The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) knows full well that differences of opinion may well exist in regard to the rights accruing under treaties, and under Acts of Parliament, or contracts. This is one of those cases in point, and we maintain our right to proceed in the direction named. This is not the time for us to make an announcement, in advance of the time when the subject would be one of controversy between the parties immediately concerned. The contracting parties will discuss that question, and it will be time enough for Parliament to deal with it after the contracting parties have considered it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Will my hon. friend allow me to suggest that Parliament has the undoubted right to express its opinion in regard to a measure of that kind. I take the ground that the Postmaster General has no authority, the Government of which he is a member has no authority, to bind this country in regard to that which will affect the revenues of the country without taking the House into its confidence. Before he proceeds to make binding arrangements on Canada in that direction, he is bound to have the approval of this House.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I regret that the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) is so indignant at our endeavouring to cement in another way the unity of the Empire.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We understand the hon. gentleman. He has been for years posing as the great advocate of Imperial union, the great advocate of loyalty in season and out of season, but now that he is in the cold shades of Opposition, there is nothing the hon. gentleman can do that he won't do, and nothing he can say that he won't say, in order to embarrass those who are carrying on the affairs of the country.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Are you embarrassed?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, I am not embarrassed. We have the right side of the case; but I point to the hon. gentleman's futile efforts. The country will understand the tactics that have been resorted to, not only in the early part of today, and all through the session, with his Livernashes and his colleagues in the other House sending a new Yukon Bill, to strike a blow at Canada, to prevent us developing the country, and to transfer the whole Yukon trade to the Americans. I understand the hon. gentleman's tactics.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Which clause of the Bill does this come under?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is what I would like to know—how it is in order for the leader of the Opposition to bring into this discussion a proposition that is not at all germane to the measure?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Will my hon. friend allow me to answer him?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If the hon. gentleman wishes to make a speech, he will have an opportunity afterwards.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not want to make a speech, but the hon. gentleman says he would like to know how it is in order. My hon. friend was making a speech to the House in regard to a proposed reduction of postage; and, consistently with that, I suggested to him, without the slightest intention of irritating my hon. friend, that he should take this proper opportunity of explaining to the House what he proposed to do with reference to foreign or outside postage, as well as domestic postage. That has a direct bearing on the revenue, and I had no idea that in making that suggestion, I was doing other than giving my hon. friend an opportunity of making an explanation to the House that he would be glad to make, and that I maintain the House is entitled to receive.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Well, Mr. Speaker, if I misunderstood the hon. gentleman, I certainly would be the first to say so.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. You certainly have.

Mr. MULOCK.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I accept the hon. gentleman's statement, and I cheerfully comply with that portion of his request. He now asks what we propose to do with regard to the postage between Canada and the Empire. Is that the question?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is a smaller question than the one the hon. gentleman pressed upon me before. I give the explanation cheerfully, although the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) fails to see what connection that has with the measure.

Mr. MONTAGUE. No. My hon. friend fails to understand me. The hon. leader of the Opposition asked a wider question than the question the hon. gentleman is referring to. He asked how the hon. gentleman came to announce the policy in Toronto, whether the policy then announced was now abandoned, and what course the hon. gentleman intended to pursue. These were three subjects that need not have raised the ire of the hon. gentleman.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They did not raise my ire at all. I suppose there is one mouthpiece for the Opposition, and I suppose the leader of the Opposition is able to express his own views, and I will cheerfully give the answer to the question he has asked last, although it has no bearing on this question.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It bears on the revenue of the Post Office Department.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The law under which the revenue between Canada and the Empire is administered is not dependent on this Bill. It is dependent, so far as Canada is concerned, on the existing law on the Statute-book of Canada; and, with regard to that, I would say that for my part I would rejoice if the conference could see its way to adopting a lower rate of postage between Great Britain and all parts of the British Empire. If that is not possible, I hope the conference will see its way to improve the postal relations between Canada and Great Britain. Our postal relations with Great Britain to-day, having regard to those existing between Canada and the United States, and having regard to the extent of our trade and commerce, and to our relations of all kinds with the mother country, are not as they should be. It is not in the interest of Canada that there should be 400 per cent higher rates of postage between Canada and Great Britain than between Canada and the United States. For 5 cents you can write a one-ounce letter to the United States and get an answer, and it costs 20 cents to write a one-ounce letter and get an answer from Great Britain. If postal communication is necessary to trade and commerce, if it is necessary to maintain intimate relations between the old land and Canada. If it is necessary to keep the people of Canada in touch with the people of England, then by all means hon. gentlemen opposite ought to be only too glad to have any measure brought about that tends to promote such freer intercourse; and, if it is possible to reduce the rate so that in communicating with Great Britain, we shall be at least under no disadvantage as compared with communicating with the United States, that would mean a reduction from 5 cents per half ounce to 3 cents per ounce, which would result in a shrinkage in our revenue, assuming that there would be no increase of business from such reduction, of about $50,000 per annum.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Would the hon. gentleman permit me to put a question to him? Does the hon. gentleman recognize that the postal relations between all the parties to the Berne Convention are exactly the same? For instance, every party that has entered into the Berne Convention, is, by that convention, obligated to adopt the same postal rates as are imposed by the convention.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. For the reason I gave my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition, I do not propose to discuss the legal points of the question.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. That is not legal.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have given the hon. gentleman all the answer I am at liberty to give him.

Mr. FOSTER. Will my hon. friend allow me a question? What I would like to know is this. There is considerable difference of opinion as to what the hon. gentleman proposed to do some four or five or six months ago with the postage between Canada and Great Britain—what instructions he sent out, and the like of that. Evidently, he met some difficulties in the way of his proposal. What was the hon. gentleman's proposal at that time, how far did he go to put the proposal into effect, and what were the difficulties he met? That was a matter of administration that has been attempted by a member of the Government; and in the eyes of the public of Canada and of this Parliament, we want to know how the hon. gentleman fared.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am glad the hon. gentleman is so interested in my administration.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker—

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have the floor.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman will just allow me—I think it will be for his benefit. I wish to enter a mild protest against any Minister of the Crown, when introducing a Bill, treating questions which are pertinent, and which any member of this House has a right to ask and get information upon, as an insult to himself and an impertinence. If the hon. gentleman takes that view, he will find that it will not be very healthy for him.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Mr. Speaker, I can well understand the hon. gentleman's question. I have no desire to withhold any information from him. Of course, I must assume that he is asking for information, although he doubtless knows the answer to everything he has asked as well as I do, inasmuch as everything that has been done up to this moment, except the correspondence, is in the possession of the public.

Mr. FOSTER. I am in utter ignorance of everything except the announcement in Toronto. I believe I heard of that.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I cannot answer all these questions at once; but hon. gentlemen know that the aim of the Government is, if possible, to bring about better postal relations between Canada and Great Britain and all parts of the Empire. Those changes must result in a reduction of the rates; and, if the rates, thus reduced, are followed by an expansion of business, it is not likely that there would be a loss of revenue; but, on the contrary, all experience tends to show that there would be a gain of revenue.

Mr. MONTAGUE. My hon. friend has not answered the question of the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster).

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I suppose that any hon. gentleman who has not had any question he put answered will be good enough to call my attention to it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not know that any member of this House is not entitled to remind the hon. gentleman that he has not answered a question put to him.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman asked me if I had answered the question of the hon. member for York.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Quite so, and I am perfectly sure you did not, and your answer to me is an impertinence.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I must leave it to the House to judge as to whether the hon. gentleman is an authority on what is courteous or not.

Mr. FOSTER. You had better call it six o'clock, and you will be in better temper after recess.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am in excellent temper now. I regret that these reforms and improvements made in the mail service do not meet with the approval of hon. gentlemen who formerly had to do with the administration of the department.

Mr. FOSTER. Better take recess now.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, I expect to finish before six o'clock.

Mr. FOSTER. I must say that the hon. gentleman cannot finish before six o'clock, if he is going to give me an answer to my questions.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Will the hon. gentleman repeat his questions?

Mr. FOSTER. I put three questions. The hon. gentleman understood, as a matter of administration, to do a certain thing some three or four months ago in reference to postage between Canada and Great Britain. He certainly knew the grounds upon which he proposed to act, and I think the House should know them. He knows the actions he took and the instructions he gave, and the House would like to know those actions and those instructions. He certainly bumped up against some difficulty, and the House would like to know what that difficulty was and whether it is still in the way.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. With regard to the first question, namely, by what authority I acted, I acted by the authority that every Government representing a member of the Postal Union has. That is a point of law subject to interpretation. As to what I did, we decided to reduce the postage to 3 cents per ounce letter between Canada and Great Britain and all the colonies, to take effect on the 1st of January. Steps were taken to announce that reduction. Among other points where it was announced, I understand from my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) that it was announced in Toronto.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. gentleman mentions my name and says he understood from me that it was announced in Toronto. The hon. gentleman's collector of customs made the announcement on the authority of the Postmaster, and it has not been contradicted since.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, it was made on my authority. The third question is whether the change was suspended and at whose request. It was suspended, as I have said before, at the request of the Imperial authorities.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman be good enough to bring down a copy of the Berne Convention so that we may have it for discussion to-night? It would be well if he would go a little more into details. What directions were issued to the different postmasters in the first place? And afterwards, when he found his scheme could not be carried out, what steps were taken to mitigate the condition, so that the letters would not go to the dead letter office?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have finished all I have to say, except to answer the last question, namely, what steps were taken to inform the postmasters to carry the change into effect and afterwards to suspend it. It was announced in the ordinary way and gazetted. Subsequently, when the Imperial authorities suggested the suspension, the postmasters were notified and the press also, and the English Government joined with us to prevent any inconvenience arising in the event of any letters being sent forward insufficiently prepaid. They gave instructions to their postmasters to see that none of the letters should be treated as insufficiently stamped in Great Britain, and we in like manner took the precaution of warning our postmasters in this country, that if any letters were insufficiently stamped in the first fifteen days of January, they were to affix stamps to the amount of the shortage. The total shortage amounted to $90, or thereabouts.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

PRIVATE BILLS.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I will ask my hon. friend from Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram) and my hon. friend from South Grey (Mr. Landerkin) to allow Bills in their names to stand. The leader of the Government is not able to be here this evening, and, as these Bills will be the subject of some conversation which cannot very well take place in his absence, I make this request.

Mr. CLARKE. When will they come up again?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. On Monday.

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 137) to revive and amend the Acts respecting the International Radial Railway Company.—(Mr. MacPherson, by Mr. McMullen.)

POST OFFICE ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. CLARKE. I would like to ask the Postmaster General, before he closes his remarks in moving the second reading of this Bill, if it is his intention to make any change in the regulations respecting parcel post. I think that the parcel post service is being used to do work that properly belongs to the express companies of the country. I would ask if the attention of the hon. Minister has been drawn to the matter and if he intends to make any proposal respecting a readjustment of the rates of charge.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). Under the Post Office Act, power is given to the Postmaster General to fix the rate of parcel post, and, therefore, legislation is not necessary in order to deal with the matter. My attention has been called to the condition of the parcel post, the rates and other circumstances; and numerous signed petitions have been presented to the department raising questions of very far-reaching importance in relation to this service. I have not felt able to come to any conclusions yet with regard to these matters. The rates are such as have been in existence for many years. There are several classifications which appear to me to be confusing and most intricate; but I speak with hesitation on the point because I have had but a limited experience of the parcel post. But from what has been told to me by those who use the service, I believe that that branch of service could be very materially modified to the public advantage. But the hon. gentleman will see that when you commence to deal with the question of parcel post by reducing rates, increasing rates, altering weights, &c., what is to the advantage of one locality is against the interest of another. Therefore the subject is one that can only be dealt with after a very careful view of the situation and a consideration of all interests involved. Therefore, while I am of the opinion that there is room for reform or change in the public interest, I could not assume the responsibility as yet, of indicating in what direction the changes should take place.

Mr. SPROULE. Can the Minister give us any idea of the weight carried by parcel post and the revenue realized from it in the year?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am not able to give the hon. gentleman that information at the moment.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am sure we have all listened with a great deal of interest to the statement made by the hon.
Postmaster General in explanation of the Bill which he has submitted to the House.
I endeavoured to follow the hon. gentleman as closely as I could, and so far as I understand this measure, it is a proposal to change the postal rates in Canada from 3 cents to 2 cents, and to leave the charge on drop letters at the present rate. Am I correct?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Bill is directed to the domestic rate of 3 cents, which is applicable to all Canada, and not to drop letters.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am glad to find the hon. Minister has, since its introduction, modified this Bill in regard to the postage rates proposed to be charged newspapers. I thought that proposal a very objectionable one, and I briefly stated my reasons to the House. Nothing that has fallen from the hon. gentleman has modified my objections to the proposal as submitted. It was stated by the Postmaster General that he estimates the reduction from 3 cents to 2 cents will involve a loss to the Post Office Department as matters stand of about $650,000 annually, and that eventually, when the charge on newspapers is brought into operation, it will involve an increase to the post office revenue of $62,000 a year. I think that is the general purport of the measure. I do not believe this measure is one that is in the interest of the country. If the post office revenue admitted of a reduction of the charges upon parties who mail letters of $650,000 a year, I think it could very well bear the amount proposed to be gained by the charge of $62,000 a year upon newspapers. I stated before that I regard the free circulation of newspapers throughout the masses of very great importance to the country. I regard the newspaper literature of this country as of the greatest possible value to the people. I do not suppose there is any country in the world where newspapers are more widely taken and read than in Canada. I may be wrong on that point, but my impression is that the statistics which the Postmaster General has given to the House abundantly prove the great value the people of the Dominion attach to their newspapers, and the rapid increase of the weight of newspapers carried by the Post Office Department affords the best possible evidence of the desire of the mass of the people to obtain newspapers. It is not merely a question of the small amount of charge on newspapers, but the fact that the people receive newspapers free of postage is one which has a most material influence in regard to popular subscriptions to them.

People will subscribe for newspapers to secure information for themselves and their families when the newspapers have free postage, when with the smallest possible charge imposed they would not do so, because such would be attended with inconvenience and expense.

Some remarks were made in this House not very long ago on the question of manhood suffrage, and the ground was taken that manhood suffrage was not in operation in England, and that some parties, myself among the number, would be glad to see it adopted in Canada. But I believe the fact was lost sight of by the hon. gentleman who was speaking on the subject, that the question of the suffrage, when you come to its relative value, depends not exactly on the terms used to indicate the suffrage.
Manhood suffrage in the Dominion of Canada is a far higher franchise than that existing in Great Britain to-day. And why? Because of the universal dissemination of knowledge in Canada, due to the fact that there is no country where the great body of the people of all classes and all parties understand the political questions and political issues to the same extent as they do in Canada. There is abundant evidence that manhood suffrage in the Dominion is a far higher franchise than manhood suffrage in Great Britain, for the reason that there are tens of thousands of electors in the United Kingdom who go to the polls without having the remotest idea not only of public questions before the country, but if their lives depended on it, they could not state who is Prime Minister of Great Britain to-day. I give that as an indication of the great advance the people of Canada have made in intelligence, and the thorough knowledge which the mass of the people here have in respect to the political issues and all other questions of that kind, as well as general information, rests largely on the fact that newspapers have so largely increased in circulation until they now reach almost every individual in the country, and there is scarcely a family to be found that has not the advantage of receiving a newspaper in some form or other. Looking upon that as a great means of education in the country and for the dissemination of the most valuable information, I do not concur with the hon. Postmaster General in the opinion that it is a wise act to impose any obstruction to that great means of disseminating popular information which is furnished by and must depend upon the newspaper press of the country.

I am glad to find that since the few observations I made on this subject, the Postmaster General has modified his Bill and made considerable change in the incidence of the taxation proposed. But if he were in a position to say to the wealthy classes, to the great business houses and persons carrying on business in large volume, that it were possible to relieve them of $650,000 a year by the reduction in the postal rates, why should the Government for the sake of $62,000 tax the newspapers that go into all parts of the country and among all classes of the people.

If the Postmaster General will consider the question, I do not think he will find that the relief given by a reduction from 3 cents to 2 cents is going to be of much value to the great mass of the people. It is not the great mass of people who fill the mail bags with letters and postal communications, but it is the wealthier class, it is the business houses, it is the people who are engaged in carrying on valuable and lucrative enterprises. Why, Sir, where is the country that enjoys a cheaper rate of postage than Canada, with very few exceptions, such as the United States? Where is there a country in the world in which you can send a letter for a distance so great as that between Cape Breton in the east and Victoria in the west for 3 cents? The hon. Postmaster General knows that that is a very low charge, it is very much lower than the rate in the United Kingdom, where a penny is charged for sending a letter a few hundred miles. Here we send a letter thousands of miles for 3 cents.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Their penny carries a heavier letter.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, but you cannot send a letter a few miles for less than a penny, while here you can send a letter of the ordinary size for thousands of miles from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Therefore, I have not heard any reason given by the hon. the Postmaster General why $650,000 should be taken out of the consolidated revenue of Canada for the purpose of reducing the already extremely low rate from 3 cents to 2. The Government are taking $250,000 out of the pockets of the people of all classes, even the very poorest, by the increased taxation on sugar this year, and I do not see why they should favour the wealthier classes, those who are best able to pay for their correspondence, by reducing the postage they have to pay on their letters, relieving them to the extent of $650,000 a year, while placing an increased tax of a quarter of a million dollars upon the poorer classes chiefly, in respect to such a necessity of life as sugar. It does not appear to me that this is a wise or just measure. The poorer classes of the people must have their sugar, and I certainly think the hon. gentleman is making a mistake in taxing their sugar to the extent of $250,000 a year, while reducing the rate of postage on letters chiefly sent by the people best able to pay the postage, to the extent of $650,000 a year.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Does the hon. gentleman think sugar should be made to pay its freight and newspapers go free?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think it is a question of the adjustment of taxation, and the first thing the Government should consider is how to make their taxation bear in the most equitable manner. I say that if it is necessary to increase the tax upon sugar to the extent of $250,000 a year without any other object in the world except to increase the revenue, that policy, in my judgment, is not consistent with the policy of turning around and relieving the wealthier classes, I may say the wealthier classes, in respect to their letter postage, because this relief will chiefly enure, not to the masses of the people, but to the people best able to pay that $650,000 that you propose to take out of the consolidated revenue of Canada, while increasing the tax on sugar by a quarter of a million. I must say that, in my judgment, this is not a well-considered policy, and it does not bear equitably upon all the people of the country. But while offering this opinion, I do not propose to do anything to obstruct this measure, further than frankly to express to the Government my views upon the subject. The Postmaster General has rested his whole case upon the weight that the department is obliged to carry. What becomes of that argument when he proposes to leave drop letters at the same charge as he is going to carry a letter from Vancouver to Cape Breton, some 4,000 miles? His whole argument falls to the ground. If it is a question of carriage, what becomes of that argument when a drop letter, which is not carried by the post office at all except it may be by a post office messenger, is left at the same rate of 2 cents? I say it is a monstrous charge, a charge of 2 cents for a drop letter while you propose to carry for the same price a letter 4,000 miles, indeed much further, when that letter is sent into the Yukon district, the distance will be vastly more. That is one of the things that appears to me to bear very unequally. Now, there are other gentlemen, notably my hon. friend the former Postmaster General (Sir Adolphe Caron), who are better able to deal with this question than I am, therefore I do not propose to say much more upon the subject. But I was much surprised when the Postmaster General proposed to give us, as I supposed, an overwhelming reason why these papers should be taxed. I thought he was going to read a list of yellow papers which were of such a monstrous character that they should not be carried through the mails of Canada. He started out with mentioning the "Licensed Victuallers' Gazette" of Montreal, and exhibited a well-feigned horror at the idea that this "Licensed Victuallers' Gazette" actually contained advertisements of intoxicating liquors. Well, I sympathize with the hon. gentleman, certainly, in his endeavour to do anything that would restrict the traffic in intoxicating liquors. But immediately after I found that the next deadly blow which he struck was aimed at the temperance papers that are circulated through this country for the purpose of stirring up the people to practice habits of temperance. I could not help thinking that the hon. gentleman certainly had failed to establish the fact that these papers that he wished to hamper and to hinder, were of such a baneful character as he seemed to indicate. In the next place, he attacked the Sunday school papers that are at present carried free, and worse than the Sunday school papers, he attacks the farmers' papers, the papers that the agricultural people of this country look to for information in regard to their important industry. I think the hon. gentleman was very unhappy in selecting temperance papers, Sunday school papers and papers connected with agriculture, as evidence of the necessity of this Government stamping with its disapprobation this class of papers, by refusing to carry them any longer free.

I shall not detain the House further in reference to this matter, but I must express my utter surprise at the indignation the Postmaster General exhibited this afternoon, when I ventured to remind him that the introduction of this Bill which reduced the domestic postage rate, afforded him a good opportunity of expressing his views in regard to inter-Imperial postage. I thought my hon. friend (Mr. Mulock) would be grateful to me for the suggestion, but to my astonishment he resented it as an insult, and poured down upon my innocent head a torrent of the most violent abuse to which I have ever listened in this House. He charged me with disloyalty to the Empire, because I was not prepared to deify him for having stultified himself by one of the most extraordinary acts ever committed by a Canadian Cabinet Minister. I hope that my hon. friend (Mr. Sutherland) will not distract the attention of the Postmaster General from what I am saying, because I believe the remarks I am about to make are worthy of all his attention, as well as the attention of the House.

Sir, if there is one matter more than another which the Parliament of Canada should be consulted on, it is a question involving the taxation of the people. Every member of this House and every intelligent man in the country is in duty bound to maintain the authority of Parliament over the taxes that shall be imposed or remitted, because you cannot remit taxation without imposing it in some other direction. The Postmaster General was very reluctant to tell us anything, but finally, he was induced to give some information about the great Imperial reform which he thought so important, that it had to be suddenly announced in the heat of a by-election by the Minister of Customs as one of the great claims to Imperial rank and status that the Postmaster General of Canada had. The Postmaster General told us that by reason of the celebrated "I, William Mulock" decree, $50,000 a year would be taken out of the pockets of the people of this country. He estimated that the reduction under the policy he tried to carry out would entail a loss to the revenue of $50,000 a year. By what authority did the Postmaster General of Canada do that? Where is the law to justify him, or the Government, during a recess of Parliament to put their unholy hands into the treasury of Canada and take out $50,000, for any purpose whatever that has not been sanctioned by the Parliament of Canada? Is that the idea that the Postmaster General has of his duties? If so, the sooner the Canadian Parliament is done away with, and the imposition and remission of taxation is handed over to the Government, the better. That act of the Postmaster General was not only without warrant of law, but it was in violation of every principle of parliamentary government. I am not now dealing with the wisdom of the act; I do not say for a single moment that if the Postmaster General came to the conclusion that it was in the interest of Canada and the Empire that we should reduce the rate of postage on inter-Imperial letters, that he and the Government of which he is a member had not the right to ask Parliament for its consent to or dissent from the proposition. But, Sir, where is to be found the justification for an officer of this Government, for the Postmaster General of Canada, assuming of his own motion to take out of the consolidated revenue $50,000 a year for any purpose whatever. I doubt very much if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) could make a very strong case for his policy, apart altogether from the entire unconstitutionality of his conduct. But that is not all. The Postmaster General woke up one fine morning to find that he had made himself utterly ridiculous, that instead of being able to put his hands into the public treasury and do what he pleased with the money, he found Canada belonged to the Berne Convention, and that even by legislative enactment Canada could not regulate the postal rate outside of its own boundaries, although the hon. gentleman had tried to do it on his own account. What did he do next? The next thing he did was to issue an order to all the post office officials in Canada to steal. What do I mean by that? I mean, Sir, that not a post office in Canada can take a postage stamp and use it for any other purpose than that authorized by law, without stealing it. The Postmaster General therefore endeavoured to cover up his blunder by a second blunder worse than the first. He made himself still more ridiculous. Who gave authority to the Postmaster General to put his hands in the consolidated revenue and take out $90, the amount he tells us was lost to the country by his act.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. $91.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Well, it is $1 worse than I thought it was, and even if it was only a one-cent postage stamp, I deny the authority of the Postmaster General or of the Government of Canada to tell its officials to take a single postage stamp unless there be a law or the consent of Parliament to justify it. Sir, the position in which the Postmaster General has placed himself is calculated to bring into derision and contempt the Government of Canada. When the people find a Cabinet Minister without any more knowledge, without any more idea of what is due from him to the country he serves, it is not calculated to raise Canada in public estimation. I am not surprised that when the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) came to realize the position in which he placed himself, the very mention of it was enough to excite his ire and to call forth his abuse. Am I right or am I wrong when I say that the course of the Postmaster General in regard to the whole of this transaction was an insult to the Parliament of Canada and to the people of this country; because he assumed a position that cannot be assumed by any officer of the Government, under such circumstances without doing the grossest violence to those principles of parliamentary government upon which the free government of Canada is founded. The hon. gentleman intimated that in concert with Great Britain and with the Berne Convention, he was going to carry this out, and carry it further than he had originally proposed. I ask the hon. gentleman whether that is his position to-night? After what has happened, after he has learned that what he has done was a complete violation of parliamentary government, I ask him whether he proposes to allow this House to rise without settling this question—whether he proposes, without the authority of Parliament, to put a charge upon the consolidated revenue of Canada of $50,000 a year—he intimates that it will be a great deal more than that—for this purpose or any other. I do not hesitate to say that a Minister of the Crown who will take such liberties as that with the rights of Parliament deserves impeachment at the hands of Parliament. The moment that you concede that any Minister of the Crown, or all of them put together, have the power to put their hands into the treasury of Canada and use public money for which Parliament has granted no sanction, however useful, however good, however appropriate the object may be, it is a complete violation of the principles of parliamentary government and a contempt of this House. I do not intend, Sir, to occupy the time of the House longer, but it was due to the hon. gentleman, especially after he had intimated that he did not intend to give any information whatever on this subject to the House, but that he intended to carry this matter to a much greater extent than he had formerly contemplated, without any authority from this House—it was due to him and to this House that I should frankly state the view I held of that transaction, and the hon. gentleman will utterly fail in his duty if he contemplates making any change of that kind without asking the authority and sanction of this House to that change before he makes it.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the criticism to which the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) has been subjected, all I can say is this, that I have listened with considerable pleasure and interest to the statements made this afternoon by that hon. gentleman in moving the second reading of this postal Bill. What is more, I think that the Bill he has presented will commend itself to not only the business men, but the letter-writing public of Canada generally. His minor proposal of sub-dead-letter offices in different parts of the Dominion is to my mind an excellent idea, and one that will be received with a great deal of satisfaction by the business community. With regard to the sharp criticism on his action of some months ago in making the announcement that the rate upon English letters would be reduced, allowing that he was premature in making the announcement and granting that the Postmaster General laboured under a misapprehension as to his powers and as to the terms of the Berne Convention. I do not know that the hon. Postmaster General of to-day committed as grave an error as the late Conservative Government did when they agreed to the entrance of Canada into the Berne Copyright Convention without coming down and asking the consent of Parliament to an agreement that has paralyzed a certain section of the printing, the paper-making and the book-making trades of this country. To be frank, Mr. Speaker, if there is one department of the Government that has shown some signs of life, reform, and progress, it is the department presided over by the Postmaster General. His proposals as outlined in the present Bill, and his promises as to the future in connection with the department, are enough to satisfy me that the department is being run on up-to-date lines; and, what is more, whatever the politicians may think, I believe that the public of Canada—the business community, the mercantile community, the letter-writing community, hold the opinion that I have expressed. One matter which worried some hon. gentlemen on this side of the House when this Bill was introduced, and which apparently worries them now—the matter which I propose to deal with—is the proposed change in the charge for the carriage of newspapers from the office of publication, and, consequent thereon, the adoption of the 2-cent rate for Canadian and American letters. Every one will be quick enough to admit that the adoption of the 2-cent rate will fill a long-felt want. I do not think there are many in this House, and I am certain that there are very few in the country, who will not agree that this proposal to make the newspaper proprietor contribute his share to the revenue for the carriage of his wares is a move in the right direction. There was good reason for the enactment of the old law that made the rate for the carriage of newspapers a cent a pound, and there never was even a semblance of sense or reason or any request for the repeal of that law. The truth is that its repeal was a mere whim of a gentleman of the Senate, who, anxious to pose in the niche of personal popularity, jollied through Parliament a measure that has cost this country in postal rates millions of dollars, creating a big deficit in the spending department, which has stood in the way of reform every time a reform was proposed. Popular judgment from the people direct, and not from the newspapers, will endorse this measure. If the people were appealed to to-morrow for their verdict, the universal sentiment of the public would favour the measure. Why should the newspaper maker have his wares carried free? The Postmaster General says the millions of Canadians can have a 2-cent rate on Canadian and American letters if he can impose a half-cent rate for newspaper carriage; and yet hon. gentlemen on this side of the House oppose the proposal, and insist that because the tax will take a few thousands of dollars out of the pockets of a few newspaper proprietors, the entire letter-writing public should stand a charge that clearly should come out of the pockets of those proprietors. We hear a good deal about newspapers being educators; but surely if the state educates the people right up to the door-knob of the university the people should be able to contribute towards the expense of their education after that. The primary object of a newspaper is not educational, but commercial. A newspaper is published to make money, and its educational influence is merely an incident in the business of making money.

To tell the truth, I feel, in approaching this question, a good deal like the late Artemus Ward when he was prepared to sacrifice all his wife's relations upon the altar of his patriotism. I am one of the fortunate newspaper proprietors who do not benefit to the extent of one hundred dollars per year by this free transmission through the post, and I would not suffer by more than that amount if Parliament should decide to withdraw the privilege. I mention this fact so that I may not gain too much glory by the self-sacrificing spirit I display in attempting to support the Postmaster General's proposals to make newspaper proprietors pay some part of the freight charges for the carrying on of their own business. There is good reason why some newspapers, having a large circulation, should agitate and plead for the free circulation of newspapers. The fact is that three newspapers in Montreal and three in Toronto get considerably over one-third of the advantage consequent on this free carriage of newspapers. The entire revenue expected from this source is about $82,000, and of this amount these six papers will contribute about $32,000. Last year, as the hon. Postmaster General has told us, and as the returns on the Table show, the public carried 5,000,000 pounds weight of letters, and the state paid for the carriage of these letters about $5,000,000. The newspaper proprietors of Canada had 16,500,000 pounds of newspapers carried for them, for which they did not pay one cent. Of this 16,500,000 pounds, about one-half the entire weight, or 8,000,000 pounds, was carried for three newspapers in Montreal and three in Toronto. Why should the Dominion be called on to contribute to the revenue of these newspaper proprietors? The free carriage of newspapers is a charge that should be borne by the newspaper proprietors and not imposed on the general public. Why should the Government be a silent partner in the newspaper business? There are thousands of postmasters throughout the country who are paid, so I understand, by commission, in different forms. These postmasters have to handle these newspaper bags, open them and distribute their contents, and for this work, they do not get one cent. As to the handling of newspapers and the work it entails on the local post offices, I am advised, taking the Toronto office for example, that were it not for the work of distributing the newspaper in that office, its work could be carried on for one-half of the present cost. This means that one-half of the staff of the post office work for the newspapers and are paid by the Government. The spirit of this age is against exemptions of all kinds; and where it is possible, the Government should set a good example and relieve the general public to the extent that the expense should be borne by those who carry on such commercial ventures as newspapers. Scores of newspapers carried free, especially those published in the interests of benefit societies, are published in many cases to save a large expenditure in postage stamps and postal cards; and from a rough calculation that I have been able to make, from the returns on the Table, I believe that an amount of from $6,000 to $8,000 is saved to these societies alone by the free carriage of these papers published in their interest. Then there are some class or trade papers that send out tens of thousands of copies all over the country free. When you talk about the educational advantages of the press, I find that these newspapers look out carefully for financial results, because I find in one case that 31 pages out of the 46, and in another case that 46 pages out of the 68, are devoted to advertising. If the country is going to stand the expense of carrying on every business the product of which has an educational value, why my hon. friends from East Lambton (Mr. Fraser) and from West Lambton (Mr. Lister) could very well put in a plea for the chief product of that county. Coal oil has an educational value, because it sheds that light which guides Canadians in the pathway of knowledge. For the greater part of the twenty-four hours, newspapers without coal oil would have no more educational value than coal oil without newspapers. I think that the hon. Postmaster General has departed from the strict principle when he proposes to exempt newspapers circulated within a ten mile zone, but I am not inclined to quarrel with an exemption which my friends the publishers of country newspapers are to enjoy. It is true that the country newspaper is published with the idea of making money. I am glad to believe that the aim of its founder is, in many cases, realized; but the country newspaper is not the important and profitable commercial enterprise that profits to anything like the extent that the great newspaper enterprises do by free transmission through the mails. The country newspaper men are patriots and philanthropists, who benefit the country by benefiting the communities which they serve; and I think if the country is going to subsidize any class of business in the community with the free use of the mails, the country newspaper man should come first in the race for the favour. I believe that the withdrawal of this privilege will prove a positive benefit to every legitimate newspaper enterprise, especially to the publishers of weeklies and monthlies. The free use of the mails has been so much capital contributed by the state, as the Postmaster General has said this afternoon, to start the mushroom publisher in business. This standing offer of free postal service has been a business opening for every fakir. What is to prevent him starting out in the newspaper line and publishing a newspaper? He could find some job printer willing to publish the first issue on credit. The Dominion are willing to carry the entire first issue free of cost, so that a too generous Government and a trusting job printer created an enterprise which exploited advertising fields that should have been reserved for legitimate publications. The privilege now to be withdrawn, the free use of the mails has exposed the standard weeklies and monthlies to competition from enterprises that would never have seen their first issue, if their founders had been called on to pay postage. With regard to religious weeklies and their cry for free postage, I do not believe that the rank and file of the Protestant denominations—and I use the word Protestant because it is on their behalf that this cry is raised—want state aid for the carriage of their newspapers. At the interview held a few weeks ago by the Postmaster General at Toronto, he quickly found that it was not the religious end but the business end of the equipment that was much in evidence. This was shown when he questioned the delegation. In one case, when a prominent publisher, supposed to represent a religious newspaper, was questioned, it was found that he represented a secular newspaper of very large circulation, and it was on behalf of the latter paper he was so anxious to have free circulation. Then many of these papers contain very few advertisements of Sunday school books and periodicals, but columns of advertisements relating to general trade, bicycles and patent medicines. I believe that no legitimate enterprise will suffer from the loss of this privilege. This free postal offer on the part of the Government has always been an inducement to fakirs to scour the advertising field to the disadvantage of established journals. They run in debt to the printer and typesetter and paper-maker and to the pressmen; and equipped with a first-class circulation liar, they gull and bleed the advertising public, who never know what they have lost until their money is all gone.

It just amounts to this, Mr. Speaker, and I am perfectly certain that it is the opinion of the country that this proposal of the Postmaster General is not only a reasonable one, but a proper one. I look upon it as one of the best Acts introduced by gentlemen on the other side of the House. I think that if the country is carrying newspapers below cost, we are doing just as much as we are entitled to do. Newspapers are not charitable institutions, and there is no reason why they should be regarded as such by the Government or by the country.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It is always a great pleasure indeed to me, and I have no doubt to other members of the House as well, to listen to the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Robertson). And when he discourses upon a question with which he is so conversant as that which is now before the House, it is all the more interesting to hear his views. The hon. gentleman has spoken of his philanthropy and his philanthropic views in so far as the newspapers were concerned. It is also a pleasure to learn that his philanthropic views and his interest as the proprietor of one of the most interesting newspapers in the country agree. The hon. gentleman has stated, very properly, that he is in favour of having the papers pay the postage the Postmaster General has decided to impose upon them. But, Sir, the hon. gentleman must remember that the new imposition does not extend within ten miles of where the paper is published. The hon. gentleman may not have considered that. But he knows that almost the whole of the enormous circulation of his paper would be within the precincts of this charmed circle. His competitors who extend beyond the ten miles would have to pay the tax, while he would stand practically untouched by it. Sir, there are two reasons which appeal to my judgment against the proposition of the Postmaster General. First, I fully agree that for a large class of the population of a country like Canada, the only medium of education, or at least, the most easily got at of all mediums of education, is the newspaper. The newspaper is eclectic in its lessons to the people. It educates them on matters of trade and commerce; the farmers and many other classes it educates in matters of their own occupation it educates them in the laws of this country and in the work of this Parliament, where the great interests of the country are discussed. I think that Canada is rich enough now to make sacrifices in order to extend the education which the newspaper and the newspaper alone can give to the people of the country. But, there is another reason which strongly appeals to my judgment. If concessions of that kind are made, whether by one party or by another it matters little, it is a retrograde step to take away from the people the privilege thus conferred. That is one reason why I believe that this proposal is a mistake; and I believe that before long the belief that it is a mistake will permeate all ranks of the people. It will be looked upon as a limitation of the privileges which were accorded to Canadians. Sir, I agree with the Postmaster General that there are expenses connected with this advantage. But, Sir, you cannot confer benefits upon the people without expense. One occupying the position of Postmaster General cannot but realize that the conditions in Canada are different from the conditions in almost any other country. You have here a territory so large that when you compare it with other countries on the map, you feel it almost incredible that it can belong to one Crown and to one people. But in this territory you have a population of only about five millions of people. How can you assimilate the conditions of a country like Canada with those of a country like England, where you have forty million of people living within a limited area, so that they can have equal postal facilities with ourselves at only 50 per cent of the expense.

I shall attempt to be as brief as possible, but I desire to follow the Postmaster General in the propositions he laid before us and in the order in which he presented them. As to books for the blind, there can be only one opinion. The afflicted, God's afflicted, must be looked after before anybody else; and there cannot be any question whatever that the measure introduced by the Postmaster General, so far as that point is concerned, will receive the approval of Parliament and the sanction of the people. In dealing with other questions, I do so in no hostile spirit. I speak as one who has had occasion to study these questions, and who cordially believes that the Postmaster General occupies one of the most important positions in the Government. This is the department that goes ahead of civilization in every part of the Dominion. Before you can establish business, before you can work mines, before you can start farming, the first necessity of the country is to establish relations which cannot exist without the post office. Whether in the crowded city or in the distant mining camp or prairie farm, a man must be in relation to the outside world if the result of his labour is not to be lost for lack of remuneration. The Postmaster General's second point was the decentralization of the dead letter office. By those who have studied this question, this must be regarded as a matter of very great importance. If the scheme of the Postmaster General is going to be carried out, by establishing all over the country, in the various post offices, a branch of the dead letter department where letters may be opened, I think he will find that he is making a great mistake.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I suppose the hon. gentleman is aware that the system obtains in Great Britain.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes, the hon. gentleman is aware of that, and the hon.

gentleman is going to tell the hon. the Postmaster General wherein circumstances are different between Canada and Great Britain, though I presume the hon. gentleman, who seems to be quite familiar with every branch of his department, must also be aware of those circumstances. No political appointments are made in Great Britain, the system of promotion obtains there, and the various postmasters are selected from well trained officers who are promoted from one rank to another as occasion arises. Suppose the postmaster of Liverpool or the postmaster of Manchester dies to-morrow, his successor will be selected from one of the other post offices, or selected from the London post office. What is the result of that? My hon. friend must know that these men are invested with larger powers than postmasters in Canada. They are entrusted with the collection of minor inland revenues, they are men trained in every branch of their department, and I see no reason why such a man should not be authorized to open the correspondence of individuals, if any one is to be so authorized. The great security of the mail depends upon the absolute confidence which the people have that no letter can be tampered with in any shape or form. The system of appointing postmasters in England is altogether different from that which obtains in Canada.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I hope the hon. gentleman is not expressing his want of confidence in our postmasters from any experience.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am expressing my views, as I never hesitate to do even when they do not accord with the views of the Postmaster General.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Perhaps the hon. gentleman does not quite understand what I propose, and an illustration may make the matter clearer. Supposing, for example, that a letter is deposited in Halifax without any address upon it, an ordinary error. The envelope is perfectly blank. Does the hon. gentleman see any objection to a scheme being devised by which an official in that office, or a branch you may call it, should be authorized to treat that letter as a dead letter, instead of sending it to Ottawa to be treated as a dead letter, thus saving a lot of delay?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I do not agree with that proposition, and I will tell the hon. gentleman why. I have pointed out the difference which exists in the system of appointing postmasters in England and that which obtains in Canada. Now, take one of our large cities in Canada. The postmaster is not supposed to take any personal interest in the departmental work, so to speak. He is not supposed to be an expert, or to have the knowledge and experience which are required from postmasters in England. Now, what would be the result if a letter were deposited, as the hon. gentleman suggests, in Halifax without any address? It will be opened by a clerk in the Halifax post office who may know the very people whose letter he is opening, whereas, under the present system, that letter is sent to the dead letter office at Ottawa. That office is under the control of a man of great experience, a man who has been trained to his work, and no letter is opened except under his supervision, or by officers who are known to be confidential men. These men open letters coming from Halifax, or coming from Victoria, coming from any other part of Canada, the writers of which they ignore absolutely. That is the point I wish to make. Now, if the hon. gentleman wishes to make a change, I think it would be much better, if a letter is insufficiently prepaid, to forward it to its destination and there recover from the receiver the postage which the sender of the letter neglected to place upon it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Suppose there was no address on it, where would you send it?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman will admit that it is very seldom letters are sent to a post office without an address.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The addresses may be difficult to decipher, but in those cases you send them up to Ottawa where you have a branch of your department, the clerks of which know no more about the man sending the letter, than if he lived in China. That is the great precaution which we must preserve. But, Sir, this is not a new question at all. The views I am expressing are not my own personal views only, they are the views of such men as Sir John A. Macdonald and Alexander Mackenzie. Now, I would like to draw the attention of the hon. gentleman to a discussion which took place in 1875, on the 9th of March, which will be found on page 533 of "Hansard." The question was still more complicated then than it is now. There were questions involving monetary interests, and the Postmaster General of that day, like the Postmaster General of to-day, wanted to alter the law so as to permit letters to be opened outside of the head of the department, who alone as the law then existed, could open a letter. Sir John A. Macdonald, referring to the clause, is thus reported:

Referring to the clause which gave the Postmaster General authority to stop letters passing through the mails, on satisfactory evidence being given to him that persons were engaged in conducting any scheme for obtaining remittances through the post office by means of false or fraudulent pretensions, he said that it might be reasonable to give such power to the Postmaster General himself. He would possess the confidence of the House and the country. At the same time it was quite impossible that he could exercise supervision in all parts of the Dominion.

Suppose a scheme of a fraudulent character were being carried on on the Pacific Coast, and letters containing money were passing from Victoria B.C., to San Francisco, the Postmaster General could not act himself, and would have to delegate the power to the local postmasters, because it was quite apparent that the whole machinery connected with the mails between those two points could not be stopped in order that the letters might be forwarded to Ottawa. The acknowledged rule was that the Postmaster General could only delegate his authority to his deputy but the Act would be inoperative unless the Postmaster General should be able to delegate his powers to a great number of officials, and those powers were not such as ought to be vested in others.

That is a strong expression of opinion, and the reason urged by the Postmaster General of the day was a stronger reason than that urged by the Postmaster General of to-day, who says a letter not addressed may have to be sent to Ottawa. I am quite certain in the case to which I have just referred the interests were so considerable that it was from the standpoint of the whole people of Canada that Sir John Macdonald expressed, as leader of the Opposition, the views which I have just quoted. He continued :

The evidence of fraud might be satisfactory to the Postmaster General and yet prove fallacious, and a great loss might occur owing to letters being stopped while passing through the mails and there is no provision under which the sender could obtain any remedy. He quite understood the object which the Postmaster General had in introducing this clause into the Bill, yet he conceived it would be infinitely better that a few persons should suffer than that the public should lose confidence in the mails being safely carried.

The right hon. gentleman then stated a case well known to those who read the parliamentary history of England. He continued :

Hon. members would recollect the case of Sir James Graham, Postmaster General in England, who opened certain letters connected with the Mazzini affair. The matter was inquired into by a select committee, who, however, refused to report against the action that had been taken. In the course of the evidence he believed it was proved that there were direct incentives in the correspondence to assassination. The correspondence was further connected with secret conspiracies on the continent, yet Sir James Graham, although he was acting under the authority of law, never overcame the feeling which arose on account of that proceeding, and confidence in the post office was much weakened ; and not until the most solemn assurances were given by the Government that no such case would again occur was confidence renewed in the department. He believed that never since that day had a letter been opened in its passage through the British mails. For these reasons he believed it would be infinitely better that this clause should be dropped out of the Bill rather than the public confidence should be weakened in the post office.

Hon. Mr. Mackenzie observed that there were undoubtedly a great many difficulties connected with the granting of these additional powers to the Postmaster General, and therefore he would be inclined to advise his hon. friend to leave this section out.

I will not continue or read from the debate, but the result was that Hon. D. A. Macdonald, whom many of us recollect and who was a personal friend of my own, and who occupied at that time the position of Postmaster General, stated that seeing the feeling of the House and the expression of opinion given by the leader of the Government and by the leader of the Opposition, he agreed that it would be better to leave this clause out of the Bill. And the clause was left out. We must not legislate only for cases of letters which are not addressed. We want in a growing country like Canada to train and educate the people to have confidence in the institutions under which they live and lead the people to believe that a letter is sacred. When administering the department I frequently found letters in respect to which it was next to impossible to decipher the address, yet the long training of the men in the dead letter office enabled them to decipher almost the addresses on letters which came from any part of the world, and although it might take more or less time, the address was deciphered. Who is to blame for that condition of affairs? The sender of the letter is to blame if he does not take the necessary precautions to have his letter reach its destination. Then why should we destroy the confidence of the people in the post office? The people know that the Postmaster General, through his deputy as the officer appointed by him to superintend the dead letter branch, is responsible to the people, and that official can be brought to Parliament. If we are going to establish dead letter offices all over Canada I am quite certain the hon. gentleman will regret it. For this reason it is apparent that the system cannot be applied in any particular way. If the hon. gentleman thinks he will be able to surmount the difficulty by establishing separate dead letter offices all over the Dominion, I say the game is not worth the candle ; it would be a very expensive procedure to establish separate branches, whereas there is in Ottawa an office to which the letters may be sent. Under these circumstances I would ask the hon. gentleman to reconsider the matter before he agrees to change a system which has worked well, and in respect to which there have been no complaints. It is impossible to assimilate the conditions in Canada with the conditions in England. The civil service there is built on different lines, and while it works well in England it would be a complete failure in Canada. The Postmaster General, I believe, next referred to the reduction in the letter rate from 3 cents per ounce to 2 cents. That is a very simple question. It is a question whether we can afford it or not. When I was acting as Postmaster General the matter was brought up on several occasions. At the time Mr.

Morley was Postmaster General in the Government of Lord Roseberry, I had the pleasure of meeting the hon. member for East Toronto in London, and we had a long chat about these matters, which are of great importance, and I must admit that if this change could be carried out, it would be an advantage.

The question is one of revenue. I know that the Postmaster General is very sanguine; I know that he is predicting a great increase in the revenues of the country, but the hon. gentleman made a mistake before about the Berne Convention and I think the hon. gentleman is making a mistake now as to the probable increase in the revenue of the Post Office Department. In a country like Canada with its sparsely-settled localities, and with its remote regions to be supplied by mail, the mail service cannot be carried on cheaply. For instance, when Rossland was opened up there were only a few huts and I was asked to establish a post office there. It would cost us more than perhaps a dozen ordinary post offices in settled portions of the Dominion; but we could not expect the miners to carry on their business, nor could the trade of that country be developed without establishing a post office, and so it was done. There are many such instances which will occur throughout this Dominion. The Postmaster General tells us that next January is going to see an equilibrium between the revenue and expenditure of the Post Office Department. Sir, I venture to predict that he is mistaken, for I believe that it is an impossibility in Canada to equalize the revenue and the expenditure of that department for years to come. I do not say, that with the enormous resources of Canada, it will not be done some day or other, but I do say that even with all the energy of the Postmaster General and his ardent desire to make his department a success, the hon. gentleman will find it an impossibility to make both ends meet until the country is more thickly settled than it is now. The value of the ordinary 3-cent stamps issued to the public during the year ending 30th June, 1897, was ordinary stamps, $2,471,946. I ventured to ask the hon. gentleman the other day about the Jubilee stamps, and he told me it was impossible to discover what they realized, but it is quite apparent that any clerk in his department could have found it out with very little trouble, and the hon. gentleman should have given us the information. From the records of the department I find that the Jubilee stamps would amount to $208,134. That makes, according to my calculation the total issue of these stamps $2,680,080. The hon. gentleman knows that this can be fairly considered as being the revenue, because the value of 3-cent stamps used on other correspondence is balanced by the use of 1-cent stamps and 2-cent stamps and 6-cent stamps and 10-cent stamps on letters. For instance, it often occurs that you put a 2-cent stamp and a 1-cent stamp on a letter instead of a 3-cent stamp; moreover, the number of letters passing by mail in Canada during the same year was 123,800,000, the postage upon which at 3 cents would amount to $3,714,000, and making allowance for foreign and drop letters, the postage upon domestic letters may be taken to amount at least to $2,000,000, of which one-third, or we will say $650,000 would be lost by the reduction in rate of postage from 3 to 2 cents. The people of Canada will therefore see what they have to pay for this privilege proposed by the Postmaster General, because that $650,000 will have to be made up in some other way. The hon. gentleman has been rather anxious, and not unfairly, to show the deficits which he says existed previously, and the great reduction which has taken place in these deficits through his peculiarly successful administration. The deficit for the year ending 30th June, 1895, was $800,857, and the deficit for the year ending the 30th June, 1896, was $700,997.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman is mistaken in that. It was $780,000.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. If I am wrong I will be ready to admit it, but until it is shown to me that I am wrong, I must consider the figures which I have given to be correct. For the year ended the 30th of June, 1897, the deficit was $586,539.93. The increase in the expenditure of the Post Office Department for the year ended the 30th of June, 1896, over that for the year ended the 30th of June, 1895, was $71,363.83, and the increase for the year ended the 30th June, 1897, over that for the previous year was $124,467.04.

If the hon. gentleman could not urge the reason he has given for reducing the postage on letters, he would have no argument at all. His contention was that the reduction would increase the number of letters to such an extent as to make up the deficiency. Sir, that is a fallacy, as has been proved beyond the possibility of discussion by what has occurred in the United States of America. This point also came up when I was in England. A personal friend of mine, and one who takes a great interest in assimilating the postage all over the British Empire, Mr. Heniker Heaton, on several occasions discussed the matter with me. He took such an interest in the question that with me he interviewed some of the officials of the London post office, so as to be able, from a purely departmental standpoint, to ascertain exactly whether that was possible or not. I brought forward the reason which I am urging to-night. I expressed my ardent desire, as I am doing to-night, to see the reduction of postage, because it would be an almost universal benefit to any country; but the sentimental side of the question disappears altogether in presence of the practical business considerations, which men occupying seats in Parliament and representing the commercial interests of the people, have to consider far and above the sentimental side of any question. We are here for the purpose of giving our earnest endeavours to the development of the country, and looking as carefully and as prudently as trustees do after the interests of the people confided to us. For that reason, however anxious we might be to reform and improve matters, we must halt before we give away the revenues of the country for an improvement which is in the right direction, but which in our financial circumstances, it is impossible for us to afford. The experience of the United States post office, I have said, proves my case. If that statement can be contradicted, of course, it will take away a great deal from the argument which I wish to submit. The excess of the receipts over the expenditure in the United States in 1883, before the reduction of the letter rate from 3 cents to 2 cents, was $2,691,992. The hon. gentleman gave some figures which I am free to confess, I could not follow, because I did not see exactly the basis on which he rested his argument. The excess of expenditures over receipts in the year ended the 30th of June, 1897, was $11,400,000. If these figures do not show that the fact of reducing the postage on letters does not increase the number of letters written in such a proportion as to make up the deficiency, I am prepared to give up my case. These figures can be verified by reference to experts in the United States, in England and in Canada, who have not only considered the matter from a departmental standpoint, but have written books bearing on the subject which can be found, I think, in the library. That is the reason why, anxious as I am to give every possible benefit to the people of Canada in connection with the postage upon letters, I say that at the present moment it is impossible for us to do so.

I wish now to pass to a question which to my mind is of the greatest possible importance to the people of Canada, and which affects the relations which exist between Canada and almost every portion of the civilized world. I was abroad when I read, to my astonishment, a paragraph in one of the leading dailies of London, stating that the Postmaster General had reduced the postage upon foreign letters from 5 cents per half ounce under the Berne convention to 3 cents per ounce. It was familiar to me, and familiar to every clerk in the Post Office Department that in 1874 a treaty for the formation of a general postal union had been signed at Berne, in Switzerland. That treaty comprised nearly all the civilized nations of the world, and some which at that period were not regarded as ranking among the most civilized, but were fast growing into the family of nations, and were likely within a short period to become as important as they have become since. This treaty did not include the British possession beyond the sea, but Canada, always taking the lead of the British colonies and always anxious to strengthen the link between herself and the mother country and obtain that position to which she is entitled among the commercial nations of the world, immediately applied to the Imperial Government to be included in that postal convention. The Imperial Government consented, and Canada was admitted to the convention that sat in Paris in 1878, and became a member of the universal postal union from the 1st of July, 1878. From that date, the postal business of Canada became assimilated to that of every nation which formed part of the postal union, and except by breaking up the treaty and withdrawing from the privileges of the postal union, no interference could take place with the postal rates, which had been adopted at that union, recognized as a treaty which bound together the nations that composed it. The convention of Vienna followed the convention of Paris, and at that convention other nations joined, always under the bond that they would obey the laws and regulations of the postal union and adopt the rates imposed. These rates are the only important portion of that treaty, because if it were not for the purpose of regulating the postal rates all over the world, there would have been no necessity for holding a convention at all. The convention of Vienna came into force on the 1st of July, 1892, and is still in force. Then the convention of Washington was held, to which Col. White was sent to represent this Government, and that convention will come into force in January, 1899. I am giving the facts, and I give the law regulations, which the hon. gentleman can read. I have in my hand the postal union containing all the regulations laid down. It is in French, because the discussions took place in French, but there is a translation into English, which I am quite sure the hon. gentleman would not require to use at all. But under this convention, a letter weighing more than half an ounce and less than an ounce would be, if prepaid, only three cents, liable to double the deficiency, namely, 14 cents, on delivery at destination, because it should have been prepaid ten cents. But the reduction which the Postmaster General, in his liberality, wanted to effect, and thus isolate himself splendidly from the whole civilized world, was not only a reduction in the amount to be paid but also a reduction by doubling the weight to be carried for the amount paid.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If the hon. gentleman will allow me, at an earlier stage in his remarks he spoke of the condition of the departmental accounts for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1896, and said the deficit was $780,000. The hon. gentleman called it about $700,000. I would refer him to the report of the department for the fiscal year ending June, 1896, and he will find in page xxxii, the following item :

Heretofore it has not been the practice to treat the amount expended under the head of Civil Government as a charge against the department, and were such practice adhered to the deficit of $1,027,529 would be reduced by $246,376, leaving the outside service stand $781,152.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am not prepared to admit until I verify it for myself, but I think that the hon. gentleman would hardly bring that point when the Berne convention is under discussion, except he ignored that convention completely. He may fancy that he can discuss anything under it, but let me ask him, as a matter of fact, if, under that convention he was not as helpless as a new-born babe. He could not change the rate or the weight of postal matter under it, unless he broke through the treaty and the regulations laid down, which I shall read to the hon. gentleman, indicating the mode in which these things can be changed. The hon. gentleman I thought was somewhat—I will not say rash—but not just as prudent as he should have been when he said to-night that the fact of his not taking Parliament into his confidence was that there were negotiations going on with the Imperial Government. Sir, the Imperial Government is as helpless as the Postmaster General to interfere.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. What nonsense.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. If the hon. gentleman can show me, by any process of law or reasoning, that when Canada became a party to the Berne convention, he could negotiate with the British Government, I shall be much surprised. Mr. Chamberlain did not consider the question very long before he told the hon. gentleman that he was entirely at sea.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Does the hon. gentleman take the ground that there cannot be a modification consented to between two countries or more and applicable only to those countries, without the consent of all parties to that treaty?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Certainly.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am very sorry that the hon. gentleman has been so long reading that convention without understanding it. That is not the meaning of the treaty.

Mr. FOSTER. Your reading of it was not accepted.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It was not the law under which the postal rates were changed between Canada and Newfoundland and Canada and the United States.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I do not know whether Newfoundland is in the convention.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am sure the hon. gentleman does not, but it is.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. If the hon. gentleman will keep his temper, and if he and I can get together, then, with his great experience and my desire to learn, we shall come to understand this convention, no doubt.

Mr. WALLACE. With the consent of the hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Adolphe Caron) I would like to ask the Postmaster General a question. Did the Postmaster General have an Order in Council passed to reduce the postage to Great Britain, or was it done by him?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It was not done by Order in Council. I would just tell the hon. gentleman (Sir Adolphe Caron) that any two or more members of the convention—

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am going to read the convention—

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. But the hon. gentleman has taken the ground that there can be no reduction without the consent of all the parties to the convention. That he may not be wandering in error, I would say to him that under the convention any two or more members can ameliorate the rates among themselves. There are conventions within conventions.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I have been so unskilful in my efforts to convince the hon. gentleman, that I have given up the task. But if I read the convention, the official document, surely the hon. gentleman will be satisfied. I am going just as far as it is possible for me to go, when the hon. gentleman wishes me to impart to him the information I have. I tried to say that under that convention, it was impossible for the British post office itself to change anything in the convention without the consent of the other parties, and the hon. gentleman would not let me finish. He must know that I would not make a statement of that kind without knowing what the effect of the convention is. Sir, I have that convention here printed for the information of the commercial nations of the world. I say that under this convention Great Britain, the mighty British Empire herself is as helpless as the Postmaster General of Canada who issued his proclamation beginning: "I, William Mulock"—and declaring so and so. He might have declared until he died, and it would have had no more effect upon the Berne Convention, or the Paris Convention, or the Vienna Convention, or the Washington Convention than if the hon. gentleman had never existed. I put this strongly for this reason that I feel that the head of one of the great departments of Canada telling the world that he, by his proclamation does so and so has made Canada ridiculous. It indeed looks very despotic for a democratic country. The hon. gentleman says in his proclamation :

Now, therefore, I, William Mulock, Postmaster General of Canada, under and by virtue of authority vested in me, do hereby establish the rate of postage upon all letters transmitted by post from any point in Canada to the United Kingdom, or to any of the British possessions, as follows :—There shall be charged and paid one uniform rate of 3 cents per ounce weight, a fraction of an ounce being chargeable as an ounce upon all letters, as aforesaid, transmitted from any point in Canada to any point in the United Kingdom or British possessions.

And this regulation shall come into force and take effect—

Mr. COCHRANE. Why did not it ?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Because of Mr. Chamberlain. He told the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) that he could not fight the whole world by himself——come into force and take effect on, from and after the first day of January, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight.

Dated at Ottawa, this twenty-third day of November, 1897.

W. MULOCK,
Postmaster General.

Now, Sir, coincidents are very strange. There was an election going on, at that time and the "Globe," the organ of the Liberal party, taking into consideration, of course, merely the interests of Canada and not at all the fact that an election was going on, had the following :—

New Link of Empire.—Important Announcement at last night's Liberal Meeting.—Three-cent Postal Rate for Canadians throughout the Empire.—Sir Louis H. Davies and Hon. William Paterson at the Massey Music Hall.—Drummond County Railway and Crow's Nest Pass—

Well, I limit myself for to-night to postal matters and I shall drop the others.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The Drummond County question is rather hot just now, and you had better not touch it.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Indeed ? The hon. gentleman will see the diplomatic way in which Mr. Paterson announced this change to the electors of Toronto :

The other important announcement was by Mr. Paterson, who said that the Postmaster General had made arrangements by which—

Made arrangements, mind you, the Berne Convention notwithstanding.

—after January 1, letters not over one ounce would be sent from Canada at a three-cent rate to all parts of the British Empire. This further development along Imperial lines was greeted with an extraordinary demonstration of approval.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. So it was.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It will come out all right.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte) was present, I suppose, and saw the reason for the enthusiasm.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I went later on.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The "Globe" says further :

The meeting was a decided success as a vote-maker, and the crowd cordially endorsed the sentiments—not much to look at, but fairly effective as sung—"that there'll be a hot time in the Centre when Bertram is elected."

Look at the queer coincidence. Just as Mr. Bertan was running, this announcement was made that the Postmaster General had abandoned the Berne Convention. All the world agreed to remain in except "I, William Mulock." There is another announcement of this reduction in postage, again under the heading "A new link in the Empire." But it would take up time uselessly to read these newspaper articles. I shall not inflict them upon hon. gentlemen who have already shown such kindness in listening to me. I call attention to these articles for no other purpose than to show that the head of the department was ignorant of the fact that he was placed in a position of impotence so far as interfering with the Berne Convention was concerned. Now, Sir, to show that I do not speak at all outside of the record, I would draw the attention of hon. members to the convention itself.

Now, I wish to draw the attention of hon. members to the convention itself. The postal convention selected Berne as the headquarters of the Postal Union, as it was thought desirable to choose a small commercial centre where no prejudicial influence might interfere with the deliberations of the union instead of one of the larger capitals. So it was decided at the first meeting that Berne, the capital of Switzerland, should be selected as the headquarters of the Postal Union. Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman should have made himself acquainted with the proceedings of the union. He knew he was going to be made Postmaster General if his party got into power, and one of the first documents he should have read, the first information he should have acquired, was how to deal with the people who had entered into a convention with Great Britain and her colonies ; and if he could not have found that out himself, if he had retained the old and trusted Deputy Minister, who is still to-day as able a man as ever he was, his Deputy Minister would have instructed him how to proceed, and would not have permitted him to issue that pronouncement, because it is nothing else. It is the personal declaration of a gentleman who has no more power to deal with that question than I have to deal with the British fleet in the Mediterranean. Now supposing the Postmaster General had wished to make a change in the postage of Canada, the convention tells him how to do it. It is printed in both French and English, so there could be no mistake about it. These meetings take place every year.

In the interval which elapses between the meetings, any postal administration—

Administration means in French the departmental authority in any country belonging to the Postal Union.

—of a country of the Union has the right to address to the other administrations belonging to it, through the medium of the International Bureau, proposals concerning the régime of the Union.

2. Every proposal is subject to the following procedure:—

A period of five months is allowed to the administrations of the Union to examine the proposals and to furnish to the International Bureau their observations, amendments, or counter proposals, as the case may be. The answers are tabulated by the International Bureau and communicated to the administrations with an invitation to declare themselves for or against.

That is common sense, the treaty cannot be destroyed.

Those who have not furnished their vote within a period of six months, counting from the date of the second circular of the International Bureau notifying to them the observations which have been received are considered as abstaining.

3. In order to become binding, the proposal must obtain:

1°. Unanimity of votes if they involve the addition of new articles or any modification of the stipulations of the present article, or articles 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 12, 13, 15 and 18.

These are technical matters affecting the various bureaus.

2°. Two-thirds of the votes if they involve a modification of the stipulations of the convention other than those of articles 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 12, 13, 15, 18 and 26.

3°. Simply an absolute majority if they affect the interpretation of the stipulations of the convention, except in the case of dispute contemplated by the foregoing article 23.

4. Resolutions duly adopted are sanctioned, in the first two cases, by a diplomatic declaration, which the Government of the Swiss Confederation is charged with the duty of preparing and transmitting to all the governments of the contracting countries, and in the third case by a simple notification from the International Bureau to all the administrations in the Union.

This is the official document. I have read sufficient to show that Canada was represented among the nations, who, by solemn treaty, bound themselves into a compact for commercial purposes in this universal union. I say there is not a clerk in the Post Office Department who does not know the value, and importance, and the terms of the Berne Convention, and the conventions which have subsequently taken place. I wished to bring this before Parliament in order to show that in selecting the hon. gentleman as Postmaster General, the Liberal Government have gibbeted Canada before the civilized nations of the world as having at the head of one of the most important departments a gentleman ignoring one of the most important conventions that affect the trade and commerce of the whole world. Sir, when I read in the papers, in London, the news of the action of the hon. gentleman, I felt a blush of shame when I realized that Canada had been made an object of criticism by the people who took part in the Berne Convention, as having ignored the very contract which regulated her intercourse with them. I have put this case briefly before Parliament because I considered it important to do so. Every point which the hon. gentleman has submitted in his scheme, the change in the postage, the decentralization of the dead letter office, all, I consider, are fraught with danger to the interests of Canada, and to the interest of the union. In expressing my views as I have done, I wish to say that I have not been moved by the slightest feeling against the hon. gentleman, but I have done so solely in obedience to what I considered my duty towards Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. I intended to ask the Postmaster General before he went away a question, but as he is gone, I will ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who is a lawyer, under what section of the Act does the Postmaster General presume to change the postage that already exists between Canada and Great Britain?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am not conversant with the statute, but I remember it was brought up once.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 10.20 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 16th May, 1898.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 142) to authorize the Quebec Harbour Commissioners to borrow money.—(Mr. Dobell.)

ST. LUC RIFLE RANGES.

Mr. MONK. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the Minister of Militia and Defence if proper precautions have been taken against accident at the St. Luc Rifle Ranges, which the newspapers have announced are to be reopened for practice this year. The hon. gentleman is aware that grave danger attended the practice on these ranges last year, in one instance it was accompanied by very grave accident. Such inquiry as I have been able to make, has convinced me that the fault was with the butts and not at all with the parties who are practicing there. I would like to know from the Minister if precautions have been taken to improve the butts so as to remove the danger of accident?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). The matter has been very carefully considered by the Quartermaster General and the Assistant Adjutant General of Artillery, who have charge of this particular matter, and I understand that they consider it safe, in a restricted way, to carry on the rifle practice this year, not for the general rifle shooting of the militia, but simply for rifle practice for the competition. They are taking the necessary precautions to make the range safe in that limited sense for the practices that may be necessary.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would remind the Minister of Marine and Fisheries of my request for a statement of the dismissals in my county.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). They are being prepared; I am in hopes to have them to-day.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 113) to incorporate the Subsidiary High Court of the Ancient Order of Foresters in the Dominion of Canada.—(Mr. Landerkin.)

SUPPLY—NORTH-WEST SEED GRAIN INDEBTEDNESS.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. DAVIN. I wish to call the attention of the Minister of the Interior to a suggestion I am about to make. The Minister a few days ago, in reply to a question of mine, said the seed grain indebtedness of the North-west Territories amounted to $145,245. I wish to make him a suggestion about that matter. I do not think the argument is unfamiliar to him that the local government of the North-west Territories were entitled, taking the same basis for calculating the obligation of the Dominion to that government as is taken in respect to the provinces, to a much larger sum than it receives at present. A couple of years ago I calculated that the Dominion Government owed the North-west Territories $1,000,000; that is to say, if since 1883, or even later, the Territories had received all they were entitled to on the same basis as the provinces receive their subsidies, at the time I made the calculation, they would have been entitled to $1,000,000 more than they have received. In 1888, taking the population according to the last census, I showed the amount they were then entitled to was a sum which actually exceeded that which they at the present time, the North-west Territory Government, was receiving to carry on its affairs. In regard to the grain indebtedness—I do not know how the members of the North-west Government would regard my suggestion, but I think the people would be in favour of it—I suggest to the hon. Minister that he hand over this sum of $145,235 to the Government of the North-west Territories, and say to them: You are entitled to get from those who owe this sum for seed grain its equivalent in statute labour. I have discussed this matter with several farmers, some of whom never received seed grain, but who take a deep interest in those around them who did receive it, and with others who are not interested mainly on their own account, but because they became security for others, and they thought that if the suggestion I make to the Minister were adopted by him, it would prove a just and wise policy for the North-west, and besides it would be a practical one, because it would be a very easy way of collecting money which would otherwise not be collected. However, that is a matter into which I will not enter. I throw out the suggestion to the Minister, and I hope yet, because I think it would be the solution of a problem which no doubt has presented itself to his mind.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). The suggestion made by the hon. gentleman that the debt due to the Government of Canada for seed grain by farmers of the North-west Territories should be assigned to the Government of the North-west Territories, is one which I have not heard made before. I shall be very glad to take it up and consider it, but at the first blush I am not able to give an opinion on it.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. When the hon. gentleman is considering the suggestion in regard to the farmers of the North-west, perhaps he will also consider claims of Manitoba which have been outstanding since 1886, with a view of taking them up and disposing of them, or else wiping them out.

ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I wish to call attention to a defect in a return brought down to this House in regard to the Royal Military College. The return I think is complete with the exception of item (c): "The respective conditions of engagement as regards the duration of the staff of the Royal Military College." I should like if the attention of the Minister of Militia is called to this, and I have no doubt that the return will be completed in that regard before we take up the Estimates.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I shall call the attention of the Minister of Militia to the request of the hon. gentleman.

ASSINIBOIA—INDIAN RESERVE CROPS.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). A few days ago the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) called my attention to the fact that a certain answer to a return had not been brought down. The only return not furnished by the Department of Indian Affairs is that ordered on the 2nd inst., calling for the number of acres seeded in 1897, the nature of the seed sown and the amount of crops grown in each Indian reserve in the provisional district of Assiniboia during the year ending 31st December, 1897. I presume that is the return the hon. gentleman refers to.

Mr. DAVIN. Yes.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The practice in the department has been to have the information forwarded only at the end of the fiscal year, so that we have not now in the department the information asked. When the Order passed the House letters were written to the officers instructing them to send the information in. The practice which has obtained for several years of not sending the information to the department until the end of the fiscal year is a very bad one and should be reformed. I will see in the future that this information shall be furnished to the department at the end of the calendar year.

Mr. DAVIN. Hear, hear.

MANITOBA UNIVERSITY LAND GRANT.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I would remind the Minister of the Interior that some time ago I moved for a return with regard to the land grant to the Manitoba University, and I have not yet been informed whether this return has been brought down.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). I will inquire about it.

Mr. LaRIVIERE.

Motion agreed to, and the House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Before we go on with the Estimates, I would remind the Minister of Public Works that he promised us some information with regard to the fence in Major's Hill Park.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). That item has been allowed to stand, but if my hon. friend wants to go back to it I will move that item be dropped for the excellent reason that the money has been spent and I do not want to vote it again.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I suppose that does not mean that the hon. gentleman will break his promise to give us information about it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The money is not wanted, but I intend to ask in the Supplementary Estimates for a small amount to complete the part of the stone work and the iron railing, and then I will give the information.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Would it be convenient for the hon. gentleman to give the information before the last days of the session, so that in the hurry it may not be forgotten?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will simply move that the item be struck out. There was some misunderstanding the other day. When I said that the fence would cost about $14,000 I meant not only the fence on Mackenzie avenue but the fence on St. Patrick Street as well. When in 1885, the park was transferred to the Government by the city of Ottawa, 963 feet of that fence on Mackenzie avenue was built, and last year I got $4,500 from Parliament to complete the fence on that avenue, and 525 feet were built. To complete the stone work will require about $700 additional, and the balance of the money will be applied for the iron railing. The whole thing will amount in the Supplementary Estimates to $3,886.50.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. So that instead of the fence costing $14,000 it will not cost $10,000?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. When the chief architect gave that figure to me he included another fence on St. Patrick's street which has not been decided on at all.

Mr. FOSTER. The cost of the fence will be about $16 a foot?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It will be about $11 a foot.

Mr. FOSTER. It is $8,000 for 525 feet and that is pretty near $16 a foot.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Quite so ; and the iron railing on the whole length of 1,461 feet.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Does the hon. gentleman know what it cost the city to build the part of the fence already erected ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That was about twenty-five years ago ; I tried to get that information and we could not.

Mr. McNEILL. What is the height of the masonry work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. About three feet above ground and there is the foundation, of course.

Mr. McNEILL. At about how much per foot does the architect estimate the cost of that masonry work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot say.

Mr. McNEILL. Does the chief architect not know what the cost of the mason work is ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. About $9.89 per lineal foot, which is not a very big price, in the opinion of those who know what the work is worth.

Mr. DAVIN. I did not quite understand what my hon. friend said. Is he going to drop a part of this fence now ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am not going to drop anything at all. I am going to ask from Parliament $3,886.50 to complete the fence on Mackenzie avenue.

Mr. DAVIN. Of course one of my hon. friend's chief objects in building this fence is to enhance the ornamental power of the park to Ottawa.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Part of that fence was built already. I have said that about twenty-five times, and I now repeat it. The park was fenced, partly in stone, twenty or twenty-five years ago, by the city of Ottawa. In 1885 it was transferred to us. Part of it was fenced with boards and the boards are all out of shape, and we are asking for the sum necessary to complete the fence in stone, 526 feet.

Mr. DAVIN. Twenty-five years ago, the whole of Canada was in a state of darkness, compared with to-day, in everything artistic. My hon. friend says that the city council of Ottawa, a quarter of a century ago, when Ottawa was emerging from its tadpole condition of Bytown into the great city it is to-day, and which we know now is making progress towards being the Washington of the North, built part of a stone fence and also a wooden fence. My hon. friend must surely know that the view taken by the Ottawa town council, 25 years ago, as to what was a proper fence is hardly the ideal up to which he and his department are reaching at this time of day. He is the Edile of the Dominion of Canada, and surely he is not going to tell this Parliament that the plans and ideals of the Ottawa city council, 25 years ago, are those that are going to govern him now. It was late the other night, when I was trying to impress on his mind the fact that the fence was unsightly and of a hybrid character and lacked the unity which ought to belong to anything artistic. I may not have impressed my hon. friend to the extent it was certainly my desire to do. I should like my hon. friend to consider whether or not it is worth while going on with this fence, which, for the stone alone, will cost nearly $10 a lineal foot. I should like to ask him also what the railing will cost per lineal foot, because it seems to me, if we are going to pay a high price for a fence, we had better have something worth looking at. The object of my hon. friend is not to exclude animals from getting into the park, but really to build a fence that will not only be protective but will please the eye and in that way give the people some value for their money.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. To complete the stone work will require only $700 now, and it is rather late in the day to take the advice of my hon. friend, although no doubt he is a first-class artist in this kind of work as he is in the House. As to the railing, the estimate made by the department on 1,461 feet, amounts to $2,291.50.

Mr. HAGGART. The other evening, I asked what the cost per yard was of the work already done.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We tried to get that information, but the city authorities would not give us any.

Mr. HAGGART. I am talking of the work you did yourself.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have just given the information. I have said the stone work cost $9.89 per lineal foot.

Mr. HAGGART. Would the hon. gentleman ask his chief architect how many cubic yards in a lineal foot or how many parts of a yard ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There are about 16 cubic feet in a lineal foot, so the chief architect tells me.

Mr. HAGGART. Then this work is costing nearly $18 per yard ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not know what the calculation of the chief architect is. I did not supervise the work myself. I hope that a Minister is not expected to supervise such work himself.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Go on the spot and see it himself?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There never was a Minister, and there never will be a Minister, who could supervise all his work himself.

Mr. FOSTER. Not all of it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If hon. gentlemen opposite take the ground that the present chief architect, who has been 28 years employed in my department, is not a good officer, I have not a word to say. It is not for me to defend him. I kept him on and promoted him; but if my hon. friends are right, I made a mistake.

Mr. HAGGART. What we want to know is this. The hon. Minister is doing this by day work, which is contrary to the Order in Council and to the argument made every time, when that side of the House was in Opposition, namely, that no work costing over $5,000 should be let except by tender. The Minister of Public Works has not done that, and we have the right to criticise in the closest manner this expenditure of $14,000, and show to the country that it has cost four or five times as much as it could have been done for by contract.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think the hon. gentleman should be consistent himself and not rise to speak of works done by day labour. I do not want to make any unpleasant references to works that he may have had done by day labour.

Mr. HAGGART. Do not spare me, but let me know what I have done.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) is a bold man, but he has done work in the past in Montreal, by day's labour, which has not proven to such a great success, and now, in discussing a small expenditure of $4,500, he should be more moderate. He is altogether wrong in this criticism. What is the duty of the Minister of Public Works so far as tenders are concerned? The Minister is not obliged to call for tenders under the law. The only legal enactment in reference to this matter of public tenders on public works—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte) will allow me, I would ask: Although there may be no statute, would not the hon. gentleman admit that there is an Order in Council respecting contracts for over $5,000?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is no law.

Mr. TARTE.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is a law.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The only legal enactment on this point is found in the Public Works Act, chap. 36 of the Revised Statutes, in which it is provided:

The Minister shall invite tenders by public advertisement for the execution of all works, except in cases of pressing emergency,—

Mr. FOSTER. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If I may be allowed to read——except in cases of pressing emergency, in which delay would be injurious to the public interest, or in which, from the nature of the work, it can be more expeditiously and economically executed by the officers and servants of the department.

In other words, the moment the Minister goes to Council and is authorized to do work by day's labour, he is perfectly within the meaning of the law.

Mr. HAGGART. Did the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte) go to Council and get that authority?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, because there was no reason for it. The expenditure was only $4,500.

Mr. DAVIN. But the real expenditure is $14,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is not a word of accuracy in that.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman's (Mr. Tarte's) own statement is that a work requiring an expenditure of over $5,000 must be given out by public tender. I venture to say he could get no opinion from the Solicitor General or Minister of Justice permitting him to evade that order by splitting the work into two and asking for a vote for only half the work. Such an Order in Council would be a perfect farce, if the Minister could get away from it by saying he would only undertake the work in sections. The Order contemplates the cost of the whole work, not the cost of a portion of it. In this case, according to the hon. gentleman's own statement, the cost would be over $15,000.

Mr. INGRAM. Are we to understand that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte) has changed his views with respect to work by tender and contract? A few years ago when in Opposition the hon. gentleman was opposed to doing the work by the day and favoured public contract. Has he changed his views?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There are works that can be better done by public tender and contract, and there are works that can be better done by day's labour. All those who have been Ministers of Public Works or Ministers of Railways and Canals will agree with me that public tender is not always the best.

Mr. INGRAM. I am glad to hear the hon. gentleman say that the Government he criticised so severely was right in this matter.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Well, we need not discuss that on an item that I propose shall be struck out.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the item is struck out, I think we are entitled to an answer from the Minister of Public Works as to whether he proposes to cheat the law by this practice of taking the work in bits. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte) the other evening was, for a moment true to the traditions of the Government, the old and long established traditions, and to the principle of an Order in Council passed long ago, when he gave as his reason for building the greenhouse by contract that it would cost over $5,000, and, therefore, could not be done by day's work. Now he has fairly well implied to-day that he does not consider himself bound to carry out that principle. I wonder if the Government intends to be bound by the declaration of the Minister of Public Works. I wonder if the Government intends to adopt the policy, from this time out, of calling for tenders for these public works only as they wish to do so. Are they going to take the ingenious and not at all honourable method of the Minister of Public Works, who, when he has on hand a work that will cost more than $5,000, divides it into sections of just less than $5,000, gets a vote for one section, and next session comes to the House and gets a vote for a few thousands more, always keeping within the $5,000, so as to cheat the practice and traditions of the department and Government, ever since the Dominion has been in existence? Having done this the hon. gentleman says that there is no law governing the case. Is the hon. gentleman bold enough to stand up in this House of Commons, and after thirty years' of administration in confederation, say that he is not bound by any law, and consequently not bound at all? He pledges himself to the House that he will not do so and so, and when the House meets they find he has done so and so, and he treats the matter with cynical unconcern. We have a right to know from the Minister of Public Works what his position is with regard to this matter. He read the law just now stating that in cases of pressing emergency, or in cases where the work could be better done by day's work, the Minister was not bound to call for public tenders. Here is a work in which neither of these things applies. It was a plain, straight piece of work, so much of a certain kind of stone to be built in a certain way—a work that any masonry contractor could do. There was no invasion threatened, nothing was going to tumble down or be injured if the wall was not built at once. So there was no urgency in the case. Yet he has gone to work deliberately and given this work out by day's work at a cost of $18 or $19 per yard, and has violated the intents of the law.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has a habit which has not raised him very much in the estimation of the House and the country.

I do not deny the debating talent of my hon. friend. But there is one thing that I must tell him in a friendly way: He will never rise to the position of a leader of men unless he amends his ways, unless he gives up that habit of lecturing everybody. No man, however big he may be, can indulge in that kind of thing. The hon. gentleman cannot once rise in the House without lecturing somebody. He has no right to do so. We are just as good men as he is. Our social position, our political position, is just as good as his. Now let us discuss the hard facts of the case. If I am wrong, I will frankly admit it, but if I am right, my hon. friend will have to admit that the language he has used towards me is unfair. What are the facts of this case? I claim that there is no law, and there is no Order in Council, binding me to give by public tender a work of that kind. If the hon. gentleman will look at the Order in Council of 1880, he will find it states that no contract for any work over and above $5,000 shall be given without public tender; it does not state that no work costing more than $5,000 shall be given out without public tender, not at all, but that no contract over $5,000 shall be given without public tender. I did not give any contract over that amount. That is the spirit of the law. In other words, if the Minister of Public Works or the Minister of Railways and Canals were bound to such an extent that they could not do a certain work by day's work which, in their estimation, could be better done in this way, they would be in a most ridiculous position. They are bound only to this extent, that they cannot give a contract for a work of over $5,000 without asking for public tenders. I did not violate the law in this case, and I will not submit to let my hon. friend lecture me in that way.

Mr. FOSTER. Did my hon. friend not give a contract?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I did not give a contract, I simply gave the work by day's labour.

Mr. FOSTER. Then he could construct a work costing half a million dollars and get off on that same technicality.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If I made up my mind that it was better to carry out a work costing $50,000 without public tender, if, for instance, I thought

It better to apply to two or three able contractors and employ them to construct that work without asking for public tenders, I would then be obliged to go to Council for authorization. I could not do otherwise. But in this case, there was nothing of the kind done. In this case I simply erected a fence by day's work, and did not give any contract. So I am perfectly within the letter of the law, and the letter of the regulations.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend is something of a casuist—I hope that will not offend him. He stated in one part of his somewhat heated diatribe that we had better discuss this question. That would have been very pertinent for him at the commencement of his short speech, when he discussed my social position, my moral position, and different other positions. Now my hon. friend had better stick to his own text. If he goes into that sort of thing he may find that others can go into it as well. The hon. gentleman need not lose his temper and attempt to use language of that kind to a fellow member because he has criticised any piece of work that he is doing. That will not stop criticism, neither will the hon. gentleman stop my criticism, by accusing me of taking the wrong way to rise. I do not care to rise except in one way, and if I do not rise in that way I will not rise at all. My hon. friend should recollect that there are ways in which a man may rise disreputably. But my hon. friend is simply a casuist when he tries to get clear of this by saying that he did not give a contract. Why, he can get rid of calling for tenders, and can arrange to build Parliament buildings in the same way.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I could not give contracts.

Mr. FOSTER. All he would have to do would be simply to do as he has done here, not call for tenders, not give a contract to anybody, but to say to some able men: Go ahead and build this, put men on, and I will pay you by day's work. The hon. gentleman says there is no contract, but there is an implied contract, and he is not fulfilling the spirit of that Order in Council when he employs men by the day and pays them day's wages for doing the work, because that is an implied contract. The hon. gentleman has actually lowered the amount of work he called for in a work which he knew would cost more than $5,000, and has violated the intent of the Order in Council.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am not bound to carry out by public tender any work, of even over $5,000, provided I can carry it out by day's labour; but I am bound not to give any contract of over $5,000 without a public tender, unless I am authorized to do otherwise by an Order in Council. But I am not making the law. The Order in Council to which I refer was adopted in 1880, and it has stood ever since. Now, on that point I think I am right, I am within the law. My hon. friend is altogether mistaken when he says that I attacked him. What I said was that our social position was as good as his—those are my words, and that our political position is just as good as his; and I said that he had no right to get on his high horse and say that we were deceiving everybody. That is no way for a man to speak who is a leader in this House.

Mr. TARTE.

Mr. DAVIN. What was the object of passing that Order in Council?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That was passed nearly twenty years ago, I did not pass it.

Mr. DAVIN. My hon. friend cannot get off that way. We have a perfect right to know from a Minister of the Crown what interpretation he puts upon a law that he is administering, although he does not seem to think an Order in Council is a law. I want to get from him what was the object of passing that Order in Council.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I did not ask for the Order in Council.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The question is one of far greater interest than merely pertains to this item. I asked the Minister of Public Works, who I thought was reading from an Order in Council, which he quoted, to allow me to look at it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I was reading from a memorandum.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman apparently has not the Order in Council in his possession.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have only a quotation from it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I have it under my hand. It is the startling proposition laid down by the hon. gentleman that brought forth the caustic criticism of the member for York. It is a statement that he has made, surrounded by his colleagues, must be shared in by them or disallowed on the spot. The suggestion has been made that an Order in Council is a wholly useless thing. That Order in Council was passed for the purpose of protecting the public interest in the event of handing over a large work to be carried on by day's work without full consideration by Council, rather than by the off-hand exercise of discretion by the Minister, and the hon. gentleman has found this short cut to the advancement of his own peculiar ideas, that is to say, where the whole cost will undoubtedly run from $14,000 to $16,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Over $5,000.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The whole work will cost what I have indicated.

That is the law of the country. I would have to go to Council and consider their opinions, and then there would be the safeguard of having competition at the hands of the public. But the Minister decides that he will do the work piecemeal, $100 or $1,000 at a time. This, however, is only part of the work, and the object of the Order in Council would not be carried out, and could not be carried out if the Minister were permitted to subdivide the work. If there is any defence for the Minister it will not be found in the argument behind which he has endeavoured to shelter himself. The Public Works Act is important in this connection. It is mandatory, and it says :

The Minister shall invite tenders by public advertisement for the execution of all work, except in case of pressing emergency in which delay would be injurious to the public interest, or if from the nature of the work it could be done more expeditiously and economically by the officers and servants of the department.

That requires some limit or definition for the protection of the Minister. In 1880, with that general law on the Statute-book, Council went further, and defined the cases in which it would be for the public interest to dispense with public tenders. Although I have not the order at hand, I can remember that it is applicable to public works, not to any part of a public work, not to any work divided into sections. But the Governor in Council gave the Minister this definition of the general language, that "where, from the nature of the work, it might be more expeditiously done by day's work," instead of using the language of the statute, "officers and servants of the department." Surely no hon. gentleman will agree that the Order in Council consents to the Minister cutting the work into sections so that no section shall amount to more than $5,000. I feel positive that this is a most flagrant interpretation of the Order in Council, and is in every sense against the public interest. We have not forgotten the extraordinary length to which hon. gentlemen opposite proceeded when sitting on this side of the House, when they did not stop to question whether we were acting within our rights and within our power, but they boldly attacked the Government for carrying out work, except in case of public emergency, when it was absolutely necessary, under any system except that of tender and contract. The present Minister of Public Works was one of the leaders in denouncing day's work in cases when it was necessary to expend considerable sums of public money, on the ground that negligence might be attributed to the heads of departments and Government employees in regard to not exercising that close scrutiny over expenditure which was possible at the hands of contractors. I have here a report of the observations of the Minister of Public Works when he was discussing a small work involving an expenditure of $700 when the Hon. Mr. Ouimet was Minister of Public works. The present hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte) asked the Minister :

Does the Minister intend to ask for tenders for that work ?

The Minister replied :

The engineer tells me he intends to carry out the work by day's labour.

The hon. gentleman then said :

I should think the Minister's experience of day's labour was not very favourable

Later on in the debate the present Minister of Public Works said :

The Minister may have the best intentions possible, but I am afraid that when the elections come on, neither he nor his chief engineer will always be able to do the best for the country. Now take the Pointe aux Esquimaux business. Suppose we have an election in a short time, the Ministerial candidate will manage to utilize the expenditure of this money on his own behalf, and a public work which the Minister intends to be carried out in the public interest will become simply an electoral engine. This is not right, and for that reason I would urge the Minister not to insist too strongly on the day's labour system.

That is a sample of the attacks made by the present Minister of Public Works on the Government of that day.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
I did not say it was against the law.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman said it was against public policy. That is my point. The hon. gentleman is not only going against what he thought at one time was public policy, but he is proceeding in the teeth of the law. He is not able to obtain the opinion of the law department or of any of his colleagues belonging to the legal profession, that his action in undertaking this work, which is to cost over $5,000, is not a direct violation of the Order in Council passed and adopted under the Public Works Act. The hon. gentleman always saw opportunities for fraud, waste of money and corruption, and he continually pointed to the Act as a means of guarding against the system of day's work. In this case the hon. gentleman is not acting as a result of a change of opinion, but in this particular instance he has sought to make useless and absolutely void and of no effect the Order in Council to which he has referred, which attempted at all events, to limit the discretion, power and authority of the head of the department.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I do not think there should be any difference of opinion on either side of the House as to how public money should be expended. It is within the knowledge of any hon. gentleman who ever had charge of a department—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Permit me to cite, in order that the hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) may appreciate our position, a statement of the Minister of Public Works in this debate. He said to my hon. friend from York (Mr. Foster) :

As my hon. friend knows, the law obliges me to ask for tenders for a work costing $5,000.

I think the Minister was then right in his interpretation of the law.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Everybody knows there are certain classes of work which can be more expeditiously performed by day's labour, performed under the eyes of the officers of the department. That class of work was done by the late Government and it must perforce be done by this and every other Government, for in some cases the nature of the work precludes calling for tenders. The statute itself provides expressly for this kind of work, for it says that if in the opinion of the Minister the work can be more expeditiously or economically performed by day's labour, the Minister has the option of proceeding in that manner rather than by tender. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) intimates that there has been an Order in Council passed which limits the discretion of the Minister in that regard, but a little reflection will show him that there ought not to be much difference of opinion on either side of the House as to what that Order in Council meant. Parliament votes sums of money for the construction of public works, and it votes them in detail. I take it that if Parliament votes more than $5,000 in a particular year for a specific work, the Minister would call for tenders to have the work carried out, but where Parliament votes a smaller sum of money than $5,000, Parliament votes it with its eyes open and with the knowledge that the law authorizes the Minister to expend it by day's labour. If, say, $1,000 is voted for a public work to be done within a year, neither by the statute law nor by the Order in Council passed in pursuance of it, is there any absolute necessity of calling for tenders. The Order in Council, as I construe it—I may be wrong, but that is my opinion—means that if the work costs over $5,000, then if the Minister thinks it might be more expeditiously performed by day's labour, and if Parliament votes more than $5,000 to do it for the year, the Minister must come to Council before he can dispense with calling for tenders. But if Parliament votes less than $5,000 for a specific work, the Order in Council does not apply, and the Minister proceeds then under the spirit of the law which says that in that case, he must take the responsibility of determining whether he can do it more expeditiously and economically in the public interest by day's labour rather than by tender. There ought to be no difference of opinion on that point, and I take it therefore that if this Parliament to-day voted $6,000 for a public work of any kind, the hon. Minister could not, under the statute, expend that six thousand dollars without calling for tenders, unless he was authorized by Council to do so. If Parliament votes less than $5,000 the necessity for going to Council and taking the opinion of his colleagues is dispensed with and the law relegates the responsibility to him as Minister of Public Works. The object of the law is that great public works involving the expenditure of large sums should only be carried on, after public competition has been invited. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) recalls the criticisms of members on this side of the House when in Opposition, against the Government policy of building public works—the Curran Bridge, for instance—involving over $100,000 expenditure, by day's labour. We said that was a direct violation of the spirit of the law and we condemned it severely. However, I do not want to rake up these old matters; I want to get to the general principle which the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) referred to, and to see if we cannot agree that there is a plain common-sense construction (in the public interest) to be given to the statute and to the Order in Council passed under it, so that when Parliament votes large sums of money, the Minister shall not on his own responsibility execute a work without calling for tenders. If it is over $5,000 he must go to Council to get authority to do it by day's labour.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. This is far too important a matter to be dismissed in an off-hand way. I am absolutely sure the Minister of Marine will not, on reflection, adhere to his criticism of my argument. Both sides will admit that the hon. gentleman has laid down a novel and I think an entirely unsafe test, because he has gone away from the language of the statute, and said, that the vote, not the nature of the work, is to govern.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Oh, no.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Over and over again the hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) said that if the Minister asks for anything under $5,000 that is the test, and Parliament votes the money with its eyes open. If that were the case the Minister of Public Works would be justified in saying: I need only do that by day's work because Parliament has only given me under $5,000 to expend; it is only when the work is $5,000 or over I am obliged to ask for tenders.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He would have to go to Council to be dispensed from calling for tenders in that case.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That was not the hon. gentleman's argument.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is what I intended.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) said more than once that this vote was to be the test. We on this side of the House contend that the vote has nothing to do with it; but that the nature and extent of the work governs, and Parliament, when it used the language spoke of the "nature" of the work. Very often a vote is taken here for $4,000 as an instalment on a work which every one knows will cost $20,000, and according to the argument of the hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) the Minister can say that the vote being for, say, $4,000, it is outside the purview of the Act, and he could give out that work by day's labour, although it would cost $20,000 eventually. That is what the argument of the hon. gentleman amounts to; but I do not think that either side of the House ever contemplated that. In the case of the Curran Bridge, the hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) will understand that the head of the department did not fly in the face of the Act or the Order in Council. The head of the department, right or wrong, went to Council, which exercised its discretion, right or wrong, and which, within the terms of the statute, authorized the construction of that bridge by day's labour. Our contention is, not that the Government as a whole cannot authorize the Minister to build this by day's labour, but that the Minister himself has no right under the statute and the Order in Council in existence, to evade the public policy they lay down, by saying that the law applies to work costing over $5,000, but that he can take votes on the instalment plan of less than $5,000, and then do the work by day's labour without any other authority than his own.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) has fairly stated my contention. I say that leaving the Order in Council to one side, the statute does not place any money limitation upon the manner in which the Minister shall spend the money. The question with the Minister, outside of the Order in Council, is entirely as to whether it would be in the public interest to spend the money by calling for tenders or to spend it by day's labour. When he makes that decision, he is responsible to Parliament for it. He may say: I chose to spend it by day's labour, because I thought that it would be more economical. Parliament would decide whether the policy is good or bad, judging it by the surrounding circumstances. But there has been a limitation placed upon the exercise of the Minister's discretion. That limitation is made by the Order in Council, which declares that should Parliament vote a sum of money exceeding $5,000, he shall not exercise his personal discretion in determining whether to call for tenders or not, but must consult his colleagues and get an Order in Council if he wants to dispense with tenders.

Mr. DAVIN. What the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) pointed out was that it was not the amount voted by this House, but the total cost of the work that was in question.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have no hesitation in saying that if $6,000 or $7,000 were voted for a specific work, the Minister of Public Works ought not to expend that by day's labour, without first taking the opinion of his colleagues:

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Does it make any difference whether the Minister asks $6,000 on a $20,000 job or only $4,000?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It makes this difference. When the Order in Council was passed, some arbitrary sum had to be agreed upon as that beyond which the Minister could not exercise his discretion, and the amount was fixed at $5,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. For the entire cost of the job, and not simply the expenditures in the financial year.

Mr. DAVIN. Does the Order in Council make use of the word vote at all?

Mr. COCHRANE. To show how fallacious that argument is, at any rate from a layman's point of view, supposing the Government decided to build a post office in my riding, which I think they ought to do, that would cost $16,000, the Minister of Public Works might ask for a vote of $4,000 in the financial year, and could spend that money by day work.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. COCHRANE. Our contention is that that is not the law, but that when a job costs $16,000, the Minister has no discretion to build it by day labour.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. You must not mix up the two questions of law and policy. The hon. gentleman may be perfectly correct with regard to the policy and quite wrong with regard to the law. Here is the statute:

The Minister shall invite tenders by public advertisement for the execution of all works except those which, from the nature of the case, can be more expeditiously and economically executed by the officers and servants of the department.

Statutory discretion is there given to the Minister of Public Works. If he determines that the work can be more expeditiously performed by day labour, he can take that means, no matter what amount the work may cost, without being required to have recourse to any Order in Council. There was no limit in the statute. But then the Order in Council came in and put a limitation upon what was an unlimited discretion. This Order in Council provides:

No contract for any work over and above $5,000 shall be given without public tender, unless the reasons for so doing be laid before and approved of by the Privy Council.

If, therefore, the Minister of Public Works received $5,000 from Parliament to carry on a certain work, he could take upon himself the responsibility of determining whether he would have that work done by day labour or by contract, after calling for tenders, and without consulting his colleagues; but if the amount was $5,500, which he had to expend within the year, he had to go before his colleagues and get their consent before he could have the work done by day labour. You cannot lay down a hard and fast policy that must be applicable, under all circumstances, to all public works. The statute is very careful not to do that, because the experienced men who framed it saw that there might be public works, the construction of which, it would be better in the public interest not to let by tender. The restriction imposed by the Order in Council was one which experience shows was necessary to enable the members of the Government to control the larger works, so that the Minister should not have absolute control himself.

Mr. DAVIN. What is the date of the Order in Council?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. 23rd of March, 1880. You may condemn or you may not condemn the course taken in each individual case, but I submit that you cannot challenge the fact that the Minister has acted strictly within the letter and the spirit of the law.

Mr. DAVIN. He has not acted even within the letter of it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The policy we are ready to discuss, but the legality is beyond doubt.

Mr. HAGGART. There cannot be much difference of opinion as to the meaning of the statute. It is clear enough and directory, that all contracts, no matter what amount, shall be given by tender. Then comes the exception, and that is limited to cases of necessity or economy.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If the hon. gentleman were right in that, his argument would be stronger.

Mr. HAGGART. Let me read the statute:

The Minister shall invite tenders by public advertisement for the execution of all works,
Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

except in cases of pressing emergency, in which delay would be injurious to the public interest.—

That means, for instance, where there is a break in a canal, which will not admit of delay.

—or in which, from the nature of the work, it can be more expeditiously and economically executed by the officers and servants of the department.

Surely the hon. gentleman does not say that the building of a fence around a public park is a case that comes within the meaning of that part of the section?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am not sufficiently conversant with the facts to know whether it would be better to build that fence by day labour or by contract. But what I say is that the Minister has the discretion to build it by day labour and is strictly within the spirit of the law in so doing. Whether it was good policy or not is another question.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman says the limitation is put by Order in Council, which provides that no work shall be done without calling for tenders if the cost exceeds $5,000. The hon. gentleman says that no matter what the work may cost, no matter whether it may cost $50,000 or $100,000, if the vote asked for within the financial year does not exceed $5,000, then the Minister is at perfect liberty to exercise his discretion. I deny that. I state that if the work is to cost in excess of the limit of $5,000, the Minister has no longer discretion, but must go to Council and get an Order in Council to allow him to construct it without calling for tenders.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. When Parliament voted $4,500, it named a sum under which it vested the expenditure in the Minister and did not require him to go to the Council. If Parliament requires him to get the authority of the Council it will give him more than $4,500.

Mr. HAGGART. That depends on the wording of the Order in Council. If I remember it rightly, it says: If any work should cost more than $5,000—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, not "work," but "contract."

Mr. HAGGART. Even if the word "contract" appears, the difference is only a verbal one. In the case of a contract or work costing $5,000, the Minister has no discretion. What was the argument used again and again by the Minister of Public Works himself when he was on this side of the House? Even in the case of an expenditure for the repairing of a wharf, the Minister would be justified in not giving out the work by contract? He said that even in the case of an expenditure of $700, the work ought to be let by tender. But we can see every day in Ottawa what the hon. gentleman is doing. We can see it in the statement he makes here to-day, authorized by the officers of the department, he is paying $9 per lineal foot, or $16 per yard, for the building of a fence. Is not that very statement sufficient to condemn this method of doing the work? Can there be any economy in it? Is it not notorious that the work could be done for less than that? But this is not the only case. Do we not see every day how the expenditure is being dragged out in the construction of the new roof for the Western Block? Does not every citizen of Ottawa know that that work is costing far more than is necessary? As we see these things as we have them forced upon our attention, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte) must not blame us if we ask that the same principle shall be applied to him as he wished to apply to us. The hon. gentleman mentioned the Curran bridge. He knows, because he was in the inquiry, that public tenders were asked for on that work. We got a tender for the whole work from the Grand Trunk Railway, and thought we could get the work done in that way. But we found we could not get it done within the time required. Then I applied to Council for the authority to do the work by day's labour. But even then, for all the material furnished and even for the day's labour employed, tenders were asked. I complied with the law in every respect; but the hon. Minister (Mr. Tarte) is not complying with the law. I do not find fault with him now because he says that the system of tender is not the best that could be adopted for the construction of public works. I may agree with him on that point. But we have here a statute which is directory, and we have an Order in Council founded upon that statute. When in Opposition, the hon. gentleman contended that the expenditure of even a few dollars should be carried out by tender and contract, and we only ask him as a Minister to live up to the principle that he professed when in Opposition.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I have here a speech which will be interesting in view of what the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Daves) has just said about the policy we have been discussing this afternoon, when he dealt with—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not think I touched on the question of policy this afternoon.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. As to the policy of the Act in the broad sense, and what Parliament thought they had done when they passed it, here is the view he expressed to the House on June 18th, 1895:

What authority had they to pay the money?—

Speaking of the Government.

—The House did not vote the money. Where did they get the authority? I say they acted unconstitutionally and illegally. What has been the law with respect to the construction of all these public works by contract?—

I call the hon. gentleman's attention to this, the first three lines were not wholly applicable:

—The Act lays down explicitly that these public contracts shall be given after tenders have been called for, public tenders invited by the Minister, and that except in cases of pressing emergency in which delay would be injurious to the public interest, these tenders have to be called.—

This is the policy, not dealing with the exceptions, which are dealt with later on:

—Now, we find the hon. gentleman, in the beginning of the construction of this work, deliberately ignoring the policy which Parliament has laid down for his guidance. He was bound to call for public tenders for the construction of that work, unless he did violence to the policy of the Government, as embodied in the several Acts of Parliament we have.

A little later on in his speech on work by day's work instead of tender, the hon. gentleman said:

But having violated the law in that respect, what did they do next? I charge the department that they violated that law, the policy of the law, in undertaking to do the work in the way they did. They were to build two little bridges, each about 235 long.

We have here a little fence, instead of two little bridges.

One would suppose that this was not a work to tax the engineering ability of the officials of the department, and as a matter of fact we have the statement made that previous to the work being given out most careful estimates had been made as to its cost. The moment the Minister dispensed with the calling of tenders and began the work by day's work, that moment he began to open the door through which fraud could be perpetrated.

That is the argument we used to-day.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Is that true?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I have no doubt of it.

Political influence then began to be brought to bear. Hon. gentlemen who wished to give employment to political friends and who found they could not give this employment if tenders were called found the door opened wide by the Minister himself by which they could pass through as many political proteges and friends as they liked, not tens or dozens, but hundreds of the political friends.

Now, the hon. gentleman thinks, whatever he may have thought of it in our case, that the gentleman who should open the door is the gentleman who believe that business is business.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think if ever there was a case in which the carrying out of a work by day's work was necessary, it is this, for the reason that the chief architect is on the spot and can supervise the work every day. Of course, I could very easily shield myself behind what has been done in the past, but I will not do that. I want to take direct issue with hon. gentlemen opposite and claim my right to carry out the work by day's labour whenever I find it is better in the public interest.

Mr. FOSTER. The last remark of the hon. Minister makes this a still more important question than it has been hitherto. This is a direct challenge to the principle of giving public works by tender and contract. We have the assertion of the Minister that in any case, no matter what, he will be guided by his own will and by his own whim, and if he considers it better that the work should be done by day's work, he will do it in that way.

Having estimated that a work would cost $14,000, he tries to get around it in this wise: He will take one year $4,500, spend it by day's work, and rely upon the strong legal opinion of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to see that he is upheld in the House. The next year he will come back and ask for $4,500 more, and put it on to the same work, and he will still give it out by day's work, and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will stand at his back. And so on, until he has compassed the whole work. Well, we have learned that the Ministry, as a whole, are going to back up their colleague in this way of administering his department, but I do not think the country will agree with them. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries, I think, makes a mistake in his argument in this: Neither the law nor the Order in Council have to do with the expenditure of a certain amount of money, they have to do primarily with the execution of a work, and if the work is to cost more than $5,000, the Minister is estopped. The Act says:

The Minister shall invite tenders by public advertisement for the execution of all works.

Not for the expenditure of all votes. The Order in Council says:

No contract for any work over and above $5,000.

It does not say: No expenditure of a sum of money over $5,000. This fence was estimated to cost $14,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, the estimate of the cost, as it was presented to me then, was $4,500. The item reads: "Major's Hill Park, to complete stone and iron fence, $4,500." Last year when that fence was brought to my attention and I was asked to sanction its erection, I remember well it was stated to me that the work would not cost more than this. At that time I did not contemplate building more than the part of the fence on Mackenzie avenue. I did not draft this item, it was drafted by my officers, and at the time I really thought it would not cost more than that. The fact is we have completed that fence with an additional expenditure for the stone of $700 only. There may have been a little mistake. At the time it was contemplated only to build the part on Mackenzie avenue. On Friday evening when I gave the estimate of the chief architect for $14,000, he was giving me an estimate for a fence on St. Patrick street, which is not my intention to build now. That is the whole case.

Mr. FOSTER. This is an exhibition which does not often happen in this House. How did we get the idea of a fence which was going to cost $14,000? From the Minister himself, as the estimate of his chief architect. This side of the House protested against building a fence costing $14,000, because that was the statement of the Minister himself based upon the estimate of his architect sitting beside him. What was the attitude of this House on Thursday night? It was that the expenditure of $14,000 for that work was useless and extravagant, we thought it was not needed, some thought there should be no fence at all. How was that rebutted by the Minister himself? By saying that having begun, it was absolutely necessary to finish it, or else we should have an unsightly and misshapen thing. That is how we got the idea that the whole fence was to cost $14,000 from the Minister himself. When we urged upon him to drop it, he argued that it having been begun 25 years ago and a certain part having been finished the remaining portion should be finished, and that $4,500 more was needed this year. But to-day the hon. gentleman comes down and throws the whole fault on his chief architect, saying that he did not make that estimate at all, but his chief architect made it under the idea that he wanted to finish the whole of it and had given him the cost of the whole. This is not an enviable position for the Minister to be in. He says that the fence that he had estimated for last year was to be completed, and therefore, the vote being to complete the fence, and being for only $4,500, he has not offended against the Order in Council or the spirit of the law. What did he state to-day with reference to that? That he only wanted now $700 more to complete this fence, and that therefore he was very close to his original estimate. Now, the estimate was to complete the fence, and on Thursday night he declared that that was a mistake due to the fault of his officers, and he plainly told us that it was impossible for him to make up all those estimates, for him to write out the items. The hon. gentleman contended the other night that the wording was a mistake, that it was not meant to complete, that it was a fault of the clerk who penned the item. Now, he says: As I asked that $4,500 to complete, and as I completed the fence within $700, it is only a little matter. Did the hon. gentleman contemplate building the fence without finishing it? Is not the rail a component part of the fence? Is he going to leave it with only five feet of stone in height, and two feet wide, without any railing? The hon. gentleman told us to-day that he wanted $3,886 to complete that piece of fence. Where does the hon. gentleman stand? I leave him with the House and with himself for a quiet meditation on his attempt to wriggle out of the bad position in which he placed himself on Thursday night. Let me go on with the argument, and I want to press it. I contend that the law and the Order in Council speak of works and not of sums of money, and what is contemplated is that when a work costs more than $5,000 the Minister has no discretion to give it out by day's work. It is not that if a work will cost more than $5,000 and the Minister proposes to do it in two years and spend each year something less than that amount, he can do it by day's work under the law and the Order in Council. The Minister of Marine by his advocacy of this policy, and the last declaration made by his colleagues, shows that the Government propose to open this door very wide, this door which they deplored had been opened in years past. As a member of this House, I entertain the fear, even under such management as that of the present Minister of Public Works, that hon. gentlemen opposite are going to open the door very wide and give the Minister of Public Works the option of doing any work by day's work rather than by tender and contract, provided it can be divided into sections of less than $5,000, and in this way obtain the sanction of Council. I desire to call the attention of the Minister of Marine to the Order in Council and to the law. The second case in which the work can be done by day's work is "possible emergency." This has nothing to do with the present case. The other case is thus stated, "or in which from the nature of the work it can be more expeditiously and economically executed by the officers and servants of the department." This is, to my mind, the only ground on which an individual Minister can go to Council and persuade his colleagues to absolve him from calling for tenders and giving out contracts. The work, however, is not done by officers and servants of the department, but by hired men, under the supervision of the department. Every public work, however, is thus carried on; every public building is constructed under the supervision of the officers of the department. Does this come under the category either of a work called for by an emergency, or works that can be more economically done by the officers of the department? It is not pretended that such is the case. Here is a plain, new piece of work. There is no tearing down or the utilizing of old and constructing with old and new material. There could not be a more straightforward work than the building of a stone wall, of a certain specified quality of stone, so many feet wide and so many feet high, the construction to be supervised by the officers of the department. How does the hon. gentleman propose to act? Has he to decide whether the work shall be done more expeditiously and economically by the officers and servants of the department—is it left to his own idea or whim? Without pressing the matter further than it should be pressed, I look upon this as a most important matter, as I do also the declaration made by the Minister and apparently acquiesced in by the Government. Is this an attempt to break down the barriers entirely? Already they have attacked the Auditor General with a good deal of severity on the part of some Ministers, in which they recommended him to mind his own business and they have a particular idea as to what his business is—but they had quite different ideas a few years ago. Is this carrying out further the attack on the Auditor General. Let the Minister carry out the idea and the public will judge.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman has shown that he possesses a short memory, especially when it suits him. The hon. gentleman has criticised the fact that this work is being done by day's labour, the total cost of which will be a little over $8,000, and not $14,000. But the hon. gentleman a few days before the general elections and when he was Finance Minister gave out a contract for $3,600 for a portion of the work, he did not undertake it by day's work, but he gave out a contract contrary to the law. There was no appropriation of money voted by Parliament, and yet the country had to pay $3,600 for the first portion of the contract, which ultimately cost over $40,000. No tenders were invited, and he gave out a contract; and yet the hon. gentleman attacks me to-day for the fact that having obtained $4,500 to carry out a certain work, I have done it by day's labour. The hon. gentleman is not fair, but I must admit that in the task of splitting hairs there is no more able man in the House, for he can even make black appear white and white black. I explained that the statement in regard to $14,000 was a mistake, I having misunderstood a statement made to me by the chief architect, this work being confined to a fence in front of Mackenzie avenue. My experience in connection with the Conservative party in the past was that it never dealt with small issues of this kind, and if the hon. gentleman thinks that the present Government is going to be defeated by such means he is much mistaken.

Mr. FOSTER. Sometimes we have to deal with small items. At page 5599 of the "Hansard" it will be found that several questions were put and several answers were given on this subject. The Minister of Public Works in answer to a question, said :

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The chief architect buys the stone, and then it is cut and put in proper place by day's work. The chief architect tells me that the work will cost about $14,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have explained that.

Mr. FOSTER. The "Hansard" proceeds :

Mr. FOSTER. Is not this a well defined piece of work ? You are not tearing down something, taking down old stuff and putting in new ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We are building a new stone and iron fence along Mackenzie avenue.

Mr. FOSTER. But you are going to do new work to the extent of $14,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My chief architect tells me that the whole work when completed will have cost $14,000, including what we spent last year.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. What I meant was Mackenzie Avenue and St. Patrick Street.

Mr. FOSTER. That does not appear by the contract. I then asked :

Mr. FOSTER. What proportion of that still remains to be done ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. About $10,000 worth.

Then I protested against a work which would cost so much being done by day's work, and the Minister said :

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am asking Parliament to vote the sum of $4,500 because I want to do this year a certain piece of work which will not exceed that amount this year. I am not bound to spend $14,000 ; I shall not spend that sum, I want to build that work gradually. My hon. friend knows how estimates are prepared. You have to remain within a certain figure, your estimates must not exceed so much. The Minister of Finance sometimes finds himself out in his estimates.

The whole conviction of my hon. friend was just in the line of my argument. Then he goes on and says later :

When the season opened I commenced the work, I did not lose much time.

Again :

The first part was built by the city, before Major's Hill was taken over by the department. I got a vote last year and spent it.

Mr. BERGERON. I understand it is not being done by contract, but by day's work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. TARTE.

Mr. BERGERON. Where did the department get the stone ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I understand that the chief architect got the stone from Hull, where there is a first-class quarry.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it intended to carry the any railing above the stone work, or to allow the fence to remain as it is now ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My chief architect tells me that he wants to put an iron railing around.

Mr. BERGERON. Has the hon. gentleman any idea where he will buy the railing, whether it will be bought by tender or by pieces ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot say now.

Mr. BERGERON. Will the cost come out of the $4,500 ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No.

Mr. BERGERON. Then this is simply for the stone work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, only for that.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it intended to carry the fencing beyond the Printing Bureau ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is intended to build 1,940 feet of stone fencing 5 feet in height.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. How many feet have been built by the city ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. About one-fourth of the whole.

I could go on and take up the time of the House reading exactly what the Minister said. The Minister was either entirely wrong the other night or he was right. If he was wrong, even if I am guilty of lecturing him, I should say that when he comes deliberately before the House to pass an Estimate, he should understand what this Estimate is for. If he was right the other night, he is getting out of a very small hole to-day in the allegation he is now putting forward.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend quotes from the unrevised "Hansard," that I said I was asking $14,500. I could not have said that, because the vote was for $4,500, and it is plain that that is the figure I spoke about. I referred a moment ago to the shortness of memory of my hon. friend (Mr. Foster). I stated that his Government gave out a contract just before the elections for paving around the Parliament grounds here, not only without tender, but without an appropriation from Parliament. I find out further that in 1894-95 when he (Mr. Foster) was Minister of Finance there were works carried on at Ste. Anne de la Pérade, amounting to $14,906, without tender. He was Minister of Finance then, and supposed to be the watch-dog.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Was there an Order in Council in that case ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There may be, but all the same, these works were carried on by day's labour to the tune of over $14,000.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is not the point.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Surely my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) was a sleeping watch-dog when that was done. I repeat that he has no right to lecture me to-day because I have done what every other Minister of Public Works has done before me.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. We on this side of the House do not deny that there can be good cases shown for work to be carried on by day's labour instead of by contract. The serious point now under discussion is that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte) has been violating the law.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Then, if I am, I have violated it a great deal less than my hon. friends opposite have done in the past. I have not violated the law at all. If I did violate it, hon. gentlemen opposite have done worse when they were in power, but that, I admit, is no argument.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman has not only violated the law, but he has attempted to deceive this House and he has thrown the responsibility on his chief architect. I am satisfied his chief architect is a competent, capable man, but I do not think his chief architect put this estimate into his hand, which says: "Major's Hill Park—to complete stone and iron fence, $4,500." The Minister came before this House last year with an estimate for $4,500 to complete the stone and iron fence on Major Hill Park, and we understood that that $4,500 was, as it said, to complete the fence. Then, again, we have this year another vote of $4,500 to complete the fence. Does the Minister of Marine justify the statement in the estimate that this is to "complete" the fence? Has he investigated the estimate in Council, and did he think it was going to complete the fence, or was he deceived, too? Look at "Hansard" and see what the Minister says. The Minister is asked will this complete the stone and iron work, and he says it will do nothing of the kind. He deceives the House last year and this, by putting in the estimate that the $4,500 is to complete the fence. The Minister of Public Works, both last year and this year, put in the estimate that this vote was to complete the fence, but when he is asked to give explanations, he says it is only to do a portion of the work, and has nothing to do with the iron fence.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. When these Estimates were prepared months ago, the work was not then completed, and it was by an oversight that I did not move immediately that the item be struck out, because the money was spent then.

Mr. TAYLOR. Let me ask the Minister if this item passed Council and if all his colleagues agreed that this $4,500 was to complete the fence and to put the iron rail on it. This item was presented to Parliament, and we now find out that the Minister tried to deceive Parliament, as he must have deceived Council, if they approved of the item. I wish to know if this item ever went to Council, and if all the Ministers are in with the Minister of Public Works in trying to deceive the House and the country.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will not argue with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) in any such contention as that.

Mr. DAVIN. Early in this discussion I asked the question: What was the object of passing this Order in Council? The hon. gentleman did not answer, and as he does not answer now, I presume that the object was to protect the public interests and guard against the misuse by a Minister of his position. In one of his answers last week, the hon. gentleman made an admission to which I call the attention of the committee. He said:

The hon. gentleman has stated that I am employing men at my own sweet will. I must protest against that charge. I have employed a good many of my political friends. It is my duty to do so as Minister.

Well, the use of the public money in the employment of the hon. gentleman's political friends is not one of the objects the public have in view when voting moneys to be spent on public works. The hon. gentleman took a position to-day most dangerous to the public interest, and I rise simply to protest against it because it has been already destroyed by my hon. friends from York and Pictou. The hon. gentleman again and again told us that he was going really to evade the Order in Council and the statute, and that no matter what was said or done, he would spend the money as he pleased. And we have him stating, as he did last week, that he is spending the money for the employment of his political friends. In the interests of the country, I protest against that.

Mr. POPE. I would like to know from the hon gentleman how many acres there are in this park?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Fifteen and a half.

Public Buildings, Ottawa, including ventilation and lighting—Repairs, materials, furniture, &c..... $75,000

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That was $94,000 in 1896.

Rideau Hall, including Grounds—Renovations, improvements, repairs, furniture and maintenance..... $17,000

Mr. FOSTER. What does the hon. gentleman propose to do?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The same as last year. I have put the vote at a little less, and find I cannot do better.

Mr. FOSTER. Does he give the maintenance of the grounds by contract?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, that is under contract.

Mr. FOSTER. What staff does the hon. gentleman keep at Rideau Hall?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Ten men. The superintendent is Mr. Hutchinson, at $90 per month. All the men are those that were there before. I have not put on any.

Mr. FOSTER. What does the maintenance of the grounds cost and who has the contract?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The same man has the contract as before, except that we give him a little less. His name is Sorley.

Mr. MONK. I find that amount excessive. Every year we are called on to vote this sum. The first year of this Parliament, the vote was $17,000, last year it was $18,000, and this year it is $17,000 for the maintenance of Rideau Hall. I do not know what was the rule which obtained in the past, but I find that sum altogether excessive. It seems to me preposterous that we should be called on every year to vote such a large amount. Last year we were told that considerable repairs were required—the completion of the ball room and the placing of a furnace in it, and I was prepared then to overlook the amount, but this year, unless we have other explanations from the Minister, I shall move that the amount be reduced to $8,000, which ought to be ample to maintain the grounds in proper order. The hon. gentleman mentioned a carpenter employed at $90 per month. That is excessive.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. He is chief of the staff.

Mr. MONK. If he is a carpenter, he is paid too much and whether the same men are retained or not, $17,000 is an outrageous amount for the maintenance of these grounds.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman has not been in public life very long, and if he will look back to the past he will find that the expenditure has always been at least that amount. I am surprised at the stand the hon. gentleman takes, coming from the city he does. As long as I am Minister of Public Works, I will not allow the distinguished persons who come from the other side to preside over this Government, to be forced to reside in a place not kept as it ought to be. This Canadian nation is wealthy enough to act decently towards its Governor Generals. I have no desire to go into any extravagant expenditure, but we must have some respect for our own dignity. We must have some pride in these matters. I say I have gone into this question myself, and I believe that Rideau Hall cannot be decently maintained without spending a pretty large sum of money. Look at the past. In one year there was an expenditure of $25,000; in another, $29,000, and in another, $31,000. I have refused many requisitions made upon me, but I feel that I should fail in my duty if I did not take the stand I take now.

Mr. MONK. I do not yield to any man in my sense of the dignity of the Governor General's position or in my desire that the representative in Canada of Her Majesty should be treated in a proper manner. But I come from a city where we have a fair notion of business as well as proper respect for the Crown. The question is a simple one—whether we are not paying too much under this head. I agree that we should keep that residence in a proper state of repair. But no man of business, whether from Montreal or from any other city in the Dominion can convince me, unless he uses other arguments than the flimsy arguments used by the hon. Minister (Mr. Tarte), that this expenditure is reasonable. I am told that this item was a subject of continual criticism by hon. gentlemen on the other side when they were in Opposition. That does not surprise me. Unless the hon. Minister comes here like a business man—not like business is business man—and shows exactly how such a large sum is needed each year, I shall object. We have residences in Montreal just as well kept up as Rideau Hall is, without costing anything like this amount. They are kept up, and better kept up, for half the amount. Why, can the hon. Minister find me any House occupied by British ambassadors in foreign countries which require any such sum for maintenance? Let him do so and I shall be ready to vote this item without demur. It is sheer waste.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) knows that I have been Minister for only a short time. Those who have preceded me have been members of his own party, and they expended large sums on Rideau Hall.

Mr. MONK. I expect you to do better.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman alluded to Montreal and to what he called a business is business man. Let me remind him that the fellow who used that expression has been landed in jail by me.

Mr. MONK. I think the hon. gentleman used the expression himself.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte) is charging the late Government with having always brought down a larger estimate than this. If he will consult the book he has in his hand, he will find that the estimate prepared by the late Government for 1896-97 was $14,100. The hon. gentleman himself came down last year with an estimate of $18,000, and there was a good deal of complaint. He promised he would go back to the old amount. Has he done so? He proposes now a vote of $17,000. My hon. friend (Mr. Monk) has proposed to reduce this item to a reasonable amount, and I am satisfied that every member on this side will agree that it ought to be reduced so as to make it, at any rate, not more than that spent by the late Conservative Government. That Government maintained that house right royally, so much so that hon. gentlemen opposite found great fault. But these hon. gentlemen are seeing that amount and going a great deal better.

Mr. FOSTER. I see by the Auditor General's Report that $2,940 was spent for the care of the grounds and nearly $6,000 for simple carpenter work. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte) said last year that there were heavy repairs to make and for that reason he required a large vote. But these repairs have been completed. I know that considerable repairs of a permanent character have been made. Besides there has been a very considerable purchase of goods, such as linen, and so on. It is there now, nearly new. What are the extraordinary expenditures called for next year?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My officers called in the chief of the staff and I tried very hard to have that item reduced, and I was convinced, as I say again, that it was impossible to reduce it. If hon. gentlemen will look over the expenditure of the past they will find that—

Mr. FOSTER. But the hon. Minister will see that there cannot be $6,000 worth of carpentering every year.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) has been Minister of Finance long enough to know what Rideau Hall is. If I had yielded to the requisitions made, the expenditure would have been double that which I propose.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What has been the average expenditure?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In 1895, the expenditure amounted to $17,997. In 1896 the amount asked from Parliament was $13,861, and I found accounts due for about $4,000, which I was obliged to pay.

Mr. FOSTER. Was that $4,000 included in the vote of $18,000?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman had to pay back $4,000 out of $18,000—

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, I did not understand; it was not included in the $18,000.

Mr. ROGERS. I have a notice of motion on the Order paper on this subject, but owing to pressure of other business I have not been able to reach it. I deem it my duty to say a few words at this juncture. This expenditure has been pretty well discussed in this House in years past, and also on public platforms throughout the country. This is a very grievous item in the eyes of many, and I cannot say but justly so. I think it can hardly be denied that too much money has been spent in the past on the maintenance of this residence. This, it seems to me is the most opportune time to make reductions. The term of the present Governor General is about expiring, and I see by the papers that he has sent in his resignation and will not be with us for another year. Another Governor General will soon be appointed. Last year I was assured that the expenditure was unusually high, and would not be so high in the future. I deemed it my duty not to object to expenditure which it might be fairly claimed the Governor General had been led to expect as representing privileges and emoluments in addition to his salary. But now that a new incumbent will enter upon the office, I think we should be perfectly justified in making reductions. Whatever action is to be taken should be taken now. In my opinion we should fix a sum to be expended, so that we shall know what we are doing, and give no ground for this continual raising of objections. I am sure it is an unpleasant duty for any member of Parliament to perform, and it must be humiliating for Their Excellencies to hear it. I think that we should fix now the yearly amount to be appropriated along that line. I do not like to go into details in this matter, but we all should know the amount in round numbers that has been expended in the past on the Governors General for salary and maintenance. We do not ask, we never have asked, that the salary should be reduced, we are willing to pay a royally good salary, and we feel that $50,000 a year is a royal salary to pay to a Governor General, especially when it is nearly all paid by about a million and a half of wage-earners. We find that about $65,000 have been annually expended for the last thirty years under that head. We have paid for the last thirty years for the salaries of Governors General about $1,500,000; for secretaries and contingencies, about $550,000; for building and repairs since confederation, over $600,000; for furniture, $120,000; fuel and light, about $200,000, or an average of $114,000 for the last thirty years. That is really an appalling amount to pay for that office. I think we have paid about $65,000 annually since confederation in connection with Rideau Hall over and above the salary of the Governor General. Besides that, we have to pay an enormous amount for the salaries of the various lieutenant-governors of the provinces, about $71,000 annually, not to speak of another very large sum for their maintenance. This subject has been often discussed on platforms among the farmers, and the general feeling was that previous Governments had promised us that the amount should be reduced from year to year. We feel that the people are paying too much for government in general. We know it costs over $60 a year for every family of five to pay for governing this country, that is, including Dominion, provincial and municipal governments. I think it would be well to take some action at this time along the line of allowing a stated sum annually to the Governor General for maintenance of Rideau Hall. We do not want to be parsimonious. It is said that we cannot get good men to come from the old country, either English or Irish noblemen to govern us unless we pay them a good royal salary. It occurs to me that it should not be considered any great sacrifice for a nobleman to come to this country as Governor General for five years. He comes to a beautiful country to live in, with a salubrious climate. We treat him with due honour and respect, in fact, we really treat him with much more reverence and respect than he receives in his own country. That is all right. It is human nature for a man to like to be made something of, and I think Canadians have done their duty in that respect. I am pleased to say that that respect has been well deserved by those who have occupied that high position in the past, and particularly so by the present Governor General. I think it is too much to ask the hard-working and struggling masses of the people to pay more than $50,000 a year for salary and maintenance. Let them be restricted to a certain amount, and they can do the best they can with it. No doubt there would be much more care exercised in the expenditure. In looking over the items for the enormous annual supplies furnished to that house, I think there must be something radically wrong. It may be said that a certain amount is required for social functions and entertainments. I do not see wherein the people derive any benefit, directly or indirectly, from that expenditure. My observation is that it is a great evil, inasmuch as it leads to extravagance in the civil service. We remember the Bill that was introduced a little while ago by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) regarding the seizure of the salaries of public officials. The reason urged for that Bill was that a good many public officials would not pay their debts, which, I think, is due to the unfortunate circumstance that in trying to keep up style, and to make a respectable appearance at these social functions, they spend more than their income. There is something radically wrong in that respect. For my part, I am not able to get up on the hustings and vindicate this expenditure, nor will I attempt to do so. The farmers are the classes who will chiefly object to this expenditure, and who have a better right than they to do so? I want to know who pays the great proportion of the taxes of this country if it is not the farmers. They pay indirectly, at least, nine-tenths of the whole taxation of this country, and I think they have a right to complain of such extravagance, and they do complain. The manufacturers, the merchants, the mechanics, the salaried men, have means of expressing their discontent; they have their organizations, their combines by which they can make their wishes known. Manufacturers, however, if they are compelled to grant an increase of wages, can form a combine and increase the prices of their products; they can seek to buy their raw material cheaper and sell their product dearer. That is a power they possess in the country and make good use of that power. A farmer is not able to do this, for he has to send his products to the markets of the world and meet general competition. I move that this item be struck out.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Perhaps I may be able to give the committee some interesting information in regard to Rideau Hall. Some hon. members are astonished at the large sums the Government are obliged to spend in maintaining the buildings and grounds. Rideau Hall is a very large establishment. The grounds cover 85 acres. There are 2 acres of flower gardens, 4 acres of vegetable gardens, 47 acres in grass, 32 acres in wood. The buildings cover 89,500 square feet. The roof covers 96,500 square feet. The carpet required is 4,118 square yards, oilcloth, 340. There are 570 lights. The drainage covers one mile and a quarter; the pavement extends over 4,420 square feet of block, and 9,220 of plank walk. There are 22,400 feet of fencing. The gravel road has a length of 2,131 feet. These buildings and grounds have to be taken proper care of, and it is not a sinecure to take charge of this large establishment.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose all the officers and employees of the Minister of Public Works are good and capable men. If so, the vegetable garden, covering 4 acres, should raise enough vegetables to supply a small city. What is the total quantity of vegetables grown in these 4 acres?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman must not forget that the employees are the same as under the old regime.

Mr. FOSTER. Then the hon. gentleman is not able to give the year's growth of vegetables?

Mr. MONK. I regret that these discussions occur annually, but I still maintain that with an expenditure of $10,000 or $12,000, we should be able to maintain the Vice-Regal residence in a proper manner. I move that the item be reduced from $17,000 to $12,000.

Amendment to the amendment (Mr. Monk) negatived: Yeas, 19; Nays, 46.

Amendment (Mr. Rogers) negatived.

Item agreed to.

Telephone Service—Public Buildings, Ottawa $5,900

Mr. FOSTER. There is an increase of $1,000 in this vote; that requires some explanation?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am obliged to increase the number of telephones here, as the use of the telephone has increased everywhere else. The use of telephones has become so general that every one must have them.

Mr. FOSTER. I trust that because every one wants them the Minister will not give way to that appeal. This matter of telephones is one that is very easily abused, and I think the Minister will find it easy to keep the amount down to $4,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I really could not do it.

Mr. FOSTER. What new telephones are there?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will give the number of all the telephones. Department of Public Works, including Rideau Hall, Dominion Police, Ottawa River Works, 20; Railways and Canals, 5; House of Commons, 9; Senate, 1; Marine and Fisheries, 3; Secretary of State, 3; Stationery and Printing, 4; Post Office, 4; Government House, 2 private telephones; Finance and Auditor General's Office, 6; Agriculture, 4; Militia and Defence, 7; Justice, 4; Privy Council, 5; Inland Revenue, 4; Customs, 2; Interior, 11; Trade and Commerce, 2; Exchequer Court, 3; in all, 99.

Mr. HAGGART. Where are the nine telephones in the House of Commons?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Office of the Speaker, office of the private secretary of the Speaker, Distributing Office, office of the Printing Bureau, Library of Parliament, messenger's room, residence of the Clerk, House of Commons, residence of the Law Clerk, Journal office.

Mr. HUGHES. Is there one in No. 16?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If my hon. friend wants one in No. 6, I will accommodate him with pleasure. I know the room; I was there several times.

Mr. FOSTER. How much do those telephones cost?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. $35, except private telephones, which are more expensive. The two private telephones in Government House, I am told, cost $130.

Mr. FOSTER. If they cost $5,000, there must be a great deal more than ninety-nine.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have just made that observation to my Deputy Minister.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I move that the item be reduced to $4,000. After looking over the list I made up my mind that $4,000 would be sufficient, and it is the same amount as last year.

Mr. INGRAM. Are there not more than 99 telephones?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not think so.

Mr. INGRAM. Instead of having an extra telephone down here, which is not doing any good, you might send one around to No. 6.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have no objection to giving one to No. 6.

Mr. MONK. The hon. Minister told us that if we wanted to resuscitate the Conservative party we would have to apply our minds to larger problems than these, but in the absence of larger problems, the hon. gentleman puts before the committee a number of smaller ones, and perhaps in the multiplicity of this lies the chance of our resurrection. It seems to me that we have a very large number of telephones. I do not say this in any spirit of carping criticism, but 11 telephones in the Department of the Interior strikes me as an extravagant number.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman must remember that the Interior Department is located in the East Block and in the Langevin Block, two separate buildings, which may explain why they have so many telephones.

Major's Hill Park..... $3,500

Mr. MONK. Is this connected with the fence?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, it is for the maintenance of the grounds themselves. The whole thing is given by contract, except an amount of $1,000 or thereabouts.

Rent—Dominion Public Buildings..... $18,000

Mr. MONK. What are the details of this?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We are obliged to rent all over Canada buildings for post offices, custom-houses, and so on. This is the usual amount.

Salaries of engineers, firemen, caretakers, &c., of Dominion public buildings..... $70,900

Mr. HUGHES. Are there any changes in the departments?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, several—some through death and some were discharged. I may say that I have practised a good deal of economy, but still the number of caretakers will increase. I am keeping the cost, however, at the same level.

Mr. CARGILL. What is the cause of the change in the caretakers at Walkerton?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Mr. Maclean was discharged and replaced by Mr. Gibson. I do not remember exactly the reason for his discharge, but I know that I made some little economy there. The old caretaker was being paid $33.33 a month, and the new one gets $29.15.

Mr. CARGILL. I thought all those caretakers got $400 a year.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Nearly in every case where I have made a change, I have succeeded in making a saving. I have tried to arrange a new system as far as possible. I am trying to have the postmasters, wherever possible, take charge themselves of the buildings, and in such cases we pay them very small amounts. Instead of paying $400, I have several to-day to whom I pay only $200 and $300.

Mr. INGRAM. Those caretakers have a good deal of power in the matter of repairs and ordering stuff. Is there any check on it?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. They do not make repairs without being authorized. I do not know of any case where a caretaker has made repairs without asking for authorization.

Mr. INGRAM. They are not very economical. The prices of the articles they get are not low.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. They have no latitude. They report such repairs as are in their opinion necessary, but unless authorized, they do not do anything. The prices of the articles they get are checked by the chief architect after close scrutiny.

Mr. CARGILL. What is the name of the caretaker of the Walkerton public buildings?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Thomas Gibson.

Mr. CARGILL. Is he related to the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson)?

Mr. MONK.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not know; I did not ask him for his certificate of baptism.

Heating—Dominion Public Buildings—
Fuel, &c..... $55,000

Mr. INGRAM. Are tenders asked for the supply of coal for these public buildings all over the Dominion?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. INGRAM. Is there any system in which the coal dealers in the localities in which the buildings are located have an advantage over or are given a preference over others?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No. We advertise for tenders and always accept the lowest.

Mr. INGRAM. In what papers are the calls for tenders published?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In such a case as this we would put it in all the leading papers of the locality.

Mr. INGRAM. My reason for calling the hon. gentleman's attention to the matter is that I have heard coal dealers complain that they had not seen the advertisements for tenders.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am surprised at that, seeing the advertisements are in so many papers.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Is this vote for public buildings throughout the Dominion?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. McDOUGALL. It appears under the head "Ont." I suppose the same applies to the item for salaries of caretakers, &c. The heading "Ont." misled me. I desire to ask the Minister a question with regard to caretakers. May I do so now?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Certainly.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I should like to ask why the Minister dismissed the caretaker in the public building in North Sydney, and also the caretaker in the public building in Sydney?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I find that in the case of the building in North Sydney the caretaker was Mr. McEacheran. He was earning $33.33 a month. Alexander Greene, who has been appointed in his place receives $29.16. There is some economy there.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Did the hon. Minister ask Mr. McEacheran if he would accept the same salary?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Was not that a wrong to Mr. McEacheran?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I know that there must have been some reason for his dismissal.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I think it is a very unfair way to treat Mr. McEacheran who has been for years a very satisfactory janitor. He is a perfectly sober man and a good man in every way. If the Minister desired to effect economy by reducing the salary, he should have asked the holder of the office if he would accept less, instead of dismissing him. What does the hon. Minister say with regard to the janitor in the public building at Sydney?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I find that Mr. McNeill was the caretaker there. He received $33.33 a month. The new caretaker is Mr. Keefe whose salary is $29.16—again a small economy.

Mr. McDOUGALL. But did the hon. Minister ask Mr. McNeill if he would accept less?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I did not. I know there must have been reasons for dismissing Mr. McNeill.

Mr. McDOUGALL. There was no good reason. He was dismissed simply to make room for a man who wanted a position. If that is the rule to be adopted, few public servants will hold their offices long, because applicants will soon appear. Mr. McNeill was placed in the position eight or ten years ago, perhaps more. He gave up a farm and business to take the position, and expected that he would continue to occupy it while he was fit for the service. And now the Minister turns him out on the street and appoints another man, justifying the change on the ground that the second man accepts the place at a few cents a month less than Mr. McNeill received.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's). I would ask the hon. Minister his reasons for dismissing the caretaker in the public building in Montague, P.E.I.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I know that there were complaints against him, though I cannot remember what they were. He did not discharge his duties as well as we had a right to expect. The position is a very small one.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's). What wages does the man receive who has been appointed?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I could not give him less than his predecessor received, as the salary paid was only $13.33 per month.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's). I have no doubt that the man appointed may be a very good man. But I venture to say that there is not a caretaker in a Dominion public building anywhere who is more careful of the public interest than the man who was dismissed. He was a perfectly steady man, always at his post, and did his work to the satisfaction of everybody. I know him intimately, he lives alongside of me, and I see him every day when I am at home. He took extraordinary pains with the little office he was filling there, and he was quite competent for it in every respect. I am quite sure nothing like political partisanship could be charged against him because, although I think he voted for myself, I do not believe any man living knew how he was going to vote when he went to the poll. He always attends to his own business, and if he is now being displaced by another man who is a political partisan, it is not in the public interest, although I do not know on whose recommendation it was done. I am confident it was done to please a political friend down there who has not the interest of the public so much at heart as he has his own interest.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Who made the recommendation for this change in my county?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I decline to state. I take the responsibility of my action.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Certainly, and I hold the Minister responsible for his action, and I hold him responsible for not doing what he ought to do when he refuses to give information to this House as to why he dismissed a public official. He should tell this House who made this recommendation, or on whose recommendation he made the dismissal. It is not enough to tell us that for the purpose of reducing the cost of a few cents a month, he made the change on behalf of a political friend. With regard to these two men, they were not in the least offensive to anybody. I do not know whether they voted for me, I believe they did, and that is all I can say about it. It is an outrage against these men for the Minister to refuse to give the information to this House on which he dismissed them.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not think I am obliged to give the names of those who gave me the information in cases like this. It is a very small matter, after all. I have not discharged any man before taking good care to look into his case. At any rate, I do not remember the particulars of this case. I cannot keep all these things in my head.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Will the Minister promise to bring down the papers?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not think that in the case the hon. gentleman refers to, there was any written communication made to me.

Mr. McDOUGALL. That is a very curious statement for the Minister to make. He is unable to carry in his head the particulars in regard to these two cases, yet he is able to tell the House there was no written correspondence. I am satisfied there was plenty of written correspondence. The Minister would not have acted as he did if there were no written correspondence.

Mr. MACDANALD (King's). There is a great deal to be said in favour of giving information of that kind. A man is dismissed from his position, and he blames one and another, and makes bad friends of one and another; whereas, if he knew the men who sent his name forward for dismissal, he would only blame those who were really the authors of his dismissal. If a man takes upon himself the responsibility of recommending a person for a position, he should not be afraid to come forward and take the responsibility therefor. Now, with respect to this man who was dismissed at Montague, he was a thoroughly competent man. I could get every man, I believe, on either side of politics, with the exception of one or two interested parties, to give him a thorough recommendation. I believe that he did his duty in his position better than nine-tenths of the officials that occupy such positions in other parts of the Dominion. I hope the Minister will be able to furnish the name of the party who recommended the dismissal of Mr. Lambert, at Montague, and who recommended the appointment of his successor.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will look into the matter and see if there are any papers.

Mr. KAULBACH. If the Minister had any reasonable ground for the dismissal of an officer, he should have no hesitation in giving those reasons. When an officer is dismissed, the fact is a reflection upon him, people suspect that he has been dishonest, that he has, perhaps, been purloining the property of the Government, and he is looked upon with reproach by his neighbours and the public generally. I think it is due to the party who has been dismissed that some reason should be given for the dismissal.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I would not dismiss a man accused of dishonesty without giving him a chance of defending himself.

Dominion Immigration Building—Repairs, furniture, &c..... $2,000

Mr. INGRAM. Where is that building situated?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That word should be "buildings." It is to cover small repairs on all the Dominion immigration buildings all over Canada.

Mr. INGRAM. Then that would mean the buildings at Port Arthur, Brandon, Winnipeg, Calgary and Regina, on which last year the expenditure was only $582. Why is it increased this year to $2,000?

Mr. McDOUGALL.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman is wrong in his figures. It is the same sum every year, and that is what I found it when I came in. It is for all the immigration buildings.

Mr. INGRAM. I see in the Auditor General's Report an item of $582.32 for repairs to immigration buildings. That is the previous year.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The department is not bound to spend every cent of that vote.

Judique, new wharf..... $4,000

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I should like to obtain some explanation as to the condition of the pier at Arichat. What has been done during the last season?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Repairs have been made, and the breakwater has been strengthened on the seaward side.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Are these repairs to be done by contract or day's labour?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. By day's labour.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). Will this expenditure place the work in almost as good a condition as it was formerly?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What has been the total expenditure?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Up to 30th December, 1897, $30,397.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Under the heading of Harbours and Rivers, Nova Scotia, I notice omissions, especially in regard to several important works needed in Cape Breton.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman must remember the Supplementary Estimates have not yet been brought down.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I desire to call the Minister's attention to some of these requirements, so that they may be provided for when the Supplementary Estimates come down. Cow Bay breakwater, for example, is a very important work. Last year some work was done on it, and it should be continued. A work was also asked for some time ago at Gabarouse. The Minister has all the information in the department. There is a large fishing settlement, and owing to the lack of harbour of refuge, many boats and considerable property have been lost. I hope in the Supplementary Estimates this work will be provided for. It will be a great deal better to grant $10,000 for this work than for a greenhouse in Ottawa, or $12,000 or $14,000 for a stone fence around a portion of the park here. At the place I have named there are eighty or a hundred fishing boats employed. These have to be pulled up on shore, or in the case of the larger vessels they have to go to Louisburg or some other port. I hope the Minister will at least make a grant to commence the work. I also call his attention to the wharf at Cape Big Pond, a part of which was carried away. A survey has been made and a report forwarded to the department. I shall be glad if the Minister could inform me as to the result of these surveys. Is it the intention of the Minister to provide for improving the harbour of New Campbellton in the county of Victoria. While the wharf is in that county, the people using it belong to my county. They are engaged in the coal industry, and they require this work carried out. It was promised two or three years ago, and I hoped last year to see an item in the Estimates. I shall be glad if the Minister will tell me if these works will be proceeded with.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman was a supporter, and a powerful supporter, of the late Government, and has sat for many years in this House. He appears to have somewhat neglected his duty in the past, or he would have attended to this matter. I believe he claims to represent the fishermen, and he must be aware that several of these wharfs remained unrepaired for years. I am surprised that the hon. gentleman has not given more attention to the interests of his constituency in the past. He will not save his neck by speaking in an unfair way of the greenhouse here. My hon. friend (Mr. McDougall) has been supporting that very greenhouse at more expensive cost. He won't save his neck.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I quite understand the source of the Minister's promptings in regard to what should have been my duty in past years. I call his attention to the fact that he will find in his own office a report prepared under the instruction of the Government in power previous to 1878, and that report is to the effect that the cost of building the breakwater at Gabarouse would amount to $100,000. In view of that report being in the department it was a difficult matter for myself or for any one else who ever had the honour to represent that constituency, to get the Government to understand that that report was not reliable. It took me a good many years to convince them, but, meanwhile, the Government was providing heavy expenditures in the county of Cape Breton, and during these years I could not be unreasonable enough to expect the Government to provide for every public work necessary in that county. During that time I got the Government to make a new survey, and if I remember aright the engineer of the Public Works Department reported that about $20,000 would build a satisfactory pier or breakwater at that place. It was the intention of the hon. gentleman who preceded the present Minister to provide for that work shortly before the Conservative Government went out of power. For these very good reasons the hon. Minister should take this work into consideration. If the Minister will take steps towards building that work for these people, so far as my party are concerned, we are quite willing to give him the benefit of every vote in that district of the county, if that is any encouragement to him. We can get all the votes that require to bring us here, and no matter whom the people of that district support, I want the work done there because it is greatly needed.

Mr. KAULBACH. I hope the hon. Minister will not give me an answer similar to that which he gave to my hon. friend (Mr. McDougall). I want to bring to the notice of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte) three public works in my county. I applied last year and the year previous for repairs to two public wharfs, one known as Sawpit Wharf, near my town, another known as Young's Landing, about two miles from the town, and also repairs to another public work known as Tancook Breakwater. All three require a certain amount of repairs, and I feel sure that if the Minister would see for himself the need for those repairs he would not hesitate to give an adequate amount to meet the necessary expenditure. Last year I got a smile from the hon. Minister and also a nod, which was taken by me as an affirmative that he was going to look after these works. I gave him an invitation to visit the county, and I should be glad to receive him very cordially. With his smile and his twinkle of the eye I came to the conclusion that my request was going to be granted. I trust I will have the hon. gentleman's visit, and something in the Estimate this year.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Unless something goes wrong, I will certainly go down next summer, and I assure my hon. friend that I will give attention to his statement.

Cribbon's Point—Repairs to wharf..... $400

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Last year the Minister spent $1,552.42, according to the Auditor General's Report, on repairs to this wharf and he is now asking $400. Was the work last year done by day's labour?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Will this complete the repairs?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Judique—New wharf $4,000

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
What is the condition of this work?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
It is under contract, let by public tender. Simmons & Berkley, of Gibson, N.B., were the lowest tenderers and they got the work. The contract was let on the 4th of April last and the work is to be completed 18 months from date of contract.

Morden—Repairs to wharf $500

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
There was expended on repairs last year $1,963. Was that done by day's labour?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
Yes; it could not be done otherwise.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
What repairs were done last year?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
I have not a description of the repairs made last year. The notes placed before me are with regard to next year. During this year the sum of $1,963 was expended in repairing a gap of 121 feet in the pier.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I understand the whole cost will be $2,400, of which $1,900 has been spent and $500 asked for.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
Yes, with the $1,900 spent last year, the whole cost will be about $2,400.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
What was there to prevent that being put up to public tender—filling a gap with stone, involving an expenditure of $2,400?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
It is perfectly impossible to make repairs by public tender in a work of that kind, because you take a piece of timber out and then find you have to take five or ten pieces out.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
The hon. gentleman lays down the general rule that in repairs, you cannot call for tenders. Does he not take into consideration the value and the character of the work?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
I spoke in a general way. From experience, we find it is quite impossible to let these repairs by tender. When you call for tenders, you must know exactly what work requires to be done, and in the case of repairs, you cannot tell in advance.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
I understand that as a general rule, but now we have a concrete case. The hon. gentleman tells us that this work is the filling in of a gap in a wharf. Do I understand him to say that his officers reported that it could be done cheaper by day work and that he acted on their advice?

Mr. TARTE.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
I acted on the report of Mr. Dodwell, confirmed by the report of the chief officer.

Mr. MAXWELL. Do I understand the hon. member for Pictou to object to day labour?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
I would be sorry if the hon. gentleman so understood me, but I am not responsible for his understanding. The question was whether this was the kind of repairs that ought to be done by day work, instead of calling for public tenders.

Mr. MAXWELL. Do I understand that the hon. member for Pictou wants it done by contract instead of day labour?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
In most cases, it is in the public interest to do so.

Mr. MAXWELL. I do not think so. The labouring men of the country do not so understand it, but are unanimously in favour of day labour. We had experience in Vancouver where we spent the sum of $80,000 in the extension of schools, a part of which was let by contract, after calling for tenders, and a part by day labour, and the day labour plan was the cheapest. I have not the slightest doubt that where day labour is employed, and wisely superintended, it is in the interests of the labouring classes and the public as well.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
The hon. gentleman, however, will find little support for that view, as he puts it, in this House. That is a subject, however, into which I am not now going. There are cases where day labour is absolutely necessary, but the system of tender is the one recognized by the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. MAXWELL. It is time it is changed.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
Well, the Government have not adopted his view, and the system of tender is at present the law of the land. If the hon. gentleman wants that amended, he will probably move a resolution to that effect at an early day, and the whole subject will be discussed.

Margaree—Extension of pier..... $4,000

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
That work is under contract, and the contractors are Reed & Chisholm. The price is $3,775, and the work is now going on. The contract was signed on the 25th February last, and the work has to be completed twelve months after the signature of the contract.

North River—St. Anne's Wharf at Seymour's Point..... $2,000

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
We are just asking for tenders for that work and they are not yet in.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What is the estimated cost ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. As the tenders are not in, I do not think it will be advisable to give the estimate of the engineer.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman used that argument the other night, and then abandoned it. It is a departure from the usual practice.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman will not find that any predecessor of his took that ground. It is the first duty of a Minister, when asking for a grant for public works, to inform the House of his estimate of the cost. It is absurd to suppose that this House will vote, at the mere request of the Minister, instalments without knowing how much the whole work is to cost. All I want is an approximate estimate. I see that this is a revote.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In this case, I pledge myself to Parliament not to ask any more than $2,000, so that this Parliament knows exactly what it is voting. Those $2,000 will complete the work, and it would be very unwise to give the estimate.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I entirely differ from the hon. gentleman. Such a suggestion has never come from the Treasury benches before. The hon. gentleman says this is all he intends asking Parliament for in connection with this work. Will he give me a full description of the nature of the work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. 360 cubic yards of stone, 940 lineal feet of timber. Also creosote piling, floor stringers, &c.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. How much creosote piling ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. 1,116 feet.

Mr. POWELL. Does that mean 1,116 feet of piling or enough to make 1,116 feet lineal measure ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I understand that it is 1,116 feet of piling.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Where is this work to be done ?

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). In Victoria County.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). In the district usually known as St. Anne's.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What has been the cause of delay in carrying out the work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There has been a question of right of way, the chief engineer tells me. The hon. gentleman might look at the plan I have here. Knowing the locality he will probably understand it better.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. As I understand it, the right of way to be got is over Donald McLeod's property. Does this estimate of $2,000 cover the right of way ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The right of way is estimated to cost $35. It has been stated to me and my officers now tell me that $2,000 will cover the whole work.

East Ragged Island—Wharf..... $2,500

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Where is that ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In Shelburne County.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The sum of $2,500 is required for this wharf. The total length will be 170 feet and the width of the main portion twenty feet. There will be six feet of water at the outer part at low water, spring tide.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What is the object of a wharf with six feet of water ? Is it to be used by boat fishermen ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is a place where vessels of light draught resort. An appropriation of $1,000 was made last year on local representations that this would be sufficient. But the engineer who went to examine the place reported that to spend $1,000 there would be to waste money, as the wharf would not hold. So, no action was taken until Parliament could be asked for an additional sum.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What port is nearest to this point ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Lockeport is the nearest important point. It is several miles away. This is a fishing locality.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. To what extent ? What number of people will use the wharf ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I could not say exactly. The whole neighbourhood is inhabited by a fishing population. But, of course, after you leave Lockeport the population is rather sparse.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Will this amount buy the site, pay for the approaches and complete the work ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Eastern Passage—Boat harbour..... $2,000

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is the eastern passage near Halifax.

Mr. POWELL. What is proposed to be done ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The money is to be spent for dredging.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What depth of water is to be got and what will the work cost ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I understand that $2,000 will cover the whole cost of the work. I cannot give the hon. gentleman the depth of the water at the moment. But according to the estimate, 10,000 yards of material has to be removed to make a channel for small craft.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. There is no trouble about the small craft coming in. This channel has been used by blockade runners in times gone by.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The work is being done on the report of the local engineer, confirmed by the chief engineer. I understand that about seven feet of water is to be had by this dredging.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Why does the hon. gentleman call it "boat harbour" ? It seems to me that it would be better, for the sake of having the Supply Bill accurate, to call it "channel or boat harbour."

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have no objection.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Shall the item be amended so as to read "Eastern channel—channel or boat harbour" ?

Item amended.

Meteghan Breakwater—Repairs $1,000

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Can the hon. gentleman explain how that stands ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is required to rebuild a portion of the outer end of the breakwater which has been damaged. During last year a sum of $2,100 was spent in rebuilding a reinforcement block along the outer side of the L of the breakwater.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Can the hon. gentleman tell how much has been spent so far ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Up to the 31st of December, 1897, $22,526.55.

Windsor Harbour—Shear dam, training dykes and deepening channel, River Avon $4,000

Mr. POWELL. Would the hon. gentleman please explain that item ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This amount is required to complete the work commenced last year. It has been undertaken after a careful survey. The work is being done by day's labour, it cannot be done otherwise. Every time that I can obtain a good clerk of works, I find it is a great deal better to do these small works without tenders. If you call for tenders, on many occasions, a small contractor will not pay his men or will not pay his material. That often happens, and we have a lot of trouble.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I do not agree with the hon. gentleman, but we need not argue that. What is the primary object of this ? Has it to do with the channel, or is it for protection ?

Mr. HALEY. The wharfs have been filling up with mud. The hon. gentleman is well acquainted with that port and acquainted with its requirements. There is a large export of gypsum and lumber from Windsor. In consequence of building a bridge across the river, the long span of which is on the Windsor side, the mud settles in and destroys the channel on that side. The channel has been filling up with mud for a long time and vessels of large size cannot load at the wharfs and get away after being loaded without waiting for spring tides. The hon. gentleman knows that a large amount of products are shipped at this point. A portion of the railway appropriation has been for some years used to keep this wharf clear by taking the mud out of the channel. A large amount of money has been spent in shovelling up the mud. It was thought best, instead of taking money from the railway appropriation to build shear dams on the opposite side of the river, throwing the ebb tide upon the Windsor side. Mr. Dodwell and Mr. Shewan estimated that it would cost about $3,300. In consequence of the shifting quicksands on the Falmouth side as they put down their caissons, it kept sinking down. They were compelled to stop work on account of the appropriation being exhausted. This year Mr. Dodwell estimates that $4,000 will do the work. They want to extend the dams further across the river so that the swift flowing tide will cut in and take the mud out with it. It has cost the Government a great deal of money in past years simply for dredging or shovelling out the mud.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Is there marsh on the opposite side of the river ?

Mr. HALEY. There is marsh on the Falmouth side, a dyke marsh. The incoming tide is cutting in on this dyke. Some of the marsh proprietors think that the shear dam is going to let the water in and cut the dyke still more ; but the engineers think the dykes will be protected by the building of the dams. If something had not been done on that dyke the bridge and everything else would have been in time destroyed. Vessels often have to lie a week or ten days before they can get out at all. The work is a very necessary one, and it is being done fairly well under the direction of the engineer who is proceeding by day's work, under his own careful inspection.

Mr. POWELL. Would not the difficulty have been overcome by projecting those wharfs further out into the channel?

Mr. HALEY. That was left to the engineer to decide. Mr. Dodwell would not act on his own responsibility, and he sent for Mr. Shewan, who has a good reputation as an engineer, having had a long experience in the tidal rivers of New Brunswick, and the Government could not undertake to extend private wharfs, to reach deeper water, and the cost would have been very much larger. I have confidence that the amount now to be voted will complete the work and give sufficient water on the Windsor side of the river. It is important to proceed with this work in the interest of one of the most important shipping ports in Nova Scotia.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I know the place to which the hon. gentleman refers, and I can understand the importance of this work; but from the statement of the hon. member for Hants (Mr. Haley), I take it that this is at the best an experiment. It may not be carried out for $4,000, and yet it may result in a complete job, the action of the water doing a great deal itself. But the Minister seemed to intimate that there was no trouble about it, that the work was not an experiment and that $4,000 would complete it.

Mr. HALEY. So far as the work has gone, that has been the case. According to the report of Mr. Dodwell, the work is not long enough.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. When the chief engineer, supported by other engineers, makes representations to the department, I feel bound to accept them.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am not saying that the hon. Minister should not do so; but I fancy they reported that the work was in the nature of an experiment. Mr. Dodwell apparently had to call in another engineer, which was a very reasonable action on his part. The work is of a novel character, and from the very clear and very full explanation given by the hon. member for Hants, it is evident there is an element of experiment about it, which does not hurt it, however, in the least. But the Minister should have taken the House into his confidence and given hon. members a full explanation of the work and what it was hoped to accomplish, instead of simply stating that the work would cost $4,000 and no more.

Mr. HALEY. Provincial engineer Murphy came there and examined the work, and stated that in his opinion they were going to have more money than was necessary to do the work.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). I have seen this work, and know something about the deposit of sand in tidal rivers. I do not think it can be called an experiment. No doubt the work will result in making the improvement expected, but there may be some doubt as to the amount of money required. To that extent it is experimental. Even if the cost were three times the amount estimated, it would pay well. The hon. member for Pictou suggested that the wharfs might have been extended. That would have been a very expensive job and would cost many times more than the present work, and then it would not necessarily be permanent. If this work is carried out, no doubt it will make a permanent improvement, and no further expenditure would be necessary, as would be the case either if the wharfs had been extended or we had built a further pier.

L'Ardoise—Repairs to breakwater..... $3,500

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. How does this work stand?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is a pier already there, to which we are going to make some additions. These include a concrete wall, rearranging, covering stones and repairs. The work is situated in Richmond county, on the side of St. Peter's Lake. A breakwater was built in 1876-77, but was almost entirely destroyed. It was reconstructed in 1891-93. The work is 400 feet long.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Is this work under contract?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have not yet made up our minds. The total amount necessary to complete the work is the sum asked.

Whycocomagh—wharf $2,000

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. How does this work stand?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have bought a wharf from the estate of Mrs. Catharine Macdonald, for which we have paid $3,000. The reports of the engineers are to the effect that $1,000 will be needed to repair the wharf, which will then be a first-class structure.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. When was this wharf bought?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In April last.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman got an appropriation from Parliament of $4,000 to build the wharf. Am I right in understanding that instead of building a wharf, he bought a wharf?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes. We found it to be better policy to buy that wharf, which is nicely located, instead of paying more money. The whole trade can be carried on there. A full report from the local engineer has been received.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). Perhaps I may be permitted to give a short history of this matter. I think the hon. gentleman opposite found difficulty in landing there on one occasion, and he had to land at this very wharf. The chief engineer gave instructions to the resident engineer to go to Whycomagh for the purpose of erecting there a wharf to cost about $4,000. Mr. Milledge being resident engineer, visited that place and found that the late Government had dredged a pretty deep channel in Whycomagh Bay, and that the only good location for a public wharf was where the Macdonald wharf was built. He applied to the Macdonald people with a view to purchase the wharf, and an arrangement was come to between the Macdonalds and the engineer, and they agreed that the wharf with approaches was one worth at least $3,000. This agreement between the resident engineer and the Macdonalds was submitted to the Government and the Government approved of the proposition and agreed to take the Macdonald wharf, which is a substantial structure, as part and parcel of the new wharf at Whycomagh. A new block is to be added to the Macdonald wharf in order to make it supply the public as a federal wharf. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) himself has seen that steamers frequent that bay and that the only place of landing was the Macdonald wharf. The addition of sixty feet which the resident engineer proposes to build in addition to that wharf will make it a very commodious structure. From the engineer's report which I have examined, it seems that the whole structure can be finished within the $4,000.

Mr. POWELL. How far is it from Baddeck?

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). Twenty-five miles.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I do not know to what my hon. friend (Mr. McLennan) refers when he suggests that my experience was anything but pleasant in Whycomagh. The only recollection I have is that of being pleasantly received and well treated when I was there. But, Mr. Chairman, this is an extraordinary case and requires a fuller explanation. There was, I am informed, considerable fear entertained by some of the residents in this district that instead of their obtaining a suitable wharf at a proper point, Mr. James Macdonald, the member for the county in the provincial Parliament and a strong Liberal, acting as guardian for this Macdonald estate, would be so fortunate as to divert this money for a purpose which while beneficial to the estate would not be as beneficial to the community as was desired. I was given to understand—of course in all this I merely speak what was said to me—that when the present member for the county (Mr. McLennan) urged upon the Government this grant he had no sinister motives whatever in connection with that private property or with the acquisition of this tumble-down wharf which is now landed upon the hands of the Minister; but that this was an afterthought, and to such an extent were the difficulties increased, that instead of spending the $4,000 which Parliament had put in the hands of the Minister for a proper wharf at a proper place, his hand was stayed by local influences and this very thing has occurred while Parliament was sitting, which certainly a portion of the people, at any rate those who have represented the matter to me, were fearful should come to pass. Apart wholly from whether it is a desirable thing or whether the merits are on his side, it does seem to me an irregularity that the Minister should ask for a grant of money to build a wharf for the accommodation of these people, and then during the session of Parliament, but with no authority whatever from Parliament, buy an existing wharf, in the face of the express wish of Parliament as contained in the Supply Bill that a new wharf should be built. It appears to me that this is an improper diversion of the money voted. It is one thing to ask the House to sanction the purchase of an old wharf to be patched up and improved, and another thing to ask for a grant of money to build a new wharf. If the Minister had stated that this old wharf was in existence many questions would arise as to the necessity for this Parliament interfering at all, for it is not a usual thing to build Government wharfs where private wharfs exist, and there must be exceptional reasons to justify it. A petition was sent to the hon. gentleman from the district, very influentially signed as it seems to me from the document which I hold in my hand, and as I read that petition it does not appear that the views originally pressed upon the Government by the representative of the county, no doubt speaking for the people of the district, are altogether met by this little arrangement to purchase this wharf which Mr. Macdonald had charge of. The petition was presented some time in January last, and is as follows:—

The Petition of the undersigned, electors of Whycomagh and surrounding districts, humbly sheweth:

1. That since, at this last session of Parliament, a grant of $4,000 was made for the building a public wharf at Whycomagh, the trade of the port is such as to require the building of the said wharf at the earliest possible date.

2. That when the said wharf is built it be placed at a point where at least 18 feet of water can be had so as to enable the St. Pierre and Newfoundland steamers to call and take and discharge freight.

3. That in the opinion of the undersigned the only suitable location for such wharf is a short distance south and east of Neil McKinnon's Brook, a property surveyed and reported on by the Government engineer some years ago.

The hon. gentleman from Inverness (Mr. McLennan) will know where that is, I do not.

4. That the building of said wharf at deep water as above stated will benefit to a large extent the business men and farmers of Inverness county as a whole, as their shipping to St. Pierre, Newfoundland and other ports could be done direct from the port of Whyccomagh more conveniently and at much less cost.

5. That this wharf be built as above requested, at deep water, since an easily and passable and comparatively level road could be built at small expense from wharf to Main Street through Whyccomagh village.

6. That a suitable warehouse be built on or near said wharf for the purpose of storing freight, inwards and outwards.

7. Your petitioners earnestly request that the wharf be built on site above mentioned, firmly believing that no property north of this site in the village would serve the interests of the general public; and further request you to order the building of public wharf at Whyccomagh on the site as above stated, since your petitioners are of the opinion the amount of the Government grant for the purpose is ample to cover all expenditure involved in granting this your humble petitioners' request.

Signed at Whyccomagh, Jan., 1898.

This petition is signed by L. S. McKeen, merchant, Neil McKinnon and a great many others. The hon. gentleman who represents the county no doubt has seen this and also the Minister of Public Works.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have seen it.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). How many lames are there from Whyccomagh?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I cannot tell that at once.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). There is 3,000 of a population there.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. All the names except those on the first page seem to be those of Whyccomagh. I will read the names if the hon. gentleman desires. They are:

L. S. McKean, Neil McKinnon, P. A. McLean, Duncan Carmichael, W. D. M. Dougall, Thos. Mitchell, James McKinnon, Peter McKinnon, Angus A. Gillies, John A. McDougall, Lanchlin Gillies, Duncan Livingston, A. E. Waters, J. C. Waters, D. J. Waters, Arch. McDougall, A. B. McKay, Murdo Gillies, George Bishop, A. A. Munro, J. H. B. McIntosh, Malcolm McAuley, Duncan McMillan, Peter McKinnon, Robert Frizze.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). Now, there it is. The hon. gentleman is giving the name of a man who lives fifteen miles away from Whyccomagh.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Is that the only one the hon. gentleman challenges?

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). My hon. friend has finished with Whyccomagh, and he has read a petition supposed to come from a locality containing 3,000 of a population.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I defer, of course, to the hon. gentleman's knowledge of the locality, but he will find that this petition does not pretend to come from Whyccomagh alone. It is the petition of "the undersigned electors of Whyccomagh and surrounding districts." These people are speaking of the county as well as the particular spot to which reference is made in the petition.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). My hon. friend will not contend that the county of Inverness is dependent on the one port of Whyccomagh. There are many other ports there.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. If the hon. gentleman desires to inform the committee that these people are all wrong in their views, of course it is his right to do so. So far as I am concerned, I am not able, from local knowledge, to contradict him, beyond saying that here is a petition which seems to be on the very lines upon which the hon. gentleman proceeded and on which the Minister of Public Works was led to take action a year ago. Certainly, a year ago the records of the Public Works Department will not show any suggestion that this wharf was to be located on the Macdonald estate. It was never suggested to the Minister of Public Works that the scheme was to buy a tumble-down wharf belonging to that estate. The hon. gentleman went at that time upon the lines that this petition covers, and, if I recollect right, it covers the historic fact as well that there had been an investigation and official reports as to the proper site to be selected; and what seems to be the irregular and extraordinary course taken of turning this vote for the construction of a new wharf into the purchase at $3,000 of this tumble-down wharf of the Macdonald estate, is worthy of consideration. Has the hon. gentleman any report from his officers as to the value of this wharf and the depth of water at the end of it?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I received a petition similar to the one just read, and before coming to any decision, I exacted a complete report from the resident engineer, Mr. Milledge. His report was to the effect that it would be less expensive and better to buy the Macdonald wharf than to build a new one. In view of that report, I had no hesitation whatever. As to the point that we are violating the spirit of the vote, my hon. friend is wrong. If he will look at the item itself, he will find it reads simply "Whycocomagh wharf," and moreover I do not see what difference it makes. Supposing I were to spend $1,000 or $2,000 more in building a new wharf, surely I would not have acted as a Minister should. The depth of water is twelve feet.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. At the site suggested it would be eighteen.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am told twelve feet now, but will look at my notes again. My hon. friend will pardon me for not having all these details, because they are pretty hard to keep in mind.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). The resident engineer, Mr. Milledge, was in the service of the Government, of which my hon. friend from Pictou was a member many years, and I am surprised that he would suggest that so old and faithful a servant would swerve from the path of duty and base a report on my advice or that of James Macdonald or any other person. I am sure he has a better opinion than that of the professional and personal standing of Mr. Milledge. I may again say that Mr. Milledge was instructed by the Department of Public Works to go and find the best site for a wharf in Whycocomagh Bay. He went there untrammelled by any instructions further than that. I read his report, and am not afraid of any reference to it. He examined three sites—the one indicated in that petition, the one on the Macdonald site, and one on another site opposite the Bayview Hotel. He found that the channel dredged out by the late Government came nearest the Macdonald wharf, and therefore determined that the public wharf should be built there. He also reported that not only was it nearest the channel, but that it would be in the heart of the village. The site indicated in the petition is quite a distance out of the village of Whycocomagh. The engineer reported that it would not be advisable, in the interests of the village and the surrounding country, to build a wharf so far out of the way of the shipping portion of that locality. He, therefore, reports to the chief engineer advising the Government to purchase the Macdonald property. Now, could the hon. gentleman from Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) condemn the Government for taking a portion of the $4,000 to purchase the right of way to the wharf. Certainly not, for he knows it is the custom to apply a portion of such grants in this way. This $3,000, then, includes the right of way, it includes a warehouse, which the petitioners wish the Government to build, it includes the whole property, right of way, wharf and all. The greater portion of this wharf is stone and cannot be considered as "tumble-down." Some parts of the wooden portion of the wharf are out of repair. I say again I do not believe Mr. Milledge would go out of his way for the sake of either the Dominion or local representative of the county, or anybody else.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. This is a poor system for the discussion of estimates—to bring in some official and suggest that he be knocked about from side to side of the House. I am not as extreme as the hon. gentleman thinks, and to show that that is the case, I would suggest that, as the Minister has a report, he should give me an opportunity to see it before concurrence; or better still, lay it on the Table. Outside of the irregularity that I suggest in connection with the plan, it really comes to a question which the people in the locality can settle with the gentleman who takes the responsibility, the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. McLennan)—the question of the advantage of having a wharf in comparatively shallow water or having a wharf in comparatively deep water. I would merely suggest that the hon. Minister bring down the report before concurrence.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have not the slightest objection to doing so. As to the deep water, on looking at my notes again I find that the extension we are going to build for $1,000 will give us a depth of 12½ feet.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). When it is considered that this whole course has been pursued on the suggestion of the resident engineer, the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) cannot be surprised if I attached so much importance to the position in which he placed himself.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. All I wish to protest against is that any criticism I offer should be considered an attack upon any officer, particularly as I explained that I had no personal knowledge of the case. What depth of water will there be in the channel leading to the wharf?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I could not say.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What additional expenditure does the hon. gentleman expect to put upon this?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Not one cent more.

Port Joli, repairs to wharf..... $1,800

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There are three blocks here. On two of them we spent $300 last year to put them in repair. We now ask $1,800 to repair the third, and cover all three and make a wharf.

Port Latour, breakwater, &c..... $4,000

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is to build a breakwater to provide safe anchorage.

Mr. POWELL. What county is that in?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In Shelburne County. We have not moved very fast in this work. I will see what we can do later on.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Is there no plan for this yet?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, we have been so busy, we have not been able to do everything.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Then why does the hon. gentleman want the money now?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Because I hope to be able to make some progress in this matter.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. But the hon. gentleman asked for the vote last year. Why was nothing done?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). Perhaps I may be allowed to make an observation. In this work, and the one covered by the next item, "Clark's Harbour—breakwater, &c., $5,000," the engineer who visited the locality has reported that the work will involve very considerable expense. Up to the present moment I have not felt at liberty to ask the Minister of Public Works to proceed. I think in this case the estimate was $14,000. While I am glad to have the money revoted, and I would urge that the work be not proceeded with unless we could get a modified plan.

Mr. POWELL. Where is Clark's Harbour?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Both Clark's Harbour and Port Latour are in Shelburne County.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What does the hon. Minister of Public Works consider the limit to which he would go?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I could not say very well—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. Minister of Finance has spoken of $14,000 for the work and says that unless a modified plan can be had nothing will be done. Would the hon. gentleman consider $10,000, for instance, a reasonable sum?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have no intention of asking the Minister to make a contract for that work in excess of $10,000. Unless we can get both the works named on some modified plans, we shall be obliged to leave them over until we have more resources. They would be really useful works if we could get them.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The object is to protect the boats in landing?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, to protect the fishermen.

Mr. KAULBACH. My hon. friend from Queen's and Shelburne (Mr. Fielding) has been so well treated by the Minister of Public Works that, as I am a near neighbour, I desire to express the hope that he (Mr. Fielding) will give the Minister of Public Works a hint not to allow me to be left out in the cold.

