequent rush of population made it necessary to increase the force very largely. It was increased to the number of 100, and then we determined to increase it again to the number of 250, and we have now in the Yukon 239 officers and men, apportioned as follows :—

Dawson City, two officers and 31 men ; Cudahy, one officer and nine men ; Summit of the White Pass, one officer and 20 men ; summit of Chilkoot Pass, one officer and 20 men ; between Lake Bennett and Dawson, six officers and 77 men, and 27 special constables, interpreters, scouts and dog drivers ; Dalton trail, twelve non-commissioned officers and men ; Stikine River, two officers and 20 men, four special constables, interpreters, scouts and dog drivers. En route from Edmonton, one officer, two men, three special constables, scouts and dog drivers, and we have one officer at Vancouver ; total, 239 men.

It is proposed to increase the force to about 250. I need not tell the House that the expenditure on this force has been very large and that the chief item of expenditure has been cost of transportation. The following gives the details in full of the expenditure :—

Pay of force.....	$ 11,846 20
Subsistence	36,308 92
Forage	7,507 37
Fuel and light	706 86
Clothing	10,853 26
Repairs and renewals.....	12,269 65
Horses, dogs, &c.....	8,569 25
Arms and ammunition	60 55
Hospital comforts	1,687 90
Books and stationery	81 35
Guides and scouts.....	51 60
Billet and travelling.....	5,347 33
Transport and freight.....	207,626 83
Contingencies	955 33
New buildings.....	7,105 08
Accounts paid from general appropriation, but chargeable to Yukon....	30,000 00
Accounts not yet classified.....	10,511 62
	351,588 50
Accounts waiting payment and other known liabilities	75,000 00
	$426,588 50

Now, there are accounts waiting payment and for known liabilities amounting to $75,000, and we anticipate further expenditure which will bring it to the neighbourhood of $500,000. The reason of this enormous expenditure, I must call it enormous, has been the fact of the exceptional conditions of the country through which we have had to send the force. The House may be interested to know what is the work that has been done by the police force in the Yukon. First of all the police are helping in assisting to collect the revenue at the passes and we have established two custom-houses, one at the summit of the White Pass and one at the summit of the Chilkoot Pass. Our officers have collected already at these two passes about $200,000 in customs duty. It is estimated that up to the 6th of May last 13,000 people have passed through the Chilkoot Pass, and 7,000 over the White Pass, and that 2,000 persons had paid duty at Tagish before the establishment of custom-houses at the summits. At the present time there are nearly a thousand tents at Bennett and probably 30 log huts, four steamers are on the stocks at Lake Bennett, more than 1,400 small boats under construction, in addition to which there are a thousand people waiting for navigation to open on the upper lakes. There are two saw-mills at Bennett ; three at Cariboo Crossing ; one at Lindemann, and two at Big Windy Arm. Much material is also being cut up by whip-sawing. The first fleet, composed of 8 boats laden with supplies for Dawson, was expected to leave the foot of Lake Labarge under Inspector Starnes about the 16th May. The detachment of police for duty on the Dalton trail arrived at Haines Mission on the 15th April, and after a very rough and tedious trip reached Canadian territory at Tainy Hollow on the 8th March, establishing a camp there and hoisting the British flag. This detachment will push patrols over the Dalton trail in the direction of Fort Selkirk. On the Stikine River the police erected comfortable quarters for 20 men before the breaking up of the ice. Since the opening of navigation constables have travelled on boats as far as Glenora, assisting customs officials whenever necessary.

Mr. HAGGART. How long a period did the $200,000 collected for customs extend over ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Since the month of February.

Mr. HAGGART. You have not the whole collection ?

The PRIME MINISTER. No, but I understand that although the expenditure on the Yukon is very large the whole revenue about meets the expenditure.

Mr. CLANCY. How many persons are actually engaged in collecting the revenue ? I understand there are only a few places where customs duties are being collected.

The PRIME MINISTER. There are at the summits two customs officers, and at the summit of the White Pass there is one police officer and 20 men, and the same number at the summit of the Chilkoot Pass. There are other stations where we collect duty, but these are the principal places.

Mr. SPROULE. Have you yet succeeded in finding out the whereabouts of Major Walsh?

Mr. CLANCY. Is the chief work of the police force there for the purpose of collecting these customs duties. The right hon. gentleman has laid great stress upon the collection of the revenue, and I would ask if that is the special object of having a large force there?

The PRIME MINISTER. That large force is distributed all over the territory, from Glenora up to Dawson, but there are at the summit of each of the passes an officer and 20 men just for the moral effect of assisting our customs officers. My hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) will not suppose that it would have been prudent on our part just to put a customs officer at the summit of the Chilkoot or White Pass without giving him any protection. We thought it advisable that we should have a sufficient force there to maintain law and order and to assist the customs officer in carrying out his duty.

Mr. DAVIN. What is the position of Major Walsh as regards the force? Does he exercise the power that the commissioner exercises in the North-west Territories?

The PRIME MINISTER. Practically.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this item to pay expenses incurred up to the first of July?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Did the Prime Minister get the money to send this force out there by Governor General's warrant?

The PRIME MINISTER. We had a Governor General's warrant of $300,000, and this vote covers the warrant and takes $200,000 in addition.

Mr. SPROULE. Was the warrant issued since the House met?

The PRIME MINISTER. Oh, no.

Mr. SPROULE. Was it laid before the House during the first fifteen days of the session?

The PRIME MINISTER. Certainly.

Mr. HAGGART. How did the Prime Minister provide the $200,000 that he expended over the $300,000?

Mr. CLANCY.

The PRIME MINISTER. We have expended actually up to date $351,000. We had a special warrant for $300,000. We had in the month of October or thereabouts another special warrant for $45,000.

Mr. HUGHES. I wish to ask the First Minister how the horses left by the Mounted Police in England have turned out.

The PRIME MINISTER. We have received no report.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman is asking $500,000, and it must be spent before the 1st of July. He got a Governor General's warrant for $300,000. He cannot spend the balance, $200,000, between now and the 1st of July. He must have expended nearly the full amount already.

The PRIME MINISTER. We have expended $350,000, and we have accounts to pay which are outstanding of $75,000, and we expect other accounts to come in which will bring the total up to the neighbourhood of $500,000.

Customs—

Board of Customs laboratory.....	$ 500
Amount required for Customs service in Yukon district (including Governor General's warrant of $2,500).....	6,000
Miscellaneous—Further amount required for printing.....	5,000
Amount required for repairs to the Government steamer "Argus," at Halifax, N.S.....	1,100

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I would like to ask the Minister of Customs for information in regard to the $500 for the board. I notice that in the Supplementary Estimates for 1899, there is a very large sum asked for the purpose of the board—I think some $4,000.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The item of $500 in the present vote is what we expect will be expended during the current year up to the first of July. As the hon. gentleman knows, this is an expenditure necessary by the change in the sugar duties and the return to the polariscopic test.

Mr. DAVIN. As the Prime Minister's items are passed, and he may be leaving the House, perhaps he would allow me to ask him respecting a telegram from London, which has been placed in my hands, and which reads as follows:—

London, June 7.—The Messrs. Petersens have failed to satisfy the Canadian Government, as they undertook to do before May 31, of the completion of the underwriting of $6,250,000 of capital in the new company. This failure causes to lapse the supplementary contract by which the Government extended the time for building and made other concessions.

The general outside idea is that this lapse of the supplementary contract frees the Government's hands.

On the contrary, Mr. Petersen now falls back on his original contract. Unless he is bought out, no fresh steps to carry out the service can be taken until he absolutely fails to place two steamers on the route in July, 1899, though every one realizes that it will be physically impossible to build the steamers in the time.

Mr. Petersen has approached Sir William Van Horne here, but I understand he has received no encouragement. If the Canadian Pacific had intended to touch the project it would have done so before the supplementary contract became necessary. It would, moreover, have avoided the heavy promotion fees attached to the Petersen scheme.

May I ask the Prime Minister what is the truth about that ?

The PRIME MINISTER. May I ask first, what is my hon. friend reading from ?

Mr. DAVIN. It is a telegram that has been placed in my hands.

The PRIME MINISTER. From whom ?

Mr. DAVIN. I do not know from whom. It is headed "London, July 7—Montreal "Star" Special Cable."

The PRIME MINISTER. I have no information upon that subject. We have not received any information of late.

Mr. HAGGART. Has the Minister of Customs expended any of this $6,000 except the $2,500 of the Governor General's warrant ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I suppose there may have been.

Mr. WALLACE. I wish to call attention to the fact that the expenses of the Department of Customs have been increasing enormously each year since the hon. gentleman took charge of it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). So have the revenues.

Mr. WALLACE. But when the revenues were millions more than they were to-day, the expenses were tens of thousands of dollars less. The expenses in 1892 were $904,000, in 1893 $901,000, in 1894 $921,000, in 1895 $917,000, and in 1896 we reduced them to $896,000. The next year the expenditure went up to $945,000, or an increase in the first year of the Government opposite of $48,900. Not satisfied with that, they are asking this year $956,000 in the Main Estimates for 1897-98, and a supplementary vote of $16,450, and now they are asking $12,000, making a total of $985,000, or an increase over 1896 of $89,200. I think there is no justification for this. The Government has put an increased duty on liquors. It does not cause an hours more work to the officials to collect an increased revenue duty on an article, and therefore there is no more labour entailed. The Minister will say that they are opening offices and so on. That may be so, but while there are always places where the expenses are increased, at the same time there are places where the expense may be decreased, and where the necessity for offices no longer exists. The hon. Minister is not justified in so enormously increasing the expenditure of the Customs Department and bringing it up to $985,000, a much larger sum than ever was charged before in the history of the Customs Department, larger than 1896 by $89,000, and larger than the average of the five years preceding 1896 by $77,000 per annum. I think that the hon. Minister should explain those enormous increases in the expenditure of his department.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I cannot explain the enormous increases which the hon. gentleman mentions because there has been no such increases. Let me give the figures to the hon. gentleman. Take the year 1894-95, because he will say that with reference to 1895-96 he was not chargeable for the whole year, but that the hon. gentleman beside him was responsible for part. Compare 1894-95, when the hon. gentleman administered the department, with 1896-97. In 1896-97, of the expenditure charged against the department since I took charge, there is over $11,000 of debts incurred by the previous controller which had to be paid out of that year. For that I do not hold myself chargeable. The hon. gentleman made up an estimate of $874,000 for that year, the Finance Minister having told him to cut the amount of the estimate of 1894-95, which was $924,000, down by $50,000. The ex-Minister of Finance simply said: Strike off $50,000, and no provision was made for the reduction of the expenditure, so it went as usual.

Mr. WALLACE. What year was that ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. 1895-96. I am now taking 1894-95 and comparing that with 1896-97. Deducting from the expenditure of 1896-97 the $11,400 that we had to pay in that year for debts that were due by the late Controller, and for which there was no money provided, the comparison is as follows:—

COMPARATIVE STATEMENT OF EXPENDITURES OF 1894-95 AND 1896-97.

It will be seen that the expenditure in the older provinces was less in 1896-97 than it was in 1894-95, as follows:—

Ontario.....	$4,670 98
New Brunswick.....	441 58
Nova Scotia.....	1,776 33
Manitoba.....	3,323 98
Prince Edward Island.....	891 38

There is an increase in Quebec of $2,656.42, but the collectorship at Montreal was vacant in 1894-95, while the salary paid the collector in 1896-97 was $4,000, virtually a reduction in the expenditure of this province of $1,343.58.

There is an increase in the North-west Territories of $8,008.55, but this is really only an increase of about $5,500, for Calgary which was formerly under Winnipeg, was made an independent port on the 1st January, 1896, and the salaries and expenses of the port for the six months amounted to about $2,500.

This makes the actual decrease in Manitoba slightly over $800. The increases are as follows:—

British Columbia.....	$4,542 04
North-west Territories (net)....	8,008 55
Inspection.....	2,974 52

The increase in British Columbia is caused by the extension of business, so is the increase in the North-west Territories, but of the amount $3,000 was contributed by the late Government by the appointment of D.

Mr. PATERSON.

W. Davis as collector at Fort Cudahy in May, 1896.

The increase in inspection is caused mostly by the appointment of Inspector Alex. McKay in May, 1896, at a salary of $2,000 per annum and travelling expenses. The expenditure for Board of Customs shows an increase of $821.04, but there was actually a decrease in 1896-97, as the appropriation not being large enough to meet the expenditure in 1894-95, the sum of $991.08 for expenses of special officers was transferred from the Board of Customs to Special Seizures Fund.

An increase in cruisers of $6,086.54. The statement of the expenditure for this account for 1894-95 places the amount for that year at $12,000. This expenditure is managed by the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and upon inquiry at that department I am informed that the actual expenditure during that year was $16,564, but the vote was only $12,000. It therefore appears that $4,564 in excess of the vote was paid in 1895-96 by the Marine Department, and the actual expenditure for 1896-97 would be really only about $1,500 more than the expenditure in 1894-95, notwithstanding the fact that I employed an additional cruiser on the Bale des Chaleurs in the spring of 1897.

In 1896-97 I appointed Mr. Fred. L. Jones an inspector of customs and of preventive service, to have charge of the revenue cruisers and to inspect the work of the various preventive officers throughout the country. This was an entirely new service, and the cost of it during the past year was $1,004.99. There is also an item of $1,672.76 for "unforeseen expenses." This covers the salaries and expenses of commissioners to investigate charges against Customs officials and is an entirely new expenditure.

There remains only one small item of $100, covering an amount paid to Customs Officer Vincent Mullins for loss of horse, harness and wagon while assisting a brother officer who was attacked by smugglers. This is an unusual expenditure.

It will be readily seen from the foregoing that while the expenditure in 1896-97 was increased over that of 1894-95 by a little over $12,000—the increase being $16,725 less than the sum of $4,500 paid by the Department of Marine and Fisheries in 1895-96 for expenses of the cruiser "Constance" incurred in 1894-95, such increase has been wholly attributed to the increased business in British Columbia and in the Territories, and in the extension of the inspection and preventive work, and that I have made substantial reductions in the older provinces.

That is a statement of the expenditure as compared with the last year of the hon. gentleman. As to the expenditure in the North-west Territories and British Columbia, hon. gentlemen will see for themselves that it is necessary owing to the increase of business there. British Columbia is opening up rapidly, and the new ports there are doing exceedingly well. With reference to the increased expenditure on the cruisers, I think there is no doubt that it is in the public interest, and that there is not an hon. member but will justify it, not only because it increases the revenue directly, but because it is largely preventive work and will improve the inland revenue returns. I found it in the public interest and for the safety of the revenue, necessary that additional inspectors should be appointed. In Ontario I have appointed two, and in Quebec one, and Mr. Jones is an additional inspector and preventive officer, as I have said. Under the circumstances, I think that the figures I have given should be satisfactory.

Mr. SPROULE. In what districts in Ontario did the hon. Minister appoint two officers?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. They do work wherever they may be sent. Inspector Clappison has his home in Hamilton. Inspector Shaw in Kingston. Mr. Clappison was not in the service before, but Mr. Shaw was a very good officer for twenty years or so in the Kingston office. I suppose I should not take credit for saving in his case, but the fact is that when I took him from the staff at Kingston, I did not fill his place. I regret to say that since we have adopted this system of inspection, the results have shown the need of it, that, in fact, some ports that have not been properly inspected for years and years, and things have been discovered which should not be allowed to go on. Some of the officers have found themselves in irregularities which have forfeited their positions, as well as their good name, and they have pleaded in extenuation of their conduct that if they had been looked after more closely these things would not have happened. Whether it is a good excuse or not, that is one excuse they make.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice by one of the papers that Mr. Jones has seized another cargo of whisky. Has the Minister succeeded in stopping the smuggling down on that notorious island?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We have succeeded in detecting some of the smuggling, but I think the great benefit we derive from the service is as a preventive service. I think we have got the parties who were engaged in that trade in much greater fear than they were in times past. That is the reason I engaged the new cruiser, which cost the department thousands of dollars which we had not counted upon. The officers have been doing some very effective work in Cape Breton lately. But, as I said before, the great benefit that accrues to the revenue is by the prevention of smuggling, but the resultant benefit does not go to the credit of the department I administer; its good effects are manifested in the Department of Inland Revenue.

Mr. WALLACE. The statement the Minister of Customs has read to the House, while it may be very interesting to him, I do not think conveys very much information to this House, and what information it does convey is misleading. To hear his statement you would imagine they had decreased the expense all along the line, but the fact remains that the expenses have been enormously increased. The Minister takes the year 1895, then he takes his lowest year when he first came into office, and he makes a comparison. But even with that comparison, the expenditure in 1896-97 was $945,000 as against $917,000 in 1895 that he takes, for the purpose of comparison, as being favourable to himself, making a difference of $23,000 increased expenditure. But he says a portion of that $940,000 should be charged to the previous year, $11,000 of it. Well, I suppose that every amount must be charged to the year which it belongs, and if there were $11,000 unpaid at the end of the year when he came into office, that should be charged to the year to which it properly belongs, and the Minister was very derelict in his duty if he did not so charge it. But he has carefully avoided making a comparison with the present year where he has an increased expenditure of $40,000 more than in his extravagant first year. I have added the figures of the sums already voted to him, which amounts to $973,000, and he asks today for $12,600 more, that will make $985,000. I do not presume the Minister has come here to ask us for that $12,600, only that the end of the year is approaching, and he finds that he requires it.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I did not expect that a controller would compare estimates with expenditure.

Mr. WALLACE. We are at the last month of his year. He asked for $956,000 for this year in the main estimates of last year.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. You will be able to compare the expenditure of 1898 when the year is up.

Mr. WALLACE. No, I compare it now. He was voted $956,000 a year ago, he was voted a year ago in the Supplementary Estimates $16,000, that makes $973,000. But he comes to-night and says that $973,000 are not sufficient to run the department for a year, and he requires $12,000 more. To hear the hon. gentleman talk, you would think there were no expenses before he came into office. But he said business has increased in British Columbia and the North-west Territories, and he had to make new appointments, presumably. I would like to ask the Minister to name one port of entry he has established since he came into office in either of those provinces.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Rossland, Kaslo, Ship's Creek, Nelson.

Mr. WALLACE. I established those offices myself when I was in power.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. They were sub-ports.

Mr. WALLACE. I made them sub-ports, but making them full ports involves no further expense, in fact it involves less expense, because they send their reports direct to the city of Ottawa.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Did you make Nakusp?

Mr. WALLACE. Nakusp was a port of entry when I was in, so were Revelstoke, Rossland, Kaslo, Boundary, and all those places.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think not. Grand Forks, Midway.

Mr. WALLACE. Yes, we had officers at all those places.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. What revenue had you there?

Mr. WALLACE. Well, if the revenue was greater, so much the more in favour of the hon. gentleman. The revenue has increased. But we had officers appointed there. At Rossland the revenue had grown up enormously before I left office, to many hundreds of dollars a day. I know it has increased since then.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. So have the officers.

Mr. WALLACE. But there are no more officers in Rossland now than there were then; there is one additional officer, I know, in

Mr. WALLACE.

Kaslo. The hon. gentleman says: Look at the enormous expense we are put to in this growing country. This expense, these officers, the whole machinery, were in operation before he came into power at all. He cannot claim any credit there. The same remarks will apply to the North-west Territories. Calgary was an outpost of Winnipeg; he made it a port of entry, and that was all right. But the machinery in the North-west Territories was practically the same then as it is to-day. The hon. member for Brockville (Mr. Wood) says that he made Calgary a port of customs before he went out of office. Now, taking the expenses of 1896 at $896,000, and add, if you please, the $11,000 which he says were debts incurred, and that were not paid, you have $907,000. What are the facts? That the next year he makes it an expenditure of $945,000. But this present year what does he make it? He has made it $985,000 or $40,000 increase over last year. He has read a lot of figures showing there was an increase in one province and a decrease in another. His figures do not convey any information. The amount was $89,000 over 1896 and $77,000, over the average of the last five years of the Conservative Administration. The hon. gentleman cannot get out of the fact that the House voted for customs $973,000.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman is making a statement wholly without foundation.

Mr. WALLACE. What is the statement without foundation?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That I said I spent $973,000.

Mr. WALLACE. I made the statement myself. I said the hon. gentleman has spent $973,000. He was voted that amount in the Estimates. If that was sufficient to run the Customs Department last year, he does not require $12,600 additional. Now the hon. gentleman is asking for $985,000, or $77,000 more than the average of the last five years of the Conservative Administration. How many scores of men has the Minister superannuated or dismissed on the plea that their services were not required? In some instances probably he acted rightly, but the total saving should go to the country. What is the amount of superannuation charges placed on the service during the last two years?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I have not the figures at hand.

Mr. WALLACE. We should have a statement. I know quite a number of officers who have been dismissed. The Minister of Finance asked me to explain where the difference of millions comes in. In 1887 the amount collected was $22,500,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In some of those years there was a duty on sugar.

Mr. WALLACE. No doubt in some years there was a duty on sugar. In 1888 the amount was $22,200,000; in 1889, $23,784,000, and less than $20,000,000 last year. In 1890 the amount was $24,014,000. So I was correct in stating that during some years millions more had been collected than last year.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman stated that without the sugar duties the late Government had these millions of additional revenue.

Mr. WALLACE. I said that in some years we were without the sugar duties, and yet we collected very large revenues. The excuse made by the Finance Minister was that when the expenditure was high, receipts were large.

Mr. MCGREGOR. You had a higher tariff then, we have a low tariff now.

Mr. WALLACE. You have a lower tariff by one-third of one per cent, which only represents $250,000 or $300,000 of difference in the amount collected. However, in the figures I quoted there are differences of $3,000,000 or $4,000,000 in respect of revenues collected by hon. gentlemen opposite.

I desire to take this opportunity of calling attention to the dismissal of Thomas Shannon, of Killarney, Man. There was a charge made against him, of which I have a copy. He was one of the most capable of the customs officials that I ever found. The charge made against him is as follows:—

I beg to complain of the personal conduct of Thomas Shannon, deputy collector of Killarney, Manitoba. He acted as returning officer, he was an active canvasser for the late Government candidate and conducted himself offensively, and the member for Lisgar accused Shannon of misleading the people.

There was no signature to this document. An investigation was held. Shannon asked to have counsel present, but this request was refused by Mr. Macpherson who conducted the investigation. I have here a copy of Mr. Macpherson's letter in which he refused that right to Mr. Shannon. The investigation, so far as I am informed, proved nothing except that Shannon acted as deputy returning officer. I understand that is a judicial position and it was far removed from a partisan position. He acted in that capacity with the consent and approval of his two superior officers, and therefore, practically with the consent of the department. The position of returning officer is a non-partisan one, it is the exercising of a judicial function, and there is no pretense that he did not conduct the election properly there, because I think he is incapable of doing a wrong act. So Mr. Shannon was refused the privilege of having a solicitor to look after his interests, but the accuser, who appears to be the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson), had a solicitor there. Mr. Macpherson wrote to Mr. Shannon:

Counsel is not permitted to take part in the investigation on either side. As far as the preparation of your defence is concerned outside the room in which the hearing is to take place, you may take the advice of counsel.

But he permitted the other side to have witnesses examined and cross-examined by counsel, and this counsel was a Mr. Hugh Sutherland. That investigation took place in May, 1897, and nothing was apparently done until November, when Mr. Shannon got three days' notice, and was dismissed. And who was appointed in his place? Why, it was Mr. Sutherland, who was the prosecuting attorney on the other side. Mr. Sutherland's character is well known there. The Minister was asked in this House by the hon. member for Marquette where was Mr. Sutherland, and he said he was away ill. Well, Mr. Sutherland is away attending an inebriate asylum. This man within a few months of his appointment is away at an inebriate asylum, and it is a standing outrage that such a man should be appointed to a position of that kind. The people of Killarney were so incensed at it that when an election took place a few months after his dismissal Mr. Shannon was elected by an extremely large vote as reeve or mayor, both parties, Grit and Tory, wishing to show their marked disapproval of the course of the Government, and they gave him 376 votes, while his opponent only got 153. That does not prove that Mr. Shannon was not a partisan, but it proves, at all events, that he had the esteem and respect of the community after he had acted as deputy returning officer, and after he had been collector of customs there for some years, and had been in the customs service, all told, for sixteen or seventeen years. This gentleman was very harshly and improperly used by the Minister of Customs. It seems that a member of Parliament came along and said: This man is a partisan. I am told he was working against me in my election, and I demand his dismissal, and that one of our friends be put in his place. The Minister complied with that, and so off goes the head of an efficient Government officer who had broken no law nor rule of the department. Mr. Shannon violated no rule, and he merely acted as deputy returning officer with the consent of his superior. The Minister told us that the man appointed in Mr. Shannon's place was ill, but I tell him now that he is away attending an inebriate asylum for the cure of drunkenness. My information is that he is utterly unfit for the position, and that one fact alone should be sufficient evidence of that. It is not creditable to the Department of Customs that such a man should be appointed, and that a man who served the country faithfully for years should be dismissed at short notice without being paced on the superannuation fund. Has Mr. Shannon been paid back the money he paid into that fund, or is it like the case of Tennant, that the money has been sent to him after the thing was exposed in Parliament.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Make your speech and I will answer it.

Mr. WALLACE. Well, give the answer now.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I cannot tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) positively, but I think that in all the cases where the services of customs officers have been dispensed with for partisan conduct, they have been given back the money they paid into the superannuation fund. If not, that is my desire and intention. Now, in reply to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace). He says that the figures which I gave to the House for the year 1896-97 gave my year of lowest expenditure, but as a matter of fact he will see that I took the only year for which I am responsible, as the year 1898 is not yet closed. He speaks about the Estimates for 1898, and compares them with the expenditure, but one would think that a person who occupied his position in the Government would hesitate to risk his reputation in making a comparison of that kind. I took the year for which I am responsible in the administration of the department, and compared it with the year for which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) was solely responsible, for I did not think it fair to take the six months of the year for which the hon. member for Brockville (Mr. Wood) is responsible, and make any comparison as to that in the case of the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Wallace's) administration of the department. The trade of the country has increased very much of late, and the population has increased very much, and notwithstanding all this I show there was a difference of some $12,000 in the expenditure only. I pointed to the increase of charges in the North-west, the Yukon, and British Columbia, and I pointed to the revenue service and the preventive service, and yet the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) says your estimates are so-and-so, and why do you come down and ask for any more. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) has been a Controller of Customs and he should know, although he appears to be completely ignorant of it, why I ask for this vote. The reason is this. Though I may have an estimate for Ontario of $10,000 more than I need, or $5,000 more than I need for Nova Scotia, I cannot use the Ontario or Nova Scotia vote to pay for the North-west Territories, and in connection with this extraordinary expenditure that has come about in the Yukon I have not money enough for the North-west Territories to cover that, and I have to ask a special vote; but that does not mean that I may not have thousands of dollars left out of the total vote. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) should know that the Auditor General will not allow me to use the sum voted for one province and apply it to another. It would be very convenient for us if the Auditor General would let us do so, but he will not. Suppose you have $10,000 more than you need in Ontario, and you have $5,000 short in Quebec, the Auditor General will not allow you to apply the surplus in Ontario for the deficit in Quebec, and therefore I estimate what will be sufficient, but in taking the estimate it does not necessarily mean that I will make the expenditure.

Mr. WALLACE.

Here is a vote for the laboratory. During this session of Parliament we have adopted a new method of measuring the sugar duties; we have reverted to the polariscopic test. The instruments have got out of repair, they must have new glasses, and we have to pay express on these and other expenses; yet the hon. gentleman says, What business have you to come and ask for anything more? That is the argument of a late Collector of Customs who had the management of this department. Here is the service for the Yukon district. We have had suddenly to send men to man the White Pass and the Chilkat Pass, and up to Stikine and Glenora. I thought I had estimated liberally for the North-west, but here is an extraordinary expenditure necessitated. Then the hon. gentleman says, You must have expended all you asked for Ontario, Quebec and all the other provinces. Not at all. We need not have expended within thousands of what was voted. I believe I saved thousands of dollars out of the total vote. Last year the expenditure was $19,000 less than the estimates. But in miscellaneous, I am $5,000 short, and I cannot get the money out of the other votes. Why do I have to ask it? Because under the preferential tariff we must have extra books in every office in the country. We must have a set of books for the preferential tariff and another set of books for the other tariff. The work of the officers has vastly increased. The hon. gentleman talks about his revenue in days gone by, when there was an immense revenue from the sugar duties; but if he would only get the returns of the entries passing through the different ports of the Dominion, he would see how vastly the work of the customs officers has increased. It takes as much time and labour for an officer to pass an entry through the customs on which $100 is levied as it does on which $200 is levied; and with the greatly decreased taxation we have now, the entries are vastly increased. When we bring the revenues up to the revenues of the hon. gentleman, with greatly reduced rates of duty, every one must see how vastly more numerous the entries must be. These are things that are patent to everybody. The work is increasing and expanding, and yet the expenditure has not been increased in the older provinces, but decreased. The increase has taken place in the new ports of the country that are opening up. I have here a statement of outport collection from 1st July, 1897, to 30th April, 1898—ten months. The hon. gentleman spoke of the revenues during his time, they were nothing compared with these: Kaslo, $48,463.24; Kakusp, $10,805.85; Rossland, $53,445.24; Trail, $18,250.99; Waneta, $8,474.23; Kootenay Lake, $774.36; Rykerts, $380.23; Sheep Creek, $172.70; Ashcroft, $12,474.35; Douglas, $1,606.77; Fort Steel, $19,592.68; Golden, $7,166.01; Grand Forks, $13,718.74; Kamloops, $3,916.61; Midway, $1,031.87; Osoyoos, $5,110.71; Revelstoke, $14,979.26; Vernon, $5,138.53; Huntingdon, $3,215.72; Aldergrove, $889.67; Crow's Nest Landing, $7,701.79; Ladner's Landing, $95.45; Steveston, $130; Upper Sumas, $29.56; Moyie City, $844.43.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). What is the object of quoting these? All these outports were created during the time of the hon. gentleman's predecessor.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. A great many of them were.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). They all were.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think not. I am showing that the revenue has increased at these ports, and where there is an increased revenue we must have an increase of officers.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). We had all these outports, and the expenditure for them told against the year 1894-95.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. If the revenues have increased, the work has increased, so that we have to put on extra officers.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Not always. At Montreal and other large ports increase of revenue does not necessarily mean increase of staff.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. But the work of these new offices does require increase of staff.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). We found it necessary to establish these outports, and we had to add the expense of them, and the hon. gentleman cannot adduce that as an argument to justify his increased expenditure.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I do not see the hon. gentleman's argument. The hon. gentlemen got extra officers, and that meant an added expenditure.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The creation of an outport to a port of entry does not mean an increase in the district.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I am not arguing that. I say that taking the main ports, with the sub-ports, the increase of work has been very great; and for the collection of the revenue and guarding the revenue it has been necessary to put on more men. If there had been no more moneys collected and no more preventive work required, and the expenditure had been increased, there would have been ground for criticism; but if there is need for preventive work at points where it has not been done before, in the interest of the revenue, and greatly increased revenue has come in at certain points, you must expect increased expenditure, and I point out how light this is. The hon. gentleman talks about estimates. He estimated for 1895-96, $874,000 to carry on the customs work of the country, and how much do you think was spent? Over $907,000.

Mr. WALLACE. Nothing of the kind—$896,000.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. But there were debts which the hon. gentleman did not pay, but which were put in the next year.

Mr. WALLACE. I was not Controller then.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There it is again—the hon. gentleman throws the responsibility on the hon. member for Brockville (Mr. Wood).

Mr. WALLACE. I am stating what the hon. gentleman knows very well, and he is misleading the House when he states differently.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. During the six months the hon. member was in office, he spent more than half of $900,000—considerably more. So that he need not turn it upon the hon. member for Brockville. I suppose in that case he would take credit for his being the estimates and not the expenditure. But I compared the expenditure of one year with the expenditure of another. The estimates are not to be taken into account because under the rule of the Auditor General limiting the expenditure on every item according to the vote given for it, I take care to have a sufficiently liberal vote, but am not bound to expend it.

Mr. HAGGART. Go to the Treasury Board and never mind the Auditor General.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I do not go to the Treasury Board but take the precaution of having a liberal vote.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman said that during the six months I was in office, in 1895-96, I spent more than half of the $900,000. In the first place, he said that I was responsible for the $896,000 that was expended. I do not want to throw responsibility on anybody else that I should shoulder myself; but as I was in office that year for less than five months, I was not personally responsible. The chief accountant told me that expenditures were kept down so as to be kept within the appropriations and have no further votes made. There was a further vote made the next session, and for that the Government of which I was a member was responsible. The Minister says that one-half the amount was spent the first six months. Does he not know that the first month of the fiscal year there are large sums placed at the credit of all branches for their contingent expenses, which have to be accounted for later. These amount to many thousands of dollars, and are not an expenditure properly chargeable to July of each year, but over the whole year. While it may be that the expenditure for the month of July is very much larger than one-twelfth of the year, that does not indicate that the appropriation is exceeded. The hon. gentleman says you cannot take the money from one item to pay another. He knows very well that that is done. What is the item? The whole is included in one item, No. 245, in the Estimates of 1897-98. He knows, taking the port of Montreal, for instance, or any one item of any other place, that is not an item by itself, but the money is taken indiscriminately from the whole. He says that he cannot take from one province what is voted for another. He can and does do so, and the expenditure will show it in many instances. He points to the number of entries and their enormous increase, and says that that entails increased labour on the officials. Well, if the officials got a little work, that would not do them any harm or the Government either. But we are told that the times are good, that there is prosperity all over the country, that the people are importing liberally and largely, and that hard times would mean a more careful and smaller importation; but if the times are as the Minister says, we will find the entries enormously increased, and no doubt they have increased. I am quite certain, however, that they have not increased more than they did two or three years ago, because we have no more increase in the revenue, and not as much an increase as then, so that every statement made by the hon. Minister is quite misleading. In the first place, he says that the last six months I was in office we had not reduced the expenditure. Sir, we reduced it enormously. In the next place, he says that the money could not be taken from one vote to another. Why, it is all in one vote, No. 255 in the estimates, No. 256 in the excise. The hon. Minister has, therefore, utterly failed to justify the increased expenditure of 1896-97, and cannot justify the enormous increase he is asking the House to provide for 1897-98. There are large amounts for superannuation, which might fairly be added to this expenditure. A new Government has this advantage over an old Government, that they dismiss officials in every direction. In one case the alleged partisan conduct in another old age, and in another the necessity to economize. The Minister has used this power very lavishly by dismissing or superannuating a large number of officials, which ought to greatly decrease the expenditure of his department. But instead of decreasing it, he has increased it. Wherever an old officer was to be appointed, up goes the salary, and as a result we have $985,000 asked for this year, a sum never asked for before by the Customs Department of any year of its history.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Has the hon. gentleman appointed an officer at Bath, in Ontario?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I recollect the hon. gentleman ridiculing the late Government for keeping in office the collector or preventive officer in that port, the revenue of which was about $50 a year, and he afterwards took credit to himself for having done away with that port. It is a fact that he has since then appointed an officer to fill the place?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I never ridiculed the appointment of the officer there, but what I did say, I suppose, was that the receipts were very small and that the officer was getting a salary of $450 a year. When he died, it was represented to me that while there was not much revenue, there was the danger of smuggling, and I appointed another officer to act as preventive officer, but instead of giving him $450 a year, I gave him $150.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The hon. gentleman's first statement was much more impressive and favourable than what is made to-night. The hon. gentleman at that time, as I said, not only ridiculed the Government for not retaining in office a person who was not required at the post, but he stated the revenue, which was a very small sum, and pointed to that as an illustration of the carelessness of the Government in retaining in office men who were actually doing nothing. Knowing what he had said, I was surprised to hear the Minister saying that he had filled that office, though at one time as I remember quite distinctly, he ridiculed the Government for retaining an officer there.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think my hon. friend misunderstood the reference I made. But here is an old officer who has been there for over twenty years. I do not interfere with him, but when he dies, I appoint another man; but instead of appointing him at $450 a year I appoint him at $150 a year.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). That does not do away with the case I put as stated by the hon. Minister. If time permitted me to refer to "Hansard" I could show that his criticism was directed against the necessity of having an officer at that port at all. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman why he requires the large amount of $5,000 for printing. That seems a large sum in addition to what has already been spent.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We had to get a double set of books on account of the preferential tariff, and our vote was not sufficient.

Intercolonial Railway—To pay Mr. A.
Kirk for damages by fire..... $689 37

Mr. SPROULE. We would like some information about this.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) was to bring down some information on this item.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think I gave very full information.

Mr. SPROULE. According to my recollection, this item was allowed to stand in order to give the Minister of Railways and Canals an opportunity to furnish information as to who owned the property.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, I furnished that information. The item was allowed to stand because some hon. gentleman asked it. I thought he might wish to discuss it.

Mr. HAGGART. While we are on this item, I desire to say a few words. I made a statement last evening with reference to the Intercolonial Railway. I stated that every item of supplies required by the Intercolonial, so far as I knew, was set up for tender, and the lowest tender was accepted, the matter being left on recommendation of Mr. Pottinger, or the Deputy Minister. The hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) stated that to his knowledge I was making a misstatement, that a great many parties had complained to him that they had not had an opportunity for tendering for these supplies, and that the contracts were given to political favourites of the late Government. Now the Minister of Railways and Canals is here, and the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals is here, and the Minister of Finance can consult them and learn whether the statement I made was correct or not. I remember perfectly well that Mr. Pottinger made an estimate of everything required for the Intercolonial—perhaps 100 or 120 items in all. Tenders were asked from different parties. I believe it was open to the whole public to tender. Perhaps the contract for a dozen articles would be awarded to one and a dozen others to another, the whole being distributed over twenty or thirty parties. And, according to my information—I may be wrong, but I believe that I am right—there was not an item except some small items, the need for which could not be known in advance, bought otherwise than by public tender, and, to my knowledge, the contract never was awarded on grounds of politics. At first, after becoming Minister, I awarded these contracts; that is, where the tenders were even, they sent for me to decide between the parties. But afterwards, I gave up the deciding of these matters and left it all to the superintendent. Now the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) has an opportunity to consult the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals and his deputy. Last evening he gave a flat contradiction to what I said. I advise him to consult these gentlemen and find out the facts.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am going to discuss the matter without consulting the Minister or his deputy, because I do not need to refer to either of them. I know the facts of which I spoke. I am not complaining of the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Haggart's) course, or attacking him on that ground. But in discussing another matter the hon. gentleman made the statement that the practice of the Intercolonial Railway had been to purchase its supplies by tender. I asked him if he meant public tender, and he said: Yes. That was the point between us. I undertake to say that that was not the practice. I will leave the Minister of Railways and Canals to speak on the point. My knowledge is that these supplies were obtained from friends of the Government. I do not say that that was wrong, unless the prices were unduly high, and that I did not allege. A list was made of parties who were asked to send in tenders for supplies. Public tenders were not asked for, and Liberals had no opportunity to tender for these supply contracts. A list was found in the department at Moncton when this Government came into power, and this list, which I have examined, contained the names of Conservative merchants who were asked to furnish supplies, and Liberal merchants did not have the opportunity, and no public tenders were invited. I am willing to leave it to the Minister of Railways and Canals to say whether that is correct or not.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I never made any close examination of the list to ascertain whether the names were Conservatives or Liberals. But it is a fact that tenders were not asked for by public advertisement. Circulars were sent out from the department at Moncton to the persons whose names were upon these lists, and I had occasion almost immediately after I came into the department, to add a number of names of men in various branches of business, gentlemen doing business on a large scale. I will not say that these lists did not contain the names of Liberals in the various cities; but I know that they did not contain the names of many prominent Liberals in various branches of business when tenders were asked.

Mr. HAGGART. All I can say is that I never heard of that charge before. I never heard a complaint from a single individual, either in New Brunswick or Nova Scotia, who was refused the right to tender. What I know is that a great part of the supplies went to Liberals, no distinction whatever was made. If a Liberal was the lowest tenderer, he got the contract. I left the decision entirely to Mr. Pottinger, and I never heard a complaint that a Liberal was left off the list. I believe that a great part of the supplies that were given to the Intercolonial Railway, notable in the very city from which the hon. gentleman comes, St. John, were given to Liberals.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I cannot speak for St. John, particularly, although I have some little knowledge of it, but speaking with respect to Halifax, I say that the hon. gentleman's statement, if he means to include the city of Halifax, that a great part of the supplies were given to Liberals, is incorrect. I am bound to say, as I said last night, that the hon. gentleman is dreaming, it is not at all the fact.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not know about the Liberals in the city of Halifax, but I do know about Liberals in St. John. The charge was made to me by our friends down there that the most of the supplies were given to Liberals. I did not care one cent whether they were or not, I never inquired what a person's politics were.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The real question was whether there were public tenders.

Mr. HAGGART. There were public tenders. The superintendent had orders to send them to every one who is in the business.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I know that the impression prevails in the city of Halifax at the present time, and I have heard it from business men whose word the Minister of Finance would not venture to question, that a marked distinction has been made since the present Government came into power. I am not speaking particularly of the supplies to the Intercolonial Railway. Speaking generally, a very marked distinction has been made in the city of Halifax between the practice which prevails now and the practice which prevailed before. Formerly tenders were invited from people irrespective of politics.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, my hon. friend is mistaken.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am only repeating what men of repute, men whose word the Minister of Finance would not question, have said, that whereas formerly they had to tender in competition with men on both sides of politics, now the greatest care is taken in some departments of the Government at least, not only not to send out tenders to men on both sides of politics, but to prevent Conservatives from having any knowledge whatever that tenders are being asked for. That impression prevails among a great many people in the city of Halifax to-day.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not know the gentleman to whom my hon. friend alludes; no doubt if he alludes to any respectable merchant in the city of Halifax, I would attach the same importance to his word as does the hon. gentleman. But that merchant can only speak of what he knows. He may know that he was formerly invited to send in tenders and that he is not invited now; but he will not be in a position to state whether the Liberal merchant formerly was invited to send in tenders. Upon that point the Liberal merchants are in a better position to give information than Conservatives. I have testimony from Liberal merchants that they were not invited to send in tenders before.

Mr. HAGGART. In order to settle this question let the hon. gentleman bring down the list, and it will show that so far as St. John is concerned, Liberals were invited to tender when I was in office.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the list is brought down I have no doubt it will show that the former list was made up almost wholly of Conservatives, and the present list made up almost wholly of Liberals.

Mr. HAGGART. This will be shown when the list is brought down. My instructions to the officers of the department were to invite tenders from every one who was in business and who was doing a sufficient large business to be likely to do the work. I never made any distinction between Conservatives or Reformers. I followed a system of open tendering, such as it exists in England. I asked parties engaged in the particular business to send in tenders for supplies.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The question is not what orders were given, but what was done, what was the practice. I assure my hon. friend that if he will look into the matter he will find that practice on the Intercolonial Railway was precisely as I have stated.

Mr. HAGGART. The practice can be decided when the list of those who were asked to tender is brought down. And I venture to say when the list is brought down you will find Reformers were invited to tender as well as Conservatives.

Mr. McCLURE. In the town of Truro, when supplies were wanted by the Government departments, never, until a change of Government, was a Liberal asked to tender. It is a notorious fact in the maritime provinces, which no Conservative there will deny, that until the change of Government, this list did not contain the names of any Liberals. I do not say it was wrong, nor do I say it was right, but the fact cannot be disputed. In the town of Truro it was the custom to ask certain parties to tender for supplies for the Pullman cars, I know the names on that list. There were Liberal grocers in that town, but not one of them was ever asked to tender until the change of Government, since which time both Liberals and Conservatives are asked to tender. Whether it was done with the hon. gentleman's knowledge or not, I cannot say, but it is useless for the hon. gentleman to deny it to-day.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would not cast any doubt on the statement made by my hon. friend, which is undoubtedly made bona fide; but I know that the various lists were put in my hands when I assumed charge of the department and I was obliged of necessity, as a matter of fair-play to Liberals, to add a number of names. I did not strike off any names, but I added Liberal names to the list. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden) will, no doubt, acknowledge that Conservative merchants there received circulars after I came into the department, not once but several times, and they had an opportunity of tendering for these supplies.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not know that any intimation was given with respect to Intercolonial Railway supplies except in one letter. I understand there was so much anxiety not to employ Conservatives in Halifax that an electric lighting contract, for, I believe, the North Railway station, was given to a cabdriver there.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You will have to call the attention of your colleague to that statement.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This is the information I happened to obtain incidentally, but which I have not verified. The name of the party who got this contract is Fleming, who actually drives a cab, and who knows no more about electric lighting than I do. I suppose he will get some one else to do the work.

Mr. ELLIS. No doubt what the ex-Minister of Railways said is true, so far as he knows. I can only remember one case in St. John when any one obtained a contract for supplies for the railway, and it was a notorious fact that the whole business was in the hands of the Conservatives.

Mr. INGRAM. Have the Government a purchasing agent on the Intercolonial?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. INGRAM. Who purchases the supplies?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have a general storekeeper for minor supplies, but the great body of supplies is furnished by tender and contract.

PRAYERS.

DEPARTURE OF HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR GENERAL.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I ask leave of the House to present for its consideration a resolution which is more pleasant than those which we have been discussing of late, though it refers to an event which, I am sure, will cause universal regret in this country. The people of Canada are already aware that the connection of His Excellency the Governor General with our country is about to be severed, that he has obtained permission to be recalled from his duties at an early date. The administration of His Excellency, I believe, has been marked by such devotion to Canada that it will be with universal regret on the part of the people that this inevitable event takes place, though it would not have taken place at this time but for private and domestic reasons affecting His Excellency alone. I think I shall command the unanimous approval of the House if I move an Address to His Excellency, to which I invite the concurrence of both sides. I move, seconded by Sir Richard Cartwright, that an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, as follows:—

To His Excellency the Right Honourable Sir John Campbell Hamilton-Gordon, Earl of Aberdeen; Viscount Formartine, Baron Haddo, Methlic, Tarves and Kellie, in the Peerage of Scotland; Viscount Gordon of Aberdeen, County of Aberdeen, in the Peerage of the United Kingdom; Baronet of Nova Scotia, &c., &c., Governor General of Canada, and Vice-Admiral of the same.

May it please Your Excellency:

We, Her Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled.
Mr. FIELDING.

bled, on the occasion of the approaching termination of Your Excellency's official connection with this country, hasten to assure you, the representative of Her Most Gracious Majesty, of the unswerving loyalty and devotion of the Canadian people to the Crown and Empire of Great Britain, and to express the hope that you will in person convey these assurances to our beloved Queen.

It is our pleasant duty to assure Your Excellency of the high appreciation by the people of Canada of the unfailing courtesy and assiduous care with which you have presided over the affairs of the Dominion for the last five years, a period which, it must be no small gratification to Your Excellency to know, has been characterized by a marked growth of progress and prosperity, and to testify to the generous and kindly interest which you have displayed in all that pertains to the welfare and advancement of the people, irrespective of distinctions of class or creed.

We are also highly sensible of the great degree in which the literature, science and art of the Dominion have benefited from the deep and practical interest which Your Excellency has taken therein.

The important services which Your Excellency has rendered to this country have been heightened by the zealous co-operation of Her Excellency the Countess of Aberdeen, whose untiring efforts to promote the social and moral welfare of our people have endeared her to all classes of the community.

We beg to convey the assurance that Your Excellency and your distinguished consort will bear from our shores our profound respect and esteem, coupled with our warm wishes for your future welfare and happiness, and we indulge the hope that this country may continue to have in Your Excellency a friend and advocate in the councils of the Empire.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, in rising to say a word with reference to the usual and customary Address to the Governor General of Canada on the occasion of his departure after having fulfilled his term of office, from this country, I desire to make a few remarks and to make them in a perfectly frank and hearty way. The Governor General, as the representative of Her Majesty the Queen, is not, in a country like ours, where freedom of thought and freedom of expression are marked characteristics, free from the exercise of that right of criticism which in this age finds its subjects in every class and every sphere of life. But that criticism in connection with the Governor General, whenever it has arisen, has always been, I am sure, and I hope it always will be, tempered by that sentiment of respect and loyalty for the person of the Queen, of whom he is, for the time being, the representative in Canada, which is becoming in a people who are governed by constitutional forms and noted for their loyalty to the Queen and to the Empire.

It would, of course, be folly for me to conceal the fact that one point of difference has arisen in the administration of His Excellency the Governor General with reference to constitutional procedure between the leader of the Liberal-Conservative party and His Excellency. That position has been plainly and frankly and honestly stated ; and in speaking to this Address at the present time, I desire it to be fully and clearly understood that the leader of the Liberal-Conservative party, that I myself as sharing his views, and, I believe, a large part of the Liberal-Conservative party in this House and in the country do not differ from the expression of those views as they have been given voice to in this House and in the country.

Having said that, however, I am free to state that a point of difference in constitutional procedure does not at all blind those who honestly hold to their view to the many excellencies and many distinguishing traits of the Governor General's administration and course in Canada. We in Canada have two periods of especial interest in Her Majesty the Queen in relation to the representation of the Crown in this country. One is when the new Governor General approaches our shores ; the other is when, after an acquaintanceship of five years or so, it becomes necessary, in the course of official procedure, that the connection that has existed shall cease. We have been particularly fortunate in the Dominion of Canada, that with reference to all our Governors General either at the period of anticipation of their undertaking office or at the period of their leaving office, there has been no occasion for any other expression than that of the most cordial good feeling and appreciation toward the distinguished men who, from confederation, have successively occupied that position.

I make no exception in this case, so far as I am concerned. There are some characteristics of their Excellencies' official connection with this country which are particularly gratifying to the people of this country. I do not think that that show of official function which is always becoming in royalty and the representatives of royalty, has ever been more graciously or more successfully administered in Canada than by the present occupant of the position of Governor General and his distinguished lady. Those representations and functions of royalty are sometimes thought to be of little use, that as mere representations they are to a certain extent cold and repressive. But I must say that the generous and hearty spirit of personal sympathy and co-operation of their Excellencies the Governor General and his consort have given to these a warmth and a heartiness which have brought the Queen and royalty, the representative head of this great Empire, in nearer and dearer relations to us than even they were before. I think no Governor General has taken greater pains to represent his Sovereign in the social way in which it has been so charmingly done than have His Excellency and the Countess of Aberdeen. Moreover, they have transferred that generous hospitality and that care from the city of Ottawa, and have made the cities of this country, from Halifax to Vancouver, the recipients of their favour and their good graces. No Governor General has tried to make himself more intimately acquainted with the people in the different sections of Canada than has His Excellency Lord Aberdeen. There is a second life in this country which is growing into greater prominence year by year as the hardness of the early conditions of a newly-settled country gradually pass away, and that is the life of literature, science and art ; and I think it is appropriate that a special allusion should have been made to their Excellencies' kind and generous interest in all that pertains to the literary, scientific and art life of this country. That is a well-merited compliment, if it can be called a compliment, which has been paid in another section of the Address, that they have been characterized by a hearty sympathy with the people of Canada, entirely irrespective of any class or any race distinctions. All have been equally the recipients of their private and official hospitality. And, Sir, as to the message with which we entrust their Excellencies as they leave our shores, that message is certainly a noble message and a great trust for His Excellency the Governor General to convey personally to the Queen. The sentiment of unswerving loyalty to the person of the Queen and of the Empire itself is in no country under the sun, not excepting Great Britain itself, more spontaneous and more general than it is in this Dominion of Canada. From five millions of as progressive, as intelligent and as happy a people as exists under the sun, there goes, without any shadow of reserve, one hearty "God save the Queen and God preserve this nation," entrusted to the care of His Excellency the Governor General, and to be dutifully laid at the feet of our gracious Sovereign the Queen.

Motion agreed to.

The PRIME MINISTER moved :

That a message be sent to the Senate informing their Honours that this House has passed an Address to His Excellency the Governor General on the occasion of the approaching termination of His Excellency's official connection with this country, and request that their Honours unite with this House in said Address.

Motion agreed to.

THE SESSIONAL INDEMNITY.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that at its next sitting the House resolve itself into committee to consider the following proposed resolution :—

That it is expedient to provide that for the present session of Parliament and for each session of Parliament hereafter held, the deduction of eight dollars per day mentioned in section twenty-six of the Act respecting the Senate and House of Commons, being chapter eleven of the Revised Statutes, shall not be made for fifteen days in the case of a member who has been absent from a sitting of the House of which he is a member, or of some committee thereof, during such number of days; but this provision shall not operate to extend the maximum amount mentioned in section twenty-five of the said Act, nor in the case of a member elected since the commencement of the present or of any subsequent session shall it apply to days prior to his election.

Motion agreed to.

KINGSTON PENITENTIARY COMMISSION.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). I promised yesterday to bring down a statement of the amount paid to the commissioners appointed to investigate the affairs of Kingston penitentiary:

E. A Meredith.....	$1,298 05
James Noxon.....	2,214 82
O. K Fraser.....	1,901 37
R. J. Ellbeck (secretary).....	1,937 77
Bouchette (secretary).....	468 00
L. A. Lafortune.....	1,000 00

Mr. INGRAM. Can the hon. gentleman say how long a time Mr. Noxon has been on the commission?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I have not got the number of days he was employed, but this amount includes his travelling expenses. The per diem allowance was $10 a day. I can ascertain the number of days.

Mr. INGRAM. Can the hon. gentleman state at what date last year he commenced?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I will give that information.

THE PACIFIC CABLE.

Mr. McNEILL. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to call the attention of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who is present here to-day, to the question of the Pacific cable. I asked a question about it from the Prime Minister the other night, and he said that when the Minister of Trade and Commerce was present he would probably be able to give the information I desired. I have a letter addressed to me by Sir Sandford Fleming on the subject, a portion of which I will read. Sir Sandford Fleming said:

I am glad to be in a position to furnish the information you ask for.

A conference of Australian Premiers met in Melbourne early in March last, presided over by Sir George Turner.

The letter gives the names of those present.

At the conclusion of the conference a summary of the proceedings was issued for publication. The following appeared in the Melbourne press, March 12, 1898, with respect to a better cable service:—

The next matter dealt with was the laying of another cable between England and Australia, only touching at British territory. One proposal was for a cable across the Pacific to join the Canadian telegraph service, and the other was for a cable from England via Gibraltar, St. Helena, Cape Town and Natal to Glenelg.

Mr. FIELDING.

It was agreed in regard to the Pacific cable, that if Great Britain and Canada would contribute each one-third of the cost the four eastern colonies, Queensland, New South Wales, Victoria and Tasmania would favourably consider the proposal to provide the remaining one-third of the contribution.

My hon. friend will observe that New Zealand was not represented on that occasion, and those four Australian colonies agreed to contribute one-third, provided the other two-thirds were supplied elsewhere. At this late period of the session I will not read the whole of this letter, but I wish to add that I have a letter also from the Premier of New Zealand, addressed to Sir Sandford Fleming.

Mr. SPEAKER. I suppose the hon. gentleman is founding a question on his statement.

Mr. McNEILL. Yes. I do not want to move the adjournment of the House, or to occupy one moment more time than is necessary. The letter from the Premier of New Zealand is as follows:—

Referring to my letter of the 12th ultimo, acknowledging the receipt of copy of my letter to Sir Wilfrid Laurier on the subject of the Pacific cable, the Right Hon. Mr. Seddon now directs me to say, in reply, that he hopes to hear that no efforts will be spared on the part of Canada to ensure the accomplishment of the scheme for a cable from Australia to the United Kingdom by way of the Pacific. The New Zealand Government strongly favour the Pacific cable.

Since then there has been a further communication received from New Zealand by Sir Sandford Fleming, and I imagine that it is not improbable that the Government have very recently received a communication from that colony. There has been a further meeting in Australia in respect to this matter, and the Australian colonies there represented decided in favour of the Pacific cable as against the other proposed route of the Extension Company. What I want to call the attention of my hon. friend especially to is this, that four of the Australian colonies have declared themselves prepared to guarantee one-third part, if the other two-thirds be guaranteed. From what fell from Sir Charles Tupper, no doubt the mother country will be prepared to guarantee her share. Therefore, we in Canada and New Zealand stand together, each prepared to do something towards guaranteeing the other one-third. It is clear that it is not necessary that Canada shall guarantee the remaining one-third, as New Zealand is ready to join in that guarantee. It is a question, of course, as to how much New Zealand may give of that third, and how much Canada may give; but the position of affairs at the present moment is that the Australian colonies are prepared to guarantee one-third, the mother country one-third, and the remaining one-third may be made up, not by Canada alone, but by Canada and New Zealand together. I should like to ask the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce if he is in a position to say whether this is a correct statement of the position of the matter to-day.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. No further communication has been made to the Government on this subject, since the last time the question was brought up in the House, and therefore I am not in a position to add anything to the remarks I made on that occasion. The question of cost will engage the consideration of the Government during the recess, but no alteration has taken place during the last two weeks.

Mr. McNEILL. I wish to call my hon. friend's attention to the fact that from what he stated the other night I thought he was under the impression that Canada was expected to do as much as the Australian colonies and as much as the mother country. It is not so. New Zealand will contribute to the guarantee along with Canada.

JUDGES FOR CHICOUTIMI, AND SAGUENAY AND GASPE.

Mr. ANGERS. (Translation). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I should like to ask the leader of the Government whether any action has been taken with regard to the increase of the salaries of the judges for the districts of Chicoutimi and Saguenay and Gaspé?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). (Translation). In reply to my hon. friend I may inform him that the Government have taken no action in regard to the salaries of the judges in the districts of Chicoutimi and Saguenay and Gaspé.

THE FAST LINE SERVICE—THE PETERSEN CONTRACT.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the Orders of the day are called, I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce if he is disposed to make any statement to the House further with respect to the Peterson contract, and how it stands at this date, after 31st May has passed.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). There is no further information to be communicated. We will probably hear definitely on the subject not before eight or ten days yet. I understand a special adjourned meeting of the board will be held shortly for the purpose of communicating their decision to the Government.

THE PROPOSED QUEBEC BRIDGE.

Mr. FOSTER. I should like to ask a question of the hon. Prime Minister. It was current in the newspaper press that the Prime Minister had promised a subvention to the Quebec Bridge I do not know whether the sum was mentioned or not, but I think it was somewhere up to one million; and it was also current in the newspapers that the promise would be implemented at the coming session of Parliament, as it was the intention to prosecute the work on the bridge at once. The second Supplementary Estimates are down and I notice nothing for the bridge. May I ask my hon. friend whether it is proposed to bring any thing more down with respect to that matter this session; or if he proposes to let Parliament rise, and then by Order in Council pledge the Government, and Parliament as far as he can, to any definite sum?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I do not think I should answer this latter portion of this question, for the very obvious reason insinuated in that last part. My hon. friend has no right to assume that the Government would withhold from Parliament its policy in order to endeavour to circumvent it in another way. I have stated more than once that I was in favour of the construction of a bridge at Quebec, and that it was my intention to ask my colleagues for an appropriation in that respect; but I could not do so at this session, though I would ask my colleagues to do so, and Parliament to do so, at the other session. That is my view; in so speaking I do not speak on behalf of the Government, but for myself personally. I could not gather from my hon. friend's remarks whether he is disposed to favour the view of aiding the Quebec bridge, or whether he is opposed to it. As we are exchanging views now I would be very much obliged to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) if he would give me his views on the subject.

Mr. FOSTER. I have too great respect for the constitutional rules of the House to enter into a debate of this kind.

PROVINCE OF MANITOBA DEBT ACCOUNT.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House resolve itself into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:—

1. That it is expedient to provide that the sum of two hundred and eighty-four thousand four hundred and fifty-six dollars and forty-seven cents, being the cost of the erection and furnishing of the legislative buildings and Government House at Winnipeg, which sum was charged against the "Province of Manitoba Debt Account," may, on the first day of July, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight, be credited to the said account, and that the interest payable to the said province on the said first day of July, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight, on the balance at the credit of the said

Debt Account may be calculated on the balance at the credit of the said account after the said sum of two hundred and eighty-four thousand four hundred and fifty-six dollars and forty-seven cents has been credited thereto as above provided.

2. That it is expedient to provide that the Government of Canada may, on the said first day of July, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight, pay to the Government of the province of Manitoba, the sum of two hundred and forty-six thousand four hundred and forty-five dollars and forty-four cents, being the sum of the amounts which would have been payable to the province of Manitoba by the Dominion, in excess of the amounts actually paid as interest from time to time payable on the balances at the credit of the said Debt Account, had the cost of the erection and furnishing of the said legislative buildings and Government House at Winnipeg not been charged against the said Debt Account, together with interest at the rate of five per centum per annum on each of the amounts so payable, in excess of the amounts actually paid from the date when the same would have been payable to the said first day of July, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight.

Mr. FOSTER. I did indulge the hope up to this very moment, that the Government did not intend to ask the House to pass the legislation foreshadowed in items 29 and 31 with reference to the Government of Manitoba and certain funds and subventions. I do not know that I could add anything in force to the protest that we have already made on this side of the House against the Government bringing down on the eve of prorogation, new legislation involving large subventions and expenditure of money. Before the leader of the Opposition left, there passed across the floor of the House certain remarks with reference to what measures would be brought down and as to the condition of the Order Paper, and if I do not mistake, the leader of the Government promised at that time—and we have been acting on that promise since and facilitating the work of the session—promised at that time that all the new and important legislation appeared on the Order Paper, and that with the exception of two measures that he named there was nothing else to come down except it might be something of a merely local nature. If my right hon. friend attempts to evade the essence of that promise—

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) will pardon me; I specially mentioned the very resolution that is now before the House.

Mr. FOSTER. This resolution.

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Then if my right hon. friend mentioned that, my criticism in that respect falls to the ground. If the right hon. gentleman excluded this item as he tells me he did, it takes away my ground of criticism in that respect, but it does not weaken to any extent the force of the protest we make on this side of the House against leaving this important legislation until the very eve of prorogation, when a great majority of the members on this side of the House at least, thinking that the important business of the session was over have left for their homes. I notice that hon. gentlemen opposite have filled their seats again very well. They know what they are going to do, and they bring their members back when they have determined as to what they shall do.

Mr. FIELDING.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is not so.

Mr. FOSTER. At the same time the criticism remains perfectly unassailable, that no Government has the right to bring legislation of this importance before the House in the dying hours of the session. How many members of this House understand either of these two questions which are to be decided? They are provincial questions and consequently there is an element of interprovincial importance attached to them. Never in the history of this Parliament has it been possible to make any readjustment with reference to any one province, unless at the same time or later readjustment had to follow in the case of other provinces. Other provinces then are vitally interested, the exchequer of Canada is vitally interested, and it goes without saying that legislation of this kind ought to be introduced in the earlier part of the session so that members might be in a position to discuss the questions involved and all correlated questions, at leisure and after a thorough investigation. All such investigation and thought as that is absolutely precluded when this legislation comes down at the present time. Now, the right hon. gentleman cannot plead that it was urgent or unexpected. The arrangements which he has made years previously and of which this—I shall not say is the final outcome—were well known to my right hon. friend. This was known to the right hon. gentleman as well when the House met as it is now. On what plea could the hon. gentleman refuse to lay this matter before the House in the earlier part of the session, and on what plea does he bring it down when the energies of the House have been dissipated by the length of the session, and when the restlessness that supervenes on the eve of breaking up is apparent everywhere? I venture to say there are not ten men in this House who understand either of these questions or what is involved in them or have looked into them. I have not for my part, and I have followed important questions with more or less care ever since I have been in public life. Yet, we are called upon to ratify a computation and the basis on which it is allowed and altogether a very large subvention amounting to nearly half a million dollars to one of the provinces of the Dominion; and we are called upon to do it between the intervals of the leave takings of the members of this House. I say that it is not a line of parliamentary action which any gentleman can defend, and the hon. gentlemen opposite are without the least excuse because they knew what they were going to do or should have known what they were going to do; knew what they were asked to do long before this period of the session. Even after they put these resolutions on the Order Paper they have kept them and kept them until this side of the House is decimated, and until there is no possibility of coming to a discussion of the matter with anything like that leisure and care which should be exercised in relation to important matters of this kind. Now, what could result if my right hon. friend leaves this legislation for another session? We shall be here again in the course of six months, and why is it that there is this deadly urgency? Is it because there is supervening in the distance, a political commotion in the province of Manitoba, when for help granted help is to be asked in return; when for facilities that have been put at the disposal of hon. gentlemen opposite, facilities are asked in return, and for political purposes. It is rumored that there is to be an election in the province of Manitoba during the course of the year. Is this one of the cards that is to be put in the hands of friends of hon. gentlemen opposite for good services already rendered. If so, Sir, I submit this is not sufficient reason why we should be called upon to discuss these great financial matters and to decide them at the fag end of the session.

I earnestly hope my hon. friend will yet come to the conclusion to defer this legislation. If this Opposition did its duty, it would stand by its seats here day after day and month after month, as a protest, if nothing more, against this method of legislation. Insult is added to injury, to use the common phrase, when this supervenes upon the millions that have been placed before this House within the last week. Three millions of supplementary estimates—supplementary estimates containing new matter of the most debatable kind. I have looked them over carefully, and I venture to say that no supplementary estimates have ever been placed before the House which contained so much debatable and doubtful matter as the supplementary estimates which are before this House to-day. Yet we are asked to swallow them in a day. Two millions of dollars are to be paid as a loan to the Harbour Commissioners—a loan behind which we stand, and which ultimately, if contingencies happen, we will have to shoulder. But with the lightest heart imaginable this is entered into by hon. gentlemen opposite, and passed within a week of the end of the session, and under the circumstances I have detailed. That is not all; but I will defer taking the time of the House in recapitulating. Now, I make an earnest protest against that method of legislation. If I had not lost all faith, I would make my appeal, with some certainty of its being answered by hon. gentlemen opposite, on the ground of the pledges they made, and the policy they enunciated during seventeen years of opposition. Who more than the Liberal party have thundered and inveighed against this method of action, or any approach to it? Who more than this party who are now opposite to us have been looked to by the men in the country who do not believe in this kind of legislation? And yet, Sir, I must say that the events of the past two years have weakened my belief that these gentlemen were doing anything else than masquerading during the seventeen years that they were in opposition, but were simply making pledges which they knew or found out afterwards it was not to their interest to implement. I have no confidence, then, on that ground in being able to prevail with my hon. friends. But possibly my hon. friend may find that outside, in this broad commonwealth of ours, there is a sturdy and honest public opinion, if it can be got at, and that that business opinion is not in favour of such methods of legislation as this. Hon. gentlemen may smile. My hon. friend who is now Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) has taken occasion several times during the last ten years, when he was on this side of the House, and when he was before the country, to asseverate before high Heaven that he believed there was no honest political sentiment in this country and that the people looked with perfect indifference on any act of corruption that may have been committed by any political party. I believe after events have shown that the hon. gentleman is honest in holding that opinion, and he proposes now as an administrator to act upon it, and to set his seal to the course of action which, if there were any lively public opinion in the country, would condemn him, as the "Witness" does condemn him, as the Huntingdon "Gleaner" does condemn him, as the "Simcoe Reformer" does condemn him, as the old guard, old line Liberals in this country do condemn him; who, even if under their beards, mutter something which at least is not a compliment, and utter it often and pretty deeply. Once more, then, I appeal to my hon. friend to withdraw this legislation, and let us pass the urgent business of the House and go to our homes.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). Mr. Speaker, the resolution which I have placed before the House is designed to correct what we regard as a mistake made some years ago in the accounts between the Dominion of Canada and the province of Manitoba. We have had under consideration during the past year three claims or applications from the Government of Manitoba. One of these relates to the School Lands Fund, and is the subject of a resolution now before the House, which, I may remind my hon. friend opposite, far from being sprung on the House, has been on the notice paper for a considerable time, and was actually on the notice paper at the close of last session, when we were not able to proceed with it. Therefore, so far as that item is concerned, there has been ample notice. That, however, is a subsequent resolution, which I will deal with in due course. The second application from the Government of Manitoba has reference to a sum of $110,825.07, which was placed to the credit of the capital account of the province in the year 1884. In the year 1885 there was a settlement of the disputed accounts with Manitoba, which settlement found expression in an Act of the Dominion Parliament of that year. A clause in that Act required that the settlement of the matters therein referred to should be regarded as final, and that the Manitoba legislature should accept it as such. The Manitoba legislature did accept that settlement as final and conclusive; but a question has arisen as to the proper interpretation of the settlement, the Manitoba Government disputing the interpretation the Dominion Government have placed upon it. In the original arrangements with Manitoba, a certain amount was placed to the credit of the capital account of the province. That amount was based on a population of 17,000. In 1885 a readjustment took place, in which a settlement was made on the basis of an assumed population of 125,000, and under that arrangement a large sum was placed to the credit of Manitoba. Now, it has been contended by the Government of Manitoba that the sum of $110,825.07, which was placed to the credit of the province in 1884, was to be held as a distinct and separate sum, and was not affected by the settlement of 1885. Therefore the Manitoba Government have claimed that the province should continue to be credited with that sum. That claim we have not been able to entertain. We have been obliged to take the view that the settlement of 1885 was intended to include, and did include, the $110,825.07 which was placed to the credit of the province by the Act of 1884. On that branch, therefore, of the Manitoba Government claim, we have not been able to agree with them, and have not asked Parliament to make any appropriation. The third claim, and the one with which we deal in the resolutions before the House, has relation to the construction of the legislative buildings and the Government House, and the furnishing thereof, in the city of Winnipeg. The claim of the Government of Manitoba was for the cost of the buildings and the furnishing. When this resolution was first drafted, it was made to cover the furnishing as well as the buildings. On closer examination we have come to the conclusion that the case in favour of payment of the furnishing account is not a strong one, and I intend in committee to so amend the resolution that that portion of the claim, not a very large one, shall be struck out. Therefore, in dealing with this resolution, we may assume that it is for a somewhat smaller sum, though not very much so, and applies merely to the cost of the legislative buildings and the Government House. In the British North America Act, section 108, it is provided :

The public works and property of each province enumerated in the third schedule to this Act shall be the property of Canada.

In the third schedule mention is made of "Custom-houses, post offices, and all other public buildings, except such as the Government of Canada appropriate for the use of the provincial legislatures and governments." Under that clause of the British North America Act, Canada became possessed of all the public buildings belonging to the Governments of the several provinces, but by Order in Council gave back to the various provinces, subject to the conditions of the Act, such buildings as were necessary for provincial purposes. Under that clause and the Order in Council founded thereon, the old provinces that existed in 1867 were allowed to use public buildings which were the property of Canada, but were assigned or transferred to the provinces for the purposes indicated in the Act. There has always been a question—perhaps my legal friends will say there is none—as to whether these transfers gave to the provinces any title to the property. It has been held that these properties still, in a certain sense, belong to Canada, and that the provincial governments have consequently not the power to dispose of them, but only to use them for provincial purposes. However that may be, it was the undoubted policy of the Dominion in 1867 to transfer to each province sufficient property in its public buildings to carry on its provincial government. Manitoba, of course, was a new province, created and taken into the union at a later day, but it does seem to have been contemplated from the beginning that the principle which was laid down respecting the older provinces should be applied to Manitoba, and that she was entitled to receive out of the public treasury sufficient appropriation to provide for public buildings to enable her to make a start in provincial government. In 1882, Sir Hector Langevin made a statement in this House on the subject, when asking an appropriation for the erection of these buildings in Manitoba. He was asked by Mr. Casgrain: How is it we are obliged to build Parliament Buildings for Manitoba? Sir Hector Langevin replied:

When the other provinces came into confederation, they had their parliamentary buildings, and these were allowed by the Federal Government to be used by the provinces. As Manitoba was a new province, and had no buildings, Parliament last year voted a sum for the purpose of constructing a public building and a residence for the Lieutenant-Governor.

It therefore seems to have been understood from the beginning that the federal treasury was to supply Manitoba with buildings for the purposes of provincial government. In 1885 there was a settlement between the provinces of Manitoba and the Dominion Government in certain matters, and a large sum was placed to the credit of Manitoba in her capital account, and in the Act, chapter 50 of the Statutes of 1885, the following section will be found, to the latter part of which I draw particularly the attention of the House :—

The capital sum on which the province is entitled to receive half-yearly payments of interest at 5 per cent per annum, as fixed by 33 Vic., chap. 3, and as readjusted or increased or readjusted by any subsequent Act, shall, from and after the 1st day of July, 1885, be calculated on a population of 125,000, at the same rate per capita as was allowed on the estimated population under the Act 33 Vic., chap. 3—

I want to draw the attention of the House particularly to these concluding words :

—and shall be charged with such advances as have been already made to the province, and with such expenditure as has been made therein by the Dominion for the purposes of a strictly local character, and with a further sum of $150,000, which the Dominion Government may advance to the province to meet the expenses of construction of a lunatic asylum and other exceptional services.

The whole question turns on the words declaring that : Manitoba shall be charged with the sums which have been expended in that province on works of a strictly local character. Under that clause, the Finance Department, as far as I can learn—I have not been able to find that the matter was ever the subject of legal opinion—seems to have taken it for granted that the sums charged against the province of Manitoba for the purposes of public buildings were intended to be charged against the capital sum placed to her credit, and from that time to the present Manitoba has been charged with the cost of these public buildings, as if they were works of a purely local character. The officers of the department interpreted the Act as no doubt they thought right, but their interpretation was not the result of any determination in Parliament, nor am I aware that the subject was ever considered in any way so as to produce a deliberate judgment. However that may be, from that time forward Manitoba has been charged with the sum of $284,456.47, consisting of $17,430.04 for furnishings and $267,026.43 for the buildings. As respects the furniture, although the Manitoba Government claimed on that also, and at one time we were disposed to think the claim was fair, we think it ought not to be pressed, and we expect our Manitoba friends to accept that vi v. Leaving the furniture as a proper charge against the local government, there remains the sum of $267,026.43 which has been charged against Manitoba from that day to this, and on which every half-year the payment of interest has been improperly withheld from the province. We think it is quite clear, from the statement made by Sir Hector Langevin, that the understanding in the beginning was that the province of Manitoba was to have been furnished with these buildings out of the money of Canada, and even apart from that, by ordinary methods of reasoning, it would be only fair that Manitoba should be treated as the older provinces were and started with a reasonable equipment to carry on its public business. After the Act of 1885 was passed, certain conversations took place in the House, which support the view that this was still regarded as a federal rather than a local matter. In 1885, during the passing of the Act, a question was put to Sir Mackenzie Bowell as to what sums were to be charged to Manitoba, under the section of the Act which I have read. Sir Mackenzie Bowell replied :

I am not in a position to say. I made special inquiry to ascertain if I could obtain the information for the House, but found that I could not. There has been a large amount of expenditure covering a number of years, and it will require full investigation before the amount to be charged against this increased capital account can be obtained, and will have to be a matter of investigation in the future and agreement between the province and the Dominion.

So that at that time it was not regarded as conclusive that the claims of Manitoba were finally adjusted. In 1886 Mr. McLelan, the then Finance Minister, made the following statement :

A settlement is to be arrived at as to what may be deemed strictly local as chargeable against them, and then what they have drawn as capital. There will necessarily be a settlement between the two governments as to what will be charged against them as strictly local.

That was in 1886.

Mr. HAGGART. Is there any itemized account in the department on which the Act of 1885 was passed ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We could easily obtain that information, but I do not think it would enter into the question at all.

Mr. HAGGART. It enters the question in this way. We wish to see whether the amount that was expended for these buildings was charged then or not, or entered into the calculation.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think not. The settlement of 1885 was arrived at by allowing to Manitoba a certain per capita sum, based on a population of 125,000, which was an assumed population. The amount allowed to capital account of Manitoba, in the first instance, was based on the allowance given the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick of $27 and some cents per head. That was afterwards increased, by a readjustment of the provincial accounts, to $32 and a fraction per head. and the capital account in Manitoba in 1885 was fixed by taking that $32 per head and applying it to an assumed population of 125,000. That made the sum which was assigned to Manitoba. The point my hon. friend mentions does not appear to have entered into the calculation at all.

Mr. HAGGART. I understood that there was a further sum of $100,000 credited to them in discharge of all local claims.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, there is no such statement in connection with the settlement of 1885, so far as I am able to discover. It seems clear from the statements made, first, that as under the British North America Act, each province was allowed the buildings it had prior to confederation, it seems only fair and reasonable that the province of Manitoba should be equipped with such buildings as were necessary for a proper beginning of its work as a province; second, it is apparent from the speech of Sir Hector Langevin that it was understood and fully acknowledged that the province should be supplied with these buildings out of the Dominion treasury, and third, though we are told that the Act of 1885 was regarded by some as a settlement of these matters, I have been able to make quotations from the speech of Mr. Bowell and Mr. McLelan, who was Minister of Finance in 1886, from which it appears that the question of what was strictly local and what was not strictly local was a matter still under consideration and not then determined. It does not appear to have ever been formally determined from that day to this; but, in the meantime, the province of Manitoba has been charged with a sum, the interest on which, we think, was fairly due to the province, but has been withheld from her.

My hon. friend (Sir Louis Davies) reminds me that the Manitoba Government, all along, have protested against this, and claimed that they were entitled to what we give them, and also to the other claims to which I made a passing allusion at an early stage of my remarks. The moment the Manitoba Government received from the Finance Department statements in which these amounts were charged against them, they immediately protested, and they have been protesting ever since. And I think I am justified in saying that, in their communications with the late Government the claim was not unfavourably considered as respects these buildings. I do not mean to say that any pledge was given that the claim would be paid; but the general information I have been able to obtain in the matter leads me to believe that the claim was not regarded unfavourably by the late Ministry or some members of it, and that if they had been longer in office, perhaps they might have adjusted it. At all events, the facts have been placed before us in such a way as to impress us with the conviction that an injustice has been done to the province of Manitoba in deducting this amount, and that, in justice and fairness, we should allow the province the sum charged against them for the construction of these public buildings, the legislative buildings at Winnipeg, and the Government House at Winnipeg, and that we should allow them interest on the various sums withheld from them from 1885 down to the present moment. This is the ground on which we ask the House to adopt the resolution I have moved.

Mr. SPROULE. I endorse every word that was said by the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) with regard to the unwisdom of submitting to this House such a proposition as this at this very late hour of the session. It seems to me that the motion is important enough to warrant the most careful consideration on our part. It involves questions that have been dealt with over and over again, that have been settled once, that have been settled twice, settled three times, settled even four times—and now we are asked for a fifth settlement. In view of these facts, and in view of the important principles and the amount of money involved, it seems to me impossible that this resolution should be lightly dealt with. I am opposed to this also because it opens up the question of assistance to the provinces. This is in accordance with the platform laid down by the members of the Reform party in 1893, when they intimated to the various provinces that, in the event of their getting into power, they would be disposed to give the provinces larger assistance than has heretofore been given. We thought that in 1885 a final settlement had been come to with regard to assistance by this Parliament to the provinces. I know that Mr. Blake took the view, and so, I think, did the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), that the time had come when it ought to be regarded as no longer justifiable for any province to appeal to the federal power for additional aid in carrying on provincial affairs. But we are asked to open the question again, to open the door for every province to come to us and ask for assistance to pay debts incurred by their own extravagance and their own improvidence.

Now, the Minister of Finance says that in these resolutions there are two questions which we are asked to consider in connection with Manitoba. One is to give them a portion of the money we retained as a permanent school fund, the interest of which they would receive to carry on the educational affairs of the province. That is dealt with in another resolution, and, therefore, I must pass it by with a very few words.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Why should my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) discuss it at all, for I refrained from more than mentioning it.

Mr. SPROULE. I only intend to mention it, as it is to be discussed later on. The other part of the Finance Minister's statement is that there is still an obligation due to Manitoba which we have not discharged; that is the cost of the present parliament buildings; and that, as we did not pay the cost of these parliament buildings, or, in other words, we paid it and charged it up to the province, which should not have been done, we are bound to allow the amount of the cost of the parliament buildings to be credited to Manitoba, and the interest of that money from the time that she was entitled to it. Now, as I read it, according to the claim of Manitoba, the interest of that money dates back to 1879.—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). No, it was not charged against Manitoba until 1885.

Mr. SPROULE. But the expenditure was made before that time.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) must have misunderstood the Finance Minister. He put his case on the ground that a mistake was made in 1885 by the Finance Department in charging this sum of money against Manitoba without the authority of Parliament and without the opinion of the Justice Department; and we must rectify that, and interest must be allowed from the time of the error.

Mr. SPROULE. But Manitoba says that she should never have been compelled to pay this amount, and, therefore, from the time they are entitled to the parliament buildings they were entitled to interest on the amount.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Not at all, that is not the claim.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is not the claim, and we are not proposing to pay it.

Mr. SPROULE. Here is the claim set up. First, we will give the revenue of the province, in order that we may understand the matter more fully:

The First Statement of the Finances of the Province.

Cost of government	$30,000 00
Per capita allowance (80 cents per head) on an estimated population of 17,000	13,600 40
Five per cent interest on $472,090, debt at $22.77 per head.....	23,604 50
Five per cent interest on $79,357, as adjusted in 1873.....	3,967 85

Then 5 per cent interest on $79,357 as adjusted in 1873 would amount to $3,967, making in all $71,172.35. That was what was going to Manitoba. This was subsequently increased by Order in Council of the 26th October, 1875, and confirmed by 33 Vic., chap. 3, to $90,000 per annum instead of $71,000. But in 1879 the subsidy was re-adjusted as follows:—Cost of Government, $30,000, same as before; per capita allowance, 80 cents per head on an estimated population of 70,000, $56,000; interest on balance of capital, $19,653, making a total revenue of $105,650.04. Then again by chap. 5 of the Statutes of Canada, 1882, the subsidy was re-adjusted again in the following way:—For support of the Government and the legislature, $50,000, instead of $30,000 as at first; per capita allowance upon an estimated population of 150,000, instead of 70,000 as before, at 80 cents per head, would make $20,000; and an indemnity in lieu of public lands of $55,000, giving them then a revenue of $215,000. That was the third time we re-adjusted their financial affairs. The last settlement of the subsidy was made by chap. 50, Statutes of Canada, 1885. It provided that all Crown lands in Manitoba which might be shown to be swamp lands should be transferred to the province; that there should be a grant for the benefit of the university of 150,000 acres of land; that the grant in lieu of public land should be $100,000 per annum. That was in lieu of the public lands which we held, and which the Manitoba Government claimed they had a right to. That the per capita allowance to the province of 80 cents per head under 30 Vic., chap. 3, increased by 45 Vic., chap. 5, based on the population of 150,000 should be subject to be increased as follows:—

A census of the province shall be taken every fifth year, reckoned from the general census of 1881, and an approximate estimate of the population shall be made upon the first day of September next and at equal intervals of time, between each quinquennial and decennial census, and whenever the population by any census or estimate exceeds 150,000 which shall be the maximum on which said allowance shall be calculated, the amount of the said per capita allowance shall be increased accordingly, and so on, until the population shall have reached 400,000 souls. It is provided by section 5 that the ten-year limitation which appeared in 45 Vic., chap. 5, is struck out, and the arrangement is made unlimited as to time. The capital sum on which the province is entitled to receive half-yearly payments of interest, at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, is fixed by the Act 33 Vic., chapter 3, and as re-adjusted or increased by any subsequent Act, shall from and after the 1st day of July, 1885, be calculated on a population of 125,000, same rate per capita as was allowed on an estimated population under the Act 33 Vic., chap. 3, and shall be charged with such advances, as may have already been made to the province and with such expenditure as has been made herein by the Dominion for the purpose of strictly local character, and with a further sum of $150,000 which the Dominion Government may advance to the province to meet the expenditure of constructing a lunatic asylum and other exceptional services.

This was to cover not only the cost of the lunatic asylum but all other exceptional services.

It is provided that the above grant and payment shall be a final settlement of all claims against the Dominion Government.

In furtherance of that understanding I take up the Act of 1885 of which clause 7 says :

The grants of land and payments authorized by the foregoing sections shall be made on the condition that they be accepted by the province (such acceptance being testified by an Act of the legislature of Manitoba), as a full settlement of all claims made by said province for the reimbursement of costs incurred in the case of disputed territory, or the reference of the boundary question to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and all other questions.

That was one of the most discussed claims between the Dominion and the provincial Government up to the 10th day of January, 1895. The last portion of that clause admits that it was a substantial settlement of all claims that had been discussed to that date. Now was this claim for the cost of the provincial legislative buildings and the Government House, discussed before that date? Certainly it was discussed, because it is mentioned in those papers over and over again, even as far back as 1871 and 1872, and from time to time it was referred to between that date and the year 1885. Therefore I claim that it was included in the settlement, and this was regarded as a final settlement of that claim as well as the others, notwithstanding any contention that may be held to the contrary now. Now, the Minister of Finance says that there is another clause, clause 6, which says :

And shall be charged with such advances as have been already made to the province, and with such expenditures as have been made therein by the Dominion for the purposes of a strictly local character.

Now, what expenses were made of strictly local character besides the Parliament buildings, the Government House and the lunatic asylum? So far as I know, there were no other expenses; therefore I claim it must apply to the cost of putting up these buildings, and if it did, then the legislative buildings and the Government House were included, and therefore they were included in the final settlement, because that is the only point of dispute, namely, that it does not apply to this. Then if it does not apply to this, it is incumbent upon the Minister of Finance to show that there were other things of a purely local character where expenditure was made that this refers to, and that this did not refer to the Government House, the legislative buildings or the lunatic asylum. I do not think the Minister has done that, it is incumbent on his to do it. But I take the ground that it was a final settlement, and therefore we should not open up this question again; when we open it up again, we established a precedent whereby every province will be appealing to us in the future for further subsidies to carry on provincial affairs. But there seems to be a strong suspicion in connection with it. That this is part and parcel of the settlement of the Manitoba school question.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. SPROULE. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries laughs at it, but let me tell him what one of his own friends says in another place: "Well, if that be a fact, we are just settling all these disputed questions the same as we propose to settle our disputed questions with the United States, that is, to put them all in one lump, we settle it all by one Act." That is undoubtedly the proposal, and you cannot disabuse the public mind of Canada of the impression that in connection with this proposal there was an understanding in the settlement of the school question that this should be a consideration. Canada believes that to-day, and Canada will still believe it, notwithstanding what may be said to the contrary. Now, it is for us to think over what we are paying for the consideration. Are we not establishing a bad precedent? Are we not establishing a principle that will be a dangerous one in the future? Are we not openly violating the final compact that was come to between the various provinces of the Dominion and the Federal Parliament in 1885, when that settlement was made between the Federal Government and all the provinces, and when it was agreed that there should be no more applications to the Federal Government for assistance to carry on provincial affairs? I say that is what we are doing to-day, and hon. gentlemen are carrying out that portion of their platform adopted in 1893, when they told the provinces of the Dominion: If we are brought to power we will relieve you of the debts you have incurred by your provincial Governments in the past, we will give you provincial subsidies that you have not got up to the present time. We are starting with Manitoba this year. The province of Prince Edward Island will come forward next year, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick will follow, and Quebec and Ontario will come afterwards.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Do not make any mistake, Ontario will be here very early, if there is any money in the question.

Mr. SPROULE. No doubt. We shall have again commenced milking the federal cow, and distributing the revenues of the Dominion. When the expenditure is increased and these amounts paid, Ontario will be called upon to pay the larger proportion, it having the greater population. It is a bad principle and a bad precedent to establish.

The Finance Minister has not made out a case in favour of Manitoba receiving this money. That Act was regarded then and should be regarded now as a final settlement of all claims between Manitoba and the Dominion Government.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I surely will not be accused of partisanship either in favour of this Government or that of the province of Manitoba in presenting the view I take of this question. The whole question, as the Finance Minister has properly stated, is reduced to a matter of book-keeping. Manitoba has no claim and never made a claim in respect to any sum with regard to the erection of public buildings. When Manitoba entered the confederation delegates were sent here by the population of the Red River colony to arrange terms. Among some of the claims made by the people of Red River through their representatives was that the Federal Parliament should provide for the erection of public buildings in the future province of Manitoba. This was so well understood that at a later period the Federal Government, with the endorsement of this Parliament, provided for the erection of public buildings without consulting the province of Manitoba. Plans were prepared in the Public Works Department at Ottawa, these were forwarded to Manitoba, and submitted to the local Government of the time. We were never consulted as to how the work should be done. The work was carried out, public buildings were erected; whether they should have cost what was expended was not our affair, and in fact we did not look into it because it was none of our funeral, as we were not going to pay for the buildings. They were duly erected and afterwards handed over to the province of Manitoba as their property. A few months afterwards we found out that our capital account was charged with the cost of the public buildings.

Mr. HAGGART. What year was that?

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I am not positive as to the year, it was after the completion of the buildings and their transfer to the province. It was in 1885, I think.

The PRIME MINISTER. In 1884.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. So our province has been deprived since that period of the revenue we should have received from the interest of that amount; that is to say, our capital account being diminished to that extent, the 5 per cent which the province was entitled to receive on that capital account has been withheld from it. In rectifying the mistake by carrying to the other side of the ledger account of the province of Manitoba the amount improperly carried to the opposite side, the Government are only restoring by a stroke of bookkeeping, what Manitoba has been unjustly and unfairly deprived of by the action of the officers of the Department of Finance. I may be told that under the settlement of 1885 all the claims of Manitoba were settled. Manitoba never put forward this question, which was disputed between the two Governments, as a claim. It was not a claim at all; it was merely a difference of opinion as to a matter of bookkeeping. We never claimed that we should get the money; but we complained that it was taken away from us by wrong action on the part of the officers of the Finance Department. Parliament never endorsed the action taken by those officers, and, as has been stated by the Finance Minister, those officers never consulted either the Government of the day or Parliament. They had no authority, and apparently did not look for any authority for doing what they did. Under these circumstances, I say that in passing this Bill, not in voting to Manitoba a specific sum of money, but in restoring to Manitoba what has been taken from her, the Government of the day are only doing an act of justice. I will not touch upon the outside considerations that may have prompted the Government to act. I say this is an act of justice in favour of my province, and in duty bound I will support it as well, strongly as I may oppose the other resolution that may be put before the House on another subject.

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On resolution 1.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I propose to amend by striking out the amount for furnishing and leaving the amount payable as $237,026.43.

Mr. SPROULE. How does the hon gentleman reconcile his action with his speech, because his arguments would apply to one part equally with the other?

The FINANCE MINISTER. That is where I differ with my hon. friend. Take the case of the Government House of New Brunswick. That passed under the control of the Dominion and became Dominion property by the British North America Act. It was transferred by the Dominion to the province of New Brunswick; but the furnishing never became the property of the Dominion of Canada and were not transferred back, and as we did not supply furnishings for these buildings in the other provinces, we should not be asked to supply furnishings in the case of Manitoba.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is another proof that the action of the Government is consistent and correct. When the Government of Manitoba, of which the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) was a member, discovered, shortly after the event, that this cross-entry had been made in the Finance Department here against their province, they entered a protest against it. Mr. Norquay came to Ottawa and interviewed the then Finance Minister, Sir Charles Tupper, and also wrote a letter pointing out how unjust and unfair it was that this item should be charged against the province. In that letter Mr. Norquay quotes the Order in Council passed by the Dominion Government when undertaking to provide legislative buildings for Manitoba.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the hon. gentleman give the date?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes. That Order in Council while declaring it was the purpose and intention of the Dominion Parliament to provide sufficient buildings for the legislative assembly and for Government House, also declared that the Government would not provide the furniture and furnishings. The Order in Council was passed on 20th April, 1879, and reads as follows:—

That with respect to the erection of public buildings at Winnipeg, the Government of Manitoba be informed that an item will be inserted in the Estimates of the next session of the Dominion Parliament for the erection of plain but sufficient buildings for the legislative assembly and Government House, but that the Dominion Government will not undertake the furnishing of either.

That is perfectly plain. The Dominion Government distinctly pledged itself to the province of Manitoba that they would construct and erect these public buildings, and at the next session provide the necessary money.

Mr. SPROULE. But they did not say it should not be charged against the capital account of the province?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman heard the statement of the Finance Minister, that in every province the Government had provided buildings for the purposes of a legislative building and Government house, and in Manitoba there not having been buildings there for the purpose, the Government came in and said by Order in Council: All right we will apply to Parliament next session for a vote and build them for you. That being done the moment the clerk or whoever he was made this entry charging Manitoba with this sum of money, it became not a question of making concessions to Manitoba, not a question of giving them something they have been clamouring for, but it became a question of correcting a manifest error. My hon. friend is quite entitled to argue that it is not a manifest error and that the terms of the statute were strong enough to cover it, although with that branch of the argument I do not agree, but he is misleading the public when he says that this action of the Government is interfering in any way with the settlement made in 1885. The settlement made in 1885 is binding by statute upon the Dominion and upon Manitoba, but does it follow from that, that if a clerk in the Finance Department charged $500,000 by mistake against Manitoba, that province is to be bound for all time by that mistake? Not at all. I appeal to my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) then, and I know he is a reasonable man.

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the Minister of Marine and Fisheries first give us the date of that letter?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The 18th day of April, 1879, is the date of the Order in Council, and the date of the letter is 2nd April, 1887. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) will see that the statute comprising the settlement was passed on the 20th July, 1885, and the first half-yearly account afterwards would be made up in 1886. The Government of Manitoba were not aware of this until after they had received their half-yearly account made upon the 1st of July, 1886.

Mr. HAGGART. That is a most important statement. What I want is information as to when the first reduction was made in their indemnity?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The 1st of July, 1886.

Mr. HAGGART. Are you sure?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am reasonably sure, because I remember going into it very carefully, and the Minister of Finance will correct me if I am wrong.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think that is correct.

Mr. LARIVIERE. It was after the settlement of 1885 when everything that was standing in the books of the Department of Finance was charged to Manitoba. All they thought should be chargeable to Manitoba was charged after the settlement of 1885, and the moment we found that out we protested against being charged with that amount.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes. My hon. friend (the Minister of the Interior) tells me I am correct that the first charge against them was on the 1st July, 1886, and when the account went up to Manitoba they made a protest at a reasonably early date. I do not think the delay between the first of the year and the spring, when they came down here could be held to prejudice their case.

Mr. SPROULE. The first protest was made in April, 1887.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes; the first official protest was made during the currency of the year when the charge was made against them. I think the matter has been put very lucidly already, and I believe I am correct in saying that the mission of Mr. Norquay to Ottawa was not unsuccessful. It is generally believed that the then Finance Minister assented to the proposition he laid down, and that Mr. Norquay's contention that this never was intended and could not be intended in face of the Order in Council passed by the Dominion Government to be charged to Manitoba; that contention, I believe, was assented to by the then Finance Minister.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. It was so much understood by our Government in Manitoba that this amount has always been kept as an asset of the province in our provincial public accounts.

Mr. HAGGART. The Minister of Finance read only one clause of the settlement of the claims of Manitoba. Besides the clause he read there is the following:—

The grant of land and payments authorized by the foregoing section shall be made on the condition that they be accepted by the province, such acceptance being testified by an Act of the legislature of Manitoba as a full settlement of all claims made by the said province, for the reimbursement of costs incurred in the government of the disputed territory, or the reference of the boundary question to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and all other questions and claims discussed between the Dominion and the provincial Governments.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did not read that section, but I stated the substance of it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Does the hon. gentleman think that this could be considered a disputed question in view of the Order in Council which I have just read which had been passed by the Government of this Dominion, and forwarded to the Government of Manitoba.

Mr. HAGGART. I am coming to that. The hon. gentleman said there was an Order in Council under which the Dominion Government assumed the erection of these provincial buildings. Then if there was no deduction from the amount that was paid to the provincial government before the passage of this Act of 1885, it is a fair question to consider whether it entered into the consideration of either of the Governments before the passage of the Act. But the whole question is, when the first deduction was made from the payment to the provincial government. If it was made before this they would not have a leg to stand upon, but if it was made afterwards then there is something in the argument.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It was made afterwards without question.

Mr. HAGGART. Then the provincial government have a fair right to rely upon the Order in Council of 1878?

The PRIME MINISTER. Hear, hear.

Mr. HAGGART. I remember perfectly well that I was appointed one of a committee to consider this question, and the Finance Department took the ground that the settlement finished the whole matter. I do not say what the opinion of the Cabinet was upon the subject, but it was a fair matter of consideration whether Manitoba was entitled to the amount or not. Are you allowing them 6 per cent?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No; 5 per cent.

Mr. HAGGART. That is all they are entitled to. If the Finance Minister will bring down a statement as to when the first deduction was made and if that deduction was made after the passage of this Act, I think the House would be satisfied that it is a fair matter for consideration whether this legislation should be passed or not.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Before the final stage I will bring down information on that important point.

Mr. McMULLEN. Does this make it compulsory on the part of the Dominion to pay a 5 per cent interest on a part of the debt?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We are crediting back to Manitoba the sum improperly charged against her, and as the provinces are entitled to receive 5 per cent on their capital we do not disturb that. That is a constitutional provision. As respects the balance we propose to pay them in cash, and be done with it.

Mr. MACLEAN. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance why he pays the province 5 per cent, and only pays depositors in the savings banks 2½ per cent?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Because there happens to be a British North America Act.

Mr. MACLEAN. Then you ought to treat the public of this country as well as you treat the provinces.

On resolution 2,

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I propose to amend this by changing the amount to $231,575.47.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. MACLEAN. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he intends to add a clause to these resolutions which will provide for the Dominion getting a quit receipt from the province of Manitoba. We thought that by the previous Act we had got a quit receipt; but now we find we did not.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If we were changing the settlement of 1885, my hon. friend's suggestion might be appropriate; but we are not: we are acting within the intention of the settlement of 1885.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood that the hon. Minister of Finance put up another contention, as to which we might as well get his opinion—that according to the British North America Act the Dominion owned all the provincial buildings.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think myself that a very good argument could be made for that contention—except such buildings as the Dominion saw fit in its wisdom to assign to the various provinces.

Mr. SPROULE. Has it assigned any ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, by Order in Council, the Dominion assigned to the various provinces of the Dominion buildings suitable for the various provincial governments. All the provinces were equipped in that way. They were assigned the use of them.

Mr. SPROULE. That raises another question : why has the province of Ontario put up a legislative building at its own cost ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The province of Ontario used the Dominion buildings for a great many years. If it wants larger and handsomer buildings, I fancy it will have to pay for them itself. If the province of Manitoba wanted a new and handsomer building, it would have to erect it at its own cost.

Mr. SPROULE. If the province put it up, who would own it ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The province would. There is some doubt as to who holds the title of the original buildings that were assigned to the provinces.

Mr. SPROULE. If the Dominion owned the original building, surely it did not pass the title to the province ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is a debatable question.

Mr. ELLIS. I would like to ask if the position taken to-day will not justify the assumption generally that it is the duty of the Dominion Government to provide provincial buildings for the provinces all through. In the province of New Brunswick, we have a provincial building that cost $110,000, which we would like to have the Dominion pay for.

Mr. MACLEAN. After the remark of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that Ontario would be only too ready to make a grab—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I rise to order. The hon. gentleman has misrepresented me. I only made the remark if the provinces were making demands for a readjustment and for money, Ontario would be well to the front.

Mr. MACLEAN. In that the hon. gentleman reflected on his friends, Mr. Hardy and all his colleagues in Ontario.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I did not.

Mr. MACLEAN. And by this resolution you may be passing an Act under which the province of Ontario may come and ask to be paid for the building in the park.

Mr. SPROULE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It was an obligation on the Dominion originally to equip each province with suitable buildings to carry on its business. If out of the great territories of the North-west we should carve new provinces, it would be our duty to provide them with suitable buildings at the start ; but if they wanted to erect larger and handsomer buildings, which would come with the growth of the country, they would have to pay for them themselves.

Mr. SEMPLE. Why is it that the province of Manitoba has not made application to this House until the present year for so large a sum of money ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. The province of Manitoba has been making application to the various Governments of Canada for ten years on this subject. I do not say that it has sent formal petitions to the House ; but it has sent delegations to interview the Government. The subject has been before the Government of Canada for a long time.

Mr. McNEILL. When the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) reflected on the province of Ontario and said that Ontario would be at the front, he ought to have remembered that a gentleman in his own province, the Prime Minister of the province, has already been making claims on this Dominion, and that the Prime Minister of a province close to his, the province of Nova Scotia, has been making similar claims. Hon. gentlemen need not make a noise. I do not take up much of the time of the House, and on an important question of this kind. I think I am justified in making a few remarks. This is an evidence of the impropriety of introducing legislation of this kind in the dying days of the session. We will open up this whole subject, and discuss it at length, if hon. gentlemen opposite desire us to do so. The present measure seems to me to be very much like the opening of the water sluices ; and we shall have the flood gates for better terms open in a short time. If we are not careful what we are about, I wish to say for the province of Ontario, that I think it is always the last province to make claims on the Dominion Treasury, but unfortunately it is too much of a milch cow when the taxes have to be paid. The principal amount of the payment, unfortunately, always comes from the province of Ontario.

Resolution to be reported.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). With the permission of the House, I would like to introduce Bill (No. 167) in further amendment to the Post Office Act. He said : The amendment gives power to the Postmaster General to establish a system of special delivery of mailable matter, fixing the rates to be charged and other details. The Auditor General holds, it appears, that we could not pay for the delivery of these letters unless the messengers had passed the Civil Service Act.

Mr. FOSTER. Will this be a self-supporting service?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We propose to impose a rate of 10 cents for special delivery. The Auditor General holds that we cannot pay the messengers unless they pass the civil service examination, and I wish to have a clause in the Act which will allow us to pay our letter carriers what extra remuneration would be reasonable. I propose to use them as far as possible, but we shall also require special messengers.

Mr. CLARKE. Is it proposed to have a bicycle service?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We have not settled on the details, but our intention is to make the delivery self-sustaining.

Mr. CLARKE. You have elaborated no scheme yet.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We have, but we will feel our way gradually into it. The letter carriers will be utilized in their spare hours, and we may have to engage other messengers.

Mr. BERGERON. Is this intended to pay some of the new batch of letter carriers in Montreal, whom the Auditor General refused to pay some time ago?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This has no such object. It has no other object than what I have stated.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

The PRIME MINISTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. May I ask my hon. friend to tell us whether or not there is any absolute certainty of no further new legislation being introduced.

The PRIME MINISTER. I tell the hon. gentleman that this absolutely exhausts all the legislation the Government has to introduce, and I may add that my hon. friend the Postmaster General does not desire to proceed with this Bill if the House is not inclined to deal with it.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned 1 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Second Sitting.

WEDNESDAY, 8th June, 1898.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—SUITS BY NON-RESIDENTS.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the hon. Solicitor General, if he were in his place—and perhaps the matter will be mentioned to him by some other members of the Government—whether he has taken cognizance of a very peculiar statute that was recently passed by the legislature of Prince Edward island with respect to the enforcement of claims by persons residing out of the province. The statute provides, briefly stated, that no claim of a mercantile character by persons residing out of the province can be successfully enforced against residents of the province unless it is proved, on the trial of the action, that the commercial traveller through whom the goods were sold had taken out and paid for a license under the provisions of the provincial statute. I believe that the enactment in question has excited a good deal of interest among business men throughout Canada, and that representations looking to its disallowance were forwarded to the Department of Justice. What I desire to know is whether the matter is now under the consideration of the Department of Justice.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I will call the attention of my colleague to the subject.

BOUNDARIES OF THE PROVINCE OF QUEBEC.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton) moved second reading of Bill (No. 160) respecting the boundaries of the province of Quebec. He said: Upon the report of the Deputy Minister of the Interior, under date of 29th January, 1896, the late Government, by an Order in Council of the 6th July, 1896, agreed with the provincial government upon an international boundary line on the northern north-eastern and north-western portion of the province of Quebec. The agreement between the two Governments was confirmed by Order in Council of the late Government of 8th July, 1896. The completing of the arrangements came into my hands when I took charge of the department. An Act has been passed by the legislature of the province of Quebec ratifying the boundary line, and this Bill is for the purpose of ratifying it by this Parliament.

I lay upon the Table copies of the Order in Council and also a map which shows the boundary line that has been agreed upon.

Motion agreed. Bill read the second time, considered in committee, and reported.

GRANTS IN AID OF THE CONSTRUCTION OF PUBLIC WORKS.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair) moved second reading of Bill (No. 161) respecting the payments of grants in aid of the construction of public works.

Mr. FOSTER. I did hope that my hon. friend (Mr. Blair) would not proceed with this Bill. So far as I am concerned, I must confess that I have been unable to look at it at all. I know that the scope of it is to change the present basis, and so far as I could learn from the explanation of the Minister, to change it for the worse. It is physically impossible at this stage of the session to undertake the investigation of new Bills.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think there is nothing in the Bill which should arouse serious objection.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) has been here from the first of the session and has had all the time to press this Bill forward. Why could not this Bill have been introduced earlier, when we had people here to discuss it and time to discuss it? One penalty that a man ought to pay for negligence in such a matter is to have his Bill kept over until we have time to consider it. I do sincerely hope that it will not be pressed.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) knows that the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) is still in attendance, he would naturally be informed in this subject. There is no objection to letting the Bill stand over until that hon. gentleman is in the Chamber.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have no objection to this Bill standing over in the meantime, if my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) expresses a wish in that direction.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is allowed to stand, then.

MANITOBA SCHOOL FUND.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House resolve itself into committee on the following resolution:—

Mr. SIFTON.

That it is expedient to provide that the Governor in Council may, from the moneys invested under the provisions of subsection 3 of section 25 of chapter 54 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, forming the School Fund for the province of Manitoba, pay from time to time the Government of Manitoba, on the request of the said government, such sum or sums as the said Governor in Council thinks proper, not exceeding in the whole the sum of $200,000, the sum or sums to be paid over to be expended by the said Government of Manitoba in the support and maintenance of the public schools in that province: provided always that not more than $200,000 shall be paid to the said government for the purpose aforesaid during the present calendar year

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I hope the hon. gentleman will explain.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The proposal is to pay to the province of Manitoba the sum of $300,000, of which $200,000 is to be paid in one year, the whole payment to be made out of a fund which belongs to the province of Manitoba. In the Dominion Lands Act it was provided that sections 11 and 29 in each township should be set apart for the formation of a school fund. No provision was made for the sale of the lands at the time of the passing of this Act. Not until 1879, I think, was provision made respecting the sale of the lands, though the Act had been passed in 1872. In the meantime, however, authority was given by Parliament for the advance of certain sums out of the Dominion treasury to the Government of Manitoba on account of this school lands fund. The amount authorized to be advanced in the first instance was $30,000, of which $20,000 was drawn. Subsequently a further Act was passed allowing another $30,000 in addition to the $10,000 undrawn. Thus the Dominion Parliament anticipated the grant of this school fund by making advances to Manitoba. Subsequently, sales of land were made, and the school fund began to grow, so much so, that the Dominion Government was repaid its advances and the fund accumulated beyond that. Under the arrangement, the Government of Manitoba was entitled to receive interest upon this fund from time to time, and interest has been paid to the province of Manitoba from that time down to the present. The sales of land were made at an average price of $7.68 per acre, the minimum price being $5. Assuming that the lands were to be sold only at the minimum price, the land to be sold for the benefit of this school fund would result in the accumulation of some millions of dollars. It will be seen, therefore, that in proposing to pay the Government of Manitoba $300,000 out of that fund, we are still reserving a very large sum, which will remain for the future purposes of education. Up to a very recent date the school fund in the hands of the Government amounted to $475,764. Out of that we propose to advance to the Government of Manitoba, as explained by the resolution, $200,000 in one year and a further sum of $100,000, being a total of $300,000, as I have already intimated. As these lands are of ever increasing value, the sale of them must yield a very large sum for the benefit of education in Manitoba. It will be generally admitted, I suppose, that the needs of the schools fund in Manitoba are greater to-day than they are likely to be at any future time. As the country is settled and villages are formed, it will be much easier for the people of Manitoba to maintain their schools than at the present day with their sparse population. I think, therefore, it is sound policy that in the early days of the province, when they are not as well off as they may hope to be at a later time, we should give them a portion of their capital fund for that purpose, taking care, however, to reserve enough for the future needs of the province. As I have already said, we are giving them only $300,000 out of a fund already in hand of $475,000, and the prospect is that as the years roll on this fund will accumulate in the hands of the Government for the benefit of the schools of Manitoba. The question has been asked me in conversation by one or two hon. members whether this is a fund which can be applied in this way, and whether it is not a trust fund which should be reserved for the future benefit of the schools. I think we are bound to leave that largely to the Government of Manitoba. We have already left to the Government of Manitoba the disposition of the interest on this fund from year to year, and on the same principle, if they are entitled to receive interest from time to time and free to use it to the best of their own judgment for school purposes, I see no reason why we should not give them this portion of the principal fund upon the same terms and conditions, allowing them to exercise their own judgment in the application of these moneys to the purposes of the advancement of education in the province of Manitoba. I do not think I can add anything to what I have said; I have given the substance of the proposal, and if reference is desired to the various Acts of Parliament relating to the subject, perhaps at a later stage I shall be able to furnish the information.

Mr. FOSTER. What conditions are attached to this grant?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The only conditions there are, are set forth in the resolutions.

Mr. FOSTER. What I mean is this: Is the Government of Manitoba at liberty to take this sum and spend it in any way they please, either directly upon roads and bridges and for current matters, or spending it for school purposes and thereby saving out of the current revenues what they should otherwise spend for school purposes, both purposes coming in the end to about the same thing? Or is it a condition of this grant that in addition to what they are now spending for education, they should spend this money also solely for the purposes of education?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The resolution declares that the money is to be spent by the said Government of Manitoba in the support and maintenance of the public schools in that province. The Government would have to receive it from us as a trust in that sense, but we would be bound to leave it very largely to their own discretion, I should say, as to how they should apply the money, but always applying it to the purposes of public education. In that respect the money would stand exactly in the same position as the money advanced to them years ago by former Governments, and in the same position as the money we have been paying from time to time in the form of interest. They all form part of a trust fund, but the exercise of that trust was left to the Government of Manitoba.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend will see that he has changed the conditions entirely. He is not here making a loan, and he is not paying interest. Interest was contemplated to be paid to them by the original Act. But he will see that if the Manitoba Government, for instance, now are spending, say, $200,000 for education, and if, on the receipt of this, they cut down that vote to $100,000, and supplement it by $100,000 of this sum, using the present $100,000 for other purposes, it is exactly the same as if they took this money and applied it to other purposes. Is there any safeguard in that respect? Otherwise if there is not, it is equivalent to putting this in the hands of the provincial government to spend for purposes other than education, which was never contemplated in the bargain which was made, and both sides have a right to see that that bargain is carried out, unless some urgent reason, arising out of the total change of circumstances, intervenes.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The amount would have to stand in the same position as the advances made by the Dominion in former years. No doubt the intention of the Act, and it is also expressed in this resolution, is that the money should be applied to educational purposes. I am not quite clear as to what restriction can be placed upon the province in the line the hon. gentleman suggests. At all events, we advance the money precisely as it was advanced in former years, the only difference being that while former advances were of a moderate sum, this is somewhat larger.

Mr. LARIVIERE. The explanations of the Finance Minister of the reasons of doing away with this trust fund for educational purposes have been cut very short by the hon. gentlemen, and I readily understand how he should hesitate to take the position he is now taking in reference to that question. In 1872, of their own action and good-will, the Government and Parliament of that day passed an Act to regulate the sale and administration of the public domain, not only in the province of Manitoba, but in the whole North-west Territories as well. Among the provisions that were embodied in that Dominion Lands Act, as it is called, was one whereby a reservation of two sections of 640 acres of land in each township was set aside, so that when that land was either leased or sold, the proceeds should be devoted to public education in the province of Manitoba and in the future provinces of the Territories. The intention was to make a permanent fund, and the revenue derived from that fund was to be handed over to the several provinces to put them in a position better to aid public education in their respective territories. Section 22 of the Dominion Lands Act, passed in 1872, reads as follows:—

And whereas it is expedient to make provision in aid of education in Manitoba and the North-west Territories, therefore sections 11 and 29 in each and every surveyed township throughout the extent of the Dominion lands, shall be and are hereby set apart as an endowment for purposes of education.

As an endowment for purposes of education. Subsection 1 reads as follows:—

1. The sections so dedicated shall be thereafter dealt with in such manner as may be prescribed by law, and the same are hereby withdrawn from the operation of the clauses in this Act relating to purchase by private interest, and to homestead rights, and it is hereby declared that no such right of purchase by private entry or homestead right shall be recognized in connection with the said sections or any part or parts thereof.

2. Provided, that on a township being surveyed, should such sections or either of them, or any part of either, be found to have been settled on and improved, then in such case the occupant or occupants, conforming to the requirements of this Act shall be confirmed in such possession, and the Secretary of State shall select a quantity equal to that found to have been so settled on from the unclaimed lands in such township, and shall withdraw the land so selected from sale and settlement, and shall set apart and publish the same as school lands, by notice in the "Canada Gazette."

3. Provided further, that the land found to have been settled upon and improved as above, is not embraced within the class of land reserved from the operation of the homestead provision of this Act by subsection 18 of section 34 thereof.

When this Bill was presented to Parliament it originated in the Senate, because the Dominion Lands Department, which was then organized, was under the control of the Department of the Secretary of State, which at that time was presided over by the Hon. Mr. Aikins, a member of the Senate, and who is still a member of the Senate. The hon. gentleman brought in this Bill, and on the 6th of May, 1872, a debate occurred, and some questions were asked by members. On moving the second reading, and in course of his explanation, he said:

The Bill provided that certain reservations be made in every township for educational purposes.

The late Hon. Mr. Bureau, then one of the leading members of that House, and a Liberal, I may add, was alarmed because he did not see in that Bill any provision for safeguarding the different religious beliefs that were entitled to their share of this reservation for the purpose of supporting their respective schools. I take from the newspapers that were published at the time, because we had no "Hansard" in those days, the following as being a report of his remarks:

Hon. Mr. Bureau, speaking on this Bill, made the following remarks:—He was in favour of assisting education by public grants, but every care should be taken to avoid a repetition of such difficulties as arose in this country in the past. No one had forgotten the question of clergy reserves or the seigniorial tenure. He trusted that every guarantee and security would be given to the parties who might receive these lands for the object contemplated by the Bill, so that the issue might be satisfactory to the peace and happiness of the community.

The Bill was then read a second time. Hon. Mr. Aikins explained that the provisions laid down were the preliminaries and would be completed later on by legislation which would provide for the administration of those lands. On 16th May the Bill was discussed in committee on clause 22, which is the clause I have read. Mr. Bureau, being apprehensive as to what might happen later on, if safeguards were not put in the Bill to avoid friction and afford protection on the part of the minority against the majority—for he was a far-seeing politician, and his remarks were apparently a prediction of what happened in Manitoba—proposed an amendment:

That the lands be divided among all religious denominations for separate school purposes, in proportion to their number.

Then Mr. Aikins explained that such a provision could not be incorporated in the Bill, which specially set apart the lands as an endowment for the purposes of education. Had the advice of that hon. gentleman been followed at the time, we perhaps might have avoided the great question of separate schools in the province of Manitoba, because this safeguard would perhaps have prevented other legislation which has been adopted later on. In 1879, as has been stated by the Finance Minister, the legislation on the school lands was completed. It was supplemented by the following section on the consolidation of the Dominion Lands Act. This was in addition and following section 22, which I have mentioned, and it is entered as section 23:

The school lands shall be administered by the Governor in Council, through the Minister of the Interior :

(1) Provided that all sales of school lands shall be at public auction, and that in no case shall such land be put up at an upset price less than the fair value of corresponding unoccupied land in the township in which such land shall be situated.

(2) Provided also that the terms of the sale of the school lands shall be one-fifth in cash at the time of the sale and the remainder in nine equal semi-annual instalments, with interest at 6 per cent per annum, to be paid with each instalment on the balance of the purchase money from time to time remaining unpaid.

Subsection 3, which is a very important one, and should receive the attention of the Government, is as follows:—

(3) Provided also, that all moneys from time to time realized from the sale of school lands shall be invested in Dominion securities and interest deriving therefrom, after deducting the cost of management, shall be paid annually to the government of the province or territory within which such lands are situated, for the support of the public schools therein, the money so paid to be distributed with such view by the government of said province or territory in such manner as may be deemed most expedient.

While it is true that on one or two occasions the province of Manitoba has asked for an advance or loan out of the proceeds of the revenue arising from the sale of those lands, this was only asked as a loan, with the idea and with the intention that this amount would be deducted from, not the capital, but from the interest that would accrue after the sale of those lands had taken place; but to-day we are asked to hand over this trust fund, or a portion of the capital to the province of Manitoba. The province of Manitoba has no vested rights to those lands or even to that trust fund, except by the good-will of this Government. This reservation of school lands is not a part or parcel of the condition of the entry of Manitoba into the confederation. It was through the generosity of this Parliament that the fund was created, and it was created after the manner of similar funds existing in the western states of the Union. The difference is that the lands there are administered by the different states, not by the central power; they are never sold, they are only leased, for long terms sometimes; but the states never part with the lands, the view being that this fund should never cease to exist, but should constitute a perpetual revenue for the benefit of education. In this case we have sold the land, whether rightly or wrongly I do not say; but I believe we acted wrongly, and now it is proposed to pay away the amount collected from the proceeds of the sale and give it to the province of Manitoba. Is it proposed to give it for educational purposes? No. If hon. members will read the last Budget speech of the Treasurer of Manitoba they will see that he has put down that amount to be credited to the consolidated fund of the province, and they have not increased the amount voted for education, except by the very small sum of $10,000 or $15,000. We are going to give them $200,000 which they can throw into their public treasury in order to make up a deficit that was created in other directions.

Mr. BERGERON. By bad government.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I am not going to discuss the politics of the province of Manitoba. This morning I supported a resolution that benefited Manitoba because I thought it was just and right for the province to get what was due her, but in this case I am bound to oppose any proposition which will place the Government of Manitoba in a position to squander a fund that has been created by the will of this Parliament, and which should be held sacred not only by the province but by the Dominion Parliament as well. I shall not, Mr. Speaker, mix up this matter with that of the Manitoba school question, but I am bound to say there is a good deal of affinity and a strong relationship between the two. Whether it is for the welfare of the minority or not I will not discuss at this moment, but, Sir, if it is meant to help the minority what is the hurry about it. Why not wait until that question is entirely settled, more especially as gentlemen opposite say it is almost settled and that the minority will get satisfaction.

Mr. BERGERON. When?

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Ah, when; that is just the point, but I will not put the question in that way. Let us wait for another occasion and if the school question is settled as I hope it will be and as I wish it should be, and if it is settled to the satisfaction of the minority and in a permanent manner, then perhaps we may trust the legislature with the control of that land and with that fund. But, Sir, even then, even if it were at the price of the settlement of the school question in favour of the minority, I say that in the interests of the whole community in Manitoba, in the interests of the majority as well as the minority, in the interests of the Protestant community as well as the Catholic community, the school fund of the province should be safeguarded so as to prevent any possibility of that fund disappearing. If we keep on spending the capital of that trust—and it is a trust fund—if we take it away from the consolidated funds of the Dominion of Canada and allow it to disappear, then later on the province of Manitoba, and the other provinces similarly situated in this regard, will come to the central power and they will say to this Parliament: What have you done with our trust fund for education; what has become of the millions of dollars which you said was there for the support of our schools? Sir, if we allow this law to be amended there will be before long a general reprobation of our action in the whole community, for we will have deprived our children and grandchildren of that precious deposit for the support of their education and the education of their offspring.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to say a few words on this question because I consider it a matter of very great importance. The same principle obtains in the older provinces of the confederation as is involved in the proposal now made to the House in regard to this Manitoba fund. At confederation when the Dominion Government took over the school lands belonging to the province of Ontario and Quebec, these lands were set apart to form a perpetual trust fund out of which education was to be maintained in these provinces. From that up to the present time we have never allowed the provinces to break in upon that capital. Yearly they receive the result of the investment of these funds at 5 per cent interest, and we receive annually in the province of Ontario a large sum of money on that account. If it should ever happen that the Dominion Parliament should so far forget themselves, and that the province of Ontario would become so needy as to ask to have that capital handed over to them, and meanwhile squander it, the result, in a few years afterwards, must assuredly be that the province would be obliged to tax itself to a much larger extent than it does to-day for the support of education. As would happen in Ontario so it would happen in the province of Manitoba. The Dominion Government holds these trust funds for educational purposes, and when Manitoba came into confederation an amount of land was set apart for the purpose of establishing an educational fund upon the same lines, and so as to, in perpetuity have an income for the province to enable it to support education. The Federal Government pays to that province the interest upon that fund to the extent of 5 per cent, or whatever is realized from these lands. The fund is held in perpetuity and as it accumulates from the additional sales of land the provinces receive a larger amount every year. I say that if you break in on the capital of that fund, you are not only doing a great wrong to the province, but you are establishing a principle that may result in the other provinces asking the right to control their own school funds. I know that this contention was set up by Ontario some time ago, but the Dominion Government very wisely did not agree to it and have never sanctioned it. Those trust funds are held by the Dominion to-day, and we in Ontario hope they will be held in perpetuity upon the same principle as in the past, and that only the interest on these funds will be paid the province of Ontario. Now, if you do as is proposed in this resolution :

Pay from time to time to the Government of Manitoba, on the request of the said government, such sum or sums as the Governor in Council thinks proper, not exceeding in the whole the sum of $300,000.

Mr. LaRIVIERE.

What will be the result? We do not know how much that fund is to-day, but $300,000 will be a serious inroad upon it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is $475,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Then you only leave $175,000 of an investment on which to pay the interest to the province. This takes away a very large part of the invested golden egg that yields a return to the province from year to year, and if the province unwisely or extravagantly squanders that, what will be the result? Why, they will have to look to other sources to pay for their education in the future, and if the burden becomes onerous on them they will apply to the Dominion Government to make up that fund from some other sources and an appeal will be made to this Government to raise the fund to such an amount as will give them a reasonable yearly income for the support of education in their province. We shall be doing a great wrong if we do this. You might just as appropriately hand over to the Government of Ontario the trust funds which we hold for educational purposes in that province as to hand over this money to the province of Manitoba. It is exactly the same principle, and if the argument holds good in the one case, it is just as good in the other. It is true, Manitoba has made the claim on the ground that she is specially needy just now; but you can always have the same claim put forward by any province when it wants money; and whenever their friends are in power in the Federal Government, they are likely to make their reasoning prevail. I say that the principle of this thing is radically wrong and unsound, and not in harmony with the principle that obtains in the case of the other provinces, for which we hold trust funds for educational purposes; and when we give these funds over to the provinces, and they are squandered, another claim will be made on the Dominion Government for additional funds in the future.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman says "Carried." If he would carry more brains in his head, it would be more valuable to his constituency; but if he would exercise more patience when these important questions are being discussed, which affect not only the province of Manitoba, but his own province as well, it would be more becoming, and better for the people he represents. I say we should not give up these trust funds, because if we do, it will not be long before another claim will be made upon us for making them up again, or else, if they are squandered, an additional amount of direct taxation will be entailed on the people of the province for the support of education. We are told in this resolution that this money is to be paid over, to be expended by the Government of Manitoba in the support and maintenance of the public schools of that province. My hon. friend from Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) says the money is to go into the consolidated revenue of the province. This resolution does not appear to indicate that that is the aim in paying over the money. I am not sure whether it will go there or not; but if it does go into the consolidated revenue, to be expended as the provincial government wish to expend it, that only makes the matter so much the worse. If it could be proven that owing to the province of Manitoba being a new country, and owing to the urgent needs of the schools in every part of the country, where the people are weak and unable to build schools, there might be some reason for granting them some aid; but I maintain that it would not be sufficient ground for doing what is proposed in the resolution here. If, on the other hand, the province should squander the money for any purpose, and not for education, that is a strong argument why it should not be given. But I say the principle is wrong. If you give aid to Manitoba, you cannot possibly escape giving aid to Ontario and Quebec, and to every other province for which you hold trust funds for educational purposes. In my judgment the Parliament of Canada should not consent to this. If we do, we shall be doing a great injustice to the people of Manitoba as well as to the people of the other provinces of the Dominion, because while it is not their money which we are paying to-day, we would in the end be required to pay over their money after this is squandered and the province of Manitoba would not be able to support their schools, and would be obliged to apply again. I think the principle is wrong, and I sincerely hope this House will not grant it.