Harbours and Rivers, Prince Edward Island—
General repairs to piers and breakwaters. $6,000

Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.) Has the Minister of Public Works any information with respect to the wharf at Annandale?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have instructed our local engineer to send us a report as to the state of the different wharfs, but that report is not yet in. This vote is the ordinary vote taken every year.

Souris, strengthening of breakwater.... $15,000

Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.) Will the Minister be good enough to give us information with respect to this expenditure?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This work is under contract. A part of this money is to pay the balance of the work contracted for by Messrs. Heney & Smith, and the balance to complete the work by day's labour. There is a part of the work that the engineers report could be better done by day's labour.

Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.) Have you any information with respect to the work that was done by Heney & Smith? Is it standing well?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The engineer reports that the works are standing very well.

Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.) There was a contract let by the previous Government on this work, previous to the contract with Heney & Smith. I think that contract was let to Messrs. Mellish & Whiteman. A good deal of time was lost between the time of the tender being accepted and the signing of the contract in the most important season in which to construct the work, that is, in the spring and summer season. I think there was about six weeks lost between the acceptance and the signing of the contract, during which the contractor was not able to proceed with the work. Then the fall storms came on and destroyed altogether some of the work that he had already constructed. In that way I think he has a strong claim on the Government for damages, or for compensation for the loss he sustained. That great storm broke a further portion of the breakwater, and the whole work was thrown over to the following year, and the contractor sustained heavy loss on account of the delay. The fact is that he lost many thousand dollars by it. I think, knowing as I do all the circumstances, that he has a strong and valid claim in justice to compensation for the delay that occurred, owing, not to any fault of his, but to the Government not promptly giving him authority to go on with the work at the season of the year when he could have accomplished it very easily.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not remember that the case of Mr. Whiteman has been laid before me. When representations are made to me, I will take the hon. gentleman's statement into consideration.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I remember well the case my hon. friend refers to. I had personal knowledge of the matter, and I inspected the work that he did, and examined the facts stated in the petition that he presented to the Public Works Department. With respect to his claim for damages, it is one of those cases that no doubt has some merit, because he was prevented by causes over which he had no control from completing his work, in fact from commencing his work at the time he hoped to be able to commence it. But the difficulty I saw was in determining that the department at Ottawa were in any sense to blame for delay in the commencement of the work. When my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works was down there last year, I spoke to him with respect to Mr. Whiteman's petition, in fact I waited upon him personally, and talked the matter over with him in the presence of his engineer. The matter was the subject of a good deal of investigation and inquiry, and I was in hopes at one time that the Minister of Public Works might have seen his way clear to recognize the claim of the petition to some extent. But it does not appear so far that he has been able to do so. I would very cordially endorse the statements made. To a large extent they are within my own personal knowledge as being correct. I think it is one of those meritorious claims which have no legal foundation, but which I think may very well be considered by the Minister from an equitable standpoint. There is no doubt he lost a tremendous lot of money, and from causes for which he was not personally responsible. But whether the department sees its way clear to recognize their liability to indemnify him, is a matter to which the Minister will no doubt give every consideration.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will be glad during recess to give more attention to the claim of Mr. Whiteman than I have been able to do. I remember now discussing this matter with the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and my officer, but having been very busy I have not been able to attend to it. But during recess I will be glad to discuss this matter again.

Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.) I am not able to say whether he has a strictly legal claim on the Government; but as my hon. friend has just now said, there is no doubt it is a case of great hardship. In the first place the delay between the acceptance of the tender and the signing of the contract, which was carried over for a month or six weeks, occurred just at the time of year which would have enabled him to complete the whole contract before the fall storms came on. He is not a political friend of mine, although I do not suppose that would have any weight with the Minister. Still, I know the particulars of the case, and I think he has a strong claim in justice to the reasonable consideration of the Government.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.)

West Point Wharf..... $7,400

Mr. POWELL. How much is that going to cost altogether?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That work is under contract, the contractors are Macdonald & Moffett. The amount of the contract is $9,500, which is the total cost of the work. The total cost of the work will be $9,500.

Mr. POWELL. Is that a new work?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The money is required for repairing and extending existing works, which when completed will be 325 feet long and 30 feet wide.

Mr. POWELL. What will be the depth of the water at the end of the pier?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Six feet at low water mark.

Mr. POWELL. For what purpose is the wharf used?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is largely used by fishermen.

Tignish, repairs to breakwater..... $7,000

Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.) Is this amount required altogether for repairs?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The work is under contract, and the amount asked will cover the cost of the whole work.

Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.) I desire to call the Minister's attention to the breakwater at Campbell's Cove. This is one of the most important fishing sections on the north shore, where there are practically no harbours; and in view of the large fishing interest involved, it is important that the breakwater should be kept in a state of repair.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will take note of it and see what can be done.

Belfast, approach to pier..... $500

Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.) For what purpose is this money required?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is required to extend the pier at Belfast.

Brae, breakwater..... $1,000

Mr. POWELL. Where is this work situated?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is near Egmond Bay. The amount is required for repairing and extending the breakwater originally erected by residents. It is 300 feet long and 20 feet wide.

For purchase of creosoted piles for general repairs to wharfs, piers and breakwaters $2,000

Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.). Has the hon. gentleman arranged to purchase creosoted piles?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have not bought any yet, but we intend to buy them.

Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.). Was lumber of that kind used in the repairs to the Souris breakwater?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Under the contract these piles have been used.

Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.). Although the cost of this wood is considerably more than the ordinary wood of the country, where the worm in our country is so destructive, it will be found more economical to use more of this class of wood in pile work.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I quite agree with my hon. friend.

Mr. POWELL. Has the Minister considered the propriety of having the work of creosoting wood carried out under the direction of the Government? If this wood had been used in the case of Cape Tormentine pier, $30,000, $40,000 or $50,000 might have been saved to the country. Owing to the large expenditure which is constantly occurring under this head it is very important that our river and harbour works, in localities where the worm is at all active, should be constructed of creosoted timber.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have been looking for information on this subject for the last few months. I asked Mr. Dobell, before he went to England, to get information there; but we have not found on the other side of the water exactly what we want. I think we should have creosoting works under our direction. They would cost in the neighbourhood of $30,000, but it would be money well invested.

Red Point Wharf, repairs..... $1,000

Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.). Where is this wharf situated?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. On the south of Hillsboro' River.

Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.). Was it taken over from the local government?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Some years ago it was taken over—in fact, it was repaired by the Dominion Government before it was taken over, and then it was taken over absolutely. It is nine miles up the river on the south side, and is an important point.

Mr. POWELL. There is one work to which I desire to call the attention of the Minister of Public Works. It is a very celebrated work; it is a work that last year was pressed on the attention of the Government and was imperatively demanded to be immediately constructed. It was to save the destruction of a very important harbour on the Northumberland Straits, the harbour of Summerside. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) I see is very self-sacrificing indeed; he is possessed of the true spirit of altruism, because he allowed the Minister of Finance to have no less than four harbours provided for his county, while the Minister of Marine has not only asked for none in any part of the county he represents, but he has actually forgone the pleasure of seeing a vote for this large work appearing in the Estimates. I would ask if the urgent necessity for the placing of that work in the Estimates last year has passed away, or whether the mind of the Minister has been changed in respect to it, its urgency or whether the work is so costly that the Government think the country cannot afford to carry it out?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I may say to my hon. friend (Mr. Powell) that, so far as I am concerned, I have not ceased to recognize the great importance of that work, and so much so that plans were prepared by the chief engineer of the Public Works Department and tenders were called for. We did suppose originally that the work could be done for $60,000 or $70,000, but when the tenders were opened we had only one tender within reasonable limits, and when that tenderer was called upon to carry out the work, he withdrew. The work was offered to the contractor next above the lowest tenderer, and he also withdrew; and we found we could not get the work constructed at anything like what we thought a reasonable sum.

Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.). Would the Minister say about what was the amount?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The tender was under $100,000. In conjunction with my hon. friend from East Prince (Mr. Yeo), who for the first time this session I do not see in his seat; I do not remember ever having seen the hon. gentleman absent from the Chamber before—

Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.). He was called away by telegram; his sister is dead.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am very sorry to hear that news. In conjunction with that hon. gentleman (Mr. Yeo) I called upon the Minister of Public Works, and he was kind enough to give instructions to his chief engineer to revise the specifications in order to see whether he could not reduce the probable cost to within those limits, that in the island at least we thought it ought to be reduced to. We had an idea that this work should not cost anything near so much money, and the chief engineer did revise his estimates. The great cost consisted in importing stone from Nova Scotia, because it was found that the island stone which had been used in filling up would not stand the sea and the water. The chief engineer did make a revision of his estimates, and put in some other stone to be taken from quarries along the line of the Shediac Road, Wallace and Pugwash, and other places. When we received the new tenders, with the reduction as we thought in the probable cost, these tenders were much larger than we expected. The matter has not been decided even now, and my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) has given me the assurance that he will recommend to his colleagues the insertion in the Supplementary Estimates of a reasonable sum, sufficient to assure the public who are deeply interested in this work that the Government bona fide intend to proceed, if it can be done at anything within reasonable limits. I am not one of those who are prepared to recommend an extravagant expenditure of public money, and I may say that my hon. friend from East Prince (Mr. Yeo) and myself have waited upon the Minister of Public Works a great many times, and upon the chief engineer, and have gone over his estimates in the hope that we may get the cost down to such a sum as from our standpoint in the maritime provinces would be reasonable. So far we have not succeeded, but I am very well satisfied with the assurance the Minister of Public Works gives me, that he will recommend to his colleagues the insertion of a reasonable sum in the Estimates in the hope that we may get that work built.

Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.) What is the object of the work?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman knows that Summerside is the second harbour in Prince Edward Island, and the channel is not deep enough to admit of the passage of the larger class of steamers, such as the "Stanley." The "Stanley" has gone in and come out, but she touched once. The channel is a little narrow and slightly tortuous. The belief among the engineers and those who have studied the question is, that if the harbour is protected by this breakwater and the entrance is reduced, then the tremendous rush of water will deepen it two or three feet, and thus afford anchorage and protection not only to ordinary sized vessels, but to vessels having the large draft of the "Stanley" when her tanks are filled. The belief is that the building of this breakwater from the lighthouse, which is situated at the south side of the entrance of the harbour, into the point, would so narrow the water that the rush would clear the channel out so as to afford the necessary depth.

Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.) I would ask the Minister of Public Works whether the experience of the officers of his department would lead him to believe that a structure of that kind in a place such as Summerside Harbour, would have the effect referred to by the Minister of Marine. I am rather inclined to think, from the nature of the bottom and the whole shape of the harbour, that there will be little if any benefit obtained from confining the waters. I must say that I think Summerside harbour has at present all the water that the necessities of the place require. It has a sufficient depth for all purposes, with possibly the exception of the "Stanley" when she is loaded down with her tanks filled for going through heavy ice, but there is no necessity for her going to Summerside while thus loaded down. People will be saying curious things about these matters, and they say that there must be a little politics in this. I do not know whether there is or not. Again, they say this thing is going to be staved off and that there will be another amount put in the Estimates when an election comes on. I do not know how much truth there is in that, but people will talk that way, you know. I dare say that the people of Summerside have been anticipating this work for some time, and no doubt it would be to their interests to have it, but whether it will really be in the interests of the harbour and of Summerside generally is quite another matter. The hon. Minister knows that in former years we had very large ships visiting our ports in the island, but the conditions have been altered in that regard, and at the present time we do not require as great a depth in our harbours as we did many years ago. While it would be perhaps well enough to construct that work if the cost is not excessive, it is a serious question as to whether an expenditure of $150,000, as I understand some of the tenders were, or even $100,000, would be warranted under the circumstances. At least that is my opinion, and I am just telling you of the way people talk.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am in hopes that there are no politics in it, because the construction of this breakwater has been a matter which came before successive Governments one after another. The late Government determined to build it, and this Government, after close examination, decided that their determination was in the interests of trade and commerce; and my hon. friend knows that although the harbour is a good one in itself, it is exposed absolutely to the south-west winds. In addition to the scouring which the hon. gentleman speaks of, which would be the practical effect of the construction of the breakwater, it would entirely protect the harbour from the south-west gales; and as the harbour is protected naturally from all the other gales, it would thus be rendered perfectly safe. Being the second harbour in the island, and perhaps the one from which the greatest export trade goes in the summer months, it is one that nobody would say should be disregarded. I am sure that my hon. friend, although he comes from the other end of the island, would not look with a jealous eye upon a reasonable expenditure in this regard. I quite agree that we must be very prudent and careful, and the best evidence my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works has given of that, is that he has not accepted any of the tenders, because they were of an amount that he thought excessive.

Mr. POWELL. I think this harbour should be safely left to the course pursued by Governments heretofore. It has been always admitted as very desirable to build this breakwater, but it has never been built. The ends of justice and the interest of all parties would be best served if that course were continued, and the present Government were to follow closely in the footsteps of their predecessors. I must congratulate the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries upon one fact: I do not think he would expend money on this breakwater needlessly or waste the public money for mere political purposes. I must congratulate him also on the fact that he advocated public improvements in his own constituency on their own merits and does not try to buttress himself with useless expenditure of public money in making four or five artificial harbours and erecting post offices that seem to be designed as tombs of decaying towns and to have been erected for no other purpose that I can see. I congratulate him in pursuing, in this respect, a course somewhat different from that taken by some of his confreres in the Government.

While this breakwater will never be built and is entirely unnecessary, I would call his attention to the great desirability of having a harbour on the Island side of the straits between Cape Traverse and Tormentine. The present harbour at Cape Traverse is of no use whatever. It is constructed in a place where the sand, owing to the shore wash, fills in around the end of it, so that a few weeks after it is dredged, it is utterly impossible for a vessel to get near it. The English engineers, in dealing with such a case, are in the habit of sinking tubular piers at considerable distances, and the wash comes between these piers, carrying the sand or silt along, and then at the outer end, probably a couple of hundred yards distant, they construct a solid pier, which is used for the purpose of mooring vessels. In this way the loose sand is washed between these tubular piers, and passes on to another portion of the coast, and the outside pier remains accessible to vessels at all time and requires no dredging. I would call the attention of the hon. Minister of Public Works to the great desirability of building a new pier. The money expended on the old one heretofore was absolutely wasted, so far as the purposes of large vessels are concerned, and any addition to that pier will also be a waste of money. Whether it is desirable to go further up the coast and construct a harbour at Carleton Head and then deflect the railway to that harbour, I am not sufficiently acquainted with the locality, although intimately with the coast, to say. The expenditure of a few thousand dollars there would afford a very good pier for the "Stanley" or the successor of the "Stanley." If it is decided to have an ice boat with more power crossing between the capes in winter and this seems to be the only available route there is. I do not know if the matter has received the attention of the department, but it certainly should. The amount that would be required to construct a breakwater at Summerside, if spent instead at Carleton Head, would construct a good artificial harbour on that side of the straits. As regards the money to be wasted in connection with the Summerside harbour, I am very familiar with that harbour, having been in and out of it, in the early part of my life, hundreds of times. The construction of this breakwater is not at all necessary. In the first place, at low water this reef, the hon. gentleman spoke of, is almost entirely dry, and any body who knows the elementary principles of sea or wave action knows that a reef with eight or nine feet of water on it and a great lagoon inside, extending a couple of miles, affords ample protection to vessels under all circumstances. It is a magnificent harbour with better protection than almost any harbour on the coast. It is easy of access, and the expenditure of $100,000 or $50,000 on it would be an absolute waste of money.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have not much to add to what my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has said. He knows the place very well and has spoken with full knowledge. I can only say that this work has given us a great deal of anxiety. The chief engineer himself went down to inspect the place with the view of changing the plans, so as to reduce the cost if possible. After his visit we called for new tenders, but we still find the cost of the work very great. At the same time, I cannot lose sight of the fact that Summerside is a very important harbour, and there is no doubt whatever that the reports from the department would justify us in the belief that the building of that breakwater would vastly improve it. It would protect it very much.

Mr. POWELL. It is sufficiently protected now.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Moreover it would create a scour so that the inside of the harbour would be kept clear. As to the other questions to which my hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) has alluded, that has received the attention of the department in the past. Mr. Shewan made surveys and reports which I would be very glad to let my hon. friend see; but I understand that the cost of the work would be very large. We cannot build in that part of the country without spending much money, I am sorry to say.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There are two things in which I agree thoroughly with my hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Powell). These are that money spent by the late Government in the construction of the wharf at Cape Traverse was so much money thrown into the sea, and that any extension of that wharf would be money equally wasted. It is possible that a pier, built after the style in which they build piers in England, up at Carleton Point, a few miles further to the west, might possibly be well spent; but the estimate for the work would amount, not to $100,000, but $250,000; and I have never been able to bring myself to the point of recommending to the Government any such work. In addition, it would necessitate a branch railway from the present line, and altogether the expenditure would amount to $300,000 or $400,000. And even when you had completed the work, it would be only an experiment. Nobody has been able yet to solve the problem as to whether winter navigation can be carried on there with steamers. My hon. friend rather sneered the other day at the little effort I made last year in that direction, and the impression has gone abroad among many people that we tried the experiment of endeavouring to cross there in the winter in the same way as between Georgetown and Pictou, namely, by smashing up the ice. That was not the idea, as I explained. The idea was to test whether the statements made by residents of the locality that the tides meeting there on the south side of the island left an open place through which the steamers would pass was a tenable one or not. If the theory was sound, no doubt a small steamer could test it. But suppose you went to the expense of $200,000 or $300,000. I may explain that I do not shut my mind against it. The matter may be worth considering. But after you test you have no guarantee that you can run steamers there. It might be useless. The idea of the Summerside breakwater, if it could be built for a reasonable sum, a sum somewhat less than $100,000, is that you could cross from there to Tormentine. The distance is not much greater than by the existing route, running around by Sea Cow Head. If you could build a breakwater at the end of which the steamer could lie, it is possible, and perhaps even probable—for practical men to entertain the idea—that you could carry on winter communication between these ports. Personally it is well known that my opinion is that the best route is between Georgetown and Pictou. But I am not going to shut my eyes to that fact that other men who have as good means to judge as I have, and who are, perhaps, more competent to judge, entertain that opinion.

Mr. POWELL. What does Capt. McElhinney say?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am not sure but I think Capt. McElhinney's opinions are on record. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Powell) will recollect that one view we entertained and had before us was the possibility and even the probability of this breakwater offering a safe harbour, at the end near the lighthouse, and might solve the question of winter communication. And this is an exceedingly important problem for Prince Edward Island. I am glad that the Minister of Public Works has given the matter so much attention together with his chief engineer. I know that they are trying to devise some specification which will bring the expense within reasonable limits. If the expense can be brought down to a reasonable sum, I shall urge strongly that the work be carried on.

Mr. POWELL. So far as the hon. gentleman's criticism of the previous Government's expenditure is concerned, I have nothing to say. It is no part of my intentions to defend the expenditure of the previous Government. But I would not assent to the proposition of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that it was an unwarrantable thing to expend public money for services in their nature experimental. The late Government were trying to kill two birds with one stone. In the first place the object was to have a pier for the purpose of interprovincial communication, and the second to afford facilities for the people of the vicinity for boats landing for fishing and other pursuits. It is true that it was in part an experiment, and, like the hon. gentleman's experiment with the "Petrel," it was a failure. But these expenditures, though the experiments do fail, are not monstrously indefensible. These experiments have to be tried. As to the failure of the boat, no person who knew anything about the matter would expect anything else.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. What did Capt. McElhinney say?

Mr. POWELL. As I am informed, Capt. McElhinney was told to procure the best boat he could for the trial. But the best boat he could get was not one built specially for the service, and any one who knew the nature of the service and considered her character, must have known that she would fail. She had not the drag, she had not the build. Boats for such service are constructed to run up on the ice and break it down. But she was not built that way. I am not reflecting on Capt. McElhinney or upon the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, for I am willing to say they did their best under the circumstances. But I am sure that Capt. McElhinney will tell you, I hear that he said so, it was not the boat that he would wish. It was the best available. There were none available that had the features necessary for this route.

Mr. MACDONALD. I would like to remind the hon. Minister of a petition sent forward from the people of Grand River in my county, for an addition to the wharf at Chapel Point, a block and span. This petition was sent last year to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and was handed, I believe, to the Minister of Public Works. I had an interview with the Minister of Public Works on the subject, and he took it in a kindly way. I trust that in the Supplementary Estimates an item will appear for this work. It is a district that has no other public works to bother the Minister about. The section is a prosperous one and there is a great deal of produce shipped even from the existing wharf, which does not offer the accommodation necessary in the short season in the autumn. This is on a river which freezes very early, and more accommodation is needed on the wharf.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I shall be glad to take note of the remarks my hon. friend has made.

Harbours and Rivers, N.B.—

Shippegan Harbour—Extension of protection works and repairs to same.... $4,000

Mr. POWELL. What work has been done?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman knows the locality better than I do. We had to repair the jetties. We have already spent nearly the amount voted last year, $2,000. I have not heard any complaint as to the work.

Mr. POWELL. Will this vote complete the work?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No. It will take between $7,000 or $8,000—perhaps even more. My hon. friend (Mr. Powell) knows that this is a very important work, and I am glad to be able to say it is being carried out in an able manner.

Cape Tormentine, repairs to breakwater..$8,000

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That wharf has cost $238,000. Unfortunately it has not been built at all as it should have been, that is to say, with the proper kind of timber, and it is nearly destroyed. At the same time, I have not made up my mind to rebuild it, and all we are doing is merely to protect it from being totally destroyed. With this money we propose to throw stones around the portions which are most eaten away on the outside, just to keep it up.

Harbours and Rivers—Maritime Provinces Generally—General repairs and improvements to harbour and river works..... $10,000

Mr. McINERNEY. Is it the intention to do anything to protect the breakwater at Richibucto harbour?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The engineer tells me that to build a wharf would require some $150,000. So far, I have not been able to make up my mind to spend that vast amount of money immediately.

Mr. McINERNEY. That means the construction of a new breakwater on the south side. But what I wished to call attention to was repairs to the old breakwater on the north side of the harbour. That was built at considerable expense some years ago, partly under the Mackenzie Government, and that breakwater is in a very bad state of repair. I think Mr. Lafleur, the engineer of the department, who was down there a few years ago on a hydrographic survey, would have knowledge of what I am saying. The top part of the breakwater is rotting away, the covering is nearly all rotted away, and unless something is done in a short time, the whole thing will have to be built over again at a very large expense, while a moderate sum now would keep it in fair repair. I would hardly expect the Minister to spend $150,000 just now on that harbour, although I could show him, as I attempted to show the former Government, that a very large coasting trade is done at that port. I may say that in the figures I produced in 1893 to Mr. Ouimet, the predecessor of the hon. gentleman, I showed that there were more entries inward and outward at Richibucto than at Chatham, Dalhousie and Campbellton combined. There are also quite a number of seagoing vessels visiting that port. The trade of the port has been very much injured on account of the dilapidated state of the breakwater there.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. A few weeks ago a deputation from Richibucto called at my department and made representations to me of two different kinds. First, they represented that the old breakwater might be repaired; secondly, that the harbour requires a good deal of dredging. I understand that the harbour is filling in nearly as quickly as it is cleaned out. I am glad my hon. friend has reminded me of the matter.

Mr. McINERNEY. I heard of the deputation being here, and I was glad to see that on the deputation were the ex-president and the present president of the Conservative Association of the county. I suppose that did not at all prejudice the consideration that the hon. Minister gave to their representations. But I do not think that the harbour is filling up, because there is about the same depth now that there has been for a few years past. I think if proper protection was given at that harbour, and a moderate breakwater built at the south side of the harbour, the depth could be very much increased. From what I learned a few years ago, I think that the view held by Mr. Coste, the chief engineer, is that there should be a breakwater on the south side of the harbour, and a small extension made of the present breakwater on the north side. If that were done at a moderate expense, I think the harbour would be very much improved. I hope the Minister lent an ear to the representations made to him by the deputation that called upon him a short time ago. I know they are very respectable gentlemen. One of them carries on one of the largest shipping industries in the county, and he is a man whose word can be relied upon—Mr. Jardine. The other gentleman, I understand, is a lawyer who has moved over to Fredericton, but he has considerable interest in that county. I hope the Minister will take what they said into consideration, and also what I now say on behalf of that harbour. It is the chief port in the county, and nothing has been done for it for a number of years. I made protestations to the late Government in favour of the harbour, but they paid little attention to them.

Mr. GANONG. I notice that in the items for New Brunswick the Minister has not included anything for repairs on the breakwater at Wilson's Beach, in Charlotte County. The hon. Minister cannot accuse me of the same fault which he charged upon my hon. friend from Cape Breton, of not calling the matter to his attention. In November, 1896, I called his attention to it, and have done so at least twice since that time. It is a very important matter for the people in that vicinity. There are no doubt six or seven hundred fishermen in the immediate vicinity, and it not only serves these people who are living in that community, but some two or three thousand people who are dependent on it to some extent, many of whom occasionally use it. It is the most important point on that part of the coast on the Island of Campobello, and it is the only protection for several miles for all their vessels. Whatever reports the hon.

Mr. TARTE.

gentleman may have from his engineers, I prefer to take the opinions of the people who are most interested. They have felt during two or three years that this breakwater was in danger of being carried away, and then no protection would be afforded to the shipping. I consider the residents know better than the engineers about the tides and winds in the vicinity. I can assure the Minister that there is nothing of a political nature in this, for I found the Liberals very thick there, 40 or 50 too thick.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The Supplementary Estimates have not yet been brought down, and if anything can be voted, it will be inserted there. We have not completed the report as to the state of affairs there. Hon. members on both sides of the House know that the Government cannot comply with all the demands made upon them.

Mr. GANONG. I will admit that statement. But if the hon. gentleman will look over the records he will find that for many years the county of Charlotte has not been a very expensive one, in fact, very few dollars have been expended there on public works. Of course, the county has been in Opposition for some time, and is so still. I believe there is also a petition in the department from Letite, a very large fishing village, which has obtained steam communication. It has, however, no pier, and it would be a great advantage if a reasonable sum were voted to assist the residents. I desire also to ask the Minister if he has had any surveys made in the harbour of St. Andrew's. In September, 1897, I drew attention, first, to the desirability of having the upper passage dredged, and if I am correctly informed, a Government officer went there during the past season. I do not know whether he made a practical examination or simply looked the ground over. This is a work that should be carried out, as a great amount of shipping goes down the river, and so long as the harbour is in its present condition vessels have to make a detour of several miles to get to the lower passage, and at some conditions of the tide it is difficult for vessels to get through that passage. If the upper passage was dredged so that it could be used at half tide, even if not at low tide, it would be of great advantage to shipping in the river but should be made passable at low water.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have received several communications on the subject. I attach great importance to St. Andrew's harbour. I had intended last year to visit the maritime provinces, but I found I was unable to do so. I intend to visit these provinces during the present year, and St. Andrew's will be one of the harbours to which I will give attention. Meanwhile I will take a note of it.

Mr. McINERNEY. Is it the intention of the Minister to put anything in the Supplementary Estimates for harbour protection at Richibucto?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. They have not passed Council.

Mr. McINERNEY. I might make my question more specific, and ask what is the Minister's present intention in regard to the question?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I should not like to make an announcement now.

Mr. McINERNEY. Surely I have a right to ask if the hon. gentleman is putting any amount in the Supplementary Estimates for this work?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. All I can say is that representations have been made to me, and I have listened to them with the greatest care.

Mr. McINERNEY. Surely they will not have precedence over representations made by the member for the county.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I always listen to my hon. friend with pleasure, and I have listened to his representations to-day, together with representations made a few days ago. They have created a very good impression on my mind.

Mr. McINERNEY. The information I desire is whether it is the intention of the hon. Minister to put any amount in the Supplementary Estimates with respect to harbour protection at Richibucto?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It would be discourteous to my colleagues to give that information now. Moreover, His Excellency has to sanction these expenditures.

Mr. McINERNEY. I am not asking what the Supplementary Estimates are going to contain, but the present intention of the Minister.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I may answer that I am full of very good intentions.

Mr. McINERNEY. The hon. gentleman knows that a certain place is paved with good intentions. If Richibucto harbour could be improved by good intentions, it would be all very well. Is it the Minister's intention to have any dredging done this summer?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My mind is in the same condition; I am very well intentioned.

Mr. McINERNEY. This is a matter of some importance, and should not be treated as a joke by the Minister. I do not think the people there will be willing to treat it in that way. I should like to know and the people want to know, whether any work will be done at that port.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The matter has not been forgotten, and the hon. gentleman does not require a promise.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is not customary to give information of that kind before the Supplementary Estimates have passed Council.

Mr. McINERNEY. It is not necessary to know whether there is anything in the Supplementary Estimates or not. What I ask is this, does the Minister intend to have any dredging done at Richibucto this summer?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The question has been put before, and I have listened carefully to the representations made. I cannot say more than that.

Mr. POWELL. In regard to the remarks of the hon. member for Kent (Mr. McInerney), this is not a laughing matter for the people of Richibucto. There must certainly be the bones of one hundred or one hundred and fifty square-rigged vessels on that reef. Owing to the peculiar formation of the harbour and the tendency to fill in, which the Minister of Public Works seems to have studied, vessels have never been able to take their full cargoes inside. They finish in the open roadstead, and when a north-east gale comes on, vessels are in a very critical condition indeed. I was born and raised there, and I have seen four or five square-rigged vessels go ashore in one storm. I can enumerate thirty or forty vessels in my own experience which pounded themselves to pieces on that reef. And when he said that you might dig the place out and it would fill up again, he states what is the literal truth. I have seen vessels go there ashore at the tip top of high water and come off at low water. It is a kind of floating sand, almost a quicksand, and I do not think dredging does a great deal of good.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It gives some relief temporarily.

Mr. POWELL. It may, but what is required is some means of diverting the current and letting the water do the work. If the water could be got to bear upon the same principle as the wind is got to bear in clearing snow out a railway cutting, the engineer would be successful. The great trouble is that the engineers have not studied the matter but have simply prepared their plans in Ottawa without knowing the condition and have gone down there time after time making useless expenditures of public money. It wants some one to study the action of the current and the sand, and with the experience gained in this way a few thousand dollars may do a great deal of good. I sincerely trust attention may be given the matter, because it means probably the loss of two or three vessels in a season if a storm should come while they are in the roadstead. I would like to ask the hon. Minister if he has received any petition from the inhabitants of Port Elgin, county of Westmoreland, for dredging the Gaspereaux River and Port Elgin Harbour. If the hon. gentleman is coming down to the province of New Brunswick, and if he would consult my wishes, so far as I am concerned I would much rather have him during the ensuing summer inspecting that harbour than during an election campaign, as I last had the pleasure of seeing him in Westmoreland County.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. So far as Richibucto Harbour is concerned it would require the extension of the "Jet-ty" and the building of another so as to create a channel, as we have been obliged to do in several places. That kind of work has a very good effect but it would cost a very large amount of money. I intend during my visit next summer to give particular attention to that harbour because I see it is of very great importance. I do not exactly remember what kind of a petition I received from Port Elgin. I am very fond of Westmoreland County. I have been very well received there although I am sorry to say I was not successful, but nevertheless I am very glad to see my hon. friend (Mr. Powell) in the House.

Mr. McINERNEY. If the Minister visits Richibucto Harbour he will see there is great need for harbour protection there. There was a large dredge sent there last summer; she was there nearly the whole summer long and I am here to state to the Minister that she did not do one yard of dredging on the Richibucto bar. She came there pretty early in the summer, and I myself saw her aground on the bar at fair tide. Those who made representations to the Minister to have that sort of boat sent to Richibucto, certainly made false representations, because a large dredge like that is practically useless there. More than that, the officer in charge told me while the dredge was aground, that they could not dredge on the bar, and that all they could do was to go outside the bar and dig a hole where dredging was not required. Only a light draft dredge is suitable for the purpose at Richibucto. The gentlemen who made the representations to get the large dredge to Richibucto last year—and I believe they took her away from Yarmouth where she was doing good work—simply debited the harbour with a full year's work and no good whatever resulted. I make representations in this House with some degree of responsibility, and the representation I make is, that if the Minister intends to do any dredging there he should not take his information from people who are not responsible, who perhaps want a little job carried out, who do not represent the people; but that he should take his representations from one who is responsible to the electors of the county. I tell him that what is required there is a light draft dredge, and not a heavy dredge to waste the whole summer doing nothing.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am glad to receive suggestions from my hon. friend (Mr. McInerney), but at the same time I would not pledge myself not to receive representations from his electors. The electors of a county have a right to be heard by every Minister, and I intend in future hearing the electors of my hon. friend as I would the electors of any other hon. member of Parliament. The dredge "Canada" worked at Richibucto for a few weeks last summer, and I think the work gave a great deal of relief.

Mr. McINERNEY. Not a particle.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Men who are engaged in business called on me and they told me that the dredging last year gave a good deal of relief.

Mr. McINERNEY. Not a particle.

Mr. GANONG. I would be happy to see the Minister of Public Works visit Charlotte County so that he may see how self-sacrificing we are on the St. Croix, when we simply ask him to do a little work at St. Andrews. It was only a few months since I had the privilege of talking with the engineer of the United States Government who was on the St. Croix, and if I mistake not there has been correspondence between the United States Government and our Government with regard to the dredging of that river. The estimate made by the United States engineer was $300,000 of which they concluded they should pay $200,000, leaving $100,000 to the Dominion. We are not making any such claim as that at the present time, but if the Minister will come down and look after St. Andrews, that is all we will ask him to do now.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I should certainly like to visit St. Andrews.

Grand Rivière, repairs to wharf..... $800

Mr. BERGERON. Is not that a new wharf?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is an old wharf.

Mr. BERGERON. I think I remember that it was only finished two or three years ago.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It was built under the late regime by Mr. Atkinson, and we are obliged to strengthen it now. I think this small sum will put it in good shape. It is done on the report of Mr. Breene, who is our resident engineer.

General repairs and improvements to Harbour, River and Bridge work..... $10,000

Mr. MARCOTTE. (Translation.) I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) whether he has included in this appropriation a certain amount for the repairs required on the River Ste. Anne?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). (Translation.) No; those works come under a special item.

Mr. MARCOTTE. (Translation.) May I ask the hon. Minister whether he is going to place a sum in the Supplementary Estimates to provide for this work?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. (Translation.) I am not free to give any information to my hon. friend as to the nature of the items which the Supplementary Estimates will contain.

Mr. MARCOTTE. (Translation.) Am I to understand that those appropriations will provide for new works only?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. (Translation.) Not exactly; the Supplementary Estimates provide for works of different kinds.

Mr. MARCOTTE. (Translation.) It is of the highest importance to the parish of Ste. Anne de la Pèrade that a certain amount should be voted this year, as that locality is threatened with very serious dangers and is liable at any time to suffer almost irreparable damages resulting from landslides on the upper part of the River Ste. Anne, above that locality, and, in fact, almost at any point on that stream. I have no hesitation in saying that if a sufficient sum were placed in the Estimates to provide for the protection of that locality, no better use could be made of public money. It should be desirable to put an item in the Estimates for those repairs, and I do not think a large sum would be required.

Some works have already been carried out by the Dominion Government on that river; but, unfortunately, those two upper piers, where they are now located, are a real nuisance, as a strong current is formed between those works and the mainland, which causes considerable landslips on the banks of the river. On these grounds, I ask the hon. Minister of Public Works to place an item in the Supplementary Estimates for repairs to those protection works on the River Ste. Anne.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. (Translation.) We have already made an expenditure of $22,000 on the River Ste. Anne for those protection works, although, they are, properly speaking, not Dominion works. Now, I am informed by the engineers of my department that, in order to carry out the necessary protection works at Ste. Anne and elsewhere, a considerable outlay would have to be incurred. I am not ready to give my pledge in that respect to the hon. gentleman. As I said, those works are not Dominion works, and therefore the Government cannot be expected to undertake such protection works along all the banks of the rivers from the waters of which damages and injuries may result. Were we to pursue such a course, it would require much larger estimates than could be placed at our disposal, to meet the wants mentioned.

Mr. MARCOTTE. (Translation.) Last year an item of $5,000 was put in the Estimates, and I think it would only be fair to place a re-vote in the estimates for this year, so as to cover the expenditure for those repairs. In my opinion, it would not require a large sum to secure an efficacious protection to that locality. Some expenditures have already been made, but, as I said, the works so far carried out do more harm than good, as a considerable current is formed between the banks and the piers, which causes landslides. Those landslides could be obviated by adding a wing to the two piers already built, which would not involve a very large expenditure.

Mr. BERGERON. Would the hon. Minister explain why he put last year an amount of $5,000 in the Estimates for that work at Ste. Anne's?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I did so because I thought that that sum could be spent in a useful manner, but after more careful examination of the situation, we concluded that it would require a vast amount of money to complete the work. As I have just explained in French, those works are not of a federal nature. The Government has already spent $22,000 for protective works at Ste. Anne's, although they were works that properly should not have been done by this Government. You must draw the line somewhere. If my department is to take charge of protecting the coasts of all the rivers and streams that cause damage, we would require a very large amount of money indeed.

Mr. MARCOTTE. (Translation.) The hon. Minister of Public Works says that such works would involve a considerable outlay. In my humble opinion—and I am free to confess that I am not perhaps a very competent judge in matters of this kind—if an additional wing were built, it would obviate the landslips on the banks of the river. At all events, I would be quite satisfied with a re-vote of $5,000. Besides, I may draw the attention of the Minister to the fact that an appropriation of $5,000 has previously been placed in the Estimates to provide for those works, that materials have been prepared in anticipation of those repairs, and that the farmers at Ste. Anne de la Pèrade have already done considerable work, piling up stone, in the hope of being reimbursed by the Government. When I say that those people are dissatisfied, the hon. gentleman may believe that I am not exaggerating in the least. A vote of $5,000 would be quite sufficient, and the ratepayers of Ste. Anne would be quite satisfied. With such a sum of money, permanent protection works could be carried out. Let therefore the hon. Minister place that revote in the Estimates.

Mr. MONK. When can we expect some announcement from the Government with regard to the harbour works in Montreal? The hon. Minister is aware that representations have been made, from time to time, to the Government, and plans discussed by the harbour commissioners and the department. I see in these estimates very considerable sums for the building of wharfs and the improvement of harbours generally in far less important places than Montreal. We have been very patient in Montreal, and it seems to me that we ought to have now some announcement from the Government.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This question is now engaging the earnest attention of the Government. The harbour commissioners and other important citizens of Montreal have called repeatedly on us this year and last, and I have myself given a great deal of attention to this important question. We have not yet been able to come to any decision. I need not tell my hon. friend that I attach just as much importance as he does to the Montreal harbour. The position of affairs is this. I have still in hand at the disposal of the harbour commissioners a sum of about $750,000 out of the amount that this Parliament in 1896 authorized the Government to advance to them. The amount then authorized was $2,000,000, out of which $1,000,000 was immediately taken to pay the floating debt of the harbour commission. Out of the other million, about $250,000 was spent in works that have been going since in that harbour. If the harbour commissioners would go on with the amount of money that they have in hand and the $750,000 that the city of Montreal voted for protective work, they could do a good deal of work. There was some difference of opinion between the harbour commissioners and myself as to the plans to be adopted, but I am glad to say that these have been settled, and we have come to an agreement as to the plans to be carried out. But I am not in a position to say this evening what the policy of the Government will be.

Mr. MONK. Might I ask the hon. gentleman what is the plan the Government has finally decided to adopt?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The plans agreed upon are what we might perhaps call a compromise scheme. My engineers, after consultation with eminent engineers from England and the harbour commissioners, came to an agreement with the harbour commissioners, according to the plan now in my department, and I shall be very glad to show it to my hon. friend, if he will do me the honour of calling at my department on any day.

Mr. BERGERON. Will the policy of the Government be declared before the end of the session?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It will.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend has said that he understands the importance of the work. In Montreal the people are very anxious to know, before spending any more money, whether any decision will be come to. I understand that there was a difference of opinion last year between the Minister and the Commissioners as to whether the harbour would be where it is now or lower down.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That was not the point of difference at all.

Mr. BERGERON. There was some difference of that sort, was there not?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The point of difference was as to the width of the basins between the piers to be erected. My contention was that as the size of the ships was growing larger every year, it was necessary to give more width than would have sufficed twenty years ago, when the ships coming into Montreal averaged 5,000 or 6,000 tons only. To-day there are steamers visiting Montreal of 10,000 and 12,000 tons burden, and the size is increasing every year. The difference of opinion arose on that point, but I am glad to say that it is now settled.

Mr. BERGERON. I am very glad to hear that, because last summer one of the Montreal newspapers, and an organ of the hon. gentleman, the Montreal "Witness," mentioned that certain gentlemen, of whom the Minister of Public Works was one, and the present Mayor of Montreal another, wanted to bring the harbour down to Ruisseau Mignon. This old scheme we heard of in Montreal very often, and I ask now whether the harbour is to be built down there or whether it is to be dug where it is now?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The plans on which we have agreed do not bear at all on the improvements at Hochelaga. They have no connection with them whatever. We have agreed on the plans for the works in the centre of the harbour leaving the other scheme in abeyance.

Mr. BERGERON. The work will be going on this summer, if the harbour is there, will it not?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No doubt. I stated a moment ago that the harbour commissioners are perfectly free to draw on the Department of Public Works whenever they like. I have still at their disposal, as I said, about three quarters of a million dollars. Within a day or two past, I have received a request from them to allow them to go on with certain works, to which I will give my attention to-morrow, I think.

Mr. BERGERON. I wish to revert for a moment to the question raised by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Marcotte), and to express my opinion for what it may be worth, that the Minister of Public Works might have stated very truthfully that the $5,000 put in the Estimates last year was put there in view of a certain election taking place in that county, and the election having been lost, the $5,000 had to disappear from the budget. I would like to ask the hon. Minister what is to be done with this vote, $10,000. It is a very dangerous vote. We vote an amount in blank, so to speak, which they can use as they please. I think it will be very interesting to the House to know what the department intends to do with it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This vote has been given annually from time immemorial.

Mr. BERGERON. That is why I am afraid of it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is no reason to be afraid. It is intended to cover unforeseen expenses—small repairs, and so on.

Laprairie—Works in connection with ice piers—Dredging steamboat channel.... $5,000

Mr. BERGERON. When will these works be finished?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My deputy tells me that the department hopes to complete this work next year. As the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) knows, these are very important works.

Mr. BERGERON. I am not opposing the vote. I know the importance of the work. But it seems to me that it takes a long time to finish these works.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We will be able to complete them next year.

Mr. BERGERON. For this amount?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No.

Mr. MONK. Is this for the main channel or for the channel leading to Laprairie?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There are two kinds of works, protection works, begun years ago and to be completed this year, and dredging to get an additional depth of water for the boats plying between Laprairie and Montreal.

River Richelieu—Belœil Channel guide piers $5,500

Mr. BERGERON. When will that be finished?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It will be completed with this vote.

Mr. BERGERON. Is the hon. gentleman building a bridge at that point?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We had the guiding piers, between which we placed booms to guide the boats passing through. These piers were destroyed, and we have replaced them with cribwork—permanent work.

Mr. BERGERON. Who has been doing the work?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have been doing it by day's labour.

Mr. MONK. Would not the hon. gentleman have done better to have called for tenders and given a contract?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will tell my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) our experience in this case. The late Government asked for tenders for this work. Mr. Beaulieu, of Lévis, tendered. When I took office I found that he had not paid for his material, he had not paid his men, he had simply given up the work.

Mr. BERGERON. Had he made a deposit?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes; of a small amount.

Mr. BERGERON. Did the hon. Minister keep it?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes. But the contractor did not do the work.

Mr. MONK. I am afraid my knowledge of this case does not altogether tally with that of the hon. Minister. This man, Beaulieu, if I remember right, tendered for this work for what the department is paying, $11,500, offering to do it for $4,000. He failed, it is true. But there were other contractors. There was a perfectly solvent contractor who tendered for $7,000, which is considerably less than the work is costing us now. Even with that tender in his possession the Minister goes on and does the work by day's labour, spending $11,500. And, more than that, if I am correctly informed, there have been claims for damages filed in the department to the amount of $3,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. MONK. Not about the tenders.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes; the tenders were for piling work—different altogether from the work we are doing now, which is cribwork.

Mr. MONK. Do I understand that these claims for damages are not going to be entertained?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have given a good deal of attention to these claims, and my opinion is that instead of having done damage we have improved the property in front of which we worked.

Mr. MONK. I quite agree with the hon. Minister. I am pleased to hear him make that declaration.

Mr. CLARKE. I am desired to ask why tenders were not called for this work? Is it the policy of the department to carry out works of this kind by day's labour?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am sorry the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) did not hear the statement I made a moment ago. I said that tenders having been called for by the late Government, Mr. Beaulieu tendered at a ridiculously low price, and could not carry out his contract. It was decided by the late Government to do the work by day's labour, and I have simply carried out the course decided upon by my predecessor.

Mr. CLARKE. I understood the hon. Minister to say that this was cribwork, and different from that ordered by the late Government. Is this work being done by contract after public calls for tender?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We did not ask for tenders.

Mr. CLARKE. Is it contended that this work can be done as cheaply and as well by day's labour as by contract?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My experience is that when we can find a good clerk of works, the work can be done by day's labour much cheaper and better than by tender.

Mr. BERGERON. Who is the clerk of works at that place?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Mr. Bernard. The work has been carried out under the direction of Mr. Lafontaine.

Mr. MARCOTTE. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I wish to direct the attention of the hon. Minister of Public Works to the fact that he had promised the hon. member for Berthier (Mr. Beausoleil), the hon. member for Nicolet (Mr. LeDuc), and myself, last session, that he would send out an engineer to make a survey, in order to find out the best means to prevent the ice damming up in the River St. Lawrence, and the flooding of the lands on the banks of the river in the counties of Berthier, Nicolet and Champlain, and the considerable damages resulting from it. I see nothing in the Estimates so far, in this connection. I have already communicated with the hon. gentleman on the subject, and I was informed that some body was surveying the St. Lawrence; but in my opinion, it would require a special survey to be made by a technical man, if we are to prevent the damming up of the ice which causes, every spring, such damages. I hope the hon. Minister will look into the matter, and should he decline to do anything for the county of Champlain, let him do at least something for the counties of Berthier and Nicolet.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. (Translation.) I may remind the hon. gentleman (Mr. Marcotte) that last year I obtained from the House an appropriation of $25,000, to provide for surveys which will bring about the solution of the problem he has just mentioned. This year, those works are carried out under the supervision of Mr. Lafleur, the head architect, acting for the department.

Lower St. Lawrence—Removal of rocks.. $3,000

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The Government has a wharf at Port Daniel, in the county of Bonaventure, which requires some repairs.

St. Irénee—Repairs to and extension of wharf to shore..... $3,000

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is to carry on a work which was begun years ago, and is intended to carry the wharf to the shore. Previously, there was a pier which did not reach the shore. I may say that this work is carried out by day's labour at a cheaper cost than any other work. It is being done by Mr. Girard, a very able carpenter and practical man.

St. Anicet—Wharf-wing or return at outer end, and repairs..... $1,500

Mr. BERGERON. What does the hon. gentleman intend to do there?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Last year Parliament gave a vote of $3,000. We bought materials for $1,500, and with the remaining $1,500 we intend to construct the works.

Mr. BERGERON. Who asked for that wharf?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. All the citizens of that locality.

Mr. BERGERON. Does the Minister take it upon himself to say, that this wharf was asked for by the citizens of St. Anicet?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Was there any petition to that effect?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I remember that the member for Huntington (Mr. Scriver) called upon me himself, and urged upon me the importance of this work. I may add that this work was begun under the late Administration.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken. This extension of the wharf was not at all asked for by the citizens of St. Anicet. If the hon. gentleman will visit that place he will find that every one, except those who are working on the wharf and making money out of it, are opposed to it, and look upon it as money spent for nothing at all. I will not say that the hon. member for Huntington has not asked for the wharf, but I would be glad to hear him say so himself. The person who has asked for it is Mr. Dupuis, a lawyer from Montreal. But the clerk of works there who has been appointed and paid so much a day, is his brother, the postmaster of St. Cunégonde. The Minister says that some materials have been bought. From whom were they bought, and what kind of materials were bought?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have bought timber and other materials. I cannot say where.

Mr. BERGERON. Were they bought by tender?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, they cannot be bought by tender, small things like that. Farmers bring their logs and timber, and the clerk of works buys the material at the best price he can. The hon. gentleman says Mr. Dupuis is postmaster at St. Henri, and that he is conducting the works at the same time. Well, I must say that Mr. Dupuis has been appointed postmaster only lately, because to my knowledge he was conductor of the works before being postmaster.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not want the hon. gentleman to think that I am contradicting him, I see he is not well posted. The man who is conductor of the works there, or at least, who is timekeeper or clerk, is the postmaster at St. Cunégonde; but the man who was appointed by the department is his brother, and bears another name. But it is the postmaster of Ste. Cunégonde who does the work and receives the money.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I was sure that I never appointed a man who does not live there.

Mr. BERGERON. I call the attention of the Minister now to the fact that the man who is clerk of works there is the postmaster of St. Cunégonde; and his brother, Mr. Dupuis, the lawyer, is the man who has asked for this work, and nobody else. Now, I would like to ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries if he has had a report from the man who keeps that wharf, and who is another Dupuis, of how much dues have been collected last year on that wharf, and how much has come into the public chest.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend is mistaken when he says that it is Mr. Dupuis himself who has asked for that work. I state here that it is the hon. member for Huntington (Mr. Scriver) himself who has urged upon me the importance of going on with the work. He called at the department several times, and he also wrote to me about it.

Mr. BERGERON. I know how anxious the hon. gentleman is that the public money should not be spent uselessly, but I can tell him that the people of that parish are entirely opposed to it, and look upon this expenditure as money wasted.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I promised to bring down a return in answer to the hon. gentleman, and I have this statement:

With reference to Mr. Bergeron's inquiry in regard to the wharf dues collected at St. Anicet, a letter has been received from the wharfinger, in which he states that during the past season he collected $41.50. It appears that under a misapprehension of his duties, he expended the greater part of this amount in purchasing lumber and repairing the wharf, and he states that he has only $7 left to deposit. Instructions have been given him that he is not to use any portion of the collections in future, but to forward all to the department. This man was only appointed in September, 1896, and is consequently not familiar with the duties of the office.

Mr. BERGERON. I am very much obliged to the hon. gentleman for the explanation. What pay does he receive?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Twenty-five per cent of the amount he collects.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is according to the law.

Mr. BERGERON. Of course, I am obliged to accept the report made by the Minister. My information is that he received $200; also that he expended $37.50 for material, in spite of the vote of $3,000. I desire to call the attention of the Government to this matter, as it is a public scandal that the postmaster of Ste. Cunégonde acts as clerk of the works at St. Anicet, and that the whole expenditure of the money is in the hands of the Dupuis family now.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No. I appointed a man there who is a brother of the postmaster of Ste. Cunégonde.

Mr. BERGERON. Then the clerk is not the postmaster, but his brother; at the same time, it is the postmaster of Ste. Cunégonde who is doing the work.

St. Roch des Aulnaies—Wharf..... $1,000

Mr. MARCOTTE. (Translation.) Where is St. Roch des Aulnaies?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. (Translation.) It is in the county of L'Islet. St. Roch des Aulnaies is a thriving parish in the lower region of the St. Lawrence. This is to provide for the building of a wharf.

Anse à Beaufile—Improvements of entrance to harbour $1,000

Mr. BERGERON. Where is this work?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. On the coast of Gaspé. It is a re-vote.

Mr. BERGERON. Has nothing been spent ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. $600, and I am going to spend $1,000 more.

St. Jean des Chaillons—Improvement of harbour $5,000

Mr. BERGERON. For what is this expenditure intended ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is to continue the work that was begun last year. St. Jean des Chaillons has a large brick industry, millions of bricks being manufactured there every year. As the water was shallow, the hon. member for Lotbinière urged on me the importance of improving the harbour, and $5,000 is asked. The work will take one year more.

Mr. BERGERON. Will the amount be $10,000 ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It will require $15,000 to complete the work.

Mr. BERGERON. How is it being done ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. By dredging. We are renting a dredge from Mr. Cameron on the same conditions as previously.

Mr. BERGERON. Is the dredge leased by the year ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We rent the dredge and put a crew on it.

Point Claire—Wharf..... $4,000

Mr. MONK. I am glad to see this work once more in the Estimates. When does the Minister intend to carry out the work, of which there is much need.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We intend to carry it out immediately. We have entered into an agreement with the Grand Trunk Railway Company; it is not yet signed, but we have exchanged letters. We are going to obtain the use of the Grand Trunk wharf at an annual rental, which will be less expensive than building a new wharf. With the amount of this vote we will be able to repair it and put it in first-class shape.

Mr. MONK. Will it be done this year ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. During the next fiscal year.

Mr. BERGERON. Who owns the wharf ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The Grand Trunk Railway Company. It is an old wharf, and the engineers of the department consider it the best that can be obtained. I applied to the company and they agreed to the terms offered.

Isle Perrault—Addition to wharf, north side $2,500

Mr. BERGERON. Some work there is very much needed. I have myself asked in years past that certain stones, which lie at the north corner of the wharf should be removed, as they are very dangerous to navigation. Is this amount for the purpose of removing them ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is an old wharf that belonged to Leduc. We bought it for $500, and are going to repair it. This wharf is in the north channel opposite Ste. Anne.

Mr. BERGERON. Isle Perrault wharf proper is on the lake. I have called the attention of the Minister in the past to stones lying at the corner of the wharf, which are very dangerous. I think these boulders could be removed at comparatively little cost, and if the Minister is able to do so, he will render great service.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am told by the chief engineer that it would require two or three thousand dollars to do the work my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) is speaking of. I have instructed my officer to take note of the hon. gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. BERGERON. I would be very glad if the Minister would do so, because I have been told by navigators that $300 or $400 would put it in perfect order.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We never know where we are when we begin dredging.

Rivière la Pipe—Wharf on Lake St. John, near mouth of river..... $2,000

Mr. BERGERON. Where is that ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is a flourishing little parish in the Lake St. John district. Things are booming in the Lake St. John district now, and I am glad indeed to be able to give some encouragement to the brave settlers who are, so to speak, building up a nation there.

Ste. Anne de Sorel—Ice piers..... $3,600

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I would move for leave to strike out the words "St. Anne" in that vote. As hon. gentlemen from Quebec know Ste. Anne and Sorel are adjoining each other, and I do not know where I will locate the piers yet.

Resolutions to be reported.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES moved the adjournment of the House.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. What business will be taken up to-morrow ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We hope to be able to take the Franchise Bill, and possibly some other Bills, and then go on with the Estimates.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 12.10 a.m. (Tuesday.)

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

PRAYERS.

INDIAN ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 144) further to amend the Indian Act. He said: The first section of the Bill amends section 33 of the present Act so as to provide that Indians not engaged in the pursuit of agriculture may be liable to statute labour. The second section amends section 38 of the present Act so as to give the Governor in Council power to dispose of dead and fallen timber without a surrender having been obtained from the Indians. The third section provides that a surrender may be attested before a justice of the peace as well as other functionaries specified in the law as it stands. The fourth section provides that the holder of a license to cut timber on an Indian reserve shall not have exclusive possession as at present. The object is to enable the department when a person has a license to cut one kind of timber to give to another person a license to cut another kind of timber. The law at the present time gives the first holder exclusive possession and thus prevents the Government giving another person permission to cut another kind of timber. The fifth section amends the procedure in cases of seizures of timber for violations of the law when cut on an Indian reserve. The present law is embodied in the following section:—

All trees, logs, timber or other product thereof seized under this Act, shall be deemed to be condemned, unless the person from whom the same are seized, or the owner thereof, within one month from the day of the seizure, gives notice to the seizing officer or nearest officer or agent of the Superintendent General, that he claims or intends to claim the same, and in default of such notice, the officer or agent seizing shall report the circumstances to the Superintendent General, who may order the sale of the same by the said officer or agent.

If notice is given, the Superintendent General has no power to order the sale. Of course that is not a proper method of proceeding in the case, because in addition to giving the notice the claimant should go on and prove title to the timber. The amendment is proposed so that the parties shall go on and in addition to giving notice shall proceed with the proof. The sixth section provides that Indian funds may be used, in addition to the other purposes for which the Indian fund may now be used, for the purpose of making surveys on reserves where deemed necessary, and making compensation to Indians for any interest they may have in lands taken from them. The eighth section gives the Superintendent General power to stop payment of annuity to any Indian parent of an illegitimate child and apply the same to such child. The ninth section gives power to the Superintendent General to deprive any Indian woman who deserts her husband and family and lives immorally with any other person of the annuity of such woman and devote the annuity to the support of the family. The tenth section contains a provision for reducing the number of chiefs and headmen from the proportion of one to thirty to two for each two hundred.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 145) further to amend the Railway Act. He said: This Bill is for the purpose of meeting what seems to be a defect in the existing Railway Act. It is not sufficiently clear and explicit that power is conferred on the Railway Committee of the Privy Council to prevent discrimination between a railway and steamship company as against a steamship company alone. That is all the Bill provides for.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

NORTH-WEST IRRIGATION ACT AMENDMENT.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 146) to amend and consolidate the North-west Irrigation Act of 1894 and 1895. He said: The Bill is one to consolidate, as the title indicates, the present laws on this subject. There are some changes of an unimportant character relating to procedure, but the principal changes are, first, to give those persons who have constructed irrigation works without authority until July next to obtain licenses, and second, to centralize the administration of the work under the Act at Regina under the authority of the Commissioner of Public Works of the North-west Government, and to provide for the filing of documents in his office, instead of with the agent of Dominion Lands where the works are situated. It also provides for the publication of notice in a newspaper published in the neighbourhood of the works, instead of in such a newspaper, as the "Canada Gazette," as at present, and to empower the Minister to deal with irrigation applications without going to Council in certain cases. There are also a number of minor amendments with regard to procedure which can be explained when the Bill is in committee.

Mr. DAVIN. Did I understand the Minister that a clause in this Bill relates to an officer resident in Regina ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The provision in the Bill to which I refer is a provision that the original applications and proceedings which are taken for the purpose of obtaining the right to divert water and make use of it, shall be taken through the office of the Commissioner of Public Works at Regina. The same control of the department will be retained over them, but the preliminary proceedings will be taken by the local authority.

Mr. DAVIN. That is Mr. Dennis.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes : He is the deputy.

Mr. DAVIN. Is Mr. Dennis partly a Dominion officer and partly a local officer ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. He will be. Under this scheme he will be paid a small additional amount by the Department of the Interior for doing this work.

Motion agreed to; and Bill read the first time.

MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY— SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message, as follows :—

ABERDEEN.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons, Supplementary Estimates of sums required for the service of the Dominion for the year ended 30th June, 1898, and in accordance with the provisions of "The British North America Act, 1867," the Governor General recommends these Estimates to the House of Commons Government House, Ottawa, 17th May, 1898.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved that His Excellency's Message, together with the Estimates, be referred to the Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to.

CHIGNECTO SHIP RAILWAY.

Mr. LISTER. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to call the attention of the Government to an article which appears in to-day's Montreal "Gazette," and which is as follows :—

It is reported from London that the Laurier Government has promised to revive the subsidy for the Chignecto Marine Railway. The news, if confirmed, will cause some surprise. The Government party, when in Opposition, not only denounced the scheme, but denounced it with reason. There is no reason to believe that the railway in question will be of any public value, and as the contractors failed to fulfil their obligations, there is no ground in law or justice, for giving them money they did not earn by executing the works in the time specified.

I would ask the Government : Is there any truth in the statements contained in this article ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, the information conveyed to the Montreal "Gazette" which has just been read by my hon. friend (Mr. Lister) is altogether inaccurate. I have reason to believe that the information as published in London is quite the reverse of what is conveyed to the Montreal "Gazette." The fact is that the Government have had for some time before them an application by the bondholders and other parties connected with the Chignecto Railway to have the bonus which was given at one time, revived. The Government after giving careful consideration to the application has come to the conclusion that the public interest demanded that this bonus should not be revived.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would like to ask my right hon. friend who is leading the House, whether at this moment he is not under an engagement to the bondholders and parties interested in that work, that the Government will reconsider their decision in regard to furnishing some compensation to the company.

The PRIME MINISTER. I may say to my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) that the Government has been approached by the bondholders to consider the propriety of giving them some compensation in the event of the Government coming to the conclusion that the bonus cannot be revived. I told the bondholders at the time the application was made, that we would give that question our best consideration. I may say, confidentially, though, that we have intimated some views in that respect to the bondholders. We have been asked to reconsider the matter and the matter is still under consideration.

Mr. OSLER. I am very glad indeed to hear the Prime Minister suggest that the Government may take into consideration the claim of the bondholders in connection with that road. I think it is due to the honour of Canada that something should be done for the bondholders.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman cannot make a speech at this stage ; he can only ask a question.

ELECTORAL FRANCHISE ACT.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick) moved third reading of Bill (No. 16) to repeal the Electoral Franchise Act and to further amend the Dominion Elections Act.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Before the motion is put, Mr. Speaker, I shall move to recommit the Bill to Committee of the Whole for the purpose of adding an amendment. After the prolonged discussion that has taken place in reference to this measure, it is not my intention to detain the House at any great length, but all parties will frankly admit the immense importance of the legislation that is now under the consideration of the House. I am very glad to recognize that the hon. the Solicitor General who is in charge of this Bill has shown so much readiness to give fair consideration to a number of important amendments that have been submitted for the consideration of the committee. Not only with the alterations that have been made at the suggestion of hon. members on both sides of the House and which have been accepted by the hon. Solicitor General, but with the amendments which have been made to the Bill as first introduced on the motion of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fitzpatrick) himself, the House will agree with me that the character of the measure has been changed in a very material respect. The main and fundamental principle of the Bill, as I understand it, is the adoption by this House of the franchises, whatever they might be, at the time of a general election, or of any election for this House, of the various provinces. In whatever province an election for this House takes place, whether in the case of a general election or a by-election, the candidates will be elected upon the franchise then existing for the election of members to the local legislature. I do not intend at this stage to go into a reconsideration of the grave objections that were made on this side of the House to the adoption of this principle. I may draw the attention of the House, however, to the very important fact that the modifications proposed by the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick) himself very materially changed the Bill and the objections to it. He has, by one amendment, provided for the placing on the lists the names of electors who were not included in the lists for the local elections. This, the House will at once see, is a very substantial and important modification, and one in which hon. members on both sides were agreed in adopting. He also made another change, and a very important one, and that was the introduction of an amendment to meet the possibility of a local legislature, after the local elections had taken place, materially changing the franchise, so that the change would operate in the election of members to this House. I quite agree with the hon. Solicitor General in the opinion that there was good ground for the adoption of so important a change, and thus providing against such a contingency as far as possible. I trust that the same spirit in which the hon. gentleman has accepted suggestions from this side will actuate him with regard to the amendment I propose to submit, and that the Government will sustain him in adopting it, because I believe it is one which will commend itself to the sense of fairness and justice which should certainly characterize a measure of this kind, that has to apply to all parties and all sections of the country and to members of this House, upon whatever side they may sit. The amendment I propose is for the purpose of giving in the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Manitoba the same protection that the electors in the province of Ontario and Quebec will enjoy under this Bill, namely, the right to appeal to a judge when the franchise is taken away from any person who is entitled to enjoy it or be given to any person who is not entitled to enjoy it, upon the mere ipse dixit of any party who holds his office at the pleasure of the Crown and is therefore the nominee of the Government of the day. In the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, as the House is well aware, those entitled to enjoy the franchise have the right to appeal to a judge, should their names be wrongfully left off the list. Each elector, who believes that his name has been improperly left off the list, can appeal to a judge, who holds his office independent of the Government of the day, and is thus protected, in the best manner, against being improperly deprived of his franchise. I believe, therefore, it will commend itself to the approval of hon. gentlemen on both sides and of the Solicitor General and the Government, that the people in the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Manitoba should have the same security for the proper exercise of the franchise as under this Bill will be enjoyed in the larger provinces of Ontario and Quebec, but not in the smaller ones I have mentioned.

I do not intend to detain the House at any great length upon this matter, but I shall give, as briefly as possible, two evidences of so strong a character as to leave no doubt in the mind of any hon. gentleman who will approach the subject in an impartial spirit, that the electors in these smaller provinces should have the same security in the enjoyment of the franchise as is possessed by the electors of Ontario and Quebec. I take, first, the province of Manitoba, and shall read to the House the affidavit of a gentleman, who was at one time a member of the Manitoba legislature, and an affidavit which, I think, only requires to be read, and will not require a word of comment to be added to it, to show that such a protection as I am now seeking for the electorate in Manitoba will not be obtained under this Bill, and we will not be in a position to obtain at an election in the province the candid expression of opinion of those entitled to cast their vote:—

Dominion of Canada.

Province of Manitoba.

In the matter of Emerson Voters' List.

I, David Henry McFadden, of the town of Emerson, in the province of Manitoba, veterinary surgeon, do solemnly declare that:

1. I was first elected to the provincial legislature of Manitoba in the year 1892, by a majority of fourteen votes, as representative for the electoral division of Emerson.

2. The aforesaid constituency of Emerson was represented by one James Thompson from 1888 to 1892, and who, in 1888, was elected by a majority of fourteen.

3. The aforesaid Thompson was my opponent in 1892.

4. Donald Forrester, barrister, of Winnipeg, was appointed registration clerk and W. E. Perdue, barrister, Winnipeg, revising barrister for the Emerson division, to revise the voters' list previous to the last provincial election.

5. The said registration clerk opened an office at Emerson according to the terms of the Election Act of this province. Every night I had a clerk go to this office and make an exact copy of the list as it was from day to day altered or added to, and continued this rule up to the last day for receiving applications to be put on the list. Late in the evening of that day I had the said list completed as it was made out by the registration clerk.

6. When the list was printed and distributed, according to the provisions of said Act, I found thirteen names on the printed list which were not on my copy of the list, the names being as follows:—

Poll No 10.

No on List.

- 13. Campbell, Arch.
- 48. Leith, Alex.
- May, Chas.
- 62. McEwan, M. W.
- White, Wm.

Poll No. 11.

- 14. Hargrave, P.
- 22. Munro, Alex.
- 34. Pullar, James.
- 47. Singer, Joseph.

Poll No. 12.

- 42. Lister, Fredk. R.
- 46. McDonald, J. C.
- 47. McKievor, D. W.
- 57. Turner, Joseph.

as appears by the revised list of electors of said electoral division of Emerson now produced and shown to me and marked as exhibit "A."

I at once made diligent inquiries as to these particular voters and as to their right to be placed upon the said electoral list, but could find no evidence that the said voters or any of them ever resided within the electoral division of Emerson. I then made application to the registration clerk to have these names struck off the said list of voters.

As to the description of residence of these individual voters, it was limited to townships, no section or other particulars being given in the list as to where these parties or any of them resided. I had summonses issued by the revising officer and placed them in the hands of responsible parties, actual residents and familiar with all other actual residents in the several townships quoted in the lists, with instructions to make every endeavour to serve these individual voters.

At the court of revision the parties whom I had so instructed to serve said summonses appeared, and stated that they could not find any of the said voters to effect service of said orders; and further stated that they could get no information that the said parties, or any of them, resided in the townships set opposite their respective names in the said list of voters. None of the parties sought for attended the court of revision, and when application was made to strike their names off the said list, the said revising barrister, the said W. E. Perdue, ruled that he would not strike them off the list until it was shown that they had been individually served with a summons to attend the said court, and he allowed all the said names to remain on the list as finally revised and the said names still remain on the list as bona electors of said division, although they are not now and never have resided in said electoral division.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Amongst the names struck off the said list of electors was the name of Donald Forrester, the registration clerk. As he resided and practiced his profession of barrister in the city of Winnipeg, application was made to strike him off. When challenged, he admitted his ineligibility, and the revising barrister had, therefore, no alternative but to strike his name off, which was done.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing it to be true and knowing it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath, and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act, 1893.

(Sgd.) H. H. McFADDEN.

Declared before me at township of Emerson, in the province of Manitoba, this 1st day of April, A.D. 1897.

(Sgd.) W. W. UNSWORTH,

A Notary Public,

in and for the province of Manitoba.

Sir, that statement requires no comment from me. There is the oath of a gentleman who was formerly a member of the legislature of Manitoba, showing that—

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Mr. McFadden is still a member of the legislature.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am very much obliged to my hon. friend (Mr. LaRiviere). This gentleman is still a member of the legislature, which shows his responsible character. You have here the proof that the law is such as to allow the most monstrous fraud that it is possible to imagine in regard to elections, a case that would be utterly impossible if an appeal were allowed to a judge, for no person holding the responsible position of a judge, when it was proved to him that this was a bogus list, that no such persons existed, would leave the names on the list to have these imaginary people personated by any one who chose to do so on the day of the election. No language that I can use would add the slightest force to the arguments as to the right, the unquestionable right, of the voters of Manitoba, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick to have that same protection in regard to the franchise that will be enjoyed under this law by the people of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

Now, Sir, I will read a letter received from a gentleman in Nova Scotia bearing upon this point. It speaks volumes, and requires no word of mine to add to its weight or authority. This is an extract from a letter written to me by Mr. J. G.

Dunlop, who was formerly sheriff of the county of Victoria, N.S. It is as follows:—

Dear Sir,—The lists of this county were cooked so that between 350 and 400 Conservatives were left off the list, as no one expected an election. Then they sprang the election. I am credibly informed it was the case in all the other counties. I was sheriff of this county for ten years, and because I did fair and would not do crooked work for the Liberals, I was dismissed, and a man put in who has now to answer to a court of law for his crooked work.

He did away with the revisers' lists in two districts and made two new lists after cutting some 70 Conservatives off, and it is into the hands of a man like this that the pure Liberals want to put our lists.

Would any hon. gentleman in this House say that we in Nova Scotia do not require protection, the same protection that will be enjoyed under this law in Quebec and Ontario, when you have the evidence of a gentleman who held the position of sheriff, a position which is in the gift of the local government from year to year, and who states that he was dismissed after ten years' service because he would not cook the election lists to suit his masters, and that the present sheriff is now arraigned before the courts of his country for his disgraceful tampering with the lists and his violation of every principle of justice in the election that recently took place in that province.

It is not necessary that I should detain the committee, as this subject has been so fully and amply discussed, and as we are now at a late period of the session and are anxious to get on as rapidly as possible with the business before us. I merely lay the facts succinctly before the House to show the justice of the appeal I now make to hon. gentlemen opposite. And I say frankly that I do not expect that this appeal will be in vain. I believe the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) who leads the House and his friends and colleagues in the Government and the Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick), who has charge of this measure, will admit that it is a fair and reasonable proposition and one which we may confidently hope will be accepted by the House.

Before I sit down I wish to say to my hon. friend the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt), who quoted in support of the Government and in favour of the adoption of the local franchises the precedent of the convention to prepare a constitution for the Australian provinces, that I hold in my hand the Bill which has been agreed upon, and I find that that Bill has the same provisions as the British North America Act. The section of the Australian Bill is as follows:—

Until the Parliament otherwise provides, the qualification of an elector for member of the house of representatives shall be in each state that which is prescribed in the law of the state as the qualification of the electors of the most numerous house of parliament of the state; but in the choosing of members each elector shall vote only once.

So that precisely the same protection that the Confederation Act provided for the adoption of such a Franchise Bill as would be approved by the Parliament of Canada, is provided in the scheme of confederation which has now been agreed upon, and is being submitted to the people of Australia. Mr. Speaker, I beg to move the following amendment:—

Notwithstanding anything in this Act, or in any Act heretofore enacted, or hereafter to be enacted by the legislature of any province, there shall be in the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Manitoba, for the purposes of revising and amending the voters' list to be used in the election of members for the House of Commons an appeal from said lists as prepared by the registration clerks and revisers to the respective judges of the county courts in each of the said provinces for the different counties in which the polling divisions for which such voters' lists have been prepared are respectively situate.

Such appeal may be, at the instance of any voter or person entitled to be a voter in the polling division, the voters' list for which is appealed from on all or any of the following grounds, viz.: that the names of voters are through inadvertence or otherwise omitted from voters' lists or wrongly stated therein, or that the names of persons are through inadvertence or otherwise inserted in the voters' list who are not entitled to be voters, and shall be made to the judge of the county court at any time within twenty days after the voters' list as first made up shall be filed with the officer who, under the law of the province, has the custody of the same, and notice of such appeal shall be given in form "C" in the schedule hereto annexed, by posting the same up in at least three public places within the polling division, and by publishing the same for at least ten days previously to such appeal in some newspaper published in the county and circulating in the said polling division; and if no newspaper is published in the county, then in a newspaper published in the nearest county having a newspaper published therein, provided that in the case of an application to strike off names from the voters' list, such notice shall be mailed, duly registered, with postage prepaid, at least one week previous to such appeal, to the address of such person or persons, if known to the appellant. The judge shall hear the appeals on affidavits, or if requested by the appellant or by the person opposing the appeal on evidence viva voce under oath, and may make an order in writing directing that the name of such person as voter shall be struck from or added to said list, and in case of more than one appeal from the same voters' list, the judge shall embody in the order the results of his adjudications in respect to all such appeals, and such order shall be filed with the officer who has the custody of the said voters' list, who shall, in pursuance of said order, strike off from or enter upon said list the names of persons as voters, and such voters' list, so amended, shall be the voters' list for the polling division.

Subsection "c" of section 5.

The voters' list shall, except in the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Manitoba, be those prepared by the several polling divisions so established and which on the sixtieth day next preceding the day fixed for the nomination of candidates for such Dominion election were in force or were last in force under the laws of that province for the purpose of provincial elections, and in the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Manitoba shall be the voters' list as amended under the provisions of section of this Act, which were prepared by the registration clerks or revisers for the several polling divisions so established for the purposes of provincial elections and were filed at least sixty days previous to the day fixed for the nomination of candidates for such Dominion election with the officer having by law the custody of the same.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Although I do not share all the views which have been expressed by my hon. friend, I have no fault to find with the manner in which he has presented his case, nor with the motives which have inspired the amendment which he has placed in your hands. I may tell him at once that it is in no captious spirit, but for very good and substantial reasons, that the Government cannot accept the amendment, because the acceptance of this amendment would simply do away with the whole principle of the Bill which we have adopted so far. My hon. friend has acknowledged the great ability and the perfect courtesy with which my hon. friend the Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick) has conducted this measure up to the present time. My hon. friend the Solicitor General has been most anxious to meet all the suggestions that have been offered from the other side. Let me say at once that many of the suggestions which have been made were valuable, and those that we have adopted have made the Bill more acceptable than it was at first. The question of the franchise under which the members of this House are to be elected, is one of very great difficulty, as we all know. It is no use to recriminate at this moment, but we are all agreed that the old franchise that this law is to replace, was not satisfactory and had been found unworkable. The new law we hope will be more workable and more acceptable, but still it has to be put to the test, and though we have great expectations from it, I am far from pretending that it will give full and absolute satisfaction. But time alone will test its usefulness, and it was in this view that we accepted many of the amendments which were offered on the other side. There would be the same disposition to accept this amendment as was manifested on previous occasions where amendments were offered which we thought were real improvements of the Bill. But I beg to suggest to my hon. friend, and to those hon. gentlemen who sit opposite, that in my judgment, at all events, it is very questionable whether we have power to introduce such an amendment into the Act. We have certainly power to take the provincial lists as they are made, and to adopt them as our own; but I question very much whether we have power to interfere in the preparation of the local lists and to impose conditions which are not imposed by local legislation as to the manner in which they are to be made. This is a question which, in my judgment, is one of great moment and of some difficulty. I do not press it strongly, however, because I apprehend that there may, perhaps, be a difference of opinion in this regard. But there can be no difference of opinion, at all events, upon this point, that even if we had power to pass such an amendment, its adoption would create great confusion. You would have a set of lists prepared for local elections, and by this amendment you would introduce federal legislation to take effect at a certain time, which would take away the lists from the local jurisdiction and bring them under federal jurisdiction as to the method of their preparation. I submit to my hon. friend that this consideration alone shows that the amendment would undoubtedly and inevitably lead to very great confusion. Now, I am free to admit that the system which prevails in Nova Scotia, in New Brunswick, and in Manitoba for the matter of that, is not as complete as I would like to see it. In the province of Quebec I have lived under a system which has prevailed for many years, and which has given the right of appeal to the judicial authorities in respect of the preparation of the lists; and I must say that so far as my experience goes, it has worked well and satisfactorily. I believe the same system has prevailed in the province of Ontario, and it has also worked well and satisfactory. But I have yet to learn that the system existing in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, which has prevailed for the last forty years, and has received judicial sanction and authority, has not given satisfaction to the people of those provinces. There is this consideration, however, that I would like to offer to my hon. friend who has moved this amendment. The people of the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick have had the same system of preparing their lists for something over forty years, and if I am correctly informed, during those forty years there have been no substantial changes, at all events there has been no change whatever calculated to improve the preparation of the lists in the manner which he has now suggested. The local lists are prepared by the sheriffs appointed as judicial officers.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Would my hon. friend allow me to say one word? It is only comparatively recently that the sheriffs have been appointed by the Government of the day. The sheriffs were formerly appointed by the judges, and, therefore, the law that has existed down to a recent period, was quite different from the present law.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not question the hon. gentleman's argument, it may be that the appointment of the sheriffs by the local government does not afford the same security to all classes that was afforded previously. I have no argument to offer upon this point; but, at all events, I have this to say to my hon. friend, that no attempt has been made to introduce into the preparation of the local lists the change which it is now sought to introduce here. The people of Nova Scotia, and of New Brunswick also, have their local judge, which is the ultimate court of appeal in each of these provinces, where they may take their grievances to be remedied. And I have no doubt that if the people of Nova Scotia find the present system not satisfactory—the system which has given satisfaction hitherto—if they thought that the sheriff being appointed by the executive authority did not give them the same security as in former times, when the sheriffs were appointed by the judicial authority, they will undoubtedly, in the exercise of their rights as citizens of a free province, introduce legislation in amendment to that legislation. But it may be said that their efforts would be unavailing, because the party suffering would not control the legislature. That may be so at the present time. But when any grievance exists in any legislature, governed under British institutions, the minority is never slow to avail itself of any opportunity to offer amendments to remove it, although the minority may be sure that its efforts will not succeed, but be rejected; a minority will never fail to bring grievances to the attention of a legislature, though they are satisfied their efforts will be prostrated, because the minority will do so simply for the purpose of affecting public opinion and affecting it in its own direction. I am therefore forced to the conclusion that as no efforts have been made either in the legislatures of Nova Scotia or New Brunswick in the direction indicated by my hon. friend, the law has been found satisfactory to the people of those provinces. If any difference now prevails, if it turns out that grievances exist now which did not exist then, the remedy will be in the hands of the local legislature. So much for New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. The hon. gentleman stated a few moments ago a case of abuse in Nova Scotia. I might say to the hon. gentleman that it is impossible to devise a law which will not be abused in some way or other and there will be infractions of it, there will be parties trying to perpetrate frauds under the law; and a case of that kind will not force the conclusion that the law was necessarily bad and unsatisfactory. If there were a series of abuses such as would influence the public mind, popular opinion would remedy it, because the means are at hand; but if you adduce one case or another case, I say you cannot form a judgment thereon. Moreover, I have reason to suppose from information given to me, that there is another side to this story in the case of Manitoba and also as regards Nova Scotia, that there is another version of the facts. Be that as it may, we have come to the conclusion that the best method we can adopt as regards the preparation of voters' lists for the elections for this House is the adoption of the local lists. We stand by that principle, and before we depart from it, we must give it a fair trial. I only ask hon. gentlemen opposite to give this law a fair trial. It may be that it will not answer the purpose; it may be that we shall be the first to be deceived as regards its operations. If we are so deceived, then it will be open to hon. gentlemen opposite to attack the Act and present something which should not be the law existing before, nor the law as it will exist henceforward. For my part, I say this, and repeat it, that though I have very great confidence that this new law in the future will give satisfaction, I can only express a hope and not a certainty. Time alone, experience alone, will prove whether it is wise or unwise. My belief is that it is wise, and we should give it a fair trial; and for that reason I am sorry to come to the conclusion that I strongly entertain the hope that this amendment will not be adopted.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). I desire to say a few words in reply to the leader of the Opposition, who has stated some occurrences alleged to have taken place under the Manitoba Election Act as an argument in favour of the proposition to give an appeal to the judiciary under the present Bill. For myself, were it not for the technical difficulty of making such a provision in connection with our statutes, I would not see any objection to permitting such an appeal. The objection referred to by the leader of the Opposition is an objection, not due to a desire on the part of the Government that there should not be the same right accorded to Manitoba, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick as is given to the other provinces. So far as Manitoba is concerned, I have lately been informed, I do not speak with any degree of positiveness, but I believe it to be a fact, that the government there, at the request of the leader of the Opposition, have agreed to amend the Election Act so that an appeal to the judiciary should be given under their Act. The probability is that such an amendment will be made. But apart from that, I desire to advert to the substance of the declaration the leader of the Opposition has read in order to show how false is the appearance of truth which that declaration presents to the House. If the House will for one moment consider the facts, this will be obvious, and the facts will appear to be as follows: W. E. Perdue, a member of the Manitoba bar, was appointed by the Government of Manitoba as revising officer. He went and held a court of revision. He was an officer of the Government and legislature of Manitoba. The list was revised, and an election was held on that revised list. The gentleman who made the declaration was elected and became a member of the legislature of Manitoba. The legislature has held several sessions since that time. If this Dr. McFadden had any grievance against the returning officer who revised the lists on which he was elected, this revising officer being an officer of the legislature of Manitoba, where was the proper place for that gentleman to bring his complaint? Was it not in the legislative assembly of Manitoba, of which he was a member, and of which the revising barrister was an officer? I hesitate not to say that if this gentleman had brought before the legislature a proper statement, such as the leader of the Opposition has submitted here, if at the first session of the legislature after his election had taken place, he had presented such a statement and demanded an investigation, that investigation would have been given. I was a member of the legislature myself at that time, and I say that at the session of the legislature which followed the election no such demand for an inquiry was made.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Do I understand the hon. Minister to say that Mr. McFadden has never brought this matter up in the legislature of Manitoba?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman is trying to put something into my mouth which I did not say at all.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes. I think I can make myself perfectly clear in English, and what I said was that if this gentleman had brought before the legislature of Manitoba a statement of facts such as the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) has brought before this House, and had supplemented that by a demand for an investigation, he would have been given the opportunity of investigating these facts before a committee of the legislature. What I say is, that he did not demand any investigation. Let me point out that Mr. Perdue, the revising officer, was a resident of the city of Winnipeg; the legislature was sitting in the city of Winnipeg; the town of Emerson, where this nefarious occurrence is said to have taken place, is only 60 miles from Winnipeg; the matter could have been brought before the legislature; a committee could have been appointed, Mr. Perdue could have come there with the records of his court of revision in his hands; the witnesses could have been brought and the facts could have been found beyond the possibility of a doubt. That was the proper place for this complaint to have been made, and that is the proper forum in which the investigation should have taken place. What do we find? We find that this gentleman asked for no investigation. He apparently is not sure enough of his case to submit it to an investigation, but we find that he sends down an ex parte declaration, a thousand miles or two thousand miles away, to be read in the absence of Mr. Perdue, the revising officer who is attacked in this declaration. I have only to submit that to the sense of fairness of hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House in order to show that it is an entirely unfair attack made on Mr. Perdue, and an attack made under such circumstances as to lead us to place no confidence whatever in the statements made.

I have this to say so far as Mr. Perdue is concerned. I do not remember having ever heard of this charge until this declaration was read in this House, but I have to say that Mr. Perdue is a gentleman who stands in the front rank of the Bar of Manitoba. He is a man of the most absolutely unblemished name, and there is not an hon. gentleman in this House who can claim to be the superior of Mr. Perdue in propriety and rectitude of character. I have never heard any person on either side of politics say anything else about Mr. Perdue, and I have no hesitation in saying from my knowledge of that gentleman, simply from my knowledge of his personal and professional character, that there can be no possible foundation for the statement, that in the discharge of any such duty as was imposed upon him by the Government of Manitoba, he had acted otherwise than as a responsible officer ought, and with complete impartiality and complete observance of the proper principles which should actuate, and did actuate him, in the discharge of these duties. Further, I have no hesitation in saying that so far as Mr. Perdue is concerned I can readily say for him that at any time he would be prepared to meet, and in fact to court, any investigation that might be ordered into his conduct as revising officer.

My hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) went a little further and he said: Such a thing as that which is alleged to have taken place, never could take place if an appeal were given to the judiciary ; if the revising officer were a judge. I will tell my hon. friend that that has taken place year after year in the province of Manitoba ; not in fourteen cases, not in fifteen cases, but in hundreds of cases ; the Dominion voters' lists in that province are stuffed with hundreds of names ; and in the case of the city of Winnipeg with thousands of names, that cannot be got off the voters' lists because there is no means of finding these men ; there is no way of finding the persons to whom these names are supposed to apply, and, consequently, it is an absolute impossibility to get this Dominion list purged. The constituency of my hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) is a special case. Upon the voters' lists of that constituency, there are thousands of names that have no business to be there, and my hon. friend (Mr. Richardson), even with $25,000 of expenditure, could not get that list even reasonably accurate and reasonably fair under the present law. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) says that such a thing as he alleged could not happen in Manitoba if there was an appeal to the judge. I will tell my hon. friend what happened before a judge. I know perfectly well what my duty is as a member of this House in speaking of a judge ; I am not going to reflect on the judge, but I will state the facts as I know them to be and I will leave the members of the House to draw their own conclusion. This happened : When the members of the Liberal party went before a county judge who was the revising officer under this Dominion Franchise Act, and proved that they had served subpoenas upon men who were improperly upon that list, the judge held he would not strike them off because it could not be proven that the parties served had been shown the original subpoena in each case. That is what he held. Now, Sir, every lawyer in this House knows that there is an old technical rule of law which says that when you serve a man with a subpoena you have got to prove that you handed him a copy and that you showed him the original.

Mr. DAVIN. Who was the judge ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Judge Walker, the present county court judge of the eastern judicial district. Every lawyer knows the old rule of law, that you have got to show that you not only handed a copy to the witness but that you showed him the original. Now, Sir, it was held in the electoral court of revision in the city of Brandon, by Judge Walker, that he would not, and he did not, strike the names off the list, because the balliff who served those persons, although he identified them and proved he handed them copies of the subpoenas, could not swear that in every case he had shown these people the originals. I have now shown to my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) what has happened under his law ; the law which we are seeking to repeal. I have challenged him, and I do now on behalf of Mr. Perdue challenge him, that Mr. McFadden or any one else may bring an accusation in the proper quarter where Mr. Perdue may have an opportunity of answering it, and it will be answered by Mr. Perdue.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The argument of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton), if there be an argument in the observations of the hon. Minister, was answered by himself in advance, when he said that after all these things that have happened in the province of Manitoba, the Government of that province was now forced to recognize the necessity of a judicial revision of the electoral lists. The Minister's resistance to the suggestion that we should put it beyond question that in all the provinces of Canada there shall be a judicial revision of the lists, was an appeal to us to take into consideration the fact that in Manitoba at any rate, they were to have the benefit that undoubtedly follows from such a judicial revision. I can understand the excitement of the hon. Minister (Mr. Sifton) in reference to Mr. Perdue and his high opinion of that gentleman, for has not this revising barrister, this former Attorney General of the Manitoba Government, been conducting for some months past, some very interesting financial operations in connection with the Minister of the Interior, Mr. Perdue drawing on the Minister of the Interior, and the hon. gentleman cashing the drafts ; the hon. Minister obtaining the money from the exchequer of Canada, too, to meet the drafts of Mr. W. E. Perdue. Of course I have no doubt that the high encomium paid Mr. Perdue, the drawer, by the hon. Minister of the Interior, the drawee, will be reciprocated fully by the drawer, in connection with these transactions, taking the position of drawee. The hon. Minister of the Interior made a rather lame defence to this House, because he did not try to refute the statement that the disgraceful facts mentioned in the McFadden case had been brought to the attention of the legislature, but pleaded that no formal appeal had been made to the legislature of Manitoba for a commission of inquiry. But that, of course, cannot affect in the slightest degree the importance and relevancy of the case in connection with this matter. Here we have the undeniable fact that in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec and British Columbia, an appeal is allowed and the Minister of the Interior tells us that the province of Manitoba proposes to follow suit. The justice and propriety of guaranteeing an appeal was admitted by the leader of the Government himself this afternoon when he said that his individual preference was for the system which obtains in the province of Quebec. In those provinces where the appeal exists, there have been no scandalous cases brought to light. I do not think it is an answer when hon. gentlemen opposite say that in the other provinces such cases have been few, because the complaint has been general, and the facts warrant the supposition that there could be many cases brought up in those provinces, where, as in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, the sheriff who is the existing court of appeal, is appointed by the Government of the day and practically at its mercy. The First Minister, in resisting the appeal of the leader of the Opposition to make uniform that beneficial system which obtains in the larger provinces, went chiefly on the ground that the proposed amendment is contrary to the principle of the Bill. But the hon. Solicitor General will tell him that he did not hang so tenaciously to the principle of the Bill, but that there were clauses introduced into it with the approval of the Government that are as much inconsistent with the principle of the Bill as the proposed amendment. There are clauses for the protection of the federal voters from any attempt on the part of the local legislatures or authorities to tamper in any way with these lists. For instance, there is the check that is provided in clause 5 of subsection "c," defining the particular lists of the province that shall be taken so as to prevent any province recklessly or improperly bringing a list into force specially for the purpose of a federal election. The Solicitor General candidly admitted that such possibilities should be prevented, and the House went very generally with him in his attempt to prevent their perpetration. We, therefore, in that case admitted, so far as the principle is involved, that we should have some control of those lists—call them provincial lists or what you like. Then take the clause protecting this House against vexatious legislation or legislation which we might consider improper in a local legislature. By that clause this House has put around federal electors a safeguard, which will protect certain officers who are disqualified in some of the provinces, from being at the caprice or wish of a local legislature disqualified in Dominion elections. Take also subsection 4 of the same section which contains a special clause with regard to the disqualification of certain classes of people—for instance, prisoners in jail, and so on. That clause gives us control over these features of the electoral lists; take, for instance, also clause number 9, which is an extraordinary clause. I am not attacking it, but showing how much has been conceded and to what a very little distance, if any, the First Minister would have to go if he gave us what he says to-day is a right and proper thing, and how very little it would invade upon the principle involved in this Bill if he accepted the amendment now proposed as he has those I have already mentioned. Take clause 9. That clause provides that where the provincial lists are more than a year old, and in other certain events, new lists shall be prepared, under the direct authority and supervision and machinery of this Parliament.

Then, of course, I need not, I suppose, at this stage, as the question is pretty fresh, refer to the other objection, at great length, of the First Minister, as to our doubtful powers with regard to this amendment of what he calls a local list. Permit me to say that it cannot be called an amendment of a local list. It is simply an amendment of a list which we make a federal list, and which is to be used only for federal purposes. The amendment is careful as to that. It does not pretend to interfere with the provincial lists, as such, in any particular. Otherwise the hon. gentleman's objection would be well taken. But the hon. gentleman will see that it is his own Bill which is making use of work done for provincial purposes, adopting under the principle laid down by the Solicitor General and much discussed in this House, some of that work and appropriating it for Dominion purposes. We add to the preliminary list, so to speak, or we change that list for federal purposes and for federal purposes only. We do not interfere, by the proposed amendment, with the local procedure for local purposes and we cut off no appeal or recourse and do not pretend to do so. They may go to the sheriff as they do now in Nova Scotia. Our work cannot be considered in any respect as affecting the provincial lists for provincial elections. So that we do not interfere with the local lists. It is misleading to call them local lists in connection with the federal election. We simply take the work done for provincial purposes and adopt it for federal purposes. If, of course, the hon. gentleman wishes to suggest doubts that have already been expressed as to other features of the Bill, much of his criticism made on this score would far more apply to clauses and provisions that have received considerable attention and which the Solicitor General himself admits form interesting subjects for discussion; but the hon. gentleman in this Bill has made a tremendous plunge in the opposite direction from the line of his argument as regards this point, and we do not want to go a jot further, as far as the principle of the Bill is concerned, than he has gone in section after section of the Bill. The hon. gentleman says we must trust to the provinces for amendment, and he discussed at some length the methods the minority had of obtaining redress. Well, if we would stand by that doctrine, there are several clauses in this Bill that are wholly unnecessary now. Because the answer to the suggestions that have been successively made, so far as the Solicitor General was concerned, if consistency be a jewel, would have been the answer of the Prime Minister to-day. He would have said: You must use your influence in your different provinces to have these principles carried out, we stand simply and solely on the provincial lists. But that principle has been already thrown to the winds in the discussion of this Bill. Consequently, I submit, nothing that has been said before to-day makes the position of the Government inconsistent with that taken by the Opposition and with this amendment. A great deal of satisfaction would be felt throughout the country, I am sure, if both the political parties could feel that when such a concession as this had been asked at the hands of the Government, the Government have been willing to grant it. I think it would do not a little good in connection with the relations of the parties, and would improve the feeling in the contests that are to take place in the future, be the results of those contests what they may.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). As the motion of the hon. leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) was based, to some extent, upon the condition of affairs in Nova Scotia, I ask to be permitted to make a few observations on that phase of the question. I intend to vote against the hon. gentleman's motion and shall ask the House to vote against it. This motion proposes to make an entirely useless addition to the election machinery of Nova Scotia. There is no province in the Dominion in which there is greater respect for judicial authority than in Nova Scotia. But I am sure I am justified in saying that there has been no general feeling among the people of the province that it is necessary to invoke the aid of the judicial authorities in connection with the revision of the electoral lists. I regret that the hon. gentleman has repeatedly attacked the Nova Scotia system of revision, because, to some extent at all events, he is responsible for it. The system had its foundation in an Act passed as long ago as 1863. The hon. gentleman was not responsible for the passing of that Act, but he was responsible for keeping it on the Statute-book for a number of years, while he led the Government of Nova Scotia, so that it passed on to his successor. A system of revision was created by that Act which has continued, with slight changes, to the present day. Prior to that time there was universal suffrage; but by the Act of 1863 a restrictive franchise was adopted. The Act provided for revision of the list by revisers appointed by the session of the county. We had no municipal government in Nova Scotia then, and revisers were appointed by the magistrates forming the county sessions. I think I am right in saying that there was no complaint against this system down to 1879, and no widespread objection of any kind raised. The revisers, appointed locally, were the final court of appeal in the preparation of the electoral lists. In 1879, Sir John Thompson, being then the Attorney General of Nova Scotia, introduced a county incorporation Act, whereby the system of municipal government was applied in the province. So satisfactory was the system of revision at that time, that Sir John Thompson was content to turn over the duty of appointing the revisers, along with the other duties of the sessions, to the municipal councils. From 1879 until after the Government of Sir John Thompson went out of office, that system continued, and no complaint was made that it was not satisfactory. There was no appeal. The revisers formed the final court. That continued down to 1889. I had the privilege of filling the position of Prime Minister of the province in that year. We were revising the franchise law. There was no general complaint that the system was a bad one, but it was represented that in a few cases the revisers had acted as partisans, and it was suggested that there might be some sort of appeal. Under the system which had existed since 1863, the sheriffs were assigned certain duties in connection with the electoral lists. They had to make up, at certain stages, lists of electors not resident in the respective districts. It seemed but reasonable, therefore, that their duties should be enlarged and that they should be called upon to sit in appeal in the revision of the lists. The provision for appeal to the sheriff was not made with a view to having a widespread system of appeal. As in the case of many another court of appeal, the benefit was not so much in the number of appeals that might be heard as in the fact of its inducing the lower court to give greater consideration than they might otherwise do to the matters brought before them. The effect was to warn the revisers that if they acted in a partisan manner there was a tribunal to which there might be an appeal. Experience has shown that there were comparatively few appeals. I have no statistics on the subject, but, speaking from memory, I can say that comparatively few appeals were taken in Nova Scotia under that system. This goes to show that while the system of appeal was useful to some extent, there was no very great need of it at that time. But the hon. gentleman said that the sheriff is a partisan officer. He says he is now appointed at the whim of the Government, and is appointed from year to year. I desire to point out that neither of these statements is correct. The sheriff is not appointed from year to year. He is not appointed at the whim of the Government; or at all events he does not hold his office by the whim of the Government; nor is he at the mercy of the Government, as the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) said. The sheriffs were appointed, prior to 1883, in a manner pointed out by the leader of the Opposition. They were appointed by an antiquated system by which the judges and representative of the Government met at certain times and produced a list and picked out one name. That system was out of date, and in 1883 a law was passed by which the sheriffs were appointed directly by the Government of the day. But they were appointed not to hold office at the whim of the Government, nor were they appointed from year to year. They were appointed as permanent officers of the Government, and, as it is termed, during good behaviour. And good behaviour, interpreted in the light of sixteen or seventeen years' experience, has shown that the sheriffs in Nova Scotia hold office by a tenure which is no less lasting than that by which the judge of the county court holds his office. In the first place, the sheriffs were not appointed in a partisan way. Many of the old sheriffs of that day were Conservatives, and in nearly every case they were re-appointed under the new system, and continued to hold office until the day of death or resignation. And at this day, after fifteen years, there are, I am certain, three or four sheriffs who were appointed by the Conservative party, and who continue to hold office at this moment. So it is evident that there was no desire to treat these officers as under the whim of the Government or at the mercy of the Government. My hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) has produced a letter or declaration. I made a statement at an earlier stage of the discussion on this Bill that no sheriff in Nova Scotia had been dismissed under the existing system. I wish to correct that statement. During the years when I had the honour to occupy the office of Prime Minister, no sheriff was dismissed after appointment in 1883. But since I retired one sheriff has been dismissed. He was appointed by my Government and was a Liberal. He was dismissed from office by the Liberal Government a few months ago for gross misconduct. And that sheriff is the man whose letter has been read by the hon. leader of the Opposition. The hon. gentleman will fail to show a case—

Mr. McDOUGALL. May I ask the hon. gentleman what was the man's misconduct?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am willing to tell the hon. gentleman privately, but I do not think I would be doing a service to the gentleman who has lost his position by proclaiming his misconduct on the floor of the House. I will tell the hon. gentleman, at the close of the sitting, what his misconduct was; but I do not wish to go further now than to say that though he was dismissed for misconduct, it had no relation whatever to any political charge. The dismissal occurred only a few months ago, after my retirement from the Government of Nova Scotia; he was dismissed for good and sufficient cause, and I do not care to say more than that. Therefore, it will be seen that when the hon.

Mr. FIELDING.

gentleman brings on the floor of the House to-day a letter from a dismissed sheriff and quotes that as evidence that this system is wrong, I think he has failed to make any case against the system. I have pointed out that the system has been in force for years, and that there was no complaint. I do not say that it has never been suggested that we should have the system which is proposed to-day, with an appeal to a county judge. But if gentlemen, at an earlier stage of discussion, thought such an appeal was necessary, experience has showed them that it was not necessary; and speaking again from memory, I think I am correct in stating that down to the time when I retired from the leadership of the Government of Nova Scotia, since this law has been placed on the Statute-book, I do not think that any proposal was ever made in the legislature to adopt the system of an appeal to a judge. I do not think any complaint ever was made against the present system. So, in short, I contend that this is entirely unnecessary; there is no grievance in Nova Scotia; both political parties recognize the fact that that system, in the main, is a good one. I will not say that a sheriff cannot be found who is a partisan sheriff, as I will not say that a county judge cannot be found in Canada who is a partisan county judge; but I say that the sheriffs generally in the province of Nova Scotia are gentlemen who will compare favourably in character and standing, and in all that goes to make a good citizen, even with the judges of the land. They are good citizens and good officials. Hon. gentlemen opposite have stood up, one after another, and acknowledged that as respects the sheriff of their particular counties they had no fault to find. I believe if there had been any grievance in this respect we would have heard of it again and again in the legislature of Nova Scotia. If it be true, as I have pointed out, that the system has met with no general complaint, if it be true that all parties are content to operate that system, if there has been no substantial grievance in Nova Scotia, I fail to see any reason why we should introduce this new and unnecessary piece of machinery. A few words more and I have done. If it be stated that any one sheriff has acted in a partisan manner—I suppose you can find such a case just as you can find a partisan judge—the machinery of the law provides ample means for bringing that sheriff to justice. If a sheriff fails to do his duty by putting on a name improperly or leaving off a name improperly, he is liable in every such case to a penalty of $200. If a sheriff, in his capacity as returning officer, shall fail to copy a list correctly and sends it to his deputy returning officer in an incorrect form, he is liable to a penalty of $50 in the case of every name so omitted; and these penalties can be recovered in the supreme court or the county court by any person who takes the trouble to sue for them. Therefore, there is ample machinery provided by which a sheriff can be punished for misconduct, and I think if there were any such cases the gentlemen who are interested in seeing the law sustained, would have taken those cases into court and would have seen that justice was done in the proper way by appealing to the judges, not to act as revisers of electoral lists, but to carry out the law which is now on the Statute-book.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). There is one point that should perhaps be brought out in connection with what my hon. friend the Minister of Finance has said in reference to the part taken by sheriffs in Nova Scotia in making up the electoral lists. He says they have always taken the same part in the preparation of the lists, because it was their duty to decide in what part of the county a non-resident should vote. At the time they were given that power they were not the appointees of the local government, they were then practically appointed by the judges of the province. But in 1889, when the Liberal Government of Nova Scotia constituted them practically the revisers of the electoral lists, they had become the appointees of the local government, and to a certain extent must be admitted to be liable to this objection, that they are, to a certain extent, at the mercy of the local government of Nova Scotia. I would like to remind the Minister of Finance, when he speaks about the perfectly secure position occupied by the sheriffs and their immunity from attack on the part of the local government, of some investigations into the conduct of officials which were held in Nova Scotia while he himself was leader of the government of that province. I think he will not have much difficulty in recalling to mind investigations into charges made against registrars of deeds and other officers whose only crime, so far as I know, was that they were Conservatives, in which cases the most unfair and petty attempts were made, and sometimes successfully made, to dismiss those men from office. I do not think it well to take up too much time of this House in dealing with purely provincial questions, but I may say that my hon. friend will recollect certain investigations which were made into the conduct of registrars of deeds and prothonotaries in the province of Nova Scotia, which show that the legislature and government of that province were not altogether, as they should be, above the rather improper work of bringing pressure to bear upon officials. That government occasionally put one out of office and put another in merely because the man removed was a political opponent. Another point made by my hon. friend was this, that while the Conservative Government were in power in Nova Scotia they did not alter the legislation then existing.

I am sure I need not recall to my hon. friend the fact that while the Holmes-Thompson Government were in power they were perfectly helpless to complete any legislation whatever which seemed undesirable to the Liberal party in the province of Nova Scotia.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Does my hon. friend mean that they attempted to change this Bill and were prevented?

Mr. BELL (Pictou). Not in this particular; but I do say that they attempted to change the Bill in reference to one particular which my hon. friend must remember. The Holmes-Thompson Government tried more than once to remove the disqualification imposed upon Dominion officials, and they were summarily put out of court by the action of the legislative council.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is not the question, but I would like to discuss that.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). It is certainly a cognate question, because it was an amendment to the Electoral Franchise Act of the province of Nova Scotia. The disqualification of some members of the civil service of Canada certainly affected the franchise of the people of Nova Scotia. In respect of that matter, the Holmes-Thompson Government tried repeatedly to remove the disqualification, and the legislative council showed itself to be a most partisan body, because it did not, in many cases, even condescend to discuss these Bills which came before it, but kicked them out of the council without an apology, without any semblance of decency even, always acting as a most partisan body. The Holmes-Thompson Government were actually prevented from legislating, and never had any power to amend the Franchise Act of that province. The Senate of Canada sometimes treats the measures of this Government promptly and vigorously, but at least they always do the Government the courtesy of discussing the measures that they send before them. I have known in the province of Nova Scotia, an important Bill that had occupied the time of the lower House for weeks, to be dismissed in twenty minutes by the legislative council, whose members laughed at the ease and facility with which they could undo that which was done in the lower House. Another thing the Minister of Finance said was that the majority of the sheriffs of Nova Scotia were Conservatives.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, I said a large number were, and some still are. I have not made a count to know which are in the majority.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). I think it will be found that a very small minority of the sheriffs are Conservatives.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. After fifteen years, there are four there yet.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). There are four out of eighteen sheriffs, and it would be unlikely indeed that there they should all be Liberals. The Conservatives were only four years in power, they had not during that time the opportunity of making appointments, because during their administration the sheriffs were appointed by the judges. How many Conservatives have been appointed sheriffs in Nova Scotia since 1873?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I rejoice to say not one.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). Not one, and furthermore the Minister of Finance is glad to say that such is the fact. When we find an hon. gentleman occupying the position of the Minister of Finance capable of expressing gratification over his position as a bitter partisan, and the fact that Nova Scotia is governed from a partisan standpoint, then I need not say another word. We must accept all the statements in the light of statements made by an hon. member who is proud that not a sheriff has been appointed by the Government of which he was formerly a member, except he adhered to the party to which the hon. gentleman belonged.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Will the hon. gentleman tell me when on a vacancy occurring during the time he was a member of the legislature supporting the Government and the Conservative party, the then Government ever appointed any Liberal?

Mr. BELL (Pictou). During that period the judges had the appointment of the sheriffs.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). The hon. gentleman himself in the course of his speech, explained the manner in which the judges were selected and the antiquated process followed.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not by the judges alone. The representative of the Government also sat with the judges.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). The hon. gentleman knows that the sheriffs were not Government appointees. He has already explained how they were appointed. The Conservatives were in power from 1878 to 1882. In 1883 the Act was passed which enabled the local government to appoint sheriffs. The hon. gentleman was a member, and a very prominent member, of the legislature of Nova Scotia at that time. So all these points raised by the hon. gentleman fall to the ground, and yet the hon. gentleman has expressed pleasure over the fact that the Government of Nova Scotia, of which he was at one time a member, is of a grossly partisan Government.

Mr BELL (Pictou).

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Did I say that?

Mr. BELL (Pictou). The hon. gentleman did not say that, but it follows from what he stated. The hon. gentleman expressed gratification that the Government of Nova Scotia, following the course he adopted, administers the affairs of the province, not in the interest of the province, but in the interest of the Liberal party. Not one argument has been advanced against the proposition of the leader of the Opposition, that if no harm could occur to the Government of Canada, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Manitoba should be given the same privilege as was accorded to the other provinces. The only semblance of argument was presented by the leader of the Government, and that conflicted so grotesquely with the acceptance of amendments and the changes made in the franchises of different provinces that I was surprised it should be advocated by the leader of the Government here to-day.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Is the hon. gentleman able to say whether or not at any time this has been made a grievance against the local government of Nova Scotia and whether any attempt has been made to remedy the grievance by seeking to give an appeal?

Mr. BELL (Pictou). So far as regards this particular point, it has never been attempted. But I have already explained why this was not done. During the Thompson Administration it was attempted to amend the Franchise Act in regard to qualification and other matters, and in each case the proposition was summarily and contemptuously rejected by the legislative council. In that body there was always an overwhelming majority of Liberals, and we did not attempt to pass any legislation which might give the Conservatives any advantage or even fair-play.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Was there in later years any attempt made to bring it up as a grievance?

Mr. BELL (Pictou). Yes, but not in regard to the appeal.

Mr. DAVIN. Does the Solicitor General share the doubt of the Prime Minister and the Minister of the Interior of the power of this House to interfere with the lists in the way proposed by this amendment?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I shall have occasion to express my opinion in a few minutes. Allow me to wait for a little while.

Mr. DAVIN. I thought it desirable to ascertain whether the legal adviser of the Government shares the doubt of the Prime Minister and the Minister of the Interior, because I was under the impression at the earlier stages of the discussion that the Sol-icator General held that this might be done, and it was desirable to have something like this done. We have now had the statement of the hon. Minister of the Interior that it was desirable, but he expressed a doubt as to whether we have the power to intervene. In regard to the main points which have been dealt with fully by the hon. member for Pictou, I do not want to say anything. I desire to point out, however, that the Minister of the Interior never replied, although he attempted to do so, to any position taken by this side of the House. Take the affidavit read by the leader of the Opposition. That affidavit was not merely an attack, certainly in the main it was not an attack in regard to Mr. Perdue, but it was an attack on a system. If it was an attack on any individual, it was an attack on Mr. Forester, registration clerk. There is paragraph after paragraph detailing what was done, and it is quite clear the real iniquity that is brought to light by that affidavit is the fact that certain names in polling divisions 10, 11 and 12 were put there by Registration Clerk Forester, who bears a very different reputation from Mr. Perdue. When Mr. McFadden went to Mr. Forester in his character of registration clerk, to remedy this grievance, he could get no satisfaction. What did Mr. Perdue do? He actually did the very thing that Judge Walker is assailed by the Minister of the Interior for doing. The Minister of the Interior, as is the manner of defence invariably followed by hon. gentlemen opposite, not to defend what they did, but to say that some one connected with the Conservative party had done the same, said Judge Walker refused to take a certain course and he gave a reason. And it was precisely the same reason as Mr. Perdue gave. What those who desire to have an appeal to the judge want is, that when a revising officer takes the view adopted by Mr. Perdue, there should be an appeal to a judge. Again with respect to the argument of the Minister of the Interior, that the Dominion lists are stuffed, it may be said that such a statement affords no argument that the other lists will not be stuffed. If the Dominion lists are stuffed it is a great evil and should be remedied. But, Sir, what is the statement the Minister made? He turned around to the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) and appealed to that truthful person as a supporter, and he asked him whether in his constituency thousands and thousands of stuffed names were not on the list? Why, how many names are on the lists that elect the member for Lisgar? If the statement of the Minister were true there would have to be millions. It shows the utter looseness of assertion that characterizes the Minister of the Interior whenever he speaks in that excited and theatrical manner which he adopts when he favours us with anything like a speech in this House. The position taken by the hon. leader of the Opposition remains entirely unimpaired. The arguments made by the Prime Minister have been completely answered by the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), and I certainly think if we are to be guided by the weight of argument we ought to adopt the amendment proposed by the hon. leader of the Opposition.

Mr. MILLS. I desire to call attention to one point that was referred to by the Minister of Finance in his statement as to the effect of appeals to the sheriffs in Nova Scotia, and the reasons why the sheriffs were appointed. The Minister of Finance said that the franchise law of Nova Scotia obtained in that province as far back as 1863. With all due deference to the Finance Minister, that is not correct. There was a new franchise altogether made by the legislature of Nova Scotia in 1889 and a most intricate franchise it is; a franchise more intricate than the Dominion Franchise Act which it is now sought to repeal. When they put that Franchise Act upon the Statute-book of Nova Scotia it was brought home to the legislature that the revisers should not be the court of final revision, and so an appeal was given to the sheriffs. The Minister of Finance to a certain extent was right when he said that the appeal to the sheriff would have the effect of keeping the revisers in check. But, Sir, when these revisers understood that the sheriffs to whom the appeals were given were as strong partisans as they themselves, they knew that the check was only a farce. If there were an appeal to a judge, then there would be a real check upon the revisers, and they would know that their actions would be considered in a judicial spirit according to the facts. As I have pointed out, the appeal to the sheriff has no check whatever upon the revisers, because the revisers regard the sheriffs as partisan, and as a partisan manner. I am astonished at the Minister of Finance stating to this House that the sheriffs of Nova Scotia were not appointed in this way. If my memory serves me right, the very law that made the sheriffs was conceived in a partisan spirit for the purpose of turning out Dr. Robinson, the sheriff in the county of Annapolis, and appointing as sheriff Peter Bonnett. The present Attorney General of Nova Scotia when he brought this law before the country referred to these sheriffs as "eighteen good men and true," and these words being clothed with the significance put upon them by the Attorney General have become a burning scandal in the province of Nova Scotia. The idea of referring to these sheriffs as non-partisan is absurd. When we ask this House that an appeal should be given to a judge, it is nothing more than right, and it is nothing more than what has been granted to the other provinces in the Dominion of Canada. It would be unwise and unjust if the right of appeal to a judicial authority is not accorded in the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Manitoba.

Mr. FOSTER. We have the implied promise of the Solicitor General that he has something to say before the debate ends, and he refused to answer the question of my hon. friend (Mr. Davin) on the grounds that he would leave the question open until a little later. We would be glad to hear from him now.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think the matter has been fully discussed.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Fitzpatrick) will surely answer the question put by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin).

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The amendment can hardly be accepted by the Government at the present time. What would be the effect of this amendment if it were adopted? The effect would be for us to declare that in so far as the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Manitoba are concerned, they do not deal honestly with their voters' lists. That is to say, that we have confidence in the lists made by the other provinces, but in so far as these provinces are concerned we cannot place in them the same amount of confidence as we place in the others. It would not be fair for us to take that position in this House. Now, with reference to the question put by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) I have got to say, that if the case was put in the way in which the Prime Minister put it, namely, that this amendment had for its effect to interfere with the lists made by the provinces, and to give an appeal which would affect the lists made by the provinces to be used for provincial purposes, it would be unconstitutional.

Mr. POWELL. The two objections that seem to have been brought to this amendment are, first, the one raised by the right hon. leader of the Government, that it is unconstitutional, and secondly, that raised by the hon. Solicitor General, that it is a declaration of want of confidence in the people of the provinces.

To deal with the second in order first, I deny that this is a declaration of want of confidence in the people of the provinces. You will observe, Sir, that the amendment takes the list as made up by the officials of the municipalities in the different provinces. As that list is filed with the secretary-treasurer or other official being the proper custodian thereof, we adopt it and take it as a basis, and so far as the province of New Brunswick is concerned, we propose by this amendment simply to allow the appeal to be had from that list to a judge of the county court to remedy any defects in it of commission or omission. There is no interference in any way with the machinery of the provinces in the making up of the lists, and as the appeal is solely for Dominion purposes there is no constitutional aspect of the question whatever arising for discussion. The right hon. leader of the Government evidently had the impression that, in some way or other, we were tampering with the local lists as made up for local purposes. But this is not the case. We are simply taking the list as compiled and completed by the local officers, and we appeal from that list, not for local purposes but for the purposes of the Dominion election. A good deal has been said with reference to the excellence of the local lists. Well, there is a complete answer to that. If these lists are perfect, then an appeal is not going to change them. If there be nothing in them to perfect, then the appeal will work no change and the lists will remain as they are. If they do wrong to any one that wrong should be remedied. And we rest satisfied, from the character of our county court judges, that no changes will be made in the lists unless the law warrants and the facts require them.

I direct my remarks particularly to the province of New Brunswick. There we have virtually no appeal. While a good deal has been said to the effect that if the Acts were defective and the cause of injury to the individual voters or the respective political parties in that province, attempts would have been made to have these Acts amended by the legislature. Now, the last Act touching upon the franchise in the province of New Brunswick was passed only last winter, and no opportunity has therefore been afforded any person to apply for any amendment. And that is the Act with respect to which the greatest amount of complaint must necessarily be raised. To point out again what I have pointed out before in this House, in New Brunswick the municipal officers prepare the lists as best they can. Each list is filed as a matter of record, and after that not an individual whose name is left off, not any man who is aggrieved by anything done, can apply for an appeal; but it is only the sheriff who can do so, if he thinks proper. That is absolute wrong. There is no principle of law, no principle of justice which would deprive a man of the right of appeal on his own motion, and allow the sheriff of the county to be the judge whether that man is to have an appeal or not. It is against this outrage that I protest. It is useless to say that because all laws are broken, there is no necessity for perfecting them. If that were the case, there would be no attempt to perfect any law which had been broken. In New Brunswick the sheriffs are reputable men, and I am not going to say anything against them; but in politics they are no more than human. I have in my mind's eye a very celebrated trial which came before a court in Westmoreland. Special jurors were called; 100 were summoned. It was in reality a political trial, and I might also say that the prisoner was charged with a very serious offence indeed. The prosecution was virtually a political prosecution, and under those circumstances, of the whole 100 people who were summoned as jurors—I am not charging the sheriff with being actuated by any improper motives—but it so turned out that only sixteen out of the 100 were Conservatives, and in a political trial the prisoner was put on his defence with almost every individual of the 12 jurors a strong Liberal. It turned out that the prisoner was found not guilty, but the result has nothing to do with the procedure of the trial or the sense of wrong which the prisoner justly experienced. This is the matter in a nutshell. We are simply asking that in New Brunswick, as in other provinces, the individual voter shall be the judge whether he shall appeal or not, and that the sheriff of the county shall not be the judge to decide whether the individual shall have the privilege of appealing.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think that the hon. Solicitor General was very definite in the answer that he made to my hon. friend. I think he gave an answer by way of a negative, if I may be allowed to draw an inference. My hon. friend asked a very distinct question. He asked if the Solicitor General was of the opinion, as law adviser of the Crown, that the passage of this amendment would conflict constitutionally with the principle of the Bill and consequently be inadmissible. My hon. friend's answer to that did not advise the conscience of this House very much. I think he stated that if the position taken by the right hon. First Minister were correct, the amendment would be inadmissible; but he left on my mind the impression, by inference, that he did not agree with the First Minister in that contention. Whether he did or did not, I think that, considering we are so eager for information and look for authoritative information from the legal representative of the Government in this House, he scarcely did his duty by us. He certainly did not answer the question of my hon. friend.

The other points have been dealt with. I do not think there is very much in the contention that we must be estopped from legislation here because some one may infer that if we do we will be throwing a slur upon the honesty of the provincial governments which have not risen to the standard of the Governments of Quebec and Ontario. I do not think that is a good reason why this House should not legislate. We are legislating here with the idea of making the law as perfect as we can. We have the admission of the right hon. First Minister himself and of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton)—though that is not so important—that the systems in Ontario and Quebec are in this respect ideal ones. They were strongly approved of by the First Minister. The First Minister, in fact, expressed regret that every province did not come up to the same standard, and he held out the hope that the legislatures of those provinces would of themselves come up to that standard. And the Minister of the Interior declared that such was the intention of the provincial government of Manitoba. But they may not, and suppose they do not, what position are we then in this House? We are in a position in this House that, in passing legislation on a subject in which our power is unquestioned—and it is certainly unquestioned so far as the Solicitor General is concerned, and he is the Government law adviser of the House—we acknowledge that an appeal to the county court judge is right and proper and marks the ideal system, and yet we refuse to enact the principle that hon. gentlemen opposite themselves dare not deny to be the correct and true principle. I do not think we ought to be stopped from putting this in the law unless it is shown to be, unless it can be shown that it is entirely unconstitutional. And if this is shown conclusively we have a still more grave subject to discuss, and that is, whether this Dominion Parliament will place itself in such a position as to submit itself to provincial legislation which is not of the best type and may be of a very vicious type. To my mind, the principle has been entirely given away. The right hon. leader of the House began this discussion upon a certain ground, the ground that the provincial legislatures were the source, and the only proper source, of legislation on this subject. Had he and the Government stuck to that, they would have been on ground unassailable, so far as logical correctness is concerned. But, Sir, they have contravened that principle, and they have acknowledged before the House in the legislation they have proposed that, after all, though the provincial legislatures are the proper sources of legislation in this matter, those local legislatures must be interfered with. They have said to the local legislatures: You have not constructed the lists on the right principle, so we will add to the lists by certain enactments in this House, and we will have the Dominion list, not a copy of the provincial list, but an extended provincial list, because the provincial list is imperfect and unjust, and we as a sovereign power have extended that list in order that it may be more just. Now, as they have contravened the principle of leaving the matter entirely and solely to the provincial legislatures, it is only a question of how far they will go. They have gone some distance, why not go further, especially as they themselves acknowledge that this covers a principle which is correct and which works out exceedingly well in practice in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec? There is no logical ground left for hon. gentlemen opposite. There is no ground of consistency. They have estopped themselves because they have already interfered with the provincial lists and interfered with them in an important particular. But, what strikes me in all this is the humiliation of the thing. Here we are, a sovereign Parliament, dealing with the basis of our own existence, to wit, the franchise upon which our members are elected. We admit here amongst ourselves that a certain principle is correct, and ought to be adopted. And yet we are kept from adopting it simply because some say: Well, the local legislatures know best about this matter; they may be wrong, and if they are wrong, let them suffer the wrong. And one province or two or three provinces may be allowed to vitiate the whole principle of the franchise; and this Parliament, which lives upon that franchise, is going on confessing itself entirely inadequate to the revision of this law, entirely inadequate to putting it upon the right basis. I say it is humiliating for an independent and paramount Parliament to place itself in that position. The right hon. gentleman who leads this Government boasted that he had made Canada a nation in a day. I believe that history will record it to his disadvantage that, if by consequence of coming in at the right moment so as to reap the benefits of the labours of others, he did something to consummate a policy in which this country strongly believed and has aided the development of Canada and seemed to justify his boast, empty though it was, he has made a retrograde step in introducing this separatist and disintegrating feature in the public life of Canada. The idea that a Dominion Parliament, paramount and sovereign, cannot say what its basis of franchise must be, that it must admit that the principle is right and yet must declare that it will not be put into practice, out of mere deference to a provincial and inferior legislature, and to do that on no logical grounds—I appeal again to the Solicitor General—to do it on no logical grounds, for he himself has introduced and has had passed in Committee of the Whole amendments to this Bill which contravene the absolute rights of provincial parliaments to fix the franchise. If the provincial legislatures knew best, the provincial legislatures must have done what was best when they disfranchised Dominion officials. But my hon. friend has put in a clause which enfranchises Dominion officials, contrary to the enactment and the wish of the provincial legislature. In that way, he has gone contrary to his opinion; and, in saying that we must follow their legislation, he has no logical ground to stand upon. This is no more against provincial rights, no more against provincial franchises. In fact, not as much, for the hon. gentleman will see that in a former amendment of which I speak, he has actually added to the number of voters, but in this amendment, if it were adopted, he would simply be making sure that the man who had the right to vote under the provincial franchise should have his name on the list and the man who had not the right should have his name struck off. Therefore, where is the logical and honest ground on which this can be denied? I believe the country will see very clearly the point which is in issue between us. Every man will admit that, other things being equal, there is safety in allowing a citizen to appeal to a court of law in such instances. Hon. gentlemen opposite, as a party, year after year contended for that principle and contended for it very strongly. To-day, when we ask that that principle be applied in this Bill, the hon. gentlemen not only refuse the right principle, but they go back upon their record, they go back upon their own confession and leave us to the will or the caprice of the local legislatures. So long as I have a seat in this Parliament I will contend that it is essentially necessary for the dignity and best government of Canada as a nation that she shall have uninterrupted and absolute control of her own franchise. And I believe that the great majority of the people of this country will not be satisfied to have it otherwise. Again, I think the Government would have done a useful thing for this country and would have kept its position and that of its supporters logical and consistent, and would have made itself square with public opinion, if it had allowed the plea of the Opposition, which is simply that, in the last resort, the voters' lists shall be subject to the revision of a competent court of law.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. members for West Hastings (Mr. Corby), Pictou (Mr. Bell), North Victoria (Mr. Hughes), and Terrebonne (Mr. Chauvin), have not voted.

Mr. HUGHES. I paired with the Minister of Agriculture. Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). I paired with the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton).

Mr. CHAUVIN. I paired with the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Fortin).

Mr. BOURASSA. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I call your attention to the fact that the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Angers) has not voted.

Mr. ANGERS. (Translation.) I paired with the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain.) Had I voted, I would have voted against the amendment.

On the main motion, third reading of Bill.

Mr. CLARKE. Before this Bill is read a third time, I would like to draw the attention of the House and of the right hon. Premier to the discussion which took place in committee upon the 9th section of the Bill, having reference to the adoption of the provincial registration lists. That section provided that the lists of manhood franchise voters, if not more than twelve months old, shall be used for elections of members to this House. I think, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. the Solicitor General was so much impressed with the fairness of the suggestions made from this side of the House, that he promised to give them his most favourable consideration. But I see that there is nothing in the Bill as reprinted which indicates that any attention has been paid to our remonstrances. It is a fact that if the Bill passes in its present shape, and if an election for members of this House is held, say, ten or eleven months after a manhood franchise list has been prepared and used, in some cities of this province, hundreds if not thousands of manhood franchise votes will be disqualified. I can speak specially for the city of Toronto; I think it is no exaggeration to say that thousands of manhood franchise voters will be disfranchised if the provincial manhood franchise list on which they vote for the election of members of this House, is ten or eleven months old; and especially will that be the case if the months of April and May intervene between the registration and the period at which such election is held. The Solicitor General was good enough to say that he would consent to a reduction of the time during which the provincial registration lists would hold good, from twelve to six months. That would remove a portion of the evil, but not all of it. Before moving an amendment to the third reading, I would like to ask the Solicitor General if it is the intention to comply with what was conceded to be, when the Bill was in committee, a most reasonable request? The provincial Act under which this registration is made, and the forms in connection with the Act, not being in harmony with the body of the Act itself, it is a most unjust procedure to ask that the provincial registration shall apply, as it is intended to apply under this section 9, to election of members of this House. I would like to ask the Premier if it is the intention to carry out the pledge made by the Solicitor General that the age of the provincial registration lists shall not be permitted to be more than six months?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The difficulty suggested by the hon. gentleman for Toronto (Mr. Clarke) is a very real difficulty which arises under the Manhood Suffrage Act of Ontario. Taking the law as it stands, in so far as the enactments are concerned, coupling those with the oath, it is necessary that a man should reside in the province for twelve months, within the electoral district for three months, and within the subdivision for the thirty days immediately preceding the election. Now, it is possible that an election may take place eleven months after the voters' lists have been made, and in that event the difficulty pointed out by my hon. friend would exist. He suggests that we have a revision of the voters' lists in the event of an election taking place more than six months after the local lists have been made. I think the Government ought to adopt that suggestion.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I may say that the same trouble exists with respect to Manitoba, where the lists are only prepared once in four years. There also a man to be qualified has to reside within the province for a year, and within the electoral district for three months. That is the reason why, on a former occasion, I asked the Solicitor General to make it three months, but when he suggested six months I agreed to accept the suggestion because it was less than a year. A year is really too long, and especially in Manitoba where the population is increasing very rapidly, and where the people are moving to and fro more, perhaps, than in any other province, before they settle down definitely. In those cases, if the time is left for a year, I am sure that in every constituency many men will be disqualified who otherwise, under this amendment, would be able to vote. Therefore I very gladly support any amendment in that direction.

Mr. HUGHES. Sometime during the progress of this Bill through the House, I took the liberty of drawing the attention of the Prime Minister and the Solicitor General to the fact that under the present law of Ontario, a number of names that undoubtedly will always be left off the list, would be disfranchised were these lists accepted here.

Mr. CLARKE.

I understood an amendment was prepared, and I should like to ask if it is the intention of the Government to have that amendment added to the Bill. The amendment was this: That after the list was printed and circulated here, any man whose name was found to be off the list, should be eligible to vote, on his making a declaration.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not think we could accept the amendment of my hon. friend for Victoria (Mr. Hughes). We had better leave that to the local legislatures, who are quite competent to deal with that little grievance. I understand that there is something there to be remedied, but I think that we had better leave it to the local legislatures. With regard to the amendment suggested by the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Clarke), as it has been adopted by the Solicitor General, I move that the Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole with instructions to amend section 9 by striking out the words "one year" and inserting instead "six months."

Mr. INGRAM. I am exceedingly sorry that the leader of the House moved any amendment. I would have no objection to it if it were confined to the cities of Toronto and Hamilton, each of which has two or more electoral districts, but to have it apply to county towns and cities it would not do. It will apply to county towns and cities such as London, Hamilton and Ottawa. In Ontario we have two systems of franchise. Under the one system a candidate in every one of the counties starts out in the early spring and does not finish his revision of the lists until the election takes place, whenever that may be. He starts out by revising lists from number one to three in municipalities in which the system applies. But the revision is not complete then so far as the candidate is concerned, because every one who resides in a county town must engage in a warfare over the registration. I want to appeal to hon. gentlemen who have not taken much part in the discussion of the Franchise Bill, every representative from Ontario, from whose county town he will receive complaints if this amendment should become law, to consider this question. I say, moreover, in regard to passing a Franchise Act as it is now being considered, it appears that we must adopt it because we have committed ourselves to it as the basis of a vote on the plebiscite. Had that not been the case, I would have suggested this Bill remain over until next session, giving each member an opportunity of going over it very carefully during the recess and having conversations with revising barristers and others who have had experience in registration and revision of lists, and then we would have been in a position to have secured a perfect Bill next session. I am sure the Solicitor General will admit that this is a crude Bill, and will not give satisfaction. It is stated that we in Ontario have an ideal system of franchise. We have nothing of the sort, but we have a cumbrous system, one that is not appreciated even by hon. gentlemen opposite or by supporters of the Hardy Government. They have discovered its weakness, but have not been able to remove all those weak points. Last session the legislature considered amendments and adopted certain changes which were in the right direction, but several more amendments are required to be introduced into the system. I call attention to the fact that the period of registration is entirely too short, that much friction will be caused, and that by embodying this registration system in the Act the House is embodying all the weak parts in the present law. Hon. gentlemen will find, if unfortunately we have an election, that this will prove a very unworkable Act, and I therefore call upon hon. members who represent constituencies in which there are county towns, and cities outside Toronto and Hamilton, to support the proposition to allow one year.

Mr. CLARKE. I do not desire to complicate the law or to make it too expensive. I expressed a wish to shorten the period as regards Toronto and Hamilton. If those cities were excluded, and the great injustice that would be done could be obviated, I would be much obliged to the Government for showing that consideration.

The PRIME MINISTER. I wanted to meet the wishes of my hon. friend. If he is not satisfied with the amendment, I do not want to press it upon him.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Will the hon. gentleman leave the amendment to apply to Manitoba?

The PRIME MINISTER. No; I ask leave to withdraw my amendment.

Mr. CLARKE. I do not understand that the hon. Prime Minister has not consented to the suggestion made. I simply pointed out that a great injustice would be done under the former clause as regards Toronto and Hamilton. If the hon. gentleman would make his amendment to apply only to those two cities or to cities with over 25,000 inhabitants, he would be complying with what I submit is a very reasonable request.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. In the absence, and on behalf of the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke), who before recess suggested an amendment to clause 9 of this Bill, making the age of voters' lists six months instead of twelve, I desire to express his regret, a regret in which I also share, that the right hon. the first Minister cannot see his way clear to accept the amendment as applying to the cities of Toronto and Hamilton. While many of us recognize the difficulty in the way of the application of this amendment to country constituencies, it is to be regretted that it cannot be applied to the larger cities. If the right hon. the First Minister is determined to withdraw the amendment which is suggested, we can do no more than urge our protest. At the same time we hope that the right hon. gentleman and the Solicitor General may be relied upon to make such representations to the Liberal Government at Toronto, as will adjust, not only this difficulty, but many other difficulties of equal importance to both political parties, in the working out of this Franchise Act.

Mr. MACLEAN. I hope that the view just put forward by the member for East Toronto (Mr. Ross Robertson) will have some weight with the Government, and that they will try to meet the suggestions made by him and by the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke). Those who know the city of Toronto know that a voters' list 12 months old will disfranchise a great number of people. In the large cities of Ontario a great many young men come in from the country, remain for a comparatively short time, but they are willing to register and they seek an opportunity of doing so. The policy of the Liberal party is to register as many men as possible and enable them to vote, and in pursuance of that policy hon. gentlemen opposite should adopt this suggestion which is on the lines of progressive legislation, and on the lines of the principles that Liberals contend for.

The PRIME MINISTER. This amendment to section 9 is intended to apply to these constituencies in Ontario in which there is registration, and when there is registration this Bill provides that if the registration has taken place more than 12 months before the time for a Dominion election, then new lists will be prepared; if it be less than 12 months, then the old list will serve. That is the Bill such as it is framed now. I understood my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) to ask that six months should be substituted for 12 months, and I was agreeable to that on the advice of my hon. friend the Solicitor General. But I understood that objection was taken by my hon. friend from East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) and others to that amendment. So far as we are concerned we are quite willing to meet the views of hon. gentlemen opposite on this point. I may say to my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean) that several complaints have been made of the law such as it exists in the province of Ontario with regard to registration, and we have undertaken to call the attention of the Ontario Government upon this point, so as to have the law amended in the sense just now suggested.

Mr. INGRAM. I did not object to the amendment applying to the cities of Toronto and Hamilton, but I objected to it applying to the province generally. Hon. gentlemen who have experience of the Registration Act of Ontario will bear me out that if this Franchise Bill was amended to read that in cities over 45,000 inhabitants the registration shall take place every six months, that would simply confine it to Toronto and Hamilton. The great hardship in the city of Toronto and Hamilton is, that many of the very best residents leave during the summer months for the Island, or for Muskoka, and being absent from the city temporarily they are disfranchised under the present law. By making it six months it perhaps would not affect them to the same extent.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not think the Act would apply to those who absent themselves for a few months in summer. The provision in the Act which allows lumbermen and others to be temporarily absent would perhaps apply to those as well.

Mr. FISDALE. The Act only applies to those mentioned.

Mr. SPROULE. Those who are away at college and at military service and so on are provided for. The people referred to by my hon. friend (Mr. Ingram) are only temporarily away and are usually back every week or so and it seems to me the Act would not apply to them. But even if it does, it appears to me that it is no greater injustice to them than it would be to the hundreds of persons who live in the other towns and cities of Ontario where revision would not take place under this amendment, who would come under the old law.

While it might be reasonable perhaps in Toronto and Hamilton, where there is greater need for it than in the other cities, still a list not more than a year old cannot be regarded as an old list. Suppose you make the amendment apply to Toronto, you leave out such places as Ottawa, Kingston, St. Thomas, Owen Sound, Windsor, Peterborough, Port Hope, Stratford, Winnipeg and all those large cities which stand exactly in the same position. It seems to me that you could scarcely with propriety make such an exception in favour of Toronto and Hamilton and leave all the other towns in Ontario and Manitoba as well.

There is another feature. It takes a great deal of work to revise the list in these towns and cities. During the last revision, a great many friends of the Reform Government, in the town of Peterborough for instance, said that the worst Franchise Act they had to deal with—the old Franchise Act for the Dominion or the local—was nothing at all compared to the revision of the lists in the towns under the new registration system. If you increase that work and have a revision every six months, you will be inflicting a large amount of onerous work upon people which they should not be called on to do.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I understand that the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Clarke) has withdrawn his suggested amendment as to the six months. The whole difficulty we found ourselves face to face with is this, and it resulted not from the Act, properly speaking, but from the form of oath required to be used by one of the sections. The Act itself is all right, but under the form of oath No. 17 a man is required to swear that he has been a resident of the district continuously and is then actually residing in the district and has been continuously a resident of it since 30 days before the registration took place. The provision of the Act does not require that, but the form of oath does. I have not had an opportunity of consulting the Prime Minister on this subject, but I would suggest that he should call on the Ontario Government to so amend that form of oath as to make it conform to the terms of the statute, which would avoid all the difficulties that have occurred. And if it does not please the Ontario Government to amend the oath, we can consider it next session and meet the difficulty by an amendment which I would not like at present to make, because once we begin to interfere with the oath we do not know where we may end.

Mr. MACLEAN. Will you undertake that there will not be an election?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Suppose there is, the only places where there will be any difficulty will be Toronto and Hamilton, where they have separate election divisions. It will not apply to Ottawa or other places where they have either one member or a whole city vote for the two.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. Does not the Solicitor General mean including the polling subdivisions as well as the district?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Under the statute, in order to get on the list, a man must have lived in the province twelve months, in the electoral district three months, and in the polling subdivision 30 days. But these all apply to a time anterior to the making of the electoral lists, according to the statute. But then the oath intervenes, and requires a man to swear that he has been continually a resident of the district up to the time he cast his vote, and there is nothing in the statute requiring that. If the oath were made to conform to the statute the difficulty could not occur.

Mr. BENNETT. There is the question that a voter in the province of Ontario must take the oath that at the moment of voting he was a resident of the district, in order to carry out the idea of one man one vote.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is right so far as other districts are concerned, but I cannot see the reason when you have the manhood suffrage registration Act.

Mr. OSLER. I do not wish to swell the talk on this subject, I am quite sure the Solicitor General has realized the difficulty we labour under in Toronto, more especially. We have a floating population in Toronto, which moves from one division of the city to the other, and out to Muskoka and other summer places, and the oath in its present form would disfranchise thousands of these voters. I am sure the Government do not wish to have an Act that will have that effect. If the difficulty can be remedied, I do not care how that is done so long as the injustice is removed. We have the promise of the Government that if the local government will not consent to change the form of oath that they will change it next session, and for my part I am quite satisfied to take their promise on that point.

Amendment (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) withdrawn.

Mr. SPEAKER. The motion now before the House is that the Bill be read the third time.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. On one or two occasions I have called the attention of the hon. Solicitor General to the fact that the province of Manitoba is in quite an exceptional position, inasmuch as there we have the lists prepared only on the eve of a local election, which means that they are prepared only once every four years. The lists now in force for the local elections in Manitoba are three years old, and if under the provisions of this Bill these lists have to be revised, if they are over a year old, they should be revised at the nearest date possible to an election, so as to give the franchise to all those qualified to vote when an election takes place, which should be the intention of this Bill. The revision of the lists should be in accordance with the statute, because as in the province of Ontario, in order to be qualified to vote one has to reside a year within the limits of the province, and only three months within the limits of the electoral district in which he is living and qualified. I do not suppose that an amendment to make it necessary to revise the list three months before an election would be accepted. But some compromise might be arrived at. In fact I was led to believe—not that I was promised—that such an amendment would be made. If my hon. friends from Ontario cannot agree in their own case, I should like to suggest that the following amendment should be made:—

That the order be discharged and the Bill be referred back to Committee of the Whole with instructions to insert the following words after the word "year" in the eighteenth line of clause 9:—"in any one province except the province of Manitoba, and six months in the said province of Manitoba."

That would leave it a year in any other province, and six months in the province of Manitoba.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. LaRivière) say that if a man is on the electoral list in Manitoba and the electoral list happens to be eleven months old, he would not have the right to vote?

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Yes, he would have the right to vote.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. This clause will not affect Manitoba in the direction pointed out. If a man is on the list in that province and the list is eleven months old, it will still be available for the purposes of the Dominion election. If this list is more than twelve months old and an election is announced, of course, a list will be made in accordance with the terms of the Manitoba law which provides that the voter must be twelve months resident in the province and three months in the electoral district. This does not affect the hon. gentleman's constituents.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I admit that if a man's name is on a list twelve months old, he is not disfranchised. But there will be many qualified to vote whose names are not on the list. To make the intervals as small as possible I propose this amendment. The law allows a man to become an elector on three months' residence. I would prefer three months under this amendment, but failing that, I suggest six months as a compromise.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not think we can accept this amendment. The difficulty is one which is common to all lists. In most of the provinces the lists have to be made at a certain period. In Quebec they have to be made in March and come into force in April.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon, but we are discussing lists that are made periodically, but not at determined times, as in the province of Quebec. The case, in Quebec, is not the same as that of provinces where the lists are prepared periodically.

The PRIME MINISTER. I only gave this as an illustration. The hon. gentleman's objection to the Bill is that as a list eleven months old is allowed, those whose names have become qualified to be electors within the eleven months will not have their names on the list. But this applies to all provinces. I use Quebec as an illustration. As the lists are prepared in March if an election takes place in the March following, the list will be eleven months old, and, of course, a certain number of people qualified to vote will be disfranchised, such as young men who have become of age during the eleven months. But you cannot devise a system that will wholly overcome this difficulty. We have come to the conclusion, and I think rightly, that the system that will do justice to the largest number will be a system of lists prepared at certain periods. It is true that those who become qualified after the preparation of one list and before the preparation of another cannot vote. But this is inevitable.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. The hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) will see that that is an accident—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. LaRivière) has already spoken.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I thought I had yielded the floor, Mr. Speaker, to the right hon. leader of the House. I was about to say: It would be by mere accident that the list in Manitoba would be available for our elections because it is only made once in four years. If the list is more than a year old, let us take the best steps in order to bring it up to date, if possible.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. You make a new list.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Well, but, why not shorten the time so as to have the list as close up to date as possible? But, if the right hon. gentleman will not accept the amendment, I shall not press it.

Mr. DAVIN. I wish to say a few words with regard to the third reading.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I see by the Speaker's notes that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) has already spoken.

Mr. DAVIN. I have not spoken on the motion, but on the amendment. I think that the discussion to-day has emphasized what a very crude, self-conflicting, immature and undesirable measure this is. Take, for instance, the confession we have heard from the hon. and learned gentleman. He asks us to accept the franchise in the province of Ontario in regard to which the oath that the voter is to take is not the oath that would really go on all fours with the statute. He admits that that is an undesirable state of things but asks us to accept it. Now, Sir, during the discussion language was held by some hon. gentlemen on the other side, that it would be a very wrong thing for the Senate to throw out the Bill, and the idea was suggested that threats were made from this side. Indeed some persons out of doors used the argument that the Senate would be going outside its function if it were to interfere with this Bill. Well, I have to say that on the face of the Bill it offends, in my opinion, against the constitutional Act under which we carry on the government of this country. But, if that were not the case, we have the precedent before us in the Senate of 1885, when the Hon. Mr. Scott moved the six months' hoist of the Franchise Bill of that day. And you will find that Senator Power, on that occasion, used the constitutional argument. But we have the "Globe" of May 14th actually blaming the Senate because it did not throw out the Bill of 1885. We have the following in an article in the "Globe" of May 14th:

No iniquity ever passed under the late Conservative Government was frustrated by the Senate. Did the Upper House exert itself to protect the people when the Franchise Act of 1885 was passed, acknowledged by all to be indefensible?

So that here we have the "Globe" of a day or two ago actually laying down the principle that the Senate of Canada would be discharging its duty as a second Chamber if it were to reject a Franchise Bill. So much for the position taken up on the opposite side of the House, that it would be very wrong for the Senate to touch this Bill, which, for my part, I think is a very bad one. I do not make these remarks to suggest to the Senate that they should throw out the Bill. My purpose is merely to show that this paper, the leading organ of the Liberal party in Ontario, has become utterly inconsistent in its utterances, as it has, I am afraid, become entirely lost to the moral standard up to which it acted in the old and great days of George Brown.

Mr. GANONG. I must admit that since the introduction of this Bill, I appreciate the kindly manner in which the Solicitor General receives suggestions from hon. members on this side of the House; and I believe that if he had had greater power, he would have made the concessions that are required in the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. No better evidence of that can be afforded than the fact that within a few minutes, on the floor of this House, the First Minister states that in order to make this law agreeable to the province of Ontario, in order to do away with some incongruities in the Ontario Act, they will solicit the Government of Ontario to make such changes as will suit that province. Now, I ask the Solicitor General if he would act as kindly towards the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. Will he and the First Minister agree this evening to solicit the Government of New Brunswick to grant us the concessions that we ask in regard to an appeal to the county court? In fact, I think I may appeal also to the Minister of Railways and Canals, who possibly still has some little say in the provincial affairs of New Brunswick. We have heard the Minister of Railways and Canals and the First Minister say that in no case have the people of New Brunswick found fault with the election law of that province. It is true there have not been a great many objections made to it, but that there have been some grievances there is no question. It is said by hon. gentlemen opposite that as that law has been in existence for forty years, it must be held to be satisfactory. The conditions in that province, especially during late years, have been somewhat dissimilar to those of other provinces in which federal politics have been an issue; and I think I am able to inform the Minister of Railways and Canals why the amendment was made to the law of New Brunswick in 1897. I question very much if anybody in the House to-day knows the reason of that beside myself. Occasionally names have been left off the lists, and there has been no right of appeal, as the hon. gentleman knows, by which they can be put on. But it chanced that in the parish of St. Stephen, in 1896, not one single name, but a whole sheet of names was left off the list; and the late lamented Hon. James Mitchell, who was then Premier of the province, took the matter in hand and gave those people the right to the franchise. The people themselves appealed to the sheriff, but he was powerless to do anything for them, and for that reason this amendment was made to the Election Act in New Brunswick to cover the case of those thirty or forty names that had been left off the list. It is evident to me that there have been causes of complaint against the local Act. All the people of New Brunswick want, in fact all the great mass of the voters in this country want, is an honest election law, whatever the politicians may desire. At present in New Brunswick the sheriff has power to revise the list. I have nothing to say against the sheriffs of New Brunswick. The sheriff in my county is a Liberal, but I believe he is a good, clean, straight man. I do not think there is a man in our county who can find any fault with Sheriff Stewart. But the appointments are annual appointments, and no one can tell from year to year who we may have as sheriff the next year. As we have had lately a coalition government, the sheriffs have not had any occasion to take sides in politics. But if this law goes into effect, I think there is not a man in New Brunswick but must admit that it will force the sheriffs to go on party lines, and in such event the appointees of the government, whether the government be Liberal or Conservative, are more than likely to favour their own side. I do not wish to detain the House any further than merely to call attention to that defect in the New Brunswick Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

THE POST OFFICE ACT.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock) moved that the House resolve itself into committee on Bill (No. 110) further to amend the Post Office Act.

Mr. FOSTER. I wanted to ask a question of the Postmaster General, I was just going to say the decapitator general. I asked the question from his colleagues on Friday evening after the hon. gentleman had left, but could not get an answer; in fact, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries stated that he could not give me an answer, or something to that effect. I would like the Postmaster General to give his authority in law for the contemplated change, which he supposed was an absolute change, in the rate of postage between Canada and Great Britain and the British possessions. The hon. gentleman, as I understand, doubled the weight and decreased the rate, and in doing that he made a change, of course, in the revenue, and moreover actually took it upon himself to change the rate of postage. I would like to find out what the hon. gentleman's warrant in law was for so doing.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman asked me the question on the motion for the second reading of this Bill. I stated then, and I think I was correct, and I repeat it now, that this is a Bill not having to do with foreign but with domestic postage, and therefore the inquiry is not germane to this motion. I gave the hon. gentleman an answer on that occasion, and that answer is on record. Further than that, I am not at present in a position to go.

Mr. FOSTER. I must press for an answer to the question with all the power that I have. I do not recollect that the hon. gentleman gave me an answer, certainly, that he gave any definite answer; if he had, I should not have asked the question a second time. The hon. gentleman says that this Bill deals with domestic postage, and therefore declines to answer. But I do not think it is a stretch of the right of a member of this House, in view of the statement which has been made by the Postmaster General of what he proposes to do with reference to foreign postage, to ask that we should have this information in discussing this Bill. I think when the question is asked with respect to the executive action of a member of the Government, the ground on which he took that action is a matter under consideration, and ordinary courtesy, to say nothing of the question of the rights of a member, demand an answer. I must appeal to the hon. gentleman the leader of the Government as to whether I am not to obtain that information.

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman has certainly the right to ask the question, but this question is not germane to the question under consideration. My hon. friend has given a fair answer to the hon. gentleman, in stating that this Bill belonged only to domestic postage. The hon. gentleman asked a question in regard to foreign postage.

Mr. FOSTER. I think I have the right to press for an answer with respect to an executive act by a member of the Government. I asked upon what authority of law the hon. gentleman founded it. I submit that I have a right to an answer to that question.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend has answered it over and over again. He said the question is not germane to the subject under discussion. The subject under discussion is domestic postage, whereas the hon. gentleman asks, where is your authority for having done an act on a certain question. My hon. friend has answered, and the hon. gentleman is well aware that there is another way of proceeding, to put a question on the paper.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I suppose after all this unusual action on the part of a member of the Government having charge of a Bill is significant. The fair conclusion to draw from the attitude of the Postmaster General was that he had not any authority. I suppose that is how the public understand it, in view of the course the hon. gentleman has taken, withdrawing from the position he had assumed and inducing his deputy to manage the retreat for him. He was not equal apparently to that part of the task, and that is the real attitude which the hon. gentleman seems to occupy. It is impossible for him to say that he had any authority to do an act from which he had soon to withdraw and abandon very quickly. But I hope the Prime Minister will not sanction the attitude of a member of the Government in restricting so closely and in such a spirit inquiries concerning public matters. This has to do with the Post Office Department and its revenue, and the Bill now before the House covers that head; it is a Bill to amend the Post Office Act, and it affects the postal revenue and the administration of the post office laws. The question could hardly be ruled out of order, and no question of order has yet been submitted to the Chair. The adoption of such a course as is indicated would preclude criticism from this side of the House. I do not think it would be ruled out of order; certainly my recollection extending over a certain number of years is that no similar case can be mentioned where a member sheltered himself from questions relating to his department by pleading that the particular clause before the House was confined to a particular subject in his department. Hon. members will remember the wide range the discussion on railway subsidies took when the means of carrying elections was debated, and many other cases in which the discussion covered a very wide field, and though perhaps out of order, it was allowed to continue. The hon. Minister has to meet this question sooner or later, and he would be in a better position if he met it at the earliest possible moment.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I spent several hours on it the other day when in Supply.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I have looked over "Hansard" and have here the observations which the hon. Minister made, but they do not cover the point. He did not go into an examination of his legal authority and power. I do not think any statement has been made by the hon. gentleman in that regard, and the country will expect from him a definite statement on this matter, and he should avail himself of the opportunity to submit the best case he can to the people. If he has made a mistake, let him admit it; and if he has bowed to some exigencies, of which the country knows nothing, he should explain the facts.

Mr. FOSTER. I had not the least idea—

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman has already spoken and we are not in committee.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman wishes to raise the question—

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not object to discussion, but we will be in committee within a few moments, and the discussion will come on more properly then.

Mr. FOSTER. When we get into committee, we will be told on every item that we must confine our remarks to the item. I rose with the very best spirit possible to repeat a question which I asked the Government the other night, in the absence of the Postmaster General, and I thought he would have replied to that question.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman has already made a speech, and he cannot make a second speech now.

Mr. FOSTER. I rose to ask a question.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Some observations were made by the hon. gentleman

Mr. FOSTER. A member has to make observations sometimes to make it plain to the Postmaster General

Mr. TAYLOR. On Friday night, when discussing this question, the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Ross Robertson) thought it necessary to eulogize the Postmaster General, and he did so to a very great extent, while at the same time he paid a very doubtful compliment to other members of the Government by stating that the Postmaster General had shown some life in the management of his department. That hon. gentleman apparently had some interest in this little Bill, because he is a newspaper publisher, and this Bill makes provision for postage on newspapers.

I want to ask the Postmaster General why in this Bill he is drawing a zone of 10 miles. I suppose it will take in the constituency he has the honour to represent so that his constituents will receive their papers free. I do not know whether my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Ross Robertson) will benefit by this arrangement or not, but the Postmaster General just now stated to the ex-Minister of Finance that this Bill simply dealt with local postages. While I am strongly in favour of a 2-cent letter rate I do not want it to be made at the expense of the farmers of this country who read newspapers, nor do I want it made at the expense of the rural population who will be deprived of the postal facilities they have enjoyed for many years. The Postmaster General replied to me the other day that during the past year he had closed 169 post offices, nineteen of which had been reopened, leaving 150 that were closed in the rural districts during the year.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. But I added that a great many more had been opened.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Postmaster General added that 250 had been opened, but under the late Government a larger number than 250 were opened every year and very few, if any, were closed. I know that the Marble Rock post office in my constituency served fifty families, but the postmaster was a Conservative and the mail carrier was a Conservative, and the only way the Postmaster General could dispose of them was to close the post office, and he did so. These fifty families have to travel miles to the nearest post office for their mail, and although he gives them a reduction of a cent on their letters, some of them have to spend a whole day going to the post office. I have received two letters from prominent men in my constituency in reference to the postal service the Postmaster General is now giving in that county. Mr. R. Harvey, miller, of Lyndhurst, writes as follows:—

George Taylor, Esq., M.P.

Our people of Ellisville, Long Point and Sweet's Corners are all up in arms about the change of mail routes. It is a shame to withdraw the daily mail from that section. Mail going to these post offices now lays over in Lyndhurst from Friday until Monday. Here are three cheese factories and a well-settled community of intelligent people placed in a worse condition than if they were in the backwoods.

For years these people enjoyed a daily mail but now they have got it only twice a week. On that route where there are four cheese factories and a thickly-settled community, they are worse off for mail service now than if they were in the backwoods. If my hon. friend (Mr. Mulock) is saving a little money in the post office he is saving it by giving the farmers of this country a very poor mail service. Another gentleman from the same place writes me as follows:—

Mr. George Taylor, M.P.

The questions you asked the Postmaster General and the answers you received give me reason to think it might be well to ask the Postmaster General why the people of Lyndhurst, Sweet's Corners, Long Point, Ellisville and Seeley's Bay were deprived of their daily mail, after enjoying this service for one and one-half years, it is a grievance to lose it. This route is thickly populated, with four cheese factories doing a large business—my own factory brought $11,000 into the neighbourhood last year, and it is an average factory. The township clerk resides on this street, and the change deprives him of the use of the daily mail for the township business. The Postmaster General gives us a tri-weekly, which is no use to us, as it comes on the wrong days and starts from the wrong end of the route. Starting from the point of delivery it starts in the morning before the mail of the day has arrived, then we don't receive that day's mail till the next trip, which is sometimes four days old—take from Friday till Monday; in fact, it is the worst mail service that can be invented.

I hear the same complaints from one end of my constituency to the other, and I fancy it is a fair sample of what is taking place throughout the Dominion. We have one mail service coming from Seeley's Bay to Gananoque, leaving there in the morning, meeting the trains at Gananoque and taking the mails back. The Postmaster General, in order to get rid of the Tory who had the contract, changed the service at great inconvenience to the people. If the reduction the Postmaster General is making in the mail service has the same effect throughout Canada as in the constituency I have the honour to represent, then I can say that the saving is in the wrong direction, and the farmers of this country will not appreciate his depriving them of the service which they have enjoyed for many years.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I must join issue with the statement made by the right hon. the leader of the House, that the question asked by my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) was not germane to the subject under discussion. I do not think the right hon. gentleman can have been attending to the debate, or else he would not for a single moment take the position that because this is a measure in reference to domestic postage, the question of inter-Imperial postage does not apply. I will tell the right hon. gentleman why. The Postmaster General has submitted a Bill to this House for the avowed purpose of making a reduction upon the domestic postage in Canada, which he assumes will cause a loss of revenue—if there is no material increase in the number of letters carried—of $650,000 a year, and in connection with the introduction of that message he has been good enough to inform the House that the proposed change which he had been prevented from making by finding that he had not the necessary authority, would have caused a further reduction of $50,000 a year in the postal revenue. If the right hon. gentleman had heard the Postmaster General make to the House that statement which deals with the subject of reducing the postage rate not only in Canada but outside Canada. I cannot believe that he would say that the question of my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) was not entirely germane to the subject under discussion. It is impossible to discuss in a satisfactory manner public questions in this House if hon. gentlemen occupying Cabinet positions assume that this House has not the right, that the humblest member in this House has not a perfect right, to demand the fullest information and explanation in reference to everything that touches the revenues of Canada in connection with the post office or any other department. I would give to my hon. friend another and I think a most conclusive reason why this question is entirely germane to the subject under consideration, and why it is incumbent upon the Postmaster General to enter into the fullest explanation, and that is, he has informed the House that he intended to carry out the object he then had in view and probably to go a good deal further. That was the statement made by the Postmaster General on that question of inter-Imperial postage, the postage between Canada and the other portions of the Empire. I assume that the Government have now had their eyes open to the despotic power which the Postmaster General unfortunately thought he was clothed with, to deal with the question of inter-Imperial postage without consulting his colleagues, without any Order in Council, because he has admitted that he had no Order in Council authorizing him; and it is time that the right hon. gentleman, finding he has colleagues who are so entirely ignorant—I use the word advisedly—of the duties with which they are charged as to commit the Government to these gigantic errors, should give some little attention to this question, and refuse his support to the Postmaster General when he undertakes to tell the House that he will not give them information absolutely necessary to its consideration of the question of postage reduction. In submitting this Bill to the House, the Postmaster General was bound to give the fullest and most complete information as to what he proposed with regard to the postal revenue of the country. Does my right hon. friend sustain the Postmaster General in his contention that he can put his hand into the consolidated revenue of Canada and take out $50,000 a year without the permission of Parliament? I am sure he will give no countenance to so monstrous and unparliamentary a proposition. I am sure he will not say that any member of the Cabinet, or the whole Cabinet, could have any right, particularly when Parliament is in session, to intimate their intention to deal with these large and important questions without any reference to Parliament and absolutely refuse to Parliament the information as to how they propose to deal with them. I am not saying one word as to the policy of the proposal which the Postmaster General undertook to carry out. But I say it is a question for Parliament, and not for the Postmaster General to consider, and that he is bound to consult Parliament and to obtain its support before carrying out any suggestion of that kind. I am sure that my right hon. friend will not say that my hon. friend from York (Mr. Foster) has at all gone outside of his right as a member of this House in asking for the fullest information from the Postmaster General. I regret very much that such an attitude should be assumed by the Government. I am satisfied that no Government, where parliamentary institutions exist, would undertake to maintain such an attitude in the face of Parliament. No man is so deeply interested as the Postmaster General in putting before Parliament at the earliest moment, a full and complete explanation of what he undertook to do but found he had no power to do. He is bound to justify his position on that bench. He has no right to sit on that bench for a single hour in face of his inability to give some reason for the extraordinary proceeding he undertook to carry out. The only thing that can justify hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches in asking for the support of their followers is their ability and readiness to give the most full and frank explanation to this House on matters of importance, the first opportunity they have of doing so. The proper moment to give that information was when the Bill was introduced dealing with the postage question. It is impossible, in dealing with the question of postal revenue and charges to draw a line between foreign and domestic postage. It is a question of the effect on the revenue of the country. Whether the policy proposed is sound and just, I am not going to discuss now, because we have not reached that point. But these hon. gentlemen are bound to give the fullest explanation, when they propose to make a charge upon the consolidated revenue of Canada that does not rest upon it to-day. I am sure my right hon. friend will not disagree with me but will admit that if we are to do the business of Parliament in a creditable manner, we will have to do it upon lines altogether different from those laid down by the Postmaster General.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I do not think there is a feature of the Bill before the House which can possibly commend itself to the approval of the people. The Postmaster General undertook to tell us that he found it necessary to cancel contracts and close post offices in order to reduce expenditure and decrease the deficits in the department. Our experience in the country on these changes brought about by the Postmaster General is that they have been brought about at the cost of the convenience of the people, who look to this mail service being conducted in an efficient manner. We find to-day, in sections of the country where the mail service used to be carried regularly by continual stage lines, the mails carried in two-horse wagons are now carried on a two-wheeled buggy or on horseback or on foot, and broken up into two or three or more separate services. When a service is carried on in that way, it is evident that it cannot be satisfactory. The hon. gentleman now comes before the House and proposes to impose a postage on newspapers. The imposition of a tax on newspapers means a tax on knowledge. Many who now receive newspapers cannot continue to receive them, because the publisher must charge this tax upon the newspapers he distributes and so increase the price to the subscriber. The hon. Postmaster General laid on the Table of the House a statement prepared, as I understand, on the basis of the circulation of the newspapers of this country, and showing the extent to which the newspapers would have to pay postage under this Bill. I was amused, after examining this statement on Friday last, to hear the remarks of the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Ross Robertson). That hon. gentleman publishes a paper in Toronto, the "Telegram." The other papers published in that city of which I took note were the "World," the "News," the "Globe" and the "Mail and Empire." I find that on the basis of the calculation made by the Postmaster General, the "Telegram" would have to pay postage to the extent of $161.46. But the "World" will have to pay $2,304.86; the "News," $2,557; the "Mail and Empire," $3,755. Yet the hon. gentleman from East Toronto praises the hon. Postmaster General for this Bill. It is no wonder the hon. gentleman has words of praise for the Postmaster General for a measure which discriminates in favour of his own paper as I have shown. The effects in some other parts of the country will be as follows: In Nova Scotia, the Halifax "Chronicle" will be affected to the extent of $422; the "Halifax Herald," $437; the "Presbyterian Witness," $63; the "North Sydney Herald," $63; and the "Eastern Chronicle," $48. Coming to Montreal, I find that it will affect the "Star" to the amount of $12,187; "La Presse," $8,269; the "Witness," $2,406; the "Gazette," $602; "La Patrie," $839; the "Herald," $642; "La Minerve," $267. Other newspapers throughout the country will be affected in the same way. The Postmaster General will hardly venture to say that this tax upon publishers will not affect the people. And I am sure that, in the face of this statement, the words of the hon. member for East Toronto will not save the head of the Postmaster General. In the imposition of the tax, I cannot see why special favour should be shown to those people who live within ten miles of the office of publication. This means that the longer it takes the newspaper to reach the subscriber and the older it is when it reaches him, the more he has to pay for it. Those living at a distance from the office of publication will be forced to do without the reading of newspapers in a great many instances. The people who live in cities and towns, where delivery is made at the expense of the people, get their mails delivered at their very door. The poor man who lives 20 miles out in the country will have to pay for the delivery of the mail matter of the wealthy man who resides in the city, though, perhaps, he himself must go three or four miles every time he wishes to mail or receive a letter. For these reasons I cannot support the Bill of the Postmaster General.

I have a word or two to say with regard to another feature—the dead letter feature. If there is any part of the mail service that we should insist upon having properly conducted, secretly and without injustice to the public, it is the dead letter service. At present a letter which is not delivered to the person to whom it is addressed, reaches the hands of a confidential officer in the Post Office Department here, is opened, and, if the writer can be identified, it is returned to him. This Bill proposes to put this machinery in the hands of every Tom, Dick and Harry throughout Canada. Take, for instance, the city of Halifax. There is scarcely a man in Halifax who writes letters but is known to the post office officials there. If a letter is mailed at Halifax which, for insufficient address or other reasons must be treated as a dead letter, it is opened there and by a person who is almost sure to know the writer. What confidence can we have that the duties of this branch are discharged in a confidential way. This letter may find its way into the hands of an official appointed in the same way as some of those to whom we may have had to call attention within the last few days, not recommended by any responsible person. At present, a letter, no matter from what part of Canada it comes, finds its way through the proper channels into the hands of the responsible official at Ottawa. There is no disadvantage in sending it to Ottawa, except the delay, and that is only a few days at most. This feature of the Bill will be most injurious and most unpopular, in fact, there is nothing in the Bill to commend it to the good opinion of anybody in this country. I have not heard anybody say a good word for this Bill except the hon. member for East Toronto, and I have give the House the reasons why that hon. gentleman approved so strongly of that measure. The hon. member for East Toronto praised the Postmaster General in these words:

To be frank, Mr. Speaker, if there is one department of the Government which has shown some signs of life, reform and progress, it is the department presided over by the Postmaster General.

The hon. member, I think, will not find many people in this country who will agree with him. If there is any man in this country charged with the responsibility of conducting the affairs of government, who has given the strongest possible evidence of being an imitation of the bull in a china shop, it is the Postmaster General. Look at the step that was taken by him with regard to the Imperial postage. He went into that question without examining it. Look at the way he deals with contractors, with postmasters, dismissing $10 postmasters because they dare to go to the poll and vote, as he supposes, for some one who is opposed to him in politics. A postmaster is dismissed who keeps his office in the most convenient place in the district, and another one is appointed who keeps his office where the people have to go several miles further. So it is with every part of the work undertaken by the Postmaster General; and I therefore move that the debate be adjourned.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I do not wish to be at all severe with the Postmaster General, but it seems to me a very extraordinary procedure on his part to refuse to reply to the questions which were properly submitted to him, according to the rules of the House, and which are of the greatest possible importance to the country. Now, why is it that in England, as in Canada, the administration is divided into several departments? It is in order that the head of each department, possessing the confidence of the people, may be able to acquire the experience necessary to administer the affairs of his department, and be able to reply to such questions as my hon. friend from York has put to the Postmaster General. We are here for the purpose of obtaining information, and it is impossible, under the constitutional system which obtains in Canada, for the hon. gentleman to sit there and refuse to reply to the question which has been put to him by the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster). Sir, I would ask also how it is that the hon. gentleman should attempt to change, without consulting Parliament, and regardless of the Berne Convention, the rate of foreign postage. I have discussed on a former occasion the terms of the Berne convention, and how the hon. gentleman violated those terms, or proposed to do so, in his famous order, I pointed out to the hon. gentleman that this was a treaty entered into, not by Canada alone, but by all the powers who were parties to that convention, and unless you break the convention in accordance with the procedure indicated therein, it is impossible for the hon. gentleman to attempt—to say nothing of carrying it out—because I knew he could not carry it out—but to attempt to change the postage upon foreign letters. Now, there is much more harm done by the course taken by the hon. gentleman than would appear by those who have not thoroughly gone into the matter. The Postmaster General, finding out his mistake, issued to the postmasters all over the Dominion an order to make up the deficiency which existed as between the rate of the Berne Convention postage and the new rate which the hon. gentleman ordered to be placed upon foreign letters. He knows that the postmasters all over the country have to account to his department, and his department to the Government, and the Government to the country for postage stamps, as postage is a matter affecting the revenue. For instance, a postmaster comes to the department from the country and asks for $100 worth of postage stamps, and he gets them. But what occurred after the hon. gentleman issued his new order breaking up the Berne Convention? The hon. gentleman knows that it was opening the door to any number of frauds. It was impossible for the department to check the postage which was going from that department, and which had to be accounted for by the postmasters throughout the country. For this reason, the hon. gentleman issued an order stating that the deficiency between the 5 cents per ounce (Berne Convention rate), and the 3 cents per half ounce (the Mulock rate), should be made up. Now, how could the hon. gentleman check the amount of postage which the postmasters would choose to call postage, which they paid to make up the deficiency in consequence of the order given by the Postmaster General? Postmasters from the country come and get $100 worth of postage stamps. The Postmaster General, at the end of the month, when the report comes in, says to the postmaster: What has become of the $100 worth of postage stamps which I gave you? They may say we have spent $50 to make up the difference between the letters which should have paid 5 cents and those which were mailed at the rate of 3 cents per half ounce. Those men may not have put a one cent stamp on any letter deficient in postage, and still it is impossible for the hon. gentleman to find out whether they had paid or not, and consequently a man might be able to put $50 in his pocket without the Postmaster General being able to trace it. The hon. Minister has made a mistake, and why should he not admit it. He has made more than one mistake. He made a great mistake in depriving himself of the valuable advice of his deputy, who had been trained almost from childhood up in the Imperial post office, and who knew every branch of the service and every technicality. The hon. Minister wanted to surround himself with political friends, and he did so. I have nothing to say against the present incumbent of the office, except one thing: he was a medical man, who may have been a very excellent doctor, but he knew no more about the great and complicated Post Office Department than if the hon. gentleman had taken a child from the street and put him in there. The old deputy would have prevented the hon. Minister interfering with the Berne Convention, and would have shown him the impossibility of interfering with a signed treaty, which was recognized by the whole civilized world, and he would have told the hon. Minister the danger he was incurring in issuing a personal order telling the postmasters: I have made a mistake, but I am going to let you make up for that mistake by using the money of Canada to put stamps on letters without accounting for them to the country or to the department. That is a point the importance of which cannot be exaggerated. It is impossible for any man who has been so long in Parliament as the hon. gentleman and myself to ignore this fact, that if this policy can prevail, if a Cabinet Minister can issue an order handing over the revenue of Canada without reference to Parliament, the sooner we close these parliamentary halls and allow a committee of hon. gentlemen opposite to run the country, the better it will be, for we will save a large amount of money and obtain as much information as we have secured to-night. The hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster) asked the Postmaster General if he would be good enough to tell him, according to his own light and view, upon what ground he acted when he issued that order. That is a fair question. The hon. Minister should be quite pleased that the hon. member had given him an opportunity of explaining this extraordinary proceeding on his part. But he will not take it in good part; he sits there and will not give any information. Why should not the hon. Minister furnish to Parliament openly and in a manly way full information? The hon. gentleman has found out he made a mistake, and he has made a larger mistake in permitting postmasters, irresponsible to any one except himself, to pay money from the public chest, to use the money of Canada for making up the mistakes which the hon. gentleman has committed. This Bill, I say, is unworkable. The decentralization of the dead letter office will cause more trouble, more annoyance to the public and business men than can be imagined, and it is impossible for me to believe that the hon. gentleman in the large commercial centres, such as Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton and Quebec should allow clerks in the post office to open the correspondence of commercial men, and after reading it return it to the man whom the letter had been addressed. I am making these observations from my sense of duty to the commercial community and the department over which I presided for a good many years. At the present time the dead letter office in Ottawa is presided over by a man who is thoroughly known as being a confidential man and is educated in his branch. He has under him clerks who open letters coming from points from Halifax to British Columbia, and those clerks do not know the people whose names are signed to the letters. But look at the difference between the present system and that proposed. Take the city of Montreal. The postmaster there is not supposed to be a technical man; he takes very little personal interest in the business of the department. Hence half a dozen young clerks would be opening letters from great commercial houses to see whether they should be sent to this or that man. If they are sent to the dead letter office at Ottawa one difficulty at least is avoided: the letters are not placed in the hands of people who know the men connected with the business treated of in the letters. I do not wish to make a motion in this matter, and I do not wish to do more than express my opinion to the Postmaster General that if this Bill had been kept over until next session, when the hon. gentleman and his new deputy would have had time to acquire experience in the department, to take up these questions and deal with them in a practical manner, it would have been a wiser course to have adopted, for hon. members must come to the conclusion that this Bill is unworkable, and I think the Postmaster General should be the first to abandon it.

Mr. FOSTER. I am sorry to be obliged to take up a little time to give reasons why the debate should be adjourned. I cannot understand how any leader of a Government could do a thing so inexpressibly stupid as to stand by one of his colleagues in flatly denying information to a member of this House. I have sat in Parliament a good many years. I have studied parliamentary history, and I have always proceeded on the assumption that the people's representatives had some rights in this deliberative body, that it was one of the bounden duties of the committee, which led and administered for the time being the Government of the country, to give the people's representatives the information which they asked and which they thought should be acquired.

What are we met with to-day? We are met with this position set up by the Postmaster General, and behind him stands the right hon. gentleman who leads the Government: that it is just within the will of the head of a department whether he shall treat a member of Parliament as a human being or not, whether he shall treat him as the representative of electors just as good in point of morals, in point of position and in point of ability, as the hon. member who, for the time being, has the executive charge of a department; whether he shall treat him as having rights in this House, or whether a despotism all the more despicable in this nineteenth century shall be set up by one member of the Government, and shall be displayed towards a free and independent House such as this is, in a country like Canada. I protest against it, Sir, and I state again that I do not see how any leader of a Government could have been led for a moment into doing so expressly stupid a thing as to stand at the back of one of his colleagues in a position of that kind. Now, Sir, what is the position? This hon. gentleman who is Postmaster General seems to think that when any question is asked, or when any information is required, somebody wishes to prod and taunt the person who sits in that seat. Not at all. The person is altogether too insignificant to have so much of the attention of the House drawn to him as that. Fortunately we have a Postmaster Generalship in this House, and it is the Postmaster Generalship that attracts this attention, and if the gentleman who is the Postmaster General for the time being makes the mistake of thinking that everything is directed against him as a person, and does not have to do with the department as a department, it is a mistake that must be condoned in some persons, but it is all the same a mistake and a fault. Now, Sir, I am going to give reasons, and they will be somewhat lengthy, as to why I think this debate should be adjourned. The right hon. gentleman who leads the Government was present the other night, and he heard the debate going along by question and answer, and discussion on this very point that I have asked for information about to-night. Was domestic postage the only thing that was talked of for the four or five hours during which this debate lasted. No, Sir, but cognate with that the whole question of the power of the Postmaster General was discussed, the whole question of his administrative action—no, of his administrative blunder into which a child fifteen years of age should not have been led—was discussed and thoroughly discussed. And both of these subjects went together as cognate subjects, and neither on the part of my right hon. friend who leads the Government, nor on the part of any member of this House, was there any cavil as to whether the House was within its right or not in discussing this question. Why, Sir, here is a gentleman who proposes a tremendously important Bill to this House. When he proposes a Bill to this House, I do not suppose that it is wisdom from on high that has come down and embalmed itself in the two or three clauses of the Act. I suppose it is an emanation from the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) himself and his advisers. But as to his advisers. The hon. gentleman got rid of one of the best of his advisers, one of the oldest of his advisers, a man who knew the post office business of this country from A to Z, by long and practical experience as well as by an apprenticeship which few men in this country have had. But the hon. gentleman who took for the time being the Postmaster Generalship of Canada did not want any peculiar and technical knowledge in his department. A man who was a medical officer in his own county, a man who had supported him strongly, could be pitch-forked right into that position, and because the fiat of such a man as the Postmaster General went forth, could be invested immediately and absolutely, with all the knowledge that was necessary to conduct the Post Office Department of Canada in its relation to all the postal countries in the world. Well, Sir, when this hon. gentleman brings down a Bill I have to remember that he has denuded himself of his best counsel and advice, and so I am not predisposed to take his measure as being the exponent of all the wisdom that is possible in post office matters. Again, Sir, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) has put himself in a false position, a most unenviable position, a most humiliating position, before this House and before this country as an administrator. He pretended to do a thing which he had not the power to do, which he could not do, which he did not do, and which up to this date he has been powerless to do. How do I know but that the same crass lack of knowledge is incorporated in this Bill. I am suspicious that it is. I think it is well that this debate should be adjourned until we should know just all about the sources of information on which was based the executive action, or proposed executive action, of the Postmaster General. What did he propose to do? "I, William Mulock," proposed to do something. The Government of Canada did not propose it. How do I know? I know it from the hon. gentleman's own lips, for he said there was no Order in Council authorizing him. How do I know? I know it because I asked his colleague, the lawyer of the party—outside of my hon. friend the Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick), who is the official lawyer of the party, but is not in the Cabinet, as the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is. I know it because the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, an able man and an able lawyer, had to answer me, that he knew really nothing as to the ground upon which the Postmaster General acted. The same despotic feature ran through all this. Oh, no need of a man who is versed by twenty or thirty years of knowledge in the Post Office Department for advice and counsel. No need of the counsel of the Justice Department of Canada. Am "I, William Mulock," not a lawyer myself? No need of consultation with thirteen gentlemen who might be presumed to be every one of them just as full of knowledge as myself. "I, William Mulock," propose to turn the Postal Convention upside down, and to say what shall be the postage that Canadians shall pay for their letters; to say how much shall be taken away from the revenues of this country, and "I, William Mulock," will do it at my own sweet will. "I, William Mulock," tried to do that, but "I, William Mulock," soon found the length of the tether by which he was bound, and his contemplated action did not take place? Now, Sir, does the right hon. gentleman who leads the Government pretend to tell me that when an official of that kind brings down a proposition to this Parliament, that we have not the right to ask him to explain the blunder he made. Or, if he did not make a blunder, to be kind enough and condescending enough to get off that almighty pedestal that he stands or sits upon so much of the time and condescend to inform poor, weak, frail human creatures like myself and other members of Parliament, as to the ground upon which he did it. Is that a question which should not be asked? Is that a piece of information which we should not have? The leader of a Liberal Government refuses to Parliament an answer to a question as to the administrative action of one of its members; refuses in that high and mighty and airy way as much as to say: What dust are you made of that you should ask a question of that kind from me, William Mulock? So I say, Sir, that before the hon. gentleman is entrusted to go into committee with this proposition he should give us some explanation as to that other proposition which proved so abortive. Why? For another reason, Sir. The hon. gentleman does not propose to make decisive legislation. He proposes to go on and to say that on a certain occasion and under a certain conjunction of the circumstances, "I, William Mulock," may reduce the postage rates from 3 cents to 2 cents. I do not trust you members of Parliament behind me and you members of Parliament on the other side to say when this should come into effect and when the rate should be two cents. Oh, no; "I, William Mulock" am the man who is to state that. And "I, William Mulock" keep that back to some indefinite time, about the time when there is an election, I suppose, in Centre Toronto, about the time that some stress of circumstances, political and in a party sense, arises, whereupon out will come that proclamation, thundered in Bonaerges tones by the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), who is the Postmaster General's locum tenens, in the meantime, to carry out his behests, when this stress of circumstances comes on. On this ground we have a perfect right to know why it is and on what ground it was that the Postmaster General proposed his Act which culminated in a blunder. And the right hon. gentleman who leads this House—a man who has declared that he is a Liberal of the Liberals, after the school of the English Liberals—stands up at the back of this recalcitrant Minister in his refusal to inform Parliament when it requires information. This is more than mortal blood can stand. It is more than the Opposition have bargained for. It is more than a Liberal Government ever should allow; and I am surprised that there is the amount of quietude that there seems to be behind the Government benches on an important matter of principle like this. I had no design at all of entering into this interesting discussion. I had no design other than finding out what the grounds were upon which this was done, but I found a lion in my path, and I must needs give certain arguments yet to show why I think that lion should be removed.

Here is another argument. The hon. gentleman, who to-day is Postmaster General, is a man of fads. He has so demonstrated himself, and I am not certain but that he was just making a bid for effect when he put that proclamation of "I, William Mulock" forth on an admiring public. I recollect the time when that same gentleman used to hunt with the hare and run with the hounds. I recollect when he used to go around the concession lines with the Patrons and declare that every economy the Patron was in favour of, he, William Mulock, was in favour of and much more. I have heard him declare, in the choicest vice-chancellor language, that the Governor General's salary was too big and ought to be made smaller. I have heard that hon. gentleman thunder upon this subject; I have heard him play to the gallery upon it. "I, William Mulock," the apostle of economy, will preach my gospel, not amongst poor men, but in high places, and not even the Queen's representative shall daunt me, William Mulock. I will go right into the vice-regal residence and beard the lion in his lair, and reduce the salary of the highest functionary in the land. "I, William Mulock" for the sake of economy, out of my love for the dear Patrons, and my adhesion to high principle, which have always been and shall always be my high characteristics, will do this. More than that, this hon. gentleman thundered many times against the extravagance of paying Cabinet Ministers $7,000 a year and travelling expenses. He declared that this country ought to be run by Ministers who would be willing to take $4,000 a year—and they would be expensive at that, if they were of the type of "I, William Mulock," so far as the administrative business of this country is concerned.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not think the hon. gentleman should refer always to the hon. Postmaster General by name.

Mr. FOSTER. I am simply making a quotation, and a most excellent quotation.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman made a quotation once from the proclamation issued by the hon. Minister, but he is continually referring to the hon. Minister by name, apart from the quotation.

Mr. FOSTER. And I do not propose that any Speaker in any House shall tell me how often I shall use a quotation.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman should withdraw the expression he has used with regard to the Speaker. He has not the right to refer to the Speaker in any such manner.

Mr. FOSTER. I shall withdraw any expression that grates on your feelings, Sir, but I would always ask you to remember that there are bounds beyond which, even as Speaker, you should not pull up a member.

Mr. MCGREGOR. The hon. gentleman ought to keep himself within bounds.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope my hon. friend will do so and not interrupt. I make the amende honourable to you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, with perfect heartiness, if I have offended what you think is proper parliamentary decorum, but I do hold to the opinion that it is rather hard lines to pull a member up for using a quotation.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I allowed the hon. gentleman several times to make the quotation he did. But now he is applying the name of "William Mulock" to every phase of the political life of the hon. Minister, and I do not think that is in order. I therefore ask the hon. gentleman not to continue using that expression, and I think that, as an old parliamentarian, he will observe my ruling.

Mr. FOSTER. I have always prefaced the words "William Mulock" with the word "I," and would not so far forget myself as to leave out that "I," because I think the three go together in a very intimate sense, and therefore I have quoted them together. There was a time when the hon. gentleman, who is now Postmaster General, thought that Cabinet Ministers would be right rarely well paid if they got $4,000 a year, and if there were a great many less of them. And I think the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) was rather a good seconder to the present Postmaster General on that line and those principles. I shall not go any further in giving the different fads that the Postmaster General, before he became a Minister, held up to the admiring gaze of his friends in the country. All of them I have called fads—why? Because as soon as the hon. gentleman got into a position of power, where he could give life to them, if they were really held as principles, we found him utterly and entirely silent with regard to every one of them. Not a single one has he ventured to put into enactment or call into life since he has become the powerful member of a powerful Government, so that I am led to the conclusion that the attempt of the hon. gentleman to put in force the low postage rate to Great Britain and British possessions was also in the line of playing to the gallery, and that in his desire and haste to play to the gallery he forgot to look at the plainest dictates of the law. What I asked the hon. gentleman was why he proposed such action, the grounds upon which he proposed it. I have gone very carefully over the Post Office Act. I suppose that the Postmaster General is bound by the law as well as every other member of the Administration. I find that in the Post Office Act, as far as I can see it as a layman, it is laid down absolutely what shall be the postage upon letters and parcels and the like in the Dominion. I find that three cents shall be the postage for a letter anywhere in Canada, and I do not find that the Postmaster General, within the bounds of this Act, has any power or authority to say that that postage shall be other than three cents for half an ounce, as the laws lays it down here.

Does the Post Office Act give the Postmaster General the power to change the postage on domestic letters? If so, all I asked was that the Postmaster General should point it out. Does the Act give him the power, of his own motion to change the postage upon letters which go from Canada to Great Britain. I cannot find it within this Act; and I asked the Postmaster General if it exists there that he would kindly point it out. Now, I find that, in the first place, as regards the rate of postage, that this Post Office Act declares what the rates of postage are and, in no case does it give the Postmaster General, so far as I can find out, any authority to vary these rates of postage of his own motion. I find also that, with reference to foreign postage outside of Canada there is this clause:

Notwithstanding anything herein contained, all letters, newspapers and other mailable matter passing by mail between any place in Canada and the United Kingdom, any British possession, or any foreign country, shall be liable to such charges and rates of postage on being posted in Canada, on delivery therein, and be subject to such regulations and conditions as are agreed upon under any arrangement made by the Postmaster General for the transmission, despatch, receipt and delivery of the same, and contained in any regulation made by the Postmaster General in pursuance of such arrangement.

Now, I am not a lawyer, but I take the plain meaning of that to be that the Postmaster General cannot make regulations or fix the rate of postage as between Canada and Great Britain or any foreign country, except in pursuance of an arrangement by himself, as Postmaster General of Canada and representing Canada, with England, with the British possessions, or with the foreign country. Now, Sir, the circumstances point to the fact that there was no arrangement made by the Postmaster General; and the very moment that Great Britain heard that he proposed of his own motion to make a change in the postal rate, that very moment the British Government, through Mr. Chamberlain, and its Post Office Department cried a halt. Now, there are other powers given to the Postmaster General under the Post Office Act. If there is, the Postmaster General can point it out. If it exists, what objection had he to point it out and save this whole discussion? And, if it does not exist, why should he not in a manly way acknowledge it and say, I was a little too hasty; my motives were good, but I based my action on a mistaken idea of the powers I possessed. Now, I asked the Postmaster General if he would bring down a copy of the Berne Convention, and copies of the instructions he sent to the postmasters of Canada when he attempted to put this clause into operation. Is that information that this House ought to have? Is a member outside of his rights when he asks for such information? There was a motion made for it and for all the correspondence with Great Britain as well. But the whole motion was denied because the negotiations, the hon. gentleman said, were still on. That could not cover the instructions the Postmaster General sent to postmasters in Canada which we have a right to see in order that we may know how far they went. Nor does it cover the instructions which cancelled the first instructions. We wish to see how far they went. We wish to see also the instructions to enable postmasters to keep out of difficulties the too confiding letter senders sending insufficiently prepaid letters. We have a right to all this. Does any member of the Government dispute that right? Why are these papers not here when this Bill is being discussed, when, a few days ago, when the discussion was up before, we asked for this information. Will the right hon. gentleman who leads the Government back up the Postmaster General in refusing to give us the instructions he sent, in trying to carry out the arrangement he made, to the postmasters of this country? Amongst those would be instructions with reference to what should be done with unpaid or insufficiently paid letters. I find, with reference to such letters this clause in the Act:

Whenever letters or other mailable matter are posted for places without the limits of Canada, to which stamps for prepayment are affixed of less value than the true rate of postage to which such letters are liable, or when stamps for prepayment are affixed to letters addressed to any places, as aforesaid, for which prepayment cannot be taken in Canada, the Postmaster General may—

And here are his powers. He may do what?

—may forward such letters charged with postage as if no stamp had been thereto affixed; and when any letter or other mailable matter is posted in Canada without prepayment, or insufficiently prepaid, in any case in which prepayment is by this Act made obligatory, the Postmaster General may detain the same and cause it to be returned, when practicable, to the sender.

Is there any other authority for the Postmaster General with reference to insufficiently prepaid letters. If there is, I asked for it. If it exists, why could not the Postmaster General give me the information and save all this discussion? But my opinion is that there is no authority. What did the Postmaster General do? He issued orders to take the revenues of Canada to which he had no right, for which he had no Parliamentary appropriation, for which he had no Governor General's warrant—and they have been pretty easily obtained within the last two or three years—without having any money current or under the statute that he could devote to that object. He absolutely interfered with the moneys of the country, with the postage stamps which are the moneys of the country; just the same, Sir, as if he had been the Finance Minister and had presumed to go down to the printing and engraving office or into the offices of the controller of currency and direct how $200 or $300 worth of these bills should be disposed of. He had no more right to lay his hand on a single postage stamp than he had to lay his hand on a dollar bill issued as part of the currency of the country. That is, I cannot find any clause of the statute under which he had the right. But he did lay his hands on the postage of the country—to a small extent, he says. And he treats it with an air of cynical carelessness. It might be $90 or $100—it was $91, to be exact. But if the Postmaster General, as a member of the Government, could lay his hands on the revenues of the country to the extent of $91, why, Constitutional Government is a myth in this country under the present regime. And the next thing we shall have, when we get a person so minded at the head of the Finance Department—I cannot think such a thing of my hon. and genial looking friend the present Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding)—will be that he will lay hands on the dollar bills and five dollar bills that are the currency of this country. He could do one just as well as the other. Why not? If there is any authority whereby he can dispose of the postage stamps of the country to the extent of a single dollar, any differently than from what I can—that is, go and buy them and then do what he likes with them—why cannot the Postmaster General tell us what his authority is, and save all this discussion?

He refuses to give the information in either the one or the other. Now, if there is any authority—I am speaking now to the Solicitor General, my brother jurist, high enough up in the profession to draw me with him—and I want to ask the Solicitor General if there is any authority for the Postmaster General interfering with the postage of the country, and if there is not, what he proposes, as the legal custodian of the Government, to do about it. Will he prefer a bill of indictment against the Postmaster General? If any clerk were to embezzle $25 of his employer's money, he would be hauled before the court. Will the Solicitor General tell me what difference there is between that and the Postmaster General laying his hands upon the postage stamps of the country and disposing of them as he thinks best? If there is any authority in law, why cannot the Postmaster General tell us where it is to be found? Why should he keep me here speaking, and keep hon. gentlemen listening, when, by a single citation of authority, he could stop all this discussion and satisfy my laudable curiosity, a curiosity in which I propose to persist until I find the reasons and grounds of the action of the Postmaster General in this matter. I say again that it is the right of every member of Parliament to have information with reference to the executive acts of the Government, so far as it is asked reasonably, and I have asked in no other way. I have asked him for the authority for disposing, by his own act, of the postage stamps of this country to the extent of $91—to be exact, as the hon. gentleman says. There are 8,000 post offices in this country. How is he to tell just how many postage stamps have been put to the use of paying the insufficiently prepaid letters which, under his proclamation heralded everywhere, the people were sending for 3 cents per ounce instead of the old rate? What I want to ascertain is the authority of the Postmaster General for interfering with the postage stamps to any amount. He has no more authority over the disposition of the postage stamps than I have. He is the head of his department, and the law is superior to him, and unless the law gives him absolute right to take $91 worth of postage stamps, he has no more right to do it than I have. I want to know from the Solicitor General when he is prepared to bring down that Bill of indemnity in order to get the Postmaster General out of the difficulty which it seems he is in. Now, Sir, finally and lastly, in the sunniest way of conciliation, I appeal to the right hon. gentleman who leads the Government, to put a stop to this despotic policy of the Postmaster General, and to advise him to treat the members of this House as fellow-men, to explain to him that when we ask for information which is within our right, it is the best and quickest way of getting business through to give that information.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am not at all surprised that hon. gentlemen opposite criticise so fiercely the general course of the Postmaster General. If there is any Minister in the Government that deserves the unanimous thanks of the people of this Dominion for the manner in which he has handled the department over which he presides, it is the Postmaster General. When we compare the manner in which that department was handled under the control of hon. gentlemen opposite with the manner in which it is controlled now, it is clearly evident that a masterhand now presides over that department, and that its affairs have been well handled down to this moment. Intimations have been made to this House with regard to the reductions that have been made in contracts that were let by hon. gentlemen opposite, contracts which, when they came to be revealed, were a positive scandal to hon.

Mr. FOSTER.

gentlemen opposite, contracts where mails were let at $25,000 a year and reduced to one-third of the amount; in other cases where they were let for $7,000 a year, and reduced to about one-third the amount. Contracts were given throughout the Dominion to individuals that were the heelers and followers, and servants of hon. gentlemen opposite, in return for services rendered. And now that these contracts have been placed upon an honest and fair basis, let by open competition to the lowest tenderer, and that the department has been cleansed of impurity and extravagance, and placed upon such a creditable basis, it is no wonder that hon. gentleman opposite assail the Postmaster General so fiercely. The ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) has laboured for nearly an hour to extract from the Postmaster General the reason why he took a certain course with regard to a certain matter, and under what authority he acted. He says that the Postmaster General put his hand into the Dominion treasury and extracted $91 of the people's money for an improper purpose. Now, let us go back a little, and look over the history of this country. Let us go back to the time when the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) was Minister of Finance of this Dominion. I remember when this House laboured a whole night we tried, we coaxed, we urged the Minister of Finance of that day to give us an account of the moneys that he had himself spent in England in placing upon the market the last loan that he placed. Still he sat upon his pedestal of dignity, and for hours and hours refused to give us any information, and we have never learned to this day what became of the thousands of dollars he spent when he was there. But to-night he thinks he has got the Postmaster General on a mere paltry sum of $91, and insists that the Postmaster General put his hand into the Dominion chest and extracted and misapplied that money. My hon. friend says that when we sat on this side of the House we urged that there should be a reduction in the salary of Ministers. So we did, because we thought that the Dominion were paying too much for the services that were rendered by the late Government. But now, when we come to consider the improved condition of things in this Dominion, I think the people of this country are of the opinion that the Ministers of the present Government deserve every dollar that is paid to them. Why, Sir, the people would rather pay each one of the Minister $7,000 over again, than allow the hon. gentlemen opposite to take their places.

In view of the fact that our receipts were declining and shrinking, and there were evidences right and left of poverty, $7,000 was an excessive salary to pay each Minister who was so poorly handling the affairs of the country, and bringing about the conditions that prevailed, and $4,000 would have been too much for the country to pay as reaping no advantage from their services. An improved condition has been brought about, particularly in the department presided over by the Postmaster General, and there is not a Minister, I do not exclude even the First Minister, who has merited more fully the thanks and gratitude of the people for his efforts to put the department on an efficient basis than the Postmaster General, who has saved the country $600,000 or $700,000 a year, and who has intimated that if he is spared to conduct the affairs of the department and carry out the reforms instituted he will make the department self-supporting in less than a year and a half. That is why hon. gentlemen opposite are "going for him" so bitterly. They feel that the hon. gentleman has made a record by the reductions he has carried out and the exposures he has made, and they feel moreover that the manner in which he has handed the department is a standing condemnation of the manner in which they handled the departments when in control. The people know, and they are viewing with approbation the efforts made by the Postmaster General and other members of the Cabinet on behalf of the public, and it is not much wonder the ex-Finance Minister worked himself into a frenzy over this matter. The hon. gentleman declared that $91 had been misappropriated; he said the Minister had misappropriated $91. Will the hon. gentleman, even years afterwards, at this late stage, get up in his place and tell us what he did with that money for which he never accounted to this House that he expended in placing a loan on the London market? Will he make that explanation now? It was more than $91, more than $191, more than $291. Where did it go? Did we ever get a voucher for it?

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. McMULLEN. I will take the hon. gentleman's answer with satisfaction now.

Mr. FOSTER. I will tell the hon. gentleman what I will do with him. If he will demand the very same from the leader of the House for the $7,000 given him in the last estimate, or if he will ask the opinion of the present Minister of Trade and Commerce, who sat down on him and some other inquiring minds with the declaration that Minister's expenditures in making loans were not to be inquired into, and bring all these matters out, I will come up to time.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman should remember the adage that people who live in glass houses should not throw stones at their neighbours. The hon. gentleman has had a history that is not by the square and plumb line. He has not followed the principles he has enunciated to-night. If he had a clean sheet, he could perhaps give advice to other men. But who gives him the right to rise and make insinuations and charges. All Ministers are liable to make errors. I do not know whether the Postmaster General made an error or not. I have to say this, that the evidences of ability and statesmanship, the manner in which he handles his department to the satisfaction of the people of the country, the manner in which he has cleaned out that stable of corruption which he found in the department and purged and purified it, and placed it on an economical and proper basis, and is determined to make an earnest endeavour to render it self-sustaining—these facts should offset a little inaccuracy connected with the expenditure of a paltry $91. The ex-Finance Minister has made a great to-do over very little, and if hon. gentlemen opposite think they are going to make an impression on the electors by adopting and pursuing such tactics and causing a row over a miserable matter of this kind, they are very much mistaken.

Mr. BENNETT. To hon. members on this side of the House who have been for some time past anxiously looking forward to the prorogation of the House, it is a matter of deep regret that the senatorship for Ontario has not been filled. So long as the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) is a suppliant for the vacancy which exists, so long may we expect him to come to the rescue of the Postmaster General, because the people of Ontario know the gift of that senatorship lies with the Postmaster General because it is in his district. It is really amusing to the House and must be so to the public to see the contortions, if I may so call them, of the hon. member for North Wellington. It will be remembered that when the Yukon Bill came down there was a vacancy in the Lieutenant-Governorship of the North-west Territories, a position which naturally would be in the gift of the Minister of the Interior, and no hon. gentleman on that side came to the rescue of the hon. Minister more earnestly than did the hon. member for North Wellington. Why, that hon. gentleman was in advance of the Bill being presented, he advising that it should be passed, and he did so while the Minister of Justice in the adjoining Chamber told the Senate that perhaps they might not be expected to pass the Bill then before this House. But the dream of a Lieutenant-Governor's position passed away from the hon. Minister. I do not know what was the objection raised by the Minister of the Interior. Perhaps he thought the hon. gentleman would not with courtly demeanour grace the position, and so he has given it to the hon. gentleman whom we see opposite smiling to-night, and who during the past two weeks has been receiving congratulations from members of the House.

Mr. CAMERON. The hon. gentleman is barking up the wrong tree again.

Mr. BENNETT. I never said it was the member for West Huron. I never imagined that that democrat of democrats would grace such a position, the man who stood in this Parliament for thirty years, who from his place had inquiringly asked who certain gentlemen in the Cabinet were, making it appear that they were utter strangers to him, that they were unfit for their position, and that he, the member for West Huron, should grace one of those positions.

Mr. CAMERON. I never said such a thing.

Mr. BENNETT. It is quite true he never will—it was never intended he should do so. If it is a fact that the hon. member for West Huron is not to be Lieutenant-Governor for the North-west Territories, then a lot of congratulations have been wasted on the hon. gentleman. Whether he is to be Lieutenant-Governor or not, there is one thing certain, and it is that the hon. member for North Wellington is not to be, and now he is not an aspirant for the vacant senatorship in Ontario which practically lies in the hollow of the hand of the Postmaster General. So to-night we hear the remarkable statement of the hon. member for North Wellington that the acts and deeds performed by the Postmaster General should be heralded and applauded. Does the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) applaud the idea that one of the most capable Deputy Ministers in the whole service should be superannuated when at the same time there was another Deputy Postmaster General drawing superannuation allowance. It is a notorious fact to-day that no Government supporter outside of the House will say that he honestly believes that the superannuation of Col. White can be justified. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) tells us to-night that it was right and proper that the efficient postmaster at Kingston should be retired to the superannuation list, and a man his senior in years placed in his position. I could see the gleam of laughter on the faces of hon. gentlemen opposite as the hon. member (Mr. McMullen) thundered away in defence of the Postmaster General, for every one knows that the goal of the ambition of the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen) is the Senate, and that he is after that Ontario vacancy which so many to-day are now in quest of. If the hon. the Premier wishes to curtail discussion in this House, he will relegate the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) to the Upper Chamber. It was not the sum of $91 that was in question to-night, but it was a question of principle, and as we know the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) is a stranger to principle. He called it a paltry sum of $91, and in discussing paltry matters he was entirely at home, for was he not the gentleman who searched through the Auditor General's Report to find the cost of laundry-

ing the towels at Rideau Hall, and denounced the expenditure. Was it not his eagle eye that discovered how many napkins were used in the household of a previous Governor General; was he not always to the fore in discussing paltry and trivial expenditures? I do not wonder that his colleagues laughed at him to-night. Now, Sir, I can see no reason why the Postmaster General should not place the House in possession of the information asked for by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster). The Postmaster General must come down to his position as a servant of the people. He must realize that he is not any higher and mightier than any other member of this House. While the hon. member for North Wellington was speaking of the great value of the present Postmaster General, I noticed the sardonic smiles that floated over the faces of hon. gentlemen opposite, who wondered what train of circumstances had placed that hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) on the front benches, while they have been relegated to the back, and when the Postmaster General was receiving his well merited castigation from the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster), I noticed that it was not relished half so well on this side of the House as it was by some hon. gentlemen on the other side. The questions asked the Postmaster General are pertinent to the administration of his department, and if he wishes to have this Bill passed, if he wishes to have his Estimates passed, if he wishes to have every matter that comes within the purview of his department passed, he cannot expect that it will be approved by this House unless he changes his manner, nor can he expect to receive the same treatment from gentlemen here as they extend to other Ministers, who act in a courteous manner, and whom gentlemen on this side of the House assist rather than retard in the conduct of public business.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) has spoken somewhat feelingly, and in this I cordially agree with him, upon the advisability of having prorogation at some early date. The season is far advancing, and I suppose it is the wish of members on both sides of the House that they may be enabled to give up their attention to public business and return to the management of their private affairs. We are making no progress to-night. Here is a Bill which has for its object the reduction of the postage. I think it is a worthy Bill, but whether gentlemen opposite agree or do not agree with it, I think we might expect from them that they shall discuss the Bill upon its merits. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) refuses to discuss the Bill upon its merits. He has found, as he says, a lion in the path, but I think the expression "lion" is too dignified, because in my opinion he has found nothing greater than a herring which he himself has placed there.

My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) says he will not consent to discuss the Bill on its merits unless my hon. colleague the Postmaster General gives authority as to what was his authority for endeavouring to reduce the inter-Imperial postage rate. If my hon. friend the Postmaster General will agree to give my hon. friend from York (Mr. Foster) the information he wants upon this point, then the lion which he sees in the path will be removed, and he will be disposed to proceed with the Bill. Let me say that my hon. friend from York (Mr. Foster) used rather severe language, which was hardly parliamentary, but I am not disposed to quarrel with him upon that at the present moment. I want to proceed with this measure if possible, and I am disposed to ignore the expressions, more or less eloquent, of which my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) made use. But my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) appears to be of the opinion—and that is all there is in it after all—that he has got my hon. friend the Postmaster General into a corner from which he cannot extricate himself. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) tells us that he has gone through the statute in vain to find the authority which the Postmaster General had for acting as he did when he endeavoured to reduce the inter-Imperial postage, and he (Mr. Foster) appealed to me, in his more sunny ways as he said, to ask my hon. friend (Mr. Mulock) to remember that he had better treat members of this House as human beings. Well, we are all human beings; we are all fallible, and we all have our little errors, and I could only have said to my colleague the Postmaster General that if he finds he has acted without any authority the only thing he could say was: Well, I made a mistake, have had a moment of weakness, and I shall not do it again. That is all I could ask my hon. friend (Mr. Mulock) to say, and if my hon. friend has no authority for his action, he could say that. But to my hon. friend from York (Mr. Foster) I will say this. He endeavoured to speak in grandiloquent terms a moment ago upon the duty of a Government, and above all a Liberal Government, giving information to the House. It is the right and privilege of every member of this House to obtain information from the Government. Nobody denies that; but I would remind my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) that under the parliamentary rules which govern this House, although a member is entitled to have information upon a matter of public interest, that information cannot be obtained unless the member asks for it in the proper time and the proper manner as provided by the rules.

Now, I submit to my hon. friend that in a Bill simply to reduce the postage upon letters and provide another method of levying postage upon newspapers, any question concerning the attempt made by the Postmaster General to reduce the postage upon Imperial matter, is not one that affects it. It is rather late in the session for my hon. friend to move for the information required, but when we are in supply he can ask for it, and no doubt the Postmaster General will then be able to give to him; and he would be within his rights in asking it then, but I do not think he is now. If the Postmaster General is not ready to give the information at this moment, I would suggest to my hon. friend that he should avail himself of the opportunity when we are in Committee of Supply to ask for that information and allow us to proceed with the Bill before us on its merits.

Mr. FOSTER. The object of putting a question on the paper or making a motion, but particularly putting a question upon the notice paper, is that no member of the Government shall be taken unawares. I do not suppose my hon. friend will argue that the Postmaster General has been taken unawares in respect of this question. My right hon. friend must remember that the Postmaster General to-night did not plead inability to give the information, but absolutely and unequivocally refused to give it.

The PRIME MINISTER. I did not so understand him.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not want to press the matter any further than it really went; but if my hon. friend will recollect it as far as it went, he will find that the Postmaster General absolutely refused, and refused, as members of this House think, in an arrogant way to give the information required. My hon. friend knows that we had a notice on the paper calling for all information with reference to this matter, but the Government pleaded that as negotiations were going on, it was impossible to bring down the information. Does my right hon. friend think it is right to press the technical view that if I want that information there is a certain way in which I may get it. Does he not think that in all fairness and for the proper despatch of business, the Postmaster General, who is conversant with the question and has studied it up fairly, should at an opportune time like this, simply give an answer to our question. If the right hon. gentleman or the Postmaster General thinks that I asked that question with the idea of interfering with the progress of business, I say that nothing was farther from my thoughts. I simply wanted the information because I thought we should have it as we were on the subject of the postal rates.

The PRIME MINISTER. Just a word of explanation. We are all liable to see things, perhaps, as they are not and apt to make mistakes. When my hon. friend from York accused the Postmaster General of having given an arrogant answer, I must say that he did my hon. friend an injustice. I am quite sure that the Postmaster General had no intention of giving anything but a simple and courteous answer. He was not ready to give the information at the moment it was asked for, but no one will pretend that in the case of any act done by the Government or any member of the Government, in the discharge of his public duties, the House is not entitled to the fullest information, and if my hon. friend persists in having the information, he is entitled to have it.

Mr. DAVIN. Surely after the discussion we have heard and the very elaborate explanation, the apology, in fact, which the right hon. Prime Minister has made for the Postmaster General, the fittest and most graceful thing that should be done by that hon. gentleman would be to give the explanation which the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) asked for and to which the First Minister admits he is entitled. My right hon. friend, in a very graceful and yet apologetic manner, feeling that the Postmaster General has not got that Chesterfield turn of mind which distinguishes his leader, feeling that the Postmaster General had made a mistake, gave him a very broad hint that he should give the information. Now, the other afternoon, when the Postmaster General was introducing his Bill, I greatly admired him. He developed on that occasion an amount of personal grace and suavity that does not generally belong to him, but an extraordinary transformation took place in the course of an hour or two, for when he came back from dinner, after recess, you would not have recognized in him the kindly graceful member of the Ministry we had to deal with in the afternoon. I would ask the hon. gentleman to revert to the mood in which he was that afternoon. It is the best one to adopt by a man who wants his estimates through or his Bill advanced. I must compliment the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) on the fact that on this occasion he rose to a height of eloquence I never knew him to reach before. As a rule he does not skim along the ground as an orator, nor yet can he be said to soar into the empyrean, but rather keeps that middle flight that a large and well known bird, which is very grateful on our Christmas table, adopts when migrating to the south or north. He keeps the middle flight, as a rule, but to-night, under the influence of whatever motive—whether it was the motive that somebody attributed to him or not, whether it was his ambition glowed at the thought of being able to do what I am told some member of the Upper House do, treat the "hon." before their name, not as if it belonged to the office but as if it belonged to their own personality, and no doubt when my hon. friend goes to the upper House we shall have on his card "the Hon. James McMullen" and that certainly is a thing to fire any one's imagination—to-night I say he rose very high in defending the Postmaster General. But how did he defend him? He absolutely had not a word to say for the Postmaster General, but fell into the very same trick that hon. gentlemen opposite adopt whenever they have to defend any of the indefensible positions they are so perpetually taking up in this House. What do they do, Sir? They cease entirely defending the ramparts behind which they fight, they say not a word for these things of which we accuse them, but they begin to show that something was done by members on this side long ago or in remote years. Why, what has the action of the ex-Finance Minister (Mr. Foster) when he went over to negotiate a loan, to do with the question we are discussing now—whether it is proper for the Postmaster General to spend $91 of the public money as he did? We are asking by what authority he did it, and he takes shelter in ignoble silence. What sort of defence is it then, for the hon. member for North Wellington to say: Years ago, when the ex-Finance Minister went to London to negotiate a loan, he spent some money, and—I submit to your ruling, Mr. Speaker, as to whether this is parliamentary—though I, James McMullen, sitting on the opposite side of the House—but I fear that would be unparliamentary, so I ask the House to imagine that I say that, and I put it in this way: The hon. member says that though, I, the hon. member for North Wellington—James McMullen understood, you know—when I was in Opposition, night after night did exerce the ears of the House of Commons, night after night with unsparring and ruthless hand did I murder the Queen's English in denouncing the ex-Finance Minister, yet I could not extract any information from him about the expenditure of that money any more than one can extract blood from a turnip—to use an elegant figure that, I believe, the hon. member for North Wellington is partial to in his figurative moments. Well, now, the fact that a man so accomplished in parliamentary rhetoric as the hon. member for North Wellington, the bare fact of a man who can run the whole gamut of parliamentary fence, should feel obliged to have recourse to such a pitiful ruse as this, show that the position taken by the Postmaster General is one that cannot be defended for a moment. I will give my hon. friend from North Wellington credit for one thing—I have seen him dare things that no man with only ordinary social courage would venture upon. But to defend squarely the attitude of the Postmaster General is beyond the courage of the hon. member for North Wellington. And take the Prime Minister. Has there ever sat in this Parliament a man who was more ready to rush to the defence of one of his colleagues? Why, that is the cardinal fault in the hon. gentleman, that is the cardinal element in his character that will drive him to ruin and defeat—that he is ready to stand by colleagues that Parliament and the country do not wish him to stand by. Had he abandoned some of his colleagues who have acted in such a way as to forfeit public confidence, he would have stood higher in the public estimation. That is a gallant feature in the hon. gentleman's character, but a Prime Minister can carry gallantry too far. He is ready to stand by colleagues who—to use the language of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) regarding the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair), even after they have been made respectable will not remain respectable. I am using euphuistic language, Mr. Speaker, and not the free language into which the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, in his frank moments occasionally drops. But even the Prime Minister who stands by his colleagues refused to stand by the Postmaster General. He apologized for that hon. gentleman. Spare him now, the hon. gentleman said, and on another occasion the information will be given. It was the language of entreaty, the language of supplication. Let him now go on with his Bill, he said, and I promise that on the occasion of Supply he will give this information. Why is Parliament to be trifled with in this matter? Is this not the time, when the Postmaster General brings forward his Bill, that he should give us an explanation, if he has one, or, if, as the Prime Minister has hinted, he has no explanation, if he is ever to make a confession, he will have to get down on his marrow bones and say: Yes, I made an egregious Minister of myself—I do not use the monosyllabic word that came into my mind, because I remember that I am speaking in Parliament—I made an egregious Minister of myself when I brought forward this proposition. I made a great mistake. I had no authority for what I did. The time will come when the hon. gentleman will have to do that. It will be a great thing if now or at any other time we forced the Postmaster General to do that, because it would be a guarantee to us in the future, that others would not act in the same manner.

Now, I wanted to facilitate the passage of this Bill and to hurry on the session to its close. Therefore, on the second reading, I did not speak. I was asked by a distinguished friend on this side if I was going to speak. I said, No; anything I have to say I can say when the Bill is in committee. But now that I have been forced, by the extraordinary exhibition that has been made on that side of the House, and especially as the Prime Minister has made an apology for his colleague, and, having referred to that, I will say something with regard to this Bill. The hon. Postmaster General in explaining this Bill, argued from the analogy of the United States and England. Well, the hon. gentleman will admit that the analogy of the United States is against him. In fact he did admit, and gave a partial explanation. And as for the analogy of England, where is it? They have to deal there with a dense population whereas ours is relatively a sparse population. So, I do not think he has made a case for his Bill that has been satisfactory to the critical eyes of the country, looking at the effect this Bill has on the revenue. Now, let me say a word on a point which I consider of very great importance, and that is the effect of this Bill on the newspapers of the country. I will appeal to the Postmaster General to spare from the whip of his Bill the whole of the country press.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. What do you mean by the country press?

Mr. DAVIN. I mean the local papers. Take the local papers in Manitoba and the North-west. The local paper is the voice, so to speak, of the public conscience, of the public consciousness of each of the little local centres where the paper is published. As was said by the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Robertson), there cannot be the least doubt that the local paper everywhere fights a hard battle. Some men who publish great papers in Montreal and Toronto, make fortunes out of them, but there is no fortune to be made out of the local paper. The amount the hon. gentleman is going to get is very small, but still the change will seriously hamper and weigh upon the resources of the local press. Now, in regard to the great city papers, I know something about newspapers, and I tell the hon. gentleman that he is going to interfere in an ineffective way with those city newspapers. In the first place, the amount which he is going to charge them is not enough, if he is going to charge them at all. In the next place, many of them, instead of using the mail, will use the express, and there is no balance whatever between the amount that the hon. gentleman is likely to get from the arrangement that he is making, and the amount that he will lose in other directions. Now let me say this, speaking generally of such reforms as the present one. This is on a par with the so-called reform made by the Minister of Finance in regard to the post office savings banks. I am glad to know we have his assurance that he is not going to carry out that policy to its full length, and I hope we will get a statement from the Postmaster General that he is not going to carry out to the full length his policy in regard to newspapers, that is embodied in this Bill. But speaking generally of these reforms, they show a want of sympathy with large portions of the public who may be called the poorer portions; they show a want of sympathy with the working classes, with the men who earn their bread by the sweat of their brow; but on the other hand, they show a sympathy with the rich and powerful who need very little commiseration from this House. If we had a population of thirty or forty millions, the reduction of postage from three to two cents might be a good move. But to compare such a reduction with a reduction to a penny postage, or to a two-penny postage, from sixpence or or sevenpence on letters—why, there is no comparison at all. I shall be only too glad if the Postmaster General finds his department will be paying its way by the first of next January; but I am sadly afraid that his prognostications will prove as foundationless as his assumption of power in the celebrated proclamation, the first line of which has been rung to so much advantage in our ears by the ex-Minister of Finance, and the sound of which, I was sorry to see, had been a little painful to your own auricular sensations.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I listened to the right hon. gentleman, and did not fail to observe that we have had a discussion that might very well have been avoided. The Opposition, however, has a duty to perform, and it was to make as strong a protest as possible against the refusal of a Cabinet Minister in charge of a Post Office Bill to answer questions and give explanations in regard to post office administration. Let me show briefly how indefensible the position of the Postmaster General has been. A large part of the debate that took place at the last stage of this Bill, was over this ground in regard to Imperial postage. The ex-Postmaster General dealt very fully with it. But before he touched the subject, the member for York put this question to the Postmaster General:

I put three questions. The hon. gentleman undertook, as a matter of administration, to do a certain thing some three or four months ago in reference to postage between Canada and Great Britain. He certainly knew the grounds upon which he proposed to act, and I think the House should know them. He knows the actions he took and the instructions he gave, and the House would like to know those actions and those instructions. He certainly bumped up against some difficulty, and the House would like to know what that difficulty was, and whether it is still in the way.

There is a request in plain language for definite information as to how the mistake came about, if it was a mistake, or upon what authority the Postmaster General was going. Now, this is the answer the Postmaster General at the first stage of the debate, vouchsafed to the House:

With regard to the first question, namely, by what authority I acted, I acted by the authority that every Government representing a member of the Postal Union has. That is a point of law subject to interpretation. As to what I did, we decided to reduce the postage to 3 cents per ounce letter between Canada and Great Britain and all the colonies, to take effect on the 1st of January. Steps were taken to announce that reduction.

Now, that answer was ambiguous. The Postmaster General himself will see, upon reflection, that there was very little information given to the House beyond that which had been in the press of the country. The point upon which the Postmaster General was ambiguous was the authority which he presumed that every Government had in taking the action that he wished, in his name, the Canadian Government to take. That is a point of law subject to interpretation. The Postmaster General did not remain in, apparently, to the end of the discussion, and on the conclusion of the speech of the ex-Postmaster General, the member for York, in order to make the matter clearer, said:

I intended to ask the Postmaster General, before he went away, a question, but as he is gone, I will ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who is a lawyer, under what section of the Act does the Postmaster General presume to change the postage that already exists between Canada and Great Britain?

That was made necessary, as the House will see, from the answer which the Postmaster General gave in regard to this subject. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries realized the importance of the question, but took no objection to it whatever, but simply confessed:

I am not conversant with the statute, but I remember it was brought up once.

That is to say, the Minister of Marine, looking at the section of the statute under which the Postmaster General thought he could act, made that statement. To-night it strikes hon. members on this side of the House as a most extraordinary and improper proceeding that when this subject is referred to again, and the Postmaster General happens to be in his seat, he should not be as courteous to the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) as was his colleague.

THE POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is not fair.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am referring to "Hausard," and I suppose I am unfair because the facts put the hon. gentleman in a very unfavourable light, and yet I do not want to put him in a more unfavourable light than the hon. gentleman placed himself.

THE POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think the hon. gentleman misunderstands me. He says that I was discourteous, as the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster), stated. It is customary for hon. gentlemen to so charge me. I think they charge me unfairly. I was so charged to-night, unfairly. I gave a fair reply, and I thought a perfectly courteous answer to the hon. member for York, the same as I am giving to the hon. member for Picton. I cannot help being so charged—I do not intend it, and I did not intend it to-night.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I did not say the hon. gentleman, in his manner, was discourteous—it is not necessary to insinuate anything of the kind—but he gave a firm, flat and stubborn refusal to answer a question that the Minister of Marine would have answered, if he had been able to lay his hand on the statute and the section; and the hon. gentleman, if he wished to treat this House with parliamentary courtesy should have answered that question if he could. For instance, does the hon. gentleman think it is improper for me to put a question, not in the language used by the hon. member for York to-night, for I will let that pass by, and to ask what Act and what section did the hon. Minister consider gave him the power to issue the proclamation that has been referred to? Will the hon. gentleman answer that question?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I must say to the hon. gentleman that he must take the discussion to-night where it was left off the other evening. When I had moved the second reading of the Bill, the hon. member for York, N.B., and the leader of the Opposition both raised the question as to the matter of Imperial postage. I stated then, and I think in as fair a way as I am trying to address the House now, that I did not feel the subject of Imperial postage or any action I had taken or attempted to take was involved, and that the Bill before the House involved two leading propositions: one the reduction of the postage on domestic letters, and the other, imposition of postage on newspapers; but out of respect and in order to be courteous to the hon. gentleman, I gave certain information to the leader of the Opposition, and I endeavoured to give it to the member for York. The hon. member for York asked me three questions, and he subsequently reduced them to one. I answered that one question, and I endeavoured also to satisfy him in regard to the question which the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) is now asking me. I gave my answer and it is reported in "Hansard," and I cannot answer at this stage more than what I stated then. If I am asked the question a hundred times I can only answer it a hundred times, and give no further information, for that is all the information I can give the hon. gentleman now.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I ask the hon. gentleman if he can answer the question which the Minister of Marine said he was not conversant with, that is, the section of the statute under which the Minister assumed that he had power to act in connection with that proclamation?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman, I am sure, is quite aware that the power to vary foreign rates in no way depends on any Canadian statute.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I was not aware of it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The right to vary the foreign rates depends on the spirit and meaning of the Berne Treaty. It is a treaty to which most of the civilized countries of the world are parties, and that treaty is such that all parties to it can make changes as they like. Further, and this does not appear to be known by the ex-Postmaster General, any two countries or any smaller portion of the whole union, may within themselves have a convention. So, under that provision the United States and Canada can by consent, by any form of consent, and it does not require the bringing together of the different countries, vary their own rates. Great Britain and Canada can between themselves vary their rates; Canada and Great Britain have between themselves varied the rates. As regards Newfoundland, I do not know whether the rate is fixed by the union as a whole or by arrangement between Newfoundland and the Dominion of Canada. Now that each country has exclusive right to the ownership of all rates connected within its own territory, there appears no valid or legal objection to any country limiting or varying the outgoing rates of postage, which constitutes its own property, whether the loss may be great or small. Whether that is a proper inference to draw from the treaty is a matter of opinion. The hon. member for York the other night asked for a copy of the Berne Treaty. I am now speaking for the information of that hon. gentleman, who said he had asked me to produce a copy of the Berne Treaty on Friday, and I had not the courtesy to produce it. The House adjourned at fifteen minutes past six, and I proceeded to the department for the express purpose of obtaining a copy of the treaty. The treaty is in French, and is in the custody of the secretary of the department, Mr. LeSueur. The department was closed, and I had to make my arrangements to leave Ottawa at ten o'clock to attend Mr. McCarthy's funeral, and there was no person in my department whom I could get to find Mr. LeSueur to procure the treaty. That is why I did not have the treaty to hand the hon. gentleman after I came here at eight o'clock.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am free to say that if the hon. Minister, three or four hours ago, had been good enough to make the explanation he has offered now, we would have been so much further ahead, and the discussion which has taken place would have been entirely unnecessary and needless. The hon. gentleman has told us where the trouble lies. The question of interpretation is not, as his colleague and perhaps others suppose, connected with the Canadian statute.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If the hon. gentleman will look at the debate of Friday in "Hansard," he will find I expressly stated it was a question of interpretation.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I read that in "Hansard." The trouble arose in regard to an answer to a question put when the hon. Postmaster General was out of the House, and we could not exactly tell where the difficulty in the interpretation occurred. Of course the Minister of Marine was not fully versed in the subject as the Postmaster General would be, and there was some difficulty in connection with the statute. I altogether disagree with the Postmaster General in his opinion as expressed to-night, that he can act under the treaty without regard to the statute. Even if his interpretation of the treaty be right it will be necessary, first that the treaty sanctions the course that he takes, and above all that this Parliament has put him in a position to act. Under no clause of the Post Office Act could he take the course he proposed if the treaty would prevent it, and we have this fact, that acting under the authority conferred on him by the Act and his view of the treaty, he took the course he has explained, but in connection with that he unwisely did not consult others to see whether that course had been upheld by the parties to the Berne Convention, and by the Imperial authorities. The trouble is that the Imperial authorities did not agree with him in the interpretation of that convention. The hon. gentleman, I take it, does not recede from his view, but a power over which he has no control has made it necessary for him to take that course.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I may tell the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) that the question as to whether I am right or wrong is reserved.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I understand.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. And what is more, some of the parties to it have consented to the arrangement. Some of the portions of the Empire are quite prepared to make the arrangement, but we hope to be able to bring in a larger scheme.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I understand, and that is most valuable information. It is information of the greatest interest in connection with the hon. gentleman's department, that although the action was taken prematurely by him he feels sure still that he was right, but nevertheless those not agreeing with him have made it necessary for him to retreat for the time being. Of course those who sympathize with the object the Postmaster General has in view will be delighted if the other parties to this treaty so act as to enable him to carry out his wishes. So far as I am concerned, and so far as this Bill is concerned, the matter can very well stand there.

Mr. MULOCK.

Motion (Mr. McDougall) to adjourn debate negatived.

Motion (The Postmaster General) agreed to, and the House again resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. CLARKE. I would ask the Postmaster General at this stage of the Bill, if he has given the question of the rate of postage on drop letters his consideration. It is a notorious fact, that while it may be contrary to law, there are agencies established in the city of Toronto, and I presume in other centers of population, which will promptly distribute letters for a certain distance at a much smaller rate than now charged by the postal authorities. It seems to me that the enormous increase of business in such a city as Toronto would amply justify the department in reducing the drop letter rate from 2 cents to 1 cent. I would ask the Postmaster General, in view of the fact that a representative delegation waited upon him last fall and that he promised to give this his best consideration; whether he has yet come to a conclusion on the matter. I would also ask the Postmaster General if he has given his attention to the more rapid delivery of letters specially stamped, in the large cities. I believe it is customary elsewhere that when an extra stamp is put on the letter it is expeditiously delivered by couriers or bicyclists. It is a matter that might well engage the attention of the Postmaster General, and I would like to have his opinion upon it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. As to the question of the more rapid delivery of letters specially stamped, I have decided to bring that system into force, if possible, on the 1st of July, and the special stamp to be placed upon such letters is now in the course of preparation.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) will come to my department to-morrow, I will be very glad to have his advice as to the fitness of some of these stamp designs submitted to me.

Mr. MACLEAN. What would the rate be?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It would probably be 10 cents. With regard to the question of reducing the drop letter rate, I have not yet been able to formulate a scheme or to arrive at a conclusion. I have not at all lost sight of the matter but I have felt that the reduction from 3 cents to 2 cents is of more general concern as it applies to rural as well as to city districts, and I thought it more proper to first deal with this general feature of the postage before taking up a matter which is to some extent local. I myself, as a resident of a city, appreciate the fact that the 2 cent rate is regarded as very onerous, and I believe that some large business concerns resort to private delivery because of the drop letter rate being so high. Although I have not arrived at any decision, I will tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) that I have not lost sight of the matter.

Mr. MACLEAN. If the Postmaster General is desirous of making money in his department, he can make more by delivering city letters at one cent than he is now making at the 2-cent rate, because he will find that business men will use the post office to a far greater extent than at present.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. On that point I contemplate having statistics taken, extending over a considerable period of time, so as to ascertain exactly how a change like that is likely to turn out. At present I have no idea what would be the loss to the revenue by the reduction.

Mr. CLARKE. The revenue derived from the Toronto post office is far in excess of the expenditure. There must be a profit of $150,000 to $200,000 in the operation of that office. I am perfectly satisfied that if the drop letter rate were decreased from two cents to one cent, there would be an increase in the revenue, which would more than compensate for the increased outlay necessitated by the large number of letter carriers. It is contrary to the spirit of the time that the rate of postage on drop letters should be so excessive that merchants and others find it more profitable to employ agents, commissioners or boys to distribute their letters from one end of the city to the other. I am credibly informed that in some establishments this distribution is made at an average cost of one cent a letter. In view of the reduction the hon. gentleman has made on the rate for letters distributed generally throughout Canada, he ought to give this matter special attention, and I feel sure business men would substantially appreciate the reduction, and the receipts of the department would substantially appreciate as well.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. While it is quite true that the revenue of the Toronto post office is greatly in excess of the expenditure, it must be borne in mind that the expenses charged against city post offices, or for the matter of that, all post offices, do not show the proportion of expenditure properly chargeable against them. For example, we pay in round numbers $2,000,000 a year to railways, steamboats and couriers for carrying the mails. None of that is apportioned against any of the offices, so that it would be a mistake to suppose that the difference between what is charged in the Estimates as the expenditure and the gross revenue of the postage business gives the accurate result. You would have to apportion against the benefits a proper proportion of the charges for services outside of Toronto, but which earn part of the revenue for Toronto.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. Minister says that about $2,000,000 are paid to railways, steamboats and couriers. How much do the railways get?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. About $1,000,000.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I fully agree with the Postmaster General in what he has said that we should pause before changing the rate of postage on drop letters. The matter came up when I happened to be Postmaster General, and I went into it pretty thoroughly. We could not at that period afford to make the change, however desirable. It must be recollected that in the large cities like Montreal and Toronto we have a delivery which is equal to the delivery in the city of London, Eng. I think the Postmaster General will bear me out in stating that we have got in the Toronto and Montreal a delivery every hour exactly as in the city of London. That is a very great boon to the commercial community, but it costs money, and the Postmaster General will not be able to give these advantages and reduce the postage upon drop letters, at least we could not, within the period of time when the matter was brought under my consideration and when I looked into it with the ardent desire of meeting the views of the commercial community. I am quite sure the Postmaster General is right in stating now that he is not prepared to give an answer to the question put to him as to the reduction from two to one cent on drop letters. The deficiency would be very much more considerable than hon. gentlemen who have not gone into the state of the account would believe.

Mr. MACLEAN. I would like to direct attention to two things. First, the still further improving of the transmission of parcels by post, and second, taking up the question of the state assuming all the telegraph lines of this country. The postal department in the old country has taken over the telegraph lines there, and furnish altogether a much better and cheaper service than before the transfer. I believe the time is fast coming when this country ought to take over the telegraph system and administer it as a portion of the Post Office Department.

Mr. FOSTER. I think that it is a doubtful venture which the hon. gentleman is going to undertake when he reduces the postage from three to two cents at this time. I have always thought that, taking the Dominion of Canada with its long distances and sparse population and the certainty of new openings which are constantly cropping up and which must be served, that we probably have the cheapest postage of any country in the world. My hon. friend seems to contemplate with great equanimity the loss of $650,000 of postal revenue. I do not know whether the Minister of Finance contemplates that loss with the same equanimity or not. I must say that if I were a Minister of Finance, I would not be disposed to look on it with levity. Starting out from the ground that our Canadian postage, taking the distribution of the population in the country, is very cheap, a letter being carried from one end of the country to the other for three cents, I take the other ground that the great mass of the people will have comparatively no alleviation by the reduction from three to two cents. The great mass of the people are not constant letter writers. The heavy letter writing is done by the commercial classes, and is a machinery of commerce, and commerce has always been able to pay reasonably for the machinery which the country puts at its disposal. So that you are not going to give the great mass of the people any boon for which there is a pressing necessity, and you are not relieving, when you take one cent per letter off from the great commercial enterprise of the country, these great enterprises to any considerable degree, and you cannot be charged at present with taxing them too much for the reasonable accommodation you give them.

Now, the Postmaster General must admit that if he is going to make both ends meet with the two-cent postage, which will reduce his revenue by $650,000, he can only do it in two ways. First, he must have a great growth in the number of letters written. Now, that depends very largely on the density of the population. In a country such as Great Britain, if, at one time, they have a 3d. postage rate for carriage over that comparatively small area and with a dense population, and that is reduced to 2d. or to 1d., you will have a rapid increase in the revenue, because of the immense impetus that will be given to letter-writing. But you will not have that in this country to anything like the same extent. It may be said almost absolutely that nobody in Canada who wants to write a letter is deterred by the fact that he has to pay 3 cents postage, nor will the people go into writing letters to a much greater extent because the rate is reduced to 2 cents. The amount put upon the face of a letter to carry it is a mere bagatelle. Therefore, I do not look for a large increase in the postal revenue by reason of a growth in the number of letters written. The other way to reimburse the Post Office Department is by what may be called economy in other branches of the service. These economies are of limited amounts. On the other hand, the call of the people will be, year after year, for increased accommodation. Vast stretches of country are opening up, and these newly opened sections are most expensive to be served by post. You may depend upon it that people will not rest content, if these extensions are refused on being told that the reduction of letter postage is given as a reason. Our agricultural country will also demand better facilities and more frequent transmissions of the mail, and they also will not accept the 2-cent rate as a reason for the refusal of them. They will say it would have been a great deal better to have left the rate at 3 cents and to have sufficient funds to give the accommodation. The hon. gentleman may make economies, or what he calls economies, in reducing the frequency of mails. In some places that are now receiving mails three times a week, he may try to satisfy the people with a delivery twice a week. But will the people be satisfied? I dare say that throughout the length and breadth of the postal service, my hon. friend may find that mails are being delivered three times a week where a delivery twice a week or even once a week would be enough. These instances, I venture to say, are very few indeed. On the other hand, the call from all parts of Canada is for quick transmission of the news, and that quick transmission of news under our system, can only be made by the doubling up the postal service, and that will double the cost. The hon. Postmaster General may make economies also by reducing the amount he pays for the carriage of mails. But I call to witness every representative of a rural district, and ask him to take his own experience, what he knows of the carrying of mails by rural carriers, and say if in nine cases out of ten they are not carried below cost or about cost. The carriers get a little ready money, but they are more out than in, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred. Of course, some of the great contracts are taken up by able carriers, and there may be some little profit in the work. But the majority of country routes are carried at about cost, or even below cost. The Postmaster General will not be able to screw these people down for ever to carrying mails at rates that do not pay them the cost and charges they are put to. Again, in connection with what my hon. friend said a moment ago, there will be a call for a swifter service. The idea of a bicycle service is coming to the front. This will cost money, but the people will demand these improvements, and there is no point in which pressure is more natural or stronger than in respect of the rapid carriage of letters and newspapers. No Government will ever be able to refuse improvements in this respect to the people. And, if there is one service more than another that we must be generous with it is the postal service, and that has always been the policy of Canada. Cut off $650,000, and add on the other side the little you will get out of the newspapers, and you still leave a tremendous hole in your revenue. You will tie the hands of the future Postmasters General and prevent them from giving these improved facilities to the people, or you will burden the finances of the country with an immense deficit for the postal service. The Postmaster General has made calculations and he has made prophecies. His calculations may be correct; it remains to be seen whether his prophecies prove true or not. I am afraid they are too rose-coloured. He must recollect that in times of prosperity—and we have been going on the up grade now for three or four years—there is always an expansion in the postal revenue to a certain extent. The growth of population will be gradual. I am afraid the hon. gentleman is banking too much on that increase and on extraordinary sources of revenue. Why, last year, he received four or five hundred thousand dollars, if I am not mistaken, from the Jubilee issue of stamps. That is an extraordinary revenue which he cannot count upon for another year. The question arises whether the collection of revenue in that way should ever have been perpetrated. It has been done, but certainly it cannot be repeated. So, I say, it strikes me that the Postmaster General is entering on a doubtful course. He evidently regards it as doubtful himself, because he does not make the legislation absolute. He makes it permissive, providing that at such and such a time, if he sees fit, he can reduce the letter postage.

It is not legislation which would lead the House to suppose that now, at a time when we make the legislation, the country is in a position to stand it. Then, if he is going to impose a postage on newspapers, I see no reason why any newspapers should be exempted. Let the postage go fair and square upon all newspapers, with no ten mile zone. If he puts a newspaper postage on, it must be for reasons. If it is because the newspaper business is a business arrangement, and therefore should pay, every newspaper is a business arrangement in one way or another. If it is because he thinks the Post Office Department ought to be reimbursed for carrying newspapers, why, all newspapers are heavy in proportion to their weight, whether they are temperance newspapers or religious or business newspapers. Then, again, what are the moral and religious papers nowadays? Why, your great dailies have their religious parts, their social parts, their scientific parts, and perhaps a wider carriage may be doing even more good than the exclusive religious newspaper, which has a comparatively smaller circulation. On these counts, therefore, it seems to me it would be the part of wisdom to go slow. In this matter of dropping the letter postage, once down you cannot bring it back; it will tend lower down instead of going further up. You never can raise it no matter how great the hiatus may be between your expenditure and your revenue. Then, again, in what position does my hon. friend put our newspapers in competition with those from the United States?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Had you not better wait until you get to that clause?

Mr. FOSTER. It probably might be as well, but I was discussing the whole as a matter of revenue. Whilst you may get some revenue from taxing Canadian newspapers, there is another thing to be considered: Whether you are not interfering with and hampering the business newspapers in Canada that are in competition with business newspapers from across the line and from other foreign countries. Every one of those newspapers that start from the United States under lessened rates of postage must be carried in this country.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They are not carried under less rates.

Mr. FOSTER. They are carried under the rates that are given in the United States.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know what the hon. gentleman means by lesser rates.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend does not charge anything for carrying those in Canada.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, we do; we carry American papers, and they carry our papers. We perform a service for them, and they perform a service for us. We do not charge anything for carrying American letters in Canada, because they carry Canadian letters throughout the United States.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend will see that newspaper work is a business, and that letters do not come under that category. The man who is publishing a family newspaper in Canada will have to pay postage upon it, whilst family papers that come in from the United States and compete with him, are carried free because this country gets nothing for carrying them.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They pay 1 cent a pound.

Mr. FOSTER. Where?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In the United States.

Mr. FOSTER. But they do not pay anything more from this extra toll the hon. gentleman is putting upon Canadian newspapers. I argue that, as compared with the position to-day, when you put a postage upon Canadian newspapers, you are handicapping the Canadian newspaper business to that extent in competition with its rivals from abroad. That may be a very serious handicap, and it may have a wider range than my hon. friend thinks. It may affect the employment and business of this country to a large extent. I am somewhat in sympathy with the idea that a newspaper ought to pay for its cost as it goes through the mail. I do not see why a paper, which is a business venture, which is full of advertising work, should not pay its cost of carriage in this country, at least. There is a large sentiment in favour of having newspapers go free as a means of diffusing knowledge, but I think that the business view ought to be taken into account as well, and these are really business ventures. The question is whether more is being charged on the newspapers than will actually cover the cost of carrying them. These are the few strictures that I wished to make upon the Bill—I did not speak upon the second reading—and it is with a view of calling attention to the fact that the argument is not all on one side in this matter, that I have made these remarks.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. I would call the attention of the Postmaster General to the fact that a large proportion of the American newspapers that enter this country come by express, and that a proportion of these papers are re-mailed in this country. Do they not pay a rate per pound?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, if re-mailed.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. They pay one cent per pound in the United States when mailed to Canada, and many of those that come from the United States are re-mailed. One of the largest news companies in Toronto re-mails American and British newspapers, and on these they pay a cent a pound.

Mr. ELLIS. That applies also to our own papers, if they are re-mailed, as the hon. gentleman terms it. He is speaking of papers that are mailed, not re-mailed. But if you re-mail a Canadian newspaper, you pay postage just the same.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. The application is not the same. There is a large number of papers re-mailed that enter this country from the United States by express and by post; they are re-mailed by large institutions like the Toronto News Company.

Mr. ELLIS. Then those papers are mailed for the first time. The hon. gentleman is using a phrase which is not correct.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think the class of foreign papers mailed in Canada have to pay 4 cents a pound, or one cent for four ounces. There are three classes of rates on papers: There is a rate of 1 cent a pound on Canadian publications, but not posted at point of publication. Then, there are free papers, being posted at the point of publication. Then the 4 cents per pound and 1 cent for four ounces on papers not published in Canada.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. The expression "re-mailing" is perfectly correct. There are a large number of papers that come from England by post that are re-mailed in this country.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The argument does not apply to the present case in Canada. The only way in which papers can be circulated without paying postage, is when they are sent from the place of publication. If newspapers are sent from the United States through an express company, and are circulated in Canada, naturally they have to pay postage. When the postage was abolished on newspapers, it was on the condition that those papers would be sent abroad to the public from the place where they were published.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. WALLACE. I think that the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) was a little too anxious about this 2 cent postage. I do not believe that we are going to have any 2 cent postage. It is not proposed to have it definitely, but the Postmaster General is to take the power so that when it suits his convenience, or when any little fake business springs up like that pretended reduction of postage to Great Britain just before by-elections, or some important political crisis comes along, then the Postmaster General can make a declaration and cancel it after the election is over. I do not think we should take this question of a reduction from 3 cents to 2 cents very seriously. If we did, we should give a great deal more consideration, and the Postmaster General should give more consideration than has been given to it and more information than the hon. gentleman has condescended to give to the House in relation to this matter. The hon. gentleman proposes to wipe out $650,000 of the revenue. He has given the House a lot of figures, one-sided and incomplete, of the business of the United States, showing the income from year to year had increased. But the population and business have likewise increased. The hon. gentleman, however, did not tell us of the financial feature of the 2-cent postage from 1887 to 1897, that there was a deficit of more than $12,000,000 in the United States of America. We are now starting in with a deficit. But the hon. gentleman has told us he will reduce it. I venture to say it will only be a temporary reduction. The sale of Jubilee stamps and other sales have brought the revenue and expenditure nearer to a parity. The proposal to strike off $650,000 of revenue is one which the ex-Minister of Finance has properly characterized. We contribute liberally to the revenues of the post office and enable the department to open up post offices in new settlements and establish a daily instead of weekly mails; but under the policy of the hon. gentleman the expansion of the postal system will be paralyzed in this country for many years to come. The hon. Postmaster General has stated that by 1899 the revenue will meet the expenditure under a 3-cent postage. We do not want William Mulock to order that this shall be done. We wish Parliament to say when a reduction from 3 and 2 cents is to go into force. This power rests with Parliament, which should not hand it over to an irresponsible Minister, whose judgment has not proved to be good in the past. In regard to the absurd proposal to put postage on newspapers, I remind the House that the hon. the Postmaster General stated the other night that the circulations of newspapers were getting enormous and intolerable, and unless a check was imposed on newspapers they would become very onerous. The hon. gentleman should be glad of the enlightenment and progress manifested by the people. He should be delighted to know of the progress of the country, that intelligence has increased and newspaper circulations increased. But the hon. Minister says that this advance must be checked, and he proposes to do it. He says that the publishers of newspapers should bear a full share of the burdens of the department. If that is the conclusion at which he has arrived, why does he not propose to carry it out? He states that the expenditure last year was $4,800,000 in the Post Office Department, and that $2,400,000 was incurred on account of newspapers. Does the hon. gentleman propose that this sum should be recouped to the department by the newspapers? No; he proposes to impose postage amounting to $82,000, but making a reduction for newspapers circulating within ten miles he allows 21 per cent, reducing the net revenue from this source to $65,000. So with a total expenditure of $2,400,000 he proposes to meet it by imposing a tax on newspapers from which he will receive $65,000, and thus he proposes also to meet the deficit of $650,000 for loss of revenue as between 3 cent and 2-cent letter postage. I do not believe this proposed newspaper tax is a proper one under the present conditions. Parliament decided about a dozen years ago to have free transmission of newspapers through the mails, and that system has worked satisfactorily.

Even the figures mourned over by the Postmaster General would have caused a statesman to be glad because they indicate the intellectual progress of the people. Another serious objection to this Bill is that it discriminates in favour of American newspapers and against Canadian newspapers. It should be so arranged that Canadian literature would be freely distributed among our Canadian people, but this Bill proposes to give a greater advantage to United States papers than they now possess. I would give them less. To-day we have free circulation for our own papers, and we circulate the American papers, too, and the Postmaster General says there is reciprocity in that. There is no reciprocity practically. While the advantage is mutual with regard to the letters the argument is entirely all the other way in the case of newspapers, because more than ten United States newspapers circulate in Canada for the one Canadian paper that circulates in the United States. It is a jug-handled policy and eminently unfair when applied to newspapers. The United States newspapers pay in the United States, but they do not pay Canada one farthing and they have the free use of our mail service for their circulation. Our Canadian newspapers are circulating loyal literature and literature in the interest of Canada, but by this Bill there is a tax placed on the Canadian newspaper while the American newspaper goes free from any point in the United States to any point in the Dominion. That clause of the Bill should be struck out; there has been no demand for it, and there is no necessity for it. We are obliged to have machinery for the conveyance of letters through the mails, and if there was not a newspaper circulated through the mails in Canada we would still have to maintain our mail service. The circulation of our newspapers requires only a little additional work and accommodation. This Bill is doing no good, it is creating dissatisfaction, it is unfair to the Canadian newspaper in competition with the American newspaper, and it should be hung up for a year or for an indefinite period. The Postmaster General comes here with a flourish of trumpets and announces that he is going to make a number of changes, but he is simply turning the Post Office Department upside down without doing any good to the people. We may fairly ask the Postmaster General to stay his hand as he was obliged to do in the case of the reduction on inter-Imperial postage. I suppose there never was a more flagrant case of a member of the Government telling us as he did the other night, that this was not the act of Government but was done on his own sweet will, without probably his even asking the consent of the Premier or the other members of the Government. He proposed by that one measure to reduce the revenues of the country by $50,000 a year, something that no Minister or no Government ever before attempted without the consent of Parliament. This Parliament and this Parliament alone has the power to impose and remit taxes. No decree of the Postmaster General sitting in his office and thinking he is ruling the universe by his proclamations could do what the Postmaster General intended should be done in that case. This whole Bill is in line with that proclamation; it is absurd from beginning to end. The first section says that the postage on letters within Canada shall be reduced from three cents to two cents, but it is only a pretense. It does not say that this shall be the law when the Governor General assents to the Bill. Unlike the section with regard to the postage of newspapers, it is not to become law at a fixed date, but it will become law when political exigencies may require it, just as in the Centre Toronto election when the Postmaster General authorized the Minister of Customs to announce in his usual silvery tones, that there would be a reduction in the inter-Imperial postage rate. The second clause of this Bill is an absurd one to commence with. It imposes a tax where we had no tax before, and when the necessity of that tax has not been made apparent to the House. It is onerous, it is worrying, and it will bring in very little revenue. It is not bringing in one tithe of what the Minister himself says the cost of handling this portion of the Post Office Department amounts to, so that the first and second clauses should be struck out. The third clause, which is for books for the use of the blind, might remain. The dead letter proposal is another equally absurd clause. The only clause I can see that should be retained is that providing that books for the use of the blind shall be free from Canada postage, under such regulations as from time to time may be made in that respect by the Postmaster General. That should be the whole Bill.

Mr. MACLEAN. As a newspaper publisher, I am willing to pay my share of the postage tax, if Parliament so determines, but I wish to have the same treatment meted out to every newspaper in the country. I do not believe in discriminating against the large morning dailies in favour of the weekly or religious papers. There ought to be fair treatment all round, and I call upon the Postmaster General to give us that equal treatment. With regard to this matter of the Order in Council, I object to the Government taking power to put this law into force whenever they like. They might do so purely for the purpose of carrying a by-election. They ought to come down with their statistics, and show how much the real cost of the post office is and what the revenue is, and then leave Parliament to pass an Act to reduce the postage, if the condition of things warrants a reduction. But the Government by this Bill say that on some future occasion, if they find things satisfactory, they will put it into force. That is not in accord with the true principle of British legislation or Canadian legislation. Something was said about this proposal being in favour of American newspapers, and there is a great deal to be said in support of that contention. It is a fact now that American newspapers are becoming the rivals of Canadian newspapers in a way never dreamt of before. The whole of Canada is now threatened with being flooded by cheap newspapers from the United States which ridicule the British system of Government and praise American institutions to the detriment of our own. The yellow journals of the States are now sold on the streets of Toronto at nine o'clock every night. They do not go through the post office, but if they did I am sufficiently of a nationalist to say that Parliament ought to deal with what threatens to become a very serious evil, namely, the preference given by our laws in many directions to the distribution and circulation of American newspapers in the country. I am willing to pay my share of the postage tax but on the condition that every publisher is treated in the same way. There are three or four papers in Toronto and as many more in Montreal who would bear the great portion of the tax.

Mr. RICHARDSON. What about Winnipeg?

Mr. MACLEAN. They will suffer in the same way. It is not fair to tax a business simply because it happens to be a large business concern. We have a Liberal Government, the members and supporters of which have been preaching for years no discrimination, and yet here is a proposal to discriminate in favour of weeklies and religious papers.

Mr. POWELL. When this matter was up for discussion the other evening, the Postmaster General gave us some interesting statistics, which furnish food for thought. At the same time, I do not think he went into these statistics just as fully as he should. The histories of postal arrangements in different countries all show that as a general rule, the reduction of the postage has not met with a permanent loss of revenue. It is equally true that people who look into these matters have settled down to the fact that the limit to the rule is about three cents on a letter; and when in the United States there was a decrease in their postal revenues, a few years ago, consequent upon the reduction of the postage from 3 cents to 2 cents; that result was according to the United States statisticians, due to the fact, that the limit had been reached and the rule had ceased to operate. I would call the hon. gentleman's attention to a comparison between the United States and ourselves. In the United States, in 1884, according to the statistics which the hon. gentleman gave us, the postal revenue was about $43,000,000. At that time a reduction in the rate was made. In 1887, the revenue increased to $48,000,000. If the Postmaster General will examine the statistics of Canada during the same years, he will find this striking fact, that if you add to the increase in Canada a proportionate allowance for their greater increase of population in the United States as compared with Canada, the increase in revenue there is less than the increase of revenue in Canada? That shows the hon. gentleman is not likely to reap the increase of revenue he anticipates. Why it is I do not know nor does anybody else, but it is evident that a three-cent rate is the limit of the operation of the rule if increased revenue from decreased rates. If he has reached the limit, the action of the Government is unjustifiable for two reasons. It is unjustifiable as respects the reduction on letters, and, in the second place, as regards the imposition of a tax on newspapers. It is universally admitted by every one who has studied the question, it is a universal canon of political philosophy—and no man would be more familiar with that than the learned Chancellor of the University of Toronto—that the correct principle of taxation is to impose the burden according to the ability to pay. It is universally recognized throughout the civilized world that there is no better index of the financial progress of a nation than the returns of its postal arrangements, and consequently the imposition of postage is a burden which bears on the people according to their ability.

If that be true, and it is true, what is the result? By lessening the tax, if you can call it a tax, we are reducing the burden on the rich man and in all probability shifting it to the shoulders of the poor. As an illustration, I had occasion, about three or four months ago to inquire into the postal revenue of one of the largest centres in the county of Westmoreland. It turned out that six people or firms paid much more than half the total revenue of the place. If we are reducing the cost of the transportation of letters, that amount must be made up from the consolidated fund or some other source, which simply means that we are making an inequitable distribution of the tax where we had an equitable distribution before—if we may call these postal rates a tax. Coming down to the question of the newspapers, what do we find? It does not make any difference how rich a man is, one or two newspapers satisfy him, and he must be very poor if he does not want one newspaper. You are violating here one of the first canons of taxation; taxes should be imposed according to the ability to pay. The Postmaster General says that it is inequitable that newspapers should be carried free. At first blush that seems perfectly sound; it seems fair that if newspapers are carried by means of the postal facilities afforded by the country, they should contribute towards the maintenance of the postal facilities. But that is a very misleading proposition, and misleading for this reason—that if we, the people of Canada are putting money in our own pockets in that way we are not doing it in some other way, and if we are not doing it in that way, we are doing it in another way. If we do not pay into the consolidated fund by taxing newspapers, we pay it in some other way. And by doing it as the Postmaster General proposes you violate the wholesome rule of government that you should distribute the burden according to the ability to bear. And if the burden of this tax—calling it a tax—is to be put upon the subscribers and not upon the publisher, you come in conflict with another very important rule, not a financial rule but more important, as there are more important considerations in this country than financial considerations. There can be no greater considerations than the enlightenment of the people. If you tax the newspaper, it may not be a matter of importance to the members of Parliament, but it is an important thing to people in the back settlements, and they are the people who most read the papers. And an increase in the price of their paper to them means a great deal, or they think it does. For this reason, I would vote against the passing of the Bill, with the exception of the clause, which I agree with my hon. friend from West York (Mr. Wallace) is a very good one—that relating to the case of the blind. This is not a case of the blind leading the blind and both falling into the ditch, but of the blind leading the blind and both going on terra firma. The Postmaster General, throughout this legislation, has certainly shown a special aptitude for blundering, and he must not feel sore if that aptitude has been the occasion of attack from this side. If he will amend the Bill, and the best way to amend it is to throw it out except those provisions that are really of an eleemosynary character, he could win more general support for it.

Mr. HUGHES. I do not intend to offer captious criticism of the Bill, but as we are discussing the clause generally, I would like to call attention to the provision for this ten-mile zone. In thickly-settled districts the ten-mile limit would cover the range of the ordinary country newspaper, which is what the hon. Postmaster General desires. But in sparsely-settled districts, which, I think should be regarded as most entitled to consideration, a limit of ten miles would not be of nearly so much benefit as a limit of five miles would be in many other districts. I have taken the liberty of explaining this matter to the Postmaster General. If he is determined to press on the clauses of this Bill—I would be very much pleased to see him withdraw it, for the session at any rate, and I think by the time another session comes around, second thoughts would have given him a great many new ideas—I think that it will be an injustice to the papers published in districts that are not so thickly settled as the frontier districts. That limit should be extended very materially and a greater radius than ten miles allowed. Now, as to newspapers from the United States re-mailed from Toronto, while some come in that way, they are not one per cent of the newspapers coming from the United States which drive a certain number of Canadian papers out of circulation. I am aware of this fact, because I have taken magazines and papers published in the United States, and used to get them forwarded by the booksellers. But in order to save the postage in Canada, the suggestion was made that they should be mailed direct from the office of publication and expense thus saved. These papers come in by express very often. Papers from Toronto also are frequently sent by express or even freight, being carried in the baggage cars and dumped off at the stations along the line and thus distributed through the country. So this proposal will not affect the large newspapers. For instance the Toronto "Evening Telegram" will not be injured by this law. I have reason to believe that, in fact, it will be very largely benefited. These newspapers are sent out by express to the country towns. The country newspapers would really be killed off and the rural districts would be left at the mercy—of course at the tender mercies of the city papers. I would ask the Postmaster General—I do not know whether or not he has the figures here—what is the cost of running the mail service, say on one line between Toronto and Montreal?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes) mean the amount paid to one railway?

Mr. HUGHES. Yes.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Twenty-five thousand dollars a year, I think, is paid to the Grand Trunk Railway for one postal car alone. I think that the rule is $160 per running mile paid on the Canadian Pacific Railway main line between Montreal and Toronto, but there are different rates for different lines according to the supposed amount of service performed. I do not vouch for the accuracy of the amounts I have given, for I speak from memory. I may say the rate from Carleton Junction to Ottawa, over the Canadian Pacific Railway, is $320 per mile, per year, a very high rate indeed and one that will properly stand reducing, I think.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Before the clause is adopted, I would like to say a word. Being a newspaper publisher myself, and connected with a paper which has a large circulation in the province of Manitoba and the North-west, the tax will fall very heavily upon us. On that account I would not like to offer any opposition to the Bill, because my position might be ascribed to personal motives. But I may say that it seems to me that this proposal with regard to the ten-mile zone should be withdrawn.

I think the papers throughout the Dominion ought to be put exactly upon the same basis. So far as I am personally concerned, I would not offer any opposition to paying postage on papers that are sent out of the country; though I must confess that in view of the fact that a policy has been adopted for many years of free postage to newspapers, it is certainly a hardship on the newspaper proprietors. In consequence of the reduction of postage the proprietors reduced the price of their papers, and at present newspapers are sold at the very lowest possible price, and it will be impossible for the publishers to raise the price to subscribers. In view of that fact the loss will fall entirely upon the newspaper publishers, and not upon the general public. With regard to carrying religious papers free, I think that is a mistake.

Mr. HUGHES.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is only proposed to carry weekly papers within the limit of the zone.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The Bill does not so provide.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have an amendment on that point.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I gathered from the remarks of one hon. member that the intention was to carry religious papers free. I think, of course, that they should pay postage as well as others, because they are commercial enterprises, and make money out of advertising.

Mr. ELLIS. As a newspaper proprietor, I am indifferent entirely to the question of the tax, but as a matter of policy I think it is very objectionable. The Conservative party may fairly argue that it was they who brought in a measure to carry newspapers free of postage throughout the country, and now the Liberal party are going to impose a tax. Well, if I were a Conservative I could easily show that nothing has been a greater benefit to the press of the country than taking off the postage. They might fairly claim that the vast improvement which has taken place in the press of this country for the past 15 years is due to the fact that they gave increased facilities for circulation to the newspapers in this way, and there is no question that the newspaper press of Canada has made wonderful progress during the last 15 years. While a weekly paper may not seem of great importance to a man living in the city, yet these weekly papers have done a tremendous amount of good work for the people. They are circulated in the most remote parts of the country, and are an important means of educating the people, and keeping them in touch with public affairs. More than that, the weekly press of this country has furnished to the daily press in the large cities some of the brightest men in the newspaper profession; and the newspaper profession in Canada has furnished the press of the United States with some exceedingly able and capable men. Moreover, in our literature in every department, in science, in morals, in art, the weekly newspaper has contributed men capable of dealing with all these subjects. Now, there is another consideration that I may mention. There has been no demand whatever for this change. It might be readily argued that the newspapers, being in the hands of newspaper men, would not have hesitated to ask for this change if they had desired it. If there were any demand for such legislation as this, it would be made at the hustings, we would have heard of it in our political canvasses, but we have heard nothing of it at all. I am in accord with the view that the newspapers should pay the cost of their transmission through the mails, and that would be all right if that had been the policy, and it was now being continued. I contend that the Liberal party is making a great mistake in putting this tax upon newspapers at the present time. Of course we will have to take the responsibility for it. I presume if it came to a vote, I would have to vote for it, or else not vote at all, on the ground that I am personally interested in the question. But I wish the Postmaster General could have seen the matter in a different light. I know it is claimed that at certain seasons of the year some newspapers load up the mails with special editions of various kinds, and thus cause a great deal of extra labour to the post office officials. I know that in the Post Office Department there is a feeling against the press just because it gives them so much trouble. I think the enterprise which some of these papers display on occasions such as the Queen's Birthday, the 1st of July, Christmas, and so on, is a most creditable thing to the press of the country. We know that many poor people in the country, who are not able to spend a dollar in little decorations, are yet able to buy 25 cents worth of these illustrated newspapers published at certain seasons of the year, with which they decorate their little homes. I think this tax will have the effect, at any rate, of repressing that enterprise to a considerable extent. I presume the Postmaster General cannot be influenced in this action by a desire to get revenue. That is quite apparent, because it is illogical to suppose that while he is taking revenue off letters he is seeking to make it up by putting a tax on newspapers. Therefore I must attribute the move to the hostility of the officials of the department to the press.

Mr. GILLIES. Can the Postmaster General tell us how the subsidy paid by the Government of Canada to railways for the carriage of the mails compares mile for mile with that paid by the United States Government?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It would be impossible for me to give minute statistics, because there is no general scale, either in Canada or the United States. The rate varies over different railways, according to circumstances. I can only say that the general opinion prevails in the United States, except in railway circles, that the railway companies in the United States are enormously overpaid, and I should think it a most unfortunate thing for Canada if the rates obtaining in the United States were regarded as a precedent to be followed in Canada.

Mr. GILLIES. If the rates paid in the two countries were somewhat alike, I should say that the reduction the Minister is making by this Bill would be a most unfortunate move. Having looked carefully into this Bill, I must say that there is nothing in it that commends itself to my mind.

A question of this kind that affects the people so universally as does any subject connected with the Post Office Department, permeating every rank of life and going into the utmost corners of the Dominion, should be approached in a non-partisan spirit. That is the spirit I desire to bring to bear upon the discussion of this question, and it is the spirit I have exercised when examining its principle and provisions in detail. I fail to see there has been any public demand for this reduction, and that the Postmaster General put forth any argument whatever to sustain him in asking that this Bill be carried through, when it involves a loss admittedly of $640,000 annually to the postal revenue. If the department loses this sum, it must obviously be made up from some other source, and the hon. member for Westmoreland correctly laid down the principle when he said that taxation should be imposed in the way by which it could be most easily paid. It is apparent that with this loss of revenue the service of the department must suffer, and that post offices in remote sections will be lopped off on the ground of economy. The people will suffer, and the circulation of intelligence will be diminished. The Postmaster General in trying to make an argument by instituting a comparison with the United States, landed in a most unfortunate position. In 1883, the reduction from 3 cents to 2 cents was made in the adjoining country. From that time there has been an annual deficit, the amount for the year ending 30th July, 1897, being $11,400,000. The year before the reduction was made there was a surplus to the credit of the department of over $2,000,000. The committee will see that if the United States suffered to that extent by the reduction, and the Postmaster General is not able to give us a comparison of the railway rates charged, Canada must have a larger deficit proportionately. This must follow owing to the conditions of the country. The United States and Canada have each territory covering about 3,600,000 square miles. In the states there are 75,000,000 of people, whereas in Canada, with a like territory, there are only 5,000,000. The cost of transportation to supply our 5,000,000 is almost equal to that necessary to supply the 75,000,000, and if the United States have a deficit in one year of $11,400,000, it is quite clear Canada must have a larger deficit in proportion. The Postmaster General further endeavoured to sustain his position by instituting a comparison between the conditions in Canada and in Great Britain in 1841, when penny postage was established. The conditions, however, do not bear any comparison. In 1841 postage in Britain was almost prohibitory, no less than 1s. 6d. being charged for a letter sent from the north of England to London. That is one reason why the conditions cannot compare. Another reason for the great increase in the postal revenue in Great Britain after the introduction of the penny postage was that prior to 1841, the circle allowed to exercise the franking privilege was an exceedingly large one, including 640 members of the House of Commons and about 400 peers. Those were manufacturers, importers and professional men with large business connections, and they were permitted to frank their letters and parcels and other mail matter, not during the session only, but during the whole year. The Bill introduced in 1841, when penny postage was established, abolished the franking privilege. No person now is allowed to frank, even during the session of Parliament, not even members of the House of Commons or peers, or members of the royal family, and even Her Majesty the Queen has to pay letter postage. When the franking privilege was abolished, the postal revenue necessarily largely increased. That is an additional reason why the conditions of England do not correspond with the conditions here, and do not warrant the Postmaster General in concluding that there will be an increased revenue by reducing the postage from 3 cents to 2 cents.

I am entirely opposed to the second clause, because, in the first place, it is a retrograde step. In the lower provinces we had no newspaper postage until confederation, and then it was imposed in accordance with the practice in the other provinces and continued until twenty or fifteen years ago, when on account of a universal cry from all parts of the country it was abolished by the Government. The removal of the postage on newspapers was a lessening of taxation upon people who could ill afford to bear taxation, and to return to newspaper postage is a mistake. If the Postmaster General feels bound to impose postage on newspapers, then there should be no exception. He will find himself very much worried by this ten mile zone, and he had better, if he imposes postage at all, abolish all territorial limitation. You have no right to say that a man who lives within ten miles of the office of publication that he shall get his newspaper free of postage, and that a man who lives near the next post office must pay. That is an undue and indefensible discrimination. The third clause of the Bill was approved by the hon. member from West York (Mr. Wallace). I am as good a friend of the deserving blind as that hon. gentleman, but I am opposed to the principle of exemption in its entirety. If we are going to aid any institutions, I contend that it is better to do it by a fixed grant than by exemptions from taxations, because if a grant is made, then the people would know exactly what they are paying. I am also opposed to the principle contained in the fourth clause with regard to the Dead Letter Branch. It has been the object in all countries to studiously regard the secrecy of communications passing through the mails, but the very moment you increase the facility for opening letters then you lessen that secrecy. At present you have but one dead-letter office for the Dominion, at Ottawa. The official in Ottawa who opens the letters knows neither the sender nor the receiver, and he is not interested in the contents of the letter; but if you establish local agencies with authority to open letters, then the official would know the sender or the addressee, his curiosity would be excited to read the letter, and consequently the secrecy which should prevail is abolished. I am opposed to that proposal, lock, stock and barrel.

Mr. CLARKE. I have not yet heard an explanation from the Postmaster General as to the principle on which he exempts country newspapers. I shall be glad to assist the Postmaster General in making the revenue and expenditure of his department equalize, but I must tell him that the imposition of postage on newspapers, after they have been carried free for so many years, will be looked upon as a retrograde movement. For my part, I cannot see why a newspaper printed in any town or village of Canada should have the exemption which is not accorded to newspapers printed in cities. These small newspapers are published as business enterprises, and why should they not contribute, according to the weight sent through the mails, to the revenue of the country just as the larger newspapers do?

The DEPUTY SPEAKER. That discussion will come up on the next clause of the Bill, and as there are certain amendments to be moved, it will perhaps be more convenient to discuss these questions when we come to the clauses bearing on them.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The question of the member for Toronto (Mr. Clarke), is a perfectly reasonable one, and I would ask him to allow me to offer him that explanation on the next clause of the Bill.

Mr. WALLACE. The undesirability of this Bill has been effectually proven by several hon. members, and yet we have been offered no explanation in defence of it. Not one of the hon. gentleman's colleagues has attempted to defend it. If the hon. Postmaster General has nothing to say, I think we ought to adjourn, and perhaps at the next sitting of the House he will be able to present reasons in reply to the statements made from this side in opposition to the Bill.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The principle of the Bill was disposed of on the second reading, and now we are working at the details.

Mr. WALLACE. At that time there were no criticisms on the Bill, and the hon. Minister gave very meagre and inadequate reasons for it. When quoting the revenues of the United States, he did not quote the enormously increased expenditure required to produce that revenue. But suppose the hon. gentleman did explain the Bill, that does not dispense him from making further statements in the House when the details are criticised.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) before he went away to-night, came to an understanding with the Government that we should reserve the clause respecting the dead letter office, and that the remainder of the Bill would probably then go through without further objection, and we have been expecting that that arrangement would be carried out.

Mr. WALLACE. Was it made across the floor of the House to the knowledge of the members?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. member for York asked what we would agree to, and we made that suggestion, and he concurred in it.

Mr. WALLACE. Did he or the Minister of Finance inform the House of it?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No.

Mr. WALLACE. Then the House is not bound by it.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. When the hon. member for York left, he told me that the understanding was as the Minister of Finance has explained it, of course subject to the consent of the other members of the House.

Mr. MARCOTTE. (Translation.) At this stage of the discussion, I am not going to take up the time of the House at any length, the more so as this subject has been pretty well threshed out. Still, I deem it but right to call attention to the fact that nobody ever complained about the 3-cent letter rate being too high. But this Bill, if carried into effect, will inflict a great loss on the revenue, and when the public realize that they must pay additional taxes in order to make up the deficiency in the revenue, then their eyes will be opened and they will no doubt, be grateful to the members of this House who have opposed, in the public interest, this clause of the Bill now before us. I am bound to oppose this clause to the utmost of my power, and I deem it my duty to protest against such a clause, as in my opinion a 3-cent letter rate is not too high considering the quick transmission of news under our system. I do not think that the relief given by a reduction from 3 cents to 2 cents is going to be of much value to the great mass of the people. It is not the great mass of the people who fill the mail bags with letters and postal communications; because as a rule the poorest classes of the community do not send many letters, but it is the wealthier classes who contribute the most to the postal revenue and it is upon their shoulders that this tax falls. As to the newspapers, which are one of the greatest educational means this country possesses—and the hon. gentlemen know that nowadays there is scarcely a family to be found that has not the advantage of receiving a newspaper in some form or other—I venture to say that the subscription price will certainly be increased if the Minister reimposes upon them a tax of one-half cent a pound.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER. (Translation.) The hon. gentleman should confine himself to the first clause of the Bill.

Mr. MARCOTTE. (Translation.) With all due deference, Mr. Chairman, I must say that the two first clauses of the Bill are so co-related one with the other, that it is almost impossible to speak to the first without touching upon the second.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER. (Translation.) The hon. gentleman should keep to the clause before the committee. The principle of the Bill being carried, the question is now on the first clause, and the hon. gentleman should confine himself to that clause.

Mr. MARCOTTE. (Translation.) It is almost impossible, in dealing with the revenue question, not to touch upon the second clause of the Bill, because the two first clauses, as I said, hang together a good deal. However, Mr. Chairman, I bow to your ruling.

Section agreed to.

On section 2,

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I announced that I intended making some changes in this clause. One is that the free circulation shall be limited to newspapers published not more frequently than weekly. The other is that the point of publication need not necessarily be in the centre, but the publisher may have the option inside a circle twenty miles in diameter or ten miles radius. In some cases the office of the publisher may be on the lake shore, so that the ten-mile radius would give only half a circle as the water took off the other half. I propose to have a circle that will be optional to the publisher.

Mr. CLARKE. Upon what principle is that exemption given to papers printed in any particular part of the country?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The rate of half a cent a pound will carry newspapers the full length of this Dominion. It is not every paper that goes very far, but the papers that become a charge upon the country and really put the country to the expense are those publications, not having a local circulation, but a widespread circulation throughout the country. They are a burden on the country, because they involve handling and carriage on railways and in various other ways. But with regard to mere local papers, which have a small circulation, a very considerable portion will be distributed in the village of the publisher and a very small proportion sent by mail.

I propose, at all events, to allow these papers to be placed in the local post office, where there is no free delivery. It will cost nothing to the public to call for the papers at the post office if they so desire, and the few taken in the mail bags for a short distance will be such a mere bagatelle that it can be hardly said that they occasion any expense to the public at all. Take the circulation of 1,000, not more than one-half of that would find its way into the mails. Five hundred papers would not weigh 50 pounds, I presume. Once a week those papers would be handed over to couriers, making a trivial parcel for each courier. I am not aware of any rate small enough to levy on that class of mail matter, considering that there is a charge of only half a cent a pound to carry papers to the remotest parts of Canada.

Mr. HUGHES. Is there anything in this clause to exempt church papers, temperance papers, &c. ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, the clause reads, "if the publication is of no greater frequency than once a week." All papers of that class are on the same footing.

Mr. CLARKE. I have every desire to aid the Postmaster General as far as I can in carrying the Bill through. But I think the explanation he gives is not entirely satisfactory. If the fact that these newspapers are only carried a short distance is any reason why they should escape the taxation imposed on newspapers, that argument should apply with all the greater force to drop letters. The drop letter in the city should not be taxed as much as one would be called on to pay for a letter sent from one city to another. If the principle is to be asserted of compelling newspapers, on the ground that they are business enterprises, to pay the cost of carriage and distribution through the mails, the principle should be applied to all. If the papers published in towns or villages are to be exempted from this tax and delivered free within a radius of five or ten miles, why should not the same apply to newspapers published in the cities ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No distinction is made.

Mr. CLARKE. If no distinction is made, a great objection is removed. Still, I think it would be fair to make them all pay.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I would appeal to the hon. gentleman who leads the House (Sir Louis Davies). We have adopted the principle of the Bill and passed the first clause. Now, the hon. Postmaster General is submitting amendments which must involve a great deal of discussion. I think the committee should rise and report progress and we should adjourn.

Mr. MULOCK.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I would ask my hon. friend (Sir Adolphe Caron) to lend his influence to carry out the agreement as far as possible. These are small amendments and they were explained by the Postmaster General some days ago. They were thoroughly understood by everybody. Under the arrangements the committee will still remain. We shall report progress and ask leave to sit again, reserving one clause, which will allow every opportunity for discussion.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I do not think these amendments can be considered as small amendments, and as to their having been explained, I have never heard of them before. I do not wish to interfere with the progress of the Bill. But I submit a proposition which must appeal to the hon. gentleman's judgment. He has just heard my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Clarke), who has given reasons which show that these amendments cannot be passed without a good deal of discussion. I do not wish to delay the Bill.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I mean exactly what I say. Hon. gentlemen opposite have a majority, and they will pass their Bill, of course ; but we are not going to permit amendments like these to pass without discussing them as they should be discussed. We have made good progress, and in the very interest of shortening the discussion, I think that it would be well for the committee to rise and report progress, and that we should adjourn now. I think it is altogether in the interest of shortening the discussion which may follow, that we should now adjourn the debate.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Perhaps it would be well for us to understand now whether the arrangement arrived at with the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) is to be adhered to. If it is, then I suppose we are free to proceed with the Bill without holding any part of it over ?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I consider that we are carrying out the agreement entered into with the hon. member for York. He stated that if we passed the first clause, the clause with reference to the dead letter office would be reserved ; but he never mentioned that the Postmaster General was going on with the second clause, and would introduce amendments which had never been mentioned, and which I, for my part, am not prepared to accept without having proper time to look into them and to discuss them.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. member is not aware that when the second reading of the Bill was moved, the Postmaster General stated that he intended to introduce certain amendments, and he mentioned them ; therefore, they are not sprung upon the House at all. I am satisfied that the hon. member for York was aware of these amendments when he made the arrangement. The arrangement was that we should pass this Bill except the one clause.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I must say that these amendments were never mentioned to me. I remember the Postmaster General spoke of introducing amendments, but I had never seen them.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I may be permitted to read what I said on this point on Friday night last :

But since that Bill was introduced, representations have been made to me which have led me to believe that it may be wise to reduce the class of exempted newspapers. If the suggestions which I propose to make in committee on that point meet with approval the reduction from the $82,000 of revenue will not amount to the figure I have named, but will be represented by a very much smaller sum.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would state what changes he proposes in his scheme.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It has been represented to me that it would be advisable to reduce the exemption contemplated by the Bill by limiting it to publications of a frequency not greater than weekly.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Then the dailies would pay ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The dailies would pay.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. That shows that the hon. gentleman indicated that he intended to propose amendments which I considered to be of great importance, but they were not discussed.

Mr. WALLACE. Besides that, if any such arrangement was come to, it was made between certain individuals, but unknown to members on both sides of the House. We are not bound in any way by that. We have now before us very important amendments on the second clause, and I think we can fairly ask the Government, after having passed the first clause, to let the committee rise.

Mr. FRASER. I think a communication from the ex-Minister of Finance, who ought to be accepted under all circumstances to represent the Opposition, should be enough for any party. Are we to understand that the leader of a great party for the time being, when he makes an arrangement with the Government, does not represent anybody but himself, and that each man can get up and say : Because I was not consulted, I will for the time being constitute myself a leader ? Really, it shocks one's views of what parties should be.

Mr. WALLACE. You look shocked.

Mr. FRASER. I am, when objection is raised by an hon. gentleman as against his leader. I appeal to the hon. gentlemen opposite that an arrangement having been made to reserve one clause, and that the rest of the Bill should be put through committee, that arrangement ought to be adhered to.

Mr. WALLACE. We never agreed to it.

Mr. FRASER. The hon. gentleman can talk for himself, and if he reads himself out from the direction of a leader and constitutes himself sole leader, then the Ministry must always consult him.

Mr. WALLACE. He is in this position, that he is not looking for judgeships, or anything of that kind.

Mr. FRASER. If the hon. gentleman makes that remark to me, he makes the biggest mistake of his life.

Mr. WALLACE. I make it with regard to myself.

Mr. FRASER. If the reference has any meaning, it is directed to me, and the meanness of the remark could only come from the hon. gentleman himself. I can tell the hon. gentleman also that he is looking for far more than I am. He has constituted himself a sort of leader, and expects to have the reins of leadership fall into his hands.

Mr. WALLACE. I may say, Mr. Chairman, that I will not accept lessons in propriety from the hon. member for Guysborough. I do not think that he is well qualified to lecture this House on that matter. As for saying that I constituted myself a leader, or that I said I would constitute myself a leader that is absolutely untrue, I never said anything that could be twisted so as to have that meaning. Now, with reference to the agreement, we had that matter discussed some weeks ago, and the leader of the House, at that time the Minister of Trade and Commerce made the statement that those agreements come to without the knowledge of the members on both sides of the House were not very satisfactory or proper ; and that in future arrangements would be made across the floor of the House to the knowledge of all the members who were here. We are told that some arrangement had been made by which the Bill was to go through, but we were not told, and the Minister of Finance was not told that two important amendments would be proposed, one changing the centre of the circle where the radius of ten miles was to be counted from, which is a very important matter as regards Toronto. It is true that the Minister gave answers to the late Postmaster General and to the hon. member for Pictou, but they were answers that were exceedingly indifferent. Besides these amendments, the clause under consideration is important. If the Minister wants to discuss it to-night, I have no objection, if he can give all the information required. Each newspaper was to be carried for one-twentieth of a cent, but a letter accompanying it, passing over the same route, handled by the same carriers and officials, was charged three cents. We are entitled to an explanation from the Postmaster General on this point, specially in view of the fact that he has stated that newspapers should pay their share of the cost to the department the same as letters. The cost of newspapers to the country he places at about two and a half millions, and he now proposes to raise a revenue from the newspapers of $65,000 to meet the loss. I should like to know if the Postmaster General intends to give the explanations to which we are entitled? The member for Cape Breton urged very clearly objections to every clause of the Bill. The hon. gentleman objected to the clause regarding books for the blind on the ground that Parliament should not make any exceptions. I thought there was one clause which I could support, but I am satisfied of the force of the objection raised by the hon. gentleman and the Bill must go by the board, and the efforts of the Postmaster General must be left to fructify and produce something more justifiable and reasonable than the present Bill, which has nothing to recommend it. The radius of ten miles provided for in the amendment is not reckoned from the place where the newspaper is published, but from some place ten miles distant, and it is the most absurd arrangement that could be conceived.

Mr. CLARKE. Do I understand from the Postmaster General that the ten-mile radius was to apply to all weekly papers printed in Canada? I draw his attention to the fact that if the 31st line of the section remains in, that exemption will not apply to weekly newspapers printed in the cities?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think it will.

Mr. WALLACE. These amendments are so complicated that it would require a man of great genius to have an adequate idea of the increased work that would devolve on the post office to keep these accounts from day to day, and to keep track of the radii of these various circles. It would be absurd to think of passing this Bill without having it printed so that the whole thing could be read consecutively. Why does not the Postmaster General in his Bill carry out his pledge that he would make the newspapers pay their way? He is not making them pay more than about one-fortieth of the expense he says is involved in doing the newspaper work through the post office. Not a single pledge has he redeemed, and we want to know the reason why.

Mr. CLARKE. Will there be a general discussion permitted on this clause respecting the dead letter office, which is reserved—a general discussion on all the provisions of the Bill.

Mr. WALLACE.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) came to an arrangement with us, that all the clauses of the Bill should be passed except that relating to the dead letter branch.

Mr. DAVIN. I did not understand that.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have no objection to allowing a full discussion on anything in the Bill, but of course there will only be one clause open.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) said you would only go to the second clause.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. I am sure that we have not been improving the time very much to-night. It seems rather strange that men who are supposed to come here and discuss matters in a business-like way, should spend so much time talking about nothing. The hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) has spent over an hour in mere trivialities. I do not wish to be hard on that hon. gentleman, but if he has any aspirations to the leadership, I can assure the other members of his party that if he should succeed in obtaining his object, he will lead them a merry dance. There will not be anything too serious or solemn in the Opposition. He has a great fund of humour, and to-night has given full vent to it; but if he keeps on after a while his party and the country at large will not take him seriously. If he has any aspirations, it would do him good to bear in mind the words of Burns:

Oh wad some power the giffle gie us
To see ourselves as ithers see us.

To come down to the discussion of the second clause of the Bill, I think that all the members who have given this Bill any serious consideration are agreed that the efforts of the Postmaster General to make ends meet in the department are praiseworthy and deserve the commendation of all those thoroughly interested in economical government.

Now, the question of newspaper postage is a very important one. There is no doubt that the newspaper is a great factor in our modern civilization. The great city newspaper is one of the most important educators we have. But, while I have nothing at all to say against the large city daily or weekly, while I do not wish to criticise them in any way, at the same time, something must be said on behalf of the small country weekly paper. Now, the defence made for the reservation in favour of the small paper by the Postmaster General was not deemed quite satisfactory by the member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke). He asked what reason could be given for making any distinction between one newspaper and another. The reason given by the Postmaster General was that the weekly newspaper had a small circulation and only a small proportion of the copies printed would be required to be carried by the mails at all, and then, only for short distances. There is still another reason why an exception should be made on behalf of a country paper, and that is because it is an absolute necessity. There is no doubt that in any community which is advancing and growing as it ought to do, it is absolutely necessary to have a good, live local paper which the people can use for advertising and for other purposes, as they cannot use the large city paper. Now, it is well known to all who have had experience of papers of that kind they are not at all remunerative. They are very hard to keep going. The financing of such papers is a very difficult matter and every consideration possible ought to be shown them in order to keep them in existence and encourage them in their work, for they have a work of their own apart altogether from that of the city paper. Now, the charging of postage on such papers would be a very serious drawback. As a matter of fact, the income from such a paper is very seldom more than enough to keep the editor alive. He has to finance very carefully to keep his paper going at all. If he had to take the price of postage out of his subscription price, he would suffer very greatly. I am much pleased to see that the Postmaster General has admitted, in this clause, the principle that an exception should be made in favour of the country paper. But this does not go far enough. While, in some portions of Canada, no doubt, a radius of ten miles would be a fair constituency for a small country weekly, in many portions of the country, where settlement is sparse, these rural papers have to extend over a very much wider area. I am sure that in Manitoba and the North-west Territories, a radius of ten miles would not be nearly enough for papers of the class I have described. I approve, to a great extent, of the amendment which was so much ridiculed by the hon. member for West York and which was so incomprehensible to his great and massive intellect, but which, a business man who wished to discuss it seriously and wished to bring out the points of the Bill could grasp in a couple of minutes—I approve it as far as it goes. But it does not go far enough. I would move in amendment, that this section 2, be amended, that in the thirty-fourth line the word “ten” be struck out and the word “twenty” be inserted. I think that a radius of twenty miles is the smallest possible radius that we could be expected to accept as a fair measure of justice to the country weekly newspaper. And I may say that such an amendment would meet with the hearty approval of the rural public throughout Canada. I think this is the proper step to take and I hope the members of the committee will give it their support and that the Postmaster General will accept the amendment.

Mr. KAULBACH. I do not wish to unduly prolong this debate but I desire to contribute a word or two by way of comment in disapproval of a portion of clause 2 of this Bill. I am not anxious to look unfavourably on this Bill of the Postmaster General. Still, I do feel that it is a hardship upon the local newspapers to be compelled to pay the postage that is proposed by this Bill. A radius of ten miles would amount to nothing at all, as it would be insufficient so far as this zone is concerned as respects distances. I would suggest that newspapers should be carried free in the counties in which they are published. There would be a line of demarkation clearly defined, but where is the Postmaster General to find a line by simply making a ten mile radius. If the exemption within ten miles allows newspapers to be carried free of postage to a certain house just on the defined line, it would be pretty hard that postage should be charged on a paper of a neighbour living only a few yards beyond that point. We should not hamper the publisher of the local paper as he has a hard struggle to have ends meet, and it is the only medium that the people residing in a country section are able to use for the publication of their local matter. I hope the Postmaster General will accept the suggestion I make.

Mr. DAVIN. How would it work ?

Mr. KAULBACH. I will explain. Suppose a paper published in my county, Lunenburg, has a radius of about 25 miles. The free carriage of that paper would be confined to the county of Lunenburg. The same would apply to other counties. There are many counties much larger than mine, such, for instance, as that of the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) and the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Dymont). These are very large districts or counties, but still I do conceive that this will give them too much latitude. It looks to me as if it would be greatly hampering and restricting education in putting this postage rate on local papers. To make this discrimination between city and town seems to me radically wrong and contrary to the interest of the public generally. I am confident that there will be no objections in the country to the suggestion I have proposed, and I hope it will be regarded with favour by the Postmaster General.

Mr. DAVIN. I agree with the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford). But he would see clearly that that amendment would entail large expense upon the department. Therefore, I move in amendment to that clause to insert after word population in line 34: “Where the population of the place does not exceed 2,500.” And in line 36 to insert: “In the case of newspapers published in places having a population of over 2,500.” It is easy to see that the proposition of the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford) would entail large expense on the department. My proposition will relieve the department of great expense, and effect the purpose that he has in view.

Mr. POPE. I must say on behalf of country newspapers that this ten-mile limit or fifteen-mile limit is a mistake. It may answer for small constituencies, or it may answer for populous constituencies which have several centres of population where there are many newspapers published. But it will not answer in the constituency that I represent, which has only one newspaper, and which is 75 miles long and 35 miles wide. I ask the Postmaster General to consider favourably the case of those weekly papers which are taken by thousands of people in Canada and who take no other papers. I trust that the revenues that he expects to receive from the carriage of newspapers will meet his anticipations. I would ask the Postmaster General to leave over for further consideration any of these amendments that affect the circulation of weekly newspapers.

Mr. McMULLEN. With respect to making this system apply to counties, a place of publication might be on the boundary line of a county or two counties. In that case the definition of the counties would not meet the requirements of the local press. If the hon. gentleman would extend the distance from ten to twenty miles, it would, I think, meet with general approbation.

Mr. POPE. If twenty miles were adopted, there was no reason why twenty-one miles should not be equally applicable. When limitation with respect to the circulation is entered on, difficulty at once arises. It is evident the hon. gentleman has not given the matter consideration, and in fact it has not received full attention from the committee. This arrangement will affect newspapers that are weekly, both as regards time of publication and their financial condition. I ask the Postmaster General to give the matter some serious consideration.

Mr. MARCOTTE. (Translation.) The clause which is now before us is of such importance that I deem it my duty to give my views on the question. Everybody knows that the newspapers are the real educators of the people. It is the best means the people have of informing their minds and increasing their knowledge of public affairs. The newspapers are certainly a medium of education for the people. I believe that the fact that Canada can boast to-day of having a better informed population among all classes is attributable to the wider circulation of the newspapers. The newspapers are a medium of education for the people. Now, Sir, what does the clause of the Bill now under consideration propose to us? This clause strikes a most potent blow at the dissemination by the press of most useful knowledge and information, and I regard it as an attempt at the suppression of one of the greatest educational means this country possesses. Moreover, I hold that this measure is most unfair to the trade of the country. The trade interests will certainly suffer from the imposition of a tax which is bound to hamper and restrict the circulation of the press and particularly that of the leading organs of the public opinion. I am not ready to admit that the newspapers which are supporting the policy of the hon. gentlemen opposite always tell the truth, but there are other newspapers from which the people of this country obtain accurate and reliable information. Now, I say that those newspapers should have as free a circulation as possible. I hold that the proposition to impose a postage upon newspapers is an attempt to tax knowledge against which I am bound to protest, to the utmost of my power. Moreover, this measure will also result in a considerable loss to the revenue of the country, and thereby swell the deficit; for, in spite of all the credit which the hon. gentlemen opposite are constantly claiming, there will certainly be another deficit this year, as the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) himself had to admit. The existence of such a deficit leaving no room for doubt, and when I consider that this new Bill is going to inflict a loss on the revenue, what, I ask, will be the outcome of all this, and what will become of the country? With such a policy, we will soon have to face direct taxation, a most undesirable thing. Now, instead of curtailing the public revenue, instead of limiting the circulation of the press and preventing their reaching the mass of the people, thereby circumscribing the dissemination of knowledge and information, as the Government are doing by the imposition of a postage, the House ought to vote down this measure. All those who are interested in the prosperity of this country ought to oppose the passage of this Bill, even from the trade standpoint, as the newspapers are a means of disseminating much useful knowledge and information in reference to trade matters.

I see there is also a clause under which a certain portion of newspapers would be exempt, as being circulated within a certain zone. But hon. gentlemen are not agreed even on that clause, as some propose to exempt newspapers circulated within the ten-mile zone, while others are in favour of a twenty-mile limit. At all events, I look upon this measure as unfair, as it limits the circulation of newspapers.

Mr. Chairman, this measure, to my mind, is not calculated to promote the prosperity of the Dominion; on the contrary, I regard it as a retrograde step, in so far as it takes away from the people a privilege conferred on them and hampers the dissemination of useful information among the mass of the people. This imposition of half a cent per pound is a pretty high tax. The publisher will have to charge this tax upon the newspapers he distributes, and so increase the price to the subscribers; so that the trade interests and the industries of the country will be affected by it, to a considerable extent. The weekly publications would have less to pay, or perhaps nothing at all, and would benefit to that extent of this provision of the Bill, while the dailies would have to incur a very large expenditure. Is it fair, I ask, thus to interfere with the free circulation of newspapers, by re-imposing a postage rate upon them? I think the Bill does not go far enough in exempting newspapers circulated within a radius of ten or twenty miles. Why should we not maintain the system now existing? Those who enacted that system were as broad-minded and as devoted to the interests of the country as the hon. gentlemen now in power claim to be. We have a system which gives satisfaction to the general public, and I see no reason why we should hamper and restrict the free circulation of newspapers outside of a ten or twenty-mile zone.

The hon. gentlemen opposite climbed into power on a liberal platform. Now, I ask, are the hon. gentlemen acting in a liberal spirit, when imposing a tax upon newspapers and restricting their circulation within a radius of ten or twenty miles? Such a departure from their liberal professions would be most deplorable. Let us, then, not interfere with the wise policy of the Conservative party in that respect; let us not deprive the great mass of the people of the means of increasing their knowledge of public affairs, so as to enable them to inform their minds in reference to public questions and to give their support to the best Government in the general interests of the country. It would be a retrograde step to take away from the people the privilege conferred on them and our plain duty is to maintain the actual system which is certainly the best yet devised.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I wish to say a few words in answer to the propositions made by the hon. members for Lunenburg, Macdonald, and Compton, and to express my desire to meet their wishes as fully as possible. With respect to the proposition made by the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach), that county lines should be the limits of free transmission, I thought that would not give as much satisfaction as a radial system. Many papers are published, not in the central portions but in remote portions of a county. The constituency of a newspaper may be largely in an adjoining county or counties, and in that case the county limits would not meet the requirements of such newspaper. Then as regards the provinces. The population is of the same character in adjoining provinces near the boundary line, and a newspaper might have a constituency on both sides, and to adopt a provincial limit, would exclude a large number of subscribers. Looking, therefore, at the subject from a general standpoint, it will be found that the great bulk of subscribers are within a certain geographical distance of the point of publication. To meet their view, I thought the zone system the most desirable. In the United States the county system prevails, but how far it has satisfied public opinion, I am unable to say. The hon. member for Macdonald suggested twenty miles. That would give a diameter of forty miles, a very large exemption. If, however, the hon. member for Lunenburg and other hon. gentlemen will be satisfied with a middle course I will move that fifteen miles be inserted instead of ten miles. Taking it all in all, this change will no doubt make it satisfactory throughout the country.

Mr. WALLACE. Will a weekly newspaper in Toronto be delivered free to subscribers there?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We never delivered newspapers free in the place of publication. This half cent limit does not apply to residents in the place of publication. Such a change would involve the appointment of an army of letter carriers.

Mr. POPE. While I should like to see everything absolutely free, as being in the best interest of the country and for the advancement of public thought, still, in view of the fact that the Minister has a majority behind him, speaking for myself I should be glad to accept the proposition made.

Mr. KAULBACH. I certainly must offer a word of acknowledgment to the Minister for the kind consideration he has given to my request. I would certainly like the provision to cover 20 or 25 miles; but if the hon. gentleman thinks he cannot go beyond his amendment, must accept the inevitable.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think I will have to adhere to the fifteen-mile limit.

Mr. DAVIN. I do not think that is enough. Did my leader, Mr. Pope, say that was enough?

Mr. POPE. It is not a question of enough, but it is about all we can get.

Mr. DAVIN. That is not the question. I want all country papers exempted.

Mr. KAULBACH. If the Minister would make it twenty-five miles, I think that would be acceptable to all, even my hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Davin).

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Kaulbach) is very winning in his ways, and if this is positively the last time of asking, we will make it a radius of twenty miles.

Mr. DAVIN. Twenty-five miles would not do in the North-west Territories. A paper published in Regina will sell 150 or 200 miles away. I move the following amendment:—

To insert in clause 2, line 34, after the word "publication" the words "or the population of the place of publication does not exceed 2,500," and in line 36 to insert after the word "if" the words "in the case of newspapers published in places having a population of 2,500."

Amendment negatived.

Mr. WALLACE. Does the amendment of the Postmaster General provide that the office of publication is within that area?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes. The paper is to be posted at the place of publication.

Section 3 agreed to.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We will pass section 4 and consider section 5.

On section 5,

Mr. WALLACE. We would like to have an explanation of this.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Section 39 of the Civil Service Act provides a form of examination that is not always apt. I think that when it comes to a man working in a post office or doing mail service, his examination ought to be confined strictly to the work he is asked to do. He passes a proper entrance examination, and, therefore, I do not think he should always be liable to pass a promotion examination.

Mr. WALLACE. Would not the same rule apply to other departments; the Customs Department, for instance?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, I consider it ought to be more general.

Mr. WALLACE. And more especially to the Inland Revenue Department, which is more technical than any other.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, I consider it ought to be more general.

Mr. WALLACE. Then why not amend the Civil Service Act in that respect instead of making the rule apply to the Post Office Department alone, where the reasons for the change are less forcible than they would be in the Department of Inland Revenue. Mind you, I quite agree with the principle the Postmaster General has laid down, but it should be made general.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I quite agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Wallace) that it ought to be made general, but at present I am only dealing with the Post Office Act, and the rest of the members of the Government have not had an opportunity of studying out the requirements of the staff and the various officers of the department. It would be a mistake to have one needed reform stand over simply to enable a lot of others deemed desirable to be brought into effect. Once a man has passed the necessary examination and entered the service, thereafter the efficiency of his office work depends upon his discharging the technical work which he is engaged in, stamping, sorting, handling the material and so on. I do not think it is fair to be eternally holding over the heads of members of the service the bugbear of an examination on undefined subjects.

Mr. MARCOTTE. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, this clause provides that clerks employed in post offices, mail couriers, and so on, shall be hereafter examined on the work of the post office, by such persons as are, from time to time, designated by the Postmaster General. When those employees discharge their duties properly, and there is no complaint about their office work, I do not see any reason why they should be obliged to pass such examinations. But this may be an attempt at exempting certain persons from passing their entrance examinations.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The only way we could test them is by examining them. In the railway mail service, we have adopted a system with great benefit. The number of mistakes made in the sorting of letters by the railway mail clerks has fallen to a most marked extent since we adopted the plan of competitive examinations. There is no way short of an examination to ascertain whether or not an officer is discharging his duties properly.

Mr. MARCOTTE. (Translation.) To tell the truth, it may be that, after having passed such examinations, they are less liable to make mistakes in the discharge of their technical work; still, I am of opinion that these competitive examinations ought to be limited.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. (Translation.) To what?

Mr. MARCOTTE. (Translation.) This examination should be confined strictly to the work the employee has to do. For instance, a clerk doing mail service should pass one or two examinations, after which he should be exempted from any further test. I do not think it is fair to be continually holding over the heads of members of the civil service the threat of an examination. There ought to be a limit of age, beyond which a man, say fifty or sixty years old, should be exempt from passing any examination. One or two examinations ought to be a sufficient test of a man's abilities. It requires a certain amount of work to prepare those examinations. It would only be fair to specify the number of examinations to be passed by an employee. That is the course which is followed in other walks of life. For instance, physicians and lawyers are not subjected to any such competitive examinations. I would have a limit fixed for the civil service employees just the same as with lawyers and physicians. I am afraid the hon. gentleman is aiming at exempting those employees from their entrance examination.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. (Translation.) No.

Mr. MARCOTTE. (Translation.) The Civil Service Act provides for different kinds of examinations, such as qualifying and promotion examinations.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. (Translation.) After the entrance examinations are passed.

Mr. MARCOTTE. (Translation.) Well, those examinations are a necessity. There is a certain amount of technical knowledge which those employees require in order to discharge properly their duties. Such examinations are calculated to raise the standard of the civil service. Those employees form an important class of the community and, in my opinion, if the standard of education for the civil service were raised, it would save the Government considerable expenditures. Let us take, for instance, the Railway Department. I think that the employees who wish to enter that branch of the civil service ought to possess all the technical knowledge of the work they are to be engaged in.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. (Translation.) I think the hon. gentleman had better confine himself to the clause now under consideration. He is referring to railway matters, which are not germane to the matter before the committee.

Mr. MARCOTTE. (Translation.) I am speaking to the clause. I was just showing that entrance examinations were a necessity, and I took, to illustrate my argument, the Railway Department, and I said that the employees in that branch of the civil service ought to have the required technical knowledge. In that way, the Government would not be obliged to give contracts to outsiders and to contractors. If the Government employees had all the technical knowledge required for the discharge of their duties, it would prevent combines and monopolies being formed with a view to compete against the Government, which is one of the grievances the hon. gentlemen opposite often complain of. Moreover, if those employees had the required technical knowledge, it would obviate another evil which is rampant in this country; it would put a stop to the too numerous applications of place-hunters. On these several grounds, I hold that every applicant for a civil service position ought to be subjected to a very severe test, and that he should pass a thorough examination before entering the civil service. As I said, were such a policy to prevail, it would obviate very serious evils and the members of the Government, instead of being besieged by place-hunters, would only have to tell the applicants: "Pass your examination, and show us that you are qualified to fill the position you are applying for." In that way, there would not be seen so many party hangers-on and place-hunters looking for civil service positions. I cannot support clause 5, because, in my opinion, it is merely a veiled attempt at imposing the burden of an examination on men of experience and otherwise well qualified for the discharge of their duties, while it seeks to exempt from it those who wish to enter the civil service.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I assume that the arrangement made by the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) has been abandoned, and therefore it would be quite in order for us to take the other clause, but I prefer to yield a point and reserve the clause.

Mr. POPE. It is only a dead letter clause.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think the arrangement was a dead letter.

The Committee rose and reported progress.

Mr. POPE. Will the hon. Minister of Finance be kind enough to tell us what will be the business to-morrow?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. An arrangement was made to name a day for a discussion of the motion of the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. McNeill), and that will be the first order for to-morrow. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 3.13 a.m. (Wednesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 18th May, 1898.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 147)—(from the Senate)—to amend the Canada Evidence Act, 1893.—(Mr. Fitzpatrick.)

BRIGADE CAMP—THIRD MILITARY DISTRICT.

Mr. GUILLET (by Mr. McCleary) asked, When and where will the brigade camp or camps for the third military district be held?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). The two military districts, Nos. 3 and 4, have been united for some years for the purpose of camp. This year there will be two camps, one at Kingston and the other at Belleville.

Mr. FOSTER. They will be disunited this year?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, for this year.

LIEUT.-COL. R. Z. ROGERS.

Mr. GUILLET (by Mr. McCleary) asked,

What was the reason that Lieut.-Col. R. Z. Rogers, who recently retired from the command of the 40th Battalion, was not transferred to the infantry reserve of officers?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). Lieut.-Col. R. Z. Rogers was not placed on the reserve of officers because at the time of his retirement the regulations did not admit of it. Since then the regulations have been modified and now Lieut.-Col. Rogers is eligible and will be placed on the reserve of officers.

MARTIN LAMBERT, OF MONTAGUE,
P.E.I.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's) asked,

What are the grounds on which Martin Lambert, caretaker of the Dominion public building at Montague, P.E.I., was dismissed? At whose suggestion was he dismissed, and who recommended his successor?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). Mr. Martin Lambert's services were dispensed with for the efficiency of the service. His successor was appointed on the recommendation of people in whom I have entire confidence.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved:

That when this House adjourns this day, Wednesday, it stands adjourned until Friday, the 20th instant.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Would my right hon. friend be able to say what he proposes to do when we adjourn on Friday?

The PRIME MINISTER. I am very much in the hands of the House with regard to that. We might perhaps sit on Saturday if it would be convenient to my hon. friends on the other side.

Hon. MEMBERS. Yes; no.

The PRIME MINISTER. I see there is some difference of opinion about that. We might think it over and come to some conclusion on Friday.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Mr. McDougall. To those of us who come from a long distance and find it impossible to get home, except perhaps once during four months, it is rather hard that we should have to postpone the business of the House on Friday evening, as we often are obliged to do, because a large number of the members go home. I think we should at the last of the session get a Saturday to transact business.

Mr. BORDEN (King's).

The PRIME MINISTER. The Government is anxious to consult the wishes and the convenience of the House in that respect. There is a great deal in what my hon. friend (Mr. McDougall) has just said. It is rather unpleasant, to say the least of it, for gentlemen who live at a great distance to have these repeated holidays. To-morrow is a holiday and the House cannot sit. But, if it be equally convenient to replace to-morrow by sitting on Saturday the Government would perhaps be able to meet that view.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We are all anxious at this period of the session to facilitate the business of the House and to learn as far as we can what prospect there is of prorogation.

The PRIME MINISTER. The Supplementary Estimates for the current year were brought down yesterday, and the Supplementary Estimates for next year will be brought down, I hope, on Friday. Then we will be able to state to the House what other measures we have to bring, and probably we can anticipate prorogation. I trust as soon as we have brought down all the Supplementary Estimates to be able to take two sittings each day after the 24th of May.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

THE LATE SPANISH AMBASSADOR TO WASHINGTON—HIS PRESENCE IN CANADA.

Mr. CHARLTON. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to direct the attention of the right hon. leader of the Government to the fact of the presence in Canada of Senor Polo, the late Spanish ambassador to Washington, and the members of the Spanish embassy. These gentlemen have been in Canada since the outbreak of the war between Spain and the United States, and it seems from recent developments that they are actively engaged in attending to affairs connected with the war. A day or two ago a man by the name of Downing was arrested as a spy in Washington. His actions and communication were traced—

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member must confine himself to asking a question unless he moves the adjournment.

Mr. CHARLTON. I do not wish to do so unless it is absolutely necessary. This man committed suicide, and his communications were traced to the Spanish Minister and members of the Spanish embassy. A number of Spaniards have crossed from Canada to the United States and are now under the surveillance of the American police authorities. It seems to me we have in Canada a combination of diplomatists belonging to Spain and recently from Washington, who are carrying on operations of some character here, and I apprehend there might be danger of our position as a neutral power being compromised by the action of these gentlemen. I wish to call the attention of the right hon. leader of the Government to the condition of affairs, and ask whether the matter has come under his consideration, and whether any steps are proposed in the premises.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I must say to my hon. friend that the attention of the Government has not been called to the presence of the late Spanish ambassador at Washington, who is now and has been for some time in Canada. My hon. friend is aware that the British Government and nation has always been the refuge of refugees under any circumstances. So long as the Spanish ambassador does not abuse the hospitality of this nation, this Government does not conceive that it is in any way bound to take notice of his presence. He is treated as every other citizen would be. During this unfortunate war now taking place between the United States and Spain, it is the intention of the Government—and it is our intention not only from our own inclination but the positive orders of the Imperial authorities—to keep absolute neutrality between the contending parties. We are taking every precaution possible so that the neutrality laws shall not be violated, either in favour of the United States or Spain.

Mr. MACLEAN. I may say that I had the pleasure of meeting the Spanish ambassador in Toronto and conversed with him and some of his friends; and as far as I could gather, they were most careful not to violate the laws of neutrality or to say anything that could in any way be offensive to the Americans, and I can see no reason why they should not be allowed to enjoy the privilege of living in Canada as long as they saw fit.

ALIEN LABOUR LAW.

Mr. McCLEARY. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to draw the attention of the Government to a subject that has been already once or twice brought to its notice. I refer to the Alien Labour Law, and if necessary I will conclude the few observations I have to make with a motion to adjourn. When this House and the Government undertook to put on the Statute-book of this country an Alien Labour Law, it appears to me that we should have gone into the work with a great deal more heart and thoroughness than we did. There was either necessity for such a law, or there was no necessity. If there was no necessity for it, then we should have not bothered with it at all; but if there was a necessity, then we should have devised such a law as would meet the requirements of the case. It is unnecessary for me to argue the necessity of such a law, because that is admitted on all hands. The leaders of both parties have declared that they are in entire sympathy with such a law. Indeed, the right hon. leader of the Government, after he had formed his Government, declared in Ontario, during the by-elections, that he would have placed upon the Statute-book a law, word for word and line for line, with the American law in force against Canadians. But instead of this, we have had put upon our statutes a law merely in name, so far as I can learn, and I am interested somewhat, representing as I do a border constituency. We have put upon the statutes something merely to be played with and not intended to be seriously enforced. The other day, in reply to some hon. member, the Government brought down a return of the names of the officers appointed by it to enforce this law. I do not know what instructions were given other officials, but I know that in my county, although I have not seen either of the gentlemen appointed at Fort Erie or Bridgeburg as to what instructions they had from the Government, they are encumbered by the lack of definite instructions. Yesterday I had a letter from a workingman—and there are no politics in this matter and ought not to be—stating that he had looked for work on the stone quarry opened in my county, and he found there some 150 Italians imported from Buffalo, and he could not get any work. These Italians are employed under contract, because every man of them has to give $2 to get the job before he comes across. This man tells me that the officer appointed to enforce the law does not do his duty, and does not know what to do because of lack of instructions from the Government, so that we are labouring under the disadvantage of having these men imported, who are not only foreigners to Canada, but who just colonize in Buffalo and sell their labour. They bid against our Canadian labour, and yet we have no means of enforcing the law; of if the law can be enforced, the officers there do not get the backing they should from the Government. I want just to repeat what I said with regard to the law not being enforced in the county in which I live. Not only have we this difficulty so far as labour is concerned, but our railway employees make a great deal of complaint. One of the largest railways in this country, the Grand Trunk Railway, in which millions of dollars of the people's money have been invested, and from which we never expect a single dollar—this railway company, whenever it has the opportunity, removes a Canadian and puts on an American in his place. Only a few weeks ago two or three prominent men, who had worked their way up from the bottom, were removed from the positions they had and Americans brought in to take their place. I do not presume that this Parliament has jurisdiction over the Grand Trunk Railway; but if we enforced the labour law as we should, these people would not be allowed to act in this way towards their Canadian employees. I think this is a very opportune time for the Government to take action. They should either amend the law in force to-day or else enforce fully, freely, rigidly and sufficiently the law as it is. I believe that every member on this side would assist the Government in passing a Bill that would meet the case. If the present law requires amendment, and in my opinion it does, and if the Government will undertake to amend it so as to give our Canadians the protection they should have, every hon. member on this side will help the Government to pass the amendment and make the law of some use.

Mr. COWAN. What amendment would you suggest?

Mr. McCLEARY. I would suggest not having so much red tape as we have about the law to-day. We should have our magistrates on the spot empowered to instruct the officers that might be appointed by the Government to enforce the law, and have in the law what would meet the requirements of the case.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). If the hon. gentleman will allow me, I would like to ask him a question. Referring to the statement he made that the Grand Trunk Railway were adopting a system of discharging Canadian employees for the purpose of making places for citizens of the United States, I suppose the hon. gentleman speaks from personal knowledge. Would he be good enough then, to give me the names of persons so discharged, and of persons so employed, their occupations, or in what capacity they are or were employed. This done, the matter could be looked into.

Mr. McCLEARY. I shall be glad to give the hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair), the information he asks for. I do not wish to give it off-hand, but I know that I shall be able to furnish it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is a very grave statement.

Mr. McCLEARY. I may say, as the hon. Minister has called my attention to this matter, that, although I go home every week, and though I never go home without having conversations with the railway men of the different sections, Toronto, Hamilton and Niagara Falls, every time I have gone home complaints have been made to me in this regard. I can get the hon. Minister the information he wants. This is an opportune time to seek a reciprocal relation with the United States in this matter, if we wish to have it. The people of Great Britain and Canada are, I believe, in hearty sympathy with the people of the United States in their present unfortunate position of war with Spain. While we are supposed to be neutral and are neutral, still Britain's heart, like the Canadian heart, beats in unison with the people of the United States. But, notwithstanding this, I am free to declare that there is an undercurrent of feeling, and not a small one or a weak one, in the breasts of Canadians, that we would like to see the United States get a little bit of a spanking to begin with, and why—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. McCLEARY. Surely, I am free to say that. And why is it? Because the United States have not treated us decently—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. McCLEARY. They have not. Some hon. members seem to think we ought not to say that. I think that I ought to be straight, honest and frank and square in this matter. That is my feeling and the feeling of the constituents I have the honour to represent—that we have been treated indecently and in a manner in which no Christian nation should treat another, particularly another speaking the same language. I do not take a second place to any man in my attachment to the Anglo-Saxon race and my belief in their superiority. Nor do I doubt more than any other man what will be the outcome as between Spain and the United States. But I am expressing the underlying feeling of Canadians, that we have not been treated right by the United States. And, while we look for, and pray for their ultimate success, we do want to receive at the hands of the United States better treatment than we have received in the past. I hope the Government will see their way clear, as I suggested, either to amend the law or enforce it, so that it will be of some use to the people of this country. I beg to move the adjournment of the House.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I sincerely hope my hon. friend (Mr. McCleary) who has just taken his seat, in his utterances, which, at the moment called forth some expressions of dissent, speaks his own personal feeling and not the feeling of his party. I would rather hope that upon the present occasion, though we are bound to be neutral and must be neutral in the present difficulties between the United States and Spain—I should like to believe that, if there is a feeling at all, apart from our sense of neutrality and of our duty as neutrals, it is a feeling of sympathy for those who are our neighbours and who share the continent with us. With regard to the subject matter which has been brought to the attention of the House by my hon. friend, I have only this to say: The hon. gentleman has been good enough to refer to the attitude I at one time took on this question. I stated on more than one occasion—and I do not desire to recall the words I made use of—that I looked upon this American Alien Labour Law as a most unfortunate measure; that I hoped it would be repealed; and if it were not repealed, then I should feel it my duty to ask Parliament to pass a similar law, line for line, word for word. I took this position, not because I thought the American law was a good one, not because I approved of such a measure, but simply because I thought this the best means to bring to the attention of our American neighbours the hostile character of their legislation. A measure was introduced last session in this Parliament, and, during my absence in England, was passed. It was not made so stringent an Act as I thought it would be, it was not made so stringent as I intended it would be, but I have not to pass judgment on this matter at the present time. I have only this to say to my hon. friend (Mr. McCleary)—even if the law is deficient and if it had to be amended, I would ask Parliament not to choose the present moment to amend it. At this moment I would deprecate, and I think everybody ought to deprecate that at this moment, when our neighbours are engaged in war, any action should be taken by this Parliament which ever so remotely looks hostile to them. For my part I would rather submit to some inconvenience, to seeing the law a little deficient, even if it were deficient in my own judgment than at this moment, when it is possible that the mother country and the American nation may assume more friendly relations than they have ever assumed before—I say it would be much to be deplored, much to be regretted that the Canadian Parliament should do ever so small an act which would impair what we expect to take place. Now, with regard to the law which is, it may be, deficient. If it is deficient we must take it as it is at the present time. I agree with my hon. friend, however, that the law as it is should be put in force, not because I particularly favour it, but because it is on the Statute-book and ought to be enforced, whenever it is possible to have it enforced. I was glad to have the testimony of my hon. friend from Essex (Mr. McGregor) a few days ago on this subject, to the effect that an appointment of an agent at Windsor had had the effect of bringing a better state of things in Windsor and Detroit; that Canadians could go to work in Detroit and American workmen could come over to work in Windsor. Now, that is what we want. We do not want any measure of hostility between the two nations. The Americans are free to come and work in competition with us, provided we have the same freedom to go and work against them. There may be some points on the frontier where American officers are over-zealous, where they overstep the mark and where it is possible an unfortunate state of things exists. At corresponding points upon the Canadian frontier, we have our own officers and our own agents. Whether or not they are sufficiently instructed, I am not prepared at this moment to say. I understand from my hon. friend (Mr. McCleary) that in the section in which the hon. gentleman's constituency is situated, in the Niagara peninsula, he finds that the officers are not properly instructed.

All I have to say to my hon. friend in this regard is that he should call the attention of the Minister of Justice at once to that condition of things. If the officer which we have appointed in the Niagara Peninsula does not do his duty, if he is not properly instructed, if, in the opinion of my hon. friend, he abstains from doing certain things which he ought to do, I think my hon. friend would do well, in view of his own convictions and in the interest of his clients, to call upon the Minister of Justice and ask him to give further instructions. I do not say that the Minister of Justice will follow the advice of my hon. friend, but if he does not do so, it will be for good and sufficient reasons, I imagine. Therefore, I would rather that my hon. friend, instead of bringing the matter before this House, should call upon the Department of Justice and endeavour to see that the law is properly observed. But I have only to repeat, as I said a moment ago, that in view of the events transpiring at the present time, we should proceed very cautiously and with great prudence in this matter.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I rise for the purpose of expressing my entire acquiescence in the sentiments which have just fallen from the leader of the House. As you, Sir, well know, and as the House knows, I have on various occasions expressed strongly the view that it was absolutely necessary in the interest of Canada that we should take a firm stand in the protection of our own people against any aggressive action or laws that were calculated to operate injuriously to Canada. No person has pressed that view upon the House more strongly than I have myself. Some time ago, during the present session, I drew attention to the great disparity that existed between the way in which Canadians are treated in the United States who are engaged in mining industries there, and the treatment accorded by Canada to citizens of the United States when coming into any part of this country. I have witnessed with great pleasure a measure recently introduced into the Senate of the United States of America, and which, I trust, if it has not already become law, will become law at a very early date, providing that Canadians shall have all the rights and privileges in Alaska that are accorded in the Canadian Yukon to citizens of the United States. I hail that step with great satisfaction as the beginning of what I hope will be fair, kindly and reciprocal legislation operating upon parties engaged in industries on both sides of the line. I must say also that, witnessing, as I have done with unqualified pleasure, the great degree of rapprochement which has recently taken place between Great Britain and the United States of America. I entirely agree with my right hon. friend that the present moment would be a most inauspicious one for us to take any such action as has been suggested, even when, under other circumstances, we would be warranted in taking it. In my judgment the kindly feeling that has been generated and exhibited so largely, not only on the part of Great Britain and the various portions of the Empire, but on the part of the most intelligent and important citizens of the United States of America, is indicative of a better state of things in the future than has heretofore existed. I believe it is in the interest of both the United States and of Canada that the most cordial commercial and social relations should exist between the two countries. While we are bound to respect that complete neutrality that has been proclaimed by the parent state in reference to the unfortunate war that now exists between the United States and Spain, nevertheless I feel that we cannot forget that the people of Canada, as of Great Britain, are but one branch of a great English-speaking family, and that the interests of peace, the interests of civilization and the interests of the world, would be promoted by the most cordial co-operation between the two great nations.

Mr. SPROULE. In saying a few words on this question I do not wish to be understood as saying anything that might be construed into an unfriendly feeling towards the United States. But I recognize that the ends of friendship will best be attained when each nation secures to their own people their full rights. Within the last two days, in connection with this labour law business, there was brought to my notice circumstances that exist in the Georgian Bay district, which I think ought to be looked into by whoever has been appointed in that district to carry out the Alien Labour Law. If there is an agent in that district whose duty it is to look after the enforcement of the law, he is evidently not doing it; because I received a letter yesterday from a friend of mine, and this is what he says relating to a portion of country where labourers come in from the United States:

I have just returned from Byng Inlet, where I have been working for a short time for the Holland & Emory Lumber Company, who own and operate lumber mills there. The company have over thirty Americans in their employ, in fact all the best positions are filled by aliens, to the detriment of Canadians. They have charge of the most important positions, such as foremen in the mills and lumber yards. They are now putting up a large shingle mill, and they have Americans here to run it. The United States boats and barges coming for lumber bring over workmen, machinery and supplies, and land them after night, and to the best of my knowledge, no report is made to the customs. The steam barge "C. F. Curtis," of Buffalo, arrived there on Sunday, the 8th instant. She landed eight passengers after dark that night; they left the vessel separately, so as not to attract the attention of the customs. Teams were drawing away the machinery, steam pipes and fittings, all night, and the customs officer had no knowledge of what they were doing, as he did not go aboard until Monday morning.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

This writer further says that every official in that district is instructed to wink at violations of the law. I do not know how it is, but it would seem if such a state of things could not go on without its being known in the locality, and whoever is charged with the duty of looking after these things, should be more alert. This writer says that it does not do for a man who is entrusted with the duty of enforcing the Alien Labour Law, to go and notify these men to leave, because they leave for a short time and then come right back and go to work, perhaps in the same camp, or other camps in the locality, and they are working on the same as usual. To make law effectual at all, these men must be deported from the country, as Canadians are deported from the United States when they go there to work. The leader of the Government says we should not do anything that might be construed as hostility against the United States. Now, I do not understand that protecting our own rights should be regarded as hostility. When we treat them quite as well as they treat us in the same line, our conduct should be regarded as no more hostile to them than theirs should be regarded as hostile to us. If their acts must be regarded as hostile, why should they treat us in such a manner? Then I say if we do no more than they do, our conduct towards them should not be regarded as hostile. An hon. member said he was glad to be informed that at Windsor they allowed Americans to come in from Detroit and labour in Canada, as Canadians went over from Windsor and found labour in the United States. If that same condition of things existed in the Georgian Bay, we would not have the same ground of complaint, because Canadians could follow the raw material that went over there and get employment, and could share with the Americans in the labour of manufacturing that raw material. But the same condition does not exist as regards Canadians receiving admission to the United States, in Michigan, when they follow the raw material which leaves their own country, as exists with respect to the Americans who are allowed to come here and take away labour from Canadians. I have been requested to call the attention of the House to this matter, and if a gentleman has not been appointed there to look after the Alien Labour Law, I trust the Minister of Justice will see that one is appointed at an early day, and will give him instructions to do his duty in the same way as do American officers at Niagara or any other point along the frontier.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There was an understanding with the House that to-day was to be given to the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) to move the resolution which he has long had on the paper, and I am very much afraid that this discussion, if protracted, will materially interfere with carrying out the agreement made by both sides of the House. I merely mention this to hon. gentlemen who may desire to say something on this subject, and to suggest that they should be as brief as possible.

Mr. CHARLTON. I only intend to occupy a very few moments in replying to some points made by hon. gentlemen opposite. I must express my very great gratification at the tone of the remarks made this afternoon by the leader of the Government and also by the leader of the Opposition; and I feel doubly grateful from the fact that my own position in these matters is in a measure justified by the attitude taken by the leader of the Opposition this afternoon. The remarks of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) are directly antagonistic to the position and remarks of his leader, and I must characterize them as being, under the circumstances, in somewhat bad taste.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman can put them with the bad-taste speeches he has delivered in this House for many years.

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon. gentleman is quite at sea with respect to the facts, or alleged facts, he presented to the House.

Mr. SPROULE. I may say to the hon. gentleman that I hold in my hand a letter from a man that I believe to be reputable, honest and truthful; and I let the facts stand for themselves.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman can make a personal explanation when the hon. member for North Norfolk has concluded.

Mr. CHARLTON. I was about to say that when the Ontario Government last fall made a condition that no alien labour was to be employed by lumbermen in Ontario and that the supplies should be exclusively purchased in Canada, American lumbermen very freely agreed to conform to that regulation, and I believe they have very faithfully done so. I do not think the information which the hon. gentleman presented with respect to Holland & Emory is well founded. I do not believe any considerable number of Americans, or any Americans knowing the facts, are so acting.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not care what you think, but there are the facts.

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon. gentleman is rather peppery. It is very difficult for employers having men in camp to ascertain what is their nationality. Many represent themselves to be Canadians, and possibly the employer may be imposed upon. But these lumbermen have very good and sufficient reason to desire to conform faithfully to the law, because the penalties under it are very severe, and they are desirous of satisfying the Ontario authorities, and I believe they intend to do so, and to the best of their ability they have done so. I know that Canadian labourers are employed in Michigan mills and lumber camps to a great extent, and there is not the slightest impediment to their going to Cheboygan, Alpena or Bay City or other Michigan points and obtaining employment. I believe, moreover, that where one American is employed in the Georgian Bay district a dozen Canadians are employed in Michigan.

With respect to the statement made by the hon. member for Welland (Mr. McCleary) as to the treatment extended to us by the United States, it is to be borne in mind that the Alien Labour Law of that country was not designed to apply to Canada; it was designed to apply to Bohemia, Hungary, Poland and some other European countries where abuses existed, and it was not called into existence and was not designed primarily to go into effect against Canada. Canadians are in high favour in the United States, both men and women; they secure employment readily, their services are sought after and they secure some of the very best positions in the country. With respect to the enforcement of the Alien Labour Law against Canadians, I am informed, and I believe correctly, that Mr. De Barry, the Alien Labour Commissioner in Buffalo, never enforced it against Canadians except where he had been informed by trades unions in Canada of the coming of labourers, and I believe it was on account of information furnished by Canadian trades unions in every case that the action of the labour commissioner at Buffalo and other places was taken. There is no disposition and no desire in that country to enforce this law against Canadians, and they have not done it in any case except where the matter was brought officially to their notice and it was necessary that some action should be taken. I repeat, that this law was not designed against Canada, but it was designed against other classes of foreigners altogether.

With respect to the assertions of the hon. member for Welland in regard to the Grand Trunk Railway, and the substitution of Americans for Canadians by the new management, the hon. gentleman was unable to name a single instance when challenged to do so by the Minister of Railways.

Mr. McCLEARY. I am prepared to give names.

Mr. CHARLTON. The list the hon. gentleman will be able to prepare, after consideration, will be a very meagre one.

Mr. McCLEARY. It will be a truthful one.

Mr. CHARLTON. I travel as much as does the hon. gentleman. I come in contact with conductors, brakemen and other employees. The complaints made are not so much because of Americans being substituted for Canadians, but the complaints arise generally in consequence of such arrangements being entered into as that recently made by the Wabash Railway, by which the Air Line has been placed under American management. Of course the Americans bring over locomotives and employ their own men. But the argument that the new management of the Grand Trunk is detrimental to the interests of Canada is quite erroneous, and the present management of that road is very active and up to date. It is now recognized to be one of the best managed roads in America, and there are no well founded charges to be brought against this management. I think the hon. gentleman, particularly in his remarks with regard to the management of the Grand Trunk, was entirely unfair, and his remarks were unwarranted by the facts of the case. I do not desire to detain the House. I rose merely to correct the statement made by the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule), for his remarks are almost entirely destitute of foundation. The hon. gentleman did not purposely make them, but I believe he has been imposed upon in presenting statements which, I believe, from my knowledge of the case, are not well grounded or founded in fact.

Mr. SPROULE. I can only say in reply to the hon. member that the gentleman from whom I have received the letter I have known for twenty years, and I believe he is as honest, truthful and sincere as is the hon. member for North Norfolk. The information given, he says, he can prove by twenty or thirty men in the employ of the company. With respect to the other point, I may say that two men from my own locality, who live within three miles of the village, went to the United States and were compelled to return owing to the Alien Labour Law, and they spoke to me about it, saying such injustice to Canada should induce us to pass a similar law prohibiting their workmen from coming into Canada to take employment. Is that not sufficient evidence to satisfy the hon. gentleman? It is sufficient to satisfy my mind. I know these men to be honest and truthful, and I believe my allegations of facts to be absolutely true and correct.

Mr. CLARKE. Recognizing the fairness of the suggestion made by the hon. leader of the Opposition, that by mutual arrangement this day, or a portion of it, was to be given up to the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) to address the House on a very important question, I shall endeavour to make my remarks as brief as possible. I desire to say that with every sentiment given expression to in the House this afternoon regarding the advisability and desirability of promoting the friendliest possible relations with the great nation to the south, I am entirely in accord; and I hail, as I believe every British subject hails, the rapprochement taking place between these two great nations, the United States and the motherland. I feel sure that if unity of purpose and action can be brought about by the statesmen of both these countries, then the welfare of the great masses of the people will be substantially promoted. But, Mr. Speaker, while holding these views and having these aspirations, and desirous of seeing the people of Canada, as a portion of the British Empire, living in the friendliest possible relations with the people of the United States, it seems to me that we ought not to forget the duty we owe to the Canadian people and especially to Canadian workingmen. We in this Parliament should endeavour to discharge our duty towards our own people fearlessly, but of course without giving offence. My hon. friend from Welland (Mr. McCleary) has given instances which have come to his personal knowledge of the non-enforcement of the Alien Labour Law which was put upon the statutes of Canada by, I believe, a unanimous vote of this Parliament last session. The right hon. the Premier tells us now, that in his absence the Bill was emasculated and the Act probably not as strong as he would like it to be, but I respectfully draw attention to the fact that this is the first time the right hon. gentleman has given us that information. This question of the enforcement of the Alien Labour Law has been brought before the House several times during the present session, but we were not advised until to-day that there were evidently mistakes and defects in the law; and so far as we are aware no steps have been taken by Government to remedy these defects. I myself took the course suggested by the Prime Minister, of drawing the attention of the Minister of Justice to the condition of affairs existing in the city of Toronto. It has been said that in border towns where workmen pass and repass from Canada to the United States and vice versa, friction takes place, but the city of Toronto is an inland city and the strike which unfortunately has taken place in that city, and into the merits of which I do not propose to enter, has given an opportunity of proving the inefficient character of this Alien Labour Act which was passed at the instigation of the organized labour of Canada for the purpose of protecting Canadian workingmen against the unfair competition they were subject to owing to the adoption and enforcement of alien labour laws by Congress and by the various States of the union. The workingmen of Toronto who are at present on strike have appealed time and again to have the Alien Labour Law enforced, but they have not been successful in their appeals. I hold in my hand a memorial which I received last night. That memorial is signed by representative workingmen who are in political sympathy with hon. gentlemen opposite, and the declaration to which they have attached their signatures sufficiently striking and of sufficient importance, it seems to me, that I should ask the time of the House to read it. The memorial is as follows:—

Toronto, May 16, 1898.

E. F. Clark, M.P., House of Commons, Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir,—As representing our various trade and labour unions we beg to lay before you, sir, the following facts relating to the working of the Alien Labour Act passed at the last session of Parliament:—

This Act is openly violated every day in the city by the J. D. King Company and by the Gold Medal Manufacturing Company. Statutory declarations from the very men who have been brought over by these firms from the United States under contract, and whose expenses of transportation and other expenses have been paid by Mr. King and Mr. McMurty, have been made and sent to the Department of Justice in Ottawa. Mr. J. D. King, jun., admitted in the Police Court here that he was employing a foreman brought from the United States in violation of the Act, and refused to answer when I asked how many men he had in his factory so procured in violation of the law.

The Dominion Government have appointed the agent ostensibly for the enforcement of this Act, but after careful and persistent effort the workingmen of Toronto, who are daily being injured by the law being broken with impunity, cannot accomplish anything through this agent. His appointment means nothing. His powers are confined to reporting to the Government, but he has no authority to bring actions for the penalties provided for by the Act, nor has he even power when the clearest proof of violation of the Act is given him, to deport the workingmen brought into this country in violation of the law. The writers have placed in his hands the most positive proof possible, but he can do nothing. In fact, as at present "enforced" the Act in Toronto is absolutely no protection to workingmen.

Sir, if this Act means anything, if Parliament is not simply playing with us, giving us the form but denying us the substance, we demand the instant deportation of these men brought in from the United States in violation of the laws of Canada. If this were done the strike in both boot and shoe trade and in the upholstering trade would soon be over, but the continued cause of the friction between employers and employed is that foreign superintendents are appointed who enlist an army of foreign labourers in the United States and import them wholesale into this country. If the workingmen of Toronto are not to go on chasing a shadow, we ask that these aliens be instantly deported in accordance with the terms of the Act passed, as we were led to suppose, for our protection.

Sir, we have read assurances in the daily press from members of the Cabinet that this Act is to be enforced. We ask, do these gentlemen mean what they say? For, unless something is done quickly, we shall be forced to come to the conclusion that Mr. J. D. King speaks truly when he boasts that the Government do not intend to do anything to him.

In conclusion, we ask on behalf of the workingmen of this city for the protection the law is said to afford, and for the instant deportation of workmen brought into this country in deliberate and direct violation of the law of Canada.

Thanking you, sir, for your efforts on our behalf, we are,

Respectfully yours,

(Sgd.) D. A. CAREY,

Pres. of the Trades and Labour Congress, Canada.

E. W. HOLMES,

President, Toronto Trades and Labour Council.

JOHN McFADYEN,

President of the Boot and Shoe Workers' Union.

PAUL RICHTER,

Secretary.

FRANCIS MARMELL,

President of Plumbers' Union, Toronto.

ROBT. HAVERSTOCK,

President, Cigar Makers' Union.

W. IRWIN,

President Upholsterers' Union.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that the statements contained in this memorial submitted by these gentlemen who know whereof they speak, are of sufficient importance to induce the Government to take some steps to give them the protection which it was intended the Alien Labour Law should afford. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) said that the American Alien Labour Law was not designed or intended to injure or to operate specially against Canadian workmen. I hope that may be the case; but the fact remains that since these laws have been put upon the Statute-books of several States of the Union, Canadian labourers and Canadian artisans have suffered very much from them, because in many of the frontier cities agents have been appointed and given carte blanche to deport Canadians who from time to time crossed the line to obtain employment in the States. I can surely appeal to the sense of justice of the members of this House, that Canadian workingmen who have a quarrel with their employers should not be completely handicapped under the Canadian Alien Labour Law as it is at present administered in the city of Toronto. As I have said before, the disputes between employers and employees might be better settled by mutual concessions on both sides if this law were enforced; but when the employer is permitted to bring foreigners into Canada to take the place of the strikers, the relations between employers and employees are embittered and an amicable and satisfactory settlement is rendered all the more difficult. It must be remembered that the men out on strike in Toronto—and the question as to whether they were justified or not in going on strike is not one with which I will deal now—are prevented by the enforcement of the Alien Labour Law which obtains on the other side from seeking employment at their craft in the United States. Their position is a deplorable one, and I appeal to the Government to give some definite instructions to the officer appointed to enforce the Alien Labour Law in Toronto and prevent the continuance of the harsh condition of things now existing there with respect to these men who are out on strike. I do not desire in any way to strain the good relations which now exist between the people of Canada and the United States, and the motherland. I believe we should endeavour to promote by every means in our power, an alliance between these two powers, but I hold that we will be only doing simple justice to the toilers of this country by seeing that the statute for their protection is made effective. That Act, which was put on the statutes ostensibly for their protection, either should be enforced or repealed. If it is found inadequate to accomplish its object, it should be amended in a fair and reasonable way, at the earliest possible moment, without regard to the opinions of people living under a foreign jurisdiction. I hope that in the near future we shall have a practical and effective labour law put on the statutes. Not that I believe in such legislation, but because I have come to the conclusion, as the right hon. First Minister did twelve months ago, that this Act was a last resource, and that the Parliament of Canada, in view of the enforcement of the American labour law, was compelled, in defence of Canadian workmen, to enact a similar measure. I hope that in the near future all these alien labour laws will be removed from the statutes of both countries; but in the meantime we can best bring about the removal of these laws from the United States statutes by enacting and enforcing a similar law on this side of the line.

Mr. FRASER. I cannot allow one of the remarks of the hon. member for Welland (Mr. McCleary) to pass without at least entering my protest. There is one thing I am sure that this House will recognize, and that is, that the statement made by the right hon. Prime Minister, and upheld and supported by the hon. leader of the Opposition, ought to be a matter of congratulation to every Canadian. It had the right ring about it, and I am sure that if the hon. member for Welland had heard his leader before he spoke, he would not have made the injudicious remarks he did. Here is a nation to the south of us engaged in war; and for practical purposes I do not see very much difference between this House and the Imperial Parliament, in so far as any remarks are made relating to that war. When we find Mr. Chamberlain's course so criticised because he said what was true, namely, that the conduct of Russia had not been of such a character as to lead the British people to always believe what the representative of that country said, and when the Russian Government called the attention of Great Britain to that speech and demanded an explanation, we may judge what would be thought if a member of Parliament in England rose in his place and said that the feeling of the people of Great Britain was that they would like to see the Americans get a licking at first, get whipped just sufficiently to humiliate them for a little time, and then succeed afterwards. Suppose some hon. gentleman rose and said the same thing about Spain, what would be the result? The war is in actual operation and I rise to make my protest, as a member of this House, against any remark of that kind, lest the Americans might conclude that the hon. gentleman who made it represented anybody but himself. I admit that our American neighbours have done many irritating things, but we cannot forget that a large number of our people are in the United States and have received great kindness at the hands of the American people. And for one I am not going to allow a statement such as was made by the hon. gentleman to be made in Parliament, without entering my protest. It is very unfair to make a statement of that kind in Parliament. There are many sentiments which hon. gentlemen may feel, but to which it is better not to give utterance. And I am sure the hon. gentleman will see himself that he made a great mistake when he gave utterance to such a statement. I believe that there is a universal disposition in Canada to-day to follow in the lines of the statement made by the right hon. First Minister and endorsed by the leader of the Opposition, and we cannot better our own position, or stand higher in the estimation of the republic to the south of us or of Great Britain by saying which would indicate an underground feeling that made us desire that in the first engagement our neighbours should be defeated. It is in equally bad taste as if we gave expression to the wish that Spain, with which we have no connection and very little sympathy, should win in the first instance.

Mr. CLARKE.

Mr. TAYLOR. I desire to bring to the attention of the Government a letter which I have received from a gentleman living in British Columbia. Were it not that this day was set apart for the discussion of the resolution of my hon. friend from Bruce (Mr. McNeill), I would feel bound to occupy the attention of the House for some considerable time, because, as is well known, I have had a good deal to do with the Alien Labour Law. Last year, when the Bill was reported by the special committee to which it had been referred, I signed the minority report. I said then, and am glad to hear the right hon. First Minister corroborate my statement, that the Bill was practically unworkable and not what the Government promised it should be. Now, I find that admission made by the leader of the Government to-day, although I see in the Supplementary Estimates a sum to be voted for the purpose of enforcing the law in British Columbia. Judging by the answers which we got to our questions the other day, there has not been a case yet under the Act nor can there be one, because the law is practically unworkable. The Bill which I introduced last session was so mutilated as to become unworkable. The letter I have received is from a Liberal of 45 years standing, who formerly resided in the county I represent:—

Mr. G. Taylor, M.P., Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—I herewith beg to inclose you a clipping from a Vancouver, B.C., paper, which explains itself, and for the truth of which I can vouch for, as I have lived in the Kootenay for five years, but it is not half told. The C.P.R. have a boat line which employs about 300 men, that has been built and operated entirely by Americans. We elected H. Bostock on the strength of his and Laurier's pledges, but their pledges, we find, are no good. They promised an Alien Labour Bill, but the one made is not worth this bit of paper. The people here of all parties denounce the late Teslin Lake railway deal, and the Yukon regulations in general, and the allowing Americans to take mineral claims. I believe in Canada far Canadians. I have been a Liberal for forty years, but not the kind that Laurier and Sifton are. Their doings are enough to make the bones of Alexander Mackenzie turn in his grave for shame, but they will make many Liberals turn at the next election.

Hoping the inclosed resolutions will help you in the good work you are doing for the Canadian people, and if you need any more information from this part of the country, address M. Soper, Nakusp, B.C., formerly of Kitley, Leeds County.

I remain,

Yours fraternally,

(Sgd.) M. SOPER.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What is the name?

Mr. TAYLOR. M. Soper.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I thought it was something soapy.

Mr. TAYLOR. In my constituency and that of my hon. friend from Brockville (Mr. Wood), the Sopers are amongst the most prominent families, and they are all Liberals. The hon. member for Brockville will corroborate my statement. The gentleman who wrote this letter was a Liberal until he went out to British Columbia. I have on the Order paper a notice of a Bill to amend the law. It is letter for letter the American law, and I wanted the Government to take charge of it and put it through; but I agree in what the right hon. First Minister has said, that under the complications existing between the United States and Spain, now is not the proper time to stir up any matter that will have any irritating effect. If the law which this Government put through the House, and for which it is responsible, will meet the wants and requirements of Canadian workmen, let them go on and enforce it, and vote all the money necessary to do so.

Mr. HUGHES. In all the districts in the province of Ontario bordering on the fringe between the timber and the farming districts, there are many young men, who, in summer, work on the farms and in winter work in the lumber camps. In the county I have the honour to represent, especially, there are a great number of these young men. They have been accustomed to seek work in winter along the line of the Ottawa, Arnprior and Parry Sound Railway and on the north shore of Georgian Bay and Lake Superior. A few years ago a large American company came in and established a fine mill at Fenelon Falls. Contrary to their agreement they brought in American workmen. They had men—I do not know exactly what to call them—employed to bring in men from the American lumber camps. These parties would bring men in at reduced rates of fare, charge them full fare and stop it out of their pay. Then, in a month or so the men would be dismissed in order that they might be hired at a low rate, and if they refused the terms others were brought in to fill their places. The consequence was that the country was overrun with these poor fellows, walking out because they had not enough money to pay their way on the railways, and pestering the country people for food and shelter. There was one instance, I maintain, in which an Alien Labour Law should have been brought into force, for every one of these men was brought in from the American lumber districts under contract. To-day, I understand, there are three or four thousand—quite a small army—of American workmen in the lumber camps along the north shore of Georgian Bay and Lakes Huron and Superior, driving out this class of Canadians to whom I have referred and who, have hitherto looked to the lumber camps as their winter harvest at all events. I draw the attention of the Government to this case as an example, not that I believe in alien labour laws, but because our young men who desire to seek work in Wisconsin and Michigan lumber camps, are met by the American Alien Labour Law. This is a question of reciprocity. Our young men used to go in and work there until this Alien Labour Law was brought against them, and I contend that American workmen seeking employment here should receive similar treatment. Under the present circumstances I endorse the words that fell from my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) in relation to the good feelings that ought to exist, and I believe do exist between Canada and the United States. The war of 1812 was not brought on by the American people but by a small ring in Congress. There will be always rings, large and small, in connection with any Congress or with any Parliament. At the present time I believe the heart of the American people beats warm for the British Empire and Canada. You remember the words of Burke, that five grasshoppers in a meadow will make more noise than a hundred oxen grazing peacefully. So five anti-Britishers or jingoes in one country, shouting against Britain and trying to twist the British lion's tail, will make more noise than five hundred thousand loyal Americans whose hearts are true to the good feeling with the motherland. I believe that to enforce the Alien Labour Law at the present time would be doing the United States a good turn. Who are all these men who are crossing the lines at the present time? Cowards, Sir, afraid to face the music and fight the battles of their country against Spain. I maintain that in enforcing the Alien Labour Law and driving back these men who are shirking their duty we should do the United States as well as Canada a good turn. We should keep out this competition with Canadian labour, and we should drive these men back to join the ranks ready to go to the front and do their duty to their country. We have no right to allow these people to come in here, so long as they do not allow our people to go there. Any young Canadian who chooses to go and enlist as a soldier to go to Cuba and fight the battles of the United States is not met by an officer at Buffalo or Detroit and told that he must not come in under contract with United States to fight for that country. On the contrary they are all welcome. I maintain that the United States should extend the same courtesy to our workingmen and to all classes when they go into that country as they do to the young fellows who go from here to volunteer in the American army. If they do not give us fair treatment, let us meet them as they meet us. But I know that a great part of that country is friendly to Britain and I trust it will long continue so.

Mr. McCLEARY. I feel it to be a duty I owe to myself to speak a few words in explanation, having brought this matter up for discussion. I would not have brought this question before the House at all had it not been that I am a representative of a border constituency and have had this matter pressed upon me until I felt that it was clearly my duty to call attention to it. Now, as to what the right hon. leader of the House says as to hostile legislation, I deprecate and would deprecate as much as any other member, any position taken by public men in this country that would seem to indicate that the people of Canada were antagonistic to the great republic to the south of us. Our interests are one in regard to the war that is going on. And if any word I happened to drop during my first remarks led any to believe that my sympathies were not all with the enemies of the United States I was misunderstood, absolutely and entirely misunderstood. What I intended to say, and what I did say, was that while Canada is enthusiastic and hearty in her sympathy with the United States, it could not be denied that that sympathy was somewhat measured by the past conduct of the United States towards Canadians, and I would not be ashamed to say that if I were standing in the Capitol at Washington. I do not deem it hostile legislation that we should seek to protect the interests of the workingmen of this country. I have a letter in my desk at this moment that informs me that Mr. DeBarry deported four Canadians from the city of Rochester across the river to Fort Erie. If the United States wants our sympathy, our cordial and hearty sympathy, why should she allow Mr. DeBarry to go on with that kind of business? The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) who, not only when he felt that that sympathy should be given to the United States, but on former occasions when Canadian interests should have been paramount, unless he has been much belied, has sympathized with the Americans, says that this law was intended as against foreigners, Bohemians, and so on, and not against Canadians. But I desire to call attention to the fact that Canadians are the only people it is enforced against to any extent. I have no apology to make as a Canadian standing here to vindicate the rights of the workingmen of this country, and to ask that this Parliament, representing the people of Canada, should protect the interest and welfare of Canadian labour. I have just one word more to say before I sit down. The hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) called me to task for the manner in which the question was brought before the House. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that I am not here to take lessons from him as to my deportment or as to the manner in which I shall bring questions before this House. Of course he wishes to show his attachment to the United States at this time. It is all very well to spread himself in that way, I have no objection. Our sympathies run largely on the same line as his own. However, I want to repeat that I have no apology to make for bringing this matter before the House, other than an apology to the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) in taking up so much of the time which was promised him to-day for the discussion of his motion in reference to preferential trade with Great Britain.

Mr. HUGHES.

Motion to adjourn, withdrawn.

PREFERENTIAL TRADE WITH GREAT BRITAIN.

Mr. McNEILL moved :

That it is advisable that customs arrangements be effected between the United Kingdom and her colonies by which trade within the Empire may be placed on a more favourable footing than that which is carried on with foreign countries.

He said : Mr. Speaker, in introducing this motion I desire to say to the House that I do so in no spirit of controversy. I do not think I need to assure the Government of that, because I think they will admit, one and all of them, that I have no desire to introduce this matter in a spirit of controversy. I think, perhaps, hon. members on either side of the House scarcely recognize as fully as they should, the attitude that has been assumed by those who for years past have been working in the cause of Imperial unity. We have one and all, whether we were members of the House or not, felt that these great Imperial issues ought to stand far above any consideration of party politics. We have all of us striven as far as possible to hold these great Imperial issues above party politics; if we have not always succeeded in doing so, it is not, at all events, because we have not striven to do so. Take my friend Col. Denison, for example. I do not know what Col. Denison's politics may be, I question if he has any party politics. I should be inclined to think that if he has voted at all of late years, he has voted Conservative. But Col. Denison is a gallant soldier, and an honest and upright gentleman of a school which is, perhaps, rarer in these days than we could wish it to be. I am convinced of this, that it would be simply impossible for Col. Denison to say or do anything which would wound the great cause for which he has worked so strongly and so well, either for any party consideration or from any personal motive whatsoever. I have made that remark because of something that has been said in reference to Col. Denison in this House on another occasion. So far as my own position is concerned, I may say that I am prepared to give my support, whatever it is worth, to any body of men, by whatever name they may be called, in the promotion of a policy which I believe is intended to promote, and which I think will promote, Imperial unity; and I am prepared to give my opposition to any body of men, by whatever name they may be called, who, in my judgment, are endeavouring to thwart or to delay that Imperial unity—that is my position. I consider that the question of the continuance of our Empire far transcends any question of party politics, and that it is the greatest issue that can be discussed by any British Parliament.

Now, I think, Mr. Speaker, it must be gratifying to all those who have at heart the welfare of the Empire and the promotion of Imperial unity, to observe the great strides that this cause has made during recent years. One might talk a long while on that subject, there are so many evidences of it, and so many interesting subjects connected with it; but I have no desire to prolong my remarks, and I will only say a word or two with regard to some of those evidences of this progress which we see in our own country. Now, who a few years ago could have expected to find the Imperial authorities and the authorities of Canada joining hand in hand to subsidize steamship communication between the different parts of the Empire? Yet we see that. We see that lines have been established across the Pacific by the Imperial Government joining hand in hand with our own Government. We have every reason to believe that we shall soon have a line joining more intimately Canada with the heart of the Empire, across the Atlantic. I believe that the hon. gentleman who has been carrying on these negotiations was, perhaps, at one time not so orthodox in his views with reference to this fast line as I, at least, should have liked to find him. I believe he was inclined to worship at the shrine of false gods, of a very inferior kind of deity, which could only get up a speed of seventeen or eighteen knots. However, the hon. gentleman, I think, has seen the error of his ways and has come to a better appreciation of the true condition of things, and he is now, I believe, perfectly orthodox. I believe he is now prepared to worship what he believes to be the most magnificent deity of this description that ever walked the waters. I have very little doubt that the hon. gentleman will succeed in letting us have shortly, through his efforts, a fast line of a class of vessels superior to anything which has ever been afloat on the ocean, if we can accept the views of the experts of the Admiralty and other experts well known to shipping men. For my part I do not withdraw from the position I held in reference to this matter last session. I do not blame the hon. gentleman. I do not blame the Government for the course they have taken in this respect. I think it was a great temptation to any Government if they believed they could save two and a half million dollars on the contract. If this contract goes through (and I think the hon. gentleman is deserving of all credit for the board he has succeeded in bringing together) we shall see upon the Atlantic a fast line service established by the assistance of the Imperial authorities. This co-operation of the Imperial authorities with the colonies in establishing better means of communication between the different parts of the Empire is a great stride in advance on the line of Imperial unity. I hope soon to see a cable service across the Pacific established in the same way.