Mr. HENDERSON. The importance of this subject is the only excuse I would offer for occupying even three or four minutes of the time of the House this afternoon. To my mind, this is a matter of great importance, not only from the standpoint of Manitoba, but from the standpoint of all the different provinces of the Dominion; because I apprehend that what we are doing for Manitoba to-day will very shortly be done for all the other provinces of the Dominion. The province of Ontario was possibly the most fortunate province with regard to trust funds held by the Dominion. Years ago there was $3,351,727 held in trust by the Dominion Government for the province of Ontario on which the province drew 5 per cent each year. This was made up of four different funds, known as the Land Improvement Fund, the Upper Canada Grammar School Fund, the Upper Canada Building Fund, and the Common School Fund. The 5 per cent which the province drew annually from the Dominion Government on this money, formed a very important addition to the revenue of the province; but unfortunately the province of Ontario became hard up. Its expenditure was increased away beyond its ordinary revenue, and it became necessary to appeal to the Government at Ottawa for money to enable it to carry on its affairs and make both ends meet. As far back as 1888 the province of Ontario made a demand for assistance on the Dominion Government and obtained the large sum of $936,000. You may consider that a loan. It was claimed as an advance against these funds. In 1889, while the provincial government were building the Parliament buildings in Toronto, another advance was made to the province of $500,000; and a year after another advance of $130,000 was made. Year after year round sums were paid by the Dominion to the province, so that the province of Ontario owes the Dominion of Canada the sum of $2,000,000, which stands against these funds. Originally we obtained interest at 5 per cent on the total amount of the trust funds; but now the hon. Minister of Finance withholds the interest on $2,000,000, amounting to $100,000, and the ordinary revenue of the province is depleted to that amount. The same thing will occur in the case of the province of Manitoba. Instead of receiving interest on $470,000, it will hereafter receive interest on only $170,000. I believe the intention of the Dominion Government was to pay off the trust funds of the province of Ontario held for common school purposes; and in 1893, power was taken by the Dominion Government to pay that money over, and at the same time, power was taken by the Government of Ontario to receive it. But unfortunately the province of Ontario used this money for ordinary purposes, just as I believe the province of Manitoba will use the money we are about to pay over for ordinary purposes, and not for school purposes at all; and the people will be obliged to tax themselves more heavily than ever for the support of their schools, because they will not have the interest arising from this fund to supplement what they will raise from direct taxation and the ordinary revenues of the province. In the case of the province of Ontario, we have had fair warning. We see that the moneys have been used for ordinary purposes, and not for school purposes at all. The revenues of the province are depleted to the amount of $100,000 each year, as will be the case in the province of Manitoba, only in a smaller way. We should take warning by what has occurred in the province of Ontario, and be careful how we treat these trust funds in the province of Manitoba, which cannot so well afford to dispense with the revenues which it receives from the Dominion. This was not the only result in the province of Ontario, and I think that the same thing will occur in the province of Manitoba. Whilst the province of Ontario was able to borrow lavishly from the Dominion, they became extravagant, and spent more than they should have spent each year.

Then, when the supply was cut off, they found themselves unable to reduce their expenditure down to its normal condition, and the result was that with a depleted revenue they were compelled to borrow money, which now amounts to the extent of $3,000,000, and there is a total loss of revenue to the country of about $200,000. I believe that the same thing will happen in Manitoba. They will use this money for ordinary purposes. The expenditure will be increased, and in the course of a year or two they will not be able to meet the increased expenditure, because they will not have $200,000 a year to draw upon, and the result will be they will start as Ontario did, on the plan of borrowing money from year to year to meet their expenditure. As the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) has so well said, this doubtless will bring about a demand from the provinces for increased subsidies—not only from the province of Manitoba but from the province of Ontario as well. And in the course of a few years, we may reasonably expect this Government to come down to Parliament, and because of the urgent demands from the various provinces, ask us to increase the subsidies, which demands would be totally unnecessary if we insisted on their keeping to the subsidies which the fathers of confederation provided.

Mr. CLARKE. May I ask the hon. Finance Minister what is the total sum, including interest, proposed to be given Manitoba under both these resolutions?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In the resolution now before us, we are giving them nothing, but paying them their own money—$300,000. The resolution we dealt with this morning, taking principal and interest, provided for an amount of between $400,000 and $500,000. This, however, is an entirely distinct matter, as it relates to the payment of their own money, which we have in our own hands.

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. HAGGART. In reply to the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Clarke), the hon. Minister said that this was their own money and that we are only giving them their own money. The interpretation which a former Minister of Justice put upon the Act that created the trust was entirely different. If the hon. gentleman will consult the law officers of the Crown, he will find that this is a trust created for our own convenience, which we have the right to change or abrogate at any time, and that it is no part of any money belonging to the province of Manitoba at all.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If it is not their own money, then the late Government and the present Government have been dealing very generously with the province of Manitoba, for we have been paying interest on this money for years.

Mr. HENDERSON.

Mr. HAGGART. No doubt.

Mr. SPROULE. The provincial government of Ontario set up the same claim with regard to our school funds, but the Dominion Government held that it was not our own money and never was, and would not pay it over. The hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Clarke) asked how much is the aggregate that Manitoba would get by these resolutions. According to the Finance Minister, it would be $798,601 which we are expected to pass through in the dying days of the session.

Mr. MACLEAN. I think that if Manitoba wants to get this money and use it, she ought to go about getting it in another way. In order to keep the distinction clear between the province and the Dominion, the province ought to be allowed to hypothecate its income from this fund. Then the whole blame would be on it. Let it hypothecate its income from this fund and issue its own bonds, and do what it likes with them, but do not make us responsible because we will be opening the door for the readjustment of the entire financial arrangements between the provinces and the Dominion. There has been more done to-day towards the re-opening of that question than in the past five years.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I know something about the claims of the provinces in the past, in which I was not an altogether uninterested party, and I am bound to say that this matter can have no relation to any claim of a province and cannot be properly made the basis of any claim by another province. We are actually, by these resolutions, giving Manitoba her own money. If we do not give her this money we pay her interest; and whether we pay the interest or the principal, is, so far as dollars and cents are concerned, a matter of no earthly importance to the Government or Parliament.

Mr. MACLEAN. But we are abandoning a trust to keep this money for educational purposes.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman's friends abandoned the trust years ago, when they passed Acts to advance the moneys of the fund without condition whatever, and gave the moneys to the province.

Mr. MACLEAN. Why should you do it if it is wrong?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Because I say it was not wrong, but right. The only difference with the hon. gentleman is that what was right before, he finds wrong now.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. The advance made before was as a loan. $30,000 were paid before as a loan, but now you are making a straight gift, and you take that from the capital account. In the other instance, it was to be taken from the revenue and should have been deducted from the accumulated interest.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I do not think you will find that item in the books.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. The statute of 1879 destroys the contention of the hon. gentleman, when he says this money belongs to the province of Manitoba. The statute of 1879 makes out of the proceeds of the sales of land a trust fund, which is to remain in the hands of the Dominion Government and be invested in Dominion securities. Therefore, Manitoba has no legal claim to that fund, but only to the revenue derived therefrom.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). I would like to ask the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) if he was not a member of the Government of Manitoba when that Government made application to the Dominion and pressed strongly its application to turn over to it the whole of the lands without restriction whatever.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I was then speaking from an entirely provincial standpoint, but my position has changed since. I have since become a member of the Canadian Parliament, and I have to look upon all matters from a Dominion standpoint.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I just desire to say that the answer which was made by the Dominion Government to the application made to Parliament by my hon. friend from Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) fully confirms the interpretation of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance. Nobody asserts that technically this money is vested in the province of Manitoba. It is vested as a trust fund in the Dominion Government.

My hon. friend the Finance Minister says that this is the money of the province of Manitoba, that we hold it in trust and that the province of Manitoba is entitled to the beneficial interest of the money. The answer of the Dominion Government at that time clearly showed that, so far back as that, the Dominion Government did not dispute that the province of Manitoba had a beneficial interest in the money and was entitled to say how it should be dealt with. They say:

The Dominion Government has taken no action in relation to those lands without full consultation with the local authorities, and pending sales, has sanctioned advances of $60,000, on account, for educational purposes.

Mr. SPROULE. This fund came from the same source as the trust fund for the province of Ontario—Crown lands, the proceeds of which were devoted to educational purposes, being held in perpetuity for the purposes of education in the province, and 5 per cent on the amount held paid every year. The province of Ontario had the right to claim this as Crown land, because the Crown lands of the province belong to the province. But, it has never been admitted by the Dominion that this fund belongs to the province of Ontario; and, if it does not, by the same parity of reasoning this does not belong to Manitoba, because this fund is an accumulation of the proceeds of lands in the province held for the benefit of education. Now, how does that fund stand? From the information given us by the Minister of Finance, we learned that there is $475,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is $475,000.

Mr. SPROULE. That is more than I understood. If the amount were $470,000, they would realize annually, at 5 per cent, $23,500. But, if you reduce that by $300,000, how much do you leave them annually for the support of education? Only $8,500. In fact, you take away all the fund except $175,000.

Mr. MACLEAN. Give it all to them.

Mr. SPROULE. We might as well give it all and destroy the fund. The very fact that you give this now will make them more needy year by year, and they will need to look to other sources for assistance to keep their schools going, or they will be forced to place a larger burden of direct taxation upon their own shoulders.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Some of the arguments put forward by the Minister of Finance are not very apt, it seems to me, in the consideration of this resolution. I do not know that it logically follows that because you have paid interest, or are under legal obligation to pay interest, you are therefore justified in paying the principal. That depends altogether on other considerations. The very circumstance that you are to pay annual interest may be the best of reasons why you should not pay the principal, and that is a point that is often dealt with in courts of law. Suppose that a fund is settled upon a marriage for the benefit of a man and his wife and their issue, the interest of that fund to be paid during the life of the husband, wife and children. It would be a remarkable thing if the trustees could justify themselves on these grounds for paying the principal to them at once. Why, the trustee who acted upon that principle would find himself in the penitentiary inside of six months. Now, the Minister of Finance tells us also that this is the money of the province. It is not the money of the province, because there is absolute control vested in this Parliament by subsection 3 of section 25. Suppose that the province does not deal with the interest in the spirit of this enactment, suppose that it applies the interest to other purposes than education, this Parliament would be justified in abrogating that trust. We propose now to hand over $300,000 to the provincial authorities to spend according to their own sweet will, and I would like the Minister of Finance or anybody else to tell me what remedy this Government or Parliament would have in case that sum is misapplied. Not the slightest. But if you leave matters as they are, you have control over the principal at least, and you can, in future, deal with the interest if the trust should be violated. Now, the hon. gentleman made what seemed to me an extraordinary statement. He said it is not of the slightest interest to this Government or Parliament what becomes of this sum.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did not say that.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I understood the hon. gentleman to say something equivalent to that. I am not pretending to quote his exact words. I am willing he should correct me if I have not understood him correctly.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I said that so far as it was a matter of dollars and cents, it was of no importance to the Dominion treasury whether we paid the principal sum or whether we paid the interest. But I said that we were concerned that the fund should be properly devoted to the purposes indicated in the trust.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Then, the hon. gentleman's remarks were almost absolutely irrelevant to the subject before us. The question we are considering is the position this Parliament and Government occupy as trustee under chapter 54 of the Revised Statutes of Canada as to the administration of this provincial fund. And I do not think that any consideration that the hon. gentleman has put forward forms a very substantial reason for putting this principal out of the hands of the trustee and into the hands of the province of Manitoba. I think that the principal money should be retained, because the trust is not created for the inhabitants of Manitoba at the present time, but for the inhabitants of the province of Manitoba for all time to come; and, when you take $300,000 of this money and hand it over to people who live in the province at the present time and allow them to spend this money for the purposes of schools or anything else, you are violating the spirit of the Act of 1896.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).

Mr. MACLEAN. To-day we have seen $755,000 voted to the province of Manitoba, and here is another vote of $300,000 for that province. And I take up a Montreal "Witness," and I read the following:—

It is stated in Winnipeg papers that the Dominion Government has given a beautiful block of six acres in the heart of the city, valued at $40,000, for the university site. The Dominion Government has also lately granted a hundred and fifty thousand acres of valuable land.

Where is this going to end? And what is in the wind, Mr. Chairman? Is there an election in Manitoba in the wind? Is there trouble in the province of Quebec calling for concessions on the part of the Government of Manitoba, so that this Government must do something to induce the Government of Manitoba to settle a question which this Government said was settled, but which, it would appear, was not settled at all? This is a raid by a province upon the federal treasury, and the raiders are succeeding. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) attacks my hon. friend from Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) on the ground that he advocated some time ago an attack upon this fund.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I did not attack him. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) should tell the truth. I simply asked him if it was the fact.

Mr. MACLEAN. But you reflected upon the hon. gentleman because he took the provincialist position, and the hon. gentleman himself to-day is taking the provincialist view of it. The Government opposite are not taking the federal view of it, but they are joining in a provincialist raid on federal funds.

Mr. QUINN. What I see before me is a proposition by the Government asking this House to pass a resolution paying from its own coffers into those of the provincial treasury of Manitoba, the sum of $300,000. Now, from the law which has been quoted by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) it seems clearly established that the funds in the hands of the Dominion treasury to-day are trust funds held by the Dominion Parliament and Government, not for the benefit of the provincial government of Manitoba, but for the benefit of the education of the people of the province of Manitoba. This Government does not hold this fund in trust for Mr. Greenway, or in trust for the legislature of Manitoba; it holds this money in trust for the people of Manitoba, and in trust for the people of Manitoba for all time, for a certain and specific object, that is, for the education of the people of Manitoba for all time. There is no explanation given to this House, even now, why such a resolution should be adopted. There is no demand even from the legislature of Manitoba asking that this money should be given by this Parliament. It seems to be a demand by the Dominion Government itself upon this House to pay out $300,000 of a trust fund, not saying that it is asked for by the people for whose benefit this Parliament holds it, not saying that it is asked for even by the government of that province; but it is a demand to pay over, without any reason given by this Government, to the provincial government of Manitoba a sum of $300,000 which is held by this Government for the benefit of the people of Manitoba. Now, let us try and assimilate this case to one that presents itself to the local legislatures at every session. We often see that men in dying create trusts, or trusts are created by donations, inter vivos, for the benefit of the children born, or to be born. In order that that trust may be broken, in order that that money may be taken from the position in which it was placed by the testator, it is necessary that application should be made to the local legislature, not alone by the person who holds the trust in his hand, not alone by the immediate beneficiary of this trust, but by all persons interested in that trust, and no provincial legislature, I feel bound to say, would assume the responsibility of breaking a trust and of distributing the money held by any individual under a trust already created by donation inter vivos, or by will, without application for the breaking of that trust on the part of those who are immediately interested, as well as of those who are most remotely interested in that trust. Now, to-day there is no demand made to us, at any rate no explanation given to us, that the Government of Manitoba asks for $300,000. There is no statement made to this Parliament that this money is to be used for any particular purpose. There is certainly no demand made by the people who are interested that this money should be paid by the Dominion Government for the education of their children, nor is there any guarantee given, either by the government or people, that this money should be used for educational purposes alone. What would be a proper proceeding to induce any hon. member of this House to vote in favour of this resolution? It should be placed before him that the Government of Manitoba required a sum of $300,000 to invest in public buildings, in school buildings, or in some other manner for the benefit of education; that they were unable out of the ordinary resources of their province to meet this expenditure without raising a loan specially for that purpose; that there were in the hands of the Government of the Dominion a sum of more than $300,000 held in trust for educational purposes; and that the fund which would be raised by them by bonds would cost as much, at any rate, as the interest which was being paid by the Dominion Government to them on the funds which they hold in their hands. Would that alone be sufficient? Would a demand made by the government of the province alone be sufficient in any ordinary case without the local legislature asking for the distribution of a trust fund? No, it would be right then for this Parliament to say to that Government: Not only must you show us that you are going to use this money for the benefit of education generally in the province of Manitoba, but you must prove to the satisfaction of this Government that this fund is required by the whole people of the province of Manitoba; that it is going to be used for the benefit of the whole people of the province, and whenever you satisfy us to that extent, then we are prepared to hand over to you that sum of money. What may be the consequences? Why, we are voting to-day a sum of $300,000 out of the trust funds held by this Government, out of the capital sum held by this Government for education in Manitoba, while there is an unsettled question involving the education of a very large portion of the people, of a large and substantial minority of that province. What guarantee has that unfortunate minority that one dollar of this $300,000 should go to the benefit of their education? Is there not on the contrary an absolute guarantee that every dollar of that money should be expended, not for their benefit, but to their detriment? If once such a sum of money as $300,000 is paid out of that trust fund by this Government, without consulting or considering in any way the claims of that minority upon this fund, is it not a precedent for further demands upon this trust fund to an unlimited extent, until finally every dollar of it is taken and expended for the benefit of the majority, or rather for the benefit of the present government in the province of Manitoba, and, as I said before, to the injury of the minority in that province. Therefore, I hope that this House will not pass this resolution. I think it would be a great misfortune that such a precedent should be laid down as that this Government would have the right to vote such a sum of money without putting before this Parliament sufficient reasons in the form of a demand, first from the Government of Manitoba, and next in the form of a resolution or some representations, both from the majority and the minority of Manitoba, saying that such money is necessary for the education of the people of the province.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I think this is a very serious matter, perhaps the most serious that has been brought before the House during the present session, and there have been a good many important subjects before it. From what I have heard the Minister of Finance say, I think that he almost, if not entirely, ignores the trust that this Government held over the funds in question. That, to my mind, is a matter of very grave importance. I cannot find, in looking over the public accounts of Manitoba, any reference made to this $400,000 as forming part of the assets of that province at any time in its history. That is in itself the strongest evidence that they never considered this in the light of a provincial asset. But that is the very light in which the Government considers it at this moment. It never was intended under subsection 3 of chapter 25 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, that such a view should be taken of their duty in that behalf. The section reads :

All moneys from time to time realized from the sale of school lands shall be invested in securities of Canada to form a School Fund, and the interest arising therefrom, after deducting cost of management, shall be paid annually to the government of the province or territory within which such lands are situated, towards the support of public schools therein ; and the moneys so paid shall be distributed for that purpose by the government of such province or territory in such manner as it deems expedient.

Now, reasoning by analogy, the trustee of a private fund would have no right to do anything of the kind. He would exercise the duties pertaining to his trust in just the same manner as any other person who carries out the wishes of a deceased person, or of the creator of a trust which is to be carried out by his executors or trustees. When the Parliament of Canada entered into this arrangement with the Government of Manitoba, it was upon the distinct understanding that it was a trust. The Parliament of Canada was not in any sense bound as a matter of law to enact such legislation, so that the Finance Minister is wrong when he says that the Government are but giving back to the people of Manitoba property which was theirs. The people of Manitoba never owned this property ; they had simply the right to the interest of 5 per cent on $400,000, by the grace of the Parliament of this country. It constitutes a gross breach of faith—I can stigmatize it as nothing else—for the Government of this Dominion at this late date, after having entered into that arrangement and lived up to it during all these years, now completely to subvert the object for which this fund was originally intended, for if it is placed in the consolidated fund of Manitoba that is the end of it so far as benefit would accrue to the public schools of Manitoba, and that was the ground and the only ground on which the Government entered into that arrangement and set apart the interest on that sum. Have we come to this, that the Government of Canada will disregard almost every principle of legislation, whether it is by precedent or regulation, in order to carry out any aim ? I do not know what possible aim they can have in this instance, unless it is to thus endeavour to enter the thin edge of the wedge, the better to enable the Government to enlarge the subsidies given to the provinces and make better terms with the provinces, whose representatives have been approaching this Government ever since their accession to office, asking that better terms be given to their respective provinces. It is a very serious matter. It is carrying out the predictions made by certain portions of the press before hon. gentlemen opposite secured the confidence of the people, and regarding it in that light, it is of so much importance that I do not think the representatives of the people of this country will be doing their duty to their constituents if this measure is allowed to pass this House without our emphasizing by our votes our condemnation of the principle involved in it.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the Finance Minister lay on the Table before the second reading all correspondence and memorials in connection with this resolution ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) made a motion on the subject some time ago, and the papers were brought down.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. The correspondence I moved for, was respecting the item we discussed this morning.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The only correspondence is the memorial of the Manitoba Government, which I hold in my hand.

Mr. MARCOTTE. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I cannot allow this resolution to pass without protesting to the utmost of my power against what I believe is a most flagrant injustice towards a portion of the people of the province of Manitoba. Although this resolution was laid upon the Table of the House two years ago, the Government have not yet asked us to vote it ; and in so doing, they wished, perhaps, to invite us to consider more seriously the importance of this measure and the injustice which it involves. It is unjust, not only because it gives away a fund set apart for the support and maintenance of schools, but also because it gives it away before the Manitoba school question is definitely settled.

The present Government propose to pay, under this resolution, to the Greenway Government, a sum of $300,000, that is to say, they propose to take this sum out of the fund set apart for the maintenance and support of schools, and of which they were only the trustees. In so giving away a notable portion of this school fund, the Government are sweeping away the only guarantee which the Catholic minority could rely upon, in order to have their rights restored to them. What I rose for to-day was not to ask the Government to grant this sum to the minority, but to press upon them the imperative necessity of meting out full justice to the minority and to grant them a reasonable proportion of the interests arising from that fund, in order to enable them to maintain their schools. What I press now upon the Cabinet is only this, that the interest be paid over the Catholic minority, ratably to the population of the different religious denominations.

When the province of Manitoba entered confederation, there existed an educational system under which Catholics had a right to their separate schools. The interest accruing from the school fund, under section 25, chapter 54 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, is to be paid over annually to the Government for the maintenance of public schools. But the question is, what was meant by public schools, as mentioned in the statute. The term "public schools" was then applied to denominational schools to which the minority as well as the majority could send their children. I would like to know why the Government are handing over to the Manitoba Government the moneys appropriated to educational purposes for the benefit of a portion of the province only, whereas, primitively, that school fund was to be distributed indiscriminately between the different creeds and races then forming the population of Manitoba. This state of things no longer prevails there. After the coming into power of the Greenway Government, they enacted that iniquitous legislation of 1890, which deprived the Catholic minority of their denominational schools, and now there are only Godless schools left, called public schools. True, the present Government have attempted to do something, and the agreement arrived at is known under the name of the Laurier-Greenway arrangement. But it has been shown that the Manitoba public schools are only Protestant schools under another name, and consequently, if you are going to pay over to the Manitoba Government as you propose under this resolution, not only the interests, but also the capital of that school fund, all the money will go to the public schools and nothing will be left for the support of the Catholic schools, which are so far from being self-supporting that public collections have to be taken for their maintenance. Catholics cannot allow their children to attend schools conducted under a secular system; they are forbidden by their conscience to do so. Mr. Chairman, I am told that the public schools mentioned in the Act are purely and simply Protestant schools, and if you are going to pay over to them, not only the interest but also the capital of that school fund, I say you are not carrying out the idea of confederation; and this is plainly a breach of the spirit, if not of the letter of the constitution. I feel in duty bound to denounce to the utmost of my power this breach of the law, and I register my protest on behalf of the Catholic population of the province of Manitoba. As I just said, the Dominion Government are throwing away the only means left them to come to the relief of the Catholic minority in Manitoba. Let us suppose, one moment, that the Prime Minister and his followers should redeem the pledges given to the electorate and introduce and pass a remedial law; but we know beyond a doubt that we could not coerce the Manitoba Government into subsidizing the Catholic schools. Now, I ask, what means are the Government going to take in order to afford relief to the Manitoba Catholics, in case the Catholic schools were restored? The only means would be to distribute among the denominational schools the moneys out of the school fund which they are now proposing to give to the Manitoba Government. I will go further and say that, instead of denouncing the Manitoba Government for creating bad feeling and disturbing the peace and harmony which prevailed in this country, the hon. gentlemen opposite are accessories to their wrong-doing, because they are fully aware that the provincial grants go to the public schools only. Let us suppose, for a moment, that the moneys out of that school fund were paid over exclusively to the Catholic schools, what an outcry should we not hear from the Protestant people of the country. Well, we are more broad-minded more public-spirited than that; we do not ask that those moneys should be exclusively granted to the Catholic schools, but what we want is that those moneys should be distributed ratably to the population, as is done in the province of Quebec and some other provinces. Therefore, I hold that if it were not fair to ask the Government to grant those moneys to the Catholic schools exclusively, although we would not be open to censure for affording relief to those who are oppressed, it is unfair to pay over those moneys exclusively to the Protestant schools. I am surprised at not hearing the hon. gentlemen opposite denouncing such a state of things. I protest against this action of the Government, because they are giving to the Greenway Government a reward they are not entitled to, being rather open to criticism for their conduct. Sir, had the voters in the province of Quebec foreseen in 1896 what has transpired since, had they known that, instead of meting out full justice, as they were pledged to do, the hon. gentlemen opposite intended to pay over to the Greenway Government $300,000, even before having settled the school question, and to hand over to them the school fund which would have enabled them to afford relief to the Catholic minority, I say that the result of the elections would have been quite different. Sir, I claim that the present Government, in paying over $300,000 to the Manitoba Government, in defiance of their most solemn pledges, are committing a most daring outrage. The right hon. leader of the House and his followers have pledged themselves to mete out full justice; they went even to the length of pledging themselves to appoint a commission of inquiry which would be presided over by Sir Oliver Mowat, and yet that commission was never appointed, and the Government have failed to redeem the pledges given to the interested parties, who were told that full satisfaction would be given them. Are they giving full satisfaction to those interested parties, when proposing to pay over $300,000 for the maintenance of public schools? No, Sir, far from that, they are thus doing away with the only guarantee the Catholic minority could rely upon. They are merely doing another injustice, without giving the least satisfaction to the Catholic minority. I do not want to take away from the Protestant schools that portion of the public moneys to which they are entitled. No; in the province of Quebec we are not used to dealing unfairly with anybody. But, in the province of Manitoba, they have despoiled the Catholic minority, and that is the reason why Mr. Langevin is asking for public collections for the maintenance of those Catholic schools, which the hon. gentlemen opposite are doing their best to wipe away, with the complicity of the Greenway cabinet by proposing a measure under which they are handing over that school fund to the Protestant schools, after having given their pledge to the Catholics that full justice would be done. Instead of giving them any protection, they are removing, under this very resolution, the only guarantee which the Catholics could rely upon, by the fact that they give away that fund. I arraign the Government of the day for having broken their pledges, and for doing away with the only safeguard for the maintenance of the Manitoba Catholic schools; I charge them with violating the spirit of the constitution and rewarding, at the same time, the very men who have fostered discord and disturbed the harmony which prevailed in the province of Quebec and in the other provinces of the Dominion of Canada. The Catholics of this country, Sir, are broad-minded and public-spirited enough to realize that in order to make this mighty confederation a success, and to build up this nation, one nationality or religious creed should not interfere with rights and privileges of another nationality or creed. There ought not to be any friction among the several religious creeds of this country; and the Government ought not to afford relief to the very men who have perpetrated wrong, as they are now proposing to do. I will not trespass any longer on the patience of this House, and before resuming my seat, I wish to protest again with all the energy that is in me against this resolution. My fellow-citizens in the province of Quebec, I hope, will come to realize the character of this measure; they will insist upon the Government of the day redeeming their pledges, instead of coming to the assistance of the Greenway Government, their accomplices in the work of persecution, and granting them $300,000 for the maintenance of public schools which are really Protestant schools. I register my protest in the name of the constituency which did me the honour of returning me to Parliament on the school question; and I hope the Catholic members of this House will register their votes in favour of the interests of the minority.

Mr. McNEILL. I intend to say only a few words. I wish to protest in the most earnest manner against the passage of measures of this kind in the dying days of the session. The introduction of resolutions such as these is much more objectionable than the introduction of a resolution in the dying days of the session granting a large bonus to a railway. For the passage of these measures means the acceptance of principles which are very wide reaching in their applications. One of these measures involves a raid by provinces upon the Dominion treasury, at least I very much fear that it will prove to be so. In the case of the other resolution we have what is regarded by some of those whose opinion is most entitled to weight in this House, very much like a breach of trust. Surely these are questions which should not be introduced into this House at this time of the session. Surely these are questions that ought to be open to debate in the gravest form; and if the Government be misjudged in any regard in respect to these questions, they must blame themselves for introducing them at this time when they cannot be properly discussed. They may be forced through the House. No doubt these resolutions will be forced through the House. Of course the Government will have the majority to do so. But I do not think the Government will be able to force a favourable opinion from the people of this country in reference to the course they have pursued.

Mr. MACLEAN. I wish to read one clause in reference to this question. Section 363 of the Criminal Code says:

Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to seven years' imprisonment who, being a trustee of any property for the use or benefit, either in whole or in part, of some other person, or for any public or charitable purpose, with intent to defraud, and in violation of his trust, converts anything of which he is trustee to any use not authorized by the trust.

That is the law of the land; that is the Criminal Code of this country, and for a breach of that law the punishment is seven years' imprisonment.

Mr. SPROULE. Indict the whole crowd.

Mr. BERGERON. I emphasize what has been said by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House in protest against the policy of the Government bringing down such important legislation as this at the end of the session. My hon. friend from Brockville (Mr. Wood) intimated that this was the commencement of a general raid upon the federal treasury, and there is no doubt in my mind that later on the other provinces of the Dominion will seek for similar favours. Let me point out to my hon.

friend from Brockville (Mr. Wood) and to my hon. friend from Bruce (Mr. McNeill) that such a thing need not surprise us, for we have the pleasure of having in this Cabinet ex-Premiers from the provinces, who have been brought to Ottawa by the right hon. the Prime Minister to form what has been called by its admirers the greatest Government Canada ever had. These ex-Premiers were not responsible for all the misdeeds of their political friends when in Opposition, and I give them a certificate that they are innocent of the means adopted by the Premier to attain power. But, Sir, these ex-provincial Premiers have doubtless seen that the days of this Government are numbered, and being still in the prime of life—I do not except the Minister of Railways, he will be glad to know—they are anticipating a return to their own provinces after defeat here, and before doing so, they are wisely taking the precaution of putting the finances of these provinces in solvent shape. Let us not forget that this Government is going at a terrific pace in spending public money. The Minister of Trade and Commerce, who was so watchful of the public treasury when in Opposition, seems to be asleep when this session, including this resolution, we are voting away $50,000,000 of the people's money.

Mr. SPROULE. Over $50,000,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Probably over $50,000,000. Those hon. gentlemen opposite who know something about the matter—I am not speaking of the rank and file of the Liberal members, who would vote anything at all—know very well that this cannot last, if it did these buildings would be besieged from outside, and they know we are going on at such a rate that the whole thing is bound to collapse very soon. More than that, when the right hon. gentleman addressed his memorandum, signed by his own hand, to some of his friends, and which memorandum found its place in a larger one addressed to the head of the church to which he belongs; the right hon. gentleman, I say, spoke slightly of the Remedial Bill, and one of his arguments was that should the Remedial Bill become law, it never could be enforced, because there would not have been any money to enforce it. Now, Sir, the gentlemen to whom the Prime Minister addressed his memorandum will be very much surprised when they read this resolution, because it gives them a sample of what could have been done if the Remedial Bill had been carried out.

The PRIME MINISTER. Why was it not done then?

Mr. BERGERON. Because the right hon. gentleman and his friends prevented the passing of that Bill.

The PRIME MINISTER. Why was it not in the Remedial Bill?

Mr. BERGERON. Because we had not the right to put it in the Bill.

The PRIME MINISTER. Hear, hear.

Mr. BERGERON. Why does the Prime Minister ask that question when he knows very well we could not tell the province of Manitoba: You shall spend such money for such a purpose. But now the right hon. gentleman himself shows to the world that we have moneys which are devoted to educational purposes in the province of Manitoba in our own hands and under our own discretion. If the Remedial Bill had passed, the right hon. gentleman knows that first of all it would have been sent to the Manitoba Government to enforce it, and if they did put it in force we would have taken it for granted that justice had been done. But if that Bill had not been put into effect by the local authorities, then it would have to be put in force by this Parliament, and whenever this Government was granting money for educational purposes to Manitoba it would have been an easy thing to say to them: Since we give you money for educational purposes, a part of it shall be devoted to the public schools, and another part to the separate schools. This, Sir, is what was expected would be done by those who had the Remedial Bill in hand. That is why the right hon. gentleman and his friends said that the Remedial Bill was no good, and that even if it were accepted by a few persons, as a matter of fact, it would never be put in practice. As this may be the last time we shall have to deal with this question, I want to put on record in the "Hansard" a letter which was addressed during the last elections to Mr. Pelletier, candidate in Laprairie, who when in this House supported the Remedial Bill. This letter was addressed to Mr. Pelletier by His Grace the Archbishop of St. Boniface; it was read on the hustings, and I will read it now in the House so that if there is any one who has been deceived by the memorandum of the right hon. gentleman, he may know the other side of the story. This is the letter:

St. Boniface, June 8th, 1896.

I have only to tell you that the Canadian episcopate are unanimous in approving of my attitude in relation to the Remedial Bill, that is to say, that their lordships the bishops acknowledge that that Bill, inasmuch as it restored to us our school rights anterior to the iniquitous law of 1890, was supremely desirable for us, but it was the duty of Catholics to vote for the Bill.

So that I am justified in concluding that those who, on the 20th March last, voted the death of the said Bill, in place of amending it, betrayed the Catholics and the French cause in Manitoba.

To maintain that I approved of a Bill null and void, or utterly insufficient and wretched, is to assert that the Archbishop of St. Boniface, with his clergy and the most notable and best instructed Catholics of St. Boniface and Winnipeg, are men without intelligence or without conscience.

If this can be of use to you, you can use it against the calumniators, who would be but too happy to find a disunited episcopate.

Rest assured of my sincere devotedness in O. L. and M.

(Sgd.) † ADELARD,
Archbishop of St. Boniface.

Mr. MCGREGOR. What is the date of that letter ?

Mr. BERGERON. The 5th of June, 1896. That proves to whoever wants to know it what has been said very often, but which cannot be said too often in view of the manner in which the right hon. gentleman and his friends are trying to change the facts; it shows what was thought of the Remedial Bill by the parties who were most interested. Now, Sir, in bringing down this resolution the Minister of Finance said that it did not make much difference whether we paid now in a lump sum to the Manitoba Government or by different sums yearly, because we were not affecting the principle of the award. Well, Sir, we do change the principle, because when the law creating the school fund of Manitoba was passed in 1872 there existed separate schools in that province. That is to say, there were in Manitoba two sorts of schools called public schools—one part Protestant public schools, and the other part Catholic schools. They were on the same footing, and both participated in the moneys which were granted to the province by the Dominion for education. The Government to-day, in doing what they are doing, are putting a stop to that condition of things. For eight years past, the Manitoba minority have been deprived of their share of that fund; and my hon. friend from Brockville (Mr. Wood) who is a legal authority, and my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean), have explained what must be understood to be a trust fund. I say that the Government, by what they are doing to-day, are changing the object of that trust fund, and are depriving the minority of their just share in it. The hon. gentleman may say: But the school question is settled. I say, Mr. Chairman, it is not settled, and the proof that it is not settled is all the work which my right hon. friend has given to himself and those who are near him, in the effort to induce those who have been ill-treated by that settlement, to accept it. The proof that it is not settled are the trips made to Rome by the different parties sent there by my right hon. friend. The proof that it is not settled is the trip of my right hon. friend himself to Rome. The proof that it is not settled is that my right hon. friend went on Sunday to Montreal, and, if I am well informed, went and consulted with His Grace the Archbishop of Montreal. The proof that it is not settled, is that to-day, as my right hon. friend knows very well, a great many of the children of Manitoba do not go to the schools that exist for the majority of that province. Sir, it will only be settled—and my right hon. friend knows that—when it is settled according to right and justice; and it will never be settled until then. But when that time comes, the minority will be deprived, by the law you are now putting on the Statute-book, of their share in this school fund of Manitoba. Of course, I understand that this is the epilogue of the school question. I understand that as long as my right hon. friend is in power, we shall not hear about it any more, because there are no demagogues on this side of the House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. BERGERON. No, and it would be useless to take either the time of Parliament or the time of the public to discuss a matter which cannot be settled until my right hon. friend leaves the place which he occupies to-day. Now, Sir, since this is the epilogue of that question, let us make an epitome of the whole thing. The school question was commenced by Mr. Greenway, the Liberal Premier of the province of Manitoba, for political purposes. It has been kept alive in the different provinces by the right hon. gentleman and his friends, so as to divert the attention of the public from their lack of policy. The agitation has been carried on in Ontario in one way, and in Quebec in another way; and the proof of this is the fact that the right hon. gentleman did not say in Ontario what he said in Quebec. He promised in Ontario that there would be no coercion in Manitoba. He promised in Quebec that he would try to settle the question by conciliation, by sunny ways, by sending Mr. Mowat to Manitoba; and if those methods did not succeed in obtaining for the minority their rights, he would then put in motion the immense machinery of the Dominion Parliament; that is to say, he would pass a Bill which would have the same object in view as the Remedial Bill. He promised that to his own electors in the province of Quebec. He has not done it; and when a few days ago he applied to myself a most unfortunate epithet, he was simply preparing the way for the position he will occupy when he goes back to his electors. Mr. Greenway has been a great man, and I do not see why my right hon. friend did not have him knighted when he was giving knighthoods right and left. There have been more Liberals knighted in the last couple of years than there have been Conservatives since confederation. Of course, hon. gentlemen opposite, who are democrats, cannot be there very long, and they must hurry up. Mr. Greenway, after bulldozing the Conservative party with the help of hon. gentlemen opposite, after humbugging this Government with the settlement he agreed upon with the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) without consulting the minority, is given to-day about $755,000 for having been such a great man with the two Governments. I imagine that the right hon. gentleman expects that he will, though I do not believe it, soften the heart of Mr. Greenway by giving him such a large amount of money, and that Mr. Greenway may be a little milder towards the minority in Manitoba; but the right hon. gentleman is making an awful mistake. If he has already paid Mr. Greenway so much money, that gentleman will surely continue the trade, and ill-treat the minority of Manitoba, if possible more than ever; and he is in the right hands when he is in the hands of the right hon. gentleman, because we know that the right hon. gentleman has a majority behind him, principally in Quebec, who will swallow anything.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. BERGERON. That seems to have struck in a good place. What is the epitome of the whole thing? The act of Mr. Greenway has carried the right hon. gentleman and his friends into power. The act of Mr. Greenway has given the Liberal party of Canada a chief in the person of the Minister of Public Works. The settlement which was made by the Minister of Public Works was first of all shown to a late lamented friend of ours, Mr. McCarthy, for his approval. We all know the love Mr. McCarthy had for the Catholics and the French; and he approved of the settlement. The Minister of Public Works was perfectly happy when he saw that Mr. McCarthy approved of his settlement of the school question of Manitoba. More than that: the settlement brought into this House the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), who probably would never have come to this House but for that coup d'état of the Minister of Public Works. More than that: we may say that the whole iniquity is consummated; it is finished. I will leave it to the right hon. gentleman—I will not say it to the Minister of Public Works, because I make a great difference between the two men; but I will leave it to the right hon. gentleman later on, because these things have their return. The right hon. gentleman when he thinks later on, of the way he has treated that minority, will, I am sure, feel remorse for the way he has acted towards those people to whom he promised his protection. More than that: I want to say—and this is the last word I will ever utter on this question—the right hon. gentleman has broken the constitution of this country.

The PRIME MINISTER. Hear, hear.

Mr. BERGERON. Yes, there is no use of the right hon. gentleman trying to smile over it. There is an article in the constitution of Canada which either should or should not be there. It is the third part of article 93, which says:

Where in any province a system of separate or dissentient schools exists by law at the union, or is thereafter established by the legislature of the province, an appeal shall lie to the Governor General in Council from any act or decision of any provincial authority affecting any right or privilege of the Protestant or Roman Catholic minority of the Queen's subjects in relation to education.

The right hon. gentleman, when he declares that the school question is settled, and that we shall never hear of it any more, is violating that clause of the constitution; and, Sir, if you can break one clause of the constitution, the whole constitution of Canada is not worth the paper on which it is written.

The PRIME MINISTER. Mr. Chairman, I must declare at once that I have no intention of discussing this question—a very important one, I admit—in the spirit and temper which has just been exhibited by my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron). My hon. friend not only discussed the question but rose to very high flights of oratory. He not only discussed the financial side of the question, but also the constitutional aspects; and I am sure he will agree with me, when I call his attention to a few facts, that he is no more of an authority on the constitution than he is on finance. He repeated—I do not know how often, for I gave up in despair trying to count—that we were to-day giving this man Greenway—such was his expression—his reward in money since we did not give him a title, and gave a money reward in the shape of nearly $800,000, namely, $300,000 by this resolution and $475,000 by the resolution of this morning. To show the hon. gentleman what is thought of his ideas of finance, I need only reply to him that the money we are giving to Manitoba to-day does, by the admission of everybody, not belong to Canada but to Manitoba.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

The PRIME MINISTER. Some hon. gentleman, in his enthusiasm and readiness to support anything said on the other side, says no, that it is not so. But as my hon. colleague, the Minister of Finance, has asked: If this money is ours, why have we been paying interest on it all along? It is childish to argue this question. As regards the other resolution which we adopted this morning, I need only refer my hon. friend to the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière), who knows more of this question than probably any member of this House, because he was a member of the Manitoba Government when these transactions took place and the wrong was done which we are now attempting to make right. We are not to-day giving a single cent to Manitoba. We are doing nothing else than repairing the injustice which was committed to the prejudice of Manitoba.

I shall come back to the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) in a moment, but I want to address myself to an observation which was made—and I must say made with a great deal of dignity and force—by my hon. friend the member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill). He called the attention of the Government—and he did it in language which I entirely approve, though I do not share the views he expressed—to the unfortunate fact, as he described it, that this resolution should have been brought down in the last days of the session. I can only say that if we bring down this question to-day, the Parliament of Canada is not taken by surprise. What we complained of in former years, when resolutions for railway subsidies amounting to millions of dollars were brought down at the end of the session, was that Parliament had had no opportunity of canvassing the different applications and giving them the preliminary study necessary for their intelligent discussion, and, therefore, was taken by surprise. But that cannot be said in this instance, because this motion has been on the Order paper since the 22nd April. It has, therefore, been in the power of everybody to obtain information upon it, and to-day nobody is taken by surprise, but everybody is in a position to decide whether it is a demand which ought or ought not to be granted.

I now come to another aspect of the question, and that is whether this is a trust or not. If we are to look into this question as it ought to be looked into—this question whether it is a trust or not—let me say that in this legislation, dealing with and amending to some extent the Dominion Lands Act, we are only dealing with one of the anomalies of which we have too many in this country. Fortunately, in this instance, it is not one that is imbedded in the constitution, but one of our own making, and, therefore, subject to our own unmaking. A certain proportion of the public lands of this country, in the province of Manitoba and the North-west Territories, have been applied for school purposes. I submit this point to the judgment of every man in this House. The education of the country has been placed in the hands of the provinces. The subject of education in Manitoba is in the control of that province. The question of education is subject to provincial jurisdiction. In the case of lands to be applied for the purpose of education, would it not then be far more logical, far more in accord with what ought to be the proper division of legislative powers between the Federal Parliament and the provincial legislature, that the latter should have the control of these moneys? I agree in the statement of the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière), made not upon this, but a former occasion, when he applied to have the reversion of those lands to the province of Manitoba. To-day, however, he holds different language. There are two men in him, he tells us, and looking at him, I must say that I am not altogether surprised at that. There is the provincial man and the Dominion man. To-day we have heard the Dominion man, but a few years ago we had the opinion of the provincial man, who stated that in the best interests of Manitoba it would be better by far that these lands should be vested in the province. It was not so decided, and, therefore, I shall not quarrel with my hon. friend on this point. The policy of the Government was different, and the lands have been kept within the jurisdiction of this Parliament. Now, the question may be fairly asked: Why do you now ask for this money? Why do you not continue to give the interest as you have been doing? Why are you giving a part of the capital?

Before I come to the reasons why we are asking Parliament to give this money, let me devote a few moments to the argument made first by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden), and then by the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) that this is a trust fund. According to the hon. member for East York, we are very guilty in bringing up this resolution, and he said with great solemnity that by statute there is imprisonment for violating a trust. I have only this to say to my hon. friend, and I submit the same argument to my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Borden), who said the same thing, but in different language. He did not put it so harshly, so brutally, if my hon. friend will excuse my using that expression. There is a prison, he said, behind every violation of a trust, and he gave us instances of the kind. I take the very simile he made. Suppose that he entrusted somebody with a certain sum and instructed him to pay the interest to a third party. Of course if the trustee, instead of paying the interest, went on paying out the capital, all the fatal consequences pointed out by my hon. friend from York would fall upon the head of the delinquent. But if the man who created the trust and the party who was to receive the benefit came to a mutual agreement, and both agreed to the payment of the capital instead of the interest, do you think that would be a criminal act?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It would depend altogether on whether the person in whose favour the agreement was made was capable, under the circumstances, of doing away with the trust. For example, in the case of a married woman or an infant, the consequences which the hon. Minister says would not fall would undoubtedly fall. What I ventured to say was that, as this was in trust, not only for the present but for the future inhabitants of Manitoba, you have not all the parties represented here.

The PRIME MINISTER. That means to say that a Parliament can never alter the laws it makes, but that those laws are there for all time. This is a new doctrine. Here is a trust, if you call it so, created by the Federal Parliament with the consent of the provincial government, and if the provincial government and the Federal Parliament agree to modify that in any way, I think they are acting quite within their rights. However, I do not wish to press that argument very far; I do not wish to press it to the final consequence, for I hold that the Government when it deals with this question ought to be chary in touching what has been done in former years. But I wish to say to my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) and my hon. friend from Champlain (Mr. Marcotte), who spoke in French, but gave us very much the same arguments to the effect that in giving this money we are crushing the rights of Catholics; that this money should be given to separate schools—

Mr. BERGERON. They should get their share.

The PRIME MINISTER. That is the argument of my hon. friend. Is that the law?

Mr. BERGERON. It was the law in 1872.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am very sorry my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) was not here a moment ago to hear the remarks of my hon. friend from Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) or that, if he did hear them, he did not appreciate them more rightly. Otherwise he would have remembered that when this law was introduced in 1872 and the trust was created, Mr. Bureau, in the Senate, moved an amendment to have this money divided between public schools and separate schools, and this was rejected by the Senate and did not become law. What is the use of presenting such arguments as that?

Mr. BERGERON. What does this prove?

The PRIME MINISTER. It proves that the argument of my hon. friend has no sense in it. He says that this money ought to be kept for separate schools. He is told by my hon. friend from Provencher that a demand was made in the Senate at the time to have this very thing done and it was refused. And now, I have only to point to him what is the law of the country upon this point.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Would my right hon. friend allow me a word of explanation?

The PRIME MINISTER. Certainly.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. The debate I have referred to occurred in 1872. The Dominion Lands Act merely set apart the school lands for educational purposes, and it was not until 1879 that this trust was created by the Act that was passed at that time. I did not refer to the debate that took place at that time; but at that time the school system of Manitoba included a system of separate schools so that the Catholic as well as the Protestant population of Manitoba was entitled to their respective shares of that fund. I did not bring forward that argument, but I understand that to be the argument of my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron).

The PRIME MINISTER. This legislation was commenced in 1872, and at that time an hon. Senator, Mr. Bureau, sought to have the fund then created appropriated at once between the public and the separate schools. That was denied. The Act was completed in 1879. Now, let me read to the House the terms on which this trust was created:

Provided, also, that all moneys from time to time realized from the sale of school lands shall be invested in Dominion securities, and the interest arising therefrom, after deducting the cost of management, shall be paid annually to the government of the province or territory within which said lands are situated towards the support of the public schools therein,—

—Public schools therein—

—the money so paid to be distributed with such view by the government of such province or territory in such manner as may be deemed most expedient.

Mr. BERGERON. The right hon. gentleman knows that the separate schools were a part of the public school system and that there were two kinds of public schools, those known as public schools and those known as separate schools.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend is not satisfied. He says that public schools comprise also separate schools. Very well. Mr. Bureau was not satisfied and sought to have this divided so that the separate schools and public schools could each have a share, and he failed.

Now, the reason why we ask to pay this money over to the Manitoba Government is that in the crippled condition of the finances of the government, they are not in a position to give to education all the assistance they desire, and that in the infant condition of the province it ought to receive. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) stated a moment ago, and stated very truly, that in future years, when the province of Manitoba is more fully settled, it will be easier for it to dispense with this assistance than at the present time. But now, when the population is scattered over immense territories, when the people are struggling, as new settlers have to struggle everywhere, now is the time when this assistance should be given. We believe it is better to take the money lying idle in the Dominion treasury to assist these schools than that a heavier burden of taxation should be laid upon the settler. There is an additional reason, whatever may be said to the contrary. Whatever may be the appeals made in some parts of the province of Manitoba, although, since the law of 1890 localities have been without schools or schools have been maintained by the Catholic population themselves while they were obliged to pay their taxes for other schools, there have been since the year 1896 more than 100 schools which must receive assistance and which, I am glad to say, whatever may be said to the contrary, have, since the 1st January, received assistance from the public treasury of Manitoba.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Does the right hon. gentleman say there were one hundred schools opened in 1896 ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Since 1896—that is my information.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I take exception to that statement, because there is not that number.

The PRIME MINISTER. Upon questions of this kind, of course, I cannot speak with authority. But I have, though not here at this moment in my possession, information that one hundred schools—or thereabouts, I will not say more than one hundred—have been opened since October, 1896. Now, this is why we ask for the appropriation of this money. I must deprecate, for my part, the spirit which some hon. gentlemen, and amongst others my hon. friend from Beauharnois, have attempted to bring into the discussion of this question. My hon. friend from Provencher stated a moment ago that it had no connection with the school question, but some affinity with it. If this has an affinity with the school question, then, in the name of everything that is sacred let us not impart more bitterness to it than there has been hitherto. My hon. friend spoke of the constitution, and he has reminded me of an argument brought forward very often by himself and his friends, that in the position I have taken on this question I had violated the constitution.

Let me say to my hon. friend, and I appeal to his judgment and to the judgment of his friends upon this question, that if the constitution were such as he explained it, if it were applied as his party has tried to apply it, the result in this country would simply be anarchy. He says that under section 93 there is an appeal to this Parliament, and because we voted against the Remedial Bill, he says we voted against the constitution. Sir, whenever a minority establishes a school system in any province as a separate school system, if that minority is affected by subsequent legislation, it has a right of appeal to this Parliament. But does my hon. friend pretend that whenever and because there is an appeal, this Parliament is always bound to reverse the legislation which is so appealed against? Why, Sir, to what absurdities would that construction of the law lead to? You have the law settled by the first judgment of the Privy Council that the legislature of Manitoba had a right to establish separate schools; and you have the point settled by that same judgment that the same legislature which established that separate school system had the right to abolish it. These two things are not disputed. From that law which the legislature passed abolishing separate schools, there was an appeal to this Government, and my hon. friend holds that because there was an appeal to this Government, we are bound to veto that law.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. We are discussing a very important subject. Do I understand the right hon. gentleman to say that the legislature that has power to pass a law establishing separate schools, has also the power to repeal that law, and that was the decision of the Privy Council?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes, that was the decision of the first judgment rendered by the Privy Council.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. It is a question of fact. I understood that the first judgment of the Privy Council only related to the schools that existed prior to the entry of Manitoba into the confederation, and that it bore on the fact that the schools that existed before confederation did not give the minority the right to their separate schools after the province entered the confederation.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have no objection to my hon. friend putting it that way. But at all events, under that interpretation of the law, I maintain that the legislature which established separate schools, whether before or after the province entered the confederation, has a right to deal with them. That is the tenor of the judgment. From that action of the legislature there is an appeal to this Parliament. The hon. member for Beauharnois argues that the moment that decision was given, then that appeal must be granted, and the legislation of the province must be abolished; that is, that we should say to the province of Manitoba: You have power to legislate, but if you dare to exercise your power, then upon your head falls the strong arm of the Dominion of Canada. No more dangerous doctrine was ever proclaimed. It has been proclaimed from the housetops in the province of Quebec.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend told his electors the very same thing.

The PRIME MINISTER. I never said that to my electors. What I said to my electors was this, and I have stated it on the floor of this House, that the power of interference exists undoubtedly with us, but to possess the power and to exercise it are two wholly different things; and whenever an appeal is made, the legislation appealed against may be allowed, or it may be reversed, or it may be modified. This is the true interpretation of the Act. My hon. friend has said one thing, however, for which I give him credit. He says that this is the last time he will ever speak upon this question, and if he will keep his promise, I will forgive him everything which he has said up to the present time.

Mr. BERGERON. When I said that, I did not mean to say that I should never be heard from any more on this subject.

The PRIME MINISTER. I thought you were boasting.

Mr. BERGERON. I meant that I should not raise the question again as long as my right hon. friend holds the position he is now in, because it would be useless for me to do so. The right hon. gentleman has referred to the fact that when Senator Bureau moved that the fund should be distributed immediately between the Catholic school board and the Protestant school board, his motion was defeated. Now, what conclusion does the right hon. gentleman draw from that? Evidently it was the opinion of the Senate at that time that the disposition of the fund should be left to the discretion of the local administration. But that does not affect the point I had made, that we are to-day changing the law which created that fund. That fund was for the province of Manitoba. At that time the separate schools were as much entitled to it as the public schools. But now we are doing the reverse, we are putting completely aside these schools called separate, and we are going to give $300,000 purely and simply to the public schools. Moreover, there may be a change in the Government of Manitoba. Suppose a new Premier comes into power, as favourably disposed towards the minority as Mr. Norquay was—because when Mr. Norquay was the Conservative Premier of Manitoba there was never any dispute about the schools of the minority, or if there was, he prevented it. Suppose, then, that the provincial legislature of Manitoba themselves should go back to the state of things which existed before 1890, what money will they have to give to the minority for their separate schools? Where will they get the money unless they take it out of their own treasury? The right hon. gentleman said here what he might have left unsaid, that Mr. Greenway had no more money, the Manitoba Government are too poor to give all the money they would like to give. We all know the Government of Manitoba is a Liberal Government, and if they are poor, it is because they have squandered the money of the province right and left, and have none left. But when Mr. Norquay and a Conservative Government were in power, they had money enough, they never came down to Ottawa asking for better terms, as the hon. gentleman has explained. He says that every province has been asking for better terms. I do not say whether this is so or not. The right hon. gentleman also quoted clause 93 of the British North America Act. The right hon. gentleman knows who put that clause there. It was put there by Sir A. J. Galt, and he knows it was put there to protect the Protestant minority of Quebec, otherwise we never would have heard of it. The Protestant minority of Quebec were afraid that the French majority would do something which would hurt their feelings, and so that clause 93 was put into the constitution. Then the right hon. gentleman said a thing which I regretted to hear him say. He said: It is true that is in the constitution, but we are not obliged to enforce it. Mr. Chairman, when there is a clause like that in the constitution which allows a strong Government to come to the rescue of a weak minority in any province, the Government that does not do so is not worthy of the position it holds. If there was one thing which, in the eyes of the right thinking Protestants, acquired their respect and admiration, it was the sight of Sir Charles Tupper and Sir Mackenzie Bowell standing up for the minority when all their friends were saying to them that they were hurting the party politically. I heard them declare, and I heard the Minister of Railways and Canals say the same thing, that where a minority was suffering a grievance, whether a Protestant or Catholic minority, that the Government in power were able to put in force clause 93, and if they did not come to the rescue of such minority, they would not be worthy of the position they held on the Treasury benches.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the First Minister to contend that this money was not a trust fund, and, therefore, they could use it as they liked. I refer him to the Statutes of 1891, chap. 6, which provided for an arbitration on the accounts in dispute between the provinces of Quebec and Ontario. The province of Ontario claimed that they were entitled to the common school fund being paid over to them, notwithstanding that the Dominion regarded it as one of the trust funds. The Dominion, in order to relieve itself of that trust, passed an Act in 1884, "An Act respecting the Common School Fund," which was assented to on 23rd July, 1894. It provides:

The Governor in Council may, so soon as an agreement is reached between the governments of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec—

—the two Governments interested in the fund—

—as to the manner in which the fund hereafter referred to is to be divided and distributed between the said provinces, or so soon as the manner of the distribution thereof is determined by the arbitrators appointed under the authority of chap. 6 of the statute of 1891, should the question of the distribution thereof be referred to and determined by such arbitrators, paid to and divided between the said provinces, in the proportion agreed upon or determined by such arbitrators, and in full discharge of any further obligation or liability on the part of the Dominion with respect to said funds.—

Therefore, there must be an obligation and liability.

—the principal of a certain fund held by the Dominion in trust for the said provinces, and known as the Common School Fund; and such payment shall divest the Dominion of the said trust and of any further liability or obligation in any way connected therewith or relating thereto.

If it requires an Act of Parliament to divest the Dominion Parliament of this trust, it cannot be successfully contended that it is not a trust and that along with it there are not obligations that the Government shall respect in dealing with this money.

Mr. MARCOTTE. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I have listened very attentively to the remarks fallen from the hon. Prime Minister and from the hon. gentlemen opposite and, with due regard to the circumstances, I fail to understand the reason why the hon. Premier is in such a hurry to settle the question now at issue. The Manitoba school question is not yet settled. The hon. Prime Minister is still negotiating with the representatives of the minority and with the bishops of the province of Quebec. What business has he to come and ask us now to vote three hundred thousand dollars? Why not wait for a more favourable opportunity, before paying over those moneys, which, as I said a little while ago, are the only means left to afford relief to the Manitoba Catholics, in case Mr. Greenway should not yield to the sunny ways of the Prime Minister? I fail to see what results, up to now those sunny ways of the Premier have secured. With his sunny ways he went to Rome, but the authorities there found that the settlement was inadequate, imperfect, unacceptable. Well, Mr. Speaker, since the sunny ways of the hon. Premier have proved powerless, I would like to know why the hon. gentleman does not come and redeem now the pledges given to the electorate in Quebec? As everybody knows, he stated, in his electoral platform, that should conciliatory means prove powerless, he would resort to constitutional means.

Now, I ask, what is there to prevent the hon. Prime Minister from acting now? Conciliating means having failed, it is now time to face the issue. Why does the hon. gentleman remain inactive? Has he not got the promise of his friends behind him, that they would support a remedial legislation? Why should he fear? We all know that not one of them would be here to-day, if they had not pledged themselves to support a Remedial Bill.

Mr. BOURASSA. (Translation.) If the hon. gentleman will allow me, I will claim the right to be excepted from that number, because I never pledged myself to vote in favour of a Remedial Bill, and yet I was returned by a handsome majority.

Mr. MADORE. (Translation.) I stand exactly in the same position.

Mr. LEGRIS. (Translation.) I never took any such pledge.

Mr. SPROULE.

Mr. MARCOTTE. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I would ask those hon. gentlemen opposite who did not take any such pledge to rise. I see three of them.

Mr. STENSON. (Translation.) Here is another one.

Mr. MARCOTTE. (Translation.) It is a crying shame for those hon. members. The other gentlemen have had the pluck and the manliness to take such a pledge. Well, I protest against such a state of things, and I ask the hon. gentlemen, with the exception of the four gentlemen who disclaim having given that pledge, to press upon the Prime Minister the urgency of such a remedial law. You have nothing to fear; the only trouble is that you have not the pluck to do it. We have seen on this side of the House, the hon. leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), a Protestant, pledge himself to pass a remedial law. You have deceived the province of Quebec, and you are only on your trial. In the province of Quebec the electors said: Let us try and see whether a Catholic and a French Canadian will succeed in settling this school question. We have seen the hon. leader of the Opposition, in his admirable programme, boldly stating that he would favour the passage of a Remedial Bill. What are you afraid of? You have nothing to fear from this side of the House, as you have the pledge of the leader of the Opposition that he will support a Remedial Bill. You have nothing to fear from your own supporters, as they have also pledged themselves to support a Remedial Bill. Why, then, should you hesitate? Is it for the pleasure of paying over to Mr. Greenway $300,000?

Nothing is in the way of the hon. Prime Minister redeeming his pledge, but the trouble is he has not got the pluck to do so. He wants to help Greenway, his bosom friend; and not only does he extend to him his sympathies, but he also hands over to him the school fund, so as to enable him the better to assist the Protestant schools in Manitoba and reward him for what he is doing. We would like this school question, which is agitating the public men, and which, in spite of what is stated to the contrary, is bound to come up again, to be settled once for all. The province of Quebec is still keeping up the agitation and claiming back the rights of the Manitoba minority. And, as a matter of fact, what does the encyclical letter say? The Pope says that we must accept partial concessions, but at the same time that we must go on protesting. That is what I am doing. The Manitoba Catholics, through their representative, the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) have protested, and still go on protesting against the injustice of which they suffer. The question is not settled, and so long as it will not be settled, the Catholic minority will insist upon full justice being meted out to them. The Catholics want their schools to be restored; and were the hon. gentlemen opposite ready to redeem their pledges, this agitation would be set at rest, and there would no longer be any wrangles in this country among the different races and creeds. Were this happy consummation to take place, all the different classes of our population would go hand in hand, without any shock, without anything disturbing the peace and harmony which should prevail in a country like ours, and without any obstacle being thrown in the way of the development of the trade and industries and natural resources of this Dominion.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the hon. Finance Minister give a statement of the money expended on public schools in Manitoba, say, during the last five years?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not at the present moment.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman bring down such a statement before the second reading.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have here a statement given by the Government of Manitoba, but it is not in the form the hon. gentleman suggests. I may be permitted to furnish some additional information I promised, and at the same time take the liberty of replying to some remarks made by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden), who took exception to some remarks I made. I stated that this fund was practically the money of Manitoba. To that statement the hon. gentleman took exception, and he said that as this Parliament could take it away from the province, it could not be the money of the province. By the same method of reasoning the hon. gentleman could prove that the capital account fund does not belong to Manitoba, because we could by Act of Parliament change it. By the same method of reasoning he could prove that the subsidy did not belong to Manitoba because it could be changed by an Act of this Parliament. There are certain funds belonging practically to the province of Manitoba, and they may be called trust funds, if members please; they are, at all events, funds which avail for the benefit of the province and no one else, and therefore practically they are the moneys of the province of Manitoba. The hon. gentleman said it would be a breach of trust to pay those moneys as we propose. I submit that this is not a trust fund in the ordinary sense of the term. The very fact that we could take this money away from the province of Manitoba is evidence that it is not in the ordinary sense a trust fund. The very power of Parliament which created that fund could certainly take it away. The same power that creates a trust can vary it, especially when the change is not antagonistic to the wishes of the province, but in accordance with it.

On a question of breach of trust, a question of principle, the amount is of no consequence. I have shown that the late Government on two occasions introduced resolutions to take a portion of that fund and give it to Manitoba, and surely if the argument of the hon. member for Halifax be correct, hon. gentlemen opposite committed a gross breach of trust.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. It was made as a loan.

Mr. FOSTER. Was it an advance?

The FINANCE MINISTER. It was an advance made chargeable to the fund, whether you call it a loan or not.

Mr. FOSTER. Was it paid back?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not by the province, but when the fund accumulated it ceased to be a charge against the province. If it had not been given in that way there would be so many more thousand dollars in the trust fund for Manitoba. If this was a trust, it was a breach of the trust on the part of the late Government to introduce two resolutions to take away a portion of it. The hon. gentleman spoke as if the Government were taking the whole of the trust fund, if a trust fund it be, and delivering it to the province of Manitoba. There are $475,000 in the fund, and we propose to give $300,000 out of it to benefit the education of the province, thereby leaving a considerable balance. The hon. gentleman argued as if there never would be another dollar added to the fund; but instead of that being the case, this is an accumulating fund, which before many years will contain millions of dollars for the benefit of Manitoba. The quantity of land appropriated and set apart under the School Lands Act was 2,277,900 acres. The quantity sold up to 1st December, 1897, and none has been sold since, was 84,451 acres, leaving 2,193,449 acres yet to be disposed of. If that land be sold at the average price which that already sold realized, and that is a very moderate statement, for the land will increase in value as Manitoba develops and improves, it will increase the fund to about $15,000,000 for the benefit of education in Manitoba; and yet because we take $300,000 out of this accumulating fund, which will reach $15,000,000 ultimately, we are told that we are going to destroy the trust fund. One of the duties of a trustee is to assist those for whose benefit the trust is established. The hon. gentleman has referred to the case of trustee for a child. One of the first duties of such trustee is surely to see that the child is maintained in proper condition, and though it may not be stated in the deed, the court will instruct the trustee to maintain the child out of the fund. To-day we are taking a small portion of the trust fund, if hon. gentlemen will call it so, and applying it to Manitoba when the province is in the greatest need of it. On 27th March, 1897, a year ago, in anticipation of legislation being passed last session, the Manitoba Government addressed a statement to the Minister of Finance, as follows:—

Treasury Department, Manitoba,
Winnipeg, 20th March, 1897.

The Honourable the Minister of Finance, Ottawa.

Sir,—I beg to ask that the sum of $100,000 be paid to the province of Manitoba as early as possible in this year out of the Manitoba School Lands Fund in the hands of the Dominion Government.

As a reason for such request, I might state that the schools of the province are greatly increasing in number, and the sparseness of the population makes it exceedingly difficult to maintain schools in all the school districts that have been opened up, while the limited resources of the province make it next to impossible to maintain the grants out of the ordinary funds of the province.

The increasing demands of the public schools have been constant, and the government grant has been increased from $68,380, in 1886-87, to $185,000 in 1897, notwithstanding the fact that in 1892 the grant per school was reduced from $150 to $130. It is considered impossible to at present further decrease these grants, as the result would be to close up a number of schools.

The lands set aside by the Dominion Government in 1883 as an endowment to public schools in Manitoba amounted to 2,000,000 acres, of which, during the past fourteen years, about 70,000 acres, or one-thirtieth of the whole, has been sold. It is impossible to accurately estimate the value of the unsold lands, but a safe valuation, based on present prices, would be between $2.50 and $7 per acre, making this endowment for the lands yet to be sold worth from $5,000,000 to $14,000,000. Taking into account the circumstances of the country and the heavy burdens necessarily imposed on the early settlers in municipal and school taxation, it is astonishing to note that the benefits of this educational endowment have largely been withheld from the people at a time in the history of the province when they were most needed. We are of opinion that the province is as much, if not more, in need of assistance from this fund now than it will be in future years, when the development of the province and the growth of the population will have rendered the burdens on the individual school districts much lighter than they are at present.

The request for $100,000 in this year is, therefore, we believe, justifiable and necessary for the following reasons:—

1. Because it is not the intention of Parliament that the trust should enure to the benefit of future generations only. That is shown by the provisions for sale, which were almost immediately acted upon.

2. The scattered settlements render the burden of school taxation at the present time most onerous. If it is intended to settle the province the schools cannot be decreased in number, as the province must offer the best possible educational inducements.

I think in view of the needs of this province, as hereinbefore indicated, it is desirable that the Dominion Government should take authority from Parliament to pay over to this province from time to time, as may be deemed necessary, the proceeds of school lands already sold.

I have, &c.,
(Sgd.) D. H. McMILLAN, Provincial Treasurer.

Mr. FIELDING.

This was written a year ago, and there was a later letter written asking us to make an immediate provision for $200,000.

Mr. SPROULE. They asked $200,000, and you are giving them $300,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We take power to give them a sum up to $300,000 at a future time, but we are only giving them $200,000 now.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 99) to incorporate the Lake Champlain and River St. Lawrence Ship Canal Company.—(Mr. Préfontaine.)

Bill (No. 124) incorporating the Western Alberta and Yukon Railway and Navigation and Mining Company.—(Mr. Casey.)

Bill (No. 139) to incorporate the Anglo-French Telegraph Company (Limited).—(Mr. Morrison.)

GREAT NORTH-WEST CENTRAL RAILWAY COMPANY.

The House resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 141—from the Senate)—respecting the Great North-west Central Railway Company.—(Mr. Morrison.)

(In the Committee.)

On section 2.

Mr. TALBOT. I propose to move an amendment to this clause. The clause itself reads as follows:—

The new bonds may be secured by mortgage in the manner and with all the rights mentioned in clause 14 of the company's charter, as set forth in the schedule to and confirmed by chapter 85 of the statutes of 1888.

To that clause I beg to move the following amendment:—

The new bonds may be secured by mortgage as provided in the Railway Act.

Mr. CASEY. Better ask that the clause be struck out first.

Mr. TALBOT. My hon. friend from West Elgin (Mr. Casey) draws my attention to the fact that I should ask that the clause be struck out and this new one inserted. Clause 14 of the old charter reads as follows:—

The directors of the company, under the authority of the shareholders to them given by a resolution of a special general meeting called for that purpose, are hereby authorized to issue bonds under the seal of the said company, signed by its president or other presiding officer and countersigned by its secretary and treasurer, and such bonds shall be made payable at such times and in such manner, and at such place or places in Canada or elsewhere, and bearing such rate of interest as the directors shall think proper ; and the directors shall have power to issue and sell or pledge all or any of the said bonds at the best price and upon the best terms and conditions which, at the same time, they may be able to obtain, for the purpose of raising money for prosecuting the said undertaking : provided that the amount of bonds so issued, sold or pledged shall not exceed $20,000 per mile, to be issued in proportion to the length of railway constructed or under contract to be constructed ; provided, also, that no such bonds shall be issued until at least $500,000 have been subscribed to the capital stock and ten per centum of the same bona fide paid thereon ; but notwithstanding anything in its charter contained, the company may secure the bonds to be issued by them by a mortgage deed, creating such mortgages, charges and encumbrances upon the whole of such property, assets, rents and revenues of the company, present or future, or both, as shall be described in said deed, but such rents and revenues shall be subject, in the first instance, to the payment of working expenses of the railway ; and by the said deed the company may grant to the holders of such bonds, or to the trustee or trustees named in such deed, all and every the powers and remedies granted by this charter in respect of said bonds, and all other powers and remedies not inconsistent with this charter, and may restrict the bondholders in the exercise of any powers, privilege or remedy granted by this charter, as the case may be, and all such powers, rights and remedies as shall be so contained in such mortgage deed shall be valid, binding and available to the bondholders in the manner and form as herein provided.

Instead of this, I wish the general clause of the Railway Act to apply. I refer to clause 94, which reads as follows :—

The company may secure such bonds, debentures, or other securities, by a mortgage deed creating such mortgages, charges and encumbrances upon the whole of such property assets, rents and revenues of the company, present or future or both, as are described in the said deed ; but such rents and revenues shall be subject in the first payment of any penalty imposed for non-compliance with the requirements of this Act respecting returns to be made to the Minister, and next to the payment of the working expenditure of the railway.

2. By the said deed the company may grant to the holders of such bonds, debentures, or other securities, or the trustees named in such deed, all and every the powers, rights and remedies granted by this Act in respect of the said bonds, debentures or other securities, and all other powers, rights and remedies not inconsistent with this Act or may restrict the said holders in the exercise of any power, privilege or remedy granted by this Act, as the case may be, and all the powers, rights and remedies so provided for in such mortgage deed shall be valid and binding, and available to the said holders in manner and form as therein provided.

3. Every such mortgage deed shall be deposited in the office of the Secretary of State of Canada—of which deposit notice shall be given by the company in the "Canada Gazette."

Mr. MORRISON. As I understand it, it is only the first part of the amendment he has handed in that my hon. friend (Mr. Talbot) wants.

Mr. TALBOT. The rest was only in case of objection.

Mr. MORRISON. So the amendment would read "The bonds may be secured by mortgage as provided in the Railway Act."

Amendment agreed to.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 4,

Mr. TALBOT. This clause was amended in the Railway Committee, and now reads as follows :—

4. The power to issue new bonds, to the amount of $12,000 per mile, shall, to the extent such power is used by the company, be in substitution pro tanto for the power to issue bonds or debentures granted to the company by its charter and the Acts amending the same ; but such new bonds shall not be issued or disposed of until the question of the ownership of the shares claimed by Alphonse Charlebois in the capital stock of the company has been settled by the High Court of Justice for Ontario, or the said court has sanctioned or ordered that such bonds may be issued and the price or terms upon which such sales shall take place.

To this clause, I move the following addition :—

Provided that no new bonds shall be issued or disposed of without the sanction or order of the said court, except for the purpose of extending the construction of the said railway.

One of the principal reasons, in fact the only reason given in the Railway Committee for the passing of this Bill was that the company would be enabled by issuing new bonds and settling past claims to complete this railway, which settlement has been in litigation for eight or nine years—to complete this railway. The reason for this amendment is to ensure the construction of that railway. I have every reason to believe that a great number of creditors so far, have been settled with. On what terms the settlement has been affected I am not in a position to say, but the statement was made in the committee by a member of this House and not contradicted that a claim for $11,000 had been settled for $1,000. There are also other claims, the claim of the sub-contractors, Messrs. Macdonald & Schiller, the Crossen estate and the Union Bank, amounting in all to $250,000. I am informed that these two claims have been settled for their face value without any interest, that is to say, that the interest for eight or nine years past has been set aside to obtain a settlement of these claims. There are besides claims by the Hon. F. Clemow, Mr. Allan, Mr. Devlin, and the Murray estate, for $100,000. I do not know if these three gentlemen have been settled with in the same proportion as the Murray estate has been settled with. But we have reason to believe that these settlements were effected in order to put Mr. Delap, who has a claim against the company of about $400,-

000, in the position of holder of these claims. The judgment of the court when it is given, will state in which way these claims shall be settled. But there is nothing to prevent Mr. Delap, once he has a judgment in his favour, from paying himself with the interest, and paying all these claims at their full value. The shares of the railway company will therefore be affected. There is only one creditor who has not been so far settled with, that is Mr. Charlebois; all the others have been settled with. But as I said in the beginning, the only reason given for this Bill was to secure the construction of the railway, and that is my motive for proposing the amendment, which will in effect secure the construction of the railway. After the statements which were made in the Railway Committee and by the solicitor of Mr. Delap, and the strong language which he used, I have no reason to believe that they are sincere in desiring to construct the railway. I want this committee now to stipulate that they will be forced to fulfil the promises that they made, that is, to construct the railway, and that the new debentures which will be issued shall be used for that purpose.

Mr. MORRISON. I think any one reading the discussion in the committee on this Bill, and the statements made by the solicitor and others, will not for a moment doubt the bona fides of these people in going on with the extension and completing it. To that extent I agree with my hon. friend's amendment. I think to a certain extent it is proper, but he has not gone far enough. I am now speaking as a member of this House, as he has done, as I have no personal interest in this Bill. But if my hon. friend will go a little further, I am willing to back him up. I do not wish to see Mr. Charlebois affected injuriously, but for the purpose of securing the construction of this railway, as well as for the purposes embraced in these various sections, I would ask that he have the courage to add this provision: "Provided that no new bonds should be issued or disposed of under the sanction or order of said court, except for purposes embraced in sections 1 and 5 of this Act, and for extending the construction of the railway." I would ask that that be added to his amendment. There will then be no serious objection to it.

Mr. DAVIS. This Bill affects to a large extent the settlers in the riding I have the honour to represent, because the proposed extension of this road passes through the district of Saskatchewan. This road has been under construction, I think, for 10 or 12 years. Since the grant was handed over to these people and since they started to construct this road up to the present time, they have only constructed 50 miles. They have been continually coming back to this House for an extension of time. Last year they came to the committee and got an extension of time for a year. Again this year they have turned up and asked for another extension of time. Although they have not got it in the same way, they still have got practically another extension of time for a year. There is a quarrel going on between Mr. Charlebois, the contractor, who I believe built 50 miles of the road, and the other gentlemen who claim to have put in the capital to build that 50 miles of road, and while this dispute is going on, the settlers in that section of the country are suffering. This is one of the best franchises, one of the best charters, in the North-west Territories, and if the charter was cancelled, there would be no difficulty whatever in getting another company to start the work and undertake to complete it. The completed section is a valuable piece of road. It runs from a point near Brandon to Rapid City. It is a first class feeder of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and will always be valuable. This company would lose nothing at all, supposing the thing was dropped now, as it should be. They have got an extension of time for another year, and under the Bill as it now stands before the House, they have, I believe, up to the 1st of August of next year to complete. That gives them practically two years, and in the meantime the people out there will be suffering. I think it is time we were done with this fooling, and these people should be compelled to show their bona fides and do something. I do not think any bona fide company would have any difficulty at all in raising enough money to build ten miles of prairie road. In the country where this proposed line runs, it would not cost more than $9,000 or $10,000 a mile to build this road. If this company is a bona fide company, if they wanted to do anything at all, after keeping the people waiting so long, they could build at least 10 miles of road next year. But they claim they have to make financial arrangements, and they have got another extension. Now, as to the amendment of the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot), I do not know how it is taken by the promoters of this Bill, but there is a good deal to be said in favour of this amendment. I think the intention of the hon. member for Bellechasse is to have the money which is realized from the proposed sale of these bonds, used in the further construction of that road, and that will certainly be in the interest of the people in the west. As to what is the intention of the promoters of this Bill, I do not know. I was under the impression that they would accept it, but it appears tonight they do not intend to accept it. Under the circumstances, if they cannot accept this amendment, I for one will have to vote against this Bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If there is one question that stinks in the nostrils of the people of Manitoba it is this Great North-west Central Railway charter. I think the original charter was granted in 1876. It was then known as the Souris and Rocky Mountain Railway, and the company incorporated under that name secured one of the most valuable land grants that any company has ever secured in this country. Believing that the country through which this road was intended to pass would be speedily settled by virtue of the construction of this railway, a great many settlers, some of the very best who have ever gone into the North-west, located along the proposed route. I think as far back as 1876 some of those settlers went in, and year after year they have waited until they have grown hoary-headed expecting this railway to be built. At first some little progress was made, but in order to deceive the settlers and the country from time to time it became necessary for this company to change its name, and it is now known as the Great North-west Central Railway Company. Out of the proposed mileage of 800 or 1,000 miles only 50 miles have up to the present time been constructed, and, as I have said, settlers have grown old waiting for the construction of the road. Parliament after Parliament has been elected, and we find this company coming before the House every year asking for an extension of time. I believe the promoters would not dare to come before this Parliament were it not for the fact that there are many changes in its membership from time to time, and they have come during three or four Parliaments asking for this extension. Members elected in the west have been instructed by their constituents to oppose this Bill with might and main, and the time has come for them to appeal to members of this House to step in and stand between the settlers and the sharks who have manipulated this charter from year to year. The interests of the settlers are paramount, and I apprehend it was the duty of a member of Parliament to protect those settlers and not to protect the men who have been feeding on this carcass. On the first section of 50 miles one of the greatest scandals that ever occurred in the province of Manitoba was revealed in connection with the construction of the road. Almost every sub-contractor on the line was never settled with, and year after year legislation was passed with a view of endeavouring to have something done to secure something for those poor contractors. The game goes on merrily and the promoters come before this Parliament almost yearly and ask for an extension of time.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. Who were the sharks?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have no doubt the hon. member knows who they are.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I should like to know.

Mr. MORRISON. I make this suggestion. I think in justice to myself, my hon. friend ought to be a little more explicit, and I imagine it will turn out that the very interests the hon. gentleman is advocating are the interests to which he refers.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I ask this question in justice to my hon. friend from Vancouver, as his name is connected with the Bill. Perhaps the hon. member for Lisgar will state who the parties are, and then we can better judge whether the Bill should be passed or not.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I can assure both the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Morrison) and the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Choquette) that they are not included in the list of sharks. In fact I have known those hon. members for some years, and I have the most profound respect for both of them. I hope as years roll on the good fellowship will continue, and they need not feel hurt because any reference is made to them because I can give both a certificate of good character. I am sure they have no malign connection with this charter. I am sorry this interruption has occurred because it has taken up my time, and I wish to lay before the committee very fully the facts in connection with this charter, in order that the indignation of members may be aroused to such an extent that they will wipe out the charter. My conviction is, and hon. members will agree with me, that if those persons who have been quarrelling over this carcass for the last eighteen or twenty years cannot agree now, the time has come to throw the carcass to them and let them fight for it until the end of time, and secure the construction of the line.

Mr. TALBOT. That is the object of the amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If I believed the passage of the Bill would secure the construction of the railway, I would not offer any opposition to it. I attended a meeting of the Railway Committee the other day with instructions from the provincial secretary of the province of Manitoba to oppose the Bill. I made up my mind, after listening to the discussion of the Bill, that it would not be in the interest of the settlers to offer opposition. I came to the conclusion that if we could pass the Bill as originally presented we would get rid of half of those whom I will not call sharks but parasites, who have been handling this charter, making a good living out of it and doing nothing. I thought the Bill as originally framed would be useful in this respect, that we would get rid of these people and construct the road. To-day we find a series of amendments, apparently agreed upon between the parasites on the one side and I do not think I am going too far in saying the sharks on the other. I have therefore made up my mind that the very best thing to do under the circumstances will be to let the sharks and the parasites fight it out, and then perhaps the settlers will have a chance. They have been waiting for the railway for eighteen or twenty years, and if we leave these promoters with the carcase the charter will lapse and some person will then go in and build the road. I repeat that if the passage of this Bill would assist the construction of the road, I would not raise my finger against its passage. I believe, however, if this Bill is passed the parties will again apply to Parliament for an extension of time. It is considered a howling farce in the North-west; the people there are simply laughing at Parliament for granting year after year this extension. Surely the settlers have some interests, and indeed their interests should be paramount. I appeal to the House and I hope within a very short time we will have an opportunity of recording our votes on this question. Inasmuch as the members representing Manitoba are a unit on this question, and inasmuch as every man from the west comes here in the interests of the settlers to urge that this farce be stopped and this railway built. I hope that if we do reach a vote it will be such a vote as will teach the parasites and sharks to keep away from Parliament in future.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Sit down.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not know that I have gone further than I should go in so designating these people, and I am willing to give a certificate to every hon. member in this House that I did not include any one of them among the sharks and parasites. But, Sir, we feel very keenly on this point in the west, and I regret that gentlemen will keep interrupting me in this way, because I want to reach a conclusion within a reasonable time, and if the interruptions continue we will not be able to secure a vote as we all wish. If hon. gentlemen keep quiet, I shall expose, as it should be exposed, the iniquity connected with the manipulation of this charter for years.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Now, Sir, after these preliminary remarks, I will come back to where the railroad started. That country is a very interesting country. You pass over a rolling prairie and then you glide out on to a plateau, and I am told that it is one of the best wheat-producing areas in the entire province of Manitoba.

Mr. SPROULE. I rise to a point of order. Mr. Chairman, I ask your ruling, if the hon. gentleman is not compelled to confine himself to the clause under discussion.

Mr. MACDONELL (Selkirk). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Richardson) is in order.

Mr. SPROULE. I want the Chairman's ruling.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Is the point of order decided, because it is deeply to be regretted that more time is wasted with it. I want to get to the meat of this question.

Mr. RICHARDSON.

Some hon. MEMBERS. "Go on," "sit down."

Mr. RICHARDSON. I just feel like saying—

Mr. FOSTER. Might I suggest to the hon. member (Mr. Richardson) that he should concentrate his thoughts as much as possible and get through. There are some very important Bills after this, and I am afraid that at this time of the night it would be impossible to reach these other Bills unless this one is disposed of. I trust my hon. friend will get down to the "meat" of the question, as he says.

Mr. MORRISON. I am willing the hon. gentleman (Mr. Richardson) should postpone his remarks until next sitting in order to get some of the other Bills through.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will you go on with the other Bills if I take my seat.

Mr. MORRISON. I have no objection.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If I knew exactly the best way to meet the views of hon. gentlemen I would be glad to do so.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order; sit down.

Mr. HENDERSON. I rise to a point of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It seems to me I have the floor.

Mr. HENDERSON. I ask that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Richardson) should sit down until I make my point of order. My point of order is that the hon. member (Mr. Richardson) has no right to stand up and occupy the time of the House without saying something.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I protest against the insinuation that I have been talking and not saying something. I have said something very material to this point, and if I had not been interrupted I was about to tell a funny story in order to illustrate my point.

Some hon. MEMBERS. You could not.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I regret these interruptions, but I have not forgotten the story and am quite willing to tell it. When I noticed that the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot) seemed to have come to an understanding with the other side, I felt that it was time that the settlers of Manitoba should take a hand in this discussion.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. Mr. Chairman, there is a Bill next to this one which might perhaps pass.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. MACDONELL (Selkirk). I move that the committee rise.

Some hon. MEMBERS. The time has expired.

Mr. WALLACE. I do not think in my experience that I have ever seen such a spectacle as we have seen to-night—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Time.

Mr. SPEAKER. The time for the consideration for private Bills having lapsed, the House will resume in Committee of the Whole on the Manitoba resolutions.

MANITOBA SCHOOL FUND.

The House again resolved itself into committee on resolution respecting the Manitoba school fund.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. QUINN. At six o'clock, Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Finance had spoken on this question for the second time, and in answer to the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden) he said that even if this fund be looked upon as a trust, yet under ordinary rules a trust could be dissolved by the consent of the parties who were the beneficiaries of that trust. I quite agree with the Minister of Finance in that. The statement made by the member for Halifax was that in an ordinary case it would be necessary to get the consent of the party who made the trust, the consent of the trustee himself, and the consent of the beneficiary before the trust could be dissolved, and any other disposition made of the money. The Minister of Finance stated that in this instance the consent of the parties had been obtained. Well, Sir, I would ask the Minister what provision had been made to obtain the consent of the minority in Manitoba to this dissolution of that educational trust. I hold that until the consent of the minority of Manitoba is obtained, it will be an injustice to that minority to dissolve this trust in any way, or to give into the hands of the Government of Manitoba any portion of the capital sum held in trust by this Government.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I would like to know from the hon. Prime Minister whether the legislature of Manitoba has made a request to have that trust fund transferred to the Government or province of Manitoba?

The PRIME MINISTER. I am not aware that the legislature of Manitoba has directly made the request, but the legislature of Manitoba has been made aware of the request made by the Government of Manitoba, and, I understand, has assented, at least by its silence.

Resolution reported, read the second time, and concurred in.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 168) respecting the Manitoba School Fund.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. BELCOURT. In view of the lateness of the session, and the possibility that the Bills on the Order paper which have been reported with amendments from the Senate may not be reached again, and as these Bills are non-contentious Bills, I move, with the unanimous consent of the House, that these amendments be now concurred in by the House.

Mr. SPROULE. I object entirely to that, because it is quite evident that it was pre-arranged to talk out the other Bill so as to reach these. We must follow the order of the paper.

Mr. SPEAKER. The motion cannot be made, as objection has been taken.

MANITOBA DEBT ACCOUNT.

The resolutions respecting the province of Manitoba Debt Account were reported.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved the second reading of resolutions. He said: When the resolutions were in committee, the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) asked a question in regard to which I promised to obtain the information before the next stage of the measure was taken. My hon. friend said that it was important to know at what time this sum for the Manitoba buildings was first charged against the provincial debt account. If it was charged against the account prior to the Act of 1885, he would hold that it was covered by that Act; but if it was charged subsequently, he felt that it would be a fair matter to be adjusted in the way we proposed.

Mr. FOSTER. No, a fair matter for consideration.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. member went beyond that, but I do not wish to dwell on that point. The Act was passed in 1885, but there was a question of interpretation, which was not determined until the following session. That question was, whether the population of 125,000, which was assumed and fixed by the Act of 1885, should apply to the per capita allowance originally placed to the credit of Manitoba, being $27 per head, or whether it should apply to the large figure of $32 per head, as fixed.

ed by later legislation. In consequence of the doubt on that point, the matter remained open until the session of 1886, when a declaratory statute was passed to the effect that the calculation should be made at the higher rate of $32 per head, applied to the population of 125,000. Immediately after the passage of that Act a statement of account was made up and sent to the Government of Manitoba. In that statement of account this item was charged for the first time against the province of Manitoba, and immediately afterwards the province of Manitoba entered its protest.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the Minister to say that the protest was entered on 6th April, 1887.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think I am correct in stating that it was made immediately after the rendering of the account. However, I am answering the question of the hon. member for Lanark, that the charge was first made in the accounts of the Finance Department in the year 1886, and consequently was made a year after the passing of the Act of 1885.

Mr. HAGGART. Would the hon. gentleman further state whether the province got the statement before the passage of its Act accepting it? That Act was passed in 1886, more than a year afterwards.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I understand that the Manitoba Act accepting the statement was passed in 1886, and the account was rendered later in the same year.

Motion agreed to, resolution read the second time, and concurred in.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 169) respecting the province of Manitoba Debt Account.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

THE ELECTORAL FRANCHISE ACT.

Amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 16) to amend the Electoral Franchise Act, and to further amend the Dominion Elections Act were taken into consideration.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The first amendment provides that on page 1, line 27, after the word "list," the words, "or in which a poll may be held," shall be inserted. I have no objection to that amendment, although I think it is unnecessary, and I move that it be concurred in.

Amendment concurred in.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The second amendment provides that on page 2, line 5, paragraph "c," be left out, and in lieu thereof the paragraph "c," framed by the Senate, be inserted. This provides for the substitution in the provinces of Manitoba, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick of the Dominion lists for provincial lists. That amendment I cannot accept, and I therefore beg to move:

Mr. FIELDING.

That the amendments made by the Honourable the Senate to sections 5, 6, 10, 21a, 23, 26a, 26b, 26c, and 27 of Bill 16: "An Act to amend the Electoral Franchise Act and to further amend the Dominion Elections Act," be disagreed to for the following reasons:—

Because the amendment made by the Honourable the Senate to the Bill, excepting from its operation the province of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Manitoba, and providing for a special revision of the voters' lists in those provinces for elections to this House, is inconsistent with and subversive of the general principle of the Bill.

That the procedure proposed by the Honourable the Senate for securing the revision of such lists, under the authority of this Parliament, is wholly inadequate, and cannot be rendered effective without creating complicated and costly machinery incompatible with the object of the Bill.

That the amendment, therefore, in effect provides for the continuation in the provinces named of the present unwieldy and expensive system of creating special voters' lists for Dominion elections.

That the passage of the amendment by the Senate after its rejection by the House of Commons is inconsistent with the undoubted right and privilege of this House to determine the principles of the franchise under which its members are elected, and is the more unwarranted in that the country has emphatically pronounced in favour of the principle of the Bill.

Mr. FOSTER. There is a little difficulty that I find in passing upon this at the moment. The reasons that are given are somewhat long and complicated. I just rise to suggest to my hon. friend that he should not force through these amendments now, but let them be printed in the Votes and Proceedings as notices of motion, and we will take them up in the morning. It is rather an important matter, and I think it would probably facilitate business and be more satisfactory if this opportunity were given members to study the reasons stated by the hon. Solicitor General. If these reasons are good, they will have all the more weight for being studied.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The subject is not new.

Mr. FOSTER. The reasons are.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not think the reasons are new at all. They simply embody well known principles, which have been debated in this House over and over again, but if it be more convenient for my hon. friend, I think we might defer to his wishes.

Mr. FOSTER. You will not lose any time by doing so.

Mr. SPEAKER. This will stand as a notice of motion for to-morrow.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The next amendment is to line 35, page 2, and it provides for the insertion of the following words:—"But nothing herein shall enable any person to vote by schedule or otherwise than by appearing personally." The amendment is absolutely unnecessary and useless, but still we do not think it necessary to make any special objection to it. I move therefore that it be concurred in.

Amendment concurred in.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The next amendment is to the 39th line of page 2, and provides for the leaving out from "election" to (a), and the insertion of "or from having his name on the list merely by reason of any provision of the provincial law disqualifying."

I object to that for the reasons already given, and move that it be not concurred in.

Mr. SPEAKER. That will stand as a notice of motion.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The next, or fifth, amendment of the Senate, is the chief difficulty. It provides that on page 6, line 23, after the word "elections," a clause be inserted, framed by the Senate, and described as clause "a." That is the chief amendment, and the other objections I took are in consequence of this amendment. I refuse to accept it, for the reasons I have given with reference to the second amendment, and move that it be not concurred in.

Mr. SPEAKER. That will stand as a notice of motion.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The next amendment, which provides that on page 7, line 17, after the "2." clause 18a be inserted. I shall not object to that amendment, and therefore move that it be now concurred in.

Amendment concurred in.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The amendments, beginning with page 8, line 17, down to page 9, line 12, inclusive, comprising clause 21a, clause 26a, clause 26b, clause 26c, clause 27a, cannot be accepted for the reasons I have already mentioned, and I therefore move that they be not concurred in.

Mr. SPEAKER. The amendments on page 8, line 17, down to page 9, line 12, inclusive, all stand for the same reasons as the second amendment.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The last amendment of the Senate, that to page 9, line 25, providing that after the word "cents." clause 30a, framed by the Senate, be added. I have no objection, and therefore move that it be concurred in.

Amendment concurred in.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL moved that the consideration of the remaining amendments which have not been concurred in, be postponed until the next sitting of the House.

Motion agreed to.

FISHERIES AMENDMENT ACT—SAW-DUST IN RIVERS.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies) moved second reading of Bill (No. 166) in further amendment of the Fisheries Act. He said: This is the Bill I explained the other day, to extend the time within which the saw-dust is permitted to be deposited in certain rivers.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported and read the third time, and passed.

COMPANIES ACT AMENDMENT.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved second reading of Bill (No. 165—from the Senate—to amend the Companies Act. He said: This Bill provides that British and foreign mining companies may obtain licenses to work in the Yukon district on applying to the Secretary of State, filing a copy of their charter and appointing an agent upon whom processes may be served.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and the House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 2,

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Reference is made to the Yukon district. I move that in each case it be made "Yukon district and North-west Territories." as mining operations are carried on in the North-west Territories as well as in the Yukon district.

Amendment agreed to.

Bill, as amended, reported and read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY—MANITOBA AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. DAVIS. Before you leave the Chair, I wish to take up but a very few minutes in bringing before the House a matter of great importance to my constituents, I refer to the charter granted to the Manitoba and North-western Railway. In order to make the facts plain to the House, I shall have to give some details and go into the history of the transactions of this company. The Manitoba and North-western Company were first chartered by the province of Manitoba, and afterwards by this House. They received a charter from this House away back in 1883 or 1884, to build a road from Portage la Prairie, in the province of Manitoba, to Prince Albert on the Saskatchewan River, in my riding. Under that charter they were to build 50 miles in each and every year until that road was extended to the Saskatchewan. Now, Mr. Speaker, on the strength of this agreement entered into between these contractors and the Dominion Government that 50 miles a year should be built, a great many people, hundreds of people in fact, went into that country and settled, believing that the Government were sincere, that the promoters of the road were sincere, that the terms of this charter would be carried out, and that in due time the road would be built to the banks of the Saskatchewan. But what was their surprise when they found that in 1893 the promoters came back to this House and received another charter under which all the previous charters were cancelled. That charter is contained in the Act 56 Vic., chapter 52, which is entitled: An Act to consolidate the Acts relating to the Manitoba and North-western Railway Company of Canada. Under this Act the old clause providing that 50 miles of road should be built each year, was struck out, and a new clause inserted under which the company were compelled to build 20 miles of road in each and every year until it reached the Saskatchewan River. Now, Sir, I will just read subsection 3 of section 9 of this Act:

The company shall construct and complete to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council, not less than 20 miles of railway on or before the 31st day of December in each calendar year after the year 1893, otherwise their powers under this section shall cease as regards so much of the said line of railway as is not completed by the said date in each calendar year.

In 1894, or the year afterwards, this company came back to Parliament. They were not satisfied with the charter they received the year previously under which they were allowed to complete 20 miles instead of 50. The new Act was 57 and 58 Vic., chapter 79, an Act respecting the Manitoba and North-western Railway Company:

Subsection 3 of section 9 of the Manitoba and North-western Railway Company's Act, 1893, is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

The work on the extensions authorized by this section shall be completed within nine years from the passing of this Act, and the company shall complete during the year 1893, and also during each calendar year thereafter, such a portion of its railway not exceeding 20 miles as is from time to time prescribed by the Governor in Council, otherwise the company's powers under this section shall cease as regards so much of said extensions as then remains uncompleted.

You will see under this last Act the company were supposed to build 20 miles of road in 1896, 20 in 1897, and 20 in 1898; well, I am able to say of my personal knowledge that this company has not built any in 1896, nor in 1897, nor do they intend, I believe, to build any more. Still they are holding this charter, and keeping other people from going in and taking up the work they have begun. I think this Government should take the matter into consideration. Of course it was the late Government that granted the charter, but Governments never lie, and I think it is the duty of this Government to take some action to annul the charter. This matter has been brought to the attention of this House time and again, not only by the representative of the district, but by memorials from the North-west Assembly, and also, I think, by reports of the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-west Territories, also by resolutions passed by agricultural societies and boards of trade in that portion of the country. In fact all organized bodies have petitioned this House to take some action in this matter, either to compel these people to go on and build the road, or to cancel the charter, but neither one nor the other has been done. Let me point out the fact that in granting a charter to railway corporations like this, and giving them the right to build just as far as they please, and then to stop and build no more, but at the same time allowing them to draw their land grant, is a pernicious system that has injured settlement in the North-west Territories to a great extent. Speaking of this land grant, the arrangement between the Government and the railroad contractors, as with all other corporations that build roads in the North-west, is worthy of notice from the fact that in order to escape payment of taxes on the lands which they get from the Government by way of subsidy, the companies leave those lands in the hands of the Government, though they have in every case hypothecated those lands as security for money which has been advanced to them for the construction of the road. This is the modus operandi. The purchaser of a parcel of land pays his money to the contractors or to the railway company; the company applies to the Government asking them to send the patent direct to the purchaser. I will cite one case in point. Mr. McMurray, a gentleman up there, purchased a parcel of land some five years ago from the Manitoba and North-western Railway Company, and paid for the same to the company. The company applied to the Government in the usual way to grant a patent of the land, but as the company had hypothecated the lands, the Government could not, I believe, grant the patent. Mr. McMurray is consequently out of his money, and he has not up to the present time, I believe, received a patent for his land, although he paid his money some five years ago. Now, the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Robertson) the other day, in dressing down the Canadian Pacific Railway officials called them murderers and dishonest men. If he were in the House to-night, I wonder what he would think of this transaction. Here is a railway corporation that sells land and receives the money, knowing all the time that it has mortgaged those lands and that a deed cannot be given to the man who pays the money, and this man has no redress. I think this matter should be taken into consideration by the Government. There is no doubt at all that this railway corporation has an interest in the land, it must have an interest in the land before it can mortgage it in order to raise money. I believe to all intents and purposes the railway corporations own these lands, because they mortgage them for the purpose of raising money; and if they are able to mortgage them they must have some interest and right to them, and, therefore, they should be subject to taxation. It is necessary that these railway corporations should bear a share of the burdens just as much as the settlers, more especially as the labour of the settlers increases the value of the company's lands, for which they are paying nothing. I wish to call the attention of the Government to the fact that this charter has lapsed, and the company should be notified, so that other parties who wish to do so can apply and obtain a charter to build over that route. I believe there is a projected railway running very nearly in the same direction, and it is probably the intention of the parties to seek a charter next year; and in the interests of the settlers this old charter should be wiped out, so that the settlers may obtain relief and some rapid means of communication for getting their produce to market.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I should like to bring a matter to the attention of the Government. I would have brought it to the attention of the Minister of Railways, if he had been present, but in his absence, I would like to mention to the right hon. gentleman who leads the Government. There is an item in the Supplementary Estimates, which we have not yet reached, of $75,000 for the purpose of building or assisting in building an elevator at Halifax, and the right hon. gentleman may perhaps be aware that the City Council of Halifax, on 31st May last, passed a resolution appropriating $50,000 for the purpose of assisting in building that elevator. So there will be available for that purpose $125,000, which it is thought will build an elevator adequate to the requirements of the port. I have received a letter from the mayor of the city, written in behalf of the City Council and also in behalf of the commercial committee of the City Council and Board of Trade, in which he says it is very desirable to proceed with the work at once, and for that purpose to employ an engineer to select a suitable site. The City Council propose to employ at once an expert engineer to come to Halifax for the purpose of advising as to the selection of that site, and they desire to know whether the Government would instruct their engineer to proceed there also for the purpose of advising and consulting with this expert engineer that the City Council intend to employ, or whether the Government would suggest some other alternative proposition, because they desire, as far as possible, to meet the views of the Government and the Government engineer in this matter. As it is very desirable that the elevator should be completed before the close of navigation, or by the time that navigation closes on the St. Lawrence, they wish me to bring the matter to the attention of the Government, as my colleague, Mr. Russell, has been unavoidably detained for a day longer than he anticipated. I hope the matter will receive the attention of the Government.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I am sure the House will have learned with pleasure that the citizens of Halifax, through the City Council, have shown enough interest to make an appropriation of their own funds, so far as they can do so, of $50,000 to supplement the amount granted in the Supplementary Estimates for an elevator at that port. The hon. gentleman is aware that the Supplementary Estimates have not yet been passed, and therefore we have no power to make any contract or any arrangement by virtue of that proposed appropriation. The theory of the appropriation was that it would be better to provide a moderate sum and build a moderate size elevator rather than to begin by indulging in a large expenditure, but if the city of Halifax feels sufficiently interested to add to the sum, I am quite sure the Department of Railways will offer no opposition to the course pursued. It may be well, however, to understand that while the city of Halifax may through its City Council, vote a certain appropriation, it cannot be available until an Act of the legislature has been passed authorizing payment of the sum.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am sure there will be no difficulty in that regard.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No doubt the wishes of the City Council will be responded to by the legislature. I shall be glad to bring the matter to the notice of the Minister of Railways, and as representing the province and as a resident of Halifax, I am most anxious to see the suggestion of my hon. friend carried out, and the wishes of the citizens in that respect put into effect at the earliest possible moment.

Motion agreed to, and the House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Auditor General's Office—

Additional amount for expenses of examining accounts of returning officers under the Plebiscite Bill, including $650 to be paid to D. McLennan, a graduate of Toronto University, notwithstanding the provisions of the Civil Service Act, under which he is entitled to receive only $430..... $1,000

Mr. HAGGART. I do not understand the wording of the item. Is $650 proposed to be given in addition to $450 ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No. This gentleman is now in the employ of the Auditor General as a temporary clerk ; he is a man of special ability, and the Auditor General wishes to retain his services for the year. At the present time he is receiving only $450 and it is proposed to give $650.

Customs Department—

Further amount required for clerical and other assistance, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act to the contrary $1,750

Mr. FOSTER. I ask the Government whether they are going to pay any attention to the Civil Service Act or not. Nearly every item on the first page of the Supplementary Estimates finishes up with the words "Notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act." Surely the hon. gentleman can employ clerks who do not come under the Act. Who is the hon. gentleman looking after now ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Since the main estimates were laid on the Table one of the first class clerks has asked to be superannuated and as his health has entirely failed it will be absolutely necessary to do so. It is my intention when concurrence is asked on the main estimates, to move to reduce the total amount by $1,750. My intention is to get two officers, because another gentleman in the department has also tendered his resignation and unfortunately his health is in such a state that no other course can be followed but to accept. He is a second class clerk. The young man acting as my private secretary will become a second class clerk, and it is my intention to get two officers in this way. As the hon. gentleman knows there are no third class clerks now, and I could not manage it in any other way, but in this way I will be able to do it. There will be no extra expense to the department and we will be in a better position than we were in before in reference to the work.

Mr. FOSTER. Does not the Minister see he is going directly against the law we have passed to get rid of the extravagance of third-class clerkships. The law says there shall be no more third-class clerks appointed, and my hon. friend breaks the spirit of the law by appending "notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act to the contrary." He can get two clerks at $400 each under the law, if he has not favourites he wants to get in.

Mr. FIELDING.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. If that be so it is a commentary on the statutory increases. If a clerk who has been getting $1,750 resigns and I can get a clerk to do this work for $350 or $400, there must have been a great deal too much paid before.

Mr. FOSTER. I have been telling my hon. friend that, and therefore third-class clerks were abolished.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. One of the gentlemen to be appointed is to do the work of this $1,750 man.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not care if he is to do the work of three or four $1,750 men. You are going directly against the law.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman knows that under the civil service I could not take in a clerk except at $1,100.

Mr. FOSTER. You can take in two or three at $400. You are not obliged to take in a man at $1,100. When the third-class clerkships were abolished it was never intended that every new appointee should commence at $1,100, but that there should be writers commencing at $350 or $400, and going up to $600.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I really did not suppose there would be the slightest objection to this proposal. This gentleman has applied for superannuation, and unfortunately it will have to be granted to him, and another second-class clerk is also in that position. I propose to drop the estimate for one when we come to concurrence, and I put in "notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act to the contrary" because if I did not I would have appointed a second class clerk at $1,100.

Mr. FOSTER. Not necessarily.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I propose to get two men for this salary, and perhaps it will not take even that. Owing to the failing health of the gentlemen who are seeking to retire, the department will then be better equipped, and the expense will not be increased in the least. If I were taking my full main estimate and asking for this also, I could understand the hon. gentleman objecting, but I did not anticipate any objection to this.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend evidently does not wish to see the point. The legislation was introduced to give the department a chance of making these savings when such occasions occur, but the Minister chooses to keep to the old and expensive system.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Why does the hon. gentleman say that, when I can get two officers for one. Does he ask me to get an officer at $300 or $400 a year who could perform the duty of a first-class clerk receiving $1,750 ?

Mr. FOSTER. You could do it easily enough. If my hon. friend wishes to make the Civil Service Act non-effective he is doing it rapidly, but it is his own responsibility.

Mr. BRITTON. I take this opportunity of calling to the attention of the Minister of Customs the case of Mr. Wm. Neish, who was appointed in 1877, under the Government of the Hon. Alex. Mackenzie. Mr. Neish, I understand, is an excellent officer in every way, but he has been put aside and persons have been appointed from outside over his head, as well as persons promoted in the office above him. He is there to-day at no higher salary than at first, unless possibly a statutory increase of $50 for a couple of years. It is right and due to this officer, who I understand is a first-class official in every way, and considered so by his superiors in the department, that he should receive promotion. I think it well in this public way to call attention to his case and to ask the favourable consideration of the Minister to it.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I will be pleased to consider the case, but I suppose the hon. gentleman (Mr. Britton) knows how many requests there are of this kind.

Mr. BRITTON. This is an exceptional case.

Department of the Geological Survey—

To provide for increases of $50 each for Messrs. Ami, Fletcher and Ellis, $250 to R. G. McConnell, and $200 to A. P. Lowe, technical officers of the Geological Survey	$600
To provide for increase in the salary of James White, geographer, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act.....	100

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). I wish to give the recommendation of the Director of the Geological Survey in connection with these increases :

Mr. McConnell is a graduate in Arts, with first rank honours in science, McGill University. First employed in May, 1879, and permanently employed since May, 1881. In 1881 and 1882 he acted as assistant to Dr. Dawson on explorations in the North-west Territories. Since 1883 he has been in charge of a field party on geological work in the Cypress Hills, Rocky Mountains, Mackenzie and Yukon (wintering at Fort Providence in 1888), Athabasca and Peace Rivers, Finlay River, and since 1894 in West Kootenay district, British Columbia. His work, reports and maps have been made with great care and efficiency.

Mr. FOSTER. What does Mr. McConnell get now ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. $1,850.

Mr. FOSTER. And you propose to give him an increase of $250 ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. So far as I am concerned, I think Mr. McConnell is worth it, and we will dispense with his history so as to make progress.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I want to explain that Mr. Ells and Mr. Fletcher were above Mr. McConnell in the service, and the increase of Mr. McConnell's salary by $250 will place him above Mr. Ells and Mr. Fletcher, who are his seniors in the service, and who are also efficient officers. I am, therefore, asking for $50 each for these two gentlemen to place them upon an equality with Mr. McConnell, and I think the House will consider that fair. I may say that Mr. McConnell refused a salary of $5,000 in order that he might remain in the service of this Government at $2,100. As to Mr. Lowe, the Director says :

Mr. Lowe is a science graduate of McGill University. First employed in 1881, and permanently employed since 1882. In 1886 he was in charge of the Mistassini expedition, and was promoted from $850 to $1,100 for services in connection with that work. Since 1882, Mr. Lowe has been chiefly engaged in the exploration of the Labrador peninsula. His exploratory work and reports have been of the first class, and he is a very efficient officer. It is recommended that his salary should be increased from $1,600 to $1,800.

As to Mr. White, the director says :

Mr. White is a graduate of the Royal Military College, Kingston, and has been continually employed on the Geological Survey since 1884. He has had considerable experience in field work, and was appointed to the permanent staff in 1894, as chief draughtsman and geographer, vice the late Scott Barlow. In this capacity Mr. White has ever since done most efficient service, taking entire charge of the work of draughting and compiling maps, &c. The amount and responsibility of such work has of late greatly increased, and it is recommended that Mr. White's salary be raised from $1,500 to $1,600.

Mr. McALISTER. I understand that there is a vacancy in the Geological Department, and I would ask the Minister if it is the intention of the Government to promote those on the staff to fill vacancies that occur ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I cannot say that I have come to any conclusion in regard to that. I have several times consulted with the director, who is instructed to obtain information as to persons who would be competent to fill positions. The position at present vacant is one requiring special technical qualifications --that of lithologist. It is probable that if the director finds a man who is suitable, we may appoint one from the outside, but I cannot say positively at the present moment.

Mr. BELCOURT. Before this item passes, I want to take up the time of the committee for a few moments on the subject of the Geological Museum. During the last session I called the attention of the House to the matter, which I then stated and which I still believe to be of very great importance. I would not trespass on the time and the patience of the members of the committee in repeating the remarks I made at that time were it not that I have in my hand a document which emphasizes in a very peculiar way the remarks I then made. I regret that I was not in the House yesterday when this matter came up. During last session I called the attention of the House and of the Government to the very great value of the collections gathered on Sussex Street in that old dilapidated building called by the name of the Geological Museum. I cited to the House statements of Canadian and foreign scientists, and extracts from the proceedings of the Royal Society of Canada and from various high authorities, dilating upon the very great importance of those collections, and upon the very imminent danger of their destruction by fire in that building. I was very much pleased that the remarks which I then made received such encouragement from the Prime Minister and other members of the House, and that those remarks were apparently received by the leader of the Opposition and hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House generally, with marked approval. I was glad also to notice that immediately after the session, the Government, realizing its duty in the premises, appointed a commission for the purpose of investigating the condition of this particular building, and also the buildings at Ottawa generally. This commission was composed of the Auditor General, the Deputy Minister of Finance, and the Under Secretary of State. These gentlemen set about their work immediately, and carried on a most careful and diligent inquiry into the condition of the various public buildings at Ottawa, and I have their report in my hand. Although it has been printed, I do not think it has yet come to the attention of any member of the House. At all events, I fancy that very few members have seen it, and I have no doubt that the members of the committee will thank me for calling their attention to it, and will be pleased to hear some extracts from this very interesting and important report. I have examined the report very carefully, I have read it from beginning to end, and I am glad to take the opportunity afforded me as a member of this House to express the thanks we owe to the three gentlemen who so laboriously, diligently and efficiently performed the duty imposed upon them in investigating the public buildings at Ottawa. The report is very elaborate and very carefully prepared, and, after reading it, one cannot help being struck with the great danger from fire to which the buildings at Ottawa are exposed, more particularly the Geological Museum. I will, with the permission of the House, read a few extracts from this report, and I hope the Government will take particular notice of these extracts, and carry further the good work they have already begun. Now that the state of affairs disclosed by this report is under their eyes, and has been brought to the attention of the House and the country, I have no doubt the Government will deem it their duty, at all events next session, to put in the Estimates a sum which will be sufficient to provide a National Museum at Ottawa. Now, I want to read from pages 23 and 24 some remarks made by the commissioners :

Messrs. Courtney, McDougall and Pope visited the Geological Survey this afternoon, and in company with Dr. Geo. M. Dawson, the deputy head, made an examination of the department. Almost everything in this department is of value. Putting aside the Museum, as not coming within the scope of their inquiries, the attention of the commissioners was drawn to a very large number of original manuscripts, maps, plans, plots of survey and field-books, going back more than half a century. In one room are to be found plans of value to the number of 16,000, kept in wooden drawers. The larger correspondence of the department, which is equally insecure, contains many communications from distinguished geologists and scientific men of repute. This correspondence, which goes back to 1878, the commissioners regard as peculiarly interesting and valuable.

Later on, the commissioners say :

The paramount idea was forced upon the commissioners during this visit is the ever-present risk and almost certain danger of fire. Not only is there an entire absence of concrete floors, but the building appears to be a mere shell, its numerous wooden partitions and receptacles for documents adding to its insecurity. This building is joined to a collection of small shops and sheds, and in the event of fire occurring in any of these could hardly avoid sharing in the common ruin. Certain of the scientific work of the department calls for the use of small furnaces, while in more than one room in the basement are to be observed coal stoves, necessitated by the dampness of the place. Pipes for these stoves, in one case at any rate, pass through wooden partitions. Besides this, there is no system of water in the building, in fact no water at all beyond one small tap, which is over a sink. There is no hose, no hydrant—in fact, no protection whatever against fire.

What has been said with regard to the danger from fire to which the documents are exposed applies with equal force to the Museum, where there are many types which could never be replaced. The library, on the first floor, running inwards of 11,000 books, most of them technical and scientific works, running in series. These are crowded into dark corners difficult of access, and equally exposed to the constant danger of fire, which threatens the whole building. In the herbarium adjoining are 60,000 sheets containing specimens of flora of Canada. These are kept in wooden cabinets dispersed through passages, there being not sufficient room for them in the narrow space allotted to Professor Macoun.

In conclusion, the commissioners were profoundly impressed by the urgent necessity for the adoption of prompt and effective measures to minimize the risk of fire to which the valuable contents of this department are constantly exposed, and also by the inadequacy of space and of general facilities necessary to the proper conduct of this highly important service.

Further on the report then says :

Under the system proposed by the undersigned, in addition to the paramount advantage of safe custody, the records would be disposed in a regular order, the plan of arrangement would be uniform, the number of officers would be reduced to the lowest point, and public convenience and economy would be equally consulted. Without such a building the records must remain as they are until another and more disastrous conflagration shall render further consideration of the subject unnecessary.

I intended to read further extracts, but I fear that owing to the very near end of the session I would not have the patient hearing which this very important subject deserves, and shall not now trouble the committee at greater length. I want to call particular attention to the last words which I quoted from this report. "The records must remain as they are until another and more disastrous conflagration renders further consideration of the subject unnecessary." I hope that next session, when the estimates come down, the Government will provide for the immediate construction of a national museum at Ottawa. I appreciate what the Government has done so far by the appointment of this commission who, by the report they have made, have called the attention of the country to this matter, and I am satisfied that when this report is circulated, public opinion will demand that a building such as the commissioners suggest be constructed for the preservation of the very valuable collections now in the old building on Sussex Street and elsewhere. I hope that the Government will act on this report, and submit to the House next session a substantial estimate for the erection of such a building.

Department of Marine and Fisheries—To provide for the salary of W. J. Quinn and Lucien Bance, extra clerks, $600 each, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act..... $1,200

Mr. FOSTER. Why is the law broken here?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Because Mr. Quinn, who was appointed by my predecessors in 1896, and who has turned out an exceptionally able man in the accountant branch, will not remain at his present salary of $455, and we have either to increase his salary or let him go, and the accountant says he cannot supply his place. Mr. Bance is also very efficient and his knowledge of French is exceedingly useful in the department.

Mr. ELLIS. I would like to draw the attention of the hon. Minister to a matter to which I called his attention last year, and in which he made me a promise. I refer to the cemetery of St. John, belonging to the marine hospital. It is in a condition requiring the attention of some person. The Government should fall in with the proposition of the trustees of the cemetery and make some provision for the care of the lot.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I did make a promise last year and communicated with the trustee who has charge of the ground. He made a proposition that on the payment of $1,000, the committee would take charge permanently of the lot. Local legislation was passed constituting a board of trustees who have charge of the cemetery, and the part of the cemetery which belongs to the Marine and Fisheries Department is a great eyesore to the city. I think their claim to a certain sum for the care of that part of the cemetery is a good one.

Mr. FOSTER. Will they take care of it for ever for $1,000?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Then close with them, by all means, or you will be appointing a man at $600 a year to take charge of it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If I could have persuaded my colleagues, I would have had it in this year's estimates, but next year will bring down a vote.

Department of Militia and Defence—To provide for one messenger, A. E. Waterson $360

Mr. FOSTER. Is this an extra messenger?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). No, a year ago it was intended in the militia branch to substitute a man in uniform for the messenger who was doing the work there. That plan was not carried out. The same messenger was kept on last year and paid out of contingency. Now we are simply putting the vote back where it was two years ago.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend is not putting his messengers in buttons, is he?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. We are not doing it, but the General recommended last year that the system adopted in England in the military branch be adopted here and the men be taken from the permanent force. That was not carried into effect, and now the vote is put back.

Post Office Department—

To provide for an increase of salary of $50 each, to two chief clerks, E. P. Stanton and W. J. Johnstone $ 100
To provide for an increase of salary of $50 each, to eight third-class clerks.. 400
Further amount required for printing and stationery 3,000

Mr. FOSTER. How many statutory increases has the Postmaster General made now?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). No statutory increases; we have recognized the merits of a number of officers

I could not say from memory how many, except in the case of those under $450 whom we have increased all around I think by $30. Mr. Stanton is the accountant of the stamp branch and a very worthy officer. His salary has been $1,850, this makes it $1,900. Mr. Johnstone is the head of the accountant's branch. His salary has been only $1,800 and this will raise it to $1,850.

Office of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada—

To provide for clerical and other assistance, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act...	$1,000
To Henry Potter, messenger, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act.....	360
	$1,360

Mr. FOSTER. Here are two bad breaks.

The PRIME MINISTER. No, only one. If there are two my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) is responsible for one. This is the case of Henry Potter.

Mr. FOSTER. We will pass that. How about the other?

The PRIME MINISTER. I cannot give information about that at the moment.

Mr. FOSTER. That is usually the case, we shall have to pass this too.

Department of the Queen's Printer—

To increase salary of J. O. Patenaude, third-class clerk, anything in the Civil Service Act notwithstanding	$150 00
P. Mungovan, for four months, at the rate of $400 a year, anything in the Civil Service Act notwithstanding...	133 33
	$283 33

Mr. FOSTER. Why these two?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Unless my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) is prepared to pass this as on the last terms, I shall be compelled to allow it to stand. The Secretary of State has furnished me with a memorandum, but it does not give the salaries paid to these gentlemen. Better let it stand, unless the hon. gentleman will take the information on concurrence.

Mr. CHAIRMAN (Mr. Campbell). Carried.

Mr. FOSTER. We must have the information.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Very well—on concurrence.

Department of Trade and Commerce—

For clerical assistance, viz. :—Additional to W. A. Warne, $140, and Miss A. C. Kennedy, $70, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act	$210
---	-------

Mr. FOSTER. Now, this is intolerable, coming from the source it does.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). The explanation is simple. Both these parties' salaries were very small—about $400 a piece and both have been two years or more in the department. They are not appointees of mine, but of my predecessor. They have been doing very particularly good work, and have been recommended to me as well worth at least $600.

Mr. MULOCK.

Mr. FOSTER. By the way, has my hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright) come to the conclusion that this department is unnecessary, and will he promise to abolish it?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I have observed that it might be of use as a department of foreign affairs.

Mr. FOSTER. I think that a gentleman by the name of Sheppard considers it very useful.

Sundry Departments—

To provide for the payment for the year 1897-98, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, of an additional salary of $300 each to such private secretaries as are in receipt of no higher salary than $1,200, viz. : the private secretaries of the Ministers of these departments :—Finance, Inland Revenue, Customs, Interior, Marine and Fisheries, Post Office and Secretary of State	$2,100
---	---------

Mr. FOSTER. Now, here is a wholesale matter that ought to be explained.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is a repetition of an item that has already been dealt with in the main Estimates for the coming year. This is to pay these gentlemen for the year now closing on the basis of $1,500 per annum. That is to be the total amount of their salaries.

Mr. FOSTER. What kind of clerks are they?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They are not in the civil service. At first it was hoped that these gentlemen would be worked into the civil service, and in that way would get their advance. Several have been provided for in that way, but not the gentlemen here referred to.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the hon. gentleman know of the fierce internecine war carried on with reference to the officials' gallery between perky private secretaries of the new Ministers and old and valued deputies in the service?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). That has been settled.

Mr. FOSTER. With the Minister of Public Works, I suppose, as peacemaker.

Mr. McMULLEN. I do hope that the Government will introduce an amendment to the Civil Service Act—

Mr. FOSTER. Vain hope.

Mr. McMULLEN. Hon. gentlemen opposite should have done it while in power.

I could read to my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) a very long list of violations of the Civil Service Act. But I do not wish to detain the House. Under these violations of the Civil Service Act, extra allowance is made to clerks from year to year. The Civil Service Act should be lived up to or it should be abolished. No civil servant should be allowed double pay. If his salary is not sufficient to remunerate him for the services he renders to the country it should be increased. Under the law a clerk must be appointed at a very small salary or else you must give him $1,100 to commence with. It would be better to recast the Act and provide that when a person is hired in one of the departments, he is to be paid a salary for all the services he will be required to perform within the department. Take, for instance, the Registrar of the Exchequer Court. We pay him a salary of $2,000, a very respectable sum. The year before last, I think, he was allowed $225 extra. He gets $300 for preparing the proceedings of the court for the printer, and then he gets $174 as commission upon the sale of stamps. Now, I contend, this is all wrong. Why, we have no less than 730 men in the employ of the country at this moment who last year drew double pay, that is, pay over and above their ordinary salaries, for supposed services rendered by them. It has got to that condition that every man in the civil service to-day is from morning to night seeking some hook upon which to hang a charge for extra pay and extra allowance. Take the clerk of the Supreme Court. His salary is $2,600 a year. Last year he drew $600 as editor of the reports, and received a commission on selling stamps. The stamps are necessarily sold by him as clerk of the court, law stamps, the revenue of this country, and he has the face to charge a commission for handing those stamps over to those who use them in that court, and he was paid $132 as commission for selling stamps. I contend this principle is wrong, and had I been allowed to go on with the Bill I had on the Order paper this year, it would put an absolute stop to all this kind of thing. The ex-Minister of Finance appears to smile at my remarks. I can read over to him figures showing the manner in which he and his friends abused the Civil Service Act during the last 12 years. I have a statement in my hand which shows that 2,093 civil servants in this country drew in twelve years, while hon. gentlemen were in power, $760,550.30 of extra pay. The average salary of those men during that time was $1,433.42 without any extras. The average of extras was $263.36. I contend this system should be put a stop to. This country has no right to pay men in this kind of way. If, next year, the Government do not introduce an amendment to the Civil Service Act to put a stop to this kind of thing, I shall undoubtedly renew my notice of that Bill, and press it upon the consideration of this House. Let us give the civil servants a fair remuneration for their services, but give them no extras.