We have further evidence, Sir, of this advance along the line of Imperial unity in Canada to-day. It is only a short time ago since those of us who were working in this direction and supporting these views, which I am endeavouring to put before the House to-day, could find support for our aspirations only among members on one side of this House. It was only among members on the Conservative side of the House a few years ago we could find any countenance for our Imperial aspirations. Now I am happy to say the leaders on both sides of the House seem desirous to prove to the people of this country that they are equally desirous of promoting the policy of Imperial unity. We had the other day another most gratifying evidence of the recognition of the force of this Imperial sentiment in the announcement made by the hon. Finance Minister, when he told this House that our friends in the West Indies, who are at present in such sore straits, were to receive the full and unconditional benefit of the British preference. That may to some perhaps seem to have been an extreme step to take. I believe it may fairly be open to criticism on the ground that an attempt should have been made to secure from our West India friends at least as good terms for Canada as they are likely to give to the United States as the result of the negotiations at present being conducted with that country. Under ordinary circumstances that criticism could scarcely have been successfully rebutted. The circumstances, however, are not ordinary, the circumstances are most exceptional. The circumstances are these: our friends in the West Indies are suffering to-day, they are literally and absolutely on the very verge of ruin, ruin brought about mainly by what does seem to me to be the insane worship on the part of certain politicians in the mother country of something which they are pleased to call free trade, but which is only trade with the greater and better part, of the freedom—the freedom of selling—taken out of it. The result is that our friends in the West Indies are, as I have said, in the most desperate straits. How far they would be able to meet advances on our part, how far they would be able to make reductions in their duties, which might impair the position of their revenue at the present time I am unable to say; but I most gratefully acknowledge the recognition of the Imperial sentiment which was made in the speech of the hon. gentleman in respect to this matter, the sincerity of which is proved by his putting into operation this clause in favour of our friends in the West Indies. I hope and believe that the course which has been taken by the Government of Canada in this regard will be greatly appreciated by our friends there, and I hope and believe it will tend to the ultimate advantage of our fellow-subjects in the West Indies and of the people of Canada. This, I say, is a gratifying evidence of advance along the line of Imperial unity.

Then, we have another evidence. Last year we had an offer of reciprocity made by Canada to all the world; an offer of reciprocity which incidentally and temporarily gave a preference to the mother country; but only incidentally and only temporarily. This year we have that offer of reciprocity converted into a true British preference. That also, Sir, is a great advance along the line of Imperial unity. I am not now going to enter into any discussion of that matter; a great deal may be said about it. But, nevertheless, there is the fact that we have now got a true British preference. We must recognize these evidences, but while we recognize them, and while we recognize them with gratification and the utmost pleasure, we cannot close our eyes to the fact that nothing has been done by the present Government of Canada in the direction of obtaining for the people of Canada a preference in the markets of the mother country for their products; a preference in that market, Sir, which will not only be beneficial to Canada, but which, inasmuch as it will enormously develop the resources of Canada and attract population to her shores as nothing else can do, must also materially benefit the mother country herself. I say, Sir, we cannot but view with regret the fact that nothing has been done by the present Government of Canada in this regard. It is scarcely necessary for me to elaborate the proof that it would be beneficial to the people of Canada to have a preference for their products in the greatest market of the world. It is scarcely necessary for me from this side of the House, to elaborate the proof on this subject when the right hon. gentleman who sits before me has not only stated before he went to England, that this would be a great boon to the people of Canada if it could be obtained, but since his return from England, has stated publicly in Toronto that any man would be an idiot who was not in favour of getting such a preference for Canadian products in the markets of the United Kingdom. That every farmer in Canada should get a preference in that greatest of all markets for everything he has to sell to the people of the United Kingdom, that he should get a preference over his foreign competitor, is surely something that it is not necessary for me to argue would be an advantage. And, Sir, this advantage would not be confined by any means to the agricultural classes of this country. The preference would also advantage the Canadian lumbermen, the Canadian fishermen, the Canadian fruit-grower, the Canadian pork-packer, the Canadian produce merchant; every one of these would be advantaged and enormously advantaged, by the adoption of such a policy.

Why, Sir, what has been the condition of things in Canada for years past? The condition of things has been this: We here, a comparatively small population, have been lying alongside a great and wealthy country to the south of us, a country which before Canada was confederated at all, had accumulated enormous wealth and built up immense industries, and a country in which is offered to our citizens sources of employment at remunerative wages. I myself think that in many cases, where our people have gone to the United States, they would have been very much better to have stayed in Canada where their prospects, although they might not to them seem so brilliant, were more secure and certain. Many of them, as we know, who have gone to the United States have come back to Canada again and have discovered that after all they can do better here than there. Nevertheless, that wealthy country to the south of us has been acting as a magnet, drawing our population there. Give us preferential trade, and what shall we find? Just as soon as it is declared that north of the boundary line every man who has anything to sell in the markets of the United Kingdom shall have a preference there over his foreign competitors, shall get a free entry for his goods into that great mart of the world, while every man south of the line shall have to pay a duty to get his goods in there; just so soon as that fact is established, the whole condition of things is changed. No longer is the magnet in the south, but Canada becomes the magnet and draws the population north. What farmer, what lumberman, what man that desires to trade with the mother country will go to the south of the line where he has got to pay a duty to get his products in the British market, if by coming to the north he gets his goods free of duty into that market. Few men will do it, and as I say, Canada will then become the magnet. Therefore, it is that I need not elaborate that argument, because it is proven by the mere statement of it.

Now, Sir, I have brought forward a resolution here to-day in reference to this preferential trade, and I have framed that resolution purposely in the widest terms possible, in the most general terms possible, so that every man who is in favour of preferential trade may be able to vote for it. All that the resolution affirms is, that some degree of preference, be it little or be it much, should be given to British goods in all British markets over foreign goods. That is all it says. There is no proposal made to give effect to the preference. The resolution is simply the affirmation of the bare principle, and I say that any man who is in favour of any kind or description of preferential trade within the Empire can support this resolution. All details are purposely excluded from it, so that the man who is in favour of absolute free trade within the Empire can support this resolution, and the man who is in favour—if there be such—of not reducing our duties at all in favour of the mother country, but giving a preference by raising our duties against foreign countries, he also can support the resolution. There is nothing stated in this resolution except the affirmation of the broad principle, that some kind of commercial union, some kind of Zollverein, if you like to call it so, on the basis of preferential trade, is desirable. We ask for nothing, nothing whatever, in this resolution. I do not want hon. gentlemen to run away with the idea that this resolution should be opposed because it is asking for something. It is asking for nothing; it is a simple affirmation of the principle that it is desirable that we should have preferential trade. It is for the mother country to give it or not to give it; we are not asking for it; we are informing the mother country of what our views in regard to this matter are: That it is the opinion of the Parliament of Canada that such an arrangement is desirable. Therefore, I do not want any one to oppose this resolution on the ground that it asks for anything. It deliberately avoids asking for anything or suggesting anything further than that a commercial union on the basis of preferential trade is desirable. I am embarrassed to know how to discuss this question, very much embarrassed, because I can hardly imagine upon what ground it can be opposed.

I will venture this assertion: that there is not a man in this House except, perhaps, one, who will rise in his place and who will say that he disapproves of preferential trade, that he disapproves of such an arrangement as would give to the people of Canada an advantage over foreigners in the markets of the mother country.

Mr. CHARLTON. Who is that one member?

Mr. McNEILL. I say, I doubt very much if there be even one hon. member in this House who is prepared to rise in his place and say so; and if I have misrepresented any one, if I have been too sanguine in that view, if I have misrepresented the views of any hon. member in this House, I should be glad that he would rise in his place here and now and put me right. I do not see an hon. member, not one, who is prepared to rise in this House and to say that he is not in favour of such a policy. I say, Sir, that is what I expected to find, because there is not an hon. member in this House who does not know full well that if he were to rise in his place in Parliament and deliberately say that he opposed an arrangement of this kind, he would run the risk of having committed political suicide. I am glad to find that it is just as I expected, and I want that fact to go abroad, I want that fact to be known in England, I want it to strengthen there the hands of the great statesman who has worked so wisely for this cause; I want his hands strengthened by the knowledge of the fact that there is not to be found one man in the Canadian House of Commons who will rise in his place and say a word against this policy of preferential trade within the Empire. And, Sir, even if we cannot have this resolution passed, at all events I have elicited that fact.

Now, Sir, we are told sometimes that it is useless to apply for this preferential trade. That is an argument that I used often to hear advanced by my old friend the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies). It is useless because we never can get it, the people of England would never dream of doing such a thing as to give the colonies preferential trade. Well, to those who have given any consideration to this question, to those who have endeavoured to discover what the opinion of the people of England really is, it seems simply amazing that any member of this House should oppose a resolution of this kind on such grounds. I will grant you, Mr. Speaker, that the course pursued by the right hon. gentleman when he was in England last year did much to stem the current of public opinion, which was then setting so strongly in favour of this policy. The right hon. gentleman went there as the First Minister of Canada. He was supposed to voice the views of the people of Canada on this matter. As the Duke of Devonshire said, he spoke, not as the representative of one self-governing colony, but of eight self-governing colonies; and when it was found that these eight self-governing colonies of British North America, that had been the special advocates of this policy of preferential trade, had come to the conclusion that its advocacy was an error and that inasmuch as it bore the taint of protection, it was to be regarded as a thing accursed, it is not surprising that its particular friends in the mother country, who had been fighting so steadily and strongly our battle, became discouraged. Why, this was done at the very moment when Mr. Chamberlain had summoned the Premiers together to discuss the question of a closer union of the Empire; and our friends on the other side were amazed and dazed by what seemed to them this lightning-like desertion to the ranks of the enemy of all the hosts of the Dominion, on the very edge of battle. What could be urged upon the Imperial Government in favour of preferential trade when Canada, its special advocate, had denounced it by the mouth of her Prime Minister. Our friends were naturally utterly confounded. Our opponents were as much encouraged and strengthened, and their opinions became of greater weight with the public. A very considerable portion of the newspaper press speedily fell under their control, and the "Times," which had been writing in favour of this policy, and which, as we all know, specially prides itself on being a reflect of the public opinion of the day, came out against the policy, and many other journals followed suit. I admit all that. I admit that a very great check was put upon this movement by the course then pursued. But although the policy received a check, I do not for one moment believe that it has been placed beyond our reach. Far from it. Because after all we must remember that the check which was effected in England was largely the result of a complete misapprehension. It was the result mainly of the misapprehension that the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) was voicing the views of the people of Canada in this regard. But the right hon. gentleman himself has done much to remove that misapprehension by stating that he was misunderstood, and that at the very time when he was supposed to be opposing this policy of preferential trade, he was pursuing a course which he believed was calculated to promote and advance it. The pendulum has consequently swung back again, and public opinion in England has reverted largely to the original position it occupied before the visit of the right hon. gentleman, and we find that the London "Times,"—as it is the most important so it has been one of the first exponents of public opinion in England to recognize this change in the condition of the public pulse. Last fall and summer it was advocating nothing but free trade pure and simple. In January last it published the most remarkable article, from which, with the consent of the House, I will read a short extract. It is an editorial article, and will be found in the "Times" of the 19th of January:

In his speech last night, as the guest of the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce, Mr. Chamberlain naturally and properly dwelt mainly upon the larger questions of commercial policy which now engage the attention of Her Majesty's Government. It is not in purely colonial questions alone, but in everything relating to our vast commercial enterprises, that a great change of opinion has taken place within the last two decades. Just as it was the custom to think that the less we had to do with the colonies the better for all concerned, so people were accustomed to suppose that trade and commerce were always capable of looking after themselves, and were much better without assistance from the state. By a very common mistake people mistook the result of peculiar and exceptional circumstances for the permanent order of nature, and rules of conduct which worked well so long as we maintained an enormous industrial start came to be regarded as true for all time. The erection and worship of fetishes is a weakness of human nature which civilization hardly seems to modify, and certainly has not eradicated. The fetishes of the Manchester school are no longer universally believed in under penalty of denunciation for impenetrable stupidity, but they still sway a considerable number of persons whose ideas lost their elasticity some fifteen or twenty years ago. The younger generation has happily proved more ready to profit by the lessons very freely supplied by events and the deliberate policy of other nations.

That, I think, to those who in this House have imagined that the people of England are still wedded to their old-fashioned views on free trade, will come somewhat in the light of a revelation. I have other extracts here, and while I do not want to weary the House, there are some important extracts which I think I must give the House. Now, "Invention," an illustrated weekly review, published in London and, I understand, a very popular publication, says this:

Patriotic feelings would lead us to see a nation banded together by a strong Imperial federation, the stepping stone to which lies in the Imperial Zollverein, discussed by the congress which has been sitting in our metropolis. From a practical commercial standpoint such a union would be of inestimable benefit both to the mother country and to the colonies, which are her offshoot. What we wish to secure is: First, that the goods which are imported by the United Kingdom from any portion of the Empire shall enjoy preferential treatment over like goods which may be imported from foreign countries; secondly, that exports from the United Kingdom to any other portion of the Empire shall receive the same preferential treatment; thirdly, that intercolonial trade shall be similarly treated in the matter of tariffs.

That is, I think, a pretty clear enunciation in favour of preferential trade. Then the "Saturday Review" said:

Half a century ago England did really enjoy industrial supremacy. We banked and manufactured and carried for the whole world. At such a moment the theory of free imports wore a very plausible appearance. We knew that other nations must come to us for manufactures. We, on our side, were rather short of corn for the time. Opening our ports meant admitting corn, not manufactures. The fatal blunder lay in imagining that this state of things would continue. In the fifty years that have intervened betwixt 1846 and 1896 foreign nations have borrowed our money to make their railroads and telegraphs, they have copied our process of manufacture, and they have built their mercantile fleets, until London has ceased to be the bank of the world, until there is not a market where foreigners do not run us neck and neck, and until, by means of subsidies, the carrying trade is rapidly passing from British to foreign bottoms. The British manufacturer now sees himself hoist with his own petard.

That is the view expressed by that important publication. Then I have a very remarkable quotation from the "Textile Mercury," published in Manchester, the very heart of the Manchester school. I will ask the attention of my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) to this. Recollect that this paper is published in Manchester, and I understand, it is one of the most widely circulated papers of its class:

The "Mercury" summarizes its review of the former and present conditions of trade in England as follows:—

The conclusions naturally to be drawn are the following:—

1st. That free trade is theoretically a correct principle.

2nd. That experience has proved that the world cannot be brought to adopt it

3rd. That its partial adoption, as in this country, where it resolves into a system of free imports only, may or may not be advantageous according to conditions and circumstances.

4th. That its adoption in 1846 and its maintenance thenceforward, say until 1875, was an almost unmitigated advantage.

5th. That since 1875 it has been a diminishing advantage, which has now almost altogether ceased.

6th. That the time has arrived when the country should review its commercial relations with other countries and their relations with it.

7th. It would then find that circumstances have changed so greatly that the present system is no longer an advantageous one to maintain, owing to foreign countries having adopted our mechanical systems of industry, and to their becoming more and more able to dispense with our manufactures—the medium in which we should pay for their productions.

8th. That the condition of many of our industries proves the injurious results of the present policy.

9th. That a system of Imperial federation should be established,—

That means commercial Imperial federation, I presume.

—by which the different parts of the Empire might sustain one another in preference to foreign states, so many of which have long cherished sentiments of hostility to this country.

The details of this policy should receive the immediate attention of statesmen with a view to carrying it into effect at the earliest possible time.

Here is another extract which I have much pleasure in reading. It will be gratifying to the hon. gentlemen opposite, and I do not wish to hold it back. Says the "British Trade Journal":

The Empire cannot be federated commercially except by a tariff against the rest of the world, and the question now is: what are the colonies prepared to do in the matter? Unless sacrifices, which may be very nominal, are made on both sides, Imperial federation may be put on one side. Are the people in the colonies prepared to differentiate in their tariff in favour of British manufactures against similar goods from foreign countries, and are the people of this country ready to differentiate by a duty, however small, in favour of the colonies and dependencies, and against the rest of the world? The governments of the colonies should move in the matter, if the chambers are really in earnest. * * * They should, in the first place, pass Bills imposing lower duties upon British than upon foreign goods. They should enforce such duties. * * * If the colonies wish the people of this country to use their produce in preference to that of foreign countries, they must show in a practical way a readiness to give advantageous terms to British manufacturers.

That, I say, I have no doubt, will be gratifying to hon. gentlemen opposite, as they will say they have done so.

The colonists cannot,—

This is very clearly recognized—

The colonists cannot, for the sake of their revenue, do away with their tariff. The most they can do is to show, as the German Emperor has recently discovered, that blood is thicker than water, and that they are prepared to treat the mother country in a spirit of generosity. Then they can rest assured that the claims of the colonists for more favoured treatment in this country will come with a force which no Government here will be able to resist.

But you will observe that it is the claims of the colonies (i.e., what they ask for) that are referred to. Then I have here an extract from the "Pail Mall Gazette":

Truly, Bradford has grounds for consternation. * * * The other lesson taught us is the need of cementing and furthering trade relations within the Empire. The United States have made it plain that they intend as far as possible to be a self-contained commercial unit. Other nations are following the same path. Let England—greater England—do likewise. Let her federate her magnificent Empire in a customs union, and she can afford to go her own way, heedless of the tariff walls which other countries build around their borders. Whether we like it or not, it is a fact that in the future we shall have to look to the colonies, and not to foreign countries, for extended trade, and seeing how great are the prospects of growth in the colonies, commercial as well as patriotic considerations must incline us to regard the prospect with pleasure. At the same time we have no guarantee that even those markets will be ours. Mr. Chamberlain's Jubilee Blue-book demonstrated that the foreigner was steadily, and in some cases swiftly, creeping into the greater markets of England. Yet we can stop the encroachment. It can be done to some extent by the adoption of better business methods on the part of our manufacturers and merchants, but only completely by the founding of a customs union for preferential trade within the Empire.

So says the "Pail Mall Gazette," admittedly one of the most important organs of public opinion in the United Kingdom, or in the Empire. Now, this blue-book referred to was the report by the governors of colonies to Mr. Chamberlain in reference to the trade relations of those several colonies, a report which he asked from these governors and which they furnished to him. There is to be found in the "Times" of Wednesday, 15th September, an article summarizing the contents of this blue-book published by the Colonial Office and containing these reports to the governors. I have made a short précis of this article; any hon. gentleman can see the article itself by referring to the "Times" of the 15th of September. I find these facts contained in that article:

From returns furnished to Mr. Chamberlain by the governors of colonies, it appears that according to the trade returns, while colonial imports increased in all from 1884 to 1894 by a little over 1 per cent, their foreign imports increased about 20 per cent.

That is from the trade returns.

But there is an opinion in the colonies that the importation of foreign-made goods has increased in a larger ratio than is shown by the trade returns, which notice only the port of shipment. In Queensland the general foreign percentage, as shown by the trade returns, is 13 per cent; but in 23 out of 64 articles the estimated annual percentage ranges from 50 to 90.

That is, of foreign goods.

In particular classes of goods the foreigner now in some cases does more than 50 per cent of a trade which a few years ago was admittedly British. In Cape Colony the United States have in the decade increased their trade in wagons and carriages twenty-fold, holding now 50 per cent of the trade in hammers with Victoria. In Tasmania the United States and Germany have now 62½ per cent of the trade in implements of industry; while in New Zealand, Germany has secured for herself a monopoly of the musical instrument trade. In other cases the foreign manufacturer has practically ousted his British competitor.

In the proceedings which took place at that great congress of the Chambers of Commerce for the Empire last year, there is a great deal of interesting information to be found with reference to the real condition of public opinion in England on this question. I think if hon. gentlemen will look at it, they will find that the representatives of English Chambers of Commerce who spoke on this subject, were about equally divided in opinion. There was about an equal number who supported preferential trade within the Empire, and who opposed it at that meeting. The expressions that were made use of by many delegates there were most remarkable, and throw a great deal of light on the opinion and feeling in England on this subject. I am going to read a few sentences on that subject, as I think it would be a pity not to give them to the House.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the date of that congress?

Mr. McNEILL. The 9th of June, 1896. Now, the representative from Birmingham, Mr. Tonks, president of the Birmingham Chamber of Commerce, says:

It is evident, as Mr. Chamberlain himself pointed out, that the chambers of commerce of this country are divided. There are those, perhaps, who believe in fair trade, and others who would go in for absolutely free trade. A line of demarcation has been presented this morning.

There we have the remarkable fact that this question has made such progress in England that the Chambers of Commerce are divided on the subject. Then you will find that the representative of the Warrington Chamber of Commerce made this remarkable statement:

Firstly, I may say that I have not the horror of British workingmen which some of our friends at this end of the room seem to entertain. I come from Lancashire myself, and I have the honour of being chairman of a workingmen's federation, and I may tell you that every member of that organization is strongly in favour of preferential duties.

That is the language of Mr. Arthur Bennett, honorary secretary of the Warrington Chamber of Commerce. Then there is this very remarkable statement made by the representative of the Middlesborough Chamber of Commerce:

Three years ago I brought before the associated chambers of commerce in London on behalf of my chamber, a resolution which dealt with the question of preference of trade.

That resolution was not carried, but an examination of the votes given upon it displayed this important and pertinent fact, that the great industrial centres of the country, voting through their Chambers, were strongly in favour of that resolution, while smaller towns were not in favour of it, and hence it was lost.

I think these utterances are sufficient to convince any hon. gentleman who desires to discover the facts in respect to this matter, that there is a very strong sentiment in England in favour of preferential trade, and that this sentiment pervades the great centres of industry in England.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. And is steadily increasing

Mr. McNEILL. And is steadily increasing, as my hon. friend states. In face of that proof, I would ask hon. members of this House if it is not just a little bit too thin, as our friends to the south would say, to suggest that this resolution should be opposed because there is no chance of our ever obtaining preferential trade in the mother country; and whether it is not also just a little too thin to say that England will never tax the necessaries of life to please the colonies. Why, Sir, who ever suggested she should or would tax the necessaries of life, to please the colonies merely? We have always maintained that this policy is as important and would be as beneficial to England as to the colonies, and it seems to me that persons who put forward such an argument as that are not friends of preferential trade; it looks to me rather as if they were enemies of preferential trade in disguise when they set up such a palpable man of straw that the uninformed may imagine something real and important has been knocked down. No one has suggested that England should tax her food for the mere purpose of pleasing the colonies. When hon. gentlemen say that England will never tax the necessaries of life, they seem to forget that at the present moment she taxes the necessaries of life, many of them enormously. She taxes tobacco, tea and coffee to an enormous extent. The taxation levied on those goods alone is equivalent to a duty of between 15 and 16 per cent on imports of every sort and description from all the colonies of the Empire. So it is quite plain that by a distribution of the duties small preferential duties could be imposed in favour of the colonies without adding to the burdens of the poor man in England in the slightest degree. As I mentioned, I remember years ago, as long ago as 1888, at a meeting I had the honour to address in Paris, Ont. "I do not think the workingman of England would be much more hurt by a duty on sealskins than a duty on his tea." But hon. gentlemen talk as if this was a thing that must tremendously oppress the workingman.

Then we are told that England would never consent to put a duty on wheat. I will take the liberty of reading a few words from an article which appeared in the Sheffield "Telegraph" as long ago as October 13, 1892—and we know what progress has been made since then—written after I had the honour of addressing the Chamber of Commerce of Sheffield. The article says:

It is essentially a poor man's question. All the rubbish talked about a cheap loaf will be exposed in the days when there is nothing to buy the cheap loaf with. "Dear bread" is a mere bogey used by the unfair traders, the worshippers of the old world fetish, to frighten the foolish. No one proposes to do anything which would make bread dear; but even if it were so, and the loaf was raised an infinitesimal part of a farthing, the better wages would far more than compensate for the difference. It is a poor man's question. Every day brings us nearer to the time when, unless we make a complete change in our fiscal arrangements, the workingman will have no wage to buy bread, cheap or dear.

That is what the Sheffield "Telegraph" said before this movement had made anything like the progress it has made recently, and the "Telegraph" is a paper having a large circulation and possessing much influence in that section of the country. During the same visit I had the honour of addressing a meeting of the Federation of Conservative Workingmen's Associations of the two great counties of Cheshire and Lancashire, which sent delegates to their quarterly meeting at which I was asked to speak. We had a magnificent meeting attended by most intelligent delegates, and the resolution in favour of preferential trade was carried unanimously, there not being one dissenting voice. At the general meeting of the Conservative Central Association of England, held subsequently, this question of a duty on wheat was brought up, and one of the delegates stated that in order to test the feeling among workingmen on the subject, he had the question submitted to a vote at a meeting at which 323 workingmen were present; 320 voted in favour of a duty, and only three dissented.

While I was in the mother country last fall I had occasion to look into the condition of the trade of England and the trade of Germany comparing them together in relation to trade with other European nations, and I will state in half a dozen words the result of that investigation. I found this condition of things existed:

The export trade of the United Kingdom and Germany with certain European countries compared in millions of the coin of the foreign country named.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think hon. members of this House will agree with me when I say that these are deplorable figures. And in view of these figures, and in view also of the fact that England is to-day very largely dependent upon foreign countries for her food supply; and in view of the fact that at this present moment Russia has placed an embargo practically upon wheat, and in view of the fact that the price of a quarter of wheat has gone up in England to between 40 and 50 shillings, and that the whole country is being agitated from one end to the other in reference to this food supply; for any one who reads the papers will see there is this agitation and that there is actually a proposal to establish granaries in England for storing up wheat and that the people of England are now becoming fully alive to the fact that they are in peril because they are dependent upon foreign nations for their food supply; I say, Sir, that in view of all these facts, it is not surprising that this question of preferential trade within the Empire has assumed gigantic proportions, and it is not surprising that we find such a statesman as the Duke of Devonshire, perhaps the most cautious of British statesmen of the first rank, taking so serious a view of the necessity for drawing closer together the different parts of the Empire. What did the Duke of Devonshire say in Liverpool, and, if I mistake not, in the presence of my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), in reference to this matter? The Duke of Devonshire said this:

I am only seeking to show you what has been one of the causes why a great change has come over public opinion in these matters, and why colonial expansion and colonial consolidation are now regarded, not as they were, as a policy of a doubtful principle, as a policy which was perhaps to be shunned, but as a policy which is essential to the maintenance of our continued prosperity.

Mr. McNEILL.

"A policy which is essential to the maintenance of our continued prosperity!" And this tremendous announcement on the part of the Duke of Devonshire was, we find, received with great applause by the sober-minded members of the Chamber of Commerce of Liverpool.

Now, I want to ask any hon. member of this House, I care not what side he may sit on, I want to ask him, whether in view of the fact that the people of England have come to regard this drawing closer together the bonds which unite the mother country and her colonies as something which is essential to the continued prosperity of Great Britain, I want to ask any hon. member of this House, whether the people of England are going very long to allow—except indeed it may be those whose minds, as the "Times" says, have lost their elasticity—whether they are going very long to allow, what the "Times" describes as fetish worship, to stand in the way of this thing which they deem essential to the maintenance of their continued prosperity. And I would like to ask him further, in view of that statement of the Duke of Devonshire, whether or not it is reasonable to ask that this House should declare itself to be in favour of a policy for drawing the Empire closer together, in the manner referred to in this resolution. I want to know, whether it is unreasonable to ask that this House should declare that it is in favour of such a policy as this, in view of the utterances of the Duke of Devonshire on this subject. I think, Mr. Speaker, that those who are responsible for the shaping of the destinies of this country, so far as men may shape the destinies of a country, are in duty bound to see to it, that they take immediate steps for the purpose of drawing closer together the various portions of the Empire by adopting a policy which, as I will show in a moment, another great English statesman considers to be that most likely to affect the result we all ought to have at heart, and which I hope we all have at heart. Now I want to say a word with regard to that other English statesman. I want to call the attention of the House to the utterances of the statesman who has risen to a due appreciation of these great issues that are presented for the consideration of the Colonial Secretary of a sovereign whose sway extends over one-fifth portion of the habitable globe. How does Mr. Chamberlain regard this question? Does he regard it as a matter of comparative insignificance? Does he dismiss it with a good-natured and passing gibe, as something which would no doubt be very pleasing to the colonies; or does he view it as the Duke of Devonshire views it, as something of the greatest possible importance, and something which will not only be beneficial to the colonies, but which will strengthen the whole Imperial fabric? Let me quote from the words of Mr. Chamberlain, spoken before the Congress of Chambers of Commerce, to which I have already referred. Speaking of the other proposals that were before the Congress, Mr. Chamberlain says :

My Lords and Gentlemen,—These proposals are of great and pressing importance, but they are, I was going to say, dwarfed into insignificance in comparison with other proposals which will also be put before you and which are intended to secure the commercial union of the Empire,—

All these other proposals, Mr. Chamberlain says, are dwarfed into insignificance. In another portion of his speech he says :

Well, gentlemen, in my personal opinion, this is a question which dominates all other Imperial interests, to which everything else is secondary, and which is at the root of the problem with which we have now to deal. The establishment of commercial union throughout the Empire would only be the first step, but it would be the main and decisive step towards the realization of the most inspiring idea that has ever entered into the minds of British statesmen.

That is how Mr. Chamberlain regards this question. I do not think I said too much when I said the other day that Mr. Chamberlain regarded this question as the most important which could engage the attention of a British Parliament. I want to ask again any hon. member on the other side of the House whether he does not think that Mr. Chamberlain will be prepared to make very large concessions indeed in order to secure what he considers of such transcendent importance, this commercial union of the Empire. Is it not reasonable to expect that he will? We know very well what the basis of the proposal made by Mr. Chamberlain was. It was very well laid down by the right hon. gentleman himself before he went to England. It is preferential trade on the basis of a revenue tariff. That is the suggestion which Mr. Chamberlain made, but he did not say that it was a hard and fast proposal. He told us distinctly that it was not, that it is no cast iron proposal, but simply a suggestion thrown out for the purpose of provoking discussion. What I understand Mr. Chamberlain's view to be is this : He says in effect : I am prepared, for the sake of free trade within the Empire, to impose duties upon foreign goods imported into the Empire, thus giving preference to the produce of the colonies, but I recognize that absolute free trade within the Empire is an impossibility. He says :

It is evident that in any arrangement as to general free trade within the Empire, exceptions must be made in the cases of articles that are chiefly taxed for revenue purposes.

I wish hon. gentlemen to bear that in mind. Therefore, Mr. Chamberlain, while he tells us that he desires free trade within the Empire, does not tell us that he considers absolute free trade within the Empire to be essential. On the contrary, instead of saying that free trade is essential, he says it is evident we cannot have absolute free trade. Then, again, I understood him to mean this, that we must approach this question from this point of view, namely, that the goal we are to have in view is free trade within the Empire, as nearly as possible, and that unless we approach the question in that spirit, he does not think we shall be able to make much progress. In his speech at the Congress of the Chambers of Commerce, he emphasized the free trade side of the question still more strongly if possible, but took special care to point out that there may be exceptions. He said he was not going to discuss those exceptions, but he called special attention to the fact that there may be exceptions ; and I want to urge upon hon. members opposite this consideration, that Mr. Chamberlain, in speaking of free trade, does not mean absolute free trade as we regard it, because he took the resolution moved by the hon. member for Toronto and carried at the Board of Trade at Toronto and accepted it as a basis for negotiations. He said : I regard this as free trade ; but that resolution specially said it was only to be free trade in so far as that was compatible with the raising of revenue for the purposes of government. Therefore, Mr. Chamberlain's meaning of free trade is free trade as far as possible, consistent with the necessity of raising revenue within the Empire. I do not deny that any one who desires to discuss this question fairly must admit that, in all probability Mr. Chamberlain desires to go much further in the direction of free trade than many of us would be prepared to go. But is that any reason why we should not negotiate? Is it any reason why we should refuse to consider this question? We have arrived at a basis for negotiations. The principle of preferential trade is accepted by Mr. Chamberlain—the very thing which we heard time and again in this House would never be accepted by the Imperial authorities. The very thing which my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) told me repeatedly across the House would never be accepted, is to-day accepted. We have the principle accepted and approved of by the Colonial Secretary himself. Is not that a basis for negotiations? Are you to say simply because you think Mr. Chamberlain may be inclined to go further in favour of free trade than we are, that we will not discuss the question at all, that we will not negotiate at all, that we will not try to obtain what my right hon. friend described as a great boon for the people. Is that any reason? Surely it is an enormous stride in advance to have the principle that we were contending for accepted by the Colonial Secretary, who is for us, in this matter, the Imperial Government. What can be alleged in excuse for not proceeding with this matter? We have the principle admitted, and there is nothing but the details to arrange, and we say we will not discuss the details, we will not proceed at all, notwithstanding the great advance we have made. I do not deny that the arrangement of the details of so great a matter must be difficult. But is that any reason why we should not negotiate, why we should not endeavour to meet the Colonial Secretary's views in this matter?

Surely not. I am quite satisfied that the people of this country will not regard that as a good reason. When the principle is accepted, when we have the basis of negotiation, when there is nothing but the matter of details separating us, why, in the name of Providence, should we not negotiate? And why, especially should a Government, yearning for free trade, refuse to negotiate? Hon gentlemen opposite have not refused to negotiate at Washington under circumstances not nearly so propitious. From this side of the House they have urged upon us over and over again that the Conservative party were not nearly anxious enough to negotiate at Washington, when there seemed to be no hope whatever for favourable negotiation there. I think, Mr. Speaker, and I venture to say that the country will think so too, that hon. gentlemen opposite might just for once try the effect of negotiating in London for preferential trade within the Empire—just for once.

PREFERENTIAL TRADE.

Mr. McNEILL. Mr. Speaker, when you left the Chair at six o'clock I had been calling attention to the fact that the principle of preferential trade had been accepted by the Colonial Secretary. I had also called attention to a statement which I deemed to be one of very great importance, made by the Duke of Devonshire. I felt at the time I was referring to his statement that I was not expressing very clearly what I meant to say, and I should like to endeavour to express more definitely my meaning now. The

Mr. McNEILL.

Duke of Devonshire said that the expansion and the consolidation of the colonial Empire was, in the opinion of the people of England, essential to the maintenance of their continued prosperity. I do not think that any one will deny that the adoption of preferential trade by the mother country, and the giving to the colonies an advantage over foreign countries for their products in the greatest market of the world, would have a tendency to the expansion of the colonial Empire of England in the sense in which the Duke of Devonshire used those words, that is to say, in the increase of their population and the development of their resources. That being so, it seems to me that the people of England will not long allow any mere fetish worship, as the "Times" calls it, to stand in the way of carrying out a policy which they deem to be essential to the continuance of their own prosperity. I was referring also to what Mr. Chamberlain had said, and I think it may be well that I should quote Mr. Chamberlain's words in his famous speech at the Canada Club dinner, so that there may be no misapprehension as to what his attitude in regard to this question really is. I see that my hon. friend (Sir Louis Davies) has what I presume is the authorized edition of Mr. Chamberlain's speeches; and I hold in my hand also a copy of Mr. Chamberlain's speech, printed by permission of the author. Now, Mr. Chamberlain said on that occasion, having discussed the question at some considerable length:

My fourth proposition is that a true Zollverein of the Empire, with a free trade established throughout the Empire, although it would involve the imposition of duties against foreign countries and would be in that respect a derogation from the high principles of free trade, and from the practice of the United Kingdom up to the present time, would still be a proper subject for discussion, and might probably lead to a satisfactory arrangement, if the colonies on their part were willing to consider it.

That, hon. gentlemen will see, is a pretty strong statement from the Colonial Secretary of a free trade country.

It has been assumed, in Lord Ripon's despatch, and in many other documents, that the colonies must necessarily refuse to consider a proposition of this kind because it would interfere with the necessities of their revenue, that they are obliged to rely upon indirect taxation for the funds by which their administration is carried on, and that they could not enter on such an agreement as this without providing ways and means by methods which, at present, at any rate, are altogether unpopular in many of our colonies. I am not convinced of the truth of that statement, and I want especially to point out that the advantages of such a proposal are so great to the colonies, as they would undoubtedly lead to the earliest possible development of their great natural resources, would bring to them population, would open to them the enormous markets of the United Kingdom for their products, their food, their timber, their sugar. The advantages, I say, are so important that it appears to me that the colonies themselves would be bound to give to any suggestion, of this kind at all events, a careful reconsideration.

My second point is that we are dealing with an entirely exceptional state of things, and that we cannot, even if we wished, imitate exactly the German Zollverein. We are not conterminous countries; we are countries, as I have said, separated by thousands of miles, in some cases, and the circumstances of our different countries vary so considerably that it is evident that in any arrangement as to general free trade within the Empire exceptions must be made in the case of articles that are taxed chiefly for revenue purposes. For instance, we cannot admit free trade in spirits or in tobacco, and to any gentleman who has any experience other articles will suggest themselves, which in one part of the Empire or another are the subject of strictly revenue duties, and might, by common agreement, be excluded from any such arrangement. But the principle which I claim must be accepted if we are to make any, even the slightest, progress, is that within the different parts of the Empire protection must disappear, and that the duties must be revenue duties, and not protective duties in the sense of protecting the products of one part of the Empire against those of another part. It seems to me that if that principle were adopted there would be reason for calling a council of the Empire, calling representatives from the different states forming the Empire; and although the subject would be one of enormous difficulty and the greatest complication, still with the good-will that exists and the ultimate goal in view, I cannot but think that something like a satisfactory and a workable arrangement might be arrived at. (Cheers.) And although in such a case the principles of free trade would lose something in their application to the dealings between ourselves and foreign countries, advocates of free trade must remember how much they would gain by its extension to all the states which form the British Empire, states which, after all, whatever may be said of their present position, more likely to develop and increase in prosperity and population and wealth and power and commerce than any of the foreign states with which we have relations.

And then he says:

I want not to lay down a course of policy which must be followed, but I want to provoke discussion.

That is the statement made by Mr. Chamberlain at the Canada Club, a speech in which he states most distinctly that in any arrangement for general free trade within the Empire exceptions must be made in case of articles chiefly taxed for revenue purposes. In his speech before the Congress of the Chambers of Commerce of the Empire, Mr. Chamberlain, as a matter of course, deals with this aspect of the question, and what I want specially to call attention to at the present moment is this, that Mr. Chamberlain accepts the resolution of the Toronto Board of Trade as something which will be likely to form a basis for the settlement of this question. I want to read what that resolution was, as I had not got it at hand before six o'clock. The principal clause reads as follows:—

Resolved,—That in the opinion of this Congress the advantages to be obtained by a closer union between the various portions of the British Empire are so great as to justify an arrangement as nearly as possible of the nature of Zollverein, based upon principles of the freest exchange of commodities within the Empire, consistent with the tariff requirements incident to maintain the local government of each kingdom, dominion, province or colony now forming part of the British family of nations.

I should like to read to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries what Mr. Chamberlain said with respect to that resolution:

We have, therefore, if we are to make any progress at all, to seek a third course, a course in which there shall be give and take on both sides, in which neither side will pedantically adhere to preconceived conclusions, in which the good of the whole shall subordinate the separate interests of parts. And I admit that, if I understand it correctly, I find the germs of such a proposal in a resolution which is to be submitted to you on behalf of the Toronto Board of Trade. What is that resolution? I hope I correctly explain it. The resolution I understand to be one for the creation of a British Zollverein or customs union, which would establish at once practically free trade throughout the British Empire, but would leave the contracting parties free to make their own arrangements with regard to duties upon foreign goods, except that this is an essential condition of the proposal that Great Britain shall consent to replace moderate duties upon certain articles which are of large production in the colonies. Now, if I have rightly understood it, these articles would rightly comprise corn, meat, wool and sugar, and perhaps other articles of enormous consumption in this country, which are at present largely produced in the colonies, and which might be under such an arrangement wholly produced in the colonies, and wholly produced by British labour. On the other hand, as I have said, the colonies, while maintaining their duties upon foreign imports, would agree to a free interchange of commodities with the rest of the Empire, and would cease to place protective duties upon any product of British labour. That is the principle of the general zollverein; that is the principle which underlies the federation of the United States of America; and I do not doubt for a moment that if it were adopted it would be the strongest bond of union between the British race throughout the world. (Cheers.) I say that such a proposal as that might commend itself even to an orthodox free trader. It would be the greatest advance that free trade has ever made since it was first advocated by Mr. Cobden, to extend its doctrines permanently to more than three hundred millions of the human race, and to communities, many of which are amongst the most thriving, the most prosperous, and the most rapidly increasing in the whole world. On the other hand, it would open up to the colonies an almost unlimited market for their agricultural and other productions. Of course the details of such a scheme would require the most careful examination. There may have to be exceptions made to the principle, although I believe the principle itself must be adopted if any progress is to be made at all. But I am not going to discuss fully these exceptions on the present occasion.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman has not read all the extract.

Mr. McNEILL. I am not going to read it all. The hon. gentleman will read that portion of the speech which he has before him, to support the branch of the argument he desires to put forward.

Mr. McMULLEN. You did not give the whole of it.

Mr. McNEILL. I have read that portion I require for the point I am making; I shall have to read some further portions afterwards. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries has the speech in his hand, and he will read that portion which he thinks it is important to read. I have taken up almost enough of the time of the House by reading extracts already. The hon. gentleman, on a former occasion, took me to task for what he was pleased to describe as "garbling" of a speech of Mr. Chamberlain. He proved that, how? By reading a portion of another speech delivered by Mr. Chamberlain, and by stating from his place and on his responsibility as a member of this House that I had read all the sentences he had read down to a certain point in that speech, and that I had broken off and left out the rest because it did not suit me. But I did not read one solitary word of that which the hon. gentleman quoted, and I read from another speech altogether. Yet the hon. gentleman had the audacity to rise and charge me with "garbling" as he called it, the speech, and to prove it he read a quotation from another speech delivered by Mr. Chamberlain. I will now proceed with the argument I was addressing to the House, after that little excursion into other matters. I was calling the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, at the time I was interrupted, somewhat unnecessarily, I think, by the hon. gentleman, who had on a former occasion deliberately misrepresented me in this House, to this fact: that when Mr. Chamberlain speaks of free trade he is not using the term in the same sense in which my hon. friend uses it, because I have read to my hon. friend the resolution of the Toronto Board of Trade, which distinctly states that they propose a Zollverein on the principle of free trade so far as is consistent with the raising of the necessary revenue and this resolution was accepted by Mr. Chamberlain as a free trade resolution.

I now pass away from that subject and proceed to deal with another aspect of the question. I asked before the House rose at six o'clock, why should we not negotiate? Well, we are told from the other side of the House why we should not negotiate. We are told by the other side of the House that we shall never obtain this preferential trade by any kind of negotiation or bargain. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) told us that if we obtain this preferential trade at all, it will be obtained by reason of some great wave of Imperial sentiment which will pass over the Empire and give us preferential trade. I am very glad to find that my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) and the members of the Government recognize so fully as they seem to recognize to-day, the force of this Imperial sentiment. I do not think that any member of this House who has been good enough to follow the discussions in which I have taken any part in reference to this matter will accuse me of not giving weight to the sentimental side of the question. But, Sir, I venture to think that what was said by the Duke of Devonshire more correctly describes the probable course of events than what was said by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance. The Duke of Devonshire, in Liverpool, said this: "The future of the Empire depends, I believe, in almost equal proportions upon considerations of an Imperial and a sentimental character." My hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) does not agree with the Duke of Devonshire in his view, if he thinks that the future of his Empire, so far as this is concerned, is to be affected by sentiment alone. I venture to think that the words of the Duke of Devonshire are more nearly correct than those of my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding), although I agree with him in believing sentiment to be a great force. I think he will find that however great the force of sentiment may be, self-interest will have a good deal to do with the determination of this question, and when hon. gentlemen opposite tell us that if we ask for a quid pro quo we are doing something that is discreditable, I cannot agree with them.

Mr. FOSTER. A huckstering spirit.

Mr. McNEILL. Yes, as my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) says, when hon. gentlemen opposite tell us that to ask for a quid pro quo implies that we approach the mother country in a huckstering spirit, I do not agree with them. I think you may offer advantages for corresponding advantages in return, not in any huckstering spirit, but in a spirit of the most generous friendship and good-will. I say further, Mr. Speaker, that the resolution which was passed by this House in 1892 was framed in no huckstering spirit and was passed in no huckstering spirit. That resolution, Sir, was framed in a spirit of the most devoted loyalty to the best interests, not only of Canada, but of the mother country. And I believe that every member of this House who supported that resolution, supported it in that spirit; and from my point of view at least, the policy which was then propounded to this House by that resolution, was vastly more beneficial to the interests of the mother country than any mere reduction of duties by us in her favour can be. And why do I say so? I say so because the future of the mother country is with her Empire. Her self-governing colonies are but outlying portions of British soil. Their people are her people. Their prosperity is her prosperity. By developing their resources, she is building up her own power. Every deserving immigrant attracted from foreign territories to their shores is added wealth and strength to the mother country herself. The growth of Montreal and Toronto is as important for her as the growth of Liverpool and Belfast. If she maintains her empire, the future is filled for her with splendour and glory, and she becomes, of necessity, the great peace-compelling influence of the world. If, on the other hand, through any outward circumstances, she fails to maintain her connection with the colonies, she shrinks to the stature of a third rate power. And, Sir, with her congested population, her dependence upon a foreign food supply, her crippled and restricted trade, as it then would be, her future is not one of splendour and glory, but, in such an event, must be a future that cannot be contemplated with composure by any loyal subject of the Queen. I say, Sir, that that can be no adequate policy of preferential trade which ignores these considerations.

I contend that the policy of the resolution of 1892 would go to build up the resources of Canada, would attract population to her shores, would increase her resources prodigiously, and by doing so would strengthen enormously the mother country and enormously increase her influence. On the other hand, I say that the policy that has been adopted by the present Government will, I very much fear, not tend to develop the resources of Canada. I very much fear that the bald reduction of 25 per cent in duties will have a tendency, in place of developing the resources of Canada to check their development and to impede the progress of some of our industries. You are, by adopting that policy, giving to the mother country, not a preference in an increasing market but in a restricted market; whereas, by adopting the policy of 1892 you are giving to the mother country the advantage in a market which would increase to an extent and with a rapidity which has never been realized, perhaps, by any hon. member in this House.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Was any action taken upon that resolution of 1892 by the Imperial authorities?

Mr. McNEILL. Yes.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What was it?

Mr. McNEILL. Calling together a conference of the Empire.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What was the result of that?

Mr. McNEILL. The results of that were very important.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What importance?

Mr. McNEILL. One of the results of that was the passing by that conference of just such a resolution as I am proposing to this House. As the hon. gentleman (Mr. Landerkin) has attracted my attention to that, I may tell him something more. I may tell him, that had it not been for the policy pursued by his Prime Minister it would not have been necessary to move this resolution to-night.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Do you think it is absolutely necessary now?

Mr. McNEILL. I do think it is very necessary now; I think we have been obliged to retrace our steps; that is what I think.

Mr. LANDERKIN. You had four years to act upon it, and why did you not do something then?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. McNEILL. Now, we are told when we speak of approaching the mother country in reference to this matter, that it is ungenerous to attempt to enter into negotiations with the mother country. That statement is almost too ridiculous to need any reply, but assuming for the sake of argument that it has been put forward seriously, I will just call the attention of hon. members on this side of the House to the view that was taken in England of that resolution of 1892 which offered a quid pro quo.

The "Times" the very morning after the resolution passed, described our action as "a most encouraging sign of loyalty and goodwill." The Sheffield "Telegraph" spoke of it as "the magnificently chivalrous offer of Canada." Under these circumstances and knowing how our action at that time was regarded by our friends and kinsmen in the mother country, I think we can afford to hear, with some degree of equanimity the criticisms which are passed upon it nowadays by hon. gentlemen who at that time proposed a very different course. And I think when we remember that course which was pursued by some hon. members at that time, we can estimate at their true value these criticisms to which I have referred. But I ask again, why should we refuse to negotiate? Why should we fold our hands and refuse to move in a matter which is of such transcendent importance to every man, woman and child in Canada and to our kinsmen in the mother country. Mr. Chamberlain, I want to tell the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, virtually notifies us to take this question up. In the Canada Club speech, he asks us to "better our offer." Before the Congress of the Chambers of the Empire, he said:

I only want to impress upon you my personal conviction that if a proposal of this kind came to us from the colonies, backed by any considerable support on their part, it would not be met by a blank refusal by the people of this country. I say, gentlemen, if it were proposed to us by the colonies, because I do not consider it would be either wise or practicable that a proposal of this kind should come in the first instance from the United Kingdom. We know how strenuously the colonies cling to their own independence, to their own initiative. If they desire, as we desire, and as we believe they do, this closer union—if they are willing to make some sacrifice of their present arrangements and convictions in order to secure it—let them say so.

This resolution simply asks that hon. gentlemen shall say so. I have one other reference to make, and that is to Mr. Chamberlain's statement, and I am very sorry the right hon. First Minister is not here at the present moment, because I would like to base a question upon this extract. This also, I think, is evidence that Mr. Chamberlain wishes the colonies to take this matter up. Speaking of commercial relations, in his interview with the Premiers, he said :

In the meanwhile, however, I may say that I note a resolution which appears to have been passed unanimously at the meeting of the Premiers in Hobart, in which the desire was expressed for closer commercial arrangements with the Empire, and I think it was suggested that a commission of inquiry should be created in order to see in what way practical effect might be given to the aspiration. If that be the case, and if it were thought that at the present time you were not prepared to go beyond inquiry, if it were the wish of the other colonies of Canada and of the South African colonies to join in such an inquiry, Her Majesty's Government would be delighted to make arrangements for the purpose, and to accept any suggestions as to the form of the reference and the character and constitution of the commission, and would very gladly take part in it.

There is Mr. Chamberlain's suggestion made to the Premiers, and now I want to ask this Government whether they took any steps to have it carried into effect. I think the people of this country are entitled to an answer. I suppose the First Minister is the most proper member of the Government from whom to ask information on this question.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We will not interrupt the hon. gentleman's speech.

Mr. McNEILL. I should like to have an answer, and the people of this country are entitled to an answer.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman indicated that he wishes the Prime Minister to reply.

Mr. McNEILL. I see five or six of his colleagues here, and it is not to be presumed that action was taken without their knowledge. Does any one of them know if any such action was taken ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman knows that the suggestion of Mr. Chamberlain was made in the presence of the Prime Minister.

Mr. McNEILL. That does not matter for my purpose.

Mr. McNEILL.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I would merely suggest to my hon. friend, as he is very courteous and reasonable in all his demands, that it would perhaps be proper for the First Minister's colleagues to wait until he comes as he may be able to make a more definite and complete answer than any of his colleagues could possibly make.

Mr. McNEILL. I am very much obliged to my hon. friend for his complimentary remarks, but I do not ask for any lengthy statement. I simply want a reply "yes or no." I only ask whether any member of this Government knows if any such action was taken in support of Mr. Chamberlain's suggestion. It is evident that no member of the Government does know of any such action or they would say so, and it is well that the country should understand this.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have almost done, and I am sure the House will be heartily glad to hear it. I want, however, to call attention to another speech of Mr. Chamberlain, the most recent and perhaps the most important he has made on this subject. It is the speech which he delivered in Liverpool, only a few days before the opening of this session. But before I read an extract from the speech, I would ask to be allowed to read an extract from a very much less important one—one that I delivered last fall at Larne during my visit to the mother country. Larne, I may inform some of the members of the House, who perhaps may not know, is the Irish terminus of the short sea passage between Great Britain and Ireland. I was asked to deliver an address there on the subject of Canada and the Empire, and I called the attention of the audience to the sort of country that this Canada of ours is. The report thus reads :

He had been asked to say something about Canada and the Empire, and he would ask them to be good enough to remember that when he spoke of Canada he spoke of half the continent of North America, a region that was almost equal in area to the whole of the continent of Europe. One-sixth greater than the United States, exclusive of Alaska and which in wealth of mineral resources, in wealth of forest, in wealth of fisheries, and in its possibilities for successful agricultural pursuits was probably equal at least to any six of the great European nations added together, if they left out Russia.

Having called attention to that fact, I said this : He wanted his audience to be good enough to project their minds into the future and to endeavour to picture to themselves that vast area, with the teeming millions that it was capable of sustaining ; he would ask them to consider to what majesty of power and wealth this great country must attain if she be not hindered by the interference of jealous or hostile powers. He wanted them to remember that the people of Canada were simply saturated with loyalty and affection for British institutions, for the people of these islands and for the Sovereign of this realm, and he wanted them to ask themselves whether under those circumstances it might not after all be worth their while to make some sacrifice in order to assist in the developing of the measureless resources of Canada, in order to secure for themselves now, the lion's share of her great future trade, and in order to cement and weld into an indissoluble union that half continent with the parent state. But when they made such a suggestion as this they were told by some people, "Oh, why do you speak of trade with the colonies. The trade of the colonies is so small as not to be compared with our foreign trade"; the trade of the colonies is not after all so insignificant as some people suppose. But let that pass, and let sentiment be laid aside too, although sentiment is the vital force of the Empire. He asked them to look at this matter from a business point of view. Was his business to look at the trade of the moment only? Did the successful business man conduct his affairs on that principle? Did the buyer of stocks consider the profit of the moment, and not look to the future? Did any successful business man refuse to take cognizance of future possibilities, probabilities, certainties? Is it or is it not true that if the Empire endures, Canada must one day be as populous and powerful as the United States are today? If that be as certain as that the sun would rise on the morrow above the horizon with a round disc, what should we think of the statesmanship which ignores it, and is incapable of looking beyond the moment in reference to the trade of the colonies? He said that evening, as he had said before, that the man who takes his view of our colonial trade, though he may be a skilful statistician, a nimble enumerator, or even an astute financier, is so far as the great tides of Empire are concerned, stone blind.

Now, I will read what Mr. Chamberlain said at Liverpool:

Our policy is to bind the colonies closer to us by all means in our power, and, if not now, yet to pave the way for a future union which will be closer than anything that is now practicable. We shall not attempt—that would be foolish—we shall not attempt to put pressure upon our colonists to go one step further than they themselves desire to go. It is not for us to take the initiative. We would rather follow the lead; but what I think we have already accomplished is to convince them that wherever they live, however far their home may be from the centre and from the motherland, we at any rate are prepared to meet them more than half way in any approach which they may make to us in any desire which they may express for closer union; and, gentlemen, it will come, if not in our days, then in that of our successors. In what form I know not—it would be foolish to attempt to predict. It may be in the shape of commercial union—of the Imperial Zollverein, which I do not think to be so absurd as do some political economists.

Then he goes on to say that it may be in the form of an Imperial Council, and he proceeds:

But, in whatever way it may be presented to us we shall not be deterred, either by the economic pedantries or selfishness which is a virtue with some politicians, from giving favourable consideration to any proposal which our brethren across the seas may make to us. And in such a consideration I for one do not believe the English people will keep a strict account of profit and loss—that they will seek to be assured of a present pecuniary gain in return for so much concession on their part. No; I think they will look, and look wisely, rather to a future time when we shall find our reward; and that the splendid isolation with which our foreign critics sometimes taunt us will be transformed into a closer alliance of the British race, and when the sons of Britain throughout the world shall stand shoulder to shoulder to defend our mutual interests and our common rights.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is the utterance of Mr. Chamberlain. He tells us there that his policy is to draw closer to the colonies. He tells us, further, that he is prepared to meet the colonies more than half way in any proposal that they may make. And, in order that we may not be deterred from making a proposal by this bogey of free trade of which we have heard so much, he tells us that he will not allow any pedantic considerations of that kind to deter him. Then he gives the coup de grace to that which has been the stock argument with those who oppose preferential trade in this country—that England will never for the sake of the small trade of the colonies impose a duty on foreign imports and interfere with foreign trade, which is much greater—he tells us distinctly that he, for one, does not believe that that will weigh so much with the people of England; he tells us that in his opinion they will not be governed wholly by considerations of present profit and loss, but will look to the future for their reward. He therefore, I say, gives the death blow to this which has been the staple argument in this country with those who oppose this policy. That is a statement made by Mr. Chamberlain, as I say, a few days before the meeting of this House. I do not desire to suggest that the statement Mr. Chamberlain made was made in response to the speech I made at Larne. I believe a copy of that speech was sent to Mr. Chamberlain. But he is a very busy man, and may not have read it. This, however, I do say, that had he read that speech, I should have desired no more favourable answer to the appeal I made than these words I have quoted from the speech he made in Liverpool. I believe that every Imperialist will thank Mr. Chamberlain from the bottom of his heart for the brave words he spoke in favour of this policy on that occasion. Emboldened by what Mr. Chamberlain said, I have ventured to put this motion on the motion paper and to ask the House of Commons of Canada to support it. I think that every hon. member in this House will agree that if this resolution be supported and carried in the House, it will enormously strengthen the hands of Mr. Chamberlain who is supporting this policy for us in the mother country. It will enormously strengthen his hands to be able to say to the people of the mother country that the eight self-governing colonies of British North America, in Parliament assembled, have approved of the policy of commercial union of the Empire based on the principle of preferential trade. I think the resolution I have put on the paper is a very moderate resolution. I think I would have been justified in moving a very much stronger resolution, a resolution calling on the Government to take immediate steps to meet these suggestions of Mr. Chamberlain. But, though I would have been justified in moving such a resolution, I preferred to move a resolution as to which there could be no cavil, as to which there could be no misapprehension, a resolution simply declaring that we approve the principle of preferential trade, simply declaring that we agree with the Colonial Secretary in believing that preferential trade would be beneficial to this country. For my part, I am unable to understand how any Government that is really in favour of preferential trade can oppose this resolution, because it is simply a resolution setting out that preferential trade is desirable. I do not understand how any Government that is not determined to oppose preferential trade can do otherwise than support this resolution. It is rather a curious thing, Mr. Speaker, that this happens to be the anniversary of the day of the founding of the good city of St. John, N.B., the day when some 3,000 men arrived there, preferring exile and hardship under the flag of England rather than their own hearths and homes where the flag of England had been hauled down and another flag had usurped its place. This is the day which has been appointed by the Prime Minister for the discussion of this question; and it does seem to me that it will be a somewhat singular coincidence if this is the day selected by the Government to stab this great British policy.

Mr. McMULLEN. In replying to my hon. friend from North Bruce (Mr. McNeill), I desire to say, in the first place, that it would be well if all the speeches delivered by Mr. Chamberlain on this very important question were submitted to an impartial judge and a careful and well-outlined decision come to as to what Mr. Chamberlain really did mean, in order to enlighten hon. gentlemen opposite. My hon. friend from North Bruce appears to labour under the impression that Mr. Chamberlain pointed to a condition of things as between the colonies and England that foreshadowed a return to a protective tariff, a return on the part of England to the condition of affairs of fifty or sixty years ago. I deny that, taking all the statements and speeches of Mr. Chamberlain, there is one single speech to show that, or that, putting them all together you can extract from them any indication whatever that he, as a great statesman in England, speaking on behalf of the Government of which he is a member, held out the inducement to the colonies that England was in a spirit or temper to return to the principle of protection.

There is no doubt that England is very anxious to cultivate friendly relations with her colonies, and that she would be willing to do anything in her power to secure more intimate trade relations with them than have existed in the past. But, Sir, if there ever was a wrench given to the friendly relations that existed between the mother country and ourselves, it was given in 1878 when hon. gentlemen opposite adopted a protective tariff, and carried out that principle up to a recent date. The hon. leader of the Opposition took part in the adoption of that principle, and he was surrounded by gentlemen who were willing, year after year, to slap England in the face by putting increased duties on English goods; notwithstanding that many remonstrances, my appeals were made to the Government of Canada with regard to the manner in which we were striking at English trade. We know that every Chamber of Commerce, the Ironmonger's Association, and boards of trade throughout England, protested through their Government against the manner in which Canada was treating English goods. But nothing would move hon. gentlemen opposite, they kept on in their policy of protection, and the result was that now, when hon. gentlemen find themselves in Opposition, they are loud in demanding that better trade relations with the mother country should be adopted. I am sure there is not an individual in Canada who would not be rejoiced to see the mother country give us advantages in her markets over the outside world; but in face of the course adopted by England, of the enormous improvement in her condition as a nation, in wealth and prosperity of every kind, on the right hand and on the left, it is folly, it is worse than folly, to expect her to reverse the policy under which she has attained to such enormous proportions as a nation, that is to say, the policy of free trade. When England adopted free trade in 1846, her debt was something like 850 millions sterling. She was paying a higher rate of interest on her national debt than she does now. We know that since that time she has largely reduced her national debt, it is now something like 900 million dollars less than it was then. We know that she has paid the enormous expenses of the Russian war, the Indian mutiny, and many other troubles, she has paid this all from revenue, and her condition today is better than it ever was in her history. Now, all this has been accomplished under a system of free trade. The increase of wealth in England is something marvellous, it is stated to be something like 750 millions sterling yearly, she is growing so much richer every year. Now, to expect that England would be willing to part with that system that has brought her forward in the race of nations, and to go back to the principle of protection, is something that I do not believe Mr. Chamberlain ever would consent to, or that any English statesman would dare to risk his standing as a public man in openly advocating. I believe England would be very glad to see the colonies unite with her under a system of free trade, and I believe that is what Mr. Chamberlain was driving at all the time—that is what he said, that he would be very glad to see the colonies come in and adopt free trade. But any other principle Mr. Chamberlain declared he would not touch with a pair of tongs, he would not think of asking England to return to the old policy, to impose a duty upon her breadstuffs, her flour and her meat that she gets from the colonies and from the outside world, in order to give the colonies advantages that we asked in return for advantages that we are disposed to give her. I believe that is what Mr. Chamberlain intended, and I would commend to hon. gentlemen opposite an article that appeared in to-day's "Globe," containing an extract from the "Saturday Review." I will read only a portion of the article :

The "Review's" remarks narrowed the controversy down to this point : Did Mr. Chamberlain mean that the colonies should adopt free trade absolute, as Henry George would have defined free trade, or did he mean "free trade as it is in England," this is, a strictly revenue tariff, under which a large revenue is raised? Even on the latter supposition it would still be nothing else than a fiscal revolution for Canada to abandon all duties except those on spirits and tobacco, tea, coffee and dried fruits. It would mean the adoption of direct taxation and it would mean also that the industries of Canada would require to come down to a free trade basis.

Mr. Chamberlain's version of the incident was given during a debate on South African affairs in which Canada came in by way of illustration. Mr. Rhodes had proposed that certain tariff favours should be shown to Great Britain in Rhodesia. Mr. Morley, criticising the position of the British Government, said : "A new departure has been taken, and now my right hon. friend and, I presume, hon. members behind him assent to a proposition which is nothing more or less than a proposal which it was reported the right hon. gentleman said 'he would not touch again with a pair of tongs.'" Mr. Chamberlain replied : "That is a different thing altogether. That was a mutual and a reciprocal arrangement under discussion with the colonial Premiers that the colonies should make a differential duty in our favour and that we should make a differential duty in their favour. That is totally different from the present proposition, which is that the colonies should make a differential duty in our favour without demanding anything in return."

I think that clearly explains what Mr. Chamberlain meant when he was discussing this question with the colonial Premiers, and the several speeches that he made on the subject. My hon. friend complains that the present Government have made no effort to secure preferential trade. Well, Sir, I think the Premier when in England took the best possible steps that could be taken to secure preferential trade with Great Britain. We know that one of the chief obstacles to the attainment of that end was the Belgian and German treaties, and by the course the Premier took he secured the disallowance of those treaties that for years had stood in the way of more extended trade relations with the mother country. Every person who is acquainted with what took place in England when the Premier was there, frankly admits that the course he took was the only course possible to bring about the change that was so desirable. We know that Col. Denison, of Toronto, who was in London, declared over his own signature that had the Premier adopted any other course than he did, the disallowance of the Belgian and German treaties never would have taken place. We have also the testimony of the Hon. Edward Blake who, I believe, of all men outside of this Chamber, has a warm heart towards Canada, and anxiously desires the progress of this country. That gentleman, in a recent visit to Canada, made a speech at Strathroy in which he went over all the utterances of Mr. Chamberlain on this important question, and pointed out the difference between what Mr. Chamberlain really meant and the interpretations that have been put upon his speeches by hon. gentlemen opposite. Mr. Blake clearly showed that no intelligent man, reading all the utterances of Mr. Chamberlain upon this question could come to any other conclusion than this, that the only ground on which the Home Government would consent to concessions being made, would be that we should receive from here goods free of duty, or under the same tariff as she receives goods from us, or virtually that a condition of things something similar to that existing between the northern and southern states of the union should prevail between Great Britain and her colonies. That is the principle the hon. gentleman wanted carried out. Any one who knows the financial position of Canada at the present moment is aware that this would be an utter impossibility. We have considerable national debt, we have to provide for the interest thereon and to meet our annual expenditure, and we have no means of doing this except by a tariff. If we were to abandon our present fiscal system, and adopt the tariff that prevails in England at the present moment, nothing could possibly prevent direct taxation, and we certainly would have it. And who is responsible for that debt and that position? Hon. gentlemen opposite. They heaped up the debt so high as to preclude the possibility of any policy in the direction of free trade in the lifetime of the youngest person within the hearing of my voice, because this country must have a revenue, we must pay the interest on the debt and provide for the expenditure. There is no one who would not rejoice if we could bring England to see that it is to her interest to give advantages to Canada in her markets as against the outside world, and undoubtedly it would be a great boon conferred on the Dominion. It would help to secure increased prices for our commodities. But when we come to consider the enormous quantity of food products which England imports annually and the limited quantity sent by Canada and the colonies, we must acknowledge that it is impossible to ask her to slap in the face those who furnish the larger portion of her trade. The Dominion supplies only one dollar out of every thirteen dollars of food products imported. In 1897 she imported food products to the value of $633,252,282, of which we sent the value of $51,385,318, or one out of every thirteen she used. What are we asking the United Kingdom to do? To place a duty on the goods represented by those $13 and give Canada a free entrance to her markets in return for the small advantage we are giving her. I do not think England, possessed of all the wisdom and statesmanship she has shown during fifty years, will turn back the clock of time for half a century and adopt a policy she rejected, a policy which she had good cause to reject, in favour of the present policy under which she has made such marvellous progress and become so immensely wealthy. Without obtaining to preferential trade, how are we to secure in the English market a preference for our products? We have already made a step in the direction of securing it. The action taken by Canada in reducing its tariff in favour of the mother country has created a very kindly feeling towards Canada. I do not think there is in the entire Empire a province or colony whose action is more appreciated than that adopted by the Dominion under the present tariff. We there showed a disposition to give the mother country advantages in our markets. How are we to secure a return for that concession? The only way is to produce a first-class commodity, and send it there. We can rest assured that with the consumers of England Canadian products will obtain a fair show in the English market. Lay our cheese or butter on any counter and let a British artisan come in, and let the seller point out American cheese, Belgian cheese and Canadian cheese. The customer will naturally say that he desires to give the preference to Canada. He will say: I am a mechanic and am manufacturing and producing articles for shipment to Canada, and I want in return to give Canada the preference. And he will take the Canadian before the American cheese.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am satisfied that the action of the First Minister will have that result; it will give Canada the preference, and that is what is occurring to-day simply because Canada has shown by the re-arrangement of her tariff that she desires to give England advantages in our market over any other country. Hon. gentlemen opposite held the reins of power during eighteen years. During all that time, overflowing as they were with loyalty, and I am not challenging their loyalty or the loyalty of the mover of the resolution, and although they had the advantage of the assistance of the ex-Finance Minister, they never on a single occasion proposed to give an advantage to England such as the present Government proposed when they came into power. Yet they are prepared to criticise this Government for not having taken advantage of what they, in their simplicity, imagined was an offer, an idea which Mr. Chamberlain never intended to convey, and because we have not made more rapid strides in the direction of securing preferential trade with England for our products. I contend that if hon. gentlemen opposite would in a spirit of fairness consider the conditions under which preferential trade could be obtained, they would not for a moment construe the utterances of Mr. Chamberlain in the sense in which they are interpreted by the hon. gentleman opposite. That hon. gentleman has garbled those statements. I have read very carefully Mr. Chamberlain's utterances, and while in some portions of the speech you will find that he came very close to recommending the principle of giving our products a preference in the English market, still if the line of argument is followed to the end, you must come to the conclusion that he did not intend that England should adopt the principle of protection. There were three courses suggested. First, that we should adopt free trade, pure and simple, as it is in England. That we could not accept. Then there was the proposition by the conference at Ottawa, that we should give certain concessions to the mother country in return for concessions received from her, and be prepared to impose a protective tariff against the outside world. Mr. Chamberlain declined that proposition, and stated distinctly that that was a principle he could not possibly accept. Then there was the proposition in favour of establishing a Zollverein as in Germany, under which there would be free trade within the Empire. We know perfectly well that Canada is not in a position to accept such an offer. Where in any speech did Mr. Chamberlain say that the English people were willing to go back to protection and tax the food of the people in order to give the products coming in from the colonies advantages in their markets, and tax the outside world on the products sent to the mother country? I have never been able to gather from the utterances of that hon. gentleman that England was prepared to do anything of this kind. The leader of the Opposition is looking at me very seriously. I earnestly hope if there was a speech delivered by Mr. Chamberlain in which the declaration was made that England was ripe to return to that principle, I earnestly hope the whole speech, not a garbled statement of it, will be read, in order to satisfy the House and the country as to Mr. Chamberlain's intention in this matter. But even supposing he did make such a declaration, that right hon. gentleman is only one member of a Government, and a powerful Government, and while I admit he is a very important and leading man, sometimes a Minister of the Crown in England, as well as in other countries, speaks in advance of the sentiments of the Cabinet of which he is a member. I do not suppose Mr. Chamberlain ever intended anything of the kind suggested, if he did, I believe he spoke in advance of the Premier of the Cabinet of which he is a member, because I do not think that Cabinet ever intended anything of the kind.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). He never said so.

Mr. McMULLEN. I believe he never said so. We know from what we have seen recently that there is a strong probability that an Anglo-American alliance may be entered into, and possibly has been entered into by this time. Does any hon. gentleman think that in view of such an alliance, England would turn around and put a duty upon the products of the United States while she would give the products of her colonies free admission to her markets. England would not entertain any such proposition, and I am quite sure that no treaty arrangement would permit it. The opponents in England of any semblance of a return to the principle of protection, have distinctly laid down that while such a policy might tend to raise the price of corn and wheat and other products, the moment that occurred the landlords would raise the rents, and the condition of the people generally would be no better than it is at the present time when the rentals have been reduced to a great extent. We know very well that England will never return to protection. We may urge that she should give her colonies advantages, but I am afraid we will urge in vain. England has progressed to a wonderful extent under free trade, and the people of England will never turn their backs upon a policy under which they have reached such a position of wealth and power. On the other hand, we know that England is greatly exposed, that she has to maintain an enormous navy, and that she is receiving a very large proportion of her food supplies from hostile countries. It was these considerations which led to the thought that England might try to supply herself from her colonies to a larger extent than in the past, and that is the only thing that could possibly induce her to give Canadian products an advantage in her markets. We all earnestly hope that our great North-west will develop rapidly, and that we will in the near future have a vast export of wheat and other products from that country. We know that the facilities for placing our goods on the English market are getting better every year, and when we have a fast Atlantic service which my hon. friend (Mr. Dobell) has been negotiating about, these facilities will be still greater enhanced. We can accomplish that, but we cannot accomplish anything in the direction of inducing England to part with her free trade policy, the benefit of which she has enjoyed for fifty years and which has made her the great country she is. We would be glad to have preferential trade, but in my opinion there is no possibility of getting it under existing circumstances.

Mr. OSLER. It is to me very extraordinary to find that the resolution of the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) is not enthusiastically endorsed by every hon. member in this House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. OSLER. There can be no question that preferential trade is the grandest aim of this country if Canada is to remain an integral part of the great British Empire. No man in this House dare get up and say that the leading idea in his mind is not that Canada is to remain a part of the British Empire, and that she is to share in the greater prosperity that must come to that Empire as the years roll on. Now, Sir, preferential trade must come as one of the necessities of an alliance between Britain and her colonies. We all know that some years ago, the idea of preferential trade was scouted by the Liberal party, and indeed I might say by most of the people of Canada. It was said to be the visionary dream of enthusiasts. I must confess with all humility that years ago I had the idea myself, that we could never attain the grand goal of the Imperial federationists, but as I have more carefully studied the matter and gained greater experience I have arrived at the conclusion that so far from preferential trade being a visionary ideal, it is absolutely the only real foundation for our hopes of a united Empire. Why, Sir, within the last few months there has been such an object lesson presented to us on this very subject, that I am surprised that any man in this House can possibly not be an enthusiastic supporter of the principle. Take the red map which shows Great Britain's position all over this world, and what do you see? You see a cross marked in one part of the globe, and in another part of the globe and all over the globe, which indicates that there Great Britain has a coaling station, and it is these coaling stations which give England her greatness to-day. I venture to assert that before five years from this date, that red map will be marked with other crosses which will announce to the world that there England has a granary. Now, Sir, in order to make England absolutely secure in herself, that granary must be filled from the productions of British soil. Preferential trade will come as surely as the sun rises because it is a necessary consequence of the maintenance and the continuance of the British Empire. I had the privilege of attending the congress in London in 1896, when the Toronto Board of Trade resolution was put before that congress suggesting that a combination should be made between the different parts of the British Empire in the nature of a Zollverein. That had been discussed at the Toronto Board of Trade for many months, and it had been accepted as part of that idea that each colony should be entitled to make its own taxes, but whatever those taxes might be, they should be lower on goods coming from Great Britain and her colonies than on goods coming from any other part of the world. I believe that that formula adopted by the Toronto Board of Trade commended itself to the Right Hon. Mr. Chamberlain. He said that the Toronto resolutions formed a germ out of which some scheme for preferential trade might arise.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). Does the hon. gentleman wish to inform this House that the presentation of the Toronto board of trade's case was accepted by the chambers of commerce?

Mr. OSLER. No.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). Certainly not.

Mr. OSLER. But I will say this, and the hon. gentleman was present at the time, that if the Toronto board of trade resolutions had been put before that congress, as I wanted, if no compromise resolution had been put, which the London Chamber of Commerce forced us to accept, the Toronto Board of Trade resolutions would have been accepted by four-fifths of the members who were at that congress at the time. One after another of those who spoke first at that congress got up and said: We must have free trade, because if not Manchester goods will suffer. Another gentleman got up and said: Oldham and Bolton will suffer if we do not have free trade. But when we got out of Manchester, when we got out of Oldham and Bolton, when we got away from the mayors who looked as if they had never been out of these places and the little municipal councils they represented, one after another of the members of broader Great Britain—from the south of England and the north of Scotland—got up and said: We believe in a broader Great Britain, we believe in broader ideas than those represented by Manchester and Bolton and Oldham. And I say, without hesitation, that if the Toronto resolutions had been submitted, they would not have been carried unanimously, because there would have been strong opposition, but three-fourths of all the members of the chambers of commerce represented in London would have voted for them. And I defy anybody but a strong bitter free trade partisan to deny what I say. The resolution that was accepted was that it was enormously in the interests of Great Britain to frame some resolution to bring the colonies and Great Britain together, that they might trade and interchange more freely with each other. I was very strongly against submitting any substitute resolution; but Sir Albert Rollit, chairman of the London Chamber of Commerce, and Sir John Lubbock strongly pressed that we should frame a resolution that would be accepted by everybody.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). The hon. gentleman must remember that Lord Strathcona moved an amendment himself to the resolution brought forward by the hon. gentleman, and that even that was not accepted, and it went back to the London Chambers of commerce.

Mr. OSLER. The resolution he moved was withdrawn, and as I have said, one of these whitewash milk and water resolutions, that do not mean anything at all, was submitted, and it would have been a great deal better if it had not been presented. And I say without hesitation that a broad, straight resolution calling for increased intercourse between the different portions of the Empire in the nature of a Zollverein, would have been carried by a three-fourths majority. We discussed in Toronto thoroughly the meaning of that resolution, and it was decided that Canada and all the colonies had the right to fix their own tariffs, without interference in any shape or way, but that whatever tariff Canada or any other colony imposed on any particular line of goods, the colonies and the mother country should pay a lower duty on such goods than was charged to the outside world. I believe that that is the ideal and the practical business result that will come before very long.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Mr. OSLER. Now, free trade is a sort of fetish.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. What is the distinction between that tariff and the present one?

Mr. OSLER. A great deal. You are giving a preference to Great Britain and getting nothing in return. But let me tell you this, that when I was president of the board of trade, so convinced was I that Great Britain will come to us and see the necessity of reciprocating, that rather than delay the matter, I was prepared, as a Canadian, to give Great Britain a preference before she gave it to us, believing that she will give it to us in the end. Free trade was the god of the hon. gentlemen on the Government benches for eighteen years. My hon. friend from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) says that Great Britain will never give up her free trade. But what do we witness today? We see here a number of the great men of Canada who preached free trade for eighteen years, but who gave it up without a struggle. Without saying by your leave or apologizing in the least, they abandoned it completely, and are to-day as strong protectionists as can be found in the country.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Nonsense.

Mr. OSLER. And if they were not, they would not sit on those benches another session. It is a slow growing idea, that change from the theoretical plan to the practical working-out. Great Britain has been a free trade country because she had all the wealth and requires all the products of other countries, but she is beginning to feel now, from day to day, that Germany, France and the United States are competing with her, making cheaper goods, sending in cheaper machinery, and competing with her in the markets of the world, and before many years Great Britain will turn from a free trade country pure and simple—as she is now supposed to be but is not—to a protectionist country. What does Great Britain do to-day? She taxes her tea, but why not take the tax off tea, which is not grown in her own colonies or in her own country, and put it on wheat grown in the Empire, especially when the tax will not affect the living of one individual in Great Britain. The fad of free trade is that you must have everything cheap. Well, we have had everything cheap for three or four years, and to-day everything is dear. Flour is to-day 40 per cent dearer than it was three years ago. Oats, peas, potatoes, horses, everything we purchase, is dearer to-day than it was three years ago, and will any hon. gentleman opposite say that the times are not better. Free trade and cheapness, the fad of Adam Smith and Cobden, is being washed out of existence every day. I believe that the last man of the English-speaking race to take the Cobden medal and think it an honour, will be found to be the leader of the Government to-day. I do not believe that another man will ever rise in the English-speaking race who will take the Cobden medal and think it an honour.

I do not propose to make a long speech. In my opinion, the speeches are far too long in this House, and I would like to see a law preventing any man from speaking longer than ten minutes, under a penalty of a fine of so many dollars for every minute he exceeded the limit. I hope, however, not to lay myself open to too heavy a fine for the length of my remarks to-night. We have had reference from the Government side to the fast steam service. Well, I should say that has been the slowest service ever inaugurated. It started years ago and we have not yet a ship made or a contract let or anything at all but the agreement on paper. Fast service—great heaven! I venture to say that the hon. Minister who smiles so blandly over there will cross the Atlantic twenty times and back at the expense of Canada, if he remains in power that long, and not once will he cross in any steamer of this fast line. It is the slowest line, so far, that has ever been known, and I believe it will continue to be so slow that it would not overtake a snail.

Mr. Chamberlain, in his speech at London, spoke rather hesitatingly as to free trade. There is no doubt that it came to him as a sort of shock that he, the advocate of free trade, should say anything that would in any way show that he had lost faith in the ideal of the Liberal party of Great Britain. Notwithstanding he distinctly led his hearers to believe that, in some way or other, a method would be found to get all the colonies and all parts of Great Britain together so that they could interchange traffic on more favourable terms than would be offered to any outside parts of the world. He left that distinctly on the minds of all who attended that Chamber of Commerce. I myself paid great attention to all that was said there, and I came away with the firm belief, with the distinct feeling that the idea of free trade had been weakened in Great Britain, and that in a few years the weakening that had only been expressed in a sort of frightened manner, would be expressed in a bold and business-like manner. I was as much impressed with that as I am with the fact that the present Government have entirely abandoned their ideas of free trade, notwithstanding the tirade the Minister of Finance made against protection in his Budget speeches in the last two years. Listening to him denouncing protection as the one evil that was grinding down the poor people of the countries where it prevailed, you would have thought that he was about to say: At all costs, I will sweep away this terrible evil. But when it comes down to practice what does he do? After making a strong speech for free trade, he goes on and protects at least his friends very much more than they were protected before. I believe that within three or four years from now, if we as Canadians choose to stand to it, we shall have preferential trade within the Empire, and our wheat and all the other things we grow will be admitted to Great Britain and to our sister colonies under a preferential tariff as against all the world.

Mr. BAIN. Whatever may be the political sentiments that divide us in our domestic affairs, occasions arise when we feel that the relations that constitute us a part of the British Empire are of intense interest to us all. And when my hon. friend (Mr. Osler), who has just spoken, drew attention to the red spots dotted over the map of the world indicating where Great Britain, with the pluck and energy which has made her what she is, had located colonies, we felt that here again her treatment of her colonies entitled her to the name of Mother of Free Nations. And, considering the growth of this colonial Empire, we cannot but feel that we can trust the statesmen who have piloted the Empire for so many years to do the fair and equitable thing between herself and these free nations, when the time came for her to take action on her own behalf or theirs. These men have the capacity and the enterprise to plant colonies over the wide earth and to keep the friendship of those colonies. Is there another nation on earth that can show the same relations to her colonies as Great Britain can? The older continental nations in years past have been able to show immense areas of fertile virgin country under their control. Where are those colonies to-day? One after another, under the vicissitudes of time they have passed from under their control—that which they gained they were not able to keep. And to-day, Britain's greatest daughter seems to be fairly in the way to take away the last of the colonial possessions of one of these grand old kingdoms, the kingdom that discovered this continent, and at one time, called the greater part of it its own. So, I may be forgiven when I say that, whatever may be the sentiment that we hold with respect to free trade or protection, we have this strong distinctive belief, that the men who have planted these colonies and developed these resources and given these colonies free institutions and the right to control their own affairs, can be safely trusted to work out the destiny of the relations of Great Britain and these colonies without any dictation from us. Sir, did these hon. gentlemen opposite ever think for a moment how large a figure they make in the trade of the mother country. My hon. friend (Mr. McMullen) put it, I thought, in a very pointed way. Thirteen dollars out of every hundred—in other words, we calmly ask the mother country to peril $87 of her trade to make sure of the other $13. My hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Osler) says that the political party now administering the affairs of Canada has abandoned free trade, and is now extreme protectionist. I would like to have him come up to Toronto and to some of the western constituencies and make proclamation of his creed on these terms in the next election. How far will he be able to carry his constituents with him? When my hon. friend the Finance Minister brought down his tariff last session, was this the kind of sentiment we heard from hon. gentlemen opposite? Did they then tell us that we had abandoned our political principles and become protectionists? Not at all. And to-day they realize the difference between the tariff as promulgated by the Finance Minister and the sentiments enunciated by the hon. leader of the Opposition. But, in this matter, I claim to support a Government that is practical; and I say this emphatically and without fear of contradiction—that if the mother country is to face the keen competition of Germany, France, the United States and other countries that are developing their resources with all the energy they are capable of, pushing forward their trade everywhere, she must do it by not being handicapped, by not loading herself with burdens to benefit her colonies and to make dear production at home. Do the men who are talking here think for a moment what the effect would be upon the teeming millions of Great Britain, who depend upon the world outside for their daily bread, if one farthing were added to the cost of the loaf? And how long would any statesman hold his own in the face of the immense consuming population if they felt that steps had been taken which resulted in bread being made dearer by artificial means?

Where would British trade and supremacy be in face of the keen competition that our friends opposite tell us she has to face, and that she will have to face in the future as we and her other colonies develop our resources? Why should they not develop their resources? Does the Anglo-Saxon race contain within itself the whole ambition of the wide world? Were I a Russian, were I a Turk, I should have that strong national feeling for my own country and my own home that would lead me to desire to see her in the front ranks of the nations. Why should not that sentiment inspire a German or a Frenchman to do their very best? Then why should the mother country, the mother of free nations, proceed to embarrass herself by loading up her resources at the very fountain head, in face of that keen competition? Let us remember that $87 out of every $100 of her trade is done with other nations, and that she makes money like every other nation by handling the products of those other countries, and making her ports the trading ports of the whole world. They say to us that England offers us no advantages in return for what we do for her. What have we ever done for Great Britain? We taxed her products just as we tax those of the United States, of the Germans, and of all other nations; and until this Government came into power, we never made one iota of difference on behalf of the mother country, while she opened her ports freely to us, as she did to all the rest of the world; and every country that could produce the best and cheapest article, commanded that market. I say that on these lines the action of this Government has been commendable, and I have no desire to restrict the credit to this Government so far as agricultural products are concerned. But I say that action is an object lesson to my mind more important than the question of discussing the time when British statesmen will clog her progress for the benefit of her colonies. When we do the best we can and put our natural products on the English market in the best possible condition, when we offer the best quality of cheese, the finest grade of butter, the finest wheat the world produces, and put them on her market in the best condition, then we have a guarantee that the English dollars will come to our pockets, and come in a legitimate process. I am no stickler for the term of free trade, or the term of protection; whatever policy will best conduce to the interests of my country shall have my approval. But I say this, that if the time ever comes when in the minds of British statesmen they can rearrange their relations and offer her colonies a preference over other nations, we will be only too glad to join in carrying out that arrangement. But I think the first step towards procuring such action is not by saying to the mother country, as hon. gentlemen opposite were doing; Give us protection for our products and we will do something for you. We did not act in that way, we said to the mother country: You have been kind to us, and we propose to make a discrimination in favour of your products. The result was that we found the best road to the mother country's regard, and the best evidence was the denunciation of those treaties with Belgium and with Germany that hon. gentlemen opposite had laboured in vain for years to induce the Government of the mother country to accomplish. Sir, I think the Government have done more during the short time that they have been in power, to secure to us a better standing with the mother country than all the patriotic talk of hon. gentlemen opposite was ever able to accomplish; and if the time comes in the future that Great Britain proposes to extend further benefits to the colonies, we will not be found backward in reaching out a hand to the mother country, and giving her fair and equitable relations. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I feel that the resolution does not exactly express the sentiments that should be expressed by this House, and I have pleasure in moving this amendment:

That this House will at all times favour every practical means of developing inter-Imperial trade and expresses its satisfaction with the action already taken by the Government in that direction.

Mr. SPROULE. This is the chicken hatched out by the hon. gentlemen after all their incubation. Now, any practical difference between that amendment and the one moved by the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) it would take a Philadelphia lawyer to find out. The resolution of my hon. friend reads:

That it is advisable that a customs arrangement be effected between the United Kingdom and her colonies by which trade within the Empire may be placed on a more favourable footing than that which is carried on with foreign countries.

Where is the difference? This House will at all times favour every practical means for that object; and yet this House won't make a plain, bald statement that they are prepared to favour it, or that they desire it. All the resolution states is that it is desirable. Both the hon. member for South Wentworth (Mr. Bain) and the hon.

member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), who spoke against this resolution, admitted that they were in favour of it if it could be accomplished. If the time comes, says the hon. member for Wentworth, when we can get it, I will welcome it. And yet he won't make the bald statement that it is desirable to have it. He admits it would be valuable, but he will not accept a resolution which asserts that it is desirable to have it. The member for North Wellington, while talking loudly against the resolution, said that if we could bring England to see the advisability of giving us this advantage in her market, it would be a great thing, and would be endorsed by everybody; yet he will not say that it is desirable that we should have it, as this resolution says. Now, is that not mere hair-splitting, making a distinction without a difference? The hon. gentlemen argue along a certain line in favour of a certain principle, and then they turn round and abuse a resolution which affirms the very thing they profess to desire. Now, Sir, I feel that the hon. member for North Bruce is entitled to the congratulations of this House for the able and intelligent manner in which he presented his subject. Having examined his resolution somewhat critically, I am of the opinion that every member of this House could accept it without the abandonment of principle. There is nothing in it which every Canadian in this country cannot endorse and support—if you leave party politics out of the question, and if the resolution was moved anywhere else than in the House of Commons. Will any Canadian say that it is not desirable that we should have closer trade relations with the mother country? If there is anything that binds the various portions of the United Kingdom together more closely than the United Kingdom is bound to foreign countries, it is the commercial and social relations that exist between the mother country and her colonies. Then is it not desirable that we should live under more favourable social and trade relations with the mother country than already exist, or than exist between the mother country and foreign countries? I think it is. I have reason to believe that every hon. gentleman in this House, if he would consult his own feelings, would be inclined to support this resolution; but because events that have transpired within the last few years have tended rather to retard the coming of the day when we could have those closer relations, hon. gentlemen opposite say they are not prepared to accept that abstract statement which otherwise everybody would be inclined to accept. While distinctly Canadian, it is not unjust to the mother country. If there is one thing that influences humanity more than another it is the self-interest of our nature. I think Horace Greeley said: "Is not all the world looking out for Number One?" In harmony with the law of our nature, which means the interest of self, we should, like every individual and country, look after that which is for our own self-interest. What does this resolution mean? In seeking to do what this resolution says it is desirable to accomplish, we would be distinctly doing something in the interest of ourselves and our own country. Then, if for no other reason, should we not support this resolution? My opinion is we should. If, while acting in the interest of ourselves, we would be inflicting some distinct injury to the mother country, then I could understand opposition being offered by those who might otherwise be expected to support it. But we would not be doing any injustice to the mother country because the signs of the times indicate distinctly that that eventful day is approaching as rapidly as it can come, and that we are measurably within reach of the time when that principle will be carried out within the British Empire. In this age every country is on the alert to secure for her subjects special advantages by treaty or otherwise in the markets of the world. Then should we be behind the times either in enterprise or in desire? Is it unreasonable that we should desire to change the commercial relationship between ourselves and the mother country if it would improve our position and give us advantages in that market which foreign countries would not possess? Is it not natural, is it not in harmony with the enterprise displayed in this age of progress that we should seek large markets, and make arrangements giving us advantages over every other country, and do everything possible that would be directly advantageous to our people who have goods to sell in foreign markets? Then, should it not be our duty to be on the alert in promoting the interests of the Canadian people and try to secure advantages which we do not already possess? Why should not Canada try it? This resolution says it is desirable we should do so. Yet we find hon. gentlemen opposite are not prepared to try it, although in the next breath they say that every one would welcome it, but there is no chance to obtain it. What is our great need to-day? Better markets. We are trying to get these markets north, south, east and west. Yet this resolution looks to securing better markets. The signs of the times indicate that if we take advantage of the occasion and act as we should act, there is a strong probability that in the near future we will be able to secure better markets to the advantage of Canadians, if we only make an effort to do it. Would such an arrangement secure us better markets? If it could be shown and satisfactorily demonstrated that such an arrangement would not secure better markets, I could understand hon. gentlemen opposing this policy: but there has not been a single word said by hon. gentlemen opposite in defence of the ground that it would not secure better markets, in fact, they have tacitly admitted that it would do so, because the arrangement would apply to a country in which we sell most of our produce. If duties were placed on the goods of other countries which supply $87 worth out of every $100 worth of the products sent to England, surely that would give some advantage to this country, which supplies the other $13. Then, this policy would give us better markets. No one contends it would not, and therefore I am justified in assuming that it would give us better markets if we succeeded in securing its adoption. If it would secure better markets, why do we not seek to get them? Why do we not advocate the principle and uphold it at all times, and in the language of the resolution declare that it is desirable we should have it and aim to secure it. We are not concerned with the question whether or not it would be suitable for Britain, though that in itself is a matter of some importance. But it does not so much concern us; it is not for us to attempt to prove that it would be unsuitable for Britain and therefore they should not accept it. If Britain accepts it and will produce the ways and means, and at the same time give us this concession, why should we not attempt to get it. It is not our place to urge that the conditions of England are opposed to it, for if the mother country shows a disposition to accept it, in all fairness to Canadians we should try to get it. If we have paid attention to what has transpired in the mother country during the last few years, we know that the signs of the times point plainly and unmistakably to the fact that the feeling in Great Britain is growing stronger in favour of this principle. What is Britain's position to-day? With the possibility of war in the east, with war looming up in the west, what would be the great problem that Great Britain would be obliged to solve if she were brought face to face with other countries in war? As the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Osler) has pointed out, she wants coaling stations all over the world to supply her vessels so as to keep them going and maintain that great navy that is the standing terror of the world to-day. Not only does she need those coaling stations, but she also requires food supply, and that too furnished within the British Empire. That food supply can be furnished within the Empire is undoubtedly true, when we consider the illimitable acres of land lying open to be tilled requiring only immigration and colonization to enable Canada to supply Britain with food products in time of war. If it can be accomplished, is it not desirable to hasten the time? If an arrangement were made with Great Britain, the stimulus given to agriculture in the various parts of the Empire would be such that within a reasonable time the colonies would supply food products to keep the Empire going. If we do that, we solve two of the great problems in the interest of Britain, and we enable her to hold her supremacy on sea and land, which undoubtedly she will maintain in the future. At the present time, I say that above all things we should endeavour to solve these problems. Is the attainment of our ambition as set forth in the resolutions possible and probable? No one who has closely observed what has taken place of late years in England can fail to come to the conclusion that it is not only possible, but probable, if we work for it. The conduct of hon. gentlemen opposite within the last few years has, however, done more than anything else to retard that eventful day. Why? Because instead of asking for it at the opportune time, when the right hon. Premier was over in Britain, and when this question was engaging the attention of the people there, he threw cold water on the scheme, and said the people of Canada did not require such a change, that it was not in Canadian interests, and was distinctly against the interests of the mother country; that what we gave we gave freely and asked nothing in return. That very act has retarded the day when we might have hoped to have reciprocal arrangements entered into between the mother country and the various parts of the Empire which would have given us better trade within ourselves, rather than hand it over to foreign countries. The only outcome of that demonstration and that great event which benefited Canada was the denunciation of the treaties. The right hon. leader of the Government is entitled to some credit for whatever he did to secure that end, because that is one step towards the accomplishment of the result which we desire. But since we have achieved that result, a step in the right direction, it has opened the door to the adoption of the other principle, and we can now present a united front and submit our request to the mother country, the unanimous request of this House, which we hoped to obtain by this resolution, and, in the words of the resolution, "it will go a long way towards strengthening the sentiment and bringing nearer the moment when we may hope to attain our ambition in that direction." One of the obstacles placed in the way was the reduction of our tariff. Why did hon. gentlemen reduce it as regards England without asking anything in return?

She did not in her dire necessity require us to do it, but we did it of our own free will, or in other words we threw away a valuable asset that we might have bartered for some other valuable consideration in return. That Sir, was not desirable in the interests of the Canadian people, nor was it calculated to secure that preferential trade which the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) says would be beneficial if we could obtain, and which the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Bain) says, would do Canada good if we had it. To my mind it is a great pity that we gave away that which if properly managed might have enabled us to secure what we aim at by this resolution. The whole conduct of the Government during the past two years has rather tended to prevent preferential trade, and so we cannot hope to advance this policy while they are in power. I believe, Sir, that Cobdenism is dying a natural death, and that the day is not far distant when Cobden medals will be of little value. They may be an ornament to those who like such decorations, but to the practical people of the world they will be regarded as of no value. It is a fact that in every gathering of farmers, or workmen, or merchants during the last few years in England, they have declared in unmistakable language that the day of Cobdenism is over, and that the era of some kind of fair trade or protection, as against free trade, is fast arriving. It is true that our Prime Minister has accepted a Cobden medal, but I have often thought that that is the one act in his life which he ought to be most ashamed of. I do not see him display it very frequently when he goes to gatherings in Canada, and I am inclined to the opinion that he would gladly bury it in oblivion and welcome the day when the public men and the press of this country would not refer to it. Sir, the British race is coming closer and closer together as the years roll on, and those who will not give that growing unity a helping hand will in days to come be regarded as the enemies of the British nation. I hold that these hon. gentlemen who are now opposing this resolution will be written down in history as guilty of an act which is not to their credit. If I know anything about the sentiment of the Canadian people I believe it is distinctly in favour of the principle laid down in this resolution, and distinctly against the policy pursued by hon. gentlemen opposite in regard to this question. The hon. member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen) told us that if ever there was a time when there was a strain given to the friendly relations between Canada and the mother country, it was when the protective policy of 1879 was introduced, and he argued that in formulating that policy we had done an act of unkindness to the mother country, as well as an act of injustice to Canada. Is it not strange that when his friends assumed the Government of Canada and had it within their power to remedy that injustice, they did not attempt to do it. There is no logic in the statement of the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen); he is either insincere or he is dishonest.

An hon. MEMBER. Or both.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, I believe I might go so far as to say both. If he is sincere, then he is derelict in his duty, because since his Government came into power he has sustained and defended practically the same tariff as was introduced in 1879, and which he has told us was unkind to England and unjust to the Canadian people. Why does he not to-day endeavour to change that policy of protection in the direction of free trade? He has the power if he wishes to use it. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) told us that the Right Hon. Mr. Chamberlain would not touch this preferential principle with a pair of tongs. But when did Mr. Chamberlain say that? It was after the Premier of Canada had told him that Canada did not want it, and that Canada gave the advantage to England of her own free will and without wanting anything in return. At that great conference which was brought together for the special purpose of considering this question of bringing the colonies closer together by extending mutual trade advantages which were not given to the outside world, the Premier of the most important colony of the Empire told Mr. Chamberlain that it was not in the interests of Canada and it would be against the interests of England to have preferential trade, and it was not until then that Mr. Chamberlain made the statement that he would not touch it with a pair of tongs. Mr. Chamberlain's object has always been to meet the wishes of the colonies as far as possible, and how could he then speak in favour of this principle when the Premier of Canada told him this colony did not want it. Up to that time Mr. Chamberlain believed that Canada desired it and that Canada had asked for it, but in view of the statement of the right hon. the Prime Minister he could not favour it any longer. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) told us that if we could make England see the advisability of giving us this advantage in her markets, it would be a great thing for us and would be endorsed by every one. Well, this resolution of the hon. gentleman (Mr. McNeill) says that preferential trade is a desirable thing, and yet the hon. member (Mr. McMullen) will not endorse the resolution. What fine reasoning powers the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) must have to satisfy himself that while he believes preferential trade is desirable, he can consistently vote against the resolution which says that it is desirable. The hon. gentleman is not consistent with himself. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) also told us that the British colonies only supply the mother country with $13 worth of products out of every hundred dollars worth she consumes, and he argued from that, that England would not countenance preferential trade. But surely the hon. gentleman did not think of the consequences which preferential trade might bring around in this direction. With our vast wheat lands in the North-west, it would be impossible for any one to estimate what the results would be. We have in that region a vast extent of fertile lands, and it would be no very great task for us to bring it under cultivation and settlement so as to supply all the food that England requires, and which to-day is being supplied by foreign nations. If we had some special advantage in the English market which would give the stimulus of a better price, population would flock into the North-west Territories, the land would be cultivated, and England supplied with all the products she needed from that portion of her Empire. The hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Bain) said that it is utterly impossible for us to get preferential trade, and then he is inconsistent enough to move an amendment to the resolution, stating that we would all like to have it. Now, the resolution of my hon. friend (Mr. McNeill), to which that is an amendment, distinctly states that we desire preferential trade, and yet political partisanship is so strong that he will not approve of the resolution, because, I presume, it comes from an hon. member on this side of the House. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bain) says we are in favour of preferential trade, but yet he will not go so far as to tell the people of England that we desire it. There is no logic or common sense in his action. Now, Sir, there is another circumstance which has attracted my attention since this debate commenced. Here is an important resolution before the House and yet most of the Cabinet Ministers are absent, notably the Prime Minister. I apprehend that he is not here because he either dislikes or is afraid to open his mouth upon this subject at the present time.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He is not well.

Mr. SPROULE. I am sorry to hear it, because I would be very much pleased to hear his opinion of this resolution, but there are other members of the Government here. Have they given this House the advantage of their opinion on it up to the present? So far as I can see, they are fighting shy of it, whether in view of their past record or whether they are afraid to commit themselves I cannot tell. But they should have sufficient moral courage to express their views on any question in which Canada is interested. If they are afraid to do that, they are unworthy of the position they hold. The signs of the times point strongly in the direction of inter-Imperial trade, and if we tell the British people, as well as Canadians, that we will support every effort in that direction, I believe that we will hasten the coming of the day when the end we desire to attain will be achieved.

Mr. McNEILL. Might I just say a word with regard to the amendment moved. The first part of it seems to cover the ground of the resolution, and as the mover of the resolution, I should be perfectly satisfied to accept the first part of this amendment. But as regards the last part, hon. gentlemen will see at once that it could not be accepted by this side of the House. I am sure that what we desire on both sides, in a grave question of this kind, is that we should arrive at some kind of unanimity, as it would be of great advantage to Canada and the Empire to have a unanimous expression of our opinion on this question. Could not hon. members allow the latter part of this amendment, which is absolutely foreign to the subject, to be dropped, and then take the first part and let us unanimously agree to it. It is impossible that we should express our approval of the policy which the Government have pursued with regard to this matter in every respect. Although in some respects, I do approve of what they have done. I cannot say that I approve of it altogether. If my hon. friend would strike out the latter part of the amendment, we would have a unanimous vote.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I am sorry to say that I cannot accept the suggestion. We think the latter part is the most important. We have not the slightest doubt that we have greatly benefited the cause of inter-Imperial trade, and we think that now is the proper occasion to affirm it.

Mr. McNEILL. My hon. friend must understand that that is a matter of dispute.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. We think that the majority of the people in the country and the majority of this House will endorse that view.

Mr. McNEILL. No doubt my hon. friend will have a majority behind him to endorse his view, but why should there be deliberately tacked to the resolution something which hon. gentlemen know must prevent unanimity in this House? If they desire to promote this policy, they must certainly know that a unanimous vote of this House would strengthen the hands of those in England who are in favour of it. If hon. gentlemen insist upon tacking to this resolution a clause which they know it is absolutely impossible for me on this side to accept, they must stand before the country in the position of men who are deliberately endeavouring to prevent a unanimous expression of opinion.

Mr. DOBELL. If the hon. member for North Bruce will allow me I think I shall be able to show him why we cannot allow our amendment to be cut in two but that it must be presented as a whole. When I learned that a day was set apart for this discussion, I thought that probably that party politics might be laid aside and that we might have a discussion of this great question, in which we are all warmly interested, without bringing into it any political strife or party feeling. I really thought that we were going to have a sort of off-day or holiday, and if I have any fault to find it is that the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. Mc-Neill) took rather the lion's share of the holiday. I think he might very well have used the pruning knife, especially in those remarks in which he devoted considerable time to misrepresent my statements concerning the fast line steamers.

Mr. McNEILL. I assure my hon. friend that I had no intention of misrepresenting him in any way.

Mr. DOBELL. I accept the hon. gentleman's disclaimer at once, but the facts are there. I should like at first just to draw attention to the remarks made by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule). He expressed some astonishment at the small egg that was the result of the very eloquent and perfect speech of my hon. friend from Wentworth (Mr. Bain). I do not think I have ever listened to a more finished and convincing answer than that which was made to the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) by my hon. friend from Wentworth. The hon. member for East Grey asked if this amendment was the egg the hon. member for Wentworth laid. Well, the difference between my hon. friend's egg and that laid by the hon. member for North Bruce is this. That of the hon. member for North Bruce was an old nest egg, and before I have done I intend to show that you might sit on that egg as long as you like and it would never fructify. But our egg has got the germs of life in it, and if you only give it time, it will develop into a good sized rooster. My hon. friend from North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) abrogates for his party the entire responsibility of advancing Imperial confederation. He covers all the ground, and sought to make out that his side of the House alone were supporting this movement. Let me carry the hon. gentleman back about twenty years ago and show him very briefly that this scheme of Imperial federation or inter-Imperial trade first originated with the Dominion Board of Trade who made an effort to form a league to draw closer trade relations between Great Britain and her colonies. A conference was held in London, the result of which was a reiteration of the opinion that it was desirable to draw closer the trade relations between Great Britain and all her colonies. But even at that early stage, there was considerable difference of opinion, and one section of that conference split from the remainder of it on the ground that we were not sufficiently pronounced in our views. The dissenting section wanted us distinctly to advocate protection and discriminating duties. We were not prepared to do that, and the consequence was that a considerable number of members left and formed what was known as the Fair Trade League. We had no sympathy with that Fair Trade League, and it died a natural death after some years of existence. The Right Hon. Mr. Foster shortly after issued a pamphlet which was very widely circulated and of very great value, and afterwards laid down the foundation of the Imperial Federation League, I can only express the great regret I felt when Mr. Foster was taken away from his sphere of usefulness in this life and Imperial Federation lost a very strong supporter.

But at that time, the real difficulty we found in the progress of the federation scheme was that we saw that England would not listen to anything that interfered with her free trade policy; and I remember well reporting to the Dominion Board of Trade that it was useless to offer suggestions that would interfere with the maintenance of that policy by Great Britain. It was while attending that conference, followed by the meeting of the Associated Chambers of Commerce, that I drew attention to the wording of their resolutions. Those resolutions having reference to treaties between Great Britain and Ireland and France or Germany or other countries were framed as follows, in all treaties between Great Britain and Ireland, with France or other countries. There was no reference made to the colonies. The chairman was challenged to say where the colonies came in. It was pointed out that the colonies had no power to negotiate treaties themselves, and it was asked where the colonies would come in. Were they foreign countries, or were they left out altogether? From that time to the present the words "Great Britain and Ireland and her colonies" were inserted in all these resolutions. And I claim that to-day the colonies of Great Britain exercise a much greater influence in the councils of the nation. Now, I am not going to detain the House by following the progress of Imperial federation. I will only mention one fact in its history which happened three or four years ago, and that is the schism which occurred in the central organization in London. A large number of members wanted to insist that Imperial defence should take precedence of Imperial trade, and we opposed this. It ended in the break-up of the central organization and the re-formation of the league in the city of London under the title of Federation League, the word Imperial being dropped out of deference to Australian colonies which is now carrying on the work. Our contention was then, and is, that if we developed trade interests between the colonies and Great Britain, the defence of those interests would be voluntarily tendered by the colonies when needed. But to advocate a tax, no matter how small, for the maintenance of the Imperial marine and land forces, not for the defence of Canada itself, but of the Empire, would not be received with favour by this country, and we realized, to-day, that the development which we are forced to carry out in making new railways, deepening our canals and opening up our new territories, taxes to the utmost the resources of this country, and it would be foolish to advocate a further tax for the defence of the whole Empire, until the necessity for such a tax was laid upon us.

I admit, Mr. Speaker, that very little progress has been made in England in this Imperial federation scheme. But gradually the mother country and the colonies have been coming closer, and the mother country has been advancing upon lines that would enable the colonies, when they are prepared to take their part, to have more extended relation amongst themselves and to enter into negotiations for closer union with Great Britain. Now, this brings us to the real point at issue between us and the hon. gentlemen opposite. And here is where I find the nest egg that has been taken hold of by the hon. member for North Bruce, because his resolution is almost a counterpart of the one carried in Ottawa.

Mr. McNEILL. It is the same, word for word.

Mr. DOBELL. I thought so. Now, let us, for a moment, look at the result of that resolution and how it was regarded by Mr. Chamberlain, who has been so freely quoted to-day. This is what he said—

Mr. McNEILL. I do not wish to interrupt the hon. gentleman. But, in his reference to what Mr. Chamberlain said on the occasion he refers to, will the hon. gentleman please remember that Mr. Chamberlain explained that he coupled the resolution with the views of those at the conference. That is an abstract resolution, but Mr. Chamberlain speaks of the views of the supporters of it. I took care to say I was moving that as an abstract resolution.

Mr. DOBELL. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McNeill) said that he made no proposal to give effect to this resolution, and that it does not ask for anything. That is one reason why I say it is an addled egg and there is no life in it. Now, Mr. Chamberlain admitted that this was a declaration of a definite principle with no definite plan. He pointed out that it would involve a most serious disturbance of the trade of the United Kingdom, it involved an imposition of a duty upon food and raw material, the tendency being to increase the cost of living and the cost of production, which would put them in a worse position in competition with foreign countries. He also pointed out that Great Britain would get a very small consideration in the shape of a preference of 2½ per cent, or it might be 5 per cent, on this whole trade from the colonies, 95 to 97½ per cent being with other countries. What, then, he asked, is the proposition we are asked to consider. He said it was a very startling proposal which it was impossible to adopt. Now, I ask if anything my hon. friend (Mr. McNeill) read gave the impression to the House conveyed by that which I am reading. I am giving an exact abstract of Mr. Chamberlain's speech.

Mr. McNEILL. My hon. friend will understand that Mr. Chamberlain was not referring to the abstract resolution at all, but to the proposals that had been made in favour of preferential trade; and in the course of his speech he referred to a proposal which he supposed I had made in favour of preferential trade. But the proposal he thought I had made was not the proposal that I did make.

Mr. DOBELL. I will just finish what Mr. Chamberlain did say. He said that it was a very startling proposal, and one which it is impossible for us to adopt, and he added that although, if sufficient advantages were offered to him, he had not such pedantic admiration for ultra free trade that he would not consider a deviation from the strict doctrine of free trade, but that at the present the colonies are offering no sufficient quid pro quo to cover the certain loss and risk to Great Britain in the revising of its present commercial policy. And he finished his argument on this point by saying:

We may fairly ask our fellow subjects in the colonies to better their offer.

Mr. McNEILL. Hear, hear.

Mr. DOBELL. I say "hear, hear," too, because I think that it is a point that hon. gentlemen opposite have lost sight of. Now, I come to challenge an expression of the hon. member for North Bruce when he spoke on the Address on the opening of the session.

Mr. McNEILL. I would ask, Mr. Speaker, if it is in order for the hon. gentleman to refer to that?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Dobell) wishes to discuss a matter which has been the subject of a former debate it would be irregular. But I understand that he will not go so far as to discuss what took place at a former debate.

Mr. DOBELL. I will read an extract—

Mr. McNEILL. From what?

Mr. DOBELL. From what the hon. gentleman (Mr. McNeill) said.

Mr. McNEILL. In that debate? Mr. Speaker has said that the hon. gentleman was not allowed to do so.

Mr. DOBELL. I understood I was not to debate the matter. However, I will not proceed with that part of my argument. I suppose I may not say what fell from the lips of my hon. colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) when he charged the hon. member (Mr. McNeill) with needlessly wasting the time of Parliament. Now, my belief is that the moment our Premier came in close contact with the strong and settled views of the people of Great Britain, he saw that preferential trade was a question too difficult to take up. But he volunteered at once that we were giving Great Britain a reduction of 25 per cent in our customs duties, and asked nothing in return, or rather said we would exact nothing in return. He did not say he would not be prepared to receive it if it were offered. But we had so long acted in an extreme way in the tariff we put upon British goods while they were receiving our goods free, that we made this reduction of 25 per cent and did not exact anything in return. I believe the reason was that he saw that Canada had wilfully for years been throwing away all her advantages by her high protective tariff, and that she failed to realize that if she wanted really to avoid corruption, extravagance and isolation, she must adopt a freer trade, and freer trade alone will give her not only larger markets, but will free her from much of the evil that a protective tariff necessarily entails upon any country. But in one short sentence our Premier did more to bring about inter-Imperial trade than all the speeches at all the conferences had done before.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I was extremely sorry to hear the remark across the floor of the House from the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) who explained the absence of the First Minister in consequence of his not being very well. I feel, Sir, that it would be extremely improper to bring this debate to a conclusion in the absence of the right hon. gentleman who leads the House, and who occupies so very conspicuous a position upon this question. I should feel myself a great delicacy in discussing this question in the way in which it would require to be discussed, in his absence. It is under these circumstances, therefore, that I rise for the purpose of moving the adjournment of the debate in order that we may have the advantage of the presence of the Prime Minister when its discussion is resumed.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

Mr. McNEILL. I would be exceedingly sorry if any hon. member on the other side of the House thought I had misrepresented my hon. friend who addressed us a moment ago, and who said that I had in some regard misrepresented him. I do not know in what respect I did so, certainly it was not my intention; and I should be glad if the hon. gentleman would tell me in what regard I misrepresented him.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. As we must rise at twelve, I do not propose to hold the House any longer, especially as some hon. gentlemen, I believe, were sitting here until an early hour this morning. I beg to move that the House do now adjourn.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 11.15 p.m.

DEATH OF RIGHT HON. W. E. GLADSTONE.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). Before the Orders of the Day are called, it becomes my duty to call the attention of the House to an occurrence which, although expected for some considerable time, will, I doubt not, be received with profound sorrow, not merely by this House but by the country at large as well as by all nations and countries in which the English tongue is spoken. The House is aware that yesterday the Right Honourable Mr. Gladstone closed a long and practical life after a very severe and painful illness. I need not say to this House that, literally for generations, the name of Gladstone has been a household word all through the British Empire. I need not tell this House that during an extremely long period Mr. Gladstone has occupied a position of the highest importance in the councils of the British Empire, and I believe I am correct in saying that, since the death of the Duke of Wellington the death of no Englishman has attracted equal attention to that of Mr. Gladstone. Mr. Gladstone was a great deal more than merely a parliamentary leader. It was only one of the many notable gifts that he possessed that he was, perhaps, the greatest parliamentary orator of this century. Besides being a man of magnificent gifts, he has been, throughout his life, according to his lights and to the best of his knowledge, the champion of all that he believed to be good and right and honourable throughout the world, and particularly the champion of the oppressed wherever he conceived that oppression existed. I think we should be simply obeying the feeling of the great majority, in fact the whole of the people of Canada, if we were to add our tribute to the tribute already being paid in the British House of Commons by friend and foe, by political opponents not less than by political supporters, to the memory of Mr. Gladstone. Sir, he has died, as every one knows, full of years and honours, after a life protracted far beyond the ordinary span, up to the very end of which he continued in full vigour of his faculties, and continued, by reason of the remarkable personality he possessed, to exercise a commanding influence over the mind of the English people. Perhaps, under the circumstances I should best meet the wishes of the House if I were to suggest that the should most fittingly honour his memory by appointing a committee of this House to prepare an address of condolence on the loss which the Empire and the world at large has sustained in the death of Mr. Gladstone. If it meets the wishes of my hon. friends on the other side, I will conclude by submitting the motion for the approbation of the House, as follows:—

That a committee composed of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Sir Charles Tupper, Sir Richard Cartwright, Sir Louis Davies, Sir Adolphe Caron, Mr. Costigan and Mr. Mulock, be appointed to prepare a resolution of condolence on the death of the Right Hon. Mr. Gladstone, and report the same with all convenient speed.

Mr. LARIVIERE. Might I suggest that some of the western members be added to that committee. I would suggest Mr. Davin as one and also some member from British Columbia.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am quite certain that the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), who is leading the House to-day, has rightly interpreted the feeling of the House and the universal feeling of the people of Canada in proposing the resolution which is now in your hands. The world recognizes the fact that probably the most conspicuous man of the present century has now passed away. Nature endowed Mr. Gladstone with the highest intellectual faculties, and these, with his indomitable energy and untiring industry exercised throughout a long life, made him, as I have said, probably the most conspicuous person in the world in connection with all the great public movements that have effected mankind in general. He was noted not only for his remarkable intellectual power, but for his ripe scholarship, so that he was, perhaps, above and beyond any other man in the world possessed of the greatest amount of knowledge covering the widest range of subjects who has appeared in any country. Not only has his life been one of untiring industry, but the position he has occupied for more than half a century has made his words and actions of the utmost importance to every portion of the civilized world.

No person's views have been studied, no person's opinions have been watched with greater or deeper interest, and I think we all recognize that not only the British Empire but the civilized world has, by the passing away of this great man, lost one whose position was of transcendent importance. I am quite certain that, as an orator, Mr. Gladstone would be recognized everywhere, not only throughout the British Empire where the English language is spoken, but in all countries, as a man who occupied a distinguished position as an orator. Oratory has perhaps been best defined by the expression that it consists in feeling the truth and speaking it; and I may say from personal experience that I believe it was absolutely impossible for any man, whether he agreed or disagreed with the opinions and sentiments expressed by that great man, to listen to him upon any important subject without arriving at the conclusion that every word he uttered came from the bottom of his heart and that he believed most implicitly in the truth of what he said. As I have said before, I am satisfied that the hon. gentleman who is leading the House (Sir Richard Cartwright) has rightly expressed the sentiments of this House and the people of Canada in taking measures to mark the deep sense of all Canada in reference to this great event and to join with people of all countries and all nations in testifying to the family of that great man the deep and unfeigned sorrow that Canada feels at the termination of his long and useful life.

Motion agreed to.

POST OFFICE ACT.

The House again resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 110) to amend the Post Office Act.—(Mr. Mulock.)

(In the Committee.)

On section 4,

4. The subsection substituted for subsection 1 of section 44 of the said Act by section 10 of chapter 20 of the statutes of 1889, is hereby repealed and the following is substituted therefor:—

"44. Except as in this Act otherwise provided, letters or other articles which, from any cause, remain undelivered in any post office, or which, having been posted, cannot be forwarded by post, shall, under such regulations as the Postmaster General makes, be transmitted by postmasters to the Post Office Department, or to such other places as the Postmaster General directs, as dead letters, there to be opened and returned to the writers or senders on payment of any postage due thereon with three cents additional on each dead letter to defray the cost of returning it, less, in the case of insufficiently prepaid letters or other mailable matter posted in Canada, such amount of postage as has been prepaid thereon; or such dead letters may, in any case or class of cases, be otherwise disposed of as the Postmaster General directs."

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not rise for the purpose of dealing specially with the clause now under the consideration of the committee, but I may say—and I say it for the purpose of shortening discussion—that I concur very much in the opinions expressed by the ex-Postmaster General, the hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Adolphe Caron) in regard to this question of the dead letter office. There is very great objection to altering the policy which has been long adopted, not only in this but in other countries, and in favour of which we have the opinions of such high authorities as the right hon. Sir John A. Macdonald and Mr. Mackenzie. The subject had been fully considered, and I would be very glad if the hon. Postmaster General would drop this clause and take further time for consideration of the question. It is admitted that considerable convenience would be experienced by the public in having this centralization to a certain extent qualified, but looking to the great importance of maintaining the secrecy of the post office, as far as possible, I would submit to my hon. friend whether it would not be wise, after the very strong statements that have been made in opposition to that clause, to take further time for the consideration of the question. No great injury could possibly result from taking a little further time, and the secrecy of the post office service is such a fundamental and essential part of it, and the sentiment in Great Britain is so overwhelmingly strong in regard to everything that exposes unnecessarily to the general public the contents of letters which pass through the mails, that I shall be very glad if that matter could be thoroughly considered before it was finally adopted. The fact that letters are sent from Victoria, Halifax and Great Britain to Ottawa and are opened, where absolutely necessary, by the parties charged with that duty, under the immediate direction of the hon. Postmaster General, gives a great security to the general public against the misdirection of a letter or anything of that kind leading to an exposure of its contents almost in the immediate locality in which it is written. The parties here being, as a rule, strangers to the localities in which these letters were written, the difficulty is absolutely minimized, but I am afraid that the change proposed will lead to a good deal of anxiety on the part of the public. I cannot see that this is an important feature of the Bill now before the House, and if my hon. friend will consent to delay it for further consideration, I think he would be consulting the feelings of a great many members on both sides of the House and of a very large portion of the most intelligent people in Canada. I will not say more because I do not want to prolong discussion. I regret that I was not able to be present the night when this Bill went into committee in the first instance, but I understand that the hon. Postmaster General who then consented that there should be the fullest latitude given in discussing any portion of the Bill without particular reference to the clause before the House. I am anxious to shorten the discussion as much as possible and will therefore simply read to the House a portion of a letter which I have received from a very eminent divine, and which speaks so strongly and clearly upon a point in the Bill to which I took exception, that I will content myself with simply reading it for the information of the committee:

The Postmaster General admits the principle of exemption by granting the country weekly press free use of the mails within the zone system of ten miles from the office of publication.

I may say frankly that I think the alteration which the hon. Postmaster General made in the Bill as first submitted removed, to a certain extent, the objections raised, but not completely.

This embraces, in most cases, very nearly the entire circulation, the denominational and Sunday school periodicals from the very nature of their constituency, scattered as it is over the entire country, are unable to take advantage of this exemption.

I beg to call your attention to the hardship which Sunday school papers especially will endure if thus discriminated against. They encounter very keen competition from certain American publishers who, possessing a very large market in the United States, can reduce their cost of production to a point which is impossible for us, with our limited circulation, to reach.

Moreover, all the material which enters into the composition of Canadian papers, presses and printing machinery, even the paper itself, which is much cheaper in the United States than in Canada, are heavily taxed, whereas, the finished American manufactured article is admitted free of duty and carried by the Canadian post office throughout the length and breadth of the country.

It may be said that the United States will also carry Canadian papers free, but the fact remains that with their larger market and greater facilities to manufacture, we cannot circulate our papers to any extent in the United States.

Moreover, the American Sunday school papers to which I refer, very naturally inculcate loyalty to the institutions and civil polity of their own country, and not unfrequently are hostile to the institutions and polity of Canada, and opposed to its British connection. They thereby become, as a leading Canadian publisher has said, "the most subtle and persuasive propaganda of anti-British sentiment which can be conceived." What I object to is the practical discrimination of the Government against the loyal and patriotic papers of Canada in favour of foreign periodicals in which American spread-eagleism is often offensively prominent.

I beg to inclose a specimen copy of a Queen's Birthday number of one of our Sunday school papers, which I have the honour to edit. In these papers love of Queen and country, of the old flag and the glorious British Empire, you will observe, form a staple theme.

I proposed to the Postmaster General to limit his exemptions so far as it concerns the religious press to denominational Sunday school periodicals having absolutely no advertisements, and send directly to the secretary or superintendent of the Sunday schools in packages of not less than five or ten. This will grant a slight exemption of less in all than two or three thousand dollars to the Sunday school periodicals issued by the three leading Protestant denominations of the country,—the Methodist, Presbyterian and Anglican. In the body which I have the honour to represent (the Methodist Church) we raise a special fund of nearly $5,000 a year to distribute these papers, either free or at greatly reduced price, to poor schools in remote and destitute parts of the country which are unable to pay their small cost. To impose a tax amounting to several hundred dollars in addition we feel would be a great hardship to our schools and to our publishing house. Some of these papers are published actually below cost, and the others at the smallest possible margin above cost.

I would feel greatly obliged if you would use your powerful influence in the House in resisting what a very large proportion of the religious denominations I have mentioned will regard as an injustice.

I won't add a word to that, it speaks for itself, but it points out the very important fact that under the proposed arrangement the religious periodicals, both Protestant and Catholic, of Canada, will be discriminated against in favour of periodicals of the same class coming from the United States of America. I need not point out that the American press, having an enormous circulation, and being able to publish at a much lower rate than can be done in Canada, have great advantage by having a free circulation in Canada, and without having to pay large taxes upon all the material they use, and these come into competition with our papers handicapped by this proposed charge. I think the advantage of circulating our own papers in preference to those of any foreign country, will commend itself to every member of the House; and I should be very glad if, late as the period is, the Postmaster General could give consideration to that point.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I can take no exception to the manner in which the leader of the Opposition has addressed himself to this clause, and to the other clause of the Bill to which he alluded. First, with reference to the decentralization of the dead letter branch: The work of the dead letter branch is not confined to letters, but it deals with a large quantity of matter other than letters. The hon. gentleman argues that decentralization will in some way that I do not yet understand, though I understand the point he has sought to make, interfere with the secrecy of the post office.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The more people that have to keep a secret the more difficult it is to keep it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is not supposed that a great number of people will have to keep a secret. I presume that if a dead letter is dealt with in Winnipeg, it will not be dealt with by any more people than it is dealt with in Ottawa. But the hon. gentleman cites the precedent of Great Britain. I do not know why he alluded to Great Britain. He thought that the experience of Great Britain would guide us, and I agree with him there. But there are many offices throughout Great Britain where dead letter matter is dealt with.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I referred to Great Britain as a country in which the secrecy of letters and the sacredness of the post office are maintained to an extent that perhaps does not exist in any other country in the world.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Well, that is a general statement. I have no doubt that in Great Britain they respect the mails; I do not know that they respect the secrecy of the mails any more in Great Britain than they do in Canada. In both countries law and practice compel the preservation of the strictest secrecy of the mails. But in Great Britain dead letters are dealt with at various points. There are three leading return dead letter offices, and in connection with each of these leading offices, are branch dead letter offices; and the work of dealing with dead letters takes place at a great many points throughout the United Kingdom. The same system prevails in Germany—I have not extended my researches beyond those two countries. So that if we take the practice of England for our guide, we shall only be following out the course that this Bill suggests. There will be no violation of secrecy by the decentralization. A man is just as honest if he is engaged in this work in Winnipeg as in the department at Ottawa. It may be that some of the officers at Ottawa will be sent to these other points, and I do not think it is fair to assume that an officer will become dishonest merely because his place of residence is changed. One point the hon. gentleman makes is that an officer, in some manner, in a local town, say Toronto, will be acquainted with the writers, or have some local interest in the writers, and thus have a local knowledge of the work itself. It does not follow that Toronto letters will be sent to the Toronto dead letter office; it does not follow that Vancouver letters will be examined in the Vancouver office; it does not follow that Victoria letters will be examined in the Victoria office.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I thought that was the scheme.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The scheme was to have different examining points throughout the Dominion, and not have nearly a million pieces gathered from all parts of the Dominion sent into Ottawa, to the great delay and inconvenience of the public, and oftentimes to loss. It is proposed to have several examining points. The details of the scheme will be such as will absolutely safeguard every interest as effectually as every interest is safeguarded to-day. Last year I find, by looking at the reports of the dead letter branch, that there were sent for examination there 875,000 pieces, in all.

Mr. FOSTER. How many of these were letters?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I presume the point of secrecy which the hon. gentleman makes is based on the supposition that an officer in a city, say Toronto, would have some local acquaintance with the writers, or the addressees, and in that case might be interested in knowing what was in those letters, or taking cognizance of their contents. But of the 875,000 pieces examined at Ottawa last year, I find only 189,465 ordinary dead letters originating in Canada. There may be some other registered letters originating in Canada, but of these 875,000 pieces of mail matter, over 330,000, approaching one-half of the whole, consisted of parcels, post cards, books and other materials, about which there is no special secrecy.

Mr. WALLACE. And members' speeches.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. And members' speeches. So that more than one-half of all the pieces so dealt with is of the nature I speak of. Now, at present great loss and inconvenience at times accrue to persons sending matter through the mails which does not promptly reach its destination, and hon. gentlemen have only to look at the last report to see a list of the articles that found their way to Ottawa, and the delay in dealing with which must at times have occasioned much loss. For example, 27 bills of exchange, 1 bond, 457 cheques, 187 drafts, 808 money orders, 73 orders, 243 promissory notes, 540 receipts, 37 certificates, 2 salary warrants, 5 various certificates. Delaying the transmission of these documents has no doubt occasioned loss to the persons interested, and when one looks through the table of contents of parcels and observes the miscellaneous list of goods of all kinds sent to Ottawa, gathered from points hundreds and thousands of miles distant, and conveyed at great expense and inconvenience to be dealt with here, I fail to see any argument to meet at all events, that branch of the proposition. I now come to another point. If there are 875,000 pieces to be treated, it means the maintenance at Ottawa of a large number of officials, occasioning and producing delay in their treatment, all of which might be largely avoided if a system of treating those dead letter pieces were adopted at various points in the country, whereby much delay would be avoided and very much less red tapeism adopted in connection with the matter, and at the same time public convenience and public interest it in the same spirit and in the same way, proposed to depart from the spirit and letter of the law that has guided the dead letter business in the past, but to deal with it in the same spirit and in the same way, although perhaps at different places. I think the proposition is one that should commend itself to the House; it is based on precedent, and it is based on precedent which we can safely follow. With regard to the proposition contained in the letter which the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) read, that certain branches of denominational literature should be exempt from postage, I may say that I received a communication similar to that which the hon. gentleman read. I had the advantage of meeting the writer of that letter with a number of others and hearing the subject thoroughly discussed. I subsequently received a communication about the matter, and gave it the fullest consideration I was able to bestow, so that my answer is not given on hearing the subject discussed for the first time, and this is not the first time that I have given expression to the opinion at which I have arrived. I have expressed a similar opinion to the writer of that communication. He asks that certain kinds of denominational publications should be exempt from postage on certain grounds. The first ground is that papers are made to pay duty on their material. But that is a matter to be dealt with by the customs laws of the country. If the customs laws are bad, let them be changed, but it is in that direction that amelioration, if any, should be directed. It is argued that denominational papers of Canada are being discriminated against in favour of American newspapers of the same kind. The American publisher is obliged to pay 1 cent a pound on his newspaper sent through the mails, and although they come to Canada there is no further rate exacted here, and under this Bill the publisher will be obliged to pay half a cent per pound. It is an erroneous presentation of the case to say that we carry American or other mail matter free. We do not do so in the true sense of the term. We perform a certain service, and in return other countries perform a like service for Canada. They carry our newspapers free and letters free, or at all events, on the same terms. On letters posted in the United States that country retains the value of the stamps, and the letters are carried into other countries without further stamps. In like manner, letters posted in Canada travel free through the United States and other countries, we retaining the amount of the postage. The country is on the whole opposed to a system of exemptions. Exemptions which involve public expenditure are against the spirit of the times, especially those exemptions which involve aid to one of the denominations. Speaking for myself, I do not hesitate to say that I think the time has passed when state aid should be given to denominations. If, however, state aid has to be given to carry Sunday or denominational newspapers, Protestant or Catholic, let it be given directly and in such a way that the public will know in what form it is presented and given, and then we will see whether public opinion will endorse or not propositions to grant state aid. If, for example, postage of a denominational paper involves a cost of $1,000 to secure its free distribution, if we exempt that church from the payment of the $1,000, we practically give that church $1,000. Under a correct system of book-keeping and financial calculation, it would be preferable, if it were desired to grant exemptions, to grant exemptions straight by passing a vote of money. If Parliament is prepared to meet an issue of that kind, let some one submit a proposition, and when he has expressed his views on the subject, let it be voted on; but do not let us allow ourselves to permit a vicious system to be covered up by a system of bonuses or exemptions from legitimate obligations. For that reason alone, I am unable to give my support to the request of the hon. leader of the Opposition. I am aware it is urged that the imposition of postage upon denominational journals published in Canada may perhaps check the circulation of those newspapers. That remains, however, to be seen; I doubt it extremely. The several denominations will rise to the occasion. At all times when a crisis has occurred and it has become necessary to face the situation, we have seen strong, vigorous, able and willing men ready to meet it. No doubt, the flourishing churches of to-day are those which receive no state aid, and inasmuch as in this country public opinion has pronounced against state aid, I think we would be making a retrograde movement if we now proposed to grant state aid to denominations in circulating publications and papers issued in the interest of any special denomination. For these reasons, I think the clause should be adopted and the Bill carried.

Mr. WALLACE. I think the Postmaster General has altogether failed to meet the objections offered by the leader of the Opposition. In the case of papers and letters which are coming in from the United States he says that an erroneous opinion prevails that we are carrying them free from the United States. But his whole argument was with respect to letters. We admit that as regards letters the arrangement is a reciprocal one, and that it is practically no injustice in carrying United States letters through our mails because perhaps a corresponding number of letters from Canada pass through United States mails. But the Postmaster General cannot say that the same rule is applicable to newspapers, because twenty or thirty newspapers will come from the United States as compared with one sent from Canada to the United States, and therefore we are performing more than our share of the work. We say it is a gross injustice, as was pointed out in the letter read by the leader of the Opposition, that papers loyal to the United States should be sent here and circulated free throughout Canada, which may be injurious to Canadians, and more especially is this the case in regard to American Sunday school papers circulating among the children. We should endeavour to inculcate a spirit of loyalty among our people, but instead of doing so, the Postmaster General is giving free transmission to American papers and taxing Canadian papers, thus making an unjust discrimination against our publishers.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. How are they free from the United States?

Mr. WALLACE. Because they have the use of the Canadian mails, and the Canadian Government are not receiving a farthing for circulating those newspapers throughout the Dominion.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We do.

Mr. WALLACE. In what way?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The United States perform a similar service.

Mr. WALLACE. It does not perform an equal or similar service for us.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. How does the hon. gentleman know that?

Mr. WALLACE. American newspapers published in the large centres of the United States are sent into Canada, and are circulated throughout the smaller towns, especially of Ontario. The Toronto newspaper circulates through the smaller towns and villages of Ontario, but those small towns and villages do not send their newspapers into the city of Toronto in the same proportion. The city of New York with its millions of inhabitants supplies newspapers to the smaller cities of the United States, and to the cities and towns of Canada as well, and the Postmaster General by his legislation is encouraging the circulation of this American newspaper literature which had better be curtailed. The Minister says that this is state aid for denominational papers, but we say, give that aid to all newspapers which had done so much in the past to increase the circulation of Canadian literature. Unless the Minister succeeds in making the newspapers pay their way this law should not be passed, but he himself has admitted that the rate to be charged will not pay one-fortieth of the expense which the transmission of newspapers through the mails entails.

Again, Sir, there is a very strong objection to this dead letter clause. I am opposed to giving to the Postmaster General—in speaking of the Postmaster General I do not refer to the present incumbent of the office; he will not always be Postmaster General—I am opposed to giving any Postmaster General the power asked for in this clause. The Postmaster General at his own sweet will can issue an order that any post office can be made a dead letter office. Suppose an election is coming on he could put machinery in motion under this clause, which would enure to his political advantage and to euchreing his opponents. The secrecy of letters transmitted through the mails should be jealously guarded. I say that this change should not be made because there is no necessity whatever for it. If it is done at all it should be done by Order in Council and not by the will of any Minister. Under this present Government we are met with too much power being exercised by the heads of the departments, and it would conduce to good government if most of these executive acts were done by Order in Council. What is the delay at Ottawa under the present dead letter system to which the Postmaster General refers to? He has a very large staff here and there should be no delay. The dead letter office should be conducted in the same manner as our savings banks and other institutions, and the dead letters that come in one day should all be dealt with that same day before the officials leave the office. I would ask the Minister what is the greatest delay in the case of dead letters coming into the office? Suppose a dead letter comes into headquarters to-day, when is that letter disposed of?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am not able to go into these details, but I say that the present system provokes delay from the very nature of the case. Suppose a letter is received at Ottawa which is not addressed at all.

Mr. WALLACE. That is very unusual.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. On the contrary it is quite usual. Or suppose it is indistinctly addressed. Then the letter is opened and correspondence takes place and a notice may have to be sent a thousand or three thousand miles away. If the person written to does not reply within a reasonable time a communication is sent to the writer if he can be discovered, and great delay occurs before the letter can be treated. I am not saying that the officials are dilatory in taking the initial steps, but on account of the distance in many cases the delay occurs. I may say that the system I suggest in this Bill was adopted eight years ago with regard to Victoria, B.C., and has been in force there since, without there being any legal authority for it whatever.

Mr. WALLACE. I can quite understand that in the case of Victoria and perhaps another point, the system proposed might be found useful. The Minister must remember that five-sixths of the population of Canada is within thirty-six hours reach of Ottawa, and, therefore, any long delay can only occur in a very small percentage of the correspondence.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend has conceded the principle as regards Victoria, and it has been already adopted there ex necessitate rei. If my hon. friend is desirous of being reasonable with me in this matter—

Mr. WALLACE. I always was.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I hope so. Are there not other points to which he will concede the principle? It was only contemplated to have this in force in cities, and for that matter I am not desirous of having it even in small cities.

Mr. WALLACE. In the case of Victoria, and one other place, I do not think there would be much objection to this clause.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Would my hon. friend object to it in regard to other mail matter than letters?

Mr. WALLACE. I do not think so.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Would he allow it in regard to letters coming from abroad?

Mr. WALLACE. I think all letters should be treated the same way.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Then I will meet the hon. gentleman's wishes as far as I can. Supposing that a part of the clause is admitted—as regards other than letters, newspapers, parcels and post cards?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Then allow it with regard to letters not originating in Canada, and I will go further and put the points in the Bill.

Mr. FOSTER. That would be far preferable.

Mr. WALLACE. I cannot just see why the hon. Minister makes a distinction between letters originating in Canada and those originating outside.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is no local knowledge here of those originating outside.

Mr. FOSTER. Is not Ottawa really the most central point to which to send foreign letters? If my hon. friend would adopt the suggestion of taking letters from the general clause and then name his points, he will go far to meet the view of the House. There need not be many points named.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman will allow me to have Victoria and Winnipeg and then say Halifax.

Mr. WALLACE. Halifax is only thirty hours from Ottawa.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Take Halifax, Winnipeg and Victoria for the treatment of all letters foreign as well as domestic. If that is agreed to, let me have the fullest power with regard to the treatment of all those.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman should have the regulations made by Order in Council, so that his colleagues may know what is going on in the department, as well as the whole country.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I propose this amendment :

Provided always that with regard to letters, the only places other than Ottawa to which the same may be so transmitted and be dealt with as dead letters, shall be the cities of Victoria, B.C., Winnipeg and Halifax, subject to such regulations as may be approved of by the Governor in Council.

Mr. SPROULE. That will conflict with the first portion of the clause, which gives the power to the Postmaster General.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In order to make it uniform, we will substitute "Governor in Council" for the "Postmaster General," where the latter appears in the clause.

Amendment agreed to ; clause as amended agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose there is no use making an appeal to the Postmaster General to make his legislation decisive, and instead of leaving it permissible, to state the time at which the Act will come in force.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I would like to meet the hon. gentleman, but he will see that it is hardly possible just now. Whilst there is every encouragement to believe that the revenue will in the near future enable the Government to bring clause 1 into force, still we cannot undertake to look into the future and name the exact date when the revenue will attain that very satisfactory condition ; but when we get the full benefit of the Bill, I trust we will not be far from the time when the clause can be put into force.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. Minister said that he expected the revenue and expenditure would meet by the 1st of January next.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I hope so and expect so.

Mr. WALLACE. That would be necessary before the law comes into force? Is that the idea?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not say necessary, but it is a very important circumstance.

Mr. WALLACE. Then there is no difficulty in fixing the precise date?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know that I can tell exactly when that happy time will arrive.

Mr. WALLACE. Why not?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I cannot look so far into the future with certainty.

Mr. FOSTER. That is why I, for one, should be very much better satisfied if the hon. gentleman did not attempt this legislation until he could see his way clear to put it into force. There may be some argument in favour of permissive legislation, but it is a vicious principle to introduce the permissive feature into legislation generally. The hon. gentleman introduces this important measure without the least idea that he can bring it into force within a short time. He will not tell the House that there is any particular time when he can bring it into force. He bases his hope of doing so on the prospect of a balance between revenue and expenditure. It would seem to me better, in important legislation of this kind, that Parliament should know what it is doing. The opinion of the Postmaster General as to the proper time to bring this Act into force, as to the financial condition that justifies such a step might not be approved by the House. As this will involve questions of revenue to the amount of $650,000 it seems to me preferable that a time should be stated when this Bill shall become law. And if, looking at the present and as much of the future as you can discern, the hon. gentleman cannot see his way to a definite conclusion, it would be better to reserve this legislation until the state of the country is such as to justify him in asking Parliament to enact it and make it definite and decisive. What do you do by such a measure as this? You raise the hopes of the whole people that they are going to have two-cent postage. That is used to the advantage of a political party—it is a fair advantage to take if you once get the legislation on the Statute-book. But suppose it turns out that you cannot bring this law into force—you have raised hopes only to dash them to the ground. I do not think a deliberative body should legislate in that way. My hon. friend (Mr. Mulock) knows that he cannot bring this legislation into force—at least he feels certain that he cannot—before next session of Parliament. Why, then, does he propose it? Why not wait until next session of Parliament? If then the revenues of the department are such as, in the opinion of the House, to justify such a measure, Parliament could then legislate with its eyes open. As it is, we are legislating to put a sort of weapon into a party man's hands, which may or may not be used. But aside from that, it is a vicious principle to leave public affairs, especially where heavy matters of revenue are concerned, subject to the will of an individual, so to speak.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) is perhaps not familiar with the Act that his Government left on the Statute-book. The Post Office Act already vests in the Postmaster General power to vary, reduce or increase the rates on all mailable matter, with the exception of letters and newspapers.

Mr. FOSTER. I am quite aware of that, but I am aware also that letters and newspapers, letters especially, are the things we are talking about.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The principle is involved in section 9 of the Post Office Act, subsection E, which provides that the Postmaster General may, subject to the provision of the Act, establish rates of postage on all mailable matter, "not being letters, newspapers, or other thing hereinafter specifically provided for." The Act specifies rates upon letters and upon newspapers, but I think these are the only rates that are fixed by the Act. As regards the enormous transactions, outside of these, covered by the Post Office Act, the Postmaster General has power to fix the rates.

Mr. HAGGART. That is only for postal conventions.

Mr. FOSTER. For parcel post.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. This is altogether without reference to the postal conventions, and refers to domestic matters within our own control. And since that Act came into force—how long that may be I do not know, but for years I see the present Act is 38 Victoria—the Postmaster General has power to vary, reduce or increase the rates on parcels, and so on, thus affecting the revenue. The principle is embodied in the Act.

Mr. FOSTER. It may be in the Act, but that does not affect the argument I make. I do not think my hon. friend will say that in these matters that affects the revenue.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This section that I have quoted affects the revenue.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, but not largely.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, largely.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, I am going on the general principle that in these matters which affect the revenue, the House and the country ought to know what it is doing.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Why did you not repeat that clause when you were in power?

Mr. FOSTER. Does my hon. friend mean to say that because a thing has existed for a certain time it must exist for ever? When we find a certain state of things existing, then is the time when an opinion may be revised. I am not arguing this as affecting one party more than another. I am stating a principle which I think is sound, and I think my hon. friend (Mr. Mulock) must agree with me. Why should he, as Postmaster General, have power to vary the revenue of the country to the extent of $100,000 or $200,000 whenever he chooses to make a proclamation?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Parliament has said so.

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot help that. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) think it good principle to embody in legislation?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) assented to it all the time he was in office.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) assents to many things that he would not see carried out to the full extent. He has taken under his control the revenue of the post office. Under this Bill, whenever it pleases him, he can reduce the revenue by $650,000 or $700,000, whether the House thinks it a favourable moment to do so or not. I say that this is not a principle that should be carried out to any such extent.

Mr. HAGGART. The principal object the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) has referred to was to allow changes with regard to parcel post with foreign countries. It is a necessary power for the Postmaster General to have.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think the hon. gentleman is confusing this with section 29.

Mr. HAGGART. In order to make a postal convention affecting the parcel post between us and a foreign country, the Postmaster General must have jurisdiction over the parcel in its carriage in this country. If I remember rightly, when Postmaster General, I made an arrangement with Japan for the interchange of parcels. The hon. Postmaster General will notice that this does not apply to newspapers or letters, but simply allows the Postmaster General the right, which ordinarily he exercises by Order in Council, for making arrangements with foreign countries for the interchange of parcels.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) is confusing two different sections of the Act. Under section 29, the Postmaster General has power to regulate the rates on all mailable matter to foreign countries, subject to any right of interference that either party would have. But section 9, to which I referred, is wholly limited to domestic mailable matter—

Mr. HAGGART. I see that it gives the Postmaster General pretty wide power.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think so. I believe that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart), when Minister in charge of this department, changed the registration fee.

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Very well. The hon. gentleman when in charge of the department raised that fee under the power that this section 9 gave him, without reference to Parliament at all.

Mr. HAGGART. If I remember rightly, I made a recommendation to Council to raise the rate on drop letters in cities and towns, and increase the rate of registration, and also to reduce the rate on letters from 3 to 2 cents. My colleagues adopted the proposition to raise the rate on drop letters, but declined to adopt the other proposition.

Bill (No. 147) for the relief of James Pearson.—(Mr. Sutherland.)

SUPPLY—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would ask the hon. gentleman who is leading the House, if he is in a position to state, as the Prime Minister promised to state to-day, what the position of public business is?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I am afraid I shall have to ask the hon. gentleman to wait until Monday. Some matters which we had hoped to decide have been interfered with by reason of the rather sudden illness of the Prime Minister. As the hon. gentleman will easily understand, I am hardly in a position to give him information to-day.

Mr. MAXWELL. Is it the intention to sit to-morrow?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. We do not intend to sit to-morrow. I may say to my hon. friend that I am afraid no progress would be made by sitting here to-morrow. It is not from any desire to idle on the part of the members of the Government, but as the hon. gentleman well knows, Saturday is practically the only day that the Government have for considering certain important matters they have to bring before the House.

Mr. FOSTER. The Government is behind-hand with their measures.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I think the hon. gentlemen, when they were on this side of the House, found it very necessary to keep Saturday until a late period.

Motion agreed to.

(In the Committee.)

Harbours and Rivers, Ontario—

Improvement of Collingwood harbour.. $30,000

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). This work is under contract. The amount paid to the contractor up to the 31st of December, 1897, was $20,000. The estimated expenditure up to the 30th of June, 1898, is $29,382. I am asking to-day for $30,000 to go on with the work.

Mr. FOSTER. How much is the whole work to cost?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The full amount of the contract is $144,960. It is for solid dredging.

Mr. WALLACE. Does this contract include the making of the harbour as well as the channel?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, it is only dredging the channel.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand that the channel, if dredged according to these specifications, will not be at all suitable, because the depth of water was calculated from high water mark. I am told the water is 18 inches below the high water mark. I understood a deputation was here in the winter asking that the channel be made deeper. What decision has the Minister come to with regard to that?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. A deputation came to me a few months ago to represent that when the data were taken for this proposed work, the water was higher than it is to-day. I went into the question fully with the late lamented member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), and we considered a number of reports as to the cost of the additional depth that it would be desirable to have. I may say that I did not yet see my way clear to agree to giving that additional depth, as it would require too large an amount of money.

Mr. FOSTER. How much?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Over $100,000. To give 20 feet on the whole width of the channel as provided in this contract, will cost much more than that.

Mr. SPROULE. Could you not reduce the width of the channel and still give the required depth of water without its costing so much ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. When I say $100,000, I mean a decreased width. But I have not been able so far to make up my mind. The death of our friend has interfered with the negotiations to a certain extent. When the session is over I may take up the new proposals, but I cannot promise to do so.

Mr. SPROULE. What depth will this expenditure give, according to the contract that is now let ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. About 18 feet in the outside part of the harbour, and 16 feet inside.

Mr. SPROULE. That is free from the present water level, not from high water mark ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Quite so, at the lowest water mark.

Mr. HAGGART. If I remember rightly, we are to receive a certain sum of money, to be contributed one-half by the Grand Trunk Railway, and the other half by the town of Collingwood for these improvements ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have received from the town of Collingwood the sum of $13,000 for their share of the work up to date.

Mr. SPROULE. They were to give $15,000, were they not, and the Grand Trunk Railway $10,000 ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The Grand Trunk Railway agreed with the town to give the town $10,000. It is for the town to settle with the Grand Trunk Railway. So far as we are concerned we have only to deal with the town, and they have been willing to pay their share, and as I have just said, have paid $13,000 already.

Mr. SPROULE. Have you any knowledge whether the town is getting that from the Grand Trunk Railway ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That I cannot say ; that does not concern us.

Mr. SPROULE. Did you make the provision that the town, in entering into the contract, were to furnish $25,000 ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have nothing to do with the Grand Trunk Railway, our deal is a straight deal with the town.

Mr. SPROULE. Have you made provision that in the event of this expenditure going on and you furnishing a certain depth of water, the town shall give $25,000 ?

Mr. TARTE.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Certainly, that is our agreement.

Mr. FOSTER. When do you propose to have it finished ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The chief engineer tells me it will take two more seasons to complete. The work is going on in a very satisfactory manner.

Mr. WALLACE. This contract is for $144,000 to complete. Some further work takes $100,000 more, as I understand the Minister ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It has been proposed to us to give an additional depth, and that additional depth would cost over $100,000.

Mr. WALLACE. How much will that give ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It will give 20 feet. That is all that is proposed in addition.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to say with regard to that harbour that it is a very important one, and if they had the proper depth of water they would do a much larger business than they can do at present. It is always a great hardship to people in any part of Canada when, by their enterprise and knowledge, they prepare to do a large business, and find themselves unable to do it for want of proper accommodation.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I quite recognize the great importance of Collingwood harbour, having visited it myself. I am glad to see that the people of that town have given evidence of public spirit in contributing so much money for this work. I shall be only too glad to do everything in my power to help them promote the progress of their town.

Mr. FOSTER. Was the work consecutively and diligently looked after last season ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, no breaks.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What was the extent of the work carried out during last season ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. 37,000 cubic yards were excavated last year; the amount paid was $20,000.

Rainy River—Improvement of navigable channel $15,000

Mr. FOSTER. No doubt the hon. gentleman is aware of the condition of Rainy River at the present time, and that navigation is practically at a standstill.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand that four or five steamers proceeded to their first trip, with provisions, machinery and passengers, and it was a cause of the greatest moment that they should find their way up the Rainy River. They, however, found it impossible to make the trip. I do not know whether the hon. Minister has been dilatory during the past season or not, but I wish to put before him, as strongly as I can, that the development of the district is absolutely dependent on the speedy betterment of Rainy River.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That work has given me great trouble and anxiety. Mr. Lafleur made a survey some years ago. Last year I sent Mr. Fraser there with a view to carrying out the necessary improvements. The engineer has reported that by dredging and removing rocks, we might possibly decrease the depth of water instead of increasing it. It was suggested that the most feasible system would be to build a dam, but when the cost was estimated at $100,000, I thought the matter over a little. This morning a deputation from Rat Portage waited on me and made representations similar to those put forward by my hon. friend. I resolved to send Mr. Fraser back there, and he will leave to-morrow. He will have in his service practical men, and he has instructions to make everything in his power so as to give the best service possible during the season.

Mr. FOSTER. Is he going to make another examination and report, and to further dilly dally? These miserable engineers are continually reporting, and one tears up the report of his predecessor. A man with a business head and possessing authority and power could put the matter into shape at an early day; but the engineers report and report, and every one, as I said, tears up the report of his predecessor. The Minister will have to decapitate a lot of the engineers, and send up some men with common sense and have the work done.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have seen Mr. Fraser and given him instructions. I think he will be able to give good navigation to a depth of four or five feet during the season. I may add that the deputation, which was composed of leading men, agreed to the measures I suggested.

Owen Sound Harbour—Dredging, &c.... $10,000

Mr. SPROULE. What is the condition of the work?

Mr. WALLACE. Why is there only $10,000 in the Estimates in this case when $30,000 appears for Collingwood harbour?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think possibly the Supplementary Estimates may supply the deficiency.

Mr. WALLACE. I know something of the promises made by the Government in regard to this work at Owen Sound, and I do not think they are fulfilling those promises. Perhaps, however, the Minister of Customs is satisfied with the amount.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not see any item in the Estimates for the dry dock promised at last election, which work was to give employment to so many poor men. I remember walking with some friends of hon. gentlemen opposite who were speaking of the active time that would prevail while building the dock, and the number of men that would be employed. I have been watching from year to year to see if any item would appear in the Estimates for this purpose, and the people of Owen Sound have been watching, too. Could the Minister of Customs state when this item is likely to be forthcoming?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The Minister of Customs has enough to do looking after his own department, and I think I can attend to the public works. I quite recognize the great importance of building a dry dock on the lake. The hon. gentleman should not, however, insist on the Government spending too much money at one time. We require to do the right thing at the right time.

Mr. SPROULE. If the hon. gentleman had taken the money spent in the elections and expended it on a dry dock, it would have been built years ago.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the cost per cubic yard of the work at Collingwood and Owen Sound. I see at Collingwood it is about 55 cents per cubic yard.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. For the Collingwood work we gave a straight contract to Boon & Armstrong, of Toronto. At Owen Sound we are dredging with hired dredges, as was done under the late Administration.

Mr. SPROULE. Hiring dredges by the hour?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, as before.

Mr. SPROULE. Who own the dredges there now?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The Owen Sound Dredging and Construction Company.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the Minister know the dredges that are employed?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not remember the name of the dredge, it belongs to the company. It is the same dredge that was hired under the late Government and has a capacity of 1,000 yards.

Mr. SPROULE. There are two dredges belonging to that company, No. 4 and No. 9, and if you are hiring No. 4 dredge at $20 an hour you are throwing away money.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We are paying $8 an hour the same as was paid by the late Government.

Mr. SPROULE. How many cubic yards do they dredge in a day?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Between 800 and 1,000 yards a day on an average. The dredging there last year cost between 12 and 14 cents a yard.

Mr. SPROULE. If my memory serves me, I figured it out that it cost 18 cents a yard.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Fourteen cents was the highest last year.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte) stated that there were 37,500 yards excavated at Collingwood last year and there was expended $20,000. If that be so, it cost over 50 cents a yard.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In Collingwood the work is done by contract. When I came into the department Boon & Armstrong's tender was in, and it was so low that the chief engineer had reported against it, and the Minister did not give out the work. I decided that, provided Boon & Armstrong could give me proper security, I would give them the work at the price which was previously considered too low.

Mr. HAGGART. Is the contract let at a fixed price per yard?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We are giving a bulk sum for the whole work. At Owen Sound the dredging is in sand, but at Collingwood it is solid rock or hard-pan excavation, and is very different.

Mr. HAGGART. I was correct in my statement that you were paying 50 cents at one place and 14 cents at the other.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There can be no comparison made between the work done at the two places.

Mr. SPROULE. It may be said, in justice to the Minister, that the excavation at Collingwood is shale rock in some places and solid rock and hard-pan in others. As the contract is let at a lump sum, and if the contractors are responsible parties and do the work properly, I suppose it does not matter the cost per yard.

Toronto Harbour—Works at eastern entrance, &c..... $20,000

Mr. CLANCY. Is that work done by contract or day's work?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The dredging work is done by a hired dredge for which I am paying $8 an hour under the same conditions as the work was done by the late Administration. The other work has been carried on by day's labour, under the direction of an old officer, Mr. Temple, and I think the work is very successfully carried out by him.

Mr. CLANCY. I want to ask whose dredge is engaged and whether the person having the contract last year is the owner of the dredge. Is the same person engaged this year and upon what terms?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The same man, Mr. Phin, has been engaged and he has done very good work.

Mr. CLANCY. Is Mr. Finn the owner of the dredge?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot say. All I know is that I have hired the dredge from him and that he delivered the goods.

Mr. CLANCY. When did the Minister first make the arrangement with Mr. Phin?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My officers think the contract was made in July last, but I cannot give the exact date now.

Mr. CLANCY. When the contract was first made with Mr. Phin, was it for one year or more?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We entered into an agreement with Mr. Phin for the season, and I have renewed the contract for this year.

Mr. CLANCY. Was there any understanding last year that the contract was to be renewed this year?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There was no understanding. I told Mr. Phin last year that if he carried out the work in a satisfactory manner I would be glad to give him the privilege of continuing.

Mr. CLANCY. Has the Minister any application to do the work for less than $8 an hour or for a certain price per day? I am informed the Minister has an offer to do the work for less.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I did not receive any offer.

Mr. CLANCY. Was such an offer made to the department by any person?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The officers tell me they did not receive any offer.

Mr. CLANCY. I understand that Mr. Phin is a varnish manufacturer of Brantford, and is not a gentleman who has any knowledge of that work at all. I am informed that he is not a dredge man in any sense, and did not own the dredging plant that was employed last year. The information I have is that this work was offered to be done this year by the dredges engaged last year at a very considerably less sum than what Mr. Phin is now getting. The hon.

gentleman says he does not know whether Mr. Phin was the owner of the dredge or not. Will he say whether the same dredges and scows are employed this year that were employed last year?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. As to whether Mr. Phin is a practical dredge man or not, does not matter much. He does not work the dredge himself; and provided I am supplied with a dredge suited for the work, I do not care whether the man who supplies it is a lawyer or a banker or a doctor. It is not the same dredge that was at work last year. My officers inform me that the dredge employed this year is the property of Mr. Phin but personally I do not know.

Mr. CLANCY. Now we have some information. The hon. gentleman was very innocent a moment ago as to who was the owner of the dredge, but at last we have found it was Mr. Phin. Perhaps he will be able to tell us who were the owners last year.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We do not know that.

Mr. CLANCY. Possibly there were other parties who would do the work for less, and the department is not bound to live up to a cast iron rule of paying six or seven or ten dollars an hour, when they can get the work done just as well and cheaper.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Any man who would offer me a dredge for six dollars an hour, with the experience I have, I would look upon with suspicion, because I would certainly conclude that the dredge was not a good one. I looked all over for dredges, because there were many calls made upon me, and was not able to find any good ones for less than $8 an hour. We have not received any other offer to my knowledge.

Mr. CLANCY. Supposing it was the same dredge. If the hon. gentleman paid $8 for the dredge last year, it must have been a good one, and he had no right to reject it this year. If it turns out that there has been any offer made to the department, whether wanting in form or otherwise, the hon. gentleman should not reject it, if it was more favourable than the one he accepted, and particularly if the same dredge was offered as did the work last year. The hon. gentleman would have to show, as a reason for his rejection of the offer, that the dredge had become worthless.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I can only repeat that no offer came to the department, to my knowledge. My officers tell me that they did not receive any.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the hon. Minister enunciates a very baneful principle when he says he will give the contract to any man for dredging, no matter whether that man be a painter or a doctor or anything else, and no matter whether he has dredging plant or not, because when a man enters into a contract, it is his business to furnish the dredge. We are told that the man who furnished this dredge is a painter and does not own any dredging plant, and it may be fairly assumed that he is not the kind of man to contract with for that kind of work. I am informed that the same practice is followed in Owen Sound. Men who owned the dredges and who could not get any work from the department, because they happen to be Conservatives, were obliged to transfer their dredge to other parties. Judge Barron, who was then in Lindsay, and Dr. Horsey, who was the defeated candidate in North Grey, entered into a contract with the Government to supply dredges, and then negotiated with other parties to obtain the dredges from them, and these other parties had to consent to this arrangement because they could not themselves get any work from the Government. The principle is radically wrong. It is not one that will be endorsed by any business man, and I am surprised that the Minister of Public Works, who is always so desirous of doing what is exactly right and straight, should have adopted it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot see for the life of me what there is in the argument of my hon. friend. What does it matter whether the owner of the dredge is a lawyer or a doctor or a philosopher, provided the dredge is a good one and does the work well. I do not object very much to good Reformers offering me dredges. Our Tory friends had a very long day, and they must not complain if some of our friends have a little show now. I intend giving them a little show when I can. Of course when a good Tory offers me better conditions, I shall accept them, but all things being equal, I shall give the preference to a Reformer.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not object to giving the contracts to Reformers, but I do object to the Government, when they have to let contracts for public works, failing to take the ordinary precaution that every business man would exercise of ascertaining whether the party who tenders has the experience and knowledge necessary and the plant required to do the work. It seems to me that before the Government give a contract to any man they should ascertain whether he has the necessary plant, because otherwise he is liable to fail in his contract and the country will suffer. Take the present case. A man comes along who has no knowledge of dredging whatever or of any kind of public works, but whose life has been spent in painting, and he offers to take a contract for dredging a harbour, would it not naturally suggest itself to the hon. Minister that this man, who has neither the experience nor the plant, is not the proper kind of man with whom to enter into a contract. If I am correctly informed, the parties who owned the dredging plant were obliged to part with it for whatever they could get, because the Government would not give them work, and that work was given to others, represented by whom? By Judge Barron, who was appointed under this Government, and Dr. Horsey, the defeated candidate for North Grey. And then it was said: There is no use in making an application unless the party who makes it is recommended by the member for the riding or some other prominent Reformer who satisfies the Minister of Public Works that he is a suitable party to do it. What would that mean? It would mean that no Conservative could be recommended, and that a Reformer would get the contract whether he had a plant or not. So the parties who owned this plant were obliged to part with it for what they could get, because they could not get work under the Government. I am informed that the same thing happens in Toronto where a contract is given to a painter who has no dredge and by whom the work is farmed out, while the parties who have the dredges cannot get the work to do. I would not object that a Reformer should be chosen in preference to a Conservative, other things being equal, but I do object to the choice being made as it has been made.

Mr. KAULBACH. I desire to inform the Minister of Public Works that I think his memory is a little defective—he will pardon me for saying so. Last year I made an application, and the year before that, and the year before that, and I do not know for how many years previous to that, for a dredge to be sent to the harbour of Lunenburg and two other points in my county, the La Have River and Mahone Bay. These places need dredging very much indeed. The harbour of Lunenburg particularly needs it. And I venture to say—and I challenge contradiction—that there is no harbour of equal importance so much in need of dredging as the harbour of Lunenburg. We have belonging to that harbour alone over 100 vessels, and, belonging to the county, we have upwards of 300, and a finer class of vessels cannot be found. But very often shipping is prevented from coming to said harbour of Lunenburg because of the lack of sufficient depth of water. Now, I think I am not making an unreasonable request when I ask the Minister to remember the applications I have made and now repeat by way of reminders. I think that the Minister will surely not fail to give us the use of the dredge this season. I think I am safe in saying that Yarmouth has the use of a dredge every year. That harbour might be in a position to claim the dredge on the principle of possession being nine points of the law. My hon. friend from Yarmouth (Mr. Flint), I think, will endorse my views in every particular.

Mr. SPROULE.

There is not a port, outside of Halifax that has a larger quantity of shipping or a larger number of vessels or more urgently needs the service of the dredge than Lunenburg. I hope the hon. Minister will not look upon my appeal otherwise than as an honest one, that he will not look upon it with political feeling—I know that does not actuate him as far as I myself am concerned, at least I venture to assume that, and I think I am right in saying so. I trust he will grant the request I reasonably make which he will see is simple justice.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Kaulbach) knows me well enough, I am sure, to know that my memory is not short. But I may tell him to remember that dredges are short. In Nova Scotia I have only three dredges, and I have here a list of twenty-five places requiring dredges.

An hon. MEMBER. Get more dredges.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. But when I ask for money for more dredges, hon. gentlemen find fault with me for that.

Mr. FOSTER. Maybe Mr. Phin has two or three more dredges.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. He supplies good dredges.

Mr. FOSTER. They usually keep them on hand in tailor's shops, you know.

Mr. KAULBACH. I think I have the floor, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bain). I would remind the hon. gentleman (Mr. Kaulbach) that this is an item for Toronto harbour.

Mr. WALLACE. We have heard from the hon. Minister of Public Works that it does not make any difference who comes along and wants work, the only qualification for getting it is that he must be a good Reformer. I think the Minister of Public Works might recollect for a moment that he is the servant of the people of Canada and not their master just yet. Though they may have seemed to endorse the policy that business is business, but they will have a reckoning with these gentlemen before very long. What are the facts? Last year the Minister of Public Works had a dredge at work that he said was doing effective work. They paid $8 per hour. They could have engaged an equally good dredge at $6 per hour. Did they do so? No, Sir, they gave the contract to this Mr. Phin, who has no dredge, agreeing to pay him $8 per hour. Why not adopt the principle that should be adopted in all public works, of letting out this work by tender and contract? If the Government can get the work done at $6 or $5 per hour, why should they not take advantage of these prices. But, no, Sir, Mr. Phin is a valuable member of the party and subscribed liberally to election funds and the work must be given to him although, as in the case of Owen Sound harbour quoted by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), others who have dredges are refused employment.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. They were not refused employment.

Mr. WALLACE. They were refused.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I say they were not.

Mr. WALLACE. I know what I am talking about.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not think so.

Mr. WALLACE. But the Minister of Public Works does not know what he is talking about. These men were refused employment. They had to dispose of their dredge to a combination of politicians who held the contract and simply farmed it out. This man has to do the work and the politicians get a large percentage, a good many dollars a day out of it. The Minister is doing the same thing in Toronto, and, no doubt, every place else where this department has to spend a dollar.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am glad to see my hon. friend (Mr. Wallace) so full of virtue. I have known him for a long time, and always as a supporter of the late Government—except when he was kicking. Sometimes he kicked hard. He was a virtuous man, no doubt, in past days. Of course, all the dredges hired under the late regime were hired in the same way and at the same prices as now.

Mr. WALLACE. Not a bit of it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, every bit of it. I know all about it. No tenders were asked and no contracts given, but my hon. friend did not show such indignation then.

Mr. WALLACE. Will the hon. gentleman permit me to tell him that Toronto harbour was let by contract.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The dredging was let along with the other work.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh; take it back.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will not take anything back. The hon. gentlemen were very willing that this system should be carried on under their own regime.

Mr. HAGGART. Business is business.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, but the business of the hon. gentlemen is getting smaller every day. If he goes on the same way, if he is here during the next Parliament, he will be even smaller than he is now. But, coming back to the point at issue, I desire to say that Mr.

Phin is supplying me with a first-class dredge. The only crime that hon. gentlemen find in him is that he is a good Reformer. That is no crime. Provided the dredge is a good one, I do not seek to learn whether he is a painter or whether he is as good a doctor as my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule). If that hon. gentleman gets a dredge and comes to me to get work for it to do, I will not ask whether he is a doctor or not. The person has nothing to do with it any more than the clerk has to do with the goods he sells—the customer judges by the goods. As I say, Mr. Phin has done good work, and I will not refuse him work because he is a Reformer.

Mr. SPROULE. Either I am wrong or the hon. Minister is wrong. The information I have, and it comes from a party who owned the dredges, is that, after reconnoitering down here as to whether they could get employment for their dredges or not, they came to the conclusion that they could not; but that this employment would go to some Reformer recommended by the member for the riding. We all know who he is—the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson). These gentlemen had this plant on their hands and, believing they could not get work owing to their being what they were—they were not active politicians but they were Conservatives—they were obliged to part with it at what they believed to be a very much reduced valuation, and it was passed over to friends of the Government who could get the work, and who got this contract. The defeated candidate for the riding, Dr. Horsey, and Mr. Barron, who was then a very active politician, was up there and some other Reform friends, who took over this plant, but they would not have taken the plant were it not for the fact that the parties who owned it could not get the dredging and, therefore, were obliged to part with their property.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I never declined to give them the work.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not know whether he did or not, all I know is this: My information is to the effect that after coming down here and trying to find out whether they could get the work, they went away under the impression, from whatever source, that they could not get the work, and, therefore, they disposed of their plant. Now, with regard to the other feature, I repeat that in my judgment the duty of the Government, whenever they have public works to give out, is to ascertain whether the men who tender are able to do the work properly, otherwise they must expect trouble. Suppose a man proposes to take a large contract from the Government to build a railway, what should the Government do? Ascertain whether that contractor has the ability to carry out the contract, whether he has experience, whether he has the plant, because if not, although he may put up a deposit, the Government may expect trouble; therefore, they would not be justified in giving a contract to that man. Now, can it be expected that a tailor or a painter is fit to take charge of a dredging job the same as a man who has been at it for a lifetime, or a judge, as in the Owen Sound case, or a lawyer who has never done anything in that line of business, or a doctor, as in the case of Dr. Horsey, whom I know very well, a very respectable man, but who has no knowledge whatever of contracting? This gentleman would not pretend to do any work of that kind were it not for the fact that his friends were in power, and he seems to have some pull which the Conservatives have not who own that dredging plant. Therefore, the plant passed to him, though at a reduced value, and the others who owned that plant are obliged to part with their property at a reduced value because they could not get the work. I say that is not fair. I do not mind any party favouring their own friends, other things being equal; but when they use the public money for the purpose of helping their own friends, without satisfying themselves that the parties who get the work are able or likely to do it satisfactorily, then the Government are acting on a very unsound principle.

Mr. McCLEARY. Not only can it be truthfully said of the Minister of Public Works that he is a modest man, but he is also a courageous man; because if he happens to do something in the interest of the public he takes credit for it, and when he does something that is questionable, he says he will do it again. This matter of the Toronto dredging is a subject that has created a good deal of interest in Toronto, among both Conservatives and Liberals. I am satisfied that if the Minister of Public Works will refresh his memory, he will find this matter has been before him on more than one occasion. He says he is short of dredges; I say he is a little short of memory this afternoon. From what I can learn of this transaction it stands in this way: Mr. Phin, who was a political friend of hon. gentlemen opposite, looking for some assistance from his party, thought that he ought to get the job of dredging Toronto harbour. Under the late Government that work was always done by contract, Murray & Cleveland having done the work as being the lowest tenderers, for years. Mr. Phin, who knows as much about dredging matters as a pig does about astronomy, as the saying is, gets a job for dredging Toronto harbour and is paid at the rate of $8 an hour for his dredge. It costs him to hire his dredge $19 a day, and I am informed that he netted every day last year something over $30 for himself personally, although he knew nothing about the work. Now, with regard to the Minister's memory again. When he says he has received no communication from other parties that they would do this work, I think he must have forgotten the fact, and if he would leave this item over he would be able to refresh his memory.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My officers here say they have not received any communication; I have not received any to my knowledge.

Mr. McCLEARY. Then there must certainly be a misunderstanding somewhere. Of course we have to accept the Minister's statement that he has not received any letters from any party offering to do the work.

Mr. SPROULE. Would the Minister tell us how many cubic yards they took out in Toronto?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Last year they took out between 700 and 800 yards a day; this year the dredge is of larger capacity, and they are taking out between 800 and 1,000 yards.

Mr. SPROULE. There is a little device that dredging men sometimes resort to whenever they want to show a good number of cubic yards taken out. When they get in a soft place they dredge down deeper than is required, and when they get in a hard place they do not go so deep; the consequence is that there is not a uniform depth, some places are high and others are lower. Is the inspector appointed by the Government or by the city?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In Toronto the work is under the immediate supervision of Mr. Temple, who has been on those works since their inception under Murray & Cleveland. The work is carried on all right.

Mr. HAGGART. There is a more serious objection than all this. When these hon. gentlemen were in Opposition they pledged themselves that if they got into power all these works would be let by contract. Here is an expenditure of $20,000 asked for during the year; how is it that they do not let it by tender as it had been previously let by the old Government? Mr. Jones at one time had the contract, and Mr. Murray had the contract for dredging the harbour at Toronto for so much per yard. When the hon. gentlemen get into power they farm out the dredging to their friends, to tailors and painters, at so much per hour. The practice is a vicious one. It may be necessary in some cases to let out the work by the day, where the dredge has to be moved from one harbour to another, and where there is only a small portion of work to be done, 500 yards or 1,000 yards. But here is a work going on continuously from year to year, and the only safe course for the Minister to take is to ask for tenders from every one in the country, and find out how cheaply he can get it done. Never mind if it costs money, the principle adopted by the country is that every man has a right to tender for a large quantity of work like that in question, and if a particular individual can do it more cheaply than others, he has a right to obtain the contract. The principle is embodied in the Order in Council and in the statute, the latter of which makes it declaratory as regards works exceeding a certain amount. Certainly the Order in Council applies to work involving an expenditure of $20,000, and I suppose the work altogether will reach from $75,000 to $100,000, and there the principle is laid down that if the work exceeds a certain amount, tenders must be asked for and the contract given to the lowest tenderer.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend is altogether wrong when he says that some of the dredging work in Toronto harbour in past days was carried out by contract. Murray & Keefer had a large contract, not for dredging alone, but for building two large dredges. The work was given out by contract. But if the hon. gentleman will go back to past days he will find that under the late Administration a great deal of dredging was carried out in the same way as I am now carrying it out. We simply dredged the channel in Toronto harbour, and that could not be done by contract. The channel is filling, and Mr. Temple, an experienced officer, has charge of the work. I take issue with the hon. gentleman as to the question of principle. I say that public works are often better executed when carried out by day's labour than by contract, especially when there is an able engineer to superintend the work. That is obvious, for the engineer has no interest in making money out of a contract, but seeks to gain a reputation for himself. The labouring classes have approached me on several occasions already and asked me not to give out work by contract when it can be done by day's labour, and the labouring classes have to be taken into consideration. Starting from that standpoint, I say that whenever I find a work can be better carried out by day's labour than by tender and contract, I will adopt the former method.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Does the hon. Minister lay down that as a principle for his future guidance?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Will the hon. gentleman do so when he finds it better, in his own judgment, that it should be done by day's labour?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I would not say that by my judgment alone. The hon. gentleman is aware that an Order in Council was passed in 1880, which compelled the Minister to go to Council when he wants to do work by day's labour.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. Minister says he is doing this work by day's labour. Is he doing it by day's labour?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No.

Mr. FOSTER. That was the argument, however, the hon. gentleman used. The hon. gentleman now has spread himself on the broad bosom of the labouring class, as if he were conferring some great favour on that class. They have nothing to do with this work. What are the facts? The hon. gentleman had $20,000 for dredging.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Not for dredging alone.

Mr. FOSTER. How much for dredging?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I observe from my notes that the whole dredging was to cost about $24,000 on the several works.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, the whole dredging work was to cost $24,000. What would seem to be the plain duty of the Minister under the circumstances? It was not an expenditure of $5,000, but a work involving an expenditure of $24,000. If any work was contemplated to be covered by the Order in Council, it was such work as this. The hon. gentleman did not call for tenders, but he hunted up some of his friends. Did the hon. gentleman give several of his friends the option of doing this work and ask them for their figures at so much per hour?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman has lost sight of the fact that in Toronto harbour we have not a straight contract for dredging to give out. We had certain dredging requiring to be done, work running over a whole season. The channel is filling up, and there is a certain amount of dredging to do to keep it clear. This could not be given out by contract; it belongs to a different class of work. When I spoke of $24,000, I referred to the whole cost of the work.

Mr. FOSTER. We agree, at all events, that this is not a straight contract. The hon. Minister says he is doing it by day's work rather than by contract.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am doing it by contract.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. Minister states in one moment that he is not doing it by contract, and another moment that he is doing it by contract. The hon. gentleman has, however, entered into a contract with one man, and he did not call for tenders. The hon. gentleman has violated the spirit in which public works have been administered in this country for many years in not asking for tenders and not carrying the work out by contract. When the work reaches $5,000 the Minister has to go to Council to be relieved of his responsibility, and this can only be done on one or two pleas, either that it is an abnormal work and cannot be done by contract, or that the work is of great urgency and necessity. Neither of these two claims is put forward in the present case, and while the hon. Minister may be doing the work by contract, he is not doing it by tender and contract. Suppose a gentleman from another country visits Toronto harbour. He looks over it and sees the vast amount of business that is being transacted, and he is told that the harbour is being completed by the Canadian Department of Public Works. If he should ask who is doing the dredging the answer given must be : a painter in Toronto. The inhabitant of another clime will be overwhelmed with wonder as to the business capacity of the Dominion Government, which when it requires a large quantity of dredging to be done in the harbour of Toronto, confers with a painter and gives him so much per hour for doing the work.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). But suppose the man is not a painter ?

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. Minister tell us what the man is ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. He is not a painter, but is a large contractor.

Mr. FOSTER. He is a painter.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. He is a large contractor.

Mr. FOSTER. Contractor, what of ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Public works.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, now.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. And before. He is a member of a large contracting firm. I let the hon. gentleman go on, but I did not want the ex-Finance Minister to fall into the same mistake.

Mr. FOSTER. I think we have information just as good as the information of my hon. friend (Mr. Paterson). The fact is, this man is not a mechanic of any kind at all. He does not own a dredge. He is simply a man who has given extraordinary services of late to the Liberal party. He is a man who does not understand dredging himself, has no dredging plant and does not follow that kind of work. But, in order to reward Mr. Phin for his political services, my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte), without calling for tender, says to him : You can have the dredging at the old rate of $8 per hour ? Mr. Phin takes the contract, and then he casts around him for some one to do the dredging and he gets hold of a man who does own a dredge, and he hires him to do the work. Both men make a profit. The man who has the dredge, and who works it is quite willing to do the work for the Government at the amount

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. Phin pays him, for he would rather be paid by the Government than by Mr. Phin, but in that case you see there would be no farming out the work, and there would be no payment for political services rendered, and so Mr. Phin steps in as a middleman between the practical man who owns the dredge and does the dredging and the Government which pays ; and Mr. Phin pockets a very neat sum per hour, and a very neat profit per day, and is in the way of richly recouping himself for what arduous services he has given to the Liberal party. Does my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) stand up here to-day and justify that system before the country ? Is that the way he is going to carry out the public works of this country ? There are Ministers in the Cabinet who do carry out the spirit of the law, and do carry out the traditions of government, and when they have $15,000 or $20,000 to spend they ask for tenders and give the work by contract. Take the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), for whom I believe my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) some time ago professed a very ardent friendship ; went so far as to write a letter in the public press in which he eulogizes the Minister of Trade and Commerce, in which he declares that the world does not rightly judge the Minister of Trade and Commerce, that they had an idea that the Minister of Trade and Commerce has been morose, and a little sour, and a little on the off-side of humanity ; and the Minister of Public Works has got at the soft heart of the Minister of Trade and Commerce and finds that the milk of humanity bubbles warm and plenteous from him. Now, if the Minister of Trade and Commerce has a contract to give for a steamship service he does not go and find a tailor or a painter and say to him : for party services rendered I will give you so much for this contract and you can get a man who owns steamers to run it. No, he puts an advertisement in the newspapers, accepts the lowest tender, and the money is expended in that way. But the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) does not do that. Business is business with the Minister of Public Works. He picks out a good party man ; he makes him farmer-general ; he gives him a good, sound percentage upon every hour's work done, and the fact is that my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) is giving to this gentleman (Mr. Phin) some two or three dollars an hour.

Mr. TAYLOR. Three dollars an hour clear profit.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Phin walks around ; he does not supervise the job, for that is done by a Government inspector ; he pays so much to the man who does the dredging and he pockets the difference. Sir, there should be no middlemen in this matter. My hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) should carry out business on business principles, as they are recognized in the public policy of the country, and not the kind of business principles which that rather fresh and verdant gentleman propounded in the Montreal district, when he put upon paper that phrase now so notorious and renowned.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I never did that.

Mr. FOSTER. The public is very discerning, and it has fixed that phrase upon my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte), and it will always fix it on him.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) fixed it, but the other fellow who tried to fix it has been fixed in jail, and if we did not take him out he would be there still.

Mr. FOSTER. And the discerning public pities the poor fellow who went to jail, and has fixed this phrase on my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte).

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. And the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), in spite of fixing it, has not been able to make much progress in Quebec. In every county in which I have met him, he has been licked out of his boots, on the very principle that business is business, politically speaking.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

LAKE BENNETT AND KLONDIKE RAILWAY AND TRAMWAY COMPANY.

Mr. HAGGART moved that the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 31) to incorporate the Lake Bennett and Klondike Railway and Tramway Company, be concurred in.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I think that it would be as well that this should stand, if the hon. member is not particularly anxious that it should be dealt with at once.

Mr. HAGGART. No; I thought it was only a matter of formally concurring in the amendments.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is one amendment made by the Senate which it would be scarcely possible to concur in.

Mr. HAGGART. Let it stand.

Mr. SPEAKER. The order stands.

MONTREAL ISLAND BELT LINE RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. BELCOURT moved that the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 105) respecting the Montreal Belt Line Railway Company, be concurred in.

Mr. SPROULE. What are the amendments?

Mr. BELCOURT. Subsection 2 of section 1 is amended. The section originally read "A duplicate of the said deed of sale, duly ratified and approved." The words "duly ratified and approved" are struck out by the Senate. In section 5, subsection 1 of section 22, the last words "towards the St. Lawrence River" are struck out by the Senate. In subsection 2 of the same section, after the word "section" in the last line the words "of this Act" are added by the Senate, and this is done to prevent misunderstanding, because the word "section" is used both as referring to a section of the road and a section of the Act.

Amendment concurred in.

TORONTO AND HUDSON BAY RAILWAY COMPANY.

On the Order for consideration of amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 77) to incorporate the Toronto and Hudson Bay Railway Company,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). There is a section added which appears to make a material change, and as it affects a number of sections in the Bill, I think it would be as well to let this Order stand until we can consider the amendments more fully.

Mr. SPEAKER. The order stands.

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 147)—from the Senate—for the relief of James Pearson—on division.—(Mr. Sutherland.)

SUPPLY.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Toronto Harbour—Works at eastern entrance, &c..... $20,000

Mr. CLANCY. What was the date of the renewal of the contract had last year for the dredging with Mr. Phin?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It was renewed last month. I may say that I followed in this case the precedent set by the late Administration. I have got a list of some of the dredges hired on the same conditions. The "Nitsdale," owned by Mr. Cameron, was hired for ten or twelve years on the same condition, $8 per hour. The "Arnoldi," a dredge owned by Allan & Fleming, was hired for years at the same rate. The dredge at Port Arthur, which belongs to Marks & Macdonald, did a good deal of work at the Kaministiquia River at $8 per hour, although it was a very poor dredge indeed and did not dredge more than 200 yards per day. Also a dredge owned by Mr. McNamee.

Mr. CLANCY. If the Minister of Public Works were as apt to follow the good example of his predecessors as their bad ones, he would not have so many accusations brought against him. Would the hon. gentleman give us some further information as to the reasons why this work was let without tenders being called for.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I stated the case very clearly this afternoon. I said there was some heavy work carried out in Toronto Bay by Murray & Cleveland, and to build the jetties some dredging had to be done. The whole thing, jetties and dredging, was given by contract to Murray & Cleveland, and in this case I followed the precedent set by the late Administration.

Mr. CLANCY. Then we do not understand that the work was more difficult, but the same class of work as has had to be done in other cases.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I did not say that the work was more difficult but that, so far as Toronto was concerned, it was of a different character.

Mr. CLANCY. I understood the hon. Minister to say that the dredges used for last year dredged from 800 to 1,000 yards per day.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No; I said last year the capacity of the dredges was between 700 and 800 yards, while this year we have a better dredge.

Mr. CLANCY. Are we to understand that this year more work will be done at $8 per hour owing to the increased capacity of the dredges?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am so informed.

Mr. CLANCY. These dredges, employed at $8 per hour are supposed to be of a certain capacity.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is no fixed rule now any more than under the late regime. I stated this afternoon, and it is perfectly true, that I am hiring about the same dredges as before. Dredges are very scarce. If I could find more, in some of the provinces, I should be very glad indeed. Generally I do not think we have any dredges that are doing less than 700 to 800 yards a day.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. This afternoon the hon. member for East Grey worked himself up into a state of considerable excitement over work in Toronto harbour, but he did not seem to be well informed of the facts. He told us repeatedly that this gentleman whose name was under discussion was a painter.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Even if he were.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, even if he were—but I would like to point out how little these hon. gentlemen know of the matter they criticise so severely.

Mr. SPROULE. If the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) does not want to misrepresent me, I may tell him that I said I had noticed the statement in the newspapers that this man was a painter.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Are we to understand, then, that the hon. member for East Grey consumes an hour or so of the time of the House making statements based upon newspaper reports? And, as to the newspaper report, I suppose that if it is shown to be wholly foundationless in one point it will be regarded as not very reliable in others. The hon. member for East Grey, in his criticism running over an hour said that this job had been let to a painter.

Mr. SPROULE. I did not criticise it twenty minutes. That is a stretch of imagination on the part of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson).

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman said time and again that this work was let to a painter. That was the effect of his argument and I have no doubt that "Hansard" will show that that is the case, for I listened to the hon. gentleman very patiently. Then the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) made a tailor out of him, I think, and that is the line of criticism that has been followed. I have only to tell these gentlemen that the engineer of the department has a record of what is done every day by these dredges and the officers of the department are interested in seeing that value is got for money paid. At the same time I only point out that these hon. gentlemen, relying upon information as to this man's business—

Mr. SPROULE. Is he a painter?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. SPROULE. I guess the hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson) does not know anything about it.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I have known him a great many years. How long has the hon. gentleman known him? I do not think he is a painter. Certainly he did not paint the hon. gentleman's face red this afternoon when he worked himself up into a state of excitement over this matter. I am not aware that Mr. Phin ever had a paint brush in his hand. I know that he is a member of a large contracting firm and has been connected with this kind of business for months and years. I think the hon. member for Welland (Mr. McCleary), who sits beside the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule), will be able to give him some information about it.

Mr. TARTE.

Mr. McCLEARY. How many years has he been contractor?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I do not know. But it was some time before he undertook dredging. I think the hon. member for Welland will agree to that. If I am not mistaken, he is a member of a firm that had a very large contract in connection with the Sarnia tunnel. I believe that the hon. member was a member of a contracting firm that tendered—unsuccessfully, it is true, but still tendered—for some specially heavy work on the canals. I mention this to show that the gentleman has been connected with a contracting firm and that it is in his line to take contracts in connection with public works. When I have given the hon. gentleman that information, he will see how far wrong he was in his criticism based upon newspaper reports. And, if he was so wholly mistaken upon that point, the doubt may possibly enter his mind whether his other criticism was sound. I mention this to set the hon. gentleman right, as his objection seemed to be that this work had been given to a painter, he may feel easy in his mind to know the work had been given to a contractor.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not see that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson) has succeeded in enlightening the House very much. He says this gentleman is a contractor. But we find men now taking contracts who were not known as contractors before, but who now get the farming out jobs and so find it worth while to start business as contractors. The hon. gentleman seemed to think that I was wasting the time of the House in trying to elicit information. But he took up a good deal of time and gave us no information either about the contractor or about this job.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I gave correct information.

Mr. SPROULE. I fail to see where it came in. He discredited the reports of the newspapers. I said that I had seen the statement I gave in a newspaper and that if it was correct we might fairly call upon the Minister of Public Works to know whether he considered this a sound way of proceeding.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman said that it was correct and proceeded on that assumption.

Mr. SPROULE. I emphatically deny that assertion.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think I can disabuse the minds of hon. gentlemen opposite as to this man. As this discussion has taken place in Parliament, the public might get the impression that Mr. Phin was taking contracts and farming them out, getting work that he was not qualified to do or entitled to get. I wish to say most emphatically that this gentleman is well and favourably known as a man and as a business man throughout a wide circle. He is a man of good business ability and in good financial standing, quite responsible for his work and well able to perform it. If the other Ministers are as successful in getting men of the character of Mr. Phin, I do not think they will make a mistake in choosing them. This gentleman's people live in the adjoining county to my own. I am sorry that neither of the hon. members for Waterloo are present. I have no doubt that they, one on one side of the House and one on the other, would speak highly of this gentleman. As he has been connected with large works as my hon. friend (Mr. Paterson) has said, some of the largest in the province, under the large railway companies, and, I think, under the previous Government, he is a man who is quite entitled to tender for work and worthy to do work for the department so long as he lives up to the rules and regulations. He is thoroughly qualified and responsible for his work.

Mr. SPROULE. Did he own any dredges?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He must have owned dredges or he would not have taken the work.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand the Minister to say that he did not own them.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My hon. friend ought to know that the firm of which he was a member owned a good deal of plant, and was in a good financial position. Whether a dredge belongs to that plant, I do not know. I am speaking of my own knowledge covering a number of years when I say that I do not know a young man in the country to which he belongs who is more favourably known than Mr. Phin. I do not know about the particulars of his business, he does not live in my constituency, but I do know that his reputation as a business man is of the best. Hon. members have been misinformed altogether if they have heard any information derogatory to the standing and character of Mr. Phin as a business man, or in any other respect.

Mr. SPROULE. Nobody said anything against his character, he may be the most respectable man in the world, we never questioned that. The contention we put up was this: There was a large amount of work to be done, and the principle heretofore followed has been that such work should be let by tender and contract. In this case tenders were not called for, the contract was given to a man, and the Minister of Public Works admitted he was not aware that he owned a dredge. Therefore, I said that the work must have been farmed out. I also drew attention to the fact that a man who is taking a contract should be at least expected to own some plant suitable for doing work of that kind.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Provided he could get a dredge. What do I care who owns it.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman means to be extremely lavish with the country's money, perhaps more so than if it was his own. But I say that on business principles, if he wanted to save public money he should have called for tenders and let this work out by contract. I say nothing about the integrity of this gentleman, but my information is to the effect that he was not in the habit of doing this kind of work, that he did not own any plant for that kind of work, and we now learn that the work was done, not by contract, but by day's work. Therefore, we have to assume that the work was farmed out, and there was not as good value given for it as might have been obtained if it had been let by tender.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend has been supporting for 20 years, under a previous Government, the very system I am now following, and he never said a word against it.

Mr. SPROULE. If the hon. gentleman will take the trouble to inform himself, he will find that several times I objected to the principle I am now condemning.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman should have made a motion denouncing his friends for doing what he is now denouncing. He is now indignant because some Liberals have got a contract. My hon. friend must try and realize the fact that the Government has changed; Tories are no longer in power to give contracts to Tory partisans exclusively. In the past Liberal contractors could not get any contract. It is only the chances of war.

Mr. CLANCY. Hon. gentlemen opposite are not going to cover this up so easily. We have heard from the lips of the Minister of Public Works this afternoon that a considerable work has been let by the hour without giving a shadow of reason why the rule heretofore followed has been departed from in the case of the Toronto harbour. Before the committee passes this item, the hon. gentleman should give a reason why he has departed from the rule heretofore followed of letting similar work by tender. This dredging work there involves an expenditure of several thousand dollars, and the hon. gentleman has let that under pretext that dredges have been employed elsewhere by the hour, and that is all the excuse he is able to offer. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if it is the custom of the department to let a contract without inquiring whether the contractor owned the plant necessary to do the work. I care not whether the man be a tailor or a painter—and here let me say that it is no reflection upon a man to be a tailor or a painter. Either occupation is wholly respectable. But our contention has been that this work was farmed out to a man who had no personal experience and had no plant. What were the results? We had from the hon. gentleman this afternoon that the dredges were placed where they were supposed to take out from 700 to 800 yards a day. We find that this man only took out 571 yards a day, costing something over 14½ cents a yard. Now the hon. gentleman is confronted with three things, to which I wish to draw the attention of the committee. One is that he either closed his eyes deliberately, or he forgot what his duties were when he was letting a contract, if he did not ascertain whether the contractor had a dredge or not. The next is that he has given no excuse for departing from the rule of letting work by contract rather than by hour's work. The next thing is that the work, instead of costing 10 or 10½ cents a yard, has cost something over 14 cents. Neither the hon. gentleman nor his friends can side track this matter by saying that we on this side of the House desire to reflect unfavourably upon any man in this country because of his calling in life. That was not the intention, as the hon. gentleman knows very well. Let me say to the Minister of Customs that a man may be silently a member of a contracting firm, he may have his money in it, he may be a painter or a tailor, and have nothing to do with the work.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He was one of the most active members.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. He had possession of a dredge there.

Mr. CLANCY. He went and employed a dredge belonging to another party, but he owned none himself.

Mr. MAXWELL. Referring to the utterances of the hon. gentleman who has just sat down (Mr. Clancy), his contentions seem to be two: First, that the Department of Public Works had made a mistake in giving this contract to a man who was not supposed to own a dredge. I don't think there is anything particularly wrong in that.

Mr. CLANCY. That was not it at all.

Mr. MAXWELL. The hon. gentleman complains that the department did not make an investigation when they gave the contract, to find out whether this man had a dredge or not. I say the department has no business to inquire into that matter at all. If a man gets a contract for dredging he can easily get a dredge to do the work with. I know from experience that during the reign of hon. gentlemen opposite it was very difficult for certain men to get a contract at all, hence there was no inducement for them to provide themselves with a plant because there was no possibility of getting employment. With respect to day's labour, I am very anxious to get hon. gentlemen opposite placed on record in regard to this particular point. I fail to see why it should be a crime for the Minister of Public Works to give employment in this particular way. I have no sympathy with contracts, nor with putting up a contract for tender, for I consider that course both detrimental to the department and to those who tender. I stand here thoroughly in sympathy with day's labour, and I believe it is desirable in view of all the facts of the case. So far as the working classes are concerned, they are practically a unit in asking the Government to have work done by day's labour instead of by contract.

Mr. CLANCY. I am sure the hon. Minister must be gratified to find shelter under the wing of the hon. gentleman who has just spoken. The hon. gentleman may play a Chinese role in British Columbia and another role here; but I tell him that we have just as much light now as we had before he addressed the committee. What experience has he had in public works to be in a position to rise here and lecture hon. members as to what should be done? He says that, according to his sweet will and pleasure, a certain course should be followed. That may be, but the hon. gentleman will not influence the committee much by that. I have not complained because the contractor did not own a dredge, but when in such circumstances a man is without a dredge and tenders for work, what does it suggest? It suggests that the man is not acquainted with the character of the work to be done. He may farm it out. The case is one that requires explanation from the Minister rather than from the hon. member who has become his champion.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentlemen opposite are marking time. I do not complain, and I take it good-humouredly. I know what it was in the past and what it is now. I have not much to add to my former statement. Hon. gentlemen have referred to the contract held by Mr. Cleveland, but that is not parallel with the present case. Mr. Cleveland had a contract for certain improvements, and there was some dredging connected with the work. The fact as to whether a contractor owns or does not own a dredge is to me a matter of no importance. I consider the question one of the dredge, not of the man, and I would have been prepared to have taken another man who had the same dredge. Mr. Phin is a good man and has a good dredge. As to the method followed, I say it has been followed in past years. I have given the committee the names of several dredges that have been hired year after year on the same conditions, and in such work I am going to follow the same system.

Mr. HAGGART. Speaking of the job, to use the term of the Minister of Customs, I think it is a suitable one, the Minister of Public Works has said he is going to do the same thing again.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Why did you do it?

Mr. HAGGART. The law is directory as to what course shall be pursued. The hon. gentleman says that this course has been pursued, and that is sufficient justification. I deny that we ever came down to a bald proposition of this kind when the work was known to amount to $24,000, and it would appear as if there were some other circumstances involved. Under the late regime the work in this particular harbour was let by contract, and the hon. Minister knows it. He says, however, there is a distinction between the work now being done and that which was formerly executed. I deny it. The hon. gentleman stated that this dredging was of a particular character, and was really special work, and was connected with dredging foundations for some crib-work. What difference is there between that work and the work done by Jones, Cleveland & Murray in connection with the harbour work? The hon. gentleman said they could not find out the exact quantities of the work, because the bottom of the harbour was shifting. Was it not shifting in the other case? The hon. gentleman must remember that it is not justification to plead the action of a previous Government. The excuse he gave was that the dredges required to be moved from place to place, that there was a small quantity of work to be done at one place and perhaps a larger quantity at the other. But the hon. gentleman does not venture on an excuse of that kind, but he states boldly that the late Government did it in the past and he intends to continue the system. That is no answer, however, to make to this committee. There must be some excuse shown for hiring dredges from day to day to carry on the work in the harbour, and no excuse has been offered in this case. This is a direct and palpable violation of the law. How the Minister of Public Works secured the passage of these expenditures by the Auditor General, I cannot understand. There is one way in which he can secure it. He proposes to make a report to Council and get the authority of Council to override the Auditor General. It will be time enough to talk in this way when he gets the authority of the Governor in Council, but he should remember that he is not supreme. The hon. gentleman takes under his patronage the Conservatives. He says he has not dismissed any Conservative from office. He must remember that he is only, after all, a servant of the country, and that a poor Conservative has as many rights as any man in the community. The hon. gentleman appears to think that he is in the Cabinet for the purpose of protecting the rights of Conservatives. He is there to carry out the law, and not to do extensive work of this kind by day's labour. The accusation was made against the late Government that works of this kind were used as a means of corruption. We did not do work by day's labour if we could possibly avoid it. When the hon. gentleman has been longer in office, he and his colleagues will find that the proper course to pursue is to carry out public works by contract, and that a system of favouritism is injurious to themselves and to the country. The hon. gentleman, if he expects to get large votes of this kind passed by the House, must promise that when it is possible to carry out the work by contract, it will be done according to law and as the Order in Council directs.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman is evidently losing his memory, and I observe that hon. gentlemen opposite seem to be losing their memories daily. At Kingston during the last ten or twelve years the late Government spent between $6,000 and $7,000 a year in day's labour on work of the very same kind that we are now carrying on. If I were going to give a list of all the work done by day's labour by the late Administration, it would be a long list. In New Brunswick, right under the eye of the watchman of hon. gentlemen opposite, the ex-Minister of Finance, there have been hundreds of thousands of dollars spent on day's labour without tender and contract. The customs house at St. John cost $200,000 by day's labour, and yet hon. gentlemen opposite rise in indignation and state that I am doing a wrong act. I am doing just what it is necessary to do. If we had enough dredges I would only be too glad to work them, but not owning dredges I do not find any better mode than the one followed by the late Government.

Mr. FLINT. I charge the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) with evading the great issue which was raised in this debate by the hon. member (Mr. Sproule) and the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy). Why should we get down to the paltry question as to whether this work should be let by contract or day's labour, when these hon. gentlemen raised the great issue as to whether the contractor was a tailor, a tinker, or a painter?

Mr. SPROULE. Not at all.

Mr. FLINT. That is the great issue before us and the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) should not draw away the attention of the House from that important phase.

Mr. HAGGART.

Another great issue raised by these hon. gentlemen was that the Minister of Public Works, before accepting a tender, should know all about the man who tenders, not only his occupation in life, but as to whether he owns the plant or not. The emphasis with which the hon. member for Bothwell dwelt on that point shows the importance which he attaches to it, and I trust the committee will not be drawn away into side issues by the ex-Minister of Railways. As to whether this work should be done by contract or day's labour, the answer of the Minister (Mr. Tarte) will suit for the present, for if any great reform is to be introduced in the prosecution of public works it should be settled by formal resolution of the House, so that the whole question can be considered in the light of the history of the past and the practice of the present. The Minister has stated that this work has been done according to the practice in vogue when he entered office, and the hon. gentlemen opposite should be the last to make any criticism in that respect considering the large number of bad examples they have given, despising the very noble and exalted principles just announced by the ex-Minister of Railways.

Mr. CLANCY. We are obliged to the hon. member (Mr. Flint) for lecturing us, but I think the House will conclude that he knows as much about this question as he does about Yarmouth bloaters. The fact is that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Flint) has been asleep and he does not know what has been transpiring. The Minister of Public Works has not answered the question raised by us when we charged him with not being able to give any reasons why he departed from the rule of letting this work by tender. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte) laughs, but his laughs and sneers do not answer the question, and they do not go for much in this House. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte) stated this afternoon, as recorded in "Hansard," that these dredges were supposed to do 700 or 800 yards a day for the $8 an hour. Let us see what answer the Minister previously gave to a question of this kind. On the 14th February last, page 502 of "Hansard," Mr. Clarke asked:

1. What sum was expended by the Government in 1896 and 1897, respectively, for dredging in connection with the works for the protection of Toronto harbour?
2. Was the work of dredging awarded each year by public tender?
3. What was the price paid per yard for dredging in 1896 and in 1897, respectively?
4. Name and address of the person or persons by whom the work of dredging was done in each year?

And the Minister of Public Works answered:

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). 1. Nothing expended in 1896 for dredging in Toronto harbour. In 1897 the sum of $5,310.26 was expended. 2. The work was not awarded by public tender. 3. The price paid the contractor was at the usual rate paid by the department for work of that kind, namely, $8 per hour actual working time. The contractor worked from the 29th June to the 26th November, dredging 37,214 cubic yards, the cost per cubic yard being 14½ cents. 4. W. E. Phin, Brantford, Ont.

Why does not the Minister tell us the reason that these dredges only got out slightly over 500 yards per day, when he says they should have got out 700 or 800. It was only a supposition that they should do that much work, because, as a matter of fact, Mr. Phin got $8 an hour of ten hours a day for putting out slightly over 500 yards. If the Minister (Mr. Tarte) cannot set up any better defence than that made by the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) he will have some difficulty getting his estimates through this House.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. How does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) figure that out?

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Phin was paid $8 an hour for ten hours a day, and the work done according to the statement of the Minister amounts to 14½ cents per yard. The number of yards taken out was 37,214 and the sum paid $5,310.26, which is over 14 cents a yard.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. What I said and what I meant to say was that the dredge had a capacity of between 700 or 800 yards, but any man who has experience knows that a dredge does not do the same work every day. One day a dredge would do a great deal of work, but the next day when it got to more difficult material it would do less. I think my hon. friend will agree with me that 14 cents a yard is not a very high price. He will remember that the Connolly contract in Quebec was 35 cents a yard, and 14 cents is very cheap.

Mr. CLANCY. What did Murray & Cleveland get?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. They got 12 cents a yard.

Mr. HAGGART. And it was a very good price for that sand dredging. It does not cost more than 10 cents. Does the hon. gentleman say that the late Government built the St. John's custom house by day's labour?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. The Minister is mistaken.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am not mistaken.

Mr. HAGGART. The St. John Custom House was burned and the Minister brought down an estimate to the House of the amount that would be required to repair it. The chief engineer of the department furnished an opinion to the Minister which he read in the House, to the effect that it was impossible to know exactly what work would be required and to draw out specifications of the work to be done. When he got his vote, he said that he intended to repair the walls and put a roof upon the building by day's labour.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman's Government spent $74,983 in 1889-93 by day labour in St. John.

Mr. HAGGART. He got the authority from Parliament.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. But he did it by day labour.

Mr. McDUGALL. But not until he got the authority of Parliament.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In 1893-94 the late Government spent $113,000 by day labour again on the same building, and I have here a complete list of all the work done in the past by day labour. Hon. gentlemen opposite carried out works by day labour to a much greater extent than I am doing.

Mr. McDUGALL. The hon. gentleman must remember that this precedent does not apply. In the case of Toronto Harbour, he was bound by statute to let that work by tender; whereas in the case of St. John's, before a dollar was spent on day labour, special authority was got from Parliament, and that authority was given because it was found impossible to make an approximate estimate of what it would cost.

Mr. SPROULE. The defence of the hon. Minister is that he has followed the precedents set by the late Government, and does not defend the principle. But when in Opposition he condemned that practice, although now in power he follows it. Two wrongs cannot make a right. If the practice was a bad one under the previous Government, it is equally a bad one now.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What about those who justified it in the past?

Mr. SPROULE. We are now dealing with the present, and if the practice was wrong in the past it cannot be justified now. With reference to what was said by the member for Yarmouth, it is evident that a man which is not possessed of the knowledge requisite to do certain work successfully, is not likely to be the best man to do it. The hon. Minister says that he did not know whether Mr. Phin had the dredging plant or not, but we have heard it over and over again given as a reason why lower tenderers were passed over and the contract given to higher tenderers, that the parties who put in the lower tender had not the plant or experience to warrant the belief that they could do the work successfully and the Government were afraid that they would be obliged to take the work off the hands of these parties. I have always regarded that as a sound reason. Another reason given for refusing the lowest tender was that the parties did not put up a deposit as a guarantee that they would do the work faithfully. In this case, there was no deposit put up, and you have not even the other guarantee that the parties had the experience and the means of doing it. The Postmaster General has followed out carefully the principle of giving everything by public tender. He told this House that he cancelled nearly 300 contracts for carrying the mails, and he gave as a justification for his action that public competition had not been invited. If the principle is a correct one as regards the carrying of the mails, the contracts for which amount to about $100 or $200 each, it surely ought to be adhered to in a contract involving an expenditure of $30,000 or $40,000. The country is fully impressed with the opinion that when a large amount of work has to be done, tenders should be called for, and when the hon. Minister departs from that principle without having any special reason for doing so, he is taking a course which the country will not justify. How much has been spent up to the present on this work

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Since confederation $1,073,000, and before confederation about $25,000.

Mr. SPROULE. What amount will be required to finish it, and how long will it take?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The total estimate is about $80,000 outside of the groins that we had to build last year. We built two or three groins last year and will have to build two or three more this year. They will cost about $1,800 each. We have had a great deal of trouble in strengthening the two jetties, which were unfortunately built in quick sand, and that is the reason why we have been obliged to do so much dredging. We were obliged to dredge around the west pier because it is tumbling down, but my officers have found out a way of strengthening the work.

Mr. HAGGART. There was $20,000 expended last year?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. When these estimates were made the work was under contract to Mr. Luke Madigan for $50,999. Mr. Madigan did not progress very favourably, but we allowed him to go on and helped him as much as we could. But he ultimately gave up the work, and that is the position to-day. When my estimates were prepared, he had not given up the work and we estimated we would spend $23,000 this year, but we have spent much less.

Mr. HAGGART. Then you have not asked for tenders to finish it?

Mr. SPROULE.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am glad the hon. gentleman has given me the opportunity to explain. When Mr. Madigan's tender was received, the chief engineer told me that the work could not be done for this amount. Mr. Madigan gave the Canadian Pacific Company as a reference, he having done work for them. After I had received information about Mr. Madigan I gave him the contract, in spite of the protest of my chief engineer who said that the tender was too low to enable the contractor to carry out his work. I visited the work that was under contract, and finding that it was not going on as rapidly as it should, I remonstrated with him. A few months after he gave up the work. I have letters from him dated 19th March and 23rd March, and also a certificate from his medical adviser, which I will show my hon. friend if he desires it.

Mr. HAGGART. No.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Poor Madigan is not in a position to carry out any work now. This is a case where the lowest tender should not have been accepted.

Mr. HAGGART. How much has the hon. Minister paid on progress estimates? And has the department become responsible for payment for materials bought and for labour?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The total payments made to Mr. Madigan were $5,078. To assist Mr. Madigan in getting the material we became responsible for $1,963.63, making a total of $7,041.63. The value of the work finished by the contractor is $8,917.20. He has left materials on the ground to the value of $1,007.25. We have also security of $3,101, a total of $13,025.45. So, we are fully protected. He has left the work with $5,984 to his credit and we have claims for wages, $1,148.82, and for materials, $253. There are other accounts, but we are not responsible.

Mr. SPROULE. I can tell the hon. Minister that there are some accounts for labour that are not yet in.

Mr. HAGGART. The appropriation for 1897-98 was $53,000. The hon. gentleman only asks for $33,000 this year. This, I suppose, means that $20,000 has been expended.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend must not forget that these are our Main Estimates and were made some time ago, at a time when Mr. Madigan had the contract and we thought he would continue. Of course we will not pay that now.

Mr. HAGGART. I shall probably understand the hon. gentleman if he will tell me what he estimates the work will cost now.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I really cannot say. Mr. Madigan tendered for about $51,000 in round numbers. He tendered too low, no doubt. The House was sitting when he gave up the work, and I have not been able to go fully into the matter. I will see what we can do when the House rises. This is one of the cases where the lowest tender should not have been accepted, and shows that the Minister should sometimes have more latitude than he has at present.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. Minister must see that when he comes and asks for a vote he should state how much is required to do the work. I presume that the $53,000 voted last year was the amount required to do the work. The Minister says it is so, because the contract was in the neighbourhood of $51,000. I suppose the rest is for superintendence, and so forth?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Quite so.

Mr. HAGGART. In other words, $53,000. Now he comes down to $33,000, of which he states he has expended in the neighbourhood of $7,000, or perhaps a little more, including liabilities of $10,000 or $11,000, say $43,000. The House has a right to expect an estimate as to how far this $43,000 will go towards the completion of the work. The engineer must have given an estimate of the work. What was the amount he said would be necessary to complete the work?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would like to know the amount of the other tenders above the tender accepted of $50,999. These were the amounts of the other tenders: $66,840, $68,500, $69,831, $70,845, $73,794, $77,249, $88,491, $88,890, $90,000, $98,540, $99,450, $99,499, $105,900. So the hon. gentleman will see that the highest tender was just a little more than double the tender which was accepted.

Mr. HAGGART. First of all, you give us the amount required to do the work, then you have a statement of the amount required each year.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman will understand that it would not be in the public interest for me to give the estimate of my chief engineer.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not want anything that will be an information to intending contractors. But the hon. gentleman should ask for a general vote, and an amount to be expended this year. He should ask for a vote of $80,000, of which $33,000 is to be expended this year.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have no objection to giving personally to my hon. friend the information, but I could not give it publicly.

Mr. HAGGART. There is no need of that. Is he going to let this work by tender?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Certainly.

L'Orignal—Re-construction of wharf..... $6,000

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The work has been going on last year, and is nearly completed. There is a great deal of trade there.

Port Burwell—Improvement of harbour, provided interested parties expend a sum of $50,000..... $25,000

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I move that the words "provided interested parties expend $50,000" be struck out.

Mr. HAGGART. Explain how it was that interested parties were going to give $50,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. When I asked for that vote last year we expected that some parties from the United States interested in the coal trade, would share in the construction of the work, but they have notified me that they cannot do so. As Port Burwell is a very important harbour, I thought well to ask for this vote without any conditions. We have spent large sums of money on harbours which are much less important than Port Burwell.

Mr. HAGGART. I think this was a case where a coal company intended to make a terminus. They were building barges and large steamers on the other side of Lake Erie, and it was principally for their accommodation that this deepening was to be done. They were to have paid a large portion of the cost, and we were to supplement it by $25,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I did not hear that they were building boats. At any rate they notified me that they could not go on and fulfil their pledges. This $25,000 will put me in a position to do the work. I want to inspect the place myself as soon as the session is over.

Mr. CLANCY. This is a considerable sum in view of a pledge by other parties to spend $50,000. This seems to be entirely disproportionate to sums that have been expended elsewhere. Could the hon. gentleman say if these parties are benefiting in any sense by the expenditure of this $25,000?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That money was not asked for in the interest of private parties. We want to help build that harbour so as to facilitate the coal trade.

Mr. CLANCY. In the case of Collingwood Harbour, I think that when a vote was asked for last year the citizens of Collingwood, or some other parties, were to contribute a certain sum. Now, this is a parallel case. A departure in one case would be unfair to the other, and a departure in both cases would not be keeping faith with the House.

Mr. CHARLTON. I may be permitted to say a few words in reference to the matter to which this vote relates, as this expenditure comes, not exactly in the riding I represent, but my riding is largely interested in the matter. Port Burwell has been one of the most important ports upon the north shore of Lake Erie, and the Government formerly expended a large sum of money there in improving that harbour, and they made a good harbour of it. The work had been allowed to fall into bad repair, and the harbour was not available for the use of a large class of lake craft. Aside entirely from any questions associated with this matter, the harbour of Port Burwell ought to be improved. That section of the Lake Erie coast has received very slight consideration from the Government, and this harbour is a public work of importance. It is peculiarly so now since the construction of a railway line from Port Burwell to Tilsonburg, connecting with an air line of the Grand Trunk Railway, and that line is being continued to the Michigan Central, and is nearly completed to that point. When completed, as it will be in a short time, it makes connection between Port Burwell and two of the railway lines of the peninsula of Ontario. It is the intention to continue the line further north to connect with the main line of the Grand Trunk Railway and with the Canadian Pacific Railway at Woodstock. The late Government promised a vote for the improvement of this harbour to the extent of $25,000, and the intention of that Government was to expend the money. It would have been a judicious vote, and the Government would have been fully justified in making the appropriation, and would undoubtedly have made it, had it continued in power. When application was made, after a change of Government, for this vote, the parties promoting the application were the gentlemen engaged in the construction of this railway line to which I have referred. A part of their scheme was and still is to establish a ferry of steamers carrying coal-laden cars, connecting the line terminating at Port Burwell with railway lines upon the south shore of Lake Erie.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the name of the port on the other side?

Mr. CHARLTON. There was a proposition to connect at Ashtabula, another proposition to connect at Black River in the neighbourhood of Cleveland, and this point has advantages over any other point on the north shore of Lake Erie in respect of distance to these American coal ports. The parties promoting the road at that time expected to carry out their scheme of construction of these coal ferry steamers as well as the construction of the road, and were willing to have this condition made.

that they should expend $50,000, the sum which was supposed to be necessary to make the coal slips and all appliances for carrying on this coal transfer business. Last summer the gentleman who was the soul of this enterprise and furnished most of the capital died suddenly, and his death disarranged to a considerable extent the plans of the company. They will be able to carry on their scheme beyond doubt, but it would be detrimental to their interest and to the public interest to suspend the work upon the improvement of the harbour itself; and there is no reason why this vote should be made contingent for the time being on the expenditure of any other sum of money, because the harbour should be opened, and when it is opened these gentlemen can make the additional arrangements, which the death of the principal promoter render necessary to carry out the original enterprise. Aside entirely from the fact that this coal road terminates there, and is to be extended to Woodstock, the port is required as an outlet to Tilsonburg and other towns in the immediate vicinity, and is required moreover as a port of refuge, it being near the upper end of Long Point. I hope the item will be allowed to pass without criticism or contention, because I do not believe there is a single item in these Estimates so little open to criticism as the one now under consideration.

Mr. HAGGART. Have they built the boats for carrying over coal?

Mr. CHARLTON. They are not building the boats now. I understand the promoters of the road from Port Burwell to Woodstock, which is practically completed to the Michigan Central road, are engaged in negotiating with Mr. Heinkoopin, who controls two boats there. The object is to induce him to put one of the boats on this route, and it is expected this arrangement will be consummated when the port is made ready for the reception of the boats.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the depth of water intended to be obtained? Will the hon. Minister also state if he has obtained the assent of the Governor General to the alteration of this item, as it is virtually an increase.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am not asking any larger sum this year than was voted last year. So I do not think it necessary to obtain the permission of the Governor General.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman may not be asking more money, but the sum was granted last year under the condition that certain other parties would spend $50,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If I require to ask more money next year, I will obtain the assent of the Governor General.

Mr. HAGGART. The item last year was "$25,000, improvement of harbour, provided interested parties expend a sum of $50,000." I have not heard that the hon. Minister has obtained the consent of the Governor General to change the amount, which is an increase, because the condition is struck out.

Mr. CHARLTON. The expenditure of $50,000 was to be made for the purposes of the railway company, for building slips these being connected with the coal company's arrangement, which was entirely disassociated from the regular and legitimate work of improving the harbour for the admission of vessels. The two things were distinct. The object of the vote of $25,000 is to make the harbour and construct piers and slips required to carry on that particular branch of business in the harbour.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not think the point raised by the ex-Minister of Public Works is well taken.

Mr. HAGGART. How much money will be required to complete the work?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have not made up my mind in regard to the work. $25,000 were in the Estimates last year, and I ask for that sum now. I am going to visit the place and see what can be done.

Mr. HAGGART. Will the hon. gentleman bring down the Governor General's consent to-morrow?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If I want more money, I will bring down the Governor General's assent.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman should be able to give us an idea as to what the expenditure will be in the future. This may be a very necessary work, but it is a very unusual proceeding to vote a certain amount simply because it has been promised before. The committee has a right to obtain some further information.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. All our plans have been changed. Parties interested were to spend $50,000, and we were to contribute $25,000 for certain harbour works. There are certain improvements to be made in order to obtain sufficient depth of water at the wharfs. Before undertaking the work I propose to have new plans prepared, and will give my best attention to the matter.

Mr. CLANCY. As the hon. gentleman is going to change his plans, possibly he may be able to cut down the amount required under the changed circumstances. It is all very well for the hon. gentleman to make promises, but the committee cannot be expected to pass money votes based on them. It is much to be regretted that while the hon. gentleman admits that the plans will be changed, he is unable to state the probable expenditure. It is an unusual proceeding to ask votes of public money under the circumstances stated.

Mr. CHARLTON. I hope the hon. gentleman will not borrow trouble in regard to this matter. Here is a port on Lake Erie which requires to be improved. There is a new line there connected with two other lines of railway—

Mr. CLANCY. The point I was making was that the whole cost of the work should be stated. No one has raised any objection to the work proposed, which may be a very proper one. So the hon. gentleman will probably save time if he will not answer contentions which have not been put forward.

Mr. CHARLTON. It is estimated by parties interested that $25,000 will be sufficient to open the port. Probably if any further sum is required, it will be a very moderate one.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman will give us his promise on this work, as on the others, that it will be let by tender?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is no doubt about that.

Thornbury—Repairs to wharf..... $1,000

Mr. WALLACE. I would like some explanation of this item?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This amount is to complete the repairs of the wharf, which were commenced last year. We have all the material on hand.

Mr. WALLACE. Is some dredging required there?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is dredging required to give 12 feet of water.

Mr. HAGGART. This seems a small sum. Why do you not take sufficient to do the work properly?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The engineers have reported this sum is sufficient.

Port Stanley, repairs to piers and dredging $11,000

Mr. HAGGART. Give some explanation of that.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This vote is required for the reconstruction of both entrance piers and dredging the entrance to the channel, and also in order to make a turning basin inside the harbour.

Mr. HAGGART. I hope the Minister will have this money spent and get the work done. It is the terminus of a railway and they are anxious to have it completed.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will. The city of London is much interested in it.

Mr. HAGGART. Will the work be let by contract?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My officers tell me that some repairs there cannot be done by contract. I suppose the main work will have to be done by contract, but I cannot pledge myself now as I do not know sufficient of the work.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the estimated cost?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. $16,000.

Mr. HAGGART. Surely that is sufficient for the Minister to get the work done by contract. Has the Minister any suggestion from the chief engineer for a new plan by which the harbour would be prevented from drifting up as it has done before?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Mr. Coste made some suggestion about changing the course of the river, but so far we have not come to that conclusion.

Mr. CLANCY. How much was expended out of last year's vote?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. $1,900.

Port Stanley—Assistance towards harbour improvements..... $10,000

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This vote is to grant assistance to the Lake Erie and Detroit River Railway Company to the amount of one-third the estimated cost of constructing a suitable slip. We did not pay it last year because the company did not go on with the work. When they do, the money will be paid.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the estimated cost of the slip?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. $30,000, and this is one-third.

North Bay—Pile wharf..... $15,000

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have asked for tenders but we have not adjudicated upon them yet.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the estimated cost?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Not more than $15,000. Tenders have been asked.

Meaford—Pile work and dredging..... $8,500

Mr. CLANCY. Will this amount cover the whole work?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. A contract has been given to Mr. Sparling for $2,500, and the balance is requisite to extend the inner harbour by dredging from 13 to 14 feet at low water, from below the old bridge towards the new bridge.

Mr. HAGGART. I suppose you have a report in the department that this can be made a good harbour?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. CLANCY. Does this complete the work?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It will complete the work. It is by tender.

Lake Manitoba—Opening of additional outlets to prevent overflow of lake, and maintenance of same at proper level for navigation purposes..... $25,000

Mr. DAVIN. This requires some explanation.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The work has not yet been begun, but I intend going on with that work as soon as possible.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman has a curious way of expressing it. "Opening of additional outlets to prevent overflow of lake and maintenance of same at proper level for navigation purposes." It looks as if the hon. gentleman were afraid the water would get too high in the lake for navigation purposes.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. What my officers meant to say was that the lake overflows at certain times and covers the adjoining lands.

Mr. HAGGART. Then it is a work purely for local purposes—to regulate the overflow into the neighbouring country.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is part of the work, of course. We want to construct works which will keep the water at a certain depth and improve the lake for navigation purposes.

Mr. HAGGART. How is the hon. gentleman going to do that and what is the estimate of the total cost?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I shall not spend a cent more than this. I have not made up my mind as to the process. Mr. Coste, my chief engineer, is away and I therefore cannot give as much information as I would like, but it is a work to which he has given his personal attention. This is only a revote from last year.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Have any soundings been made in the lake. It is a very shallow sheet of water, and I know it overflows on some sides, especially the east side, but the question is if the water is taken away from the lake, will not that injure navigation instead of improving it. The water is very shallow, and the lake is not navigable except in the centre, and there are very few approaches where a wharf can be laid down in order to facilitate navigation. The lowering of the water will be a mistake.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. The intention is not to lower the normal level of the lake, but the channel of the river has become closed up by boulders, which are carried in by the ice, and the channel of the outlet is silted up. The object is to make an additional outlet so as to maintain the lake at its normal level. There is no question of lowering the lake but of keeping it within proper bounds.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. The complaint is that it overflows, and the present work is to prevent this.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. If the lake is kept at its normal level it will not overflow.

Mr. HAGGART. But the hon. gentleman must understand that if you take obstructions from the mouth of the river to keep the lake at its normal level you will have to put these obstructions back again or have a system of locks or dams.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. The lake is a natural receptacle for the drainage of a very large section of country; and after a series of wet years, the number of rivers flowing into the lake being so much in excess of the outlet from it, the water accumulates in the lake, and the object is to make an additional outlet so that the extra water which flows in will be allowed to flow out. By taking proper precautions and not getting below the level of the bed rock, the water will be maintained at its normal level.

Mr. HAGGART. It will be a very nice job to dredge it so exactly at the outlet as to keep it at its normal level at all times of the year. It will be requisite not only to deepen the outlet but have some means of regulating the outflow by wier or dam.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The engineer will settle that question.

Mr. HAGGART. When the hon. gentleman comes down for a grant, he should be in a position to give all the information required.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My chief engineer is away.

Mr. HAGGART. Then he should have left you a written brief.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman has had a whole year, and he is just as much destitute of information as he was last year. He has, therefore, no excuse as he would have if it were a new item.

Mr. HAGGART. That may lay over until immediately before an election, and the hon. gentleman may then get the work done by day labour. We must have his promise that he will not wait until an election and will not have it done by day labour.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will promise not to wait until an election comes on but go on with the work this year.

Mr. HAGGART. Here is $25,000 which he asks us to spend and which he can draw on at his leisure. He should be prepared with estimates and plans and everything before asking the vote. He must give us the promise that if he does expend this sum, he will invite tenders.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If I do the work at all, I will do it by contract.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Will the hon. Minister promise that he will keep his promise? Resolutions to be reported.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. HAGGART. What will be the business on Monday?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The resolution concerning judges salaries, a few little Bills, and then the Estimates.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 10.15 p.m.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I beg leave to call the attention of the Government to the fact that two weeks ago the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), whom I do not see in his place, promised to bring down a statement of the officials of the department in my constituency who had been dismissed. That promise was repeated on several occasions since, but not implemented, so far as I know.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). If the hon. gentleman (Mr. McDougall) will kindly send me a note of the matter, I will call the attention of the department to it.

THE QUEEN VS. SKELTON ET AL.

Mr. DAVIN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to call the attention of the Government—though I do not see the Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick) in his place, to the fact that early in the session, I had an interview with the Minister of Justice respecting the case of the Queen vs. Skelton et al., and I told him that I understood that application was to be made to him for a new trial. He told me that at the time no application had been made. I asked him if I should be notified if the application was made, and whether I should have an opportunity to see the affidavits and if I should be heard before the Minister came to a decision. The Minister told me definitely that nothing would be done ex parte. Well, time passed on, and the first thing I heard after that was that Mr. Skelton had been here in Ottawa. Then I spoke to the Solicitor General about the matter. However, on Friday week I saw the Minister of Justice, and he promised to give me a copy of the affidavits. He told me then that he had had communications and that he would hear me. I said: What could I say unless I have the papers before me? He told me he would let me have a copy of the affidavits. I have never had a copy of the affidavits yet. I saw the Minister of Justice informally on the right of the Chair on Friday, and I said: I have not received a copy of those affidavits. He told me the papers had been mislaid, but now I should have them. Since seeing the hon. the Minister of Justice on the right of the Chair, I have received a telegram from Battleford saying that a new trial had been granted. I must say I feel I have something to complain of. However, what I want now is, before the Estimates of the Department of Justice are brought up, to ask the Solicitor General, or as he does not seem to be in his place, to ask the right hon. leader of the House (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) whether all the papers will now be laid on the Table?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I think my hon. friend (Mr. Davin) has been misinformed in being told that a new trial has been granted. I am not aware that such a thing has taken place, and I do not believe it has. The hon. gentleman asked me if the papers would be laid on the Table. I cannot give him an answer upon that point until I have consulted the Minister of Justice. I may say, however, that if the matter has been disposed of by the Minister of Justice, I can see no reason why the papers should not be laid on the Table. But the hon. gentleman will understand that if the matter is still open, I cannot say that the papers will be brought down.

Mr. DAVIN. I suppose that I should put the matter in this form: First, to ask whether a new trial has been granted, and if so, will the papers be laid upon the Table?

The PRIME MINISTER. I am not aware that a new trial has been granted, but I will inquire.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. GILLIES. I desire to ask the leader of the House, as I do not see the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) in his place, when the papers relating to the dismissal of Joseph McNell, Point Jérôme, St. Peters, will be brought down? The hon. Minister promised some time ago that they should be brought down, and I have had an intimation from an officer in the department that they are ready.

WESTERN ASSINIBOIA AND THE IMMIGRATION HAND-BOOK.

Mr. DAVIN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to draw the attention of the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) to a portion of his hand-book, and, to put myself in order, I shall conclude with a motion. The matter to which I wish to refer is one of very great importance to the North-west Territories, as the House will see. If there is a misrepresentation of some of the most successful parts of the Territory appearing in the hand-book; "The official hand-book of information relating to the Dominion of Canada, 1897; published with the approval of Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies, by the Government of Canada," it will be seen to be a matter of great importance, and if there is such a misrepresentation it should be repudiated at the earliest possible moment by those who are acquainted with the facts, and I venture to say, by the Minister of the Interior himself, the moment he finds out what it is. I have a copy of the book here, and I read from page 84 where, under the prominent heading "Western Assiniboia," I find the following:—

The western two-thirds of Assiniboia is almost entirely composed of open plains, which, with the exception of the localities immediately adjoining the towns of Regina and Moose Jaw, and in the vicinity of the Wood Mountains and Cypress Hills, described more fully further on, are devoid at present of settlement, and unsuited to agriculture without the aid of irrigation. In the districts near Regina and Moose Jaw, and in the valley of the Qu'Appelle River, to the north of these towns, considerable settlement has taken place, but the success attending farming operations has not been encouraging. This portion of the district is on the borderland between the humid and arid portions of the Territories, and while the soil is of an exceptionally fertile character, the liability to drought renders grain-growing precarious, and owing to scarcity of water supply irrigation cannot be resorted to as an aid to crop production in the manner practised in other parts of the plains region. The vast extent of territory in this part of Assinibola is broken in two places by marked ranges of hills which rise to a considerable height above the general elevation of the plains.

Now, Sir, for the moment, that is sufficient to read. But the hon. gentleman who is at the head of the Department of the Interior and who is familiar with the North-west Territories, must know that that is a most damaging as well as a most unjust representation of the country from the east of Qu'Appelle station to the west for something like forty miles, of Moose Jaw. Last year, as the hon. gentleman knows, was a dry year as compared with other years. The precipitation of rain last year was not as great as usual; yet what is the fact as regards north and south of Moose Jaw, north and south of Regina and north and south of Qu'Appelle station, and north and south of Balgonie? In the region specified by this misrepresentation in the hand-book of the Department of the Interior some of the best crops in the whole of Canada were grown. It is here said that the success attending farming operations has not been encouraging. Why, Sir, I venture to say that we have some of the most successful farmers in the North-west Territories around Moose Jaw, north of Pense, near Stoney Beach, north of Regina and north of Qu'Appelle, and around Balgonie. In that district immediately around Regina, the farmers last year, in addition to what they banked at their credit for the purpose of setting out loans, have placed in the Montreal savings bank $100,000. I have here an account of the shipments from those points last year. We shipped from Balgonie, 131,214 bushels; from Moose Jaw, 220,233 bushels; from Regina, 135,177; from Qu'Appelle, 157,525—all in one year. I know as a fact that those farmers had not emptied their granaries when I got this report, which is that of the Canadian Pacific Railway. In addition to this amount of wheat you have the large amount that has gone to feed the people of those points. The shipments from those points amounted altogether to 644,383 bushels, of their own produce. Then, of general produce there were sent away from Balgonie, 77 tons; from Regina, 162; from Qu'Appelle, 174; total, 413 tons. It seems to me these facts demonstrate that this paragraph in the hand-book is a misrepresentation. Now, further, the writer of that paragraph is not aware evidently that the farmers in those regions had to learn how to farm. The system that is pursued in the east would not do in that part of the country. We admit that as compared with portions of eastern Canada, the country is dry, but after an experience now of fifteen years, we entirely deny that that part of the country is too dry for successful arable farming. Now, what is the secret of farming successfully in that portion of the North-west? The secret is summer-fallowing. Perhaps that word would be misleading to intending settlers in the North-west. An incoming farmer into the North-west Territories, in order to farm successfully, has to have June fallowing. June fallowing accomplishes two things. In the first place, it prevents the weeds seeding; in the next place, it keeps the June rains in the ground. If the hon. gentleman who is at the head of the Department of the Interior would go over every bit of this district, referred to specially by me, which is here pronounced unfit for arable cultivation, he would find the finest wheat fields ever seen, and side by side with these wheat fields, only moderately rich crops of wheat. If he asked the farmer who would be accompanying him: How is it that this field is ready to give thirty to thirty-five bushels to the acre, and other fields alongside will not produce more than twelve or fifteen bushels? The answer invariably would be: At first they used to practice summer-fallowing, but after a while it was found that if they had summer-fallowing, fallowing right into the fall, the results were not the same as when the fallowing had been done in June or July. Our farmers had not learned, if I may use such a phrase, the trick of the country, but now they are doing better. Then you can to some extent produce the same results as the precipitation of rain by keeping the snow from drifting; that will have the same effect as rain moisture. If the snow is kept from drifting, when the spring sun comes, instead of the sun striking on the land, from which the wind has swept the snow away, it melts at least a portion of the snow, because it must be admitted that a considerable portion of the snow, lying sometimes two or three feet deep—some of that will evaporate, but some of it will melt, and this moisture will go into the ground. The frost in many parts goes deep into the ground, and the rain that falls in the autumn is actually kept by that frost in the ground, and when summer time comes the roots of the crop are moistened, not merely by the rainfalls of that summer, but by the moisture that is drawn from below up to the roots. Now, if that description is true given in the hand-book, the best thing that can be done is to abandon all this region; but I know that the description is misleading, I know that it is not correct. The success of the rural farmers, the Browns north of Regina, the Carsses in Qu'Appelle valley, and others who have put in fifteen years of labour, prove that description to be incorrect. The Cullums, north of

Regina, made a clear profit last year of $10,000. These men are thus making money, their properties are to be seen with comfortable houses, with stables as fine as are to be found on the Model Farm. These same Cullums have as fine stables as are to be found in any part of the country. Now, such a description is depreciatory of the property of these people, and I bring it to the attention of the Minister of the Interior in order that it may be corrected. Whoever wrote that pamphlet was, in my opinion, quite misinformed. Then, there is the report of Mr. Dennis, in the blue-book of 1897. I have the highest opinion of Mr. Dennis as an engineer, and any one reporting as he does here as an engineer, would not controvert the position he is taking up, that is to say, he is writing as an engineer, as a scientific man, and is not supposed to take account of the agricultural conditions, because that was not his business. His business was, I suppose, to speak about the rainfall. That was his principal topic in a paper on irrigation. I want to point out, however, that this, too, is misleading and will have to be corrected, and it is not only misleading as regards these parts of the country to which I am referring, but it is misleading in regard to a large portion of Alberta. However, what I am chiefly concerned with is the hand-book, which has been circulated broadcast. I see that Lord Strathcona, our High Commissioner, refers to the fact of the book having been largely circulated in England and elsewhere, and I think this is the gravamen of the fault that the Department of the Interior has committed. I will call attention to what is in the blue-book. On page 24 we read :

Commencing at the intersection of the International boundary with the second initial meridian (longitude 102°) and running thence north-westerly, following very closely the line marking the westerly limit of the bluff country and the eastern limit of the great plains proper until the South Saskatchewan River is reached about the north boundary of Township 33. From thence the boundary is deflected rather more to the north, crossing the north branch of the Saskatchewan River in Range 14 west of the 3rd meridian, and extending as far north as Township 50.

From thence the boundary runs about thirty miles to the west, and thence turning to the south-west, runs in that direction to the north boundary of Township 30, in Range 27 west of the 4th meridian and from thence west to the Rocky Mountains.

This appears under the head "Boundaries of the Arid Region"; and within those boundaries both the Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway have been selling lands, and the Government have allowed people to take up homesteads there, where the land, of course, by implication, is considered to be fit for cultivation as homesteads. The report continues :

This portion of the Territories comprises an area of 101,340 square miles, and its relation to the remaining portion of the Territories and the boundaries of the region will be more readily understood from the map covering this report.

Here is the map accompanying the report. I showed the map to a gentleman who is largely interested in the North-west, and he was perfectly amazed that such a map, without any qualification whatever, should be sent out from the Department of the Interior. The arid area is made to run up, as I have described, to east of Qu'Appelle it goes north into the Saskatchewan, and then comes right down a little north of Calgary. That is calculated to do a great deal of harm, and I think I have only to bring it to the attention of the hon. Minister to lead him to take steps to have the wrong done to the portion of the territory in his charge alluded to and the wrong done to the property owners, the settlers, in that region, corrected. I may say, in passing, in regard to the irrigation reported on here, that I am very glad to see that work is being done in this direction ; and I am the more glad because as will be seen by "Hansard," when I first proposed that steps should be taken to irrigate certain portions of the North-west, I was told from an official source at that time in this House that I was depreciating the country. The truth of the proposition laid down, that irrigation would be useful in certain parts of the territory, has already been proved, and I am very glad to see that the Government are going on still further with the work. This is a very different matter from characterizing portions of the territory, which have proved fruitful, where men have got rich in farming, and could not be induced to remove so satisfied are they with their prosperity, as being within the arid region, including the four great centres of Regina, Moose Jaw, Balgonie and Qu'Appelle. I beg to move the adjournment of the House.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). I presume the House without argument will acquit me of any desire to disparage any part of Canada ; and the House will also at once acknowledge, I think, the difficulty of preparing a descriptive hand-book of Canada which will be accurate and at the same time satisfy the desire of the inhabitants of various portions of the country. It would be a comparatively easy matter to issue a hand-book of indiscriminate praise for every portion of the country ; it is when an attempt is made to describe the country and tell the truth, which is the most necessary element in connection with immigration and an immigration policy, and convince the people that the information supplied is the truth, that difficulty arises. The greatest possible care has been taken in the preparation of the book to which the hon. gentleman refers, and he has indicated in his own speech that the information which is displayed here is the result of inquiries and studies made by the scientific officers of the department. I will not for a moment dispute what the hon. gentleman states when he says that from his personal knowledge the account given of western Assiniboia is not as favourable as it should be, in order to be in accordance with the facts. No one is more delighted to hear the hon. gentleman's testimony as to that fact than I am. I will endeavour before the second edition goes to press to secure accurate information in detail and correct the text in any portion of the hand-book which appears to be incorrect.

Motion to adjourn negatived.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

On the Order,

That for the remainder of the session the House shall hold two sittings on each day, one from 11 a.m. until 1 p.m., and the second from 3 p.m. until the hour of adjournment, and at each such sitting Government Orders shall have precedence.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I do not propose to move this motion to-day; I think I will leave it to the next sitting of the House, on Wednesday. My reason is that the House is entitled to a declaration from the Government of the business which it proposes to bring down and proceed with. Unfortunately on account of my absence from my usual duties, and being confined to my house for the last few days, I am unable to make the declaration to-day, but I will do so on Wednesday.

Mr. SPEAKER. The Order stands.

DOMINION LANDS ACT.

Bill (No. 130) further to amend the Dominion Lands Act (Mr. Sifton) was read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 3,

Mr. DAVIN. What class of immigrants does this provide for?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The demand for this legislation has been made by a number of farmers now residing in Manitoba, who desire to move into the Territories and work upon the co-operative plan. The application was made last year, but I left the matter over, and after giving it a good deal of consideration, I think it is possibly worth while to try it. It will do no harm, and we will make an attempt to see if it can be worked out in this case.

Mr. DAVIN. It is to meet the case of settlers who have been for some time in Manitoba?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. DAVIN. Are they the Gallicians?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No; they are Canadian farmers. It is not intended specially to apply to new settlers but of course it may do so.

On section 6,

Mr. DAVIN. Why is the Minister of the Interior making this change with regard to the second homestead?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The old clause found in section of the Act of last session to amend the Dominion Lands Act combined the two cases of the settler who had procured his patent for his first homestead and then entry for his second homestead, and the son of such a settler. It has been found that the combination of the two cases in the one clause makes it almost impossible to interpret the section intelligently in a variety of cases that arise. The section as amended by this Bill practically gives the son the privilege of earning his patent by living with his parent, so long as the parent is a farmer living upon a farm in the vicinity.

On section 7,

Mr. DAVIN. Why is the hon. gentleman changing the wording here?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have to move that section 7 be amended to read as follows:—

Subclause 10 of the said clause 38, as amended by section 4 of chapter 29, of the Statutes of 1897, is hereby amended by striking out the words "or has a pre-emption" in the third line thereof, and by substituting for paragraph (a) thereof the following:—

(a) That he has fulfilled three years' residence within the meaning of this clause.

The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) introduced a Bill last session the principle of which I proposed to adopt, and the law clerk of my department adopted practically the wording of my hon. friend's (Mr. Davin's) Bill, but I found that it gave rise to some difficulty in the interpretation. This amendment I think will remove the difficulty and will carry out what my hon. friend (Mr. Davin) meant.

On section 8,

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This clause has been suggested by the board of examiners to provide for the case of provincial land surveyors of British Columbia, who are desirous of becoming land surveyors of the Dominion. The board say that under the law they are compelled to undergo an examination which is more onerous than the board consider necessary, and they have drafted this section.

On section 9,

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I move that in the first blank, being line

39, the words "six months" be inserted, and in the next line, the word "years" be struck out, and in the next blank the words "$100" be inserted, so that it will read "not exceeding six months, or to a penalty not exceeding $100."

Mr. DAVIN. Will the hon. gentleman explain the object of this?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman knows the enormous amount of difficulty that has arisen by reason of the posts being stolen, and it is to be regretted that a more stringent law was not adopted to prevent such an offence.

Mr. DAVIN. I am glad to see this legislation at last introduced, because it was undoubtedly a great grievance to have the land marks removed; but how will the hon. gentleman deal with those who are the greatest sinners in this respect? Our experience is that the Indians, when they move about in the summer, take up these posts and use them as firewood.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I was not aware that the Indians are in the habit of doing that, but I do not think it would be a difficult matter to deal with, if the agents were given instructions to look carefully after it.

On section 10,

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I notice in reading the report that I did not state accurately what the effect of this section is. At present the Act permits a person to homestead a quarter section or any portion less than a quarter section, but the land homesteaded must be all in the same parcel. He could not take two legal subdivisions not connected with each other, and this section provides that he may do that.

On section 11,

Mr. DAVIN. What lands does the province propose to give back to the Dominion Government and what land is the Dominion Government going to give in exchange?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There has been a system of exchange of lands going on between the Dominion and the province of Manitoba for many years. It has risen principally in this way. Ever since the province has been entitled to swamp lands, settlers have gone on these lands and then would apply for homestead entries. The settler would be told that the land belonged to the province, and he could not get a homestead entry for it. In many cases, the province agreed to give the lands back to the Dominion, and the Minister of the Interior gave the settlers homestead entries for it and gave the province other lands of equal value. There has been an exchange of that kind going on between the Minister of the Interior and Manitoba for many years past. In addition to that, there have been a couple of cases—one in particular—in which the late Government transferred lands to the province of Manitoba and the Canadian Pacific Railway had it down in their books as forming part of their land and had sold it to settlers. An exchange becomes necessary in such cases. Another case is that of the Spruce Bush, which lies south of the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway in the neighbourhood of Calgary and Melbourne. There, in order to preserve the timber, we are exchanging with the provincial government, giving them lands in other parts, so that all the Dominion lands would be in one place, and the provincial lands in the other. Otherwise, it is almost impossible for the officer to protect the timber.

On section 12,

Mr. DAVIN. This bears on a matter we have discussed to-day—the arid lands. I would like to understand how the hon. gentleman will carry out this policy. Suppose it should happen that some men have settled on lands actually arid, and have got out patents. I presume, in cases of that sort, there is clear justice in their demanding the right of entry a second time for a homestead. Does the hon. gentleman mean that in the case of any persons who have settled on lands which he thinks are arid, he would give them equivalent homesteads elsewhere? That might prove to be of a proper policy. I think that where lands are proved to be arid it is good policy and common justice to the incoming settler to withdraw them from settlement.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman is perfectly right in principle. I have had cases before me a number of times. I have had cases in which men have proven that they settled on lands on which nobody could possibly make a living, and in every case in which the certificate of recommendation had not been actually signed and delivered, I have permitted the settler to make another homestead. And I have been strongly pressed to amend the Act so that I might permit another homestead, even in cases where the patent had been issued, but I do not see how I could go so far as that. If a man who has been upon the land for three years and has actually received his patent may come to the Government and say: This land is no good; I cannot make a living on it, and so get another homestead, I cannot see how there would be anything in the nature of finality in the administration of Dominion lands. I think that if a man has had three years to make a trial of his land, and after that time, has decided to prove up and take out his patent, that must be considered as final.

Mr. DAVIN. I agree with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton). It would not be wise to go so far as to allow a man who has taken out his patent to say : I will give up this homestead and enter again. It would lead men, the moment they had a whimsical desire to go elsewhere to make an excuse of saying that their land was no good. I would not ask the hon. gentleman to go so far. I think he is right in allowing a man who has entered but who has not taken out his patent and finds he cannot make a living on the land he has chosen, to re-enter.

On section 13,

Mr. DAVIN. Is not this rather going back on the liberal spirit of our legislation in regard to settlement ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No ; I will explain. In the early days, particularly in the province of Manitoba, a large quantity of land was sold to private parties. These sales are known in the Department of the Interior as "old time sales." The land was sold on very favourable terms, and men bought a quarter or half section, sometimes even two or three, and made one payment. The Government has been a very indulgent creditor, and these sales have stood for years with very little paid. In a great many cases, it is perfectly evident that the people have no intention of carrying out the sale in a bona fide way. I have waited about two years before taking decisive action, and I have come to the conclusion that, in a great majority of cases, these sales must be cancelled, and this land again thrown open for settlement. I do not think it would be in the public interest to allow the land to be simply sold again to speculators who would undoubtedly be the purchasers if the land were put upon the market. I wish to have it disposed of on settlement condition, so that it shall get into the hands of parties who are prepared to live on it and cultivate it. At the same time there are choice pieces of this land, near to the towns, within easy reach of the conveniences of civilization, and it seems to me that, in some cases at least, there ought to be a price of a dollar or two an acre put on the land in addition to the settlement duties. I have no doubt it will be quickly taken up if such a price is fixed. I cannot say I have come to a very positive conclusion as to the price, but I think I ought to have power to require a payment, even if not a large payment in some of these cases, particularly where the land is specially valuable, and to do that, such legislation is required as is provided in this clause.

Mr. DAVIN. I understand that what the Minister aims at is that it shall depend on his own judgment whether this payment shall be made a condition or not.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It will depend on my judgment, as in the case of all Dominion land. The Minister of the Interior has power to put a price upon Dominion lands within certain limits. In that way, I have power to fix the price for these lands under the existing law and do not require any additional legislation for that purpose. But I wish the power to bring this land under the homestead conditions, so that when I sell the lands I may at the same time make the sale conditional upon settlement. This clause is not to give me greater power with regard to the price of the land, but to enable me to require settlement duties.

Mr. DAVIN. There is only this point—that the great thing is to get in good settlers. I have long been of opinion that the view taken in regard to the incoming of the settler, that the Government should make money out of him, is a mistake.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin).

Mr. DAVIN. The real way for the country to make money out of the settler is to bring in the settler, to get the taxes he pays and the benefit of the enrichment consequent upon his labour.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. These lands will be taken up almost altogether by people in that country who know where they are, people, who, in many cases, have been watching these lands for years.

On section 14,

Mr. DAVIN. What squatters are these that this clause aims at ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The provision now in the Act with regard to the removal of persons who are unlawfully in possession of Dominion lands is not satisfactory. Of course the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) understands that the Government ought to have proper means of ejecting people who are in possession of Dominion lands if they deem it necessary to do so. There are occasionally cases in which persons take possession of Dominion lands and refuse to vacate. This simply provides a summary method of procedure against them if it is deemed desirable to eject them.

Mr. DAVIN. What does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) intend to put in the blank in line 40 ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. "Thirty days."

Mr. DAVIN. I would like to know from the hon. gentleman whether this is aimed at settlers who happen to take up land before survey ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No ; the Act expressly recognizes them. This is only for the purpose of being used in case some person is wrongfully in possession of Dominion lands, and, though notified by the officer under the direction of the department to get off the lands, will not do so. Of course, we could bring an action of ejectment against him and put him off, but that would be expensive and troublesome. Every Crown Lands Act ought to have a provision of this kind, and they nearly all have.

Bill, as amended, reported.

THE POST OFFICE ACT.

Order for third reading of Bill (No. 110) further to amend the Post Office Act,

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock) moved that the Order be discharged, and that the House again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole with instructions to add the following amendments:—

Subsection 1 of section 9 of the Post Office Act, chapter 35 of the Revised Statutes, is hereby amended by adding thereto the following paragraph:—

(s) Make regulations providing that in the case of mail matter which bears upon the cover thereof the name and address of the sender, and which may be mailed unpaid, the postmaster at the office of mailing may notify the sender thereof of such non-payment and allow him to supply the short postage for the purpose of being affixed thereto by the postmaster, and that in the case of imperfectly addressed mail matter which indicates on the cover the sender's name, the postmaster may afford the sender an opportunity of enabling the postmaster to complete the address.

He said: At present a letter that is wholly unpaid is transmitted to Ottawa. For example, on Saturday I received a complaint from a Premier of one of our provinces that a drop letter addressed to him in the city where he resides, instead of being forwarded to him, was forwarded to Ottawa under the present law, the postmaster, I suppose, holding that he had no power to do otherwise than send it to the dead letter office. This amendment proposes to allow the postmaster to use a little common sense, and to apply to whoever is the sender, and get a stamp to be put on. The second part of the amendment provides that the postmaster is allowed to perfect an address if he can do so. Another amendment is this: On Friday last the House agreed to three points outside of Ottawa being treated as dead letter offices, namely, Winnipeg, Victoria and Halifax. On conference with the officers of the department, I am satisfied it would be advisable to establish at least one in Toronto, which is a very large centre, and if possible, another in Montreal. These are both important railway centres, Toronto especially being the centre for all the western part of Ontario, and the mail matter of that region would only be delayed by transferring it to Ottawa. I do not propose that dead letter matter in any of these offices shall be dealt with by the officers connected with the local staff; but they shall, for this purpose, be treated as members of the inside service in order that they may be more directly under the control of the department here; and, if necessary, to make additional appointments, assuming that we shall have to transfer some of the officers from the centre to outside points. In other cases it may be sufficient to transfer the members of the local outside staff to the inside staff so that they shall be amenable directly to the department at Ottawa.

Motion agreed to, and the House again resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On the amendments,

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Was there not an understanding the other night that the places to be treated as dead letter offices, should be limited to three cities?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, in a sense; but I do not think a great deal of importance was attached to the number. The Bill as presented to the House asked that the Postmaster General might be allowed to indicate the number of offices without their being named; and when the point was taken that that gave too much power, because he might select some small towns, and that the person opening the letters would have too much local knowledge, I then expressed my willingness to name the points, and in a way I referred to those remote points. But since then, in conference with Major Walsh this morning, I have satisfied myself that we ought to have at least Toronto for the accommodation of all the dead letter matter west of Toronto, instead of sending that down to Ottawa to be treated as dead letter matter, thus involving a delay of several days.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Unfortunately some of the hon. gentlemen on this side of the House who took a prominent part in the discussion which led to what was tantamount to a settlement, are not here now; and I would suggest, when these amendments are reported, that the Bill, instead of being read the third time as is usually done, stand over until those hon. gentlemen are here.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am quite agreeable to that.

Mr. HUGHES. Is it not the case that in the United States the territory is divided up into dead letter districts?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think not. But in Great Britain they have sixteen examining points all the way from Aberdeen in the north to Cork in the south.

Mr. DAVIN. I will remind the hon. gentleman that what took place was this: He will remember that an hon. gentleman, who takes a prominent part in our debates, was objecting strongly to accepting the proposal of the Postmaster General, and the leader of the Opposition turned round to him and said: Oh, well, we will accept that. That looks to me very like an agreement.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am willing to adopt the suggestion of the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) and allow the matter to stand that his friends who take an interest in it, may be here.

Bill, as amended, reported.

NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES ACTS.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton) moved second reading of Bill (No. 131) further to amend the Acts respecting the North-west Territories.

Mr. DAVIN. There is one clause in this Bill that seems to aim chiefly at providing for a perambulatory banc for the North-West Territories. The hon. gentleman will remember that last year when there was a Bill before the House providing for that, I gave him my views about it in private, and he seemed to agree with them. The consequence was that he struck out the clause, but now I see that clause reappears in this Bill. I think he will agree with me that, from what we know of the effect of having a central judiciary, from its good effect upon the country and good effect upon the profession, it is not desirable to introduce the principle of a perambulating banc in the North-west Territories. Why should we not have the system continued that has already existed, and have the Bench sitting in Regina? I know there are one or two persons who consider that lawyers should not be brought to Regina, but that the judges should travel everywhere over the Territories. I do not think that is advisable. It is impossible to provide a good library in every part of the Territories. A good library will be required, in order to make judicial proceedings effective, at Edmonton, Calgary and Moose Jaw, and I hope the hon. gentleman will reconsider this portion of the Bill.

Motion agreed to. Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. DAVIN. I understand why the hon. Minister is making this change; but I think the House generally has not paid very much attention to the provision, and I would ask the hon. Minister to explain what he wants to get rid of by the amendment.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I explained when I introduced the Bill that section 1 was for the purpose of permitting of the correction of an error which crept in last session when amendments to the North-west Act were being passed. The term "Lieutenant-Governor in Council," under the old Act meant the Lieutenant-Governor acting by and with the advice of the assembly; but under the new constitution, the term "Lieutenant-Governor in Council" means the same as the Lieutenant-Governor of the province, that is, the Lieutenant-Governor acting with the advice of his Executive Council. The clause relating to education in the old Act provided that the Lieutenant-Governor in Council might make orders; and therefore, when the changed interpretation came into force, that section being unaltered, the power of the legislature in respect to education was undoubtedly left to the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, instead of to the legislative assembly. The change is a most necessary one, and the explanations I have made is all that is needed to show the committee the effect of this clause.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I quite understand the necessity for that amendment. In connection with the subject, however, I would like the Minister of the Interior to explain his idea of the effect of the Constitutional Act, so to speak, which came into force last October, as regards the position of the Lieutenant-Governor of the Territories, and particularly in connection with the issue of permits for the sale of liquor, as to how far that is under the government of the Territories, or whether the Government consider the Lieutenant-Governor there acts under direct instructions from the federal authority?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The change which was made in the Constitutional Act of the North-west Territories of course placed the Lieutenant-Governor in the position of being very much the same as the Lieutenant-Governor of one of the provinces, an officer who could act only by advice of his council. Under the amendment, the Executive Council of the North-west Territories claim that everything which the Lieutenant-Governor is empowered to do, he must do with the advice of his council. I am not sure that interpretation is correct. I do not think any lawyer would say the question was free from doubt, but the view I entertained was that, inasmuch as the power to issue permits in respect to liquor was a power inserted in the Act in former days when the Lieutenant-Governor was practically an executive officer clothed with power he could exercise without advice, that when the power was in the nature of the exercise of a police regulation, in the absence of anything express or positive it might be considered that the power of the Lieutenant-Governor remained as it was before. I would not say that opinion is without doubt correct; I would not say it is free from doubt, and I may add that the Government of the North-west Territories entertain a very strong opinion in the opposite direction, I thought it better not to have any conflict in regard to this matter, and the Government of the North-west Territories agreed with me on the subject, and when Mr. Haultain was here some time ago, it was arranged between us that no permit for taking liquor into the Yukon district should be issued except such as would be without any objection whatever, such cases as application made for taking in a few gallons for private use, in respect of which I thought it was perfectly proper to allow him to exercise his own discretion, and therefore in the meantime any such permit has been issued by the Lieutenant-Governor on the advice of the Executive Council. It was part of the understanding that no permit should be issued for liquor that could be made use of in a commercial way. The effect of the understanding is that the matter remains in abeyance until the Act relating to the government of the Yukon district, which the Government are about introducing, receives the royal assent, and the matter will there be dealt with and removed from doubt. I may say that the arrangement between the Government of the North-west Territories and the Government here is perfectly harmonious, and Mr. Haultain and myself both agreed that the arrangement suggested was the best one in order to avoid dispute.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I have not looked sufficiently into the question as to warrant me in giving any opinion as to the technical interpretation of the legislation in regard to that question. But my recollection is, that the understanding last session was, when the Act relating to the government of the Territories passed through the House, that the Governor in Council was to have complete control, and that if there was authority, as the hon. gentleman has suggested, over the Governor by this Government, it was 'casus omissus.'

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I take the same view myself, and if I were compelled to assert a view, I would assert that view. If I were compelled to act in hostility to the other Government, I would take that view and insist that it was correct; but I would prefer not to be forced into that position.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. This is the observation I have reference to and it confirms the statement made by the hon. gentleman, that it was his intention to give the same powers to the Governor in Council as are exercised in any province. At column 410 of the Debates of 1897, I find the following:—

On section 2.

2. The paragraph lettered (c) of section 2 of the said Act is hereby repealed, and the following substituted therefor:—

Mr. SIFTON.

"(c) The expression 'Lieutenant-Governor in Council' means the Lieutenant-Governor of the Territories, by and with the consent of the Executive Council of the Territories, or in conjunction with the Executive Council of the Territories, as the case may be."

Mr. FOSTER. What is the difference?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). We are simply bringing the definition of Lieutenant-Governor in Council in the Territories into line with the definition of Lieutenant-Governor in Council in the provinces.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. You are taking away the personal action of the Lieutenant-Governor and making him act with his Council.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

So that was the intention. My object is to suggest to the Minister of the Interior that this would be an opportunity, in connection with this Bill, to remove all doubt and to settle that question, and settle it on the line which I understand, according to the arrangement between the Federal Government and the Government of the North-west Territories, on which they are jointly acting. It seems to me opportune to deal with the subject.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is worth considering. I shall ask that the committee have leave to sit again, so that I can think it over.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Very well.

Mr. DAVIN. This clause of course emphasizes the fact that in regard to the Yukon, in the opinion of the Minister of the Interior, the Dominion Government had the authority to advise the Lieutenant-Governor, and the Minister will remember that on several occasions when we asked him as to who gave authority to have liquor taken into the Yukon, in regard to thousands of gallons, the Minister replied: that it was the Lieutenant-Governor; but ultimately, in answer to a question put by myself, asking who told the Lieutenant-Governor to give authority, it turned out that the authority came from the Minister of the Interior.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I thought the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) knew that all the time.

Mr. DAVIN. I probably suspected it.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I thought the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) knew that as a matter of course, because before I took office an arrangement had been made between the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-west Territories and the former Minister of the Interior, under which arrangement it was settled, that no permits should be issued for the taking of liquor into the Yukon except upon the authority of the Department of the Interior. That fact was quite notorious and I think everybody else in Canada knew it, because I got, I suppose thousands of letters, certainly hundreds, asking me to give authority to issue permits. The Act of course expressly states that the Lieutenant-Governor issues the permit, and the fact that I received the letters proved very conclusively that it was a matter of common knowledge that it was through the Department of the Interior the permit would issue.

Mr. DAVIN. But we never really have had an explanation from the Minister (Mr. Sifton) as to why he allowed these thousands upon thousands of gallons to go into the Yukon; and he might tell us, in passing, why he did it. It was a most extraordinary thing to give a man in Manitoba the power to take in this large quantity of liquor.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have not got the statement under my hand at the present time, but I have no objection to discuss it at any time I am prepared with the documents.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) has given us the figures, but he has not given the people of the country the explanation as to why he gave these permits to such a number of private individuals. My information is that those private individuals multiplied the quantity, and took in many times the amount they got permission to take in.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I hope the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) would not hold me responsible for that.

Mr. DAVIN. No; but it shows the character of the men to whom the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) advised a great officer of the Crown to give permission.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I venture to say that not a single one of the persons or corporations who got the permits, has taken in as large a quantity as he was authorized to. I am, of course, making that statement without absolute mathematical knowledge.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. At all events there was a kind of a hot time in Dawson City.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have said that I did not make the statement from mathematical knowledge, and the only way I could prove such a statement would be by getting a return of the amount taken in. I venture to say that as to the persons who received permission on my direction, having made application to the Department of the Interior, none of them up to the present time, has taken in as much as he was authorized to take in by the permit.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. Minister can easily explain why he directed the Lieutenant-Governor to give permission to these private parties to take in large quantities of liquor. With regard to what the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) says. I have read reports from every part of the Yukon district, and especially from Dawson, saying that at every turn there was a saloon. Where did that liquor come from?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Not under any permit issued by me or my direction. It went in under proceedings that were taken before I took office.

Mr. DAVIN. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) was lavish enough in directing to have thousands of gallons go in.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think that has done any harm there yet.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. You think it has not materialized there?

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) does not know how quick his friends are. Our information is that his friends actually took in the quantity allowed, and took in a great deal more, and made a large amount of money out of it.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Which particular friend do you refer to?

Mr. DAVIN. That Manitoba friend.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The gentleman from Oak Lake?

Mr. DAVIN. Yes; I think that one.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think he has had an opportunity of taking in any.

Mr. DAVIN. Does the Minister know all about him? He seems to be very familiar with these whisky pedlars. What we do want to get from the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) is an explanation as to why it was that he, in charge of the Yukon, and having the responsibility, asked the Lieutenant-Governor to give permission to take in that whisky. Does not the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) see that under the question I am putting, it does not matter whether the whisky has gone in or not, but what I want to know is, why the Minister was moved to ask the Lieutenant-Governor to give the permits.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I can appreciate the hostility of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) to liquor, and I have no objection to giving the explanation as to how this took place. The arrangement that I found in vogue when I took charge of the department was—this I was informed by the late Deputy Minister, Mr. Burgess—was, that the Department of the Interior gave direction what liquor was to be taken in there. In the first place, the department had decided that it was impossible with the police force then in the district, to undertake to keep liquor out absolutely, and they then decided they would allow a certain amount of liquor to go in upon the direction of the Department of the Interior. First, permits had been granted—and now I speak from memory—to the two transportation companies, the Alaskan and the North American, and an application came before me to renew these permits. When that application came before me I simply said: How much did they get the year before; I was told; and I then said: You can renew the permit for the amount they got the year before. Subsequently, some parties applied for leave to take liquor in. A man named O'Brien came with a letter from Inspector Constantine recommending that a permit should be given him, saying, if I recollect aright, that the liquor business was carried on there, that O'Brien was a respectable man, and he was recommended to the good offices of the department. It was simply upon that letter a permit was issued to Mr. O'Brien. There were two or three other cases of applications having been made, amongst them this gentleman from Oak Lake, who seems to have excited the hostility of my hon. friend from West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin). I granted two or three permits. I could not see there was any special reasons why, if the liquor business was going to be carried on in the Yukon district, it should be confined to two American trading companies, and I do not see now why it should be confined to the two American trading companies. The only question was, whether the amount for which I granted the permit was an excessive amount. I do not think any one would say that if there was going to be liquor allowed into the Yukon district, 10,000 or 12,000 gallons would be an excessive amount for thirty or forty thousand people. Therefore, I feel that I am not open to any severe criticism in that respect. I subsequently found that applications were coming from all over the country for permits to take liquor into the Yukon district, and I simply sat on the whole thing, and I said I would not issue any more. That has been followed consistently since with the exception of a few cases to which I referred before, in which the applications were not of a commercial nature: that is to say, in the sense of a desire on the part of the applicant to use the permit for commercial purposes, and in these cases a few permits were granted for a small amount, five or six gallons. These permits are shown on the returns brought down to the House.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I heard from one source, I think it was in the House but I cannot find the reference, not as the Minister of the Interior puts it, that this practice had existed of issuing these permits on the part of his predecessor, but that the Lieutenant-Governor had himself claimed the right to issue permits, and had issued permits to those two companies in particular.

Mr. SIFTON.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That was since, I think, speaking from memory, the companies got the Lieutenant-Governor to issue the permit after I had refused. The late Deputy Minister, Mr. Burgess, told me that was the arrangement that had been made, and an application was made to me on behalf of these two companies in the first instance. I said to renew their permits for this year for the same amount as last year. For the reasons I have given, I subsequently gave a permit to Mr. O'Brien and to two or three others, and amongst them to one firm on the recommendation of Mr. Turner, the Premier of British Columbia, who wrote me recommending the parties as responsible. From information I have got since, the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-west Territories apparently issued permits after I had ceased to allow any further requisitions to go forward, and I think he must have issued permits to the two companies which had applied to me and been refused, because when they came again, after I had given directions for the first time, some months later, I said I would not issue any recommendation in their favour because I had decided not to issue further recommendations until I knew more clearly what sort of administration we were going to have in that country, and I think they must have got their permits from the Lieutenant-Governor of the Territories without any knowledge by the Department of the Interior. I do not know that any other explanation is necessary.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. Minister is not able to say that his predecessor issued any permits in the Yukon territory?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. When the matter came before me I referred it to the late Mr. Burgess, who was then Deputy Minister. He explained to me what I have stated. I never looked back to see when or where the permits had been granted. I had been told that permits had been issued the year before, and I said to renew them for the same amount. When the return came down, I found that they had been given about the time of the change of Government, and that the officers in the department must have issued the requisitions. Probably, therefore, the late Minister of the Interior did not know anything about it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That seems to be the idea. For instance, on 30th March, I see in "Hansard" that the hon. Minister, referring to one of these permits, stated that a permit to take 1,000 gallons of whisky into the Yukon district had been issued by the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-west Territories. I suppose the hon. gentleman, in referring to the custom anterior to his taking office, referred to the power the Government of the North-west Territories claimed to have to issue these permits regardless of the Minister of the Interior.

THE MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. All the permits were issued by the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-west Territories, as I explained to the member for Assiniboia. It did not occur to me to say that the permits issued by the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-west Territories were issued upon my recommendation. I did not imagine that anybody in the House did not know that.

MR. DAVIN. Of course, in that case to which my hon. friend from Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) refers, that is the only case in which a Minister of the Interior told the Lieutenant-Governor to issue a permit for 1,000 gallons of whisky. That was done at the instance of the Minister of the Interior. He has the honour of being the first Minister of the Interior to have recommended permits to issue.

THE MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I suppose that, technically speaking, that is correct. The explanation I have to give to the House will show that what I endeavoured to do was to follow exactly the practice which I had been told had been followed in the department. I was not aware at all, until I saw the return, that the permits had been issued at a time when, it will appear from a political condition then existing there was probably no Minister of the Interior. The Minister of the Interior then probably did not give it his personal attention. I was under the impression, from what Mr. Burgess told me, that that was the practice which had prevailed for two or three years before, but I cannot say that he said so.

On section 2.

THE MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. When this Bill was being introduced, I said that this section would be struck out. It is for the purpose of repealing subsection 2 of section 14, which was a validating clause, and I thought at the time that to repeal the validating clause would probably affect the validity of the ordinances which were validated by it; but on giving the matter more careful attention, I am satisfied that there is no danger of that and therefore the clause shall stand.

On section 3.

THE MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. With regard to my hon. friend's position as to a perambulating court, it is true that that clause was introduced last year and I withdrew it at my hon. friend's request, being always desirous of meeting his suggestions. When I introduced this Bill, I said that this change had been recommended by the judges of the North-west Territories. I was wrong in that. I have examined the correspondence, and I find that it was introduced at the request of Mr. Haultain, the Premier of the North-west Territories. While there may be a great deal in what my hon. friend from Assiniboia says regarding the undesirability of having a perambulating court, yet it seemed to me that in reality the local government of the Territories are the proper parties to decide where and under what circumstances the court shall sit. The facts as stated to me by Mr. Haultain, are as follows, and I might suggest that Mr. Haultain can have no possible purpose to serve except that of the public interest. Residing as he does at Regina, his local feelings, if he has any, would naturally incline him to the idea that the court should not move from Regina, but the fact that he has pressed the matter on my attention twice and on the last occasion urged very strongly that this clause should be introduced, indicates that the public convenience there would be served very much by the passage of this legislation. As he stated the case to me, the litigation which the court has to deal with comes very largely from the district of Calgary. The appeals which are entered for hearing before the full court are taken largely from the district of Calgary. Mr. Haultain says that it has happened and does happen that the business of the court sitting at Regina comes, at certain sittings, almost entirely from Calgary, and the lawyers have to come down there at considerable expense, and in his judgment public convenience would be better served by permitting the court occasionally to hold sittings at Calgary. I do not fancy that there is any suggestion that it should go to any other place than Calgary, which, next to Regina, is the leading place in the Territories, and I can see no harm in permitting the Government of the Territories, who are responsible to the people of the Territories and know very much better than we can possibly, what the public convenience requires, to exercise the responsibility of deciding as to whether the court should move to any other town for the purpose of holding sittings or not. In every province, the provincial authorities decide where the courts shall sit, and practically we are, in a modified way, giving the Government of the Territories the power to decide as to the method in which the local convenience of the people will best be served. I do not consider myself possessed of sufficient local knowledge to express a very strong opinion, and I put my advocacy of the clause entirely upon the ground that the local government are the best qualified persons to decide as to whether this power shall be exercised or not. In any case it is not an innovation of a serious character and cannot possibly do anybody any harm. I have no doubt that it may possibly, if used to any considerable extent, conflict with the desire of the judge who happens to sit at Regina, but it will not be likely to conflict with the desire of any of the other judges, because they are all resident district judges and have to travel to the full court in any case.

Mr. DAVIN. Of course I attach the greatest possible weight to what my friend Mr. Hautain urges on the Minister. He is the head of the local government, and of course is in touch with the people, and I have the greatest possible respect for what he says. Nevertheless if I were in the assembly with him, I would differ with him on this point. I do not think it is in the interest of any parties that the change should be made. However, I am not going, when the head of the local executive urges this on the Minister, to fight it here in committee. But I express my opinion and that remains unchanged. The one point that I made is a very serious one. If the court is sitting in banc at one place, the Government could have a first-rate library there; whereas the Government cannot afford to have a good library at Calgary, another at Moosomin, another at Moose Jaw, and another at Edmonton.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. As a matter of fact I think they are as well equipped at Calgary as they are at Regina, perhaps better.

Mr. DAVIN. I doubt that. But I know the Executive take an interest in having this clause, and if they do, I shall certainly not fight it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Can the hon. Minister say what additional amount will be required for travelling expenses? The present grant for travelling expenses is $3,000.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It will be so trifling that I can hardly make an estimate. The district judges now have to travel to the place where the court sits in banc. It will simply mean that when the court sits in Calgary the judges will have to travel there instead of to Regina, and so on.

On section 4,

Mr. DAVIN. Will the Minister please explain the object of this section?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is to remove the disqualification which now prevents an employee of the Dominion Government from sitting in the legislative assembly of the Territories. This has also been introduced at the request of the Territorial Government. They say, and I can perfectly understand it from my experience in the west, that the difficulty of legislation there arises from the difficulty of getting first-class men to contest the different ridings for the assembly and spend the necessary time to attend to legislation. As the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin), of course, knows, there can be no party question in this as affecting the Territories, because they have no party government there. Men have been shut out of the assembly because they were holders of some petty office under the Dominion Government, for instance, a postmastership which yields, perhaps, $25 or $30 a year. I can see no reason in the world why a man who happens to hold an office under the Dominion Government should not represent the district in the assembly, if the assembly wants him to. Of course, if the assembly disqualifies a man on the ground that he holds an office under the Dominion Government, we have no objection to that, but I doubt if we ought to disqualify him. Under this section, the assembly will have it in their own hands. If they desire to disqualify a holder of an office under the Dominion Government from sitting in the assembly, they can do so; but he would not be disqualified by Dominion legislation.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That raises the very important question how far this Government ought to go.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I mentioned before that there might be a difference of opinion.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The question is how far the Government should go in permitting its own officers to enter legislatures of the different provinces. If you permit it in the Territories, it will be somewhat difficult to refuse similar privileges in the other provinces. And yet it seems to me a business that would tend to affect the proper discharge of the duties of these officers. We have legislation now on our Statute-book which renders it impossible, under certain circumstances, for officers of the Dominion Government having a certain salary to do any other work, the object being to keep their whole time for the service of the Government. I do not know whether the Minister of the Interior is able to say at the present time what the policy of the Government would be with regard to giving permission to their employees to enter the political field in any of the territories or provinces. Of course, that policy could be adopted irrespective of this clause.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There can be no doubt that salaried officers performing important duties could not be permitted, in justice to the Government, to devote their time to politics. The cases it is desired to cover are the cases of persons who hold offices for which they get very small remuneration, which could not, under any circumstances, give a man a living. And, of course, so far as the Government is concerned it would not permit an officer who held a salaried office which was supposed to afford him a livelihood to enter upon the discharge of legislative duties. Having that view, I do not think any serious difficulty could arise, because the Government would carry that view out. I do not feel very strongly wedded to the clause myself, and if my hon. friends on the other side object to it, I shall not insist upon it.

Mr. DAVIN. If it is to meet the case of postmasters only, they could be specified. But, I may say to the hon. Minister that in such cases they generally transfer the offices. Where a postmaster is elected to the assembly, he transfers the office to his sister or daughter.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is the way they have in the Territories.

Mr. DAVIN. Yes, that is a way they have. I think it would be better to specify the officers. For instance, it would be convenient to have the agent of the Dominion lands a member of the assembly. Take the case of Mr. Pearce, who was resident in Calgary—I do not know whether he is still resident there—he is an important officer and it would be undesirable that he should be a member of the assembly. We pay him $3,000 a year, I think, and he is a good officer.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The present state of affairs has not caused any serious difficulty heretofore, and I presume the people in the Territories can get along for another year while we have time to consider the matter. I move that the clause be struck out.

Section struck out.

Bill, as amended, reported.

LAND TITLES ACT, 1894.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 132) further to amend the Land Titles Act, 1894.

Mr. DAVIN. This is a very important matter, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) while introducing it did not fully explain the changes. I think he ought to tell the House what he proposes.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I did not explain the Bill on second reading. I said that it would be better, as it was a complicated Bill, to explain it in Committee of the Whole.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and the House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 2,

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The clause which this section amends is the clause which defines the word "instrument," and the words "or affecting" are inserted after the words "relating to." The object is to widen the interpretation of the word "instrument." It has been suggested and contended that the words "relating to" require local description in order to make them applicable. So, unless the instrument has local descriptions, it would not come within the definition of an instrument. So, the words "or affecting" are put in for the purpose of covering such instruments as caveats, executions and satisfactions of judgment.

On section 4,

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This is the old clause:

The registrar shall not receive or enter in the day-book any instrument except an execution against lands, caveats, mechanics' lien, transfers by a sheriff or municipal officer, or orders of a court or judge.

The words "or municipal" are left out. Then we insert "transfers on sale of lands for taxes or certificates or orders of a court or judge." The result of the amendment is that transfers on sales of lands for taxes, certificates, or orders of a court or judge, are registered without the production of a duplicate. The words "municipal officer" are struck out because they practically have no municipal officer there. It is really the officers of the school districts who perform the duties.

On section 5,

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The legislation of last session or the session before, gave the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-west Territories power to deal with the closing and alteration of road allowances. Then, the question arose as to the conveyance of land which had formed a part of the road allowance before the change took place. This is a provision to cover that.

On section 9,

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This is rendered necessary by the difficulty that arises owing to the fact that it has been held that a mortgage given by a settler was not an assignment within the meaning of the Dominion Lands Act, so that when the registrar comes to deal with an application for a certificate of title under the Real Property Act, he may find a mortgage there given by a man who had no right to give it, and yet it is of record in the office, and he has to take notice of it.

On section 10,

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The effect of sections 10, 11 and 12 taken together, is to amend the Act so as to take away the special provisions in the Act for foreclosing a mortgage or incumbrance, and to leave the mortgagee or incumbrancee a remedy with the Supreme Court of the North-west Territories, so that the practice will be uniform. This provision has been strongly recommended by the judges who find that double system of procedure is extremely inconvenient.

On section 21,

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The latter portion is not very well worded. I move to amend by inserting in line 32: "The practice and procedure for obtaining such orders and giving such security, and the practice upon which the same may be granted, shall be as nearly as may be the same as upon an application for security for costs." I wish to provide that the principles upon which the court shall act in granting security for costs, shall be the same as in ordinary cases. I do not want to change the principle, but I want to leave the court to deal with the case under this Act as in an ordinary case.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I do not think these words improve it. "Practice and procedure" are covered by a large part of the section, and apply to the whole.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My law clerk took the view that this amendment should be made. The court is given power to make an order for security for costs. Now, supposing a man makes an application that the opposite party shall give security for costs. There are certain principles on which the court acts. It does not ordinarily give such an order except on certain specified lines. If, for instance, a person against whom an order for security is applied owns real estate within the jurisdiction of the court, security will not, in some of the provinces, be demanded. There are a number of special holdings in respect to security for costs, and what I desire is that the section should make it perfectly clear that the court shall apply the same principles in this case as in cases of ordinary litigation. The hon. gentleman indicates that "practice" covers it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is the difference between practice and procedure. Procedure would be insufficient, but practice is the application of principles, and principles would thereby govern the granting of these orders. Practice seems to involve the principles of procedure.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Very likely the words "practice and procedure" would cover the point, but I do not see any harm in adding the words of the Minister of the Interior. I call his attention to the words, "may in his discretion." We know how the word discretion is used by judges, but I am not so sure as to the interpretation in a statute of this kind. It might give the judges a wider discretion than the language in the subsequent sections of the Bill would indicate.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My view is that if the words, "in his discretion" were properly interpreted, it would not make any difference. As, however, they appear to be surplusage, I move to strike them out.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 22,

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This section is for the purpose of removing doubt that arose from the fact that the local legislature deals with property and civil rights and we deal with real property as set out in the Territories Real Property Act. The local assembly has passed a Creditors' Relief Act. There are four judges on the bench, and two have decided that this does not affect claims on lands, because, they say, the Dominion has not changed the powers of the legislature in regard to such claims, and therefore the Act of the legislature is ultra vires. Two judges hold that the Act is good, and consequently there is a deadlock. There seems no reason why the legislature should not have the right to settle the question of priority.

On section 23,

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This is to permit the registration of an estate less than an estate in fee simple.

On section 24,

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This section provides that plans may be registered, not covered by the formalities of certain Acts.

Bill as amended reported.

LAND GRANTS TO NORTH-WEST MILITIA.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton) moved second reading of Bill (No. 123) to make further provision respecting grants of land to members of the militia force on active service in the North-west.

Mr. DAVIN. What class of volunteers is this intended to relieve?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Those who were entitled under the special Act to land warrants.

Mr. DAVIN. I did not know there was a single case remaining to be met.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is just to extend the time; the time ran out.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in committee, and reported.

THE INDIAN ACT.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton) moved second reading of Bill (No. 144) to amend the Indian Act.

Mr. DAVIN. The Minister of the Interior should now explain the changes which be effected in the management of the Indian Affairs in the North-west and Manitoba, and especially ought we to have an explanation of why he removed the Indian Commissioner from a central part of the North-west Territories to Winnipeg. In the North-west Territories you have practically six treaties as against two in Manitoba; you have far more Indians in the Territories than in Manitoba, and there will be by and by further Indian treaties in the Territories. In fact, I believe the Minister is contemplating entering into treaties now with bands of Indians who are yet outside and all of whom are in the North-west Territories. I cannot for the life of me understand why the Minister removed the Indian office from a central point in the Territories to Winnipeg. I could understand his deciding—although I would not have approved of it—to abolish the commissioner's office altogether and to manage the Indians direct from Ottawa, but that he should retain the office of Indian commissioner and then bring the commissioner away from the midst of the Indians, to Winnipeg, is what I cannot understand. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) knows very well the character of the Indians, and that the Indian requires to be placed in touch with the great Ho-go-man, as he calls him, the head man. Now, if the chief of the Blackfeet or the chiefs of other bands in the North-west want to come in contact with the Indian commissioner, they will have to travel all the way to Winnipeg, instead of, as they used, either go west or south or east and concentrate in a central spot in the Territories and there meet the commissioner. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) brought down some returns I asked for, but owing to the fact that the year given is the financial year and not the calendar year, the returns did not give the information I wanted. I may say to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) that his plan has not worked well, and that in his own departmental report there is evidence that the change he made has not been satisfactory. If the Minister will turn to the report of Mr. Forget, the Indian commissioner, he will find that Mr. Forget admits in that report that he cannot supply the statistics that are necessary, and he says that in certain reserves there has not been the same success as that which characterized the management of Indians in the previous years. It could not fail to be otherwise, because in order to effect a small saving, and also in order, I fear, to confer political advantages on the heads of persons who were not obnoxious to such treatment, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) has made changes, or rather Mr. Forget has made changes at the Crooked Lake Reserve that last year resulted in having no crops, and Mr. Forget himself admits that the cattle have decreased in number. I am told that there is a very uneasy feeling among the Indians of the North-west Territories, and I point out to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) that it is not in one year that the fruits of his policy will be seen, but a year from now or two years from now, after it has been seen what the effect on the Indian is of not being subjected to careful surveillance, as has been the case in the past. I say, that on the face of the departmental report of the hon. Minister, things are not satisfactory. But even suppose we had not that evidence, we should still be face to face with the anomaly, that in the matter of the management of Indian affairs in the west, the Minister brings the head man, the man controlling the Indians from being in their midst to being at the edge as it were of the whole Indian population. I think we ought to have from the Minister an explanation of the changes he made.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). I have not under my hand the detailed statement of the changes in the administration of Indian affairs in the Territories. That I regret, but I will have no objection when the Indian estimates are before the House, or at any other convenient time to discuss the matter. So far as the removal of the Indian commissioner's office from Regina to Winnipeg is concerned, I may say that that was done solely because the Indian commissioner said he could do his work better from that point. I can imagine no better reason than that.

Mr. DAVIN. Do I understand my hon. friend (Mr. Sifton) to say that Mr. Forget said and reported he could do his work better from Winnipeg?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. DAVIN. I have been informed that what he reported to the Minister was that he could do his work better by coming down to Ottawa.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is not correct; at least I have not the slightest knowledge of any such report. Whether Mr. Forget suggested that he should come to Ottawa or not I cannot say, but it is possible that in the voluminous correspondence there might be some such suggestion that would escape me. Mr. Forget never suggested as far as I am aware that the work of the office of the Indian commissioner could be better discharged from Ottawa than Regina, but he did specifically recommend that he should be placed at Winnipeg, on the ground that his work could be more advantageously and conveniently and effectively be done from Winnipeg than from any other point. The fact is, that while at Regina he would be nearer to certain tribes of Indians, he would not be nearer on the average to the Indians under his charge. In this matter we should speak from the standpoint of railway communication rather than actual distance, and in that sense Winnipeg is the most central point from which to reach all the Indians under the commissioner's charge. It seems to me that the commissioner's statement, that he could do his work more conveniently from Winnipeg is well-founded, and it is natural that such should be the case. It did not so seem to me when he made the recommendation, and I accepted his suggestion, believing it would increase the efficiency of the work, and I am inclined to think it has. The particular changes to which the hon. gentleman refers, the reorganization of the service in the North-west Territories, did not take effect until too late to have any effect on the crops for the year, so that I do not think my hon. friend's opinion on that point can be considered conclusive. As to the loss of cattle, I refuse to be held responsible for a loss which took place on one of the reserves, which has been referred to before in this House. It took place upon a reserve, owing to the lack of foresight of a gentleman appointed by the late Government and not by mine, and I could not be held responsible in any way except for keeping him in place rather than dismissing him.

Mr. DAVIN. If the hon. gentleman will allow me, I will read what Mr. Forget says :

On the whole the past season has not been favourable as that of the preceding year. The crops, for some unexplainable reason, have been lower, and the condition of the stock generally for beef purposes has not been quite so good. Good prices, however, have been the rule.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. What year is that report for ?

Mr. DAVIN. For the year ending 30th June, 1897.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is when the change came into effect. The reorganization took effect just at that time, so it could not have caused the loss.

Mr. DAVIN. It took effect, I think, some time before.

Motion agreed to. Bill read the second time, and the House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I explained this section when introducing the Bill. Section 33 is that section of the Indian Act which provides for the imposition of statute labour or road work ordered upon an Indian reserve. It provides that the duty of performing this labour may be imposed upon the Indians on a reserve engaged in the pursuit of agriculture as their principal means of support. The amendment will strike out the words limiting the imposition of this duty on those Indians who are engaged in agriculture, so that all the

Mr. SIFTON.

Indians on a reserve may be rendered liable for the performance of their duty.

On section 2,

Mr. DAVIN. Would the hon. gentleman explain how this will work ? I understand it to prevent any Indian applying to have a lease made. The whole band will have to consent to the lease.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is a specific form in which the lease is given. It is given by a council meeting. The only effect of this amendment is to add to the old law and allow the Superintendent General to dispose to the best advantage, in the interests of the Indians, the wild grass or dead timber. If an application is made to him to purchase the dead timber on a survey, he may sell it, for the benefit of the Indians of course, but he need not get the consent of the council. I want to avoid going through the formality of getting the authority of the Indian council to sell dead timber or wild hay on a reserve.

On section 6.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If the hon. gentleman will look at the fifteenth line on the third page of the Bill, in section 6, he will see that the effect of this is to re-enact the old section and re-insert therein the words commencing in line 15, as follows :

For surveys, for compensation to Indians, for improvements, for any interests they have in land taken from them.

The effect, therefore, is that the Governor in Council may, subject to the general provisions of the Act, make use of the Indian funds which belong to the band for these purposes in addition to the others mentioned in that section. For instance, at present the law is just the same, except that we have not the power to use the savings of the band for surveys or compensating the Indians for lands taken from them. We may use the funds at present for the management of the reserve, and for the construction or repairs of roads, bridges, ditches, waterworks and so on, but we cannot authorize the expenditure for surveys. Sometimes the survey of a reserve is most necessary, and it has happened in one or two cases that a few Indians have obstructed the passage of the necessary resolution, in order to prevent surveys, without which a considerable number of the Indians on a reserve could not get on satisfactorily. For that reason it was deemed desirable that the Government should have power, in a particular case in the interests of the band, to expend what may be necessary. It does not affect any reserves except those in the older portions of Canada.

Mr. DAVIN. Was Mr. Pontin paid out of the moneys of the Indians ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Dealing with Indians funds—some of the hands in the older portions have had funds to their credit.

On section 9,

Mr. DAVIN. This is very important, because it makes a change in what might be called the constitution under which the chiefs work.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. At present they have one chief for each thirty, and we want to make two for each 200. The number is altogether too large.

Bill reported.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

GREAT NORTH-WEST CENTRAL RAILWAY.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Before any other Order is taken up, Mr. Speaker, might I ask permission to have the second reading of Bill (No. 141)—from the Senate—respecting the Great North-west Railway Company proceeded with. There was a misunderstanding. I asked that it should stand over; but I think that every purpose will be served if the second reading is taken, so that the Bill may go to the Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines. Possibly, there might not be another opportunity. If there be no objection, I should like this to be taken up.

Mr. McISAAC moved second reading of Bill (No. 141)—from the Senate—respecting the Great North-west Railway Company.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and referred to Committee on Railways, &c.

MILITIA ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 140) further to amend the Militia Act, was read the second time, and the House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. DAVIN. What is this allowance? Do I understand an additional sum of $2,000 as an allowance to be paid to him?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA. Yes.

Mr. DAVIN. What is that for?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA. The resolution upon which this Bill was based was carried in the House after a full discussion. I suppose my hon. friend (Mr. Davin) was not in the House at the time. The attention of this Government was called by the Imperial Government to the fact that the General commanding the militia in this country is paid a very much smaller salary than in any of the other colonies although his duties are considerably more important, as he has a larger number of men under him. The Militia Act, of which this is an amendment, provides that the Major General Commanding shall be paid a salary at the rate of $4,000 per annum in full of all pay and allowances. That portion of clause 37 is changed by this Bill to read "And shall be paid a salary at the rate of $4,000 per annum, and in addition thereto, and, in lieu of allowances, such sum, not exceeding $2,000 per annum, as is determined by the Governor in Council."

Mr. DAVIN. Of course, then, this sum is in addition to his pay.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA. Yes.

Bill reported, and read the third time, and passed.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 145) further to amend the Railway Act, was read the second time, considered in committee, and reported.

THE GENERAL INSPECTION ACT.

Bill (No. 128) further to amend the General Inspection Act, was read the second time, and the House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The object of the first clause of this Bill is to institute compulsory inspection in the matter of raw hides, potash and pearl ash; and I may say here that my intention is not to press the adoption of that part of the Bill. I felt justified in introducing it from the number of petitions received from the boards of trade of all our principal towns as well as from associations and corporations; but since the Bill has been introduced I find that it has given rise to very serious opposition on the part of dealers in raw hides and of butchers. I think that at this late stage of the session, especially as it appears to me evident that the public may, to a certain extent, have been taken by surprise and did not expect that this year we would re-establish compulsory inspection, I will not ask the committee to adopt that clause, but will beg leave to strike out of the Bill all those parts that relate to compulsory inspection. At the same time the public will be warned that another year, if I am spared and it is my privilege to preside over this department, it is my intention to bring this measure up again because I think there are strong reasons in its favour.

Motion agreed to.

On section 2,

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. We have in every large city, and in some smaller ones, official inspectors, but as inspection is not now compulsory, certain individuals assume the privilege of inspecting, especially in case of fish, and take it upon themselves to mark the quality as first, second, third, and so forth, to the great detriment of honest traders, and of those who suppose, when they see those marks, that they are official marks upon which they can rely. In order to prevent that, I am asking the committee to allow me to devise means by which every certificate of inspection, as well as every mark and every stamp of inspection, shall bear such an official character as can be given to it, by the presence of a crown and the initials of the Queen, for instance, and there is a penalty provided for imitating those marks. I have become convinced that, until we can restore compulsory inspection, there must be some official marks to enlighten the public so that they may know that an article has really been inspected by an official inspector. When it is remembered that the official inspectors are only appointed after having passed an examination before the board of examiners qualified in the different branches of trade, to which the examination is applied, one can see that there is a real value to be attached to their inspection. The Bill had provided for a penalty of $1,000.

Mr. DAVIN. That is too large.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I agree it is far too large, and I propose, in the last line but one, to strike out the words to the end of the clause, and to substitute the following words: "The penalty provided for by section 21 of said Act for each such offence." That penalty is $40, which I think is sufficient.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). No doubt the object which the hon. gentleman desires to attain by the last portion of this section, is a very worthy one, but I would venture to suggest to him that it might not answer the purpose for which it is intended. The object, so far as I understand, is to prevent people from being misled by marks which purport to be official marks. The last clause of this Bill only provides a penalty in case particular marks, that is to say, the official marks, are counterfeited; but it would be quite possible for persons to put on marks not being official marks, but being of such a character as to mislead. If packed in barrels and sent to foreign countries with marks of that character, the same injurious results might follow as prevail at the present time. I suggest, therefore, that the scope of the latter part of the section should be widened, if the hon. gentleman desires to remove any evil.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. If exporters really want to have inspection marks of any value, this result can only be attained by adopting a set of official marks with the Crown and "V. R." as indicating that the goods have been inspected by official authority. When exporters and dealers are informed that all goods officially inspected must bear the marks of the Crown and the initials of Her Majesty, that will in a large degree prevent promiscuous inspection which every exporter considers he is entitled to carry on. It is very difficult to pass a law prohibiting a manufacturer from marking his goods No. 1, 2 or 3 on the barrel or package. But I want intelligent people, especially those in the trade, to learn what the official marks are, and then they will understand whether the goods have been officially inspected or not, and if the packages are not stamped with the Crown and V. R., as required under the Bill, people will soon learn that the goods have not been inspected by the official inspectors.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The question of compulsory examination is one that has evidently received very careful attention from the Minister of Inland Revenue. I am very glad he has taken the position of postponing compulsory inspection, at all events until next year. He will require very full and reliable information before he asks Parliament to deal with this subject in that manner, although he may prove correct in coming to the conclusion that compulsory inspection is desirable. I have had some experience on this subject. During my administration of that department we had to change the law. We had to change the inspection on some articles from compulsory to voluntary. We found that the system worked best with voluntary inspection. Where we adopted compulsory inspection and arranged to pay fees for such inspection, we found the inspector in many cases looked upon his office as a revenue-producing office, and he was in many cases careless as regards the inspection he made, and was most interested in collecting the fees. The result was that it was a tax on the public for which they received no benefit. There was really no bona fide inspection. The view then taken by the department was that if the inspection were made voluntary and proper machinery were supplied for carrying it out, it would be to the interest of the inspector to make a satisfactory inspection and show that it was of some value to the trade. The hon. gentleman in providing for special marks has taken a step in the right direction; and I think the law will work well in that respect. When the public know that an official inspection has been made, by seeing certain marks on the barrel, this inspection will give certain character and value to the goods, not only in this country but in foreign countries to which they may be exported, and the public will be glad to avail themselves of it. There is a good deal of force in the remarks made by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden). I do not wish to press the point. The hon. Minister has stated that care will be taken to educate the people as to the marks that will designate an official inspection. That is no doubt true here, but the exporters of fish to other countries may take longer to learn that an inferior article may go out branded No. 1, and thereby injury may be done to our trade in foreign countries. It was under these circumstances that the member for Halifax suggested that the clause should be made a little wider in its scope.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. That, I am afraid, will be tantamount to compulsory inspection. If we say that merchandise shall not be exported unless it bears certain marks of inspection, that is practically establishing compulsory inspection, which the ex-Minister of Inland Revenue found so objectionable. I think this is the best measure we can adopt at present.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My remarks were not made so much with respect to placing signs Nos 1, 2 and 3 on packages as with regard to the easy manner in which the law could be evaded. Probably if "Canadian inspection" without the "V. R." were placed on a barrel, or the "V. R." without "Canadian inspection" no conviction could be obtained. I, therefore, suggested that the clause should be amended so as to make it wider and afford the protection desired.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. We expect that all merchants engaged in the trade will look at the marks, and will soon learn to distinguish those which are official. I confess it there are many difficulties surrounding the question, but it is admitted on all sides, I believe, that this is a step in the right direction.

On section 3,

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I move that this section be struck out, as it refers to compulsory inspection. I may be accused of taking people by surprise if I press it, and I do not think it would be quite fair to go on with it at the present stage of the session. There is no doubt that the inspection of potash and pearl ash is one of those scientific operations which can only be carried on satisfactorily by persons with some knowledge of chemistry. For instance, the first quality must contain 75 per cent of pure alkali, and the second quality 55 per cent, and so forth, and it would be very difficult for an inexperienced person to calculate the exact amount of alkali contained in it.

Section 3 withdrawn.

On section 4,

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The first line of section 21 of the general inspection law says that every person who "with fraudulent intent" does a number of things therein enumerated as forbidden shall be subject to a penalty. I move to strike out the words "with fraudulent intent," because it would appear that in every one of these forbidden Acts there is necessarily a fraudulent intention, but it is necessary, if we are to protect the revenue, that we should not be compelled to prove it. It is very difficult to protect the revenue and to protect the public, and these difficulties are greatly increased by leaving in the words "fraudulent intent."

Mr. DAVIN. That is calculated to work harshly in regard to persons who might be perfectly innocent. A child might obliterate one of these inspection marks, or a servant girl might use a package without obliterating the inspection mark, and so be subject to this penalty.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. There is certainly something in that suggestion, but unless in the case of a child any person who would do any one of those acts forbidden by the statute would undoubtedly do it fraudulently.

Mr. DAVIN. If you leave out the words "with a fraudulent intention" section (d) would read, that every person who uses for any purpose any old package bearing inspection marks would incur a penalty for $40. The thing seems ridiculous.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. It is a fraud that is perpetrated continually in the tobacco trade.

Mr. DAVIN. Yes, when it is a fraud.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. They take an inspected package and put things in it when they are not inspected, and if we are to protect the revenue such an amendment as this would help us.

Mr. DAVIN. You cannot make a crime out of a perfectly innocent act. There must be a fraudulent intent.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. If there is any very strong reason to the contrary I would not press it, but I ask my hon. friend (Mr. Davin) to remember the great difficulty we have to contend with. In the case of illicit distillation we would never be able to convict if we had to enter into the intention of the party. It is enough in that case to find the illicit still.

Mr. DAVIN. The onus is on the accused to prove that he did not do it fraudulently, and not on the Government.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. If we find a still in a house or a shed the persons who own the place will tell the officers that they do not know what use it was for, and then when they are told that its possession exposes them to a penalty, they will say that some enemy of theirs placed it there. In the eastern townships and along the boundary line there are a great many people who call themselves pedlars and who sell American tobacco, but if we had to prove that they smuggled that tobacco we would often find it hard to obtain a conviction. I do not consider I am exposing innocent persons to punishment, but it certainly seems that every one of those acts prohibited by clause 21 is of such a fraudulent nature that the Crown should not be compelled to prove that there was an intention to commit a fraud.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The last observations of the hon. Minister seem to show that this clause is most dangerous. He says that the mere fact that they do it is evidence of fraudulent intent, but he does not wish to prove the fraudulent intent in a court of law.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. No.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It does seem to me that this is a most dangerous provision. It would be easy for the department to obtain a conviction if the hon. gentleman's clause were adopted, but that is a very dangerous reason for adopting this kind of legislation. It puts the public in a position that I do not think they occupy in any other country in connection with such legislation. The law has hitherto made the Crown prove the fraudulent intent, and it seems to me that that is the line on which all such legislation proceeds in any civilized country. The hon. gentleman speaks of pedlars. He wants to get after some pedlars. In the case of Queen vs. Dart in Nova Scotia, the result of the executive action in that case was to put pedlars in a terrible position. A pedlar was shot and killed, and the man convicted of killing him was allowed to go at large by the exercise of the clemency of the Crown, and I believe that the only two other pedlars who happened to be abroad in the county took the first train and left it, if not the province. Now, the hon. gentleman intends to punish pedlars who happen to have done a certain act, even when he is unable to prove fraudulent intent and even if there be no fraudulent intent.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. How can there be no fraudulent intent? How can that be done without fraudulent intent?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. If that be the case, then there is no need to strike out those words. If the mere doing of the thing is evidence of fraudulent intent, then that is all the proof that the hon. gentleman will require, and he need not strike out these words.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If the hon. gentleman will look at clause "d," he will see that if a farmer takes hold of an old flour barrel and uses it for the purpose of taking potatoes to market, he will be liable to a penalty of $20, under the Act, if those words be struck out. The hon. gentleman is doing away with the necessity of any fraudulent intent, and not simply with the necessity of proving it. It might be desirable to throw the burden of proof on the defendant by some suitable clause, but it would never do to take away the necessity for the existence of the fraudulent intent, and that is what the amendment will do.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. It will be seen that when the Bill was introduced, this did not form part of it, and since my hon. friends on the other side, with their legal knowledge, say that the mere fact is evidence of fraudulent intent, and that no other proof would be required, I would ask that this clause be struck out. I would move therefore to strike out these words.

Bill reported, and read the third time, and passed.

SUPPLY.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Experimental Farm..... $75,000

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the hon. gentleman explain any change?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). I am very glad indeed to give any explanation hon. gentlemen opposite would like in regard to this item. It is one which not infrequently involves some discussion in the House and one which certainly is of the greatest interest to the country. It is one also to which I have myself given a good deal of attention, both before and since coming into office, and yet I must frankly say that I have not yet been able to do all that I hoped with regard to these farms. The work that was going on has been of the utmost value to the country, and I felt that there were other things in my department which needed my own personal attention more urgently perhaps than this work, and therefore I allowed it to continue on pretty much the same lines on which it had proceeded, with one or two exceptions.

I cannot say that there is any definite change in policy, except as regards the Napan farm. I visited that farm soon after I came into office, and found a condition of affairs there with which I was not at all satisfied and which I did not consider could be continued to the advantage of the maritime provinces. It seemed to me there was abundant opportunity to establish a good dairy farm there. As the hon. ex-Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Montague) knows, there is at Nappan a dairy station as well as a farm. We are running a creamery there under Prof. Robertson as dairy commissioner. The stock on the farm was not dairy stock. It was a mixed lot of animals, and some of them had been detained beyond their usefulness and service. I therefore directed that a large number should be immediately disposed of, and I purchased a considerable number of first-class animals, and sent them down to replace the other stock. Besides, I have given directions that on that farm the chief attention and work of the farm should be devoted to dairying. With the little acquaintance I have had with the maritime provinces, especially with the provinces of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, which I know a little better than I know the province of New Brunswick, I have been convinced that there is opportunity for great dairy development there. I found that in these provinces the attention of the people was being turned to stock and stock-keeping. While not wishing in any way to hamper the development of beef-raising and making in these provinces, I perceived, as I thought, that stock-raising had been, perhaps, a little more advanced than the dairying had been, and I thought that if it was possible to establish a good model farm at Nappan, it would perhaps be the best thing that could be done for the farmers of the maritime provinces. That has been going on, and, I trust, under the management of Mr. Robertson, whom I sent down to take charge of the farm, it will be carried on successfully. Mr. Robertson having been for years a well known expert in dairying and keeping dairy stock. As regards the farms in the west, I may say that there is practically no change. I have not, since coming into office, been able to visit the western farms. It was my good fortune, during last Parliament, when I was not in the House, to make a trip to the west, and I took occasion, being interested in these matters, to visit these farms. But since coming into office, I have not found time to make a trip to the west. Following conversations I have had with the managers of the farms, some slight changes have been made, but the work has been going on largely on the lines on which it was previously carried on.

At the Central Experimental Farm here, there are one or two things to which I had better allude. First, I would speak of the fact that last autumn tuberculosis was found in the herd at the farm. I regret to be obliged to state this fact. It was an unfortunate fact, but I thought that, having discovered it, it was best to face it, and take steps to rid the farm of that dread disease. We tested the animals there, and disposed immediately of those which were found diseased, a large number, I regret to say. I also had the animals at the other farms tested, and found at Nappan no diseased animals, and, in the western farms, only two or three at each farm. Here there were no less than twenty-six diseased animals out of a total of fifty-five head, speaking from memory. Of course this immediately reduced the stock upon the farm, and up to the present I have not altogether replaced that stock. I had to buy a few animals, but not a very large number, up to the present time. I had the barns and stables thoroughly cleansed and disinfected, in such a way as, I believe, to prevent the building retaining any of the germs of the disease. The only other thing that it is necessary for me to detail at this stage is the fact that the horticulturist resigned his position, and I took occasion to promote Mr. William Macoun, who has been in charge of the forestry and of the arboretum there, to the position. I have not added to the staff, but in view of the vacancy thus created, I propose, as soon as I can find a suitable man, to appoint an agriculturist at the farm, who will take especial charge of the farm, the treatment of the soil and the stock, and make that an especial feature, and relieve Prof. Saunders, the director general of the farm, of some of the work he has had to do personally in that regard. I am satisfied that this will be an advantage to the farm, and I have the full concurrence and sympathy of Prof. Saunders himself in this action. I may say that, in consequence of the condition of the stock at Nappan, and the loss of stock here, I shall have a small amount in the Supplementary Estimates of this year for the purchase of stock. Otherwise the expenditure at the experimental farm has been kept within the bounds, and I trust that the work upon it has been carried on in as thoroughly an efficient manner as it has been in the past. Of course, if there are further questions that any hon. gentleman desires to ask me, I shall be only too glad to explain anything further in connection with the work.

Mr. MONTAGUE. In view of what the hon. Minister has said concerning the appointment of an agriculturist, I should like to ask whether he has yet considered seriously the appointment of a bee expert. I have previously called the attention of the hon. gentleman to what I regard as the importance of that subject. There can be no doubt, I think, of the value of sending out literature with regard to bee-keeping through the sections of the country which are adapted to this industry, as almost all our provinces are. I quite understand that the previous Government did establish an apiary branch there, but, I am sorry to say, they did it in a somewhat half-hearted fashion. They placed it in charge of Prof. Fletcher—

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Mr. Fixter has it in charge.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is the farm foreman, but I think it is under the oversight of Prof. Fletcher; at least, it was; I cannot say how it is at the present time. Suppose we were to take the statement of the hon. Minister that this branch is in charge of the farm foreman. Now, I do not think that that is paying as much attention to bee-keeping as might be done with advantage to the Canadian Experimental Farm. I know that this is a matter which the bee-keepers all through the country are exceedingly anxious about. I may say that the hon. Minister (Mr. Fisher) will remember that this has been called to his attention a number of times, not only in the press representing that branch of agriculture, but by bee-keepers all over the country. I think that last year the hon. gentleman gave us somewhat of a promise, or shadow of a promise, that he would do something in this direction, and I hope that this time he will be able to give us the promise that something definite will be done. The Government are fairly liberal, I think, in dealing with the public service generally and with public money, and I do not think they should refuse to accede to the wishes of the people representing an important, even though relatively small, branch of agriculture, which has its representatives in almost every province of the Dominion, and which contributes a great deal to the income of the farmers of Canada. I cannot speak too strongly upon that point, because I know how thoroughly alive the bee-keepers are to the importance of having some attention paid to their industry, so as to secure for them the benefit of experiments, as has been done in dairying and other branches of agriculture that have received attention at the farm.

As to the questions of policy, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher), it will please the hon. gentlemen on this side of the House to know, is pursuing the same policy as the previous Government. He has not found time to disturb it. That being the case, I fancy there is very little for us to criticise in the hon. gentleman's vote or the manner in which he is carrying on the farm. I would like to ask whether he intends to have the experiment stations in various parts of the country. In another place, I believe, there was a discussion on this point, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) expressed a favourable opinion upon that work.

I must say that I differ with some gentlemen who spoke on that point, and I would support the hon. gentleman if he would ask for a vote, small in the beginning, but growing larger, for the purpose of doing experimental work in connection with the various farms in the several provinces of the Dominion. I see the Minister of Finance smiles, he always smiles when money is asked for, but he smiles with an approving smile when the Minister of Public Works asks for money. Money has been spent by the Minister of Public Works in building fences and greenhouses that might have been more wisely spent by the Minister of Agriculture in making experiments for the people who are really the wealth producers, or at least the great portion of them, in the Dominion of Canada. I think if the hon. gentleman will take up that work he will find that the farmers would take a deep interest in it, and he would be performing for almost every section of the country what he is attempting here, I believe, with very fair success in other branches. I do not see any reason, with an expenditure of 40 millions—or will it be when we hear the total, 42 millions, the Minister of Finance might be able to tell us—I do not see any reason why a few thousand could not be spared from the Estimates of the Minister of Public Works to make a few experiments for the farmers of Canada in connection with the illustration stations. I know the Minister of Finance is generous, I am sure the Minister of Public Works is generous where public works are constructed, and I would also ask him to be generous to the farmers of Canada who, notwithstanding any opinion that may be expressed as to the wisdom of this course, I believe are fully in accord with the action of the past Government and of the present Government in making experiments upon as wide a scale as possible for the advancement of agriculture. There are other points to which the hon. gentleman has referred which I regret equally with him, particularly the disease which broke out among the herds at the Central Experimental Farm. I am glad that he found no disease in the eastern provinces; but I hope that will not be taken as an excuse, as some hon. gentlemen has suggested, for moving the whole experimental farm to the eastern provinces. May I ask the Minister of Agriculture to give me an answer upon these two points: As to the apiary, and as to the illustration stations. Then I may ask him as to how many animals he purchased for the farm at Nappan?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In answer to the hon. gentleman, first, about an apiarist at the Experimental Farm, I may say frankly that I have not yet reached the point where I feel that I can make such an appointment. As the hon. gentleman knows, there is a fixed vote for carrying on the Experimental Farm, and before I am able to add any particular expenditures such as he has alluded to, I should have to provide for cutting off something else.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Better increase the vote.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The vote is the same as it has been. I hope in the course of this season to be able to cut off a considerable amount of expenditure on various items at all the five farms, and if so, I may then consider the question of the appointment of an apiarist, or of doing something else to extend experimental work in connection with these. But I do not like to charge the farms with that expenditure until I can see my way clear to doing it in some such way as I have suggested. As regards the proposition of what Professor Robertson and myself have called illustration stations, and of experimental stations in different parts of the country, I may say that this question was brought up in the Committee of Agriculture a short time ago, but in a tentative way, for the purpose of sounding the opinion of the members. I am satisfied in my own mind, that a good deal of good might be accomplished by some such work. But I may say frankly that the scheme has not yet been proposed or worked out to that point where it can be put into immediate practice, and I have not at the present moment come to a conclusion as to whether I can do anything during the next season. The hon. gentleman will see that such a work as this could not be taken out of the vote for experimental farms, in fact it was not the intention that it should be done entirely in connection with the experimental farms, but rather under the control and management of the dairy commissioner who has done such able work in what might be called the illustration stations in dairying all over the country. In fact the idea grew out of the success of Professor Robertson in illustrating the best dairy methods for the people in the different provinces of the Dominion. We hope, if this work is undertaken, that, commencing in a comparatively small way, it will grow, not as a charge upon the revenue of the country, but in efficiency and advantage similar to the splendid dairy work that Professor Robertson has inaugurated in days gone by. The hon. gentleman has asked me for some details about the purchase of animals for the Nappan farm. The prices paid do not come into the report of this year, the purchases were made late in the fall. I can say, however, speaking from memory, that we sent down to the Nappan farm some 20 cows, bought chiefly in the neighbourhood of Huntingdon, in the province of Quebec. Amongst them, however, were two thoroughbred Guernsey cows bought in the United States, along with a thoroughbred Guernsey bull and one or two Ayrshires bought in Canada, all thoroughbreds. The rest of them were grade animals sent down from this part of Canada. We also bought two or three Guernsey cattle for the central farm, one or two of which are to be sent to the west this spring, either to Brandon or Indian Head. The total number purchased is about 25 head. The prices paid for the grade cattle were in the neighbourhood of $50 to $55. The cows were cows coming in, as it is called, that is to say, going to calve or having just calved in the fall of the year. I think I may say they were good animals, and the prices paid were what I consider reasonable prices. They were purchased mostly by Mr. Robertson, the new manager of the farm at Nappan, who is considered an extra good judge of stock, one of the best judges of dairy cattle, I suppose, in the Dominion of Canada at the present day. They were purchased from different people, two of the grade cows in the neighbourhood of Ottawa, and all the rest in the neighbourhood of Huntingdon and Chateauguay. Most of them were Ayrshires, there being a large number of this breed kept in the neighbourhood, and of an excellent quality.

Mr. CLANCY. I agree with the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) that the expenditure on these experimental farms is entirely too small. Take, for instance, the Central Experimental Farm at Ottawa. I had the pleasure of visiting that only a day or two ago, and I am not making this criticism in a vein of fault finding, when I say that I think the time has come when we have completely outgrown the state of things that can be produced by the money now voted by Parliament for purposes of this kind. I think the Minister of Agriculture will agree with me that a considerably larger sum could be expended in a most useful work at the Experimental Farm. Now, in looking over it, I became persuaded, not that the money was badly spent, but that there was not enough money spent. Take, for instance, the swine; the hon. gentleman will know himself that there is not a variety, there is not the kind the farmers would expect to see there. The building is entirely too small, it is one wanting entirely in facilities for carrying on such a work as would be applicable to a city like Ottawa, and which, from its location, would do a great deal of good. I hope another year the Minister will considerably increase the vote, for I believe no money is so well spent in Canada as in the expenditure on the work being carried on at the experimental farm now. With respect to the experimental stations, I do not quite agree with the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague), that that project can be carried out. I quite sympathize with those who hold the view that work of that kind might produce good results, but I think the farmers will see, and the Minister of Agriculture himself will see the difficulty of undertaking a work of that kind with a view to reach the masses. I imagine if the grant can be increased for the central farm, so that more seed can be sent out for experimental purposes and returns obtained by the department here, more benefit will be accomplished and the mass of the people will be reached more readily. The fact is, you must have every man engage as an experimentalist in order to obtain success. You will never reach the masses until you can get each man to undertake these experiments for himself and make an intelligent return to the Department of Agriculture. A very great deal of useful work has been done by the Agriculture College at Guelph in regard to the distribution of seed. They have there what is called an experimental union. Seed is distributed, and every recipient is supposed to make a return of the results obtained during the year. It is easy to lay down a cast-iron rule with respect to the manufacture of cheese and butter, but the committee will see the difficulty of laying down any such rule with respect to farming. The rules must bend and yield to all the different conditions that obtain on a farm. It would be impossible for any intelligent farmer to conduct operations on two farms and obtain precisely the same results unless the conditions were exactly similar, which would not prevail, and these results could not be obtained by following a cast-iron rule. Experiments on one farm might be very useful, but they might not apply to an adjoining farm, owing to the conditions not being the same. But if we distributed large quantities of grain, and that is the reason why I wish a considerable increase in the expenditure, each person receiving it would become an experimentalist, and excellent results would be obtained in educating the mass of the farmers and bringing about that condition of pride and thrift which our farmers must require in order to farm successfully to-day. The time has passed when our agriculturists can follow the old style and succeed. They must adapt themselves to every new method. They must produce the highest quality of products at the least possible cost, and the margin of profit will depend on the results. I hope the hon. Minister another year will be able to ask a larger sum for distribution of grain, and will adopt measures to secure a larger number of reports. The total cost of bulletins last year, I observe, was $718, a sum which the Minister will agree with me is altogether too small. People look forward with interest to receiving these bulletins, but, as they are issued on a comparatively small scale, I am afraid they are not doing much benefit. The total expenditure on seed grain distribution was $1,700. I should like the hon. Minister to explain on what principle the seed grain was distributed from the central farm?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman is entirely in error in thinking that there were fewer bulletins issued during last year than the year before. There were more bulletins issued.

Mr. CLANCY. I was not making any comparison, but simply stating that there were too few issued.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I fully appreciate the value of the bulletins, and I have made a great effort to get out as many as possible. I think last year we sent out seven bulletins, a considerably larger number than ever before, at all events, more than have been sent out in several previous years. I value very much this method of obtaining information, and it is very important they should be sent out to the farmers, because a great many men will read a short bulletin of eight or ten pages on a certain topic, when they will not read the annual report and pick out the pages referring to their own special subject. Those reports are sent out in accordance with a mailing list. During six or seven years no revision of this list was made, but I had it thoroughly revised last year. The list now amounts to near 55,000 names, and all the publications of the experimental farm are sent to every one of these individuals as soon as they are issued. The hon. gentleman may not be aware of the fact, but in addition to these reports the Agriculture Committee of the House sometimes orders special editions of evidence for the information of farmers. They have ordered sometimes the whole farm report. I think that is not judicious; but the different officers appear before the committee and give evidence, touching lightly and pointedly on the particularly salient features of their year's work, and this evidence is taken down verbatim, and when published is sent out by the committee through members of the House.

The hon. gentleman asks how the seed grain was distributed from the central farm. I have changed the method a little this year. I investigated the matter and found a very small number of reports were sent in by those who had received the grain. This grain is sent out in three-pound bags, and a certificate is sent by the same mail, inclosing a form which the receiver of the grain has to fill up and return to the farm. In this form, details are asked as to the amount of land covered, the nature of the season, the amount of crop harvested, and general remarks as to the result. We found unfortunately that only 20 per cent of all the grain sent out was reported upon. I thought this was a very unfortunate and at the same time, a very startling fact. I, therefore, had a very careful examination made of the list of persons who had received grain. I found that grain was sent out to persons whose names appeared on the list furnished either by members of the House or by societies, and from those persons very few reports were received. In many cases, especially in the lists furnished by members of the House, the persons were not farmers or even gardeners, but were men like blacksmiths, tailors, merchants, and all sorts of people; as a matter of fact some of the members simply marked their voters' lists and asked us to send farm bulletins and seed grain to those people. I therefore instructed Professor Saunders during the past winter to send out a circular to all members of the House and of the Senate and every person who had been on the list, stating that no one would receive seed grain who did not make a personal application to show bona fides. The result is that we have sent out between 24,000 and 25,000 samples instead of 37,000 last year; but of those who made personal application most of the individuals had made reports previously, or I would prefer to say that the number includes practically all those who had made reports previously, and we cut off a large number of those who had not reported. I feel that in order that this distribution of seed grain be effective and useful and justify public expenditure, we should obtain some reports and not simply leave the matter in the hands of individuals who may happen to obtain samples of the grain. I took this method of trying to reduce the waste, and I hope and believe a considerable reduction of the waste will ensue. As a matter of fact, in consequence of the circular asking people to make personal application to us a larger number of personal applications were made this year than usual. I felt that any one who took the trouble to make a personal application after receiving a circular of that kind, would be more likely to be incited to make a report, which is really what we want. As soon as I can see a way clear of utilizing the public money to the advantage of the farmers I shall not hesitate at all in asking Parliament for such a sum as shall be needed, but until I do see my way clear, I do not think it would be quite fair for me to ask the House to vote the money. I trust that by cutting down a large number of small unnecessary expenditures here and there, perhaps in some way economizing, but in no way hurting the efficiency of the experimental farms, I may be able to extend and improve them and make them larger and better than they have been in the past. Such at any rate shall be my effort.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman will see that the seed grain must be distributed in the country, and the results cannot be accomplished in a year and must be attended with many failures before it reaches the 50 per cent which would be a very fair showing. I would suggest to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher), that he should send circulars to those who receive grain asking them for their reports. Those who are acquainted with the methods of farmers generally, know that some are careless of correspondence, and I know of no expenditure that would be more useful than the small sum required to send out circulars asking those who receive the grain for their reports. I am glad the hon. gentleman has seen the inutility of sending seed grain to persons who are not engaged in agriculture or even gardening. The moment the Minister can get the farmers to make personal application for the seed grain, and to make prompt reports to the department, a great work will be accomplished. We know that occasionally a man may be disappointed in the grain, that the conditions may have been against his success, and the probabilities are he will be discouraged from sending in any report. I hope that whatever expenditure the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) cuts down he will not cut down the expenditure on seed grain distribution and other matters connected with it, and in obtaining prompt reports from those who receive it, but that on the contrary it will be his policy to increase it.

Mr. KAULBACH. My desire is that the agricultural interests of the country may be advanced in the best possible manner, and there is no better way calculated to promote scientific farming than by showing to the people of Canada the results obtained at the Central Experimental Farm at Ottawa. I quite agree with some hon. gentlemen, that the expenditure in this direction is small and that perhaps we could accomplish greater and more beneficial results with the money at present voted, but I certainly agree that if we can obtain beneficial results we should not lessen the expenditure. When I visited the Central Experimental Farm a few days ago, the thought occurred to me that the lessons to be derived from such visits should be utilized as educators throughout the Dominion. I wish to offer some suggestions, not with a view of criticising but with a view of helping in the work. I do not think that the farm should be a mere experimental farm, but on the contrary that visitors, whether members of Parliament or any one else, should have an opportunity of seeing a model farm as well as an experimental, both as regards the character and convenience of the buildings as well as the mode of conducting the work and the keep of farm stock.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Is the hon. gentleman speaking of the farm here?

Mr. KAULBACH. I am speaking of the Central Experimental Farm at Ottawa. I do not wonder that the cattle in the barn on that farm became diseased, because during my visit, I found that the aroma from the silos was most objectionable, and the atmosphere inhaled by the cattle from day to day certainly most injurious to them. The barn itself is not so constructed as in my opinion to be of advantage to the farm. They cannot produce as much manure with cattle in a barn on the ground floor. Although the floor is cemented and all the liquids retained, still I believe that if that liquid were allowed to go into the solid manure, it would produce more beneficial results to the farm. I quite agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) in his remarks about the piggery, and I believe that improvements could be made in that direction in a variety of ways. I am not going to step aside in respect to my views with regard to the position of a farmer. I am a farmer myself, and as extensive a one as there is in the county of Lunenburg, and as agricultural matters come before me frequently. I think it only right I should make reference to them in this House. With regard to the distribution of seed grain, I have known the results to be very beneficial to persons receiving them in the county of Lunenburg. They have found the grain distributed from the Experimental Farm to result most profitably to them, and instead of repeating the old seed from year to year they have put in new varieties with good results. I believe that the art and knowledge of agriculture might be advanced very considerably if a greater number of reports of the Experimental Farm were circulated. At present the number distributed is too limited, and for the last few years I have been unable to get such numbers of these reports as I considered necessary in the interests of the country. If the vote is at present too limited, then I would suggest to the Minister of Agriculture that he should increase it so that we may spread the knowledge of agriculture as widely as we possibly can. I believe in agricultural stations in the different districts in this Dominion, say one in the smaller provinces and two in the larger provinces. The Minister referred to them as illustration stations. I believe that they would be excellent educators for the agriculturists, and they would advance the knowledge of farming more rapidly than by having this one central experimental farm alone, to which only members of Parliament and a comparative few others have access. If at these experimental stations a farmer could see with his own eye what is being done, it would be a better educator than even the distribution of books and reports. In this way the farmers of the different sections of the country, by travelling a comparatively short distance to a station would see for themselves practical farming operations carried out in the most scientific manner, and with such lessons so acquired would show good practical results on their private farms in a very short time. With views of this sort, if they could be carried out, by employing additional hands, I feel satisfied that we are doing an excellent work, and that the money so granted by the Government could not be expended in any better way.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I was very much interested in the reference to the apiary, and if the Minister of Agriculture has serious intentions of developing that line of farming, I could refer him with confidence to the Minister of Finance and the Premier of Nova Scotia, who would recommend him a man most suitable to take charge of anything of that kind in the province of Nova Scotia. I rose particularly to ask why it became necessary to dispense with the services of Mr. Forrest, who was the man in charge of the Nappan farm?

Mr. KAULBACH.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. When I need an apiarist, I shall be very glad to apply to the Minister of Finance and would be very happy if I can find one in Nova Scotia to do the work. I may say, incidentally, that we sent the other day several swarms to the farm at Nappan, where Mr. Robertson, the new man, is an expert in bee culture as well as dairying. With regard to Mr. Forrest, when I went to Nappan first, after taking office, I found the stock in a condition which did not reflect credit on the Government or the farm. I had a long talk with Mr. Forrest, and came to the deliberate conclusion that he could not carry out the work I wanted done at Nappan, and therefore requested his resignation. I need a man there who is an expert in dairying, and on whom I could depend to carry out the plans and arrangements I wish to make. I did not think Mr. Forrest could do so, and I chose a man who seemed to me eminently competent for that purpose.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Were the animals diseased?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, but they were in bad order, badly kept and badly handled.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Was Mr. Forrest called upon to make an explanation, and what was his explanation?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I could not find any explanation that would justify the condition in which the animals were. I was informed by him and the herdsman in charge of the barns, that he had been feeding the cattle a large quantity of grain in the months of June and July, when there is abundant pasture, and the cattle are out on grass, and in the fall of the year, when the grass is short, he had no grain to feed them with. A man who will do that is not fit to take charge of a farm.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Was there any investigation or was it just the hon. gentleman's own impression that induced him to dispense with Mr. Forrest's services?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There was no inquiry. I discussed the matter with Professor Robertson, and acted on my own responsibility.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Was Mr. Forrest heard at all?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I wrote to him asking for his resignation, and he wrote back that he would not resign, and I then dispensed with his services.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. He was not asked for any explanation?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think so.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I think that that was very summary treatment. Of course all I know of Mr. Forrest is the reputation he has had for many years in that county, which is a county where farming is pretty well understood. He is a man of more than ordinary intelligence and who has held very responsible positions, and even if he had not occupied in times past these responsible positions, it seems to me that even the humblest man in the service is entitled to a fair hearing or to be called on to show such cause as could be shown for the state of things which the hon. Minister says existed. There is no case that one may put that is not open to some explanation. It occurs to me, taking the Minister's own statement, which I do very frankly, that Mr. Forrest was dealt with very summarily indeed. He was asked for no explanation and given no opportunity to remove the bad impressions which the Minister had formed. I speak of this simply for this reason. Mr. Forrest has never communicated with me, directly or indirectly, and I was at a loss to know why his services were dispensed with, because I know the man. I know him to be a man of good practical ability, who has filled very important positions, parliamentary and otherwise, and who stood well with the department. He is a man who was well liked and well thought of, and whose character is above reproach. Under these circumstances, I am surprised that the hon. Minister has no other statement to make than that he formed a bad impression and summarily called upon the officer for his resignation.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have no reproach to make against Mr. Forrest's character or position or anything of that kind. I believe that these are just what the hon. member has said. I was dealing with him simply as a man in charge of a farm. I went there and examined the affairs along with Professor Saunders, and the condition was such as required certainly an explanation. I talked over it all with Mr. Forrest at the time. I spent a whole day discussing everything with him in connection with the stock and the barns and everything else. I pointed out that what I considered to be the condition of affairs, and if he had any explanation to make he had there an ample opportunity of making it. I did not act hastily but came back to Ottawa and discussed the whole situation very seriously with Professor Saunders, the director. I gave Mr. Forrest certain directions to carry out, and he carried those out as I told him. I have no fault to find with the manner in which he carried out my directions as regards the sale of the stock, but at the same time it appeared to me, on the face of it, that he was not competent to carry out the work that I wished in connection with the stock. From what he said himself and from what occurred at the time, I felt justified in asking for his resignation. In asking for it, I explained that that was the reason. He offered no explanation in his reply, but merely said that he was satisfied. He could do as well as anybody else, and declined to resign. Under these circumstances, there was nothing for me to do but to put a man in charge who could carry out the work satisfactorily. I do not wish in any way to reflect on Mr. Forrest's character or conduct in any other position he occupied. My own belief is that he was quite competent to carry on the farming which had been carried on at his own farm, but that was not the kind of farming I wish to have carried on. I am still of opinion that a change was necessary in the public interest and the interests of the farmers of the maritime provinces who may wish to visit that farm and see the operations going on.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Did any one make a complaint before the Minister went to the farm? Did he hear any dissatisfaction from any quarter?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot say that I did, except from Professor Saunders. He was not satisfied with Mr. Forrest's conduct before I took charge, and I fully discussed the matter with him. When I took office, I discussed the different branch farms with Professor Saunders, and the only farm on which he made adverse criticism was that at Nappan.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Did the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan) discuss Mr. Forrest's case before that action was taken?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Not a word. He was present when I went to the farm, but until then I never had communication of any kind with him about Mr. Forrest or the farm at Nappan. It was my own opinion entirely on which I acted, without any prompting from the member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan) whatever.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Who was put in his place?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Mr. Robert Robertson. He came from the county represented by the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Pope).

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Is he a brother of Professor Robertson?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, nor any connection of his in any way whatever. He is a young man, who was born, I think, in the county of Huntingdown, or in that neighbourhood. The first time I came in contact with him was a good many years ago, when I was acting as judge in a provincial farmers competition in the province of Quebec. I visited his farm and was struck with admiration of the way in which it was managed and the condition in which it was. Shortly afterwards he was chosen by the Quebec Government—the allies and friends of hon. gentlemen opposite—to take charge of the Quebec stock at the Chicago exhibition. He went there in charge of the Ayrshire stock of the province of Quebec and took 11 out of 14 prizes. He swept the boards with his stock. He was afterwards chosen to take charge of the Quebec model farm at Compton and managed it for a couple of years. He resigned that position to buy a farm in the neighbourhood of Compton, and was on it, when I asked him to take charge of the farm at Nappan. He is well known as an Ayrshire breeder and a capable stock man, and has been a judge and competitor at all the great fairs in the Dominion of Canada, and invariably has shown his stock in splendid order and carried off a very large portion of prizes.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Had the hon. Minister any recommendations for anybody in the province of Nova Scotia to take Mr. Forrest's place?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot say that I had.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Did the hon. gentleman make any inquiries?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, I consulted various members of the House and various members from the province of Nova Scotia, and they agreed with me that it would be well to send such a man as Mr. Robertson to take charge of the farm.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What was the objection to Mr. Blair, the assistant?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He is not a farmer, but a horticulturist.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Is he not the assistant superintendent?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, he is a horticulturist.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What salary does the new man receive?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The same salary, $1,400.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I must say that when Mr. Forrest was appointed to the position of superintendent of the Nappan Farm, he came very highly recommended. If I caught the remarks of the hon. gentleman correctly, he stated that the condition of the farm—

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Only the condition of the stock.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It rather created a prejudice in the minds of hon. gentlemen. Of course, the hon. gentleman will remember that Mr. Forrest was in charge of the farm for only a very short time, and he will see that Mr. Forrest could not be held responsible for the condition of an institution in connection with which he had been only a very short time indeed. All I can say is that he came to me very highly recommended indeed, as a very skilful farmer, and one in whom the people of Nova Scotia would have a great deal of confidence. I regret, under these circumstances, that the hon. gentleman felt it necessary to dismiss him.

Mr. TALBOT. I would ask the Minister of Agriculture whether, as his staff is now constituted at the Central Experimental Farm, the French-speaking people of the province of Quebec are able to derive much benefit from the lectures that are given throughout the country, as they would derive if some of the lecturers were fluent in the use of the French language. I am informed that in the other provinces of the Dominion, Prof. Saunders and other gentlemen of the Experimental Farm, have been in the habit of delivering lectures to the people. I am not aware that this work is being done in the province of Quebec among the French people, where, however, it would be of great utility. I would like to know if it is intended to take steps to remedy that evil.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman is misinformed in stating that this kind of work is not being carried on in the province of Quebec. As a matter of fact, Mr. J. L. McMurray has been nearly all this winter making trips in the province of Quebec and delivering lectures in various localities. He is a very practical man in connection with farm work, thoroughly understands it all, and has a gift for addressing public audiences which makes his lectures very acceptable and useful. Perhaps some hon. gentlemen in this House have heard him, certainly many of them have reported to me, in consequence of his going out at my request and under my instructions to visit their counties, that his lectures have given a great deal of satisfaction. I may also say that Mr. James Fletcher, the entomologist, is a good French scholar, and has delivered addresses in the French language at various places. There is an impression abroad that there are not many French-speaking employees on the farm. I have a list of Frenchmen on the farm, and I can assure the hon. gentleman that this impression is not a correct one. As a matter of fact, there are some five or six men connected with the central offices of the farm who are French by race and by language. There are in the barns and about the farm half a dozen more who are also French. I am now looking for an assistant chemist, and I have one or two applications, but I have decided that the new assistant must be a Frenchman. Under these circumstances, I can assure the hon. gentleman that the French language and the French people are fairly represented, and that anybody going to the farm who wishes to have explanations in French will be entirely satisfied on that head. Now, in regard to the remarks of the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach) about the barns and the piggery of the farm, while I am not at all responsible for the plan of those barns and of the piggery, I agree with him in some of the reflections that he made upon those buildings. The cattle stable is not at all what I would like. I am not, however, in a position to make radical changes that would cost a great deal of money; that barn has already cost a very large amount, and it would be a serious business to make a new barn. Some changes in the stables will be made soon, which, I trust, will to a certain extent obviate the objections which the hon. gentleman has taken in respect to ventilation and the sanitary condition of the buildings. So far as saving manure is concerned, the barn is satisfactory. The cattle are so bedded constantly by absorbents, that none of the manure is lost. We have found, after careful experiments, that when the green manure is taken immediately from the barn to the fields, it is the most valuable as a fertilizer. But I think I can say that no manure is lost there which can be saved.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will you use gypsum in the stables?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. KAULBACH. I am glad my hon. friend agrees with my views with regard to the barn and piggery on the Central Farm. Whilst I am on my feet, the hon. gentleman will permit me to supplement my remarks with a word or two further. I am anxious that the Central Experimental Farm should extend its branches, and that one of them may find its way into the province to which I belong. The Minister, I think, knows sufficiently of the geography of my county to know that it is situated about half way between Cape Sable and the Strait of Canso, very centrally placed indeed, and well adapted for a central farm. Now, I am ready to help the hon. gentleman to carry out the views I have expressed, and I think he will be willing to help us with a small expenditure there, which will be much more profitable than a great deal of the expenditures that are made throughout this Dominion. I will pledge myself to give him a good farm in my county, very centrally situated, not far from the county of Annapolis, and away from the seaboard, in one of the best farming districts of my county, where fine farms are to be found extending from the centre of the province down to the sea. I am anxious to see a thorough practical farmer brought into the county I represent; and I can pledge the hon. gentleman that I will aid him to superintend that work so far as I am able free of expense, and will give him all the ideas I have been able to gather from my own practical knowledge of farming. This offer will be open any time the hon. gentleman chooses to accept it. I want to see men brought into the county who will be educators to our farmers in all the various operations conducted on a farm, so that they may learn how to obtain the best crop from the least amount of labour; in other words, that they may learn something of the mysteries of agricultural chemistry and profit from results.

Mr. TALBOT. Is not this Mr. McMurray the hon. Minister mentioned a mere corresponding clerk on the farm, drawing a very small salary, and not a man of much experience there?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Mr. McMurray is not chief of the department. He is one of the clerks, and very competent to do the work which has been referred to.

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not think it would be fair to my hon. friend from South Huron (Mr. McMillan) who, I am sorry to say, is not in his place to-night, to have this whole item passed now. I think that one item in it should be allowed to stand until he is present and also until my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) is here. I know that both these gentlemen wish to take part in discussing this subject. It is very refreshing to hear the discussion from this side of the House to-night compared with what we used to hear two or three years ago when gentlemen opposite sat here and we upon the other side. I understood the Minister to say that the amount voted this year is the same as it has been—$75,000—but that out of that large sum, he cannot see his way to save a sufficient amount to establish bee-keeping. When hon. gentlemen sat on this side they used to criticise this item and say that the experimental farm should be self-sustaining and that this money was squandered. But from gentlemen now in opposition we hear quite the contrary. They say that the Government should ask for more and extend the work. But the Minister is simply trotting along in the old track that his predecessors followed, spending the same amount of money and doing the same work; and yet cannot save a dollar to branch out in the direction of a new industry. My hon. friend from South Huron has a charge to bring against the Minister, I believe, and I should like to hear him. In justice to him and also to my hon. friend from East Grey who has also something to say, I think a part of this item should be left so as to carry on the discussion. I think we should have an opportunity of hearing the musical voice of the hon. member for South Huron criticising this expenditure to see how it will compare with the criticisms we heard from him when the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) had charge of the work.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. These hon. gentlemen will have an opportunity to be heard on concurrence.

Mr. TAYLOR. Perhaps that will do.

Printing and distributing reports and bulletins of farms..... $4,000

Mr. KAULBACH. I might suggest to the Minister the printing of a larger number of reports for circulation than has been done in the past. They are grand educators.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We are revising the list, and perhaps we shall be able to add some names.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How many tobacco bulletins were sent out?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They were sent to all the people on the list, about 55,000.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Are you making any experiments in tobacco growing at the Farm?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, a crop is being grown; but then the main experiment is with regard to the curing of tobacco. There is not much trouble about growing it.

Mr. DAVIN. Do I understand that a farmer who wants to get a bulletin must make personal application?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, that was said about the seed grain.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman said circulars were sent out notifying some one, I do not know whom, that personal application should be made for grain. To whom were the circulars sent?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Members of Parliament and Senators.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I received none.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. One was posted to you.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I got none.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. One was posted to you.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I did not get one.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I can only say that Professor Saunders assured me that they had been sent out in the early part of the winter to every member and Senator.

Mr. DAVIN. How many bulletins are placed at the disposal of every member of Parliament?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. None. The bulletins are sent to those whose names appear on the mailing list of the farm. Any member who wishes to get names upon the list has only to send them in.

Mr. TAYLOR.

Mr. CLANCY. As to the tobacco bulletins, a general distribution is not of much value, because there are only a few sections in which tobacco is grown, and in those sections we cannot get them. I have only three and I have had applications for thousands I may say. I would like the Minister to consider the issuing of a new edition.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) would be astonished at the number of parts of the country from which we have received inquiries about tobacco growing. It is important that these bulletins should be sent to many different portions of the Dominion. Several thousands were left after distribution took place and applications have been received every day since then.

Mr. CLANCY. I know that parties applied and could not get them. As I say, I received only three.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) must know that many of the 55,000 sent out went to his own county, as there are many in that county whose names are on the list. I am sorry now that there were not eight or ten thousand or even fifteen thousand extra copies printed. But there were not, and the type has since been distributed, so the bulletin cannot be reproduced without setting the type again. It may be necessary to do that. I think the supply is not yet exhausted; it was not a day or two ago.

Mr. CLANCY. I think the hon. gentleman will see the necessity of revising the mailing list—

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We have been revising it for the last year. It is practically a new list.

Mr. CLANCY. By using a mailing list, these bulletins are often put in the hands of persons who simply cast them aside. In a special bulletin of this kind, I think the members of the House should be given more control of the distribution, as they would put them in the hands of persons who will make good use of them. So far as my constituency is concerned, I would ask to have none sent in this way, because I am sure that three-quarters of them will go wrong, being sent to persons, who will not make good use of them. I am not finding fault, but calling attention to the results of the present method. I should like to have more of the bulletins, as I have so many applications for them.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think I can let the hon. gentleman have more.

Mr. McDOUGALL. What means does the hon. gentleman take to revise the list? Where does he get the information with respect to parties in the constituency to enable him to strike off some names and put on others.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The list is made up of those who apply for the bulletins of the farms and those who ask for information. Hundreds and thousands of letters are received from people all over the country asking to have their names put upon the list, and this request is complied with. Any names sent in are also put on. Then we ask postmasters all over the country to return publications sent out from the farm that are not taken from the post office, and when they are returned the names of the parties to whom they are addressed are struck off. If any member of the House chooses to send in names that he wishes to have put upon the list, the names are added. Members constantly send in names.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I sent in a list of names, but I understand that during this revision they have been struck off.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think so.

Mr. McDOUGALL. The parties have not received anything from the experimental farm for some time.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will inquire into that.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It would be well for the Minister to consider whether he would not give to the members representing agricultural constituencies a certain number of these bulletins. They go through the mails free, even when the members are at home. There is a great deal in what has been urged that the member representing a district, from his local knowledge, is better able to distribute these bulletins where they will do the most good than any officers here, even with a revised list; for, as the hon. Minister himself says the list must grow imperfect in a short time. I would suggest sending to each member forty or fifty copies of any special bulletin that may be prepared.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is a good suggestion.

Mr. MONTAGUE. With regard to experiments on the farm with regard to curing tobacco, I suppose the hon. Minister would have the result published in the next annual report.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Perhaps in a bulletin.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think that would be preferable. The Experimental Farm Report is pretty late in getting out, and these experiments, if successful and such as to encourage the farmers in various sections to go into tobacco growing, should be put into the hands of the farmers without unnecessary delay. Then the Minister will give thirty or forty copies?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Dairying service $30,000

To promote the establishment of creameries in the North-west Territories..... $5,000

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is the system the same as that followed last year?

Mr. McLENNAN. When this item was before the House last year, I asked if the Minister could not encourage dairying in the Island of Cape Breton, somewhat after the manner in which it was being encouraged in Prince Edward Island. The Minister at that time said he was not in a position to do anything in regard to encouraging dairying in the Island of Cape Breton, but in the coming year he would see what could be done. I should like to hear from the hon. gentleman whether anything has been done in the direction of encouraging dairying in the Island of Cape Breton.

Mr. CLANCY. Where is the $30,000 generally spent?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will, in the first place, reply to the remarks of the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. McLennan). Last year I did hope to be able to do something for the encouragement of dairying in the Island of Cape Breton, because I had understood there was a good opening for development, somewhat similar to the development which has occurred in Prince Edward Island, and which has been so successful. Last winter, with this object in view, I took occasion to send, first, the officer of the department who has charge at Nappan Dairying Station to Cape Breton, to hold some meetings there; and later on I sent another of the employees for the same purpose. I carefully examined the reports which those officials made to me, and I took occasion to obtain through Prof. Robertson all the other information I possibly could in regard to the prospects and conditions of affairs in Cape Breton. After very careful thought, and somewhat reluctantly, I came to the conclusion that it would be better in the interest of progress that a little preparatory work be done before undertaking to establish any creamery on that island. I trust, however, that in the fall and before next spring at all events to be able to do still more of that preparatory work, and if there is any way possible by which I can succeed during next season in helping to establish and promote the creamery industry there, I shall certainly carry out any scheme that can be formulated to that end.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Had those officers instructions to put themselves in communication with the local representatives, with a view to ascertain what could be done in the different constituencies of the island?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I communicated with the secretary of the provincial Government agricultural department, who knows a good deal about the Island of Cape Breton, and he was kind enough to offer to accompany my officers and make the necessary arrangements for holding the meetings.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Is it not customary for the Minister to communicate with members for the island, and advise them of the steps proposed to be taken?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think it is.

Mr. McDOUGALL. The hon. gentleman, I believe, has not communicated with any of the members representing those constituencies?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I have not been communicated with, and I represent a very large farming constituency.

Mr. McLENNAN. I regret to say that it is my impression that the secretary of agriculture of the Nova Scotia provincial Government does not know a great deal about the agricultural capabilities of the Island of Cape Breton, as he is comparatively a stranger to the island, and I must say that the members had a right to be consulted in this matter. I must complain that I was not consulted. To send those officers with a stranger to guide them is like the blind leading the blind. If merely reading lectures in a few towns near the railway constitutes preparatory work, I regret that in my opinion it is not a step very much in advance. I stated here a few weeks ago that delivering abstract lectures to farmers with respect to dairying and scientific farming was waste of energy, because those people have no means of having these lectures properly demonstrated to them. I therefore regret that the department has not seen fit to take more vigorous steps by way of demonstrating those lectures, somewhat as has been done in Prince Edward Island. In that island this system has been most successful, and as regards the Island of Cape Breton, which we may call a neighbouring province. I do not see why it should not succeed there. I therefore feel that greater attention should be paid to this important industry in our midst. I say again that I should have at least been communicated with, especially as I have the honour to represent a very fine agricultural constituency to which these gentlemen were strangers. I only hope that the Minister will prosecute the preparatory work which he wishes to put the people through with more substantial vigour than he has shown during the past year; otherwise, we will rightfully come to the conclusion that we have not been properly treated in this matter.

Mr. FISHER.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman has not yet explained where the $30,000 were expended.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Out of this vote, Prof. Robertson's own salary and the various salaries and travelling expenses and printing at the head office are taken, this amount being about $11,000 annually. In Quebec last year there was a grant made to the dairy school at St. Hyacinthe, and the salary and expenses of J. P. Chapais, assistant dairy commissioner, are taken out of the appropriation for Quebec. Besides last year there was an inspector of creameries, Mr. Leclerc, whose salary came out of this item. In Prince Edward Island, there were two travelling dairying instructors. Until last year the Dominion Government ran several cheese factories and creameries there; but the position of affairs has improved to such an extent that we felt that we could withdraw from the management of any individual creameries, but the two travelling instructors were kept at the dairying establishments there. In New Brunswick there is a dairying station at Napan, and Mr. Hopkins travelled and had a school there during the winter. In New Brunswick we had a travelling instructor and inspector part of the summer. In the working of the creamery there a deficit of $6,000 occurred, which came out of this vote. We had a special vote last year for the North-west Territories, to aid in the establishment of creameries in the North-west; but to carry them on, as at several of the creameries, the quantity of milk was so small that the establishments did not pay for the manufacture of butter there, expenditure had to be incurred. This explains the different expenditures coming out of this vote of $30,000.

Mr. CLANCY. I understand that as regards the North-west creameries, the money advanced is being repaid gradually.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is the capital.

Mr. CLANCY. Is a portion taken out of this sum to make up any loss?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes; but next year hardly any sum will be required, the progress made has been so satisfactory.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Does the hon. gentleman propose to go into any new district?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, we propose to establish two new creameries, at Saltcoats and at another point.

To promote the establishment and maintenance of creameries in the North-west Territories.... $5,000

Mr. DAVIN. Why is this vote decreased $10,000?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am asking for $10,000 in the Supplementary Estimates, so that it is really the $15,000 vote.

Mr. DAVIN. Very well.

For cold storage on steamships, on railways, at warehouses, and at creameries, and for expenses in connection with trial shipments of products, and for securing recognition of the quality of the same outside of Canada..... $85,000

Mr. MARTIN. Has the Minister been able to make any arrangement for cold storage in steamships with regard to Prince Edward Island?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I may tell the hon. gentleman in confidence that there will be a vote in the Supplementary Estimates for a steamer running from Prince Edward Island to England.

Mr. MARTIN. Has the Minister made the arrangement for a steamer calling at Charlottetown?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not yet succeeded in making the arrangement, but we propose to vote the money and I am in communication with two steamship companies proposing to make an arrangement with them. I have a telegram from one of them to-night, which I hope will lead to results.

Mr. CLANCY. Why is there a reduction of $15,000 in this item? Is the Minister satisfied, from a year's experience, that there has been such rapid growth as to warrant a less sum being asked for this year, or is the hon. gentleman economizing in this direction?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am practising economy, but not such as will in any sense interfere with the efficiency of the service. The reason for the reduction of this vote is, that out of the vote of the year before I was able to pay last year's payments to several steamers, and this current year I am able to pay for some of this year's steamers so that I will not have to pay for these steamers out of this vote. I was able to do several things more cheaply. The payments to the steamers have been less in every instance than we had calculated upon. The machinery has been put in at a lower price than we feared it would be necessary to pay, and consequently the payments to steamships have been less. The railway service has been found to be so much availed of that the deficit which we guaranteed to make up has been very small. Besides that, not so many creameries will ask for the first bonus of $50 this year. The arrangement was that the creameries should have a bonus of $50 the first year and $25 for two following years, and this being the second year a large number of them will be paid $25 instead of $50. The expenditure is consequently less, but the efficiency is not less than last year.