Mr. CLANCY. Perhaps this is a good time for the Postmaster General to answer my question with reference to the places where post offices are being rented, and what rent he pays

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). I can say to the hon. gentleman that I think there have been no premises rented by the Post Office Department for the purposes of the post office, since I took office. I find a number of leases made to the department, of premises in a few towns, in Ontario principally, but those leases are null and void if exceeding a year. There is no provision in the Act authorizing us to take a lease at all, so that no lease creating a charge on the revenue can be made exceeding the period of the fiscal year for which we vote the money. I have a list of places: Bowmanville, Oshawa, Shediac, Sackville, St. Roch de Québec, St. Sauveur de Québec, St. Catherine Street, Montreal, Victoriaville, Woodstock. Then there is a room in the Union station at Toronto, acquired recently, by the Public Works Department. There is also in Toronto the eastern receiving house and the northern receiving house; and there is a room at the Bonaventure station, Montreal. There are also premises in Sherbrooke, leased for the purpose of an inspector's office, and since the office has been abolished, the premises have been sub-let by the department for the unexpired portion of the term.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman stated that these leases expired at the end of a year. Is rent still being paid?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I did not say they expired. I said there was no legal right to take a lease for a period longer than a year. But I find a number of such leases, whatever they are good for, in existence, and I have not yet decided to deal with them.

Mr. CLARKE. Are large post office buildings only leased for a year in such places as Toronto?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know what the length of the term is, but the lessors have no claim to recover under leases for any period longer than the year for which the supplies are voted.

Mr. CLARKE. After a branch post office has been established in a certain place for a number of years, it would be a mistake to remove it, unless extraordinary circumstances demand it, because the public become acquainted with the location.

Administration of Justice..... $1,126.03

Mr. ERB. I desire to repeat the question I put to the Government a day or two ago as to the grounds upon which J. P. Woods, late county judge of Perth, was retired; whether he got a retiring allowance or superannuation, and if so, upon what ground?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. He was not retired, he resigned, but after an investigation. A commission was appointed and held an investigation, after which he resigned. He was entitled to a superannuation allowance, as a matter of course.

Mr. ERR. I desire to say that I fully agree with what has been said during the last few days as to the high standing of our judges as a class. But we cannot close our eyes to the fact that though the judges as a class are of a high character and are deserving of our admiration and respect, still there are exceptional cases. This, I am sorry to say, is one of those exceptional cases. Complaints, I understand, were made against this gentleman. A commission was appointed to make an investigation. So far as I have been able to find out, the investigation was dropped, the judge was allowed to retire or resign, and I see in the main Estimates a superannuation allowance of $1,600 has been allowed him. I wish to enter my protest against this proceeding. Whichever member of the Government is responsible for this act, I do not know, but I feel strongly on the matter. If it is necessary that we should have a superannuation Act, I have no fault to find with judges receiving a retiring allowance whenever they are entitled to it, but I protest against granting a superannuation allowance when the Act does not cover the case, and in this case the individual brought himself into this unfortunate position by his own voluntary act. The charges laid against him were of a very serious nature. As they were dropped, we do not know whether they were true or not; but considering that he saw fit to resign, we can come to no other conclusion than there was some ground for the charges made. Frequent charges have been made against the old administration of abuse of the Civil Service Act and the Superannuation Act. We have here a similar case. I maintain that if the Superannuation Act cannot be carried out without abuse, the sooner we get rid of it the better. We should pay our judges and civil servants fair salaries for work performed. If they see fit, they can save out of their earnings, get their lives insured and make provision for their families or their old age. If they choose to spend all their means, or live beyond their income, let them bear the consequences, the same as other people. These are my views on the subject of superannuation.

Mr. BRITTON. The other evening I asked, in respect to Judge McGuire, of the Yukon, whether it is intended to pay him, in addition to his salary, living expenses.

Mr. ERR.

His salary has been increased by $1,000, and travelling expense will be paid him. I suppose there is no permanent capital there yet, and so I wish to know if it is intended to pay his living expenses.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I draw attention to the fact that section 10 of the Bill respecting the judges of provincial courts provides that there should be a judge of the Superior Court in the Yukon, and that he is to be paid such travelling allowances as the Governor in Council may determine.

Mr. BRITTON. But I suppose some policy has been arrived at as to whether his living expenses will be paid when residing at Dawson City.

To purchase cameras and signaling instruments for the purpose of introducing the Bertillon system for the identification of criminals in the five penitentiaries, and fitting up a central bureau at Ottawa under the supervision of the Commissioner of Dominion Police for recording and distributing the information obtained $1,000

Mr. FOSTER. Is this system to be extended to all kinds of criminals?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Our attention has been called to the fact that it would be highly improper that the system should be extended to ordinary misdemeanours. There is no intention to apply the system to cases of that sort. We can safely leave its application, I think, to the head of the Dominion police.

Mr. FOSTER. Will it apply to Ministers who break the Civil Service Act dozens of times. There are fifteen items in these Estimates connected with the civil service, and there are eighteen violations of the Civil Service Act.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The Ministers are exposed to another system which, however, is more excruciatingly painful.

To pay the surgeon of the Kingston Penitentiary for services as medical superintendent of insane ward, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Penitentiary Act and amendments thereto..... $300

Mr. CLARKE. I should like to obtain some information from the Government respecting the payment of this amount. Who is the gentleman to whom this sum is to be paid?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The former incumbent of this position, Dr. Strange, received a salary of $1,800 a year, and in addition he was entitled to his general practice. Under the new regulations Dr. Phelan had his salary fixed at $1,500. The intention is to give him an additional $300 because of services rendered in connection with the insane ward. This will make his salary the same as that of his predecessor, but he will not have the right to practice, and he will be obliged to give his whole time to the service of the penitentiary.

Mr. COCHRANE. I suppose Dr. Strange had to give medical attendance to the prisoners when required. We do not want a man waiting for some prisoners to get sick.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It was found desirable, under the regulations made previous to the change of Government, to provide that the physician should give his whole time to the penitentiary service.

Mr. SPROULE. How many inmates are there in the Kingston penitentiary ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Something like 350.

Mr. CLARKE. Can the hon. gentleman state the retiring allowance paid to Dr. Strange ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Not at the moment.

Mr. CLARKE. When was he superannuated ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. A year ago ; he is over seventy years of age.

Mr. COCHRANE. He was not superannuated so much, I think, because he could not attend to his practice, but largely at his own wish.

Mr. CLARKE. Did Dr. Strange look after patients in the insane wards ?

Mr. COCHRANE. And the new medical officer receives an increase of $300 for that service ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. He received $1,800, and he had his general practice in addition. The new appointee only receives $1,500, and we ask that he be paid for the future $1,800, the same as his predecessor, but with this difference, that he is not allowed outside practice.

Mr. SPROULE. The object was to show economy by starting out at $1,500, and now you give him the full salary.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is not the object. The intention is to reward adequately a man of first-class merit ; a man infinitely superior to any we have in any of the other penitentiaries.

Mr. POPE. Why did you not start him off with a high salary ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Because we wanted to find him out, and we discovered him.

Mr. POPE. How could you want to find him out, if you appointed him permanently at the beginning ? You are in the hole.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I may be, in the opinion of my hon. friend (Mr. Pope), but I do not think any one else cares very much about his opinion.

Mr. QUINN. As the superannuation of Dr. Strange followed on the report of the Kingston penitentiary commissioners, and as that report is a very unique document, it will not be amiss to make some reference to it, especially as I cannot agree with some of the statements made about it yesterday. When questioned by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) the Solicitor General said :

As a result of the report of the inquiry into the Kingston penitentiary the deputy warden, storekeeper and engineer were dismissed, the surgeon was superannuated, and the services of one or two other officials are dispensed with.

The Solicitor General forgot to mention that owing to the criticisms in this House last session, and owing to the reiterated demands of the engineer, Mr. Devlin, another commission was appointed to investigate the commissioners on whose report these officers were dismissed. Mr. Devlin, the late engineer, asked for this commission and it was appointed. Any hon. gentleman who refers to the report of the commissioners will find that some three pages of it were covered with charges against Mr. Devlin. These commissioners held him up as a man unworthy of any consideration, and it was even insinuated in the House that before this session Mr. Devlin would be behind the bars of the Kingston penitentiary as a criminal. Mr. Devlin persisted in his demands for an inquiry notwithstanding that, and the Minister of Justice, who I presume examined all the evidence taken by these commissioners found there was nothing in nine-tenths of the charges against Devlin, and boiled down the charges to five insignificant allegations of what was termed a conspiracy to defraud the Government. These charges were investigated at Kingston and Montreal, and I have no hesitation in saying that the commissioner who was appointed by the Department of Justice to investigate, will report to the department that there is not one tittle of evidence to support the charges that were made against Mr. Devlin in the first instance. This report of the commissioners resulted in three respectable and honourable men being dismissed from the Kingston penitentiary. They have lain under these charges for more than a year, and now that the charges made by these commissioners have been further investigated, the last commissioner will, I believe, report that there is not one tittle of evidence in support of them.

Mr. BRITTON. Is it fair to anticipate the report of the commissioner ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Let him proceed. The best service that could be done the administration of the department is to allow this to go on.

Mr. QUINN. Two of these men have not been allowed any investigation, but the third has been granted an investigation, and I have no hesitation in stating that the result will be to vindicate Mr. Devlin.

Mr. MCGREGOR. You do not know anything about it.

Mr. QUINN. I do know about it, because having taken the interest I did in this matter last session, and knowing the manner in which these commissioners conducted the inquiry, I took the trouble of going to Kingston to be present at the investigation, and I heard the evidence adduced before the commissioner, and I know what I am speaking about.

Mr. MCGREGOR. I do not think you do.

Mr. QUINN. I am not responsible for the hon. gentleman's calibre or his power of thinking, but I leave the House to judge whether his thinking is right or not. It was not my intention to refer to this matter, as I understood an arrangement was come to that the report of the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary commissioners would not be debated this session, but it is necessary for me to say something, as some hon. members yesterday disregarded this understanding and made ex parte statements concerning the report, which should be corrected. Let me say that all these penitentiary commissions have been conducted in a most outrageous manner, and from beginning to end have been a violation of the first principles of justice. In the history of English law in England or any British colony there is no parallel for a commission carried on as was this commission appointed to inquire into the Kingston and St. Vincent de Paul penitentiaries. Yesterday in speaking about this matter my hon. friend (Mr. Fitzpatrick) said :

The commissioners commenced their investigation into St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary in the month of April, 1897. They proceeded with the investigation, and towards the month of August they had practically completed their labours. As a result of the report made at that time, Mr. Ouimet was recommended for dismissal.

I have too much respect for the Solicitor General to think that he would be a party to what was done by these commissioners, but let me read for his information the demands which were made by Mr. Ouimet, then warden of St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary, at the time the commissioners first began their inquiry, and we shall see from it how the commissioners acted at that time. The letter is as follows :—

To Messrs. Noxon, Fraser and D. A. Lafortune,
Commissioners to inquire into the administration of the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary.

Sirs,—I have been formally apprised by the Department of Justice that you are sent here as a commission to inquire into the administration of the penitentiary, and also possibly into certain charges made against me personally. I am at your disposal as regards both, and I beg from you to give me communication of any instructions that you may have which might apprise me with the kind of information that may be required from me, and also what are the charges that you intend to investigate against me.

I must also respectfully state that having no legal training, I am unable by myself without a counsel to conduct my defence in a way to do justice to myself and properly bring before your commission the facts upon which your commission shall have to report.

I therefore beg to request your commission to allow me the assistance of the legal counsel to properly defend not only my honour and position, but also to protect and defend the honour of this institution and of those of my co-officers who might be affected by the investigation.

Yours,

(Sgd.) TEL. OUIMET.

Warden.

St. Vincent de Paul,
20th April, 1897.

The answer given by Mr. Noxon, the chairman of the commissioners, to this letter was :

St. Lawrence Hall,
Montreal, 24th April, 1897.

Sir,—The commissioners having considered your request to be represented by counsel during the investigation into the arrangement of the institution under your charge, we have to advise that no one is employed to prosecute the investigation to your prejudice, and it is not essential to an intelligent pursuit of our inquiries that counsel be employed by you to direct us in respect to them.

Should there come under our attention any matters reflecting upon your official conduct, notice will be given you, and ample opportunity offered to call witnesses if necessary to make clear your position in relation to them.

I am sir, your obedient servant,

(Sgd.) JAS. NOXON.

Chairman.

Téléphore Ouimet,

Warden of St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary.

This is dated the 24th of April, 1897 ; yet my hon. friend made this statement :

The commissioners commenced their investigation into the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary in the month of April, 1897. They proceeded with the investigation, and towards the month of August they had practically completed their labours. As the result of the report they made at that time, Mr. Ouimet, the warden, was recommended for dismissal.

So that these commissioners did not, in accordance with the letter which they sent to Mr. Ouimet, give him any notice of the charges brought against him, the evidence heard against him, or the witnesses who gave evidence before him ; but, contrary to their letter, they sent to the Department of Justice in August, 1897, a report, as a result of which Mr. Ouimet was dismissed from his position as warden. My hon. friend also said that Mr. Ouimet made representations to the department, and asked for an investigation. That is quite true ; he did so. But my hon. friend makes this specific statement :

My hon. friends will find by the report that whereas these specific charges were communicated to Mr. Ouimet about the 15th September, yet because of the absence of his counsel and witnesses, there were numerous delays, all resulting from the action of the warden, and I concurred in these delays asked for by him.

Now, my hon. friend, I am sure, stated then what he believed to be accurate in every particular. I do not charge him with any bad faith. I charge him with lack of information on this question, and I charge the commissioners with having made these representations to the Department of Justice in order to cover up their own neglect of duty ; because I am informed by counsel employed by Mr. Ouimet—leading counsel of Montreal, whom I am sure my hon. friend would believe, even against the commissioners—that only on one occasion was the commission prevented from sitting as usual on account of the absence of Mr. Ouimet's counsel. That was one occasion on which Mr. Greenshields was obliged to be absent from Montreal, and could not attend the sitting of the commission. On every other occasion when the commissioners could not proceed with their investigations, it was due to the absence of one of the commissioners. I think three adjournments occurred, either on account of the absence of one of the commissioners, or on account of the absence of witnesses, or on account of the inability of the commissioners to proceed, due solely to themselves. So that my hon. friend was not quite accurate. He, of course, made these statements on the information he had from these commissioners. There was another peculiarity about this commission which I am sure my hon. friend did not know anything about, or else he would not have tolerated it. When this commission sat in the first instance—that is, the commission of which Mr. Ouimet knew nothing, and on which the recommendation was made to the Department of Justice for his dismissal, and on which he was actually dismissed, and in answer to which he made a demand from the Department of Justice to grant him a subsequent inquiry—when this first commission sat, it sat at the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary, where the convicts could be examined as witnesses, where the officers of the institution could be brought as witnesses, where the documents that were to be referred to were right at the hands of witnesses and the commissioners. But all that was changed when Mr. Ouimet was put on his defence. There was no sitting at St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary then ; there was no chance given to him to cross-examine the witnesses who had given evidence against him, there was no chance given to call witnesses in his defence. They were poor men, and he was obliged to bring them to Montreal to the St. Lawrence Hall, and pay their expenses. He could not, of course, get one of the convicts of the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary out of the prison to give evidence in his favour, and it was impossible to cross-examine them on any evidence they had given against him. It was impossible for him to have reference to the documents and other articles in the penitentiary which were necessary to find evidence either against him or in his favour. He was put at enormous expense to engage counsel ; and when this counsel attempted to cross-examine witnesses on questions that did not bear immediately on the particular charge against him, all reference to them was ruled out by the commissioners. These are matters which the hon. gentleman could not know, but which the commissioners used as a piece of petty tyranny for the purpose of carrying out what they thought they had been appointed for, that was, the dismissal of Mr. Ouimet as warden. What was the fact ? I will not state this as a matter proven before the commission ; I state it as a matter currently reported through the city of Montreal and through the village of St. Vincent de Paul ; that, for example, when the commission first sat to investigate the charges against Mr. Ouimet, commissioners were known to go to convicts in the penitentiary and put their arms over their shoulders, pat them on the back, and promise them rewards, that their terms would be shortened, and that they would give them privileges such as the wearing of moustaches if they would give information against the officers of the penitentiary. For instance, a man named Viau, one of the most notorious criminals, possibly the most notorious criminal in Canada, a man who has spent the greatest part of his life in the penitentiary, was allowed by the commissioners to grow a beard and moustache and to wear civilian's clothes, and was promised, as a reward for the information he would give against the officers, his release from the penitentiary.

Mr. MCGREGOR. You would not take his word ?

Mr. QUINN. I would not certainly, but the commissioners did. I see that my hon. friend is disgusted at the idea of my taking Viau's word. It was on the evidence of Viau and such men as he that Mr. Ouimet was dismissed.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not like to interrupt my hon. friend in his very interesting speech ; but I would like him to tell us where he can get evidence that any promise was given to Viau that if he gave information against the officers he would be released, or that he was allowed to wear a beard and moustache. I state, with all due deference to my hon. friend, that there is not a word of truth in that.

Mr. QUINN. I say this is a matter of public report in Montreal and in the village of St. Vincent de Paul. I say the officers of the institution know this to be a fact, and I guarantee, if my hon. friend will grant another commission to investigate that charge, that I will prove it as a fact. But these are only some of the things.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Do I understand my hon. friend to say here, in his place in Parliament, that he is prepared to prove that the commissioners gave permission to Viau to wear a beard and moustache as a reward for any information he gave to them?

Mr. QUINN. I undertake to prove that the commissioners went to St. Vincent de Paul on the 24th of April, 1897, that Viau at that time occupied the position of an ordinary convict, that he was interviewed by the commissioners, that as a result of or immediately after this interview he was allowed to wear his moustache, and was allowed to wear civilian's clothes, and that he continued to do so during the whole time of the sitting of this commission. I cannot prove by the men who composed this commission that they made these promises. I have had too much experience of them to attempt to prove it by them, and I would not attempt to prove such a thing by Viau, one of the notorious convicts in the penitentiary, and whom I know too well. But he was one of the men on whom the commission relied to get evidence against Warden Ouimet. What more? My hon. friend is startled and I do not wonder at it, I know he is not aware of any of these things, but I refer him to Mr. Ouimet's counsel. Let him ask Mr. Greenshields.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I have had several conversations with Mr. Greenshields, and I never heard him make that statement.

Mr. QUINN. I will give another.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Better prove this one first.

Mr. QUINN. My hon. friend does not know that these convicts were taken by the commissioners into a private room in the penitentiary and there examined, and before they left that room were sworn not to divulge the fact that they had been cross-examined by the commissioners. My hon. friend does not know that.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No, nor do you.

Mr. QUINN. I know it from as good authority as any hon. member in this House. I know it by the word of two members of the Bar of the city of Montreal.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Give us their names.

Mr. QUINN. Mr. Leblanc and Mr. J. N. Greenshields.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. They are responsible for the accuracy of your statement.

Mr. QUINN.

Mr. QUINN. Yes. My hon friend did not know that, and I do not wonder that he should be astonished. I was horrified, or rather I would have been if I had not had my experience at Kingston penitentiary investigation, and seen the way in which the officers of that institution had been held up to the ridicule and contempt of the convicts, and looked more like criminals than did the convicts, while the convicts who were able to give information to the commissioners looked more like the warden and the guards. The hon. member for Laval (Mr. Fortin) brings as a charge against the warden that a large quantity of the stone and a large quantity of the cement were not accounted for. What are the facts? The evidence comes from a man named Crane, who made all the measurements. Mr. Crane belongs to Brockville, I understand. He swore to measurements, and I am informed that the measurements were never made by him but by convicts, and were sworn to by Crane as facts. In any event, the disappearance of this stone or cement was not a matter chargeable to Mr. Ouimet. It was under the supervision of the Department of Public Works, and all that Ouimet had to do with it was to see that the convicts, detailed for this particular work, were kept at the work and properly looked after. He had no account to take of the stone or the cement. There was an officer of the Department of Public Works to attend to that.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Who was that officer?

Mr. QUINN. I do not know his name, but I am informed that there was one. The next charge the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Fortin) made was that letters belonging to the convicts were not delivered to them and were left lying in the vault for years, and also that letters given to be posted by the convicts were never mailed. If my hon. friend has read the evidence, and he must have found that the evidence concerning this matter is that Mr. Papineau, the secretary of the penitentiary, was the officer who had charge of that particular branch. It could not be expected that the warden of the penitentiary could be also warden's secretary, the head officer of Public Works, guard and everything else in the prison. He was there as the chief officer, and of course had to see that his subordinates attended to their duty, but the secretary, when asked what had become of those letters, made no answer in many instances. Well, did the Department of Justice dismiss Papineau, who was directly responsible. No, but they dismissed the warden. Papineau was not dismissed but sent down to a position in the Dorchester penitentiary.

There is another great charge made by my hon. friend from Laval (Mr. Fortin) about the sale of goods by prisoners—a custom which has existed in the penitentiary from time immemorial. I can remember as a boy visiting the Kingston penitentiary, seeing the prisoners offering toothpicks, and little nick-nacks of that kind which they had made themselves, for sale to visitors. That was permitted by every warden from the time of Warden Macdonald, some 30 years ago; and one can readily understand that a concession of that kind would rather help to improve the morals of the convicts. That however, is one of the complaints against Warden Ouimet. I do not know whether it is forbidden by any law of the department, but I do know that 30 years ago it was allowed by Warden Macdonald in the Kingston penitentiary. There is another charge, that of selling goods to the prisoners, but when we come to the evidence, we find that the selling consisted merely of the disposal of some apples by some of the guards to the convicts, and was permitted by the inspector and the department. In any event, it was not such an outrageous violation of duty as to necessitate the dismissal of the warden.

The next statement made by the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Fortin) is that the warden had a set of harness made upon a model lot of the harness for the Lieutenant-Governor of the province of Quebec, without any expense to himself, for his own personal use and benefit. I am informed that that is not the case at all. This evidence shows that this harness was allowed by the department to Mr. Ouimet for use in the penitentiary, and it was used for the purposes of the penitentiary. There is also a charge that he kept four or five horses, and I am told that this is grossly exaggerated, and that there is no evidence to prove it. I am told that he kept two horses with the knowledge of the inspector and the department. These two were used for the service of the penitentiary, and the warden used them occasionally when he required them.

Now, my hon. friends made a great misado about a yacht. Without going into all the details which he went into, about the ownership being in two individual officers of the department, one of whom died, and some difficulty occurring about the ownership, I am informed that the facts are that a certain gentleman had permission to have a yacht built in the penitentiary, and furnished the material, and everything in connection with it. He had it built, with the knowledge of the department, in the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary out of materials furnished by himself. And, after the yacht had been built, he permitted the officers of the penitentiary to use it for the purposes of the penitentiary for the placing of certain buoys in the river in the neighbourhood, and also for following prisoners on certain occasions who had attempted to escape. Certain materials which had been furnished by him and destroyed by prisoners who were working on this yacht, were afterwards supplied out of penitentiary materials, and no bill was ever sent to him, though he has always been ready and willing to pay for them. It has been the subject of a charge against the warden that this yacht was built at the expense of the Department of Justice, when as a matter of fact according to the information I have, it was built by this gentleman out of materials furnished by him, and if the materials were furnished by the penitentiary it was to supply the place of materials destroyed by the convicts who were working on the yacht, an account of which has not been sent to him or it would have been paid long ago. Now, my only object in referring to this matter at all was that the statements made contrary to the understanding arrived at, I believe, between my hon. friend the Solicitor General and the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) who is absent, and was absent when these statements were made, should not go unchallenged. I do not pretend to state what I have stated from having read carefully every page of the evidence brought before these commissioners. But I do say there is not one fact of which I have spoken in connection with the charges referred to by the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Fortin) that I have not substantiated by reference to the evidence of different witnesses examined before these commissioners. I think the statement of the hon. member for Laval exaggerates the facts as given in evidence before the commissioners. I do not say it goes to exaggerate the finding of the report, because from my experience of the reports sent in by these commissioners, they are prepared to exaggerate any evidence brought before them, or to manufacture it where it has not been brought before them. I should like to see the Solicitor General take the same stand in this matter as he took in the case of the Kingston penitentiary, and though justice may be tardy, I hope he will mete out to the men who have been dismissed, both in Kingston and St. Vincent de Paul penitentiaries, the same treatment as he did to the engineer of the Kingston penitentiary by giving him an opportunity to exculpate himself from the charges made by the commissioners of the Kingston penitentiary last year.

THE SOLICITOR GENERAL. When the report of the commissioners first came up to be discussed the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) told me he had not had time necessary to examine the evidence to put him in a position to discuss this matter and refer to the evidence and not to mere street gossip for his authority. In view of the fact that the evidence was voluminous, we agreed that it would be wiser to delay the discussion until we had time to refer to the documents and evidence, because what hon. gentlemen on both sides want is an intelligent discussion of matters of fact and not an attempt to deal with charges upon the basis of mere street gossip.

The commissioners for the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary were appointed in April, 1897. At that time they were approached by the warden who asked whether they would allow counsel on his behalf to appear before them. They stated that they had no charges to make against him, that they were appointed to investigate the discipline and the management of the penitentiary; and, very properly, they said: If, after we have made an examination, we discover charges to be made against you, they will be communicated to you, and you will be given an opportunity to answer them and explain them away. They made their examination, and as a result, in the month of August, they came to the conclusion that it would be improper, in view of the evidence they had gathered, to allow this gentleman to remain longer at the head of this important institution. We had riot and revolt in that penitentiary, we had stealing by wholesale. Stone was taken away to the value of $60,000 and used, in part, for the construction of a building by the warden himself. We found it necessary to inform the gentleman that his services would no longer be required. The warden asked that the charges be formulated that he be given an opportunity to defend himself. In September, 1897, we took the evidence and analysed it, extracting from it several charges, and communicated these charges to him. When the charges were made against him, he asked permission to be represented by counsel and to produce witnesses before the commissioners. The permission was granted. Mr. Ouimet had not one counsel, not two but three. He chose Mr. Bisailon, then Mr. Greenshields, and afterwards he settled on Mr. Leblanc. I do not ask the House to believe anything on street gossip, but I deny emphatically the statements made in regard to these delays. In the month of September, Mr. Bisailon applied for a postponement of the investigation on the ground that he was about to leave for Europe to attend a meeting of the Privy Council in England. He said he was going to be away for some time, and it would be necessary to substitute other counsel. As a result Mr. Greenshields was chosen, and not once, not twice, not half a dozen times, but more than that, Mr. Greenshields applied to the commissioners for delay, and, on their refusal, he applied to myself personally. The telegram and letters are in existence, I make this statement before this House—and I am responsible as representing the Department of Justice in this House—that I am prepared to produce the documents in support of my statement. Now, we have a prolongation of this investigation from the beginning early in September down to the end of December, and during all that time the delays were occasioned exclusively by Mr. Ouimet and in his interest, as he represented it to me.

I am not going to deal with the report.

Mr. FITZPATRICK.

The report of the Commissioners is before the House. So far as I am concerned I am not going to ask this House, when I come to deal with that report, to take for granted one single phrase, one single line, one single word that is in the report. I am prepared to corroborate it from beginning to end by evidence I have in my possession. I am prepared to prove that accounts were paid twice over, accounts paid over that were received back by myself since I have been connected with the Department of Justice. I am prepared to prove the statement made last night by the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Fortin) that stone to the value of $60,000 is not accounted for; I am prepared to prove the statement that he made with reference to cement. I do not ask you to take the commissioners' report, I will deal with it when the time comes. I will not ask you to take the report on the faith of those who made it, on the strength of their character and of their position, but I am prepared to ask you to deal with it in connection with the evidence I can produce in corroboration. I say that is the only honest way to deal with this report, it is the only serious way, it is the only way we are justified in dealing with it, and in taking five minutes of the time of this House in that connection.

Mr. QUINN. Will my hon. friend state that the disappearance of this stone was one of the charges made against Warden Ouimet?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, one of the grounds of his dismissal.

Mr. QUINN. Does he know that when Mr. Leblanc, counsel for Ouimet, attempted to adduce evidence and cross-examine Crane as to the measurement of that stone, he was stopped by one of the commissioners, Mr. Fraser, and the commission would not allow that evidence, as Crane's report could not affect the warden?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I will deal with that when I put the evidence before the House. I am not going to be drawn out by questions of this sort.

Mr. QUINN. It is on statements made by yourself.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I will deal with it on the evidence. Now, let me come down to the Kingston penitentiary report. This matter my hon. friend is familiar with, he was connected with it, and he acted in the matter by himself and through his partner. What are the facts so far as Mr. Devlin is concerned? The facts are that charges were made against Mr. Devlin. And here let me say that we are entitled, if in our view the proper administration of any department requires it, to dismiss any official in the public service without being obliged to accuse him of thievery or rascality of any sort. It is sufficient that we should consider his appearance at the head of any department is contrary to the public interest, to justify his dismissal. But in dealing with Devlin, we made specific charges against him—I am not going to forestall the report of the commission—but we made specific charges against him; and I went to this extreme, that after he was dismissed, in order to give him an opportunity to justify himself and to prove that some of the charges made by the commissioners against him were unfounded, I made specific charges and communicated them to him, and he was offered an opportunity to produce evidence to deny those charges, and I appointed practically, a man of his own selection as commissioner. And I say, moreover, that after the investigation was finished, Devlin and his counsel declared that this investigation was in every respect impartial, and that they were thoroughly satisfied with the judicial manner in which the commissioners had conducted the inquiry. I will ask my hon. friend when, next session, that report is brought here, to get up and say what he said to-night, that that report would be favourable to Mr. Devlin. Let him bear in mind what I am telling him now, he will read that report, which is now partially ready, it will be produced, and if my hon. friend's contention is borne out, I will undertake to see that Mr. Devlin is put back in the penitentiary—but I will not say in what capacity.

Mr. FORTIN. I happened to come into the House when my hon. friend from Montreal Centre (Mr. Quinn) had been speaking for some time, and so I do not know whether he referred to me before or not. But I must say from what I heard of his speech that he entirely misapprehended what I said in committee last night. I made no charge against any officer of the penitentiary, I simply expressed regret that the report had not been printed in order that the members of the House might take cognizance of it. I then went on to state what the perusal of some pages of the report shows. I mentioned that there were charges against the warden in regard to stone, cement, letters, and so forth. But I never mentioned the name of the warden in connection with these things nor of any other officer; I merely mentioned the facts that had been brought to light. I never followed the inquiry, I never preferred a single charge myself, in fact, I allowed the commissioners appointed to hold the investigation, they did not require any assistance, nor did I assist them directly or indirectly. So, when my hon. friend makes the assertion that I charged the warden with doing this or doing that, he is mistaken. I never charged the warden or anybody else. I know nothing of these matters beyond what I see in the report. If he challenges my statements as to the contents of the report, I can quote, for instance, from page 71 with regard to the stone. He will see that the fact I mentioned to the committee last night is borne out by the report of the commission. I know nothing of the evidence, never saw it, never had any desire to see it. Let me read this paragraph from page 71 of the report:

The result is that the Government paid $107,796.25 for 539,435 feet of stone. Of that stone, 215,448 feet, worth $42,133.72 at contract prices, are accounted for.

Deduct $42,000 from $107,000, and you have $65,000 worth of stone unaccounted for. Now, for the cement we find the same testimony in the report:

In connection with this work it is also found that some 1,637 barrels of cement were paid for by the Department of Public Works, and only about 650 accounted for.

I stated last night that about 700 barrels were unaccounted for, but the report says that nearly 1,000 barrels cannot be accounted for. I have not a word to withdraw from the statement I made last night.

Mr. QUINN. The hon. member for Laval says he never mentioned the name of the warden or of any other officer. As a matter of fact, the warden is the officer who has been dismissed.

Mr. FORTIN. Not the only one.

Mr. QUINN. He is the most important officer who has been dismissed. When we find that a man has been dismissed from an office and charges of grave irregularities, or fraud, or theft, made or insinuated against him, then we are inclined to charge him with all the irregularities of the position from which he has been discharged. My hon. friend must have known that any language that he may use in that way will be construed, not as against impersonal individuals, but as against somebody. Somebody must be responsible for it.

Mr. FORTIN. I spoke of the institution generally.

Mr. QUINN. Does my hon. friend know that there has been an inspection of that institution annually since Warden Ouimet has been there for twelve years? If he does know that, does he not know that it has always been reported as the best managed institution in the Dominion of Canada, and that Warden Ouimet has been reported as the most efficient officer in the Dominion of Canada? Does he not know as a matter of fact from the annual report of the inspector that the cost of maintaining prisoners there was far less under Warden Ouimet than at any other penitentiary; that the discipline of the penitentiary during the twelve years Warden Ouimet was there was better than in any other penitentiary; that in these reports the inspector has continually given Warden Ouimet the highest character of any warden in the Department of Justice. Yet the hon. gentleman says he makes no charges against this man. He takes out a certain portion of the commissioner's report, which it was understood between the leader and the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) was not to be discussed this session, and he based his statement on that report. I would not attach any more importance to that report than the unsworn statement of any convict in the penitentiary. The hon. Solicitor General says it is sufficient if we believe that the presence of an officer in any office is injurious to that department, to dismiss him. He says, in effect, that if the presence of Devlin or any other officer were injurious, he should be dismissed. I grant that, but my hon. friend because he occupies the position of Solicitor General or Minister of Justice—and I should like to see him Minister of Justice—could not set himself above the law and do unfairness or injustice towards a fellowman. He could not on a mere whim and because he believed the presence of a man was injurious to the institution, dismiss him. That would be a most convenient course for hon. gentlemen to take, for a Minister could simply rise and say; I believe the presence of this man in that branch of the department is injurious, and consequently I will dismiss him. But the Civil Service Act prevents dismissals being made in this way, and it is necessary that some criminal charge or quasi-criminal charge should be made. If the hon. gentleman thought that the presence of certain officers was injurious to the penitentiary and that nothing criminal could be proved, why was it necessary to have the commissioners report the parties guilty of crime in order to have them removed. Yet that is what has been done. The Solicitor General did not act on the belief that the presence of these men was injurious to the department. He did not act in the case of Warden Oulmet on the ground that his presence as warden of the penitentiary was injurious to the penitentiary; but he acted on the report of the commissioners, and which I should like to attack. I consider this report as unworthy of belief and of any confidence, I hold it is totally unfit to lay before the House, as the result of a deliberate, fair and honest investigation into the conduct of that penitentiary.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The hon. gentleman said a moment ago that the commissioners stated at the time they called witnesses that there was no connection between the warden and the waste of stone. I will read from the report:

He is likewise responsible (with Label and Daignault) for the gross waste practised in connection with the building of the new boundary wall and other erections in and about the prison and the very bad workmanship displayed in same, which are elsewhere referred to in this report and the report of George Crain, Esq. The Warden attempts to escape responsibility for this worse than negligence in this matter by saying that the Department of Public Works is responsible, and he was not an officer of that department. But the evidence shows most conclusively that he assumed full control of the work, and was recognized by the Department of Public Works as controlling it; requisitions for Public Works supplies were countersigned by him, and the contract for stone expressly made deliveries of same subject to his inspection—that he did so inspect—that he ordered and directed how the work should be done—instructed not only the clerk of works, but the stonecutters, masons and all others engaged upon the work, and these men took orders from him. He endeavoured, contrary to the wishes of the department, to have stone contracts continued instead of working the quarries with prison labour, as is being now successfully done. It was upon his order that the plans were repeatedly changed, each change of gate plans involving considerable loss to the prison.

It was the warden who disposed of all the stone which was wasted or destroyed. In a word, he had full control of this work, which control was either assumed by or delegated to him.

Mr. QUINN. In answer to the hon. gentleman, I will read from the statement made by Hon. Mr. Leblanc, but I will not compare that gentleman with any of the commissioners. He said:

Crane, on whose evidence the ex-warden was accused of having allowed tremendous waste of stone and cement, had his measurements made by the convicts, though he swore personally to them, and when he (Mr. Leblanc) wanted to prove that fact, he was stopped by Mr. Fraser, who told him that he would not allow that evidence, as Crane's report did not affect the warden.

I submit that report of the commissioners to the people of Canada, and especially to the people of Quebec, and I will let them weigh the statements of Hon. Mr. Leblanc against those of Messrs. Noxon, Fraser and Lafortune. The Solicitor General stated that if there was no report against Devlin, he would put him back in the penitentiary. The hon. gentleman is reiterating what he stated last session, when he said that Devlin was in Kingston penitentiary, and he would be back, though not as an officer. The hon. gentleman will find himself in the same position again as he found himself then. Devlin will not go back; all the power possessed by the hon. gentleman could not place Devlin back as an official. No one outside of the member for Kingston could put back a man who had been dismissed, because there are too many men of the stripe of that member looking for jobs to allow any honest man to go back there. The hon. gentleman said there was only one pump there. Now he is obliged to admit there are two pumps, and his charge against Devlin was regarding two pumps and not one pump, and his threats in this regard against Devlin were in vain.

To pay Mr. George F. Bruce, returning officer, and Messrs. Kerr, Macdonald, Davidson & Paterson, solicitors, Toronto, for costs and expenses in connection with litigation arising out of a partial election for the House of Commons, held in the north riding of the county of Ontario, on the 4th February, 1897 $204 14

Mr. HUGHES. This item has reference to an election that was held in 1897 in the north riding of Ontario, when Mr. Bruce was returning officer. I intend to suggest some amendments to the law so as to prevent such frauds being perpetrated in the future as were then perpetrated, and I trust the Solicitor General will make a note of my suggestions. The Liberal-Conservative party obtained information to the effect that Mr. Bruce, the returning officer, as soon as the declaration was made, was going to place the ballot boxes in the express office and ship them immediately to Ottawa in order to provide against possibility of there being a recount. In this regard the law should be amended so as to prevent any returning officer having it in his power to interfere with what either party might consider as their rights. This returning officer was about shipping the ballots to Ottawa immediately so that there could be no possibility of a recount when legal papers were served on him for a recount of the votes. It was no doubt rather quick work, but the order was obtained in due time from Mr. Justice Mahaffy. Now, Mr. Justice Mahaffy is the only judge residing in North Ontario. The cry went forth that Judge Dartnell, of Whitby, was the judge of the county, but that is not so. It is true he is the judge of Ontario county, but the fact is that Judge Mahaffy presides over the greater part of the townships in the riding of North Ontario, which includes part of Muskoka. As soon as the notice of a recount was served on Mr. Bruce he was summoned to the city of Toronto and Judge Dartnell was also summoned to that city and in a certain law office there, the office of the late Mr. McCarthy, it was arranged that Judge Dartnell should have notice for a recount served on him and a date fixed for the recount, which was prior to the date fixed before Judge Mahaffy. The friends of the Liberal-Conservative candidate who deemed that he was properly elected and were anxious to test it by every fair means, obtained an injunction to restrain Judge Dartnell from acting and I shall read some of the affidavits in that connection. These affidavits will show that the law should be amended so as to make it impossible for one party to have a recount before this judge and another party to have a recount before that judge, one cutting the other out as it were. I understand that in a recent local election a similar thing was resorted to, our friends made application for a recount before a certain judge and the Government friends had a recount before another judge who seemed more suitable for them, a day or two in advance, and thus possibly the ends of justice were not carried out. There is one point in connection with the case to which I am drawing the attention of the House, which is most important, and that is that before the application for an injunction was made, and before it was served a leading solicitor of the city of Toronto, as will be shown by Mr. McCarthy's affidavit, actually sought on Sunday to influence the mind of the judge so that on Monday morning when the application would be made for an injunction, that judge would refuse the application. The matter is put in a very explicit form in the affidavits of Mr. McCarthy, Mr. Arnold and Mr. Aylesworth, three eminent members of the Ontario bar, and so I will draw attention to these affidavits. The first one is :

IN THE HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

Between

Angus McLeod, Plaintiff,
and

Robert M. Noble, George F. Bruce and George T. Dartnell, Defendants.

I, Orville Montrose Arnold, of the town of Bracebridge, in the district of Muskoka, solicitor, make oath and say :

1. I am solicitor herein for the above named plaintiff, Angus McLeod.

2. Under writ directed to the above named defendant, George Fraser Bruce, as returning officer, an election of a member of the House of Commons of Canada for the electoral district of the north riding of the county of Ontario was holden on Thursday, the 28th day of January, 1897, and on Thursday, the 4th day of February, 1897, and at the said election the above named plaintiff, Angus McLeod, and one Duncan Graham, were the only candidates nominated.

3. On Thursday, the 11th day of February instant, at the village of Beaverton, in the said electoral district, the said defendant Bruce as returning officer at the said election, opened the ballot boxes used thereat and summed up the votes given for the said respective candidates and declared as elected the said candidate Duncan Graham by a majority of thirty-nine votes.

4. Upon the same day and as soon as possible after the said declaration by the returning officer, I, as solicitor for the said Angus McLeod, caused application to be made to William Cosby Mahaffy, Esquire, the judge of the district court of the provisional judicial district of Muskoka and Parry Sound, for a recount of the votes cast at the said election.

5. The said application was made in the name of the said plaintiff, Angus McLeod, and under specific instructions given by him to me in that behalf, and is supported by affidavits of the said McLeod and of one Thomas J. Woods, setting out as ground of the said application that at the said election deputy returning officers improperly rejected many of the ballot papers cast thereat ; and upon making the said application there was duly deposited with the clerk of the said District Court at Bracebridge aforesaid the sum of one hundred dollars as security for costs in respect of the said recount, and thereupon the said William Cosby Mahaffy, the judge of the said District Court, appointed Tuesday, the 16th day of February instant, at his chambers in the courthouse at the town of Bracebridge aforesaid, within the said electoral district of North Victoria, at the hour of 10 o'clock in the forenoon, for the purpose of making a recount of the votes cast at the said election and making a final addition thereof.

6. Afterwards, and on the said 11th day of February instant, I personally served a true copy of such appointment as given by the said William Cosby Mahaffy, upon Duncan Graham aforesaid, one of the candidates at the said election, and also upon the above named defendant, Bruce, as the returning officer at the said election, and upon his election clerk, and thereafter on the same day in conversation with the said defendant Noble I informed him of the making of the said appointment, and that I had served the same as above set out.

7. The said defendant Noble is a solicitor of this court, practising at the village of Cannington, in the said electoral district, and at the said opening of the ballot boxes and summing up of the votes by the returning officer as aforesaid on the 11th day of February instant the said Noble appeared as solicitor or agent attending on behalf of the said candidate Duncan Graham, and in the said election the said Noble was, I verily believe an active supporter of the said candidate, Graham.

8. On the 13th day of February instant the paper writing now shown to me and marked with the letter "A," purporting to be signed by the abovenamed defendant George T. Dartnell, as judge of the County Court of the county of Ontario, was served on Mr. Alfred Hunt, the statutory agent at the said election abovenamed of the plaintiff, Angus McLeod, as I was yesterday informed by the said Hunt, and as I verily believe, but as I verily believe no copy of the said appointment for recount has been personally served upon the said plaintiff, McLeod.

9. I verily believe that the application to the said George T. Dartnell for recount as above set out is made in the interests of and on behalf of the said candidate, Duncan Graham, who has been found by the returning officer to have the majority of votes at the said election, and that unless restrained by order of this honourable court the said defendant Bruce will attend before the defendant Dartnell with the parcels containing the ballots used at the said election and deliver the same to the said defendant Dartnell, and will disobey the appointment and summons issued as above set out by the said William Cosby Mahaffy as such judge of the said district court, and that unless the said defendants are severally restrained by this honourable court from entering upon and proceeding with a recount of the said votes before the said George T. Dartnell, the application of the plaintiff for a recount of the votes as aforesaid will be altogether frustrated and defeated.

10. This application for an interlocutory injunction is made in good faith and under advice of counsel as necessary for the due protection of the plaintiff's interests, and to secure to him what he is advised is under the statute his legal right, and this application is not made for any purpose of more delay or for any improper purpose whatever.

There are a great many other affidavits in the case, but I will not read any that are not absolutely necessary. Then, there is a formal notice of an injunction that was issued, which I will not read. Then, there is Mr. McLeod's affidavit. Mr. Arnold attended before the court and served a notice on Mr. Graham. In this Mr. Dalton McCarthy took part. But here is an affidavit that I want to read. I presume it is for work of this kind that this officer Bruce is getting this extra money. This affidavit is as follows:—

I, James McBrien Browne, of the town of Whitby, in the county and province of Ontario, mail clerk, make oath and say:

1. I am a clerk in the post office in the said town of Whitby, and sleep on the post office premises.

2. About 11 o'clock on the night of the 15th day of February, A.D. 1897, Mr. Bruce, returning officer for North Ontario, came to the post office in Whitby and asked me if he could send some mail matter on the train going east on the following morning, and whether or not he would have sufficient time in the morning to get them registered, as he said he would rather keep the mail matter until the morning in his own possession for fear of fire. I told him he would have plenty of time in the morning before the train left.

3. About seven o'clock the next morning Mr. Bruce called at the post office again and mailed and registered a large letter and a parcel of ballots to S. E. St. O. Chapleau, Ottawa, and the same went east on the mail train due at Whitby Station, Grand Trunk Railway, at five minutes after eight o'clock on the morning of the 16th day of February, A.D. 1897.

The facts are that after Mr. Bruce had been brought down to the city of Toronto and put through a course of training as to what would be the best way for him to avoid having these ballots counted before Judge Mahaffy, he went to North Ontario, took the ballots before Judge Dartnell, obeyed the summons to attend before him, although he had previously been served with a summons to appear before Judge Mahaffy, and certainly could not plead ignorance. He went before Judge Dartnell, and, as the evidence shows, he surrendered the ballots there at the dictation of the solicitor in the case. Then, in order to get them back to Ottawa, in order to avoid any action of the court which would compel him to have another recount at Bracebridge before Judge Mahaffy, he went to the post office late at night and made arrangements so that they could be registered in the morning. I must say, under the circumstances, if Mr. Bruce has been put to any expense in this matter, as this vote of $204.14 would seem to show, I certainly think the Dominion of Canada should not pay for any miscarriage of justice such as undoubtedly took place. If it were earlier in the session and if the night were younger, I would enter into some of the details that were brought out in connection with that election, to show that from start to finish there was a determination to secure that seat by fair means or foul. If ever these ballots had a proper recount, there is not the slightest doubt that Mr. Angus McLeod would have been the member. We have a summing-up of the ballots by the favoured judge, Mr. Dartnell, a gentleman who was, I say it advisedly, for I know whereof I speak, in a certain sense at the mercy of the Liberal party, or conceived himself to be at the mercy of the Liberal party in that county, and was afraid to act in any other way than he was ordered to act by the lawyers for Mr. Bruce and these people. We find that the summing-up of their ballots was as follows:—For Duncan Graham, 2,414; for Angus McLeod, 2,397; rejected ballots, 15; and spoiled ballots, 8; a total of 4,852. Of these spoiled and rejected ballots there is no doubt that a number of them were ballots that should have been counted; and had the scrutiny been held under proper auspices, I am satisfied that the result would have been in favour of Mr. Angus McLeod. To show that this is the case, a formal offer was made to Mr. A. B. Aylesworth, a Liberal, who was the lawyer conducting the case of Mr. McLeod, that they would hold the recount before Judge Mahaffy on the understanding that he would count Mr. Graham in by one vote. To the credit of the Liberal Conservative party and Mr. Aylesworth, they and he refused to be a party to any such deal or miscarriage of justice. Their offer was to drop proceedings before Judge Dartnell, and consent to go before Judge Mahaffy. I shall now present another affidavit in the case from the late Mr. Dalton McCarthy. My object in presenting this is to give those of us who are not behind the scenes a little insight into the way in which justice seems sometimes to be managed, at all events by gentlemen who occupy positions which should command respect—at all events, who hold such high positions in the legal profession that they seem to consider themselves free to act in a manner which, to my mind, would send many another man to the penitentiary. This is an affidavit by Mr. Dalton McCarthy, and I draw the attention of the House to this section of it:

On Sunday, the 14th February, I was informed that it was the intention of the plaintiff to apply for an injunction to restrain the recounting of ballots by His Honour the judge of the county court of the county of Ontario, and was instructed to oppose the granting of any such injunction.

Fearing that the injunction might be applied for ex-parte, I requested my partner, Mr. B. B. Osler to communicate with the Hon. Mr. Justice Robertson, who I understand was to take the court for the week commencing on the 15th February, to inform His Lordship that I understood that such motion was to be made and to ask him not to take it ex-parte as on behalf of the parties interested I would be prepared to oppose the granting of the motion without any formal notice, and I instructed Mr. Leighton McCarthy to appear in the matter on the Monday morning following before the said judge for the purpose of opposing the motion which he was prepared to do.

Mr. Osler did call on Mr. Justice Robertson on a Sunday and did succeed in so influencing the mind of Mr. Justice Robertson that when the application was made the next morning, it required considerable time and argument to remove the prejudice in his mind, so that it was impossible to get the injunction down on the forenoon train in order to serve it personally on Mr. Justice

Dartnell. However, it was telegraphed down and was ignored by order of Mr. McCarthy. I shall read merely one other affidavit in connection with the matter. An injunction was granted, and Judge Dartnell admits having received an official notification by telegram from Osgoode Hall to that effect. In this same connection, the affidavit of Mr. A. B. Aylesworth, who is one of the leading lawyers of Toronto, will, I am sure, receive consideration:

IN THE HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

Between

Angus McLeod, Plaintiff,
and

Robert N. Noble, George F. Bruce and George T. Dartnell, Defendants.

And in the matter of an application against Mr. Dalton McCarthy for an alleged contempt of court.

I, Allen Bristol Aylesworth, of the city of Toronto, in the county of York, barrister and solicitor, make oath and say:

1. I am Toronto agent herein for the solicitor for the above-named plaintiff.

2. I personally issued the writ of summons in this action. The said writ was issued and the affidavit of Orville M. Arnold on which the order of injunction was issued.

3. I made application for the said injunction as early in the morning of the fifteenth day of February, 1897, as I could. Mr. Justice Robertson was the rota judge presiding in the weekly court that week, and I attended at his private room at Osgoode Hall on the said day on his arrival, and about twenty or fifteen minutes before ten o'clock in the forenoon. The learned judge went over the said affidavit very carefully and referred to the statutes at some length before making up his mind to grant the order. He expressed himself as averse to making an order ex parte but I pressed the application as strongly as I could and urged that plaintiff ought not to be required to give any notice of the application as the proceeding he was applying to restrain was appointed to begin at the hour of ten o'clock on the same morning and the application I was making was therefore of such special urgency in the plaintiff's interest that even minutes were of importance. Nearly if not quite half an hour was occupied in discussing the application and finally the learned judge decided to grant the order, remarking that it would at any rate only operate to stay the proceedings before the defendant Dartnell for three days and give opportunity to have the rights of both sides as to the place of the recount determined in the High Court, when Mr. Leighton McCarthy entered the room. The learned judge had granted the order of injunction before Mr. McCarthy appeared but had not yet filled in the blanks or written his initials on the form of order I had submitted to him, Mr. McCarthy entered the room in a very abrupt manner: he seemed to have been hurrying to get there and he spoke excitedly: he did not state for whom he appeared and I did not know till three days later when I heard him say so that his appearance had been on behalf of the defendant Noble. Mr. McCarthy immediately on entering the room asked if this was an application for an injunction in the matter of the North Ontario election and said he wished to oppose the application. I at once objected to his being heard and he and I were both speaking at once. He did not produce any affidavit or allude to having any but almost at once on beginning to speak he made the statement that the plaintiff and Judge Mahaffy were partners in business. I interrupted him hotly, denying what he said and charging that in making the allegation he was trying to use improperly to Mr. McLeod's prejudice knowledge of Mr. McLeod's affairs which his firm had acquired as Mr. McLeod's solicitors. He retorted with equal heat that what I said was untrue, and thereupon Mr. Justice Robertson interfered, saying he would not have such an altercation before him, and adding "any way the application is an ex parte one." Mr. McCarthy replied, "Oh, very well, if your Lordship refuses to hear me," and left the room very hurriedly repeating his remark as he was opening the door which he at once closed behind him, and he did not return during the time I remained.

4. Mr. McCarthy was not in the judge's room more than, to the best of my judgment, two minutes in all and there was no refusal by the learned judge to hear him beyond what is above described and the statement which the judge made to him before the said altercation took place either that he had made or that he was going to make the order I had applied for.

5. My recollection entirely differs from that of Mr. McCarthy in his statement that to his asking of the judge if he refused to hear him, the judge replied that he did. I do not think that the judge made any answer at all to Mr. McCarthy's remark. If he did, I did not hear any such answer. Mr. McCarthy was leaving the judge's table and stepping rapidly towards the door as he spoke; he repeated his words at least a second time as he was going out; he was not very calm at the time, and he spoke loudly and excitedly, and if the judge made him any answer at all, I certainly did not hear it or if I did I cannot now recall it at all.

6. I remained in the judge's room only a minute or so after Mr. McCarthy had gone out. I left all my papers except the writ and copy with the judge, who wished to enter in his book a note of it. After issuing the writ of summons, I returned to the judge's room and brought away the original order to the clerk of the weekly court, to be signed by him and issued in due course.

7. I have been told, but I cannot now remember by whom, that the defendant Dartnell, whose affidavit has been filed on behalf of Mr. Dalton McCarthy in answer to the application of the plaintiffs herein upon request sent to him, the said defendant Dartnell, by wire, came to Toronto on the 12th day of February, 1897, and went to the office of Messrs. McCarthy, Osler, Hoskin and Creelman for the purpose of making his appointment and issuing his summons for the recount of ballots mentioned in the said order of injunction and that he did in the said office make the said appointment, and there sign the said summonses for such recount. I believe the said statement to be true, and among other reasons for my belief is the circumstance that on the 18th day of February last, in a discussion of this affair in the presence of five or six persons, I charged the fact to be as above stated and commented upon it, and the said Mr. Leighton McCarthy was one of the five or six persons taking part in the said discussion and he did not in any way deny or question the truth of the said charge.

Mr. LISTER. Cut it short. It was all up in the courts.

Mr. HUGHES. That is where I got them.

Mr. SCRIVER. Why do you want to read them here?

Mr. HUGHES.

Mr. HUGHES. The door is open, and the hon. gentleman may walk out if he does not want to listen. There is lots of room outside, and the air is quite fresh. If he does not want to hear me, let him go to sleep, as he usually does.

Mr. SCRIVER. I am not the only one who does not want to hear the hon. gentleman.

Mr. HUGHES. That is the last affidavit I will read. If the Government will give us information what this $204 is for, we will be pleased to hear it. The Finance Minister admits that he does not know anything about it. It undoubtedly was one of the most flagrant stealing of votes that ever was perpetrated in any country. Talk about the North-west ballot stuffing, it cannot compare with the ballot stuffing in the North Ontario election. Let the Conservatives of North Ontario have the Dominion treasury at their back even to the extent of 10 per cent of the amount placed by the Minister of the Interior at the disposal of his friends in Manitoba and the North-west Territories, let there be an investigation into the conduct of that election in North Ontario, even if there is anything proven against the Liberal-Conservatives in the election in Manitoba, we shall be able to put beside it a case that will stand for all time as a disgrace to the Liberal party of Canada. I do not refer particularly to their conduct in coercing—I say coercing—Judge Dartnell into the course he pursued in counting certain ballots in certain ways on the recount differently from the way he would have counted them when he was let alone; but I refer to the conduct of the election beforehand. I am certainly of opinion that this item should not pass, that not one dollar should be paid by the people for any such purpose as recouping Mr. Bruce, whether he was an officer of this House or not, because he got himself into trouble by deliberately disobeying the courts of this country.

For classifying all Canadian patents and preparing drawings of same for classification, and for exchange with the United States in return for their patents, to be paid notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act. $5,000

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. Minister please explain this?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). Our patents in Canada have never been classified, that is, they have never been divided and subdivided into classes according to the subjects of the patents. In the other countries where the examination of patents takes place, as in France, Germany and the United States, patents are all carefully classified for the purpose of assisting examiners in their work. In the United States they have about 640,000 patents at the present time which are carefully classified in the way I have described. The United States have offered us a complete classification of their patents in return for a classification of ours. To obtain these very great advantages for our examiners, I think will be worth the expense involved.

Mr. SCRIVER. How is the classification made ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. By experts. I propose to put it in the hands of the best of examiners.

Mr. SCRIVER. Is it a list of the patents ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is a list in a sense. The patents are put into classes and subclasses. All we have to send is cuts with the numbers of the patents, they accepting that as a sufficient description of the patents. In return we get, not only cuts and drawings, but also a short resume of each patent which they make in their classification. This is the bargain that has been made by the deputy commissioner of patents and the patent office in the United States. It will cost us about $8,000 to make the cuts and do the work of classifying. This expense I propose to spread over two or two and a half years. This classification of the United States patents, if we were to buy it from them and not exchange, would cost about $20,000, and we should not then have our own classification. I think the bargain is a good one and greatly in the interest of the patent office.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon gentleman is going to spread the expenditure over two and a half years, what does he want $5,000 for now ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We have to get a certain amount of plant, to do the photogravure work, by which these cuts are made. Besides, I expect that the classification will go on more rapidly at the beginning

Arts, Agriculture and Statistics—

To provide a dwelling at the dairy station, Nappan, N.S..... $1,200

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). As to this question of establishing creameries provided for in the main estimates, the Minister of Agriculture gave me to understand the preparatory work would be engaged in during the coming season. I regret to find that no provision is made for such work in the Supplementary Estimates. Does the hon. gentleman rely on the original vote for this ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It comes out of the usual dairy vote.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). May I hope the Minister will see to it that the gentlemen who are sent to carry out the work will consult with me as representing the people of Inverness as to the most eligible places to set about this work of setting up dairy establishments or creameries

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will communicate with the hon. member.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). The reason why I ask is because I have had a letter from the secretary of agriculture of the province, Mr. Chipman, bringing me to book for questioning his knowledge of farming in the island of Cape Breton. I maintain that he is not so well acquainted with agriculture in Cape Breton as in other parts of the province, and he cannot be supposed to be as well posted in regard to agriculture in that island as the gentlemen representing its various constituencies in this House. For my part I must say that the gentleman coming from the Department of Agriculture never consulted me as to where he should go. The people of Inverness sent me here, and I think that they will expect that the Department of Agriculture in sending men out to carry on this work, would consult their representative in this matter.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. member knows that when I communicated with Mr. Chipman, who was then Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Chipman wrote to him and asked him his advice and the hon. gentleman never chose to reply to him.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). Last fall, when these gentlemen, in company with Mr. Chipman went to the island of Cape Breton, they never wrote me and never mentioned one word about it. This spring when they came Mr. Chipman did deign to write me a letter. I did not answer it because I considered that as the representative of the people of Inverness, I had nothing to do with Mr. Chipman, an employé of the Government of Nova Scotia.

Quarantine $5,000

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This is almost entirely due to the extra expense at Williams Head quarantine, on the coast of British Columbia, where we have crowded incoming passenger steamers from the Orient. Several cases of smallpox and other contagious diseases have been found on the vessels.

Mr. EARLE. While we are on this item of quarantine, I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture if he proposes to do anything in connection with the lepers of British Columbia ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not any such intention. The lepers there are in charge of the local authorities, as I understand. I do not think the Dominion Government is responsible.

Mr. EARLE. The Minister, I suppose, is aware that the expense of caring for the lepers falls upon the cities of Victoria and Vancouver where they were discovered.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Does not the local government contribute anything ?

Mr. EARLE. They do not contribute a dollar. But those cities that have had to pay for the care of these lepers have felt that the Dominion Government, having taken care of lepers under all circumstances, I think in the province of Manitoba, should also do the same thing in regard to the lepers there. As the Minister is aware, those municipalities are not in a position to treat lepers in the way that they should be treated. They are also very desirous of getting rid of them. It was suggested that something might be done in regard to transferring them, as you did the lepers from Manitoba, to your hospital at Tracadie. At any rate, it seems a great hardship that those two cities, where these lepers are discovered, should be compelled to care for them when they are not responsible for their introduction. The Dominion Government receives a very large income from Chinese immigration there, they receive about two-thirds of the tax, and we feel strongly that they should do something towards the care of these lepers.

Militia—Income $61,200

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I see there is an item here to pay for medals for militiamen serving during the Fenian raid in 1866 and 1870. We had a raid in Manitoba in 1871 where militiamen and even citizens formed themselves into a military corps, and went to the frontier to defend the province from invasion. I believe that our militiamen and our private citizens that enrolled themselves in the militia are as much entitled to medals as those that have served in the eastern provinces. I would suggest to the hon. gentleman to include the raid of 1871 into the province of Manitoba, when the Hudson's Bay Company's fort at Pembina was taken by invading Fenians, and if it had not been for the interference of American soldiers, the province would have been perhaps ransacked by invaders.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I may explain to the hon. gentleman that it is necessary in cases of this kind to get permission of the Imperial Government, or Her Majesty in fact, before granting a medal. So far as I recollect, the Order in Council which was passed simply referred to the years 1866 and 1870; therefore, so far as this vote is concerned, I think it must be limited to those years. But since the hon. gentleman has called my attention to the matter, I shall be very glad to take it up, and we can make it the subject of a further representation. I think it is the desire of Parliament that all who were engaged in repelling the threatened invasion referred to should be recognized and rewarded in this way.

Mr. HUGHES. I would like to ask the Minister of Militia and Defence how many butts there will be on the new Dominion of Canada range?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think about 50.

Mr. EARLE.

Mr. CLARKE. I see in this vote items for new rifle ranges at Hamilton and Victoria. Are these municipalities contributing anything towards the cost of these ranges?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Nothing.

Mr. FOSTER. Are these votes to complete the payment for the ranges?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes. The rifle range at Hamilton has been taken up and expropriated by a railway company passing through it, and rendering it useless. It was necessary to provide a new range, and this sum, it is estimated, will pay for the land and complete the range.

Mr. FOSTER. Who owned that rifle range?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The old rifle range was rented by the Government.

To pay for 25 acres of land at London, Ont., for a training and camping ground, expropriated under Order in Council of 25th March, 1895... .. $25,000

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. $25,000 is appropriated for the land which has been used for some time for militia purposes. The quantity is twenty-five acres at $1,000 per acre.

Mr. CLARKE. From whom is it being purchased?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The Bank of British North America.

Mr. HUGHES. I would make a suggestion that another year the Minister of Militia should take up the question of the rifle range at Kingston. It is used by the Kingston corps, and the third military district. The range is very dangerous, it being parallel with the main road. I would suggest to the member for Kingston that he should select a suitable location, get the ear of the Minister and have a new range laid out. I am sure the camp went to Belleville largely because the Kingston range was not considered safe.

Mr. CLARKE. Has the land been purchased for the ranges at Hamilton and Victoria?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Not purchased yet, but will be purchased after the vote is passed.

Mr. FOSTER. Have they been selected?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. We have plans in the department for both these ranges. At Hamilton the price is considered very reasonable, but we will take further means to ascertain whether the price is fair or not. At Victoria the present range is reported as unsafe. It is proposed to move to another location. The site proposed meets the recommendation of the district officer commanding, and all the local officers, and is located at Oak Bay.

Mr. EARLE. The old range, which was selected years ago, is on the beach, but there has always been difficulty in connection with it, especially with the use of modern weapons. The range is too short, and steamers pass in front of it, so that the men have to cease firing whenever any craft are moving in the vicinity. It has been used, but not with satisfaction for many years. The road for travel passes by the range.

To provide for gratuities to the following:—

On account of error in length of service when calculating gratuity last year, viz. :—
Prof. R. C. Harris, R.M.C.....	$ 45 00
Prof. A. D. Duval.....	28 80
Lt.-Col. C. T. Irwin, A.A.G.A...	652 00
Major J. Fraser, Supt. of Stores at Winnipeg.....	1,127 00
Lt.-Col. d'Orsennens, D.A.G. at St. Johns, P.Q.....	1,347 90
Children of the late Lt.-Col. Prevost, Superintendent of Cartridge Factory	333 33
Joseph Larose, shot at Cote St. Luc	1,000 00
Loranzo McCarroll, for loss of eyesight while on duty as a marker..	500 00
Widow and children of Jas. Cosman, accidentally killed by shot fired by Yarmouth Garrison Artillery.....	500 00
Lt.-Col. P. B. Worsley, D.A.G. at Halifax	3,799 00
Thos. Moor, sr., for loss of his son, killed at Batoche, in 1885.....	1,500 00
Lt.-Col. John Gray, inspector of stores, 9 years and 2 months' service	1,436 75
Mrs. Thos. Christian, for loss of her husband, shot at drill shed, Ottawa	500 00

Mr. FOSTER. Perhaps the Minister will give an explanation with respect to these gratuities.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The first five are items to cover deficiencies last year. Errors were made in calculating the gratuity, the wrong salary being taken in some cases. The principle on which the gratuity is given is this. The officer on being retired receives 10 per cent for every year he has served of the salary he enjoys at the time he is retired. In the case of Col. d'Orsennens, his gratuity had been calculated on a salary of $1,700, instead of $2,200 or $2,300.

Mr. POPE. What was the reason for retiring Lieut.-Col d'Orsennens?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. His retirement was very strongly recommended by the General Commanding, it being reported that to secure the efficiency of the school it was absolutely necessary that Col. d'Orsennens' services be dispensed with. I do not know whether he had passed the age limit, sixty years, or not, but he had about reached the age limit.

Mr. SPROULE. If it is the rule to give 10 per cent of the salary received at the time of retirement for each year served, how does it occur that General Cameron only received $710.10, while all the other officers in the Military College received proportionate amounts according to the system described? Had General Cameron received the proportionate amount, he would have been paid $2,557, instead of $710.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The Imperial officers who are appointed to positions in the Royal Military College never have received any retiring allowance. Major Cameron received no retiring allowance, simply money sufficient to return him to the place whence he came. That course has been followed in all cases. The Imperial officers have their expenses to this country paid and the expenses for their return paid. That has been the rule in the past. The leader of the Opposition the day he went away called my attention to this matter, and I promised to look into it. I have not had an opportunity of doing so carefully yet, but that is the rule, and the reason I have given is the real reason.

Mr. SPROULE. Was he the only one of the number belonging to the British service that retired?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The only one.

Mr. SPROULE. I respectfully submit that since all the others got a retiring allowance on the basis of the calculation given by the Minister, and as Major General Cameron was the only one who did not, the Minister ought to have dealt a little more liberally with him, and in my judgment he should receive at least the same proportionate amount as a gratuity that the others did.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. These Imperial officers who are loaned to us by the Imperial Government have never yet received one dollar of gratuity. They simply receive their travelling expenses to this country and back to England after their service is ended.

Mr. SPROULE. It might not be out of place for the Minister to establish a precedent.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That is another thing.

Mr. SPROULE. It is an act of kindness towards General Cameron, and it is no injustice to the country or the service.

Mr. SPROULE. In the case of Colonel Prevost's children, did you allow a pension besides?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No.

Mr. SPROULE. In that case $300 appears to be a small amount.

Mr. MILLS. On what principle does the Minister reach this amount of $333.33 ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That would be two months pay. The $1,000 was recommended by the board of officers, who considered the case of the poor man Larose shot at St. Luc.

Mr. MILLS. And $500 seems to be enough for the family of James Cosman, who was killed at Yarmouth.

Mr. POPE. I see one or two instances of $500 here. If that is considered as the price of husbands it is not worth dying.

Mr. FOSTER. Was that Yarmouth case a recommendation of the board ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. In this case there was no board. The general officer commanding recommended: "I forward herewith Colonel Irvine's report and from my knowledge of the case, and considering the accident was not caused by any fault of the man, I consider the Government should bestow a pension or gratuity on his widow."

Mr. MILLS. When did that happen ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. In 1889. My attention was called to the matter by the member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) and he seemed to think that the widow would be very well satisfied to receive this recognition.

Mr. FOSTER. Had there been previous applications ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. A wounded man who has recovered and is at work gets $1,000, and the other fellow was knocked clean out and his family only get $500.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It might be that the wounded man would have to pay considerable for medical attendance.

Lt.-Col. Worsley, D.A.G. at Halifax.... $3,799

Mr. FOSTER. How does this come ; it seems a fortune ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Lieut.-Col. Worsley was the district officer commanding at Halifax, and he had some trouble with the department in the time of General Herbert. It is a long story, but to summarize, something like this happened. Colonel Worsley ascertained that an irregularity had taken place in the accounts and he reported it to headquarters, and as a result of his having reported the irregularity he seems to have been suspected of having some improper knowledge beforehand, or at all events that was General Herbert's view. Afterwards a good deal of correspondence took place, and I think Colonel Worsley was suspended although his pay went on. Subsequently he came to Ottawa and negotiations passed between him and the Minister of Militia of that day, the result of which was that a promise was made to Colonel Worsley that if he would resign he would receive an appointment. That promise was not carried out. He did receive an appointment by the day in the stores branch in Halifax for a short time, but when Mr. Dickey came in he dispensed with Colonel Worsley's services. I may say that I know it to be a fact that the promise was made to Colonel Worsley, and I have the documentary evidence to show that the promise was made in the hearing of the then Governor General, but the promise was never fulfilled. Colonel Worsley, I think, was harshly treated. He had the right at the time he retired from the militia to receive the sum of money which is now being voted to him, provided there was no special reasons to the contrary. He was not dismissed, he resigned, and I think it is only fair that Colonel Worsley should receive this amount.

Mr. BORDEN (King's).

Thos. Moor, sr., for loss of his son, killed at Batoche, 1885..... $1,500

Mr. MILLS. Was there ever an application made for this before ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Thomas Moor was killed at Batoche in action, aged 18, tinsmith by trade, earned $9 a week and contributed in a measure to the support of his two brothers, sister, mother and father. The father is still living, and it is to him this money is to be paid. The father applied, first, for scrip, and second for $500, as he intended to open a small store. The opinion of the board, stated on the 23rd of January, 1886, was :

The board, after due consideration, have come to the conclusion that as Mr. Moor, sr., has only asked for the scrip that would have gone to his son, together with $500, the board feel that they can only recommend that Mr. Moor's request be granted ; but should the case have come up without any amount being named, they would have recommended a larger sum.

The case is similar to that of Private Isaac Thomas Hughes, of the 10th Battalion, who was killed at the same time. His age was twenty years and three months. His salary was $8 per week as a gold and silver plater ; an excellent workman ; would now be in receipt of $10 or $11 per week if living ; sent his salary for the support of his mother and father ; the latter, a carpenter by trade, is sixty-nine years old and not in good health. Isaac Thomas Hughes was the only support of his aged parents. They bought a property in Toronto, upon which they had to pay $600 at the time of the death of the young man. The first board sat on the 15th of December, 1885, and reported that it was impossible for them to state any particular amount as a compensation, but as in their opinion it is a very hard case they strongly recommend it to the favourable consideration of the department. A second meeting of the board took place in January, 1886, and they came to the following conclusions :—

Had this young man been disabled for life, he would, in the opinion of the board, have received a pension of 60 cents per day. The board would, therefore, recommend, that he should receive half that amount, or a lump sum which would produce that amount at 6 per cent. The latter, the board thinks, would be preferable, as this amount would enable the parents to relieve the property from debt which was incurred through relying on the son's assistance to pay for it.

He received by Order in Council of the 16th of August, 1886, $1,825, which at 6 per cent is equal to 30 cents per diem. I have based the additional amount to be given to Thomas Moor, senior, upon what was done in the case of Thomas Hughes, which was exactly a similar case. He received $500, and I propose to supplement that by a further amount of $1,500.

Mr. CLARKE. I know something about this case of the death of Thomas Moor, junior, and I think it was the modesty of the father in making the demand after the son was killed that caused the board of officers to report as they did. I think the additional amount the Minister is granting to the father, who is in poor health, and also the mother, is a reasonable amount.

Gratuity to Lt.-Col. John Gray, inspector of stores, 9 years and 2 months' service $1,436 75

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Colonel Gray was retired shortly after I came into office. I found that he had really nothing to do, and I omitted at that time to place any gratuity in the estimates. He is entitled to this gratuity from the length of service he performed.

To meet outstanding liabilities incurred by Dominion Rifle Association in connection with the erection of a building at Bisley, England $5,000

Mr. FOSTER. What is the whole cost of that building ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The total cost is $14,918. We gave $5,000 in 1896, and this $5,000 will complete our contribution.

Mr. HUGHES. I may say that this is money well expended. The building is a very fine advertisement for the Dominion of Canada, and was seen by thousands last year. Its cost was greatly increased, owing to the fact that it was put up in the Jubilee year, when everything was at four or five prices in England.

Further grant to Dominion Artillery Association, $2,000 of which is to provide for entertainment of visiting English team $4,100

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. An English artillery team is to visit this country this year, to return the visit paid by our artillery team two years ago, when we won a very important match at Shoeburyness. It is necessary to have this sum of money in order properly to entertain this English team. In addition to that, the Artillery Association find that it is absolutely impossible for them to get on with the amount of money which is granted to them, which is $2,900, and they ask for $2,100 more in order to enable them to carry out their annual matches efficiently and properly, and I think it is money well expended.

Mr. QUINN. I would like to ask the Minister if anything has been done towards establishing a military school in Montreal. A deputation waited on the Minister some time ago, and I think it was understood at that time that some steps would be taken to select a site.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am sorry not to be able to point the hon. gentleman to a vote in the Estimates for that purpose. It was found impossible to ask for any money for that purpose this year. In the meantime, we are getting the best information together we can, and, so far as I am concerned, at any rate, as the head of the Militia Department, I am very strongly in favour of establishing a depot at Montreal at the earliest possible moment. I believe we would get a better return for the money expended at the city of Montreal than at any other point in the whole Dominion, except perhaps Toronto.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). I would like to ask the Minister if it is intended to increase the strength of the 94th Battalion ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think there are six companies in that battalion. The battalions run from four companies to eight. I think there are more battalions in the Dominion having six companies than any other number. But I may say to the hon. gentleman that as the 94th is the only military organization in the Island of Cape Breton, except the field artillery at Sydney, and as there are a great many mining centres there, it is very important to have a good infantry organization in that part of the country. I propose, at the earliest possible moment, to increase the strength of that battalion.

Mr. HUGHES. The hon. Minister will remember that we had some conversation the other day with reference to the repatriation of the 100th Regiment, or in other words, a Canadian regiment in the Imperial service. I would suggest that an item be left over so that we may have a discussion in the morning.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think I ought to state with regard to the item of $15,000, that I have the word of the Imperial Government to return to us that money. They sent us ammunition which was not what it ought to be, and we are to make it right at our own factories, and I have a letter from the Imperial authorities offering to return the money.

For arms and accoutrements..... $50,000

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That is intended for the purchase of accoutrements to equip the balance of the militia. The chief item is to provide the garrison field artillery with the Lee-Enfield carbine so that the whole militia may be equipped with the same weapon. The estimated number to be purchased is 2,000. There are also required 3,000 more sets of the Oliver equipment.

Resolutions to be reported.

FIRST READING.

Bill (T) further to amend the Act respecting Public Offices (from the Senate) read the first time.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. BRITTON. As I shall not be here to-morrow, I would ask permission of the House just to say a word with reference to a vote that is to be taken to-morrow. I have no intention of making a speech. A vote is to be asked for $600,000 for rolling stock in connection with the railways of this Dominion. I would urge strongly on the Government that this money be expended in the manufacturing establishments of this Dominion.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 1.15 a.m. (Thursday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 9th June, 1898.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PRAYERS.

DRUMMOND COUNTY RAILWAY INVESTIGATION.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved :

That the notice of motion of Mr. Lister "That the Report of the Special Committee appointed to inquire into subsidies granted in aid of the Drummond County Railway be adopted," be made the First Order of the Day at the second sitting this day.

Mr. BORDEN (King's).

Mr. FOSTER. I hope my hon. friend will not press this motion at this time of the session. I think I can say without at all being mistaken, that there was an understanding amongst the members of the committee that this report should not be taken up this session. The committee got through with their labours very late in the session, then it took some time to print the report, and it has only been printed two or three days. With members sitting up until three o'clock in the morning and rushing business through, I do not think any of us can have an opportunity of really informing ourselves about the report. The hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell), the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden), and the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) were the members of the committee from our side of the House. The hon. member for Westmoreland has left, and left with the understanding that the question would not be discussed this session, and he has taken with him important papers in connection with it. It would be absolutely impossible for us to make any satisfactory discussion of that matter in the absence of the hon. member for Westmoreland. I submit to my right hon. friend, therefore, whether, under the circumstances, it would not be better to come to an arrangement by which this could be taken up next session. It would be strenuously discussed, and our vital forces would be stronger on both sides, I suppose, if the debate were to take place under other circumstances. I hope my hon. friend does not wish to take the Spanish army at a disadvantage.

The PRIME MINISTER. I think the Spanish army is bottled up; at all events, I see that army is not ready for a fight at this moment.

Mr. FOSTER. We have a Merrimac in store.

The PRIME MINISTER. However, there is a great deal of force in what my hon. friend says. When we are up till three o'clock in the morning and commencing business at eleven, it is evident that the House is in no condition to discuss such a matter as fully, perhaps, as it should be discussed. I do not see just now how we can arrange to postpone a discussion of this question until next session. If the parliamentary ingenuity of my hon. friend can discover a way by which we can take up this report next session, I have no objection to agree to his suggestion, and let the dogs of war sleep in the meantime.

Mr. FOSTER. Then I can guarantee to my hon. friend that the combined ingenuity of the House will be able to discover a way by which that report can be taken up next session.

Motion withdrawn.

THE CASE OF MISS HUBERT.

Mr. GILLIES. Before the Orders of the Day are called I wish to draw the attention of the right hon. gentleman to a petition that I presented a few days ago on behalf of a lady, Miss Hubert, from Arichat. I have been requested, on her behalf, to make some inquiry of the Government whether any steps have been taken in answer to her petition, and if not yet taken when will the Government consider the prayer of this petition?

The PRIME MINISTER. What is the nature of the request of this lady? I have not been able to look at the petition.

Mr. GILLIES. It is a lengthy petition, setting forth certain grievances of a personal character, she having been deprived of some property. The petition has been filed with the officers of the House, and can be referred to. I desire now to bring it to the notice of the Government, and to ask them to consider what steps can be taken.

The PRIME MINISTER. The only answer I can give to my hon. friend at this moment is that we will inquire into the matter and see if it is possible, if we are satisfied this lady has a grievance, to redress it.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the Orders of the Day are called, probably at this stage we might have a little conversation as to the probable date of prorogation. My hon. friend informed me yesterday that all the legislation was down that it was intended to bring, that the Postmaster General's Bill if, when printed, it was found to be a contentious measure, would not necessarily be pressed. There remains the Bill of the Minister of Railways and Canals, concerning which I would like to have a little consultation with the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) who is looking into it. That leaves us the Estimates and the legislation which is already advanced towards the final stage. Under these circumstances, the hon. gentleman might indicate somewhere near the time that prorogation could take place. This side of the House is willing to facilitate that as much as possible. There is a good deal of contentious matter in the Supplementary Estimates, but we will try to confine our criticisms to the point, and to the worst points, particularly of the large and doubtful items. With this position it would seem to me that we ought to pass our Sunday, not as a combined House of Commons.

The PRIME MINISTER. I quite reciprocate the wish of my hon. friend that we should spend next Sunday thanking God for the blessing of having reached the end of this session. In order to facilitate this, I move now that item 33, second reading of Bill (No. 164)—letter Q of the Senate—respecting loan companies, be discharged.

Motion agreed to.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have no other order to move at present. But, as I stated to my hon. friend the other day, the Bill moved by the Postmaster General, not having been announced when I gave the Government programme a few days ago, if the Opposition think that Bill is a contentious one we will not press it. There is no more legislation to bring down; therefore, the whole programme is upon the Order paper. It seems to me that to-day we ought to be able to dispose of all the legislation which is now under way and to dispose of the rest of the Estimates. Then we can take concurrence to-morrow, and I see no reason why we should not prorogue on Saturday—that is so far as we are concerned.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. MARTIN. Before the Orders of the Day are called I wish to draw the attention of the Postmaster General to a return which I asked for last session, and to which I called attention several times this session. I should like to obtain the papers.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). The secretary of the department yesterday made quite a find, and he sent over to the Secretary of State a large number of returns. This return asked for by my hon. friend may be among the number, and perhaps he will renew his question at three o'clock.

Mr. FOSTER. Among other papers that have turned up is there a statement as to the exact income from jubilee stamps in 1897 and 1898, respecting which the hon. gentleman has not yet made a return.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I thought I had explained that there was no separate account kept of these jubilee stamps. They were issued concurrently with other stamps. We could separate the number of those issued to postmasters, but there is no separate account of the returns made. If the hon. gentleman will renew his inquiry next session, we may assume that the stamps sent out have been used, and therefore the department will be chargeable with everything outstanding.

Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.) I beg to ask the Minister of Public Works if he is going to bring down the return with reference to the dredge "Prince Edward," asked for on 30th March.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). I will take a note of it, and lay it on the Table to-day.

Mr. WALLACE. I desire to ask the Minister of the Interior whether the letter with respect to the dismissal of W. F. Wood, officer at Kamloops, which he promised to bring down, will be laid on the Table.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). I will lay it on the Table after recess.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 130) respecting the boundaries of the province of Quebec.—(Mr. Sifton.)

THE ELECTORAL FRANCHISE ACT.

The House resumed consideration of amendments made by the Senate to sections 5, 10, 21a, 23, 26a, 26b, 26c, and 27 of Bill (No. 16) to amend the Electoral Franchise Act, and to further amend the Dominion Elections Act.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick) moved :

That the amendments made by the Honourable the Senate to sections 5, 6, 10, 12a, 23, 26a, 26b, 26c, and 27 of Bill (No. 16), "An Act to amend the Electoral Franchise Act and to amend the Dominion Elections Act," be disagreed to for the following reasons :—

Because the amendment made by the Honourable the Senate to the Bill, excepting from its operation in the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Manitoba, and providing for a special revision of the voters' lists in those provinces for elections to this House, is inconsistent with and subversive of the general principle of the Bill.

That the procedure proposed by the Honourable the Senate for securing the revision of such lists, under the authority of this Parliament, is wholly inadequate, and cannot be rendered effective without creating complicated and costly machinery incompatible with the object of the Bill.

That the amendment, therefore, in effect provides for the continuation in the provinces named of the present unwieldy and expensive system of creating special voters' lists for Dominion elections.

That the passage of the amendment by the Senate after its rejection by the House of Commons is inconsistent with the undoubted right and privilege of this House to determine the principles of the franchise under which its members are elected, and is the more unwarranted in that the country has emphatically pronounced in favour of the principle of the Bill.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). So far as regards the reasons incorporated in the notice of motion by the Solicitor General, I do not see anything that will apply in any respect to the amendments having reference to the province of Prince Edward Island. These are included in the amendments in which the House does not propose to concur. I do not see the slightest reason stated for not concurring in those amendments. So far as I understand the law of the province of Prince Edward Island with respect to these matters, and I speak subject to correction, because I have not had such opportunity of making myself familiar with the law there as has the Solicitor General, nor have I the same familiarity with it that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries possesses, I understand that under the law of Prince Edward Island any person who makes an affidavit of qualification is entitled to vote. The voting in that province is open voting and not by ballot—that is at the provincial elections. There is a provision made for testing the right of such a person to vote, and if it eventually appears that he is not so entitled, his vote is struck out. It is struck off from the number of votes given for the candidate for whom that person voted.

Mr. WALLACE.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). You refer to the election petition being filed, and a scrutiny.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do. That scrutiny, as I understand it, is held in Prince Edward Island on an election petition.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Certainly, because there is open voting there.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). As I understand the amendment of the Senate it is simply designed to give some relief in cases of that kind, and if you do not pass this amendment in what position are you in the province of Prince Edward Island? You have no record at all of the candidate for whom any particular person has voted; you have that person voting upon a mere affidavit; there is no voters' list at all; you have any person able to come and vote who is prepared to make an affidavit. Now, what remedy are you to have in respect to a matter of that kind? Surely my hon. and learned friend (the Solicitor General) must agree that there should be some way of dealing with possibilities of that kind. You may have 500 persons coming in and taking the oath of qualification, and it is absolutely impossible to know for whom they voted, and how are you to deal with that? Are you to deal with that on an election petition; if so it appears to me that you would require to amend the Dominion Controverted Election Act. Of course where a man is bribed or where a man bribes, you can have his name struck off without inquiring at all as to the person for whom he voted; you simply strike off one vote from the number of votes given for the candidate on whose behalf he was bribed or on whose behalf he bribed. But in the present case how are you to deal with it. Suppose a person comes in and votes on his own motion, he does not vote at the instance of either one party or the other, but it would eventually transpire if an inquiry was granted that he had no right to vote at all. Now, the candidate who is elected by votes of that character ought not to hold his seat. As I understand the amendment of the Senate it simply amounts to this : that when any such person has his vote objected to by either candidate, you can go into that question upon a recount before the county judge and you can there investigate the right of this person to vote. That seems to me to be a very fair provision. My hon. and learned friend may suggest that you can do this by an election petition. I have not had the opportunity of investigating as to that, but whether you have the right or not, it seems to me a fair thing that you should do it in an inexpensive way. You have had no opportunity of testing in the first place the qualification of this voter ; his qualification ought to be tested in some inexpensive and prompt way, and the least expensive and most prompt way would be before a county judge, and it would be proper to give to the county court judges in the province of Prince Edward Island the right and the jurisdiction, as the Senate has evidently intended to confer upon them, to test the qualification of any such voter. These amendments are not touched in any way by the reasons which my learned friend (Mr. Fitzpatrick) has put forward, and therefore I venture to submit to him with some confidence, and I also venture to submit to my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, that these are fair provisions and reasonable provisions, and that this House ought not to refuse to concur in them. I think my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will see that a doubt might arise and probably would arise if some such procedure as this is not adopted. Under the present law of Prince Edward Island it is all right in a local election because you have open voting, but if you do not keep any record of the candidate for whom these votes have been given it would be absolutely impossible to deal with this argument. That seems to me to be the whole point of the Senate.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The real point is the secrecy of the ballot.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Quite so, but you have the alternative of one thing or the other. In this province where there is open voting you have this particular provision of the law giving the right of investigation afterwards, and you propose to apply to a system of that kind of voting by ballot. You must either give up in the case in which these voters are objected to, the secrecy of the ballot so far as that secrecy is done away with by such a procedure as this, or, you must leave the door open to the very serious evils which would be created by the non-concurrence of this House in the amendment of the Senate.

Now, with respect to the other amendments to which the reasons put forward by my hon. friend (Mr. Fitzpatrick) more particularly apply. I venture to think that the first reason advanced in the notice of motion does not state the position quite fairly. The ground is, that this amendment of the Senate provides for a special revision. It does not provide for a special revision. It does not provide for a general revision at least ; it simply provides for a revision on certain specified grounds at the instance of any voter or person entitled to be a voter. There is no general revision provided for. What is provided for is the right of appeal at the instance of any voter whose name has been omitted from the list, or which considers that the names of others have been improperly added to or omitted from the list. That is in no sense a general revision and it in no sense seems to me merits the condemnation which is contained in the first clause of the notice of motion. The second clause of the notice of motion speaks of the complicated and costly machinery. There is no very complicated and costly machinery provided for here, and even if there were complicated and costly machinery provided for, it surely is not more complicated and more costly than the similar machinery provided for in the other provinces. My hon. and learned friend (Mr. Fitzpatrick) may say that is provided by the provinces themselves, but it is assumed and must be assumed that it is a right thing to have an appeal to a judicial tribunal in the last instance regarding matters of this kind ; then I say that even if the procedure is as costly and as complicated as the machinery in the other provinces we should not for a moment hesitate to adopt it. The third clause of the notice of motion is :

That the amendment, therefore, in effect provides for the continuation in the provinces named of the present unwieldy and expensive system of creating special voters' lists for Dominion elections.

Surely my learned friend (Mr. Fitzpatrick) will not say that this is a very fair way to deal with this amendment. It is not unwieldy, it is not expensive ; it simply provides that any voter who has a grievance in respect of himself or in respect to any other voter can go to the county court judge and have that particular matter dealt with, and when so dealt with it will not in any way affect the provincial lists.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I ask my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) to address himself particularly to that point.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I will do so. The provincial lists, when settled by the sheriff, remain the lists so far as the provincial elections are concerned. So far as Dominion elections are concerned, this amendment simply allows any voter, in respect of the names of certain voters placed upon or omitted from that list, to obtain an adjudication from the county court judge. That in no sense touches the validity of the provincial lists for provincial elections. It simply provides that upon the order which the county court judge shall make upon the appeals to him, the list shall be modified solely for the purpose of any Dominion election. The result will be that you will have in the hands of the proper officer having the custody thereof, a list ready to be used for the purposes of provincial elections, and you will have in the hands of that officer that list for the purposes of Dominion elections, as modified by the order which the county court judge shall have made upon such appeal. Surely, there is nothing very unwieldy or complicated or costly in that. Having that, you simply have in these three provinces the same right of appeal to a judicial officer as already exists in the other provinces of this Dominion. It seems to me that the amendment of the Senate in that respect is in a very simple and very reasonable form. At all events, if it is not in a simple form, and if it can be improved, it seems to me that it is the duty of my hon. and learned friend not to reject it, if the principle of it can be defended, but to suggest such modifications as will make it more simple and less costly, if any such can be suggested. The last clause of my hon. and learned friend's motion says :

That the passage of the amendment by the Senate, after its rejection by the House of Commons, is inconsistent with the undoubted right and privilege of this House.

Such a principle as this would prevent the Senate discussing any question which would be dealt with by this House. I do not understand that to be the true position in regard to the franchise or any other subject. The fact that any particular amendment has been discussed in this House is no reason why the Senate should be shut off from action upon it; otherwise the functions of the Senate are merely nominal. The Senate has a right, no doubt, to consider the reasons given in this House for or against; but to say that because this House has considered certain reasons in regard to any question to be wise or not wise, therefore the Senate shall be precluded or concluded from discussing that question upon its merits, seems to me to be a very dangerous doctrine. My hon. and learned friend's motion concludes by saying that this action of the Senate "is the more unwarranted in that the country has emphatically pronounced in favour of the principle of the Bill." If my hon. and learned friend states that under the circumstances under which the last Dominion election was held, the country had in view the particular principle which is said to be invaded by this action of the Senate, I think he would be going a little further than he has yet gone on this or any similar subject. My hon. and learned friend knows that the last Dominion election was not to any extent fought on the principle of the Franchise Bill or any principle embodied in this Bill. He knows the truth, as laid down by a recent

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax),

English writer, Mr. Lecky, in his work on "Democracy and Liberty," that it is almost impossible to get an electorate to pronounce an opinion on more than one important subject at one general election. The matters which engaged the attention of the electorate of this country at the last general election were not connected in any way with the subject of this Bill, so far as it has been modified by the Senate; and to say that the giving of the right of appeal to a judicial officer in these three provinces invades any principle on which the country pronounced at the last general election, seems to me to be trifling with this subject. This principle, or any principle relating to the franchise, was not considered, at all events so far as I have been able to make myself acquainted with the public questions discussed in that election. Therefore, it seems to me that the reasons which have been put forward in this motion cannot be made good, that the amendment which the Senate has made in the Bill and in which it asks the concurrence of this House, is a reasonable amendment, and that this House, upon fair consideration and doing only the barest justice to the three provinces in which at present there exists no right of appeal to a judge, ought to concur in that amendment.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Mr. Speaker, I would like to make just a remark or two in reference to what has been said by my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Borden), more particularly in its bearing upon the situation in my own province. I have followed this discussion a little closely, though not as closely as I would have liked, during the progress of the Bill through committee, and I have been surprised beyond measure at the persistent determination evinced by my hon. friends opposite, and continued in the other Chamber, to introduce the element embodied in the Senate amendments into the Franchise Bill. My surprise has proceeded from the fact that that amendment argued, as it appeared to me, an entire want of apprehension of the fundamental principle underlying this measure. The principle of this Bill is that we shall accept the lists which are prepared for the purposes of the provincial elections. The amendment, as proposed in this House, and the amendment as made in the Senate, strikes at the very root of that principle; and my hon. friends opposite might as well ask us to abandon this Bill altogether as to ask us to accept this amendment. It does occasion me no end of surprise to think that those of my hon. friends who are eminent at the bar, and who are justly reputed for their legal knowledge and attainments, should fail to see the blot which lies on the face of their proposition. My hon. friend from Halifax has said that these proposed reasons for refusing to concur in the Senate amendments are not well founded. It appears to me that they might be stated much more strongly than they are, at least one of them. I maintain with all confidence, from a knowledge of the existing provincial law of New Brunswick and of the system under which the lists are made up, that it would be utterly and radically impossible to engraft this amendment upon that system without destroying the lists altogether. My hon. friend cannot find in the amendment as adopted by the Senate the necessary machinery to work out this appeal to the judges. It is not there at all, and you would find yourself in the most anomalous and absurd position when you came to try to work the law out.

What is the law in New Brunswick? It is that the revisers, after they have discharged their duty, shall send the lists to the county secretary within a date fixed, I think, not later than the 10th November. Those lists remain in the office of the county secretary until the sheriff of the county, not earlier than the 10th of December, takes them up for the purpose of ascertaining and determining what names have been duplicated, and striking out the names of those not residing in any parish which appears on its list, so as to leave simply each name once upon the final list. The list cannot be taken for Dominion purposes out of the hands of the county secretary and touched without ceasing to be a provincial list. You cannot lay your hand on it without destroying it for provincial purposes. It is then no longer a provincial list. After you take it out of the hands of the county secretary by order of a judge, and add an amendment to it, what becomes of it?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Would it not be just as possible, for the purposes of this appeal, to procure from the proper officer a certified copy of the list for the purposes of the Dominion elections?

An hon. MEMBER. We have not provided for that.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why not provide for them now?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is not provided for, and you have to provide for it in the most explicit manner, or else you are going to be absolutely lost when you come to work this thing out. From the moment you undertake to touch those lists, you have to take them out of the hands of the local officers and declare them to be Dominion lists and subject to the treatment your section proposes. From the moment they are taken out of the hands of the county officers, you have to follow them through the various channels so that they may be properly constituted Dominion lists, and continued Dominion lists, and cease to be provincial lists for any purpose. When, in reply to the leader of the Opposition, I endeavoured very briefly to show how utterly impracticable that would be, I brought down upon myself the wrath and indignation of my hon. friend, and he amended his motion as then submitted, but he did not put it in a better position, and the Senate have not got in it a better position, because it is utterly and radically opposed to the principle of the Franchise Bill as introduced by this Parliament.

Only a moment's consideration by my hon. friend, directing his astute mind to it and applying the law as it exists in the province of New Brunswick to this condition of things, will show him that we would be putting ourselves in a very absurd position and making an absolutely unworkable Act, as far as the Dominion is concerned, if we adopted this amendment.

Mr. McNEILL. What this House and the country have got to understand from the hon. Minister who has just resumed his seat (Mr. Blair) is that the Government will not attempt to make this amendment a workable amendment, no matter how just it may be. That is what we have to understand from the speech he has just delivered. We have heard him put a number of technicalities before the House and the country as an excuse why men should be unjustly treated.

I desire to say a word with regard to an argument advanced, namely, that because the country has pronounced in favour of a change in the existing franchise law, therefore, the Second Chamber is precluded from making any amendment to the Bill introduced by the Government. In the first place, I deny, as it has already been denied, that the country has pronounced upon that question in the manner alleged. But supposing it had pronounced, supposing it had declared that it was advisable to enact a new franchise law or to amend the present law, what has that to do with the question before the House? What did we see in the mother country a short time ago. We saw a Government returned to power upon the express issue of Home Rule or no Home Rule. And what followed? They brought down their Home Rule measure, but it was so stuffed with injustice, as this measure is, that when it went up to the Second Chamber, the Second Chamber, although the election had turned upon that question in a manner in which it cannot be maintained the election in this country turned upon this question, they, without hesitation, threw out the whole Bill. And what did the country say? It said that the Second Chamber had done right, and sent the party that had thrown out the measure into power with a larger majority at its back than any known in the memory of living men.

Then, with reference to the other argument which my hon. friend the Solicitor General has adduced, as to the infringement of the sacred secrecy of the ballot. He says it would never do to empower an aggrieved candidate in Prince Edward Island with the means of tracing improper voters, because that would interfere with the sanctity of ballot secrecy. Why, my hon. friend surely knows that in the province of Ontario the very law which he desires to impose upon this House has a provision similar to the one he rejects now and objects to in the case of the province of Prince Edward Island.

Then, he says, we must not interfere with the principle of this Bill. But is he not interfering with its principle when he imposes the ballot on the province of Prince Edward Island? Is election by a ballot the course pursued in that province? Does that province recognize the ballot to-day? No, the voting there is open, and not by ballot. Yet my hon. friend does not hesitate to lay his hand upon the province of Prince Edward Island and force secret voting upon it. And while doing this, he still says that we must not interfere with the principle of the Bill, because we must not do anything that will in any way change the nature of the lists or of the voting now existing under the provincial laws. But what more absolute interference could there be than the change of open into secret voting which is done by this Bill? We need not refer to this question of the principle of the Bill, we need not accept this argument gravely, because we know that the principle of the Bill was violated long ago. At the very commencement of the discussion an amendment to this Bill was introduced by the Government, which, on the face of it, interfered with the power of the local legislature to strike names off the list.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not at all. Can the hon. gentleman point to a single word in the Bill, as it passed this House, which interferes with the lists as made up for provincial purposes—which either took a name off or put a name on? True, the Bill did provide that persons might vote who were not on the lists.

Mr. McNEILL. I need not answer my hon. friend because he has answered himself. The amendment proposed by the Senate is eminently just and desirable. It is so eminently just and desirable that the mere statement of it will, I venture to say, carry conviction to any unprejudiced mind in Canada. I should like to know what independent man in Canada is prepared to say that an elector in the province of Nova Scotia or New Brunswick or Manitoba shall not be allowed to have the same right of appeal to a judge in the last resort as is given to an elector in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario? I want to know, who that is independent, or who that wishes to take a fair view of this question is prepared to say that he will deprive a man whose name has been improperly and unjustly taken off the list, either through incompetence or through deliberate partisanship by partisan official, of the right to have his grievance heard and adjudicated upon by a competent and impartial tribunal? That is the question. That is what the Senate has proposed, and that is the proposal which the Government are prepared to resist. Why, Sir, I wonder that any Government should venture to take upon itself the responsibility of resisting an amendment so conspicuously fair and so just. And, what is the argument that is presented to us? Why is it that this measure of justice, this elementary measure of justice, is to be withheld from our fellow citizens of these provinces?

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. McNEILL. Yes; I say an elementary measure of justice. The reason, we are told, is that it is inconsistent with the principles of this Bill. That is the most extraordinary reason—I was about to say the most unblushing reason—that I could very well imagine to be presented for opposition to a proposal of this kind.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh; order.

Mr. McNEILL. I wish, Mr. Speaker, that you would kindly ask some of these gentlemen who are, no doubt, impatient for the end of the session, to restrain their spirits.

Mr. LANDERKIN. We want you to speak out and not conceal anything.

Mr. McNEILL. I say that if this simple plain, elementary measure of justice is inconsistent with the principle of this Bill, then, so much the worse for the Bill. If the principle of this Bill is inconsistent with the most elementary measure of justice, then, the Government should never have introduced such a measure into this House. Why, Sir, when this measure was passing through the House, when the House was being induced—I might say when it was being cajoled—into agreeing to the second reading, what were we told? We were told that if any measure of injustice were perpetrated by the province, or if any measure of justice were withheld by the provinces, we had it in our hands to redress the grievance. But, now, what do we find? What are we told when asked for the redress of such a grievance? We are told: You are too late, you have agreed to the principle of the Bill, and you cannot have this measure of justice for your fellow citizens. Now, what did the "Globe" say, what was the organ of hon. gentlemen opposite instructed to say with reference to this matter when this measure was passing through the House?

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The applause is very weak over there.

Mr. COCHRANÉ. But there is some sense in it.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Raise your voice.

Mr. McNEILL. Mr. Speaker, there is a character whose appearance at the footlights is always greeted with pleasure, with a degree of amusement. I refer to the clown or buffoon. I should be sorry to suggest for a moment an unparliamentary term to be applied to an hon. member of this House, but, if there is such a thing as a parliamentary clown or buffoon, I should like to apply the term to the gentleman who is interrupting me,—but, if it be unparliamentary. I will not apply it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. The House sees the application.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Are you out of a job?

Mr. McNEILL. The "Globe" says:

The provinces are not of one mind in regard to the franchise; and if Quebec is not prepared for manhood suffrage and one man one vote, and we are not satisfied with plural voting and other features of the Quebec system, the simplest way out of the difficulty is to let each province suit itself. Of course, it is the duty of the Dominion Parliament to see that the Franchise law, whatever it may be, shall be fair to all, and it is reasonable that there should be safeguards against unfair provincial legislation.

But now, when we want to take safeguards against unfair provincial legislation, which we know to exist, we are told that it is contrary to the principle of the Bill. Though the organ of the Government was instructed to inform the public that these safeguards ought to be taken and would be taken, we are now told that the Government are not prepared to take the safeguards, but are prepared to deny them to the people of the provinces. It is only right, I think that that should be clearly understood by the country.

Now, Sir, I venture to say that if there was any reason, if any reason could be assigned, why it was right and just that we should oppose this Bill on the second reading, the reason has been given to us now and given to us without measure. The fact that the very principle of the measure is inconsistent with the most elementary principles of justice is, I think, a sufficient reason why this House should not have passed the measure, and a sufficient reason why the House should support this most reasonable amendment sent down by the Second Chamber. Why, Sir, my hon. friend the Solicitor General says that the Second Chamber has no right to send down such an amendment, that it is in violation of the privileges of this House. Why, my hon. friend surely knows a great deal better than that. He knows very well that the Second Chamber in the mother country has been in the habit of dealing with questions of this kind. In 1884, when Mr. Gladstone brought down his famous measure on the Franchise and refused to accompany it with a redistribution Bill, as my hon. friend knows very well, the Franchise Act was discussed in the House of Lords and was rejected by the House of Lords, and the country supported the action of the House of Lords in that regard. My hon. friend shakes his head. There were a hundred thousand people assembled in Manchester in support of the action of the House of Lords. The result of the discussion was that Mr. Gladstone, after standing to his guns as long as he could, had to send for Lord Salisbury and come to an arrangement with him in this regard. During the whole of that discussion there never was a suggestion from either side of the House of Lords that it was not perfectly competent for the Second Chamber to reject the measure or amend the measure. Lord Kimberley introduced the Bill in that House, and at the time of its second reading, if my memory is correct, stated in terms that it was the right of the House to reject the Bill. The Earl of Morley, who spoke for the Government on that occasion, who was then Under Secretary for War, said:

He did not for an instant deny the constitutional right of their Lordships to reject or amend the Bill.

The Lord Chancellor, Lord Selborne, also speaking for the Government never for one moment suggested as a reason why the Bill should not pass the House that their lordships had not a perfect right to reject or amend it if they liked. In referring to the redistribution Bill which was the cause of offence, for it was said that the House of Lords should refuse to pass the Franchise Bill until the Redistribution Bill was brought down, Lord Selborne met that argument by saying: When the Redistribution Bill comes down it is within the right of your lordships to amend or to reject it. So you have the statement from the Lord Chancellor himself in reference to the constitutional right, if any one ever doubted it, of the Second Chamber to deal with the Franchise of the House of Commons. So far as that argument is concerned, I do not see any force in it, and I venture to say it has no weight whatever. Now, I think that I have given sufficient reason why this House should agree to the amendment sent down by the Senate. I say that if that amendment requires further amendment so as to make its operation more inexpensive and more easily workable, it is for the Government to approach the Senate and to arrange with the Senate such further amendments as may be required. As I said before, there is no difference between the parties in this country in their desire to lessen the cost of the existing franchise law. We all desire to do that; but I say now as I said before, that it would be a blot upon parliamentary government in Canada, I will go further and say it would be an evidence that Canada was not fit for responsible government, if there was not statesmanship enough in Canada to reduce the cost of the existing franchise law without depriving this House of its most precious privilege, the right to regulate its own franchise, a right that is possessed by the smallest legislature in this Dominion, but of which the Government desires to deprive this House. I say further still, it would be a still greater blot if, in order to reduce the cost of the existing Franchise Act, it was necessary to introduce a measure, which according to the Government's own admission, is inconsistent with the most elementary principles of justice.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I wish to say a word or two so far as Nova Scotia is concerned, and to represent the views of the electors in that province concerning the machinery we now have for arranging the franchise. First let me say that this peculiarly applies to Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Manitoba, and the eloquent philippic of my hon. friend from North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) is altogether out of place. I want to say that I never heard an objection from a Conservative in Nova Scotia against the local lists. I will ask the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden) if the sheriff of the county of Halifax that he represents, and who, if I mistake not, was made returning officer, while in other counties the sheriffs were not made returning officers—I want to ask him whether that sheriff is not a man who would do right.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I will say to my hon. friend, as I said before, that so far as the integrity of the sheriff of Halifax is concerned, I would not question it for a moment. But I think the sheriff of Halifax would be ready to admit himself that he does not possess a knowledge of the law to enable him to be a capable judge of matters of this kind when he acts as a court of appeal.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I may say in answer to the hon. gentleman that it does not require very much law to know whether a man has the necessary qualification to entitle him to be placed on the list. I venture to think that an ordinary business man like the sheriff of Halifax, or the sheriffs of the other counties of Nova Scotia, is a better judge of who are entitled to go on the lists than some of our county court judges, for whom I have the very highest respect. It is beclouding things to say that only judicial men can do this kind of work. To say that it requires a great knowledge of law to be good judges of the men who should go upon the list, is not stating the facts. I think the sheriffs in the various districts are really good judges of the men who should go upon the list. I admit there may come up questions of law—

Mr. MILLS. Hear, hear.

Mr. McNEILL.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). There seems to be one man in this House that fears an honest electorate in his county.

Mr. MILLS. No, he does not.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I repeat that the sheriffs in the various counties are as good judges, I will say even better judges, in the majority of cases, of who should go upon the list, than the judges themselves. What is the foundation after all of this property qualification? It is the assessment. The assessors who make the assessment know all about the men in their locality. Take any polling district in any county of Nova Scotia. In the first place, the assessor knows every man in the district, and after all, knowledge of the facts is the foundation of righteous judgment. He knows every man in the district, and there are very few, whether young or old, of whom he has not a personal knowledge. I want to state now, to emphasize what I said before, that in my whole experience in the province of Nova Scotia I never heard an objection made publicly, and I think I might go further and say privately, against the methods pursued by the various sheriffs. Their fairness was undoubted. I will give you as an example a case in the county where I live. One family has held the office of the shrievalty of the county of Pictou since the first Philadelphia settlers came over in 1772; the same Harriss family have through all the good reports of Liberal administrations and all the evil reports of Conservative Administrations, held office without a single break. I tell you that in Nova Scotia we only appoint the best men to offices of that kind. They are good and true men. I will make the assertion that in the county of Pictou there never was a man who, either in public or in private, relating to the service of the smallest process up to the highest position of holding a Dominion election, ever complained that a sheriff in the county of Pictou did a dishonourable act. Hon. gentlemen opposite seem to think that because a man is a sheriff he is not as good a man as a county judge. Now, on general principles I admit that a county judge ought to be above suspicion; but in my experience with the sheriffs of Nova Scotia, they have always endeavoured to act fairly in everything they did. I venture to make the statement here in the presence of a much more distinguished lawyer than myself, the hon. member for the county of Halifax (Mr. Borden), that if he reads over the amendment as proposed by the Senate, we could never have a list under which we could run an election in Nova Scotia. The machinery provided there cannot eventuate in a list at all. I have looked that amendment over carefully, and I say the machinery provided there would have the result of preventing any list being made in Nova Scotia, it could not be done. I have all due respect for the Senate, I am not saying a single word against them. I admit at once that they are part and parcel of the constitution of this country; but while they have a right to discuss and a right to propose, they have no right to insist upon any view they may have as to what electorate shall vote for members of this House who have to go before that electorate. I admit that they are to bring all their wisdom to bear upon legislation that goes from this House, but I will not for a moment admit that they have a right to say what class of voters shall vote for members of this House, because that would be to admit that whether the majority in the Upper House were Liberals or Conservatives, they could control the franchise, and in the interest of their party, have the right to name what men should come to this House. We cannot prevent them, whether they be Liberals or Conservatives, acting in the interests of the party to which they are attached, and I must say they are attached to parties to as great a degree as are members of this House. I venture to make the statement in the presence of members of this House that no greater partisanship was ever shown in this Chamber than has been shown by members in the other House. I do not deny their rights by any means; but I deny them the right, particularly after they having evinced this partisan disposition, to say what men shall sit and vote for members of this House when the Government go before the people. Do the gentlemen in the Upper Chamber show that absence of partisanship which might be expected from them; are their speeches not tinged with partisanship; and when we find them to be of the earth earthy, politicians crawling for a living and characterized by worse partisanship than the politicians in this House, I say they are not worthy of exercising such judgment.

Mr. SPROULE. I ask your ruling, Mr. Speaker, as to whether the hon. gentleman is in order in thus referring to members of the Upper House.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the last expression of the hon. gentleman should undoubtedly be withdrawn.

Mr. FRASER. I withdraw it. I wish the withdrawal to be read with the statement I made. In view of the knowledge I possess in regard to these matters in Nova Scotia, I hold that to accede to the amendments made by the Senate would be to destroy the Bill. What is its underlying principle? It is the local lists hon. gentlemen opposite have the right to discuss the Bill and to oppose the principle, which is that of the adoption of the local lists of the various provinces. I can understand hon. members contending that that is not a good provision; but if that is the underlying principle, as undoubtedly it is—whether it may be faulty or not is another question—the Senate amendments are designed to overturn the underlying principle of accepting the various franchises of the various provinces. For myself I want no hybrid. If we adopt that principle, we must accept it to its fullest extent, whether it is good or bad. The carrying out of that principle must be left with the electorate. An hon. member speaking about the general elections said that this question of the franchise was not an item in it. During the last few days we have had strange experiences, if I can accept the statements we hear on the other side of the House as to what decided the last elections. I hold that every element in the Liberal programme contributed to the decision of the last election.

Mr. SPROULE. As well as the expectation of increased expenditure.

Mr. FRASER. I remember a previous session when the hon. gentleman and myself took sweet counsel together, when we united against an attempt to do a wrong. The hon. gentleman surely has forgotten that union of feeling, and he has now become as cold and icy as death. I remember him kindly on account of those past days and the work then done. When the next reformation comes round I trust this conversion will be more permanent. As regards this Franchise Act, we must either adopt the principle and follow it as regards the local lists prepared by the various provinces or we must sweep away that principle and go back to a Bill under which all the provinces of the Dominion come under a Dominion Franchise Act, one and universal. I only rose in the first instance to say that so far as the province from which I come is concerned, no difficulty has been raised. In my province we are satisfied with the Act. Hon. gentlemen opposite may have different information; I make that statement on my own behalf. I know there are Conservative sheriffs in the province who are fair-minded men. I will instance one who died a short time ago, and who lived in Colchester County, Sheriff Crowe, who was a life-long Conservative, and yet I never heard a Liberal there say a word against him, for he did what was fair. When a man accepts the office of sheriff the whole county looks up to him, and Sheriff Crowe held office with credit to himself and to his county; and it will be found that the responsibility of office which always attaches to a man whenever he gets a place, is the very best safeguard against such officer becoming an open partisan. In view, therefore, of these three facts: first, that there is no objection in Nova Scotia against the local lists as prepared by our sheriffs; second, that the underlying principle of the Bill is the acceptance of the local lists, and that everything else would interfere with them; third, that the amendments proposed would not and could not give a list such as we could act upon at an election because the machinery is defective, I cannot, as one member, agree to these amendments. I wish to take the broadest possible ground of the right of the Senate to deal with this Bill. But there must be recognized the underlying principle that members who sit in this House shall decide, if even we are to accept a franchise that may work against us, what the franchise shall be, and that we shall never lose sight of this central idea that the House of Commons and the House of Commons alone, in essence and principle, must decide the men who shall vote and constitute the electorate.

Mr. SPROULE. If that be the case, how was it that in the Senate in 1885 the Hon. R. W. Scott moved that the Franchise Act passed by this House be thrown out?

Mr. FRASER. According to the hon. gentleman I am to accept what Mr. Scott did, and my mouth is to be closed. That is not the case; nobody authorized him to do it. I am not bound by what Mr. Scott said or did. That is the worst kind of Tory doctrine, that if a gentleman in the Senate makes a statement, another hon. gentleman, because he has the same party affiliations, must accept it.

Mr. SPROULE. If the hon. gentleman's contention is right, his friends are all wrong.

Mr. FRASER. There might come an occasion in which the birthright of many Canadians might be taken away, and the Senate might be called upon to interfere.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It is not necessary to discuss the abstract black letter right which the Senate may possibly have to consider a Franchise Bill; but I venture to make this statement that in view of the circumstances under which this Franchise Bill came before the Senate, it is beyond the scope of their well-understood right to interfere with this particular portion of the Bill. The object of the amendment to which I will specially address myself is that which practically provides in effect that in so far as three of the provinces are concerned, Manitoba, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, there shall be for these provinces Dominion lists instead of provincial lists as exist elsewhere. Under the circumstances in which this Bill came before the Senate it was improper for the Senate to interfere with it in the way in which they did.

Mr. DAVIN. Why?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) will restrain his impatience, he will get reasons in a minute. We are by this Bill adopting the principle that obtained in Canada from 1867 to 1885, during which period we had a provincial franchise and provincial lists for federal purposes. During all those years, from 1867 to 1885, this monstrous iniquity that the Senate now undertakes to amend, existed without a word of protest from them.

Mr. FRASER

Mr. McNEILL. Would my hon. friend (Mr. Fitzpatrick) permit me?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. McNEILL. Would my hon. friend (Mr. Fitzpatrick) allow me to ask him a question? He said that until 1885 we had the local lists without any protest. Did we not pass an Act in this House in 1882 with reference to that?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am dealing now with the object of the Senate amendment, and I do not think it necessary, for the purpose of this discussion, to cover the earth or to go back to the time of the Deluge. My hon. friend (Mr. McNeill) refers to the Act of 1882, it is scarcely worth while discussing that, but as he has raised the question, I will say that the amendment introduced in 1882 was intended to provide for these men who were disfranchised because they were public officials, and there was in it no reference at all to the lists. Now, not only had we those lists from 1867 to 1885 without a single word of protest from the Senate, and without a single word of protest from the Conservative party, but when, in 1885, the Dominion Franchise Act was introduced, a strong protest was made by the Liberal party against the introduction of the principle of having the federal lists under the control of federal officers. And, Sir, not only was there a protest made at that time by the Liberal party against the principle adopted, but in season and out of season since that time the voice of the Liberal party has been raised throughout the whole of the Dominion in protest against these federal franchise lists, and in favour of the principle we are now seeking to carry out by this Bill. Not only did we raise that protest in the course of the debate in 1885, but we protested in the election of 1887, the election of 1891, the election of 1896, and in those elections that was the chief plank in the Liberal platform, in addition to the platform laid down by the Liberal party at Ottawa in 1893.

Now, we have the fact that these conditions existed from 1867 to 1885, we have the fact that in 1885 the Liberal party protested against the change, we have in addition the fact that in each recurring election the chief plank in the Liberal platform was a reversion to the condition of things existing before 1885, and we have also the fact that this policy was inserted in the Liberal platform at the Ottawa convention. The Liberal party came into power, therefore, with an express mandate from the people to repeal the Dominion franchise law of 1885 and to revert to the provincial lists, and we find that at the very first working session after the change of Government, the session of 1897, a franchise Bill was introduced by us. Not only do we find that, but we find also that because we wanted the Bill to be thoroughly understood, and that the public might well know what our intentions were, that Bill was placed before the people for their consideration, and at this session, a franchise Bill was the very first measure disposed of. Under these circumstances, is it possible to conceive for a moment that there can be any doubt, that we, the majority in the House of Commons as now constituted, the supporters of the present Government, came here with an imperative mandate from the people of the Dominion to rid them of the useless and expensive system known as the Dominion Franchise Act, and to substitute this proposed law. Not only did we receive that mandate from the people of the Dominion, but, Sir, when we introduced our legislation in this House, there was not a single voice within these walls raised in favour of the old Dominion Franchise Act, and it went down to its grave unwept, unhonoured and unsung. In view of the fact that our desire is to obey the imperative mandate of the people, in view of the fact that our desire is to rid the people of this country of this incubus in the form of the Dominion Franchise Act, an Act which has cost us in the years it was in operation over $2,000,000; an Act which has not been revised for the last four years and that hon. gentlemen opposite dare not revise because of the expense incurred in the revision; in view of these facts, we are justified in carrying out our promise to the people and in endeavouring as far as possible to place the making of the lists under the control of the people themselves, thus proving that the Liberal party have and always had confidence in the people, as distinguished from hon. gentlemen opposite, who because they did not trust the people wanted to keep the control of the lists in the hands of officials appointed by themselves. In view of these circumstances, even if the abstract right exists in the Senate to interfere with the franchise—a right which I do not concede—it was improper for them to interfere with a franchise Bill passed by this House under the conditions that I have indicated.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. We had this Senate amendment introduced into the House of Commons by the leader of the Opposition, and we had it voted down by one of the greatest majorities that the Government has had during the present session. And, Sir, at the time the debate took place on that amendment, and previous to the vote being taken, we heard a voice from the other side notifying us of the fate that was in store for us when that amendment was moved in the Senate. That premonitory warning proved by subsequent events to have had more authority than we thought at the time. It is now apparent to us that from the very outset this Bill was destined to be wrecked in the Senate; from the outset it was intended that the will of the people should be thwarted by the Senate.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Sir, it was intended from the outset that the Conservative party would make manifest their lack of confidence in the people, and their desire to control the franchise through their own hired and paid officials. Let us now deal with the amendment. So far as that amendment of the Senate is concerned, I say, with all due regard to the hon. gentleman who drew it up, that it was drawn up by a man who had no conception of a franchise Act, who does not know what an election means, and who probably, safe in that haven of rest, felt that he never would be called upon to put the Act into operation. In the first place, if this amendment were put into operation, the effect would be absolutely to destroy the provincial lists in these three provinces. I will proceed to prove that. It would destroy the provincial lists for provincial purposes as well as for Dominion purposes. Subsection "c" of subsection 5 says:

The voters' lists * * * in the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Manitoba, shall be the voters' lists as amended under the provisions of section 10a of this Act, which were prepared by the registration clerks or revisers for the several polling divisions so established for the purposes of provincial elections.

That is to say, starting from that point, voters' lists are to be the provincial lists. Now, what is provided by clause 10a?

There shall be in the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Manitoba, for the purpose of revising and amending the voters' lists to be used in the election of members for the House of Commons, an appeal from said lists as prepared by the registration clerks and revisers.

I draw my hon. friend's attention to that. There is an appeal from the lists, not as subsequently dealt with on appeal in any of those provinces; but as originally prepared by the registration clerks and revisers. Clause 10a provides that the provincial list in the custody of a provincial officer shall be taken before the judge of the county court, and he shall deal with it by striking out any name in it that he finds objectionable, and adding to it any name that he thinks should be on it. That is the list for provincial purposes. That list goes back to the reviser, and what becomes of it? I said a moment ago that the amendment was conceived by a man who had no knowledge of the working of the provincial machinery and had no knowledge of the fact that we cannot deal with provincial lists. We cannot touch them or deal with them in any manner, nor can we control a provincial officer having custody of a provincial list for provincial purposes. In addition to that, we find that section 6 of the Bill provides:

No person possessed of the qualifications generally required by the provincial law to entitle him to vote at a provincial election shall be disqualified from voting at a Dominion election,—

And, further, the amendment provides :

—or from having his name on the list.

Not only has he the right to vote as we provide, but he has the right to have his name put on the provincial list. How are you going to provide for dealing with the provincial list? The Senate not only provides for an appeal, but for a man's name on the provincial list without reference to the provincial authorities. How can that be done?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). With all deference to my learned friend's view, I would suppose that merely referred to the provincial list as it is to be used for Dominion purposes.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I take the amendment as it reads. We have to suppose that it intends what it reads, and it says: "or from having his name on the list."

Mr. TAYLOR. That is for Dominion purposes.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Where does it say for Dominion purposes? That may be in the hon. gentleman's imagination, but it is not in the clause. But let us go on, and deal with the peculiarities of the procedure here provided for, and see how nicely this amendment has been prepared, how carefully it has been considered by the Senate, how much they know about the franchise law, and how anxious and desirable they were to make our Act workable. I find here, for instance, that the appeal is from the list, not as it is revised in the province—because there is a revision in all these provinces. In the maritime provinces there is a revision before the sheriff. The amendment does not provide for dealing with the lists after the revision in the provinces, but as it originally stood in the hands of the registration clerks and revisers. In Manitoba, take the list as it comes from the hands of the registration clerk. The law provides that there shall be an appeal to a court of revision presided over by one of the county court judges of the province or by a barrister of at least three years' standing. Therefore, under the amendment, you are going to have an appeal to a county court judge, and while that appeal is proceeding under this amendment, you will have another appeal under the provincial law, and both appeals may come before the same judge. That is the result of this carefully prepared legislation which my hon. friend wants us to adopt. Under the provincial law you have an appeal to the revision court, and under the Dominion law you have an appeal on the same list to the county court judge.

Mr. FITZPATRICK.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Both going on at the same time.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Both may be going on at the same time, and practically before the same man under two distinct and separate Acts. It is to me perfectly inconceivable that any person, having given five minutes serious consideration to this Bill, should have drawn such an amendment or have been responsible for it. Now, let us deal with the appeal in the case of New Brunswick or Nova Scotia, where an appeal may be taken from the revisers to the sheriff of the county.

An hon. MEMBER. It is not an appeal.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Call it what you choose, it comes before him for revision.

Mr. McINERNEY. Only as to certain voters.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The sheriff comes in about a month after the lists find their way into the hands of the county secretary, and he goes through the lists in the way I have stated. Under this Bill, in the meantime, ten days before the sheriff has any right to intervene, this county court appeal is provided in the amendment of the Senate.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. In the province of Nova Scotia an appeal may be taken from the revisers to the sheriff of the county, by whom the provincial lists are finally revised. The time for appeal, under the Senate amendment, is limited to twenty days after—mark you—the voters' list, as first made up, is filed with the officer who, under provincial law, has its custody. Now what is meant by the voters' list as first made up? Take the procedure in Nova Scotia, with which that in New Brunswick is almost identical. Under section 11, 52 Victoria, chapter 1 of the Nova Scotia statutes, the assessors of each assessment district are required to deliver, on or before the 20th January in each year, a copy of the assessment roll and other information necessary for the making up of the lists. On or before the 5th of February in each year, the revisers shall select and prepare from the assessment roll an application based on income, alphabetical lists of the qualified voters in each polling division. On or before the 5th March, they are to post up copies of such lists in three of the most public places in each polling district, with a notice that the revisers will be at a given place, on or before the 5th March, to hear objections to the lists. Under another section, the revisers are required to attend at the time and place appointed, and, after investigating the cases of which notice has been given, to correct the lists accordingly. They are directed then to transmit a corrected list to the clerk of the municipality on or before the 18th of March. There is also a further appeal to the sheriff, who is to attend at his office on the 21st March, for the purpose of hearing appeals. The lists are then to be made up, signed by the sheriff deposited with the clerk of the municipality on or before the 10th of April, in each year, and shall thenceforth be the register of electors for the county.

Now, assuming that all proceedings have been regularly taken under the provincial law of Nova Scotia, what becomes in the meantime of our appeal? How are you going to get access to the lists? All this is being done under the provincial law, with lists which we say are to be ours. But while the provincial authorities are dealing with those lists, where are we?

An hon. MEMBER. They have a prior right to them.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. They have the exclusive right to them, and the simple fact that, under the provincial law, these lists would be in the custody, for provincial purposes, of these officials, during the time given for our appeal and when the time for our appeal would lapse, is sufficient to show the want of care and attention given by the Senate to their amendment.

I do not wish to take up the time of the House at great length, but I would call attention to the fact—

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is merely a detail, which could be cured by one sentence.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not look upon that as a matter of detail. I state absolutely, and I am quite certain that my hon. friend will agree with me, that it is beyond the scope of our authority, that there is no power in the Dominion which will enable us to deal with the provincial lists.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Certainly not for the purposes of a provincial election, but it is perfectly competent in us, by a very simple provision—if this amendment is wanting in that respect—to enable a certified copy of the lists to be used or a copy of the lists verified by affidavit, for the purpose of appeal in respect of a Dominion election.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I would draw my hon. friend's attention to this, that I am dealing with an amendment supposed to have been carefully considered, an amendment upon which this whole constitution turns apparently, judging by the importance attached to it by the Senate, an amendment prepared by them which they want to impose upon us, and my intention is to show that they never gave the matter five minutes consideration.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In order to show that that is not quite conclusive reasoning, let me point out the case which I pointed out the other day to the Minister of Inland Revenue, in which this House, as well as the Senate, in 1897 repealed an Act that had been already repealed. If the Senate has overlooked anything in respect of the details of an important measure, that is not conclusive reason that they have not given it careful study.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. If there had been a real, serious and honest desire to deal with this matter, it seems to me that the thing could not have been overlooked. If the Senate had read the Bill, they could not have failed to see this clause which provides for the fact that the list for federal purposes is the copy of the list obtained from the local authority and sent here to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. That is the difficulty to be dealt with if they wanted to deal with it at all. But that was not their desire. Their desire was to create difficulty and trouble and try to bring about disagreement.

Mr. McNEILL. I wish to know—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. McNEILL. I wish to ask your ruling, Mr. Speaker, as to whether it is competent for an hon. member of this House to say that the other Chamber has introduced an amendment for the purpose of creating trouble and difficulty?

Mr. SPEAKER. I am rather inclined to think that when this House or the other is considering amendments made by the one House or the other, it has the right to adduce arguments and draw fair conclusions from them.

Mr. McNEILL. I think I have not made myself clear—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have ruled on the point the hon. gentleman raised.

Mr. McNEILL. I just wish to say—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DAVIN. I wish to ask a question—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon gentleman cannot ask a question.

Mr. DAVIN. I rise to a point of order, and not the point my hon. friend made. Has an hon. member the right to attribute motives to the other Chamber?

Mr. SPEAKER. That is an abstract question.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I was not dealing with motives, but with consequences and facts, and I presume a man always intends the consequences of his acts. Let me draw the attention of the House to this other fact. Let us see what machinery is provided here. How do they proceed to dispose of those appeals? It is provided that the judge shall hear the appeals on affidavits. Let me draw the attention of fair-minded hon. gentlemen opposite to this fact. The appeal is inserted and is to be disposed of on affidavits, but if the judge is requested by the appellant or by the person opposing the appeal, then on evidence viva voce under oath, the judge may make an order in writing directing that the name of such person as voter shall be struck from or added to said list, and in case of more than one appeal from the same voters' list, the judge shall embody in one order the result of his adjudication.

I draw attention to the question of notice to the person whose right to vote is questioned. How do they deal with that :

In the case of an application to strike off names from the voters' lists, such notice shall be mailed, duly registered, with postage prepaid, at least one week previous to such appeal, to the address of such person or persons whose right to vote is assailed, if known to the appellant.

So all the appellant needs, if he wants to get rid of the obligation to give notice, is to declare that he does not know the address of the voter whose name he was to strike from the list. Here is the provision we are asked to adopt, and then we are told that this is honest and fair dealing with the electors of the country. I say there has been no serious consideration given this Bill, no serious desire to improve the machinery, and do justice to the electors. The whole object of the measure was to prove that we, the Liberals, had confidence in the people of the Dominion, and our confidence was placed in them to this extent, that we wanted to put under their immediate supervision and control the making of their electoral lists. This amendment is an attempt to thwart our desire and interfere with us in the carrying out of that object.

Mr. MILLS. As it is one o'clock, I beg to move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. LANDERKIN. There is five minutes yet. You can finish in five minutes.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). Go on.

Mr. MILLS. Very well. I am the one to judge whether I can finish in five minutes or not. When the right hon. First Minister introduced this Bill in the House of Commons he asked hon. members to consider this matter, a most important matter for this House and for the country, in a calm and judicial manner. The Opposition in this House took the Prime Minister at his word, and did make an effort to consider this matter in a calm and judicial manner. Whenever a proposition was made that this Bill should be pressed forward another step, it was granted by the Opposition. We were asked to allow the second reading of the Bill, to allow the principle of the Bill to be endorsed—for the Opposition saw that the Government were determined to carry the principle of this measure—and we allowed the principle of this Bill to be adopted, without discussing it as thoroughly as it should have been discussed, upon the distinct understanding that if there were any amendments to be made in the details of the Bill, they should be fully gone into in Committee of the Whole. Now, the principle of the Bill has been adopted, and no one in this House has any desire now—whatever our wishes may have been before—to disturb the principle of the Bill. No one in the Senate has any desire to disturb the principle of the Bill, and the amendment that has come down to us from the Senate disturbs not one jot, not one tittle of the principle of this measure, but only affects the details, the working out of the Bill. What are the amendments of the Senate? So far as the one which has been principally discussed is concerned, it gives the right of appeal to a county court judge, really provides for the proper carrying out of the Franchise Acts of the provinces of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Manitoba. It is adopting these Franchise Acts and merely providing the machinery to carry them out properly in the provinces I have named. We have in Nova Scotia, as has been stated to-day, an appeal to the sheriff. Now, I am not here to cast any reflections whatever upon the sheriffs. I have said before, and I repeat, that any hon. member who sets up that argument and knocks it down only shows that he is talking to the galleries, that he is talking for some purpose, perhaps, inimical to the purpose before the House. I do not come here to talk against the sheriffs, but I have said before, and I say again very distinctly and emphatically, that in Nova Scotia we have a Franchise Act that is intricate in its provisions and cannot be understood by a layman who has no pretensions to more than common knowledge. Hon. members may suggest, the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) may say, that a layman can understand this Act; but on serious and calm reflection, he will not use that argument before men who understand the Act and who understand him.

Mr. FITZPATRICK.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman had better move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. MILLS moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 1 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Second Sitting.

THURSDAY, 9th June, 1898.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

A QUESTION OF DISALLOWANCE—
PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—WIT-NESSES AND EVIDENCE.

Mr. CLARKE. Before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, I would like to ask from some member of the Government information as to an Act passed by the legislature of Prince Edward Island, entitled "An Act to amend the Act respecting witnesses and evidence." I have received a great volume of correspondence from the city of Toronto this morning respecting this Act, and have been requested to ask the Government whether their attention has been drawn to it and whether it is the intention of the Government to disallow it. I do not wish to take up the time by reading the correspondence, but I will ask whether the Government have received any representations from commercial bodies respecting that Act and whether the Act will be disallowed?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I did not understand—what is the point?

Mr. CLARKE. The contention of those who are opposed to the Act and desire its disallowance—

Mr. SPEAKER. I really do not think, that on the Orders of the Day the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) can do more than ask a question.

Mr. CLARKE. I am answering the question asked by the right hon. First Minister.

The PRIME MINISTER. I cannot inform my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) whether this Act has been received yet by the Government. Our attention has not been called to it until this moment.

Mr. CLARKE. I will send the papers over to the right hon. gentleman if he wishes.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have no objection. I suppose that the people who oppose the Act will communicate with the Government.

ELECTORAL FRANCHISE ACT.

The House resumed adjourned debate on amendments made by the Senate to sections 5, 6, 10, 21a, 23, 26a, 26b, 26c and 27 of Bill

(No. 16) to amend the Electoral Franchise Act and to further amend the Dominion Elections Act.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, when the House adjourned, I was about to call the attention of hon. members to the points referred to by the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) as to the mode of operation regarding the electoral list in the province of Nova Scotia. One of the principal things in the hon. member's speech was the contention that we had a quarrel with the sheriffs of that province, and, I presume, a quarrel with the sheriffs of New Brunswick as well. There is not a member on this side of the House, to my knowledge, who has any quarrel with the sheriffs of either of these provinces. They are, so far as I know, honourable men, well qualified for the duties of their sphere of action. But it was a very peculiar thing—and it has been alluded to before in the discussion on this Bill—that the province of Nova Scotia took from the judges of the province the appointment of the sheriffs, so to speak, and made them political appointees. Those men have been appointed from a political standpoint. The men who have been appointed since that Act was passed in Nova Scotia have been political partisans, and they are political partisans to this day.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). Do you mean the Tories?

Mr. MILLS. All of them.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Then, there were Tories appointed under that Act.

Mr. MILLS. There were some Tories originally in office.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They were appointed under that Act. The local government had power to appoint them or not, and they appointed Tories.

Mr. MILLS. The sheriffs were retained by that Act, and some of those sheriffs were Tories. But they are amenable to the local government of Nova Scotia, and the direct cause of the passing of that Act grew out of the contention that arose in the county of Annapolis, where it became desirable on behalf of the Liberal party to turn out Dr. Robinson, who was then sheriff of the county of Annapolis, and they could do it in no other way than by passing an Act turning out all the sheriffs in Nova Scotia, so that they could level their guns, so to speak, at one individual in that province. The doctor was turned out, a man against whom no person can make a scintilla of a charge except that he is a Liberal-Conservative, and a Mr. Bonnett was placed in his stead. Afterward he, Bonnett, was also turned out, and one of the most notorious partisans in the county was placed in his stead, a gentleman who is now dead. If he were alive, perhaps I would say something more, but let the dead rest. Another gentleman has been appointed, more reasonable to be sure, but notwithstanding that, he is a partisan. Now, these are partisan officials to all intents and purposes; and no person, whether Ministers or members of Parliament, can gainsay the assertion that these officials are amenable to the present local government, they are partisan officials. Place a Tory in a position of that kind, place him under a government and he must of necessity be to a certain extent subservient to that government. Therefore, these men are partisans. Now, what this amendment asks is that this power be not given to partisans, but that it be given to men who are clothed with some judicial authority, men who are learned in the law. The member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) says that the Franchise Act of Nova Scotia can be fully understood even by a layman, and better understood by sheriffs who know the people in the district where they have jurisdiction better than any other man. I take exception to that statement. I say that the Franchise Act of Nova Scotia is a most intricate Act. Any lawyer or layman reading it will say that contentions will of necessity arise which no layman could adjudicate upon, and which require a trained mind to settle, a man who is not always in doubt in reference to these matters. A man that is always in doubt and who is a partisan, will give his party the benefit of that doubt every time. But take a man who is educated, who has a technical knowledge of what he has to adjudicate upon, and give him judicial authority, and I contend that man will give his decision according to his knowledge, and he will decide more in accordance with what is right than a man who is always in doubt. We have gentlemen on the other side who are candidates for the judicial bench. The hon. member for Guysborough is a candidate for the judicial bench, if the "Morning Chronicle" and the "Canadian Law Times" are to be believed. I would rather trust a case before the member for Guysborough, who has a trained mind, to a certain extent, in these matters, than I would to a layman, violent partisan though that hon. member may be. Therefore, this amendment is asking only what is right. It is only asking what has been accorded to other provinces of the Dominion, and it should be likewise accorded to Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Manitoba. But what does this Government contend with reference to the province of Prince Edward Island? There they have had that right of appeal to a judicial authority. If this Bill is passed without the Senate amendment, that right will be taken away from the province of Prince Edward Island.

Mr. MILLS.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). What right is that?

Mr. MILLS. I think I can tell the hon. gentleman, although I am not as conversant with the law of Prince Edward Island as with the Franchise Act of the Dominion. I understand that in Prince Edward Island, at the present time, they have no lists. Men can go and openly record their votes. They are subject to being questioned, as I understand it, but they register their votes. But after their vote is registered, upon an appeal, or reference to a county court judge, those men can be marked and known and it can be discovered whether they did have a right to vote or not.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. My hon. friend is quite mistaken. The only way of testing them is to file an election petition, praying for an ordinary scrutiny under the election petition.

Mr. MILLS. I covered that by saying: or a reference to a judge. But if the Government Bill is put through, that right will be taken away, because they provide for a ballot, and the ballot does not reveal how these men have voted. Therefore, the man who may have no more right to vote than a Zulu, can go to Prince Edward Island and answer the questions that are put to him, and have a right to vote, and that is the end of it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, not by long odds.

Mr. MILLS. Well, he has to swear to his vote.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He has to swear to his vote, and if he perjures himself, he will be arrested on the spot.

Mr. MILLS. If he goes away the next day?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, he does not leave the booth without being arrested.

Mr. MILLS. I say the bars of fraud, the bars of deception and corruption, instead of being put up in this matter, are being torn down, and they are being torn down by this Government with reference to Prince Edward Island. We who contend that the right of appeal to a judicial authority should lie in the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Manitoba, are putting up the bars against fraud and corruption as well as it can be done. Now, the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals made a speech. He is a gentleman who has a good legal knowledge, but still he is one of those gentlemen that sometimes talk to the galleries. He said we should accept the lists as prepared by the provinces. It was not decided by this House that we should accept the lists as prepared by the provinces. The resolution passed in this House before the Bill was introduced did not provide that the lists of the different provinces should be accepted, but that the franchises of the provinces should be accepted, and there is quite a difference between the franchises and the lists. What does this amendment provide? It provides that the resolution be carried out in its entirety, because if we do not have the right of appeal from the decisions of the assessors and revisers in Nova Scotia to a proper judicial authority the people will not get their names, as they have a perfect right to do, on the lists under the franchise of Nova Scotia. We will not be carrying out fully and to the letter the resolution passed before this House, seeing we are repealing the Franchise Act of the Dominion, and adopt the franchises of the provinces for our franchise. If the local machinery is not sufficient to put into effect the provincial franchises, then in order to carry out the resolution and the principle of the Bill, it is the duty of this House to manufacture such machinery, and pave the way to put machinery in motion whereby the people who have these rights under the franchises can get their names on the lists. In Nova Scotia the machinery is not there in order to properly get the names of the electors on the lists, so that they can take advantage of the franchise of the province. We have partisan officials, partisan revisers, partisan assessors, from whom appeals should be taken. Give us the judges, and I doubt if there will be half a dozen appeals made to them. Why? They will act as a terror to those partisan revisers and assessors. Give us the judges, and I apprehend there will not be any expense in regard to appeals. These partisan assessors and revisers well know there will be a judicial whip over them, and that if they do not do what is right their acts can be revised and the wrong committed can be righted. It will also have the effect of reducing the expense. It has already been said by hon. gentlemen opposite that there has been no one to defend the late Franchise Act of the Dominion. I have defended it, and I am prepared to do so again. And even if on the ground of expense, I hold that the Franchise Act could have been so amended by arranging for the preparation of the lists year by year as would have reduced the expense to a minimum. The difficulty in regard to expense was being surmounted when the people thought it best to repeal the Act. By the platform of the Liberal party adopted in Ottawa in 1893 it was resolved by that party that the Act should be repealed. I will admit that that was a plank in the Liberal platform, but so far as I am aware it was never mentioned in any of the counties. I had the opportunity in Annapolis County to hear many speeches; and although I did not hear the speeches delivered by the Minister of Finance, I ascertained what the hon. gentleman declared to be the platform of the Liberals in the last elections. In not one of the hon. gentleman's speeches did he refer to the Dominion Franchise Act.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not know whether I referred to that subject in my speeches in Annapolis, but I did so in fifty speeches I delivered in Nova Scotia.

Mr. MILLS. I have typewritten copies of three of the speeches delivered by the hon. gentleman in Annapolis County, taken by an official stenographer, and not one word appears to have been said with respect to the franchise of the Dominion. But there were a great many remarks made with respect to the enormous duty on cotton, flour and many other articles. Not one of the promises made in regard to them has been fulfilled, but this promise in regard to the franchise is going to be fulfilled. Very good. So far as I am concerned I accept the mandate of the people, which was that the Dominion Franchise Act should be abolished and we should accept the franchises of the different provinces for the Dominion franchise. Then, in God's name, allow the people to have ample opportunity to get their names on the lists and take advantage of the different franchises. To put the Bill through in its present shape, this would not be done, by accepting the amendments of the Senate it would be accomplished. I was very much amused in regard to the speeches delivered this morning in regard to this Bill. In the few remarks made by me before adjournment I called the attention of the House to the fact that the First Minister had said we should approach this subject in a calm and judicial spirit, and we did approach it in such a spirit and endeavoured to do what we thought to be right and square about it. In my remarks on the second reading I said I always was suspicious of a Liberal when he asks politicians to approach any matter in a calm and judicial manner and have no politics about it. There is always something behind, and this has not failed to prove true in the present instance. Have hon. gentlemen opposite been calm and judicial in their speeches to-day? We had a speech from the Minister of Railways and Canals; we also had a speech from the member for Guysborough, and as he very seldom speaks in a calm and judicial manner, I was not surprised at his speech; but I was surprised at the speech delivered by the Solicitor General. He has acted in a calm and judicial manner up to the present moment, but he went out of his way to follow the footsteps of the Minister of Railways; they put their heads together to talk to the galleries, or to one particular gallery in this House, and told the occupants: you could not go any further or you would go beyond the bounds of your prerogative. So far as the Senate was concerned the eyes of the people of Canada have been upon that body, their action has aroused the enthusiastic plaudits of the country, and the members of that body have done their duty in this Parliament.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. MILLS. And the eyes of the people of Canada are still upon the Senate.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. MILLS. The Senate has struck the right and proper path of duty in this matter. They have said to this Chamber: you have done right; you have obeyed the mandate of the people, which was to abolish the Dominion Franchise Act and accept the different franchises of the provinces as your franchise; that is right and proper and we will not go back of it. And they have not done so. But this they say to the representatives of Canada: Allow the people of the different provinces the right to take advantage of these franchises; we are giving you the proper machinery and proper authority to allow the people to exercise the rights which have accrued to them. The Solicitor General said that the Senate prepared this amendment with no careful thought. That is very funny coming from the Solicitor General in view of what we have had with regard to this Bill. A Bill was brought down to this House some months ago, and I would like to ask if that Bill is anything like the one we have here to-day? Has it not been cut, recut and cut again? Did it look as if very careful thought had been given on the part of the Solicitor General or Department of Justice to the preparation of the Bill? Not very long ago the Liberal member for Halifax (Mr. Russell) when speaking of the amendments that were made to the laws of Nova Scotia said that there was amendment upon amendment, that the statutes were being shingled and shangled and shungled and shongled, and so with reference to this Bill, it has been shingled and shangled and shungled and shongled until we get it in its present shape.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would like to ascertain from my hon. friend (Mr. Mills) whether he has fully made up his own mind as to what amendments should be proposed in order to make the amendments of the Senate workable.

Mr. MILLS. I am coming to that. The Solicitor General told us that the framer of the Senate amendment being secure in his seat did not give this any very careful thought, and such a criticism comes with very illgrace from the hon. the Solicitor General. Sir, the principle of the amendment is there and it is very easy to establish machinery by which it can be carried out. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fitzpatrick) held up the bugaboo of expense, but I can tell him that the expense is a very small thing compared with the injustice that would be done to the people of Manitoba, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and Prince Edward Island if this amendment be not accepted by the Commons, as it ought to be accepted. I do not wish to prolong this debate, nor do I as a rule intrude very much on the time of the House, for what I have to say I generally say right to the point. Suppose the Commons do not accept the amendment made by the Senate, then I say the Senate will be derelict to its duty and will be stultifying itself before the people of Canada if it does not persevere in its path of rectitude and right. It is a path the people of Canada will support the Senate in pursuing, and the Senate will be doing nothing more than what is consistent with its prerogative and duty if it adheres to the line it has marked out for itself.

Mr. MILLS.

Mr. MARTIN. I do not wish to occupy the time of the House, but I do express the hope that the Solicitor General will accept the amendment of the Senate so far as Prince Edward Island is concerned, and I shall state briefly why that amendment is necessary in the Bill. I know the Solicitor General had a very hard time of it to adapt this Bill to the condition of affairs in the province of Prince Edward Island as well as the various and conflicting conditions existing in all the provinces of Canada. He went one step at my suggestion to improve the Bill in relation to Prince Edward Island, and I thank him for it, but one step further is required. In Prince Edward Island we have neither voters' lists nor the ballot, and this Bill proposes to impose the ballot on the province, but to leave us without registration, and therein lies the difficulty. In consequence of our not having voters' lists, the qualification of a voter has to be decided on election day, and when a voter comes to the poll his title to vote is considered and if good he is allowed to vote. But if there are doubts about it the voter goes on the poll-books and is marked "objected to." That is all right under the system of open voting, but it is quite a different thing under the ballot, because once the ballot paper is deposited in the box, hon. gentlemen can very easily understand that it can no longer be identified—and no matter how scrupulous may be the agents in performing their duty, some voters may be passed who have no right to vote, and there is no possibility of telling for whom they voted. There is no remedy for that under this Bill, under a ballot system; but there is a remedy under the present system of open voting.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There is one observation I should have made this morning and which will come in appropriately now. The difficulty which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) mentions has no bearing whatever on the franchise, but we can very easily allow this Bill to pass, and then by an amendment to the election law, provide for the difficulty suggested by my hon. friend (Mr. Martin), and it is a difficulty. It is, however, an entirely different matter from the franchise.

Mr. MARTIN. My hon. friend (Mr. Fitzpatrick) will see that the province may not change the law, we have to take the law as it stands.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It is the Dominion election law that I refer to.

Mr. MARTIN. Let me point out the difficulty to the Solicitor General. At present in Prince Edward Island, before Declaration Day the books are looked over, and if any candidate thinks an injury is done him, by there being on the poll book a large number of votes marked "objected to," that candidate demands a scrutiny, which is not very expensive in Prince Edward Island. At the scrutiny they go through the poll book and if any of these votes marked "objected to" are proven to be of no value they are wiped off the book and the correct votes are added up. But the difficulty under this Bill is that when you have a ballot and the voting paper is dropped into the box, you do not know which way the man has voted, although the vote may be marked "objected to," and it is impossible to erase the vote though it proves to be a bad one. If the hon. gentleman will turn to the Act of 1893, section 130, where the scrutiny is provided for—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is just as you state.

Mr. MARTIN. Turning to 56 Victoria, cap. 1, sections 128, 129 and 130 of the statutes of Prince Edward Island, passed in 1893, we will find that it provides that if there is any reasonable doubt about the validity of a vote, the burden of proof that it should be rejected shall be on the party to the scrutiny on whose behalf such vote is polled. You see the difficulty at once: when the vote is by ballot, how is it possible to determine for whom the vote is polled? There is no way proposed to mark the ballot. Therefore you cannot demand a scrutiny. The result is this. Suppose that on election day, in any riding of Prince Edward Island, there are 100 votes which under the local law would be marked rejected, you cannot reach them under the Ballot Act, because under the scrutiny it is incumbent on those who call for the rejection of those votes to show which way they voted, and if they cannot prove that, they cannot go on with the scrutiny. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries says that if men make a false declaration, they may be prosecuted for perjury. But what effect has that on an election? What solace is that to the candidate? I do not say that in Prince Edward Island we have many men who do not respect the sanctity of an oath. In this respect the people of Prince Edward Island compare very well, indeed, with those of the rest of Canada; but my hon. friend knows that we have a considerable floating population there, which may be increased; and the ballot box may be stuffed by the votes of those people. There is another point in regard to this. In the province of Prince Edward Island we have open voting. How is this Parliament going to enforce on that province a ballot? Are the people of Prince Edward Island to be coerced?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. You have not open voting under the Franchise Act.

Mr. MARTIN. Yes, in our province we have open voting, and this law forces the ballot on the province. I do not object to that, if the provision is made in this Bill for the change. This is a very serious objection. I notice that the Solicitor General has not given any reason in his notice of motion why the amendments proposed by the Senate in the case of Prince Edward Island should be disagreed to. The reasons he has given do not at all apply to Prince Edward Island. I do not think there is any principle at stake in this amendment; it is all a matter of detail. The only plea that can be set up against it is that in the case of the few votes that are marked rejected, it may be found out which way they voted. That can only be found out in case of a scrutiny. If there is no scrutiny, those votes are just as secret as any votes in the province of Ontario. I do not think there is any hardship in this. I think my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries acknowledged that an amendment of this kind is required. I understood him to say that this provision in regard to marking the ballots when they are objected to, was one which he would not seriously oppose. Why not leave open voting in Prince Edward Island as it is to-day? If that were done, this provision which we asked for would not be required at all. But if you compel Prince Edward Island to adopt the ballot system, and if you want a pure election and a true indication of the vote in Prince Edward Island, you must introduce into this Bill something on the lines proposed by the Senate. In that, there is no principle involved. It is only providing for the change adopted in this Bill by introducing vote by ballot in Prince Edward Island. I think the difficulty is a serious one. I think the Minister of Marine appreciates it when he suggests that it will be sufficient in cases of this kind to prosecute for perjury the man who improperly takes the oath. It shows the weakness of his case. Does the hon. Minister mean to say for one moment that if a man is robbed of his seat because certain votes have been polled against him by persons who have no votes at all, it is any consolation or compensation to him to know that those who so voted may be prosecuted for perjury? When he sets up that plea, the hon. gentleman acknowledges that this difficulty exists. I hoped that the Solicitor General, with his usual goodness, would have adopted this amendment and made the Bill workable so far as Prince Edward Island is concerned.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is no doubt that there is a very serious difficulty in the application of this Bill to Prince Edward Island, and the question we had to determine was the choice between two evils—whether it was better to pass the Bill as it left this House, and leave it open to the serious objection which the hon. gentleman has pointed out, that if a man chooses to perjure himself he may get in a bad vote, or whether we were prepared to adopt the amendment which destroys the secrecy of the ballot. I confess that my mind wavered for a long time as to which was the best to do. When I came to consider the fact, I found that the objection, though theoretically a strong one, is practically a weak one. I have been for the last twenty-five years in active political life in Prince Edward Island. The hon. gentleman talks about the value of a scrutiny. To my knowledge there has only been one scrutiny in Prince Edward Island in twenty-five years, and that one proved abortive.

Mr. MARTIN. Will the hon. gentleman allow me? Will he tell me the date when that scrutiny was held?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. In 1879 or 1880.

Mr. MARTIN. Does the hon. gentleman refer to local politics?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN. Is he aware that there was a scrutiny after the last general election?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, I was not. The only one I have any knowledge of is the one I have just mentioned, and I cited it to show that the law, as it stands now, is an excellent law and works well, there are no bad votes forced or put in at an election.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Perhaps the fact that you have a law may prevent it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Why amend it? The people vote in their own little districts. It is an agricultural community almost entirely. Every man is known in a polling district, and it is known whether he has a vote or not, and when he comes to the poll, he will not take a false oath in the presence of his neighbours. My hon. friend will admit that outside the cities, the evil is reduced to a minimum. If this amendment were adopted, it would put a tremendous power in the hands of the Government. Every Dominion employee on the railway would go to the polls knowing that the Minister of the day could ascertain how he voted. All you would have to do would be to say "I object," then the ballot is numbered, a corresponding number is put in the ballot book, and the agent and deputy returning officer, when they count the ballots, see the corresponding number in the poll book and know how the men objected to voted.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is the same ballot we have in Ontario, and you call it sacred.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am not very strong against that, my mind wavered for a long time, but I am pointing out the disadvantages, and if I wanted to take advantage of my official position, I think I would rather accept the amendment. But I wish to point out that inasmuch as there never has been any difficulty experienced in 25 or 30 years of the working of the law, and inasmuch as the provisions giving the right to file an election petition and ask for a scrutiny are very rarely acted upon, Parliament is quite safe in trying the application of the provincial law as it exists without amendment. The adoption of the amendment will entirely destroy the secrecy of the ballot, and I think the hon. Solicitor General has thrown out a suggestion which I would ask my hon. friend to consider. My mind is not prejudiced one way or the other. It is my interest as well as his to have an election law fair, and every provision made against having bad votes polled. I know that I shall lose largely if bad votes are allowed to get in. In Charlottetown I have always found the bad votes worked against the party to which I belonged. If the hon. gentleman will think the matter over and determine that an amendment to the election law is desirable, we can get together and agree upon such a measure, next session or afterwards, which would meet the difficulty I acknowledge does exist, but I am afraid that an attempt to meet it in this Bill will, if carried out, have very prejudicial effects, because the destruction of the secrecy of the ballot would destroy the whole civil service vote in the island.

Mr. MARTIN. Does the hon. gentleman not know that the same difficulty exists in the Ontario law? The ballots are numbered, as we proposed to number the ballots here. If that be the case, why does the hon. gentleman make this objection?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I understand that in Ontario they have no Government railways.

Mr. MARTIN. In Ontario every ballot is numbered, but here it is only required to number those objected to.

Mr. DAVIN. Before the motion is carried, I wish to say a few words. My hon. friend the Solicitor General laid down the proposition that the Senators had gone beyond the scope of their functions in interfering with this portion of the Bill, and I asked him why. He said that if I could control my impatience for a short time he would tell me. I listened with the greatest attention to what he said, and although he got eloquent, discursive, argumentative and reminiscent, he never told us how the Senate had gone beyond the scope of its proper functions. He went on to say that from 1867 to 1885, the franchise which this Bill seeks to introduce existed in Canada as the Dominion franchise. He then referred to the Franchise Act of 1885, and he said that in 1887, 1892 and 1896 the reform of the franchise was the chief plank in the platform of the Liberal party. He said it was the chief plank. I shall not split hairs with him on that point, but of course we all know that it was not the chief plank. But I want to ask him if the Senate is seized of the planks of the Liberal party in any way, or of any party, from year to year. If it is not, that can in no way bear on the question as to the scope of the duties of the Senate. He then referred to the fact that in 1891 a Bill was introduced. And he dwelt upon the fact, or the supposed fact, that this Bill was intended to return to the people the control of their franchise.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The control of the making of the lists.

Mr. DAVIN. Exactly. Now, in regard to that, the hon. gentleman knows well that in Manitoba our complaint is that the registration clerk deprives the people of the control of their own lists, and what we wanted was an effective appeal against the depriving of the people of Manitoba of the control of their own lists. He then took up the amendment, and said that in the House of Commons this amendment was rejected, and that it was inserted by the Senate for the purpose of wrecking the Bill. And he refers to the fact that some words that fell from this side had had a construction put upon them by himself and others. He went on to say that if the amendment were adopted, it would destroy the Bill, that the Bill would become inoperative, and then he went into a discussion, which I shall deal with very briefly, of the character of the amendment.

Now, I have reviewed the hon. gentleman's speech, and I ask: Did he deal at all with the only question that is really of importance here to-day? This Bill will, no doubt, be adopted on division. We are not powerful enough on this side to prevent it passing. But, Sir, a most serious thing has happened. The course taken by the hon. gentleman and by the Government of which he is a member, the form in which he puts their request to this House to refuse assent to the Senate's amendment is a greater offence than the Bill itself. It is an offence against the constitution.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. DAVIN. Yes. They ask us to register in this Parliament a proposition that is opposed to the well-understood principles of the British constitution.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. DAVIN. I see that such great constitutional authorities and parliamentarians as my hon. friend from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) dissent. I have a great respect for the hon. gentleman's opinion; he has been a long time in this House. But I say here that the assertion embodied in this proposal is one of the greatest offences against the constitution of this country that has been committed by this Government, and that is saying a great deal. Now, it is important that there should be no mistake about this. Is it to be supposed, for instance, that the Senate had no authority, as asserted here, and as asserted by the hon. gentleman in his speech, to follow the course it did? Here is what we read in the reasons for refusing to agree to the Senate amendment:

That the passage of the amendment by the Senate after its rejection by the House of Commons is inconsistent with the undoubted right and privilege of this House to determine the principles of the franchise under which its members are elected.

Now, Sir, you observe that the proposition that is stated there is that the Senate has no right whatever to interfere with the principles of the franchise for this House. It does not assert that the Senate has not a right to propose an amendment if it had been proposed in this House and rejected—

Mr. MCGREGOR. We can reject it, too.

Mr. DAVIN. I do not see the bearing of my hon. friend's remarks on what I have said; but I will try to ponder it as I go on, and if it has any bearing upon the question, I will deal with it. The assertion is not that if this House rejected this amendment, and an identical amendment is proposed and passed by the Senate, that is beyond the scope of the Senate's right. What it asserts is that in regard to every Bill dealing with the franchise, the Senate has no right to reject it or alter any portion of it vitally. It cannot mean that there must be no amendments by the Senate, because the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fitzpatrick) is accepting amendments proposed by Mr. Mills, the leader of the Senate.

Now, Mr. Gladstone in 1884, when the Representation of the People Bill was before the House of Lords, referred to a speech that Lord Salisbury was supposed to have made:

I find that in a speech of Lord Salisbury, I rather think in the papers of to-day, there is the following passage:—"The House of Lords has a right to say: 'We do not approve of the measure you bring forward; if you like to accept its rejection, well and good; if you object to its rejection, your remedy is to go to the people.' That I take to imply that the Bill has been rejected."

Mr. Gladstone's speech is found in the earlier portion of volume 291 of the "Hansard." And you will find in the whole course of Mr. Gladstone's speech, the question he deals with is, whether the Bill had been rejected. He does not at all assail the position taken by Lord Salisbury. What Lord Salisbury says is worth reading as bearing on this general question, which is the only thing I care about. This amendment is sure to be carried, but it is important that we should not allow it to receive the assent of this House without protesting against it as a violation of the constitution. Lord Salisbury calls attention to what Mr. Gladstone says :

That seems a very captious criticism, and although I do not ordinarily take any notice of misconstruction of things that I say, I think that if the Prime Minister condescends to misunderstand you, you are bound, as a matter of respect, to correct him. What I wished to point out is, that I was speaking, when I used those words--as any one who will consult the speech will see--of the general constitutional rule affecting the action of the House of Lords upon the question of dissolution, and it was impossible for me to state it in more limited terms than I did. As a general rule, it is perfectly true that the House of Lords has a right to say: "We do not approve the measure you bring forward. If you like to accept its rejection, well and good; if you object to its rejection,--"

That is, the rejection of the Representation of the People Bill. And what could an Upper Chamber do more diametrically opposed to the reasoning of the hon. and learned Solicitor General than by absolutely rejecting a measure that is passed by the Lower House providing for its representation?

If you object to its rejection, your remedy is to go to the people. But in saying that I did not mean, nor does it necessarily follow, that in every particular case coming under that general rule the statement would require to be in equally large terms. The general rule is necessarily larger than the particular instance. What happened in this particular instance was, that we did not reject the measure, which rejection had for its effect that the Bill could not pass until certain necessary and supplementary legislation had been added to it. But what I wish to point out is that I was discussing the general rule.

And the general rule, therefore, includes the proposition that the Representation of the People Bill passed by the Lower House could be absolutely rejected by the Upper Chamber, and that as the strongest thing that can be done with regard to it.

Now I come to the criticism made on this amendment by the Solicitor General. He showed himself a skilful advocate, because the course he was going to take in regard to this amendment was as untenable as the position he takes on the larger issue I have just dealt with. He says this amendment showed want of consideration on the part of the Senate. Suppose it did. If the amendment as a whole is a good one, as I believe in his heart the Solicitor General thinks it to be, would that be a reason for rejecting it? All that is required is a mere verbal amendment. What did he say in regard to this clause 10a, which is the chief clause to be dealt with, which gives an appeal to a judge? I will quote that part of it:

Notwithstanding anything in this Act, or in any Act heretofore enacted or hereafter to be enacted by the legislature of any province, there shall be in the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Manitoba, for the purpose of revising and amending the voters' lists to be used in the election of members for the House of Commons, an appeal from said lists as prepared by the registration clerk and revisers to the respective judges of the county courts.

The hon. gentleman made this criticism: This is framed as if the promoter did not know there were appeals in Manitoba, that an appeal was provided to the revision court presided over, it might be, by a county court judge, or a revising barrister. Somebody said, and I thought the hon. gentleman adopted the suggestion, that there might actually be two appeals going on, that there might be an appeal to a county court judge, and there might be an appeal in fact under this clause, and also under the Act as it exists at the present time.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Quite right.

Mr. DAVIN. Now, what is the remedy? Suppose that clause is a good clause, what is the remedy for that part of the Bill but to put in three or four words, such as these: "An appeal from said lists as prepared by the registration clerks and revisers," and then add in the words: "and finally settled by the proper officers." That would fix it; there could then be only an appeal from the list as finally revised under the Manitoba law at present. In the next place the hon. gentleman criticised severely the close of the first sentence in the second paragraph:

Such appeal may be at the instance of any voter or person entitled to be a voter in the polling divisions, the voters' list for which is appealed from, on all or any of the following grounds, viz.: that the names of voters are through inadvertence or otherwise omitted from voters' lists--

That would be to put names on.

---or wrongly stated therein,---

That would be to exclude names.

---or otherwise omitted from voters' lists or wrongly stated therein, * * * and shall be made to the judge of the county court at any time within twenty days after the voters' list as first made up shall be filed with the officer who under the law of the province has the custody of the same, and notice of such appeal shall be given in form "C" in the schedule hereunto annexed.

Now, how is the notice of appeal to be given? First, by posting the same up at least in three public places within the polling division; next, by publishing the same for at least ten days previously to such appeal in some newspaper published in the county and circulated in the polling division, and if no newspaper is published in the county, then in a newspaper published in the nearest county. So there you have three guarantees that notice shall be given to the person whose name is appealed against, that there is an appeal to the county court judge to strike his name off the list. But there is a further guarantee that he shall be informed, according to this provision, and this is the provision that excited the exuberant ridicule of my hon. friend :

Provided that in the case of an application to strike off names from the voters' list, such notice shall be mailed duly registered with postage prepaid, at least one week previous to such appeal, to the address of such person or persons, if known to the appellant

My hon. friend became eloquent in his ridicule of the words : " if known to the appellant." But what is the meaning of it ? Would the hon. gentleman have put in : " if unknown to the appellant " ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I would have taken care to understand something about the provision of the law in similar cases, and I would have adopted the old Franchise Act. That would have shown some care.

Mr. DAVIN. Exactly. What would be easier than to make a verbal amendment ? Everybody knows that in every county in Canada there would be little difficulty in finding out the address of the appellant. But suppose his address was not known. Notice of appeal twenty days beforehand has been posted up in three public places, has been published in a newspaper, and is it to be supposed that there would not be sufficient guarantee for his receiving notice of appeal ? I have shown, therefore, that the hon. gentleman never dealt with the real question at issue, the constitutional power of the Senate of Canada, the Second Chamber. I have shown that he never dealt with the vital principle of that clause, but contented himself with a verbal criticism of the first and second portions of it. If I am right in that assumption, I am afraid the reason the hon. gentleman took that course was because he already knows well that the amendment is a reasonable amendment and should be adopted by this House, and would have been adopted if the best minds on the other side had had their way. It would have been adopted if the Solicitor General himself had had his way. I think we had a kind of half opinion expressed by the Solicitor General to the effect that an appeal was desirable, and the Minister of the Interior said an appeal was desirable, but that the Government did not want it. I rose simply to enter my protest against the proposition that is levied at the very constitution under which we live, and which asks this House to stultify itself by giving a reason larger than is necessary for disagreeing with the amendments of the Senate. And I also rose to point out that the Solicitor General found it necessary to stoop to verbal criticism of the principal amendment in order to justify the course of the Government and in order to conceal from this House and the public that he was not grappling with the real issue, and the hon. gentleman was compelled to make a stump speech from his place in this House in order to cover up the position of the Government.

Amendments 2, 4, 5, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11 were disagreed to.

Amendment concurred in on division.

PAYMENT OF GRANTS FOR CONSTRUCTION OF PUBLIC WORKS.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair) moved second reading of Bill (No. 161) respecting the payment of grants in aid of the construction of public works.

Mr. HAGGART. I suppose the hon. gentleman only intends to apply this Bill to the Crow's Nest Pass road and the Grand Trunk Railway bridge at Montreal.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have only those two works in my mind at the present time.

Mr. FOSTER. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will amend the Bill in that direction ; otherwise it will be a general Bill.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think I can do that.

Mr. FOSTER. Then the assertion has no value so far as legislation is concerned, for it only indicates the present intention of the Minister. I think it would be better to limit the Bill at present, and if the hon. gentleman next session desires to make the Bill more general, he can come down with another proposition.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have no other work in my mind at the present time.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and the House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 2,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I move the following subsection be added :

This Act shall only apply to contracts made with the Grand Trunk Railway in aid of the Victoria Bridge, and with the Canadian Pacific Railway in aid of the construction of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway.

Amendment agreed to.

Bill, as amended, reported, and read the third time and passed.

MANITOBA SCHOOL FUND—PAYMENT BY DOMINION GOVERNMENT.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved second reading of Bill (No. 168) respecting the Manitoba School Fund.

Mr. FOSTER. Would my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) give the figures in regard to the school expenditure ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The legislative grant for a period of five years, beginning with 1892, of expenditure in Manitoba for school purposes, is as follows :—

1892.....	$127,436 93
1893.....	126,968 49
1894.....	140,562 68
1895.....	152,386 54
1896.....	165,094 88

The municipal taxation for the same period of five years was as follows :—

1892.....	$262,297
1893.....	329,562
1894.....	354,493
1895.....	481,828
1896.....	472,039

Mr. FOSTER. I do not intend to detain the House for more than five or ten minutes, but I would be loathe to see this pass without stating my objection to it as briefly as is consistent with any degree of clearness. Differing from some hon. gentlemen on the other side, I cannot help but look at this as a matter of trust or endowment. I am not going into the history of what preceded and which has some relation to this matter, and if it were fully gone into, the contemporary and antecedent history of the time would, I think, add some weight to the argument of those who consider that this was a trust undertaken by the Dominion Government, not simply for the provincial administration which might for the time being be in power in the province of Manitoba, but a trust for the inhabitants of Manitoba; those who at the time were inhabitants, and those who should become its inhabitants in the future. Looked at in that light, it seems to be a grave matter for the Government at the present time to practically destroy that trust, because when they assume, on the slight grounds they have given, to take $300,000 of a trust fund which at present amounts to $475,000, they deplete the fund as it at present exists of the greater part of its capital, and they establish the principle that whenever they please they can come to Parliament and make an allocation of the capital of this fund to the consolidated fund of the province. I say, that if we are to go so far as to make an absolute allocation without stipulation for repayment or anything of the kind of a portion or the whole of the capital fund, we can only do it, it seems to me, on the strongest of guarantees that the money which was so allocated should be devoted to nothing else than to the interests of the public schools of the province. I asked for these statistics from my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) because I wished to show that at present there is no claim, I believe, on the part of the Manitoba Government that this $300,000 is needed for and will be devoted to school purposes, nor, as shown by the appropriations that have been made is there any very large increase in the appropriations which would go at all to offset the amount of money which is being set apart to the consolidated fund of Manitoba by this Government. There has been nothing more than a gradual, and, I must say, a very gradual and a very slight increase in the legislative grant for educational purposes in the province of Manitoba compared with the increase in population, which is fairly rapid in that province. Take, for instance, the last three years, and we find that the amount given by legislative grants for school purposes in Manitoba in 1894 was $140,562; in 1895, $152,386, and in 1896, $165,094. There was, therefore, an increase of twelve or thirteen thousand dollars a year in the legislative grant, and that is an increase which is not, I imagine, as great as the increase in the population. It is certainly not as great as the increase in the school population taken by percentages, as I have it before me in this statement. Therefore, it is clear to me, and I think the House understands, that this $300,000 of the capital sum of this endowment is not required to be devoted either to recoup an abnormal increase in the legislative grant towards education, nor for the purpose of using it this year or the succeeding year for public school education. The fact is that the increase in the education grant in Manitoba is not in percentage equal to the increase in the school population, and the amount of $300,000 which is being granted is to go into the consolidated fund of the province of Manitoba to be used for roads and bridges, for railway subsidies, or for any of the purposes which fall under the administration of the Government. Now, it does seem to me that you are doing two things. In the first place, you are breaking the trust which was made by the means which have been mentioned, a trust which was made for high and laudable purposes. Why, Sir, if we take some of the western states of the Union, we will find that there has been no system more popular and more conducive of great benefit in the educational point of view than the system which commenced some twenty or twenty-five years ago, that when a state was new and had public lands, of setting apart a portion of the domain which was to be held as a trust for education; in some cases, for the purpose of higher education and in others for the purpose of common or public education. And as the resources of the state were developed, as the population increased, as values rose, this part of the public domain which was set apart increased in value until these states had large funds out of which they have equipped great educational institutions of the higher kind, colleges and universities, and in some cases that formed a permanent fund which is largely lightening the taxation of the people in keeping up their schools, or what is better, supplementing that taxation in a more liberal manner than possibly could have been done by the ability of the people to pay for these institutions. I think it was something of this same sort that entered into the minds of our legislators at the time when, looking out upon Manitoba, large in extent, with valuable public lands, they set apart, by solemn enactment, for the future population of the province of Manitoba this area of the public lands to make sure, in all the strife for public improvements, in all the eagerness for public works which is born out of the necessities of the time and the race for progress in a new province, that the interests of education should be absolutely provided for, in so far that out of the public domain there should be kept an inviolable part which should be from time to time turned into funds, the interest of these funds, on fair and reasonable and safe investment, to be a subvention, year by year, for these purposes. I consider, Sir, that the province of Manitoba has been immeasurably helped by the very fact that there was such a trust and endowment as that; and I apprehend that immigrants, seeking a new home, have found this to be one of the attractions of Manitoba; for they have said to themselves: In the future out of these valuable public lands, there will be sufficient revenue to make it certain beyond all shadow of doubt that the most progressive system of education shall be generously and abundantly sustained in that province. And what more powerful attraction is there to large classes of an immigrating population than to be assured that in the country to which they go, and where their children and grandchildren's lot shall be cast, there shall be that public school education which they often missed in the countries from which they come. Now, there is not the least doubt about it, this application and this grant have arisen out of the political necessities of the two Governments—out of the political necessity, we will say, of the Manitoba Government, leaving out of the consideration this Government for the time being. Funds are hard to be got, expenditures are high, and are being called for more and more year by year; and pressure is brought upon this Government to make up the deficiency of funds, if need be, by taking away from this available capital fund $200,000 or $300,000, to be paid into their treasury and so tide their general financial needs along for a short time. What will happen again? The fund is added to year by year by sales, we will hope by profitable sales; but the temptation is still there. Provincial governments are proverbially governments which spend up to and beyond the limit of proper expenditure. The pressure upon them is strong for needed improvements, and for other improvements which might well be deferred for a time. But that pressure upon a provincial government is always steady and strong, and pushes them to the very verge of their resources, either to borrow or to commute, as is being done in this case, the funds of a trust into the use of present financial necessities. Once the door is open, once they find a Government to accede to their demand, what is easier, when two or three thousand dollars is wanted at any time in the future, than to bring political pressure to bear, and come to this Government with a precedent established, and ask for another slice of the capital of that trust or endowment. The way is open to them, and if this legislation is passed, I for my part bid farewell—with a certainty that that farewell is perfectly appropriate—to any stable and considerable fund ever being allowed to remain for the future in the province of Manitoba. Once the door is open, once the pressure brings $300,000, the door remains open, the pressure can be applied again; from time to time it will be applied; and the result will be that the fund will always, from time to time, be drawn upon to provide for the financial necessities of the province. How much better it would have been, Sir, if that fund could have been kept intact; and in the course of ten or twelve years that province would have had for its public school education probably a subvention of $100,000 per year, mounting gradually up, as these lands increased in value; and this would have been not only a benefit to the public school system of the province at large, but one of the greatest advertisements for the province of Manitoba which it could possibly have had. Ultimately out of that endowment, if it could have been kept intact and well managed, I believe the whole public school expense of the province of Manitoba could have been sufficiently provided for. Suppose that $15,000,000 had ultimately been secured out of the sale of those lands, the interest on that sum well invested, would have gone a long way to provide, under a certain and stable school system, for the public school instruction of the people of Manitoba. It is idle to say that because an advance was made for a limited time—an advance which was repaid, which must have been repaid, the money for repaying which was from year to year in the hands of the Government here which made the advance and called for the repayment—I say it is idle to say that an advance is any ground for an absolute allocation of a portion of the capital fund.

Mr. BLAIR.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am not going to weary the House with a long argument. I merely state my grounds. I look upon this fund as a trust, as a high and benevolent trust; and I look upon this legislation as destroying the purpose of that fund, and therefore I am opposed to it. The Government, of course, have made up their minds. They propose to put it through. I do not think it will be the best piece of legislation by any means which they have put through, and that is not saying much of their legislation if we take the samples that we have had this year.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has repeated in brief the arguments which were advanced by others in the course of the debate at another stage, and therefore it would be of no advantage for us to have any protracted debate at the present time. Nevertheless, I may be permitted in a few words, to reply to what he has said. So far as the trust funds are concerned, we went over that subject very fully before. Surely, it will not be denied that if this Parliament had power to create the trust fund, it has power to change the terms of the fund, in order better to carry out the purposes for which it was designed. It was a matter between the Government of Canada and the Government of Manitoba. They were the two parties to the trust, because the two Governments must be held to represent the peoples of the two communities, the Dominion on the one hand and the province on the other, and if the two parties to the trust are satisfied to change its terms, I fail to see how anybody can say there has been anything that can be described as a breach of trust.

Then the hon. gentleman says we are establishing a dangerous precedent. I do not see that we need be very much alarmed by the precedent. My hon. friend opposite established it some years ago, and it has not brought any danger in its train. But my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) says there is a difference. He says that they only gave an advance and that we are giving the money. Well, I venture to say that the province of Manitoba would be just as well pleased if we called this an advance. The only difference between the two positions is this, that hon. gentlemen opposite paid the money to the province of Manitoba when they did not have it, and we pay it when we have it, but in both cases, it is a charge on the same fund. I do not understand what my hon. friend means by his attempt to draw a distinction between the payment of money in this case and the payment by the late Government—

Mr. FOSTER. Surely he sees the difference between a loan and a gift.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is no gift. If the amount paid by the late

Mr. FOSTER.

Government were a loan, then it should have been repaid by the Government of Manitoba. Can he say that the Manitoba Government ever paid a cent in return? It was an advance from a trust fund to be charged against the accumulation of this trust fund, and the Manitoba Government never paid a cent in return.

Mr. FOSTER. It amounted to the same thing, if instead of repayment being made by them this amount was kept back from what would become due them.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman was aware that moneys would arise in a future day from the sales of these lands, and knowing that, his Government made an advance on account of future receipts. We simply pay out a portion of the moneys we hold. We do not make any advance but simply pay out a portion of the moneys we have in hand. The hon. gentleman passed through Parliament Acts by which he took authority to pay the province of Manitoba $40,000. That was the statutory provision, and out of that he paid $30,000 altogether, I think. That became a charge upon this fund, and the situation is just this. If that loan or that advance had never been made, the province of Manitoba would have $30,000 more in the trust fund besides the interest thereon to-day. Therefore, as a matter of precedent and argument, there is no distinction whatever between the two cases, with this exception, that the late Government advanced the money when they did not have it, and we are simply giving it when we have it to the credit of the province. We are giving a little more than they gave, but from the standpoint of precedent and principle, the amount does not affect the question.

The only other point is the suggestion which ran through the debates on the other side, that we are giving up the whole fund. We are simply doing what the late Government did, giving a very small amount of a fund which will ultimately reach many millions. We are giving this amount out of a fund which will reach, in all probability, to $15,000,000. Out of that fund they took authority to pay $40,000 and we are taking authority to give $300,000. The purpose in both cases was to assist Manitoba in its earlier days when its needs of educational help are greater than they will be in the future. Therefore the precedent is that which the hon. gentleman established, and there is not the slightest danger when we look to the fact that after paying the moderate sum provided by this Bill, there will be still a considerable sum to the credit of Manitoba and also a vast tract of land, the value of which, as it accumulates in future years, can only be counted by millions.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. The hon. Finance Minister wants to establish a parity between the advance made a few years ago by the late Government and the advance he proposes to-day to make to the province of Manitoba out of the school fund. It is true that at that time we asked for assistance from the Federal Government; but there was then no fund, and we merely asked for a loan in order to help us to carry out our educational system. But this loan, of course, to be taken from the money that would accrue to the province in the future. It was to be taken out of the revenues accruing to the province from the school lands, and was simply an advance on the interest account. These gentlemen, however, charge their advance against capital account. The interest has been accruing for years and the province never claimed it, because they knew that they were indebted for the advance of $30,000 which they had already received. This Government, however, instead of charging that $30,000 against the $78,000 interest which has accrued, placed the full amount of interest to the credit of Manitoba and held this advance as a charge against capital. To-day we are not asked to advance any money out of the interest account but out of the capital account. That is what makes the difference between the two situations—that of the former Government and the position taken by the Government of to-day. We object to the capital account being interfered with. With regard to the interest, if the Government chose to ask us to advance $300,000 to the province of Manitoba, to be deducted from the revenues that will accrue from the capital account, as soon as the revenue reaches that amount of $300,000, there could be no objection to that.

Mr. FOSTER. And to be devoted to educational purposes.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Certainly. Instead of doing that, however, we are now giving this to Manitoba, not out of the revenues to be derived from that fund, but out of the capital itself, and you will see that next year the North-west Territories will come down and ask for their share of the school fund, and it will not be long before this Parliament will be overwhelmed with applications, and in the end part with the lands and the whole fund that was created and should be respected and kept as a permanent fund for the purposes of education.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman is entirely wrong when he says that the first advance was to be repaid out of the interest only. The Act, section 2, chapter 13 of the statutes of 1878, distinctly says:

The said sums may be so advanced out of any unappropriated moneys forming part of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada, and shall be repaid to the said fund with interest at the rate of five per cent per annum out of the first proceeds of sale of the lands mentioned in the preamble.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 169) respecting the Province of Manitoba Debt Account.

POST OFFICE ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 167) to further amend the Post Office Act, was read the second time, considered in committee, amended and reported.
Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. QUINN. Before this amendment is agreed to, I wish to ask the Postmaster General why it is that the letter carriers in Montreal have not received any vacation during the last couple of years? I would ask also if it is the intention to give them a vacation this year?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Perhaps, if there is to be a discussion on this point, it would more properly come up in Supply; but I have no objection to answering my hon. friend (Mr. Quinn). The letter carriers have their statutory rights, and I am not aware that they have been deprived of them. If they have, and my hon. friend (Mr. Quinn) will give me particulars, I will see to it that it does not happen again, and I will deal with any persons who have been depriving them of their rights.

Amendment concurred in; and Bill read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC OFFICERS.

Bill (No. 170)—from the Senate—further to amend the Act respecting Public Officers, was read the second time, considered in committee and reported.

On motion for third reading.

Mr. FOSTER. I think subsection 3 needs a little consideration. This has gone through so rapidly that we have not had an opportunity to examine it.

The Governor in Council may from time to time make regulations for the establishment and maintenance of a fund to be derived from the salaries or pay of persons concerned, wherewith to make good to the Crown any loss sustained by reason of the failure of any person to give security as aforesaid, to duly discharge the duties of his office, trust or employment, or to duly account for public moneys entrusted to him or placed under his control.

Does that mean that you are going to ask all your civil servants to form an insurance fund out of which any damages or losses that may be sustained by reason of the insufficient security, or lack of security, should be made good? It does not seem to be optional; but it is "deducted from" salaries.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In many of the Acts applicable to the various departments there is a provision setting forth at great length the particular security of the bond to be given by each separate member of the staff from whom security is required. That is a cumbersome way of securing the Crown, or giving to the Crown proper security. Probably this Bill is framed somewhat after a Bill that was passed last session in regard to the Post Office Department. In that department it was found that we had a large number of bonds, thousands of them, and a great deal of labour is involved in keeping track of them and seeing that the premiums were paid. In order to simplify the work and ultimately to establish a fund whereby the department would be its own security, its own company, last session an Act was passed giving the department power to take one general bond, what might be called a blanket bond, from the companies, not a separate bond for each official, and in addition to that, power was given to establish a fund by way of assessment. That fund and that assessment take the place in my department of the security that was formerly given by an individual bond.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. According to the practice in banks.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, we have begun the system in the Post Office Department, and it simplifies the work very much. For example, supposing that an officer is required to give $1,000 security, instead of his giving a separate bond as now, we give his name to the company under the general bond, and he is at once insured to the extent named. But instead of naming it for say $1,000 as originally, we in my department divide up the security, putting part in the company and insuring the other part in the department by an assessment. That process simply amounts to this: That instead of having to collect two or three dollars from each insured person, sending them notice and collecting it, seeing it is paid and then transmitting it to Ottawa, Montreal or elsewhere, instead of each person being directly taxed for it, it is charged against him, a couple of dollars or so going to the credit of the general trust account, and this simplifies the work very much, it does not cost the clerk any more because it is deducted. It is to the extent he is taxed to maintain the fund that he is insured proportionately in respect to a separate bond.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not know that such legislation went through last year. That comes from rushing legislation through without even reading the different sections, which I think we ought to avoid. If I understand this rightly, if an honest clerk intends to do his duty he ought not to be made to pay an assessment for the purpose of securing or making pay for losses.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is only intended to apply to cases where security is properly required. Wherever to-day an officer ought to give a bond, he shall continue to give security, but instead of being a separate bond as heretofore, it may be as in the first part of this Bill, under one general bond given by a company, and with a blanket policy. That is, the security may be divided, partly being covered by the company's general bond, and partly by his having contributed to the general fund.

Mr. FOSTER. It is confined, then, to those officers who have to give a security?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is not intended to apply to any one else. That is the understanding.

Mr. FOSTER. And secures whatever they have to give. Some will have to give $1,000 and some $10,000.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Quite so.

Mr. FOSTER. Are deductions made, then, from the salaries only of persons who have to give security and only in proportion to the amount of the security they give?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Quite so. It is quite possible to abuse it, and it might be possible to levy the assessment upon a man who did not give security. But that would be a very wrong thing for a Minister to do. But it is only those who ought to give security.

Mr. HENDERSON. Does this Bill apply to the outside service as well as to officers in the departments here?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think it does. It says the Governor in Council may pass a regulation requiring security to be given generally. My own opinion is that it is a very excellent measure. It will simplify departmental work, it will not cost the staff anything more than at present, and ultimately it will enable the Government to do its own insuring at cost price, and will be better for the staff, who to-day have to pay more than they ought, to enable the companies to keep up. It will ultimately result in their getting their security at actual cost.

Mr. HENDERSON. My impression is that the insurance companies have made a great deal of money in the past out of the Government by guaranteeing officials.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time, and passed.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE TARIFF.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). As there are one or two amendments to be made to our tariff resolutions which have been deferred to the present time, I now move:

That the order for receiving reports of Committee of Ways and Means be discharged, and the resolutions be referred back to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Motion agreed to, and the House again resolved itself into Committee of Ways and Means.

(In the Committee.)

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It will be remembered that during one of the discussions some time ago mention was made of an error which appeared to have come into the tariff legislation with respect to the item, "rubber belting," and on a careful examination being made it was ascertained that a mistake had occurred, whether a mistake in the printing or in the copying is not quite clear, but the fact remains that a mistake has been made. In the Votes and Proceedings of 1897, page 464, I find the tariff resolution is dealt with, and the item is expressed in the following words:—

India-rubber boots and shoes, rubber belting, rubber cement and all manufactures of rubber and gutta percha, n.o.p., 25 per cent ad valorem.

That appears as item 214 in the Votes and Proceedings, which will be regarded as conclusive evidence of what the House adopted. I find that the item was discussed to some extent. Hon. members particularly dwelt on rubber belting, and it was suggested that the duty be placed at 30 per cent, to which we did not agree, but the intention of the House was that the duty on that article should be 25 per cent. It appears that in transferring that item from the Votes and Proceedings to the Tariff Act the words: "rubber belting, rubber cement," were omitted, and the item appears:

India-rubber boots and shoes, and all manufactures of india-rubber and gutta percha, n.o.p., 25 per cent ad valorem.

The effect of omitting rubber belting and rubber cement was to throw rubber belting into another class, which speaks of belting not otherwise specified, and imposes a duty of 20 per cent, thus establishing a rate which did not carry out the intention of the House. What I now propose is to amend the Tariff Act by taking the words in regard to that particular item as they appear in the Votes and Proceedings, and embody them in the Tariff Act:

India-rubber belting, india-rubber boots and shoes, india-rubber cement and all manufactures of india-rubber and gutta percha, n.o.p., 25 per cent ad valorem.

Except as to sugar, which is a subject for special consideration, we do not propose to make tariff changes beyond rectifying that manifest error, which led to the intention of Parliament not being carried out.

Mr. WALLACE. I remember the discussion, and that Parliament arrived at the decision stated by the Minister of Finance. A gross injustice has been done to the manufacturers of rubber belting by the intention of Parliament not being carried out by the Act. Does the hon. gentleman propose to compensate the manufacturers in any way? The Minister of Trade and

Mr. FIELDING.

Commerce shakes his head; but an injustice has undoubtedly been done. Parliament decided that on rubber belting the duty shall be 25 per cent. Through some means that decision has been set at naught; and from the explanation of the Finance Minister rubber belting was brought under another classification. It would not have been a great stretch of authority on the part of the Government to have placed rubber belting at 25 per cent, as it was apparent that it came under other "manufactures of rubber." Such action would have been clearly justifiable, and would not have been an exercise of undue authority. An injustice has been done to the manufacturers, because I am told that the importation of rubber belting has been much larger since the Tariff Act was adopted than it had been formerly, the duties charged on it being 20 per cent.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We could hardly go so far as to provide compensation to the parties interested.

Resolution agreed to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is one other item upon which there was a discussion, and which I asked to have deferred for further consideration. It is a case in which a slight change in the wording becomes a matter of some importance. It is in relation to the duties on sugar, and I have a proposal to make now which will be regarded perhaps as a further step in the direction of Imperial preferential trade. It will be remembered that we provided by the terms of our resolutions to extend the preferential tariff to the products of the British West India Islands. It was claimed that one effect of that preference would be to create unequal conditions in the sugar trade, and that advantages would be given to the refining interests on the Atlantic coast which would not be given to the refining interests on the Pacific coast, inasmuch as the latter draw their supply of raw sugar from sections of the Empire which are not within the scope of the preferential tariff. I am inclined to think that the danger in that direction was somewhat magnified, but still in appearance it would seem to create unequal conditions, and as we think we may be able to remedy that without departing from the principle underlying our policy, but rather extending it, I have a motion to make on this subject. It was suggested by hon. gentlemen opposite that we might extend the benefits of the preferential tariff to the colonies of Queensland, Fiji and Mauritius, which might all supply sugar to the Pacific coast, but we thought the object would be better served by pursuing a somewhat different course. The proposal I have to make is that instead of admitting all the products of Queensland, the Fiji Islands and Mauritius under the preferential tariff, the proposal is that raw sugar from all portions of the British Empire shall be admitted under the terms of that tariff. That will entirely meet the claims put forward by gentlemen interested in the Pacific sugar trade, and altogether I am inclined to think that it may lead to the encouragement of trade between Canada and the Australasian colonies. At all events it will remove what seemed an inequality and to that extent it is an improvement. I beg to move, Mr. Chairman :

That the second resolution be amended by the insertion of the following as subsection 2 of the proposed new section 17 of the Customs Tariff Act of 1897 :

"Raw sugar including all sugar described in item 436 of schedule 'A' may, when imported direct from any British colony or possession, be entered for duty and taken out of warehouse for consumption in Canada at the reduced rate of duty provided in the preferential tariff."

Motion agreed to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In order that this resolution may be carried into effect, I beg to move :

That the sixth resolution be amended by striking out the words "all articles the growth, produce or manufacture of the United Kingdom or of any British colony or possession" in the first and second lines of schedule "B."

Motion agreed to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I beg to move the following amendment :

Except as herein afterwards provided, this Act shall be held to have come in force on the 6th of April of the present year, 1898.

That is the day following on which the resolutions were introduced, and this motion follows the usual practice.

Motion agreed to.

Resolutions reported, and read the second time and concurred in.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 171) to amend the Customs Tariff, 1897.

Bill (No. 172) further to amend the Inland Revenue Act.

PRIVATE BILL LEGISLATION.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Before we call it six o'clock, I wish to state that I have been approached by some members of the House who are interested in private legislation, to know whether or not the House would agree to take an hour this evening, after eight o'clock, for private Bills. Of course, this cannot be done except with the unanimous consent of the House, and I would like to ascertain the views of my hon. friend opposite upon the subject.

Mr. FOSTER. I have no objection at all ; but have we any guarantee that the hour shall not be absolutely wasted ? If so, it is a precious lot of time to take from our limited store. Last night, it seemed to be the intention of the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr Richardson) to talk out the first Bill that appeared among private Bills on the Order paper.

The PRIME MINISTER. I cannot give any guarantee.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to have the hour for private Bills, as there are some important ones on the paper ; but there is a strong objection, which I think cannot be overcome, to giving them precedence, and we shall have to take the private Bills in their order.

Mr. SPEAKER. My recollection is that of the private Bills on the paper which are undisposed of, there is only one Bill which is the subject of contest. There are four others as to which there only remains the consideration of amendments made by the Senate. Possibly a motion might be agreed to unanimously by the House to take up—

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

SUPPLY.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Public Buildings—Nova Scotia—
Halifax Drill Hall—
Revote	$20,000
New vote.....	6,000
		$26,000

Mr. FOSTER. Does this finish the Halifax drill shed ? And what will be the total cost ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). This will finish the work. The contract is for $195,000, and we now ask $6,000 for alterations, especially alterations in the roof.

Public Buildings—New Brunswick—
St. John Quarantine Station—Partridge Island—Artesian well	$1,500

Mr. FOSTER. What leads you to suppose you can get water there ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. A survey has been made, and it is estimated that water will be struck at a depth of 300 feet.

Quebec—

Montreal Post Office—To re-cover roof with copper $8,000

Mr. FOSTER. With reference to the first item, is that roof to be re-covered by contract?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. By tender and contract?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Public tender?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Quebec Custom House and Examining Warehouse—New cement sidewalks $1,400

Mr. SPROULE. What kind of sidewalk will this be?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. An asphalt sidewalk.

Mr. CLARKE. Will all this be done by contract and let by public tender?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, it is a small piece of work.

Public Buildings, Ottawa—To pay to the estate of the late Samuel Howell in full and final settlement of all claims for damages caused by reason of the flow of water from the roof of the Langevin Block on their Sparks Street property.. $600

Mr. FOSTER. What is all this?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. When the Langevin Block was erected, the property on which the water would flow was not purchased or leased. I settled one case in the face of an action. I consulted with the Department of Justice, and as we were found liable, I thought it better to settle.

Public Buildings, Ottawa—Langevin Block—Improvement to fire-proof character of the attic and roof, including steel shelving and additional vault accommodation $33,000

Mr. FOSTER. This is a very large amount.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The chief architect went over the ground very carefully with Mr. Marcotte, one of the architects of my department. As my hon. friend knows, the attic in the Langevin Block was not built habitable. Last year, after the fire in the West Block, the Department of the Interior moved into this attic. Unfortunately, and to my great surprise, the attic in the Langevin Block is not built fireproof, and if there was a fire, the roof would certainly be destroyed. The chief architect advised me that it was necessary to provide for that. I find that I can give contracts for $22,000 or $25,000 of the work to be done under this vote, which I shall be glad to do.

Mr. TARTE.

Mr. CLARKE. By public tender?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Public Buildings, Ottawa—Four new boilers in West Block..... $7,000

Mr. FOSTER. Do you get these boilers by public tender?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, we buy them at the market price. By this change, we hope to save between $2,500 and $3,000 a year. In our old boilers we used wood, but, in these we shall use coal. We estimate that a ton of coal is equal to about two cords of wood, and as the price of the ton of coal and the cord of wood is about the same, we hope to save this amount.

Public Buildings, Ottawa—New elevator in East Block..... $4,000

Mr. FOSTER. How many elevators in the East Block now?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. None.

Mr. FOSTER. Do not you think it would be wise not to have one? It is not a very high building; there are only two flights of stairs.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Pretty strong representations have been made to me on the subject—by the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) especially, I may say.

Mr. FOSTER. It is all folly.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) should not object to this; it is a small item.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not only $4,000 expenditure, but continual maintenance.

Mr. SPROULE. It will mean a couple of more men to attend to it, and they will be pensioned on the country at about $1,200 a year for the two.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Oh, no.

Rat Portage Public Building (proper site given free of cost by the municipality). $8,000

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Tenders have been called for and received. The estimated cost is about $24,000 for the whole thing, heating and everything complete.

Sarnia Public Building $5,000

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This building will be of the same kind and cost, between $20,000 and $25,000. All these contracts for public buildings are let by tender.

Major's Hill Park—To complete stone fence on Mackenzie Avenue, with iron railing thereon $3,886

Mr. SPROULE. Is that the stone fence we had so much talk about?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, that will be all this time. I will not build another.

Medicine Hat—Court House, &c., to replace court house destroyed by fire.... $6,000

Mr. SPROULE. What is the cost of that building?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This will cover the cost of the whole building. The contract was let after calling for tenders.

Vancouver Drill Hall, New Westminster District (site given free of cost)..... $20,000

Mr. SPROULE. This drill hall may turn out like the one in Halifax. What is the total cost expected to be?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will not spend more than $40,000. Last year there was an appropriation of $10,000, which was revoted this year in the main Estimates, and this amount is to go on with the work. Our plans are being prepared and tenders will be called for.

Harbours and Rivers—Nova Scotia—
Iona wharf $2,000

Mr. FOSTER. Where is Iona?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In the county of Victoria.

Ingonish, North Bay—Breakwater..... $2,000

Mr. CLARKE. Is Ingonish also in Victoria County?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

West Arichat—To complete repairs to wharf $7,000

Mr. GILLIES. What is this for?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Reballasting and placing a guard rail on the north side. We will do the work immediately.

Petit de Grat—Reconstruction of protection work and dredging..... $1,500

Mr. GILLIES. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if he proposes to construct that wharf this summer and whether by tender and contract or day's labour?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I understand that wharf can only be successfully carried out by day's labour. Part of the work is hand dredging. We are trying to make a little channel.

Mr. GILLIES. Does the hon. gentleman intend constructing that this summer?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Cow Bay—Breakwater repairs..... $500

Mr. FOSTER. How much have you spent there?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. $145,000. We are simply repairing the work. We have had to cut the work in two, so to speak, just to save the best part of it.

Mr. FOSTER. Do we get any contribution towards it?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No.

New Harbour—Breakwater $4,000

Mr. FOSTER. Where is this?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In the county of Guysborough, at the mouth of the St. Catherine River. This vote is to provide for the formation of a harbour for fishing boats.

Mr. McALISTER. Are any large vessels coming in there?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, I do not think so. It is to accommodate fishing boats. This vote is for the commencement of a work, that is if I decide to carry it on. Soon after the session I intend to go down there and inspect the place.

Mr. SPROULE. What does the engineer estimate that the whole work will cost?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot say now.

Mr. SPROULE. I think it is an extraordinary way to ask the House to vote supplies, without any plan, without estimates, and without any knowledge.

Mr. FOSTER. I think that if the Minister has not information enough as to whether he will build or not, or on what plans, it would be better to leave this over until the Minister goes down, and then he can make up his mind. It seems a rather peculiar thing to put an item of $4,000 in just because a member asks you, and then go down and see if you can find some place to spend it. That is what this amounts to. You have no plan, you do not know what you are going to build, you do not know whether you will build at all; but you do intimate to the House that $4,000 will not be the end of it. I understand that the member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) has his future fully provided for, and there is no necessity for this $4,000 as a solace to him. But on another ground, I do not think this vote is justified. The same thing came up during the late Administration, and for a long time the rule was that these votes should be reserved for harbours for commercial purposes alone. It is only of late years, and to a small extent, that the policy has gained ground of spending sums of money for mere fishing purposes outside of commerce. If the two are combined, you have a very good ground. But if you are going to spend public money for harbours for fishermen along our coast, you will have a tremendous drain on the funds. In one sense, a fisherman is just as good as a merchant; but it is plain we cannot legitimately go on to provide for fishing harbours on a large scale.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What does my hon. friend mean by the commercial aspect of the question? Works which will yield a revenue?

Mr. FOSTER. No, but for commerce particularly.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. On the Atlantic coast, while we are supplied with numerous natural harbours, there are many points where there are fishing settlements and where a small expenditure of money will make a safe anchorage and enable these people to carry on their avocation and remain in the country, whereas they would otherwise be obliged to leave. While I appreciate the spirit in which my hon. friend has spoken, deprecating that we should enter into dangerous paths, I would not like to accept the principle that we could not give these people a word of encouragement, and that we should in no case build small breakwaters which would enable them to carry on their fishing work in places which otherwise would be so much exposed that they could not continue their business. I think it is a proper expenditure of money for the encouragement of the people on our Atlantic coast, though, I grant, we might overdo it. As to the other point, it is not an uncommon principle, indeed I think it is almost necessary, that occasionally an appropriation should be made upon the representation of the member for the county, the Minister taking care, however, that before he undertakes to make an actual expenditure he causes plans and specifications to be made which will be a sufficient protection to him. But if no appropriation is made until the Minister has sent down an engineer, I think, slow as our methods are, we would find them slower still. I would not like my hon. friend the Minister to say that no vote of money should be given until after we had had a report from the engineer. If a large sum were contemplated to be spent, then I think it would be quite correct to have specific reports from an engineer, but this is a moderate sum, and the Minister will himself inspect the locality before spending the money.

Mr. FOSTER. I am sorry that the Minister of Finance enunciates that doctrine. I do not think that has been the doctrine enunciated by Ministers of Finance heretofore.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is good doctrine, I think.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think it is good doctrine. It means that a member shall come to a Minister and say: I want money expended in my county. Well, where do you want it? I am not quite sure, but I think that at such and such a place something might be done. The Minister says: I know nothing about it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, my hon. friend misunderstood me. I have a report of my engineer. What I said was that I did not know whether his report was correct, that I did not know whether that work ought to be constructed, and that I intended to go down and see for myself.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman has engineers who could ascertain approximately what the work would cost. This is practically placing at the disposal of the Minister of Public Works an amount with which he can go to the people of the district and say: If you are pretty good to me, I will spend so much money here.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Has the hon. gentleman any report?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have a plan.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the estimated cost?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. $25,000, and that is the reason why I do not want to pledge myself to go on with the work now.

Mr. FOSTER. If we are going to build $25,000 harbours for the fishermen along the coast, they must be centrally located and constitute harbours of refuge, and to such harbours the fishermen have a right within certain limits. But every one knows that the ambition of every supporter of the Government is to have money spent in his county, and although a comparatively small expenditure might suffice, he is raised in importance according to the number of thousands of dollars put into a work in his county. $25,000 is too much money to spend on a small place like this, where there is no town, and when this work will not be utilized as a harbour of refuge for a considerable fleet of fishing vessels.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Some years ago I made a suggestion, which did not meet with a great deal of favour at that time, but which in the present mood of the ex-Finance Minister he might be disposed to support. It seems to me that sums of public money would be far better employed distributed as fishing bounties than in public works, and it would be well for the representatives of the maritime provinces to consider if this would not be a better system to pursue.

Mr. FOSTER. The amount of bounty distributed is $150,000, and with members like the hon. member for Guysborough, who now wants $25,000 expended at this point, the money would not go far to help the fishermen.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Can the Minister give any information as to the locality where the money will be spent?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is at the mouth of the St. Catherine River, in Guysborough County, a place frequented by fishermen. It is proposed to build a breakwater and improve the mouth of the river by dredging.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Is there any city, town or place of considerable importance there?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not know of any city or town near there.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Do you know the population?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is not very considerable. It is pretty largely frequented by smacks and boats.

Mr. FOSTER. How many smacks?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have not all the details.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman does not know the importance of the place, its population, or whether it is frequented by fishing vessels. All we know is that this is a little river not known outside of the county of Guysborough, and it is proposed to build a breakwater there at a cost of $25,000, according to the engineer's estimate. I would advise the hon. gentleman not to proceed with it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I would consider it not expedient to proceed with the building of a great many works of this kind costing $25,000. In nine cases out of ten, however, such works can be built at half that cost. I would not feel warranted in proceeding with the work under such conditions, and I should consider that $25,000 too large an expense to incur. While I would justify this appropriation being taken so far as its initial stage is concerned, the Minister of Public Works should cause further inquiries to be made before incurring such expenditure. My experience is that engineers are in the habit of making excessive estimates, and that they desire to construct monuments to their reputation in the shape of public works.

Mr. BERGERON. But the people have to pay for them.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. You can frequently build public works that will prove sufficiently useful for less sums than the engineer's estimate, and I am not disposed to commence public works on engineer's estimates, except those estimates have been reconsidered. I know a number of cases where on reconsideration, modified estimates have been submitted. I would not recommend, with the present information, the expenditure of $25,000 on this work, and if it is going to cost that amount, I will not ask the sum to be expended. I state frankly that I have no personal knowledge of the place, but I think from the general knowledge of the population and the country I possess that $25,000 will be a large sum, unless we have more information; and if it should be found that the work will cost so large a sum, I would not ask the Minister of Public Works to proceed with it.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Supposing this vote is granted, is the hon. gentleman going to complete the work during the present season?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Then the hon. gentleman should reduce the item.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I mean that I am not going to expend $25,000 during the present season. I am only asking for $4,000 now. I will not spend one dollar unless I see the place myself and learn how the matter stands.

Mr. CLARKE. It is evident the Minister of Public Works has not made up his mind to carry out the work, and, therefore, he should allow the matter to stand until he visits the province and looks over the ground. When this has been done, the hon. gentleman could next session ask for an appropriation.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). Some questions have been asked about the population at this particular place. Let me tell the committee that these wharfs and harbours are harbours of refuge, not for the population on land, but for the people engaged in fishing along the coast. In addition, those people along the shores are often many miles away from any railway communication, and while their friends who are more favoured are receiving the benefits of large grants to railways, subsidized by the Government, these people get nothing. It is only fair to this section of the community that a certain sum should be given in order to compensate them to some extent for the advantages their neighbours enjoy, who are more favoured by living along lines of railway.

Mr. FOSTER. That is one reason to be given, and I commend it to the judgment of the House, I will not say to the good judgment of the House. But I want to press this point, that if you are going to put into the Estimates an item for $4,000 for the commencement of a public work, and do so without obtaining any particular information, we are going to adopt a new system of voting supplies. Supply—what does it mean? What does "estimate" mean? It is something you come to the conclusion to build for certain reasons and you find how much the work is going to cost. The late Premier of the province (Mr. Fielding), who it is to be presumed knew his province well, cannot give a scrap of information about this place. The idea is that some part of Guysborough has a post office, another part a railway, and as this section has nothing $25,000 must be spent on it some way in order to heal the amour propre of the people there, and give them an idea that their member has not forgotten them.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend from Guysborough pressed that item on me very strongly.

Mr. FOSTER. No doubt.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. He represented to me that the fishermen there were badly in need of shelter, and I asked the local engineer to make an estimate and to my surprise he estimated $25,000. I will go there and ascertain if I cannot give a good harbour for a sum not exceeding $8,000 or $10,000.

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister (Mr. Tarte) has not shown that there is even need for a harbour there, but he is frank enough to confess that the only reason for asking this vote is because he was pressed to do so by the member for the county.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) was long enough a Minister to know how that is done.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, and I have been long enough a Minister to know how to withstand it.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The county of Guysborough has been represented for a great number of years by a supporter of the Liberal party, and as a result no grant of public money has reached that county.

Mr. FOSTER. Worse still.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It is absolutely necessary that at the earliest possible moment the urgent wants of that constituency which has been so long neglected shall be attended to, and that is one reason why it has been found necessary to provide these harbours in Guysborough County.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If I do not find that a useful work can be built there I shall not expend the money, and I mean every word that I say now.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. FOSTER. And your ingenuity is so great that I have not the least doubt that you will find a way to spend the money.

Mr. MORRISON. I happen to know that portion of the coast where this harbour is to be erected, and I am surprised there are not such facilities already existing there as are sought now. Quite near where this harbour is to be built is the Strait of Canso, which is one of the marine highways between the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the Atlantic Ocean, and at the entrance to the Strait of Canso is the flourishing fishing town of Arichat, one of the largest fishing stations in America. Its fishing fleet scatters all along the coast line of the county of Guysborough, and what is wanted is harbours of refuge, not at the point of departure, but at different points along the coast. There are fishing stations also further east at Main-a-dieu and Louisbourg and Scattarie, and from the time these fishing fleets leave the harbour of Arichat, if they go east there is no safe harbour except Louisbourg between Arichat and Sydney, and going west they cannot find any considerable harbour until they get to Halifax.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think my hon. friend (Mr. Morrison) is mistaken.

Mr. MORRISON. My hon. friend (Mr. Borden) may perhaps correct that. From the time you leave Arichat until you get to Halifax, there is not sufficient protection for the large fleet that is constantly sailing between these points, especially in the mackerel fishing season during the fall. Of course there are one or two places where they might by haphazard resort to, but I am surprised to see that the late Government have left this coast line so unprotected up to the present time. I suppose that north of Portland there is not such a number of vessels passing and repassing as along that coast, and knowing as we do the tempestuous character of the Atlantic, especially in the fall, any person having the slightest knowledge of the requirements for the protection of these people would not for a moment contest the necessity for a harbour of refuge at this point. I believe that money expended judiciously for the purpose of protecting these fishing vessels and the lives of those on board is money well spent indeed, and I have confidence that the Minister (Mr. Tarte) will see that there is no extravagance. There is no point along the coast of Nova Scotia that I know of which more requires to have harbours of that kind than does the coast of Guysborough.

Mr. FOSTER. Probably I can give a better reason than the hon. gentleman (Mr. Morrison) has given. I notice that the Ministers are particularly anxious that this vote should pass, and it is stated that the pressure comes from the member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser). Now, we all sympathize with the member for Guysborough. We know his many disappointments, his sadness of heart, his aimless wanderings up and down when men who have served the Liberal cause for far less time than he are preferred, and on them is put the fine linen and the scarlet while he has to walk around in corduroy.

But it is stated that the hon. member for Guysborough is to have his heart solaced in the near future, and that there is a large seat waiting for him somewhere; if it is not on the Atlantic coast, it is probably on the Pacific coast. Now, to come down to the real facts, is not what is called the fine Italian hand of the Minister of Public Works showing itself here again, in view of a possible election in the county of Guysborough? And is not the possible expenditure of $20,000 on a new harbour somewhere at the mouth of the St. Catherine River, a gentle reminder of a coming election? Perhaps that is the reason; perhaps that is the potent pressure that is brought.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Is that the way you used to do it?

Mr. FOSTER. No, but since the month of July, 1896, I have been a patient student of hon. gentlemen opposite, and I have come to the conclusion that that is very probably what is in this. Will not the Minister of Public Works take this into consideration? If it is necessary for the hon. gentleman to have a small vote for exploratory purposes let him ask that, and let him say: I will go down myself with the engineer and look over the country and come to the conclusion what ought to be done, and inform myself; so that next year when I am asked for information, I will be able to give it, and be able to explain to the House what kind of work and what expenditure should be given; and this House would vote it cheerfully.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Well, this Government does not like to lose too much time. It has been represented to this committee to-night, by men who know the place, that this part of the coast has been neglected. My hon. friend opposite has not attended to it in the past; and now that we have a Government that has its eyes open, we find that it is time that this part of the country should be recognized. At the same time, I must repeat what I said before: I do not intend spending anything like the sum that has been estimated by the engineer. I think it is only fair that this small appropriation should be voted. It would be unfair, I think, to disappoint those fishermen, who have a right to expect protection at our hands.

Mr. FOSTER. It is the big fishermen over there.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend is too suspicious. Of course, we do not forget that we have elections to carry; but I do not anticipate that this House is going to lose the valuable services of my hon. friend from Guysborough. We expect to keep him for a long time to come. He is one of our most loyal supporters, and he likes to sit in the House. My hon. friend is too suspicious altogether. There is no by-election in view there.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's). Before this item is carried, I would like to say a few words on it. It seems to me that the members of this House are not very well up in their geography. My hon. friend from New Westminster (Mr. Morrison) drew rather a pitiful picture of the coast of Nova Scotia from the Straits of Canso to Halifax; but I would venture the assertion that there is not a part of this great Dominion that is better indented with harbours than that portion of the coast. I have always understood that the county of Guysborough was particularly well off in that respect. When my hon. friend from New Westminster refers to the coast line of Cape Breton from the town of Arichat down to Scattarie, I certainly agree with him that there is no part of the lower provinces that fits out a larger number of fishermen, and there is no part of the coast on which there is less harbour accommodation than the coast of Cape Breton. If the hon. Minister was spending this money to build a harbour on the coast of Cape Breton, where one is much needed, on either the Atlantic coast or the Bay coast, I could well understand it. The very iron-bound coast of Inverness is without harbours. So far as the county of Guysborough is concerned, my impression is that it is well indented with harbours. My hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) knows very well that when looking after the people who are taking lobsters out of season, he had great difficulty in finding the poachers along that coast. Under these circumstances, I think $25,000 is a very large amount to spend on a work of that kind in that locality.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I shall not spend that.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to ask the hon. Minister how far this is from the nearest good harbour, and what is the name of the nearest harbour?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot really say.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Could the hon. gentleman tell me how far this is from Caribou Cove?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot say. I have not a map under my hand.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Does he know whether it is north or south of Canso?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot say.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will the hon. gentleman tell me which way it is from Guysborough? We do not seem to be able to find really where it is. Is my hon. friend quite sure that there is any such place?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). Yes. I can testify that there is such a place.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have heard a good deal of the harbours around that coast in connection with actions on policies of insurance on fishing vessels, and I have never heard of this harbour before. There are a good many harbours near there.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will get a map for the hon. gentleman.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not think there is anything in this vote that is remarkable. The Minister of Public Works has a right to take the statement of a representative of a county that a certain work is useful and necessary.

Mr. FOSTER. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I say that there is nothing wrong in a Minister taking a statement from a member of Parliament in whom he has confidence that a certain work in his county is necessary and desirable, and putting a moderate appropriation in the Estimates for that work, provided that the Minister, before he spends the money, has a proper investigation made by his engineer and satisfies himself that the work is going to serve a useful purpose. I am very much gratified that the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) should suppose that I know all about the province of Nova Scotia. It is not as small a province as the hon. gentleman imagines, and there are a good many harbours in it that I have not seen. The county of Guysborough is an isolated part of the province of Nova Scotia, and I have no hesitation in saying that in years past that county was not properly treated by the late Government, because it was represented by a Liberal.

It is a matter of public notoriety that a gentleman who was a candidate of the Conservative party accompanied the Minister of Public Works on his tour, and stated at a meeting in Guysborough that if the people of that constituency expected to get any public works, they must elect a supporter of the Government. But the county refused the bribe, and exercised its liberty of electing a gentleman opposed to the Government of that day; and when now there is a fair proposal to give that county the grants included in the Estimates. I do not see anything wrong in that. I am prepared to state that the representations of the member for the county, made in good faith and in the desire to serve the interests of his people, are ample justification for bringing down this vote, and the Minister of

Mr. TARTE.

Public Works has given the assurance that before one dollar of the money is expended, he will cause an examination to be made.

Mr. SPROULE. That is a most extraordinary doctrine to be laid down by a Minister of the Crown. There are 213 members of this House, and I venture to say that there is not one of them who could not find half a dozen places in his riding where, in his judgment, it would be well to spend public money; and if the Minister were so susceptible as to accept the word of every member who desired public works in his county, what would the Estimates be like? I have always regarded it as essential, when a Minister asks for a vote of public money, that, in the case of a new work, he should give the estimate of the engineer as to what it will cost, the site where it is to be erected, what it is required for, and any other information deemed necessary. Without this information, we would not be in a position to justify our voting the money. But the Minister now asks us to vote money simply because the member representing the riding recommends the expenditure. That is practically all the information he can give us. It seems to me that he has been acting on the very same principle with regard to a good many of these harbours in Nova Scotia, for I find there are forty places in the Supplementary Estimates where public money is to be spent. The aggregate expenditure is $95,900 in the Supplementaries, and $38,900 in the main Estimates. I always thought that when making up the main Estimates, works to be taken up were fully considered by the Council and the larger portion of the expenditure estimated for.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Is that your past experience?

Mr. SPROULE. I have been here a good many years, and it is the general experience in this House. It may not have been the experience of the hon. gentleman when running a provincial government.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have not been a member of this House for many years, but I have carefully followed its proceedings, and my observation is that it has been the practice of the Government to bring down considerable amounts in the Supplementary Estimates for that class of work.

Mr. SPROULE. Much larger than the main Estimates?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman cannot establish that.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In the Estimates of the Conservative party of 1896, the Supplementaries were four times as large as the main Estimates.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman is not comparing the Supplementaries with the main Estimates, but the last Supplementaries with those immediately preceding. There are forty places in Nova Scotia where there is to be an expenditure of public money. We do not know how many of these Estimates are for new work and how many are for works already begun. But it does look as though the Minister and his friends expected an election there or intended to hold general elections. Otherwise they would not propose expenditure at every place where a member supporting the Government requested public money should be expended. The hon. Minister will then come down, when an election is about to be held, and see where it is necessary, in his judgment that the money should be spent. He will tell the people, as he did at Owen Sound: You need a dry dock very badly here, and there is no doubt whatever that if you do your duty by us you may expect that the Government will do its duty by you. Then another location is picked out for a post office, and thus a direct invitation is held out by the Government to the constituency in the event of an election. The Minister will thus go touring around, finding out, in his own judgment, where it will be most profitable politically to spend public money, without consulting his engineer. We have had a sample of that kind of policy in the drill shed at Halifax, which was to have cost a reasonable sum, but which the Minister now says will cost $200,000 when finished. How are we to know that this harbour, when completed, will not cost $100,000 or $200,000, and we are justified in coming to the conclusion that it will cost more than the Minister says it will, because he cannot give us any information about it.

Take New Brunswick, what do I find there? $30,000 in the main Estimates and $41,000 in the Supplementaries. Take Prince Edward Island, I find $40,000 in the main Estimates and $40,750 in the Supplementary. In every instance the Supplementaries are higher than the main Estimates. Take the province of Quebec—$97,000 in the main Estimates and $134,000 in the Supplementaries. If the Minister expects that upon the meagre information he has given us, we are going to vote this money, he must think that we are prepared to go it blind on most of the items submitted in these Supplementaries.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am very much surprised to hear the hon. gentleman make so much opposition over a small vote to the fishermen of Nova Scotia. Why, in one single harbour of Ontario, Collingwood, we are carrying out a contract at a cost of $144,000, and because I am applying myself to the interests of some poor fishermen, my hon. friend rises in a rage. He is not fair. Each part of this country has a right to be fairly dealt with.

When I say that before going into that expenditure, I will go down myself and see that not more than $8,000 or $10,000 are spent, I think that is a sufficient guarantee.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would just remind the Minister that Collingwood harbour in Ontario, is one of those points where there is also to be a by-election shortly.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. Minister is most unfortunate in his analogy. Collingwood is one of the most important commercial towns in our country, one of its main thoroughfares both by land and water, one of the entrepôts of this country from the North-west. It has half a dozen steamship lines. There is an immense trade going in there for vessels. The hon. gentleman talks about the appropriations spent in Ontario, $234,000, and in Nova Scotia $134,000 in the main and Supplementary Estimates. Compare the importance of the two and see the difference. Collingwood is a large, enterprising town, where there is an immense trade being done, and a through trade by land and water, one of the great highways of commerce, while the other place must be a locality almost unknown, because the Minister does not know where it is and cannot find it on the map.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is unfair to say that.

Mr. SPROULE. I have every respect for the fishermen and would help them as much as any one in supplying their requirements, but I cannot justify the innovation of commencing with new work, the cost of which, when completed, the Minister cannot tell us.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I suppose my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) knows a place called Thornbury?

Mr. SPROULE. I do.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In that place, which is in the hon. gentleman's own county, about $49,000 has been spent in the harbour. It is not a very large place. Yet my hon. friend rises in a rage because I am asking for a few thousand dollars to spend on a harbour for the fishermen of Nova Scotia. I think he should be a little more moderate in his criticism.

Mr. SPROULE. When the hon. Minister speaks of the town of Thornbury, I suppose he knows that the municipality gave $15,000 toward that work, and the sum that he speaks of is the total that has been expended since confederation and even before. It is an important town where the steamers of three great lines on the Georgian Bay call. And the surrounding country is one of the richest agricultural districts in Ontario or in the Dominion. There is an immense business to be done. I have tried over and over again to get $1,000 spent for the accommodation of the fishermen of that locality—and there is quite a considerable fishing fleet—and I have never succeeded. And when the hon. Minister compares this place with a place in Nova Scotia which he is actually unable to find on the map, I may say the comparison is an odious one.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If the hon. gentleman desires to see it on the map, I have a map here and I will send it to him.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. Minister has found it at last from Belden's atlas.

Mr. CLARKE. Objection has not been taken on this side of the House because the expenditure was proposed by the Minister of Public Works in the province of Nova Scotia or in the county of Guysborough.

Mr. COPP. It seems so.

Mr. CLARKE. Nothing has been said to justify that statement. The criticism is because the hon. Minister comes here without a report from his engineers, without knowing the character of the work he is going to construct or the cost of it, and proposes that we should enter upon a work which, when completed, would cost $25,000. All that he is asked is not to press this vote at present, but to go down and see for himself, as he has not made up his mind as to the work that should be done, and then, after consulting with the engineers, let him come to the House next session with a definite plan and the House will vote the money necessary for the protection of the lives of the fishermen by the construction of a harbour of refuge.

Mr. QUINN. I do not think it at all extraordinary that the Minister of Public Works should take the stand he has taken upon this occasion. When he was driven into a corner with regard to this matter, and finding no better excuse for the expenditure of about $25,000 for this new harbour, he charges the members on this side of the House with opposing this because it happens to be in the county of Guysborough and in the province of Nova Scotia. How any Minister of the Crown can stand up in the House of Commons and make such a statement—except, of course, the Minister of Public Works—I cannot conceive. But it is quite of a piece with his whole character, and, therefore, as I say, it does not surprise me. Only the other day, we heard him, when he was advocating his pet scheme for Montreal, make the most outrageous, the most outlandish statements about men whose names are identical with the progress and commercial greatness of the city of Montreal. He, a newcomer in the city, whose name was connected with nothing of the advancement of the city and only associated with one particular thing—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I would remind the hon. gentleman (Mr. Quinn) that he is not at liberty to refer to a past debate.

Mr. SPROULE.

Mr. QUINN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I am at all out of order. I am not referring to a previous debate, but I am only showing the similarity of the stand taken by the Minister this evening and the stand taken by him the other day, and showing the absurdity of the proposition he lays down, and how unreasonable it is that, when driven in a corner, in a case in which he cannot give information—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Quinn) was discussing what was said in a past debate.

Mr. QUINN. If the Chair will pardon me, I was not.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Well, that is what I understood.

Mr. QUINN. I was simply stating that the Minister was acting now in the same way as he did the other day when he spoke of these gentlemen in Montreal. Just as he made this statement about the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) that he was opposing this vote because this work is in the county of Guysborough and in the province of Nova Scotia, so, the other day, he stated that Mr. Thompson, Mr. Ogilvie and Mr. McLennan were members of the Harbour Board in 1894 and carried through their pet scheme of Windmill Point basin for their own advantage. And yet the hon. Minister must have known that Mr. Thompson was not a member of the Harbour Commission at that time.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I did not say he was.

Mr. QUINN. The hon. Minister said so in this House. He said these men talked about speculation, but that the Windmill Point basin was built to improve their property. And yet he must have known, if he inquired into the matter, if he spoke with a calmness and caution that should characterize a Minister of the Crown, that neither Mr. Ogilvie—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Quinn) must see that he is referring to a previous debate.

Mr. QUINN. I am simply showing the similarity—

Mr. McCLEARY. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. QUINN. I was showing the similarity of the statements made by the hon. Minister the other day and those made by him to-night. If he speaks with the caution which should characterize a Minister of the Crown, he must have inquired into the truth of that statement. If not, he must have made it without having taken the trouble to ascertain the truth of it. He stated that the Windmill Point basin was built by Mr. McLennan, Mr. Ogilvie and Mr. Thompson out of the funds of the Harbour Commissioners for the purpose of benefiting their own property, and that this work cost a million dollars. If he had inquired into the matter, he must have known that none of these gentlemen owned an inch of property in that neighbourhood at the time that Windmill Point basin was started. If he did not know that, he was guilty of making a statement without having made proper inquiries. I do not speak of these things for the purpose of influencing public opinion in Montreal, because the character of these men is so well known as to be a sufficient protection against any statements made by the Minister of Public Works. But these statements go broadcast throughout the country, and the names of Mr. Ogilvie, Mr. Thompson, Mr. Andrew Allan, Mr. McLennan and others—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I rise to call the hon. gentleman's attention, for the fourth time, to the fact that the subject he is debating has nothing to do with the item before the Chair.

Mr. QUINN. I am speaking to the motion that the committee rise.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It does not make any difference. On a motion that the committee rise the hon. gentleman has not a right to discuss questions that are not debatable in the usual way. It is the same as a motion to adjourn.

Mr. QUINN. I am not discussing the question, but merely making a statement of what the Minister has said, to show—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. The hon. gentleman must confine himself to the subject under discussion.

Mr. FOSTER. I am afraid we have not insisted on that rule very carefully heretofore.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). The hon. gentleman is referring to a past debate.

Mr. FOSTER. I think, perhaps, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Quinn) took his information from the Montreal newspapers.

Mr. SPROULE. I respectfully submit that referring to a debate which took place with regard to money that we voted in this session, even though not in the present Estimates, is not referring to a past debate.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). It was not in Supply at all.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If the hon. gentleman wants to discuss that, I do not object, but I would suggest that he take some other occasion.

Mr. QUINN. If the Chair decides that I am out of order—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I have decided four times that the hon. gentleman is out of order, and I thought he understood it. The hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that he has no right to refer to a previous debate. When a question is before the Chair, and a motion is made to adjourn the debate, as has been done now by the hon. member for Welland (Mr. McCleary), or a motion is made that the committee rise, which is the same thing as a motion to adjourn, in such cases we have no right to discuss any other question than the main question.

Mr. BERGERON. I suppose you have forgotten that you yourself spoke four hours on a similar occasion in this House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. For the information of the committee I may perhaps be allowed to quote from the valuable work of Sir John Bourinot:

It is not regular to move an adjournment of debate on a question for an adjournment of the sittings of the committee to a future time; but certain motions may be made with the same effect. If it is proposed to defer the discussion of a Bill or resolution, the motion may be made "That the chairman do report progress and ask leave to sit again;" and if this motion (which is equivalent to a motion for the adjournment of the debate) be agreed to, the committee rises at once, and the chairman reports accordingly.

So it is a well settled rule that a motion for the committee to rise is the same as a motion for adjournment, and in such case an hon. member cannot go outside the main question.

Mr. SPROULE. When a motion is made that the committee rise, it would be quite proper, it seems to me, that you should submit to the House the reasons why the committee should rise.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. That is quite another thing.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. No doubt a general discussion between my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works and the hon. member for Montreal (Mr. Quinn) would give great edification and some little amusement at a more convenient season. But really if you wish to discuss the numerous items in the Supplementary Estimates, I would suggest to both hon. gentlemen that we have little enough time. Without detracting from the importance of the remarks that the hon. member for Montreal is going to make with reference to the Montreal harbour and basin, a question that was pretty well threshed out a day or two ago, and if a long discussion takes place on perfectly irrelevant matter, it must be clear that we cannot possibly discuss, as the hon. gentleman wishes to do, the items that are coming before us. Of course, I know that if hon. gentlemen opposite wish to protract the session, or to protract this particular sitting, it is in their power to do so. We are not going to bother ourselves to remain here indefinitely to-night in order to make progress with the business of the House. We are perfectly ready to remain two, or three, or four days, and discuss these items if it is the wish of our friends on the other side. I have often asked as much for myself, and I do not say that our hon. friends opposite are not quite within their right. I think my hon. friend from Montreal will see, on reflection, that he might defer his remarks until to-morrow when there will be no difficulty, in fact, we would be obliged to him, while the Senate are discussing our measures, if he would give us a little interesting lecture on the Montreal harbour.

Mr. QUINN. Simply to satisfy the Minister of Trade and Commerce, I will proceed with the debate in the manner in which I began. I was going to say, then, that the Minister had adopted to-night the very same proceedings that he did in this harbour matter. Before he made the statement that Messrs. McLennan, Ogilvie and Thompson had property at or near the Windmill basin, he ought to have known whether it was true or not. Now, I am prepared to state what I know as a fact, that these gentlemen had not one dollar's worth of property there at that time. My hon. friend the Minister also said that plan No. 6 had been abandoned.

Mr. ELLIS. I rise to a point of order. I respectfully suggest that the hon. gentleman is referring to another debate, which is contrary to the rules of the House.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I have decided that point of order four times. I regret that the hon. member declines to obey the rules of the House.

Mr. QUINN. It was simply at the request of the Minister of Trade and Commerce that I was going on. But I want to say one word in regard to the item under discussion. The Minister to-night stated, in answer to the hon. member for North Grey (Mr. Sproule) that he, the hon. member for Grey, opposed this vote simply because it was a vote for the county of Guysborough, and for the province of Nova Scotia. Well, what are the facts? The Minister was asked by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden) if he knew where this was on the map, as regards the Strait of Canso, as regards Halifax, as regards any other port in Nova Scotia, if he knew where it was, if he knew what population there was in the vicinity, if he knew how many boats went there, if he knew anything about it, even if he knew there was such a place as New Harbour, and the Minister was obliged to confess that he did not know anything about it. The only thing he did know was that it would cost in the neighbourhood of $25,000. He is asked to produce this report, he has not got it with him; yet the Minister has the temerity to stand up in this House, he, a Minister of the Crown, one of the advisers of Her Majesty—he has the temerity to stand up in this House and say to the hon. member for East Grey: The reason you oppose this is because it is for the province of Nova Scotia and the county of Guysborough. I say that is unworthy of a Minister of the Crown, and it is of a piece with his conduct in the treatment of the subjects to which I have already alluded.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the hon. Minister of Public Works had better withdraw this vote. However, I want to call attention to a few things. He is here bringing down a vote for which he has no basis at all with the exception of the pressure of a member of this House. That is the principle he is importing into the estimates that he is asking. I want to enter my protest against the doctrine enunciated by the Minister of Finance. I have no hesitation in saying that it is a most vicious doctrine, a doctrine opposed to what any Chancellor of the Exchequer in Great Britain or any Finance Minister in this country, who understands his position and feels the responsibility, would dare to enunciate on the floor of the House of Commons. What is the basis of estimates submitted to the House? That the public work is necessary, that it is known to be necessary by the Minister who proposes the vote, that he will have the information, the plan, what he proposes to expend, the probable cost of the work and the benefit of the work to submit to the House to justify the vote. Fancy a Chancellor of the Exchequer in Great Britain allowing a Minister to come down with a vote in this way, and justifying it on the broad doctrine that all you have to do in order to get the House to vote your Estimates is to have a request from a member who represents the county, with the statement of that member that the work is one of necessity. Therefore, you are going to make Estimates on the request of members of Parliament. It is a vicious doctrine, and I am sorry that any Finance Minister has ever boldly proclaimed that doctrine in this House. The Minister of Trade and Commerce will not back that doctrine to-night. All I want to do is to emphasize it and let it go to the country. It is on a par with the statement made by the Finance Minister with respect to the big post office in the little town of Shelburne, that as public money had not been expended there, it was perfectly right to ask that some money should be expended. He made that declaration entirely irrespective of the merits.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No.

Mr. FOSTER. That statement is put forward to-night by implication and argument. I want to emphasize the point, that the hon. Minister of Public Works has not the remotest estimate of the cost of this work and as to what is proposed to be done, and yet the Minister of Finance is quite satisfied to include a sum in his Estimates on the mere request of the member of the county that the work is necessary.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken. He has not understood what I said, or I have not made myself understood. I said that the engineer estimated the cost of the work at $25,000, but I have not made up my mind to spend that sum. It is unfair to say I have no plan, for I have the plan here.

Mr. FOSTER. You are not going to use those plans.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. But I have them. It is unfair to say that I do not know where the work is. It is situated on the Atlantic coast, 20 miles from the town of Guysborough. It is at the mouth of the St. Catherine River. If the hon. gentleman cannot find it with that information, I am sorry. I hope my hon. friend will not oppose longer this item, and he does not expect me to reply to the wind-bag speeches.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I desire to point out to the Minister that within a distance of 60 miles on the south coast of Guysborough there are 25 harbours shown on the map I have before me, which is not drawn on a very large scale. It is therefore very clear that the coast is well supplied with harbours. It may be that this particular harbour needs a breakwater. If it does, I would not object to its construction if it were necessary in the interest of the people there. The only criticism I have to make in regard to the position of the Minister of Public Works is that he does not seem to have the slightest information about the proposed work, as to its necessity, locality or cost, and without that information I do not think the committee should be called upon to pass this item.

Mr. BERGERON. We are voting money by the bushel. Those members who remember the old days and the criticisms offered by hon. gentlemen opposite when they were on this side of the House must be perfectly astonished that a Government, comprising in its ranks the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries who would not have allowed an item of this sort to pass in the Estimates, should sit on the Treasury benches and those hon. gentlemen help the Minister of Public Works in carrying this item through. The hon. member for York said that any Minister, and especially the Minister of Public Works, should be in a position to furnish all possible information respecting these items. The Minister says he has stated it is far from his thought that he should come to Parliament and ask for $25,000 to build a breakwater at New Harbour, in county Guysborough, or at Cow Bay.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The latter place happens in the county formerly represented by the leader of the Opposition, and the hon. gentleman might be more considerate in his absence.

Mr. BERGERON. Whether it is in one or the other does not affect public opinion. The people want to know whether this House is voting public money for a good purpose or not. The Minister of Public Works says he does not intend to spend $25,000, but he may spend $8,000 or $9,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am only asking $4,000.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. gentleman has been long enough Minister of Public Works to know that he may construct a $100,000 work by the system he is pursuing now. We are doing something which is purely and simply outrageous in voting the people's money to this so-called economical Government, which got into power on the plea of economy, and which has since squandered money, and no member of that party was more loud-mouthed than the Minister of Public Works. The Supplementary Estimates for 1899 show items for the province of Nova Scotia alone of $95,000, besides the sums asked for in the main Estimates. If the Opposition say anything by way of criticism or ask legitimate questions, we are told that we are prolonging the session, and one of the Ministers declared a short time ago that is all right if we want to do so, for we could adjourn for three or four days and listen to speeches delivered in the other Chamber where they are killing their own Bill. Members on this side of the House are prepared to vote all the money required, but we want the necessary information. If that were the only item that the Minister has asked us to vote and with reference to which he cannot give us any information, I would excuse it, but it is the same thing with every one of his items. If he were in Opposition and a Conservative Minister were doing as he is doing, what a speech he would make and what a terrible article would be written against the Government the next day in "La Patrie" of Montreal. I am utterly opposed to the granting of this money.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) did not say so when he was down in that county with Mr. Forbes.

Mr. BERGERON. Can the Minister of Marine tell me what I said there?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not repeat the exact words, but the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) was in company with the Minister of Public Works and a prospective candidate for Guysborough, named Mr. Forbes, and he gave the people of that county to understand that they should support the then Government or they would get no money for public works in the county.

Mr. BERGERON. If all the Minister of Marine and Fisheries knows is as correct as that, I pity him. I never said such a thing as that, either in Guysborough or in any other place. I have never promised the electorate public works, because I believe it is immoral, and I would not have been elected in my own county for twenty years if I had done such a thing. The Minister is giving a bad example to his friends behind him who are willing enough to imitate it, when he talks about public works being promised to electors. I trust that the Minister will now get up and accept my denial.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Perhaps the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) did not say so in so many words. I visited the county shortly after the hon. gentleman was there, and if he did not make the promise the candidate whom he went there to support expressly promised on the platform that these public works would be given, and the Minister of Public Works was there too.

Mr. BERGERON. That is a very round-about way of getting at it. Whether Mr. Forbes said that or not I do not know, but I know that Mr. Forbes was never a candidate.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. You appointed him a judge afterwards.

Mr. WALLACE. I was present on the occasion in question, and I can deny the statement of the Minister of Marine.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. You were not present.

Mr. WALLACE. Yes, I was there with the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) and Mr. Forbes.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. And Mr. Oulmet?

Mr. WALLACE. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. And Mr. Tupper, too, and the Minister of Marine is very badly informed. My hon. friend (Sir Louis Davies) went there a few days afterwards, and doubtless he promised a great many things, and this vote is probably a result of his promises. Guysborough is a fine little town and we were hospitably received, but I never saw any traffic there to justify the building of a breakwater. I saw what in our part of the country we would call large skiffs, but there did not appear to be a necessity for spending thousands of dollars to accommodate them. We met our esteemed friend from Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), and we would like to have had him at the friendly meeting we held, but he would not come, and I am sorry for that, because he might have given better renseignement to the Minister of Marine (Sir Louis Davies) which would have prevented him from bringing forward allegations which he cannot prove. But as we say in French, revenons à nos moutons. The Minister of Public Works has not given a single reason to any unprejudiced mind why he should vote this money. He says he will go down to Guysborough during the recess, but when we were passing his main Estimates he promised us that he would go to so many places all over the country that there are not enough days in the year to enable him to carry out all promised visits. He is going to inspect every public building in the whole Dominion, and he is going to inspect every river and ditch in Canada. He says that if it is not necessary he will not spend this money, but there is not a man in this House or in the country who knows the Minister of Public Works and who will believe that if we vote him this $4,000 this money would ever come back to the public treasury. He may visit that place and he may find it unnecessary to build a breakwater, but the $4,000 will be expended all the same. As members of Parliament we are obliged by our oath of office to prevent the public treasury from being plundered. It is our duty to prevent the passing of any such estimate, and I for one will vote against it.

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

Mr. POPE. I hesitate to rise, but the principle laid down by the Minister of Public Works that every member of the Opposition is in duty bound to assume the responsibility for an item if he does not enter his protest against it, demands that I should enter my protest against this. That was a dangerous ground for the Minister of Public Works to take, because it is liable to prolong the passage of his Estimates through the House. I find from the remarks of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that an election is running in his mind, and I have become more convinced than ever that we are going to have an election in that constituency, and that this vote is part and parcel of the preparation for that election. The Minister of Public Works says he is going to visit Guysborough County. I have no doubt that if the Minister inspects this place he will be able to express more or less of an intelligent opinion, though likely his opinion will not be any more intelligent than that of his chief engineer. But, Sir, in view of the fact that we are going to have an election in the county of Guysborough, a personal visit of the Minister to that constituency is the most dangerous part of the whole thing. The fact that he is going to have this money voted, that he is not having the work located anywhere, and that he is going to look over the ground himself, is the most dangerous part of the whole scheme. For my part, if the Minister of Public Works would assure me that he will not visit Guysborough during the summer, I would be more inclined to support the item. We have experience of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte) visiting constituencies during election time. We know he went to Lévis during a local election, and that he promised the building of grain elevators there, and the result of the election was in favour of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BERGERON. And there are $68,000 in the Estimates for Lévis.

Mr. POPE. Yes; these visits of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) are very expensive. If he visits all the places he has planned since we came to discuss his Estimates, and if each visit is going to cost $68,000 to the people of the country, he had better double up these Estimates at once, for if he does not he will run out of money on his visits, and he won't be able to get home. I do not think it is the intention of the leaders of the Government in the maritime provinces to any longer prolong the disappointment of the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser).

They have snubbed him to a sufficient degree; they have left him out in the cold; they have injured his feelings, I am sure, to a sufficient extent; and in order that that hon. gentleman might be more or less satisfied with the chilly seat he occupies among the rear benches of this House, I have no doubt that the various Estimates which we find here are not only to console him, but are also a preparation for what is to come after he receives his due reward for faithful services rendered to the party to which he belongs. If anybody in this House is to receive a political reward, I am sure we will all admit that no one in this House is more deserving of it than that hon. gentleman. I believe that the hon. gentleman is shortly to receive recognition, and that when the clock strikes on Saturday, it will strike for the last time upon the hon. member for Guysborough, and after this session we shall have a new representative for that county. This is the reason why the Minister of Public Works is laying out this estimate in this peculiar manner. I may be wrong; this may be merely a suspicion on my part; but no man proposes to spend either his own or other people's money unless he has some object in view. The hon. gentleman says that the estimate of his engineer was for such a large amount that he cannot undertake it. If the plans he has before him are so extensive that he cannot carry them out, they are worth very little as an indication of what he is going to expend; so that we can say that practically he has no plan. He has discovered, since this House opened this evening, even since nine o'clock, that this place is located on the Atlantic coast—I presume on that portion of the Atlantic coast that is in Canadian territory. But he has not the slightest information as to the shipping or the business that is done there. He simply comes and says, "I want $4,000; I do not know when I will spend it or where I will spend it; but if you will give me $4,000, I give you my word of honour that I will not spend $25,000; but I want $4,000 for a special purpose; I want to make the expenditure this summer after the House rises"—if he said a little more, he would say after the by-election goes through. "I want this little bait for these fishermen; they are used to handling bait, and they want this little bait from me." And the moment it is announced that the Minister of Public Works has left the city of Ottawa to make a tour through the lower provinces, and that he is to go into Guysborough, the canvasser will begin to go about, saying, "the Minister of Public Works is coming down, and he has money voted by Parliament for a wharf which he can put anywhere he likes; if he does not put it here, he will put it there." And the hon. gentleman will have the whole line of voters along the coast at his disposal, for he will have the money voted, and he can locate that wharf anywhere he pleases.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. What is the use of saying that? The place is very well known—very well located.

Mr. POPE. The hon. Minister says it is very well located. An hour ago he could not tell us where it was.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman was not in the House. I have stated it all along.

Mr. POPE. I have not been outside of this House since the hon. gentleman took up this item. I have been so interested in it that I could not go outside of the House. I was peculiarly attracted to my seat when I thought of the hon. gentleman's visit to that constituency. I cannot get that out of my mind—that the hon. gentleman is going to pay a visit to the county of Guysborough, with $4,000 at his disposal, at a particular time and for a particular purpose as to which he does not now propose to inform us. I want to enter my protest against voting for the construction of public works without having proper plans and estimates, without at least knowing where the harbour is, and without having information as to the usefulness of the works after they are constructed. On that ground I am opposed to the passage of this item.

Mr. CLANCY. Like others, though very anxious that we should go on with the work of this House, I have been listening with a great deal of interest to this discussion. I must confess that during my short time in this House I have never seen such an exhibition as I have witnessed to-night. We have on the one hand the Minister of Public Works coming down to this House without a tittle of information and unable to tell whether the place where this work is to be located is east, west, north or south—coming and asking a sum of money to be voted for a harbour on the representation of some local man who is wholly irresponsible to this House. Then, we have an extraordinary declaration on the part of another hon. gentleman who is the keeper of the purse-strings of the Dominion of Canada, that hon. gentleman rising in his place and proposing for the first time in this Parliament, I hope, that upon the mere word of some hon. member of this House that some work is useful, this House, without any further information, should vote a sum of money for that work, on the understanding that the Minister of Public Works should afterwards go down and determine its utility. In other words, he proposes that we should give a blank check in advance to the Minister of Public Works, because the hon. gentleman who has recommended the work is a Liberal. I say that no hon. member's word is good enough for us to vote money upon. If we accept that doctrine, there is not a single item in the Estimates from start to finish that the Minister of Public Works might not with as much reason urge should be voted by this House on the same principle. The hon. Minister has not urged up to this time that this is a case of urgency, or that there was no time to obtain the information, and that he must throw himself on the indulgence of the House. If the House assents to this, they will be assenting for all time to the principle that the Minister of Public Works may ask this House to vote expenditure simply because any supporter of the Government thinks it is required in his own constituency. Rather than put the House in so awkward and dangerous a position, the hon. gentleman should withdraw this item.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot allow the item to stand. I have got all the information that any Minister could be asked for, under the circumstances. I have the plans and all the details before me.

Mr. CLARKE. Read the details.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Certainly.

Mr. WALLACE. Would the hon. Minister, while he is reading the details, send round the plan giving its exact location.

Mr. COCHRANE. I understand that the plan the Minister has in his hands is for an expenditure of $25,000, but he tells us that he is not going to spend that amount. Of what use then is the plan?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have told the House that I have the plans and all the information. The information is to the effect that on the representation of the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), who has the right to make those representations, as is customary and has always been done in the past—

Mr. CLANCY. Are those plans made upon the information of the engineer of the department or that obtained from the hon. member for Guysborough?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The information obtained by the engineer. The hon. member for Guysborough pressed that work on me, and my chief engineer instructed Mr. Milledge to proceed to New Harbour and make an examination, and the result of his investigation was that he reported that works could be built there at the cost of $25,000. Plans were prepared on the same principle as in the case of the Ontario harbours. The works are located at the mouth of the St. Catherine River, two jetties are designed, and the estimated cost is $25,000. I found that that was a very expensive work, and I made up my mind to go with the acting chief engineer, Mr. Lafleur, and see if those plans could not be amended so as to spend not more than $8,000 or $10,000.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. Minister has now made it perfectly clear that he is absolutely destitute of the information which would warrant him in declaring that this is a work of utility or necessity. What is the information that he gives the House? The hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) told the Minister that he wanted some work done.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, the member for Guysborough represented to me that the fishermen were largely in need of protection, and that is the reason why I applied for that vote.

Mr. CLANCY. That is what he might be expected to urge. The hon. member for Guysborough had said that he wanted this money spent for his own purposes, of course the hon. Minister would hardly listen to him. The engineer down there was requested to make a report, and the hon. Minister does not accept the report, because he says the report calls for an expenditure of $25,000, and he will not spend more than $10,000. We have nothing to show that the work is needed at all, and I hope he will withdraw the item.

Mr. COCHRANE. I cannot see my way clear to accept this vote, I do not care where money is expended in this Dominion, if it is for the advantage of the public, but I would ask how did these gentlemen opposite acted when they were in Opposition. The very gentleman who is now proposing this vote used to say that the Conservative party was buying up constituencies with their own money. And here we have the Minister of Public Works coming down with a plan of works that are to cost $25,000, and telling us in the same breath that he is not going to ask us to spend that money, but only to spend $4,000. With the record of the Minister still ringing in our ears in reference to this stone fence at Major's Hill Park, on which he took the responsibility of spending $4,000 by day's labour, what assurance have we that if there is to be a by-election in the county of Guysborough, he will not come down to that county and employ hundreds of men down there by the day, just as he did on this western block when there was an election going on across the river. When that election was going on, I saw five men at the western block holding a ladder for one man to work on, and no doubt a similar sight will be witnessed in Guysborough County. If the hon. gentleman has any respect for his own utterances, he will withdraw this vote. We can well remember the forcible language of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) in former days, when he would have us believe that there must be something wrong whenever we were spending money, and when he predicted that if his party got into power they would save $3,000,000 or $4,000,000 per year in our expenditure. When challenged, he repeated more emphatically that he would show the country how its affairs could be run with an annual expenditure of $4,000,000 less than that which the Tory party were expending. And what an exhibition they have made of economy. Talk about bushels of money—they have spent mountains of money. They have not only equalled the extravagant Conservative Government, these Liberal economists, but they have spent $10,000,000 more; and they tell us: We will stay here and let you talk, let you extend the session as long as you please. Why did they not bring down their Estimates in time? Why should we be discussing Supplementary Estimates of four million dollars in the dying hours of the session? Why do they hold the whip of a long session over the heads of members to make them swallow the votes whether they like them or not? Out of respect to the opinion of the House, the hon. Minister of Public Works should withdraw this vote.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Hon. gentlemen opposite are so accustomed to certain methods in the carrying out of public works, that they cannot conceive of any other. I am sorry to see a somewhat ungenerous spirit manifested with regard to this vote. My hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) labours under the delusion that I have announced a new and startling doctrine. But I am informed and believe that this House has over and over again voted small appropriations without having plan or special report from engineers.

Mr. CLANCY. But it is wrong.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not admit that it is wrong. There are limitations within which it is quite right. I am informed on very good authority that it is no unusual practice in this House to vote, in the Supplementary Estimates, on the representation of a member of Parliament, small appropriations, subject to examination subsequently to be made by the engineers of the department.

Mr. BERGERON. No, no.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It has always been done.

Mr. BERGERON. I have been here three times as long as the Minister of Public Works, and I never saw it done.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have my information from the highest and best authority, that it has been no uncommon occurrence for appropriations to be voted this way in the Supplementary Estimates, with the understanding that the Minister would send his engineer to see if the work could be carried out or not. As to the usefulness of a public work, I do not admit that that is merely an engineering question. I say that there is no better authority on that point, if he speaks truly and gives you the benefit of his confidence, than the representative of the county. You may call in your engineer to ascertain what the cost will be, and when you receive his report, you may find that the cost is out of all proportion to the usefulness of the work. But as to the usefulness of the work to the people, the representative is as competent to speak as any engineer. I do not say that it would be just to follow this procedure in the voting of large sums, but in the appropriation of small sums I am informed it has been the practice for many years.

Mr. SPROULE. I have been in this House for twenty years, and I have never seen or known of such a practice. As a matter of fact, under the late Government we were asked by the Minister of Public Works to give facts as to the size of the place, the trade to be done and what the effect upon trade would be if the improved facilities were provided. You take the harbour of Collingwood, Meaford, Thornbury, Owen Sound, Goderich, Southampton, Port Elgin, Penetanguishene or Midland—that was the rule universally followed. I myself have furnished figures, from time to time, and I have always advised deputations coming down to ask that appropriations be made to be prepared to give these facts. If we were not able to furnish them, we did not regard ourselves as having given sufficient information to justify the Minister of Public Works to put an item in the Estimates for a harbour.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is another thing in respect to the county of Guysborough that will have some weight with hon. gentlemen as to the necessity for voting of money for protection works there. It seems to me that it cannot be generally understood by hon. gentlemen that Guysborough is one of the first fishing counties in the Dominion of Canada. There are more boat fishermen in the county of Guysborough than in any other county in Canada, except Gaspé, and the value of the fish products—

Mr. MILLS. It is lucky for the hon. Minister (Sir Louis Davies) that the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach) is not in the House.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That hon. member may be here, or may be absent, it cannot alter the fact. I know that there are more vessels going out of Lunenburg than out of Guysborough; but we are speaking here of protection for the boat fishermen, and I say, with the exception of the county of Gaspé, and not excepting even the county of Halifax, there are more boat fishermen in Guysborough than in any other county in the Dominion. The fisheries of Guysborough county represent a product of nearly $700,000 yearly. And with the exception of Lunenburg and Halifax, there are no counties in the province that approach it in the value of its fisheries. When you think of thousands of fishermen of that coast being for many years without these necessary works, I think it will be thought not unreasonable that the hon. member for Guysborough should represent to the Minister of Public Works the necessity for paying some attention to their wants.

Mr. CLANCY. If the hon. Minister (Sir Louis Davies) will allow me, I desire to ask him a question. I am seeking for information. Has there been a pressing demand by the fishermen for some time past, and is there now that demand for the work in this particular place?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am not in a position to answer that question. But I am told by an hon. gentleman behind that there has been that demand. I rose merely to call attention to the fact that Guysborough is not an ordinary county with a few hundred or a thousand or fifteen hundred fishermen, but has a larger number of boat fishermen than any other county in the maritime provinces, and except Gaspé, more than any other county in the Dominion. Hon. gentlemen must not be surprised, therefore, if these thousands of fishermen ask for some little recognition at the hands of Parliament. They are engaged in one of the most hazardous occupations that one can be engaged in. Their lives are constantly at stake. They come to me often as Minister of Marine and Fisheries for aid of navigation, and I give them as much as I can with the small sum placed at my disposal by Parliament in the way of lights, and so on. But they want harbours of refuge into which when storms arise they can go to save their boats and their own lives. I submit that there has been shown an ungenerous feeling which should not be shown considering the facts.