Mr. MARTIN. I wish to remind the Minister (Mr. Fisher) that last year he told me across the floor that he had been making arrangements with steamers to call at Charlottetown, but it did not amount to anything. I hope that this year he will be a little more successful.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I hope so.

Mr. MARTIN. It is a little hard on the province of Prince Edward Island to see that every other part of the Dominion is provided with means to ship its products in cold storage, while in that province where agriculture is perhaps the main occupation of the people, no such facilities are given. I am afraid the Minister of Agriculture will get the name of slighting that province. If I mistake not, during the first part of the session, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) told me that he had correspondence with some steamboat owners, and he expected definite results would be arrived at. We are now near the end of the session, the shipping season is well on, and yet no arrangement has been completed. I am very much afraid that the matter may be a failure this year also, and I hope that the Minister will not come down with the story next year that he has been unable to complete the arrangement. There is no doubt the arrangement can be completed if the Minister is zealous enough.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I sympathize with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin).

Mr. CLANCY. I would ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) with regard to the warehouse service. I am sure he has already seen that at the outset it is a difficult thing to meet the public wants in that direction, and in cutting down the vote, if there is money saved in one quarter, it might be usefully expended in another with regard to giving the people along the line of railways greater facilities than they now enjoy.

Cattle Quarantine..... $30,000

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I wish to ask some information with regard to the changes that have been made at the Emerson quarantine station in Manitoba. Since the number of cattle in quarantine have been decreased in consequence of the change in the arrangements, I wish to ask if the expenses have decreased in proportion.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In consequence of the arrangement I made with the United States, by which we practically did away with detention at the frontier, the expenses on quarantine stations in Manitoba and the North-west have largely decreased. I was able practically to do away with most of them, just simply retaining the services of a few officers on call, and as we had some buildings at Emerson, I had to keep a caretaker.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Notwithstanding the decreased expenditure you are asking the same amount this year as last.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This vote should be for animal quarantine, and not simply cattle quarantine. The expenses have been largely increased, partly in consequence of hog killing, and partly in consequence of our taking over the work in British Columbia. We have had to do a great deal of work in British Columbia which formerly was not done at all. We are getting a great many calls for the inspection of animals, and demands on the time of the chief inspector and his assistants, which have increased the travelling expenses and general expenditure very greatly.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. What are the reasons of the change in the staff at Emerson from the inspector down to the stableman?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There were statements made in regard to their conduct in the election which required a change.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. On account of what?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Partisan conduct in the election.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Which election?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The election of 1896.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I did not know the news would travel that far so soon.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The understanding was to allow one item on immigration to stand, and that the question generally could be discussed on that.

Mr. DAVIN. If it is understood that the whole matter of immigration can be discussed on the one item, there will be no objection.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is the understanding.

Expenses of Committees, sessional and extra clerks, &c..... $14,200

Mr. MONTAGUE. What is the total number of sessional clerks, messengers and pages?

Mr. SPEAKER. Twenty-five sessional clerks, the same as usual, about 45 messengers, and 20 pages.

Books for Library of American History.. $1,000

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is any of that amount to be given to Mr. Kingsford?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That matter is under consideration and may be mentioned in the Supplementary Estimates.

Mr. DAVIN. I hope it will be considered favourably. I think that really that work of Mr. Kingsford is one that may well meet with some recognition on the part of the Government.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I quite agree with the hon. member for Assiniboia. There can be no doubt about the value of the material which Mr. Kingsford has collected, particularly for future reference. I hope the Government will see fit to give it a small grant.

Mr. CLANCY. How many volumes?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Nine volumes, and he purposes issuing a tenth.

Excise $451,776 25

Mr. MONTAGUE. There is nothing for Li Hung Chang in this?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Some hon. gentleman wanted to know some days ago what the rat traps were for that we had purchased and whether they had anything to do with Li Hung Chang. I may explain the case. There is a proverb which says that the rats deserted the sinking ship. There were no rats when we came into power. I do not know whether they had all left just before, but if so, they had evidently recovered confidence, for they came back in multitudes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And as the hon. gentleman (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière) felt that the ship might sink, he bought the traps in order to retain the rats.

Culling timber..... $19,350

Mr. CLANCY. What is the reason for the increase of contingencies here?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The timber trade made such advance last year that, up to the 31st March last, we had collected $12,373 against $6,300 in the same time last year—more than double the amount. To get the specifications ready in time we had to employ extra clerks.

Adulteration of food and fertilizers, and the administration of the Act respecting fraudulent marking..... $25,000

Mr. CLANCY. It would be well for us to have some little explanation of this item. It is not a large one, but it is very important.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. This includes the expense of all the analyses made, and of the reports and bulletins that are issued every month. There are no new features in connection with the item.

Customs$983,780

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I think there will be no objection to the passing of this item, on the understanding that the committee is to have full liberty of discussion on other items of the Customs, and to be free to take up any matter whether relating to these items or not.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Certainly, we will reserve any item that hon. gentlemen may wish.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It is not that, but that we should be free to discuss any item of customs.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, the customs matters may be discussed on other items of customs than this. There will probably be something in the Supplementary Estimates which will open the same field. I think we have done a fairly reasonable day's work, and we are much indebted to hon. gentlemen opposite for their help.

Resolutions to be reported.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved the adjournment of the House.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. May I ask if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) is able to say what is likely to be the order of business for Wednesday—or is that too far ahead for him to know?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is some difficulty about it. I think that if the Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick) returns we may take up the motion which he has on the paper respecting the salaries of the judges. But I would not speak of that with too much certainty. It is our expectation, as stated by the right hon. the Premier (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to announce on Wednesday generally what we propose regarding the business of the session, and that may affect the business of Wednesday. Failing other matters, we will take Supply.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 11.15 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 25th May, 1898.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

NORTH-WEST CENTRAL RAILWAY— QUESTION OF PROCEDURE.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I wish to call attention to what appears to me to be an irregularity in the Votes and Proceedings. I was present on Monday, the last sitting of the House, when Private Bills were called, and when Bill (No. 140) from the Senate was reached, the Prime Minister asked that it should stand. I had been spoken to by gentlemen who were interested in the subject matter of the Bill, and had the Prime Minister not made that request, I should myself have asked the House to permit it to stand. It appears that subsequently, after Bill 140 was dealt with, as appears on the Votes and Proceedings, the member for Antigonish (Mr. Mc-Isaac)—so I was informed, I was not present at the time—moved, seconded by the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Bostock), with the unanimous consent of the House, that this Bill be read the second time, which was done, and it was referred to the Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines. The attendance in the House was very small. I was present during nearly all the proceedings, and had been asked to bring to the attention of the House certain facts, by the gentlemen who were interested in the Bill. I have looked into the procedure, and while it may be technically right to do this kind of thing, it is certainly out of the ordinary course. A question might be raised in regard to the regularity of the procedure; but I happen to know there are several hon. gentlemen in the House who have been spoken to as I was, and if any of them had been present, I am certain some of them would have mentioned that this was an important Bill, and that it was desirable that various matters should be stated in connection with it before it was referred to the committee, but no opportunity for that was afforded. I notice in Sir John Bourinot's work, page 374, in speaking of the subject of the power of the House to do almost anything by unanimous consent, it is said:

In the Canadian Commons, in more than one case, it has been attempted to take a notice of motion out of its place, and give it priority, which, of course, could not be allowed. See ruling in Canadian Hansard, 24th March, 1885, when it was proposed to give precedence to a Bill without notice.

Without wishing to insist too much on these technicalities, and as I have not had an opportunity to consult the precedents, I would like to move that the order for the second reading of Bill (No. 140), from the Senate, and its reference to the Railway Committee, be discharged.

Mr. SPEAKER. I may mention with reference to this matter that my recollection is that we had passed through Private Bills, and that order stood at the request of somebody.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Of the Prime Minister.

Mr. SPEAKER. We were proceeding in a later order, I think, and the Minister of Railways and Canals mentioned that, with so many orders standing on the paper, unless it was referred now to the Committee on Railways, it might at this stage of the session fall through altogether. Then a motion was put by me, an expressed and disinct motion, that leave be given to take up the second reading of this Bill, and that motion was unanimously carried. Then the question of the second reading was put by me and carried, and the Bill was referred to the Railway Committee, so that the procedure was most carefully gone through. I must say that I can see no irregularity in it. Of course, if hon. members interested were not here to object, it cannot be helped. But the motion the hon. gentleman has moved now is, I suppose, the only way out of the difficulty.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). If my hon. friend were to allege, as I do not understand that he did, that a substantial injustice had been done to somebody, or to some parties interested in this Bill, there could be no objection at all to his motion. I remember distinctly the facts as they were stated a moment ago. When this Bill was called, it had been the intention to have it referred to the Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines; but after a conference, I think, by both sides of the House, it was agreed to let it stand. I was approached afterwards by the Minister of Railways and Canals, who represented to me that unless this Bill was sent immediately to the Committee on Railways it might lose an opportunity of being considered during the present session. My view was that as it was a private Bill, perhaps the parties interested might be taken by surprise if it were now referred to the Committee on Railways. But as I understood, at least that was the impression that was conveyed to me at the time, that the parties interested were agreeable to have the Bill sent up to the Committee on Railways so that they might there have an opportunity of discussing the conflicting interests involved in it. Unless, therefore, some interests may suffer, I would suggest to my hon. friend whether it would be advisable to take the proceeding which he now asks us to take. The Bill would come up again, necessarily, this evening at eight o'clock, and might be taken up and referred again to the Committee on Railways. I would ask him whether it would serve any purpose to persist in this motion, although I have no objection, so far as I am concerned.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I would not like to press this motion upon a mere technicality. But in answer to the right hon. gentleman, I may say that while I am not fully conversant with the facts in the case, one of the counsel in the case who is resident in this city, and was engaged in the discussion of the question before the Privy Council in England touching the Great North-west Central Railway Company, informs me that he was very anxious that certain facts should be put before the House before this Bill was referred to the committee. His statement briefly was this:

Mr. SPEAKER.

That much of this legislation is in connection with a litigation which has reached the Privy Council in England; that although a judgment of the Privy Council suggesting legislation has been given, this legislation has sprung up very quickly, before even the reasons for the judgment have been framed, although the mere outlines of the judgment have been given so that a formal judgment could be drawn up—such is my information. Under these circumstances it was premature, and might prejudice the interests of the parties for Parliament to deal with legislation that has become necessary on account of a judgment of the Privy Council before that judgment can be understood and fully discussed—those were the statements. The observation was also made to me that the Bill was introduced to the Senate only a few days ago, that it came from that House to this in the dying hours of this session, and not only was this procedure adopted yesterday, but a notice was actually posted in this House for the Railway Committee before the Bill had been read, the rules requiring a notice to be posted a certain time. Therefore, there is a danger in this extreme haste to the interests of the parties, and there were many, there were several counsel interested before the Privy Council representing various parties, creditors, sub-contractors and others. The danger is, therefore, that if this Bill is proceeded with so hastily, the Railway Committee may have charge of it before these parties are able to be heard. The gentlemen who spoke to me about this, desired that before the Bill was referred to the committee, the question should be discussed as to whether the Bill should be read the second time.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I think, perhaps, I am more directly responsible for the procedure which has taken place in connection with this Bill than any other member of the House, and I did so after a good deal of consideration—in other words, I took the course I did after a good deal of consideration. But I may say, without knowing that the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) was desirous of opposing the Bill taking its second reading, that I was aware from day to day that the Bill was standing over at the request of the Premier, and I spoke to him on the subject, pointing out what seemed to me to be rather an objection to our refusing to allow the Bill to go to a second reading. I have been advised from various sources, and by various members of the House, that they had strong objections to the Bill passing, and I felt myself that it was one to which very strong objection could be taken.

Seeing that this had been dealt with by a committee in the other Chamber and been very considerably amended, I thought it should be considered by the Railway Committee of this House, and it would be taking an exceedingly extreme course if we refused to allow the matter to be discussed before the proper committee. I have no doubt allegations will be made on the one hand against the Bill and controverted on the other, and this House will not be in a position to deal on sound principles or in a correct way with this Bill on the motion for its second reading, in view of the contradiction that will arise on both sides until the discussion has taken place. It seems to me that the Railway Committee is the proper tribunal before which this hearing should take place, I did not think, and I am of that opinion now, that it would be at all proper, in view of any discussion which could take place here, to refuse the second reading of the Bill. There is nothing in the Bill, on the face of it, so unsound in principle but that on being amended or considered fully by the committee, it might possibly be permitted to pass; but that is all a fair matter for consideration by the committee. I would suggest to my hon. friend now whether it would be desirable for him to press this motion, seeing that if this course were taken it would not be in the interest of the Bill, because my own view at present is against the Bill, but it would enable the parties to obtain a fair hearing before the usual committee which deals with this subject. I would assure the hon. gentleman that there is not the slightest disposition to hasten legislation. I may be found as strongly opposed as is the hon. gentleman to the Bill, for I have no preconceived views in regard to it, but after the Bill has been considered by the committee and we have arrived at the facts, I will be in a position to advise the House as to whether it should be proceeded with further or not.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The danger in that proposition simply is whether the Bill could be taken up to-morrow by the committee or not. My hon. friend will see that it is largely a question of notice. I am informed on very good authority, by the solicitor, that there was a notice for hearing to-morrow actually on the paper of the Railway Committee before this Bill received its second reading. It would meet the case if the Bill were not taken up until regular notices had been given, that is to say, the regular notices as to the second reading of the Bill and its references to the committee.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It was quite impossible that this notice could have been given at a time indicated, because there was no reference to this special Bill but there was the general call of the committee. If the Bill goes before the committee, I shall be as ready as my hon. friend to insist that it be not taken up until the parties interested have had the fullest opportunity of being heard.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I would ask the leader of the House, under these circumstances, to withdraw the motion.

Motion withdrawn.

PLACER MINING IN YUKON TERRITORY.

Mr. MONK asked,

1. Are all claims entered for placer mining in the Yukon Territory reported to the Department of the Interior?
2. How many claims have been reported as entered to date?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). Owing to the slowness of communication between the Yukon and Ottawa, it is exceedingly likely that a large number of claims have been entered before the Gold Commissioner recently. Up to and including 30th March, 1898, 9,777 claims had been entered.

POSTMASTERS IN PROVENCHER, MANITOBA.

Mr. LaRIVIERE asked,

1. Who were appointed postmasters in the electoral district of Provencher since the 1st of July, 1896, and what are the names of their respective post offices?
2. Why are not the new appointments recorded in the "Official Postal Guide" of January, 1898?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). The following postmasters have been appointed in the electoral division of Provencher since the 1st of July, 1896:—

RATES ON GOVERNMENT TELEGRAPH LINES.

Mr. BETHUNE asked,

1. How many miles of Government telegraph lines are there in the county of Victoria, Nova Scotia?
2. How many in Inverness County?
3. What are the through and local rates in each of these counties?

4. If there is a difference in the rates, what are they, and why the difference?

5. Will the Government make the rates over their telegraph lines in the counties of Victoria and Inverness uniform?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). 1. 130½ miles with a twenty-knot cable to St. Paul's Island. 2. 63 miles. 3 and 4. The through and local rate between North Sydney and Meat Cove is 25 cents per ten words and 1 cent for each additional word. On the line between Mabou and Cheticamp (Inverness) the through rate (on business exchange with the Western Union Telegraph Company) is 15 cents and 1 cent, and the local rate is 25 cents and 2 cents. The through and local rate on the Meat Cove line was, prior to 1892, 25 cents and 2 cents, but in readjusting the rates to the Magdalen Islands, with which that line also connects, it was changed to 25 cents and 1 cent. A lower rate was not considered warrantable, because of the length of the line being over 100 miles. At the time the Cheticamp line was built (in 1887) the former rate of 25 cents and 2 cents was applied to it as on the Meat Cove line; but in view of the comparative shortness of its length, the exceptional rate of 15 cents and 1 cent was fixed for through messages. No dissatisfaction was expressed with this arrangement, and it has continued undisturbed up to the present time. 5. The attention of the department has been called to the advisability of a uniform rate being established and the department now has the matter under serious consideration.

POSTMASTER AT ST. CYPRIEN, P.Q.

Mr. BERGERON asked,

1. Was there an investigation held upon the postmaster at St. Cyprien, county of Napierville?

3. How much did the investigation cost?
4. What was the result of the investigation?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). 1. Yes. 2. Mr. Wilfrid Mercier, advocate, Montreal. 3. $40. 4. The postmaster was relieved of his office.

CUSTOMS OFFICER AT BATH, ONT.

Mr. WILSON asked,

Who is customs officer at the village of Bath, Ontario? When was he appointed? By whom was he recommended, and what is his salary?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). Mr. David T. Rowse is sub-collector of customs at the village of Bath. He was appointed on the 13th day of May, 1898. His salary is $150 per annum. Mr. Rowse was recommended to me by parties in whom I have confidence.

Mr. BETHUNE.

CUSTOMS COLLECTOR AT NAPANEE.

Mr. WILSON asked,

Is Thomas E. Anderson the collector of customs at Napanee, Ontario, also gas inspector, and collector of inland revenue? If so, what amount is he paid in each case, or for each of these offices?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). Mr. Thomas E. Anderson, collector of customs at Napanee, acts for the Inland Revenue Department, in the collection of excise duties, and is paid a commission of five per cent on his collections up to $3,000. If the amount collected in any one year exceeds that sum, a salary is paid according to the following scale:—

- Over $3,000 and up to $5,000—$150 per annum.
- Over $5,000 and up to $10,000—$200 per annum.
- Over $10,000—$250 per annum.

Mr. Anderson does not fill the position of gas inspector at that place.

CARETAKER, PUBLIC BUILDING, NAPANEE.

Mr. WILSON asked,

1. Who is caretaker of the public building in Napanee, Ontario?
2. When was he appointed, and by whom was he recommended?
3. What is his salary, and has he to take care of all the offices for his salary without any extras?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). 1. Robert Webster. 2. He was appointed on the 1st April last, and was highly recommended by people in whom the Minister has great confidence. 3. $400 per year, the same as his predecessor received, for which he has to take care of all the offices without any extras.

BERTHIER POST OFFICE.

Mr. BEAUSOLELL (by Mr. Sutherland) asked,

1. Whether it is true, as stated in "La Gazette de Berthier," on May' 13th instant, that the Dominion Government have definitely acquired the Huguenise property at Berthier, with a view to converting it into a post office?
2. If so, when was the acquisition effected?
3. From whom?
4. What price was paid or agreed upon?
5. Are the buildings on the property such as are required for the post office, and if so, what sum will require to be expended for repairs and fitting out the office, and when can the postmaster enter into possession?
6. Is the property held under lease or otherwise, and if under lease, how many years has such lease to run?
7. What is the yearly rental and the amount of the capital it represents?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). 1. Yes. 2. Deed is not yet completed, but authority has been obtained by Order in Council of the 14th April last, to make the purchase. 3. From the Huguenin and Hénault estates. 4. Price agreed upon, $3,200. 5. It is expected that a sum between $1,000 and $1,200 will be sufficient to do all that is required to provide commodious quarters for the post office, &c., and it is hoped that the postmaster will be able to enter into possession by the 1st of July next. 6. No. 7. None.

SUPPLIES FOR YUKON MILITARY CONTINGENT.

Mr. BRODER (by Mr. Taylor) asked,

1. What supplies and quantities of each have been contracted for with the Government by H. N. Bate & Sons, of Ottawa, to be furnished to the Yukon military contingent this year?
2. What is the value of such supplies furnished or to be furnished by said firm?
3. Was it understood in contracting for these supplies that Messrs. Bate & Sons could purchase them, or part of them, in the United States? If so, what proportion of the whole consignment was purchased in the United States?
4. Will the goods so purchased in a foreign country be admitted into Canada free of duty?
5. Was there a general call for tenders for purchasing these supplies?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). The following supplies in part, and the quantities, which I will give approximately, have been purchased from H. N. Bate & Sons: Tinned meats, 88,000 pounds; biscuits, 43,000 pounds; flour, 138,000 pounds; peas, 3,500 pounds; evaporated vegetables, 6,500 pounds; rice, 10,000 pounds; evaporated apples, 8,400 pounds; evaporated fruits (prunes, apricots, peaches), 17,400 pounds; lard, 7,900 pounds; sugar, 21,000 pounds; tea, 5,200 pounds; salt, 4,700 pounds; pepper, 300 pounds; baking powder, 900 pounds; candles, 3,000 pounds; soap, 250 pounds; tobacco, 3,000 pounds; matches, 26 cases. In addition to these supplies a quantity of canned fruits, extracts, pickles, pipes, &c., were obtained to supply any of the men who might desire to purchase them. I am not able to give the value, but it is approximately $30,000. 3. There was no understanding as to where the goods should be purchased. I am not able to give the proportions purchased in the United States. 4. If any goods were purchased in a foreign country they would pay the duty. 5. There was not a general call for tenders; that is, there was no advertisement in the newspapers, but tenders were asked for and received from several firms.

FOURTEEN-FOOT NAVIGATION—BETWEEN LAKE ONTARIO AND MONTREAL.

Mr. MACLEAN (by Mr. Taylor) asked:

When will the fourteen-foot navigation between Lake Ontario and Montreal be completed?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). It is confidently expected that the canal between Lake Ontario and Montreal will be sufficiently completed to be open for traffic at the opening of navigation in 1899.

COMMISSIONS IN THE PERMANENT FORCE.

Mr. TYRWHITT (by Mr. McDougall) asked,

1. What qualifications were required from subaltern officers before being granted commissions in the permanent force on 1st July, 1896?
2. What qualifications, if any, are required at the present time?
3. Did the Major General commanding the Militia recommend or approve of these changes?
4. How many officers have been appointed to the permanent force since 10th July, 1896? How many are graduates of Royal Military College, Kingston?
5. Did the General Officer commanding the Militia recommend any of the officers appointed to the permanent force since 10th July, 1896? If so, how many, and what are their names?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). 1. Long course certificate. 2. Long course "Grade A" certificate. 3. Yes. 4. (a) 13; (b) 1. 5. (a) Yes; (b) one, Lieut. and Capt. C. M. Nelles. The General Officer commanding recommended especially Lieut. and Capt. Nelles; he approved of all the others before their names appeared in the "Canada Gazette."

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Could the hon. gentleman give the name of the graduate of the Royal Military College that was appointed?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Bennett.

INSPECTOR OF LIVE STOCK.

Mr. CLARKE (by Mr. Taylor) asked,

Has Mr. John Sheridan, of Toronto, been appointed inspector of live stock? When was he appointed? What is the nature of his duties? What salary will he be paid? What territory will be included in his jurisdiction?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). Mr. John Sheridan, of Toronto, has not been appointed inspector of live stock, but he was appointed an honorary commissioner on the 5th November, 1897, to report to the Department of Agriculture from time to time in regard to the facilities, arrangements and practices connected with the shipment of live stock in Canada for export. He is paid no salary at all, and his territory will include all the channels of communication for export.

EDMONTON BRIDGE.

Mr. DAVIN asked,

1. Did the Department of Public Works get quotations from the Canadian Pacific Railway for freight rates for carrying stone from any point in Manitoba to Edmonton ?

2. Have any estimates been paid to the contractor for building the bridge at Edmonton ?

3. Has the cement bought by the contractor for the purpose of making concrete for the construction of Edmonton bridge been tested ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). 1. Yes, a quotation was obtained from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for freight rates for carrying stone from Stoney Mountain, Stonewall and Selkirk, and the quotation given was 40 cents per 100 pounds for minimum weight of 30,000 pounds per car. 2. No. 3. Yes.

DUTY ON LAFRANCE FIRE ENGINE.

Mr. MILLS asked,

1. At what figures were the Lafrance steam fire engines purchased by the corporations of Ottawa and Montreal last autumn, and this spring respectively, entered at customs ?

2. Was there any difficulty or difference of opinion between the shippers and the Customs Department in connection with the value for duty at which either or both of these fire engines should be entered for duty ? If so, how was the difficulty adjusted ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). The Lafrance fire engine for the corporation of Ottawa was entered for duty at a value of $3,550, and the value was raised on appraisal to $4,200, and duty paid accordingly. The Lafrance fire engine for the corporation of Montreal was entered provisionally at $5,000, pending adjustment of valuation, which was finally fixed at $4,500, and duty levied accordingly.

THE CASE OF JOHN. E. TANNER.

Mr. RUSSELL asked,

Whether the attention of the Government has been called to the case of John E. Tanner, a British subject, mate of the British schooner "Ida," of Halifax, Nova Scotia, who is stated to have been forcibly taken off his vessel by an armed boat's crew from the Spanish warship "Criolla," on the 5th May, 1897, at Fajardo, Porto Rico, on a charge of having injured a lighterman named Manuel Santana, and to have been there detained without any trial or examination until the 2nd July, when he was set at liberty, and if attention has been called to it, and the matter has been investigated and the facts are as stated: Whether any claim has been made on the Spanish Government for compensation for this wrongful treatment; and whether Messrs. G. P. Mitchell & Sons, the owners of the schooner "Ida," have submitted a claim for expenses incurred in endeavouring to obtain the release of said John Tanner, also for detention of their vessel at Fajardo for seventeen days, and for damages for loss of market through detention of vessel; and if so, whether a settlement of these claims is being pressed for by Her Majesty's Government ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). The attention of the Government was called to the case of John E. Tanner, mate of the schooner "Ida," on the 26th May last, and a few days later cable communication was had with the Imperial Government on the subject. On the 14th June, various affidavits furnished by Messrs. G. P. Mitchell & Sons were forwarded to the Colonial Office, accompanied by an expression of the desire on the part of the Government of Canada that the matter might be fully inquired into and justice rendered to all parties concerned. In the month of August following, a statement of the claim of the owners of the schooner "Ida," arising out of the imprisonment of the mate, was forwarded to the Colonial Office. These documents were acknowledged and the Government informed that the Foreign Office had been requested to procure from Her Majesty's consul at Porto Rico a full report on the affidavits which this Government had sent home in June last. Her Majesty's Government, the despatch stated, would defer action in regard to these claims pending the receipt of that report. Nothing further has been heard on the subject, but I may say that the attention of Her Majesty's Government has again been called to the matter.

SILVER LEAD SMELTING.

Mr. EARLE asked,

1. Have the provisions of the Act intituled: "An Act to encourage Silver Lead Smelting, 1895," been made effective by regulations ?

2. If so, when did the regulations go into effect, and what amounts have been paid out under them ?

3. If not, is it the intention of the Government to make such regulations as will make the Act effective ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). 1. Regulations were passed, under date of the 12th of July, 1897, to make effective the provisions of the Act to encourage silver lead smelting. 2. The regulations went into effect from the date of the Order in Council (12th July, 1897), but as yet no amounts have been paid under the provisions thereof, for the reason that the department has not received from all the smelters the compliance with the regulations, or details of the work done. 3. It is not the present intention of the Government to change the regulations, as it is not apparent that any change under the terms of the Act would be more effective.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE HOUSE—GOVERNMENT BUSINESS.

On the Order for Government Notices of Motion,

That for the remainder of the session the House shall hold two sittings on each day, one from 11 a.m. until 1 p.m., and the second from 3 p.m. until the hour of adjournment, and at each such sitting Government Orders shall have precedence.—(Sir Richard Cartwright.)

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, as two important committees have been called for to-morrow morning, the Committee on Public Accounts and the Railway Committee, the Government does not think it would be advisable to commence the morning sitting of this House to-morrow. Therefore, this motion will stand for to-day, but my hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright) will move it to-morrow afternoon in order to have it take effect the following day. I will take advantage of this opportunity to say that the Government has no further legislation of any importance to bring to the attention of Parliament this session. The only legislation which will be submitted this session will be upon the following subjects:—(1) To authorize the issue of bonds by the Montreal Harbour Commission; (2) To give effect to the judgment of the Court of Exchequer in reference to the Dominion Atlantic Railway Company; (3) To rectify an error which has crept into the interpretation of the Act passed a few years ago to settle the account between the Government of Manitoba and the Government of Canada; (4) To confirm an Act and agreement about the boundary between Canada and the province of Quebec; and last, if possible, one or two purely departmental measures respecting Customs and Inland Revenue.

NEW REGULATIONS ON THE GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY.

Mr. WALLACE. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to call the attention of the Government, and more especially of the Minister of Railways, to what is considered by railway employees to be a very important series of regulations that we are told will go into effect on the Grand Trunk Railway on the 1st of July next. The following is contained in a circular issued by the Grand Trunk management:—

The following rules and regulations for the government of the transportation department of the Grand Trunk Railway system having been adopted by the Directors of the Railway Company and approved by the Governor in Council of the Dominion of Canada, will take effect at 12 o'clock noon, on Friday, 1st July, 1898.

The attention of employees is directed to the extract from the Railway Act included on pages 117 and 118 of this book.

(Sgd.) F. H. McGUIGAN,
General Superintendent.

Approved,
CHARLES M. HAYS,
General Manager.

These regulations, it is stated, have been approved by the Governor General in Council, and it is further stated by the railway employees, who are the parties most immediately interested, that very many of them are very arbitrary. For instance, one requires the employees to be on top of the box cars on all up grades. They say that it will take an hour to get up some grades, and that, in the inclement weather we have in winter, with the thermometer down below zero, it would be very cruel to compel them to stand on top of these cars for an hour. I am told further that the general tendency of these regulations is to Americanize our railways.

Mr. SPEAKER. I suppose the hon. gentleman will conclude with a motion.

Mr. WALLACE. If necessary, I will conclude with a motion to adjourn. They say that these will Americanize our system of railways, and that the Canadian rules and regulations which have been in vogue on our Canadian railways, particularly on the Grand Trunk Railway, provide greater security for the passengers and the employees than is to be found on any United States railway, and that therefore the changes proposed, and which have been approved by the Governor General in Council, do not give as much security to the travelling public and the trainmen employed. That is the statement made by the railway employees. If so, I think that the Government, in sanctioning these regulations, which will revolutionize the system in vogue, have committed a mistake. That is the opinion of the railway employees. These employees had a warning given them some five weeks ago that the new regulations will go into effect on the 1st of July, 1898. I would like to call the attention of the Government to the fact that the effect of these regulations which they have sanctioned, will be very injurious, in the opinion of the 30,000 men employed on those railways, to the employees and dangerous to the travelling public. I hope that the statement here made is not correct, and that the Governor General in Council have not, without more careful consideration, approved of those changes which will revolutionize the entire character of our railways, and make them more American in their management. The Grand Trunk Railway is now under the management of Mr. Hays, and those he has brought from the United States, and those regulations will enable them to bring over a number of others to control one of the greatest railroads of our country, to the detriment of public business and the injury of our Canadian workmen. I have received a telegram from the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean), who had intended to be here and to have called the attention of the House to this matter, but who was unable to be present. If this report be true, I hope the Government will reconsider the matter and see that the interests of the trainmen of the Dominion are amply protected. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). My attention has already been called to the matter alluded to by the hon. gentleman. Some days ago I had a communication on the subject from a gentleman who is not a member of this House, but who appears to be very much interested on behalf of the railway employees, and since then I also heard from the hon. member for West Elgin on this same subject. In point of fact, it is quite new to me. It was quite new to me when mentioned by my first correspondent to whom I have just alluded. It was new to me, perhaps, in a sense, but should not have been entirely new, because in the way of formal routine it had gone through my hands. Early in February last an application was made in the usual way by the Grand Trunk Railway to my department for the approval of certain new regulations, or rather a body of regulations, some of which, it was said, were in amendment of the previous regulations approved by the Governor General in Council. These regulations were examined by the officers of my department in the usual way and recommended to me for submission to the Governor General in Council, as being only changes in minor particulars of the former schedule of rules. The regulations were therefore approved as is usual and customary. Since then, however, I have been advised by the correspondent to whom I have alluded to some time ago—he does not state when, perhaps a year ago—the Grand Trunk Railway were contemplating some changes in their regulations, and had communicated with the right hon. First Minister and myself, informing us that some such movement was in contemplation, and asking that before the action of the Grand Trunk Railway was endorsed by the Governor General in Council, those opposed to it might be heard on the subject. I must confess that the statement that such a request had been made to me was not according to my own recollection. I really do not carry in my mind that any such formal or informal request had been made to me, nor was the right hon. First Minister able to recollect that any such request had been made to him. I would be very sorry, however, to question the accuracy of the statement, because it might very well be that in the pressure of work the matter had not impressed itself on my mind.

Mr. WALLACE. Is there any correspondence on file?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It has not been stated to me that there is, and if there had been any communication, I think without doubt it would have been regularly filed and have attracted the attention of the deputy head of the department, who would then have mentioned it to me when the subject came to be dealt with. However, as the matter now stands, I am quite unaware of what the nature is of the objections made by the employees to the existing regulations. I cannot think that my hon. friend has fully informed himself either in respect of the nature of those changes, and I think it would be premature, in the absence of reliable data on which to form an opinion, for either myself or my hon. friend to assume that what has been done is objectionable or in the nature of revolutionary changes. I think it would be well for us to fully possess ourselves of the facts before we reach any conclusion, assuming that the newspaper reports are correct or that the Grand Trunk Railway Company has made itself subject to any criticism on account of what they have done. I have already given assurance that the subject will receive my immediate attention, and it is my purpose to give it my immediate attention: and if there has been anything done calculated to inflict injury on the employees of the road, by reason of these regulations having been approved of, proper steps will be taken to redress their grievances. The hon. gentleman and those interested in the subject may rest assured that it will not be lost sight of.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. Minister says that I should have acquainted myself with the facts and should not have relied upon what appeared in the newspapers. What I saw in the newspaper was the statement that the rules and regulations submitted by the general superintendent have been approved of by the Governor General in Council, and I assume that to be correct.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is correct.

Mr. WALLACE. These have been approved by the Governor in Council. Then, as to whether they are oppressive or not, I have here a representation made by the trainmen. This is not by the newspapers or by myself, but by the men employed, the men whose lives are at stake and who are interested therefore in these rules and regulations. They have received these rules and, having read them over, they condemn them, because, as I have already pointed out, they make the traffic more dangerous for the men and more dangerous for the passengers. Besides, they have the effect of introducing the American system into Canada, and the men claim that there is no system—on this continent, at any rate—that gives greater safety to the travelling public and to the employees than the Canadian system. Therefore, the Government should have been slow to consent to any changes. But the Minister of Railways tells us that these rules came up before his officers in a casual way; they were looked at in a casual way, and, when they came before him—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I suppose the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) desires to state correctly what I said. I said these were looked at by my officers in the usual way.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I think the hon. Minister said in a routine way.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I said I passed it through in a routine way, because I did not pretend to understand the details of these matters. They are looked at and reported upon by the Deputy Minister and his officers as carefully, I have no doubt, as any other matter that comes before them.

Mr. WALLACE. At any rate, the matter came before him in the usual way for approval and was forwarded to the Governor in Council.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. And the hon. gentleman assumed from this that they were scarcely looked at at all.

Mr. WALLACE. I gathered that from what the Minister said. I do not wish to misrepresent him. The Minister gave the House to understand that this was considered a matter of very minor importance, and, in the rush of business that was going on, did not receive the consideration to which it was entitled. The hon. Minister was not seized of the importance of the matter. That is what I gather from what he said, and I think his words will fairly justify that interpretation. But this is an important matter. It is important for the safety of the trainmen and of the travelling public, and it is an important matter if the Minister has consented to a change in the regulations which will Americanize our railways and work to the injury of those railways and their Canadian employees.

Mr. HUGHES. I have taken occasion to look into this matter in the town in which I live, which is a large railway centre; and I find that the regulations bring about a certain change in signals, and that until the men get thoroughly posted in the new system, there is a possibility of accidents. But, presuming the men get used to the changes, I think there will be no trouble whatever. While some of the men in the town in which I live feared at first that the changes would be undesirable, now that they have examined them they are unable to point out anything very seriously wrong with the new rules. This is a good deal as it was when Mr. Hays became the general manager of the road. As was natural, Mr. Hays brought in a number of officers accustomed to his system of running a railway to take charge of important positions on the road. The cry at once went out that every conductor and every trainman was going to be dismissed and replaced by a Yankee. But I can say that in our whole district not one man on such account has been dismissed. On the contrary, Mr. McGuigan, Mr. Hays and the chief engineer, have watched the men, and wherever they have found a deserving man in that district, they have not only retained him, but, in many instances, they have advanced such men to very high positions in the service, taking advantage of every opportunity to give the local officers promotion. Besides, in some cases—I was going to say many, but I can say at least in some cases—they have taken men from our system and put them on the general system of the company even in Michigan, giving them good positions. I have examined the rules carefully, and the only danger that I can see in them will arise during the time when the men are learning the new system of signals. It is possible then for accidents to occur, as the signals differ from those that the men have been accustomed to.

Mr. CASEY. I had a notice on the paper of a question on this subject, which, I believe, was allowed to stand at the request of the Government.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Casey) was not here.

Mr. CASEY. I was not aware that it was coming up to-day or that this discussion was coming up. Without asking for a categorical answer now to the question I proposed to ask, I would say that I have heard complaints from the railway men in the district where I live that changes were made in the rules of the service calling for longer hours than necessary for the performance of the employees' duties, and, therefore, not only oppressive to the men, but inconsistent with the safety of the public as well. There have also been complaints about the change in signals which has been referred to. It stands to reason that sudden change of methods of signalling is apt to cause confusion and accidents. My object in the questions I desired to ask was simply to have the whole subject ventilated. No doubt, when I have an opportunity to ask the questions, the Minister can give a full statement with regard to it. I can quite understand that a matter of this kind should pass the department in a routine way, as has been mentioned, without anybody's attention being called to it. But I was also given to understand that some of the employees of the Grand Trunk Railway had asked, through certain representatives of their own, to be heard before the Minister, or whoever should hear them, on the subject of these rules. I hope the Minister will be able to give a full explanation when he comes to answer the questions. I have no doubt these rules are subject to such modifications as an expert would decide to be in the interest of the public and of the men, as well as of the railway company. Of course, the Government's control of these rules has been largely nominal at all times, for the simple reason that nobody in the department was a railway expert in this sense. But what I would suggest is that in the future, before such rules and regulations are approved of, those interested on the other side of the question, the employees, should be heard. I think this course would lead to more general satisfaction.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I am glad that my hon. friend from West York (Mr. Wallace) has brought this matter to the attention of the Minister of Railways and the House. Whatever the Minister of Railways may think of this subject, I can tell him that there exists a very strong feeling among the men on the Grand Trunk against the adoption of these new rules. I represent a constituency which forms the head of one of the largest divisions of the Grand Trunk Railway, and I know whereof I speak when I say that changes in the rules that have been approved by the Governor in Council, are extremely unpopular with the men they more particularly affect. Now, I hold in my hand a resolution passed by a very important body of trainmen strongly protesting against the adoption of these changes, which, it appears, the Minister of Railways has approved. Whatever may be said in favour of the new system—and it does not appear that any person in this House has examined the system sufficiently to pronounce upon its merits—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Do you think they would be able to pronounce upon it if they had examined it?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I daresay that my hon. friend from West Elgin (Mr. Casey), who has paid a good deal of attention to legislative matters of this kind, would be able to give a pretty fair opinion. Besides, there are railway men in the House, the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) and others. Yes, I do not hesitate to say to the Minister of Railways that there are members of this House who, on carefully examining the two systems of rules and comparing them, and taking into consideration the fact that the system in vogue in this country has proved, so far as I know or have ever heard, less injurious than the system adopted in the United States, could give us an opinion that would be of value. I have been told by railway men that the system in vogue in this country is better for the safety of employees and passengers than the system in vogue in the United States. But I submit to the Minister of Railways, in all fairness, that when adopting a change so important as this, at all events the large representative body of men known as the legislative committee of the trainmen should have been consulted. In these days, Mr. Speaker, large corporations have to be a little more carefully watched than in the days of old. We have had some instances, not only in the present session of this Parliament, but in recent years, to show a grasping tendency on the part of some corporations. And we know that the best solution of the difficulties that arise between corporations and the employees is conciliation. We know that the principle of arbitration is always best. I submit, Sir, without wishing to say anything more on the subject, that before the Governor in Council was asked to approve of these rules, the representatives of the other side of the question should, at least, have been given an opportunity to present whatever objections they might have to the adoption of these rules.

Mr. McNEILL. I wish to say one word in regard to this matter. I think the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) deserves our thanks for having brought this important subject to the notice of the House. The travelling public are deeply interested in this question, and it is evident that we would have no protest from the railway employees unless they had a grievance. It is a serious matter for the employees of a great corporation to come forward in this way, knowing that they do so at a certain risk, and I am satisfied there would be no such application unless there was a grievance. But I would like to call the attention of the hon. Minister to what my hon. friend from West Elgin (Mr. Casey) referred to, the fact that the employees are called upon to serve too long hours at a stretch. I called attention to that in the House some little time ago. I venture to think that it would be desirable that this House should limit by legislation, if necessary, the number of hours during which railway employees should be kept at work. I recollect when, a good many years ago, a great deal of attention was called to this subject in the old country, a good many accidents had occurred, and when the matter came up and was investigated, it was found that these accidents arose largely from the fact that the men were utterly worn out, that they were not in a condition to discharge their duties in such a manner as was necessary for the public safety.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend will allow me to say that no doubt he is aware that in many branches of the railway service some legislation would be required to prevent men from working too long hours by their own desire. They are, perhaps, more desirous of working long hours than the railway companies desire them to work, because they get paid by the time. Therefore, in the legislation which my hon. friend has in mind, this fact would have to be taken into consideration.

Mr. McNEILL. I am not standing up in the House to discuss the interests of the employees as against the corporations, nor of the corporations as against employees, nor do I desire to make political capital with one class or the other. I am speaking now in the interests of the public as well as of the employees; and if it be necessary to limit the number of hours that employees should work at a stretch when they do so voluntarily, then let it be done. It is clear to any one who chooses to think of the matter that engineers and others who work too long at a stretch, can only do so with the greatest possible risk to the public safety. I do not know the particulars of these new regulations that have been introduced, but I think we do know that heretofore we have been far more free from railway accidents in Canada than have our friends to the south of the line, in proportion to our population and to the number of trains that are running. If there is any likelihood of a system being introduced in Canada that would make the risk of accidents greater than heretofore, then it becomes a very grave matter, and one that deserves the serious consideration of the Government. I would urge upon the Minister to take up this matter seriously, and also to hear what the employees themselves have got to say on the subject.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is not the slightest objection to that, in fact I am desirous of doing so.

Mr. CORBY. When in Toronto this week I was informed by a number of drivers and firemen that they had not yet received the new rules, although they are going into force on the 1st of July. I also had a conversation with conductors who complain that they are not getting time enough to study those rules if they are to go into force on the 1st of July. When it is remembered that many of these railway men have been working for the last 25 years under certain rules, the Government should be very careful to safeguard the public interest when they propose to enforce new rules in 30 days, because if the engineers and firemen received the rules now, they would only have 30 days in which to learn them. Representing, as I do, a large railway centre in the city of Belleville, the changing point between Brockville and Toronto, I must say that I think the men ought to have a fair show, they should have a chance to come down here and air their grievances, and should have been heard by the Minister of Railways and Canals before that Order in Council was passed. I am told on good authority, and by the men themselves, that they had a direct promise from the Minister of Railways and Canals that before that Order in Council was passed, they would be allowed to be heard with reference to their grievance. It may be said also that these men, who are earning their daily bread in working for the Grand Trunk Railway, are afraid to come here publicly and represent their interests; therefore, I say that we, their representatives, should stand up and protect them; and I, for one, irrespective of the Grand Trunk Railway or anybody else, propose to stand up here and urge what I think is fair-play in the interest of the railway employees. In the hope the Minister of Railways and Canals will appoint a day and allow the men to send a representative here and put their case before the Government, and if they have not been properly treated, I think the Government should rescind that Order in Council.

Mr. McMULLEN. I earnestly hope that the Government will move very cautiously in lending their sanction to any radical change as between the railways and those employed. Before the Government sanctions rules that apparently are to come into force on the 1st of July, I think an opportunity should be given to the trainmen to present their arguments on behalf of the reforms that they desire. Of course it could not be expected that the Government should send an invitation to any organization to come here and present their arguments. However, I concur with some hon. gentlemen opposite in the belief that the organization of trainmen should be allowed a reasonable opportunity of making any objections to any new rules before the Government grant their sanction to those rules, so as to protect the rights of individuals. We know well that all railway managers are anxious to get as much as they can out of their hired labour, and we cannot find any fault with that. But the rules should be so fairly adjusted, the scale should be so fairly balanced between the employees and the corporations that injustice should not be permitted to exist, and that the railway men should not be subjected to harsh treatment or obliged to work too long hours. I quite agree with what the Minister of Railways and Canals has said with regard to the men desiring to put in long hours so as to draw larger pay. Conductors and brakemen are generally paid by the hour, and they are anxious to put in more than ten or twelve hours a day, in some cases they would work 18 hours if they could get paid for that time. It is the duty of the railway company to see that men are not permitted to work more than, say, 12 hours, because if they do, the company is running a great risk, and the public safety is also endangered. We know that accidents have occurred by reason of the fact that trainmen have virtually fallen asleep at their post, and sometimes even loss of life has occurred thereby. Some protection should be given to the public in that regard. I do not know whether the new rules are imposing upon skilled labour more onerous duties than such labour was subjected to before, but I hope that in any new rules to be enforced, skilled labour will be protected against any injustice being done.

Mr. DAVIN. I wish, as representing a large number of railway men, to add my voice to the considerations that have been urged on the attention of the Minister of Railways and Canals in regard to this important matter. The Minister of Railways and Canals is under a mistake in supposing that on all occasions the railway employees prefer to have long hours even when the company would prefer that they should work a lesser number of hours. I remember that ten years ago I brought this matter to the attention of the House, and particularly to the attention of the hon. gentleman who is now leading the Opposition, when the Conservative party was in power; and I pointed out that the conductors and engineers on the Canadian Pacific Railway in the North-west were running distances and running for hours, inconsistent with efficiency, inconsistent with health, and inconsistent with safety to the public. The result was that the Canadian Pacific Railway changed the distances and changed the hours. I think it would be wise for the Minister of Railways to postpone final decision until the men interested were heard, and in doing so he would be acting on a precedent set by the Conservative Government. A few years ago, when Sir John Thompson was Prime Minister, a very important change was about to be introduced by legislation in this House, and although the legislation had matured and had gone, I think, through all its stages in this Chamber, nevertheless when some hon. members, among them the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) went to Sir John Thompson, he allowed us to introduce a large deputation of railway men, and the result was that the legislation did not go through at that time. I hope, because this is a matter in which the public is deeply interested and in which justice is concerned as well, the Minister will hear the men before finally putting this Order in Council into operation, in fact, I think they should have been heard before the Order in Council was passed.

The PRIME MINISTER. This question is certainly one of very serious importance to the whole community, not only to the railway men but to the people at large; but I am afraid it has been discussed by some hon. gentlemen opposite under somewhat of a misapprehension. The rules which are now complained of have been approved by the Governor in Council; they have been approved in the ordinary manner and under ordinary circumstances, and this is not the first time that rules of this kind have come before the Governor in Council for approval. From time to time the rules have to be changed, and when this occurs they are submitted to the Governor in Council and are sent to the Minister of Railways, by him they are referred to the experts of his department, and if they are favourably reported on by those experts, the rules are sent to the Governor in Council for approval. This is the procedure which has been followed in this instance. I am not aware that on any occasion the railway men have been consulted as to those rules. This, however, is a progressive age, and what has been done before may not be followed to-day, and I think it would not only be proper but quite valuable that the men who have formulated the rules should be consulted. There has been some misapprehension in regard to this matter, because I was quite astonished to receive a few days ago a letter from a friend who takes an interest in railway men, stating that I had given a pledge that the men would be heard. I have no recollection of having been interviewed on this question; of course, the matter may have passed from my memory, but I do not think so, and I have not the faintest recollection that I was approached either in an interview or privately as to this particular matter. But however that may be, the character of the rules is so important that the other side of the question should be placed before the Government. Of course, there are two sides to this question, as on every other question. The men who are going to operate the road may find fault, and they may be right in doing so; on the other hand, it cannot be supposed that the company have not good reasons to have these rules put in force. I do not say whether one side is right or wrong, it is impossible to pass judgment unless a man is an expert. But I must take exception to the statement of the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) that these rules were objectionable owing to their tendency to Americanize our railways. It is not a good objection on the floor of this House to present against these rules that they are liable to Americanize our roads whether the rules are good or bad, and the fact that they are endorsed by the United States is no reason why they should not be adopted in this country, if they are intrinsically good. Moreover, my hon. friend insinuated that this change was proposed because the manager of the Grand Trunk Railway is an American. I do not think this objection can be sustained. Mr. Hays is not the first American imported from the United States to manage our railways; there has been other precedents and no fault has ever been found with such precedents. But I think we may on this occasion cast aside these considerations; the subject is too serious to be treated in this way, and it must be treated on its merits. In this progressive age every citizen has a right to be heard whenever laws are proposed to be passed by the Parliament of Canada or the Government of the Dominion which would affect in any way his position in the country. The Government is quite disposed to act according to this view.

Mr. HAGGART. I have not seen the rules that have been approved, and I doubt whether if I had seen them, I would have been able to state whether they were right or wrong. These rules are dealt with by the head of the department in a very perfunctory manner, and they are sent to the experts of the department, and if approved, the Minister recommends them. But what I desire to remind the hon. Minister of especially, is that a deputation of trainmen waited upon me when I occupied the position of Minister of Railways. The trainmen heard that the rules were likely to be changed. They asked me, before the rules were changed or approved by the Governor in Council, to be allowed to present their opinions on the question. I gave that direct promise to the deputation—I remember it perfectly well. I sent to the head of the department, and instructed him that as regards any new rules, they should not be recommended to Council for approval until communication had taken place with the trainmen. I think in this case the trainmen should have been consulted before new rules had been put into operation.

Mr. SPROULE. There is one point worthy of consideration. The First Minister stated that no man except an expert could pass an opinion on this subject under consideration, and this was a reflection on some members of the House, especially the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace), who had expressed his opinion regarding them. If that is the case I submit that the parties who are best able to give the necessary information, and who are in fact experts, are the men doing the work, and they should have an opportunity of being heard before these rules are put into force. There are two objects sought to be attained in having these matters submitted for the approval of the Governor in Council. One is that they may not be lightly passed and injury done, where perhaps it was not intended to be done; and the other is that the parties interested may have notice and give their views and present their side of the question. In this case, as I have said, the operatives of the road are really the experts. The railway companies have had an opportunity of expressing their views, and so far as is disclosed in the discussion, the railway men have not had the opportunity of presenting their case. As the hon. member for Brockville stated, in these days we adjust our differences by conciliation and arbitration, and this certainly applies to differences of opinion existing between employers and employees. The great corporations lay down cast iron rules, and in these cases it is becoming more and more important that both sides should be heard before conclusions are arrived at and acted upon. Only the corporations and employers had an opportunity of presenting their views with respect to the wisdom or otherwise of some of the rules crystallized into law by Order in Council before they became law. This course should be followed in this and all other cases, and before these rules come into operation it is the duty of the Government to withhold them for the time so as to give this large class of the community an opportunity to express their approval or disapproval to the rules, in so far as they may affect their side of the case.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr Blair). I may perhaps say one word in view of the statement made by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart). I quite accept his recollection of what took place when he was Minister of Railways, and I have no doubt at all in my own mind that he is correct in that statement; but it is only fair to the deputy head, who was also the deputy under his administration, to say that he has no recollection whatever of having been asked to make any record, nor did he make any record of the request of the committee of trainmen made upon the ex-Minister of Railways. The deputy has sent me a memo. over his own signature, to the effect that there is no record whatever in the department of the railway employees having asked to be heard before any regulations or new rules should be approved. It is, therefore, quite clear that it has entirely escaped his memory as it did mine. If either of these gentlemen or any of them spoke to me on the subject I have no recollection, and in view of their statement I would be sorry to say they did not. The matter went through, as the ex-Minister of Railways has stated, quite in the usual way. I wish to be understood distinctly as by no means intending now or then to treat this matter lightly. I recognize its importance and I should be extremely well pleased at any time to afford the fullest opportunity to this body of men, or any other which may be connected with railroads, to be heard before any regulation is approved which may in the slightest degree affect their interests. I will be very glad indeed to afford every facility, as I always endeavour to do in the general discharge of the duties of my department, to any persons who wish to be heard with regard to any action which the department may take.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not know what took place between the late Minister of Railways and the permanent head of the department, but I think I introduced the deputation that represented the trainmen to the late Minister of Railways and Canals, and at that time it was supposed that the Grand Trunk Railway Company were about to issue new rules; indeed the deputation thought at that time that these rules had already been submitted to the Department of Railways. I remember very well the answer given by the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart), namely, that he had not yet heard of the intention of the Grand Trunk Railway to introduce new rules, but he made the promise in my presence that when the rules should be submitted to the department for approval, the committee of the trainmen would be notified and given an opportunity of presenting any objections which they might have to the adoption of these new rules. There is no necessity for my repeating the opinions which have so often been expressed here to-day as to the importance of the matter which has been brought to the attention of the House. Although the Prime Minister seemed to have been perhaps a little misinformed in regard to that, or perhaps misunderstood it, there has been no intention to decry Mr. Hays, the general manager of the Grand Trunk Railway, who though an American, has undoubtedly shown great ability in connection with the management of the road. That, however, has nothing to do with the question as to whether the men who are employed under him and whose lives are at stake, as well as the lives of the public in their hands, should be consulted upon so important a question to them and to the public. The Minister (Mr. Blair) states that he is quite willing to see that the men are consulted when such an important matter as this concerning their interests is in the hands of the department, but the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) will see that the rules have now been adopted by the department, and the point which was taken by the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule) was not answered, namely, the question as to whether the Minister now saw any means or any way of giving the trainmen or their representatives an opportunity of expressing their opinion, or of showing up what they believe to be deficiencies in the present rules. Nor did the Minister reply to the other point suggested by the hon. member for Hastings (Mr. Corby), who urged that greater time should be given for the men to become acquainted with the new rules. These are two points of importance and really they are the kernel of the discussion.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I prefer not making any definite statement on the subject, further than if it is possible to afford an opportunity for reopening the question, I shall be very pleased to do so.

Motion to adjourn negatived.

NOTICE OF MOTION—MR. HUGHES.

Mr. HUGHES. On page 7 of the Routine Proceedings of the House will be found a notice of motion of mine. My recollection is that on a previous occasion it was agreed with the consent of the First Minister that this motion should be dropped from the Order paper, but there appears to have been some misunderstanding about it. I would like to have the motion dropped as I want to speak on it when we go into Supply. If I cannot manage to get it out of the way, I will have to get around it.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am quite sure my hon. friend (Mr. Hughes) can manage to get around it and relying on his powers in that direction, I do not think it would be advisable to let the motion drop, because if we do it for one we will have to do it for others, and as we want to reach prorogation—
Mr. MONTAGUE.

An hon. MEMBER. When ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Whenever it pleases gentlemen on the other side of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. In order to hasten that desirable day I call the attention of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) to the fact, that three months ago an order of the House was passed on my motion, for all the papers in connection with the winter service between St. John, Halifax and the old country, and the return has not been brought down yet.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I am almost certain the papers are prepared. I will inquire immediately.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I call the attention of the Minister of Militia to the fact that he promised to bring down the papers connected with the shipment of supplies and ammunition to the Yukon, via Seattle or over the Grand Trunk Railway.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA (Mr. Borden). I thought, perhaps, the information could be given in Supply.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The understanding was that the Minister would bring down the information before we discussed the item in Supply.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA. Very well.

THE CASE OF MR. FREEMAN HALSTEAD.

Mr. HENDERSON. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to draw the attention of the right hon. the First Minister to an article which appears in the Toronto "World" of yesterday, and also in a great many other newspapers. It has reference to a matter which I brought to the attention of the Government about ten days ago, and in regard to which the hon. Minister of Marine (Sir Louis Davies) very kindly took action. The following is the article to which I refer :—

Halstead begins his Term.—Canadian Sentenced at Porto Rico.—Sent to the Penal Camp.

St. Thomas, Danish West Indies, May 23.—The British steamer "Aldborough," Captain Farrant, which arrived at Porto Rico on May 6, from Mothil, Scotland, reached this port from San Juan de Porto Rico yesterday morning. She reported that Mr. Freeman Halstead, Canadian, the newspaper correspondent for the New York "Herald," who has been sentenced to nine years' imprisonment for taking photographs of the fortifications of San Juan de Porto Rico, has been conveyed to a convict camp in order to undergo his sentence.

I draw the attention of the First Minister again to this matter, more particularly as the young man herein referred to, up to the year 1890 resided in the county which I have the honour to represent, and his friends live there still and have been in communication with me, asking me if the Government would be likely to take any further action than they did a week ago when they kindly made inquiry as to what the result of the trial in Porto Rico was. I therefore ask the right hon. the First Minister if his attention has been drawn to this matter, and if he thinks it possible that the Imperial Government may be communicated with, with a view of inquiring into the matter as to whether the sentence of Mr. Halstead is not altogether too harsh, and whether steps would not be taken, perhaps, to secure the release of this young Canadian who has so unfortunately got into the toils of the Spaniards at this critical period?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am sorry I cannot give my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) any information to-day further than we had the other day. My colleague, the Minister of Marine, has the matter in hand and is attending to it. My hon. friend may be quite sure that the Government will neglect no opportunity of giving him every satisfaction with respect to these important matters.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE HOUSE— GOVERNMENT BUSINESS.

Sir CHARES TUPPER. Before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, I would like to draw the attention of the right hon. leader of the House to the fact that while he was good enough to inform us that it is not the intention of the Government to bring down any further measures this session, he did not refer to another matter, which has an important bearing on the adjournment, and that is the slaughter of the innocents. What measures now on the paper does the Government intend to drop or proceed with?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). We have no intention of dropping any other measures on the Order paper.

COTE ST. LUO RIFLE RANGE.

Mr. MONK. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I feel it my duty to call once more the attention of the hon. Minister of Militia to the state of affairs existing at the Cote St. Luc rifle range. Perhaps the best way in which I can inform the Minister of what has taken place is to read a communication I have just received from a number of farmers who live in the vicinity of the range. It is as follows:—

The people of Cote de Liesse, residing in the vicinity of the military ranges of Cote St. Luc, request me to call the attention of the Government very earnestly to the manner in which they are treated by the military authorities conducting the military exercises at Cote St. Luc. The accident which happened last autumn, and an indemnity for which has not yet been paid, ought nevertheless to have been sufficient warning to the Government with regard to the exercises which are now going on in that place. Lt.-Col. Gordon and his confrère, Mr. Vidal, told us last year that they were surprised nobody had been killed on the Cote St. Liesse road, which is within range of the firing, and they were evidently right because last Saturday, the 21st May, the men who were working on Mr. Larose's farm—Mr. Larose is the man who was wounded last year, and is still unable to work—heard bullets whistling past their heads to such an extent that they had to give up work. They were about one arpent from the public road. What makes this more intolerable is the fact that the militia officers have warned the following farmers, Messrs. Mason, A. Groulx, B. Groulx, Jos. Larose (the victim of last year's practice), Art. St. Aubin, Hubert St. Aubin and others, that henceforth there will be exercises on the ranges twice a week—every Wednesday and Saturday, the whole day until 7 p.m.—and that during this time they will have to abstain going to their fields and have to keep their animals in their stables or otherwise the militia authorities will not be responsible for any accidents happening during these two days. This notice was given them in French and English, and they were told that this state of affairs would last until the fall. Now these farmers ask themselves what they ought to do. Can they remain in their fields during these two days or must they abstain from work during the two days mentioned in the notice? They desire to protest against this state of affairs, and wish their grievance to be brought to the notice of the Government.

I am sure that the hon. Minister is not aware of this state of affairs, and that when it is brought to his notice, as I deemed it my duty to do on the reception of this notice, he will see that such an intolerable state of things is put an end to at once.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). I am very much obliged to the hon. gentleman indeed for calling my attention to this matter. He is quite right in saying that he is sure I was not aware of any notice of this kind having been given. I was certainly not in possession of any information except what I gave the other day. I would ask the hon. gentleman to be kind enough to send me that letter or a copy of it, and I promise to bring the matter before the officers of the department at once.

CROW'S NEST PASS RAILWAY COMMISSION.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. I desire to ask the Government when the report of the commission appointed to inquire into the treatment of the workmen on the Crow's Nest Pass Railway will be brought down to the House?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am sorry that I cannot give any information to my hon. friend to-day on this subject. I thought I would have been able to do so, but I find that I have not the information at hand to-day.

BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. Have the Government yet taken any action with regard to the petition of the Bell Telephone Company for advanced rates?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). No; no action has been taken.

THE COLONEL OF THE 8TH HUSSARS.

Mr. FOSTER. I asked the hon. Minister of Militia a few days ago for the papers in connection with some charges against the Colonel of the 8th Hussars, and he said he would be able to give me an answer later. Has he yet made up his mind?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). I think that as the matter is not yet disposed of it would be very undesirable to bring the papers down now. I may tell my hon. friend that the position is this. Charges were made against the colonel commanding the 8th Hussars by the senior major. They went before the General, and the General reported that they had better not be proceeded with, and advised the senior major to that effect. The senior major did not see fit to accept that advice, and the matter now comes under my notice. I have not had time to look into it, but as soon as the session is through, I shall take the matter up.

Mr. FOSTER. I am very glad to hear my hon. friend say that. I made the inquiry largely in the interests of all parties and of justice, I think. I happened to have seen a copy of the charges, and they are charges which I think no militia officer should lie under. I do not know what motivated the course of the General commandant, but I know that the charges have been made for a considerable length of time, and, if I mistake not, arrangements were made at one time for hearing them. There was delay, however, and afterwards the suggestion was made by the General that the matter should be allowed to pass over, but I submit to my hon. friend that a charge of that kind ought not, in the interests of the force or any officer of the force, be allowed to be passed over.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Perhaps I ought to add that a certain limited investigation was made and that certain documents, some bank receipts, were asked for, and the General reported that, so far as he had gone, he thought the charges were not sustained and advised the senior major to withdraw them.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON.

I have only looked at the papers cursorily, but as I have said, the matter has now come before me officially and I shall look into it.

GALICIAN IMMIGRANTS.

Mr. DAVIN. I wish to call the attention of the Government—and I am sorry the Minister of the Interior is not in his place—to what seems a very serious matter respecting immigration to the North-west Territories. Attention is called to it in an article in the "North-wester" of 23rd May. The article is as follows:—

THE GOVERNMENT'S TREATMENT OF SETTLERS.

The trick which has been played upon the last batch of Galician immigrants by the officials of the Immigration Department here was a disgraceful one, and cannot be too strongly reprobated. The Galicians may be undesirable as settlers, but if the Government will insist on bringing them into the country it should at least keep faith with them and treat them, not as brutes, but as human beings. A large number of the last consignment came here with the intention of joining their friends already settled here at Edmonton, Dauphin and Yorkton. The immigration officials has formed a scheme for locating a colony at Saskatoon. Upon their arrival here, those who had decided to locate near their friends in the Yorkton, Edmonton and Dauphin districts, declined to be shipped off at the whim of the commissioner to Saskatoon. Taking advantage of the ignorance of these people, the commissioner led them to believe that their luggage was being checked to the destinations they respectively desired, and by this means induced them to embark on the train which was to take them to Saskatoon. It is not surprising that, when, failing to arrive at their desired destination, these people discovered the trick played on them, they were violently indignant, and that the immigration agent in charge of them had to appeal to the North-west Mounted police to protect him. It is altogether likely that the Government will have to pay the expense of bringing these people back to the districts to which they originally intended to go. It is altogether likely, also, that the Government, owing to its delay in locating them, will now have to provide them with provisions, as it had to do in the case in previous shipments; for, although these were alleged by the Immigration Department to be a more wealthy class than any previously sent out, they only possessed on an average $25 per head. But whether the people are ultimately located where they desired to go to, or whether, owing to their poverty, they are compelled to remain far from their friends in a district they dislike, they will not soon forget the dishonourable and high-handed manner in which they have been treated by the Canadian Government. This is, unfortunately, not the first instance of such conduct on the part of the immigration authorities. Last year, it will be remembered, similarly brutal treatment was employed to force settlers to comply with the whims of the Immigration Commissioner. On that occasion, they were locked in the cars and were brutally beaten back, and were otherwise maltreated when they attempted to escape. It will also be remembered what a pitiful tale of bad faith on the part of the Government's agents the Galicians who were starving at Yorkton last winter had to tell. They had been lured into immigration here by delusive promises as to what the Government would do in supplying them with stock, implements and provisions, in addition to giving them their homesteads. These unscrupulous methods on the part of the Immigration Department cannot fail to have an injurious effect upon immigration generally. If the reports of the way in which these settlers have been treated served merely to check Galician immigration, the consequences would not be very serious, for the country is better without these immigrants than with them. But foreign immigration agents will cite these breaches of faith and acts of high-handedness as illustrations of what all settlers coming to Canada may expect at the hands of the Government, and thereby many really desirable settlers will probably be lost to the country. It is high time that the Government should do something to reform the methods of the immigration service.

Sir, I think it is very desirable that we should have an answer from the Government as to the serious charge made in this article.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier. My hon. friend (Mr. Davin), I am sure, will agree that it is not possible for the Government to give any answer to a newspaper article, which may be true or may not be true, but upon which it is not possible for the Government to take any action. If the hon. gentleman will warrant that the statements made are accurate, the Government will at once inquire into the matter. But he will see that it is hardly fair to expect a statement with regard to an article which gives no names of officers impugned, or to expect the Government to take action upon such a vague statement. All I can say is that we have no report, so far, of such maltreatment of immigrants as is reported there to have been inflicted upon the Galicians. All the information we have received is that the Galicians are a most desirable class of immigrants.

DISMISSALS IN CAPE BRETON COUNTY.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I wish to call the attention of the right hon. the First Minister to a matter I referred to on Monday—the promise made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) to bring down to this House certain papers in connection with dismissals of officials in the county of Cape Breton. On the 10th May the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries promised to bring the information before the House. He said:

I shall have to give the reason in each particular case. I told the hon. gentleman that I would bring down the information in each particular case, and I will give it to him to-morrow. But to-morrow the information was not brought down, and on the 13th I called the Minister's attention to the fact, and the following discussion took place:—

Mr. McDOUGALL. I desire to call the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to papers he promised to bring down the day before yesterday. These returns refer to the dismissal of William James Dunlop, William Burke, Francis Quinan, Richard Hickey and Alexander Macdonald.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I will take a memorandum of what the hon. gentleman requires.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I desire also to ask the Minister of Customs and the Minister of Public Works if they will be good enough to give me information which I endeavoured to secure from them respecting the dismissals in their respective departments in my constituency. If these papers are brought down, the work of passing the Estimates will be facilitated.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). There is a memorandum in my department referring to this matter, and I will make inquiries.

On several occasions since I have been promised the papers and the right hon. the Prime Minister promised on Monday the papers would be brought down. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries has gone out of the country, and I would like to know who has taken charge of the department, and if I can get a promise that will be fulfilled.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I do not know how far the hon. gentleman's (Mr. McDougall's) question goes, and whether the memorandum I have here, furnished me by the department, covers the information desired. But I will send it to the hon. gentleman and he will be able to see whether it covers what he wishes, and if not, I will be glad to discuss the matter with him with a view to procuring the information for him.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I wanted a copy of the names of the officers dismissed in my county, the names of the parties appointed to their places, the reason for dismissal in each case, &c. I wanted, in fact, all the papers connected with these dismissals and appointments—the usual information in a return of that kind.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This memorandum gives the names of officials, date of dismissal and names of parties appointed, but there are no other papers. I will send the memorandum to the hon. gentleman and see how far it meets his wishes.

MILITARY COLLEGE EMPLOYEES.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Before the Orders of the Day are called, Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the Minister of Militia if he would kindly supplement a return he brought down with regard to the class of employees in the Royal Military College. I find that item "C," which in the Order of the House covers "the respective conditions of engagement as regards duration," and I do not find anything in this return on that point. In the absence of the Minister of Militia, the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries told me that he would call attention to the point.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries sent me a note informing me what the hon. gentleman wanted, and I handed it to my deputy, and supposed that the information had been sent in. I will make another inquiry to-morrow and see that the information is brought down.

Mr. McDUGALL. I would ask to be permitted to call attention of the hon. Minister to the statement just placed in my hands. There is no information here beyond that I gave to the House myself, as to the dismissal of these people. I cannot understand the Minister undertaking to trifle with the intelligence of the House by presenting such a return as this.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. McDougall) had better discuss the matter in fair terms. I handed him the memorandum sent me by the department. If it does not cover the ground, if the hon. gentleman will be good enough to give me the page of "Hansard" in which the information he asks for is described, I will undertake to give him the information to-morrow or tell him the reason why.

THE PLEBISCITE ON PROHIBITION.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher) moved third reading of Bill (No. 121) respecting the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the Bill is read the third time, I take the opportunity of again very shortly trying to impress upon the Government, as I tried on one or two occasions before, that the securing of a fair vote as well as the comfort and best interest of the electorate as a whole would be furthered if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher), for the Government, would give some definite information as to the time when this plebiscite is supposed to take place. My hon. friend may probably have noticed that there is considerable call for this from the public. The people think they should have information on this point. If this is to be a vote upon which any definite results are to hang, it is very necessary that there should be the fullest discussion of the questions involved, and that the electorate should not in any way be taken by surprise. I think it is also unfortunate if, now that the Bill has been put into shape, there should be any long delay. My hon. friend knows what it means in any election contest, and especially in a contest of this kind; so I hope that before we read this Bill the third time, he will be able to make a definite statement as to when the vote will be taken. I urge this in the interests of the temperance people particularly, who, I know, feel strongly on this point.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) wishes me to make a statement. I shall be glad to say a word, at all events. Since the Bill was passed through committee, the Government have received a number of communication with regard to the date of the vote. These communications expressed very little difference of opinion. The writers of all seemed to be perfectly satisfied with the statement which was made either by the right hon. leader of the Government or myself at the time the Bill was read a second time, viz. : that the election would take place as early in the fall as would meet the convenience of the people, consistent with their harvesting operations. I may say further that the Government will give due notice; so there can be no reason for uncertainty and no danger that the people will be taken by surprise. Notice of certainly six weeks or two months will be given, so that there may be abundant opportunity to prepare for the vote.

Mr. FOSTER. It should be at least two months.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think so myself; I will say two months. I think that this announcement ought to be sufficient and ought to meet the views of the hon. gentleman. He cannot expect, I am sure he does not expect, that we should to-day name a date, but the announcement I have made is entirely in accordance with the views of the Government.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I regret very much that I was unable to be present during the discussion which took place in reference to this important measure, and, therefore, have not had the advantage of knowing more precisely the position in which it stands. The proposal to take the opinion of the electorate of Canada is of course a very novel proposition. It is not one, I believe, that has ever before been resorted to in the Dominion of Canada; but I presume the Government have arrived at the conclusion that it was desirable to adopt this course after having given it very careful consideration. The question itself is surrounded with a great many difficulties, and my object in rising now to make a few observations, is for the purpose, if possible, of clearing away some of those difficulties. I am sure every member of this House will agree with me in the opinion that the public who are called upon at great expense and great personal inconvenience to deal with this question in the form in which it is proposed, should have some clear and definite idea of what the result of these proceedings is to be. The Minister of Justice has given the opinion, as I see it stated in the press, that it is in the power of every province in the Dominion of Canada absolutely to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors within such province. Under these circumstances the very important question arises, and one to which the present Government have given a great deal of attention in regard to other matters, of how far it is proposed by action of this Parliament to override and overrule the opinions of a province in regard to a question on which the Minister of Justice declares the legislature of any province now possesses the absolute right to act in such a way as to enforce prohibition within the bounds of that province. That is one question, and a most important question, and I would like to ask the right hon. gentleman who is leading the House, and the Minister of Agriculture who is in charge of this measure, to ask them for my own information and for the information of the country, how far it is proposed that the decision of the whole electorate of Canada shall operate to override the pronounced opinion in another direction of any particular province of the Dominion. Is it intended to coerce an individual province by the power of the Dominion Parliament on a question in which, as I have just said, the Minister of Justice has given his opinion that the legislature of a province possesses, under the law and under the constitution as interpreted by the Committee of the Privy Council, the right absolutely to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors within the bounds of that province. Another question, and one of vastly more importance, is that the Government should state to this House, as I think they are bound to state, for the information of the House and the country, under what conditions they propose to carry out by law of the Dominion Parliament, a verdict of the country when that verdict shall be rendered by the result of the plebiscite. Before the people enter into this struggle, both those who are strongly in favour of prohibition and those who are opposed to it, are, I hold, entitled to know what the result of the vote is to be, whether, in case a bare majority of the whole electorate decide in favour of prohibition throughout Canada, the Government, in that event, are prepared to say now to the country, as I hold they are bound to say whether they will carry that verdict into effect by legislation of this Parliament. I say that before the people are called upon to incur this great expense involved in a plebiscite, they should be informed whether they are endeavouring to accomplish something which will be bootless in the end, they should be informed how far, in the opinion of the Government, a favourable vote should preponderate, or whether a bare majority in favour of prohibition would be taken by the Government as a mandate to pass a prohibitory law. I hope I will not be thought by my right hon. friend to be unreasonable in asking from the Government an explicit statement, first, as to the question of provincial rights, as to the question of whether in case there is a majority in the whole Dominion in favour of prohibitory law, and a majority in any one province against it, it is intended to enforce such a law throughout the whole Dominion, to enforce it in a province which, by a large majority, may have declared its hostility to such a measure. The second question is, whether, in case only a bare majority supports a prohibitory enactment, the Government will take measures to enact a prohibitory law and enforce it, either throughout the Dominion, or only in such provinces as may, by a majority of the electors, have declared that they are in favour of it. A third question is, what must be the preponderating influence and how great the majority must be, in order to warrant the Government in undertaking to deal with prohibition. We are all, I believe, sincerely desirous of doing everything possible to promote the cause of temperance throughout the Dominion; we are all, I believe, fully alive to the great advantage that the propagation of temperance principles, the inculcation of such principles, would be to the whole country. But as my right hon. friend knows, there is the greatest possible difference of opinion upon the question of how far a prohibitory enactment is practicable, how far it would be effective in promoting the great object aimed at. I regret very much not having had it in my power to be present when this subject was discussed, and I must ask the House to excuse me in bringing this subject up at this late hour, although I have done so as briefly as possible, in order to present the reasons why I think the Government should make an avowal of their position on the points I have mentioned.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). My hon. friend, in putting to me the questions which he has just set forth, ventured the expression that I would not think him unreasonable. I am sorry to say, Mr. Speaker, that, with every desire to think well of my hon. friend, I consider his questions at this time most unreasonable, and he can scarcely expect me to answer them at this moment. My hon. friend said a moment ago that the object we all had in view was to promote the great cause of temperance. I believe this is the object which is animating every one of us, whether we are in favour of this Bill or not, whether we may vote in this plebiscite for prohibition, or whether we may vote against it. But my hon. friend will permit me to remark that on this occasion he is more Catholic than the Pope, and more prohibitionist than the prohibitionists. My hon. friend is asking me at this moment to answer questions which no one of the many temperance organizations who are actively engaged in promoting prohibition, have yet asked the Government to pronounce upon. I say to my hon. friend that the temperance societies, at whose instance especially this legislation has been brought forward, have, in all their representations upon this subject, agreed that the consequence of this vote should only be taken up to be dealt with after the vote has been taken. My hon. friend asks me what will take place in case another thing takes place, what will happen if the vote shows a small majority in favour of prohibition, and what will happen if, on the contrary, it shows a large majority against. Let me ask my hon. friend this question: What will happen if there is no majority at all? Of course the whole matter would drop. But that is one of the possibilities which we have to bear in mind when we are called upon to pronounce an opinion beforehand. The people may pronounce a verdict for or against prohibition. If they pronounce against it, the matter ends at once, and therefore there is no occasion to trouble ourselves with the consequences of such a contingency. But if there be a majority for prohibition, whether large or small, then it will be the duty of the Government to consider whether the time has arrived for the Dominion Parliament to place such an enactment upon the Statute-book. I have only this to say to my hon. friend, that, after the will of the people has been ascertained, if the Government does not then perform its duty, it will be open to my hon. friend to call the Government to a very severe account for failure to perform that duty. My hon. friend remarked that he was not present when the matter was discussed on a previous occasion. If he had been present on a previous occasion he would have remembered that the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) took the Government to task and contended that every promise made should be implemented and every responsibility fulfilled.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not take such a large order as that.

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman does not do himself justice. He has only to ask the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron), who on that occasion pronounced some words that he would have preferred not have heard him utter. When the time comes for the Government to perform its duty, after the expression of the public will has been given, then we shall be able to give an answer to the question of my hon. friend.

Mr. CRAIG. I suppose the great art of a politician is to be able to conceal his views. I am not a politician, at least I am not a politician on this question, and I do not think I am a politician on other questions, because I state my views very clearly to the House when I state them at all. I should have been glad if the Prime Minister had given his views as to the question of majority, as to what majority might lead to the introduction of a prohibitory law, if any majority could do so. The hon. gentleman has not done so;

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

but I will give my views, and I believe they will express his views also. We must admit that this question is a most difficult one to politicians. But it is a most difficult one without regard to politics, this question of prohibition, and men who are strong temperance men and who differ in politics agree that this is a somewhat difficult question to settle. There are three classes in the community who hold three different views on this question. The first class is opposed to prohibition, for different reasons. Some because they are interested in the business financially. Some because they do not believe in curtailing a man's liberty. I know strong temperance men who are nevertheless entirely opposed to prohibition in any sense, for they believe it is curtailing a man's liberty to say that he shall not drink so and so. Then there is a second class, those who would like to see prohibition, but do not think it practicable. I believe these people form a large class of the community. There is another class who say prohibition is right and is practicable. This class, and here I differ with the Prime Minister, who think prohibition is right and practicable, did not ask for the plebiscite vote; they have not asked for it, they do ask for prohibition. I am confirmed in this opinion by the result of a meeting held upstairs, when people belonging to this class declared they were not responsible for the plebiscite; that as it was offered to them, they should try to make it a success, but in their opinion the country is now ripe for a prohibitory law. The first class say the country is not ripe or ready for prohibition and that a prohibitory law could not be carried out; and another class says we do not know whether the country is ready or not. This latter class wanted the plebiscite, and in answer to their request the Government have granted the plebiscite vote. Some people, again, say that the Government are not honest in desiring prohibition, that this is another effort to get rid of the question; that the Government simply state they do not know whether the country is ready for prohibition or not; and they give a plebiscite so that the question will be put off a few years longer. We know that it has been put off for a few years in other ways previously, and now the present Government have a chance of disposing of the prohibition question in this way. I am going, however, to give my views plainly on the question, and I believe they are the views of the Prime Minister, although I do not expect he will tell us so. The question is, will this plebiscite vote settle the question of a prohibitory law? I answer that this depends to a very considerable extent on the largeness of the vote and the majority given. A couple of weeks ago I asked the First Minister what he would consider a majority, whether it would have to be a majority of the votes cast or a majority of the total votes on the list. Of course I did not get an answer, and I did not expect an answer, but I gave the hon. gentleman a chance to make a reply. The right hon. gentleman asked me about the point, as I said I held an opinion, and I gave my views frankly and fully. I said I believed that if any Government endeavoured to pass a prohibitory law it should be with a majority of the voters on the list in its favour. Some hon. members laughed and said that the Premier had roped me in, that I had let him out of the hole, and so on. Those are my views, however, and they have been my views for years, and I wanted to state them here so as to show that I am not sailing under false colours, either with the temperance people or others, and I wanted to show where I stand. In order to prove that these views have not been adopted by me lately, and have not been adopted since I rose to discuss the question, and not put forward at the moment, in the innocence of my heart, I wish to read a short extract from a speech I delivered on February 24th, 1896. I then said :

I claim that the prohibitory law must have a great majority behind it, not only of those who vote, but of all who have votes in this country. It was a great weakness in the Scott Act that it required for its adoption only a majority of the votes cast. It would have been far better if it had required a majority of the votes of all those entitled to vote, because in some cases very little interest was taken in the elections, and the majority of the vote was not represented. The law must have a great majority behind it to be effective. It is no use placing such a law on the Statute-book by a bare majority—in fact, I would be opposed to it. While I am in favour of prohibition, I do not want a law placed on the Statute-book unless there is a great majority in favour of it. It is claimed by those who have studied the question that the great majority of the people are in favour of such a law.

I have read that extract in order to show that in 1896, when I voted in favour of prohibition, I thought as I think now. I have adopted no new views to suit the present occasion, because those were the views I held then, and I expressed them plainly. I stated that I was satisfied that if only a small vote were cast, that fact would show the people did not want prohibition. I will now read a short selection from a newspaper, which is a strong prohibition paper, the Montreal "Witness." It appears in its issue of May 13th, 1898. It seems there was a meeting of the advocates of the plebiscite, and one of the speakers was Rev. Dr. Rose, and the "Witness" endorses the stand he took on that occasion. Hon. members will see the position he took from the extract I now read, which is as follows :

The prohibition rally at Knox Church last night was an inspiring occasion. There should, however, not have been either sitting or standing room left to spare in the church. Dr. Rose said truly that the people of Canada might rest assured that they would certainly get prohibition as soon as they wanted it, plebiscite or no plebiscite. They might think they wanted it, but when they wanted it enough to vote against their party for it ; when they were willing to risk the loss of friendship or of business rather than the loss of it ; when they were interested enough to be on hand when the question was at issue, then they would get it. If they did not want it they would not get it, plebiscite or no plebiscite. The Government only wanted to know the will of the people, and when it was assured of that it would certainly obey the mandate. We may rely upon it that politicians are watching every gauge of public opinion and drawing their conclusions, and those prohibitionists who are missing when heads are being counted cannot escape the responsibility of being to that extent counted in the negative.

That is just the view I take. If the people are in favour of prohibition, they will take the trouble to go to the polls and vote in favour of it ; if they do not want it, they will neglect to go to the polls and vote in favour of it. Unless a majority of the people expressly declare they want prohibition, it is no use for any Government to pass a prohibitory measure, and if a majority of the people do not vote in favour of it when they have the opportunity to do so, then I say that is proof they do not want it. If there is a substantial majority given in favour of adopting such a measure, then the temperance people may justly ask for a prohibitory law ; and that is where the whole question rests. If a majority vote in favour of prohibition, by giving a large majority when the poll is taken on the plebiscite, then I hold no Government should refuse to grant the temperance people such a law. I believe that, but I believe just as well that if we find a minority of the people voting in favour of prohibition, then, I believe, we will find no Government bringing in a Bill of this kind, and I would not be willing to support such a Bill under those circumstances. I approve of the plebiscite as an opportunity for the people to express their views on this question. I think it is a good thing to have the question brought to this point, and I give the Government credit for doing it at this time. Whether it is a political dodge or not I do not care. We have had this matter argued out over and over again. Some say the moment is ripe for prohibition, and some say it is not, but now we will have that question at all events settled by the plebiscite. I say, Sir, it will be settled in favour of prohibition if we find a majority of the people of this country going to the polls and recording their votes in favour of prohibition. I cannot do better than to read to the House the conclusion of that speech which I made on a previous occasion, because it expresses the sentiments which I have to day :

Let me say in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that I would like to see prohibition brought about. I believe it would be of great benefit to this country, but, Sir, I want to see it done intelligently. I want people to do it with their eyes open. I want it to be done with a proper guarantee that it will be enforced. I want it to be done with a due consideration of all the objections that are urged against it. I hold that it would be a great evil, and that it would retard the progress of the temperance cause for many years, if a prohibitory law were passed in one Parliament and repealed in the next. In order to prevent that, I wish that careful consideration should be given to this matter. As I said before, it should be done intelligently, and above all, it should be done with a great majority of the people behind it. If it is done in that way, and if the Bill is drawn carefully, and with a due regard to these considerations, then, Sir, it will be a success. I hope to see the day when such a prohibitory law will pass this Parliament; but unless it is such a law as I have indicated, I am not anxious to have a prohibitory law at all.

As I had not an opportunity of speaking on the second reading, I thought it only right that I should express my views at this stage of the Bill, because I am in favour of temperance; I am a total abstainer myself, and would do a great deal to see a prohibitory measure passed. But at the same time, as I have already said, I do not want to see a prohibitory measure placed on the statute-books if it is not going to be enforced, and I am satisfied it would not be enforced unless a majority of the people are behind it.

Mr. FLINT. I do not desire the Bill to pass its third reading without making a few observations in connection with some of the points raised in the discussion this afternoon. I quite agree with the line taken by the right hon. the leader of the House in declining to be drawn into a discussion of the contingencies brought before him by the hon. leader of the Opposition and his hon. colleague from York (Mr. Foster); because as every hon. member can see, any opinions expressed by so important a member of this House as the leader of the Administration upon collateral and subsidiary points in connection with the prohibition movement, would to that extent complicate and tend to cloud the operation of the public mind in dealing with the question which the plebiscite will bring before it. No doubt, that naturally and quite in consonance with human nature, there will not only be temperance feeling so-called, raised in connection with the further progress of this matter, but to a large degree party and political interests are necessarily mixed up in it, and it is advisable from every standpoint that to the very greatest possible extent political and partisan feeling should be removed from a question such as this. And, Sir, should the Government be so ill-advised as to sketch beforehand, either in greater or less detail, what they would do under certain contingencies, they would be placing a political and partisan weapon in the hands of both parties to be made use of to further complicate a question which all parties seem to have agreed should be kept as far as possible apart from these considerations. My own views have been given at great length in previous Parliaments upon the main features of this question, and those views I believe obtained their principal importance from the fact that they were supposed to represent, and I believe did in the main represent, the views of prohibitionists generally throughout the country. In regard to the course pursued by the Administration, it will be remembered that the precise method of deciding this question that has now been adopted was not in accordance with my own original idea. The question is two-fold. In the first place: is the country ready and prepared in a proper way to support any Administration and any Parliament which would bring forward and pass a prohibitory liquor law? The secondary question, and one of immense importance is this: is this Parliament ready to enact a prohibitory liquor law? And, Sir, while as the result of the plebiscite we may have evidence given us as to the state of the public mind throughout the Dominion, yet this second question is not by that necessarily settled. We may have evidence to a greater or lesser extent as to public opinion throughout the various provinces upon prohibition in an abstract way, but that does not give us evidence as to the position which Parliament, as a Parliament, will take in connection with it. The ground that I have always assumed since I began a careful study of this matter has been, that the proper method by which prohibition should ultimately crystallize into the form of law would be by public education, by the manifestation of the public will at parliamentary elections, and that in each electoral district throughout the Dominion, from time to time, there should be such an overwhelming manifestation of public feeling in favour of prohibition so that members of Parliament would be elected, pledged and determined to support and enact such a law. And although the public opinion which will be pronounced this autumn will be of great importance and value, yet the second question to a large degree remains unanswered. It may be possible that the majority of the whole electors will express their views in favour of a prohibitory liquor law as asked in the plebiscite question, and at the same time it is quite possible, and in my opinion highly probable, that the majority of Parliament may dissent from the view of the majority of the electors. In what position are we placed in that contingency? It would be just as reasonable to ask the Administration to say what it would do under such circumstances as it would to ask the Administration to say what it would do in the other contingencies sketched by the hon. gentlemen opposite. I think the duty devolving upon the prohibition party throughout the country at present is to take one step at a time, and to bring all their energy, all their enthusiasm, and all their strong faith in the sound principle of prohibition to bear in the approaching plebiscite campaign so as to produce upon the public mind, and upon the minds of public men, as far as that evidence can influence their minds, the strongest possible impression of the desirability of enacting a prohibitory liquor law. And, after the vote has been taken, then it will become the duty of Parliament as well as the duty of the Government—for I do not consider it to be solely a question thrown upon the shoulders of the Government, but a question to be faced by Parliament as a whole—to consider the relation in which they stand to this question, and to assume their duty as parliamentarians and as gentlemen desirous of properly representing public opinion, and so conduct themselves as to speak and vote in a manner to strengthen the hands of any Administration which may attempt to carry it through.

Mr. KAULBACH. The question of prohibition pure and simple, in my opinion, is very important, and should be discussed purely on its merits without party bias or restrictions, that the electorate throughout this Dominion may have the opportunity of reading and discussing all comments pro and con, so as to be better prepared to vote intelligently on the question when submitted to them at the polls. By some the plebiscite is spoken of as an excellent device to divert the energy of the temperance people from the Ministry for a time by way of postponement, till a something else can be thought of to further postpone—whether there is anything in it or not I cannot divine—but it is to be hoped the Government are sincere and would not tolerate a thought of that kind.

Both political parties are pretty well a unit on this great question now exercising the minds of the temperance body. I, as one, claim to belong to the temperance party, and am in sympathy with their effort thus put forth, and proud to be able to say I am sincere, having ever shown my allegiance to the cause by my living example, as well as by my devotion to its claims, and never expect to make a deviation therefrom by word or act, as I have seen and heard too much of the improper use of alcoholic drinks that intoxicate, and the effects on the part of those enslaved by the resistless and craving appetite for the abominable use of it. By the excessive use of strong drinks I know of domestic homes having been rendered desolate for the want of bread, and the other necessaries of life for home comfort, wives forsaken and almost driven to destruction, children neglected, families homeless, Christian and religious training and observances disregarded, homes devastated, life and property destroyed, law placed at defiance, and an untimely end, and a premature grave reached, and all through worthless and dissipated husbands lacking the strength to refrain from the use of strong drinks. I may say that there are cases of husbands by their example bringing wives and children to follow in the use of the abominable evil, whereby misery and the worst of trials have been encountered, and as a consequence crimes of the most heinous kind perpetrated, hence I would never think of doing anything by word or act but what would serve to promote and encourage this project of prohibition to a successful end, and remove the poison, if possible, except for medicinal purposes, entirely from reach.

The right hon. the leader of the Government admitted that he believed prohibition would be defeated in Quebec, which if the case is as he believes, then I say he should have been the last to think of giving Quebec a franchise with advantages over the other provinces of the Dominion, by means of which they, as voters, will have as many votes as they possess property qualifications, or, in other words, the prohibitionist voter in Nova Scotia will find his one vote for prohibition more than counterbalanced or offset by the three or four votes of some anti-prohibitionist in Quebec. I ask if this is right or just? I am not a pessimist, but I have a proof here that the Franchise Bill giving one province advantage over another, is radically unjust, and if it will work injuriously to the temperance party in this plebiscite vote, it must work unjustly in every other vote, Quebec having the advantage over the other provinces every time—cannot hon. gentlemen opposite see for themselves the injustice they are doing the other provinces and redress the wrong. Why not run on the principle one man one vote? Was the Franchise Bill placed by the Government in advance of the Plebiscite Bill with a view of defeating this measure? It certainly appears to me somewhat like it. I say, give the plebiscite a fair chance, and let us deal with the subject like men.

I cannot agree with the hon. Minister of Agriculture, who is the promoter of this Bill, and poses as the champion of the temperance cause, when he says that the subject of prohibition "is relegated to the people and to the hustings, where the question is to be threshed out," meaning that we are not supposed to discuss it here, but in the country and at the polls. I say we should express our views here in this Chamber, by a free and unbiassed discussion showing the sentiments of either side, the pros and cons.

We are told complications may arise of a constitutional character preventing prohibition being carried out, or such difficulties may offer as to bar the possibility of an Act of this kind becoming workable. If such condition of affairs is liable to occur, or if there is even a doubt, why not consult the Minister of Justice, or some other expounder of the law on constitutional questions. We have numbers of lawyers in this House and some very good ones, surely they should possess sufficient acumen to give a definite answer and thereby remove all doubt or uncertainty as to our course of action. Until such is done, what is the use, and where is the sense in our asking a vote at the polls, on the abstract principle of prohibition, or this initial step being taken now, at the cost of several hundred thousands of dollars, at least a quarter of a million of dollars, to the people of this country, probably get an affirmative answer, and then, perhaps, be told that there are grave constitutional questions involved, offering difficulties, and in consequence matters cannot proceed further. I say, face the difficulties first, let us hear what they are before the expense of a plebiscite is incurred, which appears to any reasonable mind as business, and we are then certainly in a better position to fight it.

We have had expressions of opinion, from hon. members in this Chamber, that we should meet this question fairly and squarely, in a business-like manner, not in a fault-finding spirit, in a measure, but free from all friction and political bias, and free and unfettered from all complications of a constitutional character as referred to, then I feel the temperance body in fighting this battle would have an easy victory, as they would be inspired with the feeling of having right on their side and fighting for a noble and just cause, which if entered into with indomitable courage and perseverance, must result satisfactorily and meet all our expectations.

I must certainly, and in all sincerity say, that I consider the Government are taking an expensive and unwise course in calling for a plebiscite now, without first satisfying themselves as to any and all complications and difficulties that may present themselves in the effort to bring about the desired end.

We have had plebiscite appeals in a number of the provinces, Nova Scotia included, also a Royal Commission throughout this Dominion, both at a heavy cost, without anything having been accomplished, and now we are told we are to have a plebiscite again in the face of a refusal from the right hon. the leader of the Government to give a straightforward answer to a direct question, as to "whether the country can have the assurance given them, that if the plebiscite is taken and results in showing a majority for prohibition, the Government will at once bring forward a prohibitory Bill and submit it to Parliament next session." This question having been submitted by the ex-Minister of Finance to the right hon. the leader of the Government, was answered as follows, in these words:—

The Government, when they have the will of the people before them, will have to take such steps as will give effect to the will of the people. There is the question of revenue to be considered; there is also the constitutional question to be considered; there are different questions which will have to be considered.

Now, in the face of an answer of this sort, so indefinite, I ask, is it honest to incur all this trouble, all this expense to the tune of several hundred thousand dollars, and then be told that it cannot be carried out? I say, remove the difficulties first, or satisfy all minds that they can be overcome, and then face the question squarely like men.

Or put the straight question of prohibition now squarely to this Parliament, yeas and nays. Or dissolve the House and appeal to the people and let the answer come in that way. This is economy and business as well. We are not even told, if this plebiscite means the majority of the electors of the entire Dominion, or only a majority of the votes polled to decide the question. Surely the country is entitled to better satisfaction than they have at present. Now, in conclusion, may I venture to ask as to whether it would not be well for the hon. Minister in charge of this Bill to use the word "alcoholic" cider, instead of "cider." I do not desire to unduly press this suggestion, neither do I wish to eliminate the word cider from the Bill as one of the restrictions, but I am impressed with the idea that if this change is not made, or the distinction shown, that it will be the means of defeating the object intended.

A very large number of the farmers and orchardists in Nova Scotia manufacture cider from the pure juice of the apple, without any adulteration, or additions of alcohol, and I feel that if the hon. Minister is sincere in his effort and really wishes the plebiscite a success at the polls, he will accept my suggestion and make this change.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

SONS OF ENGLAND BENEFIT SOCIETY.

Mr. BERTRAM moved that the House resolve itself into committee on Bill (No. 122) to incorporate the Supreme Grand Lodge of the Sons of England Benefit Society.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). Before this Bill is passed, the attention of the House should be drawn to the circumstances under which it comes before us. This is a Bill to incorporate a fraternal society which is conducting what is called the assessment system of insurance. Some years ago, I believe, before I had the honour of being a member of this House, there was considerable discussion from time to time on the subject of assessment insurance. I believe that some privileges were granted to these companies in former years, which perhaps would not be granted to-day. However that may be, I think that it was in 1895 that an amendment was made to the Insurance Act, which provided that hereafter any of these companies seeking incorporation should be obliged to make a deposit and to come under the provisions of the insurance law with respect to inspection, &c. From that time up to the present, I believe, no company has been incorporated for this purpose. One company applied to Parliament for incorporation, but, in consequence of restrictions placed in its charter, the Bill was withdrawn. This year two companies made application, one the company named in the Bill now before us, and the other named the Ancient Order of Foresters. When these Bills came before the Committee on Banking and Commerce there was very considerable discussion, and the whole subject of assessment insurance was threshed out at considerable length. My own judgment, after consulting with the Superintendent of Insurance, was that it would be good policy not to press either of these Bills upon the House this session. There has been one or two disastrous failures of assessment companies during the last two years, and these two, I think, have tended to create a wider interest in the question. I submitted to the committee that it might be a wise policy to defer action on these Bills for the present, in the hope that we could agree upon a Bill governing all such companies.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The other Bill has been passed?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes. The committee thought it best not to wait but to deal with the Bills on their merits. In the case of the first, the Ancient Order of Foresters, the promoters of the Bill agreed to certain amendments which were suggested by the insurance department, and which, though they did not make the Bill entirely satisfactory to the department, did remove some of the objections urged against it. The most important amendment was that the promoters agreed that, as respects the new business of the company, the rates charged should be sufficient to create a reserve according to the standard accepted by the insurance department. As respects the existing business, they were free to carry it on, on the rates previously agreed upon; but, as to the new business, they bound themselves by the amendment with respect to creating a sufficient reserve. With that amendment and others of less importance, the Bill was passed. It was proposed that the same conditions could be attached to this Bill. But the promoters of this Bill were not prepared to accept the same conditions and so the Bill does not stand exactly on the same footing. Though I should prefer that the whole matter should be deferred for another year, in the hope that we could come to a general understanding on this matter, yet, as the other Bill is passed, I would be prepared to support this if the same amendments were made in it as were made in the other. But I am informed that the promoters say they would rather withdraw the Bill than accept these amendments. I desire to state exactly how the matter stands, so that those who were not present in committee will understand that this has been a matter of considerable importance, and that the Bill we are asked now to pass is not exactly on the same footing as the Bill that was passed a week or two ago.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I regret that the Minister of Finance has offered a protest, though a somewhat mild one, to the passage of this Bill. We are all, I am sure, very willing to join with the Government in any effort which they may make to make investment in insurance, of whatever kind, as safe as it can possibly be made. I was one of those who sought, some years ago, to take away from one of the insurance companies the privilege of making a wider range of investments than is allowed to life insurance companies under the general Act. I regret to say that those of us who took that view were unsuccessful at that time. It must, however, I think be apparent to the House that a distinction must be drawn, and that a distinction is drawn in the public mind, between the benevolent and benefit societies and regular life insurance companies, which take a large amount of money from the public. This is a different class of insurance. It is confined more especially to the middle classes of people, to the masses of the country, if I may say so. Perhaps, when we come to look at it in that light, we should be willing that the strings should not be drawn quite so closely around this association as they are around the regular life assurance companies, to which I have already referred. Those of us who are supporting this Bill only ask that it receive the same sort of treatment extended to other associations of the same kind. We only ask that this society which, as the hon. Minister of Finance knows, is already doing business in the province of Ontario under a provincial charter, shall not be placed at a disadvantage in competition with other societies of that kind. The hon. gentleman has stated that this Parliament has already incorporated societies of this class. If I remember correctly, the Independent Order of Foresters was incorporated by this Parliament a few years ago, I think, in 1889.

The Orange Order was incorporated in 1890; the Catholic Mutual Benefit Society was incorporated in 1893, and the Woodmen of the World was incorporated the same year. Now, these societies are practically the same sort of societies as the one that seeks incorporation under this Bill, and to place any greater restriction upon the Sons of England than is placed upon the societies to which I have referred, as the hon. Finance Minister knows, and as this House will clearly appreciate, will be to place this society at a disadvantage as compared with their competitors in this class of insurance. It is true that in 1895 an amendment to the Insurance Act was made requiring a deposit of $50,000 with the Government. But the hon. Minister of Finance knows that that was found quite unworkable. And, as he is well aware, the Foresters' Bill was put through Parliament this year with that requirement left out. I am quite aware that it is the intention of the Government, as announced by them, to introduce a general Bill, which they have promised in a short time, under which all these companies shall be allowed to operate. That is a wise policy, and I hope that the Government will introduce that Bill at the earliest possible moment. I hope that it will throw around these societies the greatest possible safeguards with regard to the investments in them of the small funds of the people who use them as insurance companies. I am sure that when the hon. Minister of Finance introduces this Bill, he will find that those who are supporting as well as those who are opposed to the Bill now before us, will join him in an honest, conscientious effort to make that Bill as perfect as possible, in order that all these safeguards may be thrown around these societies. But, Sir, until that Bill is introduced and all the societies are compelled to operate under it, I want to press the claim, and I think it is an equitable one, and one which will appeal to the sense of justice of this House, that this society should have no disability placed upon it that is not placed upon any society with which it competes in the insurance business. Now, with regard to the clause which the hon. gentleman refers to as placed in the Foresters' Bill, he states that a clause has been placed in that Bill which will compel them, on new insurance, to charge the rates of the old line companies. To my mind, you cannot justly compel a society of this kind to take that jump in a day.

There is no doubt that these societies would gradually work up to that standard, they are going up as the years pass by, and as experience shows that it is safer to come nearer to the standard of rates which the old line companies have adopted. But I submit that it is impossible to compel a company to make such a change and to make it successfully in a day, more particularly when they are entering into competition every day with societies that are operating under charters which have no such clauses, and, therefore, which have a great advantage over this society which has such a clause in its charter. Now, Sir, this company will go on and do business, whether this Bill passes or not. It does business in the province of Ontario, it will continue to do such business, and to my mind no public good will be served by placing this society under disabilities under which other societies are not placed. I hope the Minister of Finance will not press his objection to the Bill. In it are interested a very large number of people who belong to that society, who look to it as their national society, and who are exceedingly anxious that this Bill should pass: they largely take the risk themselves, and they are doing a magnificent work in Canada. Having in view particularly the fact that the Government intend shortly to introduce a general Bill under which all these societies shall be compelled to work, I think this Parliament could very well afford to pass the measure now, and let them go upon the same plan as others when such a Bill is introduced.

Mr. HEYD. I desire to say a few words in connection with this Bill, and I do not want to occupy any more of the time of the House than is absolutely necessary. Sympathizing, as I do, with these benevolent institutions, and believing that there is a large field for their successful operation, the remarks that I will make are not at all in an antagonistic spirit. But I desire that the benevolent institutions that go into the business of life insurance should go into it at least partially equipped to carry out their obligations successfully. Members of the House that are not members of the Banking Committee, are probably not aware of the animated discussion that took place before that committee when the Ancient Order of Foresters' Bill was before them. That was a society which, from a financial standpoint, is much stronger than the one that now seeks a Dominion charter. Their rates were materially higher, and if it was ever safe to grant a charter to an institution, it was safe for the Government to grant one to the Ancient Order of Foresters. The men who had charge of that Bill were exceedingly anxious to raise the standard of their institution to a safe basis and, therefore, in order to get the assent of the Government, they were willing to accept certain modifications of their Bill whereby they agreed to raise their monthly rates so as to make the sum that was likely to go to a deceased person, at least assured. Therefore, their Bill, which is almost similar to the one which is now before us, was amended in clause 10 to read:

Will accumulate and maintain a fund which shall never be less than the reserve or re-insurance value of such policies or certificates computed according to the standard provided for in the Insurance Act.

Now, at that time the Ancient Order of Foresters were assessing their members at the rate of $10.92 per annum, whereas this present society assesses its members only $8.04. At another age they assessed their members at $15.24, where the Sons of England only assess theirs at $9.60. At the age of 40, they assessed at $18.24, where the Sons of England only assess their members at $11.28. At the age of 44 the Ancient Order of Foresters assessed their members at $21 a year, where the Sons of England only assessed their members at $11 a year. The result of that is that at the end of a man's expectation of life the Ancient Order of Foresters would, at the age of 25, have a sum of $1.124 for the security of that individual; at the age of 35, they would have $1.031; at the age of 40, $1.011; at the age of 44, $982, subject to the expenses of management. These high figures did not, however, cause the Government to feel justified in conceding to their request, and before they could get the Government's assent they had to consent to have the rates materially raised. Now if we compare the conditions that exist in this society that now seeks incorporation with those that exist in the Ancient Order of Foresters, we find that at the age of 25, at the end of a man's expectation of life, there are $828 waiting for him; at the age of 35, $649; at the age of 40, $631; at the age of 44, $525, when the obligation is that they are to pay this man $1,000. These figures are also subject, I presume, to working expenses. It is also true that the Sons of England can make three additional assessments: they are not compelled to do so, but they may do so, and if they do that, they will have, for a man aged 44, at the end of his expectations, $636, where they promised to pay him $1,000. And yet it is said that we are arbitrary if we do not consent to give them a Dominion charter in order that it may be used in the outlying provinces to further the aims of their institutions. Now, I am a sympathizer with benevolent institutions, I recognize the good they have done in the past and that they will do in the future, if they confine themselves within proper and safe lines. But when any benevolent institution starts out with the assumption that they can pay a man $1,000 at the end of his expectations of life, and only collect $636 from him, they are bound ultimately to fail in their objects. Therefore, I look with considerable alarm at the attempt made to get Dominion incorporation to continue such a state of things as I have enumerated. It has been said that the benevolent societies cannot successfully carry on a life insurance business. I do not think that is true. I do not see why, under a proper and economical management, they could not successfully compete with the ordinary life insurance societies of the day, because their expenses are so much smaller than those of the ordinary life companies that they are able to reduce materially the rates they charge. The last speaker gathered from the remarks of the Minister of Finance that the Government will compel these societies to raise such a sum as to equal that of life insurance companies. That is not at all necessary, because the expenses of life insurance companies are so immeasurably larger, that a benevolent society can carry on its work of life insurance under their ordinary management at a much cheaper rate, and, therefore, they can successfully carry on the business of life insurance. I have looked over the returns of the various Canadian life insurance companies doing business in Canada, and I find that out of ten companies there are only two that do not expend more than 20 per cent of their entire premium incomes, one spends 25 per cent, two spend 30 per cent, one spends 33 per cent, two spend 40 per cent, one 42 per cent, one 43 per cent, and one 48 per cent of their entire premium income in the management of their business. Now, if a benevolent society can conduct its affairs in a more economical way, they can come up to the requirements of the Government without at all levying such a large annual assessment upon their members as is levied by the ordinary insurance company. I think that the Sons of England are engaged in a good work, a patriotic work, but it is doubtful whether they are justified in asking us to incorporate their society in order to do business in the various provinces of the country when we know, and they know, that they are not securing from its members an adequate sum of money to enable them successfully to carry out their objects. How a society can honestly and consistently induce members to join it and promise to pay them $1,000, when they only have $500 to do it with, is something I cannot comprehend. Because the Ancient Order of Foresters were willing and consented to have their annual premiums raised in order that they may be absolutely safe, I vigorously supported their Bill. They consented to accept the amendment suggested by the actuaries of the department, and having done that, they put their society upon a safe basis in so far, at least, as all their future business is concerned. Is it safe for us now, when we have taken the first step forward in the right direction, to go back to the old principle that we know is wrong, though it has obtained for the past few years? It has been urged here to-night that because the Government has given a Dominion charter to several institutions, therefore, it is right that it should be extended to this one. The question, I fancy, for us to consider is, was it right for the Government in days gone by to give charters to institutions that could not implement their promises? And if it was not right, is it right for us to continue that custom to-day? If they have engaged in the past in a business that is likely to prove unprofitable to the people who have identified themselves with these societies, and we are trying to provide a remedy, is it a desirable thing to go back to a condition of affairs that we now condemn? Would it not be far better for members of the House to be governed by the opinion of the actuaries of the department in this particular case rather than oppose the provision to establish insurance in connection with these benevolent societies on a surer financial basis, and insist that all companies securing Dominion charters must come up to that standard? It is very easy to say that the Government intend to bring in a general Bill to regulate these benevolent institutions. When the Government realizes that over half a million members are interested in these societies, that it is not very easy to bring in a Bill without giving great offence, they will hesitate about bringing a measure which would have the effect of increasing existing rates. The Government have already adopted these measures in the case of the Ancient Order of Foresters, and they have established a precedent in that case; and it would be wise to insist that after this time all societies obtaining Dominion charters, shall at least submit to the rates laid down for the Ancient Order of Foresters to make them absolutely safe. Those who contend that the Government are properly insisting on raising the rates so as to make the institution safe, will be met with the reply that other societies are doing business at half the rates, and therefore those societies will secure all the new members while they do not get any. We cannot help this, and are we going to throw any obstacles in the way of these societies being brought up to the basis which the actuaries of the department consider safe, and at the same time allow other societies to do business at half rates? I regard all these benevolent societies, unless they change their methods, as absolutely unsafe, and it is necessary they should be placed under Government control. I look with dread on the fact that after having established a precedent, the next application should result in the House falling back on the old methods adopted and returning to the old rates, a course of action which is bound to lead to disaster. Many of the societies have failed because they have been doing insurance by taking five cents where they promised to pay ten cents, and it is impossible to manage business successfully on such a basis. Hampered as these institutions are by brotherly love and friendly feeling, probably the medical examination is not so rigorous as that of other life insurance societies, and it is only by imposing reasonable rates that the insurance can hope to be paid when death overtakes one of the members. I take it that immediate claims will certainly be paid, but that within a very few years such institutions must come to an end, and I hope the House will put its foot down so as to prevent incorporation of societies by the Dominion to provide life insurance, unless they possess financial backing which will enable them to carry out and fulfil their obligations. It may be said that the action suggested will prove a great hardship to this institution now under consideration. It will not be a hardship. On the contrary, it will be a benefit, for they can no longer induce, I will not use the word entrap, people to join the society to obtain a thousand dollars when they can practically only calculate on paying five hundred. The institution can still go on and do business under its provincial charter as in days gone by, but it will not have the stamp and imprimatur of the Dominion Government. These societies will not be able to say, as no doubt has been done in days gone by, that they have a license from the Dominion, and that means something to the minds of ordinary men. To those familiar with legislative matters, it does not convey very much, for such men know how little it means by a Dominion charter, but by obtaining such charter people are led to believe that their interests are absolutely secure, that the Government are looking over these organizations and are watching the provisions made to carry out the company's obligations, when nothing can be further from the law. What we desire above everything else is to protect our families, and if we remove all the safeguards we are unable to do so. I trust, therefore, the House will stand by the actuaries of the department, and unless the hon. gentleman consents to adopt the amendments, which were practically enforced on the Order of Foresters, and probably not unwillingly on their part, the Bill should be permitted to stand over till another year; and if the Government bring in a general Act, which they claim they will be prepared to do, and which probably they wish to do without recognizing the difficulty and hostility it will meet with and the serious consequences that will result from an interference with the business of 500,000 or 600,000 ratepayers, then this Bill may be proceeded with. In the meantime these companies, which are endeavouring to secure business at one-half rates as compared with those of other companies, are bound to come to grief. I understand that already some of these institutions are taking steps to increase their annual assessment so as to make them more safe than they are now, but until they come up to the standard fixed by the Government with respect to the Ancient Order of Foresters, and which was forced on that order a few days ago, this result will not be obtained. We have established the precedent that all the institutions should come up to the standard. If we depart from it now, we may as well open the door wide and let these societies come in and do business when and where they will, whatever results may ensue.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I want to say a word or two in regard to the point taken by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Heyd). I was not present during the discussion of this particular Bill in the Banking and Commerce Committee, but I was present at the discussion of the Bill of the Ancient Order of Foresters. After very considerable debate it was agreed by the committee that the provision to exact $50,000 of deposit might be waived in the case of that society, but at the same time as it had been clearly and distinctly stated by the actuaries of the department that the terms on which they were proposing to issue insurance were such that they could by no possibility secure the payment of the insurance for the sum proposed, unless in the event of a very large number of lives lapsing, it was decided that they should be called upon, if required by the actuaries of the department, to raise their rates to such a point as would afford reasonable security to the parties insured. That proposition, after a good deal of debate, was accepted, as the hon. gentleman has stated, by the Ancient Order of Foresters. Now, as I understand it, all the Finance Minister asks is that these two Bills apparently for precisely the same object and purpose, shall be placed on the same footing. I cannot admit it is of the slightest importance in dealing with this matter that bad Bills have under former Administrations or in former sessions of Parliament been permitted to pass this House. The duty of the House in this matter is plain and simple. It is to provide, so far as it can, that every society which receives the sanction of a Dominion charter shall be capable of fulfilling the promises which it holds out to the insurers. That is an exceedingly rational and reasonable position to take. I have not heard any hon. member deny the truth of the calculation submitted by the Department of Insurance, though it went the length of stating that the rates demanded by this particular society could not, in the nature of things, afford a sufficient and satisfactory guarantee. We are doing no injury to these gentlemen by asking them to conform to the obligations placed on the Ancient Order of Foresters, on the contrary. My hon. friend contends that we are endeavouring to do the greatest possible service to every man who is a member of this society. There is no use disregarding this simple fact, that it is entirely impossible, unless a sufficient rate is levied, to give adequate security to the members of the society. I am perfectly aware that these societies have most excellent objects, and they can afford to do insurance at considerably cheaper rates than old line companies because they are not put to anything like the same expense in securing business.

We do not propose, nor does the Finance Minister ask the House, to insist on the rates paid to the old line companies. All he desires is that such rates shall be required from this society as shall make the insurance safe. The House will do well to remember that there is no sort of doubt that any society which obtains a charter from this House will be believed by the great body of people, in spite of any clause inserted in the Act or any addition made to the policy, to be specially under Government inspection, and it is in part for the purpose of securing this advantage that these companies come before this Parliament. This society can go on operating in Ontario, and when my hon. friend the Finance Minister has time to introduce a general Bill applicable to these societies, we will be able to give them incorporation under a general Dominion charter. But, in the meantime, I put these two points to hon. members on both sides of the House, because this is in no respect a party question: we have within the past few days inserted certain clauses in the Bill respecting the Ancient Order of Foresters, and the House having done that within the past week or ten days, is it prepared to go back on its own record and pass another Bill containing different clauses and powers placing this particular society on a totally different footing? It seems to me that would be a very injudicious and indiscreet mode of legislating, and the House must pay some regard to the declaration of my hon. friend that the actuaries of the department, having carefully examined into the matter, declare that the rates now exacted by the society are not sufficient to guarantee safety to the insured. The House will take a serious responsibility on itself, in my judgment, if they persist after that declaration, in refusing to so amend the Bill as to put it on all fours with the Bill of the Ancient Order of Foresters, which this House has passed.

Mr. TAYLOR. Because one act of injustice has already been done that is no reason why the House should do a second injustice. The hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) and others who have spoken in opposition to this Bill speak of it as an insurance company, but we do not view it in that light. It is a mutual benefit society. I belong to numbers of such societies, and we pay a certain sum per year, and they are good while they last. The hon. Minister of Finance said that two or three of these companies have already met with disaster. Be it so: no person lost anything. My hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) may insure his house in a fire company, he pays his insurance by the year, and at the end of the year if his house does not burn he is glad of it, but his money has gone all the same. We go into these mutual benefit societies, we have the association of the society, we pay a certain sum monthly and if during the year we happen to drop off our feet, they receives $1,000. If we do not die, then at the end of the year our money is paid and we are alive and we are glad of it. That is the way the great majority of people who go into such societies look upon the matter. We do not look upon it as providing a life insurance for all time to come. We look upon it as doing mutual good, and were it not for such societies, many a poor widow and family would be left helpless on the world, and the standard insurance companies would have stood on one side because none of the mechanics and working people would be able to avail of them. I say that the Government would do an injustice to these benefit societies by bringing them up to the standard of regular life insurance companies, and they will be doing an injustice to the Sons of England if they do not allow them to operate in the other provinces of the Dominion as well as in Ontario.

Mr. CLARKE. The Minister of Finance has stated very correctly and fairly the position that was assumed before the committee and the action that was taken there. I heartily agree with what has been said respecting the advisability at the earliest possible moment of passing a general Act and compelling all these assessment organizations to come under its operation. One of the advantages that will obtain, if this Act is passed to-night, is that the members of this organization place themselves publicly on record as being agreeable to come under the operations of this general Act whenever it may be passed.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is expressed in the Bill.

Mr. CLARKE. That clause is embodied in the Bill. If the House in its wisdom declines to pass the Bill this organization will go on doing business. It is not contended that there will be any increase made in the rates that are now charged, and our position will be no worse at the end of the 12 months than it is to-night. At the same time it is hardly fair to say, that because the Ancient Order of Foresters accepted the suggestion of the superintendent of insurance, therefore the gentlemen who have charge of this Bill should do the same thing or the Bill should not carry. It was distinctly stated before the committee that these gentlemen had no authority to bind the organization which they represent, that a meeting of their supreme body would of necessity have to be called and this proposition of the inspector of insurance submitted to them, while in the case of the Foresters, the gentlemen in charge of that Bill were in a position to act for their organization. I say deliberately, that I think the Ancient Order of Foresters were wise in accepting the suggestion of the superintendent of insurance and agreeing that in all future business they shall write a sufficient fee shall be charged to enable them to put up the reserve. But, Mr. Speaker, when the Ancient Order of Foresters first came to Parliament they brought down a similar Bill to this, and it was because the gentlemen having charge of the Bill were empowered to act for the society that they were forced, as my hon. friend from South Brant (Mr. Heyd) says, to accept the suggestion made by the superintendent of insurance. I believe that this organization whose Bill we are now discussing charges a higher rate than any single organization—with the exception of the Ancient Order of Foresters—which has received special recognition from this Parliament in the past. Taking into consideration the amount of insurance the Sons of England have written their position is sounder and stronger than almost any other mutual benefit organization in existence, and if they are given this Act of incorporation, with a clause by which provision is made that they will come under the general Act when it is passed, I am satisfied they will raise their rates as the other organizations have done, to a standard sufficient to enable them to put up the reserve. It seems to me that this society is not asking anything unreasonable when it asks for the same legislation that has been passed time and again by this Parliament and made applicable to friendly benevolent associations similar to this. The work done by this society has been most commendable, and it will be strengthened in its efforts by this Act of Parliament. Its members will be given a warning that when the general law to be passed in the near future by this Parliament comes into operation, they shall come under the operation of that Act, and they will commence to prepare themselves at once for the necessary increase of rates which will have to be made in view of the contemplated legislation. The matter was fully discussed before the Committee on Banking and Commerce, and I am safe in saying that the feeling of that committee was, that in view of the intention to introduce a general law, and in view of the fact that privileges such as this society asks for have been granted time and again by the Parliament of Canada, it was not unreasonable to give them similar privileges. I hope that under these circumstances the House will see fit to advance the Bill a stage to-night, because, knowing as I do many of the gentlemen connected with the Sons of England in an official capacity, I am satisfied that they will be the first to avail themselves of the general law and to increase their rates to enable them to live up to it. I hope this Bill will pass to-night.

Mr. BERTRAM. The arguments of the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Trade and Commerce show the necessity for a general law being brought in at the earliest possible moment, but until that is done, it is my opinion that all these benevolent societies should be placed on the same footing. A number of other benevolent societies throughout the Dominion are able to do business under a Dominion charter, and the Sons of England society are simply asking to be at liberty to do business on the same basis. No remedy can be found to deal with societies of this nature until a general law is passed, and until that is done the Sons of England should be allowed the same privileges as other fraternal societies throughout the Dominion.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am going to vote for this Bill, and I wish to offer a few remarks to the House. I agree with what my hon. leader (Sir Richard Cartwright) said with regard to protecting the people in insurance companies, yet I disagree with him in one material point in reference to the legislation which is now asked for. I object altogether to having these benevolent societies coming under the Insurance Act so far as making a deposit is concerned, for we know well that their rates are not sufficient to provide for the reserve required by companies that are licensed. While they are under inspection by the department, yet when they are issued a license, every one who knows anything at all about insurance knows that these companies are not charging a sufficient rate to provide the reserve. As I said in committee, I do not believe that any of these associations that have been incorporated by this Parliament should be allowed to do business under the General Insurance Act. But, Sir, having incorporated these companies, I agree with the hon. gentlemen who have spoken, that there is no reason why they should not be allowed to do business, and yet I differ from the Finance Minister and his department, as I do not think they should be issued a license to do an insurance business and allowed to make any deposit, because as my hon. friend put it, the Act of incorporation itself gives them a standing in the country that they should not have, but it makes it a great deal worse when they receive a license to do business, and are able to say to the public that they have a deposit and are in the same position as ordinary and regular insurance companies, when they are not. Under all the circumstances I propose to vote for this Bill.

Mr. McMULLEN. I do not think that we ought to go on chartering companies of this kind simply because we have done so in the past. We have an inspector of insurance, to whom we pay a large salary in order to furnish us with information on the question of insurance companies, which will enable this House to act in the general interest, and we ought to be very careful before we legislate contrary to the information thus obtained. The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) argued that these companies only charged small premiums, which in reality only covered the risk for the year, but we know that there are many who contribute from year to year and look forward to their heirs obtaining a certain amount at their death, and we should be very careful to do what we can to prevent such people being disappointed. We know what great hardships have resulted from the collapse of the Massachusetts Mutual Insurance Company, which absorbed in its downfall another Canadian mutual company, and we have heard rumours recently of financial embarrassments gathering around certain mutual associations supposed to be very powerful. Some of these companies have largely increased their rates, and many of their members have in consequence ceased contributing, having lost confidence. When we give a Dominion charter to one of these companies, we place it in a position of being able to go before the public and point to the fact that it has obtained such a charter, and consequently must have met the approval of the insurance department of the Government. This in itself will be looked upon as a guarantee of the soundness and responsibility of the organization, and therefore should not be given without most careful consideration. I have no objection whatever to encouraging mutual insurance companies, but while we have a department of insurance and an inspector of that department, we ought to be guided in a great measure by their reports. I believe that the insurance inspector has declared that the financial basis on which these companies stand is not sufficient, and that consequently those who join them in the expectation of being able to leave at their death a certain sum to their families, may not find their wishes realized. At present there is about $50,000,000 of insurance in fraternal associations in Ontario alone. No one would say that we should go on receiving further applications for associations of this kind without attempting to exercise some control over their operations and protect the public, as far as possible, against the collapse of such societies. The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) spoke of families that would have been turned out on the road without a cent, had it not been for the fact that the heads of these families belonged to some of these associations. While that is the case, I believe there are as many other families who have been seriously disappointed owing to the fact that they were unable to collect from those associations the sum they hoped to be able to receive when overtaken by misfortune. I think it would be well that the Government should at once introduce a Bill that would reach all those associations and place them all on an equal footing. That is unquestionably desirable; and if this Bill now before the House be passed, I hope the Government will come down not later than next session with a measure dealing with all mutual insurance companies, and which will have the effect of putting them all on a sound basis, so that those who contribute may safely count on receiving something in return. A very serious responsibility rests on the Government in the matter, and the sooner they act, the sooner will they receive the gratitude of the people and earn the respect of those disposed to invest their money in mutual companies.

* Motion for Committee agreed to.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hour for private Bills having expired, the House will proceed with other business.

NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES ACT.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton) moved third reading of Bill (No. 131) further to amend the Acts respecting the North-west Territories.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. When this Bill was in committee, the hon. gentleman said he would take occasion, before the third reading, to consider the suggestion that was made to the effect that the time was opportune to deal with the point that had arisen with regard to the powers of the Government of the Territories. Has he dealt with that or given up the idea of framing a clause to meet the point?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. In reply to the hon. gentleman, I may say that the Minister of Justice has introduced a Bill in the Senate which will deal with the point to which my hon. friend has referred.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Public Works chargeable to income—Harbours and Rivers—

British Columbia—Columbia River—Improvements above Golden..... $5,000

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works what he proposes to do with this money. He might also say what work was done there last year, if any.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). This money is required to continue the improvement of the Columbia River. The dredge "Muskrat" has been working there, removing rocks and snags. The same work will be continued this year.

Mr. FOSTER. What work has been done there—what value?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The total value of work done on the Columbia is $89,133 up to date. The report of the Department of Public Works, page 99, contains a good deal of information on this subject.

Mr. HUGHES. How far above Golden is it proposed to give proper navigation ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Ninety miles.

Fraser River—Improvement of ship channel $20,000

Mr. FOSTER. Is this for the prosecution of the same kind of works ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

General repairs and improvements to harbour, river and bridge works..... $3,000

Mr. HUGHES. What are these works ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Throughout British Columbia generally. This cannot be provided for in a more specific manner.

Columbia River—Removal of rocks above Revelstoke $2,360

Mr. FOSTER. Is there navigation above Revelstoke ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes. This is for the same work as in the other case—removal of rocks and snags.

Columbia River—Improvements in Narrows between Upper and Lower Arrow Lakes $5,300

Mr. FOSTER. I desire to ask the Minister, as I do not find anything in these estimates with regard to the Kootenay River, if he proposes to do anything to improve the navigation of that river between Fort Steele and the Great Northern Railway. There is an important stretch of river there, and the only means of navigation that the East Kootenay country has up to the present time. The navigation is of the most tortuous kind, and a certain amount should be spent in improvements, so that the river would be navigable for a considerable part of the long season that they have. That portion of the navigable waters of British Columbia has been almost entirely neglected. It is stated by navigators there that the expenditure of a not-over-large sum of money would make the river navigable for the greater portion of the season. As I understand it, and as it appeared to me going down the river, the difficulty is that this water in the main part of the stream widens out and the channel is continually shifting. The opinion is that by a number of inexpensive sheer-dams, or something of that kind, the water could be kept from forming new channels and dissipating itself. If this could be done, the navigability of the river would be much improved. There is one most dangerous point where several shipwrecks have already taken place, and where the rocks must be blasted out. That would be a pretty expensive improvement. I am told that the United States authorities are quite willing to do their share of the improvement of that part of the river. This is a most important section of the country, and it is dependent upon this river for navigation.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I received a deputation of gentlemen representing the mining interests of that district. They made about the same statements as have been made by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster). I sent Mr. Roy to make a survey and we have received a report from him.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the nature of that report ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not recollect just now. I hope to deal with this matter in my Supplementary Estimates.

Mr. HUGHES. I would like to ask if anything is to be granted out of these appropriations for British Columbia to any private concern ? Are all these public works ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. They are all public works.

Mr. HUGHES. Then these items now under consideration are in British Columbia ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. They are all for public works in British Columbia.

Harbours and Rivers generally..... $5,000

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Does that mean works all over Canada ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, this vote covers all Canada.

Mr. EARLE. I would like to ask the Minister if any portion of this vote is to be applied to complete the work undertaken in the Fraser River ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No. The estimate to complete the work of the Fraser River will reach a very large amount indeed. It is a difficult problem to deal with, and we are doing all we can with the small amount placed at our disposal every year. But to complete the work as we would like, would require a much larger amount of money. We are doing from year to year as much as possible to protect the work already done, which I may say in passing has cost about $600,000.

Mr. EARLE. I understood that when an engineer was sent to British Columbia it was for the purpose of making a survey and estimate of the cost of accomplishing what could be accomplished on the Fraser River. As I understand it, the great difficulty there has been that the work is being done in such a tedious manner by small votes, that it is carried away year after year, and the money is being wasted ; whereas, if a larger vote was given and the work was undertaken as a whole and carried through, it could be done successfully. I was in hopes that this session we would have a report from the engineer sent up there for that purpose.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This $20,000 that we voted a moment ago is to continue the work in the channel. As my hon. friend knows, when these works were undertaken, we had only between 10 and 11 feet of water; we have now over 20 feet of water, which proves that the works have been carried on very successfully. We are now constructing works to prevent the river from cutting through Westham Island and passing behind our works. I may say that no part of that work has been carried away.

Mr. GILLIES. In what particular parts of the Dominion is it proposed to spend this amount?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Wherever it is wanted. Suppose, for instance, that a harbour suffers damage which we cannot now foresee, we will then take out of this amount the sum necessary to make repairs.

Mr. FOSTER. In answer to the question as to where this general vote was to be spent, the Minister of Public Works says it is to be spent all over the Dominion, and where there is a hole knocked out of a harbour, this will put the hole in again. Now, the Minister will be surprised to learn that not a dollar of this money goes for anything of that kind. He will be surprised to learn that last year, out of that vote, he spent much of it for such items as these:

Beaudry & Cie., subscription to "Annales de Construction" for 1897....	$	4	02
Belanger et Cie., drags $10.50; Durie, J., & Son, sundries, 40c.....		10	55

There is a vote which is taken entirely under false pretenses, and when the Minister attempts to explain it, he gives to the House the idea that this $5,000 is to be spent in actual public works wherever there is a deficiency, while in fact it is to pay travelling expenses and little odds and ends which ought to be charged under contingencies.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In connection with public works?

Mr. FOSTER. But my hon. friend sees that the whole spirit of an estimate that he is taking, is that it is for public works and not for travelling expenses, or for contingencies in connection with public works. That is the aim of the vote, and he covers up, under an item which professes to be for doing public works in Canada, contingencies which ought to be voted in contingencies, or for travelling, or for something where it would be explicitly stated. I would advise my hon. friend that it would be a fairer way of putting the estimate to vote this for contingencies, and let the House know what it is voting. The House is led to suppose that it is putting $5,000 into the Minister's hands for public works, when that is not the case.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am asking this money for the same purposes from which it has always been voted when my hon. friend was Minister of Finance. If he will look at the report of the Auditor General in the past, as my officers inform me, he will find that the vote has been just the same amount. The vote has always been applied for the purpose of repairing damages. What my hon. friend has read over is easy to understand. There are travelling expenses, there are a lot of things connected with harbours and rivers generally, and to this item all those expenses are charged. I think it is only fair. Suppose, for instance, one of my officers went to inspect a harbour, it would be only fair to charge the amount of his expenses to this item, because they have not otherwise been provided for. At any rate, I say again that this sum has always been voted in that way.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend feels that he is standing on solid ground when he says "I do just the same as he does." But if he will look over the history of this appropriation, he will find that while for a number of years there was this general vote that had been expunged, and there was no general vote, although it has crept back now. The whole object of putting estimates before this House is to let the House know what they are voting the money for. That is why we have votes for contingencies for each special item of work, and the contingencies of a department are voted as contingencies, with the idea that they take in all the contingencies. My hon. friend says that he must have travelling expenses. You take your travelling expenses from every work that is conducted in this country. If an engineer goes to a particular work, his expenses are charged to that work. This $5,000 is over and above all that.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Not always.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the rule, that is the way you get your travelling expenses, that is the way you pay your clerk of works—out of the vote given by Parliament for that particular work. But I want to repeat that these are really contingencies and travelling expenses, and they should be so exposed.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I must take issue with my hon. friend. There are a great many surveys wanted at places for which no money have been voted.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman did not take a dollar for surveys out of this vote last year.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It was expended in a general way. I must again say that I simply pursued the same system as had been followed in the past.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I do not think the officer who advised the Minister was candid. The hon. member for York has explained how the vote has been irregularly dealt with, and that a change of system is required. We will not agree that it is always a satisfactory answer for the hon. Minister to say that there has been an abuse of long standing and it was simply continued. The question is whether this is a proper way of keeping the account, that the amount voted generally for harbours and rivers should be expended on contingencies. I do not think the Finance Minister would agree that the vote on harbours and rivers generally should be used for departmental contingencies.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The report of the Auditor General for 1895-96 shows that this item was expended by the Conservative Government for the same purpose as it was expended last year. The details appear at part II., page 157, and the items include telegraphic service, express charges, travelling expenses and similar expenditures.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That, however, was not a proper system to follow.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am very glad my attention is now called to it.

Mr. GILLIES. The question is whether the system in regard to the expenditure of this $5,000 for harbours and rivers generally is a proper one and should be continued, for if it is irregular it should be discontinued. I now direct the Minister's attention to item 161, which is a vote for 1897-98, $115,000, Harbours and Rivers, Nova Scotia. Now, only $38,500 appears for this purpose. Why has this large reduction been made in the service?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman had better wait until the Supplementary Estimates come down.

Mr. GILLIES. I may not be here at the time. Item 161 last year shows $2,000 for a breakwater in my province (L'Ardoise—repairs to breakwater). That sum has not been expended. I had considerable trouble in inducing the Minister to put that sum in the Estimates. During the season I met the Minister in Montreal and urged the necessity of making the expenditure. He promised it should be done, but it has not been carried out. The Minister is well aware that there was a by-election pending during the whole of last season. I now ask the Minister why this amount of $2,000 was not expended on that work after it had been voted by Parliament, instead of the work being allowed to go to pieces and washed away by storms on the Atlantic.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The reason I did not expend the $2,000 was because the engineer reported that the sum was insufficient. This year I have placed $1,500 additional in the Estimates, so as to be able to carry out the work. That is my only motive.

Mr. GILLIES. I am not referring to the hon. gentleman's motives, but I have my own opinion in regard to it. The hon. gentleman last year stated, on the report of his engineer, that $2,000 would be sufficient for the work. How did it occur that the engineer so rapidly changed his mind? When was the report received stating that this amendment would be insufficient?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not remember the date. The report came in that the amount was not sufficient, and I thought it better to wait and obtain an additional sum. I therefore put $1,500 additional in the Estimates.

Mr. GILLIES. If the work had been proceeded with in last July, and the $2,000 expended when it had been voted by Parliament, it would have been amply sufficient, as was reported by the hon. gentleman's own officer. But the expenditure was not made then, for some reason well known to the hon. gentleman, and still better known to some of his colleagues; the work was allowed to go into disrepair, and then, of course, this amount was not sufficient. I am glad, however, to find $1,500 additional in the Estimates. When will this amount be expended?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. So soon as we are ready to go on with the work in a successful manner.

Mr. GILLIES. I hope the season will not be allowed to run by before the work is entered upon. There is no by-election pending in the county now. This work is a work of great necessity, and it is a crying shame that it was not done last year in consonance with the desire of Parliament that granted the money.

Mr. CLANCY. I had consoled myself with the idea that this $5,000 was probably intended for improving the navigation of the River Sydenham, but I see nothing in the Main Estimates nor in the Supplementary Estimates so far for that work. The character of the soil is such up there that unless the work is done in one season it might almost as well not be done at all, and unless the work is continued this year what was done last year will be utterly worthless. The navigation will not be much improved unless a dredge is sent there and these bars taken out in one season. Probably there is more trade done in the way of shipping on the Sydenham than on any river of its size in Ontario, and I do not know of any port from which there is so much shipping comparatively as from the port of Wallaceburg. I hope the hon. gentleman will continue the work this year.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My attention has been called to this work and I am confident that when the Supplementary Estimates come down my hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) will not have much to say against the manner in which I will deal with the question.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Is it the intention of the Minister to expend any of this grant on repairs to Main à Dieu breakwater in Cape Breton County? About three years ago an examination was made of the breakwater and an estimate obtained of what it would require to repair the damage done. It is only a small amount but that breakwater originally cost $15,000 or $20,000, is of great importance to the people of that coast, and unless it is repaired this year the whole breakwater may be lost.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will have a note taken of the statement of the hon. gentleman, and we might take a few hundred dollars out of the general vote to repair the damages.

Mr. GILLIES.

Mr. SPROULE. I wish to draw the attention of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte) to the harbour of Thornbury, a vote for which was passed the other night. He has very kindly provided $1,000 to repair the wharf there which was very much needed, but I am told by the people that a little dredging is badly required. It is almost impossible for them to get in and out with the small boats unless there is some additional dredging done, and if the Minister should provide a small sum of money for dredging at that harbour it would be appreciated very much by the people. I wish to say a word with regard to Meaford Harbour. The people were very glad to notice an item last year for that harbour but unfortunately the money was not spent. The work is very much needed there, and I hope the Minister will not allow the season to pass by without making the expenditure. If he does that, and spends a few hundred dollars for dredging at Thornbury, the people will be very grateful.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Unfortunately we are short of dredges and I cannot do dredging without dredges. As far as Meaford is concerned the work is under contract.

Mr. SPROULE. The people are quite satisfied with the Minister making a reasonable effort to do this work, and they appreciate the difficulty of his not having dredges. I call the attention of the Minister to it in the hope that he will find a dredge by some means this season.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I quite understand the request of the hon. gentleman.

New dredging plant..... $60,000

Mr. FOSTER. What plant is to be built next year?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is $25,000 for a new hull for elevator dredge No. 9, which is now at Kamanistiquia River; machinery for the same dredge $10,000; new boiler for tug "Trudeau" $3,500, new tug $21,500.

Mr. FOSTER. Are these being built by contract?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We build them in Sorel. We have a shipyard there, and in spite of what my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) said the other evening I am quite sure we are carrying out the work cheaper there. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) takes great interest in that, and I would be glad, when we have a little more time, if he would go privately into that expenditure.

Mr. FOSTER. I paid a good deal of attention to that for a number of years, and it is a perfect sink hole. Is the hull to be built of iron or wood?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Wood.

Mr. FOSTER. Are you building the hull in Sorel to send up to Kaministiquia?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No. I made a mistake in that. The hull will be constructed at Port Arthur.

Mr. HUGHES. Where is the $21,500 tug to be built?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In Sorel.

Mr. BENNETT. Where are the old boiler and engine of the tug "Trudeau"?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. They are still at Midland.

Mr. HUGHES. What became of the dredges employed at Owen Sound harbour, a year or so after the general election in order to recoup a number of friends of the Government?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not understand what my hon. friend means.

Mr. HUGHES. The Minister of Public Works employed a dredge pumping water there, where it was doing very little work, in order to recoup some political friends who were buried at the last general election. One came from away down in my county—a lawyer engaged in dredging at Owen Sound. Is there a dredge there yet?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, the same as was there before.

Mr. HUGHES. Does the Government own it?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, we hire it by the hour, as has always been done.

Mr. BENNETT. With reference to the boiler and engine of the tug "Trudeau," is it intended to place these in a new dredge?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am asking a sum of $3,500 for a new boiler. As to the machinery in the old tug, we will use that as much as possible.

Mr. BENNETT. Is it intended to bring up the hull to Midland and place the machinery in it there or take the machinery down to Sorel?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. These are details on which I cannot give information just now. The chief engineer will have to decide all those details.

Mr. BENNETT. When the machinery was removed from the "Trudeau" last fall at Midland, were any offers made by any persons there to build a tug?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not remember receiving any. My officers do not remember receiving any either, but it may be that there were some.

Mr. BENNETT. I must say that the Minister has been hardly fair to the ship building industry of Georgian Bay. There have been very large steamers built on the shores there, and yesterday a very large tug was launched at Midland 140 feet in length, and it seems rather out of the way, with the machinery of the old tug lying on the shore, that you should not have built the hull there for it, where it could have been built just as cheaply as at Sorel. If the machinery has to be shipped from Midland to Sorel, that will be a large bill of expense. And if the new hull is to be towed from Sorel by way of the Welland Canal and up Lake Erie to the Georgian Bay, that will entail a large amount of expenditure which might be avoided. I have reason to believe that certain parties at Midland were very anxious to build a hull for the machinery.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We are fairly equipped at Sorel to build dredges, and so on, and we take advantage of our own equipment to build our own dredges. I would have been very glad to build elsewhere, if it had been found practicable, but as we have a ship yard of our own in Sorel, we build there as much as possible.

Mr. HUGHES. There is $10,000 machinery for the Kaministiquia dredge. Where is that to be built?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In Sorel.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Where do you get the boiler?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We generally ask for tenders for the boiler.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Are you going to ask for tenders in this case?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I suppose so, unless I can buy in a better way.

Mr. HUGHES. Is the hon. gentleman fitting up this dredge with machinery and boiler by some private concern down in Sorel?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, we have a ship yard of our own in Sorel and we do the work ourselves.

Mr. MONK. There is no boiler-making in the ship yard?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No.

Mr. MONK. In that case, it would be far better for the Minister to pledge that tenders will be called for the construction of these engines. It is unfair that work of this magnitude and cost should be entered into without calling for tenders.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We are equipped in Sorel to make the machinery, but we do not make boilers.

Mr. MONK. Does the hon. gentleman intend calling for tenders for the boiler?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have not yet made up my mind.

Mr. FOSTER. This is the time when Parliament would like to know. When the Minister is asking for the money, he should have his mind made up and tell the people's representatives how he proposes to spend it. Is it to be done in the same way as this dredging in Toronto harbour—by farming it out to some painter or varnisher? This is over $5,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is $3,500. The machinery is $10,000. The machinery will be built by ourselves in Sorel in our own ship yard.

Mr. FOSTER. Where is the hon. gentleman going to get the boiler for the Kaministiquia?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The old one is good.

Mr. FOSTER. And the $10,000 is for machinery?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, we are going to build that in Sorel.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the hon. gentleman equipped there for making all the machinery?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, except a few pieces.

Mr. FOSTER. Does my hon. friend think it is economical, when he is going to put a dredge into the Kaministiquia harbour or Owen Sound or Meaford, to build it in Sorel and tow it up there? Would it not be more economical to build the hull where the dredge is intended to work?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have just stated to my hon. friends that we are going to build the hull at Port Arthur. As for the machinery, we are equipped at Sorel in our own ship yard, and I am going to build it there. For the tug "Trudeau" we require a boiler for which I am asking Parliament $3,500.

Mr. HUGHES. Has the hon. Minister taken any steps in relation to the construction of the hull in Kaministiquia?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No.

Mr. HUGHES. I would like to know the dimensions of that dredge. $25,000 seems an extravagant amount for a hull for a dredge.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. When the hon. gentleman is Minister of Public Works, he will learn that dredges cost a great deal more than that. I am very sorry I have not got the dimensions here.

Mr. MONK.

Mr. HUGHES. The Kaministiquia is a very small river, and I should imagine that an expensive dredge.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This dredge has been used in the port of Montreal, in the St. Lawrence, and it is a pretty large dredge.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the estimated cost of the new hull for the "Trudeau" which is being built at Sorel?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is being built by day's labour at our own shops and I cannot give the cost at present.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the estimated cost?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am told by the acting chief engineer that she will cost about $7,000 or $8,000.

Mr. BENNETT. If the Minister will get from his officers the dimensions of the "Trudeau," I think he will find that that price is rather high for a hull of that size.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have to rely for these details on the statements of my officers, and this year I am placed in a more difficult position because my chief engineer is absent, though he is well replaced by Mr. Lafleur. If the chief engineer were here I could give more complete information as to these details.

Mr. BENNETT. What will it cost to tow the hull up to Midland and place the machinery in her?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It will not cost much, because we have tugs of our own which will take it up there.

Mr. BENNETT. A tug for this purpose will cost $40 or $50 a day. So that this hull, which, I am satisfied, should not cost more than $5,000, will involve a charge of about $1,000 to take it to Midland.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No.

Mr. BENNETT. How much will it cost?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am told that $200 or $300 will land the hull at Midland.

Mr. BERTRAM. I may say that, in my judgment, as to the question of the relative cost of building at Sorel and Midland, you must bear in mind that the Government shipyard at Sorel must be kept going. It is most important that it shall not remain idle. And if they can build at Sorel at first cost, having the equipment there, they would save more than it would cost to transport the hull from Sorel to Midland.

Mr. BENNETT. Let me tell the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram) that two tugs were built in Midland this winter, one about the size of the "Trudeau" and the other much larger. Those who know anything of the prices of timber will agree, I think, that timber on the Georgian Bay is less than at Sorel. As to the argument that the Government have a shipyard at Sorel and must keep it going, I can only say that if the keeping of the shipyard at Sorel is contingent on the building of a tug like the "Trudeau," it was bad judgment to start a shipyard there. I do not blame the Minister, this mistake having been made apparently, by his officers. But the fact is that, having machinery at Midland, they are constructing a tug at Sorel to put it into. Now, the alternative is presented to them of transporting the machinery from Midland or transporting the hull from Sorel.

Mr. HUGHES. If I understand the matter aright, the Government has established the new shipyards at Sorel. I would like to know when this was done?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It was transferred to the Government when the Government took from the harbour commissioners of Montreal the ship channel.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Has the Government bought new machinery recently?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, such an establishment must always be buying machinery.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What has been bought this year?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Not a great deal.

Mr. HUGHES. I wish to understand when the Government went into this business of ship building.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The transfer of ship channels was made in 1889, and the works have been going on ever since.

Mr. HUGHES. Building ships?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Building and repairing dredges and doing all the Government work.

Mr. MONK. It seems to me that $7,000 or $8,000 for the mere hull of a tug is very expensive. I would like to hear from some member of the House who has knowledge of this business. I do not see the object of continuing what the Minister calls the ship yard. I did not know that we had more than a repairing yard at Sorel.

Mr. MONTAGUE. You can buy a tug on the Welland Canal for $5,000 or $6,000.

Mr. MCGREGOR. Some old one.

Mr. MONTAGUE. No, good tugs. I should like to hear from the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram) on this point.

Mr. BERTRAM. There are tugs and tugs. We have built tugs that have gone over $30,000. A lumberman cannot get a tug, substantial and fit to do his business for less than $20,000. I cannot say as to the reasonableness of the price in this case unless I know the size. The cost of machinery is a very serious item. The more power you want, the higher will be the cost.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What would a whole tug of these dimensions cost?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is 85 feet long.

Mr. MCGREGOR. What is the beam?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Eighteen feet.

Mr. MCGREGOR. And the draught?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Seven feet.

Mr. BERTRAM. I think that $8,000 for a tug of that size is a little high.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot give the exact figures. I cannot attend to all these details myself.

Mr. MONTAGUE. My hon. friend from Centre Toronto I fancy would take the contract for about half.

Mr. BERTRAM. No.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Just about.

Mr. BENNETT. Since the hon. Minister cannot give the House the information, I can add something about this tug "Trudeau" having seen it for a number of years. That one may judge of the strength of the machinery I may say that the machinery did not do violence to the hull, and the hull was 25 years old. I can tell the Minister that there is a tug, very much more powerful than the "Trudeau" was, and larger, being 95 feet long, lying at Midland, and this tug the Minister could have bought for $5,000 complete with her power. I know her owners. I know they would have been glad to dispose of her at $5,000. From what I have been able to hear, I think a fair price for a hull similar to that of the "Trudeau," would be $3,000. And the hon. Minister of Public Works can hardly gainsay that he will be at an expense of upwards of $1,000 in taking this new hull up through the St. Lawrence locks to Lake Ontario through the Welland Canal and Lake Erie, into Lake Huron and down to Georgian Bay. I say the Minister has been ill-advised by his officers in building this dredge at Sorel, instead of asking for figures on the Georgian Bay, either at Midland, Penetanguishene, Owen Sound, Collingwood, or any other points where tugs are built much more cheaply than at Sorel, and a large saving could have been effected. At Midland there is a firm in the business of building tugs; they built one tug similar in size to the "Trudeau," 140 feet in length, during the past winter, and would have been only too glad to undertake the construction of this tug.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I gave that figure because one of my officers has given it to me, but it may cost less. The hull is nearly completed now.

Mr. HUGHES. By what authority does the Minister complete the hull without getting a vote from this Parliament for the purpose?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I got a vote last year for the hull; I do not ask for anything for the hull now. I am only asking $3,500 for a new boiler.

Mr. MONTAGUE. If the hull of the tug has been built, the hon. gentleman can tell us what it has cost.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, because it has been built by day's labour.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Does the hon. gentleman do his business in such a way that he cannot tell what an article costs?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman has been a Minister himself, and he knows well that it often happens that no one can tell how much a certain work will cost.

Mr. MONTAGUE. In connection with these articles that are built there, does the department keep an estimate of what each article costs? Is the work done and the article charged up to it?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The work is done under the direction of Mr. Howden, who is the superintendent, while it is under the general direction of the chief engineer. We can give an account of every cent that is spent there.

Mr. BERGERON. Speaking about the yard in Sorel, has the Minister come to any arrangement with the McCarthy estate?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, I am sorry to say that we have not been able to come to an agreement with the McCarthy estate. We have been negotiating with them. The department has been renting grounds there for years, and we hope to be able to come to some arrangement soon. There has been some correspondence about it.

Mr. BERGERON. On which side of the river is it?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. On the same spot as it has been since 1889. The department has been trying to buy it, as I explained a few nights ago.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the hon. gentleman, at a later stage, give us the dimensions of the tug, the cost of the hull, and the cost of the machinery that he intends to put in it?

Mr. BENNETT.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Certainly.

Mr. BENNETT. I am surprised that the hon. member for Essex (Mr. McGregor) should be so neglectful of the interests of the ship-builders on the Erie in his part of the province. They will not be pleased to know that the Minister is building tugs down in the lower provinces and bringing them past their door, and the hon. member for Essex laughs at it.

Mr. MCGREGOR. He will take care of himself.

Mr. BENNETT. If report speaks truly, that hon. gentleman is to be taken care of by the Government soon. My hon. friend who represents Muskoka (Mr. McCormack) is the owner, or part owner, of the tug I refer to, the tug "Signal," which, I am informed, they would willingly sell for $5,000. He furthermore tells me that the tug "Signal" is ninety-five feet in length, a larger tug than the "Trudeau," and draws ten feet of water, and the hull of the "Signal" was built for $3,500.

Mr. BERTRAM. Can you tell how old it is?

Mr. BENNETT. I have not yet looked at its teeth.

Mr. BERTRAM. When was it built?

Mr. BENNETT. About two years ago. Now, the Minister must admit that he is constructing a tug which could have been built on the shores of the Georgian Bay at several points, for much less than $3,500, and he will find that before he gets through towing it up from Sorel to the Georgian Bay, he will have been at a further cost of at least $1,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have not much experience in ship-building, but I know there are good tugs and bad tugs.

Mr. MCGREGOR. On the other hand, a boat drawing ten feet of water might not suit the purpose required by my hon. friend. They require a boat of light draught. The hon. gentleman opposite exaggerates when he talks of the cost of towing this boat from Sorel to the Georgian Bay. There are boats going up the rivers and lakes almost every day, and $150 or $200, at the outside, will tow this boat from Sorel to the Georgian Bay. It can be hooked on behind one of the propellers and towed up the river and lakes. It is not necessary to send a tug after her.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What is the draught?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. About eight feet.

Mr. HUGHES. Does the Minister propose to ask for tenders for this dredge to be built in the Kaministiquia River?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not know whether I will build that dredge by day's work or by contract. We have one dredge that has been built by contract which does not give much satisfaction, and we have been obliged to make a lot of repairs.

Mr. HUGHES. When the hon. gentlemen now in power were in Opposition, they were very strict in requiring that all these jobs should be done by tender, but now that they are in power, they seem to have changed their policy. I would like the Minister to see his way clear to ask for tenders so that others than his friends might have something to say in the construction of this dredge.

Dredge vessels, repairs..... $30,000

Mr. FOSTER. Is that all done in Sorel, too ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. GILLIES. The hon. gentleman told us that there was a scarcity of dredges in the lower provinces, and that he could not do one tithe of the work required. I would like to know if he proposes to have any dredges constructed for those provinces ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have several dredges in the maritime provinces ; we have the " St. Lawrence," the " Canada," the " New Dominion," the " St. Edward," the " George Mackenzie " and the " Cape Breton." I admit that there is a great deal of dredging required in the lower provinces.

Mr. GILLIES. The dredges he has just enumerated have been in the possession of the department for years.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman is wrong. The " Cape Breton " was built one year ago.

Mr. GILLIES. But that was begun before he came into the department, and sent down to St. John. That dredge was built to replace a dredge lost a year ago in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, so the department is not one dredge better off as regards the lower provinces than it was formerly. The coast line of the maritime provinces, extending from the Bay of Fundy to Baie des Chaleurs, is many hundreds of miles in extent, and no comparison can be made between that coast and the inland waters of the other provinces. In view of the fact that there was urgent necessity for dredging in the maritime provinces, I cannot see what justification the Minister can have for not asking votes for the construction of new dredges to be used there, while at the same time large votes were asked for other parts of the Dominion.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have explained that large sums are required for repairs to dredges in the maritime provinces and elsewhere.

Mr. BERGERON. Where is the line of demarcation to be drawn between new dredges and repairs ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have applied for $60,000 for new work and $30,000 for repairs.

Mr. BERGERON. Then this amount of $30,000 is to be given for work to be done at Sorel ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No. It is partly for work to be done at Sorel in the shape of rebuilding scows and other work, and partly for repairing dredges in the maritime provinces, and also for making some repairs in Ontario.

Dredging—Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick..... $60,000

Mr. McDOUGALL. Where does the Minister propose to expend this amount in the maritime provinces ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The dredge " St. Lawrence " is working at Yarmouth. There is certain work to be completed, which will take a few weeks. The dredge " Canada " is at Barrington, and will go from there to some other point. The " New Dominion " will dredge in the St. John River. The dredge " Mackenzie," now at Wallace will go to Arichat. The " Cape Breton " will work in St. John harbour.

Mr. McDOUGALL. We are now discussing expenditures for the current year. On what work does the hon. gentleman propose to spend this amount, after 1st July ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We estimate that $60,000 will be necessary to keep the dredges working during the whole year. As to localities, we have not made up our minds altogether, but I have stated some localities where the dredges are at work.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Surely the hon. gentleman does not base his estimate on the necessity of keeping the dredges working, but on the necessity of certain work being done. I want to know the works on which the dredges will be employed.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is quite impossible to give the exact quantity of work required to be done at certain places ; but it has been estimated by the local engineers, that this sum will be required to keep the dredges at work during the season. As to work, there is plenty to be done.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I think it has been customary for the Minister to state the particular places where work will be done during the year.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have already given the names of some of the localities where the dredges are going to work.

Mr. KAULBACH. I hope the hon. Minister will not forget to notice my remarks as to the necessity of dredging in the county I represent. I trust he will consider these points of more importance than all the other works in all the other provinces.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I should be only too glad to send dredges all over the Dominion, if the department possessed them.

Mr. KAULBACH. The hon. gentleman promised a year ago that this work would be done, and I trust I will not be disappointed.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The hon. Minister has made no promise in regard to the Magdalen Islands, but no dredge has been sent there for twenty years, and I would ask the hon. Minister, in the name of my constituents, to send a dredge there this summer.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will take a good note of the request of my hon. friend, but I have no dredge available at the present time.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I hope the hon. Minister will be glad to make a note of the fact that I called his attention to dredging required at New Campbellton.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I should be glad to send a dredge there, if I had one at liberty.

Mr. McGREGOR. In 1896 the late Administration sent a dredge to my county to dredge out the river, and on election day removed the dredge. I want 300 feet more dredging done on Bell River. Before the hon. Minister attends to the demands of hon. gentlemen opposite, I trust he will see that our requests are met.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). I desire to call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to a very important work in my county concerning which I have spoken to him more than once, and I am very sorry to see that he has not made any provision for it. In the year 1896 during the election, the late Government took $25,000 to erect two piers for the purpose of affording a boat harbour at a place called Grand Etang, in the county of Inverness. The late Government spent $18,000 of that money and the present Government $7,000. The two piers were built, and all that now remains to make that a very commodious harbour for the fishermen along that coast is to remove a small mound of gravel between these two piers. I would like to get the ear of the Minister for a moment while I am speaking about this work. For the past two years the Minister of Public Works has given assurances to me from time to time that the work would be attended to, and I accordingly of late said little about the matter; but now that he has recited those other places without mentioning this work I feel that he has overlooked it. I remember that last year he particularly assured me that this dredging would be attended to, and I hope that he will spare one of his dredges this year for a few weeks to work in the good old county of Inverness. In view of the large amount of money spent on these piers it would be a great pity that they should be allowed to rot before that boat harbour is made available for the fishermen there.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The estimate is that the work to which the hon. gentleman refers will cost about $5,000. I would be very glad indeed if Parliament would give me all the money required to do all these works, but that is impossible. I am ready to carry out any amount of work, but I must have the money. I will be glad to do all I can in this case. Part of this dredging will have to be done by hand, and part by a dredge, and I will take note of my hon. friend's request and if there is any possibility of sending a dredge there I will do so.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). I would like to get some more definite assurance from the Minister because I had a similar assurance to that last year and no good came of it. The people whom I represent will hardly be satisfied by my telling them a second time that the Minister said this work will be done.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am very sorry indeed I am not in a position to give a more positive assurance to the hon. gentleman (Mr. McLennan).

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). How long has that dredge been working at Wallace Harbour? If my memory serves me it was there at the time of the general elections in 1896; it was there last year, 1897, and is going to be there in 1898. I would like to know how Wallace Harbour occupies so much of the time of one of the dredges?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think it is a very good policy when once a work is started to complete it. When I send a dredge to Inverness County I will do all the work that is to be done there.

Mr. QUINN. The member for Inverness (Mr. McLennan) has not considered the subject thoroughly, or he would have seen that so much has been done for the Ministers. Take, for instance, the county of Shelburne, that it would be impossible for him, an ordinary member, to expect his request to be granted. To listen to the hon. gentlemen for Inverness (Mr. McLennan) one would imagine that he was a Cabinet Minister. He forgets that he must be contented with second or third or fourth place after the Ministers get through with public works.

Mr. BENNETT. Or a post office.

Mr. QUINN. Yes, I understand that the Finance Minister has got a post office in Shelburne, but the hon. gentleman from Inverness (Mr. McLennan) must be contented with less. The Cabinet Ministers are so weak in their constituencies that thousands of dollars must be expended in their counties before the rank and file of the party are attended to.

Mr. GILLIES. I sympathize with my friend from Inverness (Mr. McLennan) because I know that the work which he has called to the attention of the Minister deserves every consideration. I have already called to the attention of the Minister of Public Works that we require more dredges in the lower provinces, but he has been sitting there year after year and he has not done anything in that respect.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have not been here very long.

Mr. GILLIES. You have been there three sessions, and you show no improvement, and it is about time for the Minister to try his prentice hand in that direction. The harbour of refuge at Fourchie in the eastern part of Nova Scotia deserves his most earnest and immediate attention. The Minister has some acquaintance, I hope, with the geography of that interesting section of the county, and if so he will know that from the harbour of Louisbourg on the eastern coast up to St. Peter's harbour, a distance of sixty miles, there is not a single harbour of refuge for a ship or a boat except the small breakwater at L'Ardoise. That section of the country is inhabited by fishermen where hundreds and hundreds of boats are pursuing their precarious avocation, and the hon. Minister will understand how necessary it is to have a harbour of refuge on that iron-bound coast. Fourchie is twenty-two miles west of Louisbourg and thirty miles east of St. Peter's, and for that whole distance there is not a place for a boat or a vessel to find shelter. The late Government sent a dredge there which did considerable work, but last year the Minister of Public Works took the dredge from there in a summary way and sent it to Wallace, in the county of Cumberland, the coast of which is dotted with harbours and not so much in need of dredging. The Minister's engineer can tell him that there is no comparison between the needs of Wallace and the needs of Fourchie and that other place to which my hon. friend from Inverness (Mr. McLennan) called attention. I think the Minister is deserving of censure for not having asked Parliament for a vote for the construction of more dredges for the maritime provinces, but scarce as are the dredges under his control, I would ask that some of them be taken away from those points where they are not really required and sent to places where there is urgent necessity for them. The Minister of Finance can have a public building at Liverpool in his county, and he can have dredges at Lockeport and Barrington where they are not required.

In the county of Shelburne, surrounded as they are with harbours and the coast indented with places of shelter, compare them with the counties of Inverness or Richmond, and they fade into insignificance. I would ask the hon. Minister to take the advice of his responsible officers who are, I know, conscientious men and good officers, and not yield to the importunities even of a Minister. If he would talk the matter over with his officers for half an hour and discuss the necessities of the places to which the hon. member for Inverness and myself have drawn his attention, he would not fail to do them justice. I ask him now if it is really his intention to do what he promised last year, namely, to have further work done at the harbour of Fourchie. I do not ask him to consider my political exigencies, but to let them weigh for nothing in the balance, and he can have all the votes, if he will only send a dredge there. If the hon. Minister will do so, he will do an act that will reflect credit on himself and the department, and be an act of justice to a very deserving and large class of people.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am much surprised indeed to find that my hon. friends have discovered that there are not enough dredges in the maritime provinces.

Mr. GILLIES. We discovered it long ago.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Then, they should have acted long ago. I have given to the maritime provinces one dredge more than they ever had before.

Mr. GILLIES. The hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken. The construction of the dredge "Cape Breton" was provided for by the late Government before he was ever sworn in.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. What is perfectly true is that there is one more dredge working in the maritime provinces than there was previously. We have not sufficient dredges, and consequently are unable to do all the dredging required. The port to which the hon. gentleman refers may be very interesting, but there are others just as interesting, and from which petitions are pouring in upon us. I can only promise that I will work the dredges every day in the year, if that be possible, and shall be very glad indeed to do work wherever required.

Mr. GILLIES. The hon. gentleman is wrong in saying that there is now one more dredge in the maritime provinces than there ever was before. The dredge "Cape Breton" was built to take the place of a dredge lost down there years ago. The number now in the lower provinces is the same as it was ten or fifteen years ago.

Dredging—Quebec and Ontario..... $60,000

Mr. BENNETT. Where is it intended to expend the moneys in Ontario?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not think our programme is mapped out for next year. This sum is required to pay the working expenses of our dredges. My hon. friend knows that I am now dredging at Midland, and will complete the work to be done there. The engineer estimates the working expenses of the dredges for the whole year, and then we map out a plan.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Do you know where you are going to send them?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Our plan is not made up.

Mr. BENNETT. I hope the hon. Minister will be able to answer the House that there will be all the necessary dredging done at Midland. I understand that the work under contract at Goderich has been abandoned by the contractor; and in view of an early election at that place, I was informed that as the contractor, Mr. Madigan, had thrown up his contract, the work was to be undertaken by day's labour. Is it intended that any part of this money is to be expended at Goderich?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Not a cent. This amount is asked for the working expenses of our dredges. If I wanted to do some special dredging at Goderich, I would have to apply for a special vote.

Mr. MONTAGUE. There was a contract at Goderich harbour which was thrown up. Is it intended to do the work by day's labour?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. At Goderich we have a contract to rebuild the long pier and will ask for tenders. I stated that two days ago.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). How much is to be spent in Ontario and how much in Quebec?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. As equally as possible.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). It is somewhat surprising that the hon. Minister should expect us to pass these Estimates without some idea of where the money is to be expended. Surely he has made some estimates as to how much he proposes to spend in one place and another, and we should know where this money is to be spent. I have been here some years, and never saw Estimates passed in this way before. I do not ask for small details, but surely the hon. gentleman has made some estimate of the expenditure, and should put us in possession of these facts. Or does he intend to get the money voted and then spend it wherever an election is coming on? If not, let him give us the information.

Mr. GILLIES.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I thought I had made that point very clear indeed. To work our dredges requires a certain amount of money, but as to the places where they will work, I am not in a position to say. There are some places I can mention, such as Midland, where one of the dredges will work the whole season. We will also do some dredging in Belleville, but our plans for next year are not made. Numerous applications are made every day. From these we will choose those where work is most necessary. I think we cannot do more than that.

Mr. BERGERON. How many dredges are there in Ontario and Quebec at work now?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There are on the St. Lawrence four dredges, and in Ontario we have the "Nipissing," "Queen," "Ontario," "Charlie" and "St. Louis."

Mr. BERGERON. In Ontario?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, that one is in Quebec.

Mr. MONTAGUE. There are certain harbours for which there are special estimates. It is not intended to spend any of this money on these harbours—Collingwood, for instance.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, this is a special vote.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It is not intended to spend any of this on Collingwood?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No.

Mr. INGRAM. There are two or three constituencies in which there are liable to be by-elections very shortly. It would be well to understand if there is to be any public money spent in them, over and above the money estimated now. Take Goderich, for instance.

Mr. BERGERON. Why should there be a vacancy there?

Mr. INGRAM. I understand that the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Cameron) is to be Lieutenant-Governor of the North-west Territories.

Mr. BERGERON. Does the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) know that?

Mr. INGRAM. I understand that the friends of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cameron) are about to meet to nominate a candidate for the constituency. It would be well to know if any other expenditure for public works is to be made there. Then there is Collingwood harbour, $30,000. I notice that Port Stanley has $10,000 for assistance towards harbour improvements and $11,000 repairs to piers and dredging also. I should like to know if any portion of this $60,000 is to be spent there?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Not one cent.

Mr. INGRAM. Last year $50,000 was spent dredging Quebec and Ontario. What proportions was spent in each?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Of the $50,000 spent last year up to the end of December, $17,169 was spent in Quebec and $24,912 in Ontario.

Mr. INGRAM. This amount was for the work done by the Government dredges?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, and by dredges hired.

Mr. INGRAM. I find in the Auditor General's Report that the hon. gentleman is paying $8 per hour for dredging. Is it not a fact that this can be done for $6 or even $5 per hour? And is it the intention of the hon. Minister to continue paying $8 per hour?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We had a long discussion on that point when my hon. friend (Mr. Ingram) was not in the House. I said that in hiring dredges at $8 per hour, I was following the policy that had been followed in the past. It may be that the system can be improved. After the remarks made in the House I shall go carefully into the question, and I may make improvements for another year.

Mr. INGRAM. I would like to ask further if it is not a fact that when a Government dredge is hired out to a private company or to an individual, the charge made is $50 a day? Why is it then, that the hon. gentleman is willing to pay $8 per hour or $80 per day when he hires a dredge? The inconsistency of the thing is most remarkable to me, for the Government has some very good dredges, probably better than any private dredges they can employ.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I know that when we are applied to by a private corporation or person to do dredging work, we only charge the actual expenditure, and that is the reason why the charge as my hon. friend says, $50 a day. But I would again remind him that in paying $8 per hour, I have followed the policy I found established in my department.

Mr. INGRAM. I understand the hon. gentleman to say that he has not an estimate of the dredging he proposes to do in the different harbours of Ontario and Quebec for this sum of $60,000. I think it would only be fair, at least, to hon. gentlemen on this side, that a statement should be given to the House as to the manner in which that amount is proposed to be expended in the province of Ontario. We expect a large number of local elections to take place between now and another session, and if it is going to be in the power of the hon. gentleman to expend this money in harbours wherever he chooses for the purpose of promoting the election of his friends, I think it will be a very unfair thing to do. The hon. gentleman has been charged, whether rightly or wrongly, with going round the country and stating to the people that various works were required, and he would do all he could to see that they were made. I think it is only fair that we should know where this money is to be expended before these local elections take place.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There are many calls made upon us, and I will have to judge of these calls to the best of my ability. My hon. friend is altogether wrong in supposing that I will do this work for political purposes. I never did that, and would not do it. But there is one thing I will certainly do, I will not forget my political friends. When work is required to be done in a good Liberal county, I do not see why I should not do it. My hon. friend reproached me with going into the fair province of Ontario and stating that there were important works to be done there. It is true, I went up there and I was well received, I found a progressive people, and I promised to do what I could to promote their progress.

Mr. INGRAM. I did not charge the hon. gentleman with making this statement, but the public press of the country charged him with doing it. As for myself, I owe many thanks to the hon. gentleman for doing his duty by the constituency I have the honour to represent, where I find he is going to spend $46,000 in improving a harbour.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that these dredges were let out at $50 a day.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I said that when a private person came to us and asked for a dredge to repair a wharf, &c., we only charged them the actual working expenses, and sometimes less. That varies according to the size of the dredge, it is usually $50 or $60 a day.

Mr. MONK. The Minister has declared his willingness to improve upon the system followed by his predecessors. A valuable improvement would be to come before us every year with a definite programme as to where this dredging is to be done. We are asked to make the Minister the absolute arbiter as to where this $60,000 shall be spent, we are altogether in the dark what he is going to do with it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am very sorry I did not make myself understood. So far as Ontario is concerned, I said I was doing work at Midland and some at Grenville, some at Whitby, some at Bowmanville, some at Newcastle. We have quite a number of applications.

Mr. SPROULE. In order to know how much money the Minister requires, it is necessary to know how much it costs per day to keep these dredges running. I think the Minister said there were nine dredges in Ontario and Quebec. If we knew how much it would require to keep them working, we would be able to say about how much money he would require to use. My information is that it costs about $25 a day to keep a dredge running, or $20 if you supply the wood. I think $20 or $25 is a fair thing. If we had this information we would know whether the amount the Minister asks is enough or too much to keep these dredges employed for a reasonable length of time. I think the Minister could easily give us the information, because he has his engineer at his hand.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is out of the question to say what the working expenses of a dredge will be. The working expenses of a small dredge like the Nipissing, for example, would amount to between $50 and $60 per day, including fuel, a tug and two scows. Dredge No. 9 will cost a great deal more than that, between $60 and $70, as the engineer tells me.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman says that there are nine dredges in Ontario and in Quebec. In what harbours are they working now?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The "Nipissing" is now at Whitby, the "Queen" at Belleville.

Mr. HUGHES. Is not the Whitby harbour owned by a private corporation?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think it is, but the dredge is not yet at work there. But if we refuse to allow the dredges to work in every harbour which is not owned by the Government, it might lead to serious trouble. Some of those private harbours which belong to corporations could not be dredged except by our own dredges. The dredge "Ontario" is now at Amherstburg, we have one dredge at Midland, and the No. 9 is on the Kaministiquia River.

Mr. McNEILL. The hon. gentleman speaks of private harbours. The harbour of Southampton is not a private harbour, it is a harbour of refuge. The hon. gentleman's attention was directed to that matter, I think, frequently, long ago. Has anything been done there in the way of dredging of late?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I hope that when the Supplementary Estimates come down, my hon. friend will see that I have not forgotten the representations he has made to me.

Mr. TARTE.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is the dredge at Whitby working?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Not yet.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is the dredge at Midland working?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think they are not working now.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is the dredge at Amherstburg working?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The dredge on the Kaministiquia?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The dredge at Belleville?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The dredge there is under repairs, it will be ready in a short time.

Mr. MONTAGUE. So there is only one dredge working in Ontario, and that has no hull.

Mr. HUGHES. In his statement, does the hon. Minister take into account the dredge "Otonabee," on the Trent waters?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That belongs to the Department of Railways and Canals.

Mr. HUGHES. Has he put in a sum for clearing the Scugog River from Lindsay to Lake Scugog, which belongs to his department?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am not yet in a position to answer my hon. friend.

Mr. HUGHES. Are there any negotiations pending in regard to the sale, leasing or transfer of the Kingston dry dock?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. None whatever.

Mr. HUGHES. Has any proposition been made to the Minister?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No.

Mr. BERGERON. Where are the dredges intended to be employed in the province of Quebec?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The "St. Louis" and another dredge are working on the St. Lawrence, and one will be taken to Yamaska River. No. 1 is working near Pointe aux Trembles.

Mr. BERGERON. Is there any dredge on the Chateauguay River?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Why are the dredges not working in Ontario ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Some of them are undergoing repairs. One will shortly be working at Belleville.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Are the dredges in Ontario manned ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Then they are manned and doing nothing ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, many of the men are doing repairs.

Mr. MARCOTTE. (Translation.) What is the name of the dredge that is working at St. Jean Deschaillons ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). (Translation.) "Nithsdale."