Mr. CLANCY. No hon. gentleman in this House objects to expenditure for the safety of the fishermen. What we complain of is the lack of information to enable us to come to an intelligent decision upon this subject. The hon. gentleman has stated, what is no doubt true, that the fishermen are constantly making demands upon him, and yet he himself could not answer a question—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. My hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) must be just. They would not come to me with a demand for a breakwater. I would have no knowledge of that subject. My hon. friend from Guysborough would, of course, lay the case before the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. Minister (Sir Louis Davies) is too shrewd and keen a debater to be imposed upon by such logic if it came from another. His argument is that there is great need for protecting the fishermen. That is not really the question, as the hon. gentleman will see. We wish to provide everything that we can for the safety of the fishermen. The point simply is that it is proposed to expend the sum of money, and we are asked to vote and that without any information as to the usefulness or necessity of the work. Now if the House were prepared to give this sum of money, what might follow? It involves a considerable expenditure, according to the estimate that is now given by the local engineer. The hon. Minister is not urging this upon the grounds of utility, he is not urging it upon the ground of saving life and property. I appeal to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who I believe to be fair, I appeal to the Minister of Finance, whom I have learned to admire in many respects, if they are prepared to lay down this new principle, because it is a principle reversing the policy of previous Governments in this respect. Unless the hon. gentleman is prepared to show a case of extreme urgency, I think he should withdraw the item.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am very sorry that I cannot oblige my hon. friend.

Mr. CLANCY. Then I move that the item be struck out.

Mr. BERGERON. There is already a motion that the committee rise.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It was never put from the Chair.

Mr. MILLS. I do not think that the Opposition or the Government are by any means ungenerous with the fishermen of Nova Scotia, or are inclined to be ungenerous. But the Opposition, before they give their sanction to a vote, desire to know something about it. During my short term as a member of Parliament, I have had something to do in getting quite a few matters like this for Nova Scotia, but it has been the invariable rule to allow the application to come from the people themselves. I have not gone to the Minister and asked him to make an appropriation simply on my own authority, but I have done it on the strength of a well-circulated and well-signed petition from the people of the community interested in that work. We place that before the Minister and he then sends down his engineer to inquire into the utility of this work. But it is contrary to usage and to sound principle for a member of Parliament, entirely upon his own ipse dixit, to go to the Minister of Public Works and ask for an appropriation. I agree largely with what the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has said with reference to the necessities of the fishermen in Nova Scotia, and the need of looking after their welfare. I am glad to see the hon. member of Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) coming into the House at the present time, perhaps he can give us some information with reference to this matter that will set the committee at rest. I believe that the fishermen in Nova Scotia have rights that should be looked after, that the lobster fishermen, the deep sea fishermen, the coasting men along the coast of Nova Scotia, have interests that should be looked after. I do not think that the members of the Opposition are inclined to be ungenerous to the fishermen in Nova Scotia, but they desire some information, some reason why the money should be expended. All we know is that the Minister of Public Works says this work will cost $25,000, but he hardly knows where the place is. Under the circumstances I do not blame the committee for being averse to voting this item.

Mr. QUINN. During my absence a few minutes ago, I am informed that the Minister of Public Works, with that elegant diction which is characteristic of him, said he would not answer the windbag speech which the member for Montreal delivered. Sir, I reply put before this committee certain considerations. I drew the attention of the committee to what I considered, but did not characterize, as the balderdash which characterized the language of the Minister in attributing to the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) a desire to oppose this vote because it came from the county of Guysborough in the province of Nova Scotia. I have no hesitation in saying that the Minister is simply following the course he has adopted all his life, and I see that he is followed in this instance by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries; the object is to produce this debate in the county of Guysborough at the proper time, to show how the Minister of Public Works nobly stood by the fishermen of Guysborough against the bigoted attacks of the members from Ontario and Quebec. In other words the Minister of Public Works is pursuing the same course he has pursued all through his tortuous life, he is trying to set one portion of this community against another, trying to attribute to persons sentiment which finds a resting place only in his own heart. Now, let us put the facts fairly before this House so that they may be presented to the electors of Guysborough as well as the statement of the Minister of Public Works, so that they may realize the humiliating position in which that hon. gentleman stands to-night in asking for this vote of money. I said a few minutes ago that the Minister, when questioned by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden), could not tell where this place, New Harbour, was, he could not tell how many boats were there, he could not tell what was the population of the town, he could not tell the name of the town adjacent to it, he could not tell how far it was from a thriving town or village, he could not tell anything about it; yet, with this meagre information, he asks the sum of $4,000 to pay for a trip, as he says, down into the county, or to begin a work there which his engineer estimates will cost $25,000. Under these circumstances, I feel satisfied that if hon. gentlemen opposite would act according to their convictions, not carried away by the sympathy which they have for their Government, and the loyalty which they feel towards their Ministers, they would take the same position that members on this side of the House do, and oppose this vote.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). During my enforced absence from the House, I understand that hon. gentlemen opposite have been very much exercised about a small vote for New Harbour, in the county of Guysborough; and the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Mills), with that density that always pervades his intellect, does not know where New Harbour is. I can say that New Harbour is well known in the county of Guysborough. It is one of the best known fishing stations.

Mr. MILLS. When the hon. member for Guysborough says that I do not know where New Harbour is, he states something that is very far from the fact.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). All I know is that when I came in I heard him clamouring for information as to where New Harbour was, how many people there were. Now that his ignorance has been exposed, he wants to show that he knows something about it. Of course, if I had not been here to bring him up—

Mr. MILLS. Let me tell the hon. member that if there was any one made a speech from this side of the House in favour of the fishermen of Guysborough, it was myself. The hon. gentleman only shows his personal animus in making this attack upon me.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I would expect that any member from Nova Scotia would know something about the places in Nova Scotia, and when I heard him clamouring for information, I was much surprised that he did not know.

Mr. MILLS. I am afraid that you have been too excited lately.

Mr. FRASER. Not at all, but the hon. gentleman wanted to make a point against myself and my constituency. When I was a member for the county during the time of the late Government, a largely signed petition came to me from New Harbour, asking that something should be done there. The petition was so largely signed that the fact appealed to the then Minister of Public Works, Hon. Mr. Ouimet, who sent one of his engineers there. That engineer made a complete survey and reported to the department what works were necessary, and full information is now in the department. I got that concession from my opponent. The river at New Harbour comes down through a very nice section of the county of Guysborough. At the mouth there is a bar, and the fishermen have sometimes to go to another harbour in their boats in order to be able to get to a place of safety. They have to wait till there is high water before they can get in with their boats, and the proposal is to build a breakwater on both sides of the river, not sufficient to get ships in, but their ordinary boats. New Harbour is inhabited by as good people as there are in Guysborough County, and that means the people in Canada. They are about equally divided politically—at the last election I got a very small majority. I claim nothing for myself or the Government in regard to obtaining this vote, not that I am getting it on my individual account or on account of the party, but because it is absolutely necessary for the people who have lived fifty or sixty years there under the greatest possible disadvantages.

Mr. WALLACE. Is there a town at the mouth of the river?

Mr. FRASER. There is no town; it is altogether a fishing district. The settlement is about ten miles long; in winter the people live there, and in the spring they all move down to the mouth of this river, where there is a little village in which the fishermen live. When they go out fishing and return with their boats, if there is the least surf running they cannot get over the bar, and they have either to stay out all night or go to the next harbour. If there is the least storm, the boats have the greatest possible difficulty in getting in. I want to say distinctly that I pressed this grant on the late Government, and press it now, not because I wish to claim any credit for it, but because the men who will be benefited are as good a lot of fishermen as I know in Nova Scotia, who are about equally divided politically, and who are going to obtain an advantage which they have long sought and to which they are entitled. That is the whole story. Let me say in regard to the county, that we have not been very fortunate in the past in regard to money grants, which is perhaps due to the political density of the people who are largely Liberals. When I was returned in 1891 the first resolution passed by the Conservative Association asked the Dominion Government to give nothing to Guysborough, because it might help me. I did succeed in obtaining a grant, on a very strong case I made out, from Sir John Thompson, $1,500 for works at Whitehead, a place which gave 100 Conservative majority, and it was understood that it was given on account of the way the people voted. I am not finding fault. I am not claiming more than we should claim. I might make almost a similar statement in regard to the vote for Port Hilford. For that port we can claim that for its population it has the greatest number of captains in the world. Out of a voting strength of 200 there are 35 captains with regular certificates, and they are obliged to run with large vessels over nine miles to get into the port. In both these cases $7,000 or $8,000 would do the work. At St. Mary's there is the largest business carried on in lumber in the province, it reaching 10,000,000 feet annually. The people of Guysborough feel gratified at this vote being made, and they will understand that the Government are not doing it with a political object, for they do not need to do it politically, but they are doing it in the interests of the people, who are men obtaining their living from the sea. In the case of the inhabitants of a great city like Montreal, they can put their hands in their pockets, and if necessary carry out their own improvements. I believe the Government was constituted to help people in similar circumstances to these fishermen, and I know the Government is not acting from political motives, but simply in the interests of fishermen, many of whom voted against them.

Mr. WALLACE. It is a most extraordinary proposition that Parliament should be asked to vote this money without the necessary information being placed before the committee. The Minister said he had plans of the proposed work, and I have those plans before me, and they involve according to the estimate an expense of $24,000 or $25,000. For what purpose does the Minister require $4,000? The hon. gentleman does not know; he simply asks the committee to vote it blindly, and he will see if he can put the money to any effective use. The Finance Minister told the committee, that it was a common occurrence to make similar appropriations. I should like the hon. gentleman to furnish an example, especially as the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) has stated that no such appropriation was ever made under the circumstances stated by the Finance Minister.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It has been the habit of Ministers of Public Works to place amounts in the estimates without plans or information, when there was no time to procure them.

Mr. WALLACE. I have been here as long as the hon. gentleman's Deputy Minister, and somewhat longer, and Parliament has always asked, as the Minister of Trade and Commerce and others know, for the fullest particulars as to the expenditure. What is the use of our coming here at all to vote away sums of money if we cannot get information as to how the money will be expended, and to-night we have no information as to how a single dollar of that $4,000 will be applied. Apparently, from what the member for Guysborough tells us, these people live away up the river, and they have to take their fishing boats five miles up stream for their winter quarters. There are breakwaters to be built here and a harbour to be formed, and $4,000 would simply do no good whatever. The Minister is justified in asking for an appropriation to survey and make plans and investigate this matter, and then submit his estimate to the House, but under present circumstances it is preposterous to ask us to vote this sum of money. The hon. member for Guysborough tells us that years ago when the Conservative party were in power, Mr. Ouimet sent down an engineer, who made plans. Is this plan before us now the plan that was made in Mr. Ouimet's time?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No.

Mr. WALLACE. Where is the plan that Mr. Ouimet had made?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not know that any plan was made, I did not see any.

Mr. WALLACE. The member for Guysborough tells us that plans were made in Mr. Ouimet's time, and yet the Minister does not know anything about it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The Deputy Minister tells me that plans similar to these were prepared in 1893.

Mr. WALLACE. Then, why should you go to the expense of sending down an engineer to make new plans?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There was a resident engineer there.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. member for Guysborough told us you sent down an engineer from here.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I said no such thing. There is a resident engineer in Antigonish, and they just sent him across.

Mr. WALLACE. What is his name?

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Mr. Mill-edge.

Mr. WALLACE. Then, in 1893, Mr. Mill-edge made a plan of this same place, and he was sent in 1897 to make a plan again? Let us know how the plan made in 1893 compares with this plan. The Minister says he knew nothing about a former plan until he was told about it to-night, and so we see that the House has to give the Minister information about the affairs of his own department. Where is the nearest harbour to the north where boats can go for shelter?

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I will tell the hon. gentleman—between eighty and 100 miles on the Gulf of St. Lawrence; to the south, the whole Atlantic Ocean.

Mr. WALLACE. Do I understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fraser) to say there is no harbour nearer than eighty or 100 miles, because if he does he tells us something that I know is not correct from my own knowledge, which is very limited, but I have been down there. I know there are harbours nearer than that.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Not north; you get into the woods there.

Mr. WALLACE. You can go to the Straits of Canso.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). That is east.

Mr. WALLACE. Well, it is north-east; the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fraser) is trying to split hairs. Southward and westward there must be harbours along that coast, but the Minister cannot give us any information about that. Can he tell us how many fishermen take their boats for winter quarters up this river, as the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) says they have to take them up.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). They do not go up the river. The whole distance, from eight to ten miles, is inhabited, and the houses are on both sides of the river from the head of the river down to the harbour. It is well settled from the head of the river to the harbour.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. member (Mr. Fraser) said that these fishing boats were taken to winter quarters five miles up stream.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Yes, lots of them, but the men who only live a quarter of a mile or half a mile up take their boats home and do not bring them up five miles.

Mr. WALLACE. I see there are shallow flats here that are dry at low tide, so that the boats cannot get over them, and at that part there is, of course, no settlement. They would have to go further up the river before they would come to any ground for settlement on that side of the stream.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). There is a settlement on both sides of the river at its mouth, where it enters the harbour.

Mr. WALLACE. I think this House should be asked to vote money only when its gets information that will justify the appropriation. This House has not been furnished yet with a particle of information as to how this $4,000 is to be expended. The Minister of Public Works has not told us unless it is to start this $24,000 job. If that is the case, we ought to know it, and we ought to have some justification of the expenditure of that $24,000. The Minister, however, tells us that he does not approve of that plan, and that it is not proposed to expend $24,000—that he will see if he cannot reduce the amount to $10,000. It is not true, as the Minister of Finance said, that in matters of this kind estimates were made in advance, and we had to give our confidence to the Minister to whom we were giving the appropriation. I am sorry we cannot do that; I am sorry that the Minister of Public Works has, by his course, deprived himself of that confidence that we ought to repose in Ministers. Now, Sir, I think the suggestion of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) is the only proper one under the circumstances, that is, that the hon. Minister should withdraw the item or give the House information that would justify it in voting this sum of money.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I did not intend to say anything about this item. I have not said much on any of the items before the House. This debate reminds me of old times; and after the understanding arrived at by the leaders on both sides of the House to expedite the business and get through, I cannot explain to myself the hours that have been wasted in the discussion of this particular item, amounting to $4,000. If the vote had been for $25,000, with the report and the plans which the Minister of Public Works submitted here, I could understand the objections made by some of our friends on this side of the House, that the information was too meagre to justify us in proceeding with the expenditure of $25,000 on a work of that kind. The very plan which the Minister placed before the House was at first used against him. Why? Because he said to the House, When I found, on representations made by a member of Parliament representing that constituency, that a certain work ought to be done, I instructed my engineer to report upon it, as has been the custom heretofore. He found that the report of his engineer involved an expenditure which made him hesitate as to whether Parliament would approve of $25,000 for that particular work. One hon. member on this side of the House said to the Minister of Public Works: "Why do you not go slow? With your report, involving an expenditure of $25,000, and you not being certain that that expenditure would be justified, why do you not ask for a small amount until you can get full information?" The Minister of Public Works rose, and said: "That is just what I am doing; I am not asking for $25,000; I am asking for $4,000;" and my hon. friend sat down, as I think he had a right to do. Now, what does all this talk about want of information amount to? I am not going to say that the information is all that every hon. member for this House might require in detail; but I do say that what struck me very forcibly was that the more information that was brought out, the more objections seemed to occur. The moment it was found that there had been an examination of this work by engineers under the instruction of a Conservative Minister of Public Works, and that plans were on file in the department, the objection was raised that too much expense had been involved—that there has been too many investigations. I think we have had all the discussion we ought to have on this subject. I do not rise for the purpose of criticising the discussion on this side of the House. I do not feel responsible for the expenditures of hon. gentlemen opposite. I was not elected to vote money to them; but I think we were elected not to obstruct, especially at this stage of the session, when we had agreed to confine ourselves to a legitimate criticism of the items. I thought it necessary to say a word because a demand was made on the Minister of Public Works that he must withdraw this item or a vote would be forced upon the House, and I felt it my duty to say why I should certainly vote against any such proposition coming from this side or any other side of the House.

Port Hillford, N.S.—Breakwater..... $4,000

Mr. FOSTER. What is to be the cost of this work?

Mr. BERGERON. Is that in Guysborough also?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes. That is to provide for the construction of a breakwater at Breakwater Point, reaching 8½ feet at low water, to furnish shelter for the fishermen. The proposed work is to be 500 feet long and 20 feet wide, and to have a depth of 20 feet at the outer end. The total cost is estimated to be about $10,000 or $12,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the population of Port Hillford?

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). About 1,000. The St. Mary's River, to which reference has been made, is the largest river in Nova Scotia, from which about 10,000,000 feet of lumber is exported. The lumber is taken down the river in rafts to Liscomb, near the mouth of St. Mary's River, and there is no harbour between the mouth of St. Mary's River and Isaac's harbour. At Port Hillford there are 35 certified captains, and if there is a storm, they have to go eight or nine miles to find a harbour. They are engaged in fishing, and a number of them go to the Labrador.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the hon. gentleman propose to call for tenders?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Certainly.

Tancock Island, N.S.—Repairs to a wharf $1,500

Mr. FOSTER. Is that owned by the Government?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

McNutt's Island, N.S.—Beach protection. $1,000

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is to be applied to the construction of a piece of crib-work, 230 feet long, for the protection of the fishing and small craft frequenting the harbour. The estimated cost is as follows:—14,000 cubic feet, $840; unforeseen, $160.

Mr. FOSTER. Will this finish the work?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is no work going on yet; but the beach is breaking away.

Swim's Point, N.S.—wharf..... $2,000

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is at Cape Sable Island, Shelburne County, a large fishing section.

Jordan Bay East—repairs to breakwater. $2,500

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This will complete the work.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Jordan Bay is in the county of Shelburne. It is a shipping place of some importance and the wharf there was damaged last year.

Upper Wood's Harbour—Wharf..... $2,500
Upper Port Latour—Wharf..... $2,000

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Those are both new works. The amounts will not be exceeded. They are in Shelburne County.

Louis Head—Repairs to crib-work, beach protection $600

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is in Shelburne County.

Sandford (or Cranberry Head)—Breakwater..... $3,500

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is in Yarmouth County. I cannot pledge myself to spend this amount, because the estimate of the engineer is $10,500. It is a new work. The money is to be applied to the construction of a new breakwater, 340 feet long, fifteen wide on top, and standing nine feet above high water. The estimated cost of the work is as follows:—120,000 cubic feet of crib-work, $8,400; repairs to existing block, $400; contingencies, $1,700. It is for the further protection of the harbour. An examination was made by the chief engineer's orders in 1893. I am reminded that there is already a breakwater there, but to make it serviceable it is necessary to build an additional piece of work and repair the old breakwater.

Mr. FOSTER. $10,000 is a very respectable sum of money. What is there around there to require this expenditure?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is a fishing village, and I must remind my hon. friend that already $5,970 have been spent in the past to erect a breakwater there, but the work will be of no avail unless we supplement it with the work I am now asking this vote for.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it a harbour of refuge?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, for fishermen. It is frequented by a great number of fishermen and is on the Bay of Fundy side.

Mr. KAULBACH. I cannot understand why so much is lavished on the counties of Shelburne and Queen's. I find no less than eight or nine items in consecutive order for expenditure in these counties. I am inclined to think that our friend has been acting on the principle that it never rains but it pours. I represent the adjoining county, where there are works required to be done, the necessity of which I have been pointing out to the Minister for a long time, and which are as deserving as, and in some cases more so, than those that appear in the Estimates. I am not objecting to the items for Queen's and Shelburne, but I think that I am entitled to a certain portion of the spoils. The hon. Minister of Finance is in the swim altogether.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. All little systems have their day and then cease to be. You have had yours.

Mr. KAULBACH. I would remind the hon. Minister of Public Works that a breakwater at Mill's Cove has been asked for, and it is really required there more than at any other part of the coast, for a number of boats have been destroyed by easterly and southerly storms in that bay. It is a part of the bay that is unprotected, and should receive the earliest and best attention of the hon. Minister.

Advocate Harbour—Wharf $2,000

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
The total estimated cost $3,000.

Pictou Light—Beach protection..... $2,800

Mr. FOSTER. This is to protect the lighthouse?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
Yes.

Mr. KAULBACH. I have asked for the protection of the light at Battery Point, Lunenburg Harbour, where the sea is making rapid inroads upon the banks of alluvium.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
I do not remember having received any application about this from my hon. friend (Mr. Kaulbach).

Mr. KAULBACH. I have written repeatedly about it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, generally sees that these light-houses are brought to the attention of the Public Works Department. We must protect the light-houses, certainly.

Mr. MILLS. I wish to call attention to a matter I have mentioned to the Minister quite frequently—I mean the remains of the piers of the old bridge in Bear River. This is an old subject. I called the attention of the late Government as well as this Government to it often. I do not bring this forward on political grounds, but simply for the public benefit. These piers are in the mouth of Bear River and are a constant menace to life and property and a serious impediment to navigation. There is a contention, I understand, between the provincial and Dominion Governments as to the responsibility for removing the piers. The Federal Government are responsible for the free navigation of rivers, and so rivers must be cleared by the Federal Government. If there is any question as to the liability of one Government or the other to pay, that is a matter that can be settled after the work is done. So far as the political aspect of the case is concerned, Bear River is the place that gives a majority against me. Bear River is a port with a large number of vessels going to and fro, so these old piers should be removed at once. I would just give the Minister of Public Works warning, that if they are not removed, I will commence a mode of warfare, something like that resorted to some years ago by a member of this House—I will obstruct in every way possible until the thing is done. I will pursue that course next year if I am here. I will commence it the first of the session and carry it through to the finish.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I believe these obstructions have been there for many years. My hon. friend (Mr. Mills) might have begun his warfare a little earlier. He had great influence with the late Government, and he should have exercised it. But no doubt there was a reason for it, and the reason he may just have intimated—he says that the people living at Bear River have been opposed to him. However, I will give my best attention to the question. I am informed that the removal of these piers would cost $15,000; but I understand that they are an obstruction to navigation, and so must give our attention to this matter.

Mr. MILLS. I must protest against the estimate given by the Minister of Public Works. I have read the report of the engineer which said that the cost of removing these piers would be $1,000. In fact, $1,000 was placed in the last estimates of the last Government for the purpose—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There were such estimates, were there?

Mr. MILLS. That is what I understood. I moved for the papers at the beginning of the session, and they show that this amount was placed in the Estimates. They give also the correspondence on the subject, including the letters I wrote to the late Government. These show that I first made this application a long time ago, and from that time until now I have pressed it. It was promised me by the late Government to have this done. It was debated here, I think, in answer to the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) it was stated that a letter had been written by the late Minister of Justice, Hon. A. R. Dickey, intimating that this was not for the public benefit. I inquired into that and asked for the papers. The letter is referred to in these papers, but there is no such letter among them. It would be inconsistent with promises given me by members of the late Government if such a letter ever was in evidence. I hope no political consideration will be allowed to affect action in this matter. I may say that the subject was first brought to my attention by a prominent Liberal firm, Messrs. Clark Bros., of Bear River, and I at once made application and have been pressing it ever since.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is in the department a letter written by the hon. member for Victoria to the late Minister of Public Works that he had received an intimation from Mr. Dickey to the effect that the removal of those obstructions are not necessary.

Mr. MILLS. There is no such letter in the papers.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Perhaps not. When I said a moment ago that those works would cost about $15,000, I was not referring alone to the removal of these piers, but I was also referring to the erection of the guiding piers that were applied for.

Livingstone Cove—Wharf..... $3,000

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is in the county of Antigonish. The total cost of the work will be about $6,000.

Mr. McISAAC. I may say that this is one of the most important works that have ever been constructed in the county of Antigonish. Some of the hon. gentlemen opposite know something about that northern coast. I refer particularly to the hon. member King's, P.E.I. (Mr. Macdonald), who will endorse me in this respect. The coast line from Pictou east to Cape George is a very dangerous coast indeed, and there are no harbours or places of refuge at all on that coast. This Livingstone Cove is a port which, even in its natural condition, affords the best protection for craft and vessels that may be caught in a storm on that part of the coast. When this breakwater is constructed, it will afford to the craft and vessels of all kinds sailing the Northumberland Straits and the Bay of St. George, very ample protection in the case of storms, as well as affording the fishermen in that locality protection for their fishing boats.

Harbours and Rivers—New Brunswick—Upper Tobique River—Improvement of channel $800

Mr. ELLIS. What is this for ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. To continue improvements in the channel of the river. The work was begun a year or two ago.

Mr. ELLIS. I beg to call the attention of the Minister to the fact that there has been legislation this session which practically makes that river a private river, and when the Upper Tobique River is spoken of, he must mean one of the branches of that river.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We are constructing wing dams and doing some dredging so as to give an additional depth of water.

Mr. ELLIS. Will this become the property of the company that is incorporated, or is this public ? The hon. Minister speaks of dams. There has been legislation which provides for a dam across the river and the river passes into the hands practically of a private company. I want to ask the Minister how he can make that expenditure now ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman has reference to some legislation which has passed this House contemplating the erection of dams down near Passakeag, which is only 28 miles up the river. I know of no intention on the part of my hon. friend to erect any dam at all.

Mr. FOSTER. Surely the hon. gentleman is not going to construct dams on that river.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The reference to dams was made by the hon. member for St. John, who said that some legislation had been passed this year which authorized the erection of dams, which had the effect of making the river a private river. I cannot quite agree with him in that opinion. I do not so understand the legislation, but I do understand that it is absolutely necessary that some facility should be afforded for the use of the drivers upon the upper stretches, and from the forks of the river down some little distance.

Mr. FOSTER. Is this to be expended south of the forks ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is for the purpose of improving the channel and to facilitate driving. There is an immense quantity of logs driven down that river, both forks of the river furnish a large lumber trade, and it is necessary in the interest of that industry that some facilities should be afforded for drivers.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There has been $6,980 spent by the late Government on the same river. It is navigable for small craft.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I can perhaps throw a little light on this subject, especially as the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Ellis) thought fit to revive the Bill which passed this House granting a charter to a company to erect dams and a saw-mill on that river. His contention is that it is a private river. But I do not think that because this Parliament grants a charter to a company to erect mills upon any river it makes that river private property.

Mr. ELLIS. I would remind my hon. friend that it gives power to make a dam as well.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I said a wing dam.

Mr. COSTIGAN. All I want to explain is that the legislation asked here to which the hon. gentleman refers, has nothing to do with this work at all, it is quite independent of it, both as to location and as to use. It is a navigable river in the sense that rivers have been called navigable, and treated as navigable since confederation. The Tobique River has received appropriations nearly every year since confederation, with the exception of a few years, for the improvement of navigation. There are no ships nor steamers going there, and where ships and steamers do not go small craft are substituted, tow boats go to take supplies up to the head of the river, and lumber is brought down, and improvements have been made there from time to time. It is proposed to build a breakwater up near the forks to improve the navigation of that section of the river, to throw the water into the channel.

Mr. ELLIS. This legislation has been passed regardless of an Act which places the control of the river in the hands of the company. They have the right to dam the river, and the whole control of the river has passed into the hands of that private corporation. If after having had his attention directed to that fact, the Minister thinks it necessary to spend public money for a private corporation, it is his lookout. I will talk to him about that next year, if I am here.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I protest against the idea that one dollar is being spent for a private company.

Tracadie—Additional block—Purchase and repairs $1,290

Mr. McALISTER. What property is it proposed to purchase ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This amount is to purchase a block at the head of the channel, and to carry out certain repairs.

Campbellton—Repairs to ballast wharf. $2,500

Mr. McALISTER. Has a petition signed by all the shippers and business men in Campbellton been sent to the department asking for the purchase of the Mowatt wharf, at a cost of $8,000, to connect the public wharf with the shore ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. McALISTER. Campbellton is the most important commercial town in the northern part of New Brunswick, with a population of 4,000. The public wharf is so built out in the river as not to be accessible except by going over a private wharf, and shipping is very much retarded from the lack of wharf accommodation. Places of infinitely less importance receive grants from $5,000 to $25,000, while nothing whatever has been put in the Estimates for the purchase of the Mowatt wharf. The people of Campbellton feel that something should be done in that direction. The late Government had a survey made, and the engineer reported that the wharf was worth about $6,500, and could be placed in a good state of repairs for a sum bringing the total cost up to $8,000. If that wharf were purchased, the public wharf would then be of some use. Shippers complain from time to time that it is too expensive to use the public wharf. It is impossible for shippers to charter vessels, because the port is so expensive. It is impossible for shippers under the present state of things to ship with any degree of success. I hope the

Mr. COSTIGAN.

Minister will take this matter into consideration and have an appropriation made for the purchase of the Mowatt wharf, in order to do justice to the people of Campbellton, and afford them better accommodation.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I understand that $8,000 or $9,000 would be required to carry out the work. I shall be in a better position to discuss this matter next session, when I have visited the locality.

Mr. McALISTER. I hope that hon. gentleman, when he visits the maritime provinces, will go to Campbellton.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will do so.

Burnt Church—Wharf $8,000

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is practically a re-vote. It was in the Estimates for a couple of years and was only dropped last year, the view of the Department of Public Works being that the cost would be more than the sum appropriated to build the wharf. Since then the department has been convinced that the work of a very extensive character which they had in contemplation is not really necessary. We do not build our wharfs in the province of New Brunswick, at all events, on the same expensive scale as the chief officers of the department think necessary in other localities, and I think the people of the Miramichi are quite ready to build a sufficient wharf at this point for the sum asked for.

Mr. FOSTER. Will $8,000 complete ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will try.

Mr. FOSTER. The difficulty was when I was a member of the Government, that it takes all the pressure you can bear on the engineers to get them to look at things in a moderate way. They wanted $16,000 to build that wharf, and I was determined it should not be built until it was brought down to a reasonable amount.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is one of the reasons why I wish to visit the Maritime Provinces. My engineers ask large sums and my colleagues around tell me that for half the money a useful work could be built. I am glad my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) agrees with them in that.

Prince Edward Island—

China Point—Reconstruction of head pier $2,000

Mr. MARTIN. I draw the attention of the Government to the delay that has occurred in the repairing of this wharf, and I am sorry that the Minister of Public Works did not display his usual push in looking after it before now. It was brought to his attention over a year ago that a block of this wharf floated into the channel.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It will be all right now.

Mr. MARTIN. I am afraid it will take some time before it will be all right.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. You do not complain of the vote being in the Estimates.

Mr. MARTIN. I complain that the work has been delayed, and I see from a letter in the public press that the Minister of Marine has been writing to some people in Prince Edward Island that $2,500 was to be spent on China Point wharf when the Government are asking for only $2,000 now. When I came to Ottawa at the opening of the session of Parliament I questioned the Minister of Public Works, and I thought he replied that a sum would be in the Estimates and the work commenced last spring so that the farmers of that section of the country would have an opportunity of attending to their shipping. Formerly a steamer used to call there three times a week, but for the last year and this year if I am correctly informed had not been able to call at all on account of the Minister not attending to this work. I have here a letter that appeared in the Charlottetown "Examiner," signed by Spectator, which shows the position of affairs in regard to China Point. The Minister of Marine has written down there that $2,500 would be spent on that wharf, and I find the letter says in one paragraph :

Nothing more was heard about the matter until last fall, when word came from Sir Louis that the sum of $2,500 was to be voted for the purpose of rebuilding our wharf, the work to be completed in time for the spring shipping.

The spring shipping is now over, and this vote instead of being in the Supplementary Estimates should have been in the Estimates for the year ending 30th June, 1898. On the 17th February, I asked this question of the Minister of Public Works :

Mr. MARTIN asked,

1. Is the Government aware that part of the wharf at China Point, in the province of Prince Edward Island, has floated up the river, and that the shipping at the wharf has practically terminated, owing to its bad condition ?

2. Does the Government propose to repair the wharf, in order to be ready for the spring shipping ?

There was, therefore, ample time for the Minister of Public Works to do the work sooner, but I suppose I have not the pull of the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), and am not in a position to kick for a judgeship. I am glad, however, that there is even this $2,000 in the Estimates, but I regret that there is not a much more generous vote and the work finished.

Summerside Harbour, re-vote.....:..... $30,000

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. In 1896 this project with reference to Summerside harbour was commenced, and I believe that $22,000 was proposed to be put in the Estimates by my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) for that purpose. Last year we took a vote for $30,000 and called for tenders, and as the lowest tender came appreciably within the limits of the money we thought it ought to be accepted, but the tenderer would not take the contract. The other tenders were so much higher we thought it better to call for new tenders. Representations were made to the chief engineers as to the necessity for cutting down the specifications so that the work could be brought within more reasonable limits. The Estimates were cut down, but the tenders called for were still so high that the Minister of Public Works did not feel called upon to enter into the contract. He suggested that the chief engineer should try to reduce the extent of the work, and my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) is now taking a revote in the hope that the work can be done without an extremely heavy outlay.

Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.) I applied some time ago to the Minister of Public Works for a little expenditure at Chapel Point wharf in Grand River in my county, and I took it for granted from what the Minister (Mr. Tarte) told me that he was going to put it in the Estimates.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. You do not want a special vote for that small amount. The Minister (Mr. Tarte) has made out an order for it, and it is all right.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is a small amount—$300, I think.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's). In the case of an extension of a wharf, I think a special vote is required. It is not repairs.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The order for it to be done is gone.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's). That is all I require. All I have to say to the hon. Minister is that I thank him very much.

Maria, Que.—Wharf $5,000

Mr. FOSTER. Where is that ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In Bonaventure County—in one of the most important parishes.

Mr. FOSTER. What is to be the total cost ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. $15,000. I hope to reduce the cost of all these works. I hope to build this for $10,000.

Mr. McALISTER. I observe that last year there was an item of $2,800 to provide a proper landing at Cross Point, in Bonaventure County, opposite Campbellton ; but nothing was done, and I see that this year the item is dropped altogether. What is the reason of that ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Because after survey it was found that the cost would be very large indeed.

Mr. McALISTER. Then, why not build it on the instalment plan, like a great many other public works ? I assure the hon. Minister that matters are at present very unsatisfactory. There is a great deal of business transacted between the two places, and the ferry steamer has to anchor three or four hundred yards from the shore and transfer the passengers to small boats. I think this place is of sufficient importance to justify a larger appropriation for this work. I hope the Minister will take the matter into his consideration.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will see what can be done when I go down.

Saguenay River, below Chicoutimi—

Dredging..... $3,000

Mr. FOSTER. How is this dredging done ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. With one of our own dredges, and it is the reason why I want an appropriation. That dredge is now working at Kingston. When the work is completed there, the dredge will be taken down to the Saguenay.

Baie St. Paul, Cap aux Corbeaux—Extension, 200 feet, and repairs to wharf. $10,000

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. At Baie St. Paul there is a pier which was erected about twenty years ago, two miles from the shore above the village, and a few years afterwards, when Mr. Cimon was the member, there was a wharf built at Cap aux Corbeaux. This wharf is too short to afford accommodation for the steamers, and I am extending it.

Mr. CLARKE. Will that work be done by contract ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Deucet's Landing—Dredging..... $4,000

Mr. FOSTER. How are you doing that dredging ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This work will be done by one of the dredges of the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal. It will cost about $63 a day.

Mr. POPE. I do not see anything here for piers in the county of Compton. On the principle laid down by the Minister of Finance, a constituency which pays its share in the expenditure of the country ought to receive some benefit. We have three or four piers in Lake Megantic which need some repairs, and as the constituency does not receive any particular benefit from the expenditure to which it has to contribute, I take this opportunity of asking the hon. Minister to do something for these piers.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have much pleasure in assuring my hon. friend that out of the general vote, I will make all the repairs he requires.

Mr. POPE. I am much obliged to the hon. gentleman. That is all I require.

Mr. GAUVREAU. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I hope that the Minister of Public Works is going to give me the same answer he has just given the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Pope), to the effect that out of this general vote for public works he will make the necessary repairs to the works at Heverte and Trois Pistoles.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. (Translation.) It is with pleasure that I will make those repairs out of the general vote for my department.

Mr. MARCOTTE. (Translation.) I wish to draw the attention of the hon. Minister of Public Works to the fact that there is no appropriation in the Estimates for the works on the River Ste. Anne. The hon. gentleman ought to know that the works built up to now, if not completed, will only prove detrimental. The property along the river is liable at any moment to be destroyed by the current which flows through those works and the mainland. As I do not see any appropriation for those repairs in the Estimates, it is my duty to protest against it. Those works may prove detrimental to the property. A vote of $5,000 had been placed in the Estimates in order to complete those works. The inhabitants of that locality have made considerable preliminary works, and now that you have dropped this vote of $5,000, the least you can do is to repair those works, which threaten to destroy the property.

If the engineers have reported to the Minister that it would involve a much larger expenditure to complete those works, I have no hesitation in saying that they are wrong. Out of the outlay of $22,000 already made, three-fourths of the necessary works have been carried out, and now those works will prove absolutely useless, or rather positively harmful, from your not having spent the five thousand dollars which had been appropriated for their completion. As I said before, this vote of $5,000 would have covered all the expenditure incurred for completing those works.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have already spent $22,000 on these protection works. They are not federal works, and I thought it time to put a stop to the expenditure. The local government and municipal council should provide the money.

Mr. CLARKE. I would ask the hon. Minister what he proposes doing for the protection of the island at Toronto?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My intention is to build this year two or three additional groins out of the vote at my disposal. I intend going up to Toronto in a few days to see about it. I think the groin we erected last year has done very good service, and I think that two or three more would be sufficient.

Mr. CLARKE. Do I understand that it is the intention of the hon. gentleman to construct two or three more groins for the protection of the island this year?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Kingston Harbour—Dredging..... $15,000

Mr. FOSTER. What dredges are these?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. They are our own, and this is to pay the expense of running them.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the use of having in one place a vote for dredging of from $200,000 to $250,000, which gives the idea that that is the whole dredge vote, and then ask for these other votes. We have votes for dredging pure and simple for each province, and then we have these separate items.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have followed the policy pursued in the past, and I do not see that I could adopt any other. In this case, I expected that I would be obliged to hire a dredge. I tried to do so, and found that all the dredges available would cost a vast amount of money and I made up my mind then to take one of our own dredges and do the work ourselves. I may as well make a statement now on this subject. I have carefully discussed this matter with my officers—

Mr. FOSTER. If you go into the general subject now, we shall lose a good deal of time.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I want to say only one word. I wish to speak so that I may get advice. I have ascertained that some of our big dredges working in Ontario, like the "Challenge" and the "Ontario," cost about $9 an hour, while some of the smaller dredges, like the "St. Louis," cost a good deal less. The average expenditure of the large and small is about $55 a day, the biggest costing about $80 or $90, and the smallest about $40.

Mr. BERGERON. The "St. Louis" about $30.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, more than that. I have instructed my officers to keep a strict account of the expenditure of every dredge. I shall try a variety of systems. I intend to hire one or two dredges and put crews on them. In some cases, I shall have our own dredges. In some cases I shall ask for tenders, for instance, at Goderich.

Mr. CLARKE. And Toronto?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have made my arrangements, otherwise I should have been glad to call for tenders there. I shall try the three systems so that we may know exactly where we stand.

Mr. FOSTER. I want the hon. Minister to promise one thing more, and that is that he will not keep his public works estimates until the day before we are going to prorogue, but will bring them down so that we may have a chance to fairly criticise them.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is something in that.

Mr. FOSTER. It is awful.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. At the same time it must not be forgotten that members of Parliament are not always as prompt as we would like them to be. They are very late in coming to us. I would rather discuss my estimates sooner. I agree that these estimates should be brought down earlier.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. Minister said that the large dredges cost about $9 an hour. What is their capacity in cubic yards, ordinarily?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. About 600 yards a day. It varies somewhat. I have figures on this subject which I shall be glad to show my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke).

Mr. McALISTER. I would like to ask the Minister if Restigouche is on the dredging programme for this year?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. McCLEARY. I would like to find out where this Jordan harbour is?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is in the county of Lincoln.

Mr. McCLEARY. Well, I thought I knew the county of Lincoln very well, but I never knew there was such a harbour as Jordan harbour there. I would ask the Minister how much money he intends to spend in that harbour?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This will cover the whole expenditure. The work consists of dredging.

Mr. CLANCY. How much work was done on the Sydenham River last year?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The total amount spent was $20,377. I have not the figures for last year. I shall be glad to give to my hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) the information.

Mr. DAVIS. Where is Sydenham River ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In the county of Bothwell.

Collection of Slide and Boom dues, including salaries of clerks connected with the service $1,000

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is the last item, except one.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman had better allow that one to stand, so that we may have a little discussion in the morning.

Railways and Canals—Capital—Intercolonial Railway—Rolling stock..... $600,000

Mr. FOSTER. This is a very important item. I think if my hon. friend does not object, we had better allow this item to stand, and criticise the Intercolonial Railway at a later time. The ex-Minister of Railways and Canals is not here to-night, and he desires to speak on this item.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There would be some difficulty in acceding to the hon. gentleman's request, unless it were imperatively necessary. I have made arrangements for a meeting of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council to-morrow, having fixed the date when I believed the session would be through. There are a large number of people here from various parts of the Dominion to attend the meeting of that committee, and therefore the hon. gentleman will understand how desirable it is that we should pass these items to-night, otherwise I would be compelled to put all those gentlemen to great inconvenience.

Mr. FOSTER. Under the circumstances, I would suggest that if this item is taken up to-night, we be allowed to discuss the Intercolonial Railway on some other item.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Quite so.

Mr. FOSTER. Will my hon. friend explain what this vote is for ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is to provide for six first class sleepers, four baggage and express, a dining car, 300 box cars, three postals and four snow ploughs. These are not for the purpose of repairing or making up any shortage in the present supplies, so far as the old portion of the road is concerned, but are rendered absolutely necessary by our business on the new portion of the road.

Mr. FOSTER. How much will these cost that have been enumerated ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The money I have stated here. I have made the prices as low as possible, consistent with the business demands of the road.

Mr. TARTE.

Mr. FOSTER. Is this rendered necessary by the lease of the Drummond and Grand Trunk Railway branches ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, by our operating that portion of the railway.

Mr. FOSTER. This is new rolling stock that is necessary in order to operate them ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, and it is much below the average requirements of the road. I have made it, as I said within the narrowest limits.

Mr. BERGERON. Where are these locomotives bought ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I hope to be able to have them all made in Canada. I am now having locomotives made by the Kingston works, and they have given me assurances that they will put their plant into such a shape as that they can turn these out for us with sufficient rapidity to answer our needs.

Mr. McALISTER. These locomotives are not confined to any particular part of the road ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is in respect to the increased demand on that portion of the road.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Have the freight receipts on the Intercolonial Railway increased lately ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I can give my hon. friend a very encouraging statement in that regard. I am not able to state what the earnings and outlay have been since the month of April, because the account for the month of May cannot possibly be tabulated and completed much before the 26th of the present month. I have, however, March and April in full, with the result for the months of March and April compared with the months of March and April during the preceding year. The whole portion of last year from the 1st of July down to the 1st of May of this year, I have also compared with the same months of the year preceding. The total loss on the Intercolonial Railway from July 1, 1896, to April 30, 1897, was $102,028.71 ; the total loss on the road from the same date in 1897 to the same date in 1898, is only $52,894. I have paid, mark you, in the expenditure up to the 30th of April, the rents which are chargeable against us in respect both of the Grand Trunk Railway portion and the Drummond County portion or the line together with the full cost of operating the leased lines. I am able to show an improvement over last year notwithstanding that this is a new road, and notwithstanding that we have only run it for two months I am able to show an improvement to the extent of $50,000. Then there is another important item to be taken into account. I found that for the last five years, or thereabouts, it had been the practice not to do any of the repairs on the line, not to do any ballasting nor to put in any new sleepers or new rails, until after the 1st of July; so that we have been running our road for the first portion of the year after the frost has gone out of the ground, under the disadvantage of not having the road lined up, new ties put in, new rails laid down, ballasting done, or the general work of repairs completed. I resolved last fall that I would ask tenders for ties in the fall, and get them during the winter, and would put them in and do the repairs, and do all the other work which would be required for maintenance, as speedily as possible after the frost went out of the ground. There has been already expended in the months of March and April last over $30,000 which has no corresponding item of outlay for the last four or five years during the same period. I expect before 1st July to lay out the sum of $101,000 for this purpose more than was laid out during the corresponding period of last year, and I am, in consequence of that, expending within the twelve months of the fiscal year, commencing 1st July, 1897, and ending 1st July, 1898, no less than $161,000 for repairs, new ties and other works which I am required to do. So within the twelve months of the current fiscal year I am compressing the work of two years, and I am going to be at a disadvantage in my general statement at the end of this year to a greater extent than I will be in any future year by reason of that fact. I felt it necessary to take the bull by the horns, as it were, in order that the road might have the advantage of being placed in first-class running shape and making all necessary repairs at the earliest possible moment. Notwithstanding the expenditure during March and April, and I have all May and June to come—it is over $30,000—I am $50,000 better off to-day than I was twelve months ago.

Mr. ELLIS. I should like to ask one question with respect to construction. In the early days of the Intercolonial there was a firm at St. John which built locomotives. Representations have been made to me with respect to that firm doing some of the work. Is there any possibility of any part of the work being done in New Brunswick?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There will be, if the firm is prepared to enter into a contract. I asked Mr. Manning for tenders before the locomotives now under construction were commenced, and I could not get any encouragement that the firm would be able to take a contract.

Increased railway accommodation at St.

John $ 250,000

Mr. FOSTER. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will give some information.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This sum is for the purpose of supplying the Intercolonial Railway with sufficient terminal facilities to enable the road to do an ocean trade.

Mr. FOSTER. On which side of the harbour?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. On the east side.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the nature of the work?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. At the present time the Intercolonial has no terminal facilities enabling it to do an ocean business on either side of the harbour at St. John. The wharfs, sheds and facilities for ocean vessel business, which are now possessed by the city, lie on the west side of the harbour, and have been constructed in connection with the terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The city of St. John itself has made a large outlay in that connection. It has spent at least $750,000 on the west side and provided sheds, wharfs and all other necessary buildings, and an elevator of a very superior character, and those facilities have enabled the Canadian Pacific Railway to do a large amount of business at St. John during the winter season as a winter port. I have a statement here which shows the rapid increase with which the winter trade of Canada has grown during the last three years at the terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway. During the winter season of 1895-96 the total shipments from St. John of freight carried by the Canadian Pacific Railway equalled 32,600 tons; in 1896-97 this tonnage had increased to 71,000 tons, in 1897-98 it had grown to the very large proportions of 120,000 tons. So the committee will get an idea of the development, having regard to the fact that this is an entirely new business, and has only sprung up within the last three years. The Intercolonial is so situated that at the present time it is unable to take up any portion of that traffic. I believe the prospects are exceedingly promising for the Intercolonial doing a large portion of the winter trade. We have only, I think, to equip our termini at Halifax and St. John, and with our road and improved equipments generally we shall be able to command a very substantial part, if not the whole of the winter trade of the Dominion. I have had calculations made by my officers with respect to the prospects of our doing this trade. I have also been in communication, among others, with the Canada Atlantic Railway Company, not to mention the Grand Trunk Railway, and the Canada Atlantic has given me to understand that there is no reason to doubt but that the Intercolonial Railway will be in a position to take up a very large amount of traffic which now finds its way to Europe through American ports. If hon. gentle men have visited Parry Sound they will have seen there most extensive arrangements made by Mr. Booth to secure the trade of the west, and it is obvious that the Canada Atlantic Railway is going to be a very heavy freight carrying railway. The road has no United States connections and no American port. It would prefer, under existing circumstances, that the portion of its traffic which does not find its way to the ocean during the summer season, should be carried over our railway and through Canadian ports in the winter, and I believe there is every prospect of our effecting arrangements with the Canada Atlantic people which will ensure to the Intercolonial Railway a very large winter port trade. In regard to the work to be done, we propose to place a wharf, with proper freight sheds and tracks convenient to the elevator at the head of St. John harbour, and almost a stone's throw from our present station. We have our eye upon a property there which I think can be had at a reasonable price. We have an option upon the property from the present owners, and so far as I can form a judgment, and I think so far, as public opinion upon both sides of politics in the city of St. John is concerned the price at which this property has been offered to us is a reasonable price. We propose to acquire that property and we propose to improve the wharf which is now upon it. If we acquire this property we will be able to provide, first, for two of the largest ocean steamships, and in addition to that we will have accommodation at the end of our wharf for any smaller sized steamer which may wish to use it. At present this wharf property is being utilized by the Dominion Atlantic Railway Company, which is paying the owners an annual rental, on a lease terminable at short notice, of $2,400 or $2,600 a year. Therefore, in acquiring this property we will be able not only to afford the necessary berth accommodation for the large steamers which now frequent the port, but we will be able also, we hope, to continue arrangements with the Dominion Atlantic Railway Company, realizing the same rental in respect to this property. I may say the property has been offered to me for $100,000, and situated as it is, and realizing the amount of rental which its owners now receive from it, (I understand about $5,500 a year), I think we are getting it at a price which every one will admit is not unreasonable.

Mr. BERGERON. Who are the owners of that property ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It belongs to a company which, I think, is called the St. John Terminal or Wharf Company.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the hon. gentleman propose to fix the price by valuation ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not yet come to any ab-

Mr. BLAIR.

solite decision as to that. The owners, I think, rather prefer that the property should be valued, that we should expropriate or that we should submit the matter to arbitration. I have some little hesitation myself in concluding that that would be the best course to take. I have had the opinion of some members of the boards of trade ; I have spoken with some of the leading officers of that board, who are not in any way interested in the property ; I have a memorial from the city council of St. John on the subject, and they recommend this site as preferable to any other available site.

Mr. FOSTER. That takes somewhere in the vicinity of $100,000 ; what is to be done with the other $150,000 ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We will have to do a considerable amount of dredging. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) knows that at the end of the harbour there has not been of late years very much dredging done either by the corporation or by private owners, and we will have to spend quite an amount of money in dredging. In addition to repairing and renewing portions of the wharf we will have to build sheds, and change the track or tracks which now lead to the St. John's bridge, so as to enable us to get the necessary length of pier as I have described.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman has got to extend the property after he purchases it ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. How much will the extension be ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think not less than from 40 to 60 feet of extension. We cannot carry it further than sixty feet, as I understand, because we then strike the harbour line, but that extension, with the additional length which we get by changing the location of the tracks, will give us 600 feet berth room on each side.

Mr. FOSTER. How much will it cost to build the extension and how much will it cost to do the dredging ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not asking sufficient to complete the work this year ?

Mr. FOSTER. Is this $250,000 not sufficient ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. FOSTER. How much is the estimated cost ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. According to the estimates of my officers, it will take to complete the work all of half a million dollars. $250,000 is all I require this year.

Mr. McALISTER. Notwithstanding that, owing to its geographical position, it is better than any other place that could be secured for the same money.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Unquestionably.

Mr. BERGERON. Is this elevator at St. John, for which you ask $75,000, to be built in the same place?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Did the city of St. John give a bonus.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have not asked the city of St. John to give a bonus, because they have already laid out over three quarters of a million of dollars, and before their engagements are carried out it may be their outlay will approach a million of money. The city of St. John has shown a spirit of enterprise which is without parallel in any other portion of Canada.

Mr. MILLS. There is a vote here for an elevator at Halifax. What has changed the policy of the Liberal party with reference to the elevator at Halifax. I can remember the time when the former elevator at Halifax was held up to ridicule and derision. Has anything new transpired to change the policy of the Liberal party in that respect?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There has been a good deal of development in Canada within the last two or three years.

Mr. MILLS. Is that all?

Mr. SPROULE. What is the capacity of this elevator at St. John?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have not proposed to embark in the matter of elevators on a large scale. The information which I have leads me to anticipate that we can for this sum provide elevator accommodation to the extent of 300,000 bushels. Our Halifax friends are rather more ambitious than that. They propose by supplementing the sum we are granting here, to increase the elevator accommodation at their port. They would like to have very much more accommodation for three-quarters of a million bushels. But I do not propose to go beyond what would be reasonable and prudent at the outset. I am advised that it is possible for us to put up elevators of such a description as will be capable of extension if the business should justify it.

Mr. McALISTER. I would ask the hon. Minister of Railways whether it is the intention to close Nash's Creek and Moffat Stations in the county of Restigouche, as telegraph stations.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Oh, no.

Galops Canal—To pay J. G. Snetsinger interest on $12,000 from the date of expropriation of his property, 12th January, 1894, to date of payment, 13th August, 1897 $2,532

Mr. FOSTER. What is the explanation of that?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is the balance of interest which Mr. Snetsinger is entitled to, growing out of the expropriation of his property for canal purposes at Cornwall. The valuers estimated his mill buildings at $12,000. The property was taken, but the amount was not paid. He claimed some damages in respect of the loss of a water privilege, which remained unsettled, and I think at this moment the question is in litigation. But the valuers placed $12,000 value on the mill, and the payment was withheld for the period mentioned in the item. The amount was paid on the 13th of August, 1897, but the property was taken on the 12th of January, 1894.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the reason he was not paid? Did the department think the amount was too large?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, but the department thought that Mr. Snetsinger ought to have been willing to give a discharge in respect of his water privilege as well as in respect of the mill.

Mr. FOSTER. Was the expropriation for both the mill and the water power?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think the property was all expropriated together.

Mr. FOSTER. Then the $12,000 was paid for the whole expropriation?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, the valuator placed the $12,000 on the mill alone, and he declined to place any estimate on the water privilege. Mr. Snetsinger will say whether that is correct.

Mr. SNETSINGER. That is correct. The Dominion Government claimed that they owned the water power themselves. I had the lease from the Ontario Government, but the late Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) told me, and also Mr. Wood, the valuator, that he would not consent to say that I had the privilege at all. He said he thought it was a Dominion and not a local water privilege, and I asked the Government to put a value on the mill itself. They did so, and I accepted that value. That was in September, 1893, and not in January, 1894.

Mr. FOSTER. Was the mill running?

Mr. SNETSINGER. Yes, a running mill.

Mr. FOSTER. And it stopped running ?

Mr. SNETSINGER. Yes.

Chambly—To continue and complete the drainage works and culverts at St. Johns, P.Q..... $14,000

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is a revote.

Mr. BERGERON. Was any money spent before that for the same object ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have spent $21,000, and this $14,000 will complete the work, the total costing $35,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Last year we voted $25,000 for something of the same kind at Valleyfield. I suppose this amount of money has been paid over to the town ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Has there been any condition attached to the payment of the money ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We only consented to pay the amount on the town undertaking to relieve us for all time from any future liability. We have a document to that effect.

Mr. BERGERON. Has the town consented to that ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. If they have done so, I think it is a great mistake. If they consented, they must have done so under pressure. I do not suppose the same condition exists in this case. The hon. gentleman understands perfectly that it is a great responsibility which they have taken on their shoulders in freeing the Government from any responsibility in the future.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There was no pressure whatever brought on them. The town was receiving from the Government $500 a year, and instead of that, they simply asked for this sum, which they were glad indeed to get.

Mr. BERGERON. They were receiving $500 per year, which capitalized would mean $12,500, and in giving them $25,000, you are really only giving them $12,500.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. They asked that amount, and were very glad to get it.

Mr. BERGERON. They asked for a good deal more than that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I can assure you it is all closed now.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. And they are very thankful.

Mr. SNETSINGER.

Mr. BERGERON. They were here and did all in their power to prevent that condition being attached to the grant of money.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, they did not ask that.

Mr. BERGERON. The mayor told me they did.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The mayor is not in such close relations with my hon. friend that he would tell him many secrets.

Mr. BERGERON. He told me so here, and asked me to help him in preventing the Government attaching that condition.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend could not do it.

Mr. BERGERON. I know that, but it is my privilege, as a member, to say what I like about it. It was a bad thing to attach that other condition to the grant.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The mayor of Valleyfield knows what he is about.

Welland Canal..... $77,100

Mr. McCLEARY. I wish to ask a question with reference to a change made in the collector's office at Port Colborne. I asked the Minister about a change made in connection with one Thomas O'Neill. I wanted to know when he was removed and upon whose advice, and if he had been reinstated and removed again.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. A vacancy occurred since Mr. O'Neill's removal by Mr. Galbraith becoming a candidate. Before we made a permanent appointment, we were called upon by the superintending engineer to nominate some one for temporary employment. O'Neill was taken on again, on the distinct understanding that he would not be employed permanently. He came on with that understanding and remained until a final appointment was made of a person by the name of Scholey.

Mr. McCLEARY. On whose recommendation ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would ask the hon. gentleman not to press that question, because we have to look for advice to those in whom we have confidence, and do not disclose who their names are.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. O'Neill was put into the office, the hon. Minister has told us, on the recommendation of the superintending engineer. That is not the information I had. He went on Thursday morning and remained until Friday night, when Mr. Scholey was recommended by Mr. German, and Mr. Misel was recommended by Mr. Lowell. Mr. Misel got the appointment at first, but Mr. German came to Ottawa and countermanded that appointment, and got his man in. It is just to satisfy the hon. gentleman's friends in Port Colborne that I make the inquiry.

To pay amounts remaining unpaid of sum voted by 52 Vic., chap. 3, and 53 Vic., chap. 2, in aid of the Central Railway Company of New Brunswick, the date for finishing work named in contract having expired before final completion thereof, this sum being acknowledged as due, notwithstanding that the changes made in the specifications for the work were not legally authorized $61,461

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is a sum which remains unpaid on the subsidies granted some years ago to the Central Railway Company. The road is about 44 miles in length, a large portion was built under contract and specifications—more than half of it, at all events, sufficient to entitle the company to be paid $75,000 on account of about $130,000, which will be the whole amount in subsidies when the work is completed. The company applied to the department for permission to place some few trestles on the lines instead of bridges, as were required by the specifications, pointing to the other railways of the same class and character which were practically branch lines of the Intercolonial. We had the matter looked into, and the engineer went over the road and made a report. It would be in accordance with usage and precedent if some of the concessions which the company asked for were conceded, and they were. An Order in Council was passed purporting to amend the specifications in respect of these trestles, and the work went on. On the strength of that Order in Council money was spent by the people concerned in building the road, and the road was brought fully up to the requirements of the amended specifications. When the matter went to the Auditor General for payment, he called attention to the fact that the amendments made by the Order in Council were not legally authorized, or, in other words, that the amendments to the specifications could not then be made by reason of the fact that the time specified in the contract and Act for fully completing the work had lapsed. So it has become necessary to ask Parliament to authorize the payment of this amount. The engineer's reports show that the work has been completed up to the specifications.

Mr. FOSTER. I think we had better wait until to-morrow for the rest.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) has been so reasonable, outside of the early stages of the Supply, that if he suggests we should adjourn, I shall not oppose it.

Mr. FOSTER. No, Mr. Chairman, I have not been reasonable. It has just been simply because of physical weariness that we are obliged to put through $3,000,000 without any chance for criticism at all. But I give fair notice to my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) that if I am living and have any endurance at all, this thing shall not, so far as I am concerned, ever take place in this Parliament again, while I am in the Opposition. If the Government will not bring down its Estimates, new entirely to the House, in reasonable time and give the members time to study them and criticise them while the House is a House; why, I think I can get enough men to stay with me to make it pretty interesting for the Government that tries this kind of thing again. I am not doing this because it is reasonable, but because I am tired out.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend is so strong in his sense of duty, that I am sure he would fight this thing out all summer, and all winter, too, if he were not pretty confident that with such a good Government in power, it is all right to pass these Estimates.

Mr. FOSTER. It is the worst Government I ever knew, so far as Estimates are concerned.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think the hon. gentleman is right on one point—that we should now adjourn.

Resolutions to be reported.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 1.25 a.m. (Friday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 10th June, 1898.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PRAYERS.

LAW CLERK—INDIAN DEPARTMENT.

Mr. DAVIN. I should like to ask the Government whether it is correct that Reginald Rimmer, of Regina, who was secretary of the Reform Association during the last election, has been appointed Law Clerk at Ottawa, at a salary of $2,000. Has he been appointed Law Clerk of the House of Commons, or what is the explanation?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). He has been appointed Law Clerk of the Indian Department.

Mr. DAVIN. Is his salary $2,000?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

INQUIRY RESPECTING RETURNS.

Mr. MARTIN. I desire again to call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to a return promised regarding expenditures on private piers and wharfs.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). The Deputy Minister informed me that he had seen the hon. gentleman and told him that the return was being prepared as rapidly as possible.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 168) respecting the Manitoba School Fund.—(Mr. Fielding.)

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS AMENDMENT ACT.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House resolve itself into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:—

That it is expedient to provide that for the present session of Parliament and for each session of Parliament hereafter held, the deduction of eight dollars per day mentioned in section twenty-six of the Act respecting the Senate and House of Commons, being chapter eleven of the Revised Statutes, shall not be made for fifteen days in the case of a member who has been absent from a sitting of the House of which he is a member, or of some committee thereof, during such number of days; but this provision shall not operate to extend the maximum amount mentioned in section twenty-five of the said Act, nor in the case of a member elected since the commencement of the present or of any subsequent session shall it apply to days prior to his election.

He said: It has been the custom from time to time to introduce a resolution and Bill at the close of the session, granting a certain number of days during which a member may be absent without loss of indemnity. Instead of passing this resolution annually, it is proposed to fix a certain maximum, and that maximum we have fixed at fifteen days.

Mr. FOSTER. What has been the usual number of days?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Twelve last year.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman proposes to advance the time from twelve days to fifteen days. He always goes one better.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Several hon. gentlemen opposite, for whom I have the highest respect, have asked that a longer time than fifteen days be allowed, and I have endeavoured to strike a happy medium.

Mr. OLIVER. For myself, and on behalf of other members who live at long distances from Ottawa, I desire to register my objection to this extension of leave of absence, and also to its being made permanent. I think perhaps the majority of the members who reside within a comparatively short distance from the Capital hardly appreciate the position in which those of us who live at a very long distance from here are placed by the extension of the session which occurs by reason of the frequent absence of members who live near the Capital in attending to their own business, while the business they should attend to in Parliament is dragging on account of their absence. There are only a few members who live at a very great distance from Ottawa.

Mr. DAVIN.

An hon. MEMBER. You get more mileage.

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. gentleman says we make it up in mileage. I should like to put the matter in this way. We are not here working on salary. We have our own private business to attend to, and, as we do not always expect to be members of Parliament, if we do not keep up our private business during the period we are members, we lose our means of livelihood. It is more than any matter of salary. It is a matter not only of our present, but of our future that is involved. As members who live near the Capital do not at all—and this is not due to bad intentions—appreciate the position in which we are placed, I take this opportunity of placing it before them. Any member may make arrangements to carry on his business for a reasonable period during his absence, and if so, the indemnity received is ample; but if the time is extended, as it has been extended this year, to a period of practically five months, it is impossible for any member, under ordinary circumstances, to arrange for a proper carrying on of his business in his absence for that period. So it is more than a matter of indemnity, mileage or money payment; it is a matter involving to those living at a distance the ruin of their business, if the session is continued beyond a reasonable time. Having taken upon ourselves the responsibilities of members of Parliament, we are prepared to sustain that loss, if it is the interest of the country. If public business require our attendance during five, or even six months, we are prepared to give it, for we are under contract with the people to render it; but if it is extended to merely meet the views of private members who are able, by reason of living near the Capital, to go home and attend to their business while they are supposed to be attending to the country's business, we object to it, and protest against it most strongly. Every measure which tends to relieve members of Parliament from their absolute duty of attending here day after day is an injustice to those who are unable, owing to their circumstances, to avail themselves of the privilege those members enjoy. I think it is only just and fair that the position of hon. members from a distance should be placed before the House for the consideration of private members and the Government, so that they will understand the very great injustice being done to those members by any unnecessary extension of the term of Parliament.

Resolution considered in committee, reported, read the second time, and concurred in.

FIRST READING.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE introduced Bill (No. 173) further to amend the Act respecting the Senate and House of Commons.

SUPPLY.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—MR. MARCOTTE AND "LA PATRIE."

Mr. MARCOTTE. (Translation.) Before the House again resolves itself into Committee of Supply, I wish to call attention on an injurious editorial published in "La Patrie," of Montreal. I think it well first to read this attack, and then register my protest. This is what "La Patrie" says:

I have too much respect for my readers to reproduce in your columns the medley of words vomited out yesterday afternoon by the member for Champlain. It would be a hopeless task for one to hunt for one single correct grammatical expression in the dishevelled harangue delivered by Mr. Marcotte and reported yesterday in "Hansard." It is simply a disgrace for the House, and one is at a loss to understand how a man who has gone through a complete curriculum can make use of such odd and trivial language as that which is habitually used on the floor of the House by the holy man who represents in Parliament the most pious of all constituencies in the religious district of Three Rivers.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to protest against the foul expressions made use of by the "Patrie" in this article. Possibly, the language which I have used might have been more correct; but I may say that upon the occasion alluded to I did give utterance to my principles and views, as every hon. member is entitled to do, on the floor of this House. I dare say that such words as those used by that journal should not find their way into the columns of a paper which is widely circulated throughout the country. That is a poor way of educating the masses. In my opinion, a paper which is received and read by respectable families should not presume to publish such articles. There is no family with the least notion of good breeding, that would dare use such expressions as those used in that article.

I protest against the rude language used in that article, which should not have appeared in a journal possessed of the least self-respect, and which ought not to be read by any one who has any self-respect.

LAW CLERK, INDIAN DEPARTMENT— APPOINTMENT OF MR. RIMMER.

Mr. DAVIN. Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) what is the necessity of this new office that is created for Mr. Reginald Rimmer. It is apparently a new office. In the Estimates for 1896-97 we have an item of $400 for a solicitor in the Indian Affairs Department, but I cannot find there is provision for a law clerk. I would like to know what new necessity has arisen for a law clerk at $2,000 a year to advise the Indian Department. I feel bitterly about the scamping way that these Estimates have been treated in this House for the last fortnight. The Opposition has almost, for seven or eight days abandoned its functions to criticise these atrocious Estimates. What reason has the Minister for the employment of Mr. Reginald Rimmer, a raw lawyer at $2,000 a year to advise him with regard to Indian Affairs?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). There are lawyers from Regina and lawyers from Regina.

Mr. DAVIN. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. So far as the appropriation for the law clerk for the Indian Department is concerned, that appropriation was made last session, and it was fully explained in the House at the time. The appropriation was made for the current year, 1896-97, and when it was made the appropriation for a solicitor for the Indian Department to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) has referred, was struck out. I went fully, at that time, into the necessity for the appointment of a law clerk in the Indian Department. I did not make the appointment until the present time because of the fact that for various reasons I was unable to go carefully into many legal complications which have arisen in connection with matters in the Indian branch, and which have been existing for many years. I stated at the time this appropriation was made that a law clerk was very necessary; I say now that a law clerk is very necessary, and that is why he was appointed. When I say he has been appointed I am perhaps not correct, for the appointment has not yet been made, but the appointment will be made and I feel satisfied that the lawyer from Regina to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) refers will fill the position very acceptably and very ably. There are no doubt excellent reasons why my hon. friend (Mr. Davin) does not like the appointment to be made as it has been made, and does not like the selection; but when I make an appointment for my hon. friend's district I cannot always be expected to meet his views with regard to the personnel of the appointee. The appropriation was made for last year and the same appropriation will be found in the Estimates this year.

Mr. DAVIN. Well, Mr. Speaker, what I have to say is this—

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) has spoken.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to know how many more presidents of Reform Associations we will have to pension before this Parliament has expired.

The PRIME MINISTER. That depends altogether on the legal qualifications of the presidents of Reform associations. I must protest against the expression used by my hon. friend from West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) when he spoke of a raw lawyer from Regina. It does not follow that because anything comes from Regina that it is raw, any more in law than in legislation.

Mr. DAVIN. It does not follow that if it comes from Regina it is not raw, or that it is not ripe, either.

NORTH-WEST MOUNTED POLICE— REPORTED LOSS OF MEN.

Mr. HUGHES. I received an intimation this morning that a young man, a former member of the battalion I have the honour to command, and a resident of North Victoria, who has joined the Mounted Police, was lost, with other mounted police, in one of the passes of the Yukon. I ask the Minister of the Interior if there is any truth in the report.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I received a long report from Major Walsh, who was at the scene of the snowslide referred to in the Chilkoot Pass a few days after the accident took place. He said nothing about any of the policemen having suffered, and, so far as I know, no report has been received which indicates that this man has met his death at the place referred to.

Motion agreed to, and the House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

For a direct fortnightly steam service between Montreal, Quebec and Manchester, England, during the summer season, and between St. John, Halifax and Manchester during the winter season... $38,933 33

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). This, as the House will observe, is a new service. It is thought that very considerable advantage will result from communication direct with Manchester which, as the House knows, is the centre of an enormous consuming population; about 8,000,000 people are represented to be located within some 25 or 30 miles of that city. The steamers will call at our winter ports during the winter season. It is not proposed, I may state, to make this a permanent thing; it is given simply to encourage the creation of a line during the next two or three years.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there any provision for cold storage on these steamers in summer?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. These vessels, both summer and winter, will have refrigerator apparatus and proper cold storage.

Mr. FOSTER. Has any agreement been made with any line of steamers?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I think we will arrange with the Manchester Steamship Company, in which the corporation of Manchester are largely interested, as well as a large number of very prominent English shippers. They will furnish vessels of very large capacity, able to carry 8,000 or 8,500 tons.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the Minister not going to call for tenders for this service.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. We applied to parties in the business, but there were none disposed to offer for it. We did not call for tenders.

Mr. FOSTER. Then how does my hon. friend propose to fix the proper amount of subsidy?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. That was a matter of detail and bargain. They asked a great deal more, and we reduced them, eventually, to the sum of £8,000 sterling per annum, which we now suggest for the consideration of the House. Of course, as I say, it is not intended to be a permanent service. It is done for the purpose of encouraging the opening up of this service. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) is aware that in the summer, going to Montreal, we probably would have no trouble in obtaining steamers enough. The real need for the subsidy lies in the necessity of providing a winter service from the ports of St. John or Halifax.

Mr. FOSTER. Has any contract been entered into?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It is not decided yet, but the terms of contract have been submitted, and will be agreed to, I think.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the agreement been made?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The agreement has been made, but it is not yet executed. The contract is now being sent forward to these people for their consideration, subject to the approval of Parliament, of course,

Mr. FOSTER. We should have a very full explanation as to what induced the Government to enter into a private contract for a steamship service. My hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright) will see that this is a new departure as far as steamship subsidies are concerned. I am not aware that we have in these important routes, or even in the less important routes, ever violated the principle of calling for tenders and getting a competitive price.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I think that has not always been carried out.

Mr. FOSTER. If it has not, my hon. friend will please point out an instance which it has not. I know he will agree with me that it has been the rule, and I would like to know when, on any important service of this kind, tenders have not been called for, and the contract awarded according to tender. It may be very well, after you have called for tenders and fixed the price, to renew a contract in some cases at the old prices; but even in important cases of renewal, my own practice was invariably to call for tenders again. Only this year my hon. friend has arranged several steamship routes, and in every case it has been done by tender. When the West India service was instituted, it was not done by private contract with any firm of vessel owners, but by public tender and competition, and very keen competition at that. In fact, tenders were twice asked for. For the service between Campbellton and Dalhousie and Gaspé my hon. friend this year followed the rule and called for tenders. The present case is an entirely new departure. There may be very good reasons for it, but they ought to be very good reasons if we are going to have the principle of calling for tenders for steamship services entirely ignored. There are lines of vessels, enterprising and numerous, with Canadian capital in them, or with English and Canadian capital combined; but none of these, it seems, have been given an opportunity of bidding for this service, although they have been putting their capital and enterprise into the development of Canadian trade for very many years. The Government seem to have embarked on a crusade for the utter abolition of the principle of competition in these matters. It is becoming a matter simply of private bargain; and when the bargains, as far as the Government can do it, are fully carried out, they come down to Parliament and ask us simply to vote the money, and we have to vote it—the protest of the Opposition goes for nothing. My hon. friend is the last man in the Cabinet, I would have supposed, who would have given his influence to this system; but he seems to have capitulated to the other members of the Cabinet.

I cannot think of a single example in which we have violated that principle—certainly not for any important service.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I think I shall be able to produce some cases in which it has been done. At the same time, I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that where circumstances permit, tenders should be asked for. We were obliged, however, in this case, to decide the matter in a very short time; and I think the object to be attained, the service which is to be rendered, the character and size of the vessels, and all the incidental circumstances taken together, will show that it is a cheap service, as measured by the sums we pay for other services of a similar kind. Of course, the hon. gentleman is perfectly justified in the criticism he has made; I do not at all deny it. But I may point out that for the sum of £8,000 sterling we get a fortnightly service, with vessels of the size I have described, and having to call during the winter at the ports of the St. John and Halifax, and it could hardly by any possibility have been obtained for less. We made a good many inquiries of the parties in the trade in Montreal, and not one of them appeared in the slightest degree disposed to tender for this service. In fact, most of them expressed their opinion to us that the service on the terms we were demanding it, would be necessarily carried on at a loss for a considerable time. The hon. gentleman is aware that the corporation of Manchester have expended a very large sum of money in opening up navigation to Manchester. He is also aware that there is a special advantage, as regards the development of our peculiar trade, in getting access to a centre of population like Manchester; and, while I do not at all desire to contend that as a general rule we should depart from the proper and wholesome principle of calling for tenders, I think that under the circumstances we would have incurred a serious loss if we had allowed this year to elapse, as we would have had to do, if we had not concluded the bargain with these parties. But I admit candidly that the hon. gentleman is perfectly right that special circumstances only should justify a departure from the rule.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend is very frank in admitting that a principle is right, and he is equally frank in violating it. I do not see where the reparation is made by that kind of proceeding. The hon. gentleman rises and says frankly, "As I am wrong"—

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I did not say that. I said that as a general rule no doubt tenders ought to be called for. But the hon. gentleman is an old public man, and he knows that there are cases constantly arising in which it is not for the public interest to call for tenders, but to make the best bargain you can.

Of course, the House can decide whether the Government have done right or wrong. The hon. gentleman has stated what the rule should be ; but if under special circumstances the Government think it is the public interest to depart from it, and state the matter to the House, and the House approves of their proceeding, then I do not think it is liable to criticism.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend pursues a line of action which the Government are perfectly at liberty to take at any time they please, and which they are taking most systematically. We have had many cases of this kind during the session. In most cases the Minister would rise and would plead : "Yes, the general rule is a good one : but this is a case of urgency : I believe I have received good value for the money, just as good as if I had called for tender ; perhaps I can show the House that I can even save money by it ; and under these circumstances I thought it best not to call for tenders." That was the plea of the Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden), in the case of the $32,000 worth of supplies, although he had time in which to call for tenders. He actually placed the orders without advertising for tenders or calling for tenders in any way—without even sending his private circular to different people in the same line. And he comes down to his followers in the House and asks them to support him in this, and they have supported him. The contracts for dredging have been of the same kind. I suppose, if we had a little time, and the Government had not adopted the policy of crowding the whole debate on the Supplementary Estimates, practically on the whole of the Estimates—within the last five or ten days of the session, I have no doubt that the Opposition would have been able to point out case after case of the same kind. My hon. friend says that circumstances in this case made it better for the Government to enter into a private bargain. Well, there may be occasions in which this might be pleaded : but the importance of the rule and the security to the country by carrying out the rule, is so great and so paramount, that I am inclined to think the occasions are very few, if there are any at all, in which such a wholesome rule should be violated. If the Ministry violated it once on the plea that they thought it best, that is an argument that can be used in any case, and it is being used very frequently by hon. gentlemen opposite. I do not think the hon. gentleman has given us in this case any particulars which would enable the House to judge as to the service—the quality of the vessels, the size of the vessels, and so on.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I mentioned that they were 8,500 tons carrying capacity, and they will have an average speed of 12 knots.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Mr. FOSTER. What does the contract bind them to ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. That is what they are bound to. I have sent for the contract.

Mr. FOSTER. And does an old parliamentarian like my hon. friend, with the reputation and character of twenty-five or thirty years of parliamentary practice, come down with a private contract, and with an estimate resulting from a private contract, and is he asking this House, just one day before the last of the session, to vote that amount of money, and has not even yet laid the contract or the papers on the Table.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I have just sent for it and will give it to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster).

Mr. FOSTER. Just sent for it ? And yet the hon. gentleman asks for the vote—

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) knows that his friends have wasted the time of the House as it never was wasted before. We began on the 3rd of April in this Committee of Supply and here we are on the 10th June with our business still unfinished. I venture to say that if, instead of wasting the time as it has been wasted—not so much by himself as by those behind him—in perfectly trivial discussion, they had criticised the Estimates in a reasonable and business like fashion, there would not have been any difficulty in this matter. But the time has been taken up by individual members in the discussion of irrelevant and trivial matters that ought not to occupy our attention.

Mr. FOSTER. I have just taken the hon. gentleman to task as an old parliamentarian, as a former Finance Minister, and as one of the foremost men in the Cabinet in the political life of this country—I am quite willing to pay him that tribute, and it is an honest and hearty one. He comes down the day before we are to prorogue and asks us to accept a private arrangement and to pay $39,000 or $40,000 on it for two or three years, and he has not even had the courtesy, to say nothing else of it, to lay a single paper with reference to the negotiations, the agreement and the contract on the Table. He has an excuse to offer for it, and I leave the House and the country to judge the value of it. His excuse is that we have wasted the time of the House, and that he has not been able to lay these papers and that contract on the Table. Suppose we had talked here for sixty days upon utterly trivial subjects, need that have prevented him from laying these papers on the Table of the House ?

But he makes this display of fire-works to distract the attention and give him a cover under which to retire. That was not worthy of him. His excuse is no excuse at all. He might have slipped in between the intervals of talk, he might have even slipped in when the talk was going on, and laid the papers on the Table telling us that they were important and asking our consideration of them. We have wasted the time of the House? I deny and repel that statement. Hon. gentlemen opposite have occupied just as much time as we have on this side. How have we been treated as a Parliament? How have we on this side been treated as an Opposition? Seven days before this Parliament was to meet, these precious gentlemen opposite made a private contract with Messrs. Mann & Mackenzie, made it in the very face of the meeting of Parliament, calling for no tender, shutting out eligible men who would have tendered had they known, guarding the doors so that no information should get out and no prospective contractor could get in, except the favoured Mann & Mackenzie. And as part of this bargain they sought to give away an immense part of the country's domain, virtually saying to Parliament: We will do this in your very face and before your very eyes, but without consulting you. They precipitated a long discussion upon that subject: and they taunt us with wasting the time of the House because we discussed this measure thoroughly. We discussed it so well that throughout this country honest Liberals and honest Conservatives alike condemn the course that these hon. gentlemen pursue. They came with a plea of starvation in the Yukon district, and events have proved that there has been no starvation and no prospect of it. They came with a plea of great difficulties amounting to revolution in that country, and time has failed to justify what they said. They came with a plea that no men but Messrs. Mann & Mackenzie were capable of carrying out that contract, and they have found since it was made known to the world that men in every way equal to Mann & Mackenzie were ready to undertake the work at half, yes, at one-tenth that of the cost to the country that these gentlemen proposed. And yet they say that we have trivially wasted the time of the House. What is the use of going any further with the acts of the hon. gentlemen? And after this has been tested by two and a half months of time, the Government themselves have admitted that their action was foolish and unnecessary, that there was nothing in their pleas of urgency—for they have not proposed any reasonable scheme to take the place of the unreasonable scheme which they put before this House in the early part of the session. Why, Mr. Chairman, I cannot find words properly to express my feeling with regard to the way these hon. gentlemen have treated this House. Sir, in old times Estimates were kept back and were not gone into until the Budget Speech had been delivered and the greater part of the session had passed. In my time all that was completely reversed, and the Estimates were brought down within ten days or a fortnight after the opening of the session. My hon. friend can go through the records of Parliament and he will find that for the last six years before the hon. gentlemen came in that was the rule in this House. This gave members of the House an opportunity to get into the discussion of the Estimates and the discussion of grievances early in the session. How has it been this year? Why, Sir, two-thirds of the whole sum that hon. gentlemen have asked for had to be voted after the prorogation was in view, when members as I have said over and over again were either at their homes or so anxious to go to their homes that there could be no fair criticism of these expenditures. And yet the hon. gentlemen opposite say that we have wasted the time; and my hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright) has the poor excuse of getting a little angry and making this display of fire-works hoping to be lost sight of in the temporary brilliancy that he has created—only to be exposed, because, as I have said, he could have laid that agreement and contract on the Table of the House in an interval of the discussion at any time.

THE MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I mentioned to the hon. gentleman that the contract had not been concluded. Now, the hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that, until a contract is concluded, it is not parliamentary usage to lay it on the Table of the House. Had it been concluded I should at once have laid it on the Table.

MR. FOSTER. There must be an agreement which is virtually the contract. The hon. gentleman himself admitted that.

THE MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I have not the slightest objection, if the hon. gentleman wishes to hand him a copy of the draft contract which is under consideration. But I must say to him that I do not think his memory, any more than mine, will furnish an instance in which an inchoate contract has been laid on the Table.

MR. FOSTER. But will the hon. gentleman deny that the agreement is actually made in good faith and that this vote is based upon it?

THE MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Of course, we would not bring down a vote unless we had reason to believe it would be carried out, and we do not intend to pay more than the sum estimated. But the hon. gentleman knows that, until the contract is signed by both parties it is not parliamentary custom nor would it be correct to lay it on the Table of the House.

MR. FOSTER. And the hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) knows also that in the case of ocean contracts, it has been claimed—I think he himself has moved an amendment that the contract should not be signed until it was presented to the House. This is not so important as a fast line contract but it involves the same principle. What are we voting on? We do not know the conditions of the service or the strictness with what is practically a contract is drawn. We are asked to put a service into operation without knowing any of these conditions. My hon. friend knows I am not criticising this in a spirit of unfairness, but I do think that he has put himself in a false position and he deserves to be roundly scored for it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) and those associated with him seem to suffer from a very severe attack of Mackenzie & Mann on the brain.

Mr. FOSTER. Probably some disappointed parties are suffering just as acutely.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There are some disappointed parties in the matter and none more so than those who opposed the Mackenzie & Mann contract. Whether we undertake to discuss in this House the construction of a fence or the granting of a steamship subsidy, my hon. friend or some of his colleagues will drift back to this question of Mackenzie & Mann.

The hon. gentleman and those associated with him have good reason for that. They know the country is holding them responsible for what occurred. They know that the hon. gentlemen who opposed the Mackenzie & Mann contract are bitterly regretting the course they pursued, because they know that the public opinion of this country is holding them responsible for the policy which has prevented the proper opening up for this year of the Yukon district, which is checking Canadian progress, which is diverting the trade which should be done by the Canadian people into the hands of the people of the United States; and to-day the feeling of the Conservative party is that the Government should come to their relief and do something to pull them out of the hole into which they have placed themselves by their course. But, Sir, the Government do not propose to relieve them from the burden they have taken upon themselves; they have assumed the responsibility of preventing this great development of the interests of Canada in the current year, they are taking the chances of the future. On them be the responsibility, and the country will hold them to account for it.

Mr. MILLS. It is all right.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is not all right, because, reading the Conservative press from day to day, we find their organs begging this Government to come down with a new Yukon Bill. But that is not the point.

Mr. FOSTER.

My hon. friend always wants to talk of Mackenzie & Mann, but we had better talk steamship subsidies. The ex-Minister of Finance gave us an exhibition of fireworks based on the assumption that the contract had not been submitted to Parliament. But my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce disposed of all that when he pointed out that the contract is not yet signed. The draft contract is now on the Table, but it will give the hon. gentleman little more information than he has already received from the statement of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. What does this item say? It declares: "For a direct fortnightly steamship service between Montreal, Quebec and Manchester, England, during the summer season, and between St. John, Halifax and Manchester during the winter season, $38,933." Now, the hon. gentleman has, in addition to that, what the Minister of Trade and Commerce has said, that this is a contract for the short period of three years, that the amount stated there, $38,933, is equivalent to £8,000 sterling, that the steamers are to have a carrying capacity of 8,000 or 8,500 tons, and a speed of not less than 12 knots. All these facts have been stated to the House, and if they were repeated 15,000 times would convey no more information than they now convey. The hon. gentleman tries to convey the impression that there has been some concealment of information from the House. There are several reasons why this contract should be made in the way it is now proposed. When I was in England last year I was asked to visit the Manchester ship canal. During my visit there I was waited upon by a deputation of representative men in the town hall of Manchester, who were anxious to open up Canadian trade. They wanted to know if something could not be done to bring the products of Canada into that great centre of the consuming masses of England. I was much impressed with the representations that they made. Professor Robertson had been over there a short time before, and given them a great deal of information about the valuable agricultural resources of Canada, and of the value of Canadian trade. They wanted to trade with Canada, they wanted to know about what had been done, they wanted to know if we would not grant a steamship subsidy. I told them that the Government of Canada was not in the habit of looking around to find parties to whom to offer these subsidies, but that if they had any proposal, any scheme to submit, it would receive consideration. The promoters of the Manchester ship canal thought that it was better to establish a company over there. The ex-Minister of Finance said that many Canadian companies would have been glad to undertake this business. As a matter of fact, when the moment for decision came, we did make inquiries respecting Canadian companies, and we had good reason to believe that no Canadian company would undertake to do the service for the amount that we proposed. But I do not hesitate in saying that even though we had a Canadian company offering to do the work, it is to the advantage of Canada that this contract should be given to this company, because it is composed of Manchester people who are interested in the development of trade. They will not have merely the interest of ordinary shareholders in a commercial company, but they will have the additional interest of citizens of Manchester, because the corporation of the Manchester ship canal are largely interested in it through their representative men. These men have great knowledge of trade, and the distribution of products to the Manchester population, and it is natural that this project should have the sympathy of the leading representatives of the Manchester people. That is what we have accomplished by this contract. I am satisfied that hon. gentlemen will appreciate the value of these considerations, and in doing so, they will come to the conclusion that even if we had a Canadian company offering to do the work, it would still be to the advantage of the trade of Canada to accept the proposal that has been made to us by these Manchester gentlemen.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce apologized for what he did, but the Minister of Finance triumphs in it. The Minister of Trade and Commerce says that the proper thing is to ask for tenders, and he excuses himself for not doing so. But, Sir, as he sometimes makes classical references, his position is that of a Latin writer, Ovid, not remarkable for gravity, but rather for levity: Video meliora proboque Deteriora sequor. I will translate that for the benefit of hon. gentleman opposite: "I see and approve the good, and I follow the bad, or the less good." That is the position throughout this session of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce. No man sees more clearly than he does what is the true course for a Government to take. He was telling the Conservative Government for seventeen years what is the true course to take on this very point, emphasizing the necessity of asking for tenders. But the moment he gets into office he goes back on it all. It is not in the Department of Trade and Commerce alone that we find this same backward policy, but in the Department of Public Works and in the Department of the Interior. We find the Minister of the Interior, as Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, not calling for tenders but sending round circulars.

The PRIME MINISTER. You are going to have a law clerk in Regina now.

Mr. DAVIN. Yes, his very obedient servant. But the law clerk of Regina will not exercise any censorious surveillance on his conduct in this respect. What I object to is giving out public works without tenders.

We have had the Minister of Public Works getting up and saying, Yes, it is a very good thing to ask for tenders. It is the right thing, but in this case I did not do it. And as I showed last session, the Minister of the Interior, when he wants Indian supplies, instead of calling for tenders, sends round circulars to gentlemen in Winnipeg to get prices from them, as was done by the Minister of Trade and Commerce in the present case. Now the Minister of Finance has taunted the Opposition with being greatly grieved that the Yukon Bill was defeated. He says the Conservative press throughout the country are saying: Would to God you would bring in another Yukon Bill. But, Sir, we know what occurred at the caucus. We know very well that the Government wanted to bring in another Yukon Bill, and that the party would not tolerate it. We know that the Minister of the Interior wanted to force a Yukon Bill upon his party, but the party from Ontario would not stand it. Sir, in regard to the feeling throughout the country respecting that Yukon Bill, let me say there never was a policy of a Government repudiated so strongly, or in regard to which the sense of reprobation remained so strong, and will remain so long, as in regard to that patent imposture called the Yukon Bill of my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior. And yet my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce endures it all. What man ever stood up for economy, what man ever stood up for lowering the expenditure, what man ever insisted that it could be reduced, as he did? And now we find him with bloated estimates and bloated expenditures such as this country has never witnessed before, and there he sits in that Ministry, the blind Sampson toiling for the Philistines. He is no longer the man who used to be on this side of the House, because he now gets up and gives the weight of such waning authority as belongs to him, to cover the misdeeds of the men whom he despises in his heart. Take my right hon. friend the leader of the House and the Government, and for whom, so long as he led the Opposition, I had the greatest honour and regard.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. DAVIN. Hon. gentlemen opposite cheer. If my honour and regard are not the same for him, it is not because he has crossed the floor of this Chamber, but because he has abandoned the principles he advocated when on this side of the House, and it is because of the extraordinary and painful circumstance that he has gone through the length and breadth of the country making promises which he does not begin to implement now that he is in power. He came to the North-west Territories and made promises he knew very well he never intended to carry out. We have heard a great deal of the great Napoleon and the young Napoleon of Canada this session, and Napoleon seems to be the god of the idolatry of one side of this House. When Napoleon going to Italy reached Lombardy he addressed the people, and said: "Nations of Italy I come to break your chains." When he left Italy the chains were rivetted around the Italian nations as they had never been before. So the right hon. gentleman came up like his great fellow-countryman to the North-west Territories, and told the farmers that he was going to break their chains, and yet he has been two years in power and the chains, which he said bound them in slavery of the same kind as that which bound the southern slaves of the United States, are clanking on their ankles and wrists to-day as sorely as when he came there and proclaimed that it was his mission to manumit them. Is there any promise he has kept? He went to St. Roch and promised a better Remedial Bill than that of the leader of the Opposition. He never attempted to carry out that promise. He made a promise to the bishops of his church in Quebec, but he did not implement it. And when they murmured he sent to the Vatican to get authority to muzzle them, and when he prepared a memorandum and was afterwards confronted with it and with his letters to Cardinals, he gave an evasive reply and almost totally denied the preparation of the memorandum, absolutely that he had anything to do with sending it to Rome, although it would have been no use anywhere except at the Vatican, and that it ever emanated from him. It is painful to me, as a patriotic Canadian, under any circumstances to refer to such conduct on the part of the Government as we have to complain of. For a man highly cultured, whom for many years I held in honour and regard, to act in the way in which my right hon. friend has acted is a matter peculiarly painful. The hon. gentleman behind him is in a different position. He is a professed bandit.

The PRIME MINISTER. Order.

Mr. DAVIN. If the expression is out of order, I will withdraw it as far as it can be withdrawn. As a mother of dukes said when she came out of a shop in Cheapside and found her coachman fighting with a tough: "What are you fighting over?" The coachman told her, mentioning a word I will not repeat: "Because he called your ladyship a——" Whereupon Nell Gwynne said: "You fool, if you fight with every one who calls me that name, you will have to fight all London." Whether I use the word or not, I am afraid the thing is attributed to the Minister of Public Works all over this country. The young Napoleon who is Minister of the Interior, also made promises. At Moosomin he promised to give the North-west implements free of duty. What had we at Brandon, when he was engineering the fight for my late friend, Dalton McCarthy? He had bills placarded all over the town: "Vote for McCarthy and free implements." We know that the success of hon. gentlemen opposite was partially due to Dalton McCarthy, and the promise made by the Minister of the Interior, as well as the statement of the Minister of Agriculture at Moosomin, and the statement made by the right hon. Prime Minister at Winnipeg, all were to the effect that the farmers of the North-west would obtain free implements. Have they got them? Sir, the Ministry is leprous with dissimulation. A book was published some years ago in London by a man of genius, and there is a character in the book—the hero indeed—represented as the embodiment of the young Appollo. A great painter paints this man, and there he stands as the embodiment of youth and power; and this man becomes dissipated and falls lower and lower morally, and in this book he is represented as sending up a prayer that however much he might become deteriorated it would not be seen in him, but that the natural result of dissipation would appear in the picture; that all the vices would be there. He at last puts away the picture, and when after he has become lower and lower, still retaining the Appollo look of beauty and charm which was native to him, he goes one day into the attic where he had hid the picture, and looking on the lineaments which showed the moral fall of which he had been the subject, the height and depth of which were portrayed in the haggard lineaments and degraded outline, he was so completely overcome that he put an end to his life. I cannot help seeing in the speeches and otherwise traces of the degeneration of this Government in the right hon. gentleman himself. And although I do not consider that the Government will arrive at the denouement depicted in that book and put an end to its own existence, I do anticipate that an outraged country, a country which has been bamboozled, will, or else it would have fallen as low as the Italian nations at the time of Machiaavelli, will not tolerate men in power who say one thing and do the other; that an indignant people, whether soon or late, and come it late or come it fast, it must come, will sweep away from power this Government on account of its tergiversations, and in doing that it will not only uphold justice, truth and honour, but it will I hope be the means of inaugurating a government that will have in it men who will challenge the respect, admiration and confidence of the country.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend will be included, of course.

Mr. DAVIN. My hon. friend says I shall be included. I throw personal ambition to the winds; my course in this House shows I have not been a man actuated by personal ambition. If I were, I would have taken a different course. I said to Sir John Macdonald when I was pressing the interests of the farmers against my own Government and was supported some time by the right

hon. gentleman who is now leading the Government—

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Mr. DAVIN. I pointed over to the right hon. leader of the then Government and said: "I know the map of Canada as well as any one, and I know that the road I take does not lead to preferment." I preferred to do what the North-west wanted, and what I did remains, rather than take the course which would have subserved towards my own ambition, if I had any. What I did attests the fact that I am not actuated by personal ambition, or that, if I be, it is submerged beneath my loyalty to the country and my loyalty to the North-west, so that I can safely say my guiding star is my love of Canada. I can say of Canada, as a Kingston poet sung:

For love or fame, or whatever it be,
I give the wine of my life to thee.

And now let me point out to the right hon. gentleman something he did to extend this session. He adjourned the House from February 22 to March 1 to play into the hands of the local government of Ontario. Yet forsooth we are taunted with taking up the time of the House. I may say here that the Opposition have acted in a too generous way—I do not know what their motive was—in allowing the Estimates to pass. The Estimates for 1898-99 were scamped although you find in regard to some items that they are nearly as large as those in the Main Estimates. I say these Estimates are being scamped through too rapidly, because there is hardly one of them in which there is not an irregularity such as we are dealing with now, and hardly one of the large ones that do not suggest suspicions that we should discuss and probe. Mr. Chairman, it is so long since I troubled the House at any length that I probably have forgotten the way to address it, but I cannot without a protest see the extraordinary exhibition that we had, first of all, apology from the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and then that kind of mock heroics in which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) can indulge with a good deal of grace and a kind of facile indignation which is not without being amusing. In fact it gives you the idea of something, I will not say infinitely small, inspired by a sense of something infinitely great, and exploding under an extraordinary and unaccustomed pressure.

Mr. CASEY. To-day we have been already treated—

Mr. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). To a trip to Coontown.

Mr. CASEY. Well, that is not the phrase I was going to use, but I think it is very appropriate.

Mr. FOSTER. And we have the flim-flammers on the other side.

Mr. CASEY. I was going to say that we have been treated to our daily fricasee of thrice-stewed absurdities. Now, there are in this fricasee which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) is so clever at concocting, several ingredients which tickle the palate occasionally, but when we have it three or four times a day and every day, and spread out at such length, and width and depth—

Mr. RUTHERFORD. Oh, no, not depth.

Mr. CASEY. Not depth; then "height" of absurdity. When we have it served up in this way and so frequently it becomes simply nauseating. I was once at a watering place where there were two rival boarding houses and each of those had its own little steam yacht which ran on the waters of the bay. The boarders of one house composed a little poem, which they used to sing to the others when they met, to the air of, "There is a happy land far, far away," an air which my hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) may have heard in his youth, and the poem ran thus:

I know of a boarding-house, four miles away,
Where they make onion hash three times a day.
Oh how the boarders yell when they hear the dinner bell,
Oh, how the onions smell—four miles away.

I simply rose to say that this touching little poem always recurs to my mind when I hear my hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) making his daily speeches to this House.

Mr. POPE. May I now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, be permitted to refer to the question actually under discussion. I am inclined to agree with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) when he states that Manchester is a great centre for the consumption of Canadian products, and one that we should make a legitimate effort to reach; but of course the Minister recognizes that we have been already shipping all sorts of commodities to that market. The ship canal people are desirous of bringing trade over their ship canal, but it has not been a paying investment and on there part there is an effort to secure trade which warrants them in coming to Canada with that object in view. They are very largely Manchester people who are interested, and as the Minister says, that no doubt may redound to our benefit if we can bring them into an arrangement with us. But, Sir, the only benefit that I can see which we can derive from subsidizing this line of steamers between Canada and Manchester, is that we should have equal rates between Canada and Manchester, with the rates which now exist between Canada and Liverpool. For instance, we can always ship lumber to Manchester, but the difficulty we had to meet in the past was that we had to pay two shillings and six pence, or three shillings a standard more to Manchester than we paid to Liverpool. If we are going to give money towards the establishment of a direct line of steamers between Canada and Manchester, it is well that the Government—if they have not done so up to the present, and we do not know they have, because the details are not before us—it is well that the Government should take into consideration the equalization of rates, and make an arrangement with the steamship company, that the rates that shall be charged on Canadian products from Canada to Manchester shall at least be not more than the rates charged from Canada to Liverpool. In that way we will receive a benefit from the establishment of a direct line of steamers, in our being able to place our Canadian products in the Manchester market as cheaply as we can now in the Liverpool market. If we are paying for the privilege by this subsidy, it is only fair that the Government should press this matter on the contracting steamship company, and for two reasons I do not think the Government will have much difficulty in accomplishing that. In the first place, the competition between the city of Manchester and the city of Liverpool, the rival jealousy, if you like to call it, between these two great centres, is so strong that it will come to the assistance of the Government in making this arrangement, and the fact that the ship canal people are very anxious to increase their traffic through the canal, and if possible get it on a paying basis, is another important factor in that direction. While I believe in the establishment of this line I would press upon the Government to use their efforts to secure us some privileges in the way of reduced freight rates on the products we ship.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). I wish to draw the attention of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pope) and of the House, to the fact that in entering into this contract with this company who are themselves interested in the Manchester trade, and who are composed largely of gentlemen who are interested specially in the ship canal, that in itself is a guarantee that the freight rates to Manchester will be made so as to compete to advantage with the rates to Liverpool. Furthermore, in the submission to us of a list of through freight rates from Canadian points to places near Manchester over the different railroad lines centreing at the terminus of the Manchester Ship Canal, we have the assurance that these through freight rates, by reason of an arrangement which the corporation and the city of Manchester, and the ship canal people have made with the various railway companies, the rates will be less from Canadian points to other points in the neighbourhood of Manchester, than the competing rates would be were the goods to be landed at Liverpool. This is a very important point; it is one which it is well hon.

gentlemen should understand, and it is one which was a very great inducement, along with others, to us to enter into this contract. I need not again point out to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pope) that Manchester is the centre of one of the greatest consuming populations in England, and that the markets of Manchester have the reputation of paying better prices for food products of good quality than the markets in any other part of the old country. By reason of our connection with this company, which is composed of men specially interested in the Manchester trade, we believe that we will be able to reach these markets to better advantage than by any other means. I would point out also that in my own departmental investigations as to the placing of our products on the English market, one of the greatest difficulties we have had to contend with is the finding of suitable and safe consignees for our Canadian shippers, and I trust that, by reason of having a large number of the leading merchant houses and business men of Manchester interested in this enterprise, we will be able to make arrangements by which we will be able to get the names and secure connections with consignees in England for our exports from Canada. This is one of the things which I propose to look into very carefully when I go to England, for I believe it is in the interests of our shippers here that we should make some such arrangements. I am satisfied that the encouragement of the trade in our export food products to England will be of the best possible kind, by reason of this arrangement to secure a direct line of Manchester, which is in the heart of the great consuming district.

Mr. HUGHES. When the Minister goes to the old country, I would suggest that he should visit the city of Belfast and look into the question of our being permitted to ship Canadian cattle to that market for the purpose of slaughter. Has anything been done in that connection recently? That is of even more importance to the cattle trade, because I believe that Manchester is not a port of slaughter.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, it is.

Mr. HUGHES. Then, why not Belfast?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Since the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes) brought the matter up before, I have received further correspondence from the High Commissioner in England, and the communications which he has had with the home authorities do not lead us to suppose that any arrangement can be made with reference to Belfast.

Mr. HUGHES. If the Minister looks into the matter when he is over there, he will find that the objections are merely sentimental.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I shall look into the matter.

Mr. POPE. Do I understand the Minister to say that special freight arrangements are made with regard to points around Manchester, but that it is not embodied in the contract?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is not in the contract.

Mr. POPE. Has the Government made any effort to insert in the contract that the freight rates between Canada and Manchester over these lines shall be at least equal to the rates existing with regard to Liverpool?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There is nothing in the contract about that.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. We are negotiating for the right to fix the maximum freight rates, and we have been assured that they will not exceed those to Liverpool.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Contracts with the steamship companies generally give us power to deal with the rates.

Mr. FOSTER. How long is this agreement to last?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Three years, we expect, but we are not asking Parliament to make it three years. We are only asking Parliament to make it for one year.

Mr. FOSTER. Are these steamers owned by the corporation of the city of Manchester?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. They are in process of construction. They are being built specially for this line by the corporation of the Manchester Steamship Company.

Mr. FOSTER. That is a private corporation; it is not the municipal corporation?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. No, but the city corporation are interested in it.

Mr. FOSTER. In the criticism I made, I want my hon. friend to understand, that I am not opposed to opening up communication with Manchester. I have not said that, and I do not want that idea to go abroad. My criticism was entirely on the line of making an agreement in this private way without calling for tenders or obtaining competition with other steamship companies. It may be that the hon. gentleman would not have got to enter that competition Canadian companies that would have performed the service any more cheaply than this company; but he would have kept intact the very important principle of inviting public competition and giving every one an equal chance, if he had called for tenders, and I am disposed to think that he could have done that and accomplished his purpose just as well. If this corporation had these extra facilities and this extra interest, its prices in the competition would necessarily have been influenced by these considerations, and, therefore, it stood in a first-class position to compete in public competition with any other company. I do not doubt for a moment that this line will be a thorough line. I could not think that this company would build ships or run a line which would not be first-class in every respect. What are the penalties for non-performance of contract, and how are the subsidies to be paid?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The subsidies are to be paid at the rate of $8,000 per annum, in quarterly instalments—the first on the 30th day of the month of September next, and at the end of each three months thereafter.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the vessels carry mails?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It is not likely that mails will be sent by these boats. Of course, the payments are made upon the company performing the stipulations of the contract as to freight rates and regular sailing.

Mr. FOSTER. Are they to make an average of 12 knots?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. They are to be capable of steaming 12 knots, but that is not made imperative upon them.

Mr. FOSTER. There is no condition as to rate of speed at all?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. This being almost purely a freight line, I do not think we shall be able to obtain that condition.

Mr. FOSTER. I should think it would not be wise to enter into a contract, at this period of freight competition, without contracting for a fair rate of speed. If you leave that entirely to the company, I do not think that is satisfactory. A freight line running from this country to Manchester, to the largest consuming population, with the exception of London, and maybe without that exception, in Great Britain, I should think it would carry classes of freight in the delivery of which speed would count as a factor; and I should hope that the contract is not silent as to the time within which the vessels should make this voyage. In the West India contract the speed was not to be less than 11 knots.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. As a matter of fact, the vessels did not perform it.

Mr. FOSTER. That is not the fault of the contract. The contract stipulated that they should make a certain rate of speed.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I think the contract does not go quite so far as that. All I can say in respect of that is this: I think the hon. gentleman will find that this particular company will do their very best to render a good service. He knows that in such matters we are not always able to secure matters of that kind. As to the prices paid, compared with prices paid for other services of a like nature, these people are giving us a very good service for the amount we are paying.

Mr. FOSTER. What time is the service to commence?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. On the 1st of July.

Mr. COCHRANE. I am thoroughly in accord with the Minister in developing a trade with Manchester; but I think it would be a mistake to give a large subvention to a steamship company that would not agree to perform the service across the Atlantic in a reasonable time. The Minister knows that we are trying to develop a trade in peaches, pears and grapes from the western portion of Ontario, and this would require a reasonably fast service. My opinion has always been that where you have a slow service you should get a much lower rate, because if there is not a fair amount of speed, I do not think the good we expect will be accomplished. If you do not keep the company up to a certain rate of speed, is it not likely but that they will be lax in the time they will cross the Atlantic?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. On these liners, as the hon. member will probably remember, we have already made provision for cold storage accommodation. In discussing this matter of the speed of freight vessels with the shippers, I found that regularity and assurance that the vessels would start at a certain date is rather more important than actual speed. The shippers want to know when their goods will go, rather than that they will occupy a day less or a day more in the passage. But I do not deny that speed is an advantage, and I think the company themselves will be interested in carrying the goods as quickly as possible so as to make as many trips as possible.

Mr. POPE. Can the Minister give us information as to the space provided for cold storage, and whether the contract provides for an increase in the rate for goods carried in cold storage?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. What we are asking for is this—such refrigerator space and refrigerator appliances as the Minister may from time to time require. Of course, we will not use this money which the House entrusts to us without endeavouring to obtain the very best terms we can. I may say that the gentlemen who came over here to negotiate with us on this subject are men of considerable position, and they were desirous for their own sakes of carrying out the arrangements in the best possible manner. Their work for the first two or three years will probably be conducted at a loss. Incidentally they are to obtain a contract from the Manchester Ship Canal Company that the vessels engaged in this service shall have the use of that canal free of ship dues, and that free towage shall be given to the company when required—which is an important concession and equals a large part of our subsidy. I mention that in order that the House may understand this is not all give on our side. The Manchester Canal Company are submitting to considerable sacrifices in granting these concessions.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. POPE. With regard to the ship canal, is there any refrigerator accommodation close to the docks?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I understand that there is magnificent accommodation.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The best in the world.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The corporation of Manchester have been at extraordinary pains to have elevators and proper warehouses constructed for the reception of goods carried in refrigerators, and that was one reason, and an important reason, that influenced us in dealing with them. I think the facilities in Manchester are quite exceptionally good, and the hon. gentlemen will understand how important this is, because the ships will sail alongside the wharfs or docks where warehouses for cold storage and other purposes are erected, there will be very little risk of injury in transferring our goods from one to the other. I regard that as of very considerable moment, because in that way we escape the damage which has often resulted in the transfer from the Liverpool docks to the various railway stations to which our goods are transported. And I know from experience that there is no population on the face of the earth, probably, unless it be the great Atlantic cities of the United States, who are likely to be of such large consumers of the best class of eatables that we are in the habit of exporting as the population around Manchester.

Mr. POPE. The great space about the canal offers special facilities for constructing these buildings, but I did not know whether the buildings existed or not. Of course, it is absolutely important that these goods on leaving the ships should go into cold storage at once.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There is cold storage in connection with the docks, and there is a very large elevator, equipped in the most modern style. The company that built the elevator engaged a competent constructor from Chicago, one who thoroughly understood the best and most modern details in connection with a large elevator. This elevator, I think, has a capacity of a million bushels.

Mr. MARTIN. I wish to call the attention of the Minister to the item which was recently passed. I did not catch the explanation he made, if there was one. I would like to know if the contract has been entered into for this proposed steamship communication with Prince Edward Island. I would like to know the date of the first proposed trip, the name of the contractor, if there is a contractor, the amount proposed to be given, and the number of trips it is proposed to make.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. At the present time I am in communication with three parties, Messrs. Furness, Witty & Co., of Halifax, Messrs. Musgrave & Co., of Halifax, and Mr. J. W. Carmichael, of New Glasgow. I hope to make an arrangement with one of these houses for a steamer that will make regular trips from Prince Edward Island to England. It is expected that the ship will be able to make about five trips in the season. The proposal is that the $5,000 be paid for these five trips; and, in addition, I am offering them the usual arrangement for cold storage—that is, in three years I will pay half the expenses necessary to put in cold storage facilities. I have been in communication with these three parties and have been urging them very strongly to carry out the scheme, and I trust and believe that within the next week or two one or the other will have accepted the conditions and made the arrangement.

Mr. FOSTER. Has my hon. friend (Mr. Fisher) not called for tenders for this service?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No. I have been in communication with every ship-owning firm that would be at all likely to undertake it. I have communicated with the several Montreal and other firms and asked if they would undertake the service, but received no satisfactory replies except from the three I have mentioned, and they have said they would try and meet our requirements. The first one that puts in an acceptance will get the contract; so that is practically calling for tenders.

Mr. MARTIN. I must say that the explanation is very unsatisfactory indeed.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The item the hon. gentleman has been discussing has been passed.

Mr. MARTIN. But there was no discussion, Mr. Chairman. It was passed so quickly that I had no opportunity to ask a question. Last year this question was taken up by the Minister and the whole question passed without anything being done.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. There was no vote last session.

Mr. MARTIN. But the question was under discussion.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman will notice that last year there was no vote on account of a subsidy. There was simply an effort on my part to obtain a vessel fitted with cold storage. This year, in consequence of the work of last year, we put in a vote for a vessel that would undertake the service, and we believe we shall be able to accomplish that object.

Mr. MARTIN. I thought tenders were called for and that the Minister had succeeded?

Mr. FOSTER. Why did not my hon. friend call for tenders? Has he also taken the same line as his colleagues of ignoring competition and writing to whatever friends he chooses, and making these offers. He cannot have the knowledge to enable him to write to everybody who might have an interest in tendering for this service. It looks as if hon. gentlemen opposite had started in a course of obstinately and determinedly ignoring public opinion. There can be no urgency in this case, and surely he will not plead that. What can be his reasons for not giving the public the benefit of competition in regard to this service? He can write to his friend Mr. Carmichael and other friends, but he cannot write to all the parties. What objection has he to asking publicly for tenders?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) is entirely mistaken in speaking about friends. The firms I have mentioned are not in any sense friends of mine, and, so far as I know, most of them are not friends of this Government or this party. The firm of Furness, Witty & Company are not Liberals. Musgrave & Company are not Liberals. Mr. Carmichael, it is true, is a Liberal. But he is a large ship-owner and one who might be looked to to undertake such a contract as this. In Montreal the shipping firms there knew that this offer was being made.

Mr. FOSTER. How did they know?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Because they were communicated with.

Mr. FOSTER. Did the hon. gentleman communicate with all?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We communicated with the Elder-Dempster line, the Allans, the Dominion line and the Thompson line.

Mr. FOSTER. Is my hon. friend going to adopt the rule of simply asking for tenders for these public services by any private letters he may choose to write?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. When a case of urgency like this arises—

Mr. FOSTER. But why is it a case of urgency—

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If the hon. gentleman will sit down I will answer him.

Mr. FOSTER. I want the hon. gentleman to answer the question.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman has no right to interrupt me. I will answer him if he will sit down.

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister is there to be interrupted by questions.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am ready to answer the question—

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister is there for no other purpose, and my hon. friend will not make anything by—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. Minister of Agriculture has the floor.

Mr. FOSTER. What I want my hon. friend to do is to answer what is this question of urgency?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. When the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) chooses to sit down, I will answer him; but until he does, I will not. He will get no answer from me if he chooses to insist upon this method of discussion. The hon. gentleman spoke a few moments ago about urgency. There could be no offer made until we knew there was going to be an item of this kind put in the Estimates. It was not put in the main Estimates, but it has been put in the Supplementary Estimates, and from that time until the present time there has been great urgency. In consequence of our not being able to put this through without a subsidy, we had to leave Prince Edward Island without cold storage facilities for the whole of last season. We found that we were going to be able to ask Parliament to give a subsidy of $5,000, and so decided upon it a few weeks ago. We wish to have this service commence in the month of June, as it is in the interests of Prince Edward Island and of the country generally that there should be no delay in the establishment of this cold storage service.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend has given the most silly excuse I ever heard a Minister give for refusing to follow the principle of public tender. He says that last year this question was brought to his attention and the matter was taken into consideration. And that is the Minister's excuse for not giving this out for tender. Urgency. How did the urgency arise? Because he did not put the sum into the Estimates until a few days ago—because, he says, he was not aware that he could get a vote for $5,000 until a few days ago.

It was his business to be aware, it was for the Government not to treat Parliament as if it were simply a register of their votes. But he is there for the purpose, he assumes office with the intention, certainly with the obligation, to consider these things and to give the result of his considerations to Parliament. Why could he not have put it in the first estimate as well as in the last? The excuse is a most silly excuse, as if he wanted not to give it to public tender in order to get an excuse of urgency, and so he does not put an item in the Estimates until a few days ago, and then comes down and says he kept the item out of the Estimates until a few days ago, and therefore it was urgent. Where is the plea of urgency for not putting advertisements in the papers and asking for tenders to put in at the end of the year? Here is another gross and unnecessary violation of the principle of calling for tenders. My hon. friend is carrying out what the rest of the Ministers are doing, but he is giving a more silly excuse. He is not nearly so frank as the Minister of Public Works, who gives as the reason that he wants to peddle patronage to his friends, and for the sake of doing that, he gives it out by private contract. But he is bold enough and honest enough, if you can call that honesty, to get up on his legs and say so.

Mr. WALLACE. I think the conduct of the Minister of Agriculture towards the member for York (Mr. Foster), approaching as it does to insolence, is not to be commended in this House by any member. The Ministers appear to think that private members should get no consideration now, and the Minister of Agriculture seems to think that he is lord of the country, and that when he gets on his feet, everything else must drop. He is there to answer questions. The member for York asked a pertinent question, relative to the very matter, and the Minister of Agriculture, in his arbitrary style, demanded him to sit down, and would not hear the question to which an answer was desired. I think he might easily mend his manners in this House, and he would find that he would get along a good deal better. Now, as to the subject-matter of this appropriation, it is just an example of the unpreparedness of the Department of Agriculture. The Minister knows last summer that he had not time to do this. What was he doing ever since? He says this service must commence in June, it is the 10th of June now. Before the Supplementary Estimates came before the House, why could he not have gone into that when the Estimates were being prepared last January? He knew it was necessary to call for tenders and have them ready prior to bringing the matter in a public manner before the consideration of the House. None of these things were done. But at the last moment he violates the sound principle of asking for public competition, for which in his case there was no excuse or for adopting the course that he did. The country, I can tell the hon. gentleman, will not look with satisfaction at such a slipshod way of doing the business of the Agriculture Department.

Resolutions to be reported.

ADJOURNMENT—CROW'S NEST PASS RAILWAY.

The PRIME MINISTER moved that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the House adjourns I want to call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the fact that there is an unexplained matter with reference to J. B. Charleson's connection, now undoubted, and for a long time whilst an officer of the Public Works Department, with the hiring and despatching and payment of men for the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. I do not ask for an answer now. I will bring it up this afternoon.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 1 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Second Sitting.

FRIDAY, 10th June, 1898.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

LOUIS GATIEN.

Mr. BERGERON (by Mr. Davin) asked,

Why was Louis Gatién, ex-postmaster at Marieville, P.Q., dismissed?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). Mr. Louis Gatién was removed from the postmastership of Marieville, county Rouville, because of the unsatisfactory situation and management of the post office while under his charge, as shown by the report of the post office inspector on the case.

STEAM COMMUNICATION WITH GASPE

Mr. BERGERON (by Mr. Davin) asked,

1. Have the Government promised any subsidy to a line of steamers or to any company or person for a line of steamers to run between Montreal, Quebec and ports in the county of Gaspé?

2. If so, to what company, person or persons?

3. What is the amount of said subsidy?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). No such subsidy as is referred to in the question has been promised. A subsidy has been voted already for a line of steamers from Quebec to Gaspé.

CHAS. E. HOUDE.

Mr. MARCOFTE (by Mr. Hughes) asked,

1. Has Charles Ed. Houde, postmaster of St. Célestin, county of Nicolet, been dismissed?

2. If so, at whose request and by whose influence?

3. For what reason?

4. Was an inquiry made?

5. What was its nature?

6. Who has succeeded him?

7. By whose influence and at whose request?

8. Is the successor solvent?

9. Who are his sureties?

10. Has a petition of all the citizens and principal persons of the place been received, asking that Mr. Houde be retained in the position, on account of having always done his duty?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). The answer to the first question is yes. The answer to the other questions, except No. 10, is : that it appeared on evidence that was considered conclusive that the postmaster had actively identified himself with party politics and was an active political partisan. It also appeared that the post office inspector had reported on a complaint that a letter had been tampered with in the post office in question and had arrived at the conclusion on circumstantial evidence, that the irregularity charged had been committed at that office. Mr. Moise Girard has been appointed his successor upon the recommendation of the member of the county. The new appointee is understood to be solvent, and his fidelity is insured in the Insurance Assessment System. The answer to question 10 is that no such petition has been received.

JOHN McCALLUM.

Mr. FOSTER asked,

1. When was John McCallum appointed postmaster of Avoca?

2. When was he dismissed from the office and why?

3. Was there any complaint or petition from the people served by the office which led to the action finally taken?

4. Was there any report from an inspector, and if so, what was its tenor?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). Mr. John McCallum was appointed postmaster of Avoca in January, 1862, on the establishment of the post office. 2. The post office was removed from the residence of Mr. McCallum to that of Mr. Alexander McPhee (a more convenient situation) on the 17th of August, 1897, and Mr. McCallum accordingly ceased to be postmaster. 3. No petition was received from the people served by the district, but representations having been made that the office was in an inconvenient situation, the post office inspector at Montreal was instructed to inquire into and report upon the matter. 4. The inspector made a report to the effect that Mr. McCallum's residence was an inconvenient site for the post office and Mr. McCallum was then requested to remove the office to a more convenient situation. This he declined to do, and it became necessary to appoint another person, residing in a more central and convenient place, to the postmastership.

THOMAS BERNEY.

Mr. TAYLOR (by Mr. Mills) asked,

Was Thomas Berney, postmaster at Athens, dismissed by order of the Postmaster General; or was he dismissed by the Deputy Postmaster General without the knowledge or consent of the Postmaster General?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). The answer to the first part of the question is "yes," and to the second part, "no."

MIDDLETON POST OFFICE DISTRICT.

Mr. MILLS asked,

1. Has the Postmaster General received a petition from the town of Middleton, Nova Scotia, of which the following is a true copy:—

"To the Honourable William Mulock,

Postmaster General of Canada.

"The petition, in three parts, of the undersigned adult citizens of the Middleton post office district, in the county of Annapolis and province of Nova Scotia, humbly sheweth:—

"1. That the present post office accommodations in the town of Middleton are quite inadequate to the town requirements; the waiting-room is very small, and without any heating privileges, and the whole post office is on a meagre scale, and not at all in keeping with the other public buildings and the private residences in the said town.

"2. That the Commercial Bank of Windsor propose erecting forthwith a new brick and stone structure for banking business in said town, on the most central corner lot within four rods of the site of the present post office, and have signified their willingness to provide ample quarters for a post office in said building with all modern appliances, including fire and burglar-proof vault, lock boxes, register heat, &c., provided they are given an official guarantee that said premises will be occupied as a post office for a period of not less than ten years.

"3. That the council of the Middleton Board of Trade, favouring the proposed new site, recently convened a public meeting of the citizens to discuss the proposition made by said bank, and a resolution was at such meeting passed unanimously in favour of the acceptance of said proposition.

"4. That the rental of the new premises will be only about one hundred dollars per year, while the rental of the present meagre quarters is sixty to eighty dollars per year.

"5. That the proposed change would greatly benefit our town, at a very limited increase of cost to your department over the present rental.

"Therefore, we humbly ask your Honour to take the premises into consideration and to grant us the boon of the proposed change of post office site, and to grant to the said bank the required guarantee for the continuance of at least ten years' occupancy of the premises for said post office purposes; and your petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c., &c.

"May 30th, 1898."

2. How many signatures are to said petition?

3. What does the Government intend to do about the matter asked for?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). A petition asking for a change in the site of the Middleton post office, county of Annapolis, was received at the department on or about the 4th instant, and was on that date referred to the post office inspector at Halifax, for inquiry and report. As the department is not at this moment in possession of the petition in question, it is impossible to say whether its terms are identical with the version given in the above question.

NARCISSE LEGRIS.

Mr. BERGERON asked,

Whether Mr. Narcisse Legris, postmaster of Ste. Eulalie, county of Nicolet, is the same Legris who wrote the following letter in "La Patrie" of April 20th last?

Mr. N. Legris, mayor of Ste. Eulalie, sends us the following:—

"Ste. Eulalie, 18th April.

"To the Editor of 'La Patrie':

"I see in your paper a question which I strongly favour: the abolition of the Senate. What a grand thing it would be to get rid of the useless incumbrance

"This is no new idea for me—I have for years favoured the abolition of the irresponsible body. The time has come for this great reform, and Mr. Laurier may rest assured that he will have the majority of the people with him.

"We have no need any longer of a Senate which retards the march of progress and prevents the realization of national enterprises, such as the Yukon Railway.

"Your most devoted servant,

"N. LEGRIS."

If so, is it the intention of the Government to dismiss him, on the grounds of political partisanship and improper meddling in public affairs?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). There is nothing upon the records to establish the identity of the postmaster of Ste. Eulalie with that of the alleged writer of the letter in "La Patrie," set forth in the question. But even if his identity were established, it would hardly be conclusive that the sentiment therein given expression to, and a very sound political one, would warrant the conclusion that the author of it was guilty of offensive partisanship.

I. A. HEBERT.

Mr. GAUVREAU asked,

1. Whether it is contrary to the regulations of the department for a postmaster to be a retailer of alcoholic liquors?

2. Whether the Postmaster General is aware that Mr. I. A. Hébert, postmaster of Princeville, in the township of Stanfold, is a retailer of alcoholic liquors, either for himself or for another, or under the style and title of any firm or joint stock company?

3. Whether it is the intention of the hon. Postmaster General to discharge the said I. A. Hébert, from his position, or at least to notify him to make his choice between the position of postmaster and that of a retailer of alcoholic liquors?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). There is nothing in the postal regulations forbidding postmasters being retailers of alcoholic liquors. It is provided in the regulations, however, that liquors shall not be sold in the same building in which the post office is kept, unless there is a complete separation between the post office and that portion of the premises where liquors are sold. I am not aware that the postmaster of Princeville is a retailer of alcoholic liquors either for himself or for others under any style or title.

APPOINTMENTS BY THE LATE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. RODDICK (by Mr. Bertram) asked,

Whether the correspondence between the Governor General and Sir Charles Tupper in July, 1896, with reference to certain appointments, was specially brought under the attention of the Imperial authorities, and if so, whether any opinion was expressed by the Colonial Office to the principle laid down and acted upon by His Excellency with reference to those appointments? If such correspondence has taken place, will the Government bring it down?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Yes. The correspondence between the Governor General and Sir Charles Tupper in July, 1896, with respect to certain appointments, were specially brought under the attention of the Imperial authorities. The correspondence which took place was confidential; but I have the authority of the Secretary of State for the Colonies to state that he approves of the principles on which the Governor General acted, as based on the facts set forth in the letter of His Excellency to Sir Charles Tupper.