Mr. McALISTER. Is it the intention of the Minister to send a dredge up the Restigouche River, part of which is in Quebec and part in New Brunswick ? Some dredging was done there two or three years ago, but the dredge was taken away and the work never completed. Dredging is very much needed.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Restigouche is on the map, on the programme for this year. Whether we will be able to reach it, I do not know.

Mr. McALISTER. Then we may expect the dredge up there this summer ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We hope so.

Mr. McALISTER. Part of the work will be for the benefit of the county of Bonaventure, which sends a supporter of the Government, and part for the county I represent, and between the two we should be able to get this dredging done.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It would not make any difference because the member for Bonaventure supports the Government. I take a deep interest in the hon. member for Restigouche.

Mr. TAYLOR. Did I understand the Minister to state that the average cost of each dredge is $60 a day ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I said the working expenses of some dredges were between $50 and $60, and that the cost varied, depending on the size of the dredge.

Mr. TAYLOR. I understand the Minister to say that there are nine dredges in Ontario and Quebec ? At an average of $60 per day the cost would be $540, or $16,200 per month. Taking the working time at seven months, this would mean an expenditure of $113,400. That shows how honest the Minister is in giving figures to the committee.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman has proved by these figures how little he understands what he is talking about.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. Minister has misled the committee in stating that the average expense was $60 per day. The dredge "Queen," including the crew on both dredge and tug, averages only $30 per day.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How much does the Minister intend to charge a company or town owning the harbour where dredging is done ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We do not always make a charge. The hon. gentleman will remember that a great deal of dredging has been done in harbours owned by private corporations and towns.

Mr. SPROULE. We should have more information in regard to the cost of running a dredge. Does the Minister include repairs in the cost stated ? Take the dredge "Challenge." How many are required to work the dredge, without the tug ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot be expected to possess a complete knowledge of all these details. If the officers of my department have deceived me in the past, I am sorry, but I am sure they have not done so. I am asking the same vote as in past years. During the last twenty years I have heard in the House and in the press gallery these items discussed, but I never remember such close inquiries to be made. It is, however, the right of hon. gentlemen to make them. There are twelve men on the "Challenge" and tug and scow.

Mr. SPROULE. At what wages ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. $80 for the engineer, $50 for the cranesmen, $30 a month for the fireman, $25 for deck hands, $25 for scowmen, $30 for cooks, $50 for wheelmen, $50 for tug engineer, $30 for tug firemen.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. gentleman is simply continuing the policy of his predecessors ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have dredges and must work them.

Mr. BERGERON. For twenty years the hon. gentleman has watched from the press gallery similar inquiries in Supply, yet he continues the same policy as was formerly pursued. It is, therefore, no use to have a change of Government. The hon. gentleman expended $17,000 in Quebec and $24,000 in Ontario ; where is the balance ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I said we spent that sum up to December last. We have two months till July.

Mr. BERGERON. But I understood that work had not been commenced ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is going on.

Mr. BERGERON. Is there any amount for dredging at Berthier ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is a special vote for that.

Mr. BERGERON. And also, I suppose, a special vote for dredging the St. Lawrence channel. This amount then is for the nine dredges working in Ontario and Quebec ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. And to pay for some dredges that are hired.

Mr. BERGERON. But the Minister is simply following the custom adopted and followed by the old Government.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have made it my duty to take everything that was good wherever it came from.

Mr. BERGERON. And the Minister is spending more money than the late Government did.

Mr. SPROULE. As I figure out the wages account it would amount to less than $20 a day. What is the cost of fuel ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot say just now.

Mr. SPROULE. Do those dredges use wood or coal ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. All of them burn coal.

Mr. SPROULE. Can the Minister tell us what is the cost of the coal ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not know I never measured it.

Mr. SPROULE. I did not ask that, nor do I expect the Minister can give the information at a moment's notice, but I presume he can get the information from his officers, and the House should know it. My information is, and I believe it to be correct, that if costs between $20 and $30 a day to keep these dredges going. I take it that the cost of repairs is not included in this item, and that this is for paying the wages and cost of fuel and such things. We should have the information in detail about these things.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Before concurrence I will give the details of the expenditure of each dredge.

Mr. SPROULE. That will be perfectly satisfactory, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. QUINN. Will the Minister give us some details as to where the dredges will work during the coming year ? We do not ask that the Minister shall be bound down by the letter of his statement and be held responsible next season for the dredges not working as he would indicate, but we should know where it is contemplated that the dredges shall work.

Mr. TARTE.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I could not locate where we would work all the dredges now.

Mr. QUINN. We know there has not been anything like the quantity of dredging done in Quebec province that has been asked for, and I suppose it is the same in other provinces. If the department is properly conducted, the Minister must have some information from his officers as to what points it is contemplated to work the dredges next year. That is what we want to get.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Did I understand the Minister to say that while the dredges were not dredging the crews were doing the repairs ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Everything that can be done by the captain or crew is done, but not the whole thing ?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Are not the crews on these dredges at the present time.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I understand that only a portion of the crews are engaged now. My instructions were that the crew should not be employed until the work is begun.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Would the Minister say what repairs have been done by the men ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am told by the Deputy Minister that small repairs are done by the men. My hon. friends opposite are doing me a great service in criticising all these details so closely. I will go deeply into the matter now and if the chief engineer of my department has not kept things as he should, I will know why it is.

Mr. MONTAGUE. According to the Auditor General's Report there is $600 charged for carpenters and caulkers, and evidently the crews did not do those repairs.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I suppose they did not. I promise my hon. friends that I will have the closest inquiry made into the working expenses of these dredges. It is not very long since I took office and I have to rely on the advice of the officers I found there. My hon. friends opposite seem to think there have been some abuses because they would not criticise all these items so severely if they did not think there were abuses.

Mr. MONTAGUE. As far as I am concerned I am not criticising the officers of the department.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman cannot be criticising me, because I do not do it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. Minister is not immaculate.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I suppose I am just as immaculate as my hon. friend.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am offering no criticism of the hon. gentleman's officers, but still we should have all necessary information.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. These Estimates have been prepared by the officers I found in the department, and I frankly admit that I did not go into these details myself. My instruction to Mr. Coste were: Do not allow one cent of expenditure which is not required, and if Mr. Coste has not fulfilled his duty, I would be very sorry for him. Now that my attention has been called to all these details, I will go very closely into them, and I promise that next year there will not be one dollar that I will not know where it has gone.

Mr. BERGERON. Where were these dredges kept during the winter?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Some were taken to Sorel, and some wintered elsewhere.

Mr. BERGERON. If they were the whole winter in Sorel, it would be natural to think that the repairs should be done during the winter at the workshops there.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. They were not all taken to Sorel.

Mr. BERGERON. Would it not be good policy to bring them into Sorel and have the repairs made during the winter?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Some are taken down to Sorel, when the chief engineer advises it. I leave him perfectly free to follow his own course, because I am not an expert.

Mr. BERGERON. It is very unfortunate that the chief engineer is not here to give us information.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think my hon. friends are getting more information than ever was given in the House.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It has been shown by the discussion and the Auditor General's report that the chief engineer would be able to protect himself pretty well. The Minister has explained that these dredges in Ontario that are idle are under commission, and for the time being their crews are employed doing small repairs. He has not yet mapped out the work for these dredges, although it is now the 25th of May, and that is the reason they are lying idle.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I never interfere with the chief engineer's work. He gives me an account of what he is doing. He submits to me the work that he intends doing, and I approve of it or do not. But he has full control of his work.

As to the delays, there have been no delays this year. The repairs may not have gone as quickly as they should, but that is not my fault. They were under the control of the chief engineer.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. Minister misunderstands some of us, because we were not criticising adversely what had been done by the chief engineer or himself, but were endeavouring to get information. He has kindly promised to give us, in concurrence, the cost of these dredges. I would ask him to add the number of days which each of them have worked during the season.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I shall have a statement prepared of all the days the dredges have worked and the money paid on every one of them.

Mr. HENDERSON. The hon. Minister was good enough to say that he was not going to forget his friends, and I desire to remind him that about a month ago a number of his very special friends from Oakville waited upon him with reference to the refuge harbour at Oakville, and the repairing of the pier. Supplementaries have come down, and I have seen nothing of any estimate for that work.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The Supplementaries are not yet down.

Mr. HENDERSON. May I ask the hon. Minister whether they will contain an item for the purpose of making repairs at Oakville and for the dredging of that harbour. If not, I would urge the Minister strongly to take something out of this large appropriation to make the improvements asked for.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman understands that I am not free to tell him what the Supplementary Estimates will contain. I may say that representations were made to me, and that I received a deputation which urged on me the importance of doing the work, and I am confident that when the Supplementaries come down, I will have the good-will of my friends.

Mr. MARCOTTE. (Translation.) I was very glad to hear the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) stating that there was a Government dredge working at St. Jean Deschaillons. I draw the attention of the Minister to the fact that this is one of the most dangerous points on the River St. Lawrence; and I would like to know whether it is his intention to keep a dredge working there permanently the whole season in order to dredge and widen that part of the channel. Does the Minister propose to devote a large sum to that work?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Translation.) The dredge "Nithsdale" is working at St. Jean Deschaillons and will be kept at work there the whole season, just as was done last year.

Dredging—Manitoba..... $8,600

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I hope the hon. Minister will give some explanation as to the work to be done this year on the Red River. Is there any dredging to be done elsewhere than at the mouth of the Red River?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have the dredge "Winnipeg" and the tug "Sir Hector" there. It is estimated that the sum of $8,000 is necessary for the working expenses of that dredge.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Where will the dredge be employed?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. At the mouth of the Red River, dredging from the sand-bar that is there. The same kind of work that was done last year.

Dredging—British Columbia..... $15,000

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is there any work to be done at the entrance of the works at Vancouver?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, my attention was called to it by the report of the chief engineer lately, and if my memory serves me right, I have given instructions that some work should be done immediately there. Mr. Coste wired me two weeks ago.

Dredging—General service..... $5,000

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. A good deal of this is used to pay part of the salaries of the officers in Ottawa, who were at work on the dredging. We have in Ottawa a general superintendent, Mr. Goodwin, and he has a staff around him.

Mr. BERGERON. He has a salary?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. He has been employed fifteen years. He has a salary of $1,200 a year, and he has a staff of officers. That $5,000 is just in the same line as the item we have discussed for harbours and rivers.

Mr. FOSTER. There is not a dollar of it spent on dredges?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is in connection with dredging operations, and is the same vote we have had for the last twenty-five years.

Slides and Booms..... $5,000

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have no details of that amount. If the House will pass it, I pledge myself to bring down the details before concurrence is taken.

Mr. HUGHES. I would like to ask the Minister what was the revenue last year from the St. Maurice River boom.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. On the St. Maurice River last year the collections amounted to $28,893, against $22,090 for the previous year.

Mr. TARTE.

Mr. MARCOTTE. (Translation.) How many men are in the employ of the Government there?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. (Translation.) We have ten permanent employees.

Mr. MARCOTTE. (Translation.) I will avail myself of the opportunity to protest against the unfair treatment meted out to one of the oldest and most faithful employees at the St. Maurice River Boom. I do not think any investigation has taken place in his case, and I believe he never interfered in politics. He discharged his duties faithfully and he was dismissed in order to make room for a partisan. I deem it my duty not to allow this item to pass without registering my protest.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. (Translation.) All I have to say in this connection is that I have made several changes at the St. Maurice River Boom, and when the hon. gentleman knows what has come to my knowledge within these few last days, he will agree that I was perfectly right in making those changes.

Roads and Bridges—

Dominion traffic bridges throughout Canada, including approaches..... $5,000

Mr. BERGERON. What is that for?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have several bridges in the North-west and on the Ottawa River, and this is for maintenance.

Bridge across the Saskatchewan at Edmonton, N.W.T..... $25,000

Mr. FOSTER. I will ask my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) to allow this to stand. It has stood for some time.

Maria Street Bridge, over the Rideau Canal—Re-construction $10,000

Mr. FOSTER. What is the reason that this has not been expended?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Because I did not ask enough. I am going to ask more in my Supplementary Estimates. I am sure the hon. gentleman will help me as he knows the matter will have to be attended to.

Mr. HUGHES. Is the Government going to ask for tenders for this work?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, the work will be let by contract.

Mr. BERGERON. Is the Government obliged to build this bridge?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Sappers' Bridge, Ottawa, extraordinary repairs.. $2,000

Mr. SPROULE. What is meant by this expression "extraordinary repairs"?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is the cost of making a new floor. That is not an ordinary repair.

Telegraph Lines..... $20,600
Land line on north shore of St. Lawrence—To improve roadway, repair line and increase operating facilities generally, between Godbout and Pointe aux Esquimaux $1,000

Mr. BERGERON. How is that work being done ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. By contract. The contractor is Mr. De Courval.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that an old contract ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The contract has been going on for the last two years and has been held by the same man.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. I would like to know whether these lines are used exclusively by the Government or whether they are used by the public telegraph companies ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. They are used by us and by every one who wishes to use them. All our lines are open to the public.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. For instance, there is an item here for $15,000 for one line. Does the Government pay for this line without getting a revenue from the telegraph companies that use it ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is not used by the telegraph companies but by the public in a general way.

Mr. HUGHES. Has the Minister any returns of what the receipts are ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, we have these returns, carefully prepared by the superintendent.

Mr. BERGERON. On this land line on the north shore of the St. Lawrence—extension from Point aux Esquimaux eastward, for which $15,000 is asked—how far does the Government intend to build eastward ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We are on the route to Belle Isle. We have 290 miles more to build.

Mr. FOSTER. How much a mile does it cost ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It costs $105 a mile and we supply the wire.

Mr. BERGERON. Who pays the operators ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We do.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the revenue generally ? /

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The revenue is very small. The line is specially built in the interests of navigation and trade. Still we are getting more revenue every year.

Mr. FOSTER. Does it pay the expenses of operation ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, that is one of the questions into which I will inquire during the recess.

Telegraph Lines, British Columbia—To provide for an alternative line connecting Cape Beale and Carmenah with Victoria by extending the French Creek-Alberni line southwardly to the southwest coast of Vancouver Island..... $4,600

Mr. HUGHES. Is the Government taking any steps about a telegraph line into the Yukon country ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not think we have made much progress in that matter yet.

Mr. HUGHES. I am aware of that. I was asking what was proposed ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am really not ready to give the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes) an answer yet. So far, we have not done anything.

Mr. GANONG. I want to call the attention of the Minister to some matters down in the county of Charlotte in connection with telegraph and telephone lines. I made some suggestions a short time since in regard to carrying out some improvements. One of them was the advisability of making a connection between Head Harbour light on one end of the island of Campobello and Welsh Pool, which has already connection with the mainland. Down among these islands, as hon. gentlemen are perfectly aware who know anything of the fishing industries, there are very few teams, in fact the roads are not always in the best condition, and the fishermen have to depend for communication principally upon their boats. In that county it is difficult to obtain fast communication, at least, on account of the very rapid tides around the coast, as well as the difficulty they occasionally have with fogs. It would seem that if it is essential to have a light at Head Harbour, it is quite as essential to have some communication between the Head Harbour light and some point where they might receive assistance. There is a great amount of tonnage going through this passage, the steamers between St. John and the ports of Portland and Boston all pass this point, some of the steamers two or three times a day. The total expenditure, as I understand it, is estimated only at $880, or an equivalent to $22 a year for interest. This connection would also give a very desirable communication between the large fishing village of Wilson's Beach and Welsh Pool. At the same time, no less important, I can assure the Minister, is the connection between Deer Island and the mainland. On Deer Island we have a population of 1,700 people who have no communication whatever of this kind with the outside. I think the estimated cost of this work was about $3,500, equal to an interest account of $85.50 a year. This line would probably prove self-sustaining, as among those islands they do a business of some $300,000 or $400,000 a year. Their business is principally with the town of Eastport. It certainly is desirable so far as possible to facilitate the business of this community by giving the people direct communication, so that they may be kept in touch with the markets where their fish are principally sold. It is certainly an idea that should be taken up by the Minister very soon. I hoped he had put some amount in his Estimates for this purpose, and I trust he may yet see his way clear to do so in the Supplementaries.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot give any promise. We are extending our lines as quickly as possible. It is a question of money.

Mr. FOSTER. It is a question, too, of distribution. The plea that has been made by the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Ganong) is a good plea. There are some points there that ought to be attended to.

National Art Gallery.. $2,000

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. Is this amount of $2,000 spent every year on this National Art Gallery.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, not every year. We are not very far advanced in the way of art.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. Who makes the selection for the National Art Gallery?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have an artist in our department, Mr. Taylor, who, with the assistance of some of the officers in the department, has made the selections in the past. Since I took office, I have not bought anything.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this amount for the purpose of buying pictures?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, and to pay the caretaker. I understand that my predecessor bought a picture, the Death of Nelson, for which he paid $1,000. I have not bought any yet, but I am negotiating for the purchase of a picture by an artist of London.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. It seems to me that the Minister, in selecting specimens of Canadian art for the National Art Gallery—and I may say that I approve of having a gallery of that kind—should be assisted by experts in selecting these pictures. They should not be bought upon the mere word of any single gentleman in the department, or through the friends of artists who are only too anxious to sell their pictures. We ought to have in the National Art Gallery the very best work Canadian artists can produce. I think the Government would do a commendable thing in spending more money in patronizing Canadian artists. We should have the very best work by the very best artists, and we should also have the best experts and judges of art to select those pictures.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend is perfectly right, but it might be a little difficult to find those experts. I would be glad to have a private conversation on the subject with my hon. friend.

Mr. HUGHES. I would suggest to the Minister that a very fine expert is the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Ross Robertson).

Temporary clerical and other assistance, inclusive of services of all persons required who were first employed after the 1st of July, 1882, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act..... $25,000

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. When I took office I reduced the expenditure too much, and I find myself short.

Mr. HUGHES. How many clerks were dismissed?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not think there has been one dismissal.

Mr. SPROULE. Have they been continued on year after year in contravention of the Act, and are some of the employees still on the list?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is another case where I took things as they were left. This is to make regular the employment of persons who have been employed since 1882. But then there was a law allowing the employment of a certain class of men, and the money has always been voted that way.

Mr. SPROULE. This $5,000 additional, is that to increase their salaries or to employ others?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If the hon. gentleman will look at past estimates he will find that in 1895-96, for the same purpose, Parliament voted $30,700; in 1896-97, $24,500. I thought I could get on with $20,000, but I find I cannot. The hon. gentleman will find, if he examines my estimates, that the expenditure so far as the civil service is concerned, has been reduced by more than $125,000.

Mr. SPROULE. In one year the hon. gentleman asked for $25,000, in the following year he asked for $23,000, or $2,000 less, and then for the succeeding year $20,000 was voted.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is an additional vote in the Supplementary Estimates for 1895-96 of $4,000.

Mr. HUGHES. The total sum should appear.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I admit that I asked for $5,000 more than last year.

Towards a monument to the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie..... $7,000

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Models have been sent in according to the tenders advertised for. We have found some difficulty in taking upon ourselves the responsibility of deciding between the competitors.

Mr. FOSTER. How long have the models been in ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. They were sent here in January.

Mr. FOSTER. How does the hon. Minister propose to make a selection ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We propose to make a selection through experts. I have not quite made up my mind as to whom we will engage as experts, and I will be very glad to receive names from hon. members on both sides of the House, for, of course, it is not a party question.

Mr. SPROULE. What is likely to be the total cost when completed ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I estimate that the statues of Her Majesty the Queen and the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie will cost about $15,000 each.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. There is no item for which I will vote more willingly than that to perpetuate the memory of Alexander Mackenzie in bronze and to erect a statue of Her Majesty the Queen. But I should like to know from the Minister whether the intention is to select from the clay models now in the National Gallery the bronze statues that are proposed to be placed in front of the Parliamentary Buildings ; or whether those models, executed by Canadian artists, are adjudged by the Government to be the best examples of Canadian art ? If the Government are not satisfied, would it not be well to extend the competition to British artists, so that when we perpetuate Her Majesty the Queen and the late Mr. Mackenzie, we may have the best examples of bronze work that it is possible to produce. I do not suppose the hon. Minister, who has seen the examples in clay in the National Gallery, will say they in any way, either in pose, proportion or in likeness, portray either Her Majesty or the late Mr. Mackenzie ; and therefore I think the Minister and the Government should take seriously into consideration whether it would not be well to extend the competition to British artists. We have very few men in this country who can give us good pieces in this particular class of art. The only good pieces of bronze that I know of in Canada are at Montreal and Quebec, and are the work of a French Canadian. I regret our sculptors have not accomplished more in the models in the National Gallery, and suggest that before the Minister makes a selection, the hon. gentleman and the Government should seriously consider whether we should not obtain examples from the best British artists, so as to secure life-like representations of Mr. Mackenzie and Her Majesty the Queen as she appeared on the Jubilee day.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. When tenders were asked I was not in Ottawa, being away on a trip, and my colleagues thought, as the time was progressing, they should invite tenders immediately. Tenders were asked only from Canadian artists. I do not want to reflect in any way on the models sent in, but my hon. friend can understand the hesitation I and my colleagues feel in regard to the delay that has taken place. I cannot say more today. I shall be very glad to receive suggestions privately from both sides of the House in regard to this matter.

Mr. LEMIEUX. (Translation.) I have listened with very great pleasure to the remarks fallen from the hon. gentlemen in connection with the models now exhibited in the National Gallery. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Ross Robertson) thinks that it would be well to extend the competition to British artists, concurrently with our Canadian sculptors. I do not think, Sir, that is necessary at all. We have had, within the last few years, monuments executed by foreign artists which are far from being good pieces of art. The city of Montreal, for instance, has had a statue of Sir John Macdonald erected on the Dominion Square, which was executed by a London sculptor, and everybody knows that it is art in its very infancy. This statue, if I am correctly informed, has cost $50,000. We have another monument in Montreal, on the Place d'Armes, representing Maisonneuve taking possession of Ville-Marie, surrounded by his friends and fellow-countrymen, his fellow-labourers in his work of colonization. That monument has cost but the modest sum of from $20,000 to $25,000, but it is generally considered to be vastly superior, as a piece of art, to the costly monument I have just mentioned. I avail myself of the opportunity to say, in this connection, that it is not necessary for us to go abroad in order to find what we need. We have in this country all the artistic talent that is needed for producing master-pieces of art. We have in our midst, I am proud to say, a French Canadian artist, Mr. Philippe Hébert, whose work is a credit to this country and bears witness to the artistic genius of the French race in Canada. Reference has been made here to the clay models now exhibited in the National Gallery in this city. I have examined, with some friends of mine, during the session, those models, and I entirely agree with the statement of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ross Robertson) that they do not all deserve to be allowed to compete, and that some should even be ruled out; but, when the hon. gentleman says that we should extend the competition to foreign artists, I think he is mistaken. When tenders were asked for Sir George E. Cartier's statue, from twenty to twenty-five models were received from France, Italy, England and the United States, and were exhibited in the Parliament Library. Now, when the competition took place, it was found that not a single one of those examples coming from the most renowned studios in the world could hold comparison either as to sculptural beauty or as to likeness with that which had been modelled by Philippe Hébert, who was then taking his steps in that career, and who is now a justly renowned artist. I have heard the matter discussed by competent men and I have no hesitation in saying that I do not see the necessity of re-opening the competition, as suggested. In my opinion, there is no reason why we should invite the competition of European artists, in order to obtain what we wish. The models exhibited by Hébert in the National Gallery, portraying Her Majesty the Queen and the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie give indisputable evidence of talent of the highest order and should be accepted without opposition. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Ross Robertson) seems to think that those models are not life-like representations. It cannot be denied that the pedestal of Mackenzie's statue is a splendid piece of art. As to the matter of likeness, that can easily be remedied. The pedestal represents an admirable conception, and expressed in a truly striking manner industry, energy, and love of duty.

As to the model of the Queen, while it is not a life-like representation of Her Majesty as she appeared on Jubilee day last year, it is a good likeness of the Queen, as she was ten years ago. I have but scanty notions of sculpture, but I understand that when a sculptor wishes to perpetuate a personage by a statue it is not absolutely necessary for him to represent that personage as he appears at the very moment when the artist is doing his work. Leaving aside the question of actual likeness, which, after all, is of secondary importance, I say that these models denote genius and art carried to their highest pitch. They have been closely examined by competent artists, who are all agreed that nothing better could be produced. The delays having now expired, I hope the Government will give this order to Mr. Hébert, our Canadian artist, whose reputation is daily growing and who, even in Europe, has reaped well-earned laurels. In the city of Quebec some of his statues now embellish the facade of the parliamentary buildings. At Chambly, he has made a bronze statue of de Salaberry. Here, in Ottawa, we have his statues of Cartier and Macdonald. Under the circumstances, I do not think the hon. Minister should hesitate a single moment to entrust the execution of these two monuments to a Canadian artist who may, besides, get information from a competent jury.

Mr. MARCOTTE. (Translation.) I have but a word or two to add to the eloquent words just fallen from the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux). I fully concur in what he said about the small encouragement given in this country to artists and literary men of talent. This is a favourable opportunity to encourage our Canadian artist and to show that we appreciate to its just value the master-piece he has produced and which is a credit to our country. I think the hon. member for Gaspé has sounded the right note. I have examined those models and some of the best pieces of art executed by Mr. Hébert and I think the House will agree that he should be selected to execute these pieces of art, so as to enable him to still further develop the talent of which he has given us so many evidences so far.

Mr. HUGHES. Has the Minister selected the sites for those statues?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Not yet.

Mr. HUGHES. I would draw the attention of the Minister to the disgraceful condition in which the vestibule at the entrance to the Parliament Building is kept. The condition is such that many persons would not tolerate it in their stables. I do not blame the Minister, but I would suggest that he give some of his friends in Ottawa a job to scrape the old paint off the pillars there. I give notice to the Minister that on concurrence, I shall ask for details about the building of that new Kaministiquia dredge, and I will also be pleased if the Minister would be good enough to bring down the estimate, harbour by harbour, as to the share of the province of Ontario in that $60,000 for dredging?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will do the best I can to comply with that request.

Resolutions to be reported.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The resolution respecting the death of Mr. Gladstone; the resolution respecting the judges, and then Supply.

Mr. FOSTER. What supply?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have not decided yet, but I think the Minister of Militia expected to go on with his Estimates to-night.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 1.10 a.m. (Thursday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 26th May, 1898.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FOREIGN IMMIGRANTS.

Mr. MACLEAN asked,

1. How many Galicians, Ruthinians, or other foreigners from the continent of Europe settled in Canada last year?

2. How many of this class of immigrants settled in the Dominion from January 1st to May 15th, this year?

3. How many immigrants from the British Isles settled in Canada last year?

4. How many immigrants from the British Isles settled in the Dominion from January 1st to May 15th, this year?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). 1. 8,563 Galicians, Ruthinians and other foreigners from the continent of Europe arrived in Canada and declared their intention of settling in this country last year. 2. 2,267 of this class of immigrants arrived and declared their intention of settling in the Dominion between the 1st January and 30th April this year, the latter being the latest date up to which the department has complete returns. 3. 10,741 immigrants from the British Isles arrived and declared their intention of settling in Canada last year. 4. 2,949 immigrants from the British Isles arrived and declared their intention of settling in the Dominion between the 1st January and the 30th April this year, the latter being the latest date up to which the department has complete returns.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright) moved:

That for the remainder of the session the House shall hold two sittings on each day, one from 11 a.m. until 1 p.m., and the second from 3 p.m. until the hour of adjournment, and at each such sitting Government Orders shall have precedence.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to call my hon. friend's attention to the fact that one or two important sittings of the Public Accounts Committee will yet be necessary in order to finish investigations that have actually been commenced. I suggest whether or not it should go into effect at the time proposed, or whether it should not be postponed a couple of days, and I think my hon. friend will make just as much progress in that way. I suggest that in view of the important committees now finishing investigations entered into, and which it is very important should be finished, the motion should not go into effect as proposed. Leaving those investigations as they are, in an unfinished state, would be unjust to parties who have been summoned, and the time mentioned in the motion should be delayed two or three days.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). We have thought that perhaps it might be possible that committees should meet at 10 a.m. and sit for one hour, and the business of the House commence at 11 o'clock. In this matter I am only desirous of consulting the wishes of my hon. friends opposite, and if my hon. friend thinks it would be better to postpone the date when the motion should go into effect, we will consent, but I hope he will consider the proposition I have made.

Mr. FOSTER. The committees are sitting now at 10 o'clock, and to sit one hour is absolutely no gain. It is my wish, and I know it is the wish of the hon. members who are prosecuting these inquiries to take up no more time than is absolutely necessary.

The PRIME MINISTER. Will the hon. gentleman consent to an amendment that the morning sittings commence next Monday?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. CASEY. I should like to ask the Government if it is not possible, by permission of the House, that some of these committees should sit during the forenoon session of the House? I think permission has been given in other sessions. There is important work before the Railway Committee, for example, in addition to the work before the Public Accounts Committee, to which the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) has adverted. Bills are before the Railway Committee which have gone through several stages, and it is hardly fair to the promoters that they should be deprived of the opportunity of getting them passed.

Mr. BÉRGERON. It is only a postponement of one day.

Mr. CASEY. I may refer to a Bill in my hands that has already passed the Senate, but which may be shut out if it does not get through the Railway Committee before Monday next. I beg leave to call the attention of the Government in regard to this proposal to the fact that unless important business before these Private Bills Committees is finished before next Monday, some arrangement should be made that routine business of that kind can be gone on with in the forenoon, although the House is sitting.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I would suggest to the right hon. the Premier and to the members of the House, that if after the committee sits, it is found there are opposed Bills that may go through this session, a motion might be made giving leave to the committee to sit during the session of the House. At present, however, that is not necessary. It may be possible that there are some Bills on the Order paper that the committee are unanimous or almost unanimous with regard to putting through, and in that case we can ask leave to sit during the session of the House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Is it the intention to sit on Saturday?

The PRIME MINISTER. The Government have no objection at all to have a morning sitting next Saturday if it be convenient for the members of the House. It might be possible to sit from 11 o'clock until 6 o'clock, but as to that it would be better to have an understanding with our friends on the other side and we may perhaps think it over between this and tomorrow afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

ST. JOHN BRIDGE AND RAILWAY EXTENSION COMPANY.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House at its next sitting resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following proposed resolution:—

That it is expedient to provide that the time for the repayment of the moneys advanced by the Dominion Government to the "Saint John Bridge and Railway Extension Company," under and by virtue of chapter 26 of the statutes of 1883, be extended for a period of fifteen years from the expiration of the present term of fifteen years mentioned and provided for in the said statute and the schedule thereto, the moneys so advanced to bear interest during such extended term at the rate of four per centum per annum, payable annually on or before the 30th day of June in each year; such extension of time for the repayment of the moneys so advanced to be on condition that the said advances and the interest thereon shall remain during such extended period as now, a first charge and lien upon the real and personal property, rights, franchises, easements and privileges of the company aforesaid, and that all the provisions of the indenture or mortgage deed, dated the 10th day of December, in the year of Our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-three, and executed by the said company under the provisions of and in accordance with the said statute, shall continue and remain in full force and effect during the said extended period, and on the further condition that the Government may, if it should be found advisable, take possession of the bridge, railway and appurtenances, at any time within five years from the date of the beginning of such extended period, on payment of the difference of the amounts then due to the Government for advances and interest and the sum of the total amount expended by the company as the cost of the said bridge, railway and works and ten per centum on such amount;

Mr. SUTHERLAND.

the Minister of Justice, any deeds, mortgages or instruments necessary for the proper carrying into effect of the foregoing.

Motion agreed to.

THE QUEEN VS. SKELTON ET AL.

Mr. DAVIN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I want to appeal to the Prime Minister again, as to the case of the Queen vs. Skelton. I doubt if I made myself understood to the right hon. gentleman when I said that on Friday week, nearly a fortnight ago, I had an interview with the Minister of Justice and he assured me then that he would let me have a copy of certain affidavits. I have asked for them but I have never received them. It is not a request that they be placed on the Table, but what the Minister of Justice told me was that he would give myself personally a copy of those affidavits.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The question which was asked from me by my hon. friend (Mr. Davin) was whether a new trial had been granted in the case of Skelton. I was not then in a position to answer, but I am able to inform him to-day that no new trial has been granted. As to whether or not the Minister of Justice has promised to give my hon. friend a copy of the affidavits, that is a matter between the Minister of Justice and my hon. friend (Mr. Davin).

Mr. DAVIN. The right hon. gentleman will see that it is more than a matter between myself and the Minister of Justice, because the Minister of Justice is a member of this Government, and if he promises an hon. member of this House to give him certain documents and does not do so, I rather think it reflects on the efficiency of the Department of Justice and on the honour of the Government.

BELLEVILLE POST OFFICE.

Mr. CORBY. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I have a matter which I would like to bring before this House in reference to the dismissal of the whole post office staff of the city of Belleville, by the Postmaster General.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. CORBY. I will conclude with a motion.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I would suggest to my hon. friend (Mr. Corby) that he can bring this matter up equally well when we go into Supply.

Mr. CORBY. I am leaving for home on Saturday.

The PRIME MINISTER. We will be going into Supply in a few minutes.

Mr. CORBY. I understand the leader of the Opposition has something to bring up on going into Supply.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. McMILLAN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, Mr. Speaker, I want to draw attention to a statement that appears in "Hansard." When I came to the House yesterday, the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) sent me across a note of the speech he made, and to my utter astonishment I found that he made an unfounded charge against me in that speech. He said that I was going to make a charge against the Minister of Agriculture. I never made such a statement and the allegation is altogether unwarranted. I have always sympathized very strongly with the Minister in the position in which he is placed, and let me say that I am glad to see that he has adopted one suggestion I made years ago, and is going to appoint a man to take charge of the stock.

Mr. TAYLOR. I wish to say a word in reply to the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMillan) who says I made a misstatement. In speaking with the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMillan) a few evenings before, he said that when the Experimental Farm Estimates were up he proposed making the statement that the accounts were not kept properly and as they should be. If that did not constitute a charge against the Minister of Agriculture, I do not know what did. He (Mr. McMillan) made the same charge against the late Government, and he told me he was going to bring it up this year.

Mr. McMILLAN. I want to explain.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order; sit down.

Mr. McMILLAN. I won't sit down.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. McMILLAN. I want to make a personal explanation.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. Personal explanations, such as the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMillan) made, are in order, but they must not be converted into a discussion.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am not going to discuss it, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order; Chair.

Mr. SPEAKER. We will hear what the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMillan) is about to say.

Mr. McMILLAN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) came across the floor and asked me if I was going to discuss the Experimental Farm. It was at his instance he came over to me, and if he would mind his own business in future it would be better.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Some days ago I inquired whether the Government would have any objection to lay on the Table a copy of instructions sent to the officers appointed for the purpose of enforcing the Alien Labour Law.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). My hon. friend (Mr. Fitzpatrick) will attend to that.

Mr. FOSTER. I call the attention of the Postmaster General to the return asked for about the post office route between Golden and Fort Steele. I asked a question from the Postmaster General and he informed me that he could give the information, but he could not give it so fully in answer to a question as on notice of motion. Notice of motion was then passed and I have not got the papers yet. Neither have I yet received the copies of instructions that were given to the postmasters with reference to carrying out or modifying the order for reduced postage to Great Britain.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). I am not aware that there was any order of the House on that subject.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not saying there was an order of the House for the papers; but I asked the hon. gentleman, upon the occasion of a discussion upon one of his Bills, if he would bring them down. I understood him to say that he would. I now ask him whether he will bring them down and give them to the House or not?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). I would say to my hon. friend, with regard to the copies of the instructions sent to postmasters which he desires to have, that I am not aware of any order of the House, or of my having stated, impliedly or expressly, that they would be brought down, simply because I was not aware that my hon. friend had made that request.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, yes.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Very well, I shall have very much pleasure in meeting his wishes.

Mr. FOSTER. And a copy of the Berne Convention.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I shall be very happy to give him a copy of the Berne Convention; but the library, I presume, contains one.

Mr. FOSTER. I would rather have one authentically from the Postmaster General.

Mr. DAVIN. I would ask the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) when we are to have the return with regard to dismissions in the North-west Territories, which was ordered by the House.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). I was under the impression that I had brought it down. However, I will look it up and see.

THE LATE RIGHT HON. W. E. GLADSTONE—RESOLUTION OF CONDOLENCE.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the House, I beg leave now to lay upon the Table the report of the committee which was appointed a few days ago to prepare a resolution of condolence on the death of the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone. The report is in these terms :

The Committee appointed to prepare a resolution of condolence on the death of the Right Honourable W. E. Gladstone, beg leave to submit the following resolution to the House :—

“Resolved,—That the House of Commons of Canada desire to record their profound sense of the loss the Empire has sustained in the death of the Right Honourable William Ewart Gladstone.

“For a period of more than half a century Mr. Gladstone has been one of the most conspicuous figures in the Parliament of Great Britain.

“Four times Premier of the United Kingdom, his tenure of office was distinguished by the inauguration of sound fiscal and political reforms of the greatest and most far-reaching character, and he passes away, full of years and honours, among a nation's tears, the most illustrious man of his generation.

“The people of the entire Empire are his mourners, and the House of Commons of Canada lays reverently on his bier this tribute of testimony of the respect and affection with which they regard the great statesman who has departed.”

(Sgd.) WILFRID LAURIER,
Chairman.

I beg to move, seconded by Sir Charles Tupper, that the report be now adopted. Mr. Speaker, everybody in this House will, I think, agree that it is eminently fitting and proper that in the universal expression of regret which ascends towards heaven from all parts of the civilized world we also should join our voice and testify to the very high sense of respect, admiration, and veneration which the entire people of Canada, irrespective of creed or race or party, entertain for the memory of the great man who has just closed his earthly career.

England has lost the most illustrious of her sons ; but the loss is not England's alone, nor is it confined to the great Empire which acknowledges England's suzerainty, nor even to the proud race which can claim kinship with the people of England. The loss is the loss of mankind. Mr. Gladstone gave his whole life to his country ; but the work which he did for his country was conceived and carried out on principles of such high elevation, for purposes so noble and aims so lofty, that not his country alone, but the whole of mankind, benefited by his work. It is no exaggeration to say that he has raised the standard of civilization, and the world to-day is undoubtedly better for both the precept and the example of his life. His death is mourned not only by England, the land of his birth, not only by Scotland, the land of his ancestors, not only by Ireland, for whom he did so much, and attempted to do so much more ; but also by the people of the two Sicilies, for whose outraged rights he once aroused the conscience of Europe, by the people of the Ionian Islands, whose independence he secured, by the people of Bulgaria and the Danubian provinces, in whose cause he enlisted the sympathy of his own native country. Indeed, since the days of Napoleon, no man has lived whose name has travelled so far and so wide over the surface of the earth ; no man has lived whose name alone so deeply moved the hearts of so many millions of men. Whereas Napoleon impressed his tremendous personality upon peoples far and near by the strange fascination which the genius of war has always exercised over the imagination of men in all lands and in all ages, the name of Gladstone had come to be, in the minds of all civilized nations, the living incarnation of right against might—the champion, the dauntless, tireless champion, of the oppressed against the oppressor. It is, I believe, equally true to say that he was the most marvellous mental organization which the world has seen since Napoleon—certainly the most compact, the most active and the most universal.

This last half century in which we live has produced many able and strong men who, in different walks of life, have attracted the attention of the world at large ; but of the men who have illustrated this age, it seems to me that in the eyes of posterity four will outlive and outshine all others—Cavour, Lincoln, Bismark and Gladstone. If we look simply at the magnitude of the results obtained, compared with the exiguity of the resources at command—if we remember that out of the small kingdom of Sardinia grew United Italy, we must come to the conclusion that Count Cavour was undoubtedly a statesman of marvellous skill and prescience. Abraham Lincoln, unknown to fame when he was elected to the Presidency, exhibited a power for the government of men which has scarcely been surpassed in any age. He saved the American Union, he enfranchised the black race, and for the task he had to perform he was edowed in some respects almost miraculously. No man ever displayed a greater insight into the motives, the complex motives, which shape the public opinion of a free country, and he possessed almost to the degree of an instinct, the supreme quality in a statesman of taking the right decision, taking it at the right moment, and expressing it in language of incomparable felicity. Prince Bismarck was the embodiment of resolute common sense, unflinching determination, relentless strength, moving onward to his end, and crushing everything in his way as unconcerned as fate itself. Mr. Gladstone undoubtedly excelled every one of these men. He had in his person a combination of varied powers of the human intellect, rarely to be found in one single individual. He had the imaginative fancy, the poetic conception of things, in which Count Cavour was deficient. He had the aptitude for business, the financial ability which Lincoln never exhibited. He had the lofty impulses, the generous inspirations which Prince Bismarck always discarded, even if he did not treat them with scorn. He was at once an orator, a statesman, a poet, and a man of business. As an orator he stands certainly in the very front rank of orators of his country or any country, of his age or any age. I remember, when Louis Blanc was in England, in the days of the Second Empire, he used to write to the press of Paris, and in one of his letters to "Le Temps," he stated that Mr. Gladstone would undoubtedly have been the foremost orator of England if it were not for the existence of Mr. Bright. It may be admitted, and I think it is admitted generally, that on some occasions Mr. Bright reached heights of grandeur and pathos which even Mr. Gladstone did not attain. But Mr. Gladstone had an ability, a vigour, a fluency which no man in his age or any age ever rivalled or even approached. That is not all. To his marvellous mental powers he added no less marvellous physical gifts. He had the eye of a god, the voice of a silver bell; and the very fire of his eye, the very music of his voice swept the hearts of men even before they had been dazzled by the torrents of his eloquence.

As a statesman, it was the good fortune of Mr. Gladstone that his career was not associated with war. The reforms which he effected, the triumphs which he achieved, were not won by the supreme arbitrament of the sword. The reforms which he effected and the triumphs which he achieved were the result of his power of persuasion over his fellow men. The reforms which he achieved in many ways amounted to a revolution. They changed, in many particulars, the face of the realm. After Sir Robert Peel had adopted the great principle which eventually carried England from protection to free trade, it was Mr. Gladstone who created the financial system which has been admitted ever since by all students of finance as the secret of Great Britain's commercial success. He enforced the extension of the suffrage to the masses of the nation and practically thereby made the Government of monarchical England as democratic as that of any republic. He disestablished the Irish Church; he introduced reform into the land tenure, and brought hope into the breasts of those tillers of the soil in Ireland who had for so many generations laboured in despair. And all this he did, not by force or violence, but simply by the power of his eloquence and the strength of his personality.

Great, however, as were the acts of the man, after all he was of the human flesh, and for him, as for everybody else, there were trivial and low duties to be performed. It is no exaggeration to say that even in those low and trivial duties he was great. He ennobled the common realities of life. His was above all things a religious mind—essentially religious in the highest sense of the term. And the religious sentiment which dominated his public life and his speeches, that same sentiment, according to the testimony of those who knew him best, also permeated all his actions from the highest to the humblest. He was a man of strong and pure affections, of long and lasting friendship, and to describe the beauty of his domestic life no words of praise can be adequate. It was simply ideally beautiful, and in the later years of his life as touching as it was beautiful. May I be permitted, without any impropriety, to recall that it was my privilege to experience and to appreciate that courtesy, made up of dignity and grace, which was famous all over the world, but of which no one could have an appropriate opinion unless he had been the recipient of it. In a character so complex and diversified, one may be asked what was the dominant feature, what was the supreme quality, the one characteristic which marked the nature of the man. Was it his incomparable genius for finance? Was it his splendid oratorical powers? Was it his marvellous fecundity of mind? In my estimation, it was not any one of those qualities. Great as they were, there was one still more marked, and if I have to give my own impression, I would say that the one trait which was dominant in his nature, which marked the man more distinctly than any other, was his intense humanity, his paramount sense of right, his abhorrence of injustice, wrong and oppression wherever to be found or in whatever shape they might show themselves. Injustice, wrong, oppression, acted upon him, as it were, mechanically, and aroused every fibre of his being, and from that moment, to the repairing of the injustice, the undoing of the wrong, and the destruction of the oppression, he gave his mind, his heart, his soul, his whole life with an energy, with an intensity, with a vigour paralleled in no man unless it be the First Napoleon. There are many evidences of this in his life. When he was travelling in southern Italy, as a tourist, for pleasure and for the benefit of the health of his family, he became aware of the abominable system which was there prevailing under the name of constitutional government. He left everything aside, even the object which had brought him to Italy, and applied himself to investigate and to collect evidence, and then denounced the abominable system in a trumpet blast of such power that it shook to its very foundation the throne of King Ferdinand and sent it tottering to its fall. Again, when he was sent as High Commissioner to the Ionian Islands, the injustice of keeping this Hellenic population separated from the rest of Greece, separated from the kingdom to which they were adjacent and towards which all their aspirations were raised, struck his generous soul with such force that he became practically their advocate and secured their independence. Again, when he had withdrawn from public life, and when, in the language of Thiers, under somewhat similar circumstances, he had returned to "ses chères études," the atrocities perpetrated by the Turks on the people of Roumania brought him back to public life with a vehemence an impetuosity, and a torrent of fierce indignation that swept everything before it. If this be, as I think it is, the one distinctive feature of his character, it seems to explain away what are called the inconsistencies of his life. Inconsistencies, there were none in his life. He had been brought up in the most unbending school of Toryism. He became the most active Reformer of our own times. But whilst he became the leader of the Liberal party and an active Reformer, it is only due to him to say that in his complex mind there was a vast space for what is known as Conservatism. His mind was not only liberal but conservative as well, and he clung to the affections of his youth until, in questions of practical moment, he found them clashing with that sense of right and abhorrence of injustice of which I have spoken. But the moment he found his conservative affections clash with what he thought right and just, he did not hesitate to abandon his former convictions and go the whole length of the reforms demanded. Thus he was always devotedly, filially lovingly attached to the Church of England. He loved it, as he often declared. He adhered to it as an establishment in England, but the very reasons and arguments which, in his mind, justified the establishment of the Church in England, compelled him to a different course as far as that church was concerned in Ireland. In England the church was the church of the majority, of almost the unanimity of the nation. In Ireland it was the church of the minority, and therefore he did not hesitate. His course was clear; he removed the one church and maintained the other. So it was with Home Rule, but coming to the subject of Home Rule, though there may be much to say, perhaps this is neither the occasion nor the place to say it. The Irish problem is dormant but not solved, but the policy proposed by Mr. Gladstone for the solution of this question has provoked too much bitterness, too deep division, even on the floor of this House, to make it advisable to say anything about it on this occasion.

I notice it, however, simply because it is the last and everlasting monument of that high sense of justice which, above all things, characterized him. When he became convinced that Home Rule was the only method whereby the insoluble problem could be solved, whereby the long open wound could be healed, he did not hesitate one moment, even though he were to sacrifice friends, power, popularity. And he sacrificed friends, power, popularity, in order to give that supreme measure of justice to a long-suffering people. Whatever may be the views which men entertain upon the policy of Home Rule, whether they favour that policy or whether they oppose it, whether they believe in it or whether they do not believe in it, every man, whether friend or foe of that measure, must say that it was not only a bold, but it was a noble thought, that of attempting to cure discontent in Ireland by trusting to Irish honour and Irish generosity.

Now, Sir, he is no more. England is today in tears, but fortunate is the nation which has produced such a man. His years are over, but his work is not closed; his work is still going on. The example which he gave to the world shall live for ever, and the seed which he has sown with such a copious hand shall still germinate and bear fruit under the full light of heaven.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Speaker, I do not rise for the purpose of speaking upon the resolution which has just been submitted in terms so admirable and so eloquent by the leader of the House, as on a recent occasion I had an opportunity of making reference to the sad event which has plunged the civilized world in mourning. I only rise for the purpose of formally seconding the resolution and making way for an hon. gentleman, the representative of Victoria (Mr. Costigan), who, I am sure, will only be too glad to avail himself of this opportunity of expressing the gratitude of the race to which he belongs for the eminent services that the departed statesman rendered them.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. Speaker, it is particularly because of a reference made to myself by the hon. leader of the Opposition that I venture to say a word on this occasion. The death of the Right Hon. William Ewart Gladstone, one of the greatest statesmen that England ever produced, and, in most respects the most commanding and wonderful personality of the 19th century, is evoking expressions of genuine grief and mourning from all over the world; and one of the greatest tributes that could be paid to the memory of the illustrious dead is the universal recognition of the inadequacy of these many-tongued expressions to fitly voice the sorrow of mankind, or the worth of him for whom earth mourns.

But I feel it to be especially my duty to say that in no part of the Empire will sorrow more thrill men's hearts than in Ireland; nor is it only the hearts of Irishmen within that ancient and glorious kingdom that swell with grief for this mighty tribune of the people, but the hearts of Irishmen and their descendants in all lands and on every sea.

Mr. Gladstone's efforts in the sacred cause of Home Rule for Ireland endeared him to the Irish people. His sympathy and his efforts gave to the Home Rule cause the dignity and the strength and the safety of a great constitutional movement, and this not only in the United Kingdom, but wherever Irishmen and their descendants work for the motherland.

That grand measure of reform has been delayed, it is true, but only delayed, and in the struggle that Ireland will continue unto a glorious victory no moral force will help more potently than the memory that Ireland's cause has had the sincere approval and generous advocacy of a man so great and so good.

Motion agreed to.

The PRIME MINISTER moved, seconded by Sir Charles Tupper:

That the resolution of condolence on the death of the Right Honourable William Ewart Gladstone be communicated to Mrs. Gladstone, on behalf of this House, by Mr. Speaker.

Motion agreed to.

POST OFFICE ACT AMENDMENT.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock) moved the third reading of Bill (No. 110) further to amend the Post Office Act. He said: When this Bill was in Committee of the Whole a discussion of the proposition to decentralize the dead letter branch evoked some little criticism. In order to meet this criticism I was willing to consent to a limitation of the outside dead letter offices; and, accordingly, the number was stated in the Bill at three, at remote points from Ottawa—Victoria, Winnipeg and Halifax. Subsequently, I ascertained from the officers of my department that it would be greatly to the interests of the public and of the service if Toronto could be included in the list: and accordingly, when the Bill came up for third reading, I moved the House into Committee of the Whole with a view to adding, if possible, Toronto and Montreal. The committee made the addition, but it was suggested by the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) that possibly that would be regarded by some members of the House who were not then present as a departure from a supposed understanding arrived at when we were in committee. Accordingly, I deferred the third reading until these gentlemen should be present, to see if they would assent to that view. I am not desirous of departing in the least from any supposed understanding reached, but I would ask them to consider if it would not be in the public interest to add Toronto and Montreal to the points in which dead matter may be examined. I think I would be correct in saying that, so far as all dead matter originating in the vicinity of Toronto or west of that point is concerned, the necessity of that matter being brought to Ottawa and treated here would involve something like a week's delay. There is a routine in connection with the communication with Ottawa involving sometimes two and sometimes three letters between Ottawa and the place of origin or destination, so that considerable delay results. From the city of Toronto there are sent to the dead letter office in Ottawa, now monthly, nearly 5,000 letters; and from Montreal nearly 6,000. In the public interest, therefore, I ask my hon. friends who hesitated before to extend the number of points beyond three, whether they cannot consent to these two points being added. They are now in the Bill as amended, and as it stands for the third reading.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am much obliged to the hon. the Postmaster General for having left this matter over in order that it might receive further consideration. I would like to ask him whether he has had any means of knowing what the public sentiment is in these two important cities of Toronto and Montreal in relation to this question. I should hesitate very much to oppose the extension to these two cities if the hon. gentleman has reason to believe that the public sentiment in those cities is largely in favour of the change he proposes.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think the question is a very proper one, and in reply I would say that certain members representing those cities have spoken to me strongly in favour of this measure. Some of them are in the House, and I would prefer if they gave their views to the House themselves.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. The proposal to decentralize the dead letter office has given unqualified satisfaction to the business men and the mercantile community in Toronto. We feel that Toronto is a large postal centre, and this effort on the part of the Postmaster General to help the business men, is recognized as being in the line of progress. The proposition meets with the universal approval, not only of the mercantile community, but of the public in Toronto. In fact, the whole Bill has given general satisfaction. In my conversation with business men in Toronto during the past ten days with regard to the different features of the Bill, I find a unanimous approval, not only of the clause of the Bill now under discussion, but also of those clauses of the Bill referring to newspaper postage and to the reduction of the rates in the postage on American and Canadian letters.

Mr. BERTRAM. The suggestion made by the Postmaster General that Montreal and Toronto should be included as points for dealing with the dead letter matter that is now sent to Ottawa, is, I think, one of those internal reforms that might very well be adopted. I was much surprised indeed to hear that the quantity of such matter sent from Toronto to Ottawa was so large, amounting to nearly 5,000 letters monthly, or 60,000 a year. It seems to me that it is a waste of time to send those letters to Ottawa for the purpose of being opened and dealt with, it would be a great convenience to the writers if they were dealt with in the Toronto post office, where, I think, the officials are just as well qualified to deal with those letters that are improperly addressed and have to be opened as are the officials in the city of Ottawa. Therefore, I hope that this reform, which will be of so much benefit to the general public, will be carried out.

Mr. SPROULE. It appeared to me there were two objects in view in making this change. One was to expedite the business and get it off the hands of the department as early as possible, and to make the delay between the posting of the letter and its return as short as possible. The other object was to lessen the expense of carrying such matter from all over the country to one centre, both of which are no doubt very proper objects. But if the latter object is one of the problems, I would suggest to the Postmaster General that he could reduce that by refusing to allow the members of Parliament to send their little trunks or stationery boxes home through the post office, as these must weigh fifteen or twenty pounds. I am informed they are being sent even as far as Manitoba and the North-west Territories through the post office. It seems to me to be an abuse of the system to send such heavy packages as that by mail, they ought to be sent either by express or by freight.

Amendments concurred in, and Bill read the third time and passed.

NORTH-WEST IRRIGATION ACTS.

Bill (No. 146) to amend and consolidate the North-west Irrigation Acts of 1894 and 1895, was read the second time, and the House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 51,

Mr. DAVIN. Is it not the intention at an early period to place this whole question of irrigation under the local government? I presume the Minister does not contemplate using other than existing officers to carry out the provisions, for instance, of this section?

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The intention is, as far as possible, that the local work and scientific work shall be carried out by the Public Works Department of the local administration. The only officer in the service of the Government who has had extensive experience and made a thorough study of irrigation is Mr. Dennis. He is the Deputy Commissioner of Public Works of the North-west Territories, and the intention is, as far as possible, in the early stages of the operation of the Act, to allow it to be carried out under his charge.

Committee rose and reported progress.

ACT RESPECTING THE JUDGES OF THE PROVINCIAL COURTS.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick) moved that the House resolve itself into committee on a certain proposed resolution declaring it expedient to amend the Act respecting the judges of provincial courts, and to provide as follows:—

That the salary of an additional judge of the Court of Appeal for Ontario shall be $5,000 per annum.

That the salaries of fourteen puisne judges of the Superior Court of the province of Quebec, whose residences are fixed at Montreal and Quebec (including the judge to whom the district of Terrebonne is assigned), shall be each $5,000 per annum.

That the salary of an additional judge of the Superior Court of Quebec shall be $4,000 per annum.

That the salary of an additional judge of the Circuit Court of the district of Montreal shall be $3,000 per annum.

That the salary of the judge of the Supreme Court of the Yukon Territory shall be $4,000 per annum.

That on and after 1st July, 1898, the salaries of the judges and junior judges of the county courts of Ontario, other than the judge of the County Court of the county of York, shall be each $2,000 per annum during the first three years of service, and after three years of service each $2,400 per annum.

That on and after the said date the salary of the judge of the County Court of the county of Halifax shall be $3,000 per annum.

That on and after the said date, in Prince Edward Island, the salary of the judge of the County Court of Queen's County shall be $3,000 per annum, and the salaries of two other county court judges each $2,000 per annum during the first three years of service, and after three years of service each $2,400 per annum.

That to each of the judges of the Court of Queen's Bench in the province of Quebec, for attending the said court for a part only of a term, or for the purpose of disposing of cases already heard, or for attending for the performance of any other judicial duty, or attending at Montreal or Quebec at the written request of the chief justice or judge performing the duties of chief justice for the purpose of conference and délibéré as to appeals heard, there shall be paid, for travelling allowances, $6 for each day's absence from his place of residence, provided that three days' absence at least shall always be allowed.

That to each of the judges of the Superior or Circuit Courts attending as such, at the request in writing of the chief justice or judge discharging the duties of chief justice in the district, any court held at any other place than that at which he is directed to reside, for each day he is absent from the said place of residence, there shall be paid for travelling allowances, six dollars; but no travelling allowances shall be granted to any judge requested to sit in review under the first section of the Act of the Legislature of Quebec, 61 Victoria, chapter 20, unless it is certified by the chief justice or judge discharging the duties of chief justice in the district that the attendance of such judge was necessary by reason of illness, incapacity or absence of one of the judges resident at Montreal or Quebec, as the case may be.

That to the judges of the Supreme Court of the Yukon Territory there shall be paid such travelling allowances as the Governor in Council determines.

That to each judge of a District Court in the province of Ontario there shall be paid, for travelling allowances, an annual sum of $500.

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The object of this resolution is to enable us to provide for the appointment of an additional judge to the Court of Appeal for the province of Ontario, and one additional judge to the Superior Court in the province of Quebec, and also to provide for the salary of the judge of the Yukon district. In addition to what I have said, the resolution is to provide for the increase in the salaries of the junior county court judges in the province of Ontario, and also for the increase of the salaries of two county court judges, one at Halifax, N.S., and the other at Charlottetown, P.E.I. The increase so far as the Ontario county court judges are concerned will be to the extent of $400 per year.

Mr. FOSTER. Making what?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. $2,400 in the case of the Ontario junior county court judges, and $2,800 for the judges at Halifax and Prince Edward Island, and then in the latter case there is $200 additional for travelling expenses which will make it $3,000.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The resolution says $3,000 salary, not $2,800 salary and $200 travelling expenses?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, the intention is to make the salary $3,000. I thought that would include travelling expenses, but I find in the details of the Bill that it is $3,000 salary. I might add that the Bill will also provide for the appointment of an additional judge of the Circuit Court of Montreal, making the number there three judges instead of two.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I would like to ask the Solicitor General as to the principle upon which he is proceeding on this resolution as a whole. Some time ago we had a discussion in this House on the anomalous condition of things whereby the local Parliaments created judges and we provided the salaries. In connection with this proposition to increase the number of judges, has the Solicitor General proceeded upon the theory that the local legislatures have created these additional judgeships, it is a perfunctory duty, so to speak, on the part of the Federal Parliament to provide the salaries; or, has the Solicitor General investigated the condition of litigation and the state of the dockets in existing courts so as to reach an opinion that these additional judges are necessary for the proper discharge of judicial business?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The administration of justice being a matter for the provinces it is absolutely necessary that due regard should be had to the wishes expressed by the local authorities. At the same time I would not agree to a proposition that this duty is merely perfunctory on our part; that is to say, that the local authorities have the right to create a vacancy, and that it is our duty to fill it. That, in my opinion, would not be a proper manner in which to interpret the conditions as they exist. After the local legislatures have made it known that it would be necessary to appoint an additional judge, I take it that our duty is to make an investigation and to ascertain whether in reality there is such a necessity as would justify us in putting this additional burden upon the shoulders of the federal taxpayers. At the same time I do not think it would be right for us to lightly set aside the expressed wishes of the local legislatures in that respect. Dealing with the appointment of an additional judge to the Court of Appeal in the province of Ontario, I think it will be admitted—and my hon. friends from Ontario will be able to bear me out in this—that it is necessary for the due carrying on of public business in that province we should have an additional judge in the Court of Appeal.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That would give five judges to the Court of Appeal of Ontario instead of four?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes. In so far as the circuit court of Montreal is concerned, it is absolutely necessary that we should have an additional judge there. Now, there are two judges and the roll has become so congested that at the present rate of progress it would take a year to catch up with the current business. It is absolutely necessary. I say, that something should be done to provide against that condition of things. I am quite prepared to say this: That the judges ought really to understand that greater diligence is expected of them and that they should pay closer attention to the performance of their duties, and give—I am speaking now for my own province with the necessities of which I am more familiar than in the case of the other provinces—and give closer attention and more time and more diligence to the performance of their duties. I quite see the necessity of my making that statement in the House. At the same time I do not see how it would be possible for the circuit court of Montreal to perform the duty expected of it if additional assistance is not given to that court.

As to the appointment of an additional judge to the Superior Court of Quebec, that additional judge will be in the district of St. Francis. In that district, which is the centre of the eastern townships, there is but one judge now, and I know from personal experience that the quantity of business done there is such that it is practically impossible for one judge to do the work. Sherbrooke is the chief town of that district. It is the centre of a very prosperous country and there are interests of very great magnitude constantly coming before the court. So far as the judicial district is concerned it is absolutely necessary that there should be assistance given to the one judge there now.

Dealing with the county court judges in Ontario, there can be, in my judgment, no justification for the distinction that is at present made between the county court judge and the junior county court judge. The county court judge under the law as it now stands is appointed at a salary of $2,000 per annum, and after a number of years' service the salary is increased by $400, making the maximum $2,400. The qualifications necessary to be a junior judge are absolutely the same as for a county court judge, and I cannot see why there should be any distinction in the way of salary between men possessed of the same qualifications and called upon to perform, not only the same duties but much more arduous duties, because the junior county court judge in Ontario has also to take the division courts, which places upon him the performance of duties of a more complicated and onerous character than those which the county court judge himself performs.

Mr. HUGHES. This will apply forthwith to judges who have already been three years in office?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. WALLACE. Would the Solicitor General be able to tell us how much the proposed increases will cost the country per year in addition to the present salaries?

Mr. FITZPATRICK.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There are eighteen junior county judges receiving an increase of $400 a year each, an additional judge of the Court of Appeal of Ontario at $5,000, and an additional judge of the Superior Court of Quebec at $4,000.

Mr. WALLACE. And travelling expenses?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No. Then, there is $3,000 for the salary of a Circuit Court judge in Montreal. For the Supreme Court judge of the Yukon territory there is $4,000 and expenses. There is an increase at Halifax of $600, and an increase at Charlottetown of $600. There are four district judges and one junior district judge in Ontario. The four will require $500 a year each for travelling expenses. We also provide in the second paragraph of the resolution an addition of $1,000 for a judge who now lives in Montreal and performs the duty of a judge in the district of Terrebonne. He now receives $4,000, and the intention is to increase his salary to $5,000 to put him on the same basis as the other judges.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think my hon. friend has made his explanation of the financial part of his resolution as clear and definite as he should. The only reason for his coming here with this resolution is to inform the committee what will be the financial burden; and, after listening to him, I do not know what it will be. I think he should be a little more definite.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not rise to oppose the Minister's proposal, but to call attention to a discrepancy between the first resolution introduced and the second one, so far as the province of Quebec is concerned. The first resolution provided for an additional judge of the Court of Appeal of Ontario at $5,000, an additional judge of the Superior Court in the province of Quebec at $5,000, an additional judge of the Circuit Court of the district of Montreal at $3,000, a judge of the Supreme Court of the Yukon territory, and so forth. The second resolution provides that the salaries of fourteen puisne judges of the Superior Court of Quebec, whose residences are fixed at Montreal and Quebec, including a judge to whom the district of Terrebonne is assigned, shall be each $5,000 per annum. In this there is evidence of an afterthought for the purpose of putting on the same basis the judge of the district of Terrebonne, who, I am told, resides in Montreal, and hitherto has been working under another law. A gentleman who has evidently taken some interest in this matter, sends me the following memorandum, which I will read for the information of the Solicitor General:—

I beg to call your attention to the resolution now before the House concerning the fourteen puisne judges of the province of Quebec. It is provided by this resolution that fourteen judges, including the judge to whom is assigned the district of Terrebonne, and who resides in Montreal, will get $5,000 of salary. There is nothing to be said concerning the salary of the judges who have exclusive jurisdiction in Montreal. But I beg to call your special attention to the salary of the judge for the district of Terrebonne, for whose sole interest that change in the law is proposed.

By the Act of 1889, 52 Vic., chap. 39, sec. 4, it is provided that thirteen judges residing in Montreal, but not including the judge of the district of Terrebonne, will receive $5,000 a year.

Judge Taschereau is the judge to whom is assigned the district of Terrebonne, and according to the law of the province of Quebec he should reside in his district, that is to say, Terrebonne. But in 1889 he got the law of Quebec amended so as to permit him to reside in Montreal, and, at the same time, the law was amended at Ottawa so as to meet his case, that is to say, so as to permit him to reside in Montreal. Still, he was not to receive more than $4,000 of salary, being the salary of a rural judge. He, however, found his way clear to increase his salary under the form of travelling allowance. By looking at the Auditor General's Report, I find that he has received the following amounts for travelling allowance :—

1894 (Page H—12).....	$1,226
1895 (Page I—11).....	1,058
1896 (Page I—11).....	1,352
1897 (Page I—12).....	1,686

Forming an average for those four last years of $1,331 over and above his statutory salary of $4,000 a year. He has consequently received, since four years, $5,331 yearly. He has consequently received more salary than any other judge of Montreal.

Now, how did he come to charge so exorbitant an amount for travelling allowance? He resides in Montreal, and I suppose that when he sits in Montreal he charges $6 a day, as judges are permitted to charge when sitting outside of their district.

I am told that there is an agreement which can be found in the Department of Justice, that provided he could reside in Montreal he would sit in Montreal without extra charge.

If that resolution is adopted, and if the charges which he has made till to-day are correct, that judge will receive then very much more than any judge in Montreal, which is absolutely unfair and unjust.

I merely draw attention to the fact that if there is any unfairness, and it seems to me that there is, this change in the law is specially made in the interests of this one judge alone, because it does not change the salary of any of the other thirteen judges.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The hon. gentleman is quite right, the sole intention of that portion of the resolution is to meet Judge Taschereau's case—to remedy a gross injustice which has been done him in the past; and I am quite certain my hon. friend will agree with me when I explain the position to him. Judge Taschereau is assigned to the district of Montreal; his residence is in Montreal, and he acts in Montreal. I ask those hon. gentlemen who practice in Montreal to say whether or not there is a judge in the whole district who does more work and takes a larger share of the performance of judicial duties than Judge Taschereau. Not only does he perform his duties as judge in the district of Montreal, and do more than his share—I use the words advisedly—of the judicial work there, but he also does the whole of the judicial work in the important district of Terrebonne. That being the case, am I not warranted in saying that a gross injustice has been done him in the past and the time has come to remedy it.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the hon. Minister mean to say that Judge Taschereau was not assigned to Terrebonne but appointed to the district of Montreal?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. He was appointed judge for the district of Terrebonne and his residence was fixed in Montreal, and residing in Montreal he performed the duties of judge in that district, and saved us the necessity of appointing an additional judge there.

Mr. SPROULE. Does he charge $6 a day when discharging his duties in Montreal?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No, he charges $6 a day when he performs his duties in the district of Terrebonne. Let me call attention to the law, chapter 27 of 52 Victoria of the Quebec statutes:

Eleven judges of the Superior Court shall reside in Montreal, and one of those judges who reside in Montreal is to be charged with the duties of the district of Terrebonne.

So that he is a judge residing in Montreal under the statute, and in addition has to discharge the duties of the district of Terrebonne.

Mr. SPROULE. Though he takes his salary as judge at Terrebonne, he charges $6 a day when he works there.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. He takes the salary to which he is entitled as a judge residing in the district of Montreal, and then travels to Terrebonne for the purpose of performing his duties there.

Mr. MONK. I can corroborate what the Solicitor General says with regard to Judge Taschereau. He sits in the district of Montreal, and certainly those who practice in that district have no reason to complain with regard to his industry or his attainments either as a judge. What we have always understood is what the Solicitor General has stated, that he gets this allowance for travelling expenses when he goes into the district of Terrebonne, and I presume that allowance will continue even when he gets the $5,000.

Mr. DAVIN. I would like to know whether what is stated in the memo. which my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) read is correct, namely, that Judge Taschereau not only charged travelling expenses when he is in Terrebonne but also in Montreal ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. With the knowledge I have of Judge Taschereau, I say that it is utterly impossible to imagine that he would do anything of the sort. I have not got the name of the hon. gentleman's informant, but I cannot conceive it possible that Judge Taschereau could do such a thing.

Mr. SPROULE. How do you account for the items in the Auditor General's Report ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. His residence being in Montreal, he gets his expenses when he goes to Terrebonne.

Mr. BERGERON. As far as Judge Taschereau is concerned the resolution is a very good one, and I think it will put matters in a better position. There can be no doubt that Judge Taschereau does a great deal of work in Montreal. He is one of the most laborious judges there, and his position was abnormal. He was first appointed to the district of Kamouraska and then transferred to Montreal for the district of Joliette, and resided in Montreal. What we are doing to-day should have been done long ago. He was residing in Montreal and doing the work in Montreal, and was transferred to Terrebonne when Judge Delormier was appointed to Joliette. To-day he will be purely and simply one more judge for the district of Montreal, and will have besides to attend to the district of Terrebonne, when, I suppose, he will be entitled to the $6 a day granted judges who are travelling outside of their place of residence.

I wish to put a few questions to my hon. friend. Who has asked for a judge at Sherbrooke ? I admit that there should be two judges at Sherbrooke, but I wish to know if it is the Quebec Government that has asked for it. It is in the province of the Quebec Government to locate the different judges in the different districts, and, therefore, of course, we cannot do that here, but since we are called upon to pay for an additional judge, let me point out that in the distribution of judicial districts in Quebec there is a great deal of inequality. There are certainly four or five districts where there is hardly anything to do, and the judge required in Sherbrooke might easily have been taken from one of these districts. Take the district of St. John and St. Hyacinthe, surely one judge could perfectly well administer those two districts. I should say that one judge could administer St. Hyacinthe, St. John and Richelieu, because in those three districts the judges have a great deal of time at their disposal, and come and sit in Montreal where they do good service, if you like, but at the same time their districts could be amended. I understand that that would have to be done by the Quebec Government, but I do not see why this Government should not confer with the Quebec authorities and avoid the payment of an extra judge, if not needed.

Another thing I would call the hon. gentleman's attention to is this. There seems to be in the resolution brought down a discrepancy between the judges of the Court of Appeal and the judges of the Superior Court. There seems to be an idea of making the judges of the Superior Court of the province of Quebec district judges, while as a matter of fact, as my hon. friend will find in the Act which appoints them, they are appointed for the whole province of Quebec. Therefore, this Bill would have the effect of minimizing their position.

Now there is also a point in this resolution about the payment of judges who are sent out from their own districts. * The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fitzpatrick) in his resolution allows the judges of the Court of Appeal $6 a day for every day they are called out of their own district either to sit in term or to render judgment, and so on. "Provided that three days' absence at least shall always be allowed." That is the old law which, I understand, is restricted to the judges of the Court of Appeal and does not apply to the judges of the Superior Court. Of course, this is a matter of policy, but I do not think that this change would be in the interest of justice. A judge is allowed to receive $6 a day during his absence from his own district. The tendency will be for the judge to spend more time away from home, instead of spending many evenings, as he does now, in preparing judgments and working up cases. In the case of a judge residing outside of Montreal, say in Beauharnois, when he sits at Beauharnois he is not entitled to any travelling allowance, but if he goes to St. Martine he will be allowed $6 a day.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is a difficulty I have to meet. It arises from an oversight and I shall have to change my resolution to meet it.

Mr. BERGERON. It says here "Any court held at any other place than that at which he is directed to reside." That is one of the points I wanted to raise.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, that is right.

Mr. BERGERON. Now, so far as the judge for the court of circuit in Montreal is concerned, the Solicitor General will understand how hard it is for any lawyer to say anything about the judges ; but I think that it becomes our duty here, and we are bound to do it. There is no doubt that two judges for the Circuit Court of Montreal would have been amply sufficient, if these two judges had been old judges—I do not mean old in years but old practitioners.

The PRIME MINISTER. Does my hon. friend mean to say that the appointments were not judicious ?

Mr. BERGERON. I am not quite saying that. The appointment was made under the old Government, and I will not say it was not judicious. But I will come to it this way: The judges of the Circuit Court of Montreal were first appointed by Mr. Mercier in Quebec as district magistrates. These were political appointments—to call things by their names. These gentlemen were very respectable men, very good men, as far as their qualifications as gentlemen and honest men and everything of that kind was concerned. But they were political nominees. The jurisdiction of the magistrates was up to $50. Afterwards the law under which they were appointed was disallowed, because Mr. Mercier had given them a salary which he had no authority to give under the local statute. But this court had proven a great help in dealing with small cases, and when the law was disallowed, there was a demand in Montreal for the creation of a court with somewhat similar jurisdiction. Under the old system the Circuit Court was held by judges of the Superior Court sitting in term and dividing the term amongst themselves. They were old judges and men of a great deal of experience and they did their work very rapidly. There is no appeal from the decision of the Circuit Court, and the cases before it range between $50 and $80 and upwards to $100. During the interregnum, when the court appointed by the local government was suspended or disallowed, the Circuit Court cases went before the judges of the Superior Court, as in former times. At that time, if I am not mistaken, there were from one hundred to one hundred and fifty cases behind, the two district magistrates having been unable to keep up with the business. The judges of the Superior Court being appointed to this work, in a week's time they had cleared off all the cases that were behind and finished up such business as was brought before them to the satisfaction of the bar. When the district magistrates court was no longer allowed to exist, there was a demand to continue the Circuit Court, with the nomination of judges, whoever they might be. But pressure was brought to bear on the Minister of Justice of that day, Sir John Thompson, to appoint the same men who had been doing this work as district magistrates. And although there was opposition to such an appointment, still, the Minister of Justice concluded that it would be a hardship to set them aside and that it would be a reflection upon their reputation. Consequently, they were appointed. The gentlemen I refer to were Messrs. Barry and Champagne. When Mr. Barry died, he was replaced by Mr. Purcell, a very promising young lawyer in Montreal. Now we find that the Government have before the House a proposal for the nomination of another judge for the Circuit Court, and for this judge we are called upon to provide $3,000 a year. But if the nomination is made in the same way as the others were, in a year or two there will be a demand for another judge for the Circuit Court. What I wish to bring before the House and to call the attention of the Government to is that two judges of the Superior Court of the province of Quebec, as under the old system, could keep up with the cases daily. As it is to-day the work is not kept up every day, and even if there is a third appointment, my impression is that it will be no better. There will not be so many cases behind, but the business will not be fully kept up, and in a year or two we shall be called upon to add another judge to the Circuit Court. I call the attention of the hon. Solicitor General to this, and I ask the Government, when they make a nomination to appoint a very good lawyer. And I would say this, so as not to make any reflection upon these gentlemen, that a salary of $3,000 a year is a very small salary for a judge of the Circuit Court of Montreal called upon to do the duties that are expected of him. I contend that there is no judge of the Superior Court in the province of Quebec who really works as hard as these judges of the Circuit Court in Montreal. They work every day. One sits from 10 o'clock to 4 or 5 and sometimes 6 o'clock, while the other prepares judgments at home or sits in chambers. The right hon. the Premier understands very well our system and knows that the Circuit Court judges are called upon to decide cases as important as those which come before the Superior Court. They may not involve the same amount of money, but they involve the same principles. Moreover, there is no appeal from the judgments rendered in the Circuit Court, and, therefore, it is most important that the judges of the Circuit Court should be men well versed in law and of great experience. The qualifications necessary for these men to possess deserve a higher salary than $3,000. As a matter of fact, I contend that these judges should be paid the same salaries as are paid to judges of the Superior Court. I call attention to these points in the hope that, in making the nomination, the Government will consider them.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am ready to admit that the judicial system as it exists to-day, in so far as it implies that there should be a division of power and a division of jurisdiction between the Federal Parliament and the local legislatures, is most inconvenient and unsatisfactory.

But we have to administer the system as we find it at the present time. Referring to an observation made a moment ago by the hon. member for Picton (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) with reference to the necessity of an additional judge in the province of Quebec, I have always held the view that this Government has but a limited power in the matter of appointment of judges. The constitution is so framed that the organization of the courts does not rest with this Parliament, but rests with the local legislature; and while it is open to the local legislature to say that there shall be so many courts and those courts shall have so many judges, the constitution also has this singular feature, that it is the Federal Parliament which shall provide for the appointment and the payment of those judges. Though I have always considered this a strange system, we cannot administer it properly except by taking it for granted that the legislatures know better the needs of the province in that respect, and we are bound in every case to accept their decision, unless we are satisfied that there is fraud or some grave reason why such a law should not be carried out. But in this case the only additional judge, in so far as the Superior Court is concerned, whose salary is here provided for, is a second judge for the district of St. Francis. There is one judge now in the district of St. Francis, and a law recently passed by the legislature of Quebec has provided that there should be a second judge in that district. Now, upon this point I am happy to be able to quote the opinion of Sir Melbourne Tate, Chief Justice of the Superior Court for the district of Montreal, residing in the city of Montreal. In the month of September last, at the opening of the courts after a long vacation, an address was presented to Sir Melbourne Tate, the Chief Justice for the district, and in answer to this address he spoke as follows:—

While it is right and proper that justice, civil and criminal, should be administered in each district, I do not know any paramount reason why a judge should be required to reside in any of these districts, with the exception of St. Francis, and perhaps Ottawa. In the former, the work is too heavy for one judge, who has several circuits to attend besides the one at the chef lieu.

This is an eminent authority upon the point that an additional judge for the district of St. Francis, whose salary is provided for by this resolution, is absolutely required for the administration of justice in that important district.

Mr. BERGERON. He does not say it should be a new nomination. If a judge was taken from some other district and brought to Sherbrooke, it would satisfy the opinion of the chief justice.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I do not so understand him. What the chief justice means, I think, is that at the present time the judges might very properly be required to reside in one city, in the city of Montreal, as the judges reside in Toronto under the Ontario system. In the latter province, all the judges reside in one city, and travel to different parts of the province to administer justice. For my part, I would not be averse to that system in the province of Quebec. I think it is preferable in many respects to the present system in Quebec. But, as the Solicitor General says, we have no power to do that. The law at present provides that the judges shall reside in the district where they administer justice, so many in Montreal, so many in Quebec, two to reside in St. Francis, and so on throughout the province. My hon. friend knows that one of the grievances complained of in the days before the union of 1841, was what we called then the centralization of justice. There were only four districts, Montreal, Quebec, St. Francis and Gaspé. Perhaps that system was wise and perhaps it was not; it was not wise, out of those four districts, to create twenty. I think twenty are too many.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Mr. BERGERON. We have railways now.

The PRIME MINISTER. While it is true that every part of the province is connected by railway, I see no reason why the law should not be amended by the legislature of Quebec in the direction of adopting the Ontario system under which the judges reside in one city, and then go about on their circuits. But we cannot do that at the present time.

Mr. BERGERON. Confer with the Quebec Government.

The PRIME MINISTER. We can confer with the Quebec Government, but this is not the time to do so. My hon. friend knows that governments are slow to move in these matters, and though we might confer with Quebec, I venture to say it would not be possible for the present Government of Quebec, strong as it is, to make so radical a change at once, or even within a few months, in a system which has been existing for more than thirty years. With regard to the Circuit Court of Montreal, I think it is admitted on all hands that a third judge is necessary. I do not agree with my hon. friend that the appointments which were made by Mr. Mercier at the time he created the magistrate's court, were political appointments. He appointed Mr. Justice Champagne and Mr. Justice Barry, both of whom were known to be perfectly well qualified for the position which was assigned to them. That is evident from the fact that after the legislation creating the court of district magistrates had been disallowed, and the present Circuit Court substituted for it, the same appointments were made by the late Federal Government. Now, I do not know the standing of the judges. I have not the honour of knowing Mr. Justice Purcell, but as for Mr. Justice Champagne, I think my hon. friend will agree with me that he is a most competent and admirable judge for the work he has to do. The Government will take due warning from the admonition which has been given by my hon. friend to select as good a man as possible to be the third judge of that district. Now, with regard to Mr. Justice Taschereau, his case is one which deserves, I will not say the sympathy only, but the consideration of this House, because Mr. Justice Taschereau has been most unfairly dealt with. This is the way the case stands at the present time. The judicial business in the district of Montreal has always been congested, and there have been demands made from time to time to increase the number of judges in the district of Montreal. They have been increased from time to time, but still that increase has not kept pace with the increasing business. In 1889 or thereabouts, the government of the province, while not willing to agree to the suggestion of this Government for the appointment of an additional judge for the district of Montreal alone, did ask that there should be an additional judge who should administer justice in both the district of Montreal and the district of Terrebonne; so that Mr. Justice Taschereau, who has no more work assigned to him by the law than any other judge, is nevertheless appointed to administer justice in both the district of Montreal and the district of Terrebonne. If he were appointed for Montreal alone, he would be entitled to a salary of $5,000, but because he has to perform the duties of a judge in the district of Terrebonne also, he only gets $4,000 a year, the salary attached to this latter district. Now, nothing can be fairer, in fact, only full justice can be done to him by not only increasing his salary by $1,000, but by increasing it by $2,000. He should have the salary which is attached to the functions of a judge who administers justice in Montreal, which is $5,000, and also an additional $1,000 for discharging the duties of a judge in the district of Terrebonne. But we ask only that he should receive the same salary as is paid to other judges who reside with him in Montreal, who do the same work as he does, but do not perform the work that he is called upon to do in the district of Terrebonne.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. When Parliament is being asked to make such a grant as $792,775 for the payment of judges in Canada, and certain increases of which the Solicitor General has not given the exact figures, but before all the increases are met under the resolution, the original estimate will be increased this year by $14,900—

Mr. LISTER. Does the hon. gentleman say that the judges require $792,775?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes. These amounts are set out on pages 22, 23 and 25 of the Estimates. I refer to the administration of justice, including the salaries of judges.

Mr. LISTER. The salaries of judges will not amount to $100,000.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes. Take, for example, the province of Quebec, now under consideration. The hon. gentleman does not realize that there are no less than 30 Superior Court judges already in that province, drawing from $4,000 to $5,000 each.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The hon. gentleman is aware of the number in Ontario—74.

Mr. FOSTER. 79.

Mr. COCHRANE. The judges in Ontario only get half the salaries of the judges in Quebec.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman will see, according to the Estimates, under "administration of justice," that outside of salaries for judges, there appears to be only the sum of $98,375 to be deducted from the total of $792,775. I am the last man to say that we want cheap judges or cheap justice; but when the amount is growing year by year and is assuming huge proportions, it seems to be the very serious duty of Parliament to investigate very closely the reason for further increase in the charges. I have always advocated, and been an outspoken advocate of bringing about such a condition of things that the judges actually required for the proper administration of justice will be paid much higher salaries than those any judges now receive. Public opinion is not ripe or educated up to the point to see the great importance and benefit to be derived by this country from having fewer judges, but judges better paid than any now in the land. But if we proceed on this assumption, to which the Prime Minister has given much support, to my great regret, we drift gradually into a most dangerous position. I am referring to the view presented by the Prime Minister that it should take a case of fraud or gross wrong on the part of a judge before this Parliament would be clearly warranted in refusing to grant an addition. The danger of giving strength or support to that proposition in the face of the admittedly large grant to be voted, whether we vote for this increase or not, is that there will never be any inducement on the part of a local legislature to grapple with this condition of things, which the hon. gentleman knows to exist in the province of Quebec to-day. I take Quebec, because it has been mentioned first—I am not singling out that province. But I happen to know something about the unfortunate condition in regard to the number of judges there, Superior Court judges in particular, and the absence of anything like a fair distribution of work among them. The Prime Minister pointed out that some of the judges are heavily worked. The hon. gentleman referred to certain portions of the province, but he did not refer to the many judges who have practically nothing to do but draw their salaries.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Who appointed them ?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Such things being so, I was led to believe when I held the position of Minister of Justice that the time had come for a redistribution of the work and the reorganization of the districts, and such a reform should end in the cutting down of the number of judges, the fact being that many of the judges under the system organized a long time ago have now practically nothing to do and that we have too many judges of a certain kind—surely if that information was reliable, I was justified in resisting at the time the pressure brought to bear to add to the already long list involving heavy expense. The view the right hon. gentleman has propounded to-day will never bring about what we all desire, and that is a reform and re-arrangement of districts and the necessity of doing it by the only authority that can do it, and that is the local legislatures. If they find out that they have simply to create those offices and call upon the Dominion Government to fill them, and this Parliament stands prepared to pay the salaries without demur, the task, which is never a welcome one, will not be taken up by the Attorney General of undertaking to grapple with this question, as otherwise he would be prepared to do. There would not be half the difficulty experienced in grappling with the question if the Government now took the position that the record shows Sir John Thompson assumed as regards the several provinces, and that is, that although the local legislatures might create judicial positions, he would not appoint judges until it was satisfactorily shown, first, that those judges were required, and, second, that the judges now in office could not be rearranged, and the local legislature carry out a system of reorganization of the districts so that the docket be kept clear in a proper fashion. I think the Solicitor General, before proceeding with such a large order as these resolutions involve, should hesitate, and I must tell him, what he perhaps knows, that a leading member of the bar, a gentleman whose position in the province of Quebec the hon. gentleman would respect, has assured me, in connection with the 30 judges of the Superior Court of Quebec already in office, that one-third of those judges are not occupied for more than three months in the year. That is the statement made to me in order that it may be made here ; and be it right or wrong, it is entitled, coming as it does from counsel of standing at the bar, to the consideration of the Solicitor General so that he may meet it and meet it successfully before proceeding further with the request for another judge. Almost all the argument of the Solicitor General with regard to the position outside of Montreal, had special reference to the district of St. Francis, where the position may have been sound enough under the old system, but it has not been readjusted to suit modern conditions, and it is a most likely condition that one place requires more judges while others do not require the existing number ; but this condition will not be changed until the local legislature sees that this Parliament will not pay additional judges salaries without careful inquiry as to the needs of the additional appointments. At present the legislatures only have to ask for a judge and we appoint one and pay him. In regard to Sherbrooke, the counsel to whom I referred admits there is trouble there. Still, even in that case, although the present judge is overworked and the place is called an important judicial centre, the system now in force provides that in case of urgency a judge from another district can from time to time be assigned to a district where his presence is found necessary. That is provided for by the Revised Statutes of Quebec, article 2,221. And so, as is stated by this gentleman, if the despatch of judicial business requires it, the chief justice is empowered to send another judge to the district requiring such judicial help. He goes on to say :

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

In the case of Sherbrooke it will be most easy for the chief justice to assign from time to time to the district of Sherbrooke the judge of the district of Bedford, or the judge of the district of St. John, or the judge of the district of Sorel, or the judge of the district of Beauharnois, all of whom certainly have not enough work to occupy their time.

These are very serious statements and the source from which they come, knowing it as I do, gives them a great deal of weight. The present system, which I have said is not up to date, is not likely to be improved if money is generously handed over whenever, instead of reforming the system there is a proposal to perpetuate it in this way. The present system was, I am told, adopted as far back as 1854. I am sure there are many members of the bar on both sides of the House who are anxious to see the judiciary strengthened and the position made more attractive both to actual members of the bar, and to those who are likely to choose one profession rather than another. Those hon. gentlemen who wish to make the administration of justice more beneficial to the country by increasing the salaries of judges will see that all these suggestions are putting that result further and further away from the realm of possibility, because it will readily be seen that if money is lavishly scattered on the mere demand of the local legislature, to judges already too numerous and to judges not of the highest court of the province, it will become more difficult if not impossible to ever add to the salaries of judges who are actually required. The latter proposition I believe meets with approval from many on both sides of this House and is backed up by the majority of public opinion in the country.

What necessity has the Solicitor General shown for the appointment of an additional judge to the Court of Appeal of the province of Ontario? Is it because the number of judges now in that court is four, and that the difficulty of an equal division of opinion may arise? The members of the bar of Ontario will not object to my repeating what I have been told, and not by Conservatives either, that there is no strong demand for this appointment on the part of the members of the Ontario bar.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Then they say one thing and write another.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. They may, but I make this statement for what it is worth in the presence of leading members of the Ontario bar, and subject to their opinion. The Solicitor General knows that the Act constituting this extra judge was passed over a year ago; does the hon. gentleman know the exact date? The hon. gentleman does not seem to know the exact date. Well, no action has been taken since that office was created, although from the position taken by the Prime Minister it would have appeared that the moment that Act was passed this Government should have immediately proceeded to obtain the necessary money. It cannot have been a matter which was very pressing, because the Act was passed quite a long time ago, and even the Solicitor General does not remember the exact date any more than I do.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It was immediately previous to our last session.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The session of Parliament and a year were allowed to pass by without action, and the inference is that the necessity for the appointment was not very pressing. The Court of Appeal of Ontario has given great satisfaction with its four judges. It is regarded all over Canada as one of the strongest courts in the Dominion, and it has won that high position under its present constitution. Certainly there has been no very apparent reason for the appointment of an additional judge and the increase of $5,000 a year taxation on the people. Can the Solicitor General tell me when authority was taken for the additional circuit court judge in Montreal?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. 60 Vic.—about a year ago.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. There are now in the Superior Court of the province of Quebec, the chief justice, salary $8,000; senior puisne judge, Montreal, salary $6,000; twelve judges at $5,000 each, $60,000; fifteen judges at $4,000 each, $60,000, including the new appointment; two judges at $3,500 each of the Superior Court, as I understand it. In view of the statements which have been made, the Solicitor General should give us some detailed reasons for those changes in the judiciary. When the late Sir John Thompson proposed to deal with the readjustment of the salaries of all the judges in Canada, a very elaborate statement was prepared in that connection showing approximately the work of the courts. This document was ordered to be prepared by Sir John Thompson, as it was his duty to do when he was asking Parliament to increase the salaries of the judges, and I submit we should have a similar statement now. When as Minister of Justice, I myself asked that this Parliament should not allow an old law to operate so as to cause a decrease in the salary of a judge in British Columbia, on the death of Sir Mathew Begbie, hon. gentlemen who were present will remember that it was made necessary for me—and I expected it should be so as it was my duty—to obtain all information as to the condition of business in that court before I was entitled to ask Parliament to prevent what, as I claimed, would have been a decrease in the salary of a judge. All those particulars were given then, and if there ever was an urgent case for showing that no re-arrangement is possible with the large number of judges paid such salaries, and if no such evidence is forthcoming to the committee, then in my opinion the committee should not adopt this resolution.

Mr. MONK. I desire to say a word in regard to that part of the resolution which concerns the province of Quebec, and more particularly the district of Montreal. There is one point which I think the committee may feel perfectly satisfied about, and that is as to the necessity of an additional circuit court judge in the district of Montreal. The amount of litigations in that court is so great and litigants are obliged to wait so long for the adjudication of their cases that it is really surprising to think we have endured the present state of things so long.

When the committee are told that litigants before the Circuit Courts in the district of Montreal have, as a rule, to wait for more than a year for a decision of their cases, the committee must be convinced that it is time some remedy should be applied. The difficulty in these matters is, I think, the one pointed out by the right hon. leader of the House. It is one of the most anomalous features of our constitution that the provincial legislatures alone have the regulation of the tribunals of justice, and that the only part assigned to the federal power is the appointment and payment of judges. It was only a year ago that the legislature of Quebec saw fit to give the federal authorities the necessary power to appoint one additional Circuit Court judge for the district of Montreal. It is regrettable that that statute did not provide for two additional judges. It is also regrettable that these judges are not paid higher salaries than they will receive under this resolution. The duties of these judges are enormous, and very fatiguing, and it is very unfair to expect them to perform these duties at a salary of only $3,000 a year. As regards the additional judge of the Superior Court, the same anomaly applies as in the other case, namely, that the federal authority can only name the judge, whereas the local authority makes the demand for such a nomination. In this case, the appointment has been demanded for the district of Sherbrooke, and I will not deny that in that district judicial affairs are in a congested state. But what I think the federal authorities ought to do is to bring what pressure they can to bear upon the local legislature to bring about a change in the composition of our tribunals in the province of Quebec. The present organization is known to be obsolete. It dates back to 1854, or thereabouts, when different conditions prevailed, and when it was considered popular to decentralize the administration of justice. But I do not think that scheme is one which commends itself to our people at the present day. We have certainly not too many judges in the Superior Court of the province of Quebec for the business that has to be done, even with the additional judge provided for in this resolution; but the distribution of the work is pre-eminently unjust and unequal. I am now mentioning facts which are well known to all who practice at the bar of the province of Quebec. There are some districts where the judges are comparatively unoccupied, or at least, have a great deal of free time, whereas in other districts, such, for instance, as the district of St. Francis, and even more so in the district of Montreal, the judges are overworked. The business of the courts has increased in a far greater ratio than the number of judges. In 1873, I think we had six judges in the district of Montreal; we have ten now, but the increase in the business has been far greater than this increase in the number of judges. The business has increased three-fold since that time. Therefore, the resolution which we are about to pass presents this anomaly, that we are remedying a grievance which exists to a certain extent in one district, whereas in the district of Montreal, where the congestion is far greater, we are powerless to apply a remedy unless the means I mentioned a moment ago are adopted by the Department of Justice. The result of the congested state of affairs in the district of Montreal is that the judges are unable to perform the duties assigned to that district alone, and they are obliged to seek the assistance of judges residing in outside districts who have considerable leisure time, and the cost of this is considerable. The Solicitor General is aware that last year, if I am not mistaken, we had to pay nearly $16,000 for the travelling expenses of these outside judges. With this amount we could have provided for three more judges for the district of Montreal, who would have resided there, and who would have found ample work to attend to. These deficiencies existing in our province are well known to the lawyers practicing there; and the only thing we can urge here is that the strongest possible pressure should be brought to bear by the Department of Justice on the local authorities to bring about a change in our system. From what I have heard, I have no hesitation in saying that the system that prevails in the province of Ontario is far preferable. Before resuming my seat, I wish to call the attention of the Department of Justice and of the committee to the inadequate salary which is provided for the judges assigned to the district of Montreal. Those judges are paid to-day the same salary that they were paid twenty-five years ago, although it is a well-known fact that the cost of living in the city of Montreal is nearly 40 per cent higher than it was in 1873, when the salaries of the judges were readjusted. Since that time the salaries of all public employees have been increased, whereas those of the judges of our courts are left as they were then. Not only has the cost of living increased, but the amount of work which these men are called upon to perform to-day is far greater than it was twenty-five years ago. Under these circumstances, it seems to me that the Department of Justice should take into serious consideration the propriety of increasing the salaries of these overworked men. It is a well-known fact that, in the city of Montreal, many of our judges are obliged to have recourse to outside work to provide for the absolute necessities of their families. Of course many of them succeed in obtaining work. Some of them labour in our universities, where we are very glad to see them assisting in the instruction of our youth. Some also have other means of increasing their income, but there is no doubt it is a depressing fact that men of this kind should be obliged to have recourse to outside work in order to obtain the amount absolutely required to meet the expense of living in Montreal. There is no set of men through the British Empire paid as meanly as are the judges in Montreal, considering the expense of living there. Look to England, or any of the British dependencies, and you will find that men occupying positions equivalent to that of the judges in Montreal, are paid twice their salaries. I have here the statistics bearing out what I have said, but I do not wish to weary the committee by reading them, and I am sure they are in the possession of the Department of Justice, and the Solicitor General is well aware of the truth of what I am saying now. The remedy for that state of things lies in a reorganization of the courts, which has to be done by the local authorities, but it seems to me that when the relations between the local and federal Governments are of such a friendly character, it would be possible to bring about that change, and the Solicitor General would confer a great favour on the province of Quebec if he brought all his efforts to bear in the direction of such a desirable modification of the organization of our tribunals.

Mr. QUINN. The difficulty at the moment is to decide whether, on the demand of a local legislature, the number of judges is to be increased indefinitely by this Parliament. It has been abundantly shown that the work of the district of Sherbrooke has been performed by calling into that district judges from outlying districts and asking them to attend to the duties on the payment of the regular allowance. If this Parliament is going to appoint a judge every time a provincial legislature declares that one is necessary in some portion of the province, it will be impossible for us to control the number of judges existing in the Dominion. The hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) expressed the opinion of many hon. members of this House, who are members of the bar of the province of Quebec, when he suggested what I have reiterated, namely, the calling in of a judge from an outlying district to the city of Sherbrooke to do the work required.

There is another question to which I might refer, that of the Circuit Court judges in Montreal. I cannot agree that the work of the Circuit Court in Montreal is being performed as efficiently as it was under the old system. It has not only the disadvantage of keeping two or three judges in the one court for the trial of unimportant cases during the whole year, but it keeps the judges of the Superior Court altogether in the Superior Court, and does not give them the experience in our procedure and the hearing of cases that they had under the old system, when they sat alternately in the Circuit Court of Montreal. There was another advantage in the old system as compared with the present one. A judge of the Superior Court having sat for a certain number of terms in that court, and then presiding in the Circuit Court in the trials of small cases, would be better able to decide when a sufficient amount of evidence was adduced than a judge who was confined altogether to the Circuit Court. There is another point. A judge of the Circuit Court, in a very short time, realizes the fact that there is no appeal from his decision, while a judge of the Superior Court, always knowing that there is an appeal from his decisions in that court, is more careful in trying cases in the Circuit Court, being under the impression that there might be possibly an appeal. I believe that the impression now existing in Montreal is that the old system of trial by judges of the Superior Court instead of by the judges of the Circuit Court, as at present, would be preferable. At the same time I am perfectly willing that a trial should be given to the present system, and that we should appoint another judge for the Circuit Court. I think I am safe in saying that there are 20,000 cases instituted before the Circuit Court in Montreal every year. Anybody who will pause and think for a moment and who will estimate the number of cases which each one of these judges have to try in a day, will at once see that it would be impossible for any two judges to keep up the work of the Circuit Court, so that another judge is absolutely necessary even if we are going to give the system a trial for a little while longer. I think the time will come when the Government will find it necessary to return to the old system of having the Superior Court judges sit in turn in the Circuit Court.

There is another question to which I would like to draw the attention of the Solicitor General, and that is the representation made by the Montreal Board of Trade concerning the establishment of an admiralty court in the city of Montreal. I think the earliest opportunity ought to be taken by the Government to have a consultation with the Quebec Government on these different points, including the one I am now referring to, in order that the affairs of the province may be better administered in the Department of Justice. I have here a communication which I have received from the secretary of the Board of Trade in Montreal, enclosing copies of letters addressed to the Deputy Minister of Justice, Ottawa, dated 31st of January, 1896, and replied thereto, and then the answer of the secretary of the Board of Trade, which I shall read to the House :

Office, Board of Trade,
Montreal, 31st January, 1898.

Deputy Minister of Justice, Ottawa.

Sir,—Having reference to the former correspondence by the Council of the Montreal Board of Trade, pressing that steps might be taken to establish a Maritime Court in the city of Montreal, I am desired now, on behalf of the Council, to earnestly press upon the Minister of Justice the necessity for favourable action at the coming session of Parliament. It is a standing injustice to the city of Montreal that we should have no Maritime Court here. We have no facilities for dealing with maritime matters other than the ordinary courts of law, involving almost prohibitory delay and expense. The only option we have is to proceed to Quebec with our lawyers and witnesses, again making it a most expensive matter.

We venture to suggest, as a practicable mode of dealing with the subject, that the present judge of the Vice Admiralty Court in Quebec might hold occasional sittings in Montreal from time to time as necessity arises.

I am, sir,

Yours obediently,
GEO. HADRILL,
Secretary.

The answer is as follows :—

Department of Justice,
Ottawa, 19th February, 1898.

Sir,—Referring to your letter of the 31st ult., and to previous correspondence, with respect to the establishment of an Admiralty Court at Montreal, I have the honour to inform you that I have communicated with Mr. Justice Routhier on the subject with a view of ascertaining whether it would not be possible to meet the requirements of the case by holding occasional sittings at Montreal when there are cases to be tried there.

I have just received a reply from the judge, in which he states that he is very busy in Quebec as a judge of the Superior Court, and that probably he could but seldom absent himself. He considers, however, that it would be practicable for him to attend occasionally in Montreal for trying Admiralty cases, where there were many witnesses to be heard, the proceedings, of course, to be taken at Quebec as at present, and the registrar of the court to go with him to Montreal for the purposes of the trial. He suggests that this means of transacting the business might be adopted if the lawyers would previously agree with him upon a time for trial which would be convenient to all.

I would like to know if this proposal of the judge would meet the views of the Board of Trade. It appears to me that it might be tried, at all events, as an experiment for the present.

I await your reply before taking any further steps in the matter.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
E. L. NEWCOMBE,
Deputy Minister of Justice.

George Hadrill, Esq.,
Secretary Board of Trade,
Montreal.

To that the secretary of the Board of Trade was intrusted to reply as follows :—

Office, Board of Trade,
Montreal, May 12th, 1898.

E. L. Newcombe, Esq.,
Deputy Minister of Justice,
Ottawa, Ont.

Sir,—I must apologize for the delay in answering your letter of the 19th February, re Admiralty Court at Montreal, but owing to the absence from town of the member of our council who was chiefly interested in the question, the council deferred replying until his return; in the meantime the subject matter of your letter was discussed with solicitors here and with the marine interests, both underwriting and shipping.

I am now desired to express appreciation of your endeavour to meet the wishes of the council, but would point out that the proposition as submitted makes it optional with the judge to come to Montreal—practically it is to be agreement between the solicitors.

The council would state frankly that the feeling in Montreal is that we are entitled to have an Admiralty Court here as a matter of right, and it is held that litigants should not be in doubt as to whether the court could be held in Montreal or not.

The expense of taking witnesses and lawyers from Montreal to Quebec has been something enormous, and establishes an unjust discrimination against this city, the fear of such expense preventing parties from taking proceedings in protection of their rights.

Mr. QUINN.

The council therefore respectfully urges that steps be taken at the present session of Parliament to establish a branch Admiralty Court in Montreal, either under the present Admiralty judge at Quebec, which would be entirely satisfactory to this board, or in such other manner as may be deemed advisable, always provided that the principle the council seeks to have recognized is duly conserved.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant.

GEO. HADRILL,
Secretary.

Now, this is only one of the cases in which, as I contend, the interests of Montreal have not been properly regarded in connection with the administration of justice. So far as the distribution of the work among the judges is concerned, personally, I would strongly favour the system in vogue in the province of Ontario. I understand that system to require residence in the principal city of the province of nearly all the judges and their going from that city to the different districts, following what is called the circuits of the province. If this were done, we should have a sufficient number of judges in the city of Montreal, in which by far the greater part of the business of the province is done, to meet all requirements. If this were not deemed sufficient, the judges might be distributed, a certain number in Montreal and a certain number in Quebec. And in that way, no jealousy would exist between the two cities, and the province might be divided into two districts over which the judges of Montreal in one case and the judges of Quebec in the other case should preside. But, of course, we cannot legislate to that end in this Parliament. It is, therefore, necessary, I say, that the Government should communicate with the Government of the province of Quebec and try in some way to arrange the judicial districts of the province, so that all the judges shall have sufficient to do to occupy them during the year, and the public business shall be properly attended to.

Now, I listened to the right hon. leader of the House (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) with the greatest attention. He realizes the position, but the only error that he makes, as I think, is in saying that it would be useless to undertake a conference at this time. I do not think it would be at all useless. We must begin some time. Every practising barrister in the province of Quebec recognizes how necessary it is that something should be done in order to relieve the congestion that exists in the city of Montreal and in the district of Sherbrooke. We realize, too, that this will not be relieved by the mere appointment of a judge for the district of Sherbrooke; but it can be relieved by distributing the work as evenly as possible among the judges in the province. Now, if this is to be done by a rearrangement of the districts, if it is to be done by the subdivision of the province into two districts, or however it is to be done, it is a subject that must engage the attention of the provincial legislature. I think it is absolutely necessary that the Government here should take the initiative steps and ask for a conference with the authorities of the province in order to meet these difficulties. It can only be done in that way. It certainly cannot be done by merely appointing a judge in a district in which it may please the province of Quebec to ask to have one appointed.

As regards the remuneration of the judges in the city of Montreal and in the province of Quebec generally, that is a subject, of course, that has engaged the attention not only of this Government but of several preceding Governments. I think all barristers of Montreal who will have the courage to speak freely and openly on the subject will say that the judges of the city of Montreal are not sufficiently recompensed by the salaries they receive to-day. As my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) has so well pointed out, the increased cost of living in Montreal is such that it is impossible for a judge to maintain the dignity of his position on the salary paid him to-day. I do not think that in any part of the province of Quebec the judges are too highly paid, but I feel that the judges of the country districts are very much better paid than the judges in the city of Montreal. I do not reflect at all on the judges in the city of Quebec when I say, as I do without fear of contradiction, that the difference in the cost of living in Montreal and Quebec is so great that, while the judges in Quebec may be properly paid with the salaries they receive, it is impossible to say that the judges in Montreal are properly paid. I know that many hon. members, after looking through the Auditor General's Report, as I see some members on the other side of the House doing, will have some criticism to offer about the travelling expenses of judges. Now, I would like to hear these criticisms made by hon. gentlemen who come from the provinces in which the judges reside who are to be criticised. I think a member of Parliament who wishes to criticise any subject should have the courage to criticise it himself, instead of furnishing documents to somebody else to enable him to make a criticism. While in some cases the travelling expenses paid to some judges in the province of Quebec may appear large, yet I think anybody who will consider the work that is being done by these judges in going from one district to another as they have been obliged to do in numberless cases, will realize at once that these travelling expenses are not too large. We know that judges have been brought from the country districts, at any rate surrounding Montreal, into Montreal for the purpose of relieving the congestion which has existed there for years. This was not done in order to enable the judges to earn $6 a day and travelling expenses.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. QUINN. When six o'clock was called I was referring to the travelling expenses of the judges who at different times had been called from their districts into the city of Montreal to relieve the congestion which existed there, and I said this had not been done to enable the judges to earn the daily allowance or the travelling expenses which are accorded to them by statute. They came because they were absolutely required to do so for the administration of justice. It is a well-known fact that there is an insufficiency of judges in Montreal, and has been for a number of years. Some criticism has been made of the judges because of the amount of expenses which they charged up as travelling expenses and daily allowance which they were entitled to under the statute. But if these expenses appear too large in certain cases, it is not due to the misconduct of the judges at all, as some might wish to infer, but to the liberal allowance which has been made by statute in cases of this kind. However, I do not think this is a matter that need be dwelt upon, I think it would be unfortunate if the conduct of the judges in this respect were made the subject of criticism in this House, and I do not propose to pursue the subject any further. I will now say a word or two of the proposition in the motion before the House to increase the salary of Mr. Justice Taschereau. I quite agree with everything that has been said by the Solicitor General concerning Mr. Justice Taschereau; I quite agree that he is probably one of the best judges that we have in Montreal. Where all are good it is very difficult to make a distinction, but I think I am not going too far when I say that there is no judge in Montreal better entitled to consideration than Mr. Justice Taschereau. I realize, too, the anomaly which existed in his case, and I am glad to see that a change is being made. But I would like to see this change made in such a way that it would not militate against the other judges who reside in some of the country districts outside of Montreal. I see a disposition to distinguish, for example, between the judges of the Court of Queen's Bench and the judges of the Superior Court. Now, why this should be, I cannot understand. Under the old system of allowing at least three days' expenses to a judge coming into the city, possibly the expense might have run up to a much larger sum than was anticipated, but I do not see that this is any reason why a change should be made and the judges compelled to count every day of service as an ordinary workman would count. Judges cannot work as ordinary workmen, I do not think it is intended that they should work as ordinary workmen. I think it would be a mistaken policy of economy for us to begin by curtailing in any way either the salaries of the judges or their travelling expenses; I think it would be a mistake for us to do that, or to criticise our judges in this respect, unless their conduct should be really open to criticism, or be such as to amount to a public scandal. I am happy to feel that no such thing exists in any part of this country; I am glad to know that the impression does not exist in this House that the conduct of our judges in any case could be considered a matter of public scandal. Therefore, I do not see the necessity of making the distinction which is made by the resolution introduced by the Solicitor General, between the judges of the Superior Court and the judges of the Court of Queen's Bench.

Speaking of the judges of the Circuit Court, I have no hesitation in saying that the two gentlemen who occupy the positions in Montreal are eminently fitted for that post. They are men both possessing wide experience. While I do not altogether approve of the system which removes the trial of Circuit Court cases from the judges of the Superior Court, I do not think that a better selection could have been made than that of those two gentlemen who occupy the position of judges of the Circuit Court in Montreal. As I have said, I do not believe in the system existing at the present time. I think it is not beneficial to our judges of the Superior Court, and is not conducive to the speedy administration of justice in the Circuit Court to have special judges appointed to that court. The cases tried in the Circuit Court may be what are considered small cases, but they are entitled to the same consideration as cases tried in the Superior Court are entitled to. There is no better field for studying practice under the code of procedure and the practice of the courts than that furnished by the Circuit Court in Montreal. I do not say our judges require to receive instruction in procedure; but every professional man within the sound of my voice knows exactly what I mean when I say that the Circuit Court has been the training school for the judges of the Superior Court in matters of procedure for a number of years. Besides, it deprives our judges of the opportunity for coming together frequently in order to consider the judgments that are to be rendered; and I think lastly, and probably it is the most important reason of all, it destroys uniformity, or rather it does not conduce to uniformity, in the judgment of the court that we should like to see, and which exists in the Superior Court. I again draw the attention of the Solicitor General to the question of the Admiralty Court in Montreal. I should like to see a conference had between the Government and the Government of the province of Quebec with the object of devising some means of giving our judges all the work they can do, and with the object eventually of making their salaries such as they would be entitled to as judges of the Superior Court. My own idea is that our province should be divided into two principal districts, Montreal and Quebec; that all the judges of the province should reside in one or other of those cities and follow circuit through their districts; that from Montreal and Quebec they should travel through the outlying country, but they should reside in the city of Quebec or the city of Montreal, and receive proper salaries that would enable them to live in comfort in those cities.

Mr. McMULLEN. I desire to say a few words on this question. In looking over the travelling expenses of the judges of the province of Quebec for the last three years, I must express my amazement that hon. gentlemen opposite, when in power, permitted this condition of things to go on from year to year. Money has evidently been improperly withdrawn, to use mild language, from the Dominion treasury from year to year, and the ex-Minister of Justice and those who discharged the duties before have permitted it to go on for years, and the sum has increased, till last year no less than $21,000 were drawn, and in many cases improperly drawn, dishonestly drawn, from the Dominion treasury. I congratulate my hon. friend the Solicitor General on the introduction of this Bill. If there is one thing relating to the judiciary of the Dominion that requires immediate and prompt action it is the course that has been adopted by the judges in the province of Quebec with respect to drawing mileage. I notice that Judge DeLorimier, who is supposed to reside in the district of Joliette, has drawn $1,494. For what? For allowance for travelling as judge from Joliette to Montreal to discharge his duties as judge. He does not live in Joliette, but in Montreal, and he has lived there continuously, notwithstanding the fact that he is supposed by the law to reside in his district. He, however, violates the law and resides in Montreal, but when he comes to charge an allowance for travelling expenses, he actually charges it from Joliette to Montreal every time, and by that means pockets $1,494. I am amazed to think that any man undertaking the onerous duties of a judge should dare to risk the disgrace of being placed in this position, and in an indirect way, by fraud, he having no right to the money, but under a technical interpretation of the law, takes advantage of it, puts $1,494 in his own pocket. I am glad to see the ex-Minister of Justice (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) in his place. He must have known that this thing was practised during late years.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What is that?

Mr. McMULLEN. Judges in Quebec who live in Montreal, in violation of the law, who should live in the districts to which they were appointed, when they serve as judges, actually charge for coming from the district where they are supposed to live to Montreal, as Judge DeLorimier did, who drew $1,494 for travelling allowance during the very year the hon. gentleman was Minister of Justice. I find there are many who have done that. Mr. Ouimet—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I rise to a point of order. If the hon. gentleman desires to make a charge deliberately against a judge that he made a dishonest claim, I think he is out of order. There is only one way in which a matter of this kind can be dealt with by Parliament. I think the Solicitor General is bound in his official position to protect the judges. I may say that I never had the slightest intimation before me or brought to my notice that any judge was doing what is dishonourable, or an act which would render it necessary to ask Parliament to interfere in his case. But the hon. gentleman is entirely out of order if he attempts in this way and in committee to charge any Superior Court judge with rendering false accounts.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am not specially called on to defend the judges who have been attacked, who are altogether judges in the province of Quebec. I intend to defend them all.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. If the hon. gentleman makes an insinuation of this kind, and I take it that he makes a direct charge, that the judges were making dishonourable charges, and when he states that I must have known it, he is taking an unwarrantable liberty and making a reckless statement. That is, however, a trifling matter. The hon. gentleman has a right to asperse me, but my point is, that the hon. gentleman has no right to make a charge of dishonourable conduct against a judge in this manner.

Mr. McMULLEN. I will recite my charge, and leave the Deputy Speaker, after I have given the full facts, to say whether I am not justified in making the statement.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I insist on a ruling on my point of order. It is that the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) has already made a serious charge against a judge, and he is now proceeding to make another serious charge against a judge. I ask your ruling, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I am very much afraid that the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) has perhaps gone too far in charging the judges with being dishonest. It is permitted to a member of this House to criticise the judges to a certain extent, but I do not consider it would be parliamentary to charge them with being dishonest.

Mr. McMULLEN. I accept your ruling, Mr. Chairman. I will state a plain bald fact, and I do not think I can be prevented from doing that.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not mean that the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) has not the right to make a charge, but there is a certain procedure which must be adopted when a charge is made against a judge, and the hon. gentleman is not following that procedure.

Mr. McMULLEN. A certain number of judges live in the city of Montreal, and some of them are supposed by law to live within their judicial districts. Judge DeLorimier is supposed to live in the district of Joliette but he does not. If he did and if he were called to Montreal to discharge duties there he would be entitled to an allowance of $6 per day, counting the day before he started for Montreal, the number of days he was engaged in Montreal, and the day he returned home; so that if he sat in Montreal only one day he would under the old rule be entitled to get $18. Well, now, Judge DeLorimier lives in Montreal, but he is judge for the district of Joliette, and when he has been called upon to discharge duties in Montreal he has drawn $6 a day for living allowance the same as if he came from Joliette into Montreal. By doing that he has put into his own pocket $1,494 during the year 1895, $2,040 in the year 1896, and $1,644 in the year 1897. Take another judge who lives in Montreal. Take Judge Ouimet, who was once a member of this House.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
No.

Mr. McMULLEN. Perhaps not. This Mr. Ouimet is judge for Richelieu district, and supposed to live there, and he has no right to live in Montreal. It is a violation of the law for him to live in Montreal, but he does so.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I again rise to a point of order. It is quite clear that the object of the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) is to bring into contempt the judges of the land, and I have under my hand an authority which would, I think, warrant the members of the Government in protecting the judges from these aspersions and insinuations which I submit are not manly. The authority is this:

Bearing in mind the general responsibility of Ministers of the Crown for the due administration of justice throughout the Kingdom, and the obligations which they owe to the dispensers of justice to preserve them from injurious attacks or calumnious accusations, it is necessary that before consenting to any motion—

The hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) does not dare to make any motion——before consenting to any motion for a parliamentary inquiry into the conduct of a judge, or even for the reception of a petition complaining of the conduct of a judge, and not asking for his removal from office in accordance with the statute, or not alleging reasonable ground for such proceeding, Ministers should themselves have investigated the matter of complaint and be prepared either to oppose or facilitate the interference of Parliament on the particular occasion.

Now (Mr. Chairman, I submit that this is abundant authority to show that this discussion is entirely irregular, and that even if the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) proposed to proceed formally, openly and above-board and in a manly direct fashion, even then the Ministers of the Crown would be bound to interfere until these parliamentary proceedings were taken when they could either assist the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) or resist them. I ask for your ruling, Mr. Chairman.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know whether my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) has any other authority, but that which he has recited only refers to a motion or application to present a petition, and not to the remarks of an hon. member.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The authority I cited was from Todd. I supposed the Postmaster General would have seen that the spirit of the quotation would have prevented anything like this discussion. But Todd continues:

The House of Commons should not initiate, and Ministers of the Crown ought not to sanction any attempt to institute criminative charges against any one unless upon some distinct and definite basis.

The committee is aware that the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) does not take the responsibility of making a formal charge. If any one dared to assume that responsibility of course a different state of things would be presented and then the way would be clear. It seems to me unnecessary to argue that this indirect manner of aspersing and bringing into contempt the judges of the land is entirely against parliamentary procedure, and that the Ministers who are charged with the duty should protect the judges from such an attack.

Mr. McMULLEN. Well, Mr. Chairman, I claim the right in this House—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order; Chair.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) has a right to discuss the point or order.

Mr. QUINN. He is not discussing it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. He has not so far spoken as to indicate what he is going to say.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am simply making a statement of what I find on the public records of this House. I am not making any statement that is not backed up by the records that are placed before the eye of

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

Parliament. I am taking that as my guide and the ex-Minister of Justice (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) is not going to prevent me making any statement here which I am within my right in making as a representative of the people. If it reflects upon any person outside of this House, I cannot help it. I merely state what the records of the House prove.

Mr. QUINN. I rise to speak on the point of order. The hon. member (Mr. McMullen) says he is speaking from the public records, and he has made a statement that certain judges reside in Montreal when they should reside in their judicial districts. The hon. member (Mr. McMullen) cannot pretend that he has in the records before him any such statement of fact. The statement of the hon. gentleman is a charge against a judge that he has violated the law under which he is appointed. The hon. Postmaster General says that the authority of my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Justice (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) does not go as far as he pretends it does, because it refers only to petitions and motions. But if a formal petition or motion is not to be presented to this House without an investigation by the Ministry, how much less should irresponsible statements of members of this House criticising the conduct of judges be tolerated when those judges have not the opportunity of defending themselves before this House. I think it a most disgraceful thing and a reflection on the administration of justice of our country.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. When a point of order is to be discussed, it should be discussed very calmly and without the use of such expressions as that which the hon. gentleman has just used.

Mr. QUINN. I am discussing it very calmly. I say it would be a disgraceful thing if it could be tolerated that the characters of the judges of the Dominion of Canada could be aspersed here by any hon. member of this House—not staking his reputation, not having the courage to make a direct charge against them, but standing up here without any responsibility and charging them with stealing the public money, with violating the laws under which they were appointed. I say that if such a thing were possible, it would certainly be a most disgraceful thing, and would not secure that proper administration of justice and that respect for the judiciary which it is entitled to under our constitution.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The question which has been raised is a very important one. I think a discussion concerning judges should be held with very great caution. I find in the authorities that generally no charge should be made against the judge without adopting the usual proceeding. I understand that a statement which would not reflect upon the honour of the bench could be made, and I hope that nothing will be said that will impugn the honesty or honour of the bench or of any judicial proceeding.

Mr. McMULLEN. Mr. Chairman, I shall respect your ruling. My hon. friend from Montreal Centre (Mr. Quinn) grew very wrathful because he thought I had made some discourteous references to the judges. I dare say that my hon. friend, like all other lawyers, is very anxious to stand in well with the bench. Now, I am going to confine myself—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I must rise to a point of order. I believe it is not permitted, under the rules of this House, to impute motives. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken has imputed to the hon. member who has spoken against an attack on the judiciary, the motive of having done so for the purpose of standing in with the judges. That is not only imputing a motive, but it is one of the grossest charges of a motive that it is possible to conceive

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is a well-known rule of the House that no improper motive should be imputed to an hon. member. Unfortunately, I was reading when my attention was called to the question, and I did not catch the expression the hon. gentleman has used.

Mr. McMULLEN. Mr. Chairman, if I said anything that very seriously wounds the feelings of my esteemed friend and that is unparliamentary, I am quite willing to withdraw it. Expressions which wound so very much are very apt to be pretty near the truth.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. McMULLEN. However, Mr. Chairman, I shall comply with your ruling. I will tell my hon. friend what I am quoting from. I am quoting from a production which I have very much admired in this House for many years, that is, the Auditor General's Report; and if hon. gentlemen opposite, including my hon. friend from Montreal Centre, would give a little more attention to that valuable production, they would render considerably more service to their constituents than they do now. My hon. friend said I was charging the judges with drawing money for day's allowance in attending court in Montreal, when they ought to be living in their own district. I am not going to say whether they lived there or not; but I am going to give the facts as I find them in the Auditor General's Report, and leave hon. gentlemen who know the facts to draw their own conclusions. I have given the facts for 1895, and I will now give the facts for 1896. I find that Mr. Tellier—I am not going to say where he lives—has drawn $1,506 as daily allowance at the rate of $6 a day.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Did the hon. gentleman hear the Prime Minister's explanation of an item of about $1,600 for Judge Taschereau, to show that there was nothing wrong in it?

Mr. McMULLEN. I will allow my hon. friend to present his side of the case when I am through, if he can offset this by any statement he can make.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I was referring to your leader's statement.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am only complimenting my hon. friend the Solicitor General on the manly act he is doing introducing his Bill to put a stop to this condition of things, so that in the future the country will not be subjected to the payment of money which might well have been saved. Now, we will take the next: Mr. C. J. Gill drew $1,140 in the same way.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not wish to stop my hon. friend, but I would like to call his attention to the fact that in England, when members speak of the judges, they always refer to them as Mr. Justice So-and-So, and I think we should adopt the same rule here.

Mr. McMULLEN. I will do that. I hope they are all justly entitled to be referred to in that way.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. McMULLEN. Hon. gentlemen are exceedingly sensitive. I should hardly think there is anything wrong in that. If the hon. member for Montreal has any point of order with regard to that statement, I will sit down.

Mr. MONK. I think a point of order may fairly be raised with regard to that. I do not think it is in conformity with your ruling, Mr. Chairman, for an hon. member of this House, when called to order by you, and instructed to refer to the judges as they should be referred to, to say he hopes they are entitled to the title they should have.

Mr. QUINN. The reason I did not raise the point of order, in which I agree with my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), is because I think it is the duty of the Government of this country to protect the judges. If they do not see that to be their duty, I think it will reflect more upon them than upon any private member of this House.

Mr. McMULLEN. I shall proceed to quote from the Auditor General's Report for the year ending 30th June, 1897. I notice by it that Mr. Justice Gill drew $1,830 for allowances. I find that other judges drew moneys in the same way. I find that Judge de Lorimier drew $1,644 for travelling allowances and Judge Taschereau $1,636. My hon. friend from Montreal prevents my pointing out where Judge Taschereau lives, because I have not got it in any authenticated report in this House.

Mr. QUINN. I asked the hon. gentleman not to point it out but to leave it to those who gave him the information, and who ought to have the courage, if they want to make these statements, to make them before the House, and not have the hon. gentleman do their dirty work for them.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The expression is not parliamentary.

Mr. QUINN. Of course I did not intend to apply that term to the conduct of the hon. gentleman, and therefore cheerfully withdraw it, but I thought that the hon. gentleman should leave it to these people to do their own work in that direction, and have the courage to face this House and the country, if they think they are doing something meritorious.

Mr. McMULLEN. I had no intention of referring to the hon. gentleman's discourteous remark with regard to myself, because I always treat such remarks according to the quarter from which they come. The hon. gentleman has complied with the rules of the House and taken back the expression, but I had no intention of pressing him to withdraw it at all. Mr. Justice Ouimet has drawn $798 for travelling expenses. I do not know whether he lives in Montreal or not, but he is supposed to live in his own district, and when coming to Montreal to be entitled to a certain per diem allowance. I see that he has drawn $786, and presume he lives in his district. Payments of this kind have been increasing. In 1895, the judges drew $17,442; in 1896, they drew $20,058; and in 1897, $21,012. These amounts they drew in addition to their substantial salaries. I compliment my hon. friend upon the introduction of this Bill. I do not think it has come a moment too soon, and I believe that in the interests of this country it is a prudent measure that should be passed in order that the law may distinctly define what allowances the judges are entitled to under those circumstances. I hope the Bill will have the effect of putting a stop to what I consider an injustice which the country ought not any longer to submit to.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not agree with the hon. member for Montreal that this is not a subject which should be discussed in this House. If I understand my duty here, it is to deal with any subject that requires expenditure of public money and see that more money is not expended than necessary. The system which has obtained for some time past in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario is such that more money is being spent than ought to be, and when we have a Bill under consideration which has for its object the remedying of that grievance, that is the proper time for us to criticise the system now existing, for it is the system we are attacking and not the judges. I do not understand that we are attacking either the personnel or the character of the judges, but discussing evils which have grown up under the law and which an effort is now being made to remove. I referred to one of the cases before recess, but I find, like the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), in looking over the Auditor General's Report, that I might refer to a great many. Here are ten judges in the province of Quebec, who have drawn for travelling allowances over $1,000 apiece.

Mr. QUINN. In the province of Quebec—not in the district of Montreal.

Mr. SPROULE. In the province of Quebec, I mean. So far as my information goes, it is to the effect that the expenditure should not be so large for travelling allowances. I drew attention to one case, concerning which information was given me, and the hon. Solicitor General seemed to question the correctness of my information. I refer to the case of Judge Taschereau, which was the only case the information I got referred to.

I find there are several others who are—properly or improperly. I do not know which—doing the same thing. But the Solicitor General said that Judge Taschereau had a right to live in the city of Montreal, and he quoted the provincial statute, which he was kind enough to send to me. This law was passed in 1889 and it provides that article 2319 of the Revised Statutes of the province of Quebec is amended by striking out the words "ten of the judges shall reside" at the beginning thereof and replacing them by the following: "Eleven of the judges of the Superior Court, one of whom to be specially charged with the district of Terrebonne, shall reside." The authority I was quoting from and which I think thoroughly justifies what I said, was the Dominion statute of the same year, the language of which I have given to the House, quoting from chap. 39:

Thirteen puisne judges of the said court, whose residence are fixed at Montreal and Quebec, not including the district of Terrebonne, $5,000 apiece.

Therefore, Terrebonne was left out. Now I wish to call attention to the fact that the provincial Act which the Solicitor General quoted came into effect on the day it was sanctioned, which was the 21st March, 1889. The Dominion statute that I have quoted was assented to on the 2nd of May, 1889, and was, therefore, of later date than the provincial statute. The question is, which one is the authority? I merely cited this to show that I was justified in making the quotation I did. According to that statute, if I am correct, Judge Taschereau had not the right to live in Montreal, and if he had not, I think it would have been improper for him to charge the travelling allowance appearing opposite his name here.

Mr. McMULLEN. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) is charging a judge with improperly drawing travelling allowances. I am amazed at hon. gentlemen sitting on the right and on the left of the Speaker should remain silent at that, considering that when another member of this House was trespassing very nearly on that mistake, they raised a protest and found fault.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) is mistaken. I do not think he can have any intention of misrepresenting what I said. I said I gave this statute in justification of the opinion I gave to the House. I do not say whether it was correct or incorrect, but I cited it to allow the Solicitor General to give such an explanation as would enable us to understand the matter, and if the information was incorrect that it might be set right before this House and the country. With regard to the resolutions before the House, I do not understand that even if carried out, they will do away with this trouble. I may not understand them, and I would ask the Solicitor General if he would show where it is proposed in these resolutions to make such a change as will meet the difficulty that has been pointed out.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I would refer the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) to the paragraph which says :

That to each of the judges of the Superior or Circuit Courts attending as such, at the request in writing of the chief justice or judge discharging the duties of chief justice in the district, any court held at any other place than that at which he is directed to reside, for each day he is absent from the said place of residence, there shall be paid, for travelling allowances, six dollars.

And so on. This is instead of $18 heretofore paid in consequence of what I consider an improper construction of the statute. Now, the judge cannot receive more than $6 a day.

Mr. SPROULE. How much did he receive before ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Eighteen dollars a day. That was the construction put upon the statute. The further provision I make for the purpose of preventing this exorbitant—if I may use the word—charge is that no judge shall be allowed to leave his district to go to an adjoining district unless he is specially requested to do so by the chief justice of the province. No judge will have the right to go from one district to another and make the charges heretofore made for travelling allowances, unless he can produce, when he files his account, a certificate in writing from the chief justice stating that he has gone there at the request of the chief justice. I think that this would reduce these travelling expenses by fifty per cent.

Mr. SPROULE. It does appear probable that this law when passed will accomplish that. But the judge is allowed $1,000 a year more of salary, and that will reduce the saving, though, apparently it will still leave something.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I shall have occasion to refer to the matter when I reply, but in the meantime, I do not wish to mislead my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule). This will not affect Judge Taschereau because he will get his $1,000 the same as the other judges ; and if he goes to Terrebonne to administer justice he will get $6 a day additional.

Mr. SPROULE. I am obliged to the hon. gentleman for giving me this information. I have only to say in addition to what I have said, that, so far as my opinion goes, the system that obtains in the province of Quebec at the present time is a bad one. It is most regrettable that a change cannot be brought about by a conference between the provincial legislature and Dominion Parliament or by some authority that might deal with this matter. It seems to be the fact, as stated by the ex-Minister of Justice (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), that there are a sufficient number of judges in the province of Quebec to do the work. Perhaps it could be done by fewer judges, if the work were better distributed. I do not care whether this applies to the province of Quebec or any other province. I think it is the duty of the province and the Dominion to work in a friendly way to remedy things of this kind. It is unfortunate that there is not, in my judgment, a sufficient disposition on the part of provincial legislatures to correspond and cooperate with the Dominion Government in bringing about these desirable changes. For they are desirable, and in the interest of the country, they should be brought about. As I understand it, we have not the authority in this House to deal with the matter, but the provincial legislatures have the authority. Still, we at least control the travelling expenses of the judges, and these should be cut down in some way so that influence would be brought to bear on the provincial governments to remedy the evil for the benefit of the people.

Now, I am not opposing this Bill : on the contrary, I believe it is in the right direction. But these irregularities or evils seem to have existed for a length of time, and the sooner they are remedied the better. My principal object in rising was to protest against the disposition that seemed to be apparent in this House to prevent a criticism of the expenditure of money in this House by any hon. member. I protest against any interference with the rights of the members of Parliament to criticise any proposition to expend public money when it comes before this House, whether relating to the expenditures of judges or of any other parties in this country.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I am not going to discuss the merits of the proposition now before the House from a Quebec or an Ontario standpoint, though the resolution seems to affect only those two provinces. But my object in rising is to express regret that while dealing with this question of the salaries of judges, the Government has not thought the time opportune to re-arrange the salaries of judges in the other provinces, especially those of the higher courts. In the province of Manitoba, where we have only four judges who are attending three large judicial districts, as the province is now divided, those four judges have to attend to all the criminal and civil cases belonging to the Court of Queen's Bench; they have to attend to chancery cases, to cases in equity, and they have also to sit in chambers after attending to the districts where they have quarterly sittings. I say that our judges are overworked, and are not receiving an adequate salary for their services. In the provinces of Ontario and Quebec the judges are receiving, some $7,000, others $6,000, others $5,000 a year, while in the province of Manitoba the chief justice only gets $5,000 a year, and the three puisne judges are only getting $4,000 each. I hope that the Government will see their way to making a just distribution of the salaries so that our judges, who are, as I say, overworked in having to attend to all those courts, may be more adequately remunerated. They not only have to sit in cases in the first instance, but they have also to sit in review of those very cases; they have to sit as a court of appeal, while in the other provinces those duties are assigned to certain judges appointed for the purpose, whose duties are confined to those courts of appeal. In Manitoba the same judges have to attend to all those cases, and they get a mere pittance. In our province the living expenses are much higher than they are in the eastern provinces, therefore, I say, it is time that the salaries of the judges in Manitoba should be looked into, and that the Government should put them on the same footing as the judges of the other provinces. There should be no discrimination as to the salaries of our judges. In 1892 there was a proposition laid before this House whereby the salaries of the judges of Manitoba were to be increased by $1,000 each, but I am sorry to say that the Government at that time did not see proper to carry out that proposition. There was a general redistribution of salaries proposed by the late Sir John Thompson at that time, but it appears that on account of some opposition coming from some of the provinces, the idea was dropped, and the intention to fix the salaries on a proper scale has been abandoned. I therefore hope that the present Government will take up this question and deal with it anew, in so far as Manitoba is concerned.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I understood the Solicitor General to say there was a radical change here in connection with the statute upon which there had been placed such a construction that $18 for a day's attendance by a judge had been allowed, whereas under his resolution the amount should be limited to $6. Now, I hold in my hand the old statute, and I fail to see a difference in that respect, and I will point out my difficulties to the hon. gentleman. I would like him to explain how he considers this change is brought about. The clause to which I have reference relates to the Superior Court judges, because the resolutions include Circuit Court judges with the Superior Court judges. Now, the resolution reads thus:

That to each of the judges of the Superior or Circuit Courts attending as such, at the request in writing of the chief justice or judge discharging the duties of chief justice in the district, any court held at any other place than that at which he is directed to reside,—

And I call attention to this:

—for each day he is absent from the said place of residence, there shall be paid for travelling allowances $6; but no travelling allowance shall be granted to any judge requested to sit in review under the first section of the Act of the Legislature of Quebec, 61 Vic., cap. 20, unless it is certified by the chief justice or judge discharging the duties of chief justice in the district, that the attendance of such judge was necessary by reason of illness, incapacity or absence of one of the judges resident at Montreal or Quebec, as the case may be.

That is the clause the hon. gentleman refers to. Then, in regard to the judge of the Court of Queen's Bench, just preceding that, there is a provision of $6 for each day's absence from his place of residence, provided that three days' absence at least shall always be allowed. That is, if it is one day he gets $18. Now, the old statute has these two phrases:

To each of the judges of the said Court of Queen's Bench, attending any other court, for each day he is absent from his place of residence, $6.

The same per diem allowance exactly. Then, there is a proviso:

Provided that any judge of the Superior Court required to attend, as such, the Court of Queen's Bench, appeal side or criminal side, elsewhere than at his said place of residence,—

I need not read the whole of it, but it says:

—the allowance shall be $6 for each day's absence from his place of residence, except that three days' absence at least shall always be allowed for.

It seems to me that this refers to practically the same provision, with the exception of the certificate, that is as regards the Queen's Bench work, three days' allowance always, at least $6 per diem allowance, Superior Court judges, $6 per day—the same in the old statute as in this, except that the hon. gentleman introduces a provision making the production of a certificate necessary to secure the indemnity. In the other case, the necessity was shown by the attendance at court, it being necessary before $6 a day was allowed that the judge drawing it should have attended court.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I may say to my hon. friend that the construction he now puts upon that statute is the construction that I propose to put upon it, and that I did put upon it when I came to the department. The trouble is that a different construction was put upon it up to that time, and that heretofore the judges have invariably claimed for each day's absence three days' allowance, when the absence did not exceed one day, and they were paid it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman proposes to repeat this clause "except that three days' absence at least shall always be allowed."

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Under my amendment a judge of the Court of Queen's Bench who absents himself for the performance of any judicial duty shall be entitled to the payment of $6 a day for each day's absence. If he is only absent one day, he shall be, under any circumstances, entitled to $18. If a judge of the Superior Court absents himself, he must first have obtained authority from the Chief Justice of the province, and then he is entitled merely to $6 per diem allowance; but under the construction put on the statute previous to the change of Government, a judge of the Superior Court who absented himself was under any circumstances entitled to $18 a day. It all turned on the fact that the concluding words of the proviso in the 13th section were made to apply to judges of the Superior Court as well as judges of the Court of Queen's Bench, which was an entire misconstruction of the statute, but that construction prevailed, and I thought it necessary to make this change proposed.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I think it is a very interesting question as to whether that proviso did not touch the preceding section. I see the point is the construction put on clause 13 regarding the judges of provincial courts and as to the distinction between judges of Queen's Bench and judges of the Superior Court. It is now proposed to draw a line and say that the judges of the Court of Queen's Bench shall be allowed three days' travelling allowance if they are absent one day, but a judge of the Superior Court shall be allowed only one day's allowance, and his absence must be certified by the Chief Justice. Why is this distinction drawn in regard to allowances?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I will give the reasons. It is in the old statute.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is assuming the hon. gentleman's interpretation of the old statute. The hon. gentleman will admit that there seems to be considerable room for argument, owing to the construction that has obtained for so many years, in drawing a distinction between these two courts. The hon. gentleman has now come to a definite conclusion, and asks for a declaratory Bill. But the practice having existed so long, does it not operate as against the view put forward by the hon. gentleman, and I think he should give some reason for drawing a distinction between the judges, as to why a judge of the Court of Queen's Bench should be allowed three days' travelling allowance and it should be reduced as regards any other judge.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It is necessary to understand our judicial system to follow the statement I am about to make. Our court of appeal is an ambulatory court; it sits alternately in Montreal and Quebec. Four of the judges reside in Montreal and two in Quebec, and they sit at stated periods in one city or the other. When a judge of Queen's Bench is called to Quebec to sit when judgments are given or for conference, it is impossible that his expenses can be covered by $6, for the necessary expenses will reach $12 or $13. Under the old rule a judge would be absolutely out of pocket as a result of going to the court, and we thought it proper that $18 should in any event be allowed for one day's absence when for only one day. In addition, it is impossible to go from Montreal to Quebec in a day; it must occupy a day and a night or a day and two nights. So that practically under most advantageous circumstances it is necessary for a judge to be absent a day and two nights. This condition does not apply to the judges of the Superior Court. Such a judge may go from one district to another, and may not travel more than ten miles. He can go to Montreal in an hour, and under the old system he might charge $18.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. gentleman stated before six o'clock that he would change some parts of the resolution to meet the cases of judges in my own district.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes; it was on oversight.

Mr. BERGERON. There was a good deal of discussion in the old Parliament on this subject. Take a judge going to Sorel, in the old days, to sit on circuit. It would take one day to go down, and he would sit one or two days, and he would take one day to return. So that the judge would charge three days. The Department of Justice maintained that ruling, although of recent years a judge could leave his home in the morning and go to Montreal, hold court all day, and return at night. I want to call attention to the fact that they can still charge three days, and I know they are doing it now. I do not believe, however, it is in the interest of their own work or in the interest of justice. The judge takes a train to Montreal in the evening and charges one day. What does he do during the evening? Nothing. If he were at home he would work. Next day he holds court, and returns on the following day, and charges three days. It cannot be contended that the interests of justice are advanced in this way.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. A judge will not be guilty of such an act as that.

Mr. BERGERON. That is what is being done.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I call your attention, Mr. Deputy Speaker, to the fact that this is a reflection on the judges.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. gentleman is not serious. I am putting the case as it is, and am pointing out that under the old law judges could claim three days. I might remind the hon. gentleman of a case which came before the Department of Justice when the accounts of Hon. T. J. J. Loranger were discussed. He gave those reasons, and they were accepted at the time. It was understood that the judges were allowed three days' allowance for holding court in one day, one day being occupied in going, one day in holding court and one in returning home. Although a judge can go to Montreal by train in the morning and return at night, he will not do it. Of course in some cases a judge would have to start early in the morning, travel twenty or thirty miles, sit in court all day, and return the same distance in the evening; and judges will not do this. The old law was more in the interest of justice than the present law.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I want to avoid discussing the question of travelling expenses.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Well, it is in the resolution.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. All I can say is, that when you learn we spend $20,000 a year to pay our judges for travelling expenses in the province of Quebec in addition to their salaries, I think every one will admit it is time for us to look about it and to see if we cannot change it.

Mr. BERGERON. That shows the system is bad.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Can the Solicitor General give me any precedent for this check which we are now putting upon the judges of the province of Quebec, upon the assumption that there has been a gross abuse for many years in the construction put upon the law by the Justice Department. Let me ask, are we going to strengthen the position of the judges of the Superior Court of the province of Quebec, some thirty of them in all, by placing them in this extraordinary position. I say this resolution places the judges in a most unenviable position before the public, because it says that hereafter their accounts will have to be certified to by another judge of another court, and that in future these judges are not to be trusted. If any judges are guilty of wrong-doing and the department cannot trust them to render proper accounts under the law for their travelling expenses, how under the sun can they expect to be free from such wrong-doing as makes this sort of resolution necessary. Under the language of the resolution, these judges are to be put under such a cloud that hereafter none of them can obtain their per diem allowance unless the chief justice, or the judge discharging the duties of chief justice in the district, certifies that the attendance of such judge was necessary. The Solicitor General may be able to give me a case which shows that this is not an invidious distinction made in the case of these judges, who are already charged with taking undue advantage of the law. Does the hon. gentleman know of any other judges who, before they draw their travelling allowances, have to submit their accounts to another judge. I know of none in my experience.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not think my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) fairly states the case.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I put it interrogatively?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. What is intended by the law if it passes is, that the judge shall be under the control of the chief justice of the province in so far as the administration of justice is concerned; that he shall not go from the district to which he is assigned to an adjoining district or to any other district of the province without being requested to do so by the chief justice. I differ from my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) in this respect: that I do not know of any country in the world under our system where the judges are not under the control of the chief justice. Here the judges are assigned by law to a particular district. They leave that district to go to another district, and surely we are entitled to know why they go there, and surely we are entitled to see they do not go there without having the sanction of the chief justice who presides over the court.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The reply of the Solicitor General makes it all the more necessary for me to press my point. The hon. gentleman says that there is nothing invidious in judges being subject to the control of a superior judge. The chief justice of the court in a sense controls his puisnes, and I find no fault with the statement of the Solicitor General. It is the tradition of the position that they are subject to a head whom they loyally serve and with whom they loyally co-operate. But my point is, that I can call to mind no case either in England or in the other provinces of Canada, where one judge submits his account of expenses to the chief justice or to any other judge. If you provide that they shall do so, are you not destroying their influence and weakening their position as administrators of justice. The resolution says that not only are they under control in regard to the administration of their duties, but their accounts must be approved.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not think my hon. friend has read the resolution.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I have and I will read it again :

But no travelling allowance shall be granted to any judge requested to sit in review * * * unless it is certified by the chief justice or judge discharging the duties of chief justice in the district, &c.

In my official experience I know of no case where one judge must have his accounts checked by another judge, but perhaps my hon. friend can give a precedent.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There is no question of having his account checked by another judge. There is no such intention, and it is not so expressed in the resolution. I am sure that my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) is desirous to see the thing done fairly.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am asking a question merely.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think we are at one on that. A judge is assigned to a judicial district by law and his duty is to administer justice in that district. If he leaves that district and goes to an adjoining district, he is entitled to receive a travelling allowance, but, I ask, should he be allowed to leave his district and go to an adjoining district without some control being exercised over him by the chief justice. The intention is that the chief justice should exercise control over his going and coming from one district to another; not as to travelling allowance, for once he is authorized to leave his district, his account for expenses will be made by himself. There is no intention whatever of doing that, and I repeat that the intention is that the chief justice shall supervise or control the movement of the other judges solely and their accounts.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. And he cannot get a dollar without having that certificate ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I beg your pardon; he cannot move without the certificate, but once he has moved he can get the money.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Let me put this case to my hon. friend. Judges—I speak in the abstract now—have been known to come from their district and to go into an adjoining district, and the judge of the adjoining district leave his district and go into his confrere's district, both of them to administer justice on the same day and at the same time, simply changing districts, and be paid travelling allowances for such as that. That is going to be stopped and this resolution is intended to stop it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. And that very statement supports my position. The Solicitor General has now spoken about a gross irregularity and a kind of conduct that would warrant a specific charge in this House and the removal of the judge guilty of it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That sort of conduct is of the grossest possible character, and the Solicitor General brings it forward as a reason for this legislation which he proposes to pass.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I say there is no checking of accounts in the resolution.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Very well. Is there any checking of accounts of the County Court judges in Ontario, in Nova Scotia, in New Brunswick, in British Columbia ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There are no accounts to check in Ontario; they are allowed a certain fixed sum.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I have had to give authority for the payment—

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Then if my hon. friend paid them anything there was no authority for it under the statute, for the statute says they are given $200 allowance.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. My hon. friend will find in the supervising of the accounts of the judges of British Columbia that they have no fixed allowance.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. You referred to Ontario.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I referred to Ontario it is true, but the case in my mind was that of British Columbia, and as the Estimates will show I am right in that. The allowances are not fixed absolutely. For instance, take the judges of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia: you do not see in the Auditor General's Report a fixed amount for each judge. Do not the judges interchange their circuits? What voucher has the hon. gentleman before him in auditing these accounts? It is considered, as it ought to be considered, that in these matters the judges can be absolutely relied upon; if they cannot, they are utterly unfit for the position they occupy. The hon. Solicitor General mentions a fearful scandal which he says exists among the Superior Court judges in the province of Quebec, by which they jockey to increase their allowances, and instead of proceeding against them in the regular way, he proposes to stop it by having this sort of check on the other judges, and placing these thirty men in a position which will absolutely mar their usefulness in public opinion—placing them in such a position that I can hardly understand a man, with proper pride and self-respect, and bred up under professional traditions, remaining in that anomalous position for a moment.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not admit the construction which my hon. friend puts upon the resolution. I do not think it is a fair construction. There is no attempt to exercise control over the judges in their own districts. A judge may go freely about his district without any control; but if he leaves his district we say that he should not leave it without some control being exercised, and that control we think can be best exercised by the chief justice of the court to which he belongs. We say that a system has grown up which we think ought to be stopped, and that the way to stop it is by passing this resolution; and I say again that no fair-minded man can read that resolution without coming to the conclusion that our desire is to control the movements of the judges, to see that they live within the districts to which they are assigned, and to prevent them going beyond the bounds of their districts unless called upon to do so by him who has the responsibility, that is, the chief justice. But we must stop the system that has grown up in connection with travelling expenses, and we think we shall accomplish that by the resolution as now drafted.

Mr. MONK. So far as the district of Montreal is concerned, I think this part of the resolution is very wise. In that district we are exceptionally situated. We have not a sufficient number of judges there to attend to the business of the courts, and, therefore, it has become customary for judges in the outlying districts to come into Montreal. They knew that the want existed for them, they knew that they would always be welcomed there, and that there was work for them to do. But there is no doubt that this provision for the written request of the chief justice will have the effect of bringing more order into this practice. We require these judges; the business of the Montreal district could not be done without their attendance; but there must be some control. I fail to see in this resolution anything for the checking of the judge's accounts; but there should be some control of their movements, and that control is properly placed in the hands of the chief justice. I think that an analogous control exists in the judicial conditions of other countries. There must be a request from the chief justice when a judge is required from an outlying district, but I do not understand that he must go to the chief justice to have his account audited or checked.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There is no intention to do that at all.

Mr. MONK. We have a Court of Review sitting in the district of Montreal and another in the district of Quebec. There ought to be a sufficient number of judges to hear appeals in review; but where a judge is necessarily absent through illness or other cause and is unable to take his seat on the bench in the Court of Review, composed of three judges, there must be some means for procuring the assistance of judges from some of the outlying districts. In that case a justification is required, and that justification is the fiat of the chief justice. I myself fail to see in that resolution anything debasing to the dignity of the bench, and I think it will have this effect: as we cannot have under our judicial organization a sufficient number of judges, it will bring some order into the system by which we are to be assisted by outside judges. But I would call the Solicitor General's attention to this. If this resolution is to be interpreted as he reads it, we may be debarred from the assistance of some of the judges, who may hesitate to come to Montreal if they are only to receive one day's allowance. If, for instance, on the requisition of the chief justice a judge is called in from Sherbrooke, he will require three days.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. He will be paid for each day he is absent from home.

Mr. MONK. As regards the strictures that have been made with regard to the claims for travelling allowances of some of our judges, I do not think the matter should pass without somebody who knows whereof he speaks saying anything upon it. I think some of those strictures have been made by gentlemen who do not know whereof they speak. It is well known to those who have paid any attention to the administration of justice in the province of Quebec that in the district of Montreal we have a congested state of business in the courts, and that we require the assistance of outside judges, who have hitherto been repeatedly called upon in an informal way. The judges of the districts of St. Hyacinthe, Sorel, Richelieu and Joliette, although supposed to reside in their respective districts, have been requested to assist in the district of Montreal, and they have continued to remain in Montreal, where their presence has been tolerated, because it has been found that they could render valuable assistance. When these gentlemen remain for weeks in the city of Montreal, attending to the judicial business of a district for which they were not named, they claim a travelling allowance, and I think they have a right to claim it. They have been performing the duties of city judges, as a matter of fact, although named for outlying districts. Mr. Justice Gill's name has been mentioned.

It is a well known fact that for a long time he sat in Aylmer, when the resident judge there was ill and unable to attend court, and was therefore entitled most regularly to the travelling allowance. I do not think that the case which the hon. Solicitor General has mentioned, although it comes from him, has ever occurred in the province of Quebec. The information was brought to the Solicitor General, but I do not think that in the province of Quebec there could possibly ever have been any exchange of districts in the manner reported to my hon. friend without a good reason. Of course, the seat of the whole evil lies in our judicial system in the province of Quebec, and the sooner the Quebec legislature deals with that subject and remedies the existing grievance, the sooner we will cease to hear criticisms of the kind we have heard to-night, and which are not calculated to advance the proper administration of justice.

Mr. McNEILL. I do not think that the members of the Government, at all events, will consider that during this session I have shown any disposition to regard their measures with too great favour—the very good measures which, no doubt, they thought they were introducing. I have not at all hesitated to criticise them as I thought they deserved; but so far as this measure is concerned, I am quite satisfied that in introducing these resolutions, the Government could not have been influenced by a desire to gain political capital. I do not think that they could have considered that what they were doing would be exceedingly popular in the country, and I am credulous enough to believe that these resolutions were devised by the Minister of Justice and his department in the belief that they were right and just and in the interests of the country. Starting from those premises, I am inclined therefore to regard the resolutions with some degree of favour. As far as the province of Quebec is concerned, I know nothing about the condition of things there except what I have gathered from the discussion which has taken place. With regard to Ontario, of course one acquires a little knowledge from living there. I was very glad indeed to hear the remarks of the hon. gentleman who last sat down (Mr. Monk), and to find that he agreed with the Solicitor General in his view that it was not intended to subject the judges to that indignity, as it would really be, which some of our friends on this side seem to think the resolution necessarily implied. I think it would be very unfortunate if we were to forget for a moment that however good the laws may be which we pass, they are of very little value if we have not judges properly to administer them. The duties of a judge are about the most onerous and thankless that any member of the community has to perform. He cannot deliver judgment in any case, or seldom can do so, without offending one or other of the parties to the suit. He is subject to all kinds of misrepresentation; and unless he is supported by the good-will, the good opinion and the sympathy of his fellow-subjects, unless he has popular sentiment behind him, he cannot successfully discharge his duties, and therefore it is, I think, very important, in discussing these matters to bear in mind that the judges should be treated with a degree of delicacy and consideration which we would not perhaps extend to any other class in the community.

I think we may say with regard to the judges of the Dominion of Canada generally, that the people of Canada have a right to be thankful for and proud of our judiciary. So far as the junior judges of Ontario are concerned, it seems to me that they are at present very inadequately paid. They are, from every point of view, entitled to as much remuneration as the senior judges. The one is called the senior judge and the other the junior judge, but the difference is only in name. The junior judges have a great deal more work to do than the senior judges. I find that last year while the cases disposed of by the senior judges involved only $24,000, the cases dealt with by the junior judges aggregated a money value of $582,000, showing how very much more work the latter are doing. They have to travel, and the senior judges have not, and the amount allowed them for travelling expenses is not sufficient to cover the disbursements, in most cases, in the larger counties. Their salaries have not been adjusted for a quarter of a century, so that the salary which a junior judge has to-day is the same as he had a quarter of a century ago, although in that time the jurisdiction of the court has been very much extended, and of course the work is heavier and of greater importance. From my point of view, the case for the very moderate increase proposed in the salaries of the junior judges in Ontario is an exceedingly strong case indeed. I quite realize that any increase at the cost of the taxpayers of this country is not popular, and for that very reason, I feel that the Government in taking up this matter and in dealing with it justly are deserving of the support of the members of this House.

Mr. ANGERS. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, one of the objects of this resolution is to remove certain grievances which some members of the judiciary have had to complain of in the past, and this is, no doubt, a most laudable object. In the case of Mr. Justice Taschereau, I think everybody will agree that he is perfectly entitled to the additional salary which is provided by this resolution. Now, I deem it right to avail myself of this opportunity to call the attention of the Solicitor General to another injustice and to ask him to remedy it.

At the time when the salaries of the rural judges were fixed by the law, it was provided that a salary of $4,000 should be paid to all the judges with the exception of the two judges assigned to the districts of Saguenay and Gaspé, who receive only $3,500. This is an abnormal position, and for my part I am at a loss to understand on what ground such a discrimination was made and why those two magistrates were not put on the same basis as the other judges were.

I further say that if, at the time when those salaries were fixed there was some reason for thinking such a discrimination, that reason no longer exists. Why, Mr. Chairman? Because those very same districts which had but a sparse population at the time when those salaries were fixed, are far more densely settled now; they have acquired a far greater importance, and as a consequence, the judge who is assigned to the districts of Chicoutimi and Saguenay has now an increasing business to attend to, having more work than some of his colleagues who are drawing a salary of $4,000.

I take the case of Mr. Justice Gagné, who is administering justice in the judicial districts of Saguenay and Chicoutimi, because I am more familiar with the condition of things prevailing there. This is an immense territory, extending from the eastern limit of the county of Montmorency down to Blanco-Sablon.

Mr. Justice Gagné administers justice not only in that district but also in that of Chicoutimi. As a judge of the Superior Court, he has to hold court at Chicoutimi and Malbaie, and also to sit in the Circuit Court at the same places and at Baie St. Paul and Hébertville. I might further say that he has to travel over long distances, having, as a matter of fact, hundreds of miles of territory to cover, undergoing considerable hardship. To give an instance of the hardships he has to undergo, I may mention as a fact that which is within my knowledge, that upon one occasion, he had to spend eight days on the road in covering a distance of 90 miles, from Malbaie to Quebec.

As I said a moment ago, those two districts are far more densely populated now than they were at the time when the salaries of the judges were fixed by law. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, Chicoutimi, where the court sits now, has grown into a city of considerable size and is still developing and progressing in a most wonderful way. A more industrious, and a more progressive population than that of Chicoutimi is not to be found anywhere. The Lake St. John district is also much more densely settled than it was at that time, and as a consequence, there are more cases instituted before the court and the amount of work which the judge is called upon to perform is far greater than it was in former years. And yet the salary of that judge as well as that of the judge for the district of Gaspé—and if I did not mention the latter's name before, it is because I am less conversant with his case—is only $3,500.

We have been told here with much reason, and the hon. members on both sides of the House seem to agree that it is desirable that the gross injustice which has been done Mr. Justice Taschereau in the past should be remedied. What are the facts of the case? Although he is a judge of the Superior Court, called upon to administer justice in Montreal, still he gets a thousand dollars less than his colleagues in the same court receive. And there seems to be a general consensus of opinion in the House that this anomaly should be corrected.

Now, if Mr. Justice Taschereau is entitled to be put on the same footing as the other judges, why, I ask, should the judges of Chicoutimi, Saguenay and Gaspé be dealt with differently from the other rural judges? We have been told that Mr. Justice Taschereau discharges his judicial duties with zeal and discipline. I may make the same argument on behalf of Mr. Justice Gagné, with whom I am personally acquainted, and who displays the same zeal in the discharge of his duties. If Mr. Justice Taschereau, as we were told here, does as much work as his colleagues of Montreal, I may say that Mr. Justice Gagné, who has to administer justice in those two districts, does a greater amount of work than several of the other rural judges. Such are the reasons why I feel I am justified in asking that the injustice which I have pointed out should be remedied.

Therefore, I think I am only asking what is fair, when pressing upon the Government the desirability of amending this resolution so as to give the judges of the districts of Chicoutimi, Saguenay and Gaspé the ordinary allowance of $4,000.

This amendment seems to me so much the more opportune as it is admitted that the intention of a portion of the resolution is to remedy the injustice which has been gone Judge Taschereau in the past. I do not think anybody could object to the Government removing both grievances at the same time.

Mr. WALLACE. I am sorry that I cannot agree with some of the former speakers. I think that there is very little in the proposed resolutions to recommend them to this House. Take, for instance, this one providing that the salary for an additional judge of the Court of Appeal for Ontario shall be $5,000 per annum. We have got along in the province of Ontario with four judges in the Court of Appeal; and, in the opinion of many who are capable of judging the business might very well be done by three. With four judges no difficulty has arisen. The appointment of this fifth judge is simply an added expense to the Dominion, and justice will not be better administered than before. I think that this appropriation is entirely unjustifiable and that this clause of the resolution should be struck out. In these resolutions we are confronted with an additional expenditure in the Department of Justice of $26,400. That would pay the interest, according to the way the Finance Minister is borrowing money now-a-days, on very nearly $1,000,000. We know that there is less litigation throughout the country than there was, at any rate in all the eastern provinces, Ontario, Quebec, the maritime provinces. According to the statement of the ex-Minister of Justice (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) there are a number of judges in Quebec who are not employed three months in the year.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is absolutely without foundation.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It has this foundation—the statement of a member of the Quebec bar.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I should like to know who he is.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. You know him very well.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Probably it is somebody outside of Montreal.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. He is practising both in Montreal and in Quebec.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not believe it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I give you my word; you can believe it or not as you please.

Mr. WALLACE. I was about to remark Mr. Chairman, that the business of the county courts in the province of Ontario has almost entirely disappeared. The senior county court judges, I am told, conduct the business of the county court, and the junior judges the business of the division court and business of that kind. The senior county court judges have very little to do, except in the case of the county of York in which is situated the city of Toronto, and there, of course, the senior judge is kept very busy. But in the counties, of the province of Ontario generally these places are almost sinecures to-day; and yet we are proposing to increase the staff of judges. The present county court judges are not fully employed in many cases. I can state that with positive knowledge of what I am saying. With regard to the province of Quebec we have the evidence of the men who know. Yet in the face of this we are asked to increase the expenditure of that department, and that in the face of the fact that for the last two years the cost of living has decreased and all classes of the community have had to curtail the expenditure and live on less money. That being the case, I do not see why the judges should not be called upon to exercise a little economy as well. But, instead of that, we have the salaries increased and new judgeships created, making additions to the expenditure which are thoroughly unjustifiable and which, I believe, will not be regarded with favour by the people. Consider the expenditure under this head, I have here the Auditor General's Report, and I quote some figures respecting judges in the province of Quebec. One judge received for travelling expenses, $1,830; another, $1,182; another, $1,644; another, $1,198; another, $1,050; another, $1,750; another, $1,428; another, $1,686; another over $1,000. So that most of the judges I have here indicated have been paid $6 a day for almost every working day in the year. We know that, in the province of Ontario, at any rate, there is what the lawyers call the long vacation, extending, I do not know how long, but through the summer and part of the fall. Yet these men are drawing their $6 a day apparently for every working day in the year. For instance, $1,830, at $6 a day would represent 305 days, out of a 312 working days in the year. Can anybody pretend that this is a fair charge or one that should be made or paid? Yet the Auditor General's Report shows that during the last fiscal year that amount was paid to one of the judges. Another judge, alluded to by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), Judge Taschereau, drew $1,686, as the hon. member for East Grey said. This judge was to live in the county of Terrebonne, but he got permission to live in Montreal. If he resided in Terrebonne, I presume he would not be entitled to mileage while administering justice in his own county. He goes to Montreal, however, and draws $1,686 for travelling expenses, or at the rate of $6 a day for 281 days. There were not that many days when court was held to justify such a charge. The Solicitor General said that that was a grievance in the past, but he was proposing to remedy it. But these resolutions do not remedy it; they do not meet the case, as was pointed out by the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper). The so-called remedies are only offensive to the judges without being such as to correct the abuses which have prevailed. For instance, in the case in which reference has been made, these judges who go to their places to hold their courts have to get the certificate of a chief justice as to the days they are away, and the chief justice has to take their word for it. That is an invidious position in which to place a judge, and it does not secure what the Solicitor General contemplates. The Chief Justice cannot give a certificate on his own personal knowledge but can only do so on information given him by the judges themselves. It is provided that the district judges in the province of Ontario are to get $500 for travelling expenses. These district judges, as I understand it, are the judges for Algoma and the large territories where they have many hundreds of miles to cover, a larger territory than nearly all the rest of the province. Their travelling expenses in such a territory must be very considerably more, I am quite sure, than those men who are receiving more than three times as much as they do for travelling expenses. In looking over the Auditor General's Report, I do not see any statement that the judges in the province of British Columbia receive travelling allowances.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It appears in another page of the report.

Mr. WALLACE. I am glad to hear that, because any one who knows British Columbia and the enormous distances that have to be travelled by judges going from one place to another to hold court must realize that it is very expensive travelling. The charge on the railways is considerably higher than in any other part of the Dominion and the cost of travelling and living there is greater, so the judges of that province should be given liberal travelling allowances.

While they are not holding court, they are spending a large portion of their time travelling over these long distances, and in many places off the lines of railway, and undergoing considerable hardship. I think it is recognized that the judges there are also of a high class, and should receive their travelling allowance. However, I have been told they do receive it, and I think that is only right. I repeat that I think the Solicitor General has made a great mistake in bringing down these resolutions and committing this Parliament to such an enormously increased expenditure for the administration of justice, at a time when other people are curtailing their expenditure, and at a time, too, when we know that litigation in almost every province of the Dominion, except perhaps the Northwest provinces and British Columbia, has enormously shrunken, and at a time when there is no necessity whatever for increasing the expenditure of this branch of government.

Mr. QUINN. In the remarks which I had the honour to address to the committee some time ago, I purposely abstained from referring in any way to the travelling expenses of the judges in the province of Quebec. I did so because I did not consider it was a matter which could be discussed here without reflecting upon the judges, and I would not wish in any way to reflect upon the character of the judges either in the province of Quebec or in any other province of the Dominion. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) has taken the trouble to go into details concerning some of the judges of the province of Quebec. He asked me to consult the Auditor General's Report. I have taken his advice, and I would like to draw his attention to page I-10 of that report for 1896-97, where he will find that ten judges in the province of Ontario drew $13,700 last year for travelling expenses.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. In addition to that, they are allowed $1,000 a year each by the province.

Mr. QUINN. In addition to which, as I am informed, they are allowed $1,000 a year by the province of Ontario, and receive salaries of from $5,000 to $6,000 from this Government. I find that in the province of Quebec 31 or 32 judges drew in travelling expenses the sum of $21,012. In other words, there is an average of $677 paid each judge in the province of Quebec for travelling expenses last year, and in the province of Ontario, the sum of $1,370 each. If my hon. friend would devote his attention to the judges of his own province, of whose conduct he should know something, he will be able to give some enlightenment to this House; and if he will leave the discussion of the conduct of the judges in the province of Quebec to the members from that province who are familiar with their conduct, he might perhaps receive a little enlightenment. Now, I would recommend my hon. friend once more to look at the salaries of the judges of the province of Ontario. I wonder why he should undertake to criticise the judges of the province of Quebec any more than the judges of any other province. However, I would commend him to look at the salaries of the judges of Quebec, and compare them with the salaries of the judges of Ontario. For example, I find that for salaries to the judges in the province of Ontario, there are paid out by this Parliament $247,000 per annum, whereas, to the judges of the province of Quebec, there are paid $186,000 per annum in salaries. There are paid out in travelling expenses in the province of Ontario $25,800; that is to say, there are two items asked for this year, one of $13,000 and the other of $12,800, making a total of $25,800 for travelling expenses for the judges of the province of Ontario; while my hon. friend the Solicitor General asks for $16,000 in all for the allowance of Circuit Court judges in the province of Quebec. In other words, in the province of Quebec, for some 38 judges, $16,000 are asked for as travelling allowances, while for 40 odd judges in the province of Ontario, we are asked for $25,800. Now, I do not think these travelling allowances are excessive. My hon. friend the Solicitor General referred to a case which I do not think he could have taken from the province of Quebec, a case where two judges exchanged districts, so to speak, that each judge might get his travelling allowance. I would be very sorry to believe such a thing could occur in Canada at all, until I received the word of the Solicitor General that it actually did occur. I would prefer to believe it occurred in some outlying districts or territories of the United States. But my hon. friend has referred to the case of a judge travelling from one district to another, for instance, going to the city of Montreal. Now, take the case of the judge of the district of Richelieu, how would it be possible for him to go to the district of Montreal and attend to his duties as a judge in the city of Montreal, if so required to do by the chief justice, without exhausting three days' time? He would be obliged to go on a steamer, leaving Sorel, we will say, at twelve or one o'clock at night.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. He would be paid for three days as usual.

Mr. QUINN. Then what I object to in the resolution of my hon. friend is that particular portion which obliges a judge to make out, so to speak, an account for a certain number of days attendance, instead of doing as is done in the province of Quebec, voting a sum en bloc for the travelling expenses of judges, allowing them to divide it up, as has been done by the judges in Ontario. Here I find the amounts divided up in Ontario as follows:—$1,400 to one judge, $1,400 to another, $1,300 to another, $1,600 to another, $1,500 to another, $1,400 to another, $1,300 to another, $1,000 to another, $1,400 to another, $1,400 to still another. I think that would be a proper and dignified way of apportioning the travelling expenses. Let the chief justice who resides in Quebec and the acting chief justice in the city of Montreal, apportion the $16,000 that are paid for travelling expenses according to the requirements of the judges who are to be drafted from the different districts into the districts of Montreal or Quebec, as the case may be, and then we will not have this kind of criticism, which tends to anything but the elevation of the judges of the country, or to increase the respect to which they are entitled from the citizens of the country.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I want to say a word in reference to a statement I made. I understood from what the Solicitor General said that he did not accept my statement that a leading member of the profession in Quebec who practiced in Montreal and Quebec—

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I accept your statement.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I want to fix that upon the attention of the committee, because its importance is undoubted. Here is a proposal to increase the number of Superior Court judges in the province of Quebec, and my statement was that I had information from a leading member of the profession that one-third of those very judges have not more than three months work in the year. Now, instead of mentioning the name of my correspondent, I take up the reports of the House of Assembly at Quebec when the Solicitor General was a member of that assembly, I refer to the debates of 1893-94. I want the hon. gentleman to listen to the statement of the Attorney General in that assembly, on the introduction of a Bill dealing with this whole question of the judiciary and the practice of the courts. Now, on that occasion the Attorney General made this observation:

The judges of the Superior Court in rural districts tell us to-day: "We have not much work in our districts, while there is much work in Montreal, and besides we usually come from the great cities, from Montreal or from Quebec."

Take this specific statement, supported as it is by statistics, and let us see where the congestion centred in the province. The Attorney General of the province, speaking on his responsibility on that occasion, further said:

During the last ten years there were issued from the Superior Court for the whole province of Quebec 52,331 writs. Thus, in all the province of Quebec there were issued from the Superior Court 52,331 writs. Now, how many do you think out of this number were issued from the Superior Court of Montreal. I was surprised and astonished at the number of writs issued from the Superior Court of Montreal, and this inclines me more than ever to say that I should come to the aid of the city which suffers the most from the existing state of affairs. The number of writs issued from the Superior Court of Montreal was 29,260. That is to say that more than half of the writs of all the province of Quebec were issued from the Superior Court of Montreal. Now let us take the judgments in contested cases. The Superior Court judgments in contested cases for the province of Quebec amount to 16,220. Now for the city of Montreal alone, in the district of Montreal, out of this total number of 16,220 judgments there are 7,708, that is to say, again the half of the judgments rendered in the province of Quebec in contested cases. Now it is easily seen that if in certain districts the judges have hardly one, two or three months' work to do a year, the judges of Montreal district are so overcrowded with work that they cannot do it at all, and are obliged to call to their assistance the judges of the surrounding country districts, and even to call the judges of country districts lower down in the river than Quebec, and the obstruction is such in the Court of Appeals at Montreal that, as I said a moment ago, that if you to-day inscribe a case at the Court of Appeals at Montreal you would be obliged to wait two years before being able to plead it.

Later he said :

I repeat that at least in a dozen districts there are judges who have not more than three months' work a year, while in the district of Montreal, Quebec and Sherbrooke the judges have more to do than they can accomplish.

That is a specific statement.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I have a very vivid recollection of this statement. It was made by Hon. Mr. Casgrain, as Attorney General, at the time he introduced his Bill, and although he was bolstered up by one of the strongest governments that ever held power in the province, he was compelled to withdraw the Bill. That indicates the force of his statement.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Does the hon. gentleman impugn the statement made ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. When any gentleman makes the statement that a judge in the province of Quebec has only one month's work in the year, I impugn it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Three months in the year.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The statement, is one, two or three months.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Is the hon. gentleman prepared to impugn the statistics ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I impugn any such statement made.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. One statement bears out the other.

Mr. BERGERON. I want to call the attention of the Solicitor General, before he brings in his Bill, founded on this part of the resolution, which speaks about the Court of Review, to the following portion of the resolution :—

But no travelling allowance shall be granted to any judge requested to sit in review under the first section of the Act of the Legislature of Quebec, 61 Victoria, chap. 20, unless it is certified by the chief justice or the judge discharging the duties of chief justice in the district that the attendance of such judge was necessary by reason of illness, incapacity or absence of one of the judges resident at Montreal or Quebec, as the case may be.

I call attention to a statute passed by the legislature of Quebec during its last session, in which I find the following :—

1. Article 2321 of the Revised Statutes is amended by adding thereto the following :—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

“ The three judges of the Court of Review are, however, taken from all the judges of the Superior Court of the province, at the discretion of the chief justice or acting chief justice, as the case may be.”

I believe under this Quebec statute we would be doing an act which would be unconstitutional by providing that country judges should be allowed to sit in review only when city judges could not act as judges in review.

Mr. McMULLEN. I want to say a word in reply to the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Quinn). The hon. gentleman stated in the calculation he gave from the Auditor General's Report that the salaries of the judges of the province of Quebec amounted to $186,000. That may be quite correct, but the hon. gentleman did not add the travelling expenses, which brought up the amount to $207,000. Then the hon. gentleman calculated the salaries of judges in Ontario, but he gave the salaries and the travelling expenses together.

Mr. QUINN. I did not.

Mr. McMULLEN. I challenge the hon. gentleman's statement. He said the salaries were $247,000, and he added the travelling expenses as well as the salaries.

Mr. QUINN. I did in the other case.