SUPPLY—THE ANGLO-AMERICAN COMMISSION.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. BERTRAM. Before this motion is carried, and because I may not have another opportunity, I wish to bring a question to the notice of the House in which the country is deeply interested, a question on which I hold a strong opinion and one on which I think I fairly voice the feelings and desires of the constituency I have the honour to represent—I refer to the Joint High Commission about to meet in the historic city of Quebec. At this moment I might say that it affords me very great satisfaction indeed, and I am sure it affords great satisfaction to the country at large, to know that a commission is about to meet in the ancient and historic city of Quebec to settle all existing differences between Great Britain and the United States in respect to Canada. I do not know anything about to take place in this country which possesses so much importance to the Canadian people as the outcome of this commission, and I am sure it will be watched with great interest. It is not my intention to speak at any length, but to bring forward one or two ideas and place them on record, holding the opinions I entertain. I cannot tell and I suppose we cannot tell, what outstanding differences will be considered. We know what some of them are, but we cannot tell all the questions that will come before this commission. I am anxious to know, and every one will be glad to know whether the trade relations between this country and the United States will engage the attention of this commission, because I feel that is a question of the greatest importance to the country. I will refer to that subject a little later on; but before doing so, I desire to say that I am in hearty sympathy with the present feeling that exists between Great Britain and the United States, and I may also say between the Canadian people and the American people. I am sure we can look forward to the future with a great deal of hope and courage when we think that the long outstanding differences are about to be settled, and I believe will be settled; and if they are settled, I think the future of the English-speaking race on this continent will be a great and commanding future, and, therefore, we are very much interested in this commission. Although we deeply regret this unfortunate war that prevails between the United States and a European country, in which Britain and Canada must maintain strict neutrality, I do not think I am going too far when I say that my sympathy, and I believe the sympathy of a great many people of this country, and particularly of the people of Great Britain, is with the United States in this conflict. There is something, I admit, pathetic in an old European country waging a hopeless contest with the American giant; but still I believe the cause of the American people is the cause of humanity, and that great good will result to Cuba and to the Spanish possessions on this continent if Spain ceases to exercise dominion over them. We can only hope that the country now at war with the United States will see before many days how utterly hopeless it is to maintain such a struggle, and will, while they can, sue for an honourable peace.

I have every confidence myself that the American people, in the approaching conference, will meet us in a friendly spirit, such as perhaps they have never evinced for us before. The American people, the American Government has, I regret to say, always been somewhat hostile to Canada, and I, for one, believe that if a change of sentiment and feeling takes place, as seems to be taking place, it will be of immense advantage to our country. There is one thing further I would like to say. I believe an opportunity is going to be offered that has never been offered before, because both parties to the controversy are coming together in the very best possible spirit, and it is only when people approach difficult questions in a proper spirit that they are able to find a solution. It is therefore that I say that an opportunity is afforded to the people of this country, to the Government of this country, and to Canada at large, that has not been offered for many long years. But while that is the case, we Canadians must bear in mind that notwithstanding the feeling of friendship between Great Britain and the United States, notwithstanding the feeling of friendship of the Canadian people towards the people of the republic to the south, we must bear in mind that when a conference of this kind takes place, sentiment, to a large extent, has to remain in the background. And, Sir, when we come to the consideration of public questions, business questions, the commissioners acting on behalf of Canada require to be careful to do what is best for the interests of Canada and the interests of the Empire at large. Our experience of former negotiations which have taken place between Great Britain and the United States is that the American negotiator is a hard man to deal with, and we know that the American Government in all controversial questions of that kind has always been a difficult government to negotiate with. I trust, Sir, that all this has passed away, and that we will find them more amenable to reason than they perhaps have ever been in the past. I believe that our trade relations with the United States can be improved to a very great extent. I believe we can have an interchange of natural products which will be of great benefit to both countries, but still, we must come to the consideration of that question realizing that we are trying to make a bargain as to what is best for the material interests of the country. Sentiment, therefore, to a large extent, will have to give way. Our trade relations can be improved; I believe there can be an interchange of products which will be of great benefit to both countries, but just how far that interchange should go, and just to what extent it should be discussed, if discussed at all, is something that I am not able to speak of at the present moment. But, Sir, this I do say: That when we come to the consideration of that, whatever it may be, we will have to look at it from a purely Canadian standpoint as to what is best for the general interests of this Dominion, and I desire to place on record on this occasion, that so far as I am concerned, I have every confidence in the gentlemen who will form that commission representing the Canadian Government, and that confidence is not weakened notwithstanding the criticisms of my friends in the Opposition, which I have had the pleasure of listening to during the whole session. I do not believe that the Government is infallible; I do not believe that all the members of the Government are infallible; they certainly make mistakes, but we all make mistakes, and whenever a man living in this country or in any other country thinks he can manage things without making a mistake in any period of his history, that man is not fit to live in this mundane sphere, but should be translated to a higher realm.

Sir, any agreement or any conclusion that may be arrived at by this conference will have to be ratified by this Parliament, and so far as I am concerned, I have made up my mind that in the consideration of a question of that kind, I shall lay party affiliations aside, and shall support what I believe to be in the best interests of Canada, and shall reject what I believe contrary to her interests. The people of this country will, therefore, take a deep interest in this conference, and will look forward with a great deal of hope to the outcome. I do not wish to take up the time of the House, feeling as I do that the session is about to close, but I cannot refrain from placing my views on record in that connection, and from stating that I hope that when any agreement is brought before this Parliament for our consideration, it will be an agreement that we can all heartily endorse. If that should be the happy result, then, Sir, a brighter future and a more prosperous career awaits our country.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bertram) has put a question to the Government, in reference to which I feel it my duty to give him some reply. My hon. friend desired to know whether or not the commercial relations between the United States and Canada would be included in the subjects to be discussed by the conference which is soon to sit in the city of Quebec. At this moment, I can only tell my hon. friend that as negotiations are pending, and so long as the negotiations have not been concluded, I cannot make any statement, although I may say that it is perhaps no very great stretch of imagination to suppose that the commercial relations between Canada and the United States will form part of the subjects to be debated between the representatives of the two countries. Sir, the Government will not be unmindful of the good and wise advice which it has just received from my hon. friend (Mr. Bertram). The Government, in which the hon. gentleman has confidence, a confidence which he says has not been misplaced, will endeavour to continue to meet his views, and to bring before this House a treaty which, though perhaps it may not be acceptable to all—it is too much to expect that we can satisfy everybody—will at all events satisfy the great majority of the people of Canada. No treaty can be made without a giving and a taking on both sides. There are, however, some difficulties to settle which, in my opinion, are perhaps more important at the present moment than even our commercial relations. There are difficulties outstanding between Canada and the United States which have marred for a great many years the good friendship which should exist between two kindred nations, and even though the commercial relations between the two countries were not to be improved, still if it be possible for us to settle these difficulties and to enter upon a new era between the two countries, my hon. friend (Mr. Bertram) will agree with me that the commission will have accomplished a great deal of good. Of course, the treaty which is to be negotiated will have to be ratified by the Parliament of Canada. It cannot be binding, and will not be made binding until after it has been approved by this Parliament, and when it is submitted for our consideration it will be open to hon. gentlemen to criticise that treaty if it does not realize the views of every member. I must say that I was very much flattered at the good opinion which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bertram) expressed of the Government.

Mr. FOSTER. You were rather surprised, were you not?

The PRIME MINISTER. Well, having heard all the ill spoken of the Government by gentlemen on the other side of the House I might have been surprised, but I am not surprised to know that it made no impression upon my hon. friend (Mr. Bertram). The Government, of course, is not perfect.

Mr. BERGERON. Hear, hear.

The PRIME MINISTER. There may be a few specks on it. I do not say that in any spirit of self-complacency, for if I were to indulge in any such spirit I would say frankly that the Government is just about as perfect as human weaknesses will allow. And, if my hon. friend (Mr. Bertram) will trust us to act in that spirit, I hope he will be quite satisfied with the treaty which it will be our duty to negotiate in a few weeks.

Mr. FOSTER. I have experienced two disappointments within the last fifteen minutes. The first was from my hon. friend from Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram), because when he rose I expected, of course, that we should have the benefit of his views definitely expressed, with regard to trade matters, especially as his remarks hinged on that from the start. I commend most cordially to the right hon. leader of the Government, who will probably be one of those commissioners, the very clearly defined views which the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Bertram) has enunciated. My second disappointment was at the paucity of the information which the right hon. leader of the Government vouchsafed to the House, rising with that frank air which he can so easily assume. I supposed he was going to take this House into his confidence and to outline at least the basis upon which the Canadian plenipotentiaries would carry on the discussion. He has disappointed me and the House in that respect. But there has been one result from this discussion. We have had a declaration of the utmost confidence of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bertram) in his leader, and we have had a very natural expression of surprise on the part of the right hon. gentleman, who fresh from all the misdeeds of the session, could hardly have expected such a full endorsement from the hon. gentleman from Toronto (Mr. Bertram). But I could not avoid falling into a reminiscent mood. I do not know how long ago it was that my hon. friend from Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram)—it is not very long—made the avowal in the city of Toronto that he had arranged every line of the tariff which was brought down by my hon. friend the Finance Minister.

Mr. BERTRAM. I never said so.

Mr. FOSTER. Maybe I should not use the word arranged; but at least that he had gone over the items with the Minister.

Mr. BERTRAM. I never said so.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend was so reported, and my hon. friend never denied it, and I can easily bring the reports in the Toronto papers, both in the "Mail" and in the "Globe," to refresh his memory.

Mr. BERTRAM. Allow me to explain here. That matter has often been referred to, and I will tell you now what I actually did, seeing that there has been so much discussion on the point. I never went over the different lines in the tariff with the Finance Minister and stated my views; but I did what a great many other men throughout the province of Ontario did: I sent down a statement of my views in writing regarding every item in the iron schedule, and nothing beyond that. That is all I did in connection with the tariff.

Mr. FOSTER. I am very glad my hon. friend's arduous efforts with regard to the iron schedule resulted so favourably to his own interest. We are all naturally a little selfish, and I cannot blame my hon. friend for looking after his own interest. But his words, I think, were more inclusive—that he had had a good deal to do with the formation of the tariff. I think we can go that far with perfect agreement. So that it was perfectly fitting that on the eve of these negotiations my hon. friend should endeavour to try his formative hand upon the proposed treaty. But how many years ago was it that my hon. friend who spoke, and my right hon. friend who replied, both of them in such delightfully indefinite terms, were of the firm conviction, held as strongly as convictions were ever supposed to be held by public men, that the only salvation for this country lay in having a treaty of unrestricted reciprocity between the United States and Canada? What change has come over the spirit of my hon. friend's dream? Has responsibility as a member of Parliament and responsibility as the leader of a Government, in each case had its transforming power and effect, and turned these unrestricted-reciprocity, no-custom-house advocates, into either firm advocates of a protective system or apologists for a protective system? For my own part, I confess that I feel a little distrust, a little lack of confidence.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am not surprised at that. I am surprised at your moderation.

Mr. FOSTER. I feel just a little lack of confidence in these gentlemen who are to go to the historic city of Quebec and negotiate with the knowing and keen plenipotentiaries of the United States with reference to the trade question amongst other subjects. I feel a little lack of confidence since our plenipotentiaries will be gentlemen, who not more than five or six years ago declared throughout the length and breadth of this country that the only salvation for the trade and prosperity of this country lay in having an unrestricted commerce with the United States of America. If not the ghost, certainly the not-long-buried remains of that living fad of 1891 to 1893 will be evoked somewhere in the vicinity of the historic city of Quebec, when those keen and wideawake United States plenipotentiaries come to sit down with the gentlemen who so recently put the argument into their mouths, and put the reasons to their hands—the very best reasons they could possibly have—for urging a treaty of commerce on the lines of a taking off of duties or a mutual reduction of duties—a taking off of duties, by preference, on all articles sent backwards and forwards between this country and the United States of America. With that disadvantage these hon. gentlemen will enter into that contest of keen diplomacy, and weakened, as they are, by their past history, I am not sure but they will be equally weak in heart. As they thought that was the only right thing then, what guarantee have we that they will not think it is the only right thing in the coming summer? They change their opinions on all trade and political questions with the facility that a gentleman changes his dress. They have their winter wear, their spring costume, and their summer costume. In that respect I confess to a feeling of fear and disturbance as to what may eventuate along the line which my hon. friend evidently wishes us to infer, but does not go so far as to state openly. My hon. friend was himself born to be a diplomat, I am quite sure. With pretty strong convictions, as I well know, he has yet left the way open for himself, so that when these friends of his, in whom he now has such confidence, come back from that meeting of plenipotentiaries, if they have a trade treaty which looks in the line of protection, he can say they still command his confidence, and if they have a trade treaty which goes in the line of free trade, he can yet, with the facility which he has shown within the past few years in changing his opinions in these matters, still say: I have great confidence in the policy of the Government.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. HUGHES. Before this question passes over, I wish to remind the Government of one or two points. I shall not refer to the manner in which the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) was received in Washington on the last occasion compared with the manner in which he and his colleagues were received some twelve months ago. The exit from Washington on the last occasion, I am pleased to say, was covered with much more glory than the exit on the former occasion. Whatever may have been the cause of that change in the attitude of the Government at Washington, I think it is not due to any action on the part of the present Government. But in any negotiations which may take place between this Government and the Government at Washington, it should be borne in mind that the present sympathy between the two nations may be merely temporary; and while for many years past I have been an advocate, first, of an alliance between Great Britain and her colonies, and, secondly, of an alliance between Great Britain and her colonies on the one hand and the United States on the other, in trade, and even in other matters, yet, in whatever negotiations may go on, it should be borne in mind that the first union should be between Great Britain and her colonies, and on the present occasion, in case the United States should again assume its old antagonistic attitude towards Great Britain, no step should be taken that would weaken in the slightest degree the ties that exist between Canada and the motherland. I throw out this suggestion, though I presume it is not necessary with these gentlemen. I know that the public have received the impression, and we believe, that they have undergone a change of heart in regard to our relationship with the motherland.

The PRIME MINISTER. That happens sometimes.

Mr. HUGHES. Yes, and I trust that these gentlemen will bear this in view in any negotiations that go on. I would take this opportunity of making another suggestion. The 141st meridian is the eastern boundary of the main portion of Alaska. East of that there is a little strip of territory along the coast that belongs to the United States, and that may cause a great deal of controversy. I would suggest to the gentlemen who will take part in the coming negotiations, whether it would not be worth while to see if an arrangement could not be made by which, in return for the treachery of some of the United States commissioners, in producing improper maps, and so forth, in former negotiations respecting the boundary between the United States and Canada, the United States would cede to Great Britain that part of the coast for some quid pro quo, or whether or not some other exchange of territory might not be made so as to make that strip part of British territory.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I regret very much that that matter has been brought up, because I think the contention of Canada and Great Britain is that we own that territory now. In reference to the first point raised, the hon. gentleman of course understands that Canada cannot make any treaty, and Great Britain is not very likely to throw anything away, after all the experience she has had in the past.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. BERGERON. Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, and before we grant any more money to Her Majesty, it is my duty, a very painful one, to bring before the House some answers to the aspersions of a newspaper which is the property of one of the Ministers of the Crown. And I am sorry to do it at this time of the session, because I know that every hon. gentleman here desires to go home as soon as possible. But I think I owe it to myself and to the people I have the honour to represent to do what I am doing. My hon. friend from Champlain (Mr. Marcotte) rose in this House to offer an answer to what appeared in the Montreal newspaper "La Patrie." And when I read the paper, I found my name appeared with that of the hon. member for Champlain in the article. Sir, I am not in the habit of reading this newspaper. On former occasions when the discussion on the school question took place in this House, the same paper published two or three very strong and very insulting articles about me; but I decided that it might be just as well to let them go unanswered, thinking that the paper would not mention my name any more in such a way. But now I see it has returned to the attack. Here is what I find written in large letters: "Bergeron and the case of Judas. The member for Beauharnois continues his work of Iscariot."

Mr. CLARKE. What paper is that?

Mr. BERGERON. This appears in "La Patrie" of 9th June. As I have said, I deem it my duty to myself and the people I represent to answer these articles. I have no newspaper at my disposal, and I am not in the habit of asking newspaper men to defend me. This House is the only place where I can defend myself. I have here an article that appeared in "La Patrie" of 16th May, after the discussion in question. I shall put it in "Hansard" so as to show the people in the other provinces who do not read this paper what kind of political discussions we have in the province of Quebec and how the Liberal party there is instructed, so that they may understand how unfortunate a thing it is for the Conservative party to be lacking in newspapers. We have, it is true, some very good independent papers in the province of Quebec, but we have no Conservative organ in the district of Montreal, and as a matter of course, such articles as this may go unchallenged:

WORDS AND DEEDS.

Mr. Clarke Wallace and Mr. Bergeron maintain that the school question is not settled, and have been making speeches without head or tail in their effort to stir up fanaticism and every evil passion, no matter where.

Strange to say, between 1890 and 1896, the same Clarke Wallace went through the country shouting out that the Manitoba schools must not be touched, and meantime, in the province of Quebec, we had Mr. Bergeron promising the people that the Conservative party would re-establish the schools abolished by Mr. Greenway.

During these six years, all the Conservative leaders and their friends played this double game, and in 1896 the question was bitterly discussed, and exceedingly difficult to settle. These men, who did nothing but make speeches, and who thought to get around the school struggle by the use of lying words and contradictory professions, are enraged because Mr. Laurier has redeemed his promises and secured a settlement which is satisfactory to the Catholic and French minority in Manitoba. They did nothing else but talk for six years; they want to talk again; let them talk, we will meet them with acts.

The country is not so blind, French Canadians are not so simple, as to believe that Clarke Wallace is working at this moment to secure justice for our fellow-countrymen. Clarke Wallace is a fanatic, a narrow-minded, ferocious demagogue, who has nothing but scorn for everything connected with our race, our language and our province; and this is the man with whom Horace Bergeron has allied himself in the attempt to revive the school agitation.

In the days of the Tory régime the French Canadians of Manitoba were ill-treated. They asked for justice, they petitioned and protested in every way, and Mgr. Langevin came all the way to our province to make known their grievances; nothing was heard in every direction but the Manitoba schools; the country was sick and tired of it; the work of Parliament was paralyzed and business interests suffered from the widespread uneasiness.

To-day Mgr. Langevin is no longer obliged to come and put forth appeals to our province. The French Canadians of Manitoba have no more grievances, they no longer complain; they have better schools now than they ever had; peace is everywhere restored, concord is general, and one feels that there is a deep current of sympathy between the various provinces of the Dominion.

The policy of tolerance and conciliation, the policy of peace and fraternity, upheld by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, has produced these consoling results; it has done more in one year for the good of the country than could ever be accomplished in twenty years by the scandalous alliance of Wallace and Bergeron.

Where was the common sense in the hon. member for Beauharnois fancying that our dear province of Quebec would follow in the wake of a coarse bigot like the member for West Norfolk?

West York they mean, no doubt.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is that all?

Mr. BERGERON. You will be very tired before I finish, if you are beginning now.

Mr. McMULLEN. Not if it is all as good as that.

Mr. BERGERON. I have some better than that.

Mr. Bergeron is a done man; he has destroyed himself. His own friends, his best supporters, shrug their shoulders in pity when they see him destroy himself by playing into the hands of an Orangeman.

Wallace is evidently more wide-awake and cunning than the ex-Deputy Speaker of the Commons. He set a trap for Mr. Bergeron, and that gentleman foolishly took the bait.

So much the worse for him.

That is one article. I have read the whole without comment, and now I have a word to say. This article says: "Mr. Clarke Wallace and Mr. Bergeron maintain that the school question is not settled." That is not quite correct. I maintain that the school question is not settled. The hon. member for West York does not say so. The other day, as the Minister of Public Works, if he had read the papers from Ontario would have seen, the Orange Grand Lodge declared that the Manitoba school question was settled. They are satisfied. The Minister of Public Works knows that. The hon. member for West York is satisfied, and the hon. Minister knows it. When the hon. Minister of Public Works writes in his paper that Wallace and Bergeron aim at an alliance, he knows very well he is not saying the truth.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Will the hon. gentleman allow me.

Mr. BERGERON. Oh, yes.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I not only did not write this, but had not even read it.

Mr. BERGERON.

Mr. BERGERON. Mr. Speaker, this is one of the ways the hon. gentleman has to get out of a difficulty. He has done it before. During the general election, more than once I read articles which I am going to read in this House and put in "Hansard." I have read articles signed with his name, published in "Le Canadien," which can be seen on file in the library. His answer was: I did not write them, but I take the responsibility of them. He has to do the same thing now. I am not going to apply to some of his employees, to take up my time discussing these matters with his editors and sub-editors. If I attack, I attack himself; and if he does not want me to attack himself, let him tell his valets not to attack me in his paper. When the hon. Minister of Public Works says that there is an alliance between the member for West York and myself, he says what is not true.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I did not write that.

Mr. BERGERON. The alliance was between the hon. member for West York and the hon. Minister of Public Works, when for two or three months they blocked the proceedings in this House and prevented the passage of the Remedial Bill. Now, this article shows the kind of work that is going on in the province of Quebec by hon. gentlemen opposite in trying to rouse these prejudices and bad feelings which it has been their policy to arouse for the last five years, by means of which they managed to get into power, but which will not help them to retain power very long. When the Minister of Public Works says: "Monseigneur Langevin is no longer obliged to come to and put forth appeals to our province," does not he know of what is called "Manitoba Pence"? In every one of our churches orders have been given by our bishops to take money in the churches for the Manitoba schools, and this is done at the request of Monseigneur Langevin, the Archbishop of Manitoba. So when the Minister of Public Works says the French Canadians no longer have a grievance, that they no longer complain, he is saying that which, as a matter of fact, is not true. This is the way he is trying to educate those who read nothing else but his paper. Now, there was another article in "La Patrie" on the 16th of May:

A DESPERATE MOVE.

The alliance between Mr. Clarke Wallace and Mr. Bergeron with a view to a revival of the agitation on the Manitoba school question, is nothing more or less than scandalous.

How are we to account for this backward movement of the Tory party, unless it be that they are at the last gasp, that they have no policy—

I suppose, since the hon. gentlemen have stolen our policy, they think we have not got any more——and no leaders left, and that the general policy of the Laurier Ministry is unassailable?

Now, the hon. gentleman gets many compliments from his friends behind him; I will show by and by what kind of compliments he received some years ago from the same source.

If there were a leader at the head of the Opposition, if Sir Charles Tupper enjoyed the confidence of the members on the left, if our adversaries were able to agree as to the course to be adopted by their party, and on the man to direct that course, does any one believe that such an attempt would be made to revive difficulties, troubles and animosities which have already produced such disastrous results? Would an attempt be made to renew the dangerous agitation which prevailed from 1890 to 1896?

Now, can anybody be more brazen-faced than the man who writes like that? Nearly all the trouble that has been created on that question was created by the Liberal party. The Conservative party had no other object but to settle it. It could not do the Conservative party any good if they were in power.

Mr. McMULLEN. But they wanted to hold office.

Mr. BERGERON. If they had wanted to hold office, the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) knows that they would have acted quite differently. In order to retain power Sir Charles Tupper had only to abandon the school question, and he would be in power to-day with a large majority. But my object in reading this is to show how the people of our province are educated by the Minister of Public Works. Surely they will not find a word of truth in all this article. Let us continue:

If the Tupperes, the Fosters, the Wallaces and the Bergerons were in a position to assail the general policy of the Laurier Cabinet, if they could find fault with the new tariff, if business stagnation prevailed, if there were increasing deficits, if our rural districts were being depleted by emigration, if we were building Curran bridges, or lapsing into McGreevyism, does any one fancy that Clarke Wallace and Horace Bergeron would attempt to revive the school question?

No, but the Government is working conscientiously in the interests of the country, business is most satisfactory, trade is increasing, agriculture is prosperous, repatriation has succeeded to emigration, our finances are rapidly approaching to equilibrium, the era of deficits is over, the tariff has been amended without injury to our national industries, in short, all goes well in the best of worlds.

And dredging contracts are left in the family.

In sheer desperation, being unable to assail the beneficent policy of the Laurier Government, and not knowing where to strike, the Tories want to embarrass our friends and galvanize their own supporters by an attempt to revive the school question, and hand it over as a prey to political passions.

They have entrusted the vile task to Mr. Clarke Wallace, the leader of the Orangemen, and to Mr. Bergeron, who would fain be a leader of something; but surely these men represent neither Mgr. Langevin nor the French population of Manitoba, nor the Manitoba clergy, in their criminal and factious scheme.

Since Mr. Laurier and our friends have taken office, we have enjoyed peace; fraternity and concord between the several races and provinces have replaced, most happily, the animosities of recent days, and a new spirit, so to speak, has arisen in our country.

For nearly two years now, national jealousies and creed prejudices have been mute, and all our energies, good-will and devotedness have been directed towards the progress, prosperity and development of our noble country. And in Manitoba the principle of conciliation has of itself made such headway, that there has been found to the satisfaction of all parties interested a modus vivendi which has given excellent schools to those of our race in that province and removed former grievances.

Mr. Laurier's appeals to peace and tolerance have produced these splendid results.

The patriotic effort of our leader, for the public good, for the national dignity, and the advancement of our people, have stifled, as though by enchantment, the base and rancorous squabbles which have done us such harm since 1890.

To-day, certain politicians without character, such as Mr. Clarke Wallace and Mr. Bergeron, certain dull champions such as Mr. LaRivière, who have never fought for anything but plunder, a few fanatics and a few ambitious men, want to compromise our well-being, disturb public order, and this era of progress and activity, this glorious period of concord upon which we have just entered; but the national conscience and the will of the great masses of the people will soon silence the wretched agitators.

Now there are some compliments here. The Minister of Public Works speaks of men without character "who have never fought for anything else but plunder." But the Minister of Public Works who speaks about plunder has fought an election with me, and he has never been able to prove any of the accusations which he brought against me in my county for a month, during my absence, when I was sitting in that Chair. He knows it, and he knows that he cannot touch one hair of my head. The man who is up to his knees in it, talks of people who have never fought for anything else but plunder. He speaks about ambitious men, "men who compromise our well-being and disturb public order," when he for five years has been promenading through the province of Quebec and writing in every paper where he could put his pen, trying to arouse national and religious feelings in this country. Sir, that is the opinion of the Minister of Public Works. Is his opinion worth anything? Let us see what he said of the man whom he now calls his chief, but whom once he wished to stone; let us see what he wrote of Mr. Laurier in 1878. I will now read from "Le Canadien," of 4th September, 1878, which was edited at that time by the present Minister of Public Works:

How shall we qualify the act of Mr. Laurier swallowing up his own statements, in order to court his king and master, Mr. Mackenzie? How shall we qualify that man who, in order to keep his portfolio in the Ministry, is low-minded enough to allow the interests of his province to be sacrificed?

Now, on the 11th of September, 1878, the same paper says:

Mr. Laurier has falsified all his pledges,—
Even at that time.

—and now he has made up his mind not to take any more engagements. Are the electors going to stultify themselves by returning to Parliament a man who thus trifled with his promises, a man who, believing himself superior to public opinion, only concerns himself about his own interests and those of a favoured few.

Another article:

Laurier Unworthy of the Confidence of the Electorate.

Is Mr. Laurier entitled to the confidence of the electors of East Quebec for having carried out the famous platform of 1872, for having allowed the interests of our city, those of our province and of our country to be sacrificed, without even uttering a single word in their defence?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Will the hon. gentleman state what the answer of the people of Quebec was?

Mr. BERGERON. I am reading from the paper published by the Minister of Public Works. The hon. gentleman will find the answer contained in different articles. I now read an article headed "Laurier Crouches before our Enemies":

(From "Le Canadien," Nov. 21, 1877.)

After accepting a portfolio, Mr. Laurier sought re-election at the hands of his old electors of Drummond and Arthabaska, but was defeated, and deservedly so. Now, in that woeful plight, he comes before you, begging humbly of you to return him to Parliament, so as to enable him to retain that portfolio, which he has bought by cringing and fawning before his masters.

Let us calmly consider his acts, his policy, and ask ourselves whether the defeated Minister who is now seeking your votes is worthy of your confidence and support. Did Mr. Laurier in the least concern himself about your interests ever since he had a seat in the House of Commons? Did he not support Mr. Mackenzie through thick and thin, to the detriment of the dearest interests of our city and of our province?

Has Mr. Laurier ever stood up and advocated on the floor of Parliament our claims and our rights? I say, no. Like all the followers of the party in power, he has only been the tool of the Prime Minister.

Here is an article under the title of "Laurier, a second-rate politician":

(From "Le Canadien," Nov. 26, 1877.)

Should "L'Evenement" condescend to ratiocinate just once, it would be quite at a loss to show us on what ground Mr. Laurier is entitled to be styled "a great statesman," "a genius," which the Rouge press very foolishly bestow upon him. We challenge "L'Evenement" to cite to us a single remarkable act accomplished by

Mr. BERGERON.

Mr. Laurier, since or before he entered public life. Did he ever bring before Parliament a single measure of any kind worth mentioning? Now, as a public speaker, he is on record for nothing else but his bombastic eloquence, worthy of a college boy. I ask again, what has he done worth mentioning? What principle did he ever advocate? What reform did he ever inaugurate?

Is it enough for one to be styled a great statesman to have edited for a few years a small radical sheet, founded by "l'Enfant Terrible"? Is a man to be called a "genius" the moment he can deliver a few high-sounding, pompous but meaningless phrases? Is a man to be called clever from the fact that he contradicts himself from one day to another?

I now read an article headed "Laurier prostitutes his seat":

(From "Le Canadien," 11th Dec., 1877.)

No sooner had Mr. Laurier taken his seat in the House of Commons, and found himself in the presence of Mr. Mackenzie, than he said: "The victory won by the Liberal party in Quebec is evidence of the confidence reposed by the people of the province in the Prime Minister. I am proud to lay it at the feet of my leader."

Electors of East Quebec, when you returned Mr. Laurier to Parliament, and secured the victory for him, was it in order that he might lay it at the feet of Mr. Mackenzie?

We were right, therefore, when we stated that Mr. Laurier, like his predecessors, would prove but the humble servant of the autocratic Prime Minister!

No sooner was he back in the capital than forthwith he was seen kneeling down at the feet of his master and resuming the heavy chains which his predecessors had been bound with.

Here is an article headed "Laurier, a political weather-cock as a protectionist":

(From "Le Canadien," August 12, 1878.)

In order to show that the Liberals were the first champions of protection in our province, we quoted the utterances fallen from Mr. Laurier, in the Legislative Assembly, in 1871: "Were I living in England," he said, "I would advocate free trade; but as I am a Canadian, residing in this country, I am of opinion that we need protection. Great Britain is a free trade country because she gets an admittance into the markets of the whole world for the output of her great industries. As for us, Canadians, we should advocate protection in order to create and foster our great industries, and give them the control of the home market, which will expand with the progress of our manufactures."

Why did Mr. Laurier advocate protection in 1871, at a time when the manufacturers did not complain? Why does he deny it to them now, at a time when the country needs it so badly? But this is only a sample of Liberal logics. Mr. Laurier adduces the strongest arguments in favour of protection and he votes against it. Such a contradiction would seemingly be a puzzle, did we not know that, like all his colleagues in the Liberal party, he has staggered and fallen a victim to the allurements of power and the benefits accruing therefrom.

Mr. McMULLEN. The Minister must have been a Tory then.

Mr. TURCOTTE. The hon. gentleman has changed his views.

Mr. BERGERON. I have not changed my views. There is no difference.

Mr. TURCOTTE. The hon. gentleman changed in 1886.

Mr. TALBOT. In 1887 he changed.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. gentleman does not know what he is talking about. He can go and read my programme in 1887.

Mr. TALBOT. I know it perfectly well.

Mr. BERGERON. If the hon. gentleman can read, he can go and read "Hansard," and he will there find how I voted. The hon. gentleman can make a plea like that on the hustings, but not here. The hon. member for Megantic (Mr. Turcotte) can also turn to the "Hansard," if he can read, and he can there see my votes.

Mr. TURCOTTE. You were in my county.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. gentleman can take my speeches as they appear in "Hansard" and read them to this House, and I shall be glad if he will do so, because some hon. members will then learn something. Here I have another article headed "Laurier, has been over-estimated; he is ignorant":

(From Le Canadien," April 8, 1878.)

We have, over and over again, of late, challenged the Liberal papers to show on what ground Mr. Laurier is entitled to be called a great statesman, a title which is bestowed upon him by the Liberal papers with more enthusiasm than wisdom. They have not thought it worth while to vouchsafe us an answer. According to those party papers, Mr. Laurier is undoubtedly a man of genius, a profound politician. And even had the young member performed no other wonders than delivering a hundred times over the same schoolboy's speech, the same bombast, his Liberal admirers would none the less continue lavishing upon him their incense.

To speak the truth, they have killed their man, politically speaking, with their fulsome flattery, the most inglorious way of dying that there ever was.

We have repeatedly warned our friends, the Liberals, that they were rendering Mr. Laurier a bad service when extolling him up to the skies before he had done anything to place himself above the common level of men, before he had done something remarkable. We told them that "credit which was grounded upon editorial puff was like a house built on sand: both were doomed to ruin." But the trouble is, the Liberal papers disregarded our advice, and continued as before, lavishing their cheap incense on their idol. The result was easily foreseen. When Mr. Laurier was given a portfolio in the Mackenzie Administration, the Liberals repeated in unison: "Now, you may look forward to a change for the better in the management of our public affairs; now you may expect to see the province of Quebec resuming her lost influence; now you are going to see a statesman at work." We knew very well what kind of wonders Mr. Laurier was likely to perform; we were well aware that he would sadly disappoint those people who innocently believed the statements of the Liberal press; but we hardly expected to see our course so fully and so soon vindicated by subsequent events.

We fancied that, after Mr. Mackenzie had shelved him in a subordinate department, Mr. Laurier would be prudent enough to keep silent, and thus preserve unimpaired, for one session at least, his reputation as a statesman. But how suddenly and irretrievably did he fall down from the pedestal upon which his friends had hoisted him, amidst the jeers and cheers of the House and the country at large! And when he fell, he fell like Lucifer—never to rise again! For while public opinion freely condones a mistake, or an error in judgment in a political man, it never excuses a man who makes himself ridiculous. As Minister of the Interior, Mr. Laurier had charge of the Bill further to amend the Acts respecting stamps on bills and notes.

We do not intend now to discuss that Bill; we only wish to draw public attention to Mr. Laurier's complete and sad failure, which has for ever destroyed his prestige.

Mr. Laurier has shown a deplorable ignorance of the details of the Act which his Bill intended to amend; he literally got entangled, and the members burst out laughing, while Mr. Mackenzie kept frowning in a very significant way.

Another one:

LAURIER, THE RINGLEADER OF BULLIES.

(From "Le Canadien," Sept. 12, 1878.)

The public feeling, as evinced at the meeting called by Mr. Laurier, ought to have satisfied him that he shall no longer be allowed to trifle with the voters, to scoff at the sufferings of the people, and to falsify his pledges with impunity.

At the opening of the meeting, the majority of those present called out: "Vallière." That was the signal for Mr. Laurier's bullies to spring on the citizens who were within their right when calling for the people's candidate to address the meeting, and protesting against the course pursued by Mr. Laurier ever since he sat in Parliament for East Quebec. Mr. Laurier had, seemingly, the command of the bullies, as we were told by trustworthy and respectable people that he was heard several times crying out: "Strike! strike!"

We sincerely regret those exhibitions of brutal force. Mr. Laurier's political record shows that he has fed all his life on violence. At the last election in Drummond and Arthabaska, an unfortunate father of a family was killed. The poor man fell a victim to the imprudence of those men who, in Mr. Laurier's interests, had urged him to acts of violence.

At St. Roch's Mr. Laurier wants to do what he did at Arthabaska, crush the popular will.

In a word, it is by means of terror and "iron knuckles" that Mr. Laurier means to be returned to Parliament.

Now is the time for all free men to rise against Mr. Laurier's tyranny, who refuses to do anything for us, and whose only concern is to pocket his salary of $8,000 a year.

Another one:

LAURIER'S UNGRATEFULNESS AND FICKLENESS.

(From "Le Canadien," Dec. 7, 1877.)

No sooner had the young Minister been extricated by the electors of East Quebec from the very serious strait he found himself in, by returning him to Parliament and enabling him to keep his portfolio, than he ungratefully came out and stated before the country that his benefactors' usefulness had gone. He has already forgotten the pledges he took during the electoral contest, and no sooner had he taken his seat in Parliament than he turned his back on those who had placed in him their confidence.

Were we not warranted, we ask, in warning the electors of Quebec East not to be led away by their feelings, and not to listen to the fine words of the new Minister of the Interior? Were we not warranted in stating that he only aimed at securing a seat in the House, in order to keep his portfolio and his salary? What does that young stranger care for the interests of East Quebec and for the needs of the working classes? He has succeeded in keeping his portfolio and his salary.

Here is another one:

LAURIER A HUMBUG.

(From "Le Canadien," June 4, 1877.)

It is rumoured that Mr. Fraser, N.P., of l'Avenir, is going to run against Mr. Laurier, stating that he is sick at heart at being represented by such a time-server. The news at hand from the country are to the effect that the electors are tired of being humbugged by Mr Laurier.

LAURIER INSULTS THE IRISH.

(From "Le Canadien," June 9, 1877.)

While trying to justify his vote on the tax on tea, Mr. Laurier has splendidly availed himself of the opportunity to insult the Irish people. His contention was that as Canadians drink very little tea, the tax on that article cannot be very burdensome to them. He further stated that those who were not likely to complain of it were the Irish, who do without bread in order to buy whisky, tea or potatoes. Besides, as he said to the electors, those who cannot afford to drink tea may drink water.

LAURIER A MAN OF NO ABILITY.

(From "Le Canadien," Oct. 2, 1877.)

Mr. Laurier is no cipher, and still less can be styled a man of talent; he is what one might call a shallow mind, a second-rate politician. He is not a well-informed man, as evinced by his speeches, never rising above the level of popular prejudices, upon which he likes to speculate and, as a matter of fact, therein lies the secret of his popularity, which is tantamount to saying that he will leave behind him a political record that will never prove beneficial to the country nor creditable to his party. By making two or three stump speeches a year, he has built up for himself a reputation as a public speaker, but the fact is that he is a vulgar rhetorician. The public speaker, as defined of old, is the upright man, skilled in uttering what is right; but Mr. Laurier's skill consists in making utterances so disposed to arouse in the hearts of his hearers the worst passions.

WE OUGHT TO DREAD A CHANGE OF GOVERNMENT.

(From "La Canadien," Sept. 24, 1877.)

We Canadians are a thoroughly conservative people. We are still young, and our record is but of yesterday. We enjoy all the desirable liberties, provided we only know how to prudently and wisely use them. We respect our institutions, and do not feel like upsetting our Government just for the fun of the thing. Contented with the rights and privileges won for them by the Conservative party, throughout a lease of power of thirty years, the Canadian people, as stated by the "Globe," now require nothing but an honest administration of public affairs.

Can we hope to compass that end with the men now at the head of affairs? We say no, because the Liberals have so far shown by their record that they lack the necessary talent and stamina for making good laws, while in the management of public business they have proved inefficient and extravagant. How can we expect those men to prove honest and incorruptible in the management of public affairs when we consider their past record and recall to mind such administrative misdoings as the too famous purchase of steel rails, and such jobs as those of Fort Francis, of Goodrich Bay, of the Georgian Bay, &c., &c.

J. ISRAEL TARTE.

This is signed J. Israel Tarte, and in fact I should have said that all the others are from J. Israel Tarte also.

Mr. MCGREGOR. Tell us about your experience as a Liberal when you were defending Riel and opposing the Tories.

Mr. BERGERON. I can tell my hon. friend (Mr. McGregor) about his clan in Scotland.

Mr. MCGREGOR. The clan is all right.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend from West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) knows something about that clan.

Mr. MCGREGOR. So do I.

Mr. BERGERON. Now, this is what the Minister of Public Works wrote about the right hon. Premier. Did he write the truth or not? What he said there, is it his opinion or not? If it is what he writes in his paper to-day, how can he and his chief agree together? If it is not, what is his opinion worth? But that is not all. The Prime Minister also one day gave his opinion of men like the Minister of Public Works. Speaking in the Club National, in Montreal, in the month of May, 1884, he said:

We, of the Liberal party, as my friend Mr. Préfontaine has said, are privileged. One must be born Liberal; he cannot become so. Whoever, not being born Liberal, will become one, will not persevere. He will either become a traitor or a renegade.

Mr. DAVIS. What is the hon. gentleman reading from?

Mr. BERGERON. A report of a public meeting.

Mr. DAVIS. Is that a translation?

Mr. BERGERON. Yes, that is the opinion of the Prime Minister in answer to all the insults lavished on him by the Minister of Public Works in his paper, "Le Canadien." Now, I find an article which was published in a newspaper which afterwards became a Liberal organ, but which has to-day disappeared. I am speaking of "Le Canada" of 1895, which published an article on the 26th of October, which I also wish to have in "Hansard," because in this article the whole career of the Minister of Public Works is pretty well exposed :

For Mr. Tarte there is in the whole world but one clever journalist, but one able politician, and but one honest and disinterested man, and that of course is himself. To hear him talk you would think he was ever and always a persecuted victim. He is ever and always playing a part, that is the part of a victim, until he has become a perfect bore. Then again you find him so loaded up with awful secrets that he continually breaks out in threats against every judge, or politician, or doctor in sight, and against every member of the Conservative party. That he does not break down utterly beneath his burthen is simply because he is one who bides his time. "The day will come, which is not yet, when I will bite the man by whom I am bit." And it is the hope of vengeance that steadies his nerves and keeps him on his feet. He thinks himself indispensable, his pockets are crammed with little scraps, and has little thought for a fellow-worker, an unworthy confrère. He bemoans his troubles, and is envious of the happiness of others. One would think him jealous.

This bundle of self-conceit is quite unable to reflect the sound opinions of others. Himself and nothing but himself. And yet, after all, what is Mr. T. ?

He was a clever youth of whom Mr. Dansereau made a journalist by putting him on the staff of a paper, for which he made a reputation for a time, until he one day became too high and mighty in his own conceit and fancied he could stand alone, when of course down he came with an awful crash.

Mr. Tarte considers all politicians as rogues, boodlers and wire-pullers. He is an adept in the work of running down French Canadians and in belittling our French Cabinet Ministers.

Mr. TALBOT. How many times has that paper changed its political colour ?

Mr. BERGERON. It has changed it very often. The hon. gentleman knows the man who wrote that :

He has a craze, which is shared to some extent by all our Liberal newspapers, for hunting down French Canadians. But what has been his own record ? It would be hard to find a man more seriously compromised or more often involved in equivocal positions—exceedingly hard ! He manipulated the funds of certain Conservative election committees. Hence it is that at times—too often, in fact—he threatened to make known dreadful things, which would compromise some Cabinet Minister, or some judge. The "Gazette" dared him repeatedly to speak out, and he then took to silence. Besides, what had he to say ? He had told all he had to tell, in fact, too much for his own good ! He had compromised himself. And we also defy him to prove that his conscience is not loaded down with crimes and delinquencies. But Mr. Tarte will not speak, for the simple reason that he would have to do his own scavenging.

What did he do with the Whelan moneys in 1882, or thereabouts ? He maintains that he gave them to his Conservative friends, at the elections. It is false. What did he do in the Beemer matters about the Quebec water works ? He made money and boasted of it himself. What did he do in the matter of the Megantic road ? He made money. He himself says so. What did he do as to the Témiscouata Railway speculation ? He made $30,000, and has just admitted it in Guelph. And when he found himself master of a fortune of $75,000, what did he do ? This we shall see later.

As a journalist Mr. Tarte did not make more millions than his fellow-craftsmen, whom he treats so cavalierly. Their task is a thankless one, and he suffered as others did and do. Mr. Tarte, the politician, has made money. By what means ? He is the person who should state it publicly, just as he told it privately on occasion to his Conservative friends. Did these men but make up their minds to follow in his footsteps, this pretentious hero would have to hide his face.

He, the great accuser, the unflinching demolisher, the enemy of every great name, and envious of the success of others, would to-morrow be himself the accused, the convicted, if we were to show him up as he is.

He courted fortune assiduously. For a time he felt himself a great man. He set up a princely establishment in Quebec, and made trip after trip to Europe. In this way he became connected with the clique who was to lead him to ruin. With the downfall of the potentate who for five years held the province of Quebec in his grasp, he also fell, and his fortune melted "like butter in the stove," simultaneously with that of the man who had helped to lay its foundations deep and wide.

Whose fault is it that Mr. Tarte was not made a Cabinet Minister ? Is it due to the Conservatives whom he is now denouncing without measure, and whose power and influence in the country excite his envy ? No, he has no one to blame but himself. His craze for injuring other people has brought him to ruin and rendered him despicable in the eyes of both parties alike, and an object of suspicion to all. What he formerly worshipped he now casts into the fire. And the men whom he denounced, despised, and looked down upon of old are now his allies. The latter tolerate and endure him simply because he forced himself upon them, and is still doing so. But he is a dead weight on them. To-morrow there will be another shuffle, and then Mr. Tarte will become again—what ? What he was from the first—a little man of talent fostered by some Mécenas.

Mr. Tarte has a newspaper (an ultra paper like "La Verité" or "The Orange Sentinel"), the lowest and most despicable of Canadian journals, as those of that type ever are, the plague of journalism in every country. "Le Cultivateur" swears by Mr. Laurier. If Mr. Tarte were as respectful towards our political leaders as the latter and all Conservative papers are towards the leader of the Opposition, there would be twenty Lauriers of high renown on our political stage. For who lifted Mr. Laurier on to the pedestal he now occupies ? Mr. Tarte will not deny that it is due to the respect the Conservatives have for him, in spite of his own lack of self-respect in allying himself with Mercier. The political character of Mr. Laurier has been often and violently assailed, but his social character has never been treated as Mr. Tarte treats French Canadian Ministers of the Crown and journalists of acknowledged standing in the country.

Mr. Tarte is a skilled journalist. He is a bitter antagonist, however, and tricky. That is all. That is the man. There is nothing in his stock-in-trade to entitle him to show contempt for men of his own blood and country, simply because they venture to differ with him.

This article gives the pedigree of the Minister of Public Works, and he has never taken upon himself to bring the man who wrote that article into court to answer for what he accused him there. Now, I wanted to show the Minister of Public Works what happens to a man who either insults his colleagues in Parliament, or pays somebody to insult them. I have said enough for today. I have said enough to show the hon. gentleman that when the hon. gentleman speaks of treason, he speaks without any basis to go upon, and that he is the arch-traitor, if there is anything of the sort here.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER. That expression is not in order.

Mr. BERGERON. I am answering a newspaper in which the Minister of Public Works called me a traitor.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it back.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, let the hon. gentleman speak out his mind.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The expression is certainly not in order.

Mr. BERGERON. If you, Mr. Speaker, rule that the word is too strong, I will take it back. But I wish to say this to the Minister of Public Works, that he had better hold his hands from injuring me. Parliament is about to close, I have no paper at my disposal, and I can tell him that I am not going to bring him before the courts, for I do not believe much in that, and have seen too much of that. But I promise him that if he insults me again in his newspaper, I have still something in my desk, which I will give to him next session.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am not directly or indirectly connected with "La Patrie." I did not write or even read the articles to which the hon. gentleman has referred. I have no time to read the newspapers. As for the articles published in "Le Canadien," twenty or twenty-five years ago, I am not very much concerned with them now. Some of the articles which then appeared in "Le Canadien" no doubt were written by me, but I am quite sure that others were written by colleagues of mine who were working with me on that paper at the time. I shall not say anything more except this. My hon. friends, the Conservative leaders, may very well understand why it is they are losing ground in the province of Quebec when they have as allies such men as the hon. member for Beauharnois.

Mr. FOSTER. Just on that point, I may say that this must be the one reason why we are losing ground in the province of Quebec, if it be true that we are losing ground in that province. This reason has been very well illustrated by the style of the articles which have been quoted from "La Patrie." Whether my hon. friend edits "La Patrie" or not is beside the mark. Every one knows his connection with that paper. Every one knows the connection of that paper with the Government and the party to which my hon. friend belongs, and it is not reasonable to suppose that anything unpleasant or unsuitable or not in the line of thought of the Minister of Public Works would appear in "La Patrie." He knows that we may take "La Patrie" as a very good example of the peculiar political arts of my hon. friend. "La Patrie" is the Liberal organ in the province of Quebec. It is the personal organ of my hon. friend, the Minister of Public Works. To it, in the early part of his ministerial career, the hon. gentleman contributed regularly over his own name, until his colleagues called him down from that very unusual position.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is altogether inaccurate.

Mr. FOSTER. And now he gets the work done, but it is done just as effectively and as much in the line of my hon. friend's peculiar political methods. Here is an article which lately appeared in "La Patrie." I have no quarrel with "La Patrie," if it chooses to rate the standing and intelligence of its readers down to the calibre of its articles. That would be a ground for sympathy with the readers. A little while ago, on the 9th of May, an article appeared in "La Patrie," and here are some of the choice bits:

The Clarke Wallaces, Fosters and Tappers are no longer willing to expend a cent in our province; they want to appropriate to the English provinces exclusively the two or three hundred thousand dollars yearly expended on repatriation and immigration.

What a beautiful spirit that shows! How that tends to the intelligent instruction of the electors! What a fine issue that is on which to gain over the electorate of this country! Then the article proceeds:

We venture to think that the good people of the district of Quebec will bear in mind, when the proper time comes, this opposition offered by our adversaries to progress and development of the Lake St. John valley. Was it in order to please the province of Quebec, think you, that on Friday last, Messrs. Clarke Wallace, Foster and the other prominent Tories spoke and laboured in the effort to prevent Canada from being represented at the Paris Exposition of 1900?

Mr. CAMPBELL. There is no mention of Bergeron there.

Mr. BERGERON. Have you not had enough of Bergeron?

Mr. FOSTER. I am really surprised at the intelligence of my hon. friend. How quickly he took that up.

Was it in order to please the province of Quebec, think you, that on Friday last, Messrs. Clarke Wallace, Foster and other prominent Tories spoke and laboured in the effort to prevent Canada from being represented at the Paris Exposition of 1900?

Hon. members know exactly what position was taken with reference to the Paris Exposition by these gentlemen. The hon. Minister of Public Works knows. This is the kind of food that my hon. friend gives out to the good people of the province of Quebec.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Read the "Mail" every day.

Mr. FOSTER. To train and educate the electors of that province, in this solid and intelligent way, and vote for him and his party

They are fanatics who are prepared to sacrifice our general interests rather than have any dealing with France.

That is an honourable sentiment. How that does tend to the up-lifting of the nationality of Canada. How that does tend to make electors broad-minded and free from prejudices—going out of his way to put food of this sort before the French people to make them believe that the Wallaces, Fosters, and the Tupper and other Tories are fanatics who are prepared to sacrifice our general interests rather than have any dealings with France. Are there any others on that side who have that high opinion? There are. I am sorry that any gentleman is willing to acknowledge it.

The Tory leaders have no objection to our voting moneys for representations at the exposition in Sweden, Norway or Belgium, but we must not spend one cent for a French exposition.

Eminently true, is it not, and eminently high-minded as well?

Is it not clear that they assume a hostile attitude towards the exposition of 1900, simply in order to strike at the legitimate sentiment of our old French province, and to wreak vengeance on us for the humiliation inflicted on them in our province on 23rd June, 1896.

What an appeal that is to broad principle. Not a touch of prejudice in it. That is the paper which is the organ of the Liberal party in the province of Quebec, which is right under the eye of the Minister of Public Works, and for every sentiment in that $30,000 newspaper the Minister of Public Works is responsible. He wields it, it will turn as he directs, he is the responsible man who directs its policy. If he is not, let him, as an honest high-minded man, get up in this House to-day and repudiate the sentiments I have read. Will he do it? No, Sir. He does not want to be held responsible for them. Some one else may write them for him, and he is willing to take the benefit, if there is a benefit, that comes from the distribution of such appeals. The article goes on:

On sundry other questions, the Wallaces, Fosters and their friends have sought to hide their animosity against our province, but the two instances we have given are enough to put our people on their guard against the men now leading the Conservative party and against their detestable tendencies. The course of events in the enemy's camp should encourage us to draw closer than ever to the Laurier Cabinet.

So long as the Laurier Cabinet endorses and thrives by such appeals, so long will it enjoy a triumph which is not well based and which they are quite welcome to enjoy if they wish it on such a basis as this.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman asks me if I would repudiate or acknowledge those articles. I have said that I am no longer connected with newspaper work. I have not even read those articles and I am not in a position to say whether they have been well translated or not. It is not for me to say whether they have been well translated or not. I have grown quite accustomed, through my experience in public life, to suffer at the hands of bad translators. There is not a day that passes but my speeches, my articles, even my signed articles, have been distorted in the translation. Let my hon. friend read the "Mail and Empire," let him read the Halifax "Herald," and a dozen other Tory papers. What will he find there? He will find there every day appeals to racial prejudices. My right hon. friend was pointed to all through the general election as a Frenchman. Every day in the "Mail and Empire" and half a dozen other Tory papers which my hon. friend will not repudiate, the Premier is pointed out as a Roman Catholic and a French Canadian. I disapprove of these appeals, whether they come from French Liberal papers or from Tory papers. I do not think I am called upon to approve or disapprove these articles for which I am not responsible. When I want to be responsible for an article I sign it. As long as I have been connected with newspaper work, I have always signed my articles. Whether they were good or bad, I signed them and I am prepared to stand by them.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I have no desire to take part in the discussion—though it is a very interesting discussion—that has taken place. But I feel it my duty to correct one statement made by my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron). I feel it incumbent upon me to do so because this is the second time the statement has been made in this House; and, I think that I should speak of the matter in justice to myself. And, I am sure the hon. gentleman will understand that I am doing him an act of justice in correcting a statement which he should not have made. I agree with him when he pays every proper tribute of respect to the leaders of the Conservative Government for initiating and carrying out as far as it was in their power to do so, their policy of remedial legislation for Manitoba. But where I thoroughly disagree with him is where he claims that the Conservative Government could have retained power by throwing that question overboard. The hon. gentleman, on relection, will see that in saying this he is casting upon himself as well as upon myself, and upon every sincere friends of that policy the most questionable reflection. I am sure it is not what the hon. gentleman means. And it is because I believe he does not mean it, and because I know I never meant it, that I call his attention to the matter. He cannot mean that the majority of the Conservative party being what they were, they would have consented to the abandonment of that policy. Would the hon. gentleman himself have consented to support them had they done so? Would I have remained in that Government an hour? Would that Government have stood for one hour? No. I correct that point, repeated in this Chamber to-day. Some Conservatives, I know, blame the Conservative Government and question the wisdom of that Government in adopting that policy. I am not going to take issue with those gentlemen now—they have their opinion. That policy was honestly maintained and carried out, as far as I know, and to state that the Government could have retained power by throwing their policy to one side is a reflection upon the integrity and sincerity of the men who committed themselves to that policy.

Mr. BERGERON. As this is a personal matter, I ask leave to say a few words in explanation. I understand and appreciate the motives of my hon. friend (Mr. Costigan). I have no doubt that he speaks sincerely and for my good. But I wish to give the reason why I spoke as I did. In spite of the advice of my hon. friend, for whom I have the greatest respect, I am ready to hold to my opinion and to express it again. I may be mistaken, but I am perfectly frank and sincere in what I say. I desire to be understood as saying that if Sir Charles Tupper, when he became Premier, had felt it right to say: This question came up while I was out of the country, and I have had nothing to do with the shaping of the party policy on it thus far; I cannot undertake to settle this question before we go to the country—if he had chosen to take such a position as to permit him to say in Quebec: I will give justice to the Manitoba minority, and in the province of Ontario: I will never coerce Manitoba—I say he would have been in power to-day.

Mr. TALBOT. Nobody would have believed him.

Mr. BERGERON. I leave my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Costigan) to settle that with the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot). My opinion is, and I repeat it, that if Sir Charles Tupper had done as the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) did, if he had played a double game—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I understood that the hon. gentleman rose to a question of personal explanation, but—

Mr. COSTIGAN.

Mr. BERGERON. But that is just what I am doing, Mr. Speaker. You cannot confine me to one word. I should regard the reflection upon myself in the remarks of my hon. friend from Victoria as a serious one, if I could not answer it. If Sir Charles Tupper had been able to tell the people of Quebec that he would do more for the Manitoba minority than his opponents would do, and to tell the people of Ontario that he would never coerce Manitoba—he would be in power to-day. I trust my hon. friend from Victoria understands my position. I have a great deal of respect for his opinion. He said he would never have supported a Government that would not render justice to the minority in Manitoba, and asked if I would, I say No, I am very much of his opinion on these matters. I have followed his conduct in reference to the New Brunswick schools, and I honour him for what he did. What I sought was justice for the minority of Manitoba and I am independent enough, thank God, to take a position that I thought was right even if in doing so I found it necessary to differ from my party.

Mr. TALBOT. Has not Sir Charles Tupper on the position he took upon the school question and as spoken of by the hon. member for Beauharnois, secured the approval and support of the whole clergy of the province of Quebec. And if that statement is correct—which to my personal knowledge has dropped from the lips of that hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron)—what other influence could he have secured to support him? The people of the province of Quebec did not vote entirely on the question of the schools. They were tired of the fiscal policy of the late Government, and that was the reason for the change in the province of Quebec.

Mr. BERGERON. That does not require any answer.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have only a few words to say. If the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) were here I would call his attention to the statement made by my hon. friend from Beauharnois and ask him to refer to a speech on the school question that he delivered in the city of Winnipeg. But the leader of the Opposition is not in his seat, so I will make no allusion to the point.

I place myself in the judgment of the House when I say that the House is not at all profited by the discussion we have just had. I would like to say further that if we are to take notice of newspaper articles that we think are unfair to us and bring them forward on the floor of the House, life will be too short, and the session, long as it is, will be very much longer. Every day I am in receipt of newspaper articles, often not at all of a flattering character; but they do not disturb me of my peace or rob me of my sleep. I can afford to let them alone.

I have this further to say—that these appeals to passion, whether to French passion or to English passion; whether to Protestant or to Catholic, should not be tolerated in this country.

Mr. BERGERON. How about "La Patrie"?

The PRIME MINISTER. I care not whether they come from "La Patrie" or any other paper. So far as I am concerned, if I can only win by means of such appeals, I desire to be defeated on every occasion. I do not want any such appeal as has been made by "La Patrie" to be made to the people of this country. The province of Quebec has no other interest than the interest of the whole Dominion of Canada. We must fight the battle upon these principles, and upon these principles alone.

Mr. WALLACE. I think that the right hon. the Prime Minister might well exert that powerful influence which he possesses, more particularly over the proprietor of "La Patrie," and over the conduct of that newspaper, in order to prevent the publication of such articles in the future, which he condemns so openly. For myself, I am quite indifferent to what "La Patrie" may say about me, and was scarcely aware of his amiable comments as regards myself until they were read by the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron). This is a little family quarrel in the province of Quebec, and I would not dare to interfere; but when a newspaper like "La Patrie" uses such language as this:

Clarke Wallace is a fanatic, a ferocious man agitator.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. WALLACE. Who says that?

Mr. TALBOT. I say so.

Mr. BELCOURT. And I say so.

Mr. WALLACE. I say the man who says that is a miserable, contemptible slanderer, without a particle of truth, and I challenge him or anybody else to produce a particle of evidence to prove the assertion, or the assertion of "La Patrie" either. In my whole career I never vilified any nationality, any religion or any race. This article says that I "have nothing but scorn for everything connected with our race, our language and our province," referring to the French Canadians. Sir, I say there is not a particle of truth in that statement. Those gentlemen know what I have said, because I have said it in the House of Commons. I have said nothing in the country but what I have said here in the House of Commons, taking the same line and using the same language. I can appeal to every member of the House of Commons whether, in all my career, there is anything to justify such a slanderous article as that. The Minister of Public Works says, in an article with reference to reviving the school question, and referring to the Conservative party, I presume:

They have entrusted the vile task of reviving the school question to Clarke Wallace and Bergeron.

Mr. Speaker, I have deprecated here and everywhere any attempt to revive that question so far as the Parliament of Canada is concerned or so far as the province of Manitoba is concerned. I have always said that the question should not be revived, that it was settled, and I pointed out the danger and necessity of watchfulness to see that the question was not brought up again, but that it remains where the Premier told us it was finally settled, and settled by the province of Manitoba. I said that the province of Manitoba had the regulation of its own educational affairs, and there could be no interference with that province. That is the ground that I always took, that is the ground that I take to-day. The Government of Manitoba is responsible to the people of Manitoba for any settlement they make. I stated in an address which I delivered in another place last week, that an effort might be made to restore the system of separate schools in that province, the province might restore that system if they chose to do so, but that it should be restored by no other power than the province itself. But as to reviving the school question, I never thought of doing so. I have always deprecated it. I opposed the Government of which I was a member because I said they had no right to bring this question into the politics of the Dominion of Canada at all, and I have constantly adhered to that position down to the present day. So, that when a newspaper reeking with bigotry, with prejudice, with untruthfulness, like "La Patrie," publishes such articles as that, I think it is timely that attention should be called to it in the proper quarter. The Minister of Public Works says that when he wants to be responsible for an article he signs it; I presume when he does not want to be responsible for his article, he does not sign it. He says he never reads "La Patrie," he does not know what is in it, he is not responsible. Well, he might as well tell that to the marines, for he tells us in the very next breath that he reads the Toronto "Mail," and he asks us to read it every day. I presume he reads it every day, or he would not ask us to read it every day. He does not find time to read his own newspaper, but he finds time to read the Toronto "Mail" every day. Well, as for the Toronto "Mail," I would be as willing to condemn an article in that paper if it contains such sentiments as "La Patrie" as I would to condemn "La Patrie."

Mr. McMULLEN. It often does.

Mr. WALLACE. Then, let the article be brought up and condemned. Let the unfairness, the dishonesty, the bigotry, if there are such in that paper, be pointed out to the House of Commons, and the same condemnation will be meted out to it as this House of Commons will mete out to that vile journal which is devoid of all sense of propriety and of truthfulness, as shown in the article which the member for Beauharnois has read. I think that the Prime Minister has very properly designated the Minister of Public Works when he said that a man to be a Liberal had to be born a Liberal, Liberalism had to be bred in the bone. He had no faith in those who came over to the Liberal party. What is his language as it was read here this afternoon:

One who is not born a Liberal will not persevere. He will become either a renegade or a traitor.

I quite coincide with the language of the Prime Minister, and I think he has admirably characterized the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. BELCOURT. It would be amusing if it were not cynical to hear the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) get up in this House and call slanderers those who charge him with being a fanatic. Why, Sir, the whole life of the hon. gentleman has been spent in fanning the prejudices, not only national but religious, of a certain element in this country. The hon. gentleman would not have a seat in this House if he had not spent his whole life in fanning the national and religious prejudices of a certain element in this country.

Mr. TALBOT. I would ask the member for West York (Mr. Wallace) if he is responsible for a quotation in the "Citizen" of Wednesday, June 1st, reporting a meeting of the Orange Lodge here for the election of Grand Master. These words are put into the mouth of the hon. member:

In regard to the Manitoba school question Mr. Wallace said that signs are not wanting that the advocates of the separate schools would seek to recover gradually the restoration of the old order of things, and he cautioned Orangemen to be ever on the alert.

Mr. WALLACE. I will only say in reply to the junior member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt), who made a statement that I spent my life in fanning prejudices—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. The hon. gentleman has already spoken.

Mr. WALLACE. That is true, but the Minister of Public Works made a lengthy speech, a second speech, and he was not called to order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Privilege.

Mr. WALLACE.

Mr. WALLACE. I know I have no right to speak, but only to correct a statement, and I rise for that purposes. But I may say the Minister of Public Works made a long argument, speaking the second time. I was going to say this, that so far as my constituency is concerned—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. WALLACE. I am making an explanation, but if the Speaker declares that I am out of order I will not pursue the attempt.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) ought to be the last man in the House to make the statement that he did, in view of the record of the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace), who was born in the constituency which he has represented for twenty years, and who has received the largest majority of any member of this House at the last election. That should satisfy any one that he is neither a fanatic nor a man who would inflame the passions of the people for the purpose of getting into Parliament. He has occupied positions of trust in almost every line, municipal, educational, and as a member of this House, and if the hon. member for Ottawa will go into the constituency of West York he will find there is not a Roman Catholic or Protestant who knows the member for West York and his family but respects him, and admits that he is a man of good intentions, good purposes and broad liberal mind, and that he will neither oppress nor abuse any one with respect to religion, nationality nor line of life. It comes with very bad grace from the hon. gentleman who is occupying a seat in this House for the first time to reflect on the record of the hon. member for West York in view of the position he occupies in the community where he has resided for fifty years or more.

Motion agreed to, and the House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

To promote direct communication and trade between Canada and South Africa. $5,000

Mr. FOSTER. We should like some explanation of this item.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Hon. gentlemen are probably aware that very considerable trade has been developed between the United States and South Africa within the last three or four years. It has grown to such an extent that whereas one steamer per month was quite sufficient two or three years ago, now there is a weekly line. We find a very considerable quantity of Canadian produce has been forwarded by that line, for which Canada does not get credit, the goods being entered as United States products. We think the time has come when something can be done in the way of providing direct trade between Canada and South Africa. We propose to establish an agent out of this vote of $20,000 at Cape Town, and the Government asks this vote for the purpose of sending one ship there as a pure experiment, more particularly because we have received an invitation from the Government of South Africa to take part in an exhibition which is about to be held in the autumn of this year at Grahamstown, and we thought that probably a good many of our merchants and manufacturers, if we had a vessel going there direct, would be likely to avail themselves of the opportunity to send goods out. This is a purely experimental effort. It is quite premature to say whether we should establish a direct line or not, but there appears to be reasonable and fair ground for considering that a considerable quantity of our products might be sold in South Africa.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the hon. gentleman propose to subsidize only one round trip.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Only one trip.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the hon. gentleman propose that the Government shall collect the freight, or make some other arrangements?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. We propose to communicate with the various Boards of Trade and call attention to the expedition, and suggest that merchants communicate with their members in case they are desirous of sending goods in this way to this exhibition or to South Africa generally.

Mr. FOSTER. The merchants will have to pay the freight?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It will be difficult to induce parties to put one ship on this line.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman advertise for tenders for the work?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. That would depend on circumstances. We might advertise, but I doubt whether we would obtain a great number of tenders for any enterprise of this kind. We will however, endeavour to obtain the most favourable terms. I know of no vessel at present sailing between any port in Canada and South Africa. The Government will make the best bargain possible, but the hon. gentleman will understand that this is purely an experimental trip, and I do not want to pledge the Government in any form, shape or way for the payment of a regular subsidy for a line to South Africa.

Mr. FOSTER. For a party which not more than four or five years ago were thundering against steamship subsidies, asking that they be cut down to the lowest possible notch, if not altogether abandoned, and attacking them in the House and in the country, hon. gentlemen opposite have experienced a most remarkable conversion. Never in the history of Parliament has such a large sum of money been voted for steamship subventions as this present year by this Government, the members of which, when in Opposition, were in principle, and as a matter of policy, diametrically opposed to subsidizing steamship lines. This last is the most absurd climax of the whole proceedings, when the hon. Minister asks $5,000 for one round trip to South Africa.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The hon. gentleman knows perfectly well, if he knows anything at all about the business of the country, that never for twenty years has there been such an extraordinary and remarkable expansion of the export trade of Canada as has occurred since this Government came into power. The trade of Canada, the export trade especially, has expanded by leaps and bounds, and has attained this very year something like $50,000,000 more than ever before. Under these circumstances it is justifiable and desirable for the Government to make this experiment and adopt methods which would not have been justified during the stagnant conditions which prevailed when the hon. gentleman and his predecessors were in office.

Mr. FOSTER. I remember that the argument used by the present Minister of Trade and Commerce when in Opposition that when there was prosperous trade vessels would come here and seek it, and yet the hon. gentleman to-day gives as a reason why Parliament should subsidize steamship lines the fact that trade has expanded to the extent of $50,000,000. If so, $50,000,000 worth of additional trade is seeking an outlet, and yet the hon. gentleman is willing to expend hundreds of thousands of dollars more in order to secure ships to come here and carry it.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. That is a very good reason for endeavouring to try and obtain additional markets.

Mr. SPROULE. The argument of the hon. gentleman and his friends when in Opposition was that the Government should not go abroad to find markets for our produce and manufactures, because we had better markets in the adjoining country, and we should take advantage of them. He then condemned every proposed subsidy to steamship companies to secure markets in other portions of the world. The hon. gentleman has in this, as in many other matters, followed the example of his predecessors, and to-day his strongest argument is that the Government wish to secure expansion of trade abroad. This expansion of trade has not, however, occurred since hon. gentlemen opposite came into power, because it had commenced before them, and the expansion of the country's trade has occurred with Great Britain, although hon. gentlemen opposite when in Opposition always had advocated the development of trade with the United States. I do not object to this vote, for it is a step in the right direction. I should like, however, to know whether the Government are going to send out another commissioner.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. No.

Mr. WALLACE. Do I understand that an exhibition is to be held at Grahamstown?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes, some time in the autumn.

Mr. WALLACE. I am sorry I cannot agree with my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule), because I think a commissioner should be sent there to give information.

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister says he is going to send a man.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. No, I did not say that. There is a gentleman at Cape Town named Mr. Motley, who may possibly be the agent.

Mr. WALLACE. I am quite in accord with the proposal. We should have some one there who would indicate the class of agricultural products and manufactures that would be in demand in that country, and I suppose they have something they can send us in return.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. There is a pretty large mining population depending on Cape Town, and we hope to send some of our products to them.

For steam communication daily during the season of 1898, i.e., from the opening to the closing of navigation, between Baddeck, Grand Narrows and Iona, and one trip each fortnight to Big Pond and East Bay.....	$4,000
For steam communication daily during the season of 1898, i.e., from the opening to the closing of navigation, between Port Mulgrave and St. Peter's, to extend twice each week to Irish Cove	$4,000

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. These two items represent a vote consolidated in the former Estimates, but which was omitted. Owing to the failure of the company who used to perform these two services in former times we are obliged to find it expedient to divide them and we are obliged to pay a trifle more. When the two services were performed together we paid $7,000, but we ask an addition of $500 in each case when divided. The Bras d'Or Steamship Company has ceased to carry on its operations.

Mr. FOSTER. Will tenders be called for now?

Mr. SPROULE.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. In these very small matters I think we had better make arrangements with the steamships that are actually carrying on business at that point.

Mr. FOSTER. These steamships will be the best fitted to undertake the competition and to tender.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I am advised there is only one set of steamships in each case.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. Minister must see that he is throwing away the whole system of contract by tender.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. In respect to these small steamship contracts it certainly was not the practice to call for tenders.

Mr. GILLIES. I am quite familiar with this service as one portion of it is largely in my constituency, namely, that from Mulgrave to St. Peters and thence to Irish Cove. This service was performed for several years by the Bras d'Or Steamship Navigation Company, which several months ago went out of business. I brought that to the notice of the department at the time so that steps would be taken to provide for a substitute. I was very anxious that this service should be put up for contract by tender as there were several steamship men anxious to perform the service, but for some reason or another it was not put up to tender. I called over to see the Minister to explain matters as they appeared from my standpoint and I asked that the service east of St. Peters should be continued as often as heretofore performed, more particularly in face of the fact that the subsidy was being increased. Let me ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce at this point if he knows the parties who are to conduct the service from Mulgrave to St. Peters and Irish Cove?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). Mr. Finlayson, the representative of the local government, came here representing the parties, but I do not recall their names. The other service from Baddeck to Grand Narrows is done by one Barrington.

Mr. GILLIES. I am not talking about that service, nor do I ask this information of the Minister of Finance. nor does the matter belong to him or his department. I called upon the Minister of Trade and Commerce two or three times, but he could not recall the names of these parties. I would like to know from the Minister of Finance what business has he to say that Mr. Finlayson had to come here representing these parties, or to make representations respecting this or any other service, when I am in this House representing the county. While I am in this House as a representative of the people I will permit no interference from any one be he local representative or be he Minister of Finance. I do not interfere with Mr. Finlayson or any one else in local matters peculiarly within their charge, and I think it comes with very bad taste indeed from the Minister of Finance who has been tinkering with these things and getting parties up here to press this matter in a particular direction when my representations were in the hands of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who I must say was ready and willing to meet my views because they were reasonable views. In that connection I may read to the House a letter which I wrote to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, because I felt that this matter was entirely in his department, and he is a gentleman from whom I received every consideration when discussing this matter with him from a business standpoint. On 5th May, I wrote the following letter:—

Ottawa, May 5th, 1898.

The Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright, Minister of Trade and Commerce,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—I trust that in the arrangements to be entered into with the parties carrying on the steam service from Mulgrave to St. Peters, that you will insist upon the boat running down from St. Peters to Irish Cove at least three times per week. Unless this be done, the people around that large section of country will be deprived all services. There is a public wharf at Irish Cove to which the boat has been running for years, in fact, ever since the wharf was built in 1891, this steamer has been touching there. There is a road from Loch Lomond settlement to the public wharf at Irish Cove, so that the steamer running to this public wharf will be a great accommodation to a large community. If you look at the map of the locality you will understand at once that the inconvenience the people will be subjected to if the steamer will not run down from St. Peters to Irish Cove at least three times a week. Trusting that you will insist upon this being done by the parties that get the subsidy we vote here,

I am, yours truly,

(Sgd.) J. A. GILLIES.

To that letter, I had the following reply from the Deputy Minister:—

Department of Trade and Commerce,
Ottawa, May 6th, 1898.

Jas. A. Gillies, House of Commons, Ottawa.

Sir,—I am desired by the Minister to acknowledge the receipt of your letter in re service to Irish Cove, and am to state that the matter will receive consideration, and such service will be provided for as may seem practicable.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

(Sgd.) W. G. PARMALEE,
Deputy Minister.

I sent a copy of the letter which I wrote to the Minister of Trade and Commerce to the two Ministers representing Nova Scotia in the Cabinet, namely, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) and the Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden). On the 7th of May,

1898, I received the following reply from the Minister of Militia:—

Minister's Office,
Ottawa, 7th May, 1898.

Dear Sir,—I am in receipt of your letter of the 5th instant, inclosing a copy of your letter to the Minister of Trade and Commerce with regard to the continuation of the steam service to Irish Cove. The matter will have my best consideration.

Yours faithfully,

(Sgd.) F. W. BORDEN,

J. A. Gillies, Esq., M.P.,
House of Commons, Ottawa.

I am obliged to the Minister of Militia for his reply. Up to date I have had not a single acknowledgment of my letter from the Minister of Finance; he was busy, I suppose, with the local member, Mr. Finlayson, with whom I have no quarrel whatever and with whose business I never interfere. I think the Minister of Finance must know that I have sufficient intelligence to represent the needs of my own county in this House or in his department or in any other department of the Government. If this be so then it is absolutely discourtesy upon his part to call in any outsider to play the part of an advisory agent in matters that have had my representation and my direction. Now, I cannot understand why the steamer that is subsidized to the extent of $4,000 to run from Mulgrave, the terminus of the Inter-colonial Railway on the mainland, to St. Peters, and thence east, should not run as often as she has hitherto done, more particularly in face of the fact that the subsidy has been increased. In 1891, when I first came to this House, the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster) was then Minister of Finance. His determination then was to lessen the subsidies to that service, on account of the railway being opened on the Island of Cape Breton from Mulgrave to Sydney. I then asked him—and he argued the question very closely with me—to look at the map, as I have asked the present Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) to do, and see what inconvenience the people there would be subject to if the steamer did not run there. The late Minister of Finance met me in a fair and liberal manner, and the subsidy was left at $7,000, and the steamer ran down there four times a week. I ask the Finance Minister who appears so anxious to interfere in this business if he should not stand by the people of that district, and not by any steamship people. Before I came to this House this year, several steamship men, who are engaged in business around the coast of Cape Breton and elsewhere, came to me and asked me if they would have any chance of getting the subsidy for that route. I asked them to apply. One of them particularly told me that it would be no use to apply, as there was a certain party applying, and he would be likely to get the subsidy. I endeavoured to press upon the department that as the old Bras d'Or Steamship Company had gone out of business, and the service to St. Peters and down east had become vacant thereby, it was the duty of the department to put the service up to tender and contract, and let the best man get it, and let the country get the benefit of competition. That was not done. This was manifestly the best course for the Government in its own and in the public interest to take. Probably if the suggestion had come from a Liberal member, or some unauthorized undelegated outsider with peculiar and ill-digested notions upon political morality for which he was punished by a supreme court judgment by a monetary penalty and five years disfranchisement some respect would have been paid to it. But I am firmly of the opinion that the Minister of Trade and Commerce himself if left untrammelled and if he would not pay so much attention to the suggestions, the unreasonable suggestions, coming from certain sources, the public funds of this country would not be misdirected in the way they are in respect to this service. The Minister of Trade and Commerce went over the map with me the other day in his own department, and I assure the committee that my object was really to assist the hon. Minister in coming to an equitable conclusion with the parties who would perform that service. That was one of the objects. The other object was that the people might have the benefit of any service we would be paying for. The hon. Minister went over the map with me, and he saw that my request was a reasonable one, that that large section of country comprising as it does the districts of Big Pond, Loch Lomond and Red Islands, should have the benefit of the steamer running down there at least three times a week. He asked me to write a letter to him to that effect. I did so, and I hope the representations I set forth in that letter will have the weight to which they are entitled. Now, what I wanted the Minister of Trade and Commerce particularly to understand was this, that the steamer running from Port Mulgrave to St. Peters, a distance of only 30 miles, which could be covered in five or six hours both ways, should be made to run down to Irish Cove, a distance of 20 miles from St. Peters at least three or four times a week if not daily. Last year the steamers were running there three or four times a week, though the subsidy paid by this Government for the service was less than it is now. This is not a political matter by any means; I do not want to be charged with anything of that kind. It is a business proposition which I put before the Minister of Trade and Commerce as a business man. This service the country is paying for. It is a service which the people had for years before, when the company that was performing it received a smaller subsidy, and it is a service that we are paying for handsomely, and that the people are entitled to and must have.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I may say that if the hon. gentleman failed to receive an acknowledgment either from my secretary or myself of a letter which he addressed to me, after sending a copy of it to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, it is an omission for which I desire to express my regret, for I certainly had no intention of treating the hon. gentleman with discourtesy. I have been very much driven of late, and a portion of my correspondence has got behind. Having said that, I am at a loss to understand what the hon. gentleman meant by the somewhat extraordinary and offensive expressions he uttered towards myself in reference to this matter. He wanted to know what right I had to let Mr. Finlayson come here and talk on this matter. Mr. Finlayson came here representing people who are interested in a steamer, and I think they had a right to send him or anybody else to represent them. That gentleman came here to make proposals in connection with this service, and I told him to go and see the Minister of Trade and Commerce. He went, and the result is that this item is in the Estimates. If the hon. gentleman knew a number of people who wanted to tender, and if those people came to the hon. gentleman in reference to the matter, it is somewhat extraordinary that he did not send them to the Minister of Trade and Commerce to make their proposals to him. The idea that it has been the practice of hon. gentlemen opposite to take tenders for all these services is an entire mistake. The services are arranged for year after year. The service between St. John and Digby has been carried on for years without tender. The service between St. John and the Basin of Minas has been going on year after year without tender. It is not convenient to invite tenders for all these services, as the number of available steamers on the coast is limited. The Bras d'Or Steamship Company have found it a losing business, and they have had to go out of the business. I have no reason to believe that if we had invited public tenders we would have got any important offers. So far as Irish Cove is concerned, one trip a week was first proposed, but I asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce to make it two trips a week, and that is provided for in the Estimates. If arrangements could be made for three trips a week, I would be glad to have it done; but the hon. gentleman has not shown that any wrong has been done in connection with this service.

Mr. GILLIES. The hon. gentleman is entirely unfair if he says that Mr. Finlayson came here to represent a steamship company.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman asked across the floor of the House who were the parties offering for this service. The Minister of Trade and Commerce did not have the name at his hand, and I stated that the parties, whoever they were, were represented by Mr. Finlayson. The Minister of Trade and Commerce did not have the names at hand, and I stated that the parties, whoever they were, had been represented in the negotiations by Mr. Finlayson. I could give the name of the agent, but not of the principals.

Mr. GILLIES. I understand the hon. Minister of Finance very well. I understand his object and his motives.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken. I can assure him. I had no motive other than, as the Minister of Trade and Commerce had not the names of the parties at hand. I thought it would help the hon. gentleman if I would tell him that the parties were represented by Mr. Finlayson.

Mr. GILLIES. The facts are as I have stated. The Bras d'Or Steam Navigation Company performed that service from 1880 or 1881, until they went out of business last year. There was no necessity for asking for tenders when that company was doing the service and doing it well, but the very moment that it went out of business, and other parties had to be called in, it became the duty of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to ask for tenders. I do not care what the Minister of Finance says to the contrary. The service became vacant, parties were anxious to take it up, and that was the time to call for tenders. If the Minister of Finance had done his duty then he would have agreed with my views and have urged them upon his colleagues in the Government in the public interest. However, I want to impress upon the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, within whose province this service peculiarly is, the necessity of this service. I did not go to the Minister of Finance in connection with the matter, it was not in his department and I was dealing with the responsible Minister.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did not want the hon. gentleman to come to me.

Mr. GILLIES. I would willingly have gone to his department, but did not want to trouble him, knowing that he had other matters to occupy his attention in keeping his kicking followers in line and other kindred occupations, but I wrote to him, representing the matter, and as I have stated had no reply. The service I asked for, namely, three times a week, from St. Peter's to Irish Cove, can be very well and easily done. It was easily done by the last steamship company, which got a smaller subsidy, and surely can be still more readily done by a company that runs a much smaller boat there and to which we give a larger amount. There is no contract entered into yet with any person. There is a small steamer running there, and when the year is over these people will come for their subsidy and get it, for a service they will probably never have performed and if performed at all then very inadequately. I wish to impress on the Minister of Trade and Commerce the fact that the service can be done three times a week from St. Peter's to Irish Cove, and until that service is given, justice will not be done and the people will not be satisfied. I would ask the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce if he would be kind enough to make a note of my representations.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I have done so.

To provide for the construction of a new steamer to take the place of the steamship "Stanley" between Prince Edward Island and the mainland... $180,000

Mr. FOSTER. Is this going to be farmed out?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, I partially explained this before. The circumstances are these. Nine years ago the Minister of Fisheries had the steamship "Stanley" built to carry out the terms of union by having a winter service between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. That vessel turned out a very great success, but the trade of the island in winter has changed almost entirely from what it formerly was and is gradually increasing. The old practice was to import all our goods in the autumn for the next six or seven months; but since the "Stanley" has been put on the route, the necessity of making enormous purchases in the fall has disappeared, and the merchants purchase from time to time what they want, and there is now a very large trade being carried on in the winter months. Many people suppose that the winter service is a losing one, but that is not the case. I have here the returns for the last nine years. The "Stanley," although she carries Her Majesty's mail, is not credited with any sum for that service, and hers is the only case in which the mails are carried without charge. I have informed the Postmaster General that the "Stanley" has to be credited with the carrying of Her Majesty's mails, whatever that be worth—$4,000 or $5,000 at any rate. The expenditure in connection with that service in the last nine years has been $138,838, and the receipts $96,641, leaving a deficit of only $42,000, which would have been more than covered if the "Stanley" had been credited with a reasonable allowance for carrying the mails.

Mr. CLARKE. How frequently does she run?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Every day when possible. Of course, there have been times when she was kept out eight days, but such cases are very exceptional. This fact has been pressed on me, that if anything happened the "Stanley," the whole service would be stopped for the winter, which makes it necessary to have a second good boat. When the board of trade of the island came here a short time ago, they represented these facts to the council, and showed that the "Stanley" was unable to carry all the freight collected from time to time in the warehouses at Pictou, so that some merchants have had to pay $300 or $400 for freight delayed at Pictou, which the "Stanley" could not carry over. One gentleman brought me his freight bills, to show what he had to pay in Pictou. Captain McElhinney, Captain Finlayson and Commodore Welsh drew up specifications for a new boat on the same lines as the "Stanley," but somewhat larger. Captain McElhinney has gone to submit the specifications to the ship-builders on the other side to get them to tender for the work.

Mr. FOSTER. The other boat cost $150,000?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. $160,000. This will cost in the neighbourhood of $180,000. She will carry about one-quarter more freight than the "Stanley."

Mr. MACDONALD (King's). I am very glad indeed to see an amount in the Estimates for a boat to take the place of the "Stanley." The "Stanley" has been wonderfully successful, and the only thing against her was that she was becoming rather small for the trade. Our winter trade has been growing so rapidly that her capacity was not found sufficient to accommodate it. That trade is making very rapid strides owing to the establishment of a very large pork curing house in the province. The people of Prince Edward Island are turning their attention very much to the growing of pork. This seems to promise to be by far the largest industry in the province. Before six years pass over our heads, I think we shall rather astonish the rest of Canada in respect of that industry. I am glad to see that the hon. Minister has brought down a sum to put on a boat similar and larger than the "Stanley" on that route.

Mr. COCHRANE. In view of the enormous increase of traffic, will the increase of a quarter more of the tonnage enable the Minister to provide for it?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The "Stanley" will be used for the customs prevention service in summer, but in winter she will be on this route as an auxiliary boat.

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's). There is a possibility of having too large a boat in this service. If she is too large, she will be unwieldy in the ice.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. All that has been carefully considered by Capt. McElhinney.

Mr. MARTIN. Can the hon. gentleman tell at what time this vessel will be in service?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I cannot tell. The hon. gentleman knows that the shipyards in Great Britain are very much overworked at present. My instructions to Capt. McElhinney were, if he found the cost of building the vessel to be in time for this autumn very excessive, he must make the contract so as to let it run over to next spring. We all hope to have her on the service on the 15th of next September.

Additional for tidal service..... $1,500

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This is required partly for the remuneration of the inspector who superintends the repairs in the existing tidal stations in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, Capt. Bloomfield Douglas. He was appointed on the representation of Mr. Bell Dawson. Instead of Mr. Dawson going down from Ottawa to inspect the tidal stations at Halifax, St. John and in the vicinity of the maritime provinces, Capt. Bloomfield Douglas, who holds a small position in connection with the department and is a commissioner for investigating wrecks, &c., will make an investigation of tidal stations and carry out these repairs. It has been found necessary to determine the tidal difference in different ports in the Bay of Fundy, that the exact time of the tide may be known at different points, where navigation is often dependent upon the tide. Mr. Bell Dawson reported to me that this was essential, and $650 of this money will be for that purpose.

Salaries and expenses of cattle inspection. $2,800

Mr. CLARKE. I desire to ask if any of this vote is for the salary of a Mr. Sheridan?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Mr. CLARKE. What is it for, then?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This is very nearly a self-sustaining service. The receipts of 1896-97 were $2,150, and the expenditure $2,586. The inspection fees were reduced during the time of my predecessor, which accounts for the expenditure being slightly in excess of the receipts. In 1893 the fees were, for cattle three cents per head and for sheep one cent per head. This was reduced in 1896 to one and a half cent for cattle and half a cent for sheep. This is for the salaries of two inspectors in Montreal, Mr. Pope, and another whose name I do not recollect.

Mr. CLARKE. Not Sheridan?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not think so, they have been there a long time.

To provide for a marine biological station in the Gulf of St. Lawrence.... $7,000

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The British Association for the Advancement of Science first represented the necessity of this station. A short time ago, with the Minister of Militia and Defence (Mr. Borden), I received a deputation representing all the universities of Canada, urging that steps be taken for the establishment of this station. The necessity of this work was pointed out, and it was stated that Canada was the only civilized country that had not a marine biological station. They suggested that it should not be a Government institution, that we should not have the appointment of the officers or the responsibility of carrying it on; but said that if we would vote $5,000, they would provide a floating biological station and appoint their own caretaker. They said that $2,000 a year would maintain it.

Mr. FOSTER. To be directed by a committee of the universities?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, with one representative from the Marine Board. I intend to appoint Mr. Commissioner Prince.

Mr. FOSTER. That is all right.

Mr. CLARKE. I notice here an item for the construction of a new observatory near Toronto. Will tenders be asked for the construction of this station?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Immigration $58,500

Mr. FOSTER. There was an item of this held over for further explanation, and as it is five minutes to six and this explanation will take some time, I think we might as well rise.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). I understood that the item was passed—I was not in the House at the time—on the understanding that at a later sitting I was to give an explanation.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

The House again resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 141) respecting the Great North-west Central Railway Company.—(Mr. Morrison.)

(In the Committee.)

On section 4,

Mr. RICHARDSON. When the hour on Private Bills expired on Wednesday last, we were considering this clause, and we had not reached a decision because I had concluded the remarks I was addressing to the committee on this very important question. Since that time I and my colleagues from the west have been considering this Bill very carefully, and there are several hon. gentlemen who want to speak on it, and so far as I am concerned, I deem it one of such supreme importance to the people of Manitoba that I do not think I can conclude my observations within less than two hours.

Mr. MORRISON. Why did you support the Bill in committee?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I may tell the hon. gentleman that I went to the committee with the intention of opposing the measure. I made up my mind during the discussion that if the Bill carried, we would probably have an opportunity of getting rid of one set of people who were parties to the matter, and if we could do that, the result might be to secure the construction of at least a portion of that road this summer. But when the Bill came before the committee, amendments were proposed by those representing Mr. Charlebois, which in the opinion of some of the members would utterly destroy the value of the Bill, and therefore, I deem it in the best interests of the people I represent to oppose it. There are a number of other Bills on the Order paper and I should not like to take the position of blocking those Bills. I recognize that if I conclude the remarks I propose making and my colleagues do the same, the result will be that those other measures will not be reached. I will be quite willing to withdraw for a brief time to allow those other measures that are unopposed to pass, for they would occupy the House not more than five minutes, and then we could resume the consideration of the present Bill. I make that suggestion to the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Morrison), and I ask him now if he is willing to agree to it. If so, I shall be very glad to give way and allow those measures to pass. If he will not agree, then I must insist on making somewhat lengthy observations to the committee. I pause to hear what the hon. gentleman has to say.

Mr. MORRISON. I must admit that the hon. gentleman has displayed characteristic assurance in requesting me to temporarily withdraw my Bill. After the extraordinary course pursued by the hon. gentleman, he could hardly expect that I would make any concession. He may proceed as he thinks best in the matter, and I will proceed in my own way.

Mr. BELCOURT. I remind the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Morrison) that this would not be a concession to the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson), but to the hon. members who have Bills on the Order paper. I would ask him in my own name and in the name of another hon. member to accept the suggestion thrown out. Only a few minutes would be occupied in passing those Bills we have in charge, because the orders are only for consideration of amendments from the Senate. I hope my hon. friend will accept the suggestion, and if he will we shall be much obliged to him.

Mr. MORRISON. The last night this Bill was up I voluntarily suggested to the hon. member for Lisgar the line of action now proposed. It was refused, because the hon. gentleman was apparently looking for gore, and the present state of affairs accordingly exists. The hon. member talked the Bill out to his own satisfaction. Since then hon. gentlemen interested in the Bill and the solicitor for the Bill are most anxious it should pass. No cogent reason can be advanced against it: certainly no valid objection has been made to the Bill up to the present, and I can see no reason why the Bill should not be allowed to proceed in the ordinary way. A manifest injustice will be done somebody if the Bill is stifled in this way by the member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson). In the position in which I am, having charge of the Bill, it is very unreasonable for anybody to ask me to make such concessions as are sought. There is no member in this House to whom I would rather grant a concession than the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt), but I hope he will appreciate my position. There is no man in the House who would vote against the Bill sooner than I if there were reasons shown me why it should not be passed, but I do deprecate the system which apparently is growing in this House of treating Bills in this way, and I trust that members with more parliamentary experience than I have will express their opinions on what we have witnessed here during the last two sittings of this committee. I am surprised and pained to find that hon. gentlemen, as I am advised, and indeed as I see, should resort to this means of obstructing legislation. The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) spoke for over half an hour at the last meeting, and with all due deference to him I must say that he did not make any argument against this Bill worthy of the merest child. Now, Sir, I have absolutely no personal interest in this Bill. I have taken charge of it after discussing it with the two solicitors of the promoters, and I am satisfied that it should become law. That is the only reason why I am connected with it. I am very sorry indeed to have to take the position I am taking, but the fault is not with me, but with the member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson), who chooses to adopt this factious opposition and will not let the Bill come to a vote in the House. I am ready to abide by that vote whether it be adverse or otherwise. That is the only honourable way out of this difficulty, for I cannot recede from the position I have taken.

Mr. FOSTER. I would advise my hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) to consider the very frank and very fair position taken by the member for Westminster (Mr. Morrison). If this Bill is objectionable let us have the objections stated. There are gentlemen on both sides who wish it to pass, but the situation is complicated in that there are gentlemen interested in other Bills on the Order paper after this one, and these cannot be reached until this one is disposed of. If it be that one or two members can actually prevent the committee of the House of Commons expressing its opinion upon half a dozen Bills, it seems to me that it is rather an extreme position to take. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Richardson) has already expressed his reasons against the Bill, but to say that because he occupies this vantage ground at the end of the session he would use it simply for the purpose of obstruction, is, I think, hardly fair. He may rely on the members of this House to throw out the Bill if it is bad or to adopt it if it is reasonable. I have no particular interest in the Bill except that the matter being before the House for a good many years, and having looked over the principle of this compromise, because it is a compromise, it seems to me that it is a fair piece of legislation for us to pass. I am informed by those interested in the Bill that if it is passed, it will provide the way for money enough to continue that road, and my hon. friend (Mr. Richardson) will be taking a great responsibility if he blocks it. At the next session of Parliament he can move as he thinks best, but if he destroys the Bill now he is certainly no nearer getting the construction of the road, which I imagine is a very important thing for the settlers there. Under this arrangement, I am informed there is a fair prospect for money to carry out the enterprise, and in that case I would very strongly recommend the hon. gentleman (Mr. Richardson) to allow the committee to express its opinion.

Mr. DAVIS. The main reason why opposition has been offered to this Bill by the members from the North-west is that this company is practically securing an extension of time for two years. Let me point out to my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) that the promoters of this Bill have not been able to find a single western member from Manitoba and the North-west to take this matter up, and so they had to go to British Columbia and get a gentleman from New Westminster. I have no wish to obstruct this Bill, but—

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). Would my hon. friend (Mr. Davis) let me make a suggestion?

Mr. DAVIS. I was going to make a suggestion myself, but if you want to make one you can go ahead.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. What I was going to suggest was this. I think perhaps I have a very full knowledge of the circumstances connected with this railway. The terminus of the railway is within sight of my home, where I lived for a great many years, and I am quite familiar with the subject. I must say that I sympathize very much with my hon. friends from Manitoba and the Territories, who have shown a disposition to prevent the passage of this Bill because this has been a burning question in that portion of the country for many years. The feeling of the people there, as has been expressed by some of my hon. friends, is that they have been fooled for sixteen or eighteen years, and they have been told from year to year that this road was going to be built, when apparently there had been no bona fide intention of building it. I am not going to discuss the details of the various transactions that have taken place further than to say, that the persons who have been connected with the road at various times seem to have done everything in the world except to devote themselves to building the railway. I think my hon. friends who are opposing the Bill would be satisfied if something like this would be done. The promoters of the Bill say they want to get these bonds issued for the purpose of settling the liabilities of the road and getting the enterprise into a business shape. The persons opposing the Bill say: That they do not think any concessions ought to be granted unless this road is extended and some guarantee of good faith on the part of the promoters is given. I would suggest to my hon. friends that they agree that a provision be inserted in the Bill that twenty miles of the road shall be built within a certain time to be agreed upon, that that shall be paid for out of the proceeds of the bonds which are issued, and that no bonds can be issued until that twenty miles is built. These people can go ahead and finance for that twenty miles, then they can issue their bonds on the whole line, including the twenty miles, and we will have the arrangement complete and the road extended a sufficient distance to give the people there guarantee that Parliament has been endeavouring to take care of their interests. I think that could be done, and I think from the number and strength of the people who are interested in the passage of that Bill, they ought to have no difficulty in financing for the additional mileage. If they can sell the bonds upon the 50 or 60 miles now built, they could sell bonds on 20 miles more just as well, and so complete the whole transaction, and that would be satisfactory to everybody.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would suggest that if the member for New Westminster (Mr. Morrison), the Minister of the Interior and the representatives of the company were to retire and have a little conference of five minutes, perhaps, we might be able to reach a conclusion and go on with the other measure. I wish also to say, now that I am on my feet, that I am here to represent the interests of the settlers in that country who have been jollied for twenty years in connection with this road. The only reason why I am doubtful about the action I am taking is the fact that it seems to please Mr. Charlebois, and I think he is one of the men that ought to be got rid of, if possible. It is an extremely difficult position to take, and if they will agree to do anything, if they would only grade 20 miles this year at an expenditure of $20,000, it would be satisfactory to us, and from year to year they could get longer extension of time. But it is absolutely impossible for us to do anything in the Railway Committee. Now we have got them on the hip, we have only about half an hour more, and if they will come down and agree to do something in the interests of the settlers, I will be the first man to take a reasonable view. I recognize the force of the appeal which my hon. friend from York (Mr. Foster) made. I would like to meet his views, but he does not represent the people of Manitoba, and I do represent, at least, a portion of them. But I want to serve their interests, and if any compromise can be suggested which will, at least, result in some little progress being made on this road, then I am satisfied. We have got this company now just where we want them, we have only half an hour, and if we talk this Bill out, their charter expires at the end of this year, and they will be obliged to do something. With reference to the position of the hon. member for New Westminster, I marvel that he should come here and take up a Bill like this, when no representative of Manitoba or the North-west would touch it with a ten foot pole. I want to tell him, and I want every member of this House to understand, that so far as my position goes, I may be mistaken, but at least I desire to advance the interests of the settlers in Manitoba.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I wish to say that the gentleman who is promoting the Bill says, that in consultation with persons who are interested, they are not able to build 20 miles, they are not able to make this arrangement. If that is so the members from Manitoba and the North-west will not allow this Bill to pass.

Mr. MORRISON. Since time has been taken up, it is as well for me to put myself right. I am surprised at the objection of the two hon. gentlemen who have last spoken to my taking up this Bill. I think it is rather extraordinary that any hon. gentleman should be prevented from putting his name on a Bill which, prima facie at least, is all right, and which, on its face, at least, is proper to be introduced here, without the Bill being boycotted, as it is sought to boycott this one. Things have come to a pretty pass if no member but those in the immediate vicinity of the locality in question should have anything to do with legislation. I am very sorry to hear the hon. gentleman from Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) take that attitude. I was pleased to have an opportunity of introducing this Bill because I think it is a proper piece of legislation, and I am surprised that any piece of legislation which is brought here by honourable solicitors, by men in good standing, by parliamentary agents, should be prevented from getting even fair treatment. It is a pernicious doctrine that because there is a certain local opposition to any Bill it must be rejected. Now, so far as I am concerned, I shall take no responsibility. The Bill is before the House, and I think the House should be allowed to perform its proper function and vote upon it. Then if it is the sense of the House that the Bill should pass, well and good; if not, I am satisfied. That would obviate the whole difficulty. I think that other members besides those from Manitoba are able to judge of the usefulness of this Bill, and why should they be precluded from having an opinion as to what is good or bad for that province?

Mr. TALBOT. As the mover of the amendment to this Bill, I wish to say that I am quite willing to agree to the suggestion of the Minister of the Interior, if the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Morrison) is also willing to agree to the suggestion of the Minister, that 20 miles be constructed this year with the proceeds of the new bonds. In that case I am willing to withdraw my amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. The member for New Westminster (Mr. Morrison) says he took up this Bill because he thought it was in the general interest of the country. Now, I do not think that that gentleman, when he took up the Bill, went round to consult any members representing any ridings in the North-west Territories through which this road runs, to see what they thought of the matter. He has never consulted us at all in the matter, and I think, with all due deference to the member for New Westminster, that members representing the different constituencies in Manitoba and the North-west Territories, know more about what are the requirements of the people there than he does. I think if the hon. member for New Westminster would take more interest in his own backyard and let ours alone, it would be better for all parties concerned. I may say that it is the intention of the members from the west to stop this legislation going through. We are going to stop it because we think we shall be acting in the interest of the settlers of that country who have been settling along the proposed line for the last ten years, waiting for these people to fulfil the conditions. They received that charter in the first place from the Government on the direct understanding that the road was to be built to Saskatoon and on to Battleford. They came to this House and got a land grant, and have built 50 miles, used up the land grant, and now they are not prepared to go any further. Last year they got another extension of time for one year, and they have come back again this year for another extension, not in the same way they did before, but with a new proposition, as I said the other night. It means that in place of having one year's extension of time, they may have two years. That is what it actually means, because they have it fixed in such a way that the House will prorogue before anything is done, and that gives them virtually another year. Now, there is no doubt at all that a company can be had to build the road, another company would apply for that charter at the next session providing these people are out of the way.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I would remind the hon. member that the preamble has been adopted, and we are now on clause 4, and I would invite him to discuss that clause.

Mr. DAVIS. Then, without saying more, I move that the committee rise. As I was saying, the interests of the settlers have to be considered, because they settled there many years ago on the strength of this charter being granted to these people. They imagined that this road would be built, and that good faith would have been kept with the settlers.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. On the motion that the committee rise, the discussion must be confined to the particular item under discussion.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I understand that when a member makes a motion—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Let hon. gentlemen keep cool; we are going to have our say on this matter in a quite, pleasant way; there is lots of time. I have a far-away impression, Mr. Chairman, that when a member of the House moves that the committee rise you can talk on everything from Dan to Beersheba.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. That is a mistake. When there is, as in this instance, a clause under discussion, even if a motion is made that the committee rise, the discussion must be on the main question, or reasons must be given why the committee should rise.

The PRIME MINISTER. It is quite evident that we are in the face of a serious and important piece of legislation. There is no doubt that under ordinary circumstances this Bill ought to carry; but it is manifest also, in view of the previous history of this charter, that the members from Manitoba and the North-west Territories, who are most concerned in it, are directly opposed to the Bill; and I think their opinion, unanimous as it is, is entitled to some consideration at the hands of this House. For my part, if the promoter of the Bill would agree to the very reasonable proposal made by my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior, I would say, let us adopt this suggestion and pass the Bill as so amended; but if the promoters of the Bill are not to agree to this very reasonable proposal, I think the committee ought to rise and allow the other business of the House to go on.

Mr. DAVIN. I understand that the promoters of the Bill are ready to agree to grade and construct and iron ten miles by the 31st of December next, and that I expect would meet the Minister's views.

Mr. CLARKE. I think the members of the committee generally sympathize to a great extent with the objections made by the hon. members for Manitoba and the North-west Territories as to the delays which have taken place in the construction of the road, which, I understand, received very valuable bonuses from Parliament. But those who are interested most deeply in the road at the present time are not entirely responsible for the disabilities under which it labours. The matter, I believe, is in the courts; litigation is going on and has been going on for years, and this has prevented the construction of the road. The people who are asking this legislation from Parliament seem to be desirous of getting the road constructed as early as possible. The long vacation will begin in two or three weeks, and very little progress will be made in the litigation until the fall; and if these people will have built and in operation ten miles of railway by the 31st of next December, I would respectfully suggest to the members from Manitoba and the North-west, that that is an evidence of their good faith and of a desire, if possible, to meet the wishes of the settlers. I would ask the hon. member for Lisgar if that proposition would not meet with his approval under all the circumstances?

Mr. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). We are a long-suffering people.

Mr. CLARKE. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman.

Mr. HENDERSON. I trust that the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) will accept the proposition of the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke). I regret that the members from the North-west take the view that this is a North-west question. I do not so regard it at all. I know that people in Ontario are interested in this road. I know people in my section who invested their money in that section of the country, depending on this road going through, and they feel deeply interested. I, therefore, hope the members from Manitoba and the North-west will not block this legislation.

Mr. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). Mr. Chairman, I made a motion that the committee rise.

Mr. FOSTER. It seems to me that the suggestion that has been made is a good evidence of bona fides. Men are not going to put their money into ten miles of road between this and the 31st of December without going further. We must take into account the difficulties which this company, after its unfortunate history, will have in raising money to finance any portion of this road. We must also take into consideration that it is now nearly the 1st of July, and that it will take a good company to stir about in order to do that amount of work between this and the end of the year. Suppose my hon. friends take the responsibility of talking this Bill out or killing it; how do they speed the construction of the road? Nothing can be done until another session of Parliament comes and a new charter is obtained. Then, I think, there is something due to the actual capital that has been put into this road by gentlemen who are not responsible at all for the delays of the law and for other things in connection with this road; and I think this House ought to have some care for people who have put capital in good faith into this work, which capital is in danger of being lost, not through their own mismanagement, but through that of others connected with the company, and who see in the way proposed here the only method of getting a partial return for that capital.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. May I interrupt my hon. friend? I have consulted with the members for Manitoba and the North-west Territories, and they agree to allow the Bill to go through, with the provision that when the bonding arrangements are made, ten miles of the road shall be built and completed before the 1st of January next. I would suggest, in order to allow the committee to deal with other business, that it be agreed that we be allowed to read the Bill to-morrow morning at the early session, so that the amendment may be nearly drawn.

Mr. TALBOT. The Minister of the Interior might add that twenty miles more shall be constructed next year.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is provided in the Bill, anyway. Of course, the committee will understand that no desire will be evinced to make that a part of the bonding arrangement, but the bonds to be issued shall provide for the ten miles to be built this year. Ten miles were to be completed by the end of the first year, and twenty to be completed next year.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Ten to be completed by the end of this year, and twenty miles next year.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They are bound under their charter now to do that. They are bound by their charter to build 20 miles this year. The distinction is between the 10 miles this year and the 20 miles next year. The 10 miles this year will be a condition of the issue of the bonds.

Mr. FOSTER. Give them the benefit of the year. It will be the 1st of July before they get their legislation. They will have built, under the proposed amendment, their 20 miles by August, 1899, that is 20 miles a year. Do not let us overload them.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There are many interests involved and a lot of complications. If the 10 miles are carried out to satisfy these people, we will then have another session of Parliament, when we can deal with any other difficulties. They do not take any risk, because the Bill provides that they shall do that to hold their charter.

Mr. FOSTER. If unexpected difficulties arise, they can be reasonably settled by the Railway Committee next session, and that committee is a reasonable one and disposed to do what is best in the interests of all parties.

Mr. DAVIN. It is understood that this will be taken up bona fide to-morrow morning?

Mr. MORRISON. I want it clearly understood that hon. gentlemen are a party to this understanding.

Mr. FOSTER. When the Minister of the Interior states that as a condition, and we have our meeting to-morrow morning to do that, I imagine that will be satisfactory.

Mr. DAVIN. What the hon. member for Westminster says is very important. I understand that the Minister of the Interior is speaking as representing the members from the North-west and also the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot), I understand him to speak for his party.

Mr. TALBOT. I want everything to be perfectly understood and no mistakes made. The promoters of the Bill agree that 10 miles will be constructed by the 1st of January, and 20 more miles by the 1st of August next.

Mr. McDONNÉLL. The proposition was that 10 miles be constructed this year, and the 20 miles by the 1st of August next.

Mr. DAVIS. I understand it in the same way.

The committee rose, and reported progress.

Mr. SIFTON.

NORTH SHORE ELECTRIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

On the order.

Consideration of amendment made by the Senate to Bill (No. 97) to incorporate the North Shore Electric Railway Company.—(Mr. Préfontaine.)

Mr. MADORE. I have been charged by the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Préfontaine) to ask that this Bill stand.

Mr. SPEAKER. The Bill stands at the request of the mover.

SUPPLY.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

In the Committee.)

Further amount required for the following services :—

Salaries of agents and employees in Canada	$ 5,000
Salaries in foreign countries.....	3,500
Contingencies and general immigration expenses	50,000
	58,500

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. Minister promised to give us a full explanation of the over expenditure of $68,000 in the vote of the current year for immigration.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). The hon. gentleman wanted to know the classes of expenditure in which the excess had taken place. I think I can best give that by the following statement. The total expenditure for the current year on immigration is as follows :—

Salaries of agencies in Canada, for the first half year.....	$19,605 00
Salaries of agencies in Canada, for second half year.....	19,191 00
Salaries of agencies in foreign countries, first half year.....	9,328 91
Salaries of agencies in foreign countries, second half year.....	12,200 00

The increase there took place almost entirely in the United States.

Salaries of agencies in Great Britain, first half year.....	$ 7,849 98
Salaries of agencies in Great Britain, second half year.....	7,850 00
Women's Protective Immigration Society, first half year.....	1,000 00
General expenses, agencies, Canada, foreign countries and Great Britain—
First half year.....	$29,193 38
Second half year.....	33,000 00
Advertising, printing, copying papers, &c.—
First half year.....	$12,700 21
Second half year	50,000 00
Bonuses, British and Continental—
First half year.....	$ 4,847 29
Second half year	25,000 00
Locating foreign settlers—
First half year.....	$ 5,700 00
Second half year.....	12,000 00

Various miscellaneous items—

First half year $14,475 00
 Second half year 5,000 00

In the item of advertising, of bonuses and location of foreign settlers, there is more than enough of increase in the second half year to account for this $60,000. The statement I have given will show an expenditure for the year of $268,000. This statement will fairly represent the expenditure for the next year. The reduction will be more or less on all the different items of expenditure except agencies, expenses in foreign countries and Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. As to this increase of over $3,000 in foreign agencies, how many agents has the Minister in foreign countries? Of course, I do not include Great Britain.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have twenty-one working in the United States; four in foreign countries.

Mr. FOSTER. Where are these four?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. One is in Paris, one is working in France and Belgium, one among the Mennonites in Russia, and the other in Iceland. In addition, of course, the hon. gentleman understands, we have a large number of men who act for us on commission in the United States—some sixty or seventy. They do not appear on the pay-roll.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the system of paying on commission?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They are paid a commission on each settler they send. They give the settler a certificate which he presents to the agent at the first Canadian Pacific Railway station he reaches. The agent forwards these certificates to the department, with a certificate that in their judgment this is a bona fide settler. When these papers reach the office here they are checked over here with correspondence and information forwarded by the agent, and on this the check is issued.

Mr. FOSTER. How much is given as a bonus?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The bonuses are: For each man, $3; for each woman, $2; and for each child, $1.

Mr. FOSTER. What guarantee has the Minister of the suitability of these people?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It works out like this. The commission agent has to report to the nearest salaried agent of the department. He afterwards has to report to the department here. When the commission agent sends the settler and the settler presents his certificate to the railway agent, that certificate is forwarded by the railway company. That is checked over with the information we have from the salaried agent. Then, we have an agent travelling who inspects them and watches them. Of course, I do not say that there is not a possibility of an odd man being slipped in on us; but we have not paid bonuses on anything like the number of men that have been sent. I have been surprised, on looking over the returns, to find that we have paid bonuses on several thousand less than we have actually received. Of course, it is a difficult thing to work out, but there is very little danger of our being defrauded.

Mr. FOSTER. Then you have salaried agents each in a given district—

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The district of each agent is not territorially defined.

Mr. FOSTER. But each works within some area. Is there not danger that the commission man gets his commission for work that is really done by the salaried man?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That may take place to some extent, of course, but our agents send men directly.

Mr. CLARKE. No commission is paid to them for that?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No. Of course where a man is in receipt of literature from the department, it is sent out through the salaried agent and comes in contact with the commission agent, and is then forwarded under the direction of the commission agent. In that case, of course, it might be said that the immigrant came partly as the result of the work of the department, and partly of the work of the commission men.

Mr. FOSTER. How do you select the commission men?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Our travelling agent went around and picked out the most enterprising station agents in the different places where they could be induced to engage in the work. As I said when speaking on the Main Estimates, I tried to work out very much the same plan that the American railways have adopted in the province of Ontario so successfully for a great many years. The American roads, through the agencies of the Canadian railway agents in the province of Ontario, sent thousands of people to the western states. Having familiarized myself with the way in which that is done, I tried to apply that in the western states, and so far, I think, with considerable success.

Mr. FOSTER. How many more agents have you in the United States the last two years than previously?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have five more agents of the salaried class, and several others who are connected with the service in the North-west and whom we send down from the places where they were located to work for the last two months of the winter at different points in the western states. We took them from the places where they were stationed in the various points in the North-west, and sent them down to places where we thought they could work advantageously.

Mr. FOSTER. Over what part of the United States do you have your agents distributed?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have what we call a general agent at Detroit, Mr. McInnes. He was formerly in the railway passenger service, and appointed on account of his experience in that way. We have an agent named Caven at Bad Axe, Michigan. He was also a railway passenger agent. Then we have an agent and assistant and a clerk at St. Paul, who work out through the states of Minnesota and Dakota. We have an agent at Steven's Point, Wisconsin, one at Reid City, Michigan, two at Kansas City, working through the state of Kansas. We have an office at St. Paul. The agents name is Davies, a brother of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. We have an agent at Chicago who works in the southern portion of Illinois, principally. We have one at Omaha, Nebraska, one at Watertown, South Dakota, another one in Dakota, who is working amongst the Mennonites. Then we have an agent who is travelling in different portions of the United States, with no exact location, who is working specially for the purpose of taking settlers to the Rainy River district. A short time ago, I am told, he took up a party of 100 heads of families. Then we have Messrs. Morin, Rousseau and Corby who have been working principally among the French Canadians in the New England states, and taking parties to the North-west. I think these three gentlemen were in the department when I came in.

Mr. FOSTER. What are the expenses of the St. Paul office?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The salary of the agent is $1,500, the salary of the corresponding clerk or typewriter, is $480. There is an assistant whose expenses can hardly be charged to the office, who works out from the office, his salary is $1,200. I may say that the agent at St. Paul office does not remain in the office. The only one that remains there is the corresponding clerk. The others work out in the country, going round amongst the people generally.

Mr. FOSTER. What allowance do these men receive outside of salaries?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. These men are not allowed anything for living expenses except when they are actually travelling. When Mr. Davies is in

Mr. SIFTON.

St. Paul, he gets nothing for expenses. He gets his salary and his expenses when he is travelling, the same as all the others.

Mr. DAVIN. What was Mr. Davies before he got this position?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is a year and a half since he was appointed. Speaking from recollection, he was ranching in Montana. He was appointed because he had been living in the states of Minnesota, Dakota and Montana for several years, travelling over them, and was familiar with those states.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, will the Minister give the expenses of advertising. During the first six months, $13,000 were expended, and during the second half of the year $50,000 were expended. That is an enormous amount to expend in advertising.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I can give the hon. gentleman the scheme of advertising and of distributing literature. For the purpose of arousing interest in Canada we adopted this plan. We sent our press agent to the people who print the patent insides in Chicago for Western States newspapers. They sell advertising space. For a certain price we obtained 2 inches or 3 inches in all the patent insides published in a certain county. We have utilized that space in publishing short notices, setting forth that if the people are unable to acquire land in their state they should communicate with the agent of the Canadian Government, giving his address, and obtain information regarding agricultural lands in the Canadian North-west. These advertisements or notices were run in the patent insides in one state for a month or six weeks, they being changed at different intervals, and afterwards in another state or two or three states at one time. Soon after these advertisements appeared our agents receive letters, which are forwarded to the department here, as our agents could not attend to them, and besides in that way the department saves postage, the letters from here being franked. When the letters are sent here the names of the parties and their residences are entered, and the pamphlets and necessary information furnished.

Mr. FOSTER. How much has been expended in advertising in the patent insides?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I cannot give you the items separately.

Mr. CLARKE. How are the accounts kept?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is a straight contract made for a certain space, and our press agent checks the accounts and certifies them. There is no possibility of fraud, unless the people fail to insert the notices.

Mr. CLARKE. Are the files of those papers available?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We do not get them here. I think it would be a good idea to have them here so that the publication of each notice could be checked. I am not speaking positively as to whether they are here or not, but I do not remember giving instructions to have them here.

Mr. DAVIN. I understand special editions of the Winnipeg "Tribune," the "Globe" and other papers are included in the advertising account.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I shall give the hon. gentleman all the information in due course. In addition to the hand-book we have printed and the sections we have issued, we have adopted a plan of buying a certain number of copies of agricultural papers, the "North-west Farmer," the "Farmers' Advocate," and another journal.

Mr. DAVIN. There is an account here for 15,000 copies of the Winnipeg "Tribune," Jubilee edition.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I will refer to that matter in a few moments.

Mr. FOSTER. The second method I understand is by issuing the hand-book. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will give some further information in respect to that.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We first circulated the hand-book as a whole. We sent copies to the newspapers wherever we thought we could get them to notice it. We sent them to newspapers in the western states, in Great Britain and Ireland, and all over Canada, this being merely for the purpose of giving them information as to what we are doing, and securing their assistance in our work. The hand-book was also sent to the people throughout the western states, if we thought they could assist our agents. Then we took sections of the hand-book referring to particular sections of the country and had them printed and circulated among persons whose names were sent in to our officers. In addition we have circulated copies of the Winnipeg "Commercial," "North-west Farmer," the "Farmers' Advocate," and in the issues we circulated we secured the insertion of special articles written on the different parts of Manitoba and the North-west. We also got copies of newspaper issues—I do not know whether that was done this year or last year—a considerable number of copies of the Winnipeg "Tribune," a special number prepared for immigration purposes, and a large issue of the Toronto "Globe," the copies being sent to the old country.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is your press man?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. W. J. White. He is from Brandon, was editor of the "Sun" and was president of the North-west Press Association. He gets $150 a month and expenses when he is travelling.

Mr. FOSTER. Where was the hand-book printed and who prepared it?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It was printed in the Bureau and prepared by the officers of the department, but some two or three sections of it were prepared by people outside. Mr. St. John, who was formerly the immigration writer of the Canadian Pacific Railway, was employed for several months preparing immigration literature. He edited it, and when he had not the information at his disposal he was authorized to have it done by outside persons whom he thought were competent.

Mr. DAVIN. Who was it prepared the libellous matter on Western Assiniboia?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is impossible to say who wrote a particular paragraph, but I hold Mr. St. John responsible.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the penalty?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The penalty is the wrath of my hon. friend from Western Assiniboia (Mr. Davin).

Mr. FOSTER. I am afraid Mr. St. John would not suffer much by that.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is only fair to Mr. St. John to say that it would be impossible for him or any one else to edit a hand-book describing the different parts of Canada without making a slip somewhere.

Mr. DAVIN. What department of Government is Mr. St. John in now?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. He is not in any so far as I know.

Mr. FOSTER. How many of the hand-books were issued?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Twenty thousand as a first issue, but that was run out and the order has gone in for more. We have an immense number of parts of it issued in pamphlet form.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the Minister give us the system upon which he proceeded in subsidizing these papers?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I cannot say that I proceeded upon any definite plan. We are practically all the time in want of large quantities of immigration literature, and newspaper agents and agents of publications are constantly there, and upon a few occasions I thought their plans would be advantageous, but the only papers of that kind I remember purchasing are the "Tribune" and the Toronto "Globe." The farmers' paper that I have circulated was my own notion, and I am satisfied that it has borne good fruit. I thought that farmers receiving such a paper would be more likely to accept the statements in it as bona fide than the statements in an ordinary immigration pamphlet, no matter how carefully prepared. We went to a great deal of pains to get lists of persons in certain portions of Dakota, and we sent that paper month after month, and the result is that we have had a large number of immigrants from the districts to which these agricultural papers were sent. I had special articles written referring to special sections of Manitoba where there were agricultural lands open for settlement, and these I supervised myself.

Mr. FOSTER. Did you pay the regular subscription?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No, they were special papers got up in a special way.

Mr. FOSTER. Not the agricultural papers which you sent monthly?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, they were specially gotten up for that purpose. I paid what I consider the ordinary price for them, and I am satisfied that I did not pay too much. The "Globe" and the "Tribune" were sent almost entirely to the old country to be placed in reading-rooms where our agent reported it was desirable, and that they would attract attention to Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. Did the Minister send a photograph of the good-looking editor of the "Tribune" and a note explaining his good qualities?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I forgot, but I will do it next time.

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister was not so thoughtful in that case as in some other cases I could mention. What was paid for the "Globe" and "Tribune"?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think the Jubilee number of the "Globe" was issued at 10 cents a copy, and I believe we took them at that price.

Mr. DAVIN. According to the Auditor General's Report you got 10,000 copies of the "Globe" for $1,000, but you paid for 5,000 copies of the Winnipeg "Commercial" $1,000, or 20 cents a copy. That is an immense price.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think the hon gentleman would think so if he saw the paper. It was specially illustrated.

Mr. DAVIN. I think the ordinary price is 10 cents.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. But this was a book almost as thick as the celebrated Klondike Guide. I am satisfied we got good value.

Mr. DAVIN. Twenty cents a copy seems to me to be very high. Then, there is $1,000 for 15,000 copies of the Winnipeg "Tribune," that is nearly 7 cents a copy. The "Tribune" usually sells for 3 cents a copy, I think.

Mr. SIFTON.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman knows that a special issue of the paper was got up in a special way.

Mr. DAVIN. Although as a rule I agree with my leader, yet with regard to the suggestion that you should have a picture of the hon. member for Lisgar, I hope you will not act on that, because it might flood the country with feminine immigration.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If the hon. gentleman would allow me to make a suggestion, I think I can arrange with the publishers of the Winnipeg "Tribune" to have a nice half-tone engraving of the hon. member for Lisgar and the hon. member for Western Assiniboia added for two cents a copy extra.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the payment for these papers is a very heavy one. I have not seen the Winnipeg "Commercial" supplement, but it must be a mighty fine one that is worth 20 cents a copy; and it must be a mighty fine issue of the Toronto "Globe" that is worth 10 cents a copy when you take 10,000 copies. I do not want to depreciate the work of the hon. member for Lisgar, but I do not see why the Winnipeg "Tribune" should be considered worth 7 cents a copy. I think this is a method which my hon. friend has adopted of subsidizing some of the faithful press.

Mr. CLARKE. How were these special editions distributed in the old country?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Through reading rooms in the country districts. Our agents tell us that in the north of England and Scotland particularly, there are reading rooms in the small villages where the farmers of the neighbourhood are accustomed to drop in, especially on Saturday evening, to read the papers. Our agents have been urging us to furnish them with Canadian papers, and it was for that reason that these papers were sent.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman give an explanation of the item of bonuses—$25,000 as against $5,000?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We got more immigrants. I have told the hon. gentleman what we paid to the agents in the United States. We pay to the English steamship agents on every bona fide immigrant to Canada $1.75, and we pay to the continental steamship agents on every bona fide immigrant $5. Of course, we have to pay just what others pay.

Mr. FOSTER. On every ticket sold?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Of course, they are all checked here. The people who come have to be certified as having arrived to settle in Canada.

Mr. CLARKE. The scheme of utilizing patent insides to distribute reading notices throughout the United States seems to be a very good one; but I would suggest to the hon. Minister that a good deal of criticism might be avoided if a file of these papers were kept at some place here so that they could be checked from time to time.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is a good suggestion, and will adopt it. It is possible my officers may have them now.

Mr. CLARKE. I would also suggest to the hon. gentleman that if he is buying other special editions, there are papers other than the papers friendly to the Administration that publish splendid editions—the "Mail and Empire" and other papers—which he might procure for special distribution in the old country.

Mr. DAVIN. Was this money for advertising paid without vouchers? Would not the agent in the States, in sending his bill, send in vouchers?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have no doubt that the press agent has got the agent in the States to certify that the advertisement appeared in the local paper.

Mr. FOSTER. The explanations which my hon. friend has given have been as full as they could be for the limited time we have had, and certainly there are some things in this estimate which I would commend as well worth carrying out. They are an experiment to a certain extent; but they are an experiment which it is worth while trying, and we shall see what the results will be; I hope they will be good. I criticized my hon. friend chiefly on his spending of his own accord $68,000 that had not been voted.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My hon. friend knows that I have only been following his example.

Mr. FOSTER. No, my hon. friend acknowledged the force of that criticism, and I hope that from this time he will confine himself to the vote the House gives.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is no doubt that principle is a sound one, but I can offer this excuse—

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend ought not to offer any excuse. He knows what he ought to do.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Even the excuse of bad example.

Mr. FOSTER. That is one of the most vicious things a man can do—justify a bad action because of what somebody else has done.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think I was led into this by reading the Auditor General's Report on the administration of my hon. friend.

Mr. FOSTER. I would suggest, if next year my hon. friend has in the Toronto "Globe" a full page advance description of some deal like the Yukon, that he get a special edition of the "Globe" sent to Ottawa.

Geological Survey—To meet the extra expenditure on field work connected with sending two parties to the Yukon district $5,000

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This amount was asked for by the director of the survey on account of the extra expenditure of sending two parties to the Yukon district. Mr. Tyrrell is the name of the officer in charge of the one, and the name of the other officer, I do not at present recollect, but they are both members of the geological survey. Mr. Tyrrell has started and is going by Ashcroft and Cariboo. The other will go by the Skagway route, and each man has a party with him.

To provide an amount to assist in repairing and remodeling buildings at the Mount Elgin Industrial School, Munceytown, Ont $3,500

Mr. FOSTER. I want to call the hon. gentleman's attention to the case of the Tyandenaga band of Indians. I have been looking over the paper, and I find the following facts. These Indians are a self-supporting band. They have had for a long time physicians in attendance, who were at first paid by the Government, but about 1892 the Government notified the band that they would no longer pay the salaries of the physicians, but would defray them out of the money of the Indians themselves. Dr. Newton was their physician at the time and continued to be their physician, and after 1892 was paid out of the Indians own fund. Dr. Newton and Dr. Walker received each $300 and $200 out of the Indian fund for their services. In 1897 the department dismissed Dr. Newton. Everybody knows that an Indian band becomes attached to its physician and does not wish to part with him. Notice was sent to the Indians in December, 1897, that on the 31st December, 1897, Dr. Newton would be dismissed for offensive partisanship. The Indians did not wish to part with Dr. Newton, and they so signified to the department, again and again, by resolution and by petition. However, the department notified them that Dr. Newton would not be paid, and they appointed Dr. Hicks, resident also in Desoronto, in Dr. Newton's place and informed the Indians that from time to time Dr. Hicks would be paid $250 out of the Indian fund. So it goes on to this day. Dr. Newton, attending the Indian, and the Government objecting to pay him out of their funds and compelling the Indian to pay out of their funds the salary of Dr. Hicks. The last document I have here is a resolution of the Council of 6th March, 1898, which was carried by a vote of 75 to 3, in favour of the retention of Dr. Newton and against the employment of Dr. Hicks. Their contention is that as they pay for their physician, they ought to have the choice. I would like to have the hon. Minister's version on the face of it, this looks rather petty and unjust.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. In the first place, there has always been a considerable number of these medical attendants upon Indian bands paid out of the Indian fund, but the Government has always assumed control of these medical attendants and asserted its authority to dismiss them. So far as Dr. Newton is concerned, the two attendant, when I took office, were Dr. Whitman and Dr. Newton. Dr. Whitman resigned, and Dr. Moore was appointed in his place. Then the hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. Hurley) wrote a letter demanding the dismissal of Dr. Newton, on the ground that, to his personal knowledge, he had taken an active part in the election. He said he would not have pressed the charge against Dr. Newton, if Dr. Newton had stopped when the election was over, but after the election he still endeavoured to injure him and took an active political part against him. I remember Mr. Hurley coming to me and saying that this doctor was taking an active part and using his position against him politically, but he said he did not want to make a charge against him, but might communicate with me further. Finally, he wrote me saying that he knew personally the circumstances and demanded the dismissal of Dr. Newton. I had no choice but to remove him. Dr. Newton was notified that his services were dispensed with, and he replied that he was not in our employ but in that of the Indian council. He was again notified and replied in a letter, which I will show the hon. member for York, but do not care to put on "Hansard," and I think the hon. gentleman will admit on reading it that it alone would have terminated the relations if they had not been put an end to before. A resolution was passed at a meeting of the Indians and sent to the department expressing regret that this man had been dismissed, and a communication was received from four of the chiefs saying that they would like to have it reconsidered, but so far no action has been taken.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think the Minister's explanation is satisfactory. Dr. Newton might fairly assume that he was not employed by the department and that his head was not the Minister of the Interior. The Indians occupy, of course, a somewhat peculiar position in relation to the Government. But this Indian band is independent, has its own fund, manages its own affairs and pays its own bills. I do not think the Minister has any right to interfere except where a physician may have been employed who was entirely unfit for the duty from want of knowledge, habits of drunkenness or something of that kind. In such a case there might be a ground for interference by the Minister. But there is no allegation of that kind. It seems to me that Dr. Newton was just as independent of the Government, so long as nothing of the kind could be alleged, as the physician of an insurance corporation, which, in a sense, is under control or the Department of Insurance. I cannot conceive of the principle upon which any Government can dismiss a man who is not in their employ. I do not see how it can dismiss a doctor whom such an Indian band as this wants to retain, or force upon them one that they have not chosen on grounds of political patronage simply.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The Department of the Interior has always asserted the right to dismiss these medical attendants.

Mr. FOSTER. But that can only be on the ground that the medical attendant is not a properly certified physician or has habits which unfit him for his duties. It seems to me that so long as he discharges his duties efficiently, he has a right to take any position he pleases in political matters and make any canvass he pleases. I think it is stretching the powers of the Minister beyond their legitimate range when he exercises them in this way. Moreover, I think it is an extremely petty thing to do that for the sake of mere patronage. If these Indians are not to be deprived of their liberty altogether, why should the hon. gentleman disregard their unanimous wish in such a matter as this?—because it is practically unanimous. The resolution of the band passed on the 6th of March last, says :

The general council of the band was this day convened for the purpose of considering certain matters affecting the band. Ex-Chief William Green was voted to the chair. The first question considered and discussed was the doctor's salary. After the matter was discussed, it was moved by Isaac W. Green, and seconded by Alexander Loft, sr., that the Indian Department be requested to pay Dr. Newton, of Deseronto, his quarterly salary up to 31st March, 1898, who has been doing duty as medical attendant for the band. Carried—for the resolution, 75 ; against the resolution, 3.

Moved by Isaac W. Green, and seconded by Alexander Loft, sr., that this council now assembled is opposed to allowing any money belonging to the band to be paid Dr. Hicks, as he has not been retained or engaged by the council of the band to do duty as medical attendant. Carried—for the resolution, 75 : against the resolution, 3.

Now, it does seem to me a great injustice, and it is not the teaching that an Indian band should have from the Government, that their fund should not be applied to the payment of their chosen doctor as long as that doctor is a proper and fit medical attendant for them. Surely, my hon. friend will accede to the request of these Indians and will give them their old doctor, the doctor they want. I think the member for the county went a long distance when he made the recommendation, and the Minister went still further when, without warrant, he dismissed the doctor in this way. I must say that if I were the doctor, and, under such circumstances, received such a demand from the Minister of the Interior, I should be apt to write him a very strong letter; and I do not think I ought to be pushed for it. I think the wrong would be in making such a demand upon me as to lead to the writing of such a letter.

The PRIME MINISTER. It is very true that this physician was paid out of the moneys belonging to the band. But it is also true, as my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) knows very well, that although they have the ownership of the money, they have not the disposal of it.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, in a way.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They are wards of the nation, and they cannot dispose of their money without the Superintendent General of the Indians concurring.

Mr. FOSTER. It is likewise true that the Superintendent General cannot dispose of the money without the sanction of the band.

The PRIME MINISTER. Very true. So it is evident these people, though having the ownership of money and of certain property, are wards of the state and minors and cannot contract, incur debt or do any of the ordinary acts of citizenship without the consent of the Superintendent General, except the one of voting. Now, the appointment of medical attendant was made by the Department of Indian Affairs and the power of appointment implies the power of removal. I grant that it would have been a petty act to dismiss this physician simply for any part he might have taken in the election. His position was somewhat different from that of an ordinary servant of the Government. But my hon. friend must not forget that though the member for the county made complaint against him and asked for his dismissal, it was not so much for his conduct during the election—that might have been passed over—as for his conduct after the election that he was dismissed. I would like the hon. Minister (Mr. Sifton) to send to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) the letter sent by this official to his superior in the department. It shows an absolute want of respect for the authorities whose servant he was, making it necessary that his conduct should be inquired into. The least that a man who accepts public money can do is to be civil in his conduct towards the authorities under whom he serves. But when the authority, when the agent, when the man who is a paid official of the Government towards the wards of the nation, shows an absolute want of respect for those who are in power and authority, whoever they may be, he gives an example to those half civilized men which ought not to go unpunished, if it be of the character which is shown in that letter. If Dr. Newton has been dismissed, he has nobody to blame but himself. For my part, I would not care what his political opinions were in election time. I would not place him in the same category as a postmaster or custom-house officer; I would grant him more independence, more latitude. But the hon. gentleman who represents East Hastings (Mr. Hurley) is, according to the judgment of all, as discreet and as considerate a gentleman as it is possible to find. He is a man of extreme prudence, I believe, and it is to his credit that when he complained of the official, he did not ask for his dismissal. But when he found that after the election this doctor, instead of attending to his business, has been going on, not only talking politics, but actually abusing and showing insolence towards the officer who had for the time being the duty of administering Indian affairs, I think the Department of Indian Affairs would have been wanting in self-respect if they had not visited that gentlemen with punishment.

Mr. FOSTER. With respect to the payment of the money grant, the Indian band has no right technically to dispose of it, it is only formally, because the band makes no disposition of the money unless for a proper object. If it is an extraordinary and unnecessary expenditure, it can be vetoed. But in the general transaction of the business of the band, they are independent in their business in this way, that the assent of the Minister is simply a formal matter in order to check what may be unnecessary expenditure, or one which should not be made at the time. But in the case of the normal expenses of the Indians, it is a matter of course that they transact their own business, and it is only formally approved of. But this is a different matter. The Minister of the Interior proposes to take out of that Indian fund $250 and devote it to purposes that the Indian band do not wish. He is putting his hand into the fund against a resolution of the band, and against the wishes of the band. Is that fair treatment of the Indians? In the second place, the strictures of my hon. friend would be more pertinent if this fact were not patent, that Dr. Newton's services were dispensed with before he told the Minister of the Interior to go to that warm place.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman will remember that he was notified his services were dispensed with, then he wrote this letter, and afterwards that resolution of the Indian band came in. If the resolution had come in, and that letter had not been on file, I am satisfied that I would, as I did in several other cases, reconsider the matter. In one case I reopened it, and put the agent back. I remember, for instance, in the case of the land agent at Wiarton, on the representation of my hon. friend from North Bruce (Mr. McNeill), I replaced the agent, the hon. gentleman stating to me that although the officer had reported that this man was derelict in his duties, yet he personally knew that the officer was a good man and doing the best he could under the circumstances. I am satisfied that upon the strong representations of the Indians under these circumstances, I would have reconsidered the position were it not for the fact that he had simply clouted the department, and put on the file of the department the letter the hon. gentleman is aware of. The hon. gentleman will see that there were charges against Dr. Newton. But I did not put his dismissal on that ground at all. If the charge of neglect had been made before dismissing him, I would have had a careful investigation, because I would not have considered it proper to put a slur upon a man's professional character without making a careful investigation.

Mr. FOSTER. The fact remains that the man was dismissed before he made use of the strong expression.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. But he was dismissed before the Indians made their representations.

Mr. FOSTER. He was not an officer of the hon. gentleman when he dismissed him, in fact, he was not in the employ of the hon. gentleman in any way. I do not think my hon. friend is so high and mighty that he can punish anybody in this broad world who does not owe any particular fealty to him, because he uses a strong word.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If my hon. friend were the Minister of a department, and upon the recommendation of the member for the county, he dismissed an officer in that way, if the departmental notice went out, and subsequently his attention was drawn to the fact that the Indians had asked that this man be restored, and he went and saw correspondence of this kind upon file, I venture to say that my hon. friend would not reopen the case.

Mr. FOSTER. It is very like a case of one darky talking to another: "Now, Sambo, if you were to go in the depth of night and steal a chicken." "But I won't suppose anything like that, because I don't steal chickens"—that would answer my hon. friend. I would not be guilty of the mean act of dismissing a man for offensive partisanship who was a medical attendant of a band of Indians, employed by that band, paid by that band, and owing no fealty to me. This man was simply dismissed for offensive partisanship, and it is because, smarting under that injustice, the man who was dismissed and who was no longer his officer, uses a hard word. It is pretty small potatoes when political partisanship penalties are carried so far.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I certainly repudiate the idea that there was anything mean about this transaction. I doubt very much, from my knowledge of the hon. member for Hastings, if it was mean on his part, either, to recommend this man's dismissal. I remember that the member for Hastings came to my office, and spoke about this matter. He said there had been a charge of neglect, but he did not know whether it was correct, he did not want to say anything about it. I showed him the declaration, and it was agreed between us that without some investigation it would not be fair to put a slur upon this man's character. He said: I do not want this man dismissed, and if he will behave himself and refrain from making use of his position against me politically, then I will leave him alone. Subsequent to that, he wrote to me that this gentleman was continually using his position for political purposes, then he wrote me a formal letter asking for his dismissal. From what I know of the member for Hastings, I venture to say that if he were here he would be able to show conclusively that there was nothing mean about it, that he was justified in doing what he did. I venture to think that, under the circumstances, the department could do nothing else, after that letter was written.

Mr. WALLACE. There is another matter to which I wish to call the attention of the committee. The other evening I asked the Minister of the Interior with respect to the dismissal of Wentworth F. Wood.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I was mistaken in my statement. The hon. gentleman has now the papers.

Mr. WALLACE. The Minister said Mr. Wood was a land agent, and that he had been dismissed for incompetency. I have the papers which the Minister has kindly forwarded to me, and I find the charge was that Mr. Wood took an active and offensive part in the late Dominion elections, not that he was inefficient. The charge is made by Mr. Hewitt Bostock. The letter is dated Ottawa, 13th March, 1897, and is as follows:—

174 McLaren St.,

Ottawa, March 13, 1898.

To the Hon. Clifford Sifton, M.P., Minister of the Interior,
Ottawa.

Dear Mr. Sifton,—I have to request that you will, dismiss Mr. Wentworth F. Wood, Indian agent at Kamloops, from his position on account of the active and offensive part he took against me during the late Dominion election whilst holding his position in the public service. I can speak of my own knowledge of Mr. Wood's having worked hard during the day of polling, 23rd of June, in bringing voters to the polling and using his influence to get them to vote for Mr. Mara; also, of his having made a bet on the polling day against me. I understand that he worked on Mr. Mara's committee, and that strong evidence can be obtained of his having made special trips about the constituency for the purpose of canvassing against me.

Kindly let me know if you require any further evidence.

Yours faithfully,
(Sgd.) HEWITT BOSTOCK.

It does not appear that further evidence was required. Mr. Wood was not given that right, which belongs to every British subject, of being brought face to face with his accuser and having the opportunity of denying the charges, which I am in a position to say are almost entirely untrue. There is one statement which possesses some truth, that Wood "made a bet on polling day against me." What he did was to accept a challenge from some one as to the majority in Kamloops. The committee and the House will not regard that as an offence. The other charges made of taking part in the election are absolutely denied; yet he was dismissed from the public service without being given an opportunity of replying to the charges made against him, and dismissed simply on the letter of a member of Parliament.

Mr. CLARKE. Who wrote the letter?

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Hewitt Bostock, M.P. This is a most unjustifiable proceeding on the part of the Minister. He did not give the man a chance. If there was a charge against Wood, that he had broken any regulation of the department, he should have been given an opportunity to defend himself, and the Minister should not have been satisfied because an hon. member asked for Wood's dismissal in order to put one of his supporters in his place. It is an outrage to dismiss public officials on that account. This is one of the many specimens of the course pursued during the last elections, and to which we have called the attention of the House. If there were charges of wrongdoing, surely they should have been preferred and Wood given an opportunity to refute them; but he was simply thrown out and another man placed in his position. I believe the other man proved incompetent and was removed, and a third man is now in the position. Is that information correct?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not remember.

Mr. WALLACE. Then I can inform the hon. gentleman that the next man was incompetent.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If I found any officer incompetent I would remove him, as I have done on many occasions.

Mr. WALLACE. Was he appointed on the recommendation of the member who asked for the dismissal of Wood?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. WALLACE. He was removed because he was incompetent. Was the other man appointed on the recommendation of Mr. Bostock?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes. What would you do if you were a Minister?

Mr. WALLACE. I would not dismiss a man without giving him an opportunity of defending himself, nor did I ever do so.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The heads came off all the same.

Mr. WALLACE. There were no dismissals of this kind when I was in office, because I gave every man fair-play and a fair chance for his life. The Minister here acted without any proof, because he could not have known personally as regards the charges made against Wood. The letter reads: "I understand he worked on Mr. Mara's committee, and that special evidence can be obtained." That is no justification for his dismissal. The Minister thinks it is a proper thing to do, and smiles about it. If that is the way the Government is conducted, it is not a very satisfactory state of affairs.

Mr. FOSTER. While this subject of the depths to which the hon. Minister can descend is under consideration, I am under the impression that he went so far as to dismiss the bathroom keeper at Banff for political partisanship. He is a very competent man, and has a very competent wife.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I was told he was not so.

Mr. FOSTER. There is a story in connection with this dismissal. Only five persons could be got to sign the petition for his dismissal, and that dismissal came about in this way. There is a blacksmith resident in Banff who felt that the Liberals were on top, and he being a Liberal suggested to the bathkeeper that he had better get any work done at his forge. The keeper replied that he had always patronized a friend. The blacksmith told him that if he did not get his shoes put on at his place, he would be sorry for it. He did not succumb to the threat, but he had to succumb to the hon. gentleman. It is getting a long way into the mountain, when the Minister of the Interior, the representative of Her Majesty and all the dignity of Government, goes so far as to dismiss a bathhouse keeper.

Mr. DAVIN. I am glad my hon. friend has brought this up because the other night when the matter was discussed, the Minister of the Interior felt what a mean act it was and he shielded himself behind the ægis of the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver). Was that hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) responsible for this outrage?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think there was any allegation of political partisanship so far as I know, but I do not pretend to recollect a year back the cases of all the labouring men in the department. There was a lot of business to do in connection with Banff matters which I may say to my hon. friend (Mr. Davin) and his colleagues, had got into a most unmitigated mess. If Banff had been inhabited by the same class of people that inhabited Batoche, there would have been another rebellion there. It was only because the people of Banff were long suffering Anglo-Saxon people that they stood it as long as they did. I sent a commissioner up there to investigate.

Mr. FOSTER. Who was he?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. E. S. Stephenson, a very good Conservative, a very strong supporter of my hon. friend (Mr. Foster), and also a very good officer, and I kept him in the service and promoted him. He conducted the investigation very well. I remember having a conversation with my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver), and on that date I found a memorandum on file directing that this man should be removed. There is no letter from my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) recommending his dismissal, but it was immediately after I had a conversation with the hon. gentleman that I removed him, and so I presume that the idea was that he was inefficient. My hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) can give his recollection of this, and I have no doubt he will remember having seen me about it. As to Mr. Wood, I want to correct what I said the other day. I stated to the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) that I was quite certain Wood was not dismissed for political partisanship. I had a distinct recollection that there was a charge of incompetency against him, but when I got the papers I found I was mistaken, and I will explain how the mistake occurred. Shortly after I took office a memorandum was submitted to me by the then Deputy Superintendent General, Mr. Hayter Reed, in which he complained of the action of Mr. Wood and practically reported that he was neglecting his duty. After discussing the matter with Mr. Reed, and knowing nothing about the man, I thought he should be removed from office, and if I remember aright I signed a recommendation to that effect, but held the matter in abeyance for some days, and in the meantime, information got out in the department that he was likely to be removed. Representations were made in his favour, and I wrote to him the following letter:—

Mr. FOSTER.

Department of Indian Affairs,
Ottawa, 5th February, 1898.

Dear Sir,—Shortly after taking office there was submitted to me a report upon the embarrassment which had resulted to the Department of Indian Affairs through your continued neglect to attend promptly to official communications. As it is essential to the proper conduct of the affairs of the department that its agents should deal carefully and expeditiously with all matters referred them, I was disposed, upon the report of your dereliction, to recommend your dismissal. On reconsidering the matter, however, I have decided to give you another chance; but I wish you to distinctly understand that a repetition of such carelessness as you have been guilty of will be followed by dismissal.

Yours very truly,

(Sgd.) CLIFFORD SIFTON.

Wentworth F. Wood, Esq.,
Indian Agent, Kamloops, B.C.

These were the circumstances upon which I based my statement to the hon. member (Mr. Wallace), that Wood was not dismissed for political partisanship. I find that after that occurred the member for Yale and Kamloops (Mr. Bostock) sent me the letter which the hon. member for West York has read and which is as follows:—

Dear Mr. Sifton,—I have to request that you will dismiss Mr. Wentworth F. Wood, Indian agent at Kamloops, from his position on account of the active and offensive part he took against me during the late Dominion election whilst holding his position in the public service. I can speak of my own knowledge of Mr. Wood's having worked hard during the day of polling, 23rd of June, in bringing voters to the polling and using his influence to get them to vote for Mr. Mara; also, of his having made a bet on the polling day against me. I understand that he worked hard on Mr. Mara's committee, and that strong evidence can be obtained of his having made special trips about the constituency for the purpose of canvassing against me.

Kindly let me know if you require any further evidence.

Yours faithfully,

(Sgd.) HEWITT BOSTOCK.

I venture to say that no member in this House who knows the member for Yale and Kamloops (Mr. Bostock) will have any doubt that the statement which he makes of his own personal knowledge must be absolutely correct. I had no doubt about it then and I have no doubt about it now, and I do not think the hon. member for Yale can be blamed for asking to have a man removed under these circumstances. My principal reason for rising was to explain the statement I made the other night, and which was made because I had forgotten the second part of the transaction.

Mr. EARLE. What is the date of the letter from the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Bostock)?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. 13th of March, 1897. It was written after seeing me two or three times in regard to the matter. It is due to the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Bostock) to make the statement that the man who was appointed as Mr. Wood's successor had no complaint, but resigned office to take a better position somewhere else.

Mr. DAVIN. I should like to hear whether the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) accepts the responsibility for the dismissal of the caretaker of the basin.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know that this is a matter that we are entitled to hold Parliament in session for the purpose of discussing, but if it is any interest to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) I will tell what I know about it. As the Minister of the Interior has said, a commission of inquiry was held with regard to certain matters at Banff. After the commission reported. I was requested by the Minister to look over the report with him and to discuss the statements contained in it, with a view to his ascertaining my knowledge of the circumstances and of the persons concerned. I went to the department to discuss that report with the Minister. I wish, however, to point out that I did not go to the department to discuss Mr. Walker, nor did the Minister ask me to go there to discuss Mr. Walker, because the consultation was in regard to matters of more importance. I understood that the report reflected on Mr. Walker, and as Mr. Walker was no friend of mine, I did not ask that he be retained in the service.

To pay Thomas Nixon as purveyor for the Indian Department in Manitoba and the North-west Territories from 10th February, 1877, to 30th June, 1879, at $500 per annum..... $1,194 93

Mr. FOSTER. What is a purveyor ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The only way I can explain this item is by reading an extract from a report I made on it to Council :

The undersigned has the honour to report that in September, 1874, Mr. Thomas Nixon was appointed agent of the North-west Mounted Police, and some months subsequently he was directed to act as paymaster and purveyor for the Manitoba and Prairie districts of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

On his appointment his salary was placed at $2,000 per annum, but no increase was given him for his extra duties in connection with the railway, the only change being that $1,000 was paid through the Public Works Department, and the other $1,000 through the Department of the Secretary of State, to which the Mounted Police were then attached.

On the 10th February, 1877, Mr. Nixon was informed that the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs desired to avail himself of his services as purveyor for the Indian Department in Manitoba and the North-west Territories, and he was advised that the question of remuneration to be granted to him would be a matter of subsequent consideration. On the 20th May, 1878, Mr. Nixon brought the question of his remuneration before the department, and the letter was marked by the then Minister, the Hon. Mr. Mills: "Stand over until certain other matters are settled." Since that date Mr. Nixon has at various times urged upon the Department of Indian Affairs his claim to additional remuneration on account of the extra services he performed as purveyor for that department.

In December, 1894, the facts of the case were submitted to the then Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, the Hon. T. Mayne Daly, who wrote to Mr. Mills with a view to ascertaining whether when he, as Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, assigned to Mr. Nixon the duties of purveyor for the Indian Department, did so with the understanding that Mr. Nixon was to receive additional remuneration for his services. Mr. Mills replied that the officer who had discharged the duties of purveyor for the Indian Department previous to Mr. Nixon's appointment had been removed for fraud, and that the then Premier suggested that Mr. Nixon, who was doing the work of purveyor for the Public Works Department satisfactorily, should be given the additional duties of purveyor for the Indian Department, and that, in view of the increased responsibility, he should be allowed an increase of salary. Mr. Mills added that the Premier and himself considered that Mr. Nixon should receive, on account of his increased duties, additional remuneration of $500 or $600 a year, which would be much less than would be paid an officer especially employed as purveyor for the Indian Department.

On the strength of this letter from Mr. Mills, Mr. Daly directed that provision be made in the Estimates for the payment of the additional remuneration which it was considered Mr. Nixon should receive. The item, however, was struck out before the Estimates reached Parliament.

Mr. Nixon continued to press his claim. The undersigned submitted to Mr. Mills all the papers of record in the department in the matter, with a view to containing a further statement from Mr. Mills as to what he, as the Minister who had employed Mr. Nixon, considered that the understanding arrived at at the time would entitle Mr. Nixon to in the way of additional remuneration. Mr. Mills, in returning the papers, repeated what he formally wrote to Mr. Daly as to the origin of Mr. Nixon's employment, and the understanding between him and the then Premier, as to the additional remuneration which, on account of the increase of work and responsibility, Mr. Nixon should receive. He added that an immense saving was affected in the purchasing of Indian supplies through the appointment of Mr. Nixon. The question of the additional remuneration to be paid to him was, Mr. Mills adds, discussed informally in Council at the time, but it was allowed to stand over, and finally was overlooked, on account of the business incident to the then approaching general elections. Mr. Mills adds :

"There is no doubt whatever that Mr. Nixon was promised an increase of salary in consequence of the additional duties imposed upon him, and in my opinion a great injustice has been done to him in allowing this matter to remain for so long a period of time without having been settled. I have a distinct recollection of my own intentions with regard to the subject, and an equally distinct recollection of the promises of the Prime Minister, who first suggested Mr. Nixon's name to me, and subsequently to Mr. Nixon on the subject."

The accountant of the Department of Indian Affairs reports that Mr. Nixon's term of service as purveyor for the Indian Department extended from the 10th February, 1877, to the 30th June, 1879, and that the amount to be paid to him at the rate of additional remuneration which Mr. Mills stated was fixed upon, namely, $500 a year, would be $1,194.93.

Mr. SPROULE. I think I recognize in this name a very interesting old friend who came from my riding. This account is twenty-one years old; and if this Mr. Nixon is the same gentleman, I have no doubt he will go on with this account until it will be like the old chancery case of Jarndyce vs. Jarndyce—it will travel through three generations of the family if he cannot recover it; because, like the English bulldog, he will hang on to the bitter end. I have no doubt that the hon. Minister, if he knows this man, is quite willing to pay him, because he is one of the old confidential friends of the Government and has done very noble service for them in the past.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Is that the reason the salary was withheld from him for so many years?

Mr. SPROULE. In 1874, I think it was, this man, Thomas Nixon, was entrusted with an important duty by the Mowat Government. That was to go up into the township of Proton in the county of Grey and try to defeat the Conservative candidate, Mr. Lauder. This is the celebrated Proton Nixon whose history may be found among the archives of the Ontario legislature. At that time he distributed Government money very lavishly, and made a reasonable effort to defeat the Conservative candidate. The history of his doings that was brought out in the House was not by any means creditable to either him or the party that sent him there. It has been said that he did a work for which he was never suitably rewarded; but it is a long lane that knows no turning, and now he is getting his reward. Hon. gentlemen opposite evidently never forget their friends; and so they are willing to settle this old claim, although it is over twenty years old, and therefore outlawed. If he went into court with such a claim, the statute of limitations would shut it out after six years; but this claim is three times six years old.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It would be a very dishonest plea for any government to set up the statute of limitations with regard to a claim of this kind.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not know anything about the claim, but from my knowledge of the man, I would regard it as a very scaley one if he did not push for it.

Mr. DAVIN. I will not say that this is a job on the part of the Minister, but I am afraid the hon. gentleman has been grossly imposed upon.

Mr. SIFTON.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Let me remind my hon. friend that the Minister who represented his party in the late Government recommended that this claim should be paid, and a copy of his recommendation is on file in my department, signed by him. The original recommendation is among the records of the Privy Council. I looked into it carefully and found that it ought to be paid. The Minister who employed him said that he had employed him and that he was entitled to the money. I do not see that because that gentleman was kept for 20 years out of his money he should not get it. My hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) may have certain recollection of Mr. Nixon, because he was a good political fighter, and people who came into contact with him would no doubt remember him, but I do not believe that the hon. member for East Grey or anybody else can bring up anything to his discredit.

Mr. SPROULE. If he is the same Nixon who lived in Croton I could turn up his history and satisfy the hon. gentleman that there is nothing to his credit there, or else the hon. gentleman is so hardened in his political sins that nothing would make an impression upon him.

Mr. DAVIN. Seriously, I do not think this ought to pass.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Surely the hon. gentleman would not dispute a recommendation signed by the Hon. T. M. Daly?

Mr. DAVIN. I would, and one reason for so doing would be that Mr. Daly might have had a moment of weakness.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. That is encroaching on the preserves of the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster).

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Daly has a very soft heart, and there is no evidence that between the period, when the services are said to have been performed and the recommendation of Mr. Daly, this man had made any application to be paid.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman is quite wrong, he made application at various times to be paid. We have a lot of letters in the department, I venture to say that, apart from the question of time, this claim could be proved and recovered in any court in Canada.

Mr. SPROULE. The time itself makes it very suspicious, because if it were a just claim that could have been easily established, no Government would have refused to pay it. I am quite sure that Nixon himself, from what I know about him, would have never allowed an honest claim which he could establish to go without payment.

To provide for the purchase and equipment of a steamboat and one or more launches for the use of the officers of the Government of the Yukon district (revote, $5,000)..... $25,000

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This is for the purchase of a steamboat and a couple of launches for the use of the officers of the Government upon the Yukon River and its tributaries. Hon. gentlemen will understand that until there is a regular steam service upon these rivers, it is absolutely necessary for the officers of the Government, especially the police and military, to have a steamboat to convey them from one place to another with reasonable speed. At present there is no steamboat service on the upper Yukon at all, and the only way of getting from Dawson City to Fort Selkirk and thence down to Lake Bennett and thence to the Hootalinqua is to pull a canoe up stream. The canoe has to be poled because the current is too rapid to paddle against. That is the quickest method of getting from Dawson City down to the lower portion of the country.

Mr. FOSTER. How many months of navigation will there be ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That portion of the river is clear about the 20th May, and navigation will probably be had until the end of October. I was there last fall on the 10th of October, and it had not frozen over then. We propose utilizing the steamer for the purpose of bringing supplies to the mounted police posts, and in the meantime also the boat will be used for carrying the mails during the summer, and the small launches for the use of the police going from one place to another.

Further amount required for expenses connected with the Rocky Mountain Park of Canada..... $1,000

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The caretaker of the park requires a man to look after the buffalo. He has estimated $500 for that and $500 for hay. There will be about 18 buffaloes to start with.

To provide for the payment of retiring gratuities to employees of the outside service of the Department of the Interior $6,500

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. Minister please explain that ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is a gratuity of $3,200 to Mr. John Dike, late commercial agent at Liverpool, and one of $2,151 to Mr. Thomas Graham, late immigration agent at Glasgow. Both of these gentlemen have been a long time in the service. There is an additional gratuity of $500, making altogether $1,000, this portion of which was omitted by mistake from last year's Estimates, to Mr. P. M. Barker, late inspector of land titles offices in the North-west Territories.

Mr. FOSTER. On what scale are the gratuities based ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. Dike and Mr. Graham were granted a year's salary each, and Mr. Barker, I think, nine months' salary.

To assist in defraying the cost of the publication of documents issued by the Canadian Mining Institute..... $1,000

Mr. FOSTER. What documents are these ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is to assist the Canadian Mining Institute in publishing literature relating to mining in the Dominion. This is a representative institution, with head office at Montreal, and including in its membership people from all provinces in the Dominion. This literature is very important and very interesting. I think the distribution of documents in the case of the Royal Society might be quoted as an instance of the same kind. The papers distributed relate not to any private interest, but to mining generally throughout the Dominion.

Mr. DAVIN. I do not intend to discuss the matter, as it is too late, but this is based on a wrong principle altogether. Where is it going to lead you ? I will get you a dozen such institutions as this wanting their proceedings published.

The PRIME MINISTER. Not a dozen.

Mr. DAVIN. Yes, a dozen. The principle is a bad one. If the papers are of any value, there will be no difficulty in getting them published and bought.

To provide for payment of balance of judgment and costs of litigation commenced against the Crown in 1894 and 1895 in cases of Canada Sugar Refining Co., and Toronto Street Railway Co.... $28,000

Mr. BERGERON. Have you lost all these cases ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, but we hope to be able to retrieve ourselves by appeal.

To provide for the payment of costs in connection with the Manitoba School Case litigation $10,607 63

Mr. TAYLOR. Is this previous to 1896 too ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes. This is for the second appeal to the Privy Council in the case. It is understood that the costs were to be borne by the members of the then Government.

Mr. FOSTER. Where did you get that information ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. From Mr. Ewart, of Winnipeg.

Mr. FOSTER. I never heard of it.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I give the information as I got it.

An hon. MEMBER. Was it to be borne by the members of the Government generally?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. By the Catholic members I understand.

Mr. FOSTER. That would be more correct.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The cost amounted to $14,000, of which $4,000 was paid, and the balance remains unpaid.

Mr. BERGERON. Does the hon. gentleman know by whom the $4,000 was paid?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do, but I do not think I know it for the information of the House. It was paid through a gentleman who was appointed as an agent for the Government, a solicitor, whose name I am not free to give. My hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) should not look surprised, for he must have heard the statement on every platform in the province of Quebec, that these costs were being borne by the Catholic members of the Government.

Mr. BERGERON. And they never paid it?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No.

Mr. BERGERON. That is why I am surprised.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. They paid $4,000. I think there were two or three members of the Government who gave $500 each.

The PRIME MINISTER. Apart from any conditions or agreements that may have been made, I submit that on the ground of justice and fair-play this item should go through. It is to be remembered that the minority in Manitoba appealed to the Government for the disallowance of the Act of 1890. The Order in Council which refused to disallow the Act stated in so many words that the constitutionality of the Act should be tested, and, if the courts pronounced the Act legal and constitutional, the minority could come to the Government under section 93, subsection 3, which grants an appeal, and ask to be heard. The judgment of the court was that the Act was constitutional. The minority came before the Government and asked for interference by the Government as against the legislation of the province of Manitoba. The Government were not prepared to acquiesce or to act either one way or the other. They were not sure whether they had the power to interfere or not. They determined to go before the Supreme Court and afterwards, as it turned out, to the Privy Council, to have the question of their right to interfere decided. The minority in Manitoba were compelled to follow them there. The minority had no doubt as to their own right to appeal and were equally sure that the Government had the right to interfere.

Mr. FITZPATRICK.

But the Government was not prepared to acquiesce in that matter, and wanted to have it decided by the courts. That was a precaution for the protection of the Government and not for the protection of the minority. The Government compelled the minority, under such circumstances, to follow them before the Supreme Court and then before the Privy Council and argue the case. Their contention was maintained by the courts. Well, under such circumstances, it seems to me by all the laws of equity and justice, that the minority should not suffer for such action, and that the Government should recoup them for the expenditure which they were obliged to make under that act.

Mr. BERGERON. I am glad to have these explanations, which are very clear. I was going to ask my hon. friend to whom is the money to be paid?

The PRIME MINISTER. To Mr. Ewart, the counsel for the minority.

Mr. FOSTER. What are the details of the expenditure?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The larger counsel fees are paid to Mr. Christopher Robinson, the Hon. Edward Blake and Mr. Haldane. That accounts for the success of the minority.

Mr. FOSTER. If the Government is going to acknowledge the principle that this was a bill of costs that the country ought to pay, and if a part of it has been paid by private subscription, it seems to me that the Government, in order to be consistent, should pay for the whole.

The PRIME MINISTER. We will wait until we have application for that. We have none so far.

To provide for the enforcement of the Alien Labour Law..... $3,000

Mr. DAVIN. Perhaps the hon. the Solicitor General could tell us what provision is being made for enforcing the Alien Labour Law in the North-west Territories. I do not see the Minister of the Interior here.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am not quite sure there has been any grievance pointed out in the North-west Territories. If there is, we will be glad to deal with it.

Mr. DAVIN. At Moose Jaw there is a strong sense of grievance because alien labour is coming in every day to work on the railways, they come in by the Sault. The railway men feel a grievance because, if they go down below the line, the officers pounce on them at once; but when the Americans come in, nothing is done. We were told when this Act was passed that there was going to be an equal administration of justice.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The Minister of the Interior told the House that he was going to carry that out. It is all in the "Hansard."

Mr. DAVIN. Nothing has been done about it yet. The only way to prevent our people being badly treated across the line, is to treat the Americans when they come here, in the same way our people are treated there. If once we do that, you will see it will bring them to their senses, because all over the country artisans are swarming in.

The PRIME MINISTER. That speaks well for the country.

Mr. FOSTER. We might talk theoretically here as much as we like; but no man who has been in British Columbia since the Crow's Nest Pass Railway has commenced, will come back without knowing that the Alien Labour Law is no more in force in British Columbia along that work than if there was no such law on the Statute-book. Everybody will tell you that there are aliens all along the line on that work. I think it would be well if the enforcement of the Alien Labour Law were left to some one department, I think probably it should be the Justice Department.

Mr. OLIVER. I would like to say that so far as my information goes, and I made particular inquiries before I came down, along the line of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway in Alberta, I was informed that the enforcement of the labour law was very satisfactory, and that as a matter of fact a large number of labourers and contractors who had come over from the States to get work on the Crow's Nest Pass Railway from Lethbridge west, had been compelled to go back to the States without getting work. That being the fact, the people in that part of the country are well satisfied with the Alien Labour Law, and satisfied with the measure of its enforcement. I would like to go further, however, and say that the people of the Territories are desirous of seeing a continuation of that enforcement. They are in favour of an Alien Labour Law. Particularly the railway men feel sore if privileges are accorded to railroaders on this side of the line which are not accorded to them when they go across. There are special facilities for exchanging railroad labour that do not exist in other branches. Railroad men are to some extent a close corporation, they keep a better tally on that kind of thing than other classes of labourers do, and it would be well for the Government to keep a good tally on that particular feature of the alien labour question. Railroading is a trade to a large extent and railroaders look for the fullest protection that the law affords them, and I think that they are entitled to it.

Board of Customs laboratory, further amount required $4,000

Mr. FOSTER. Why this large increase?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That is owing to the change in the sugar duty, and the use of the polariscope test. It will be an additional charge upon the department.

Mr. SPROULE. We have had the polariscope test for years.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Some of the instruments have to be renewed. Under the polariscope, we pay express charges on samples and despatches.

Mr. BERGERON. I wish to inquire if a lot of machinery was imported from the United States for the elevator which is being built at Coteau Landing for the Canada Atlantic Railway Company, and if it passed the custom-house at Valleyfield without having paid full duty, and if it has resulted in difficulty between the department and the importers. Is it correct that the entries were not properly made, the collector not knowing how to deal with them.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I cannot answer the hon. gentleman's question at this moment, but I shall be glad to furnish him with the information to-morrow morning.

Mr. FOSTER. I desire to inquire whether machinery has been imported for the Chicoutimi pulp factory, and whether it was allowed to run for some time without the duty being paid, the machinery having been imported from the United States.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. My recollection is that some machinery was brought in there, and put in the mill during its course of construction. My impression is that the duty was paid before the mill commenced work.

Mr. TAYLOR. I drew the attention of the Minister to the fact that he appointed a new customs officer at Gananoque early last spring and that his residence is in such a dilapidated condition that he is unable to occupy it. The building should be put into such a shape that the officer and his family can use it.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I am glad the hon. gentleman has mentioned it in the hearing of the Minister of Public Works.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The matter still belongs to the Customs Department.

Mr. TAYLOR. I should like to have the satisfaction of being able to inform the custom-house officer that the house will be put into such a state that he and his family can occupy it. At present they are out on the street.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I should communicate with the Department of Public Works.

Amount required to provide for increase of salary of $15 each to six letter carriers in the Brantford post office, from 1st January to 30th June, 1899, those salaries not to exceed $360 each a year..... $90

Mr. BERGERON. Does this include all temporary clerks?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It covers temporary clerks.

Mr. FOSTER. This is a living example of the doctrine laid down by hon. gentlemen opposite that all statutory increases were to be abolished.

Mr. BERGERON. Are all temporary employees to share in the increases?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There are 148 of these increases, and they are made to very deserving men. They all receive not more than $450 a year each.

Mr. BERGERON. Are the increases given to the hon. gentleman's political friends and are Conservatives left aside?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The recipients will be nearly all Conservatives.

Mr. DAVIN. I do not see in the Supplementary Estimates that any consideration whatever is shown to the mail clerks in Manitoba and the North-west Territories. It is still true that the cost of living in the North-west is higher than in any other part of Canada, and the remuneration of mail clerks should be considered. As consideration appears now to be given to the cases of clerks with very small salaries, I trust that next year the hon. gentleman will place the railway mail clerks of Manitoba and the North-west in a more satisfactory position.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The mail clerks of the North-west receive special allowance above their ordinary salaries for the reason mentioned by the hon. gentleman. No officers in the service appeal more strongly for special consideration than the railway mail clerks, but both in British Columbia, Manitoba and the North-west Territories they receive special allowances.

Mr. DAVIN. Not what they formerly received.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In what way?

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman's predecessor lowered the amount, and we were never able to bring it back to the original sum.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They are receiving the same remuneration as when I took office.

Mr. ELLIS. I observe that compensation has been given to officers of the department in some cases. In 1889, John Campbell was employed as a mail clerk on the Short Line, and was running over the Maine Central, under instructions from the Postmaster

Mr. PATERSON.

General, when he was burnt to death. Mr. Weldon and myself united in applying to the Premier, Sir John Macdonald, and in presenting the case we received a courteous reply, but nothing was done. In 1890, we again made representations, I think Sir Mackenzie Bowell being then acting leader in this House. He promised to look into the matter. The case went to the Post Office Department, and the secretary said that to make an allowance in such a case would form a precedent which it was not desirable to establish. I observe that since then the case of Mrs. Edgecombe has been decided. Campbell died in the public service, leaving a widow and children, and his friends have always felt that some compensation should be made. The late Inspector King spoke very highly as to the efficiency of this public servant, and I trust the Postmaster General will take his case into consideration, and grant some compensation, for if it was proper to make an allowance to Mrs. Edgecombe it is only fair to make compensation in the Campbell case, notwithstanding the lapse of years.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend (Mr. Ellis) a short time ago mentioned the matter to me and I had it examined, and yesterday the Controller brought the papers to me and I had an opportunity of looking through them carefully. If my hon. friend (Mr. Ellis) will have patience I think that next year the estimates will be more promising in this respect than they are now, or were on former occasions.

Mr. BERGERON. Surely the Estimates are not going to be larger next year?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I refer to this particular item. I believe that the case my hon. friend (Mr. Ellis) mentions has merit in it and ought to have been considered years ago. I hope to be able to report favourably upon it if we should be spared till another session.

Mr. McMULLEN. The Postmaster General was not in the House the other evening when I drew attention to the common custom in every department of paying clerks extra for extra work. For years in the Post Office Savings Bank Department a certain number of clerks are paid extra for calculating the interest quarterly. I object to that, for I do not believe that any clerk in the service should be paid extra pay for any such work. Bank clerks have to make up quarterly returns to the head office, and have to work some times until 12 o'clock at night, and I do not think they get extra pay for that. The clerks of wholesale merchants are required to work late at night for two or three weeks twice in the year at stocktaking, and they get no extra pay. I call the attention of the Postmaster General to this pernicious custom for it is high time it should be dropped both in the Post Office and other departments. Now, I want the Solicitor General's attention to this. I see that the Clerk of the Exchequer Court gets a salary of $2,000 and he gets $300 extra for preparing the decisions of that court for the printers, and in addition to that for selling stamps in connection with his duty as clerk, he was last year paid $132 commission. The Clerk of the Supreme Court gets $2,600 salary, and under the system inaugurated by the Conservatives he gets $600 a year extra for preparing the reports for the printer, and in addition to that he got $190 for selling stamps. It is grossly unjust to allow these men a commission for selling stamps which is part of their duty. When I was in Opposition I challenged this extra pay system and I challenge it now. It is so common, that every clerk in every department is seeking to get extra pay, and last year about 730 of them drew money in this way. I hope that the Government will cut off these extras, particularly in the case of men who get high salaries like those officials in the Supreme and Exchequer Courts. There is no other class in the Dominion as well paid as the civil servants. Take the Department of Inland Revenue. The Deputy Minister gets $3,200 salary, and $800 additional as commissioner of standards, and he does not even sign a report for that. He should be willing to serve the country for $3,200 without getting extra pay. I hope that next year the Government will cut these extras off in the Estimates. I do not wish to cut any man's salary down. If in any department a man is getting a salary less than he is worth, let his salary be increased, but let him not get extra money in this irregular way.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I quite agree with what has been said by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen). This Government has a big job on hand and we will have to give them a certain amount of time to correct all these abuses that have grown up under the old regime for 18 years. It is surprising to see hon. gentlemen opposite, and especially the member for York (Mr. Foster) criticising every little two-ha'penny item when for years these abuses were existing under his Government and he never said one word against them. I trust that the Government will correct this abuse.

Mr. ROGERS. I like to see some of these parliamentary warriors like the hon. gentlemen who have spoken express views on a question of this kind. The civil servants are well paid, and the evidence of that is that when there is a vacancy every representative in this House knows how he is worried by an army of applicants for the position. They have either very little to do or are very well paid, or they would not be so anxious about these positions. I speak for the farming class whom I represent, when I say that all these extra expenses should be cut down. There are very few young men from the country who have Government positions, but when one member of a family gets a position I know the difficulty and the labour the young men left at home on the farm have to encounter in order to pay for him and others in the civil service.

I know that if one of the sons of the family could trade positions to-day with one of these young men, he would give his hundred acres in return for a Government position. There is something wrong when that is the case. When the farmers of this country see the salaries of civil servants going up, and superannuations paid to them from time to time, they feel that great injustice is being done. The question is often asked, why the young men leave the farm; and this is one reason. I said before I came to this Parliament that it was very hard to undo what has been done in these matters; but I do hope that this Government will try to check a growing evil. I admit that not as much has been done as I would like to see done. I would have said more about it if a few more of the Patron boys were here. I feel my weakness, and I feel that I could do more if I had more backbone and a little more experience in this House. I feel that the Government are doing something along the right line; but I cannot say I am satisfied, and I hope they will try to do more to lessen the burdens on the backs of the agriculturists of this country. I do not wish to keep the junior clerks, or those on low salaries, at $350 or $400. I want to see them well paid; but it is the salaries of those who are getting the thousands that I want to see checked, because we are paying them more than we are really able to pay. We are willing to pay them what they earn. These increases, I am glad to see, have been given to the junior clerks who are getting small salaries. I hope the Government will continue in the good work they are doing.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I would say to my hon. friends that the special allowance made to those clerks in the service who compute the interest in the savings banks are not made for the first time by the present Government. This system of allowances I found in existence when I took office. However, I think it right that the matter should be looked into, and I promise my hon. friends to look into it; and if I find any abuses, it will be my duty to give effect to the suggestions and remove those officials.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Reference was made to certain officials of the Supreme and Exchequer Courts who receive moneys in excess of their salaries. I think the statement was made without a full knowledge of the facts. The two gentlemen are paid these extra moneys, not for the services they render as registrars of the courts, but because they make reports of cases that are to be published. This is no part of their work as registrars, and I may say that the return we receive from the sale of those reports is more than sufficient to compensate us for the outlay. The two officers to whom special reference has been made are men in every possible way qualified for their positions, and they earn every dollar they receive.

Mr. McMULLEN. What about the commissions on the sale of stamps?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. In all the courts those who sell stamps are remunerated in that form. This is a system that has existed to my knowledge since I have been connected with public affairs. I know that it has existed in my own province from time immemorial.

Mr. McMULLEN. I want to say, in reply to my hon. friend, that we have found that a great many things have been in existence for years, but that is no reason why they should be continued. We are here to reform wrongs, and this is one of the wrongs. I do not care if all the clerks in all the courts of this country have received commissions on stamps in the past, I contend that it should be stopped. They should be called on to sell stamps, and give the country the entire revenue. The hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) kind of belittles what I say.

Mr. FOSTER. Not at all. I am going to support you against the Solicitor General.

Mr. McMULLEN. If you had supported my demands in past years, it would have been better. I called the hon. gentleman's attention to these abuses when he was in power, but he turned a deaf ear. I am glad to be able to say that I am calling the attention of a Cabinet to these abuses that I have some confidence in, and I believe they will right these abuses. I do not care how long this system of commissions on stamps has existed in the past; I contend that when these men get good salaries, they should not be paid for selling these stamps. I remember that in 1895 a man who got a salary of $1,025 was paid $60 extra for winding a clock, and my hon. friend from York raised no objection to it.

Mr. FOSTER. What kind of a clock was that?

Mr. BERGERON. Was it his grandfather's clock?

Mr. McMULLEN. I hope that next year these extra payments will be stopped in the Supreme Court and the Exchequer Court. I contend that these men get good salaries for their services, and if they do prepare these reports, that is part of their duty.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No, it is not.

Mr. FITZPATRICK.

Mr. McMULLEN. Well, it ought to be. When they are not occupied as clerks, what are they doing the rest of the time? I contend that they should put these records in shape for the printers without a cent of extra pay. There is no necessity of giving them extra pay. Remove these clerks to-morrow, and you will find men in this county who will undertake to fill their positions, and do it well for the salaries they are getting. That was an abuse that was introduced and sanctioned by the hon. member for York, and I dare say he would condone it.

Mr. FOSTER. The present Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright)—we will not speak of those who have passed away—introduced that. I suggest this about the clock. I am at one with my hon. friend, and I will not vote for any $60 for winding a clock. The clock should be wound by the Solicitor General—he is tall enough and strong enough, and has not much to do.

Mr. McMULLEN. I want to say to my hon. friend that it is such abuses as that which he inaugurated and perpetuated that caused the people of this country to wind him up, and I tell you that the present Government need to put their House in order. I have said before that an allowance for extra services should not be granted. These clerks should perform those extra duties without extra pay. There is not a line of business in which men are engaged, where they are allowed extra pay for anything of that kind. The Postmaster General has handled his department admirably and merits the thanks of the country, and I hope that he will not let this abuse escape the fate of the many others he has corrected. While I hold a seat in this House, I shall endeavour to point out those wrongs and urge their removal, I do not care who is in power.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman will point out the wrong and will rest satisfied with pointing them out. What a nice little comedy this was. He was very profuse in his eulogiums on the Postmaster General, but before starting this subject, he had to come down and whisper in the ear of the Postmaster General and get his permission to attack these items.

Mr. BERGERON. Has my hon. friend received a petition from the people of the town of Beauharnois asking him to change the hour for making up the mails to catch the Montreal train in the morning?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It may have been received by the department, but personally I have no knowledge of it.

Mr. BERGERON. I know that such a petition has been sent, and since the hon. gentleman has not seen it, I shall explain to him what is required. The mails travel between Montreal and Beauharnois by the St. Lawrence and Adirondack Railway. They used to go down by the nine o'clock train to Montreal, but that train has changed its hour and now passes at 10.30, so that the mails are not distributed in Montreal before noon. But there is a local train which does not change its hours of leaving, and which passes Beauharnois at 7.46 a.m. The people of Beauharnois ask that the postmaster be instructed to make up the mails to catch this train, and I would urge my hon. friend to give their petition his most favourable consideration. There is no politics in it, because the thing is asked for by everybody, both Liberals and Conservatives.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I shall look into it.

Mr. BRITTON. With reference to temporary clerks, there are in the service a goodly number of persons who hold office temporarily. I happen to know some who were appointed four and five years ago and are still temporary clerks. They have passed the civil service examination and expected to be put on the permanent staff, but they are still temporary and their position is uncertain. I would ask the hon. Postmaster General to look into their case, and see if he cannot, in the case of those who are suitable in every way, make their position permanent so that they will understand where they are.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I found in the office a large number of temporary clerks in excess numerically of any provision in the statute. The number went up among the hundreds, their names do not appear on any civil service list at all, and there was no provision in the estimates or in any Order in Council for permanent officers which they could fill. I do not know that Parliament will be prepared to create all the clerkships necessary, in order to provide positions for the temporary clerks now in the service. Meritorious men gradually find their way into the permanent list, but I cannot give any assurance in the matter.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it true that a gentleman by the name of Joseph A. Dauphinet, president of the Liberal Club at Sorel, has been appointed postmaster there in place of Mr. Duplessis?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think so.

Mr. BERGERON. In that change was any compensation given to Duplessis. The officer was very well conducted, although he is a very old gentleman. Some of his family helped him.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The late Government had been considering the question of retiring Mr. Duplessis, but left the task unfinished when they went out of office, and the matter devolved on me. My recollection is, if I am not confounding this case with another, that the officer became too old and infirm to give any attention to the work at all, and it was left in the hands of some very young member of his family. I recognized the intentions of the late Administration and gave effect to them after very careful consideration. The law does not provide any system of compensation to postmasters who are not on the civil service list, and this man was not.

Mr. BELL (Addington). Before this resolution is adopted, let me say that with all his faults, I find in the Postmaster General a great deal to admire. I wish to draw his attention to the position of the mail service at Desmond, and have no doubt that he will see that the grievance I am about to mention is removed. We are not getting the service that the Postmaster General desires, no doubt, we should have. We are connected with the service from Camden east to Centreville—a daily mail service—and all outgoing mail matter must lay over one night at Centreville. I call his attention to the fact that he could connect that service with the Bay of Quinté Railway, a shorter distance and at less expense, and we then could have direct connection with the daily mail. The present system is a great inconvenience. If a letter is mailed to me from home on Monday, I do not receive it until Wednesday. If the hon. gentleman will give some attention to the matter, he could improve the service without any increase in the expense.

Legislation—House of Commons—

To provide for the payment to Sir A. P. Caron of the amount deducted from his sessional allowance owing to his absence from the House during the session of 1898, caused by injuries....	$ 150
To provide for the payment of the sessional indemnity of Thomas Beattie, who was absent owing to illness.....	1,000
Additional amount required for sessional clerks and translators	488
Additional for committees	400
Sessional messengers, pages, charwomen, &c.....	693
	$2,731

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There are here a couple of items which I regret to be obliged to ask the House to drop—those relating to the indemnity of two of our members. I placed the items in the Estimates with the idea that there were precedents for it and that it was the usual practice. That, however, is denied. It is stated that this practice is the exception and not the rule. I believe the fifteen days' allowance will cover one of these, though it may not fully cover the other. I think it better to withdraw these items than to follow a bad precedent.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend refers to cases of sickness and not of death.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. I must agree with my hon. friend. I think it is unusual, and it ought to remain unusual, because if every case of sickness is to bring full indemnity, it is liable to grow to become a great abuse. Still, I think that it is a pity, these items having been placed in the Estimate, that they should be dropped.

The PRIME MINISTER. In the case of Sir Adolphe Caron, it is beyond doubt that the fifteen days' allowance will be enough to cover his absence by reason of his unfortunate illness. And, in the case of Mr. Beattie, this fifteen days, which practically covers three weeks, will be about all that is necessary.

Mr. TAYLOR. No. It was early in the session that Major Beattie was going home and was taken sick on the train. Had he remained in Ottawa and been taken sick here, he would have drawn his indemnity. He has been absent a month or six weeks.

The PRIME MINISTER. If he had been away a month, that would leave him the loss of a week only.

Mr. TAYLOR. I wish to refer to two other cases concerning which I have had some conversation with the chief whip on the Government side, two cases that should have been attended to a session or two ago. I refer to Mr. Livingston and Mr. Corby. Mr. Livingston met with an accident by which he had his leg broken and was prevented from being here except for two or three days. Mr. Corby, after being here a few days was ordered south for his health. These are exceptional cases and provision ought have been made for them as a matter of justice. I know other cases not nearly so exceptional that have been received with favour by the Government and members have been paid for the whole session, though not present.

Resolutions to be reported.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson) moved :

That the resolution of this House agreeing to the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 71) further to amend the Weights and Measures Act, be rescinded, and that the said amendments be further considered at the next sitting of the House

He said : this Bill coming from the Senate had two amendments. The first was making the weight of lime at 80 pounds ; the second was this :

No weighing machine used for weighing or determining the weights of any of the articles mentioned in section 16 of the Weights and Measures Act shall be of less certified capacity than one Winchester bushel.

The word " Winchester " is inserted. That is not a legal measure here, we do not employ that term. I move to reconsider with a view to moving this resolution :

Mr. FIELDING.

That the first amendment be agreed to, and that the second amendment be amended by striking out the word " Winchester " therein.

Mr. WALLACE. What is the difference between a Winchester bushel and the simple term bushel ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The Winchester bushel is not in use in Canada, we use the Imperial bushel. The Winchester bushel is used in the United States. The articles mentioned in the Bill are all of the weights of the Imperial bushel, the regular standard bushel that is in use in Canada.

Mr. BELL (Addington). What is the capacity of an Imperial bushel and a Winchester bushel ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think they are in the proportion of about five to six.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not understand exactly the wording of this amendment that has been adopted by the Senate, but it seems to me that it is going to play a good deal of trouble with the grain trade. As I understand the amendment, no measure shall be less than a bushel. But how are you going to do with a half bushel, or a peck, or a gallon that is used in the grain trade ? It seems to me that this amendment has been passed by the Senate without understanding the question, and I think that the Government should consider that before they adopt the amendment at all. I think the Bill should be withdrawn and considered next session. It seems to me, from a hasty reading of it, that it will seriously affect the grain trade. The member for West York (Mr. Wallace) will know the effect it will have on handling the grain trade throughout the country by dealers, and elevator men, and farmers.

Mr. COCHRANE. It will affect the elevator men more than the farmers.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. What the hon. gentleman says will have no weight against the present motion in your hands, because that is rescinding what was done, then it will be for consideration to-morrow.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I might be able to explain this amendment. I think my hon. friend from Kent (Mr. Campbell) somewhat misapprehends the point at issue. The amendment of the Senate is that no weighing machine used for weighing or determining the weight of any of the articles mentioned in section 16 of the Weights and Measures Act, shall be of less certified capacity than one Winchester bushel. It does not affect the measure of a bushel at all, it is that the weighing machine shall be of capacity to weigh a bushel. It does not affect the standard weight, it is simply to define that any weighing machine which shall be used to test the weight of a bushel, shall be of a capacity to weigh a bushel. But unfortunately the word "Winchester" has been put in, and they might in that case be using a machine which would be of a capacity to weigh a Winchester bushel, when it could not weigh an Imperial bushel.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Does not that mean that the machine while having the capacity for weighing a bushel, could be used for half a bushel or a peck?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Certainly. It is not intended that the weight shall be made up or tested by weighing only parts of a bushel. But that it should be sufficient to weigh a whole bushel. That is, I think, the meaning of the Senate amendment. I am not discussing the advisability of that amendment, or how the House should deal with it.

Mr. BELL (Addington). If a machine can weigh a bushel, it can weigh a peck. If a weighing machine can weigh a Winchester bushel, can it not also weigh an Imperial bushel?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Not necessarily.

Mr. SPROULE. The amendment is made for the purpose of meeting a long felt want amongst the farmers. Wheat to-day is bought by standard and that standard is 1-16 of a bushel, which is a small brass pail, and the wheat is put into that and weighed. Now, wheat is bought on the market at, say 80 cents standard, that is wheat weighing 60 pounds to the bushel. Suppose it is sent down to the mill of my hon. friend from Kent (Mr. Campbell). The ticket comes back, your wheat is below standard—that is, below the 60 pounds to the bushel—we will only allow you 79 cents or 78 cents or 70 cents. The miller always has it in his own hand to send back what the standard is. Therefore, he has an advantage over the farmer, I know from experience, because I have seen it frequently, and no later than last fall, out of the same bin, I sent some wheat to two men, a portion to one and a portion to the other. It was bought at 82 cents standard, and one reported it back as not up to standard; only 58 pounds to the bushel. Therefore, I was paid 80 cents for it instead of 82 cents, while the other man bought at 82 cents standard, and paid me 1 cent more. He stated it was only half a pound less than the standard, while the first one stated it was two pounds less. It is unfair to the farmers, it is not a fair test of a bushel of wheat. If you test it at all, test the full bushel. To satisfy myself I took out of that same grain that was sent to the mill, a full bushel, and it weighed 61½ pounds, yet it was reported back as weighing only 59½ by one, and 58 pounds by the other. I am glad to see the amendment is made because it is in the right direction and will place the farmers in a better position than they are to-day in selling their wheat.

Mr. TAYLOR. I think the Minister should hold this Bill over until he has consulted the grain buyers. If this Bill passed, it would render useless hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of machines now used by grain buyers throughout the country.

An hon. MEMBER. So much the better.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman is speaking about something of which he knows nothing.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. These amendments are made by the Senate. If we adopt them, we should not adopt the Winchester bushel.

Mr. TAYLOR. The law now recognizes a weighing machine for weighing two quarts. It is undoubtedly a fact that more grain can be placed in a two-quart measure than can be run into one of these machines. This Bill will not benefit any one, but it will render useless all these weighing machines.

Mr. SPROULE. They are a nuisance.

Mr. TAYLOR. There are thousands of them in use in the country to-day. I know all about this business because I have been buying grain for twenty years.

Mr. COCHRANE. Some of us have been selling it for twenty years.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Minister should consult the grain men and the farmers.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 171) to amend the Customs Tariff of 1897.—(Mr. Fielding.)

Bill (No. 172) to amend the Inland Revenue Act.—(Mr. Fielding.)

The PRIME MINISTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 12.25 a.m. (Saturday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

SATURDAY, 11th June, 1898.

PRAYERS.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

NORTH-WEST CENTRAL RAILWAY COMPANY.

The House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 141)—from the Senate—respecting the Great North-west Central Railway Company.—(Mr. Morrison.)

(In the Committee.)

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). It has been agreed between the various parties interested in the Bill that the suggestion which I made last evening should be carried out, provided that the power to issue new bonds be exercised only upon condition that the bonds should be issued for an additional ten miles, and the additional ten miles should be built and equipped so as to make the building of the ten miles a condition of the issuing of the bonds. I have drawn up the amendments, and they have been agreed to by the parties, and are as follows. Section 5 will be amended so as to read :

The proceeds of the new bonds shall be first applied in the construction, equipment and completion of the extension of the said railway, from its present northwestern terminus, a distance of not less than ten miles, and second,

At the end of that will be added subsection 7, as follows :—

It is hereby declared that if the said westerly extension of ten miles provided for in the first subsection of this section is not constructed, equipped and put into operation on or before the 31st December, 1898, all issues of new bonds made under this Act shall be null and void.

Section 6 will be amended so as to read in the proviso :

Provided that the company shall complete and put in operation 20 miles of its railway in addition to the ten miles required by section 5 on or before the first day of August, 1899.

A further provision is that the proviso which was added in the Railway Committee to section 4 shall be changed by striking out the word "or" after the words "High Court of Justice for Ontario," and putting in the word "and" so as to make the section read as follows :—

But such new bonds shall not be issued or disposed of until the question of the ownership of the shares claimed by Alphonse Charlebois in the capital stock of the company has been settled by a judge of the High Court of Justice for Ontario and the said court has sanctioned or ordered that such bonds may be issued, and the price or terms upon which such sale or disposition shall take place.

Mr. SPROULE.

I move, Mr. Chairman, that these amendments, as read by me, be placed in the Bill.

Motion agreed to.

Bill reported as amended, and read the third time and passed.

NORTH SHORE ELECTRIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

The House proceeded to consider amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 97) to incorporate the North Shore Electric Railway Company.

Mr. SAVARD moved the following amendment :—

Clause 4. After the word "from" in the second line, strike out the words "Shawenegan to," and add at the end of the said clause 4 the following words :—"but such line shall not run within four miles at any point of the Great Northern Railway."

Amendment agreed to, and Senate amendments concurred in.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 173) further to amend the Act respecting the Senate and House of Commons.

IRRIGATION IN THE NORTH-WEST.

The House proceeded to consider amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 146) to amend and consolidate the North-west Irrigation Acts of 1894 and 1895.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton) moved :

Page 9, line 36, after the word "work," to insert "and the minimum rates to be charged by the licensee," be not concurred in, because it is impracticable to fix the maximum rate before completing the work, and before it is ascertained what the cost of constructing the same will be, and that the other amendments made by the Senate in the said Bill be concurred in.

He said : These works are not to be constructed with public money. The capital will be private money, the people will go into these enterprises in most cases without knowing absolutely what the work is going to cost. I think we must go very much further in our experience in these matters before we can adopt such a course as is here proposed. No Minister would know what the work would cost to construct or to maintain. If there was danger of the rates being fixed at such a scale as would prevent the work from paying, nobody would put his money into these works and the Act would be a dead letter, for no works would be constructed. When the attention of the Senate is called to these facts, I think that they will not insist upon their amendment.

Mr. SPROULE. It does not seem to me that there should be any difficulty in fixing a maximum rate of charges. The construction of these irrigation drains will usually be by contract, and surely the contractor will take the trouble to have an estimate made by an engineer of the cost, and that would be stated in the contract. As for the cost of maintenance, I think that the experience gained in the localities where these works have been in operation for a length of time ought to enable any one to estimate fairly well the cost of maintenance. With this data it would be easy to fix the maximum rate. We should avoid putting it into the power of any person or corporation to charge a monopoly price for the use of water from these drains for irrigation purposes. This is the only means the farmers there have of carrying on farming operations in these districts, and there should be nothing to discourage them in this respect.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) is mistaken in supposing that private companies will have control of the water. That will be in control of the department. If my hon. friend has ever built a house he will know that it is only rarely the cost of it can be known before it is started—and houses have been built for a good many years. It is almost impossible to tell what these works will cost, even when we have an estimate. Any one will understand this who has ever had to do with the construction of public works. In the case of irrigation in the North-west Territories, we have practically no experience either as to construction or as to maintenance, and it is only by experience that we can learn. We want to make this Act as flexible as possible, so as to induce people to invest their money in irrigation works. Very little has been invested so far, but we are surveying the land at Government expense so as to induce capital to undertake these enterprises.

Mr. SPROULE. Since these drains have been in operation in the North-west Territories, there have been serious complaints regarding the ability of the people to get the use of the water in the streams that nature had provided, but which was controlled by man's device. They found it impossible to get the use of the water to irrigate their lands. I have had consultation with some who have had experience, and they strongly advise not to put it in the power of any private corporation to control the irrigation of any locality, because as soon as they do that, the people would assuredly suffer, the cost of the supply would be put at the highest possible figure, and one that would make it impossible for many to cultivate their lands at a profit.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not altogether agree that the cost of the work is the proper basis upon which to fix the rates. The value of irrigation depends on the profits that can be made out of the crop raised, and if water cannot be got at a figure that will enable crops to be raised at a profit, then the irrigation has no value, and there is no object in having a company organized to construct the work. I think the proper basis of the calculation of the rates is the amount that the crop can afford to pay for the use of the water, and not the cost of the work. Those who wish to go into irrigation work should go into it on the principle, that if they cannot supply the water at certain rates, they should not put their money into the work. The Government should not give a company control of the water supply free on that condition, because while one company may undertake a certain work and, by mismanagement, may make it necessary to levy a higher rate than the crop will stand in order to give them interest on their money, another company, better managed, might if they had the privilege use that same water in such a way as to give it to the people at a rate which would enable them to grow crops at a profit. While I do not wish to delay the Bill, I think it is only right, seeing that I represent one of the only two districts under Dominion control in which irrigation is likely to be used extensively, that I should make this statement.

Mr. DAVIN. What harm will result from allowing the amendment of the Senate to stand?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I could not carry it out. The amendment is that I should fix the maximum rate, and I would be in a helpless position when I came to do so before these proceedings are taken. I would not have any basis upon which to fix the rate. If I took the basis of the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver), and undertook to decide it upon the basis of the value of the crops that are going to be grown on the land, I would like any hon. member to tell me how I could figure it out. It cannot be done. When the works are constructed, we can see what benefit they are going to be, and we will have some basis upon which to fix the rate.

Mr. DAVIN. Suppose the case of a man getting control of the source of irrigation, and, after he has finished his work, he wants to charge more than the farmer could pay and make a profit, and the farmer won't use the water; how are we going to deal with such a case as that?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If the Senate had said that no rate should be charged except such as should be approved by the department, I would have agreed to to that, because that is practicable. But if the hon. gentleman wants to introduce an amendment to the Act next year to that effect, I will agree to it.

Mr. POUPORE. That would be the proper thing.

Mr. SPROULE. The member for Alberta says that it should be known how much the cost will be to the farmer before the work is commenced, but the farmer has no data for judging of the cost, he does not know whether it would be a paying investment if he used it.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman's views can be met without any amendment to the legislation at all. The farmer does not need to take the water unless he wants to. He does not need to be brought into connection with the irrigation system at all if he does not want to. The result of this amendment will be this, that the Minister would either have to stop the work altogether, or he would have to put this maximum rate up so high that he would be sure that he would not prevent capital from going into the construction of the work. The effect would be injurious rather than beneficial. I would agree to the proposition that the Commissioner or the Minister should fix maximum rates, and that an appeal should be allowed to a tribunal for the purpose of regulating the rates. I have no objection to such an amendment if any hon. member wishes to bring it in next year.

Mr. SPROULE. Do you propose to amend it now in that direction so as to enable the Governor in Council to have control over the rates?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I could do so, but it is too late to do it this year.

Mr. OLIVER. The provision giving the Governor the power to regulate the rates is contained in the Bill as it stands; the only question is as to whether the rates should be regulated on the basis of the value of the work.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We cannot settle that now, and the Senate do not undertake to settle it. The Senate simply says that the Minister should say what the higher rates shall be. My hon. friend's argument shows the difficulty of doing that. He says the rates ought to be based on one thing. I suggest the rates ought to be based on another; so that if provision is made for regulating the rates, it ought to be worked out carefully on the basis provided, and that cannot be done now.

Mr. OLIVER. I merely wish to put the suggestion formally before the House, to be worked out in the future. By paragraph 6 of section 51 it is provided that the Minister may regulate from time to time what rates may be charged by the licensees and the proportion of the tariff of rates. There is no question about the Government having the right to regulate the rates, the question is as to the basis.

Senate amendments, as amended, concurred in.

Mr. SPROULE.

THE ELECTORAL FRANCHISE.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick) moved:

That this House do not insist upon their objections to the 7th, 8th, 9th and 10th amendments of the Senate to Bill (No. 16) repealing the Electoral Franchise Act, and to further amend the Dominion Elections Act, without assenting to the reasons given by the Senate.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The English of it is that we accept the amendments so far as they relate to Prince Edward Island. When these amendments came down first I was doubtful whether they should be accepted or not, and the reason I was doubtful, I may just as well explain to the House. The effect of the amendment is to place an inordinate power in the hands of the Minister for the time being. There are 400 or 500 voters on the Prince Edward Island Railway, and the effect of the amendment is to disclose to the public how each of those men vote. The effect of the amendment, therefore, is to give an excessive and improper power to the Minister of the day. On that ground, I opposed it, but having made my objection, and as it did not carry the weight I expected, I will not persist in my objection any longer.

Amendment concurred in.

SUPPLY.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). Referring to the inquiry made by the member for York (Mr. Foster) regarding the payment of duties on machinery for the Chicoutimi pulp works, I beg to inform him that permission was given to warehouse the machinery during construction of the building and pending valuation. The valuation has been made and the duty paid.

Mr. FOSTER. What I want to know is, whether the machinery was in use for any time, and if so, how long, before the duty was paid.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I cannot tell the time.

Mr. FOSTER. My information is that the machinery was in use for months before the duty was paid.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We had control of the machinery.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). Hon. gentlemen opposite did the same in regard to machinery used in the beet sugar manufactories.

Mr. FOSTER. I want the exact date at which the duty was paid, before concurrence is taken.

Militia—Yukon Contingent $147,000

Mr. FOSTER. I should like to obtain full information from the Minister both in regard to the transportation and supplies. I expected the hon. gentleman would have had a statement prepared.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). A misunderstanding arose as to the information asked for. The member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) asked for certain information as to the contracts entered into for carrying the supplies. I had an abstract prepared and handed to the hon. member, by whom it was shown to fellow-members. As to the supplies, we have already had considerable discussion as to why they were not put up to public tender. I explained that a few firms had made offers, and we had finally purchased the goods from H. N. Bate & Co., of Ottawa, and the Hudson Bay Company. The chief point at issue between the member for York and myself with respect to the supplies was that I should have asked for tenders by public advertisement. My answer to that was a statement prepared by the Quartermaster General, which I read to the House, in which he pointed out that there was urgency, and that it was necessary for the purpose of securing more careful packing and high quality that as far as possible the supplies should be put up under the eye of the officers of the department. It seemed to be conceded by the hon. gentleman that perhaps, so far as the first portion of the supplies was concerned, that argument had some force.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not admit it.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. So far as regards the second portion of the supplies, about two-thirds of the whole, the hon. gentleman thought there were no good reasons why tenders should not have been asked. My reply was that the urgency was equally great. It was found necessary after the defeat of the Government's Yukon Railway Bill that the second lot should leave this side for the Pacific early in May, because it was found that the only safe means of getting our supplies up to Port Selkirk was by way of the Yukon River. So there was really less time for preparation of the second portion than for the first.

Mr. FOSTER. When does the first boat go?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It has gone already. It sailed yesterday or the day before. The date given when supplies should reach the Pacific Coast was 20th May, and they had therefore to leave here during the first week in May. I have here a statement of the firms from whom the goods were purchased, and the prices. It is as follows:—

Nature of Supplies.	Prices.		Total cost.	Successful Tenderers.	Other firms tendering or asked to tender.

This last order was given to Bate & Co., including the tinned meats.

Mr. EARLE. In regard to the item of $14,000, particulars should be given, for it might consist of small lines of goods sold at very high prices.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. As regards this item of $14, 000, nearly the whole of it is for articles that will be sold to the men as they may require them, and the value will be deducted from their pay. That is customary at all our depots to a certain extent.

Mr. EARLE. That hardly covers the point. Unless all the prices are known, it is impossible to make a proper comparison.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The comparison was made in the department. The information we had was from Mr. White, of the North-west Mounted Police, and the prices quoted were compared with the prices obtaining on the coast. I made that statement of facts to the hon. gentleman and I am not able to add anything to it. We received several prices from the district commanding officer, but I found after discussing the matter with Col. Lake that our principal information was received here from prices which were being paid here. I think the hon. gentleman should take my word for that, and I scarcely see why such very severe criticisms should be made.

Mr. EARLE. I would simply say that this is a matter of very great interest to our people on the Pacific Coast. They feel that they ought at least to have an equal interest in supplying these goods as have the merchants in the east, and what I would like is something to satisfy them that they have not been overlooked in the matter. It is evident that they have not had an equal show to tender for these supplies; and in fact they were not asked to tender at all. We have no information as to the prices that have been quoted to the department by the militia officer on the Pacific Coast, and I feel myself that had the merchants of British Columbia an opportunity of tendering on open tender for that quantity of goods, the order could have been filled on the Pacific Coast certainly at these prices and I think at lower prices.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have told my hon. friend (Mr. Earle) that we decided at the outset not to ask for public tenders and therefore, right or wrong, that phase of the case is excluded. The question remains as to whether we should buy the goods through Mr. Perry on the coast as has been done for the North-west Mounted Police, or buy them here; and my officers after considering the matter carefully decided that it was desirable we should buy them here. That is all I can say to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Earle) with reference to that point. His friends on the coast have certainly received a very large share of the patronage of this Government; ten times I suppose the amount that the merchants in the east have received. Had there been an opportunity of publishing advertisements for tenders, of course the friends of the hon. gentleman would have had the same opportunities as the others, but we did not think we had time to do that. I wish to make no reflection on the merchants of the coast or anywhere else, but what I said the other day is true, that it so happened that the goods were purchased at prices below those which we would probably have to pay if we advertised, because goods have increased in price since that time. That may be an accident, but it is nevertheless a fact and the country gets the benefit of it.

Mr. SPROULE. I want to say a word with regard to the principle the Minister has laid down.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, never mind that.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell) is getting uneasy again; he will want another dose of salts.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I won't go to you for it.

Mr. SPROULE. This information should have been given to us at an earlier date so as to enable us to ascertain how far we are justified in passing this item. The Minister tells us that he sent a memorandum to the member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) and he supposed it was shown to the parties interested. Now, every member of this House wants this information just as well as the member for Pictou or half a dozen others, and it should have been given to the whole House and not to a few members. This is a large item and it can only be voted on intelligently when we know the details of how the expenditure was made. Not one Minister but several Ministers during this session have deferred information until the very moment the item was before us and when it was impossible to understand it, and I say that such a course is treating the House with scant courtesy. This deferring of information to the last moment is one reason of the delay in passing the Estimates this session, and the Ministers are responsible for it. When they bring down Estimates at another session, if ever they do have an opportunity of bringing down Estimates again, they should recollect that they must give the House the information it is entitled to at the earliest possible date.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not mean to be unduly insistent, but I think we will save time if this item is allowed to stand until the Minister brings down the information. This is an item of $30,000, and for my part I do not feel inclined to let it go on the scrappy information given us. The Minister has got his department equipped with officers under his control and what is the reason he cannot get a detailed statement made.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). What do you want?

Mr. FOSTER. I want the particulars, I want to know the firms he asked to send in tenders for groceries.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I told you that.

Mr. FOSTER. No, the Minister has not given us the detailed information as to what were the prices of these different firms. We asked the Minister for this information three weeks ago and now he wants to give it at the last moment by word of mouth. We want to have something that we can look at and see how the prices compare. The Minister can get that done in his department in twenty-five minutes, and it is totally inexcusable that he should ask the House to vote this without a word of information.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I can scarcely understand why the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) should make myself, in connection with this transaction, the object of his special criticism.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not that.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. An item of half a million dollars passed the other day for the Yukon district and the hon. gentleman had not a word to say about it. I do not know if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) desires to press me unduly, or that he has any suspicion of wrongdoing in this matter but I must say the hon. gentleman's course is an unusual one.

Mr. FOSTER. Not at all.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) knows that the two firms with whom we are dealing, the Hudson Bay Company and H. N. Bate & Co., are two of the most reputable firms in this country, firms who would not charge improper prices and who would not enter into improper relations with any Government or any member of a Government. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) suspects anything wrong let him say so, but if he should accept the explanation which I gave I will say this, if this item is allowed to pass I will give in detail the price paid for every single article of grocery at three o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) better bring it at three o'clock and we will pass the item.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Oh, pass the item.

Mr. FOSTER. No.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think there is a great want of courtesy in treating me in that way. I have been in this House for more years than the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) and I know the custom has been that when a Minister of the Crown makes a statement that he will bring down papers before a certain hour, that statement has usually been accepted. These goods have been purchased and they have to be paid for. I will bring down the particulars this afternoon if my officers can do it, and I think they can. I will bring down the price of salt and pepper and every item. I did not direct the making out of the memorandum I have read, my officers did it and they no doubt thought it was all the information required. I do think that after the statement I have made the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) should allow the item to pass.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Borden) was not on good ground when he takes the inference that because information on an important vote is insisted on there is a suspicion that he is dishonest. My hon. friend (Mr. Borden) knows his own honesty and if he has confidence in it he ought not to take that line of argument. This House has a perfect right to know even the price of salt. My hon. friend (Mr. Borden) says he has made a saving to the country; he has done it by private contract, and it is not a picayune thing for a member of Parliament to insist that information should be given. Who said the Minister did not deal with reputable firms? But is the Minister going to make that an excuse for bringing information down? Three weeks ago this item was postponed for information, but the Minister to-day has not given us any more information than he gave then.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not believe that in my whole experience in this House I have ever seen the matter pressed as this has been against the Minister. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) has a right to infer that there is some personal reason for this course.

Mr. FOSTER. Let me set that at rest at once. I say there is no personal consideration at all.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Why do you not accept what never has been refused before at the request of a Minister?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My hon. friend (Mr. Borden) explicitly gave the reasons why he acted as he did, and he gave the names of every article and the price.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Why, the other night the Minister read a long memorandum and the House asked him to dispense with the reading of it. There could be no suggestion that he was refusing information. He had the documents there and was willing and anxious to give the facts. He made the most frank and explicit explanation of the whole matter. I think this is not fair treatment of the Minister; because, as every hon. member of the House knows, it has been usual when good general information has been given, whether satisfactory or not, for the items to be passed. Further the hon. Minister said that if any member of the House wished more definite information he would bring down in detail the facts regarding every purchase. I do not see on what ground there can be any dissatisfaction.

Mr. FOSTER. I will tell you what I will agree to, we will allow this to pass on the condition we have full information on concurrence and be allowed to discuss it the same as in committee.

Mr. SPROULE. Before we leave this, I desire to say a word in answer to the Minister. The hon. gentleman said that he never saw an item passed in this way in this House before. We have been passing items of this nature the whole session and asking for information, and we have been refused it. The Minister says that we have passed hundreds of thousands of dollars on the same principle. So we have. But we have entered our protest on every occasion against doing so; we have asked for the information and have been refused. And it is because we have been so systematically refused that we say that the principle was a bad one and one which should not be followed. The Minister suggests that we should have a discussion now, and he will bring down the information afterwards. Did he think for a moment how absurd that must seem? How can we intelligently discuss the question without the information? First, he says, commit the country to the expenditure and discuss the matter afterwards.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) allow me. Surely he will admit that when detailed information is wanted it is generally got through the Public Accounts Committee. It is not usual to bring down invoices and every detail here.

Mr. SPROULE. Such information has been brought before the House, having been asked for especially where, in a large item like this, no contract has been given, the thing having been done by private bargain, under circumstances which justify, to my mind, suspicion that something is wrong.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. What does the hon. gentleman mean by that—"circumstances that justify suspicion"—what does he mean?

Mr. SPROULE. I mean what I say. When the Minister gives a contract by private bargain and at prices above the normal prices, as we are told—

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That is not correct, Mr. Speaker: the prices were not above the normal prices, and when the hon. gentleman states so, he states something which is not true.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPROULE. I ask your ruling on that word, Mr. Speaker.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Then I will say that the hon. gentleman is stating that which is not correct. I have over and over again said that the prices are not above the normal, and I proved it by quoting prices in this House.

Mr. SPROULE. Do I understand that the Minister has withdrawn the objectionable language? It is quite true that the Minister quoted a price list, but men just as reputable as he, and just as intelligent as he, men engaged in that business and therefore acquainted with the prices, have also quoted figures to show that the prices he gave were high and that the goods could be purchased for less. Does not that justify suspicion? And when you have the additional fact that these contracts have been given without tender, without advertisement or invitation to those engaged in the trade, you have still more to justify suspicion. I repeat "surrounded by circumstances sufficient to justify suspicion," and I do not withdraw a word of it. It is important that we should have the information which I asked for weeks ago, but which the Minister promised to give us but did not give us.

Mr. HUGHES. In view of the fact that abnormally large estimates were brought down this session, some couple of months ago, I suggested that we should avoid a great deal of discussion in order that we might get to these estimates and criticise them properly. My suggestions were not acted upon, and we had hundreds of thousands of dollars voted for transport to the Yukon voted without any discussion, the items being rushed through at the close of the session. I have entered my protest against that kind of thing already this session. These are the matters that we should discuss. We have been hanging around here for a great part of the winter, all the spring and now well into summer, and yet we have had no opportunity to discuss these matters properly. There was one point I particularly wished to discuss, and that was the item of $800 a ton for transport into the Yukon country. I am glad that the leader of the Opposition has accepted the proposal of the Minister, and I hope the Minister will bring down full information on the subject.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) has any information at hand and will send it over, it will be gratefully received. The correspondence brought down with reference to transport is not clear; it does not appear on what ground an additional $200 or $250 is being paid to transport to the Grand Trunk.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The hon. gentleman will understand that we purchased the goods delivered at Vancouver and Seattle, with the exception of some 40 or 45 tons which we sent through ourselves. The price paid is $20 per ton.

Mr. FOSTER. Or is it not $25 a ton?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The original price named was $25 a ton. But I pointed out to the Grand Trunk people that the Canadian Pacific rate was $20, and I thought they should have reduced theirs to the same, and they agreed to do it.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. FOSTER. It appears that the hon. Minister asked the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific for transport, and the Canadian Pacific gave a price of $20 per ton, while the Grand Trunk, in the first place, put in a schedule of prices very much higher than $20 per ton. Then after having a Sunday conference with the hon. Minister in Montreal they sent a tender reducing it to $25 a ton, which price, so far as these papers show, they never reduced. But on the last day, when the Canadian Pacific Railway telegraphed to know—that was on the 12th April—if their tender was accepted, the reply was sent that the Minister had not yet decided. And yet, I find the contract was awarded to the Grand Trunk on that very same day. When my hon. friend had asked for tenders and received them, the tender of the Canadian Pacific being the lowest, why was not that accepted? Why did the Minister tell the Grand Trunk in the first place that their schedule of prices was too high, and when they offered a rate of $25 tell them that they were still $5 above the Canadian Pacific and get them to reduce it? Does the hon. gentleman think that is a fair way of awarding contracts after asking for tenders?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Our object in corresponding with them was simply to get transportation from the Pacific to a point in the Yukon. The hon. gentleman will also remember—a fact that I have stated several times—the goods purchased on this side were purchased delivered at Vancouver or Seattle, and we had no particular interest in the rate of freight charged—that was a matter for the contractors. But it happened that the transportation company on the Pacific with which we finally made our arrangement had connection with the Grand Trunk and Northern Pacific, and so far as we were concerned, we felt under obligations to give the Grand Trunk the only traffic we had the 40 or 45 tons. The hon. gentleman knows there are different classes of freight, and we found out the rate was $5 in excess. Still, it did not amount to much on only 45 tons. I asked the Grand Trunk to make their rate the same as Canadian Pacific, and they said they thought their rate was the same, but the Canadian Pacific had gone $5 below them and they were prepared to meet the Canadian Pacific. But so far as either road was concerned, we had no traffic of any consequence for the reason I have pointed out—that the greater part of the goods were delivered on the Pacific Coast.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend thinks that is a satisfactory statement now. He thinks that is the way to carry out a system of tender and contract—to ask two companies to tender, and when one tenders too high, to have a personal interview and get them to accept a lower rate—then tell them the tender of the other company, and show them that they are still too high and must come down. If the hon. Minister is willing to let it go at that, I am.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. In addition to that there is the fact that a portion of the freight was to be taken at Seattle, and I supposed the most direct way to get the goods to Seattle was over the Grand Trunk and Northern Pacific and that that portion of the freight taken on at Seattle was shipped in that way.

Mr. FOSTER. The company which takes the freight, in the end calls at Vancouver.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It does now. But the company insisted that one hundred tons of the freight should be taken on at Seattle.

Mr. FOSTER. Then why was not the Canadian Pacific asked to tender for the goods taken to Seattle? If you bound yourself to send that freight by an American port rather than a Canadian port, why not ask for the rate to Seattle?

Mr. EARLE. Any one in the freight business knows that Seattle is a common point.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. At the option of the ship.

Mr. EARLE. I have a letter here from a gentleman engaged for many years in shipping by large steamers. He, in quoting the prices to the Government for freight from the Pacific coast to Dawson, $275 a ton, dead weight, and ship's option, he claims, is about three times the rate that he quoted. Two thousand pounds of goods they call a ton, then take the ordinary goods by measurement, and they will measure three tons to one by weight, or somewhere in the neighbourhood, which would make their rates very much higher than the price he quoted. Here is what that gentleman says, and I presume this is information he gave to the hon. gentleman's officers:

We did receive an inquiry from the Government through Colonel Peters for a tender to carry some 200 tons of supplies for Dawson via the Yukon. We were then in a perfect position to handle the business, and we made a quotation of $275 per ton weight through to Dawson City, particularly pointing out at the time that in offering this as a weight proposition, we were giving an extremely good quotation, because, as these supplies would run as high as three tons measurement to one ton weight, which, at the market quotation of $200 per ton weight or measurement (ship's option), meant that we were quoting $275 against $600.

Of course the ship has the option in all cases, unless special arrangements are made, as in the case of dry goods, for example, they take the option of measurement, in all other cases they take it by weight. This gentleman says further:

Further, in case of the officials not being fully cognizant of the trend of these quotations, we made an alternative offer of $200 per ton, weight or measurement (ship's option). Our offer was not taken up.

Another gentleman writes who had not been applied to, and I think he was in a good position to have forwarded these goods by the 10th of June. The first steamer was advertised to leave on the 9th of June for the Yukon. It is something that I have gone into particularly, because I am a member of the Canadian Pacific Navigation Company who are building a steamer at St. Michael's for the Yukon trade. We had the matter investigated carefully last year, both as to the time of opening of the Yukon and character of the river, and we know pretty well who are building steamers, and what companies are in a position to carry freight. When I left the Pacific Coast I never heard of a transportation company of the name given here. I have information since that these boats do not belong to this company calling themselves a transportation company, they belong to another company. There are a great many little companies formed who call themselves transportation companies, but which are adventurers and speculators, and these people were not in a position at the time these negotiations were made to handle the goods in any shape or form. They had no steamers, while other people had steamers and were actually engaged in transportation on that line, and were building steamers for the Yukon River. In fact, there were two or three built in Toronto by Mr. Bertram, a member of this House, and he has told me that these vessels had been shipped some time ago, and would be ready to go up as soon as it was possible to put them on the river. Another gentleman writes :

The Dominion Government did not make any inquiry from me with regard to carrying 250 tons of supplies for the North-west Mounted Police into the Yukon. I should have been very glad to carry this amount and to have delivered it at Fort Selkirk for $300 a ton, I am despatching, the ocean steamer "Tordenskjold," with two of my river boats, on the 9th of June.

His boats have all sailed, and I have been informed, I do not say it is information I can vouch for, that the Boston Alaska Company was not in a position to get out these goods at the time they intended. This gentleman continues :

The river boats will proceed to Dawson, Fort Selkirk and Teslin Lake, and will thereafter run upon the station between Teslin Lake and Dawson City.

Yours truly,

(Sgd. H. MAITLAND KERSEY.

He represents the Canadian Development Company. Anybody on the coast, the officer of the department, or Major Peters, must have known that it was possible to get a Canadian company to carry these goods as low as an American company. There are a number of them on the river, they are in an equally good position to do the work, and as to giving a guarantee to get to Selkirk. But there is no steamboat company which would give a guarantee to get to Selkirk, neither has this company given such a guarantee. This is a contract which means nothing. If a boy of mine 10 years of age drew up a contract like that, I should feel very much like spanking him. It means simply nothing. If it were read to the House any man who is accustomed to documents of that kind could see that it means nothing. There is no assurance that the contract will be carried out, and there is no penalty attached to a failure. Speaking of the purchase of goods, I do feel a little warmly upon that subject. The hon. gentleman speaks of the merchants of the Pacific Coast having had a large share of the trade. I claim that they are entitled to the bulk of it, and if they got it all, it would not be too much to expect. We were the first to take steps to divert the trade of the Yukon to Canada. When the excitement broke out last fall there was not a dollar's worth of trade being done in the Dominion of Canada with the Yukon, it was all being done in Seattle and the United States coast cities. We went to work as individuals and spent at least $75,000 on the Pacific Coast in advertising, and trying to divert trade to our ports and to Canada, because as soon as our trade was opened up we felt that all Canada was going to get a share of it. The mills from one end of Canada to the other started up in making goods specially adapted to that trade, even down as far as New Brunswick, where mills began making a special kind of cloth. We were the natural distributors for the eastern people. They talk of the trade being all for our benefit. It is a perfect myth. There were the shoe manufacturers, the makers of rubber boots, snowshoes, and everything else in that line, who immediately felt the benefit, and it was all brought about by the efforts of the merchants on the Pacific Coast, by their pluck and perseverance. We sent agents all through the country, as well as to Great Britain and Australia, we sent out circulars, and folders, and maps, much in excess of anything ever done by this Government, not excepting the celebrated book published by Hunter, Rose & Co. By these means we diverted a great portion of the trade to the coast, as is well known. The immigration that was taking place came almost exclusively from the United States, and you will understand the difficulty there was in getting them to call for supplies on our coast. We had to fight the Pacific Coast Steamship Company (who were offering to tender for the transportation of those goods that are going out now). They were our greatest enemies. They had their emissaries in Washington trying to induce the Government to enforce such customs laws as would prevent us landing goods at Skagway or Dyea. Our people carried on this fight without any assistance from Canada, and we succeeded in diverting trade to our cities, to a great extent. Of course eastern Canada is getting their share of it. I think it is most unfortunate that our people, at any rate, did not have an opportunity to share in any benefits that were derived from the trade of the Yukon country. Now, we have competition from the east in every line, but in business of this kind we are in a good position to compete, and I think in all fairness we should have an opportunity. In this case the Minister has given these orders to two reputable houses, as he says. But there are many other houses just as reputable as Messrs. Bate & Co., and the Hudson Bay Co.

Mr. EARLE.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. We could not accommodate all of them.

Mr. EARLE. You could have divided it up, or have given them a show. I am speaking for British Columbia, and I feel that we were entitled to a show above all others in this country. We have spent money, we are still spending it, and I do not think that Messrs. Bate & Co. ever contributed one dollar to assist in diverting trade to the Canadian cities on the coast, and if we do not get that trade, it will go to the American cities. In asking for information in regard to this matter, I do not attribute any unfair motives to the Minister, but I must say that his action looks something like favouritism, and there is a possibility of things being not quite square. With regard to the transportation of these goods, that seems to have been done on the principle that there was to be no competition. Take the case cited by the hon. member for York in regard to freight. If a private individual conducted tenders in that way, it would not be possible for him to get anybody to tender a second time. Here is a company who tendered the first time at a much lower price than has been awarded in the contract. It is a most unfair thing, in respect to tenders, to hawk the lowest tender around trying to get some of your friends to do it at the same price. That is a most dishonourable thing, and a man who would do it in his private business, would be looked upon as dishonourable, and no respectable contractor would think of sending him a tender the second time. Now I sincerely hope that the Minister, when he gets this information in the afternoon, will give us something that is really information, because what we have now only gives the prices of a few goods, it does not even say where they are delivered. The other day I made some remarks about the flour furnished in this contract. I find the flour furnished is not of the first grade, it is second grade, as I suspected the other day from the price. I would like very much to see what this large amount of $14,000 is composed of. I presume these are prices delivered on the coast.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. All prices delivered on the coast. The freight was negotiated by the contractors themselves.

Mr. EARLE. Then these negotiations seem all to have gone through the department.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. As I explained to the member for York, they refer simply to the small quantity of stuff that was sent by the Government from the east, stuff that was in stock. Everything included in that list means delivered on the other side.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the hon. gentleman agree with the view of the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Earle) ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That was a matter under discussion, and I had to defer to men who possessed large experience. I took the agreement to Mr. White, of the North-west Mounted Police, and asked him what he thought of it. He showed me agreements or terms which he had made with the North-American Transportation Company corresponding to the arrangement made with this company, and I was informed that that was the usual arrangement. Further, I was told that the difference in this class of goods would not be very great. In the case of bulky goods, no doubt it would increase the price, but not in the case of heavy goods. If there is any addition to the number of tons, if it should turn out to be more than 250 tons to be paid for, the difference would be very slight indeed. We have sent officers to watch the weighing of the freight and to carefully guard the Government's interest and see that we receive fair play. We have in addition the bulk of the goods when on the cars. We took pains to consult the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway, which latter corporation recommended the company with whom we have made the bargain—the Hudson Bay Company and the North American Trading Company were also asked to tender. I believe the company with which we made the bargain is a sound one.

Mr. CLARKE. Who constitute the company ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Their headquarters are at Boston. Mr. McNaught is the president or vice-president, and Mr. Grosse is the agent who came here.

Mr. EARLE. Mr. McNaught was at one time. I do not know whether he is to-day, a very prominent official in the Northern Pacific Railway Company.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. We have the assurance of Dunn &

Co., of Boston, that the company is reliable and able to carry out the contract. It is true that Mr. Kersey has offered recently to carry freight to Fort Selkirk, but it is not correct that he had no opportunity to make an offer at an earlier period. His agent was constantly in communication with my department in regard to carrying freight.

Mr. EARLE. That has not been shown by the papers.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. He knew we were going to send goods to the Yukon. We endeavoured to make an arrangement with the North American Company, but we were unable to do so, and so we entered into an arrangement with the present company, which I have every confidence will be satisfactory.

To pay the Halifax Banking Company, assignee of the Nova Scotia Central Railway Company, balance of amount earned and unpaid of sum voted by 56 Vic., chap. 2, in aid of the construction of this road, payment having been delayed owing to a dispute as to who should receive the money..... $4,500

Mr. MILLS. Last session I asked whether there was still a balance on subsidy due to the Nova Scotia Central Railway Company, and I think the Minister of Railways replied that there was a balance of $4,500 still remaining due; that as it had been earned, it would not lapse, and that so far as he knew then, he was prepared to adhere to the opinion given by the late Sir John Thompson. If that answer is correct, I should like to know why this item appears in the estimate.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I have some knowledge of this subject, but I am not sure that it will prove sufficient to satisfy the hon. gentleman. This is a case in which a balance of subsidy was due to the Nova Scotia Central Railway Company, amounting to $4,500. There arose a question some years ago as to the person who was entitled to receive this subsidy, the company having got into difficulties. In 1893, a balance of $4,500 was revoted, and as revoted it was decided that it should be paid, not to the company, but to the persons entitled to receive it. There are several interests in this matter. In the first place, there is the company; in the second place, there is the Halifax Banking Company, which was interested; in the third place, there is F. B. Wade, who afterwards became the receiver and liquidator of the company, and in the fourth place, there were a number of unsatisfied creditors. The late Minister of Justice, Sir John Thompson, after going over the matter very thoroughly, gave an opinion that the Halifax Banking Company was entitled to receive this subsidy, but he thought it might properly be held for an accounting in the Supreme Court as between the company, the bank and all parties interested. The Halifax Banking Company claimed, by reason of a power of attorney. James Eisenhauer and F. B. Wade financed the road. They provided certain moneys, and obtained those moneys on their credit at the Halifax Bank, and among the bank's securities was a power of attorney from the company to draw the Dominion subsidy, and it did draw the subsidy until towards the end. Sir John Thompson decided that the party entitled to the money was the Halifax Banking Company, adding that it would be well to reserve payment a sufficient time for an accounting between the company and the bank. It does not appear that any accounting has taken place between the company and the bank. There has been an accounting as between Mr. Wade, as receiver of the company, and the company itself, as I am informed, although I do not find any reference to an accounting. All the equities are in favour of the Halifax Bank. If the amount were a large one, $40,000 or $50,000 instead of $4,500, it might be worth while to go behind the claim of the bank and consider the claims of other creditors, but the present amount of $4,500 would be wholly expended in endeavouring to find out who was the proper party and entitled to the money. The bank advanced money on the power of attorney. The company attempted to revoke that power of attorney; but in view of all the circumstances, they were not allowed to revoke it. In view of those facts, and that the claim is an old one and should be adjusted, and taking a broad and equitable view of the whole transaction as to the payment of the money, I think the banking company are entitled to it. That was the view taken by the Minister of Railways; but the Auditor General held that further parliamentary authority should be obtained, and therefore this item is put in the Estimates for the payment of the money to the Halifax Banking Company. As regards the railway company itself, it never was a very substantial company, it was largely a paper company. At the early stages there was some financial strength, but for a very long time the company was not in a sound condition. The road has been taken over by the bank and is owned by it, although it now runs under the name of the Central Railway. As to the company, it cannot establish any claim to the money. As regards the creditors, the amount is so insignificant that any attempt to divide it among them would mean the waste of the money in legal expenses. The Halifax Bank is entitled equitably, and I hope it will be found legally, to this money. Mr. Wade at one time filed a personal claim against the company for $20,000. Taking all the circumstances into account, Parliament could not do better than pay the amount to the Halifax Banking Company. We can go into concurrence and then my hon. friend will have an opportunity of discussing it.

Mr. BORDEN (King's).

Mr. MILLS. I am not here to talk. I want to convince the hon. gentleman that he is wrong.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Though the item should pass, yet if my hon. friend (Mr. Mills) can convince me it ought not to be paid, then it will not be paid.

Mr. MILLS. I can say what I have to say in a very few minutes. I agree with the facts substantially as they were stated by the Finance Minister. A vote was passed in this House for this money to be paid to the Nova Scotia Central Railway at first, and the company in order to finance their road entered into an arrangement with Wade & Eisenhauer, and Mr. Eisenhauer was the man to whom the Halifax Banking Company really looked for the payment of the advances made by them, and the mortgage that was placed upon the road at that time specially provides that these subsidies are excepted. Mr. Wade was put in as receiver under that mortgage, and there has been an accounting so far as that mortgage is concerned, but there has been no accounting as was stated by the Minister of Finance, as between Mr. Wade or Mr. Wade and Eisenhauer.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Mr. Wade acted in the capacity of receiver and I believe there was an accounting in that capacity.

Mr. MILLS. I think, perhaps, there was. There must of necessity in the ordinary legal course have been an accounting before the road could be taken over. The accounting referred to in the decision of Sir John Thompson is between Wade & Eisenhauer and the Halifax Banking Company on the one hand, and the railway company on the other. Every effort has been made to get that accounting. Mr. Wade has that entirely in his possession and he has defied the company with reference to that. It is true the company have not been very substantial.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That would not be a good reason for longer withholding the money from the Banking Company which is not in fault.

Mr. MILLS. I am stating that the Banking Company is not in fault, and I know that the Banking Company would be willing to settle this matter if they could get Mr. Wade to do so. It is not the Halifax Banking Company that is making this objection but it is Mr. Wade.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not at all.

Mr. MILLS. They may be used by Mr. Wade.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have correspondence from the Halifax Banking Company demanding the money, but what their relations are with Mr. Wade I do not know.

Mr. MILLS. The Halifax Banking Company was on the eve of settling this but Mr. Wade said: No; the Liberals are in power and I have influence with the Liberal Government and I can get this for the Halifax Banking Company in spite of anything that may be alleged against it. That is the contention. Let us come out and speak plainly with reference to this. Every one knows that is the understanding.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know it.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Wade says he has a pull on the Government with reference to this, notwithstanding the opinion given by Sir John Thompson, and he says he is going to exercise that pull and to endeavour to blot out the opinion of Sir John Thompson with reference to this matter. I do not wish to beat about the bush and these are the plain facts. The resolution that was put upon the Statute-book first, voted a subsidy to the Nova Scotia Central Railway. When this balance of subsidy was about lapsing, in this Parliament in 1893—and the discussion on it is spread on the pages of "Hansard"—the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) at that time advocated the contention of Mr. Wade, and he had the motion amended in this way. That instead of having it paid directly to the Nova Scotia Central Railway, it would read:

To the Nova Scotia Central Railway Company, or to such person or persons or company as in the opinion of the Minister or acting Minister of Justice are entitled to the sum.

Sir Louis Davies had that amendment put in in 1893, and why are you going back on that amendment now? I am suggesting that that very same thing be done now.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Is it to stand there for ever?

Mr. FOSTER. No, the Minister of Justice would decide that.

Mr. MILLS. The reason why an action for accounting has not been made before was because I could not find Mr. Stearns, the president. He gave this to me to look after for him when he was living in Middleton, but he got sick and went away and I could not find his address. Since I came to this session he has written me and I have his address now: it is Bridgeport, Conn., and he has instructed me to go on with reference to this accounting. The reason Mr. Stearns' address could not be found was because all correspondence was kept from him for something like nine months or a year, he being so very ill. I had forgotten the length of time exactly, but it was long enough to keep me from bringing Mr. Wade or the Halifax Banking Company to an accounting. All we want is an accounting. We contend that Mr. Wade has been paid time and again over and above everything, and if Mr. Eisenhower were alive he would tell you so because he explained personally to me that Mr. Wade had gobbled up the whole thing and Mr. Wade was the man who got Mr. Eisenhower into the trap. All that I ask is—and it is a reasonable request and it is only what the late Government did at the instance of the present Minister of Marine—all that I ask is that the matter should be left as it is and the opinion of Sir John Thompson adhered to. I will guarantee that we will have that matter before the courts inside of three months and have it settled if Sir John Thompson's opinion is adhered to. It is absurd that we in this Parliament should be asked to legislate on what the courts are instituted to determine, and Sir John Thompson acted extremely fairly with reference to that matter.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The suggestion of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mills) does not appear to me to be unreasonable, and we can insert in the item, "subject to its being settled within three months."

Mr. MILLS. I cannot say that it will be settled, but I will guarantee that within three months an action will be entered for an accounting.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They were entitled under that opinion of Sir John Thompson to demand an accounting. They have not done so, and my hon. friend tells us that the president of the company went away and could not be found; which is a good reason to show that the company had not a substantial interest in it.

Mr. MILLS. That is a very unfair argument.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not think so. It never could have been Sir John Thompson's opinion that this thing was to be hung up for years and the proper persons kept out of the money, because the president of the company could not be found. There are people all over Nova Scotia who are clamouring for this money, and the bank claims and the Wade claims ought to be settled and wiped out of the business of Canada. I agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Blair) that we might put in a qualification that this be subject to an accounting within three or four months or any reasonable length of time.

Mr. MILLS. Very well, I am willing to say six months.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The bank is not going to suffer by that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not see that the bank or anybody else suffers. If it gets any money over what it is entitled to it can be recovered.

Mr. MILLS. But is not this a bad precedent?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No. We are simply paying this money to the corporation that has authority from the original contractor to receive the money under a power of attorney, and that was the opinion of the late Sir John Thompson.

Mr. MILLS. Not exactly.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are simply giving the money to the corporation which had authority from the contracting company to receive it and which is bound to account to the contracting company if it gets one dollar more than is due.

Mr. FOSTER. Let us put in the provision with reference to giving six months for the accounting before the Supreme Court.

Mr. KAULBACH. I regret I can not concur with the views expressed by the hon. Minister of Finance. The appropriation as respects the Nova Scotia Central Railway as shown in this item of the Estimates, reads as follows:—

To pay the Halifax Banking Company, assignee of the Nova Scotia Central Railway Company, balance of amount earned and unpaid of sum voted by 56 Vic., chap. 2, in aid of the construction of this road, payment having been delayed owing to a dispute as to who should receive the money, $4,500.

Now, I beg to inform the hon. Minister of Railways, and the Government, that in my opinion, and I consider I am right, the Halifax Banking Company is not entitled to this money equitably, the only parties entitled to it are the employees of the company—the contractors and the labourers who gave their honest toil or labour on the road, and they having done so, are entitled to their honest pay.

I have always held, and I contend I am right, that in the construction of railways, as well as any other works subsidized by Government, there should be protection given to the labourer who gives his honest toil or labour on the works. If a contractor agrees to construct, and he sublets the work. I say, in justice to the employee so engaged, they should have a right to a lien on the work and a claim on the Government, without any prejudice or any intervention of the contractor or company, or sub-contractor until their labour is paid, but not to exceed in the aggregate the amount of subsidy originally granted, less the material employed in such construction.

I ask, by what right is the Halifax Banking Company entitled to this money? This bank, as security for the money they advanced took a first lien upon the railway known as the "Nova Scotia Central," together with all the equipments of said road. and I contend the company now, at this late hour, have no claim upon this money, they having been preferred in the first instance having as security the railway as well as the unpaid labour of the men, and certainly and I will go so far as to say legally I feel the bank is not entitled to this money, as it would be giving the Banking Company the pay a second time. All I can do is to make my honest protest against this money being appropriated in this way, and to say that as the friend of the poor workingman, the right thing for the Government to do is to pay the money to the employees pro rata and not to the bank.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Kaulbach) would propose any method whereby the creditors might get the money, I could see more force in his remarks. But when he simply proposes that we shall do nothing, he does not help the creditors. I do not agree that the Halifax Banking Company has not paid this money. They advanced the money, and will be out of pocket even if they receive this amount. It is no answer to say that they have the property, for in this they have not a property that is a source of revenue, but it is a source of loss. Therefore, the fact of their holding the property should not be used to their disadvantage. If my hon. friend is going to pay any of the persons who have claims, he must pay them all; and the moment he attempts that, this $4,500 is dissipated into a few shillings apiece.

Mr. KAULBACH. I propose that in these payments the employees should have priority.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Employees of what?

Mr. KAULBACH. The men who constructed the road, without whose labour there would have been no road. The Banking Company having taken possession and sold out the property, they have acquired the results of the labour of these people, and now they want the money as well.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My recollection is that in the later stages of this business, whatever may have happened before, the labour was all paid for. Ever since Messrs. Wade & Eisenhauer and the Halifax Banking Company provided the money, this has been done. I do not think there is a penny due for labour within the last ten years of this concern's history.

Mr. KAULBACH. But the labour has not been paid for that constructed the road, and there never would have been a railway but for the labour of these people.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Is my hon. friend (Mr. Kaulbach) referring to the labourers at the time previous to the Halifax Bank's time? If so, all that is dead and gone. There was a settlement and moneys were paid. Ever since Mr. Wade and Mr. Eisenhauer and the Halifax Banking Company advanced money, there has been no such claim left unpaid.

Mr. KAULBACH. I am sure the hon. gentleman is mistaken.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I can tell my hon. friend that both in my capacity as a Minister here and in my capacity as a Minister in Nova Scotia, I have had these things before me, and I have no recollection of any claim being put in for labour employed in the course of construction.

Mr. KAULBACH. I am sure that Mr. Eisenhauer and Mr. Wade and all the parties interested in the road know that my statement is a correct one. Why, the name of the claimants for the payment of these bills is legion.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). What good would this $4,500 do them?

Mr. KAULBACH. It would show that the Government, on their part are willing that these parties should receive their pay. There is no justice in paying banking corporations who have already received the proceeds of the people's labour, while these labourers themselves have received nothing.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I hope my hon. friend (Mr. Kaulbach) will not allow that statement to go on record. I state, and I think I know the facts, that there are not any unpaid bills for labour since the money was advanced by Messrs. Wade & Eisenhauer and the Halifax Banking Company, but that every dollar of labour that went into the road since then was paid for. There was some question of supplies toward the end of construction, and after the road was finished there were claims arising out of its operation; but that did not touch the subsidy. I think my hon. friend is mistaken when he says that there are labourers' claims now.

Mr. KAULBACH. I am strongly impressed with the view I have placed on record here.

Mr. FOSTER. I think perhaps we had better get out of the committee and get clear of the matter in the meantime. Then it can be taken up on concurrence, and I think we can engage that there shall not be very much discussion.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I am willing to say that the amount will be withheld, if my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) desires it, for the term of six months, in order to afford the parties interested an opportunity to have their account considered and to have it determined whether the money should be paid to the Nova Scotia Central Railway Company or to the Halifax Bank.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. And in that case if it is not payable to the Halifax Bank under the accounting, we will not pay it at all.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will do that—if the result of the accounting is that the amount is not properly coming to the Halifax Bank, it will not be paid at all.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is the best way.

Mr. MILLS. What I propose, and it is only agreeing to what the late Government agreed to at the suggestion of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This amounts to the same thing.

Mr. MILLS. No, my proposition is—I cannot on the spur of the moment give the wording of the resolution, but I think an item might be framed so as to carry out the idea—that the opinion of the late Minister of Justice in this matter should be acted upon, and let it stand, say for four months, and then if the accounting has not taken place, let the money be paid over to the Halifax Bank.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. Minister (Mr. Blair) gives you a formal offer to that effect.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mills) has one thing in mind and I have another. Mine is a totally distinct proposition. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Mills) desires me to engage that the view suggested by the late Sir John Thompson should be accepted, that in a certain eventuality the amounts to be paid to these solicitors, that is for certain purposes, should be dealt with. I do not wish to be drawn into any controversy as between the solicitors or to determine whether they are entitled to the money or not. I simply want to agree, if my hon. friend will accept it, that the amount shall remain in the treasury, in the meantime until an accounting takes place in a reasonable time. Then if the Banking Company is not entitled to be paid, it shall not be paid.

Mr. MILLS. That seems fair as far as it goes. Then I shall have to explain the reasons why I would like to have the other part of Sir John Thompson's opinion agreed to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. You will be in no worse position than if there was no vote. The money will remain in the treasury.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He may satisfy us that we should ask for the vote to be paid in the direction he suggests.

Mr. MILLS. This was done by the late Government at the suggestion of the other side. I cannot see why it cannot be carried out.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I foresee no end of trouble in it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The Minister's statement is a fair one and ought to be accepted.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The hon. gentleman from Annapolis (Mr. Mills) discussed the matter in this House in 1893. His statement is on record, he went over the whole case then, and he could not make a clearer or fuller statement than he made at that time.

Mr. KAULBACH. Would it not be well, in order to relieve the Government of the onus and also keep the matter out of the courts and prevent the lawyers from getting this amount to themselves and the poor unfortunate claimants getting nothing, to appoint a party who could have sufficient intelligence to weigh these matters as well as a lawyer, or that each party could have their lawyers and have a third party to make up an agreement.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend would allow me—suppose you just leave it to be paid on the report of the Minister of Justice. He is a third man and also, in a sense, a representative of both.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No more than I am.

Mr. FOSTER. In one way. But if we constitute him, as it were, the arbitrator and then pay upon his advisement—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is not a matter of arbitration; it is a matter for the courts. These parties have had four years to have this accounting, and they have not done it. Now the Minister says he will give them further time—that is equivalent to an engagement by an Act of Parliament—and that the money shall not be paid before six months, and if, in the meantime, they get an accounting showing that the Halifax Banking Company has no right to the money, the money will not be paid at all, and then we shall come back to Parliament to deal with the matter further.

Mr. KAULBACH. I do not think that the hon. gentleman can say that accounts have not been submitted; some have been put in, but they have not been recognized.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, what I said was that no accounts for labour at the latter stage of the affair were due, but that there were some supply accounts arising in the later years.

Mr. MILLS. I do not wish to prolong the discussion, but if I had time, I think I could give very substantial reasons why the course proposed by the late Sir John Thompson should be carried out, and I think it is very unfair that the matter should be dealt with as suggested and not in accordance with Sir John Thompson's decision. It is taking upon ourselves the adjudication of a matter that should be adjudicated before the courts.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, we are not adjudicating anything.

Mr. MILLS. Then what is the proposition?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What I understand was asked to be agreed to is this: Sir John Thompson decided that this was due to the Halifax Banking Company, but the railway company claimed that they had settled with the Halifax Banking Company. Therefore, this will be held open long enough to secure an accounting. Years have passed and no accounting has been given although my hon. friend (Mr. Mills) says he could get an accounting at once.

Mr. MILLS. No, what I said was that I am prepared to enforce an accounting. That accounting is all in the hands of the other side. Mr. Wade has it in his own hands entirely.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Mills) said that he was prepared to get an accounting in three months. We are ready to allow him six months, and then if the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia determines that the Halifax Banking Company is not entitled to the money, the money will not be paid.

Mr. KAULBACH. I ask that instead of this, the item be allowed to stand over until next session.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Carried.

Mr. FOSTER. On the understanding stated by the Minister of Finance.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals authorized it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

The committee rose, and reported.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I ought to have said that I asked the Chairman to substitute the "Attorney of the Halifax Banking Company" instead of the "Assignee of the Halifax Banking Company."

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 1.45 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Second Sitting.

SATURDAY, 11th June, 1898.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

PROROGATION.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have received the following communication from the secretary of His Excellency the Governor General:—

His Excellency will proceed to the Senate Chamber to prorogue the session of the Dominion Parliament on Monday, the 13th instant, at 3 o'clock p.m.

NOVA SCOTIA SOUTHERN RAILWAY.

Mr. KAULBACH. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I do not see the Minister of Railways and Canals in his seat, but I have written a letter to him asking for a renewal of the subsidy for the railway known as the Nova Scotia Southern Railway, also for a grant this year for the extension of that road from New Germany to Halifax. The proposed branch is from Shelburne to New Germany, and thence to Halifax direct, touching at several points on the line.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). It is not the policy of the Government to bring down any railway subsidies this session. This is one of many cases that have been presented to the Minister of Railways and Canals. I can assure the hon. gentleman of my earnest desire that his wishes should be carried out, but it is not a matter in which the Government are in a position to make any announcement at present.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

The House proceeded to consider resolutions adopted in Committee of Supply 20th April last.

Civil Government—

Department of Customs..... $38,750

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). I move that that be reduced by $1,750.

Mr. CLARKE. I would like to draw the attention of the Minister of Customs to a statement which appeared in the Toronto "News" yesterday respecting important changes which are to be made in the staff of the customs-house at Toronto. I will read the paragraph, and I would be obliged to the hon. gentleman if he would inform me as to the nature of the changes:

In political circles there are rumours of many changes to be made in the staff at the Toronto customs-house. The changes, it is expected, will take place at the beginning of the fiscal year, and will take the form of superannuations, four or five of the old officers who have served the allotted term in the employ of the Government and who are now at an age where it is necessary to dispense with their services, will be placed on the list of pensioners.

Workers of the Government who have been waiting patiently for their reward, are hustling around among their friends to receive the appointments.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I am at a loss to know how a report like that could have originated. We have not contemplated definitely any changes there except, perhaps, in the case of a very few officers who may be entitled, in our judgment, to an advanced salary or something of that kind.

Mr. CLARKE. Would the Minister give me the names of the officers whom he intends to superannuate?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We do not intend to superannuate any.

Resolutions read the second time and concurred in.

River Ottawa—Improvement of steam-boat channel, &c..... $7,200

Mr. POUPORE. I ask the Minister of Public Works in regard to repairs necessary to Portage du Fort bridge. This matter was brought to the attention of the Minister some time ago. The answer of the Minister was that the Government had transferred to the municipalities concerned the bridge in question. The position of the matter is this. It is true that such action was taken by the Government some years ago whereby they endeavoured to place the responsibility on the municipalities which the bridge connects, the one in Ontario and the other in Quebec. The municipalities never accepted the transfer of the responsibility from the Government, for the reason that they were unable to maintain so expensive a structure. The municipality in Quebec with which that bridge connects is Portage du Fort, a village of small proportions. In order to reach the main bridge it is necessary to have an approach bridge. Portage du Fort issued bonds to raise sufficient money with which to construct such approach bridge. This is a very heavy load for that municipality to bear, without being called upon to contribute anything to the main structure across the Ottawa River. The Government, after having taken the action to which I have referred, seeing the injustice done to the municipality, afterwards did work on that structure from time to time as it became necessary. They saw it was necessary again to come to the rescue of the structure, otherwise it would fall into the river. In 1870, the Dominion Government constructed a bridge on condition that the local legislatures of Ontario and Quebec would between them contribute half the cost. Since that date the bridge has been repaired on several occasions, and these two provincial governments have contributed in the same proportion towards the repairs, the Federal Government always contributing half the cost. During the last session of the Ontario legislature a sum of $2,000 was voted for repairs to the bridge, and we obtained a similar sum from the Quebec legislature, the condition being that the Government of Canada would contribute as before. I, together with a deputation, waited on the Minister of Public Works and asked him to place a sum in the Estimates to make the necessary repairs. This is the first interprovincial bridge between Ontario and Quebec for a distance of 120 miles, and it is therefore a work not only of importance to the province, but to the Dominion. I cannot understand why the Minister of Public Works has persistently refused to put a sum in the Estimates to keep that structure in use. The deplorable fact is that the provincial governments of Ontario and Quebec have granted each $1,000, in the expectation that the Federal Government would contribute $4,000. All I ask, the Minister, and I am not alone in making this request, for it is also made to the Minister by the hon. member for North Renfrew and others, is that some grant be made in order to enable repairs to be proceeded with. All I ask the Minister of Public Works to do is to put in the estimates $2,000. If we can get that in addition to what has been voted by the local governments, we can keep that bridge alive for the next few years. We think it is reasonable that the Federal Government should do this in view of the fact that the Federal Government has gone to work and on two different occasions spent considerable sums of money on that bridge. If the Federal Government had done this in the past there is no reason why it should not continue in the same line, more especially as the amount we ask is so small. Before concurrence in this item I again appeal to the Minister of Public Works to consider the situation. It is not a political matter; it is in the interests of the whole community regardless of politics, and I will ask the Minister (Mr. Tarte) to lend a little of his good will in the matter. Indeed, I know he is inclined to be generous; I may say that he has treated me very fairly in some matters, and I would ask him to come to our rescue in this matter which affects the provinces both of Quebec and Ontario.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. About thirty years ago that bridge was constructed by the Dominion Government with the aid of the two local governments, and ten years ago the bridge was transferred to the municipal authorities. A proclamation was issued to that effect, but whether it was necessary or not for the municipal authorities to accept that bridge I am not prepared to say. I remind my friend that this proclamation was issued with the authority of the Department of Justice. It is perfectly true that since that transfer has been made the Federal Government, through political pressure I have no doubt, has spent money on that bridge, but that does not prove that the bridge has to be always kept up by Federal authorities. It is purely a provincial and municipal bridge and for the life of me I cannot understand how two provincial governments like Ontario and Quebec cannot take care of their own bridges.

Mr. POUPORE. Will the Minister (Mr. Tarte) excuse me a moment. One reason why I and others think the Federal Government should come to the assistance of the municipal authorities and the local governments, is because the Federal Government controls the Ottawa River entirely, and derives revenue from it to a great extent, and the construction of that bridge was made more expensive because of the improvements made in the river by the Federal authorities. The revenue of the Dominion Government is greater because of these improvements.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). And the recent decision of the Privy Council has to be considered by the Government in connection with that matter.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend (Mr. Poupore) knows all about it as well as I do. He is now trying to make a little bit of politics.

Mr. POUPORE. I beg your pardon ; I certainly am not.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Well, it is his right to do so, but at the same time I am sure the House will agree with me that we cannot stand by the principle that the Federal Government will take care of all these bridges.

Mr. POUPORE. But this is not an ordinary case—

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Poupore) has already spoken.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In the case not only of an interprovincial bridge, but of an international bridge further east, the Government did not contribute a cent, and the cost had to be borne by the province of New Brunswick, which was the province interested in the matter.

Mr. MACKIE. This is one of two bridges of interprovincial importance which the Government built, between the province of Quebec and Ontario. The Minister of Public Works claims that they were handed over to the municipalities, but the municipalities claim that they never took possession of them. We claim that the Dominion Government should look after this bridge, and I believe they have a right to do so. It will not take much money now to repair the bridge, but if it is allowed to go on as it is, it will take a great deal more money, and I believe the Minister of Public Works should see to the matter at once.

Mr. FOSTER. Surely the Minister of Public Works will answer that appeal.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think I have answered that fairly already.

Bridge across the Sackatchewan at Edmonton $ 25,000

Mr. DAVIN. Before this is concurred in, I wish to call attention to some telegrams with reference to this bridge. Tenders were to be sent to the department by August 6th, 1897. The specifications called for the work to be completed by the 15th November, 1897, under a penalty of $50 per day. On August 2nd, 1897, Messrs. Alford and Pringle wired the chief engineer, Mr. Louis Coste, as follows :—

Kindly wire, at our expense, if specifications piers Edmonton bridge, stating Nov. 15th, 1897, for completion are correct, and if correct will Government insist on so early a date for completion. Know locality, want to tender, but impossible to complete work in time specified.

ALFORD & PRINGLE.

The answer from Mr. Louis Coste was to the effect that the specifications would be adhered to, and that the time limit was sufficient to do the work in. Under the circumstances, Alford & Pringle declined to tender, but if more time had been allowed, 25 per cent could have been saved on the cost. A calculation of the cost of the work, as it is going on now, is placed before me by a competent person, and is as follows :—

Estimated cost of bulk sum in tender for Edmonton Bridge, if tenders had been invited in usual way :—

Clearing foundations	$ 109
4,200 feet pine, 12x12, at 22 cents.....	924
720 feet pine, 8x10, at 15 cents.....	108
3,500 lbs. iron bolts, at 6 cents.....	210
Lumber for scaffolding.....	450
184 yards of concrete in foundation at $10	1,840
1,216 yards ashlar masonry at $25.....	30,400
Rip-rap, 1,000 yards at $1.50.....	1,500
Total	$25,532

It will be seen that really $25 a yard is being paid for the concrete, although the specifications call for ashlar.

To provide for the amount required for surveys, examination of survey returns, printing of plans, &c..... $150,000

Mr. DAVIN. Before this is concurred in, I wish to read two sentences from a return :

Mr. WALLACE. I would like to make a few remarks on a matter that was brought up the other day. A question was asked the Minister of Public Works whether a Mr. J. B. Charleson, who was in his service, was in some way connected with the employment of men to work on the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. We understood the Minister of Public Works to say that it was a son of this man engaged by the Minister, and that so far as he knew, there was no connection between the employee in the Public Works Department and those who were engaged to employ and send men out to work on that railway. Now, I have the report of the commission who investigated these matters, and I find a complete denial of the statement made by the Minister of Public Works. This Charleson family, as I understand it, came up to Ottawa after the change of Government, and I presume on account of their valuable services, they came to get their reward, and they received their reward. This Mr. J. B. Charleson was engaged in the Public Works Department, and either the son or himself were provided with, or provided themselves with, in some way or other, a hardware store in Ottawa, and I presume they are furnishing a large portion of the hardware required by the Government; so that they are pretty well provided for. But not being satisfied with this, Mr. J. B. Charleson, while in the employ of the Government of Canada, undertook to engage men for the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. The result was that these men came in here. I presume a lot of them worked on the Western Block, or worked in various ways for the Government. They were asked to go out to the Crow's Nest Pass, and Mr. Charleson, a Government officer, engaged them. They supposed, not knowing all the intricacies of the business of the Government, that the Government were building the road; they knew, at least, that Mr. Charleson, an officer of the Government, was engaging them, and that presumably they would have, not as good a time perhaps as when working on the Western Block, but at any rate they would be under Government control, and the Government would see that the subjects of the country were not improperly treated. That was a very fair inference to make. But they were soon undeceived when they went out there. I have a letter from Nova Scotia, which I received last night, relating to the death of these two young men. It is a very distressing story, but I will not read it now. I will read that portion of the report referring to Mr. J. B. Charleson's connection with this matter:

Besides those hired for the company, Mr. Haney, upon requisitions, would help in procuring men for contractors. To that effect he appointed several agents; Mr. J. B. Charleson, at Ottawa; Mr. William McCreary, and later Mr. Calder, at Winnipeg; and Mr. Guertin, at Montreal. Mr. J. B. Charleson was appointed sole agent from Fort William east to Montreal. A first form of contract (form 277) was furnished.

Telegrams were sent by Mr. Haney to Mr. J. B. Charleson on the 17th of July, 1897, instructing him to hire 500 axemen at $1.50 a day, with the understanding that they should be charged $4 a week for board, and 6 cooks at $40 to $50 a month.

It having been found that men could not be hired under conditions first fixed by Mr. Haney, subsequent telegrams were exchanged between Mr. Haney and Mr. J. B. Charleson, when finally, on the 20th July Mr. Haney gave orders to the latter to hire 100 good axemen at $20 to $26 per month and board, with 6 cooks at prices fixed in the previous telegram, to wit, from $40 to $50. One Hermenegilde Magloire Roy was then charged by Mr. Charleson to hire these first 100 men, and the result was that on the 24th July Roy started with 115 men, which, by his deposition (No. 93), he acknowledged having hired at $20 to $26 per month and board, and food to be furnished them on the journey. With the exception of a few, all the contracts which Roy had signed were blank as to wages, and the reason given for this was that the rate being fixed from $20 to $25, it was left to Mr. Haney to fix the amount according to the ability of the man.

Still, there were some contracts specifically fixing the wages at $26, as Roy considered the men hired thereunder as particularly good axemen, who, besides, refused to sign unless the amount of their wages which they were to receive would be specially settled. The length of service and character of the work generally also were not specified, but they were all told verbally that they were to work as axemen, and be paid as such. Roy states that having specially asked Mr. J. B. Charleson as to the fare, he answered that it would be all right, understanding this to mean that it would be free, and that that is what he represented to the 115 men he engaged. He also understood and represented to the men that they would be fed on the road, that their time would commence from the day they arrived at Macleod, and that they would be furnished with blankets. On leaving, Mr. Charleson gave him tickets for the men, and also handed him $40 to buy them food for the trip. Having reached Macleod on the 28th July, at 8 p.m., Roy reported to Mr. Harwood, the accountant of the company, and there tried to obtain blankets for the men, but failed. At Macleod, those men were kept nine days idle, and on the 6th of August they were ordered to leave for Crow's Nest Lake, a distance of 70 miles. During the nine days kept idle at Macleod the men were under tents and without blankets, the company stating they had none in stock, and the men complained of suffering from the cold during the nights. On or about the 23rd of August these men, hearing that the company intended to deduct their fare from Ottawa to Macleod,—

Which was in direct contradiction of the understanding that they were to be transported there free, and that their wages would commence from the time that they arrived.

—and transportation from Macleod to the works, took advantage of the presence of Mr. Haney at Crow's Nest Lake, to send a deputation of two (one Frenchman and one Englishman) in order to inquire about the same, and as to whether they would be paid for the nine days passed at Macleod. But, according to the report of these two men, no satisfaction could be had, and one of them, Laferrière, with one Dupont, was, the day after, discharged. In his testimony, Mr. Haney said they had been reported to him by T. Nash, under whose charge the men were, as being ringleaders, and that this was the reason for his discharging them.

This charging of fare under the circumstances, and after the representations made by Roy to those 115 men, the non-payment of wages from the time they reached Macleod to the time they began work at Crow's Nest Lake, and the charges for transportation, were the first principal causes of discontent.

Other reasons were, that having been hired as axemen, they had to work with pick and shovel for weeks; and having been engaged by the month at $20 to $26 and board, they were deducted for Sundays and for days they could not work owing to bad weather—

Then there was a new arrangement, contrary to that arrangement, and the conditions under which they left Ottawa, some of those conditions being written conditions, and some of them verbal, having, as they said, the fullest confidence that Mr. Charleson would act fairly with them and carry out every understanding that was made.

—or other circumstances over which they had no control, and that on these days they were charged for their board. This seems to have discouraged them, and as a result some left and returned to Macleod to get information and to discuss matters with the head officials, as they could not obtain satisfactory explanations from those immediately over them, such as the walking-bosses, timekeepers and district superintendents, and others left with the determination of not returning to work.

In the meantime, one Noé Landry, hotel-keeper at Hull, had been asked by Mr. J. B. Charleson to hire other men,—

You see Mr. Charleson was the controller, the manager of the men to be supplied from Fort William eastward, from all the older provinces, including the maritime provinces.

—and, in fact, from the end of August to the end of September, Landry did send some 200 or 300 men engaged under the same form of contract, but more particularly, Landry says that he insisted that the men should be hired by the month, and that the month should consist of 26 days, and, he adds, that he specially asked Mr. J. B. Charleson whether those men would have to pay their transportation to Macleod, or to the place of work, to which he was answered, no; that the company would transport them free, that this is what he represented to all those men whom he hired until the end of September.

We see the conditions which prevail. Mr. Charleson told Landry to hire the men under those conditions by the month, that their fares out would be paid and not charged against them and that they would be paid from the time they arrived at Macleod and were ready to proceed to work. Those conditions were not carried out. The report of the commissioners says:

The form which was produced to him, and which he had signed by and for the men is form 277, the blanks being generally filled at the rate of $20 to $26 per month, and it being called "26 working days, with board."

Afterwards, the second form of contract was furnished to him, and Landry adds that under both forms he always answered to those who inquired, that it might be, that after having worked at least six months, the company would make a reduction on the rate to return home, but he affirms that he never said this would be obligatory on the part of the company. The first form which is attached to Landry's deposition hired the men for the company only, giving to the company the right to end the engagement at any time without notice, and submitting the employee to give fifteen days' notice of his intention to quit the company's service. The second form specifies that although the men are engaged for the company, and to work for the company, they would be obliged to work for any contractor with whom the company would secure them work for a period of at least six months, or such longer period as the company or contractor might require their services.

From that date, the latter part of September, the men seem to have been engaged at $1.50 per day, Sunday excluded, and that they would have to pay $4 a week board.

Landry swears that under the last form he represented to all whom he hired, that they would have to pay their passage to Macleod at the rate of one cent a mile, and that he never said to any one of them that after three months' work or more they would be reimbursed the same, or that they would get a reduced rate, or a free pass home, and he adds that he represented to all that it was more prudent to bring their blankets, not knowing whether they would be supplied free or sold by the company.

Landry is generally contradicted by the men we have heard engaged under the last form of contract, and they themselves do not each give the same version, some pretending that after three months the fare paid up to Macleod would be reimbursed, some admitting that there was no reimbursement to be made, some saying that after six months they would be entitled to return either at the reduced rate of one cent a mile, or free. It is difficult to form an opinion as to who is speaking the truth, but it seems that even under the last form of contract some verbal representations were made in such a way as to induce the men to start at all hazards, leaving them to understand that the company, as well for their trip to go up as for their return, would deal with them liberally. In the meantime, men were engaged at North Bay, Renfrew, Pembroke, and in the surroundings and sent on the works, by Mr. W. G. Charleson.

This is the son, and the first time he appears on the scene.

Several of those (about 17 or 18) were heard, and their pretensions also vary as to the fare going up and coming back, some saying that, having paid $2 to the employment agent, they understood this was all they had to pay in order to be transported to Macleod, others admitting that nothing was said, but that having to work for the company and travel on their own line, they expected and understood that no fare was to be charged; others, and this is the majority, declaring that they were specially told that after three months' work the fare up to Macleod would be reimbursed to them, although first deducted from their wages, and that after six months they would be returned free, or at a reduction of one cent a mile. Mr. W. G. Charleson, being examined on these points, denies having affirmed any such thing, but adds that representations having been made to him that such were the conditions stated to other men engaged by other sub-agents or contractors, he answered that what was done for others would be done for them by the company, or that the company, at all events, would deal with them squarely.

We have had no complaint on that score from any men engaged at Winnipeg, with the exception of one man, named James Horner, whose contract mentions that he is entitled to free transportation, whilst he was charged therefor.

Men were sent also by Mr. McCreary, the commissioner of immigration at Winnipeg, and it is right to say that none of them complained of misrepresentations.

Then the whole of the misrepresentations came from a Government officer employed by the Government and in the pay of the Government and doing Government work presumably, although at the same time he was violating a wholesome rule of the department that all men who receive salaries over $1,000 are not permitted to engage in any other employment without the express permission of the Minister who presides over the department. The report says further:

The first batch sent from Ottawa under Roy, having begun the wagon road at Crow's Nest Lake, continued their work west. They were soon joined by a number of other men hired either by Noé Landry or W. G. Charleson. It having been circulated that fare to Macleod, and from Macleod to the works, would be charged, and that they would not be paid for the time lost at Macleod, and during the journey to the work, six of them left immediately, and eighteen, headed by one Zéphérin St. Amand, at the end of September, when it was found that the rumour proved to be true, and besides that their wages were deducted for the days during which they were laid off through bad weather or uncontrollable circumstances. They were then at Wardner, distant about 125 miles from Macleod. Food was refused to all of them leaving; also, to the last gang at headquarters, after a 35-mile walk without eating, and although they offered to pay for the same. This seems to have been in obedience to general orders given at company's camps. Liver and beef heart, though, could be had from a butcher 12 miles further on, which gave them three meals without bread, and sustained them to reach Crow's Nest Lake, where they could get all they wanted to help them to continue their journey to Macleod.

A few days after these men left, through some accident, the food began to fall short in the same camp, under Mr. P. Nash, and, according to the men, this had been noticed for two or three days before the Friday noon, when, at breakfast and at dinner, they saw they were fed upon what they considered was not sufficient to sustain them while working. It is averred, further, that their foremen, Brown and Patton, acknowledged that they could not work upon the food given them; whilst, on the other side, Coleman Godfrey, then foreman, and Mr. Charleson, then timekeeper, when examined, declared that, although acknowledging a certain deficiency in food, they believe there was enough in quality and quantity to permit the men to work. Besides, the men affirm that the cook told them that there would not be enough food to feed them any longer, upon which they refused to go to work, and matters stood in that condition until the return of Mr. P. Nash, who had gone for provisions, and who came back on the Saturday night. Having, apparently, taken information from the walking-bosses and timekeeper as to what had happened, he, on the Sunday morning, discharged 54 of these men. They were at that time at about 130 miles from Macleod. It is affirmed by the witnesses heard as to this fact that Nash not only at first refused them food to keep them on the way, but also sent somebody ahead of them, or went himself, to give orders at the company's camps not to feed them on their way. There is no positive proof to that effect, except that at first Nash did give orders to his cook not to give them any provisions, and that it was only upon their threats that they were permitted to take what they could lay their hands on in the kitchen, and which was sufficient to feed them for three meals. It is further declared that Nash, in the meantime, threatened to blow the brains out of those who would dare to enter the kitchen.

It is hard to believe that such barbarous treatment was accorded to men in our country, men who while not in Government employ understood they were engaged by one of the Ministers of Public Works, and they relied on the fairness of the Government to deal properly with every man they engaged. This is a brutal and totally disreputable state of affairs, and the Government is involved in it through the conduct of its own officials. These men started out there under agreement, not one condition of which has been lived up to by those who engaged them. The Government officer knew many of the men, of course he was their superior officer and had been connected with works going on at Ottawa. They knew he was employed by the Government. Every condition of the engagement was totally disregarded, and when these men refused to work under conditions to which they never agreed, they were not treated like human beings, they were not treated as well as ordinary men treat beasts, for they were refused food although they had to walk 133 miles and had to endure the distressing conditions.

On the road, the 54 men were really refused provisions, and whilst Nash himself denies having given a special order to that effect, Inspector Saunders declares that Nash admitted to him that he had given orders to the camps not to supply them with food, as he wished to teach the other men a lesson.

These men who had worked faithfully for the company started to go back, and the first thing is that they were starved on the way, the contractors not caring whether or not they reached their destination at Macleod.

These men, leaving by detachments, assert that they suffered a great deal of hardship on their way, many of them going towards Macleod, destitute, without food, sleeping in the open, suffering from cold, and having before them a long distance to walk.

Nash's own denial is not worth a cent in the face of the fact that Inspector Saunders, of the North-west Mounted Police, a man of reputation and position, declares that orders were issued by Nash not to supply food to these men in order to teach them a lesson.

A few, taking other directions,—

And I presume never reaching their destination, if the truth were told.

—and more particularly the three Welshmen whom we examined at Coal Creek Mines, who, after leaving on the Sunday morning, walked until the Tuesday night, sleeping also in the open, and having their first meal only at the mines on that day.

Here they were without a bite to eat and without protection at night, walking through this inhospitable country. These are the men that the Government agents sent out there under promises that were never fulfilled.

THE MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Not the Government agents.

Mr. WALLACE. The Government officer, J. B. Charleson, an official of the Department of Public Works, who engaged every one of them, and yet the Minister of Public Works said he knew nothing about this. Well, if the Minister of Public Works tells us, as he tells us frequently when we make inquiries, that he leaves it to his officers, and that if they do wrong he is not responsible; he is not an architect; he is not an engineer, or an engager of men; if he makes that excuse in this case it will not do. The country will hold him responsible for this. It will not do any longer for the Minister (Mr. Tarte) to declare his own incompetency, the public will not accept his excuse about it in this matter.

At about that time, three men, Stephen Leclair and two others (deposition 163), who were working at four miles from the camp, received a letter from Nash informing them they were discharged. It was on a Sunday. They immediately went to the camp, which they reached during the night, and were refused admittance, and would have slept in the open if they had not been received in the prospector's shanty in the neighbourhood. The reason given for discharging them was, that having worked for Keith & Fitzgerald, they should have remained with them.

They never were asked to work for Keith & Fitzgerald, they were employed by the company. It is true that a second agreement was made saying they would have to be transferred to another company, but these men, some of them illiterate, no doubt, went out there believing they would be fairly treated, and this is the way they were treated.

These men represent they were not obliged to do so, as their contract was with the company.

I have no doubt their contract was not with the company.

The work on the wagon or tote road was continued under Nash during about one month and eight days, and then his men were put under the guidance of Brown. It is averred by some of those who continued that work that they suffered a great deal from cold under tents, having generally no stoves until the beginning of January, and from being fed at times with frozen provisions, and this lasting two or three weeks.

Imagine for a moment, Mr. Speaker, that these things were going on. The Minister (Mr. Tarte) stated the other day, and I presume he will state now, that he did not know. The daily papers of that time were full of items about it, and especially the Ottawa "Free Press," which came under his observation every day. Mr. Charleson was here in his employ, under his observation daily, and the Minister could not help but know that Charleson was engaging these men at that time, and sending them out to the Crow's Nest Pass, even at the very time these terrible stories were coming in. There were no stoves until the beginning of January, when the cold of that place and the enormous snow fall make it uncomfortable to live even if they had stoves.

Mr. Haney says that at least two pairs of blankets are necessary for protection against cold in ordinary circumstances. Men he had with more than one pair was a very rare exception. Tents had to be removed from point to point periodically as the works progressed, and it happened that men, after quitting their work at 6 o'clock would have to pitch their own tent on the frozen earth, often covered with snow and ice. The tents not being provided with stoves, the men's suffering was intensified by their clothes being wet after working amidst snow, and snow droppings from the trees, and having no means of having them dried. A common result of this was suffering from rheumatism and colds.

A more unhappy state of affairs could never be pictured than we have in this report of the commission.

Under the first form of contract (277), the men were engaged for the company, and either on reaching Macleod, or after having worked a certain time for the company, hundreds of them were sent back to work under contractors or sub-contractors.

In violation of their agreement, because the commissioners say that contract 277 was with the company only.

The first batch so hired by Noé Landry, numbering about 50, were sent to Macleod under the direction of one McNab. They left on the 27th August. Although destined from the very beginning to contractors, Keith & Co., McNab was made aware of it only on the day after they had reached, and the men themselves only nine or ten miles after they left Macleod.

They were then told they were not to work for the company but for Keith & Co., about whom they knew nothing.

The camp of Keith & Co. then was at 50 miles from Macleod. Before beginning the work, Antoine Proulx and one Joel Galarneau were sent to inquire from Keith as to the conditions under which they would work for them, representing that they had been hired for the company, and for the company at $20 to $25 per month and board, and free transportation to work, to which Keith answered that this was an old story, and that they would be paid $1.50 per day, being charged $4 per week for board. Upon their refusing to work Keith begged them to wait until he would inquire about the conditions from Mr. Haney. Upon this they consented to remain and worked at clearing right of way until the 13th of October. They then asked for a settlement of accounts, and for money, and all were told at night that they were indebted to the contractors, Proulx himself owing $8.

Here are men who have gone 2,000 miles away; skilled axemen who worked faithfully for several months, and at the end of that time one of them was told he was $8 in debt.

On the 13th Dupuis, Leclair and Legault left, as they could not get shoes and mittens, but they were immediately arrested.

This was adding insult to injury. Not one condition of their engagement was observed. They were told they were to work for Keith & Co., and that they would be fairly treated and they worked for several months and yet one of them was $8 in debt, and some of them were arrested.

On the 14th instant nine others, headed by Antoine Proulx, also left to go to Macleod, some having no shoes.

This was the 14th of October, and I can tell the Minister that on the 14th of October in these mountains the winter has set in and there is generally an enormous snowfall. I have been there myself in the month of October, and I know about this, and I ask the Minister to picture these men tramping around without shoes.

That means that in the case of one of these men the contractor owed him $37.75, but they made him out $8 in debt when he refused to work any longer, and they put some of them in jail, and when the verdict came out and he got justice, there was a judgment in his favour for $37.75.

On the 15th they too were arrested, and were added to the four others in jail. This last arrest took place on a Saturday, but on the Monday night all were liberated, and made their way to Macleod, sleeping in the open in the prairie. Having sued Keith for wages before the Mounted Police officers at Macleod, they obtained judgment, and Proulx more particularly for the amount of $37.75, the others for more or less. The night following, having no money, the greater part of them slept again in the open. Other discontented labourers had reached Macleod in the meantime, and all had taken or took action against Keith and others. Judgment having been rendered in their favour, an appeal was taken by Keith.—

Of course these men were not in a position to appeal. They had not $1; they had not a bed to lie on, not a shelter was over them, and yet the appeal was taken.

—and it was agreed that the case of Antoine Proulx, which had been made the test case before the magistrate, should be made the test case in appeal. Afterwards that appeal was sustained.

But what did these men suffer in the meantime. Lured away from their homes by a Government official, an official of the department of the Minister of Public Works, the business man of the Government, employed, lured away, by his departmental officer, a man he has entrusted apparently with the control of every working man of the Public Works Department.

Whilst waiting for the result of the appeal, twelve of the men obtained work with Buchanan at $1 per day and board, but after working three days, they were told by Buchanan that he had received a letter from the company, ordering him to discharge them unless they signed a written agreement to pay their fare.

Mr. Speaker, what do you think of that?

This they refused to do and were discharged.

They got work with Buchanan, and they had to be discharged at the instigation of these men, I suppose, to teach a lesson.

Subsequently, some of them obtained work under assumed names. Others, through the intervention of Inspector Saunders, met Mr. Turnbull, the assistant superintendent, and got work at $1.50, paying $4 a week board. After six days, they returned to Macleod to inquire as to their cases in appeal, and on seeing new difficulties to which they were exposed, and an offer being made that if they would sign a complete discharge of the company's liability to them the company would give them a free pass home and $5 in cash, they decided to accept this with others, numbering in all eighty-two (82).

These men who were helpless, they had neither money nor provisions. They had a verdict against the contractors; contractors who were backed up by the other contractors, and backed up by a Government official who never came to the rescue of these men when he saw these reports published, and I say the Minister of Public Works himself could not help seeing these reports. An offer was made to give them a free pass back and $5 cash, and of course they were obliged to take it, for it is absurd to suppose they could refuse when they were subjected to such injustice and inhumanity.

The company has appointed officials to receive the men and look after them on their reaching Macleod, so they came by batches. It happened that for one reason or another, due notice was not received, and that men arriving that way did not know where to go, or what to do, and were left at Macleod station without any direction, for one night or so. Others complained that they were lodged for nights in places which were not fit, as, for instance, in an old house near the station, which they say was filthy, cold, and not properly sheltered, they being there without any blankets or any other covering whatsoever. In some instances tents were provided for them, but not in sufficient quantity, and a portion of the men had to sleep in the open and on the bare ground. Numbers were kept in box cars, in all cases also filthy and cold, during several days and nights sleeping on the floor. All alleged more or less suffering. This applies more particularly to the men who were sent in August and September. After having passed some days either in the old house or in box cars, some hundreds of them were afterwards brought to work on the track between Lethbridge and Pincher Creek.

I would like to call attention to this particular car, which was denominated by them as a Jumbo car.

It is complained that they were kept in a boarding car which has been denominated by them as the "Jumbo car" number three. It is alleged that during two months from 90 to 115 slept in that car. The size of the sleeping accommodation is given as follows:—Bunks, 4 ft. 6 in. in width; height between top and bottom of each bunk about 2 ft. 3 in. from board to board; passage, 3 ft. 11 in. in width; each bunk being under 6 feet in length and the whole car about 70 feet long. Two men were obliged to sleep in each bunk, and there being three tiers on each side, this forced six men to face six others when rising and retiring. It is mentioned that it was not sufficiently heated, that it was filthy, the atmosphere intolerable and unhealthy, that there was no washing or lavatory facilities in the car (only one small basin and an ordinary pail for water) and that there was not sufficient drinking water provided. Windows on each side exist for every tier of bunks for purposes of ventilation.

Statements are made that in the moving of men to the works or in changing from section to section, at times, no proper or reasonable facilities were provided, and therefore they had to sleep either in the open or on the prairie, or in hay lofts and stables; and there was a lack of proper provisions, and that they had to walk long distances without taking sufficient meals, and at proper hours. Joseph Tobin and 133 others who left Macleod one morning, without breakfast, having been told that there was food in the wagons, walked 14 miles to Buchanan's camp and there found only a barrel of biscuits. The 133 made the best of it, and starting again, they had nothing to eat until the night of the following day at Crow's Nest Lake. The next day they walked 20 miles to Michel Prairie before having their second meal. There was no provision made for their sleeping on the journey. The last day, they reached Mann's camp, 100 miles from Macleod, where they were put into a green camp, with one stove which, on being lit, thawed out the ice and snow, and the following morning some of the men could not move through suffering from rheumatism. In this, the witness Tobin is corroborated by several.

At the beginning of October, a gang of men first apparently assigned to Keith & Company, were afterwards directed to Smith & Mackenzie, at Pincher Creek, for the transport to which place they had to pay $2. After three weeks, the work ended there, and they were kept idle for six days. Afterwards they were directed to Wardner, which took them seven days, making in all thirteen days, for which they were refused wages. (See deposition 103 of Noel Gingras and three others.)

We note some special facts, such as, for instance, the fainting of men on the works, the refusal on the part of teamsters, whose wagons were hardly loaded, to give a ride to wounded men, such as young Joseph Bourignon and Théodore Lambert; some threats of Noble, one of the foremen, to kick them; the alleged bad treatment by the same foreman of men who had had difficulties with the company, and who were discharged one day after they had returned to work; the refusal of food generally to all men discharged or quitting work, and the hardship experienced on account of this, caused one Weir, for instance, to faint, and others to feel very weak; three men having to subsist for a whole day on one onion (see deposition 139); a pinch of salt refused to men leaving camp, which they asked for in order to salt fish they might catch with a fish hook given to them by another of the men. All this when they were at distances varying from 70 to 150 miles from, and having to walk to Macleod, often having no money, and even with money not being able to obtain food, and having sometimes to rely on remnants thrown away on the road.

Losses have been sustained through the fact that having generally brought their clothes and effects in trunks, the men were forbidden to carry them with them on the works, and had to leave the trunks at Macleod, and put whatever they could into bags, with the result that in many cases, whatever had remained in the trunks, and the trunks themselves disappeared, and could not be found again. On this account the immigrants, and more especially the Welshmen, suffered more than the rest, as, coming from greater distances, they were better supplied, though one Jean Baptiste St. Amour, of Montreal, lost in this manner, over $80 worth of goods. The preventing of the men taking with them all their clothing which had been thought necessary, did not permit them, when on the works in the mountains, to effect a change of clothing, which was naturally necessary to men working in the bush and getting drenched.

In several instances, some of the contractor's camps were not kept in a proper condition, and the men, although habitually clean, were compelled to associate in the sleeping bunks with men who were habitually unclean, and thereby became affected with lice. It was impossible for them to take precautions to avoid such a result. According to the evidence, and from what we have seen ourselves, we must say that the generality of camps are well kept, but there are too many exceptions, some not being sufficiently sheltered so that the rain, snow and cold would be a cause of suffering to the men who had to remain therein. Others have not sufficient, or to speak better, have no light at all and men even during daylight, have either to use candles, for which they have to pay, or keep their doors open, if they want light either to mend their clothes or for any other purpose, without speaking of the inconvenience of being in the dark during daytime; whilst on the other hand some camps, even when offering all other conveniences, are not properly attended to, inasmuch as they are left entirely to the men themselves to be cleaned and kept, and it may be more properly said here than anywhere else, that "whatever is the concern of all is the concern of none." It appears that before our arrival on the line there were more camps in that condition than when we passed, some having been repaired a week or two before.

In one instance there was an entire abandonment by contractors Doidge & Company of their men in the camp, under the pretext that they were going to Macleod to settle certain difficulties, and to bring money to pay their wages. Yet they never returned, and the men were kept on the work uncertain as to what would become of them, and what they had to do. This was at Coal Creek 110 miles west of Macleod. Edwin Doidge was in charge for the concern, being examined (see deposition 126) admits the facts and says that he abandoned the camps on the 14th of December, about twenty men, being still there, about as many having left the day previous, and that $300 would pay the amount of refused cheques to labourers. We met one of these men who had been settled with Doidge & Company (deposition 54) with a cheque from them, amounting to $65 payable at the Union Bank, Macleod, but which had been refused and returned to him. This man although in possession of still another cheque for $70 from another concern not connected with the railway, but whose cheques were considered as good as cash, had been refused board along the line, and, being without money he, with a companion, only had one meal in two days, and a piece of bread. The reason for the camps not furnishing food was stated to be that it was the rule on the road.

At Wardner several labourers employed by Smith & Mackenzie complained of not having been settled with for their wages for the last two months, December and January, although a settlement had been promised to them every day.

At seven miles from Fort Steele, 25 men from Major Bowles's camp gave their evidence, stating that Major Bowles had left camp on the 7th December, and that as they were, they had barely enough to eat, and could not get provisions. The tents had become filthy, offering no mere convenient shelter and no settlement of their wages had taken place since, and they were left in the dark as to what would happen to them.

At some camps, men were entirely forbidden, on pain of instant dismissal, to say a word during the work, and on the remark of one of them as to whether they were prisoners, the foreman answered that they were very nearly so.

There are several complaints of coarse language being used towards the men by the foremen, walking bosses, and timekeepers, without any apparent reason, and there is a hint on the part of a French Canadian (Joseph Mallette) that they were so treated on account of their nationality. It is complained that sick men did not receive reasonable care from their foremen, walking boss or those immediately over them, and were refused meals, although they were paying for their board, and some of them were charged 35 cents per meal, the contractors assuming that in reality they were not sick, and even some were discharged under the same pretext.

In settling their accounts, and more particularly those who were engaged until the latter part of September, the men seem to have been left entirely in the dark. Being entitled to be paid by the month at the rate of $20 to $26 and board, they believed that they would get that amount at the end of each month, according to what they would be rated at from $20 to $26, without deduction for lost time through bad weather, and other causes not controllable by them. On the first pay they found that this was not so, and that they had to lose as many days as they were kept forcibly idle. After the first month, which would be at the beginning of September, an order came from Mr. Haney to Mr. Charleson, the bookkeeper and assistant storekeeper of the company at headquarters (see his deposition No. 78) by which men were to be paid at the rate of 24-30 or 24-31 of $26, according to the number of days in the month, and this, notwithstanding the fact that some contracts specified 26 working days per month. This rule would explain what several of the men declare in their depositions, that in order to be paid at the rate of $20 to $26 per month, they had to work every day in the month Sundays included. By referring to the accounts, it appears to be so.

Before going further, the case of Frank Beaulieu and Auguste Rivard (deposition 77) who formed part of Proulx's gang should be noticed. They, like the fifty others, having hired by the company, learned after they had left Macleod, that they had to work under Keith & Company, contractors. They protested and accepted work only with the understanding that if they were not satisfied they might leave whenever they liked. They speak like several other witnesses, of the hardship on the trip to Pincher Creek, sleeping in the open, without blankets and being fed on biscuit and cheese, and one day eating nothing from breakfast time to half-past six in the evening. They had been engaged as bushmen, but were put to work with pick and shovel. Afterwards thirteen of them were sent to work under sub-contractor Fitzgerald. Having notified Fitzgerald after one half day that they would not work for him, on account of what they heard about being charged the fare to Macleod, he promised to give them employment as drillers, but when they saw that he did not keep his promise, and after some difficulty with the foreman, Patrick Tierney, seven of them left after eight days, and were arrested. Five of them were sent to jail for thirty days, two having returned to work.

It is the above and similar complaints which brought from eighty to one hundred men at about the middle of October to Macleod. The majority took legal action against the company or the contractors, others would not work, or could not obtain any more work. They were all in a perfect state of destitution, many of them had to sleep in the open, several were kept in a house hired by Zéphérin St. Amand, but all, or nearly all, had to live upon public charity, and suffered in many instances, through hunger, cold and lack of proper clothing. Discouraged and disheartened, they at the end consented to a compromise proposed to them by which they accepted a free pass to return home and $5 each to buy provisions on the journey, a full discharge for any claim against the company being at that time signed by eighty-two of them.

Now, all these facts, I think it is the duty of the House to observe. We have the right to hold the Minister of Public Works directly responsible in this matter. Permit me to read a letter I have received, dated New Glasgow, N.S., from Rev. A. W. Nicholson, a Presbyterian minister:

New Glasgow, N.S., June 10, 1898.

N. Clarke Wallace, M.P.

Sir,—A short time ago, a case was brought up in the House of Commons, about two young men from this county, who went out to work on the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, took ill with diphtheria, and died, both of them, one shortly after the other. Stories, some of them considered authentic enough, have reached here, telling of shameful neglect and gross indifference on the part of the railway authorities in the section in which they died, and revealing a state of matters shocking to any one possessed of refined and cultivated feelings, and unworthy of a country like Canada that professes to be civilized and Christianized. Several individuals, the physician who attended them, and the clergyman who administered to them during their last moments, have been written to, and facts obtained from them. We have learned enough that some parties are to blame, and that there was neglect and indifference shown. To think that two young men, sons of respectable and worthy parents, should be treated in their last hours like lepers, and buried little better than dogs, is something we cannot get over hurriedly.

The names of these two young men were Edward McC. Fraser and Charles McDonald. The former's people are respectable and well-to-do. His father, a worthy, upright citizen and an elder in the Presbyterian church, died not very long ago, his death being caused by worry, anxiety and distress on account of the death of his son under such sad circumstances, so far away from home. Now, sir, we will take this opportunity of asking you to lend your aid and influence to the members from this county (Pictou) and the other members who have brought up this question in Parliament. Leave no stone unturned to find out all that can be found out about these young men. We want to know, and we ask you, as a favour, to help us. We are deeply interested in this, and we will be only doing our duty when we have striven to find out everything that can be ascertained.

A. W. NICHOLSON.

That is the substance of the letter. I call this letter to the attention of the Minister of Public Works and the Government, and I ask them as a duty they owe to the country to ascertain the facts concerning these young men, so as to be able to give a satisfactory explanation, and, if wrong has been done, to see to it that the guilty parties shall be punished. And wrong has been done. Can the case of these young men be called anything else than murder? Far from home, they were neglected by those who should have cared for them, treated as lepers and buried almost like dogs. Why, Mr. Speaker, it makes one's blood run cold to think of the treatment meted out to these men. And I reiterate that the chief agent of the Minister of Public Works, his confidential man, the man who has charge of all the workmen employed by the department about Ottawa, occupied himself in sending men out to this work. This same gentleman has a store on Rideau street to supply the Government with all the hardware they require, and, I apprehend that it will be a nice bill we shall have to examine when these accounts are looked over. It will not do for the Minister of Public Works to rise and say that he knows nothing about this Crow's Nest Pass affair. We will not excuse him on any such answer, but we will hold him responsible for the most flagrant acts of inhumanity and brutality that are recorded in the history of this country.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). Of course, there is no excuse whatever for the treatment that Canadian workmen have received at the hands of the sub-contractors on the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. When the subsidy to the Canadian Pacific Railway was unanimously voted last year—

Mr. WALLACE. Not unanimously.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It was voted very nearly unanimously.

Mr. WALLACE. It was protested against.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) permit me, I did not interrupt him once.

Mr. WALLACE. I want to correct the statement of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte).

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. When the subsidy was voted almost unanimously last year, it was made a condition that the work should be carried on by Canadian labour. Surely, at that time nobody believed that our workmen would be treated as they have been treated on that work. I do not think that the Government can be held responsible, for any lack of attention in this matter, that it can be accused of not having done its duty. As soon as we learned that complaints were made, we appointed three commissioners to investigate. I may say that Judge Dugas was appointed on that commission at my own instigation. I knew that he had a great deal of knowledge of men, and that his experience on the bench for many years would enable him to conduct the inquiry with great satisfaction to us. Well, Sir, the accusation is brought against me by my hon. friend (Mr. Wallace), who has just taken his seat that I am responsible for the action of Mr. Charleson in this matter. I am very sorry now that Mr. Charleson has in any way been mixed up with the hiring of men in the city of Ottawa for this work. Mr. Charleson and Mr. Haney are old friends, and, if the information which is conveyed to me is correct, Mr. Haney asked Mr. Charleson to find men for him. I must say at once that Mr. Charleson never asked any authorization from me nor did I give him any authorization. When I saw items in the newspapers to the effect that Mr. Charleson was hiring men for the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, I asked him in what capacity he was acting, and he said: A few friends asked me, purely as a matter of friendship, to help them to place men with Mr. Haney, and I am doing so without receiving any remuneration. Mr. Charleson told me, at the same time, that he was doing this work after office hours. As a matter of fact, he was doing just what any of us might have been doing at the time. I remember very well having written letters to Mr. Haney, just as any one would do, asking him to take some men, that I would be glad if he would give them employment.

I understood at the time that Mr. Charleson was acting in the way I am now pointing out. The hon. gentleman does not insinuate, of course, that the two poor young men who died out there had been engaged by Mr. Charleson, they were not engaged by him. I do not know who sent them out there. We all regret what has taken place, and the hon. gentleman echoes the opinions of members on both sides of the House when he says that some action must be taken against the parties responsible for what has taken place. Canadian labourers have been treated as navvies, as Italians are treated when working on railways; they have been treated as many railway contractors treat foreigners engaged to work on railways. Well, we cannot stand that sort of treatment. The Government has done its duty; we have appointed a commission whose report has been read to-day. The parties responsible for the ill-treatment that honest labouring men received, should be punished if there is any law by which that can be done. I can say no more than that. This is not the time to make long speeches, there is no cause for it. Action is better than any number of speeches. As for Mr. Charleson, he is not in town now; as soon as he comes back I will ask him to give an account of what he has done, and if he is not in a position to give me a satisfactory explanation, he will have to take the consequences of what he has done. But I do not believe it is right, before those explanations are asked from, and given by Mr. Charleson, that he should be accused of having done anything wrong. Suppose he did send some men there, no one man could foresee that men engaged under certain conditions would be treated like dogs. I have myself sent men out there.

Mr. LISTER. I sent two.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have sent men there believing that they would receive fair treatment. However, what has taken place is a lesson that will not be lost sight of. I am sure, when new contracts are awarded. Stringent conditions will have to be imposed, we will have to see that labouring men are treated as they have a right to be, that is, fairly and honestly.

Mr. DAVIN. I wish to protest against the position taken, not for the first time, by the Minister of Public Works in trying to shield himself behind the action of one of his subordinates. It is simply incredible that the Minister of Public Works did not know the position that Mr. Charleson occu-pled in respect to the hiring business. But it is not merely the Department of Public Works that is responsible, the Department of Justice is responsible. When my colleague from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) tried to get the machinery of justice to work in order to bring the responsibility home to those who did these two young men to death, what were the answers that he got from the Department of Justice? He first applied to the Minister of Justice, he is then referred to the Deputy Minister of Justice, who sends back word that he had no jurisdiction in the matter, that he had no control over the coroner.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). Is that true or not true in law, that he had no control over the coroner?

Mr. DAVIN. He had power to authorize the coroner, Dr. Mead, to withdraw and get another coroner to take his place.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is true, he could not have interfered.

Mr. DAVIN. But the Prime Minister tells me that the Minister of Justice is not merely Minister of Justice for the Dominion, but he is Attorney General over the North-west Territories. That is what I was told by the Prime Minister in discussing the case of the Queen against Skelton.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Did this give him control over the coroner?

Mr. DAVIN. I want to ask the hon. gentleman whether the Attorney General in Quebec, or in Ontario, in the presence of a state of things such as was going on in the North-west Territories, it being brought to his attention that an application was being made to a judge to prevent a coroner going on with an inquiry, does he mean to say that the Attorney General for the province could not interfere?

Mr. LISTER. That is a different question.

Mr. DAVIN. It is not different. I will read the very words of the Prime Minister, in the discussion of the case of the Queen vs. Skelton:

I must say to my hon. friend that he stated, and stated correctly, that on the 16th of May when the case was called to be proceeded with, the agent of the Minister of Justice, who is the Attorney General, stated that he had received a letter of instructions from the Attorney General not to go on with the case but to suspend it to another term. * * * He says that the Minister of Justice was not within his duty. * * * I have only this answer to make to my hon. friend, and he will see that he has been labouring under serious misapprehension. The Minister of Justice is the Attorney General for the North-west Territories. He is the prosecutor for Her Majesty. The Minister of Justice is the Attorney General for Canada. He has jurisdiction in all the courts of Canada, he is the prosecutor wherever Her Majesty brings suits, and he was prosecuting that indictment against James Skelton.

Mr. TARTE.

If so, he was the prosecutor behind the coroner, and could interfere, and when application was made to Mr. Justice Rouleau for an injunction to prevent that coroner going on with the inquiry, the Attorney General for the North-west Territories could have interfered. It brings home straight to the Department of Justice the responsibility for not having had due inquiry into the death of these two young men.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The hon. gentleman must know better than to make such a statement as that.

Mr. DAVIN. I say that responsibility is brought straight home to the Department of Justice. The Minister of Justice is the Attorney General for the North-west Territories, he has jurisdiction in all the courts. If the Minister of Justice was the Attorney General in the court of Battleford against Skelton, so was he in this case. This is what the Prime Minister says :

If the Minister of Justice was the Attorney General prosecuting that indictment in the court at Battleford against Skelton, the case was in his hands, and he was simply within his rights when he gave instructions to his agent to postpone the case. If that case had been brought in Manitoba, or Quebec, or Ontario, where the Attorney General for the province, the prosecutor is then the Attorney General for such province, and the Minister of Justice could not have interfered in the case.

I say here that the Department of Justice was, on the showing of the Prime Minister himself, in a position to prevent such a state of things as we are now confronted with, namely, that Mr. Justice Rouleau was allowed to make that injunction preventing the coroner going on with this inquiry. The people there who wanted justice to be done, were told that nothing could be done by the Attorney General, by the man who was in the position of the Attorney General of a province. I say this brings home to the Government of Canada a much more serious matter than even the conduct of Mr. Charleson.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I have listened with a great deal of attention and with a great deal of interest to what fell from the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace). He has stated facts upon which one can place some reliance, and I think he aroused a degree of generous interest and sympathy in this House of which the occasion is deserving. But as for the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), I can scarcely credit that a gentleman occupying his position in the House should stand up and take the responsibility of the statements that he has made. He undertakes to say that the Department of Justice is responsible for the death of these young men.

Mr. DAVIN. That is not what I said. I said the department was responsible for not bringing home the guilt to the guilty parties.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am surprised that the hon. gentleman does not remember even for two minutes what he says. These were his words: "The Department of Justice was responsible for the death of these young men."

Mr. DAVIN. That is not what I said; there is no use in the hon. gentleman replying to that. If it should turn out that I said so, it would be a lapsus linguae. What I meant to say was that the Department of Justice was responsible for the position of things, in not bringing justice home to the responsible parties.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Let me deal with that. The young men died after having been in the service of the Canadian Pacific Railway. We were not responsible for their employment, nor should we be responsible for the treatment they received from the time they left the Crow's Nest Pass until they reached Pincher Creek, where they died. The first information the Department of Justice had concerning this matter was information conveyed to them when a notice of application for an injunction on the coroner was sent to the Department of Justice, the coroner sent that notice asking the Department of Justice to say whether we would interfere to defend him on the basis of that injunction. I am surprised that my hon. friend could have any doubt about that. He is a lawyer from the North-west Territories himself. The coroner is not an official of the Department of Justice, he is not an official of the Federal Government, he is not under our control, he is an official of the North-west Territories, he is appointed by them and entirely under their control. The injunction, therefore, was applied for against an official of the North-west Territories. When that application was made it came before the court, who dealt with it. The court maintained the injunction on the ground that the coroner, being a party interested, being a witness and having attended the deceased, should not act as coroner. Under these circumstances nothing remained to be done. That is the extent to which the Department of Justice is concerned with this matter. Our responsibility commenced when the death of the young men came to our knowledge. What did we do? We found a commission had been appointed to investigate the whole trouble on the Crow's Nest Pass road. It was appointed by the Government. We knew that they, being on the ground, would naturally take cognizance of the occurrence, and as a matter of fact, they did make an investigation, partial I am free to admit, into the death of these young men. What could we do until the report of the commission came here? The course taken by the Department of Justice may be stated. That report was made: we applied for a copy of it to the Department of the Interior. We are examining that report to ascertain whether we have therein the material necessary to enable us to take such proceedings as may vindicate justice in respect to the death of these men. Yesterday in the Senate it was declared by the head of the Department of Justice that if the information contained in this report was not sufficient to enable the Government to take proceedings, then another and a further investigation would be made in order to put the Government in possession of all the facts, because it is our firm intention to investigate the matter to the bottom, to ascertain the true facts connected with it. And the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) was so persistent in bringing forward this matter and calling attention to it that his efforts will be rewarded so far as the Department of Justice is concerned, because we shall make such an investigation as will enable us, if criminal acts have been done, to punish the criminals. To what extent is the Government responsible for what has taken place? To what extent is the Government, having contributed a certain amount of money to aid in the construction of this road and provided that Canadian labour should be employed, liable for the fact that those labourers, who proceeded to the scene of operations in order to earn a livelihood, have been treated in a manner most brutal and in a manner that we cannot allow to pass unnoticed? The Government has ascertained the facts, it has reported them to the House. What more can be expected from the Government? Having ascertained the facts and reported them to the House, it is our duty now, on those facts, to take such proceedings, civil or criminal, as may be justified under the circumstances. Beyond that, we could not go. This is not the first time in our history that such abuses have been committed by great corporations, benefited by contributions from the public chest, but they have been allowed to pass unnoticed. I venture the statement that those who are acquainted with the facts connected with the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, when hon. gentlemen were in power and had the control of public affairs, will be aware that similar outrages were committed, but the then Government never dared to investigate them. We have dared to investigate, and we mean to punish the criminals and mete out justice to them.

Mr. DAVIN. Who appoints the coroners in the North-west?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The local government.

Mr. DAVIN. They are appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am exceedingly glad to hear the remarks made by the hon. Solicitor General. I hope, in respect to the treatment given these men, that we shall never hear again of such barbaric acts being committed, and that the Government on the facts presented in the report submitted, will see that punishment is meted out to those individuals such as they justly deserve. On a former occasion I stated I could hardly conceive that the Canadian Pacific Railway officials at Montreal were fully cognizant of the ill-treatment to which these men were subjected. I hope such is not the case. If they were, they have a serious charge to answer, and they should be called upon to answer it; and I earnestly trust that before the entire money voted by the Government towards the construction of the road is paid, at least those men who have been inhumanly treated should be generously dealt with, while at the same time punishment should be meted out to those men who perpetrated the acts of inhumanity. I believe those men were sub-contractors connected with the Crow's Nest Pass road. Of course, I do not know who they were. I believe Mr. Haney, who was placed in charge of the Canadian Pacific Railway construction, had authority to let out and did let out the works on considerable mileage to sub-contractors, and I believe when we come to thoroughly investigate the matter, it will be found that some of the sub-contractors were guilty of these inhuman acts, and not the regular officials of the road. I believe that is true; I have a hint that it is true. I hope the Canadian Pacific Railway Company itself will make a thorough investigation in the interest of justice and to clear their skirts of such disgraceful, inhuman acts, and not allow the matter to remain in its present shape; and further, that the Government will, in accordance with sentiments expressed by the Solicitor General, declare that the parties guilty shall be properly punished.

Mr. SPROULE. It has unfortunately happened that too frequently railway contractors treat their men in a most inhuman manner. We had some experience of that during the building of the Canadian Pacific road around Lake Superior. I remember what took place under D. F. Burke, a contractor who was around the corridors a few days ago. He employed Italians and let them go at the beginning of winter, without food or shelter, and after the season's work. They had not enough money coming to them according to his book-keeping to pay their way out of the place. They came to the Sault, and by the last boat were brought down as an act of charity to Collingwood. At the end of the season's operations these men had not enough money to bring them down to Wiarton, and they were brought down by charity. I thought then the contractor should have been punished, but unfortunately the matter was not brought to public notice. I regret that from time to time similar occurrences have taken place elsewhere. The recital of such inhuman conduct as is shown in the report read is enough to make the blood boil, for it clearly shows inhumanity and barbarity. The report was in the possession of the Government some time ago, and the only complaint that can fairly be made against the Government in this connection is that they have been supine and have let the time go by to bring the guilty parties to trial and punishment. Had this matter not been brought so prominently and forcibly before the House, I am afraid much more time would have elapsed before taking action than is likely to result at the present time. A Government official is really an aider and abettor in these crimes, and I hope that official will receive the punishment to which he is entitled. These railway contractors are getting rich, while at the same time they are dishonestly treating and cruelly treating their men. Many of the employers are treating their employees more as beasts than as human beings. Inhumanity, barbarity and brutality are the only words in the English language which adequately express the conduct of these contractors, and condign punishment ought to be meted out at a very early date. The facts are now brought very clearly to the attention of the Government, and they should not allow one hour to pass before bringing these men to justice. With respect to the men who are dead, I can only say that from my understanding of these inquiries it is the right of the Attorney General, or whoever may represent him, if a miscarriage of justice occurs through the coroner, to have another inquiry held. A post-mortem examination is needed to obtain all possible evidence as to the cause of death.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. How can the hon. gentleman contend that at a coroner's inquest, in case of death by diphtheria, a post-mortem could take place after the coroner had been stayed by injunction? It could not be done.

Mr. SPROULE. The treatment meted out may have been calculated to bring on this disease, and this demands a most searching investigation; and if through any technicality the coroner was unable to do his duty, it is the right of the Attorney General to institute another inquiry through another coroner to bring out all the facts, and enable him to see where the blame lies and punish the guilty parties.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Let us deal with this matter fairly and honestly. I am sure the gentleman who acted as a coroner, when acting within his legal authority, is in a position where he cannot be interfered with by the Attorney General of Canada.

Mr. DAVIN. But he is the Attorney General of the North-west Territories.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Why blame anybody but the Attorney General of the North-west Territories?

Mr. DAVIN. The Attorney General of the North-west Territories is the Minister of Justice.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I understand the North-west Territories have law in that regard just the same as the provinces, and when there is an appointing authority, that authority has power to punish any dereliction of duty on the part of the appointee.

Mr. DAVIN. You know nothing about it.

Mr. FOSTER. They will never make a judge of you.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I am not fit to be a judge if my statement is not correct, that the power appointing an authority has the power to discipline that authority. If any lawyer from the North-west Territories disputes that statement, then I say it is no wonder he has not much practice.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Does the hon. gentleman from West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) mean to say that the coroner appointed in the Territories must be taken to account by the Attorney General of Canada, if he contravenes the law?

Mr. DAVIN. I mean to say that the Attorney General of Canada has authority over him.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I did not ask that. Of course, if the authorities in the Territories do not do their duty, then there is an appeal to the superior authority of the Attorney General of Canada. We are all agreed as to the wrong committed, but do not let us throw on the Government or on the Opposition for that matter, the blame when it does not rightly lie on them. The Solicitor General has said that the Government, in so far as they have any power, will see that justice is done to the end. I thank the Solicitor General for that. I believe that any member of the Opposition who says that is not a sufficient guarantee or tries to make political capital out of it, is not a friend of the two unfortunate men who died. The Government have said they will probe the whole matter to the bottom, and surely all should be satisfied with that. What more can they do? The Solicitor General or the Minister of Justice must follow the law, and he has no power to act arbitrarily or outside of the law. For the sake of the two young men who died, and for the sake of the reputation of Canada, I am glad that the Solicitor General has made the statement he did, but in the name of common humanity and in the name of bringing to justice any corporation or any individual who has done wrong, let us agree, without making party capital out of it, that justice should be done.

Mr. DAVIN. Do I understand the Solicitor General to say that Coroner Mead was appointed by what is called the local government—Mr. Haultain and Mr. Ross?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I say now, as I said a moment ago, and without looking into the matter, I do not wish to be inconsistent in my statement, that the coroner is an official of the local authorities in the North-west Territories.

Mr. DAVIN. Then, the hon. and learned gentleman is profoundly ignorant on the subject.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That expression of opinion from the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) is, I believe, a commendation to me.

Mr. CLARKE. I entirely agree with the remarks that have fallen from my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), that the inquiry into the circumstances of the death of these two young Nova Scotians and the punishment of those, if any, who are responsible for the death should not be made a party question. As a matter of fact, it cannot be made a party political question unless it can be shown that the Government of the day are derelict in their duty in bringing the perpetrators of this outrage to justice.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CLARKE. It is very difficult for laymen to brush aside the uncertainties of the law, and to know just what the powers and responsibilities of the officers of Government are, but I most respectfully draw the attention of the House to the fact that these young Nova Scotians have been dead four or five months, and that such a long time has been permitted to elapse that the condition of their bodies is now such that a post-mortem examination will not give the evidence that a post-mortem examination held immediately after their death would have given. I call attention to the fact that those who were on the ground at the time these sad circumstances were permitted to take place, are scattered far and wide, and it will be impossible, or next to impossible, to get the evidence by which responsibility can be fixed on those who are responsible for this sad and foul blot on the fair name of our country. I repeat that the people of Canada will hold the Government responsible if they have not resorted to every legal expedient within their power to obtain all possible information as to the condition under which these men were working, and as to the sad iniquity committed. We learned the other night from the statement made by the Minister of the Interior that the inquiry into the methods adopted in the construction of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway was instituted because of information which the Government had obtained from time to time through the agents who were appointed to enforce the Alien Labour Law, and since these agents have reported, I want to know what steps the Government of Canada have taken to prevent those who are still engaged in the construction of that road from being treated as the former unfortunate employees were. Without prejudging the case, we will await the action which the Government will take in this matter, and if the Government do not mete out, as far as it is possible to mete it out, not cold justice, but ample justice, to those who have brought such disgrace upon Canada by their inhuman treatment of these workmen, the people of the Dominion will know where to fix the responsibility, and they will not allow legal quibbles to stand in the way of justice being done.

Mr. FRASER.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I very much fear that the hope expressed by the hon. gentleman from Toronto (Mr. Clarke), that no attempt shall be made to make political capital out of this unfortunate incident, is not to be gratified. Judging from the language we have heard to-day from some hon. gentlemen opposite, it is quite evident that they will endeavour to make out of the sad death of these poor men all the capital they can against the Government. I regret to say that they are not above parading the corpses of these two young men in order to attempt to make an impression against the Government. Nothing could be more unfair and unjust than some of the charges made to-day against the Minister of Public Works, because one of his officers, as it is alleged, happened to be concerned in the hiring of these workmen. Even if one of the officers of the Public Works Department had been mixed up in the hiring of these men to work on the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, that would be at best a breach of the discipline of the department which would be altogether unnoticed, were it not for the fact that the men sent to that work were ill-treated. Had they met with ordinary fair treatment, not a word would be said to-day against Mr. Charleson or the Minister of Public Works, but because it so happened that the men were inhumanly treated, an attempt was made to fasten the guilt on the Minister of Public Works, who had no more to do with the matter than any man in this House. If Mr. Charleson has been guilty of a breach of discipline, he must first be given an opportunity of defending himself, and then have such treatment meted out to him as his case demands, but whether Mr. Charleson has been guilty or not, what reason can there be for making the Minister of Public Works responsible for his actions.

With regard to what took place afterwards the first notice which the Department of Justice had was a telegram from Mr. Oliver, informing the department that the coroner had been stopped proceeding with the inquest, by an injunction. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to contend that the department was bound to interfere between the coroner and the judge of the North-west Territories? It seems to me that the only thing that the Government could do was to await the result of the judicial action taken before the judge. Of course it is not the fault of the Government if the judge kept the injunction before him some six weeks before giving a decision, and the department could not presume that he would have kept the matter under deliberation so long. Afterwards a full report was made to the Department of Justice by Mr. Coneybeare, the Government agent at Lethbridge, stating that there was reason to believe that gross maltreatment had been given these two men. What was there to be done under the circumstances? Only one thing, and that was to have an inquiry made. Why, at that very moment there were commissioners holding investigations into all the facts. Months before that, upon the first report that the men had not been fairly treated, the Government thought it advisable to issue a commission to inquire into the facts. We have the report of that commission, and so far as I understand them, hon. gentlemen opposite say that it is a fair, honest and pretty full report. We have in the proceedings of that commission the evidence as to who are responsible for the death of these young men, if their death was due to the action of man, or we have not. If we have, there is sufficient proof on which to administer justice. If we have not, then we have the word of the Department of Justice, given here by the Solicitor General, that no effort shall be spared in order to have full justice done. Under the circumstances, I am at a loss to understand in what respect the Government is blameable. I am at a loss to know what more shall be done than has been done. The Government, far from being derelict in their duty, have shown more diligence in this respect than any previous Government ever did. There have been other public works constructed, as was stated by the Solicitor General a moment ago, and other complaints of ill-treatment to the men employed on these works, and this is the first time that any Government has been so solicitous for the welfare of the labourers on public works as to issue a commission to inquire into their treatment.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. Minister of Public Works say what position Mr. Charleson has in his department?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. He is general inspector. He attends to the pay lists, he sees that the men are located where they should be; he acts as a general agent.

Mr. FOSTER. As a purchasing agent?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, he purchases very little. He only checks the lists of purchases.

Miscellaneous printing $257,000

Mr. WALLACE. I intended to refer to the post office at Digby at some length, but as the hon. Postmaster General is not in his place, I shall be very brief. I intend merely to say that the post office has been removed from the centre of business where it had been some twenty or more years, to a place which is not suitable, and the people have petitioned unanimously to have it restored to the same locality.

There was a matter brought up some short time ago with reference E. J. Welsh, engineer, and the Prime Minister asked that it might be laid over for a moment and be brought up again under the item of miscellaneous matters. The hon. member for Pictou introduced the subject to the attention of the House, and the Prime Minister said it would receive the attention of the Government. The Government has given some attention to it but has not come to any decision and has accomplished nothing. Mr. Welsh was a civil engineer in the employ of the Government, surveying for intercolonial extensions in Nova Scotia and other provinces, and when the government of the Leeward Islands asked the Canadian Government to recommend a competent engineer to take charge of their public works, the then acting Minister of Railways and Canals—I think it was the late Sir John Macdonald—on the recommendation of Mr. Schreiber, the chief engineer of Railways and Canals, sent down Mr. Welsh, under an agreement made by the Canadian Government with the Government of the Leeward Islands. This was about eight years ago. Mr. Welsh worked there five years, and the Government of the Leeward Islands were in arrears a large amount of his salary, more than a year and a half, when they gave him notice of the termination of his contract. They gave him notice that the contract was terminated. He asked them for a settlement, but that settlement was delayed and he had to remain there. It may be said that he should have come home. But with what was to him a very large sum of money due him—pay for a year and a half, amounting to about $5,000 in round numbers—he could not very well come away and leave the matter uncertain as to whether he should get his money or not. He stayed there for three months or more before he could get a settlement and secure his money. He now claims that while he was given notice of the termination of his contract, he was obliged by the action of the people there to remain, and that he is entitled to be paid for the time he was obliged to remain. Mr. Welsh himself is helpless to enforce the bargain against the Government of the Leeward Islands, but this Government are in a position to press the matter. The previous Government sent Mr. Welsh out, and the present Government inheriting the—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Sins.

Mr. WALLACE—the sins of their predecessors—and improving on those sins in many cases—should urge this case to a settlement. The Government of this country undertook to procure a man for this service at the request of the Government of the Leeward Islands. The matter has been referred to the Colonial Secretary, and he has perfunctorily disposed of the case. But this is the case of a Canadian citizen going to serve another Government under contract made by the Canadian Government, and I think it is the duty of the Government to look after the interests of this citizen as if they were directly interested—as indeed they are, the bargain having been made with them. Now, this Government has had some correspondence, both with the Leeward Islands and the Colonial Secretary, but Mr. Welsh gets no redress and gets none of the money properly due him. I think Mr. Welsh has the right to expect the Government to make proper representations to the Colonial Department. I believe such representations have been made, but the matter has been allowed to drop and lapse. It has not been followed up.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What would my hon. friend (Mr. Wallace) expect us to do besides making representations to the Colonial Office?

Mr. WALLACE. The Colonial Office has simply thrown the case aside. I think the Canadian Government should say: This man was sent to the Leeward Islands under the instructions of the Canadian Government at the request of the Government of the Leeward Islands, and we demand, and fairly demand, that they receive legitimate treatment and be paid the balance of the salary to which he is fairly entitled. This Canadian citizen was sent 2,000 miles away under an agreement by which his expenses were to be paid going and returning, and he was even to be paid for the time returning; but they did not pay his wages and he had to remain there until he got a settlement. This Government could make representations both to the Government of the Leeward Islands and to the Colonial Office, for the Government of the Leeward Islands communicated directly with the Government of Canada when they desired a man of Mr. Welsh's qualifications. This is a case where only the Government can act. It may be said that Mr. Welsh could go down and sue the Government of the Leeward Islands, but practically that is out of the question. If he sued the Government there and had a jury of the ebony-coloured gentlemen down there who understood that this man was trying to get from their country, it is not possible that he would receive fair treatment. Besides he could not be expected to undergo the expense necessary for the proceeding. The Government here should represent the case of Mr. Welsh just as strongly as if they had to pay the money out of their own pocket, for they sent Mr. Welsh there and made the bargain under which his services were to be given. Under these circumstances, I think they should make the strongest possible representations both to the Colonial Secretary and also to the Government of the Leeward Islands to accord justice to Mr. Welsh.

Mr. WALLACE.

Civil Government—

Customs Department $1,750

Mr. FOSTER. May I ask the Minister of Customs if he has that information from his department with reference to the Chicoutimi mill machinery?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Nothing further than what I have given the hon. gentleman. The machinery was brought in and warehoused while the mill was in the course of construction. The full amount of the duty has been paid.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the hon. gentleman tell me what was the date of the payment of the duty.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. On May 14th, $2,813.20 was paid. This machinery did not all come in at the same time. While it was coming in, it was warehoused pending appraisalment, to be settled when it all came in.

Mr. FOSTER. Was May 14th the final payment?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think so. It came in at different dates, some of it as late as March. Instruction was sent that it was to be warehoused and that the duty was to be paid pending appraisalment.

Mr. WALLACE. What was the object in taking that unusual course?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I do not know that it was particularly unusual. The mill was not up, the machinery kept coming along, and was warehoused.

Mr. WALLACE. Is the mill running now?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I do not know.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend has all that information in his pocket, and he might as well give it to us. He knows the payment I do not want, but he does not know the payment I do want. If he can tell from his department when the last payment was made, he knows when all the payments were made.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman asked me, when I gave the other information, when the whole duties were collected. He wanted to know whether the duties had been paid before the machinery started running. I asked that of my deputy, and he said that we were not in possession of any information that the mill had been running prior to that date.

Mr. FOSTER. Will he try that department again, and get the date on which it was bonded, and the dates at which the different payments were made?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Will the hon. gentleman be frank with me and tell me whether he thinks anything has been irregular? It has been done under warehousing conditions, where they are under a penalty of double duty. The machinery is under your control the whole time. The fact of the machinery being warehoused makes them liable to double duty.

Mr. FOSTER. Will my hon. friend get me that information?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I am giving it to you now.

Mr. FOSTER. I want the dates at which the machinery was bonded and the dates when payments were made.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think I can get that.

Mr. WALLACE. The Minister knows that is quite contrary to the law, unless he sends an officer that has the goods under his charge all the time. But the duty must be paid when the goods come into the country, and he knows that is law.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I do not know anything of the kind. I do not think the hon. gentleman can inform me as to what the law is.

Mr. WALLACE. The law is explicit that the duty has not been paid.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I said it was warehoused, warehoused in the usual way.

Mr. WALLACE. Warehoused means to put it in a bonded warehouse, there is no other way to warehouse. The Minister did not put it in a bonded warehouse because, we are told, that it was put in the factory.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. And the factory was constituted a bonded warehouse.

WAYS AND MEANS.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of Ways and Means.

(In the Committee.)

1. Resolved, That towards making good the Supply granted to Her Majesty, on account of certain expenses of the public service for the financial year ending the 30th June, 1898, the sum of $1,425,412.91 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

2. Resolved, That towards making good the Supply granted to Her Majesty, on account of certain expenses of the public service for the financial year ending the 30th June, 1899, the sum of $28,677,283.08 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Resolutions to be reported.

SUPPLY BILL.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 174) for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the public service for the financial year ending respectively 30th June, 1898, and 30th June, 1899, and for other purposes relating to the public service.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

JUDGES OF PROVINCIAL COURTS.

The House proceeded to consider amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 150) further to amend the Act respecting the Judges of Provincial Courts.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The Senate has made only one important amendment, and two or three minor amendments to this Bill. They have amended the clause with respect to the superannuation of judges at 75 years of age so as to read that superannuation shall take place and apply only to judges hereafter to be appointed.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman not accept that?

The PRIME MINISTER. There is a good deal of point in it, but I propose to consider the whole matter at a future session. I move that all the words in this amendment be struck out and the remaining amendments be concurred in. This will have the effect of postponing the whole question of the superannuation of the judges to a future date. The Government propose to deal with the whole question at a future session.

Mr. FOSTER. Then if new judges are appointed, all of the Act will go into operation with the exception of the section providing for the retirement of judges at 75 years?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Motion agreed to.

THE FRANCHISE ACT.

Mr. FOSTER. Referring to the Franchise Act, I desire to suggest that a number of copies be printed and distributed to the members of the House. Many members are away or going away, and the revision of the lists is going on, and if in connection with the Act there should be printed the schedule, it would be found very useful indeed, and not very costly. The Solicitor General agreed that it would be a good thing to have copies printed. Some half dozen copies might be sent to each member.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). It is a good suggestion.

Mr. FOSTER. Then it will not need a motion?

The PRIME MINISTER. No, it is not needed.

The PRIME MINISTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 6.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 13th June, 1898.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

STATUS OF CORONER IN NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

Mr. DAVIN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to make one or two remarks in order to put the House in possession of the facts as regards the position we are in in the North-west Territories.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman, I fear, is going to do more than put a question.

Mr. DAVIN. I will put myself in order. The North-west Territories are placed by Imperial statute, 34-35 Victoria, under the Parliament of Canada. I must say that, with some qualifications, the North-west Territories are to this moment under the legislative control of this Parliament. Even as regards the powers we give by legislation in this House, there is a saving clause; and at any moment this Parliament could resume its plenary authority over those territories, but I may call attention to the 13th section, chapter 50, of the Revised Statutes, which defines the position of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council at that time:

The Lieutenant-Governor in Council shall have such powers to make ordinances for the government of the North-west Territories as the Governor in Council from time to time confers upon him, but such powers shall not, at any time, be in excess of those conferred by the 92nd and 93rd sections of the British North America Act, 1867, upon the legislatures of the several provinces of Canada.

There was a slight amendment in 1888, but of no importance. There was no amendment in 1889 and none in 1890. I should probably have said that the fourth section of chapter 50 of the Revised Statutes reads as follows:—

Mr. FOSTER.

There shall be for the territories an officer called the Lieutenant-Governor, appointed by the Governor in Council, by instrument, under the Great Seal of Canada, who shall hold office during pleasure.

The Lieutenant-Governor shall administer the government, under instructions from time to time given him by the Governor in Council or by the Secretary of State of Canada.

The North-west Territories—where we have, for all practical purposes, responsible government—apart from the powers given to the legislative assembly, to which I shall call attention, are as completely under the control of the Dominion Government as the Yukon district will be after the Act that we passed this session is assented to. In 1891 a very important Act was passed, to which I wish to call the attention of the House for a minute. That Act enlarged the powers of what might be called the territorial parliament, and by one section, which is the one we are interested in at present, it enacted: The administration of justice in the territories, including the constitution, organization and maintenance of the territorial courts of civil jurisdiction, including the procedure therein, but not including the power of appointing any judicial officers. This is subsection 10 of section 13, as amended by section 6 of the Act of 1891: the difference observed between it and the provincial powers in the British North America Act will be familiar to the hon. gentlemen. Here is the way the powers are given to the province in subsection 14 of section 92 of the British North America Act:

The administration of justice in the province, including the constitution, maintenance and organization of provincial courts, both of civil and of criminal jurisdiction, and including procedure in civil matters in those courts.

Now, the next amendment that was made of any importance was in 1894, when some powers were added, but nothing bearing on the subject which we have to deal with to-day. Then comes the Act of 1897, which changed the name of the executive committee of 1894 to that of the executive council. In the Act of 1894, I forgot to say, it is provided that the Lieutenant-Governor shall consult with his executive committee as to the expenditure of all funds, not only strictly local funds, but the funds voted by this Parliament. Up to the passing of the Act of 1897, the clerk of the assembly was a Dominion officer. I now return to the section of the North-west Territories Act which, passing away from provisions as to the administration of justice in civil matters in the territories, deals with criminal matters, and then comes to coroners and inquests; and I will ask the attention of the House to these sections—section 82 to 87 of the Revised Statutes, chapter 50:

82. The Indian Commissioner for the territories, the judges of the Supreme Court, the Commissioner and Assistant Commissioner of the North-west Mounted Police, and such other persons as the Lieutenant-Governor—

Mark this: the Lieutenant-Governor, not as advised by his executive council, but the Lieutenant-Governor as the agent of this Government.

—from time to time appoints, shall be coroners in and for the territories.

83. Except as hereinafter provided, no inquest shall be held upon the body of any deceased persons by any coroner, unless it has been made to appear that there is reason to believe that the deceased died from violence or unfair means, or by culpable or negligent conduct either of himself or of others, under such circumstances as require investigation, and not through mere accident or mischance.

84. Upon the death of any prisoner, the jailer or officer in charge of the jail where the prisoner dies, shall immediately give notice to the nearest resident coroner, and such coroner shall proceed forthwith to hold an inquest upon the body.

85. It shall not be necessary in any case that a coroner's jury shall exceed six persons, but in every case of an inquest, six jurors must agree in order to render the verdict valid.

86. Coroners shall have the same power to summon witnesses and to punish them for disobeying a summons to appear or for refusing to be sworn or to give evidence, as are enjoyed by justices of the peace.

87. The fees of coroners, jurors and witnesses attending in criminal trials and inquests may be fixed from time to time by the Governor in Council, and paid in such manner as he directs.

That is, the Governor General, as will be seen by the interpreting clause. These provisions have never been repealed.

You will observe the distinction between Lieutenant-Governor in Council and Lieutenant-Governor when used alone, as it is in section 82 of the North-west Territories Act. The coroner is, therefore, appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor, not as advised by any one, but as a Dominion officer. I thought it was necessary that I should make this clear, because it is perfectly plain, from the debates in this House, that in certain quarters, which ought to be properly informed, they really do not know what is the state of the law in this country as regards the North-west Territories, and the very department that should know what is the actual position of the coroner, actually stated, by its mouthpiece in this House, that the coroner in the North-west Territories is a local officer, whereas he is a Dominion officer.

Motion to adjourn negatived.

SUPPLY BILL.

Bill (No. 174) an Act granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the public service for the financial years ending respectively the 30th June, 1898, and the 30th June, 1899, and for other purposes relating to the public service (Mr. Fielding) read the second time and considered in committee.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the said Bill be read the third time.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. FOSTER. On the motion for the Supply Bill, I ask the House for a few moments of its time—which is not so valuable as it was at an earlier stage of the session—in order to make some comments on this Bill or upon certain features of the financial administration of the Government as illustrated in the Supply Bill. In the first place, it may be noted that this is the largest Supply Bill that ever was presented to this Parliament for its assent: and it cannot be considered remarkable, therefore, that it should call for some comments. The comments I intend to make upon the Bill shall be directed to two particulars, two prominent features: First, the utter repudiation of pre-election pledges with reference to the management of the finances of the country apparent in the administration of the present Government, and illustrated in this Supply Bill; second, the startling disregard of old and salutary methods of administration shown by the Government, of which notable examples are to be found in the present Supply Bill.

First, then, with regard to the pledges of economy. It is an old saying that we are to teach line upon line and precept upon precept. The oldest and greatest truths are those which are most frequently repeated. So, I hope I shall not jar the sensitive nerves of hon. gentlemen opposite if I ask them for another time—and not for the last time—to listen to pledges which they have already made. An influential member of the Liberal Opposition, not a member of the present Government—though probably this statement will be a reminder of disappointment to the hon. gentleman—the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) reiterated a statement with reference to the attitude of his party on the expenditures of the country. I choose one sample of his statements previous to the last election. In 1895, the hon. member for North Norfolk declared:

The Liberal party, if in power, could at once reduce the public expenditure and effect other savings to the extent of $5,000,000 per annum, without impairing the efficiency of the service.

This represented one wing, and a large wing, of the Liberal party at that time. The election documents in the province of Prince Edward Island for which, of course, I hold my hon. friend the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) largely responsible, contained the following:—

The Liberal party says that several millions may be lopped off the present expenditure, without injury to the public service. Hon. David Mills estimates the probable saving at $4,000,000.

The present Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), at one time Finance Minister of this Dominion, and the principal financial critic of the late Government, declared in this House in 1896 :

For my own part, I do not hesitate to tell him—

That is the Finance Minister——that I consider a yearly expenditure of $40,000,000, or $38,300,000, altogether too large for the present resources of Canada. I say it is a disgrace and a shame to the Government that have been entrusted with our affairs that they come down to us and ask for an expenditure of $38,300,000 a year for federal purposes. Sir, the thing is utterly unjustifiable. Sir, there is very little use for hon. gentlemen whining over this matter. They ought to try and meet it, and the way to meet it is to reduce our present establishment, to reduce your present extravagant mode of government, and to reduce your extravagant ideas. I have said before, and I repeat it, that $38,000,000 is, in my judgment, a monstrous sum for this people to be called on to provide for.

The right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), who leads the present Government declared in Toronto, shortly before the last general election :

Has the expenditure gone down? No. It has gone up. It went up by one, two, three, five, ten millions, and more, until it is now thirty-eight millions and the Conservatives do not shrink from it, but swallow it all. If we get into power we will follow the example of Mr. Mackenzie, and I say that, although we may not be able to bring back the expenditures to what they were under him, we can reduce the amount two, yes, three millions of dollars per year.

But, Sir, coming back to the basis of all these statements, the convention of 1893, we find the party then assembled declaring :

We cannot but view with alarm the large increase of the public debt and of the controllable annual expenditure of the Dominion, and the consequent undue taxation of the people under the Governments that have been continuously in power since 1878, and we demand a strict economy in the administration of the Government of the country.

These, Mr. Speaker, are samples of the pledges, all in the same direction, which were made during seventeen years, and more especially within the last five years before the elections of 1896, and made by the Liberal party then in Opposition, now in power.

We have seen, then, what their pledges were. Let us ask, now, what has been the practical performance of these pledges. Well, Sir, as to the debt of the country. The net debt on the 30th June, 1896, was $258,497,432. On the 30th June, 1897, it was $261,538,596, an increase of $3,041,163. On the 30th June, 1898, it will be, according to the estimate of the Finance Minister at the time of his late Budget speech, $266,038,596, or an increase of $4,500,000 over 1897, making an increase in the two years of $7,541,163, or an average of $3,770,581 per year. Now, the net debt of the Dominion in 1890, when the late Government was in power, was $237,533,211, and in 1896, when they went out of power, it was $258,497,432, being an increase in those years of $20,964,221. Taking off $2,394,000 from that, which was transferred and charged in 1895, although incurred in 1884 (being for the North Shore Railway bonds), we have an increase of $18,570,000, which is an average increase for these years of $2,652,900. For that the Liberal-Conservative Government and party were denounced, and on the basis of that increase it was declared that the party then in Opposition, if it came into power, would greatly improve that deplorable state of things, as stated in its platform of 1893. They have done that, Sir, by making an increase in debt to date of $3,770,581 per year against an average of $2,652,900 for the six years preceding. But, Sir, this would not be so bad if there was a prospect of an early stoppage of this increase; but every hon. gentleman present knows that with the schemes now under way and the schemes that are on the way, there is no possibility of any decrease, but all of us who are practical look for a steady and large increase of the public debt under the present Government.

There is the practical performance; I have read you the solemn pledge. It is for you and the country to judge how the performance approaches the pledge. Next, Sir, with reference to taxation. It was declared that the taxation was altogether burdensome and too great, and that if the Liberal party came into power the taxation would be rendered less burdensome, and the amount taken from the people would be less. Let us see how that pledge has been carried out, as shown by the following table of customs actually paid in according to the Public Accounts :

1891-92	$ 20,501,059
1892-93	20,954,003
1893-94	19,198,114
1894-95	17,640,466
1895-96	19,833,279
Total, 5 years.....	$ 98,126,921
Average per year.....	19,623,384

Now, Sir, in 1896-97 the customs receipts were $19,478,247, not much difference between that and the preceding year; but in 1897-98 the customs taxation, by the statement of the Minister of Finance made in his Budget speech, will amount to $21,000,000, or an increase of $1,400,000 in the sum of the customs taxation in 1897-98 over the average of 1891-92 to 1895-96. The other form of taxation is the excise taxation, shown as follows :—

1891-92.....	$ 7,945,097
1892-93	8,367,363
1893-94	8,381,088
1894-95	7,805,732
1895-96	7,926,005
Total	$ 40,425,285
Average	8,085,057

Mr. FOSTER.

In 1896-97 the excise produced $9,170,378, and for 1897-98, when we come back to a more normal condition, the Minister of Finance estimates the duty at 8 million dollars. So we find that the excise taxation has increased as well as the customs taxation under the present regime as compared with that of the Liberal-Conservative Government. Taking the total taxation shown by these two, we find that, whereas the average in the five preceding years was $27,710,000, in 1896-97 it was nearly $1,000,000 greater, or $28,648,625 and in 1897-98 it is to be $1,300,000 greater, or $29,000,000, as estimated by the Finance Minister; and in 1898-99 he estimates the total taxation at $29,500,000. So that in 1898-99 the total taxation by customs and excise will be $29,500,000, or nearly $2,000,000 greater in amount than the total customs and excise taxation in the average of the years between 1891-92 and 1895-96. Taking the total revenues of the Dominion, the total amount of money that is taken from the people to be spent, the average of the five years preceding 1896-97 was $36,412,378; but in 1896-97 that increased by $1,400,000 to $37,829,000; and in 1897-98 it increased to $39,300,000, or $2,900,000 more than the average from 1891-92 to 1895-96; and in 1898-99 the Minister of Finance estimates it to be $40,500,000, or as nearly as possible, $4,000,000 greater than the average from 1891-92 to 1895-96. How exactly the prophecy—no, the solemn pledge and undertaking of the right hon. gentleman who leads the Government, has been reversed. He pledged himself that if they came into power it would be possible to reduce the total taxation by one, two, three, and the Hon. David Mills said, four million dollars, so that when 1898-99 had passed there should be a decrease of $4,000,000; but by that time it will have actually increased by $4,000,000. There you have the pledge, here you have performance: and the House and the country can see how the pledge and the performance tally with each other. But hon. gentlemen will say they have reduced the rate of taxation. How much? The rate of taxation on dutiable goods in 1893 was 30·28 per cent; in 1894, 30·87 per cent; in 1895, 30·87 per cent; in 1896, 30·07 per cent; 1897, 30·04 per cent. That is the reduction in the rate of taxation on dutiable goods, was exactly 300ths of 1 per cent in the year 1897, as compared with the year 1896. Hon. gentlemen say: But the reduced tariff was only a short time in force in 1897; for a period of about two months. Very well, that is a fair argument. Then, in order to meet the case as regards the tariff going fully into effect, if you take the comparison between the first six months of 1897-98 and of 1896-97, you find that the rate of taxation on dutiable goods was reduced by exactly 45·100ths of 1 per cent. But the statement is also made that the added 12½ per cent reduction is yet to come. Let the 12½ per cent reduction come, as it will after the 1st of July, and I venture to say that the percentage of reduction upon dutiable goods under the hon. gentleman's tariff will not at most be over 1 or 1½ per cent, if it be that. The burden is increased, the sum taken from the people is increased, the total amount is greater by millions, but the rate of taxation is inappreciably reduced.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Do you take into account the percentages on the total imports?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, I gave that in reply to the hon. gentleman's Budget speech, where you will find it. However, that does not help the matter any. Now, Sir, the hon. gentlemen have made changes in the rate of taxation. They have largely increased the duty upon tobaccos which are very extensively used by the poorer classes of people in this country. They have appreciably raised the price of tobaccos from the large increase of duty which they placed upon them, and they have done that without the satisfaction of gathering into the treasury any proportional amount of revenue, simply because in putting these increased duties upon tobacco, they have put the duties beyond the rate of profitable collection of the revenue and customs duties. They have thereby given an impulse to smuggling, and the revenue has not gained, whilst the people have to pay the increased cost of an article of prime necessity and most widely used by the people. They have added so far as taxation is concerned, this present year, a sum variously estimated at from $300,000 to $500,000 of extra taxation put upon the article of sugar, and which has gone into force with the last tariff enactment of my hon. friend. So, also, duties have in some cases been lowered to the detriment of the industries, to the wiping out almost entirely of the binder twine industry of this country without a corresponding advantage to the consumer, and to the detriment of other industries in this country, notably the shirt, collar and cuff industry, which is now struggling with the competition made unfair to it by the absurd arrangement of the tariff upon their raw material and their manufactured goods, so that a reduction of wages ensues, and upon the labouring poor of the country fall the stress and the burden.

But, Sir, whilst this increased taxation has been put upon sugar and tobacco, what else has happened? The hard-working, wage-earning class of the country has had ½ per cent taken off the interest on their deposit in the Government savings banks, and the Government have been able to save a quarter million of dollars and after 1st July will have saved a half million of dollars because of the lowering of the rate on the deposits. One-half of that lowering to 3 per cent, I think, in the main could not be found fault with; the lowering of the other half, to 2½ per cent, is a hardship and should not be done, unless it were offset by the application of it to decrease the burdens of the people. But the half million saved in the two years by the two reductions in the interest on savings bank deposits of the country has been accompanied by the increase upon the duties on sugar, which the poor people consume, and the increase on which was placed upon it during this present year. So that, while taking out of the wage-earning class 1 per cent on the interest on deposits paid them on the one hand, the country obtains no surcease of taxation, for on the sugar largely used by these same classes about an equal amount of taxation is placed.

The next subject is with respect to the pledge made in regard to the expenditures of the country. That pledge was, as I have read it, that the expenditure of the country was to be decreased by one, two, three, and probably four millions. How has it turned out? The average expenditure on Consolidated Fund from 1887 to 1895-96, inclusive, was $36,910,000. In 1895-96, the last year of the Liberal-Conservative Government, the expenditure was $36,949,142. In 1896-97, the first full year of the Liberal Government, the expenditure increased to $38,349,759, or $1,400,000 over and above the average expenditure from 1887 to 1896, inclusive. In 1897-98, the expenditure on Consolidated Fund is to amount to $38,750,000, or an increase of $1,800,000 over the average expenditure from 1887 to 1896. Take capital account, and I mean by that the capital sum as voted in the Estimates. The average capital expenditure from 1887 to 1895-96 by the Liberal-Conservative Government was $3,550,480; in 1895-96 it was $3,781,311, that year having $1,000,000 of militia estimates charged to capital, which was an unusual expenditure. In 1896-97 the expenditure on capital was $3,523,160, and in 1897-98 it is to be $7,506,185, or $4,000,000 over the average expenditure from 1887 to 1895-96. Adding revenue and capital, they show a total average expenditure, 1887—1896, on Consolidated Fund and capital account, as voted in the Estimates, of $40,460,480; but in 1896-97 the total expenditure by this Government was $41,872,919, or $1,400,000 greater, and in 1897-98 it is to be $46,256,185, or nearly $6,000,000 greater than the average expenditure from 1887 to 1895-96 by the Liberal-Conservative Government. This does not, however, show the total expenditure. You must add to these sums the railway subsidies, general and special: the immense vote to the Canadian Pacific Railway Crow's Nest Pass Railway, $3,630,000, which will mature during the present and next year. You have to take into account the payment to Manitoba of $475,000, or thereabouts, for her public buildings. You must take into account also the loan which was put through on almost the last day of the session, of $2,000,000 to the harbour of Montreal, which, though it is a loan, adds to the liability of the country and is so counted in by the financiers of the world's market when loans have to be asked for. And to this generous sum there are other expenditures which are looming up not far in the distance. The first raid on the Treasury of the Dominion by the provinces has come. It will be followed by others. It has been successful, not quite so successful as the hon. Minister expected, thanks to the good sense and wisdom of the other House, but still it has been material and it has succeeded; after years will show its development and the success of the provinces in each instance. They are preparing, and they are preparing on the basis of pledges made at the election of 1896, which must be implemented, if the hon. gentlemen expect to face those by whose votes and influence they got into power in 1896, and by whose votes and influence they can alone hope to remain in power after their present term is over. But when we come to the estimated expenditures, we find the extravagance of the Government especially manifested, and the utter disregard and practically absolute repudiation of the pledges they made in every part of this country with respect to expenditure. On Consolidated Fund account the actual estimates for 1898-99, now before the House, are $41,073,774, but every one knows that next year we shall see in the supplementaries for 1898-99 an addition for that year probably equal to the supplementaries brought down for the current year, and then the Estimates for 1898-99 will be $42,373,774. The Estimates already down on capital account reached $6,851,282. Adding to that an equal amount to the capital estimate brought down in the supplementaries for the current year it would make a total sum of $7,000,000. So that, totalling up, we find the actual estimate brought down is $47,925,056, or an increase of $6,200,000 on these accounts over the Estimates of 1895-96; and if we take the estimated supplementaries to be brought down, we get a total estimate of $49,373,774 on Consolidated Fund and capital account, as compared with $41,768,573 on those two accounts in 1895-96, an increase of $7,600,000 in round numbers. This statement, Mr. Speaker, furnishes food for thought in two directions. In the first and primary direction, as to what hon. gentlemen think when their pledges are carried out by such performances, and the two are brought before an electorate that has been grossly deceived; in the other respect, as to what will be the financial condition of the country if this galloping increase in the expenditures goes on and still on. Is there any hope that it will be decreased or delayed in its progress? No, and for the same reason that I have already given. Schemes are already in hand and schemes are on the way to be put in hand, with the increased pressure by those behind upon men who made the great and cardinal mistake of failing to take the necessary action in their first year, when they were laying down their principles and policy and were in a position to have fulfilled their pledges, and stayed the tide, and stayed it effectively and thoroughly, if they had had the moral force to keep to their pledges and do what they believed to be right. These, then, are the performances of hon. gentlemen opposite on the line of their financial administration. So much with regard to that matter.

But, Sir, with reference to my other point of criticism as to the startling disregard of old and salutary methods of administration I have something to say. One of the first things that strikes one is the expenditure of the public money without the authorization of Parliament. I am not going to take the time of the House to marshal all the instances of that, but I will name two or three cases as illustrative. There is one well-founded and acknowledged rule that in the expenditure of public moneys the executive or Government of the country must not spend or must not undertake to spend what Parliament has not authorized it to spend, or what it has not authorized it to undertake to spend. No gentleman on the other side will for a moment contradict that well-established and well-understood rule. The Liberal Government, of all others under its present management ought to have stood firmly by that rule. They denounced every infraction or every alleged infraction of it for the whole term of their Opposition existence, and they pledged their good faith and their word as public men and as a party that they would stand by that rule when they came into office. They have not done so, and what are the results. In the first place, I take the illustration of the Governor General's warrants issued in 1896. The law is plain on the Statute-book. The discussion had upon that matter in this House was one-sided and entirely in one direction. It was not, even by the Minister of Trade and Commerce himself, denied that the law was in its intent in a certain direction, and the late lamented Mr. McCarthy, then member for North Simcoe, made the same admission, if I mistake not, in his speech. But, $2,000,000 of Governor General warrants were asked for and were granted and were partly expended, although each of those votes had been expressly refused by the preceding Parliament, when it was proposed to it, and though it was possible to have had Parliament together and to have had a vote of credit from Parliament, and thus to have kept the salutary and secure rule of administration.

The Baie des Chaleurs Railway, as foreign to our Government railway system as is the railway in Russian Siberia, without warrant or authority of Parliament was taken in hand by the Minister of Railways and administered for four or five months at a loss and with the result of his having to ask Parliament for $18,000 or $20,000 to recoup the treasury. That was done, as I have said, without authorization of Parliament or any warrant at all except the mere personal will of the Minister or of the Government. Those are two examples of many that might be cited to illustrate this fact. Again, contracts are given and entered into without the authorization of Parliament; contracts which call for large expenditures of the people's money, or of the people's domain, which is equivalent to the people's money.

As an example of that let me take the Drummond County Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway arrangement, which, without any previous authorization of Parliament, without even the matter having been discussed in this Parliament, was undertaken by the Minister of Railways, on his own personal initiative, carried through, and a binding contract entered into with those two companies which had the effect of adding a capital obligation equivalent to $7,000,000 at 3 per cent in the yearly expenditure which it called for, for a hundred years, or in perpetuity. Thanks to the wisdom and caution of another body, a part of this Parliament, that deal was not allowed to go through and, as a result, a second arrangement has taken place which on the Drummond purchase alone saves to the people of this country $600,000 of hard cash, and which, in the two arrangements taken together is calculated to save to this country nearly $1,000,000. That deal was entered into without authority of Parliament, without previous discussion in Parliament, and, thanks to the action of the Senate, and the consequent re-arrangement which has resulted, there is a saving to the people of the country of $1,000,000.

Take the Yukon deal of this year. With Parliament within seven days of assembling the Government privately and secretly, and without competition, made a private arrangement with two contractors to give them a monopoly of railway carriage into that country for a number of years and to give them nearly 5,000,000 acres of surveyed and choice gold lands as a subsidy therefor. Parliament did discuss that and, fortunately, Parliament, taking both its branches into account, was able to discount this deal and to save that enormous part of the public domain for the future use and I believe for the future good of the country. These are examples of that vice of administration by the present Government.

The next illustration is that of the principle of doing public work by private bargain without that competition which is the only security, although not even an absolute security against corruption, and which is the best security the country can have as to the regulation of prices and the consequent wise expenditure of public money. And, Sir, concrete examples of this course have been furnished as we have gone through the Estimates, and the statement has been made over and over again, unrepudiated until this hour by any member of the Government, from the leader down, that whenever the Minister of Public Works chooses and whenever the Government thinks fit to allow him, in some matters without consultation with the Government, in some greater matters after consultation with his colleagues, but whenever it shall suit, the principle of public tender and contract based thereon shall be utterly and absolutely repudiated. What are the examples? The Minister of Public Works in the matter of the erection of a stone fence to cost on the whole about $14,000, new work entirely, as plain a piece of work for contract and tender as could possibly be, with its supervision under the eyes of its officer, right here in Ottawa, instead of letting it by tender, carved it up into portions of less than $5,000, and had it done by day's work, giving it to whomsoever he pleased. In the matter of the dredging to be done at Coteau Landing, involving $20,000 expenditure, the Minister of Public Works did not even cut it into less than in $5,000 sections, but gave the contract privately without competition, without the knowledge of the public, to a man whose work was not dredging, whose whole business is entirely foreign to it, but who has the advantage in this respect of being a relative of the Minister himself.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
He is not, but say it.

Mr. FOSTER. By marriage.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
That is not relationship.

Mr. FOSTER. That is a sort of relationship. Anyway it causes a fellow feeling wondrous kind to spring up between the father of the son and the family of the son's wife. The contract was given to this man who had not a dredge of his own, and actually farmed out by him to others, he getting a percentage, how much I cannot tell, but no doubt a very respectable sum. When called to book for this, my hon. friend could only reply that this was the only way in which he could obtain a share of the patronage for his political friends, because unfortunately it was the Liberal-Conservatives who owned most of the dredges. The only way therefore in which he could benefit his friends was by giving the contract to them and letting them farm it out.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
At 8 cents a yard.

Mr. FOSTER. That does not make a bit of difference.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
It makes a great deal.

Mr. FOSTER. What more? You find the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who is called the big policeman of the Government from the province of Ontario, has himself been guilty of loitering in forbidden places, because he came down, the last day but one of the working session, with an agreement made for two or three years with a firm at £8,000 sterling per year, to carry on a steamship line between ports in this country and Manchester, and has not to this day deigned to lay the draft contract on the Table of the House, or give the House any information as to details of the negotiations, other than the explanation he made at the time of asking the House to pass the vote; but that is merely an example among a large number. How are the prices to be settled if no competition is invited? and in that case there was not even the plea of urgency. Public competition was entirely set aside, and the hon. gentleman himself repudiated in that transaction, in this high-handed open way, the principle of letting these great contracts by tenders and basing the contracts on the tenders received from the public.

Mr. FOSTER.

We have the Minister of Agriculture pleading urgency for going about among private parties by letter or messenger and asking them how much they would charge to carry freight between Prince Edward Island and the old country, and then asking us for a sum of money to enable him to make a private bargain. The only plea he gave for not advertising for tenders was the plea of urgency, although he had a whole year to make up his mind and four months to prepare and bring down his estimates.

What more do we find? We find that the Minister of Railways and the Minister of Interior in this Yukon arrangement with Mann & Mackenzie, repudiated the principle of open competition and contract made upon tender.

Then we have the Minister of Militia, without any plea for urgency, which any reasonable man will admit, giving $33,000 worth of miscellaneous supplies to his friends by private bargain, without even inviting competition among them, so as to give some security at least that the prices would be on a par with the market prices. We find him doing this in two sections—placing one order at a certain time and one about twenty days later, and showing by the fragmentary papers he has brought down that the prices of his second order are largely higher than the prices of his first, which proves conclusively that if he had put up the whole supplies for tender, he would have had them much cheaper by many thousand dollars according to his own showing. He had time to write to distant parts such as Halifax and Kentville and other cities of the Dominion, yet he came with the plea of urgency. And to show the bad faith of such a plea, let me point out that the vessel only started with these supplies from the Pacific Coast on the 10th of June of this year, and this action he contemplated as early as February, 1898. So much as instances of the repudiation by the present Government of the principle of inviting tenders and open competition are given and based upon those tenders.

What more has been done? The spoils system has been introduced into the civil service of the country and its permanency so far as future appointees are concerned, has been completely done away with. Hereafter all such appointees of the Government may at any hour be dismissed at the will of the Minister, from whatever kind of pressure, and have paid back their own money, which is on deposit, at interest, without any reference to Parliament, the high court of this country, for whose benefit this civil service is supposed to exist and not for the benefit of a party or individual Ministers.

What more has been done? These hon. gentlemen have been willing to avail themselves of every piece of legislation which was in force under the late Government, and which they denounced when in Opposition. This is shown in reference to the superannuation system. Does the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) believe that anything is being accomplished in easing the burden of superannuation in this country?

Mr. McMULLEN. You will not give me much opportunity of saying anything about it this session.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This makes one hour the hon. gentleman has been talking.

Mr. FOSTER. Time is not so precious as it used to be. What has been done with reference to superannuation, of which my Patron friends and the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) and the Postmaster General no doubt will make a fruitful theme of discussion during recess. Not one penny of the burden of superannuation, as respects any employee at present in the Government, has been removed from this country.

Mr. McMULLEN. On the urgent plea of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. FOSTER. I am glad my hon. friend agrees with me. When he gives an excuse for it, he agrees with the fact. I agree in the action that has taken place. It is hon. gentlemen opposite who have to look their inconsistency in the face. My action and that of my hon. friends on this side is thoroughly consistent.

Mr. McMULLEN. The action taken has been entirely in the line of the Bill introduced a year ago.

Mr. FOSTER. On the other hand with reference to future appointments in the service, I am here to state that not one dollar lightening of the burden of that future service has been secured by the legislation passed this session. Why? Because all new appointments for the last four years have been made on the basis of a superannuation abatement, which made their superannuation allowance self-sustaining and without any burden upon the country at all. That is the fact with reference to the result of superannuation legislation. With reference to the practice of superannuations, here is a table brought down by hon. gentlemen themselves, which I shall read:

And it is very well for the Government that denounced the system of superannuation and its intolerable burdens for seventeen years, and, when it came into power, has not lightened those burdens by one single dollar, but has availed itself of the old machinery, the law as it was on the Statute-book, to the extraordinary extent that I have named, in the first full year of its administration.

Mr. McMULLEN. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) tell the House how many of those offices were abolished, and how many were left unfilled. Let me tell the hon. gentleman—

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I have the floor. If hon. gentlemen opposite wish to take that point, I desire to say that I have not stated it, because, if I had, it would have applied to the late Conservative Administration as well as to this. When superannuations are made, there is a certain amount of saving by reason of offices abolished and not filled either by new appointments or promotions.

Mr. McMULLEN. A small percentage.

Mr. FOSTER. No, the percentage may be a large one. I am stating the facts as they appear, and as they are, with reference to the practical administration of the superan-uation system by hon. gentlemen opposite, who have long denounced it.

And now, Mr. Speaker. I have finished the very short and imperfect review I have attempted of these points in connection with the present Supply Bill. I think there is food for thought for the country and for the supporters of hon. gentlemen opposite. I offer this contribution to the discussion with the greatest good-will to my hon. friends opposite, hoping, but hoping without much prospect of fulfilment, that these warnings may be heeded, and that while there is yet time, they may flee from the wrath to come.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). If agreeable, I should like to make some observations upon what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has said, but I think the business of the House would be facilitated by reading the Supply for the third time, with the understanding that I shall have an opportunity to reply on the motion to adjourn the House.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I propose to avail myself of the understanding come to a moment ago, and move the adjournment of the House, so that I may have an opportunity of replying to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster). But first I must express my regret that at such a very late time of the session my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) has found it necessary to commit what I cannot help regarding as something like a breach of faith. I spoke to him this morning, and said I should be pleased if he could inform me if there was to be a debate on the final stage of the Supply Bill. He said that he did not intend to speak more than ten minutes. I said that if that were the case, it would be unnecessary to make any arrangement; otherwise, with the short time at our disposal, we ought to come to some understanding as to the division of the time. The hon. gentleman has occupied an hour and five minutes of the time, and now we have only a few minutes left. I think it a pity that my hon. friend was not able to keep to his engagement a little more faithfully at the close of the session—

Mr. FOSTER. I am sure my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) will allow me a word. There is no use in going into heroics—

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did not know there was anything heroic in what I said—

Mr. FOSTER. I simply availed myself of my right to—

Mr. LISTER. In violation of your promise.

Mr. FOSTER. It was not in violation of a promise. Mr. Speaker, I do not like that kind of language used across the floor of the House. The hon. member (Mr. Lister)

Mr. FOSTER.

in this his farewell session, simply sits there and calls me a—

Mr. LISTER. What right have you to say that this is my last session?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, am I to have protection? Am I to have protection from this bully?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) be called upon to withdraw that remark.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think that both remarks should be withdrawn.

Mr. FOSTER. Very well; let us withdraw them mutually.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member who has the floor will withdraw his observation.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has not the floor.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understood he had the floor on a point of personal explanation or point of order.

Mr. LISTER. As you have decided, Mr. Speaker, that what I said is out of order, I withdraw it on that account.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman has information that he had not before.

Mr. LISTER. I said it was a violation of promise.

Mr. FOSTER. I took advantage of the last reading of the Supply Bill to make some observations, as I have a perfect right to do. I do not see how I could well make them before the Supply Bill was at that stage. It is not an unusual course. On one or two occasions I have done it before. The Finance Minister or the members of the Government must simply be ready for criticism at any time, and ready with their reply, if they wish to make one. The Finance Minister asked me if I were going to speak on the Supply Bill, and I told him that I was. He asked me how long I should speak, and I said I did not think it would be more than ten minutes. It was more than ten minutes. If I have done wrong in that, I must apologize. After all it is not always that one speaking in this House keeps his remarks within the time he expects.

Mr. McMULLEN. I want to say one word. I expected to say something on the Supply Bill, and the hon. Finance Minister asked me to give way and not try to catch the Speaker's eye; that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) was going to speak, but he would not occupy more than ten minutes. Had I been disposed to be as selfish as the hon. gentleman I should have taken up the time as well as he.

Mr. FOSTER. I have no objection to the House going on until three o'clock to allow hon. gentlemen all the time they require.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) knows that the House cannot go on until three o'clock, because there is a standing order of the House that it must adjourn at one o'clock. It was my hon. friend (Mr. Foster's) right to say, when I asked him the question, that he did not wish to express any opinion, that he intended to be free to take any course he pleased. Had he done so, I should have had no reason to complain. But he said he was going to speak ten minutes, and he knew that my desire was to make an arrangement—

Mr. FOSTER. I entirely repudiate that assignment of motive. I did not know that that was the hon. gentleman's intentions, nor did he say so. If I considered the idea with which he spoke to me, I thought he wished to know whether I was going to speak, in case that he might wish to reply.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have stated the facts as they occurred. The hon. gentleman assured me that he would only take ten minutes.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman will not say that he informed me in so many words that he wished to make an arrangement.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman said he would speak ten minutes, and I said: It is unnecessary, then, to talk about an arrangement.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not hear the hon. gentleman.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I regret, Mr. Speaker, that the time has been occupied, because it is utterly impossible to follow the hon. gentleman in all that he has said. What I shall be able to say will necessarily be hurried and incomplete. I should have imagined that, with his former experience, my hon. friend would not have attempted to play the part of an alarmist with reference to the financial policy of the Government. He indulged in one of these alarmist speeches during the first session he was in Opposition, but experience has shown that his alarm was unnecessary; in the light of the public accounts, all his predictions of financial disaster were shown to be unwarranted. We hope and believe that it will be the same in the future. The hon. gentleman is right in saying that these Estimates are somewhat large. But the items in the Estimates are to be justified on examination, and the hon. gentleman has not dealt with them in such a way as to establish any case to the contrary. He has manifested a disposition, manifested also in the Conservative press, to confuse estimates and expenditure, comparing the Estimates of one year with the expenditure of another, as if the two represented expenditure in the same way. It is important that we should observe the distinction. Persons who are familiar with our financial affairs, of course, know that the Estimates and expenditures are two different things. But the country at large does not so well understand it and there is a constant disposition in the Conservative press to confuse the two. For the purpose of avoiding confusion, it is well that I should point out the difference. I have here the Estimates and expenditures for several years as an illustration:

Year.	Amount authorized.	Amount expended.	Amount authorized but not expended.
1894-95.	$39,252,799.31	$38,132,005.05	$1,120,794.26
1895-96.	37,814,729.33	36,949,142.03	865,587.30
1896-97.	40,264,231.77	38,349,759.84	1,914,471.93

I mention these figures in order that not the House alone, but those outside who follow the proceedings, may understand that though the Estimates appear very large, it does not follow of necessity that these sums of money are expended; on the contrary, owing to various circumstances the Estimates of the year cannot be fully expended. As I have pointed out, in the year 1896-97 the difference between the Estimates and the expenditure was not less than $1,914,471. therefore in comparing the large estimate for the present year it is impossible that a fair comparison can be made with the expenses of former years without making allowance for the saving which always takes place. Now there is a disposition on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite to treat their expenditure for the year 1895-96 as an expenditure on which a fair comparison can be made. The expenditure of that year, the last year of the Conservative Government, was $36,949,142.03; and hon. gentlemen are constantly putting that sum before us as the measure of Conservative expenditure and the standard of comparison. I want to point out that that standard is a very unfair one, that the expenses of the year 1895-96 were entirely exceptional, and that no just comparison can be made by taking that year as a standard. If we turn to the expenditure of several years previous we find there was a constant increase from year to year. I have the figures of the annual expenditure chargeable to income, beginning with 1889-90:

		Increase.
1889-90.....	$35,994,031 47
1890-91.....	36,343,567 96	$349,536 49
1891-92.....	36,765,894 18	422,326 22
1892-93.....	36,814,052 90	48,158 72
1893-94.....	37,585,025 52	770,972 62
1894-95.....	38,132,005 05	546,979 53

An average increase in six years of $427,594 70

Thus we see that from year to year the expenditure of the hon. gentlemen was going on by leaps and bounds. In one year it was slightly checked, in 1892-93, when the increase was only $48,000, but in the following year the increase was $770,000, and in the following year again it was $554,000, which was the increase at the close of the year 1895. Now, with this increase going on from year to year, how did it come about that in 1895-96 the hon. gentlemen were suddenly able to make a reduction of their expenditure? They did in that year show a reduced expenditure to the extent of $1,182,863 as compared with the expenditure of the former year. Does anybody believe that that change was brought about by any real economy? Does anybody suppose that those hon. gentlemen were actually reducing their expenditure and trying to save money? On the contrary, this was accomplished by a mere manipulation of accounts. In the first place, it was accomplished by cutting down expenses for the moment, when the hon. gentlemen must have known that the reduction could not be maintained. In the second place, the reduction was accomplished by throwing over to the next year expenditures which properly belonged to that year, and obliging us to pay them in the following year. From the time this Government came into power down to the present moment they have been often engaged in examining and paying the bills of the hon. gentlemen which were left for us to pay. In the first year of our coming into power we had to provide for a large sum which was incurred for expenses of 1895-96 by themselves, and which should have been paid in that year, but were actually paid in the subsequent year. It was by these means that the hon. gentlemen were able to show an apparent reduction of expenses in 1895-96, which reduction was entirely visionary, which had no substantial reality, and which could not possibly allow the figures of that year to be taken as a fair standard for comparison in future years. But the hon. gentleman himself knew that he could not continue that reduction. While he had shown that his expenditure for 1895-96 was a fraction under $37,000,000, he brought down in his first main Estimates for 1896-97 an amount of $38,306,586; clearly showing that at the very initiation of his financial work in 1896-97 the record which he presented for 1895-96 was a deceptive record, and one that he could not possibly continue. So he increased his main Estimates of that year to a figure which was enormously in excess of his total expenditure the previous year. But that was not the whole story. The hon. gentleman then had Supplementary Estimates. We found when we came into office records of the Supplementary Estimates prepared by the hon. gentleman to the enormous sum of $3,621,689.50 on consolidated account.

Mr. FOSTER. With the hon. gentleman's permission I will take the opportunity of stating that no Supplementary Estimates were brought down, that no Supplementary Estimates were agreed upon to a single dollar.

Mr. FIELDING.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I was perfectly aware that my hon. friend would say that. I repeat that he brought down his main Estimates amounting to $38,308,548, which in themselves were largely in excess of his expenditure the previous year. Then he had Supplementary Estimates of $3,621,689.50, making his proposed expenditure for that year chargeable only to income, irrespective of capital account, $41,930,237.63. In addition to that, his capital account estimates, main and supplementary, were large, but I do not need to dwell on these. Now, the hon. gentleman wishes us to understand that these Estimates had no existence. He stated that before. I say that the hon. gentleman cannot escape the consequence of these Estimates, because he used them to his political advantage. These Estimates were printed for nearly every item, they were distributed among certain favoured friends, they were placed in the hands of candidates throughout the different parts of the Dominion who were permitted to go on the stump and say that this, that and the other public work was provided for in the Estimates. When the other night the Minister of Public Works was accused of neglecting a certain public work by an opposition member, and the latter was asked why he did not look after it before the change of Government, the reply was: I did not neglect it, I did look after it, for it was in the Estimates for the last year. I asked the hon. gentleman: Then there were such Estimates? Yes, he says, that item was provided in them. And the hon. gentleman was right; the item to which he referred was in the Supplementary Estimates.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish just to enter a denial, and if my hon. friend goes on after I deny, I would like to see my denial there in the midst of his speech. The Estimates, those which he calls Estimates, were not Estimates at all; they were simply the demands of the different departments which, as he knows, are submitted to Council, and those of them that are approved of become the Estimates. These were not only not Estimates, but they were never submitted to Council.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman may take whichever horn of the dilemma he pleases. Either these were Estimates submitted to Council and having the assent of the Ministers, or they grossly deceived the people in regard to them. They sent these Estimates to their friends, they were shown around the country. The hon. gentleman knows that there are on record telegrams and letters referring to those items. Whenever in any portion of the Dominion a public work was required, and a candidate thought he could make favour by it, he went to the people and said: I have arranged all that, the money is provided for in the Estimates. Again and again letters were written and telegrams were sent on the part of the Ministers saying: We have arranged to do this work, but the Grits would not allow us to get our Estimates through. The Estimates were printed, I have a copy of them here.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). They were printed in regular form.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend takes occasion to say that they are printed in regular form.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Certainly they were.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not care whether they were printed in regular or irregular form, all I have to say is that they are not Estimates, and never were; they were merely the demands of departments that were going to be submitted to Council, but which were not passed by Council, and many of them were not submitted.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman cannot escape there. Either they were Estimates and the Government meant to spend that money in good faith, or they were documents deliberately prepared to deceive and trick the electors of Canada. Of the two offences I should think the hon. gentleman would rather plead guilty to extravagance than that he had deliberately placed in these documents figures and appropriations intended to deceive the electors of Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. I have to take neither horn of the dilemma, because the facts are not as represented by the hon. gentleman.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I undertake to say that there are very few people who remember the declarations that were made by the candidates of the Conservative party that these Estimates had been prepared, who will not be able to draw conclusions in accordance with my statements. Take the little incident that occurred the other night when my hon. friend from Annapolis (Mr. Mills) complained that there was no appropriation made for a work in his county, and said it had been provided for in the late Government's Estimates. I say that these Estimates were hawked around the Dominion of Canada by the hon. gentleman and his friends in order to get votes, and constituencies were carried on the strength of them. So I think we cannot allow my hon. friend to escape the consequences of these Estimates. Now let us see what our appropriations are for the coming year. Let me say, however, that while our Estimates are large, we have certain large and exceptional expenses to meet. Let us see what they are. The following are the details of these unusual items:

Estimates for items which were not included in former estimates.

1897-98.

Rental to Grand Trunk Railway and Drummond County Railway, from Chaudière to Montreal.....	$ 157,500 00

These figures show that in the current year, now drawing to a close, we have had to provide $814,500 for services that had no existence in previous years. Let us turn now to the Estimates of the coming year:

1898-99.

For an exploratory survey and report as to a railway route between the Stikine River and an ocean port in British Columbia.....	$ 35,000 00

Manitoba arrears.....	236,575 47
	Grand total..... $2,112,151 50

Here then we have in our Estimates for next year more than two million dollars for services that did not appear in the Estimates of the late Government. I wish now to invite the attention of the House to some comparisons of our Estimates with those of the late Government :

COMPARISONS WITH 1897-98.

Liberal estimates, session 1897.....	$39,282,147 79
Liberal estimates, supplementary, session 1898.....	1,287,344 81

	Balance in favour of our estimates for 1897-98..... $2,175,245 03

This is further increased by allowance for the late Government's final supplementaries, necessary in session of 1897, making probably two and a half millions difference in our favour.

COMPARISONS WITH 1898-99.

	Balance in favour of our estimates..$ 2,803,000 19

As regards the expenditure on the civil service, I desire to point out that a large number of superannuations have taken place, and in some cases new officers have been appointed, while in others the offices have been abolished. No doubt as time rolls on we shall be able to do more in that direction. There is no part of the public expenditure in which the people expect greater saving to be made than in the civil service. I believe there are too many officers, and that hon. gentlemen opposite, when in power, yielded too readily to pressure put on them to make appointments. It is much more easily to appoint officers than to remove them, and that has been the experience of the head of every department. My colleagues will be ready to tell the House the difficulties they have met with in attempting to rid the service of some men who are useless, but who have been retained in the service by an influence stronger almost than vested right. The superfluous officers have political friends and relatives on both sides of politics who will tell you that if you remove that man you are going to subject his family to destitution. I suppose these Ministers are only human, and in many cases when they desired to get rid of officials they were obliged to retain them because of the hardship that would be inflicted on the officials and their families. I believe, Sir, that as the days and years go on we shall be able to overcome that, and we shall be able to meet the expectations of the people for a reduction in the expenses of the civil service. We are expending more money on agriculture, but who will complain of that? Surely if there be any class of people in the whole Dominion who ought to receive encouragement from the Government it is the farmers of Canada. My hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) has asked for liberal expenditures in his department, and we have without distinction of party granted him the money. We are spending more money on immigration, and why not? The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) spent a great deal of money on immigration, but he and his Government sent the people out of the country, whereas we are spending money to bring the people here and to keep them here. The exodus if not absolutely stopped—I suppose it will never stop altogether—the exodus has been stemmed and Canadians are having hope and faith in their country now and are staying at home. My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) is bringing thousands of immigrants into the country to swell the population. We must take each of these items of expenditure in detail and if we do we will see that they are all expenditures for the advancement and prosperity of Canada.

Mr. FIELDING.

We have been spending a large amount of money on militia, for we do not keep up an expensive staff as the Conservative Government did, and forget to drill the men. We spent money to open up the Yukon district, and who will blame us for that? We are spending more money on the Intercolonial Railway, and who will blame us for that? We are giving to the people of Prince Edward Island an improvement in their service between the island and the mainland, which was one of the terms of their entering into confederation, and which up to the present has never been fully carried out. We are appropriating money for the plebiscite. Let the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) take these items in detail and if they are wrong let him challenge the vote of the House on them. Why does not the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) do that? Oh, no. He won't do that. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) had the audacity at an earlier stage of the session—is the word audacity parliamentary, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. FOSTER. I won't challenge it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He had the audacity to talk of the Crow's Nest Pass "deal." The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) not only voted for the Crow's Nest Pass "deal," but day after day through the session he manifested more interest in it than the man who introduced the Bill. Day after day when the Bill was not gone on with as fast as he wanted, he would rise in his place and say, what are you going to do with this Bill? The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) was more interested in the Crow's Nest Pass Bill than any other man in this House. He voted for it, he hustled it along, and now he comes back a year afterwards to talk about the Crow's Nest Pass "deal." If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) objects to these things, why does he not take them up item after item and vote against them? We have voted, he says, many millions of dollars. Let him go to the records of the House and he will find that there are not more than two or three paltry items of four and five thousand dollars each with reference to which he has had the courage to divide the House. If these expenditures are lavish, why does not the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) accept his responsibility to Parliament and to the country, and challenge a division on them.

Mr. FOSTER. After you had decimated the House.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) knows that we brought down our estimates at a reasonably early period.

Mr. FOSTER. When did you go into them?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We went into Committee of Supply at a reasonably early period, and we have spent twenty-seven days in Supply, which is quite long enough. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) instead of wasting his time with some trumpery matters had brought his mind to bear on this question of the estimates and challenged what he thought was wrong, he would be in a better position to make his complaint in the House now. But the hon. gentleman and his friends did not do that. They preferred to let the estimates go, knowing that they could not challenge them item by item. They preferred to do that, and then to send out to their press paragraphs containing statements like this, which I take from the chief Conservative organ, the Toronto "Mail and Empire," of Friday last:

HOW WE STAND.

The expenditures proposed so far by the Government for the coming year are as follows:—

Regular Estimates.....	$ 44,912,571
Supplementaries	3,058,376
Further Supplementaries.....	68,500
Judicial salaries, additional.....	27,000
Payable to Manitoba—
For schools	300,000
On account of Parliament buildings	475,000
	$ 48,841,447

Then says the voracious writer:

This is exactly twelve millions more than was spent in the year when Sir Richard stood on Parliament hill and viewed the annual outlays with alarm.

The figures for that year, 1895-96, was $36,949,000.

The chief organ of the Conservative party is willing to have that false statement go before the country, that for the services which the Conservatives in 1895-96 expended $36,949,000 we propose to spend $48,831,000. They take the capital services and the income services; they take them in the first estimates and they take them in the second estimate; they take the proposed payment of $300,000 of Manitoba, and they add it, when even if it had to be paid it would not add one cent to the charges on Canada as it is merely a matter of book-keeping. They take the item on account of Manitoba Parliament Buildings, one-half of which does not enter into the year's expenditure at all but is credited back to Manitoba. They take all these items, income charges and capital charges; they dump them all into one account and they say that over $48,000,000 are being expended by this Government upon services which in the time of the Conservative Government only cost $36,949,000. The author of that statement knew it was an infamous comparison to make when he undertook to roll up capital expenditures and income expenditures and everything of the kind, and compare them with the expenditures of the Conservative Government chargeable to income only. That is on a par with what hon. gentlemen opposite have been doing right along. "But," says the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), "some Liberals thought they could carry on the business of the country at an expenditure of less money." Undoubtedly many Liberals thought that the expenditure in the past was extravagant, and they were right, but they did not realize as fully as they do now the difficulty in cutting down that expenditure. I have no doubt that some of the reductions which they desired will in a short time be carried out. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) says we should be consistent, but there is a true and false consistency. I think it was Emerson who said: Consistency is the bugaboo of little minds. It is much easier to be consistent at times than it is to be right, and the highest consistency is in being consistent with the obligations which the Government has cast upon it. New occasions teach new duties. We recognize that and we are endeavouring to respond to these new duties and to make the new expenditures which have been demanded of us. I believe that the people of Canada will understand that. I believe that the people of Canada are not going to be alarmed because this Government meets its new obligations in a generous spirit. What the people of Canada would be alarmed about would be, if they had any reason to believe that the money placed at our service was to be jobbed away as the public money was jobbed away by the Conservative Government. I have no fear that this Government will be condemned because it is liberal in its expenditure of public money for useful public purposes. It is true that we might have saved money and not opened up the Yukon country. It is true that we might have saved money by not completing our canal system, but the country did not want that sort of economy. I believe the country will ask the question: Is the Government doing what is necessary to meet the new condition of things, and if we can show that these moneys have been expended faithfully and honestly, for the proper development of the country, the people of the country will not blame us for it. I believe that no Government in the history of Canada ever had to deal with so many new and difficult questions in the same space of time as this Government has had to deal with during the twenty-three months it has been in office. Hon. gentlemen opposite knew that very well, and they indulged in fond anticipation that these difficulties would be too great for the Government to surmount. They thought, Sir, that one session of Parliament would put an end to this Government. I believe that one distinguished member of the Opposition was good enough to give us a single session. Well, Sir, we have been here for the second and third session; we have met the attacks of hon. gentlemen opposite, we have had them fishing into the public accounts day after day and week after week, with what result? On one subject they did endeavour to cast the suspicion of corruption upon a transaction with which this Government was connected. But this Government did not let them escape on that. They would have been glad had they been allowed to escape, but this Government insisted that there should be a strict investigation, and the result of that investigation into the Drummond

Mr. FIELDING.

County transaction was that members on that side of the House had to stand up and declare, not only that there was no corruption but that they had never charged corruption. And hon. gentlemen opposite, instead of pressing the matter to a conclusion this session, were ready to ask that it should not be gone on with.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend is not quite fair. He should put in the words there "this session."

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Very well, "this session." My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) thinks that by putting it off this session the public will forget the great outcry that was made by him and his friends as to alleged corruption last year. My hon. friend thinks that the public will forget that it has been proven beyond a doubt that there was not a shade of wrongdoing in connection with the Drummond County Railway. The Government have expended large sums of money, but they have expended them for useful purposes, for purposes which the country does appreciate and will continue to appreciate. Some large sums of money have been expended in opening up the Yukon, and though for the moment the work of the Government has been checked by the foolish policy of hon. gentlemen opposite, yet that opposition would be overcome and the progress of Canada will continue in the meantime. In the North-west and British Columbia we have secured the building of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) voted for and afterwards attempted to condemn. We have in that matter given hope and encouragement to the people in the mining districts of British Columbia, and our action will be a great factor in the development of that province. Coming east we have released the people of the prairie province from the excessive transportation charges which the Conservative Government fastened upon them. We have opened up the trade of British Columbia and the Yukon, as never before, to the merchants of Ontario and Quebec. We have developed the canal system to such an extent that before many months are over, our people will have advantage of the increased trade through the completion of these works to which they have been so long looking. We have extended the Intercolonial Railway into Montreal, into which it should have been extended long ago. We are giving assistance to the great port of Montreal to provide for the large stream of traffic that flows into that port. We have helped the good old harbour of Quebec, which I believe has now a brighter future. We have gone to the maritime provinces, and in order that the trade of Canada, as far as possible, should be carried through the national channels of Canada, we are equipping the Intercolonial Railway, in Halifax and St. John with elevators to receive the grain of Canada and send it across the ocean.

The record of this Government has been one of progress. The one question overshadowing others, which hon. gentlemen opposite fondly hoped would bring this Government down, the great Manitoba school question, my right hon. friend beside me has brought to a settlement, which is bound to bring peace and prosperity to the western country and the whole Dominion. True, we have the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron), and one or two others, conducting a sort of guerilla warfare on the subject, but they show how little faith they have in their own party when they do not venture to move a resolution and challenge a division of the House. They will, no doubt, go on from day to day telling the Roman Catholic population of the province of Quebec and of Manitoba what wonderful things they would do for them, if they had the chance. But all who are concerned will not fail to observe that although these hon. gentlemen are quite ready to make speeches, not one of them will come down with a declaration of Conservative policy and take a division on the subject.

If that is the record of the Government at home, what is it abroad? In our dealings with other nations, this Government has a record of which it may well be proud. The treaties which hon. gentlemen opposite in vain struggled for years to have removed have now been taken away. By the action of my right hon. friend, the British Government were able to denounce the treaties and did denounce them. In our dealings with the United States, we find a better condition of affairs than ever existed before, and the way is opening now to a fair and liberal treaty of reciprocity. Whether at home or abroad, Canada, under the administration of this Government has had progress and prosperity, and if hon. gentlemen opposite will only bear with us in patience we feel satisfied that for many years to come we shall have the same good story to tell them.

I move that the House do now adjourn.

Motion agreed to, and at 1 p.m. the House adjourned.

SPREECH :

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate :

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

I am glad to be able to relieve you from further attendance in Parliament.

Whilst all the measures which public interest seemed to demand, and to which I invited your consideration at the opening of this session, have not received the concurrence of both Houses of Parliament, I congratulate you on the very important legislation which has been the outcome of your deliberations, particularly the Plebiscite Act and the new Franchise Act, which, it is confidently expected, will work satisfactorily in all parts of the Dominion.

I rejoice that during my term of office, it has been my good fortune to witness the improved relations that have grown up between Canada and the neighbouring Republic, and I look forward with much satisfaction to the great benefits that will flow from a settlement of the many questions that have caused irritation in the past.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

I thank you for the liberal provision which you have made for the public service.

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate :

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

I now wish to express the earnest hope that the work of the session may materially advance the prosperity of the country.

I cannot be unmindful of the fact that this is the last occasion on which it will be my privilege to address you from this seat, as the Representative of the Sovereign.

In bidding you a cordial farewell, I have to return my warm acknowledgments of the parting Address, full of loyalty to the Queen and of kindly good-will to myself, which I am officially informed has been unanimously passed by both Houses of Parliament, and which will always constitute a valued token and memorial of my stay amongst you ; and in conclusion I desire to express my most hearty good wishes for your personal happiness and for the welfare of the great interests entrusted to you.