Mr. McMULLEN. If the hon. gentleman will go over the figures, he will find I am right. I am not challenging the expenses paid in Ontario, nor am I challenging those paid in Quebec, if honestly and properly drawn ; but I wish to point out that when a judge in Toronto is called to discharge his duties, and he draws a per diem allowance of $6 for coming in from an outside section where he was supposed to be located as a judge, while at the same time he was living in Toronto—if a judge drew money in that way, I would find fault with him. The hon. gentleman is trying to draw a herring across the track, in order to show that the judges of Ontario and the judges of Quebec were in the same category with respect to the expenses, which I contend they are not. The judges in Ontario are allowed by the Act of the provincial legislature and by a provision of the Act of this Parliament to the amount they draw ; there is an understanding and clearly defined arrangement, while in the case of the Quebec judges they draw this allowance by means of a side wind. The hon. gentleman said it would be better for hon. members from Ontario to criticise matters relating to Ontario, and allow members from Quebec to discharge the same duties with regard to matters relating to Quebec. Will the hon. gentleman pretend to say that we are simply here to attend to matters for the several provinces we represent ?

Mr. QUINN. No.

Mr. McMULLEN. Then, why did the hon. gentleman suggest such action in regard to the province from which he comes? We are here to legislate for the entire Dominion. I am surprised to hear an hon. member, with the learning and ability the hon. gentleman claims to possess, suggest that hon. members should confine themselves to affairs of their own province.

Mr. QUINN. I never suggested it.

Mr. McMULLEN. You will find it so recorded in "Hansard."

Mr. QUINN. What I said was that if the hon. gentleman would leave the members of the bar of the province of Quebec, who understood the matter, to discuss it, he would probably learn something. And I repeat that statement. It is true that I made a mistake. The figures should have been $182,000 salaries and travelling expenses for the judges of Quebec, and $247,000 salaries and travelling expense for the judges of Ontario. I adhere to the statement that $247,100 is asked for by the Estimates this year for travelling expenses and salaries for judges in Ontario, and $182,000 for salaries and travelling expense for judges in the province of Quebec. I reiterate that statement, and if the hon. gentleman will look at the Estimates, he will find I was correct.

Mr. McMULLEN. My hon. friend (Mr. Quinn) may possibly find that in the Estimates, but if he looks over the Auditor General's Report he will find that my statement is correct. He first quoted from the Auditor General's Report, but when he got cornered he deserted the Auditor General and went to the Estimates.

Mr. QUINN. My hon. friend (Mr. McMullen), with his usual wriggling policy, tried to put me in the hole in which he is himself. I have shown he is wrong by the Estimates, and now I will prove it by the Auditor General's Report, from which I quoted that there were actually expended last year, $13,700 for the travelling of ten judges in the province of Ontario, while 32 judges in the province of Quebec only spent $21,000. I showed from the Auditor General's Report that 32 judges in Quebec, actually spent in travelling, an average of $667 each per annum, while the ten judges in the province of Ontario spent an average of $1,300 per annum each.

Resolution agreed to, reported, read the second time and concurred in.

Bill (No. 150) to amend the Act respecting judges of the provincial courts.

SUPPLY—PACIFIC CABLE FROM VANCOUVER TO AUSTRALIA.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House do again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. CASDY. Before that motion is carried, Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring a matter before the House which I consider is of sufficient importance to justify our devoting a little time to it, even at this late period of the session. I need not say that what I shall bring up is not a motion of want of confidence in the Government, nor even any attempt to find fault with the Government. It is a matter on which I hope to elicit the opinion of the House to some extent, and possibly the opinion of the Government; a matter which I consider to be of Imperial importance. I refer to the question of the laying of a Pacific cable to connect Vancouver with Australasia. It will be within the memory of all of us that this subject has occupied the consideration of colonial conferences, of colonial Governments, and of this House at different times. Not to go further back than the first intercolonial conference of 1887, held in London, we know that resolutions were passed there favourable to the laying of such a cable. Subsequently, when the then Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Mackenzie Bowell) visited Australia, negotiations took place which led to the summoning of the intercolonial conference in Ottawa in the early summer of 1894, where that question was again considered and the laying of the cable approved by resolution.

I shall not detain the House by reading these resolutions in detail, but I may say they were to the effect that the Imperial Government should be asked to consider as to what aid they would give, and that the Canadian Government should be asked to ascertain what such a cable would probably cost. As a result of that conference, in the year following the Government of this country called for tenders, and the lowest tender for the construction of that cable, and its maintenance for three years by the contractors, including all possible risks during the making and laying of the cable, amounted in round numbers to about one and a half million pounds sterling. None of these tenders were accepted as they were invited merely for the purpose of ascertaining about what such a cable would cost. The matter was not concluded after these investigations, but early in 1896, an Imperial committee was called together in London to consider the subject, at which Sir Donald A. Smith, now Lord Strathcona and Mount Royal, and Sir Sandford Fleming were appointed to represent the Canadian Government; there being representatives present from the Imperial Government and from the Australasian colonies. That committee held its sittings through the summer and autumn of 1896, and at great length investigated all questions connected with the cable, and established not only the practicability of a cable being laid in the waters in question, but also that the cost would be moderate and the traffic large. The report of that committee has never been published, for some reasons which are known only to the official mind of the Colonial Office in England. For reasons of policy they have objected to the publication of the report of that committee. However, the Canadian representative, and Sir Sandford Fleming—who did not sit as a member of the committee, having stepped out and acted as consulting expert only, because the other colonies only sent one representative each—the Canadian representatives reported to the Canadian Government their own proceedings in connection with that committee. Some considerable time ago I obtained an address from the House asking for the report of that committee, and the reports of the Canadian representatives thereon. The Secretary of State reports in the return which was brought down yesterday: that “the report itself asked for, is held as confidential under instructions from the Imperial authorities not to publish until permission is given to do so.” The reports of the Canadian representative and of Sir Sandford Fleming have been brought down in this return, which I shall certainly not read to the House at this time, although I hope that it will be printed for the information of the public on this very important matter. I will, however, occupy a few moments in reading a letter received from Sir Sandford Fleming by myself, in response to a request of mine for a concise and brief statement of the whole question. The letter is as follows:—

Ottawa, May 26th, 1898.

Geo. E. Casey, Esq., M.P.

Dear Mr. Casey,—I am very glad to reply to your inquiries.

I have recently received many communications from Australia, all pointing to the great interest taken in the Pacific Cable, and the desire on the part of these rich and growing communities, seated in that favoured region of the globe, to cultivate close relations with Canada.

The communications received embrace official and private letters. Among the former the following extracts from letters received from the Premiers of Queensland and New Zealand may be taken as illustrations.

The Premier of Queensland states in a letter of February 19th, 1898, that his Government “have in no sense altered their views as to the advantages to be derived by the Australian colonies and the Empire generally from the construction of the proposed Pacific Cable, connecting Australia with Great Britain by way of Canada.” He is pleased to be able to give his “hearty assurance of entire sympathy with the movement in favour of this important national undertaking, and trusts that before long it may be possible to take some definite steps in the direction of executing what is by Queensland regarded as not only a very desirable, but a very practicable scheme.”

The Premier of New Zealand, in a letter of March 16th, 1898, expresses the hope “that no efforts will be spared on the part of Canada to ensure the accomplishment of the scheme for a cable from Australia to the United Kingdom by way of the Pacific.” He adds: “The New Zealand Government strongly favours the Pacific Cable.”

In the same month (March) the Premiers of New South Wales, Queensland, Victoria and Tasmania met in Melbourne, and agreed on behalf of those colonies to supply one-third of the cost of the Pacific Cable if Canada and Great Britain will co-operate with them.

New Zealand was not represented at this conference, but the letter of Mr. Seddon, the Premier above quoted, indicates that the undertaking is strongly supported by his Government. This fact he communicated to the conference of Premiers by telegraph.

The cost of the cable has been ascertained to be under £1,500,000, and the most careful experts have calculated that an annual gross income of £150,000 would more than meet interest, sinking fund, working expenses and maintenance. In the year 1896 the cable traffic between Australasia and Europe, according to Government returns, reached 2,326,984 words. If we reckon the traffic at three shillings a word (the rate between Australia and Europe is four and nine pence per word), we have a gross revenue of £349,047, showing very clearly that, even assuming the cable business will never exceed that of 1896, there would be amply remunerative business for the Pacific Cable.

But the cable business is progressive. The following is a statement taken from the Government returns of the number of words transmitted in each year from 1891 to 1896. The traffic for last year (1897) has not yet been received.

	Total Words Transmitted.
In 1891.....	1,110,869
1892.....	1,321,412
1893.....	1,401,293
1894.....	1,323,243
1895.....	1,948,630
1896.....	2,326,984

This establishes that from 1891 to 1896 the cable business has more than doubled, and in view of the stimulating effect of a new line of communication, it is reasonable to estimate that the gross cable business in 1901 will not be less than 4,000,000 words. As 1,000,000 words at three shillings a word will produce £150,000, the revenue required to cover every charge against the Pacific Cable, it is evident that if the Pacific Cable obtains one-quarter of the Australian-European traffic it will be a paying concern from the first year it can be put in operation.

To my mind there is no reason to apprehend that the Pacific Cable will not obtain far more than one-quarter of the entire cable business. The Australian land lines are public property, managed by the Post Office Departments, and each Government will have the power to direct traffic over the Pacific Cable, so as to make it remunerative. The cable business takes its origin chiefly in New South Wales, Queensland, Victoria and New Zealand, and it is obvious that if these colonies have a proprietary interest in the undertaking its complete financial success will be assured.

New South Wales, Queensland and Victoria have agreed through their Premiers to become responsible for one-third of the whole cost. It is understood that the Imperial Government will be willing to bear one-third. There remains one-third to be borne by New Zealand and Canada, in proportions to be agreed upon.

These facts and explanations clearly establish that whatever share of the co-partnership may be assumed by Canada the liability will be merely nominal. As the existing traffic alone, without taking into account the new business certain to be created, would be more than sufficient to cover working expenses, maintenance, interest and sinking fund to pay off the original loan, all increase of business and all new business to be developed between Canada, the United States and Australia would swell out receipts in a few years so as to admit of a reduction in charges on messages much below present rates, by which great advantage to the public would result.

It has been proposed to establish this national work through the instrumentality of a Pacific Cable trust, to be created by the several Parliaments. This trust to be empowered to raise by loan the required capital, providing for its replacement by sinking fund. The loan to be guaranteed by the associated Governments in agreed proportions.

The Pacific Cable trust would be a small board on which the associated Governments would be represented. As empowered by statute it would do everything necessary to establish and operate the line, collect the revenue and properly account for it.

By this means a great national undertaking designed to promote trade and bring the outer Empire into electric contact would be easily established without any actual addition to the public debt or any annual charge on the taxpayer.

Yours very truly,

SANDFORD FLEMING.

It may be asked, Sir, why, if this enterprise is so sure to pay, it should not be undertaken by a private corporation. The answer is, that if it were undertaken by a private corporation, the provincial governments in Australasia which have been referred to would not be bound by their own interest to send over it the business necessary to make it a paying concern. That is a very sufficient answer in itself. It would have to compete for its business with the Eastern Extension Cable Company, a tremendously wealthy and influential corporation in trying to get into the good graces of the provincial governments which control that business and it is easy to understand that a new company could not compete successfully with an old, influential and wealthy one. In the second place, the capital could not be obtained at nearly as reasonable rates by a company as by a cable trust, with the guarantee of the different governments. The ordinary rate of profit expected by investors would certainly range from 5 to 8 per cent, or probably more, whereas the rate of interest at which money could be borrowed on a government guarantee would be between 2½ and 3 per cent. That difference is enough to make the distinction between a paying and a non-paying investment. As to the responsibility incurred by the governments which guarantee this loan, I think Sir Sandford's statement, which he assures me is taken from the Government blue-books of these colonies, is sufficient to make it appear that the responsibility would be purely nominal. I might instance the case of the Intercolonial Railway. When Canada proposed to build that road the Imperial Government, whose credit was so much better than ours, guaranteed a very considerable amount of the bonds, and we got the money at a lower rate of interest than we otherwise could have done. Yet the Imperial Government has never had to pay a cent of the interest on those bonds. When we have a case like this, in which it is clear that the other parties who would go into the enterprise of laying the cable, have it in their power to direct over it a paying stream of traffic, and would be interested in doing so as guarantors of the scheme, it seems to me very clear that neither this country nor any of the other colonies would ever have to pay a cent towards liquidating the cost of that cable.

Why should Canada take the initiative in this matter? In the first place, because she is the most important colony and most interested in this cable of any except Australia. In the second place, because Canada has acquired already what it is now fashionable to call the hegemony of Greater Britain. She is the most important in the councils of the greater Empire which lies outside the British islands. Since the day of the Jubilee celebration, I think that cannot be doubted. Ever since then it is admitted by Englishmen that Canada is not only the leader of the colonies, but the leader of the Empire, in many questions of policy, both internal and external. Canada has already gone a long way on certain paths which are intended to promote, not only her own prosperity, but the unity of the Empire and the mutual co-operation of its different members. It is eminently proper, therefore, that Canada should take the initiative in this matter. I do not speak now as if the initiative remained to be taken. Canada has taken the initiative in discussing this matter and obtaining the necessary information with regard to it. What is required is that she should now take the initiative by being the first to lay down a definite scheme to carry out the plans that have already been fully discussed, and take up her share of Imperial responsibility in this connection.

The commercial advantages to Canada of this scheme will be great. We have had for some years a line of steamers plying between Vancouver and Australia, but only within this year that line has ceased to pay and has had to be taken over by another company. Why? Simply because there has not been direct telegraphic communication between Canada and Australia. Where there is no direct telegraphic communication, and no ports of call, having telegraphic connections, between points so far distant as Vancouver and Australia, where ships can call for orders, commerce is sure to languish as it has in this case.

Still more from the point of view of the safety of the Empire, and thereby indirectly our own, this cable would be an agency whose importance cannot be exaggerated. In these days of wars and rumours of wars, and of cutting of cables by one of the combatants to embarrass the other, the necessity of a cable with its terminals on British territory is very clearly apparent. This proposed cable line, according to the most feasible route, will start from Vancouver, and then by way of Fanning Island and Fiji to Norfolk Island, from which it will fork to New Zealand and Australia. The total length will be something over 7,000 miles. The committee in England have fully established the feasibility of laying a cable in these waters at a reasonable cost. Under all these circumstances I am sure that we are in a position to ask the Imperial Government to drop the veil of secrecy which has been laid over the matter at present, and to come out fully and frankly and meet ourselves and the other colonies half way, not only in promising support to this scheme, but in maturing and carrying out the project. There is urgency in the matter at present for two reasons. In the first place, this Eastern Extension Company has been trying to obtain the assistance of the Australian colonies to another route, by way of the Cape of Good Hope, from Australia to England. In the second place, the French Government has a cable from New Caledonia to New Zealand, and steps have been taken to construct another link in a route which would connect New Caledonia with Hawaia, and thence by the American cable with San Francisco. If either of these schemes took practical form, the proposal for the Canadian cable would be at an end, because either of the others would serve the purpose of Australia, if not ours.

A profitable and growing trade between Australia and Canada cannot be accomplished by any other means than by this electric communication. We should then be the warehouse for European goods going to Australia and Australian goods coming to England over our great national highway, the Canadian Pacific Railway. I do not bring up this question with any idea of forcing the hand of the Government or urging it to say anything definite in the matter to-night, but in the hope that it will promote such a discussion as will give the Government some idea of the feeling in the House and country, and that there will be such discussion in the country, even in these days of interesting war news, as will call public attention to the matter, and enable the people to see that it is a national Canadian, as well as Imperial, work of great importance and deserving of more activity on our part.

I do not know that I have anything further to add to what I have already said and to the remarks I have quoted from the greatest living authority on submarine cables, Sir Sandford Fleming. I could give interesting details from the various papers brought down, but although they would add to the interest of the subject, they would not add to the pleasure of the House to-night. I hope to hear from both sides on the question. I am sorry that some hon. gentlemen are not present whom I would desire to see here to-night. I refer to members from British Columbia on this side of the House—I see one on the other side—who are, to my knowledge, in sympathy with this scheme, but I am forced to bring it on in their absence on account of the nearness of prorogation.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I waited, Mr. Speaker, before rising, in the belief that some member of the Government would, in response to the very strong appeal just made by the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey), favour the House with the position which the Government propose to take on this very important question. I have not had an opportunity of reading the papers that have been placed on the Table, and from what my hon. friend says, I am afraid I would not derive a great deal of information if I had.

Mr. CASEY. Yes, the report of the Canadian commissioner is pretty full.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I speak of the matter so far as the views of the Government are concerned which is an important point; and, from what fell from my hon. friend who has just gone over this subject with so much care and ability, I am afraid I should not have learned a great deal as to the attitude of the Government. But I may say, that I am afraid that the Government have scarcely realized our just expectations in regard to this very important matter. The question was taken up with great zeal and great ability long ago by Sir Sandford Fleming, who gave the subject attention, not from the promoter's point of view, because he never dealt with the subject from that standpoint at all, but entirely from the higher point of view of what he could do—and it was a great deal—to bring such facts and evidence to bear upon the question as would commend it to the consideration of the Government and lead to its being taken up by the Government of Canada and other countries interested with a view to its accomplishment. I do not intend to say a single word with regard to its importance. The hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) has pointed out, that probably the failure of those who undertook the establishment of a line of communication between the great Island Continent of Australia resulted to a large extent from the want of that direct telegraphic communication which so greatly facilitates commercial transactions. I will now give the House a little idea of the position in which that question was when I resigned the position of High Commissioner in London. The great conference that was held of the Australasian representatives and the representatives of the British Government meeting here with the representatives of Canada gave a great impetus to this project. After consideration of the subject that conference arrived at a practically unanimous resolution in favour of the question being taken up and pressed upon the consideration of Her Majesty's Government. Lord Jersey, who represented the Imperial Government at that conference attached very great importance to this project and dealt very ably with it in his report to Her Majesty's Government upon the conference itself. When the present Government came into power I made a very strong appeal under direction of the Government of Canada to the Right Hon. Mr. Chamberlain, the Colonial Minister, to take up this question of the Pacific Cable connecting Canada with Australasia, and that right hon. gentleman having given a great deal of attention and careful consideration to the subject was good enough to receive a deputation. On that occasion, I was accompanied to the Colonial Office by the representatives in London of all the Australasian colonies, including New Zealand, with the exception of the representatives of South Australia and West Australia. We never expected to have the active support of these provinces, for the reason that they had built a very long and expensive line of telegraphic communication across the country connecting with the Eastern Extension Company, and the carrying out of the project of cable communication on the Pacific from Vancouver to Australia would tend very much to take away the business upon which this line constructed by South Australia and West Australia depended for its maintenance. I may say that when on the occasion on which, under instructions of the Government of Canada and of all the Australian Governments, except the two I have mentioned, we waited upon the Right Hon. Mr. Chamberlain with a joint request that a commission should be appointed by Her Majesty's Government for the purpose of taking up the question as to whether it was desirable that this Pacific Cable should be established and in what form it was most likely to be successfully carried out, the Colonial Minister at once warmly entered into the subject, and, in response to our application agreed promptly to issue a Royal Commission to invite representatives from Canada and from Australia to meet in England for the purpose of conferring with Her Majesty's Government on that subject. And I may say—and it is a very important statement that I am about to make—that Mr.

Chamberlain, who is noted not only for his great ability, but for his thorough knowledge of financial questions, stated to the delegation or representatives from Canada and Australia that, having given to the subject the fullest and most careful consideration in his power, and, in the light of all the information that could be brought to bear upon it, he had arrived at the conclusion that the accomplishment of the Pacific Cable from Vancouver to Australia would not involve, practically, any financial responsibility. He reached this conclusion not only from the evidence that had been submitted by Sir Sandford Fleming, to which he had given careful attention, but from the stronger and more complete evidence afforded by the invitation for tenders by the Government of Canada at the request of the Ottawa conference. This invitation resulted in obtaining from one of the strongest firms of Great Britain, the India Rubber and Gutta Percha Cable Company and Works a tender for the construction and maintenance for three years of the cable. This not only established that the calculations that Sir Sandford Fleming had made—and very elaborate calculations they were—were sound but that the terms on which one of the strongest cable companies in Great Britain was prepared to carry out the work, was nearly a million less than Sir Sandford Fleming had estimated.

So that instead of having been too sanguine, instead of having overestimated the results of his labours, it was found by practical test that his figures were outside figures, and that he could undoubtedly have constructed it at a much lower rate than he had estimated. Not only that, but as I have said, the Colonial Minister himself declared that having gone into the subject with great care, he had arrived at the conclusion that this great work in which Her Majesty's Government were most deeply interested, could be carried out by the joint operation of Canada, Great Britain and Australasia, without practically involving any other material financial responsibility whatever. Now, Sir, that was an enormous point gained. A commission was appointed, and, as the House knows from the papers that have been laid upon the Table, no definite conclusion was arrived at. A change of Government occurred about that time, and an alteration was made in the commission, although I am glad to know that the present Government availed themselves of the invaluable services of Sir Sandford Fleming in this matter, as the previous Government had done, but with the result that while we all looked forward to this great Jubilee occasion as one on which we had every reason to believe this important work would be finally arranged, on the contrary, for some cause, to me unaccountable, the work was not proceeded with, but suffered a decided set-back. The hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) has invited the Government to seek Her Majesty's Government to remove the veil of secrecy and let us see behind the scenes, let us learn why it is that in view of this great work, so vitally important to us and to Australia, equally important to Her Majesty's Government and to the Empire itself, as recent events have strikingly evidenced—why it is that this matter should be apparently in abeyance. Now, Sir, I hold in my hand a paper to which I would like very well to have drawn the attention of the First Minister, who, I am sorry to see, is not in his seat to-night; it contains a statement made apparently with a good deal of authority, and which throws a good deal of responsibility in regard to the present position of this important question, upon that right hon. gentleman. I hold in my hand a copy of the London "Standard," of the 26th of July, 1897. I may say for the information of some members of the House who may not be aware of the fact, that the London "Standard" is practically the organ of Her Majesty's Government. I do not know a paper published in London that is looked to with the same confidence as the London "Standard" to ascertain the views and sentiments of Her Majesty's Government. This paper professes to give, on what purports to be the best authority, the report of an interview between Mr. Chamberlain and the Colonial Premiers. We have had since that a portion of the details laid by that right hon. gentleman himself upon the Table of the House, but this inside view of the interview gives us some information above and beyond anything that is to be found in the statements laid upon the Table of the House of Commons. I may say that from the very moment that this question of a Pacific Cable was mooted, it met with the most untiring hostility of the Eastern Extension Cable Company of which Sir John Pender, a very able man, was the founder, a man of consummate ability, and whose arms were long and far reaching. I say from the outset this Pacific Cable project met with the determined hostility of the Eastern Extension Cable Company for the obvious reasons that they had practically a monopoly of communication with the great islands of Australasia, and disliked any competition from another and superior line of communication, and one more free from interruption than the line that now exists. Well, it appears that in their untiring efforts to defeat this scheme, they brought forward and placed before the cable commission in London, an alternative scheme. I will now read a report of what professes to be a result of the conference between Mr. Chamberlain and the Colonial Premiers:

The conference left the Pacific Cable scheme in mid-air, and it is very unlikely that anything more will be heard of it for a considerable time. The position was entirely changed by a proposal by the Eastern Extension Telegraph Company to lay an all-British line from Western Australia,

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

across the Indian Ocean to Mauritius, thence connecting with the Cape and St. Helena and Ascension. Under any circumstances, Western Australia and South Australia were opposed to the Pacific Cable.—

For the reasons I have mentioned.

—which would divert traffic from their land lines, and Victoria was indifferent. New South Wales, Queensland and New Zealand were, by reason of their geographical position, prepared to subsidize the Pacific line, and if the Home and Canadian Governments had been willing to pay their share, no doubt the scheme would have been carried out. But the conference soon discovered that the Imperial Treasury was very unwilling indeed to subsidize the line, while Sir Wilfrid Laurier indicated that he mistrusted the estimates of cost, revenue and maintenance which had been submitted by the projector, and was not prepared to pledge Canada to bear a share of the burden.

Now, Sir, I regret that the right hon. gentleman is not here to give to this House some explanation of the grounds upon which he should have questioned the conclusion of the projector, for that could be no other than Sir Sandford Fleming, as he was the party who had put forward all the data upon which this question was dealt with. I would like to know why he should throw doubt and discredit upon Sir Sandford Fleming's calculations of the cost, when they had been subjected to so severe and important a test as that of being submitted to competition between the great cable companies, and it had been found that instead of those calculations being unworthy of confidence, he had erred upon the safe side of largely over-estimating the cost beyond what it was found an important cable firm in London were prepared to construct the work. If that be a correct statement, I regret very much that such doubts should have been expressed, or that any hesitation should have been expressed by Canada in regard to a matter that I look upon as very important, not only to Canada and Australia, but perhaps still more important to the Empire itself.

If Her Majesty's Government show a disposition, as here stated, to recede from the position of being prepared to bear a large and substantial portion of the risk, regarded as a very light one by the representative of the Imperial Government, Mr. Chamberlain, a very great change must have taken place in that right hon. gentleman's opinion from the time I had the pleasure of discussing that subject with him in connection with the delegates from all the colonies. I do not intend at this hour to occupy further time than to say that this is a question deserving the hearty support of the Government and Parliament of Canada. I believe it is all but demonstrated that it is of great importance to us, that it would make Canada the great highway and thoroughfare for a very large amount of the cable communication between the great island conti-ment of Australasia and Europe; that it would have ensured us a position that would have been one of great value commercially, that it would have been attended with a very moderate charge, if any, on the revenues of the country, and at the same time have resulted in giving our geographical position that importance to which I think it is justly entitled. I hope the further consideration of this question will lead to its being promptly taken up by the Imperial Government, the Government of Australasia and the Government of Canada at no distant day, and that at no distant day we may see that which has been regarded with general favour and as a matter of great importance by all parties, except by those interested and who have a direct interest, such as the Eastern Extension Cable Company has, in preventing its being carried out.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I do not think it would be safe to accept the "Standard" or any other newspaper as accurately representing what may be the true position of this question. One thing I may assure the hon. gentleman and that is that up to a very recent date the Imperial authorities objected to bringing down any further information, and I am justified in saying, in obedience to that intimation, nothing further has been brought down. As to the question itself, no doubt the hon. leader of the Opposition and my hon. friend who has brought this matter under the consideration of the House, are quite justified in saying that this is a very important enterprise, and under certain possible conditions it would probably be extremely desirable that the several parties concerned should take steps to bring it about. But as regards the people of Canada at large, with whom we are most concerned, while I am not disposed to say it is of no great consequence to them, I am disposed to say this, that of the three principal parties concerned, they are, in my judgment, the least directly concerned. I think the great Australasian group beyond question are the most interested, and next to them, having regard to their enormous interests in the Pacific Ocean at large and in Australasia in particular, I think the Imperial authorities are most interested; and while not disposed to deny that Canada has a distinct and material interest in promoting trade and commerce with the Australian colonies, I think I am justified in saying that of the three parties we are the least interested, from a commercial point of view, at all events. Under these circumstances, and bearing in mind that Canada, in my judgment, has been called upon to contribute enormously in proportion to her resources to the building of a trans-continental railway across this continent, in regard to which I have always held the British Government ought to have contributed, and I think the hon. gentleman opposite, if I am not mistaken, was very much of the same opinion—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It is no particular secret now that if we had been a little less precipitate in making an agreement for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway some thirty years ago, the British Government would have been compelled to have assisted largely in its construction. However, the whole burden fell on Canada. Canada, in carrying that out, in my judgment, rendered great service to the Empire, which has not been adequately acknowledged up to the present time, at all events, by the British Government. Under these circumstances, while I would not be disposed to refuse to take a reasonable share in this cable enterprise, I consider Canada should not to be called upon to bear too large a proportion; and that without entering into any very minute discussion to-night on the subject of the proposed cost and of the proposed revenue which may be obtained from various sources, we in this Dominion are justified in saying both to the Australasian group and to Great Britain that after all we should not be called on to contribute to it more than in accordance with our interest. Up to the present time the Government have not found it possible to come to an exact understanding with the other parties to the enterprise, although they have not abandoned the hope that negotiations may yet be carried out to a successful issue. I am not at the present time going to enter into any details about these negotiations, which would rather injure than promote the cause; but of two things the hon. gentlemen opposite may rest assured: first, that we shall not lose sight of it; and second, that we shall feel it our duty to see that Canada is not called upon to bear more than her proper proportion of the cost. It may prove, and I hope it will prove, when this matter is thoroughly brought before the Australian colonies, and the proposal is placed before the people at home, that the expectations formed by the gentlemen promoting this scheme are correct, there is reasonable hope that advances will speedily be made which will bring about the realization of the hon. gentleman's desire. Up to the present moment, although these things are in the air, they are not fully crystallized, I am not in a position to come down to the House with any definite proposition on the subject. Moreover, though Canada is a country of great potential resources; the Dominion and this Government have undertaken a great many expensive operations up to the present moment, and our resources at this time, as we shall be reminded by speeches from hon. gentlemen opposite later on, are very fully engaged. I must say that we should be very careful in regard to entering into any immediate liability, although we may believe there is a reasonable good chance of being recouped within a moderate space of time. I do not want to deter any hon. gentleman who has taken an interest in the subject from giving the House and the Government the benefit of his views. Anything the hon. leader of the Opposition or his friends or our friends may choose to say will be carefully considered by the Government and receive due attention at their hands. We are not, however, in a position to bring down at this moment any suggestion as to the proportion of the enterprise we should undertake, and I hardly think it would be profitable to those who desire to promote this enterprise to enter into any discussion of that phase of the question. As to the general benefit that may follow, I do not dispute it. The only point I make is, that while it may be of interest to Canada, it is of very much more interest to the Australian group, whose inhabitants are wealthy people, quite as wealthy, and perhaps more so, than are Canadians as yet; and to the people of Great Britain, whose interest would be very largely served by having a second line of cable through British territory which would be practically inaccessible to any attempts that may be made by any foe at any time to interrupt communication.

Mr. McNEILL. I do not purpose to detain the House in reference to this matter, but I would like to call the attention of the hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) to one fact in connection with the subject which he admits is one of very great importance, and that is, that the emissaries of the Eastern Extension Telegraph Company are at present hard at work in Australia doing all they can to induce the Australian colonies to give up their intention of supporting this project, so that delay now will be exceedingly dangerous. I would also call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that the present time seems to be singularly appropriate for urging this question upon the attention of the Imperial authorities. When every one must be alive to the enormous importance of telegraphic communication from one point of the Empire to the other, I should imagine that this was a time, if ever, when an effort should be made to bring this question home with the greatest possible force to the Imperial Government. I find that in a memorandum which was recently presented to the Imperial House of Commons by the Colonial Secretary, the Colonial Secretary said, that the Imperial authorities were ready to co-operate; willing to co-operate, but that they would not take the initiative, as the initiative should come from the colonies interested. If that initiative is not taken and if this matter is allowed to drift, the result might be that this hostile cable company may succeed in blocking this very important Imperial scheme altogether. I very much regret that there should have been the delay which has taken place in regard to it. I think it is only too true what was said by the "Standard" in reference to the action taken by our own Prime Minister in England, because I find that in a letter, a copy of which was placed on the Table of the House last night, addressed by the Prime Minister of Queensland to Sir Sandford Fleming, this sentence occurs:

The matter was, as you are aware, discussed at the conference between the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for the Colonies and the Premiers of the self-governing colonies held in London last year, and it was with some surprise that I heard Sir Wilfrid Laurier announce during the course that the proceedings that his Government was not yet prepared to give practical effect, so far as the Dominion of Canada was concerned, to the proposal that the colonies interested should guarantee their shares of the cost of the construction of the cable.

It would seem, therefore, that the information possessed by the "Standard" is correct, and that really Sir Wilfrid Laurier's course in London last year had very much to do with the blocking of this most important Imperial work. It is very unfortunate that that should have been the case. From the best information that we can obtain, from the opinion of the Right Hon. Mr. Chamberlain himself, and from the opinion of many other experts, it would seem that this great Imperial work will not cost the people of Canada one cent; that it will not in any way increase the burdens of the people of Canada; that it will be a self-sustaining concern from the very beginning and that all the Government of Canada will be asked to do will be to give a guarantee. No one has at all ventured to dispute that fact. Under those circumstances I do think that it is unfortunate that there should be any appearance of sticking for the exact proportion which may be guaranteed by Canada, by Australasia, and by the mother country. I believe that the benefit to Canada of the Pacific Cable would be enormous, both commercially and as a matter of safety for the whole community. No portion of this cable will be laid upon foreign soil, and it will have this other great element of safety connected with it, that it will be a deep sea cable, a cable that it will be exceedingly difficult for any hostile power to reach and interfere with. In that respect it would be very different from the cables proposed to be laid by the Eastern Extension Company, which will be cables laid in shallow waters, and which might be readily interfered with. If through any untoward circumstances the people of this country should be deprived of the advantage which the construction of this cable would bring to them, it would be a very great pity indeed. I would venture to urge upon the Government in the strongest way possible that they should do all that they can do to expedite the negotiations, whatever they may be, that are being carried on at the present time.

Mr. WALLACE. I regret very much that the Government have not a more satisfactory statement to make with regard to this cable. Recent events have made it most imperative that some action should be taken in this regard. I have here a letter written by Mr. Parkin, Principal of Upper Canada College, than whom I think no one is more capable of giving an intelligent opinion upon the importance of this cable, both from a Canadian point of view and from the standpoint of a great national British work. Mr. Parkin's letter, which I will take the liberty of reading to the House, is as follows:—

NOW FOR THE PACIFIC CABLE.

An Object Lesson which Establishes its Utility and its Political Urgency.

Editor World:—The events of the last few days have brought out with startling vividness some truths which a few thinkers have with pain and difficulty been trying to impress upon our British world of late years. These lessons are now being written in letters of flame on men's minds. The importance of coaling stations, the need of instant communication with every part of the world, the overwhelming weight of naval defence energy, the amazing significance of sea power, are things which are now in every man's thoughts. Are we British people going to learn, and learn effectively, one great lesson which they teach? Will the events of the past week at last make us realize the immediate necessity for constructing the Pacific Cable?

It seems to me that Canada is the country which should move in the matter, and move at once. I believe that the whole thing can be done, so to speak, with the turn of a finger. A joint resolution by both Houses of the Canadian Parliament, addressed to the Queen or to the Colonial Secretary, asking that a Royal Commission should at once be appointed, with full powers to arrange for the construction and operation of a cable from Canada to Australia, and to assign the fair proportion of cost to be borne by the different parts of the Empire, would almost compel action in the matter. Canada's guarantees for the initial cost tacked to the resolution would make it immediately effective. Such a guarantee can be given without any risk. Sir Sandford Fleming has proved over and over again that the cable must necessarily pay for itself from the start. We do not contribute to the Imperial army or navy, which protects us, but we can at least show our national pluck and patriotism in a peaceful enterprise like this.

The proposal is made in no jingo spirit. To quote the words used by the American admiral to Mr. Goschen, as they together viewed, last summer, the 30-mile line of British battleships drawn up at Spithead: "This makes for peace." The mere idea of the whole might of the British navy, its North Pacific squadron, its China squadron, its Australian squadron, its West African and East African squadrons, to say nothing of the Channel and Mediterranean fleets, or of the flying squadrons, which we now know can be sent to sea inside of forty-eight hours, launched from every quarter of the globe under the impulse of one will and one national purpose against an enemy, presents, in the light of recent events, a picture of prodigious and irresistible power, which, more than anything else, will make nations disposed to trouble us shrink from war. The comparative paralysis which would fall upon this gigantic machinery if the power of concerted action were removed, as it is likely to be without a Pacific Cable, cannot be contemplated with equanimity by a nation which has such vast industrial and commercial interests at stake as have our British people. A single battleship let loose on one of our great cities in any corner of the world would in one hour do more damage than would cover the cost of three such cables. If we have men at Ottawa who know how "to take occasion by the hand," now is the opportunity. Not a moment should be lost, for we know how easily the destructive forces of the world may be let loose. British people hold a position in the world where they must do something more than hope for peace; they must, if possible, command it. This is a time when every link of the Empire should be firmly welded, and Canada has the opportunity of welding one of the most important. I am satisfied that the Government at Ottawa would be heartily supported by men of all parties if they boldly and immediately dealt with the question.

GEO. R. PARKIN.

I think that is a pretty good argument in favour of immediate action without requiring any further remarks from myself.

THE AUDITOR GENERAL.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I want, late as the hour is—

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has already spoken.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I propose to move a resolution.

Mr. SPEAKER. As the hon. gentleman has spoken on the motion before the Chair, to enable him again to speak, an amendment would have to be moved by another hon. member.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the motion is put, I desire to move the motion which my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition proposed to move, in this sense:

That all the words after the word "That" be left out and the following added instead thereof:—"in the opinion of this House the Auditor General as a functionary of the House of Commons charged with the duties of control over the application of the public moneys by the executive Government is entitled to great latitude in reporting his opinions to Parliament, and that he should be encouraged, in the public interest, to explain, in detail, every particular connected with the appropriation of the public grants upon which he may think it desirable that Parliament should have further information."

I do not imagine that there will be any opposition to the passage of this resolution; but it does seem necessary, in the light of certain events that have taken place, to have the affirmation put upon the records of the House. It is not within our right to take notice of what has transpired in a committee; but we have seen from the public press that certain strictures were passed upon the Auditor General during the proceedings of a committee of this House which rather led to the idea that possibly the Auditor General's freedom, which he has hitherto exercised, in the criticism of public accounts and expenditures, it was in contemplation to narrow and restrict to a certain extent. I have had, as Finance Minister and a member of the late Government, a great deal of intercourse with the Auditor General; and although at times some friction, such as will always take place between a parliamentary officer and the spending departments, took place in regard to various accounts from time to time, I can bear cheerful testimony, as I have always done, to the fairness and honest endeavour of the Auditor General to perform his duties as a parliamentary officer without fear or favour or partiality. It would be a great mistake, I think, and one which Parliament could not overlook, if any attempt were made to restrict the freedom of the Auditor General in these respects. For my own part, rather than see that done, I would rather see greater facilities placed at his disposal for the most efficient investigation of every expenditure which is made—facilities which, I think, should be cheerfully placed at the hands of the Auditor General by every department; for every department is in the end most vitally interested in having the closest and deepest scrutiny of its expenditures detailed to this House and to the country. I do not propose to make a long speech upon what is a self-evident proposition. I place this motion before the House in order that my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition may have an opportunity of expressing his views more at length.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Speaker, I took an opportunity of placing this motion in the hands of the right hon. leader of the Government a short time ago. At that time it was not exactly convenient that it should be moved; and I therefore consented not to move it on that day, but to take a subsequent opportunity, on the motion to go into Supply, to move it. It is in virtue of that arrangement that I desire, before temporarily leaving the House, to say a few words on the subject; at this hour of the night they will be very few. I do not move this motion from a hostile point of view at all. A motion made on going into Supply is usually regarded to a certain extent as a vote of want of confidence, and is resisted by the Government; but that, as my hon. friends on the Treasury benches know, is by no means a necessary result. It is perfectly competent for the Government—and they very frequently do it—to accept a motion which is made on going into Supply, and when there is no other means, as at this period of the session there is no other means, of reaching the question. I hope and believe that this resolution will receive the unanimous support of the House—that hon. gentlemen opposite, who are more interested at this moment than we are, will avail themselves of the opportunity to have the increased protection which such a resolution as this will give to them. The House will remember that some time ago, after the leader of the Liberal Government, the Hon. Mr. Mackenzie, had some experience of the cares and responsibilities and difficulties of his position on the Treasury benches, he gave expression to a very plaintive appeal in a letter to one of his friends over his own signature, as to the position in which he found himself, and in case any hon. gentleman opposite has forgotten that appeal, I will read an extract from the letter written by the late Hon. Alexander Mackenzie on the 27th April, 1875:

I would like much to be relieved of the Public Works Department, but I cannot see my way to do that at present. It is a great spending department, and a possible great jobbing department, and a department that can make or ruin the Government at such a time as this. Nearly twenty-five millions are in the power of its head to spend in public works. Friends expect to be benefited by offices which they are unfit for, by contracts they are not entitled to, by advances not earned. I feel like the besieged, lying on my arms night and day. I have offended at least twenty parliamentary friends by my defence of the citadel. A weak Minister here would ruin the party in a month, and the country very soon.

Every hon. gentleman will know that, true to the principle which the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie announced in that letter, he brought forward a measure which he considered of great importance in the protection of the public revenues of this country. That was the establishment of the office of Auditor General. The Auditor General was not to be a Government officer but a parliamentary officer, placed by statute beyond and above the power of the Government, and only to be reached through Parliament itself. The hon. gentleman selected a gentleman to fill that position of great ability and high character, and, as I believe, of independence and integrity, to discharge the important functions of Auditor General of this country. Well, we were startled not long ago by reading in the press that a prominent gentleman connected with the Administration had stated that he intended to have a very sharp issue with that important parliamentary official, and that in fact the Government did not intend to submit to his exercise of the right of free criticism of their acts to the extent he had shown a disposition to do. That is a very alarming statement, taken in the light of the note I have just read from a gentleman who was charged with the duty of carrying on the Liberal Government of this country and with the serious responsibility of resisting their onslaughts of his supporters upon the public revenues and treasury of the country. It, therefore, becomes a matter, not only of importance to Parliament and the country but of the first significance to the Government themselves. that that official, thus clothed by Parliament with the power to protect the revenue of the country, should have his hands strengthened instead of weakened, and instead of being terrorized by the determination of the Government to resist his efforts to discharge his duty in a thoroughly independent manner, he should be made feel that he has the confidence of Parliament, and that, independent of party, we are determined to strengthen his hands in the discharge of his duties.

A rumour still more startling than that to which I have just referred has been passing about the lobbies of this House and received a good deal of prominence in the last few days. It is that a prominent member of the Administration had absolutely declared that he did not intend, as the head of a great spending department in this country, to be restrained by the Department of Justice; that although he might ask the opinion of the Department of Justice on questions of law bearing upon the expenditure of public money and questions of that kind, he practically declared that he only intended to use the Department of Justice as a buffer to protect the Government rather than direct and control them in the expenditure of public money. In that state of things, we can only say that it becomes doubly necessary that gentlemen on both sides should combine to strengthen the hands of the officer who was created for the express purpose of preventing even the Government from taking any undue liberty with the control and administration of public funds. I do not see why this resolution should not receive the unanimous support of both sides, because it is simply a declaration of facts that will have the result of effectively strengthening the hands of an important public officer, who has been clothed with power for the express purpose of protecting the public interests of Canada.

THE MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I am sure it is a great pleasure to me, and I am certain that it would have been a great pleasure to my lamented friend, Mr. Mackenzie, could he have witnessed it, to have so ample and satisfactory a testimony to the wisdom of our determination to appoint an Auditor General as is now given by hon. gentlemen opposite. I may take some little credit, too, for I believe it fell to my lot to introduce the Audit Act and appoint the Auditor General in the first instance, I would just caution my hon. friend opposite not to put too great credence on the rumours he hears about the corridors, especially when, as in this case, they have no doubt been started by friends of his own who are not all anxious to promote harmony among the members of the Government. I have not heard any hon. gentleman presiding over a great spending department express any determination to ignore the Department of Justice—very much the contrary. Nor do I think he is correct in stating, as far as I know, that any member of this Government has announced his intention of making things unpleasant for the Auditor General. Of course the Auditor General may on occasion come into collision with members of the Government, or rather perhaps I should say, more correctly, with officers of their departments, with respect to the extent or amount of information which he thinks it is necessary for him to obtain. My own relations with Mr. McDougall have always been of a most pleasant character. Besides a long and intimate friendship with him, I believe him to have always been a very excellent officer. I think he has discharged his duties with perfect impartiality. He has been perhaps a little unpleasant to hon. gentlemen opposite when on this side, by checking a good many of their extravagances, and it may be that occasionally he has come into collision with some officers of our various departments by reason of their not giving him all the information he required. But when the hon. gentleman asks us, particularly after indulging in the allusions he has made, to accept a motion of this kind, I think he is asking a little too much. My recollection of parliamentary affairs in the Dominion of Canada is quite as long as the hon. gentleman's, and I do not think he has exhibited his usual accuracy of statement when he declared to the House that he has found motions of this kind very frequently accepted. I remember pressing one or two motions from that side, which, under peculiar circumstances, were accepted, but it was not very frequently that such a thing occurred. It was, I think, to the best of my recollection, about twice in eighteen years; and perhaps if the hon. gentleman—as I hope he will—will continue in the enjoyment of health and vigour and remain in his present position for a similar term of years, we may hope to accept a couple of motions from him in good time. There is, in my judgment, a right and a wrong way of dealing with this matter.

I do not think, Sir, that we shall help the Auditor General materially; I do not think we shall in any way strengthen his hands, by passing a vague motion such as the hon. gentleman has proposed. So far as I am aware, the Audit Act, as it stands upon the Statute-book, gives to the Auditor General all the power that he can require. But if it be demonstrated that in any respect that Act is lacking and that the Auditor General does not, under it, obtain or have the right to obtain all the information that is necessary to discharge his duties, then I can assure hon. gentlemen opposite that if they will suggest an amendment to that Audit Act in a proper way and at a proper time, we will be very happy to consider it. I am of the same opinion that was entertained, I believe, by the hon. gentleman's colleagues and former Premiers of this Dominion, that the Auditor General is a very valuable functionary to the Government of the day, in this respect, that he may prevent and very often does prevent them from committing irregularities that might prove to the detriment of the public service; and though his extra punctiliousness, as some may regard it may cause delay, and may cause inconvenience to some, I am quite at one with the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) in thinking that it is better that there should be some delay and some inconvenience, from time to time, than that there should be any risk of the public money being improperly expended. So far, I am at one with the hon. gentleman. I am also at one with him in the tribute he has paid to the Auditor General himself. I am further at one with him in saying that if it can be established that the present Audit Act does not give him sufficient power to investigate matters properly and obtain proper vouchers, we will be ready to consider that and to accept proper amendments from whatever side of the House they may come. But that at least ought to be shown, and I cannot, for my part, say that I think the hon. gentleman ought to press us to adopt this amendment now, nor can I offer him any hope that it will be accepted as it stands.

DISMISSALS IN BELLEVILLE POST OFFICE.

Mr. CORBY. I must apologize to hon. members for rising at this late hour of the evening to bring before the House the subject of the dismissal of officials of the Belleville post office, but I consider that I should not be doing my duty as the representative of West Hastings did I not strongly protest against the high-handed measures taken by the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) in relation to these officers. I assure the House that in the criticism I shall pass on the Postmaster General, I will speak as a business man and not as a politician. I think I can say to this House that before I get through I shall show that not only have these officials been badly treated, but a slur has been cast on the beautiful city of Belleville by reducing the status of the office from that of a city to that of a town office. The plea of the Postmaster General is economy; but had he wished to economize he should have begun in the city of Ottawa and in his own department. Let me refer to just two or three cases of superannuation he has made in a very short time, in which he could have saved more than the extra wages formerly paid to the officials in the city of Belleville. First, I wish to refer to the superannuation of one of the very best men that ever held a position in the Post Office Department, Colonel White. Why, Mr. Speaker, it is ridiculous to superannuate one of the very best men in the department, giving him a superannuation allowance of $2,240. The Postmaster General also superannuated Mr. Griffin, a gentleman well qualified in every way to fill the position he held and to perform the duties expected of him. This gentleman's superannuation allowance is $2,239. The Postmaster General also superannuated Mr. Shannon at $680. Then he writes up to the city of Belleville and tells us he is going to save $4,500. And how does he do it? He discharges the full staff of officials, and reinstates only one man at an increase of salary—the deputy postmaster general, a gentleman well qualified for the position, and a credit to the office. He dismisses the postmaster, who was appointed about three years ago, or about a year before this Government took office, a gentleman well qualified for a position and one against whom they had no cause of complaint—and the right hon. leader of the Government told this House that no man should be dismissed without cause. Now, Mr. Speaker, I claim that this postmaster and these other officials were dismissed without cause. I know that the Postmaster General, in replying, will state that he has cut down the expense, but he has done so by hiring these men back at a paltry sum of $400 each. I will go over the officials in the Belleville post office. First, take Mr. Duncan, assistant postmaster, 37 years of age and with fifteen and a half years' of service to his credit; his salary being $1,350.

They superannuated him and gave him $400 a year, then they turn round and make him acting postmaster at a salary of $1,600. The next man on the list is Mr. Alfred Gillen, a young man that passed a second-class clerk's examination, age 39, served 15 years and 3 months, worked up to a salary of $1,200. The Postmaster General superannuated him at $360 a year, then turns round and engages him at a paltry salary of $400. Now, Mr. Speaker, it will lower the efficiency of the staff of any office to make such reductions. I claim that a man holding an honourable position in a post office is entitled to more wages than a labouring man. A labouring man to-day can earn his $390 a year, and here the hon. gentleman is putting back those officials to the paltry salary of $400. I am willing to back up the Postmaster General in trying to reduce the expenses, but I say he should do it in a legitimate way. I had a conversation with the Postmaster General two years ago about the time he took charge of his department. He told me then he intended to run his department on purely business principles, and I assure you I was surprised and disappointed when I found that the first move he made was a political one. I claim it was a political move, and I claim that the hungry Reform politicians in the city of Belleville forced his hand to dismiss these men and put them back at a smaller salary, thinking they would throw up their positions, and that they would get their places, and that one of their friends would get the postmastership at $1,800 a year. I can assure the Postmaster General that as long as I have the pleasure of sitting in this House, whenever he does that, he may expect to hear from me. Now, I will go on with these officials. Here is a young man, Mr. Embury, a third-class clerk, 41 years of age, 13 years in the Belleville post office, under the Civil Service Act. He had worked up to $800, and the Postmaster General superannuates him at $204.52. Mr. Embury, I may say, put in seven years in the post office previous to the thirteen years, so that after having been there twenty years, they dismissed him and threw him on the world with a family to take care of. The Postmaster General may say that he wanted to economize. If he wanted to economize, why did he not give this man a chance to get back under the salary of $400 offered? He allowed some of them to go back, and why did he dismiss this young man and put in his place the daughter of the ex-president of the Reform Association? I have nothing to say against the young lady in any way. He also engaged Mr. Taylor, son of an English Radical, a man who has a daughter who holds a position now in the Brockville asylum. The next on the list is W. B. Walker, a third-class clerk, 34 years of age, served 13 years and 9 months, worked up to $800, was superannuated at $208 and dismissed. He is the support of an aged father and mother, who have no other support outside of a married son. Next case is Miss J. M. Newbury, third-class clerk, aged 43, served 13 years, worked up to $800, and superannuated at $207. She is the only support of a widowed mother. Now, take Mr. Lynch, third-class clerk, 30 years of age, served 12 years, worked up to $800, he is superannuated at $186. Mr. Reeves, third-class clerk, 28 years of age, served 8 years, worked up to $600. He gets a gratuity of $304. Now, I want to say with reference to Mr. J. H. Reeves that to prove that the Government are not paying these officials what they are entitled to, I got that gentleman a position through the hon. member for South Grenville (Mr. Reid) in the Edwardsburg Starch Works, three weeks ago, at a salary of $720. The Government were paying him $400. He gets $800 the second year, and $1,000 the third year. I claim that the Government have a right to pay men what they are worth, and I claim that if that young man is worth $720 to the Edwardsburg Starch Company, he is worth that money to the Belleville post office. I say that the Government have no right to dismiss a man because they have him in a tight place, hire him over, and pay him only $400, after serving the number of years they have served. Take Miss Kennedy, 34 years of age, served 4 years and a half, worked up to $520, gets a gratuity of $187, and she is put back at $400. B. L. Hargrave, third-class clerk, served 4 years and a half, at a salary of $520, and is dismissed. He has gone to the States to earn a living. The last is Mr. John Taylor, postmaster, who served two years. Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to read the letter sent dismissing the postmaster. It is dated October 1st, at the Post Office Department :

Sir,—With reference to the departmental letter of the 25th ultimo, informing you that by Order in Council of the 22nd ultimo, the system obtaining in connection with the staff of the Belleville post office, which was on a city basis, yourself and your clerks being under the provisions of the Civil Service Superannuation Acts, was to be discontinued from the 1st October, 1897, I am directed to inform you that you have been retired from the service on and from that date.

I am to express the Postmaster General's regret that although he recommended to Council the granting of a gratuity in your case, it was not allowed under the provisions of the Civil Service Superannuation Act, as you were upwards of forty-five years of age at the time of your appointment and did not contribute to the Superannuation Fund.

(Sgd.) Secretary.

I claim that is pretty short notice for a man against whom the Government have not the scratch of a pen. It is hard treatment all through, and I would not be doing my duty as the representative of that city if I did not stand up here and protest against the manner in which the city of Belleville has been treated. The Postmaster General received letters from the mayor and corporation, and also from the president of the board of trade, protesting against the high-handed action taken by the hon. gentleman. If it was done from motives of economy, why single out the Belleville post office? Why not take other offices which have less claim to consideration. The Minister has no right to single out Belleville because Belleville happens to be represented by a Conservative, and put it back to where it was a great many years ago. I wish to give some figures from various post offices, to show that the expenses of a large number of them are double those of the city of Belleville in proportion of population and receipts. Take, first, the town of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, Charlottetown, the expenses of that office amount to $16,278, or 114 per cent of the receipts. The expenses of running the Belleville post office are 54 per cent of the receipts. Why did not the Postmaster General put back the office of Charlottetown the same as he did the Belleville office? Take, for instance, Kingston, costing 80 per cent of the receipts, Hamilton, 67 per cent; Ottawa, 101 per cent—though I do not suppose that Ottawa is a fair criterion—Windsor, 70 per cent; Quebec, 96 per cent; Sherbrooke, 38 per cent; St. John, 75 per cent; Victoria, 59 per cent. I claim the Postmaster General has no right to select one post office like Belleville and make changes there alone. The other places are represented by Liberals. If economy has to be practiced, salaries should be cut down at different points. I claim the Postmaster did not make a fair comparison as regards Belleville. The action of the hon. gentleman is condemned by the best thinking Reformers in West Hastings; it is condemned by Mr. Ritchie, my opponent at the last general elections. I am not saying that the parties who urged this change on the Postmaster General were office-seekers, but they were not the best-thinking Reformers in the riding. I will now read a few extracts from the city papers in order to show the stand they have taken in regard to this action by the Postmaster General

The changes made in the post office status and staff, and particularly the dismissal of Miss Newbery and Mr. Walker, two of the most efficient members of the staff, who were willing to continue at the reduced salaries, have aroused an almost universal outburst of condemnation in Belleville.

To the credit of the Liberals be it said, the great majority of those who have spoken on the subject are just as emphatic in condemnation of the affair as are the Conservatives.

One well-known Liberal said that it was an outrage. No new and untrained clerks ought to have been put in. The party would be seriously injured not only in Dominion, but in provincial politics in this district. Henceforward he would pay but little attention to politics and devote himself to his business.

Another Liberal, who for forty years has voted for and enthusiastically supported his party, said that he would never cast another Grit vote.

Such are fair samples of the expressions heard on all hands.

The question which chiefly agitates the public mind is as to where rests the responsibility for the dismissals.

Certain Liberals state that the executive of their association were authorized from headquarters to choose two persons for appointment as clerks, but that they did not agree as to the new appointees; also that all the other appointments rested with Mr. Duncan.

The daughter of a widow, who is her mother's sole support, and was one of the most efficient clerks, dismissed; another highly capable clerk, the chief support of a family, retired; a young woman, without training in post office work and of slight physique, daughter of one of the bosses of the Grit machine, and the son of another of the bosses, appointed. These are, in brief, the facts in connection with the dismissals from the post office made on the first of October that stand out most conspicuously as an outrage. Partisanship and greed are so manifestly exhibited in the transaction that the feelings of the people of the city have been stirred as they never were before. The Government that permits such wantonness and the political machine by whose behest so heartless a proceeding is carried out, are regarded with something akin to contempt. Other features of the action of Postmaster General Mulock will be referred to in a subsequent issue.

I claim that it is not right to place the responsibility on Mr. Duncan, who is acting postmaster to-day, for the discharge of officials. I am satisfied that he was authorized by the Reform association or others to send names to Ottawa. He dare not open his mouth in regard to this transaction and give information in regard to it. I have not asked him for any information, but I do not think it is on his responsibility that these officers were dismissed. I feel I am justified in criticising the Postmaster General for his action against Belleville in removing certain officers and allowing members of the civil service elsewhere to remain in their positions. If he had taken all the officers in the service and made reductions, I would not have found fault with his action. I hold that the Government have no right to hire officials and pay them less than they are really worth, and less than they can afford to work for. There is great responsibility devolving on post office clerks who have charge of the registered letter department and savings bank department, and they should obtain higher salaries than labouring men. At least the Government should pay a fair salary for a reasonable day's work. I secured a position for Mr. Reeves, who instead of receiving $400, will be paid $720 and $800, and has a promise of $1,000 during the next two years. I felt it my duty to bring this matter before the House, for this post office has not been treated in a proper manner, the position of the office has been lowered, and in doing so the Government have passed a reflection on our beautiful city. I can tell the Postmaster General that the people will resent this treatment. Whether I am a candidate or not at the next elections, and I hope I will not be, the constituency will return a Conservative owing to the way it has been treated in this matter. I do not blame the First Minister, who evidently wants to do what is fair and just, and I am satisfied he would never have given his sanction to the wholesale dismissal of officers. At each election I worked for my party, and have always fought the Reform party, and expect to do so in future; I do not propose to surrender any principles to the present Government. If these public officials do not receive better salaries they cannot live. The late Mr. Mitchem was postmaster for about fifty years, and during his occupancy of the office there was never a registered letter or an ordinary letter lost. I never interfered with that gentleman, who was 85 years old when he was superannuated. He came to me two or three times and asked to be superannuated, and at length I agreed to have it done, and nominated John Taylor, who is well qualified and held in high esteem and remained the officer for two years, and then hon. gentlemen came into power and dismissed him. This is a bad system, and I do not advocate it and never did. I do not believe in the system to the victors belong the spoils.

The Postmaster General and his friends can make up their mind about one thing. It is a long lane that has no turn, and you can make up your mind that if there are any dismissals in my constituency, and if I am a member of this House and the Conservative Government gets back to power, then every man who is put in the position of a dismissed man without cause, will have to go, or I will not support the Government of the day. I intended, Sir, to give more facts and figures to the House, but I do not suppose it would make my case any better, and in view of the early hour of the morning I shall rest content with what I have said.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Corby) suggests that perhaps the action of the Government for which I am responsible, though it was governmental action, was directed by other than considerations for the public interest. The hon. gentleman seemed to suggest that it was perhaps attributable to the fact that West Hastings sent a Conservative to this House. Whether my statement be accepted as correct or otherwise, I may say that the change in the Belleville post office was made purely for the reasons set forth in the Order in Council and not because of any outside considerations. The bare facts will perhaps best explain the situation, and these facts I will give the House. In 1882 the Belleville post office was on a commission basis the same as the majority of post offices throughout the country. The Postmaster was paid a regulation allowance on the same scale as is in force for thousands of offices throughout Canada, and at that time the revenue of the Belleville office was $15,580, and the allowance for expenses of running the office $3,770. That system had been in force from the establishment of the office up to 1882, and it worked well. I do not know whether it was the present member for West Hastings or his predecessor, or what influences were brought to work; but in 1882, the then Government made the mistake of placing the Belleville post office upon a city basis. When the change in that post office was made by me the revenue had increased from $15,580 in 1882 to $16,586, and if it had been continued under the old system it would have cost the country $3,907 to administer. There was no complaint against the old system, and I am not aware of any petition having been presented, asking for the change in the public interest, but it is probable that a number of persons anxious to obtain more lucrative positions succeeded in getting the change made and the country put to the useless expense which I tried to remedy by the Order in Council last year.

Mr. HUGHES. What was the expense of the post office then?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If the system previous to 1882 had been continued the cost of the post office, when I made the change, would have been $3,907, but in consequence of the extravagant system brought into force in 1882 the expense of the office had become $9,079 at the time I made the change. That was an unjustifiable expense.

Mr. HUGHES. What is the present cost of the office ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend (Mr. Corby) correctly states that in order to bring into force the new system it was necessary to deal with the staff according to the Act. Some of them had been recent appointees and they were retired from the service by the payment of gratuities which amounted to $553.59. Those who had been more than ten years in the service were entitled to pensions, and these pensions, omitting that of Mr. Duncan who does not draw his pension whilst retained in the office, amounts to $1,166.79. The reduction in expenses during the first year the change was in force amounted to $3,421; that is charging against the office the gratuities and the pensions and all the expenses of the office.

Mr. WILSON. What is the expense of the office now ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We save by the change at the present time $4,005 a year. At present it costs us about $3,907 or rather that is when the change was made, and I do not know if there has been any variation since. The cost is based upon a scale which depends upon the revenue of the office, and at the time the change was made the cost of administering the office, if we had no pensions to pay would have been $3,907, as against the former cost of over $9,000. The saving, even including the pensions, is $4,005 and the cost to-day is not one-half what it was under the old system. If we had not the pensions to pay the cost would have been $5,000 less. In other words, it is the difference between $3,900 the present cost and $9,000 the previous cost. These are the reasons for the change, Mr. Speaker. I do not know that at this late hour, anything can be gained by referring to the superannuation of Colonel White and of Mr. Shannon. I will be quite prepared to discuss those and other post office matters at the proper time, but I suppose the hon. gentleman (Mr. Corby) would prefer at this late hour that the discussion should be confined to the Belleville office.

Mr. HUGHES. Who is now the postmaster in Belleville ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Mr. Duncan is the postmaster or acting postmaster. Mr. Duncan was formerly the assistant postmaster. The postmaster was Mr. Taylor who was appointed in 1895, and I do not know that it was any hardship to Mr.

Mr. MULOCK.

Taylor to be retired from the office. I think Mr. Taylor was engaged in very large farming operations in the North-west. At all events, this change was not brought about for political reasons. It was not asked for by what the hon. gentleman describes as the hungry politicians of Belleville. If there was any feeling on the part of the people there, it was for the old system, partly out of consideration for the staff, and partly from pride in the town itself.

Mr. HUGHES. When the new postmaster is appointed, will that not bring the cost up nearly to the old figures ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No. Mr. Duncan was the assistant postmaster, and became entitled to a pension. My recollection is that his pension amounted to $400 or $500 a year; but I gave him the option of continuing as an under postmaster at Belleville, and so long as he continued in the office he would not draw the pension. I think the allowance paid to him as postmaster is something like $1,500 a year; my hon. friend says $1,600, and I suppose he has informed himself correctly as to the amount. However that may be, instead of proceeding politically, or, as the hon. gentleman suggests, in a malicious way towards those in office because of their politics, I think if he had informed himself of the facts, he would have given me credit for having at least had consideration for those in the office. He complains that a number of them were continued in office, although at reduced salaries. The greatest consideration which the conditions admitted was shown in the reduction of the staff. Mr. Duncan, like all others, was given a free hand as to whom he would retain or not retain; but it was in his instructions that he should appoint to the office no persons who were not agreeable to the representatives of the Liberal party in the city of Belleville. That and that only was the extent to which we interfered; but I think the Liberal party must have had a great deal of consideration for the staff, when my hon. friend tells me that nearly the whole of that staff has been continued in office, although at a reduced rate. If we had desired to proceed with political animus against the staff, I presume that instead of all but two being retained in the service, there would have been none retained. My hon. friend says that I should have proceeded to have applied this principle to Charlottetown and other places, and would have done so but that they were represented by Liberals. I would say that that circumstance had no force whatever with me in not proceeding to change the status of the offices of those cities. The city of Victoria, B.C., which he cites as one which ought to have been put on the same basis, is not represented here by Liberals, but by two Conservatives. My hon. friend says that the cost of maintaining the Charlottetown post office is very greatly in excess of the cost of maintaining the Belleville one. The expenses of the Charlottetown post office are not correctly set forth in the Public Accounts or in the Civil Service List which the hon. gentleman quotes from. Charlottetown is the capital of the Island of Prince Edward, and the postmaster, Mr. Brecken, is also inspector; the staff of the office also do the inspector's work for the whole Island, and the two services are charged in one account against the Charlottetown post office. Thus it appears that the expenses of the Charlottetown post office are greater in proportion than those in other cities. However, I do intend, if it will gratify my hon. friend, to make some changes in the Charlottetown post office with a view to economy. But I will say that it was easier to deal with the case of Belleville, because the staff have been a less time in office. If you analyse the terms of the officers in Windsor and Charlottetown, you will find that it would cost a great deal more to retire them than it would the Belleville staff. Nevertheless, a very considerable reduction was effected at Windsor; and perhaps, if the staff had been appointed as recently as the staff at Belleville, I might have dealt with it in the same way. Windsor stands in a different position from Belleville. It is on the international frontier, and it has a large amount of exchange work which in no way appears to affect the revenue. It is quite true, a protest was sent against this change by the Belleville Board of Trade and by others in Belleville. But the view I took of it was this, speaking now from the standpoint of the Board of Trade and the natural pride which my hon. friend and the Belleville people generally naturally take in the welfare of their city. I found a system in force in Belleville that was almost without precedent. With all respect to Belleville, I do not think any one would say that a great office like Hamilton stands on the same footing. The revenue of the Hamilton post office, speaking from memory, is $70,000 or $80,000 a year. It would be a very different matter to put an office of that kind on the same basis as that of Belleville which does perhaps not more than one-fifth the amount of business. So I might say with reference to the other cases which the hon. gentleman has cited. But taking the parallel cases to which he has referred, I will briefly refer to those figures. Here was Belleville, on a city basis, doing a business of less than $17,000 a year and costing $9,000 a year. At the same time, we have Woodstock post office, with a business of $15,000 odd and only costing the country $4,100. We have the city of St. Thomas post office, doing a business of $19,300, with the expenses $4,900.

Mr. INGRAM. I would like to state to the hon. gentleman that since the removal of one of the prominent insurance companies from there the revenue of the post office has not been quite so much. The revenue has been higher than $20,000.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Still, it was under the same system. These are the figures up to the 1st of July, 1897, shortly before the coming into effect of this change. St. Catharines, revenue, $16,000; expenses, $3,500; Peterborough, revenue, $18,800; expenses, $4,500; Guelph, $20,600 revenue; expenses, $5,000; Chatham, revenue over $15,000; expenses, $3,600; Brockville, revenue, $24,500, and expenses, $4,400; Brantford, revenue, $25,600, and expenses, $4,900. Compare that with Belleville, whose revenue was $16,000 and expenditure $9,000, and it will be seen at once that we had to bring Belleville to the same basis as the others. I do not see that there is any indignity to Belleville in putting it in the same category with Brantford and Woodstock, St. Thomas and Guelph and other thriving and promising cities in Ontario. We must remember that it is not Belleville which pays this expense. If it were, then we might leave that matter in the hands of the people of Belleville, but my hon. friends know very well that if this expenditure were charged to the people of Belleville, if they themselves had to pay it, and he were running for the mayoralty, he would stand very little chance of being elected on a policy continuing a system that costs $9,000, instead of replacing it by one which would only cost $4,000.

Mr. CORBY. Why single out Belleville, and not take Kingston alongside of it?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman complains that the change was a slur on Belleville in the first place, and then that Belleville was discriminated against in not being given the same treatment as was meted out to other places. I am dealing with the first charge, and I say that this cannot be considered a slur on Belleville, but that, on the contrary, it is a thing which the people would have voted for themselves. My hon. friend asks why we did not follow the same course in Kingston. Well, Kingston has been on the present basis a great many years, and there is a large staff there that have been in office many years, and to superannuate them would have cost a very much larger sum in proportion to the number employed, than did the superannuation of the Belleville people. Moreover, my hon. friend will admit that Kingston is very considerably larger than Belleville, and the business done there is very much larger. My hon. friend complained of the cost of running the Kingston post office.

Mr. CORBY. I was showing the comparison between Belleville and Kingston offices—that is the percentage cost of running the offices.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman cannot have a low percentage and high salaries. He complains that the Belleville salaries are too light, but if he wants high salaries, he must have higher receipts.

Mr. CORBY. You are paying officers in Kingston more than in Belleville. You reduced the officers in Belleville to $400 a year.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I know nothing whatever as to the remuneration of the staff at Belleville.

Mr. CORBY. Do I understand the Postmaster General to say that he did not fix the salaries, but left it to the postmaster to give these men just $400 a year?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My recollection is that a certain sum was set apart for the maintenance of the Belleville post-office, based upon the business of the office, and I think that that was left to be apportioned amongst the staff as the Postmaster might in his own judgment determine. That is the practice, although a sort of middle course has grown up in the country lately. For example, in St. Thomas the remuneration of the staff is fixed, but at Belleville it is limited by the appropriation for the maintenance of the office. The same system, I think, applies in Peterborough and in Brockville. It may be that that system was the one applied to Belleville, but on that point I speak with hesitation. All I do say is that a certain appropriation of revenue was assigned for the maintenance of the Belleville post office, and I think that the apportioning of it amongst the staff was referred to the postmaster himself. As to the retention of the acting postmaster, Mr. Duncan, he is a Conservative, and if I were anxious to get rid of all Conservatives, I had an excellent opportunity of relieving the service of him as well, and my hon. friend's complaint has opened that question again. I did what the interest of the country demanded, and what in no way injured the efficiency of the post office in Belleville.

Mr. HUGHES. I would like to ask what the hon. gentleman meant by his last remark, that this opened up the question again. I do not think it is decent for the hon. gentleman to make any reference to Mr. Duncan, as though he were a school boy who happened to have a friend in the House and whom the hon. gentleman consequently intended to punish. If he is going to throw down the gauntlet, members on this side will take it up and make the proceedings very warm for the hon. gentleman. If I were to follow his example and descend to the sort of thing that he resorts to, I might point out that all this interference of his in the post offices did not take place until after the protests in North Simcoe and North Ontario had been dropped.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know what the hon. gentleman means. I do not care about indulging in insinuations, and if the hon. gentleman has anything to say against me let him make the statement here on the floor of Parliament. He asked me to say what I meant by my reference to Mr. Duncan. I mean just what I said. The hon. member for West Hastings suggests that the changes I made in Belleville were made on political considerations. I think I have shown that that is not the case. And in proof of it, I mention the fact that a very large portion of the staff is still on duty there, although in different positions and under different circumstances.

Mr. CORBY. Some of them at about 70 per cent reduction.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Still, I suppose there are plenty of Liberals who would like to have these positions even at these rates. When, at all events, I have not interfered to deprive these people of employment, and, in one case have actually retained in the lucrative office of acting postmaster, the former officer, the assistant postmaster, and when we find that nearly the whole staff, as I understand the hon. gentleman is still in office—

Mr. CORBY. I say you should have taken all the staff back that wanted to come.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am dealing with the charge that the hon. gentleman made. If the hon. gentleman or any one else is not prepared to see fair dealing when it is done, he simply wants a different kind of treatment. If he objects to our retaining in office these employees, and if he desires that what he says shall have weight—

Mr. CORBY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) is making threats, he will not punish me, but innocent people.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am making no reference whatever and have no reference to the hon. gentleman. I tried to have fair treatment dealt out to that staff, and if the hon. gentleman, voicing public opinion, says that the retention of the staff in office was not fair, then I have only one course open.

Mr. CORBY. I did not say so.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman must give me credit for fair dealing, or I must have a free hand. I will stand here and hear the hon. gentleman declare that I acted from political considerations in making these changes, and, at the same time, tell me that these people are in office to-day. He must not blow hot and cold at the same time.

Mr. CORBY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) is making threats. He will not punish me but innocent people. He occupies a high position, and I think he ought to be above anything of that sort. I think he is belittling himself by making any such statement as he has made.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I find it is impossible by any method to satisfy the hon. gentleman. I have allowed these men to be retained in office. Not only that, but I did what I could, in a friendly way, with the acting postmaster, to see that the best consideration was given them. If I had not been so moved, probably none of them would have been in office, not even the acting postmaster himself; and I regret to say that after I had tried to do this, instead of receiving some recognition, I only meet with criticism.

Mr. FOSTER. I should not be doing my duty, I think, did I not protest against the spirit shown by the Postmaster General and the words he has used. His case would have been very much better, I can inform him, not only in the opinion of this House, but in the opinion of those outside this House who will read this discussion, if he had sat down a little while before he finished. The hon. gentleman is Postmaster General—that is true. But he did not buy the office; it does not belong to him, he is there to act for the people. My hon. friend from West Hastings (Mr. Corby) is here in his capacity as a member of this House. He has a perfect right to ventilate any grievance that he feels.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not wish to interfere in the discussion, but the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has already spoken on the question.

Mr. FOSTER. Not on the main motion.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. On the motion before the Chair.

Mr. FOSTER. I will move the adjournment of the House.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman cannot speak to such a motion made by himself.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, I will take another opportunity.

Mr. INGRAM. I should like to draw the attention of the Postmaster General to the fact that one of the clerks in the St. Thomas office resigned some time ago, and, as they are short-handed in that office—in fact they always have been—and as the holiday season is coming on for the hard working employees I would like to know from the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) when he will have a man appointed to take the place of the officer who has resigned?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will take a note of the matter.

Mr. McMULLEN. I desire to say a word in connection with the changes that have taken place in the Belleville post office. I think these changes are in line with what the Postmaster General has done in other ways in endeavouring to reduce the expense of his department. I think that the hon.

gentleman deserves great credit for the effort he is making. He is evidently determined to handle his department in the interest of the country, and I hope that every hon. Minister will follow him in the efficient and economical management of his department. The people will be slow to condemn a change by which $5,000 a year is saved to the taxpayers of this country. We know that the Post Office Department has been a tax on the people to a very considerable amount year after year. We believed, at the time that this system was inaugurated in Belleville, that it was imprudent from a financial point of view. The city of Belleville is, no doubt, a very nice little town. We wish it every success, and when it reaches the status that entitles it to have its post office run as a city post office, with all the expense that is incurred in populous places, and with a good revenue, no doubt it will get every consideration. The very figures produced by my hon. friend from West Hastings (Mr. Corby) himself prove that it was improvident from a financial standpoint, to place Belleville post office on the basis of a city system. The hon. gentleman himself did not deny that the revenue does not come up to the amount that would warrant the system then inaugurated. No doubt, when it was inaugurated there were anticipations that Belleville would make more rapid progress than it has done. I have gone over the Auditor General's report of receipts and expenditure of various post offices. I find that in Brantford the receipts were $25,632, while the sum paid out was $4,916, or 19 per cent.

Mr. CORBY. That is a commission office and has nothing to do with the case before us. Belleville was taken out of the commission offices and a city service established.

Mr. McMULLEN. But I would ask my hon. friend (Mr. Corby) if it is right when, in the city of Brantford, where the gross contribution is about $25,000, the office is on a commission basis, and the expenditure only 19 per cent of the receipts, that Belleville, with a revenue of only $16,235, should have a city delivery at an expense of about 50 per cent? Will any person dare to say that it is not in the interests of economy and with a desire to reduce general expense that these changes were made? But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Corby) says: Why has the Postmaster General not dealt in the same way with other places: there are other places in which the expenditure is a large percentage of the revenue. But it is impossible to deal with all at once. I think the Postmaster General has made a very creditable progress in the direction of cutting down the expenses of his department, and I earnestly hope that he will handle other offices as he has handled Belleville, and will make further reductions. He will be obliged to do so, because he has intimated to this House, and I think he intends to carry out what he has intimated, that it will be possible, by reductions in this and other branches, to bring the expenditure down to within $100,000 of the revenue. It now costs the country about half a million dollars from the general revenue to make up the deficit in the revenue of the Post Office Department. To endeavour to make the revenue and expenditure balance is a very commendable thing.

I believe he is actuated solely by the desire to carry out that intimation he has given to this House, and I am sure the people will be glad of it. The move that he has made in the case of the Belleville post office bears on its face the proof that it was done purely in the interest of the administration of the department, and in the taxpayers of this country. The object is to cut down expenses, and to make the department self-sustaining at the earliest possible moment. I have no feeling against Belleville, and I hope that in every other town where similar conditions exist, the same reductions will be made, and that the country may be relieved to that extent from unnecessary taxation. Possibly there was a powerful influence exercised at the time this system was established in Belleville. No doubt my hon. friend had powerful influence at court, and he was backed up no doubt by another hon. gentleman who is now in the Senate. We cannot tell what influences were brought to bear in order to raise Belleville from the position of a town office to that of a city office, and with the expense attaching to a city office. I hope the Postmaster General will make similar reductions in all other offices where extravagance exists. He has made a magnificent start, and the people of this country will give him credit for what he has done.

Mr. QUINN. When the Postmaster General takes credit to himself for effecting economy in the case of Belleville, and as the city of Kingston was mentioned by the hon. member for West Hastings (Mr. Corby), I am reminded of a little circumstance connected with the appointment of a postmaster in Kingston a couple of years ago. It is unfortunate that the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) did not also remember that circumstance when he spoke of the great good that the Postmaster General had done in the inauguration of this economical system. It is only within two years that the Postmaster General appointed as postmaster in the city of Kingston a man over 60 years of age, after having superannuated a man barely 60 years of age. That was a good chance to begin a system of economy, and I do not see why it was not grasped at by the Postmaster General. Now in the case referred to by the hon. member for West Hastings, it seems to me extraordinary that such a wholesale wiping out of officials should have taken place in that particular office. While I can accept with the greatest freedom the statement made by the Postmaster General, that he was not actuated by political motives, at the same time I think that an outside observer will perhaps connect that sweeping reform with the fact that this constituency was represented by my hon. friend from West Hastings, and that this fact had something to do with the dismissal of these men. The Postmaster General takes credit to himself for making reductions there, but if I understood the figures he gave, if these people who have been superannuated had not been re-employed, and if their superannuation had not been paid to them, and other persons employed in their place, the reduction would have been very small indeed. I understand that four or five of them were superannuated at from $300 to $400 a year.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The only member of the staff whose superannuation has been suspended by his re-appointment, or continuance in office, is Mr. Duncan the postmaster. His superannuation was $400 or $500 a year. All the others are drawing their superannuation allowance and the salaries they are getting under the new arrangement.

Mr. QUINN. So that besides the salary they receive from the Postmaster General, they receive a superannuation from the department, and that must be added to the cost of working the office. I do not know that it will show anything like a clear saving of $5,000.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It shows a saving of $4,005 so long as the superannuations have to be paid.

Mr. QUINN. We have cases cited here by the hon. member for West Hastings that are exactly similar, if not a little more grave than the case of Belleville, and I hope the Postmaster General will follow out the economical strain in which he has started, that he will devote his attention to the case of Charlottetown and other places which are represented by members supporting the Government, and then perhaps the public generally will have reason to accept with the perfect confidence that we do, the statement of the Minister that there was nothing political in this operation.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I am glad the hon. member for West Hastings (Mr. Corby) brought this matter up. One might have supposed, after hearing him speak, that some injustice had been done to these officials; but when we get at the facts, we feel satisfied with the action taken by the Postmaster General. He gives as efficient service as they had before, and he saves one-half the cost of maintaining the office. Now can anybody tell us why Belleville was exalted above all the other cities and towns of similar size in the Dominion? What had Belleville done that she should have a preference above all others and be given a set of officials costing twice as much as those in other towns where the revenue was larger than in the city of Belleville? I am rather surprised that the hon. member for West Hastings should bring this matter before the House and cause all the facts to be exposed. I give the Postmaster General credit for what he has done. I do not care for the threats that are made by the hon. member for West Hastings. I tell the Postmaster General, and I tell the hon. member for West Hastings, that if the Government conduct matters in such a way as they have done in this instance, they have no fear to face the people. I think if the hon. member for West Hastings backs up a system such as this, a system so extravagant and so burdensome to the taxpayers, he is taking the wrong course to secure the confidence of the people of this country. The Postmaster General has acted very considerably in this case. He has left in office those whom he found there, and has saved a considerable amount of money to the people, but he gets no credit for it from the member for West Hastings. The Postmaster General has no cause to fear an appeal to the high court of the people, and as long as he continues to discharge the duties of his department in the same efficient manner that he has done so far, the people of this country will owe him a debt of gratitude.

Mr. McMILLAN. Since this session began, how often has the Government been blamed whenever they have reduced the expenditure in any department, but whenever there was an increase in the expenditure, the hon. gentlemen opposite have always been willing that it should be done. Whenever, in the interest of economy, the Government have made reductions, they are found fault with by hon. gentlemen opposite. In this case of the Belleville post office, we are not told that the people of that town are not as well served as they were before, or that the office is not conducted as efficiently as it was before. The Postmaster General has given a satisfactory reason why Belleville was singled out, namely, that it was the last office placed on the city regulations, and that a very small amount was required for the civil servants to fulfil the conditions and place them on salary. When this discussion goes abroad there will not be an honest thinking Conservative who will assert that the Postmaster General has not done his duty, especially when it is remembered that post offices with receipts exceeding those of Belleville by $3,000 or $4,000, are only costing $3,000 a year. The Postmaster General has taken the very best step possible. I do not believe he discriminated against Belleville because the member for East Hastings was a Conservative, but he simply took one of the towns that could be dealt with and effected an economy by reducing the expenditure. The Postmaster General is doing everything possible to give the country very efficient service. In my own riding a storm was raised when the Postmaster General cancelled a contract which had run for fifteen years without tender. The result, however, was that instead of having a mail three times a week, the hon. gentleman was able to secure a daily mail at $12 less than the old system. It is impossible for the Postmaster General and the Government to reduce expenses without some people feeling it, but the interests of the general taxpayers must be consulted, and they will support the Government when they see that no general injury has been done. The hon. gentleman said these officers were paid $400 a year, which is only a labouring man's wages. Farm labourers in Ontario average only $250 a year. I commend the Postmaster General for the action he has taken in this case, not because it is Belleville, but because it is the last place brought under civil service regulations, and he could do justice to the civil service and at the same time reduce the cost. If there are other localities where he can make a saving, I trust he will take them up, so as ultimately to place all the officials in the post offices as nearly as possible on an equal footing.

Motion agreed to, and the House again resolved itself into committee.

Resolutions to be reported.

The FINANCE MINISTER (Mr. Fielding) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We will probably proceed with the Estimates, taking Public Works and Railways and Canals.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 1.40 a.m. (Friday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 27th May, 1898.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

PACIFIC CABLE.

Mr. CASEY moved:

That Rule 92 be suspended and that the Return of Papers with regard to the Pacific Cable be printed forthwith.

Motion agreed to.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 151)—from the Senate—to incorporate the Pacific and Yukon Railway, Navigation, Trading and Mining Company.—(Mr. Rosamond.)

BILL WITHDRAWN.

Mr. SUTHERLAND moved :

That Bill (No. 95) respecting the Great Commonwealth Development and Mining Company, Limited Liability, and to change its name to the Alberta and Yukon Company, be withdrawn.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In accordance with request of some members of the Railway Committee I beg to move :

That leave be granted to the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines to sit during the time the House is in session.

Mr. FOSTER. The Railway Committee finds it necessary to ask leave to sit while the House is in session, and the Committee on Public Accounts was unable to finish its investigation into the Manitoba matter to-day, but has arranged to finish it on Monday. The question arose there whether it would not be wiser to defer the morning sittings of the House until Tuesday morning when the Committee on Public Accounts would be through with its business. I submit to my right hon. friend that perhaps we would get along just as well by doing that.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am very anxious to meet the views of my hon. friends opposite. I think they are reasonably disposed not to retard the day of prorogation.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The PRIME MINISTER. If my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) thinks it would be more convenient that we should not sit on Monday morning I will agree to have the motion changed so that we will not sit until Tuesday morning.

Mr. FOSTER. I think that would be better, and I can assure my right hon. friend that we are as anxious to get away as he is.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. With the permission of the House I ask leave to withdraw my motion.

Mr. CASEY. I would ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sutherland) not to withdraw, for the reason that although the Public Accounts Committee may be certain of getting through on Monday the Railway Committee is almost certain not to finish its business on Monday.

Mr. FOSTER. Perhaps that motion might go.

Mr. CASEY.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the Railway Committee was to meet to-morrow.

The PRIME MINISTER. Perhaps it might.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. All this illustrates the necessity of carrying out the rules of the House. Most of these Bills now before the committee are Bills which came in after the time fixed for presenting the Private Bills had expired. In most of these cases the notices were not given, and now we are called upon to retard the proper business of the House in order to attend to these late private Bills. I trust that next session the committee having charge of the petitions will see that the rules of the House are carried out and that these irregularities do not occur in future.

The PRIME MINISTER. The remarks made by my hon. friend from Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) are quite proper. Of course, we have been in the habit of late years, as everybody knows, of being very indulgent with regard to the observance of the rules of the House, especially with reference to private Bills. But if it were to be understood at the end of this session that next year the rules would be rigidly adhered to, and that every man who wants private legislation would not get it unless he observed the rules and gave notice in time, then nobody would have any reason to complain; and before the end of the session, I will take occasion to call attention to that subject.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to ask if it is understood that the Railway Committee will meet to-morrow; because if it does not, there are a number of members who would like to go home.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. A request was made by some parties that the committee should meet to-morrow; but some considered that it would be difficult to have a meeting, and therefore it was agreed that we should not meet to-morrow.

Mr. CASEY. A number of these delayed Bills are not delayed for the reason the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) seems to think, but because of the length of the discussion on some other Bills which have stood on the Order paper, like one Bill that came down from the Senate. The notices were given early, and it was no fault of the promoters of the Bills that they could not be brought into this House earlier.

Mr. FOSTER. We might as well settle now a matter that was spoken of yesterday, whether the House will sit from eleven to six o'clock to-morrow.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). No.

Motion agreed to

The PRIME MINISTER moved :

That for the remainder of the session, after Monday next, the 30th of May, the House shall hold two sittings on each sitting day, one from 11 a.m. until 1 p.m., and the second from 3 p.m. until the hour for adjournment, and at each such sitting Government Orders shall have precedence.

Motion agreed to.

THE QUEBEC HARBOUR.

Mr. DOBELL moved second reading of Bill (No. 142) to authorize the Quebec Harbour Commissioners to borrow money.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the hon. gentleman explained the Bill to the House? If not, would he kindly do so?

Mr. DOBELL. Mr. Speaker, the object of this Bill is to make provision for the additional service which is now required in the public interest. In old times Quebec had every accommodation necessary for a large number of ships of small tonnage; but it has now become necessary to make provision for large steamers of 10,000 tons, and to do that, it is necessary to lengthen all our wharfs or such portions of wharfs as we expect the steamers will lie alongside. To do that we estimate that $200,000 will be required. We may have to make an additional wharf at Point Lévis for the same purpose; and if so, we propose to use a portion of the money for that purpose.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend is not explaining what would be the ultimate effect of this, and it might be well for the House to understand the question. I believe the Quebec Harbour Commissioners owe an amount of money already to the Dominion, do they not?

Mr. DOBELL. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. And this is allowing them to borrow from outside parties, I suppose?

Mr. DOBELL. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. What security do they give for that money, and in what way does it change the prospects, not very bright, probably, for the payment of the interest, and ultimately of the principal, to the Government?

Mr. DOBELL. It will not prejudice the Government interest in the least by lessening the value of the present property. It only allows us to borrow $350,000 more to complete the property that has already been constructed, and the bonds we now propose to issue will take precedence of the Government debt.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the security of the proposed lenders of this amount—that for $350,000 of bonds they shall have the first lien on the revenue?

Mr. DOBELL. Exactly.

Mr. FOSTER. That affects the position of the Government by putting very far off, I am afraid, the possibility of the Government receiving any portion of the interest due upon the very large sum already borrowed from it; or, does my hon. friend think the improvements that will be made out of this $350,000 will improve the revenues to such an extent that the interest on this sum can be paid without prejudice to what may accrue on account of interest upon the debt already owed? I quite understand that the revenues of the harbour of Quebec are small, and I suppose will not grow larger unless there is extraordinary accommodation, and that this is meant to provide that extraordinary accommodation. If the hon. gentleman could give any fair business assertion that the expenditure of this money, involving even the putting back of the Government security to a second lien, may, in a business point of view, probably not result to the disadvantage, but may be to the advantage of the Government debt, it would be well for the House to hear that.

Mr. DOBELL. The hon. gentleman has put it exactly as I would like to put it—that this outlay actually brings into use certain properties which we have not been able to use on account of the increased size of the steamers that come into the harbour. We intend to increase the width of the Harbour Commissioners' wharf from 300 to 800 feet, in order to provide for the accommodation of the large steamers I have spoken of. Quebec has suffered of late years from the entire withdrawal of what used to be its staple trade, by the abandonment of sailing ships, and now we must make provision for large steamers of 10,000 tons. I may inform the House that one firm alone had under contract last winter for the St. Lawrence trade twenty-six steamers, ten of which were over 10,000 tons, which will be launched within the next twelve months. All these steamers require special facilities for loading and unloading. This work, which we intend to carry out, will give us three lines of railway down to the end of the Harbour Commissioners' wharf, and a sufficient width to build a grain elevator; we have already a cold storage shed, and we intend to build other sheds, so as to be in a position to discharge cargoes quickly, and tranship them to the west. I feel myself perfectly satisfied that Quebec harbour will yet pay interests on the amount loaned—I shall not say the full amount, because hon. gentlemen know that a great deal of money has been wasted in Quebec—but to-day our revenue is improving and we have every reason to believe that this will enable us to earn a revenue on property which has been dead for some years.

Mr. FOSTER. What are the revenues of the past two years, and the expenditures?

Mr. DOBELL. The net revenue last year was $35,000, the gross revenue was about $70,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Was the $35,000, the difference between the net and the gross revenue, all taken up with expenses of management, or with interest as well?

Mr. DOBELL. We had permission to use the revenue for completing the outer basin in order to have 27 feet of water, as we were then providing for the fast line. We refaced the long wharf.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the actual cost of management?

Mr. DOBELL. There is really very little expenditure. There is only the expenses of the harbour commissioners, which is merely a trifle, $5 a sitting, and they sit once a week.

Mr. FOSTER. There must be some expenses for management besides.

Mr. DOBELL. There is a wharfinger and an engineer and a secretary and the chairman of the commission, who gets a special amount.

Mr. FOSTER. Are the charges of management more than $2,000?

Mr. DOBELL. Yes; perhaps $7,000.

Mr. FOSTER. It seems to me that $7,000, in the financial condition of the harbour, is rather a large percentage—10 per cent of the gross revenue.

Mr. DOBELL. I am including the wharfinger, engineer, chairman of the commission, and other incidental charges. I do not think it is possible to reduce the expenses without changing the constitution of the harbour commission.

Mr. FOSTER. Perhaps my hon. friend will give me those details before the third reading.

Mr. DOBELL. Certainly.

Motion agreed to.

Bill read the second time, and the House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. FOSTER. I see that one of the purposes of this is to enable the corporation of the Quebec Harbour Commissioners to acquire additional lands on the river front. What is it proposed to acquire?

Mr. DOBELL. There is a small piece of frontage at the extreme end of the inner basin, which is owned by a private estate, and we propose to take it and give a portion of our present property to the Lake St. John Railway.

Mr. FOSTER. By way of transfer?

Mr. DOBELL.

Mr. DOBELL. Yes, it is a very small transfer. I am quite sure that the property we propose to purchase will not cost more than $10,000 or $15,000 altogether.

Bill reported.

THE WINNIPEG GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. BLAIR moved second reading of Bill (No. 148) respecting the transport contract between Her Majesty and the Winnipeg Great Northern Railway Company. He said: This Bill is for the purpose of enabling the Government to make a new arrangement to a certain extent with the Winnipeg Great Northern Railway Company, in the event of that company consenting to do so, in respect of the route of the railway which is to be constructed. The House is no doubt aware that a contract of some years' standing has been in existence between the Government on the one hand and this railway company on the other, providing for the construction of a line which is to tap the Saskatchewan River. That line has not all been completed, and the company have not earned the subsidy to which they will be entitled, but a balance of something like 120 or 125 miles still remains to be constructed in order to complete their line to the point mentioned in their charter and the contract with the Government. The Government are moving in the direction of having this change made, because, in our judgment, it would be very much in the public interest if the line of the railway instead of being completed to run to the Saskatchewan River were to be deflected to run to the Swan River country. We are led to believe that it would be very much better in the interest of settlement and in the public interest generally if such alteration were made. We, therefore, ask Parliament to give us the power, in the event of our being able to secure the consent of the company to such change, to make the change and to substitute the new line as pointed out in this Bill.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and the House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Would the hon. Minister of Railways inform us what is the difference in mileage between the line it is proposed to substitute and that under the original contract?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). It is not proposed to make any difference in the mileage. The company will be obliged to construct 125 miles toward and into the Swan River district, in order to earn the subsidy they would be entitled to under their contract if they build to the Saskatchewan River. We do not contemplate either increasing or decreasing the mileage.

Mr. DAVIN. What parties represented to the Government that it would be advantageous to make this change? Did any representations come from the North-west?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I must ask my hon. friend to inquire of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), from whom, chiefly, I have received information as to the desire of the people of that section of country and as to the advantage of the change of routes. The hon. Minister of the Interior is not here at the moment.

Mr. FOSTER. The third reading can be allowed to stand over, then.

Bill reported.

ST. JOHN BRIDGE AND RAILWAY EXTENSION COMPANY LOAN.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House resolve itself into committee to consider the following resolution:—

That it is expedient to provide that the time for the repayment of the moneys advanced by the Dominion Government to the "Saint John Bridge and Railway Extension Company," under and by virtue of chapter 26 of the Statutes of 1883, be extended for a period of fifteen years from the expiration of the present term of fifteen years mentioned and provided for in the said statute and the schedule thereto, the moneys so advanced to bear interest during such extended term at the rate of four per centum per annum, payable annually on or before the 30th day of June in each year; such extension of time for the repayment of the moneys so advanced to be on condition that the said advances and the interest thereon shall remain during such extended period as now, a first charge and lien upon the real and personal property, rights, franchises, easements and privileges of the company aforesaid, and that all the provisions of the indenture or mortgage deed, dated the 10th day of December, in the year of Our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-three, and executed by the said company under the provisions of and in accordance with the said statute, shall continue and remain in full force and effect during the said extended period, and on the further condition that the Government may, if it should be found advisable, take possession of the bridge, railway and appurtenances, at any time within five years from the date of the beginning of such extended period, on payment of the difference of the amount then due to the Government for advances and interest and the sum of the total amount expended by the company as the cost of the said bridge, railway and works, and ten per centum on such amount; the company to execute, to the satisfaction of the Minister of Justice, any deeds, mortgages or instruments necessary for the proper carrying into effect of the foregoing.

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. FOSTER. What is the amount of the loan?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Mr. Chairman, the St. John Bridge and Railway Extension Company, as, perhaps, many of the hon. gentlemen may be aware, was chartered to build the well known cantilever bridge across the St. John River, together with a small section of railway, forming the connection between the Intercolonial Railway and the railway on the western side of the harbour which has since become part of the Canadian Pacific. The bridge and works connected with it cost about $600,000. Of this sum the Government loaned to the company $433,000 at 4 per cent for 15 years. The company carried out its undertaking successfully, and has kept the bridge in good condition and paid its interest promptly, having paid into the Dominion treasury something over $200,000 by way of interest. The company has sought an extension of the loan for another period of 15 years, and under all the circumstances, and regarding it as a safe investment, and the transactions hitherto having been quite satisfactory, the Government advises that the loan should be continued.

Mr. FOSTER. At the same rate of interest?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The same rate. In the original Act there was a proviso that within five years after the date of the first advance the Government might take possession of the bridge upon paying 10 per cent advance on the cost. That provision has expired by lapse of time, but we propose to renew it—not that we have any special policy with regard to the matter, but because we thought it well to renew the loan on substantially the same terms as before.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish all our investments were as good.

Resolution agreed to.

CANADA EVIDENCE ACT AMENDMENT.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick) moved second reading of Bill (No. 143)—from the Senate—an Act to amend the Canada Evidence Act, 1893.

Mr. FOSTER. Is my hon. friend (Mr. Fitzpatrick) anxious to take that up to-day? The hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) is not present.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I would like to take it up to-day some time, either this afternoon or during the evening sitting.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. member for Pictou cannot be here to-day. Are there any important questions involved in the Bill?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No; it is simply to make clear some points which I think are sufficiently clear, but which the judges have found difficult.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, then, the third reading might stand.

Mr. BRITTON. There would seem almost to be a case unprovided for in this Bill. It does not excuse any one from answering and it prevents the evidence being used in a criminal trial. However, as I understand the Bill—I have just read it this moment—there seems no provision to prevent the evidence being used in a civil case. I understand that a constitutional difficulty might arise here, this Parliament not having the power to legislate to prevent such evidence being used in civil proceedings. But if the Bill is right in principle, then, surely there ought to be concurrent legislation on the part of the provinces so that, as evidence is given under compulsion, and as the party is protected against the use of that evidence against him in a criminal case, he should be protected as against the same evidence on a question of civil liability.

Now, I suppose the reason why it is not covered by this Bill is just what I mentioned, that the Solicitor General will say that this House has no power to amend the Evidence Act as applicable to a mere question of civil rights, and that that power belongs to the province. But if by an Act of this Parliament a person is excused from answering, surely this Act ought not to go into operation as regards the civil rights of individuals that are interfered with by this Act until there is concurrent legislation on the part of the province; therefore, I would submit that the Act should not go into operation until a proclamation to that effect is issued, giving an opportunity of protecting persons in reference to their civil rights. I may say that this is an attempt to cure, and I suppose that to that extent it does cure, or remove a difficulty that arises by reason of a conflict between two divisions of the courts of Ontario. Hon. gentlemen who took any interest in the amendment I introduced in the early part of the session to the Criminal Code, will remember that one of the objects of that amendment was to remove a difficulty of this kind, to prevent a conflict between two divisions of the high court in Toronto, such a conflict as arises in reference to depositions taken before a coroner. One division decided that depositions taken before a coroner were admissible against the person on trial, and the other division held that they were not. The amendment that I introduced proposed to make a reserve case, not to any one of the divisions, but to the Court of Appeal so that there could be no conflict in cases of that kind. In one case, the case of Mr. Hammond, they allowed a new trial, and that trial is now going on; the new trial was allowed by reason of the improper admission of those depositions. In the other case, a person suffered the extreme penalty of the law because the other view was taken.

Mr. FITZPATRICK.

The Solicitor General, or the Minister of Justice, has thought proper to go to the root of the matter in this one particular case, and amend the Evidence Act by making that evidence admissible, or, in other words, compelling the person to answer, but protecting him as to the result of his answer, saying that it shall not be used against him in any criminal proceedings. So far, they have removed a difficulty in regard to this question of evidence, but a similar difficulty may arise on any other question that may be reserved hereafter in any criminal case. That will have to be cured later on, or there may be a similar conflict to the one that now exists between these two divisions of the court. The point with reference to this Bill is provided for as follows:—

No witness shall be excused from answering any question upon the ground that the answer to such question may tend to criminate him, or may tend to establish his liability to a civil proceeding at the instance of the Crown or of any person; provided, however, that if with respect to any question the witness objects to answer upon the ground that his answer may tend to criminate him or may tend to establish his liability to a civil proceeding at the instance of the Crown or any person, and if but for this section the witness would therefore have been excused from answering such question, then, although the witness shall be compelled to answer yet the answer so given shall not be used or receivable in evidence against him in any criminal trial or other criminal proceeding against him thereafter taking place other than a prosecution for perjury in giving such evidence.

To sum up, while he is not excused from answering on the ground that it may tend to make him liable in a civil proceeding, there is no provision in this Act for protecting him when an action is brought against him in a civil matter. As I understand it, it cannot be because the question of jurisdiction arises as to this Parliament having a right to say that a person shall not be compelled to answer in a civil proceeding, or that this evidence shall not be used against him in a civil proceeding. I think when a person gives evidence under compulsion, we ought to provide in some way that this Act ought not to go into operation until there is provincial legislation protecting him in some way in his civil rights, as this Act now protects him in a criminal matter.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. This Act has been in force since 1893, and this is the first time that I have heard of the difficulty that my hon. friend now points out. The Canada Evidence Act applies only to criminal proceedings, and with respect to these the Parliament of Canada has jurisdiction. Now, this particular section 5 abolished the privilege of silence which existed under the old law, and which exists in England at the present time. Under that law the witness has got in his own hands the right to protect himself against his incriminating testimony, that is the general principle of the law. This section of the Act abolished the privilege. At the same time, the intention of the legislature was evidently to protect him against the consequences of his testimony that he is obliged to give. I think it was contended that the evidence so given by him, practically under compulsion, should not be made available against him in a criminal proceeding, and that was clearly the intention. However, when the matter came to be discussed before the courts, the judges divided. There were two cases in which the judges held that the privilege did not apply, and there were two other cases in which they held that the privilege did apply. That is to say, in two cases they held that this provision of section 5 did not apply, and that evidence so given under compulsion could be used against him except in a prosecution for forgery. It was held that that did not apply when a man came before a coroner, for instance, and gave evidence that then he had no protection. Now, the intention of the amendment is to make it absolutely clear, and to provide that, whereas the privilege of silence is abolished, the protection that formerly existed, that is to say, in a case where a man is compelled to give evidence improperly, that privilege or protection is still extended to him, and he is now protected against the consequences of the evidence that he gives under compulsion. That is the intention of the law, simply to make it clear.

Mr. DAVIN. But still there is clearly a cogency in what the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton) suggests, that if the Department of Justice could get the provincial authorities to co-operate with him, it would be very desirable to have provincial legislation to protect the witnesses from the consequences pointed out by him.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is to say, to protect the witness against the consequences of a civil proceeding that might be brought in consequence of evidence given under these circumstances. I think that protection is already given under the law. However, I think a witness compelled to give testimony, as he is compelled under this Act here, would be protected against the consequences of that testimony absolutely as well as he would have been under the old law, if he was obliged by an improper ruling of the court to give evidence in a case in which he should not be compelled to give evidence against himself. But here is the point: The judges in the Ontario Court of Appeal decide in one way, and the divisional courts decide in another, and we have had cases disposed of arising under those rulings. In one case, a man is found guilty upon evidence given under that section, the case came before a divisional court, and the judgment was confirmed, and the man was hung. Another man was tried on evidence given under the same section and under the same conditions, and he gets a new trial. Now, we must amend such a condition of things as that, and that is the object of this Bill.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in committee and reported.

SUPPLY—DEBTS DUE THE DOMINION.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. McMULLEN. In connection with the Bill just passed, granting additional power to the Quebec Harbour Commissioners to borrow money, I notice in looking over the accounts that there is now a very considerable amount of interest in arrear. The amount is $1,155,575. The very large amount of debt standing against the harbour is evidently more than the intrinsic value of the improvements made there, and that debt is an unsatisfactory condition. I also observe that the Fredericton and St. Mary's Railway Bridge Company is in arrears of interest to the extent of $96,000. It would be very much better if the Government, in the case of the debt on Quebec harbour, were to place a proper value upon improvements made there, and in some way vitalize that debt by reducing the amount to a sum which the harbour may fairly be expected to pay and place the interest at something like a reasonable amount, in order that the debt and interest may not be allowed to accumulate in this very unsatisfactory way from year to year. I dare say we all recollect the manner in which money was spent on the harbour of Quebec. We remember years ago hearing unpleasant statements as to the way in which the money was squandered. I think in the case of that debt, it would be very much better to make a revaluation, and recast the whole debt and reduce it to a sum the Harbour Commissioners may reasonably be expected to pay, and then ask that the interest be paid annually. Why allow this interest to roll up in this unsatisfactory condition? I think the Harbour Commissioners have not the means to pay the interest on this enormous debt, and it would be very much better that an investigation should be made so as to have the debt adjusted in some way and reduce the sums on which the Harbour Commissioners will be asked to pay reasonable interest, and after paying the interest on the amount they have now asked powers to borrow, so that we may fairly expect to receive the interest every year. With respect to the Fredericton bridge, the interest on that work has been allowed to accumulate. I drew the attention of the House several years ago to the fact that this company had never paid one cent of interest, except a small instalment when they obtained an additional grant from the Dominion. Since that time the revenue has been consumed in expenses for keeping the bridge in running order, and whenever there has been a small surplus it has been expended in painting and improving the work, the shareholders having evidently made up their mind that they will expend any returns on the bridge itself. If that policy is to be followed, the country should take possession of the bridge and any revenues obtained. I see there are several debts mentioned in the Auditor General's Report as being in arrears; they are set out on page 45, and the amount due on 30th June, 1897, was $1,297,295. Why should these debts be allowed to accumulate? It would be better if the Government would consider them, and place them on a basis so that the companies would be able to pay interest. I do not believe any reduction should be made in the case of the Fredericton bridge, for if it were efficiently operated and proper tolls charged on the cars passing over it, the country would reap a reasonable rate of interest from the investment. Unfortunately it is virtually controlled by two lines of railway, one on each side of the river, and the result is that between these two companies the tolls are kept down, and while the companies have the advantage of the use of the bridge, the Government is not able to collect the interest due. If the Dominion is going to make a present of the bridge to Fredericton, let the announcement be made; if not, the Government should do something to vitalize the debt and put it in shape to pay interest. I hope the Government will do this in regard to the Fredericton bridge and also with respect to the harbour of Quebec. I believe in the latter case a very considerable reduction should be made, for we all remember the extravagant expenditures that occurred, which resulted in the harbour board being encumbered with such a heavy debt that it has been unable to meet the interest.

Mr. DOBELL. The Government sympathize a good deal with what has fallen from the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen). There is some reason for reconsidering the arrangements entered into with the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec. I am sorry my hon. friend was not present in the House when I gave reasons for borrowing a further sum of $350,000 to bring into life property that was constructed more than twenty-five years ago, and is now quite unsuitable for the present style of steamers coming up the St. Lawrence. If my hon. friend will allow this matter to stand over, we will probably have some scheme to present here to carry out the views he has expressed.

Mr. McMULLEN.

THE QUEEN vs. SKELTON.

Mr. DAVIN. I would make an appeal to the Solicitor General about the copies of affidavits in the case of the Queen vs. Skelton that I have been promised. I have the word of a Minister of the Crown that I would get them, and it is very strange that I do not. Is there any chance that I shall?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). I will draw the attention of the Minister of Justice again to the matter.

ALIEN LABOUR LAW.

Mr. BENNETT. I ask the right hon. the First Minister, is it his intention under the Alien Labour Law to appoint some official on the north shore of the Georgian Bay to see as to the enforcement of the Act? I believe that a large number of Americans are at present being employed there, and I may suggest that the appointment of an official at Parry Sound would meet the requirement of the case.

The PRIME MINISTER. I will be very glad to adopt the suggestion of my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett). I see no reason why it should not be done.

CROW'S NEST PASS RAILWAY.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to call the attention of the Government to a matter which was reported to me yesterday in connection with the construction of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. I have received information on what I believe to be very good authority, that the railway company is thinking of abandoning the construction of the last fifty miles of the 330 for which a bonus of $11,000 per mile was granted by this Parliament last year. I am informed that instead of constructing these fifty miles the cost of which is estimated to be from $25,000 to $30,000 a mile, it is the intention of the company to put heavy train boats on the lake, and to carry passengers and freight by boat instead of building the line around the shores of the lake. That, of course, would relieve the company of a very heavy expenditure. I have not positive information on the matter, but I call the attention of the Government to it in order that they may have inquiries made, and inasmuch as one of the terms of the contract is that the bonus shall be paid on every ten miles of the road completed, it might be well for the Government to inquire, and if it is a fact that the company does not propose to build these fifty miles, then the Government should withhold the bonus and keep the company to its bargain.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The hon. gentleman

(Mr. Richardson) intimated to me that he intended to bring this matter up, and I can only say in answer to his remarks that this is the very first I have heard of such a rumour being abroad with regard to the intention of the Canadian Pacific Railway. It will be remembered by members of the House that when the Crow's Nest Railway contract was under consideration, it was pointed out to the House that that portion of the road between the south of Kootenay Lake and Nelson was very expensive and difficult to construct, and could not be completed at as early a date as some other portions of the line, even though the work might be entered upon at the Nelson end and the Kootenay Lake end at the same time. The Government, understanding there would be some delay in this, and that the 31st December, 1900, would be the earliest date at which we could hope for the completion of the line from Macleod to Nelson, caused a clause to be inserted in the contract providing that from the southerly point of Kootenay Lake to Nelson, there should be, pending the completion, a service by car ferry. I presume that some persons may have seen evidences of the company making arrangements for such a mode of transport and have drawn the inference that the company intended to abandon that part of their work. I feel very well assured that there cannot be any such purpose in the mind of the company, and I may state to my hon. friend (Mr. Richardson) that I will make close inquiry in regard to it. I would most unquestionably avail myself of the power which is conferred on us under the contract in case we should see any evidence of intention on the part of the company to abandon that portion of the road.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the Minister say as to what time it is supposed the road will be finished through to the Kootenay River in East Kootenay below Fort Steele?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The company have contracted to complete the line to the southerly point of Kootenay Lake by the end of the present year.

Mr. FOSTER. That is, beyond East Kootenay River?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, within fifty or fifty-five miles of Nelson.

Mr. FOSTER. The question I asked was, if my hon. friend (Mr. Blair) knew the probable time of the road reaching the East Kootenay River below Fort Steele, because then it comes into line with a fairly serviceable water communication both ways.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not informed as to when that part of the line will be completed so that the trains can be run, but I think a very large portion of it is now finished. There are one or two breaks that have to be filled up. Of course the contract makes it obligatory on the company to complete it all to the southerly point of Kootenay Lake at the end of the current year.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. BELCOURT. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to refer to a personal matter. In the columns of the Montreal "Gazette" to-day I notice the following item:

Hon. A. G. Blair stated to-day in the Railway Committee that the Government had decided to oppose all Yukon railway Bills for roads to cross the international boundary. This does not affect existing characters, such as that of the British Yukon Company, but it means that Mr. Belcourt's Bill to incorporate the Alaska and Northwestern Railway Company, which is reported to be one of Hamilton Smith's Bills, and which is now before the Railway Committee, will not be allowed to pass. The same result will happen to Hamilton Smith's other Bill, which passed the Senate yesterday.

I desire to state and to have it clearly understood, that so far as I know Mr. Hamilton Smith has no connection or interest, direct or indirect, with the Bill which stands in my name and which is still before the Railway Committee. I desire to add further, that I have the very best of reasons for believing and knowing that Mr. Hamilton Smith has no connection with this Bill.

Mr. COCHRANE. It would not hurt it if he had.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY TRAIN SERVICE.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I desire to ask the Minister of Railways when it is the intention to issue a new time table on the Intercolonial Railway for the summer business?

Mr. FOSTER. Is it a new time table my hon. friend (Mr. Choquette) asks for?

Mr. CHOQUETTE. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. I thought it was a new tariff.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The summer arrangement will be entered upon about the 15th or 20th of June.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. Then I will ask the Minister of Railways if it is his intention to see that a proper train service is given on the Intercolonial Railway to the Quebec district. Some of my colleagues from that district, as well as myself, have very often had occasion to remind him that the present train service on the Intercolonial Railway is simply intolerable. The people of the Quebec district are now obliged to travel on way freights and accommodation freights which for the last four or five months have been many hours late every day. We have always been promised that some remedy would be given, but so far nothing has been done. I myself saw Mr. Pottinger yesterday and he promised to improve the service at once so as to have a through freight train instead of having the cars taking on and putting off freight at every station. I should like to know if that is going to be done now, because in the past we have only had promises.

Mr. McALISTER. It is well to accommodate all people living along the Intercolonial Railway as far as possible, but the hon. gentleman (Mr. Choquette) must remember that the district of Quebec is not the only place to be considered in this matter. I find that the present arrangement is giving universal satisfaction between Montreal and the maritime provinces. If it does not suit Quebec, I think a change should not be made to accommodate Quebec alone unless it accommodates other parts of the country as well.

Mr. TALBOT. I would ask the Minister of Railways if the delay of the Intercolonial in the Quebec section is due to the railway being short of engines? That is the reason given, that the engines which ought to be kept for hauling passenger trains are used for hauling freight trains. I would ask the Minister of Railways whether that is true or not?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I think it can hardly be said that the regular trains are delayed in consequence of any shortage in our traction power. It is quite true, we are not very well supplied; but rather than have the passenger traffic delayed, we believe it to be our duty to go further than we have yet gone, and we have gone some distance, in hiring locomotives. But the difficulty which my hon. friends are complaining of is one which I presume it is not possible for us to avoid without putting on a more expensive class of train than we are running between the points mentioned. Our express trains are running on time, and I have heard no complaint at all with regard to them; and in the desire to afford additional accommodation, we have added passenger cars to our train service. This I expected would have been appreciated to a somewhat greater extent than my hon. friend seems to appreciate it. It has rather furnished a ground of complaint against us, because we have not been able, providing the accommodation in that way, to make quite as regular and speedy time as we could wish. Our intention is, as soon as we are in a position to make the arrangements, to give what I think will be found to be a fairly satisfactory service to the Quebec district, and I hope my hon. friends will have patience until these arrangements can be got into better shape than they are in at this moment.

Motion agreed to, and the House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. CHOQUETTE.

(In the Committee.)

To cover balances of expenditures for works for which the appropriations may be insufficient (the amounts expended under this appropriation to be shown under the heading of the several works affected)..... $3,000

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). I beg to say that this item has been placed in my estimates by the Department of Finance. Perhaps it would satisfy my hon. friends if I were to add these words: "Provided that the sum in each case shall not exceed $100 for each work." We are carrying on works for which at times we are short by $50 or $25, and it is in order to provide for such cases that the Department of Finance has suggested this item. With the proviso I have just indicated, I think the ex-Minister of Finance will be perfectly satisfied.

Mr. FOSTER. The objection I had to the item was this. My hon. friend will see that he has a most elastic estimate, much more so than any other department of the Government. In the first place, he takes an estimate for every special work, and it is of the essence of estimating that the estimate shall come as near as possible to the cost of the work. After my hon. friend has estimated for every special work in a province he takes a general vote to cover work in any part of the province. After dealing with all the provinces in that way, he takes a further vote for the Dominion generally; and now he is capping that by putting in an item to cover any balances that may be required. If all the departments are going to estimate in that way, where will this thing end. In the first place, it induces carelessness in the department. I have heard no strong reason given so far why we should not get on without this vote.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think if my hon. friend will carefully consider the question, he will agree with me. He knows that when my department or any other department has a special amount voted for a special work, the Auditor General will not allow me to take from any general vote any amount in which I might be short for the special work. So that these general votes are not available for this purpose, and that is the reason why I am asking this vote. Not long ago, I was $63 short in one case, and I was obliged to over-expend. It is to cover these small shortages that I ask this small amount.

Mr. FOSTER. I will make a suggestion. Make the vote read "To cover balances of expenditures for works already authorized," and then add at the end "And in no case to exceed $100 for each work."

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I agree to that.

Bridge across the Saskatchewan at Edmonton, N.W.T. $25,000

Mr. DAVIN. I want to ask a few questions with regard to this, and think it would be desirable that we should go over rapidly the history of the contract. The hon. gentleman is aware that an advertisement was published, dated the 16th July, 1897, calling for tenders for the construction of three piers and two abutments for a bridge, according to plans and specifications to be seen at certain points, on and after 22nd July, and that tenders were to be in not later than Friday, August 6th. An accepted cheque, payable to the order of the Minister of Public Works, for $2,000 was to accompany each tender and to be forfeited if the party declined the contract or failed to complete the work. In looking at the specifications, I find that they call for a lump sum for the whole work shown on a certain plan and described in the specifications and also a price per lineal foot for piles driven, and per thousand feet, board measure, for timber laid and spiked in the foundations of the piers and the abutments. The hon. gentleman assents to this?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am following my hon. friend closely.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman will interrupt me, if I misstate the case.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, but I shall simply reply when the hon. gentleman is through.

Mr. DAVIN. The amount paid for the finished work would, therefore, consist, first, of the lump sum, second, the amount paid for piles, and third, the amount paid for the timber work, which was to be sawn pine timber. According to sections 14 and 15 of the specifications, the timber was to be of the very best description, and according to section 17 the piles were to be white oak or rock elm for the piers and cedar for the abutments. As may be seen on looking at the plan, there are no piles in the pier but only in the abutments. Again, there is no cedar in the North-west, but for piles sunk in the ground, tamarack, of which there is an abundance in the North-west, is as good as cedar. I will now ask what timber is being used?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The chief engineer is not here at present, but the acting engineer tells me that oak has been used, but I shall let my hon. friend know to-morrow.

Mr. DAVIN. Oak is being used for piles?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will find out and let the hon. gentleman know.

Mr. DAVIN. The piles were to be built of rock-faced ashlar masonry, first-class in every respect. The stone was to be limestone granite, and from a quarry accepted by the engineer, and the abutments were also to be of ashlar masonry. I am quoting from the specifications. No estimates were to be paid during construction. Have estimates been paid?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Not one cent.

Mr. DAVIN. The work was to be commenced as soon as possible after the signature of the contract, and to be completed on or before 15th November, 1897, and there was a fine of $50 every day after that date that the work remained uncompleted. The date of the contract was the 17th August. Therefore for this large work, there was less than three months allowed in which to do it. Why was it that the time for putting in tenders was so short?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Let the hon. gentleman make his statement. I would rather answer all his questions at once.

Mr. DAVIN. I have a perfect right to put this question.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is simply an argument, and I will give the details in reply.

Mr. DAVIN. How can the hon. gentleman know, when I am stating the history of the case, whether or not there is a point in it that I consider calls for comment, because he cannot build an argument on a mere statement of the case. He would have to make an argument in reply to one made by me on my statement of facts.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have a statement to make to the House and I see that the hon. gentleman has a statement also. I will hear his statement and then give my reply.

Mr. DAVIN. The date of the advertisement is the 16th July and the tenders had to be in on the 6th August. Why was so short a time given for the construction of the work—less than three months?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am taking a note of that and will certainly answer my hon. friend's question.

Mr. DAVIN. Why was it that a penalty of $50 a day was attached to each day that should elapse after the 15th of November, while the work remained incomplete?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am just taking a note of my hon. friend's statement, and will certainly answer it.

Mr. DAVIN. I would ask the hon. gentleman whether the work was completed in that time?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will answer my hon. friend as soon as he gets through.

Mr. DAVIN. Surely, Mr. Chairman, I am entitled to know whether the contract was completed or not.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It was not completed in the time specified.

Mr. DAVIN. Was the fine of $50 a day imposed?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No fine was imposed.

Mr. DAVIN. Was there any forfeiture?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, there was no forfeiture.

Mr. DAVIN. As the contract is signed on the 17th August, there would be less than three months to complete a work thus hedged around with forfeitures and penalties. And it is perfectly clear, from the way it has turned out, that for the tenderer who got the contract, there was no terror in these forfeitures and no danger in the penalties. Now, anybody who has had any experience of the execution of public works knows that when you limit the time, when you confine a contractor to a very brief period for doing the work, he will have to spend more money than he would have to spend if the work is extended over a longer period.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIN. Very well. Now, in this case, I believe some stone was shown at the office to the contractors tendering, which they were told was to be had about fifty miles from Edmonton in a quarry belonging to one Alexis Degagné. And I believe that this Mr. Degagné is a supporter of the Liberal party.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I never knew him. I do not know whether he is dead or alive.

Mr. DAVIN. He is a strong supporter of my hon. friend from Edmonton (Mr. Oliver). I believe the contractors were told at the office that this stone could be had dressed at the quarries at $14 per cubic yard.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not know that there was any price fixed, but I remember that in the report of the chief engineer, which my hon. friend (Mr. Davin) has in his hand, it was stated that the stone was shown in the office as coming from Degagné's quarry.

Mr. DAVIN. Now, Mr. Chairman, it will be seen that all the conditions were harsh and calculated to frighten contractors. First, the time allowed to put in tenders was short. Second, no estimates were to be paid. Third, there was a penalty of $50 a day. And lastly, there was a forfeit of $2,000. Now, Sir, it is obvious—I just put this hypothetically—that if any one contractor knew that there was no terror in that penalty, no terror in that forfeit, he would be able to tender at a lower rate than one who believed that there was business in these conditions—I do not mean in the sense of "business is business"—

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That old chestnut once more. My hon. friend (Mr. Davin) makes himself cheaper every day.

Mr. DAVIN. I am afraid that the chestnut was so hard that the cracking of it has destroyed the political teeth of my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte). Now, if one contractor knew that he need not use stone at all, that everything would be easy for him, he would be in a position to tender much lower than his competitors. There were four tenders put in. The first was from Frs. Lemoine, living in Montreal. The lump sum of his contract for all the work other than piles and sawn timber work, was $36,500. For piles driven, his charge was $1 per lineal foot, and for timber laid and spiked $30 per thousand feet, board measure. The second tender was from Joseph Bourque, living, I think, in Hull. The lump sum of his tender was $42,750, with $2 per lineal foot for piles and $65 per thousand feet for timber laid and spiked. Then, we have a third tender from John Burns, of Ottawa. The lump sum of his tender was $44,900. The price he proposed to charge for piles was 30 cents per lineal foot, and for timber laid and spiked $50 per thousand feet. The fourth tender was from Rourke & Allison. The lump sum was $59,500; piles, oak, 75 cents per lineal foot; and timber, $36 per thousand feet, board measure. The first tenderer was from Montreal, the second from Hull, the third from Ottawa, and the fourth from Winnipeg. Lemoine was the lowest for masonry; Burns the lowest for piles driven; Lemoine the lowest for foundation timber. The dates of the tenders were respectively: Lemoine, 6th; Bourque, 6th; Burns, 6th; and Rourke & Allison, 4th August. You will observe, Sir, that the sixth day was the last day the tenders could come in. Now, I wish to ask the hon. Minister, when did these tenders, dated the 6th August, arrive at the office of the Minister of Public Works?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot say. These tenders were not opened by me, but by the Deputy Minister and the chief engineer. I have not opened a tender since I took charge of the department—yes, I opened one, just to see how things were done. The tenders were received in the ordinary way by the secretary of the chief engineer.

Mr. DAVIN. Is that Mr. Roy?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. DAVIN. When were they brought to the attention of the Minister?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not remember the date, but they were brought to my attention in the ordinary way by the Deputy Minister.

Mr. DAVIN. Of course, at any time, but specially at the present time, it would be impossible for a contract to be made with the Department of Public Works without the Minister's sanction.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Quite so.

Mr. DAVIN. What date was the contract awarded?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. As the hon. gentleman himself says, it was the 17th August, if I remember well.

Mr. DAVIN. That is not what I mean. When was it determined to award the contract?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not remember the exact date.

Mr. DAVIN. Does the hon. Minister remember whether he was in Ottawa when he determined to award the contract?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think so. I cannot pretend to remember these things.

Mr. DAVIN. Now, it is quite clear that there are some gaps in the papers that have been brought down. In the papers that have been brought down, there is what is apparently a telegram dated the 7th, at Montreal, and signed by Louis Coste, engineer, saying:

Am instructed by the Minister to ask you to immediately notify the lowest tenderer for Edmonton bridge masonry that his tender is accepted. Minister goes to Quebec to-morrow night; I return to Ottawa by late train to-night.

Therefore, on the 7th the Minister must have been in Montreal.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Perhaps I was in Montreal.

Mr. DAVIN. Evidently it was in Montreal that the Minister decided to give the contract. The tender from Montreal was dated the 6th of August. Now, I want to know whether that tender of Lemoine was sent by mail.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, it was sent to the Deputy Minister by mail.

Mr. DAVIN. Then, if the tender was dated the 6th of August and sent by mail, it could not have arrived in the department until the day after the time for receiving tenders. If sent by mail, as we are now told it was, it could not have reached Ottawa before the 7th, which is the date on which Mr. Louis Coste's telegram is apparently addressed to Mr. Roy, the secretary. Now, the same remark is true of the tender of Bourque & Burns, and of that of O'Rourke & Allison. It is doubtful if they could have arrived on the 6th. Now, on the 7th, the Minister and his engineer are at Montreal, and from Montreal Mr. Coste sends a telegram that the contract was to be given to the lowest tenderer; therefore, the Minister must have decided—and I ask his attention to this—to give the contract to the lowest tenderer without going into the merits of the respective tenderers. My hon. friend laughs at it. Is not that so? Did the hon. gentleman enter into the merits of the respective tenders? No answer.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Not at the present time.

Mr. DAVIN. But surely the House is entitled to know whether the hon. gentleman considered the merits of these tenders.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The question is ridiculous.

Mr. DAVIN. It is not at all ridiculous. It is clear the hon. Minister of Public Works is not desirous of shedding any light on that point.

Mr. MCGREGOR. Or the speaker, either.

Mr. DAVIN. Just wait awhile, and we shall see. It is quite evident that some of the backers of the Minister of Public Works who have stood by him under all circumstances in this House, are rather afraid that he is being a little squeezed, and are trying to come to his rescue. Now, Sir, I want an answer to the question: Did the hon. gentleman at Montreal consider the merits of these tenders? Now, at Montreal, on the 7th, which is presumably the date that the tender of Lemoine arrived at the Department of Public Works, the Minister authorized Mr. Louis Coste to give directions to have the contract given to the lowest tenderer. Will the Minister answer this: How came he and the engineer to be at Montreal on the day the decision was arrived at?

An hon. MEMBER. They went by train.

Mr. DAVIN. Hon. members are pleased to laugh and jeer at any amount of curious work that may be perpetrated by any department, but remember there is a day of reckoning coming. How came the Minister and the engineer to be at Montreal on the day the decision was arrived at? How is it that he sends his decision by telegram? How came it to be the date on which the tenders arrived in Ottawa that he decides in Montreal? The Minister is silent, but of course we will insist upon having a reply to that. Now, Mr. E. F. E. Roy appears to have notified Mr. Lemoine by letter, which letter is not here, because on the 9th of August Lemoine telegraphs: "I will be in Ottawa this evening." On the following day Lemoine writes the secretary a letter dated Ottawa, saying that he is ready to enter into a contract with the Government for building the piers and abutments of the Edmonton bridge according to his tender, and asks that he may be addressed at Montreal. On the 11th of August, R. C. Derochiers, assistant secretary, informs Lemoine by letter that the contract had been sent to Montreal for execution. The contract is dated the 17th of August. Now, the Minister will have to give me some enlightenment, because I will surely be entitled to some help to piece out this history. What occurred afterwards? After the contract was thus let, Mr. Lemoine goes up to Edmonton, he examines the quarry, and then comes back and informs the Department of Public Works that the stone is unfit for building piers and abutments. Is that correct?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will take a note of it.

Mr. DAVIN. Is it correct or not?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I shall not discuss political matters in connection with that department.

Mr. DAVIN. There is nothing political.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I mean public matters.

Mr. DAVIN. Then Mr. St. Laurent is instructed to test the report that he made about the quarry at Edmonton, and he also tests the report made about the stone at Calgary. It was then decided to allow Mr. Lemoine to build the pier and abutments of the Edmonton bridge of concrete, and the conclusion was arrived at that it would cost about as much to build it of concrete as of masonry. The result was that Mr. Lemoine, without any new tenders being called for was allowed to build the piers and abutments of concrete. Does the hon. Minister assert that the cost of concrete is anything like the cost of masonry? What I complain of is this: I assert that the cost of concrete is not much more than half the cost of masonry, and under these circumstances, we want an explanation from the Minister of this item.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I should be very glad indeed to give to my hon. friend all the information he may be anxious to obtain. Tenders were asked for the bridge, tenders were received, and when they were put before me I instructed my officers to give the contract to the lowest tenderer, who happened to be Mr. Lemoine, of Montreal. Whether the result of the opening of the tenders was put before me in Montreal or in Ottawa does not much matter.

Mr. HAGGART. Did you give the contract yourself or make a report to Council, which was afterwards approved by His Excellency?

Mr. DAVIN.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I always report to Council. When I speak of myself I do so as head of the department. Tenders were opened by my officers in the usual way. The lowest tenderer happened to be Mr. Lemoine. I knew him to be a contractor of good reputation, and without any hesitation I awarded him the contract. The contract was given on 17th August and was to be completed on 15th November. The hon. gentleman has asked why the period was so short. The chief engineer reported that the bridge could be completed during that time, and that the period should be made short on account of the rising of the water in the river, and the short season in the west. I concurred in that recommendation. My engineer prepared the specifications, and I relied on him, as I do in every such case. My hon. friend is correct in stating that it was announced that the piers would be built in masonry, and that a sample of the stone to be used was in the Department of Public Works.

Mr. DAVIN. When were the tenders laid before the Minister?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. They were laid before me immediately, as it was considered a very urgent matter indeed. The stone was to be obtained from a quarry owned by Mr. Degagné, and a sample of which had been in the department since 1894. Tenders were put in no doubt on the face supposition that stone, according to the sample in the department, would be used. Mr. St. Laurent went west.

Mr. DAVIN. Had the tenders been before the Minister before he directed the engineer to tell the secretary that the contract would be given to the lowest tenderer?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not know whether the tenders themselves were placed before me or not, but the result of the examination of the tenders was placed before me. The business is always done in that way. Every hon. member who has been a Minister knows that the result of the examination of tenders is laid before the Minister and he writes his name or initials on the schedule accepted. Mr. St. Laurent went west to carry on the work. I may say that Mr. St. Laurent is an old officer of the Department of Public Works, who has been employed in Ottawa and Manitoba, and I appointed him as superintendent of the work because of that experience. The first intimation the department had that something was wrong is contained in this report:

Department of Public Works, Canada,
Resident Engineer's Office,
Ottawa, 30th August, 1897.

Sir,—I have just returned, after a hard trip, from a visit to Mr. Degagné's quarry, about fifty miles up the River Saskatchewan, and I find that the stone, of which he sent a sample to the department, is positively not suitable for bridge piers.

The stratification of the stone is bad, the different beds are cut up by thin vertical seams in all directions, these seams being composed of weak cementing material.

The action of water and frost in splitting open this stone is plainly visible through the seams, and it is quite impossible to get a single block of sandstone of the dimensions required for the piers.

I have notified the contractor to take immediate steps to procure suitable stones at once, and to proceed vigorously with the work, which, in fact, is not practically commenced yet. As I intend to leave for Lake Manitoba about the 10th of September, and will be away from Edmonton a few weeks, it might be advisable that a competent inspector be appointed during my absence. Please advise me at Winnipeg. In any case, if not detained unavoidably at Lake Manitoba, I shall try to be back to Edmonton at the end of September.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) ARTHUR ST. LAURENT,
Engineer in Charge.

Louis Coste, Esq.,
Chief Engineer,
Dept. of Public Works, Ottawa.

This is dated Ottawa, but that is evidently a mistake, as Mr. St. Laurent was apparently writing from Edmonton. This was the first report that came to us. The second report that came from the same engineer is dated Calgary, 15th September, and is as follows :

Department of Public Works, Canada,
Chief Engineer's Office,
Calgary, 15th September, 1897.

Sir,—In accordance with your instructions, I visited all the quarries in Calgary, with the view of finding suitable stone for the Edmonton bridge piers, and I have the honour to report herein the result of my visit, supplementing my telegram of the 14th inst., stating that no suitable stone had been found in this connection.

All the quarries examined around Calgary prove to be sandstone, and although finding many kinds different in their properties, I conclude, after mature consideration, that it would not be safe to risk the use of them in the large and exposed piers of the Edmonton bridge. Two varieties were mainly examined, the others being considered not worth mentioning—one of a dark cream colour, the other of a bluish gray. The first variety is soft, and hardens on exposure, but owing to its porosity, and consequently high absorptive power, the action of frost is great on that stone, and this action is plainly visible in some of the Calgary buildings where it has been used. However, I would not hesitate to recommend the use of that stone in piers above ordinary water, though very soft, if the stone could be dried in the sun for a few weeks before using.

The blue variety shows great compactness, and it is the hardest sandstone found at Calgary. It occurs in pockets in the ordinary sandstone formation, in depths of one to six feet.

At first sight the stone was all that could be desired for piers, some of the residents stating positively that the frost had no action upon it, though they could not point out to me its use in exposed situations.

In stripping off this quarry, large pieces of that blue stone were rolled down the steep cut bank to the Elbow River below. In every instance where these blocks were in a position to be soaked by the river water and exposed to frost, they showed frost splits.

Moreover, the quantity in sight is much under the quantity required. It would take many weeks of earth and stone stripping to get at it, with the prospect of the pocket running out.

Under these circumstances I felt it my duty to report against the use of any of the Calgary stone in connection with the Edmonton bridge.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) ARTHUR ST. LAURENT,
Engineer in Charge.

Louis Coste, Esq.,
Chief Engineer,
Dept. of Public Works, Ottawa.

I may say at once that the specifications required that the stone would be at least 15 inches thick. We found, as Mr. St. Laurent says, that the quarry of Mr. De-gagné could not supply the necessary stone and that the stone at Calgary was not considered suitable.

Mr. DAVIN. Is that the original report of St. Laurent ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am reading from a copy.

Mr. DAVIN. I suppose there would be no objection to giving us the original report ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There would be no objection. I suppose the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) does not pretend that we would falsify a document ?

Mr. DAVIN. Oh, dear me, no ; I would be incapable of suspecting it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This copy was prepared by the officers in the department.

Mr. DAVIN. May I ask the Minister this question, because it is quite clear that all the papers did not come down. When Mr. Lemoine came to the office to say he could not do the work, was Mr. St. Laurent instructed here or was he telegraphed to, or what was done ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. When Mr. Lemoine went west to carry out the work Mr. St. Laurent proceeded at the same time with him. I do not remember the dates, but Mr. St. Laurent was sent out by the chief engineer.

Mr. DAVIN. Might I ask the Minister further—

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I want to make the statement complete and I cannot do that and discuss these questions with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin).

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) has not the right to speak unless with the consent of the member who has the floor.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will be very glad to answer the question of the hon. gentleman when I have finished my statement. The two reports that I have read give the reasons why delays took place. My hon. friend (Mr. Davin) has asked me why we did not impose the fine of $50 a day. The reason is very obvious. Mr. Lemoine tendered on the faith of the Public Works Department saying that there was stone available, and there was a sample of the stone in Mr. Coste's office. Mr. Coste no doubt thought at the time that Mr. Degagné's quarry could supply suitable stone and Mr. Lemoine tendered on the faith that he would find the stone required there. He went up there, but, as the chief engineer's report shows, the stone was not suitable and the work could not be carried out. I had better now read the report of the chief engineer, because it affords the best possible argument and gives an answer to every question that has been put by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin). Mr. Coste's report is dated the 22nd September and reads as follows :

On the 17th of August, 1897, a contract was entered with Mr. Lemoine for the construction of the piers and abutments of the Edmonton bridge for an amount of $36,500, the specification calling for masonry of rock-faced ashlar from a limestone or granite quarry accepted by the engineer. Tenders were invited for this work on the 22nd July, and were received on the 6th of August, the lowest being that of Mr. Lemoine.

I may say that I was personally under the impression that unsuitable stone could be found in the neighbourhood of Edmonton. As far back as September, 1894, I had caused an examination of the banks of the river to be made by C. J. Duggan, formerly in the employ of the Canadian Pacific Railway, who reported that he found a quarry fifty miles up the river from Edmonton with a hard flinty stone, the ledge showing along the bank for about 600 feet, and from 8 to 10 feet thick, from which large pieces could be obtained.

This opinion of Mr. Duggan was further corroborated by Mr. Alexis Degagné, who, on the 16th June, 1897, forwarded a sample of stone taken from his quarry, situated about fifty miles up the River Saskatchewan, stating that he could contract for any quantity that might be required, and that the stone existed in mass-like granite, and not in layers, and that blocks of any thickness could be obtained. He offered that stone for $14 per cubic yard, dressed.

The sample was examined in my office, and found to be of excellent quality for bridge-building, and was shown to all contractors who inquired whether or not stone could be procured in the neighbourhood of Edmonton—nothing, however, being guaranteed.

As soon as the contract had been awarded, Mr. Lemoine proceeded to Edmonton, but came back at once and reported that he could not find stone of the dimensions or of the quality required by the specification. He was told to procure it elsewhere, but replied that he had also examined the stone found at Calgary, and was of the opinion that it would not be accepted.

Then Mr. Arthur St. Laurent, engineer of this department, was sent to examine the quarries, and he reported as follows, under date of August 30th, 1897.

Mr. TARTE.

As I have just read the report of Mr. St. Laurent, I need not read it again. After quoting from that report, Mr. Coste continues :

From these reports you will see that it would be unsafe to use any of the stone found at or near Edmonton, or at or near Calgary, and the nearest place where stone could be found would be Winnipeg, but I submit that freight rates make the use of that stone prohibitory.

Under the above circumstances, having ascertained that good clean gravel can be found on the banks of the Saskatchewan for concrete work, I have the honour to strongly recommend that the substitution of concrete for masonry be permitted.

With regard to the price, I find that if the contractor had been able to procure dressed stone from the Degagné quarry, even at the very high price quoted to me in June last, viz., $14 per cubic yard, delivered at the site of the bridge, the cost of his masonry per cubic yard would have been as follows :—

Stone, dressed, delivered.....	$14 00
Cement mortar.....	2 60
Laying, scaffolding, &c.....	2 50
	<hr/>
	$19 10

And for backing the price would have been :

Stone, delivered at the site of bridge	$ 5 00
Cement mortar.....	6 00
Laying	2 00
	$13 00

And as the proportion of ashlar and backing are two to one, the average price of the masonry would have been $17.00.

The price of a cubic yard of concrete I estimate as follows :—

Broken stone, delivered on site of work	$ 3 50
Sand	0 20
Cement mortar.....	10 80
Laying and scaffolding.....	2 50

which price would be augmented by about 80 cents per cubic yard if the 80 cubic yards of pure mortar forming the 3-inch coating is taken into consideration, thus bringing the estimated cost of concrete work at a value of $17.80 per cubic yard.

It appears to me, therefore, owing to the high value of cement in Edmonton, which is $6 per barrel, the prices of concrete and of masonry at that place are about the same, and I therefore recommend that the price of the contract be allowed to remain the same, viz., $36,500.

I desire to add to the above that concrete work for bridge piers and abutments, is, in my opinion, much preferable to indifferent masonry work, and that this kind of work is now in general use where first-class stone cannot be found.

On the Canada Atlantic Railway, nearly all permanent bridge piers and abutments are built of concrete, and in Europe dock walls and foundations are also frequently built of concrete masonry, and one of the chief reasons that has to a certain extent militated against concrete work is the difficulty to obtain first-class cement.

In the present instance the contractor has furnished good cement, and under the superintendence of Mr. Arthur St. Laurent, engineer of this department, I have no doubt that the work will be done in a satisfactory manner.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) LOUIS COSTE,
Chief Engineer.

Acting on the report of my chief engineer, I left the contract in Mr. Lemoine's hands; but I may say that before I did so, Mr. Coste and myself tried to find out whether we could not procure stone in Manitoba. We made inquiries, but we found that the railway rates rendered it simply impossible.

Mr. DAVIN. What were the railway rates?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. From Calgary to Edmonton, ten cents per hundred pounds, and from Stony Mountain and other points in Manitoba, forty cents per hundred pounds for dressed stone.

Mr. DAVIN. Why would forty cents per hundred pounds for dressed stone make it impracticable to take stone from Manitoba?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The rates would amount to $15 per cubic yard, which was out of the question. Whether I was right or wrong in awarding the contract to Mr. Lemoine, events will prove. I know that the work is being carried out in a first-class manner. Only two days ago I received a resolution from the Edmonton Board of Trade thanking me for the way in which the work is being carried out. The masonry work will be completed by the end of June. It is to the personal knowledge of a great many members of this House that many works of this importance are now being built of concrete masonry. The work that the Montreal Electric Company are putting up on the Chambly River is being built of concrete, which is considered better even than stone work when the concrete is well done. Mr. St. Laurent is an engineer of vast experience who is testing cement every day.

Mr. DAVIN. Will the hon. gentleman send me the report of Mr. St. Laurent?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. With pleasure. I may be permitted to read the resolution of the Edmonton Board of Trade:

Edmonton, N.W.T., May, 1898.

The council of the Board of Trade have unanimously passed the following resolution:—

"That this council has viewed with pleasure the rapid progress made on the Edmonton bridge, and believe that the work reflects great credit on the contractor, Mr. Lemoine, and also the engineer in charge, Mr. St. Laurent."

The height of the piers was not considered quite sufficient. We decided that they should be raised two feet, at an additional cost of $1,500.

Mr. DAVIN. Why was it, when Mr. Lemoine came back to Ottawa and told the Department of Public Works that he could not build the piers and abutments of masonry, new tenders were not called for?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Because we were anxious that the work should be carried out immediately, and as the chief engineer, Mr. St. Laurent, reported to me—and I do not think his report can be disputed—that concrete work is even better than the stone which could be supplied there. I did not see any reason for losing any more time.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman's object was that the work should be done immediately, but he learned in the autumn, just entering into winter, that the work could not be proceeded with. Could he proceed during the winter?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No.

Mr. DAVIN. Where then did the immediate necessity come in?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I expected the work would be carried out quickly, and it has in fact been done more quickly than if we had called for new tenders. Mr. Lemoine was there with his plant and was ready to go on and he had been the lowest tenderer. And as my engineer reported to me that concrete work was just as good as masonry, I acted on his advice.

Mr. DAVIN. My hon. friend gave one reason why he entered into a new arrangement, and that was that he wanted to have the work done immediately. But the whole winter had to elapse, and it was only commenced the other day. Finding this reason insufficient, he now says that Mr. Lemoine had plant up there. What plant had Mr. Lemoine out there on the 17th August for the construction of concrete?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am sorry that I cannot give any other reasons than those I have given, which I think are quite sufficient. I am sorry if I cannot convince my hon. friend, but that is a pretty hard task at times. My conduct has been perfectly above-board, and I have acted on the advice of my officers. If they advised me wrongly, I would be very sorry for them, but they did not.

Mr. DAVIN. My hon. friend has not seized the point. He gives two reasons—first, that he wanted the contract carried out immediately, and next, that Mr. Lemoine had plant up there. If there is no foundation in fact for these two reasons then, he must find other ones. He could not have the bridge constructed immediately because the winter was coming on, and it is morally certain that Mr. Lemoine had no plant up there, because we are told that he made a hurried trip to Edmonton and came immediately back to the department and reported that he could not build the work of stone.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am sorry to have to repeat that I cannot offer any other reasons than those contained in the report of my officers, and which I considered sufficient. If the hon. gentleman will not acquiesce in the report. I will have to dispense with his acquiescence.

Mr. DAVIN. There is nothing in the report about immediate or about Mr. Lemoine having the plant up there to construct a concrete bridge. The hon. gentleman has given me two reasons, and I want to know whether there are any facts behind these reasons?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If the hon. gentleman has some charge to make or facts to show, let him bring them out. There is no use proceeding by insinuation. I am generally prepared to meet any accusations, and if the hon. gentleman has any to make let him make them. The contract was for masonry, but proper stone could not be found. The contractor went west and came back, and reported that the quarry pointed out by the engineer could not supply the stone required.

Mr. DAVIN. The question I put was why fresh tenders were not called for as this was new work. The hon. gentleman replied that he wanted the work done immediately, and he has admitted that it was then coming on winter and the work could not be proceeded with until the spring.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It was September.

Mr. DAVIN. Was it done immediately?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It was proceeded with immediately, but not as quickly as I expected. The ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) laughs, but he has seen many works that were not built as quickly as he expected.

Mr. FOSTER. I want a definition of the word "immediately."

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. What I mean is that I was anxious the work should be proceeded with immediately, and so it was, but it was not completed immediately.

Mr. DAVIN. When did the cement get out and the work begin?

Mr. OLIVER. I can perhaps throw some light on the subject. The work was commenced some time in the latter end of August or the beginning of September, and proceeded with until the ice took in the river in the fall. The foundations of two of the piers were completed last fall, and the abutments were partially completed. Preparations were made for the foundation of the third pier, but were not completed, owing to the early setting in of winter. Had that work been done last fall, it is very possible it could not have been completed this summer, as there would not have been sufficient time between the going out of the ice in the spring and the high rise of water in June to allow of the work being completed. So that the work that was done last fall was practical and substantial, and necessary to the completion of the bridge at a sufficiently early date this season to allow the superstructure to be put on during the summer.

Mr. DAVIN.

Mr. DAVIN. As my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) evidently knows a great deal more about the Department of Public Works than the Minister does, I will ask him a question—

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. He lives at Edmonton, where this work is.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman says the laying of the concrete foundation was commenced in August.

Mr. OLIVER. I could not say—the latter part of August or the first of September; but the work had made good progress during September and was continued during October and did not cease, I believe, until some time in November.

Mr. HAGGART. The principal point in this change, as I see it, is the change from masonry to cement. The Minister justifies the change by saying that the report of his officers was to the effect that one was as good as the other and that it would cost as much to put in cement as to put in rock.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Out there.

Mr. HAGGART. The Minister says that the stone cost about $14 per cubic yard at the quarry.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is the price given to me.

Mr. HAGGART. And in the work it cost about $17 per cubic yard. He says that the concrete would cost $17 per cubic yard. He bases this estimate upon a cost for concrete of $6 a barrel there. If he will look at the report of the Auditor General he will find that the hon. Minister of Railways gets his cement at Soulanges for $1.60 a barrel. He can get the very best Portland cement for $2 a barrel. I would like to know from the hon. gentleman, does it cost $4 per barrel to take it to Edmonton?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The acting chief engineer, whom I have just consulted, tells me that I have made a mistake and that, instead of cement being $6 a barrel there, it was $6.50. Of course, I have to take my officers as authority on these matters. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) has been a Minister and understands that point. The price was laid before me by the chief engineer himself. I remember perfectly well asking him at the time whether that was not too high. His answer was that he had received information on the subject.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. Minister must know, and his department must know, the cost of cement, because they use thousands of barrels a year, buying it delivered in Montreal. If they do not know the price, they can find it by consulting the Auditor General's Report. Does the hon. Minister mean to tell me that it would cost $1,000 a carload to take it to Edmonton? That is what it would mean if the cost is $6 or $6.50 a barrel there.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have the answer here in the form of a telegram from Mr. St. Laurent, dated the 5th May. This gentleman is in charge of the works. He wires:

Cost of cement, per barrel, delivered, $6.50.

What more can I say?

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. Minister says that it was on the report of his chief engineer, Mr. Louis Coste, dated 22nd September, that he gave the contract to build these works of concrete. My hon. friend from Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) tells us that it had commenced early in September. I have a question to ask my hon. friend. I have here what purports to be a copy of the report of Richard St. Laurent, engineer in charge, and it is dated "Department of Public Works, Canada, Resident Engineer's Office, Ottawa, 13th August."

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I explained that that was a mistake.

Mr. DAVIN. How does my hon. friend know?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My officers tell me so.

Mr. DAVIN. When will the hon. gentleman place the original of this on the Table?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Whenever the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) wishes. I have already given instructions to have it brought.

Mr. DAVIN. I shall be glad to see it. Now, as to this report of the chief engineer, is not $14 per cubic yard for stone at the quarry an exorbitant rate?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot judge these things. Let the hon. gentleman discuss them with the chief engineer.

Mr. DAVIN. Now, here is a paragraph which my hon. friend read:

As soon as the contract had been awarded, Mr. Lemoine proceeded to Edmonton, but he came back at once, and reported that he could not find stone of the dimensions or quality required by the specification. He was told to procure it elsewhere, but replied that he had also examined the stone at Calgary, and was of opinion that it would not be accepted.

Did Mr. Lemoine on that occasion see the Minister of Public Works?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think he did, but I do not remember.

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin), as I understand, was asking something with regard to myself.

Mr. DAVIN. No, that is of no consequence. I am now speaking in reference to Mr. Lemoine. He came back from Edmonton and reported about the stone, and the Minister says he probably saw him. Was the decision immediately come to then to build the bridge of concrete?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot remember. I know the whole thing was discussed.

Mr. DAVIN. If this decision was immediately come to, that will bear out what the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) says. He says that the concrete work was commenced, he thought, in the latter part of August, but certainly early in September.

Mr. OLIVER. I did not say that the concrete work was begun in August or early in September—

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. But the foundations.

Mr. OLIVER. I said that Lemoine had commenced his work at that time. I did not say the concrete had been commenced then. There was a great deal of preliminary work before the concrete could be laid. The bed of the river had to be dug out to make a place for the foundation. The piles had to be driven, abutments had to be dug out, soundings had to be taken, weeks of work had to be put in, expensive work, employing a large number of men, before the concrete work could be commenced. Now, in regard to this bridge, I may be allowed to take up a few minutes of the time of the committee, and my apology for doing so is that this bridge is in the constituency I represent, and that the town in which I live has put up $25,000 of its good money to help the construction of the work.

Mr. DAVIN. I want to ask the hon. gentleman a question.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. gentleman has taken up all this afternoon in regard to matters which do not concern him and in regard to which he is not informed; I think it is only fair that I should have a few minutes to give the committee some information on the subject. I do not know what object the hon. gentleman has in view, and those who are backing him in this matter; but if they are trying to make political capital against the Minister of Public Works in the matter of this bridge, I will tell them something of its history. The question of this bridge has been before the late Government and before the public for a number of years, and the people of Edmonton and those who are interested in building the bridge, were jollied along by the members of the late Government year after year; they were to be given this, they were to be given that, and they were to be given the other thing, but they got nothing except a great big game of talk, such as the hon. member has been giving us to-day. When the new Government came in the people of Edmonton approached them with the view of getting this bridge constructed, and they were successful in getting the new Minister of Public Works to take up the matter. The late Government understood the necessity of this bridge, and offered to construct it from time to time; but the last we heard from them was when the former Minister of the Interior made a visit to Edmonton and told us a very funny story. It was a great joke, and the end of the story was that if the brick staid up we would get the bridge. Well, the joke turned against the hon. gentlemen when election day came round; and I think that probably the effort of the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) will not tend to the security of his present position when the next election day comes round. When the new Government came in and the same representations were made to them that had been made to the old Government, this Government took the matter up and instead of giving us great big promises, they came down to business and they said: If you want a railway bridge at Edmonton and will pay the difference in cost between a traffic bridge and a railway bridge, we will pay the cost of a traffic bridge there. We closed with the offer at once, and put up $25,000, and the Minister of Public Works at once went on with arrangements to build the bridge. I may perhaps be allowed to go so far as to say that I had something to do in what may now be considered mistakes in regard to this bridge; that is to say, I pushed the Government with any strength I had for an early construction of the bridge. There had been so much dilly-dallying by the late Government that the people had lost confidence in the good faith of any Government in regard to this important public work, and they said: If we are putting up our money we want the work commenced, and we want it pushed. I pressed that view upon the Minister of Public Works, and he acceded to it. I suppose it was because he saw fit to accede to that view that he made the limit of time so short for the completion of the piers. I do not know any better reason can be given than that every pressure possible was brought to bear by those who are putting up one-third of the cost of the bridge, to get him to make the time limit as short as possible. That having been decided on, I must also take some responsibility for the matter of the stone. I was anxious that for that bridge local stone should be used if possible, and I asked Mr. Degagné to put in a sample of stone to see if it would be approved by the officers of the department. I have never seen the quarry, I did not know that the stone did not exist in blocks as large as was desirable. It was certainly of a desirable quality, it was accessible, and it would have been a good thing for the people and for the Government as well, if it had been available. But when the contractor came up and saw the quarry, he reported that it was not desirable. The engineer who came at the same time as the contractor, with the evident intention of pushing the work, then went up and examined the quarry as well, and he reported that the stone was not suitable. Now, I can assure the hon. gentleman that every effort was made by those of us who were interested in that locality to get that stone accepted by the Government, by the engineer and by the contractor, but we failed in doing so, and I believe now that it was in our own interest that the stone should not be accepted, because it was not suitable for the work. When the contract had been let on the understanding that the stone could be procured in the locality, and when it was found that stone could not be procured in the locality, it was then for the Government to decide whether they should make a new arrangement with the contractor or throw the matter over for another year. I can assure the hon. gentlemen who are interested that we, who, I think, were more deeply interested than they are, still continued to press the Minister for the early commencement and completion of the bridge.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
It will be completed in a short time now.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not say that the department were swayed by the pressure we sought to exert upon them, but at least they considered our views in the matter by making a new arrangement with the present contractor in order to get the bridge commenced last season so that it could be built this season. As I said a few minutes ago, owing to rise of water in the river in June, it becomes impracticable for a couple of months in the middle of the summer to do any work at all, and it is even now a question whether the piers will be built before that rise takes place, so that had a new arrangement not been made with the contractor last season, the construction of the bridge would certainly have been thrown over for another year, to the great dissatisfaction of the people in that part of the country, particularly as it is now known that there is railroad construction in prospect there which is dependent upon the construction of this bridge as a railway and traffic bridge. If it is a crime on the part of the Department of Public Works to go into a business arrangement with the people of a town who desire the construction of an important public work, and are willing to put up their money to aid the work—if that is a crime, then these gentlemen are justified in attacking the Minister of Public Works. If it is a crime for the Government to do all that can be done to procure the material required for any public work in the locality in which the work is to be constructed, then the Minister is open to their attacks; and if it is a crime for the Minister to desire the earliest possible completion of important public works that are desired specially by the people interested, then again he is open to their attacks. But I say that unless these are crimes, and they have not been crimes before in the history of this country, and they are not crimes in the eyes of the people who are interested, then it seems to me that the Minister is not open to their attacks, and I say that the time of this committee has been wasted during the whole of this afternoon, because there has been no allegation, there has been absolutely no proof, that there is any waste of public money, nor that there has been any waste of time on the part of the Government in the matter of this bridge.

As to the difference in the cost of material, between stone and concrete, I am not an expert in these matters, and some hon. gentlemen opposite seem to throw doubt on the estimated cost of the material as laid down at Edmonton. The engineer gives the cost of cement at $6.50 per barrel. The hon. member for Hamilton, who knows what the freight rates on railways to that country are perhaps better than any other hon. member, has informed me that the rate of freight on cement is $1.80 per 100 pounds, and there are 360 pounds in a barrel. So that the cement is being laid down at Edmonton for less than the ordinary rate of freight on the same, and if there is a steal as regards the charge for the cement, it is a steal on the part of the Government against the contractor and not on the part of the contractor against the Government. I am very sorry that the time of the House should have been occupied with a profitless criticism of what is an important public work, and which has been carried out in a business-like way, and certainly to the expressed satisfaction of the people who are interested not merely as spectators, not merely as overseers of the work, but who are putting up at least one-third of the actual cash required for the construction. I submit they are the parties who are entitled to full consideration in the matter. If they express satisfaction, I do not see there is any room for the dissatisfaction expressed at such great length by the hon. member for Western Assiniboia.

Mr. DAVIN. I wanted to get the Canadian Pacific Railway rate, and I have them here for May 18th, 1898.

The PRIME MINISTER. What was it a year ago?

Mr. DAVIN. It was just the same a year ago, 99 cents per 100 pounds.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

SONS OF ENGLAND BENEFIT SOCIETY.

Bill (No. 122) to incorporate the Supreme Grand Lodge of the Sons of England Benefit Society (Mr. Bertram) was considered in committee and reported.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 147)—from the Senate—for the relief of James Pearson.—(Mr. Sutherland.)

Bill (No. 129)—from the Senate—to incorporate the Tobique Manufacturing Company.—(Mr. Taylor.)

LAKE BENNETT AND KLONDIKE RAILWAY AND TRAMWAY COMPANY.

The House proceeded to the consideration of the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 31) to incorporate the Lake Bennett and Klondike Railway and Tramway Company.

Mr. HAGGART moved that the said amendments be read the second time and concurred in.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). This Bill has been standing over for some few days in order to ascertain whether, if possible, some arrangement could be arrived at whereby the objection to leaving the Bill in its present form might be overcome. The hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), who I regret is not present, has been interested in the Bill, and I have had several interviews with him, and have stated my views with regard to the amendment made in the Senate to the 4th section. That amendment provided that in addition to the power given to the company to lay out, construct and operate a railway and tramway within the points indicated, it also conferred upon the company the right to build a wagon road to run on either side of the Miles Cañon and White Horse Rapids and from Marsh Lake to the Hootalinqua River. It appears to me, in view of the legislation which has passed this House during the present session incorporating two companies—one to build a tramway on the east side of the Miles Cañon and build a tramway on the west side—that it was objectionable to allow any interference with the rights which we were conferring upon these companies until at least it would appear that no reasonable effort was being made to exercise the powers which were being or had been conferred upon those companies. I have been informed, and those who are interested in promoting this Bill assert with confidence, that on either side of these cañons or rapids there would be no sufficient opportunity for laying down a wagon road and a tramway both, side by side, and that one would necessarily interfere with the construction of the other. Under those circumstances I pointed out to the hon. member for Pictou that it would not seem to be fair that we should confer this power, which might be exercised at once before the other companies could get into operation. At the same time I conceded that it would be unreasonable to prevent this company from building a wagon road if they reached these points, and the necessities of their enterprise required that a wagon road should be constructed. So I drafted a section, which met with the approval of the hon. gentleman, and, with some little alterations which he has suggested, I have it in my hand; and, if it would be in order to make a motion in amendment to the Senate amendment, I would now move what I propose, and what was agreeable to the hon. member for Pictou as an amendment to the Bill. I would propose to add the following at the end of subsection 2 of section 4, to become subsection 3 of section 4:

The building of a wagon road under the authority of this Act shall not prevent any company authorized during the present or any previous session of Parliament from constructing and operating a tramway along and over the route of such wagon road, and any such company may, subject to the provisions hereinafter, enter upon and take possession of the whole or any part of such wagon road if the same is deemed more favourable by such company for laying down their tramway than the adjoining lands along the route of the wagon road, and may build their tramway thereon and use and occupy the same for tramway purposes.

In addition to that clause, it was agreed between the hon. member and myself, that words should be added which would enable this company, if it should build the wagon road, to claim compensation for the outlay on its construction, should it be appropriated by the company that has been chartered during the present year. The hon. gentleman stated, and I have no doubt he is correct, that this provision follows the usual language which is employed in Acts of Parliament for this purpose:

Whenever such tramway company, or person acting for it in that behalf, fails to agree with the company building or having built the wagon road as to the value of any lands or property so entered upon, taken or promised as aforesaid, the company or person acting for it may tender the reasonable value in the estimation of the company or person so acting with a notice that if the same is not accepted the question will be submitted to the Governor in Council.

The compensation money agreed upon or awarded by the Governor in Council for any land or property acquired or taken by the company shall stand in the stead of such land or property; and any claim or encumbrance upon such land or property shall, as respects the company so taking the land or property, be converted into a claim to such compensation money or to a proportionate amount thereof, and shall be void as respects the land or property, which shall by the fact of the taking possession thereof become and be absolutely vested in the said company, subject always to the determination of the compensation to be paid and to the payment thereof when such conveyance, agreement or award has been made.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not know whether I understood the hon. Minister of Railways aright or not, that he had a conversation with the hon. member for Pictou, and that he was agreeable to the amendment.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, he drafted the latter portion of the amendment, and I drafted the first portion.

Mr. HAGGART. Then it is all right.

Mr. SPROULE. I may say that the hon. member for Pictou spoke to me before he left the House, and stated that it was satisfactory so far as he was concerned.

Amendment agreed to, and amendments made by the Senate read the second time, and concurred in.

TORONTO AND HUDSON BAY RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. CLARKE moved that the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 77) to incorporate the Toronto and Hudson Bay Railway Company be read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. SPROULE. I have looked over those amendments since last meeting, and I do not think they make any material change in the Bill, but accomplish what was intended to be accomplished, only in another way.

Motion agreed to; and amendments read the second time and concurred in.

SUPPLY.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. DAVIN. My hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) rose to give us some instruction concerning the building of the bridge at Edmonton. His first remarks left the impression that the concrete work had begun last year, whereas his further explanation showed that what he meant was not that the concrete work began last year, but that certain excavations, which had to be made in any case, were made last year, and that we knew. He then devoted some time to arraigning me for having attacked the construction of the bridge. But that I have not done at all. On the contrary, I am very glad the bridge is being built, and I am finding fault because it was not built more rapidly, so that the precious time, the loss of which the hon. gentleman mourned, was really wasted by himself and not by me.

I want to call the attention of the Minister of Public Works and the committee to a paragraph in Mr. Coste's report :

As soon as the contract was awarded, Mr. Lemoine proceeded to Edmonton, but came back at once and reported that he could not find stone of the dimensions or quality required. He was told to procure it elsewhere, but replied that he had also examined stone found in Calgary, and was of the opinion that it could not be accepted. Then Mr. Arthur St. Laurent, engineer of this department, was sent to examine the quarry, and he reported as follows, under date of August 30th, 1897.

I call the attention of the hon. Minister to this fact. The contract was signed on the 17th August, in Montreal, and Mr. Lemoine, according to this report, went from Montreal to Calgary, from Calgary to Edmonton, from Edmonton to the quarry, inspected the quarry, came back to Edmonton, thence to Calgary, and thence to Ottawa, and the department instructed Mr. Arthur St. Laurent to examine the quarry at Edmonton, and Mr. St. Laurent had time to examine it and make his report dated August 30th at Ottawa, for the report was apparently dated at Ottawa, but even if it were not, that would not matter, for the purpose of my argument. Here we have an achievement that outstrips the wildest imagination of Jules Verne in his "Tour of the World in Eighty Days." His speed was far surpassed by the rapidity with which those gentlemen can telegraph themselves bodily around. I take the liberty of sending the hon. Minister the Canadian Almanac, so that he can follow the dates himself. If he will turn to August 17th, he will find that it was a Tuesday. Let us suppose that Mr. Lemoine left the very day the contract was signed—a very unlikely thing. Let us suppose that he left Montreal on Tuesday, the 17th of August, for Edmonton. He would first reach Calgary, and then the first connection he could possibly make would be on Monday the 23rd, for the trains leave Calgary for Edmonton on Wednesdays and Mondays. Let us suppose that he left Calgary on the morning of Monday the 23rd, he would arrive at Edmonton between seven and eight o'clock in the evening of the same day. On the 24th, if he took a good team, which no doubt he did, to the quarry, he could make the fifty miles in half a day, and reach there about mid-day on the 24th.

Could he inspect the quarry, so as to know that the stone was good or not, in half a day or even a day and a half? Would he be in a position to judge by merely looking at the surface stone? Everybody knows that the surface stone of quarries is always bad. Then, to return, the trains leave Edmonton on Tuesdays and Thursdays and therefore he could not have left for Calgary before the morning of the 26th, and if he did he would have only had time to make a very perfunctory examination of a few hours of the quarry. He would arrive in Calgary about eight o'clock in the evening, and could not do anything on that evening. Supposing he devoted Friday the 27th to examining the quarries in Calgary, which would take him a whole day anyway, he could only leave Calgary on the night of the 27th or on the 28th, and therefore could not possibly arrive in Ottawa before the 1st of September. Yet we are asked to believe that he did all this travelling and inspection and went into the office of the department in Ottawa long before that date, because the moment he went into that office, instructions were given to Mr. St. Laurent to test the report of Mr. Lemoine. I do not care whether Mr. St. Laurent happened to be west in Calgary and was telegraphed to go and test the report or was sent from here, he could not possibly have examined the quarry at Edmonton and come back to Ottawa and written a report there on the 30th of August, the day before Mr. Lemoine arrived, and the day before Mr. St. Laurent could have got any instructions. I am afraid that this report, on which my hon. friend relies, is not one that will acquit him in the eyes of the people of Canada of having been reckless with their money in the price he admits he gave for the concrete. Mr. St. Laurent, according to this report, went and examined the quarry at Edmonton some time before the 30th of August. Now, how could he have done that? He writes :

I find that the stone from the Degagné quarry is positively not suitable for bridge purposes. The stratification of the stone is too defective, cut up in thin vertical seams, and so on.

If he made such an examination, that must have taken him a day or two. If he started from Ottawa, it would take him four or five days to get to Edmonton and a day to get to the quarry and another to get back, and if, as appears from the document laid on the Table, he wrote his report in Ottawa, some fourteen or sixteen days would have had to elapse, and that would have to count from the date Mr. Lemoine returned from the journey he had commenced on the 17th of August. Such a story has never before been placed before Parliament in the history of our public works. Mr. Coste's report further says :

From these reports you will see that it would be unsafe to use any of the stone found at or near Edmonton, or at or near Calgary, and the nearest place where stone could be found would be Winnipeg, but I submit that freight rates make the use of that stone prohibitory.

Under the above circumstances, having ascertained that good clean gravel can be found on the banks of the Saskatchewan—

Now, I ask especial attention to this——for concrete work, I have the honour to strongly recommend that the substitution of concrete for masonry be permitted.

Therefore, up to the date of this report, the permission had not been given—or else that paragraph is as inexplicable as the other paragraph of which I have spoken. But I call your attention, Sir, to this expression “good clean gravel,” because I am going to comment upon it in a moment.

With regard to the price, I find that if the contractor had been able to procure dressed stone from the Degagné quarry, even at the very high price quoted to me in June last, viz., $14 per cubic yard, delivered—

Mind, he admits that $14 per yard for dressed stone was an exorbitant price. I ask attention to this, because the relationship between stone and concrete is one that I intend to deal with—the relationship between concrete and stone not an exorbitant price but at an ordinary price. That relationship is about as 8 to 4. And, if cut stone at an ordinary price is to concrete as 8 to 4, how much higher must the first figure be that would express the relationship between stone at $14 per cubic yard, which Mr. Coste himself admits is a high price, and concrete——delivered at the site of the bridge, the cost of his masonry per cubic yard would have been as follows:—

Stone dressed, delivered.....	$14 00
Cement mortar.....	2 60
Laying, scaffolding, &c.....	2 50
	$19 10

And for backing the price would have been:

Stone delivered at the site of bridge	$ 5 00
Cement mortar.....	6 00
Laying	2 00
	$13 00

And as the proportion of ashlar and backing are two to one, the average price of the masonry would have been $17.06.

He goes on:

The price of a cubic yard of concrete I estimate as follows:—

Broken stone, delivered on site of work, $3.50.

This is at page 4 of his report. But on page 3 he tells us that there is any quantity of good clean gravel to be had on the banks of the Saskatchewan. If so, what does he want with broken stone, for the gravel is better than broken stone? But, even if he wants the broken stone, everybody knows that $3.50 is an extravagant price for it, and that you could get enough good clean gravel—which is better—for a cubic yard of concrete for 30 cents. But suppose you take what I am told by contractors is an extravagant price—suppose you say 50 cents. The amount of sand, he puts down at 20 cents—he could get it for 10 cents. In this report he quotes the price of cement per barrel at Edmonton at $6. To-day we are told it is $6.50. I will not quarrel with that. The Minister of Public Works knows that last year cement was sold at Montreal at $1.50 for the four hundred-pound barrel. This year it is higher, I know. But take the price given in the report, and, if any one wishes to dispute this price, I am ready to demonstrate from other sources, what should be the cost of a barrel of cement in Edmonton. Well, how much cement is required to make a cubic yard of concrete?

Mr. DAVIN.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. A barrel and a third.

Mr. HUGHES. What weight?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There would be 375 pounds of cement in a barrel.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). The standard weight of cement in a standard barrel is 360 pounds.

Mr. DAVIN. I wish to take the hon. Minister's own figures. With a barrel and a third for a yard of concrete, and $6 a barrel for the cement, that would mean $8 worth of cement for a yard of concrete. Then, add 50 cents for gravel, and 20 cents for sand. The laying, I am told, could be done for $1.25. This would make the cost of the concrete and laying it at Edmonton less than $10 per cubic yard. And I am in a position to show that there are contractors who would have been very glad to lay it for less than $10 at Edmonton. Here, then, we have more than $7 a yard paid in excess of what should have been paid. I want to ask the Minister of Public Works, in passing, what brand of cement is being used?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. A Belgium cement of the first class.

Mr. DAVIN. I have here quotations as to what cement can be laid down in Edmonton for, to-day: Belgian brand, 350 pound casks, “Camel” brand, “Parrot” brand and White Star brand, $5.21, $5.28 and $5.41 respectively.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. What year?

Mr. DAVIN. This year; it was cheaper last year.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, it was $2 a barrel higher, at least. The hon. gentleman does not know anything at all about it.

Mr. DAVIN. There is the “Stork” brand, Belgian brand, $5.57; “White’s” English brand, $5.99. How can any man take a pencil in his hand and find the amounts on which the Minister of Public Works should give this enormous price for concrete so greatly in excess of what the justice of the case would demand? Now I want to call attention to the closing lines of this report:

In the present instance the contractor has furnished good cement, and under the superintendence of Mr. Arthur St. Laurent, the engineer of this department, I have no doubt that the work will be done in a satisfactory manner.

Why, Sir, he talks there of a contract in the past tense. The contract had been given, although this is the report on which the Minister of Public Works bases his giving the contract. But I have to call the attention of the Minister to a thing he did not read in his defence. Here is an extract from the report of the Committee of the Privy Council for the giving of this contract, approved on the 20th October, 1897, and this is based on a memorandum of the Minister's of the 14th of October. He could not legally make a contract without its bearing date, at the very nearest, on the 20th of October, without that Order in Council he could make no contract; yet he has read to us a report of the 22nd of September to justify his giving the contract, and that report implies that the actual contract that he says was given in consequence of a report, had already gone into effect:

On a memorandum dated 14th October, 1897, from the Minister of Public Works, submitting that in July, 1897, tenders were called for by public advertisement for the construction of the piers and abutments of the proposed bridge across the Saskatchewan at Edmonton, N.W.T., and that on the 17th of August, 1879, a contract was entered into with Mr. François Lemoine, of Montreal, the lowest tenderer for the work mentioned, the amount of the contract being $36,500.

That the specifications forming part of the said contract stipulate that the masonry was to be built of rock-faced ashlar from a limestone or granite quarry accepted by the engineer.

That as soon as the contract had been awarded, Mr. Lemoine proceeded to Edmonton, but he returned with the report that he could not find at Edmonton stone of the dimensions or the quality required by the specifications, and that he had also examined the stone which could be obtained from Calgary, and was of opinion that it could not be accepted for the same reason.

The Minister states that Mr. Arthur St. Laurent, an assistant engineer of public works, who was then sent by the chief engineer to examine and report whether at or near Edmonton or Calgary any quarry could be found out of which stone suitable for the intended purpose could be procured, reported against the use of various kinds of stone which were available at those places, they not being at all suitable for the work in question, for the reasons given in his report, which is embodied in the chief engineer's report, hereto attached.

That in this latter report the chief engineer of the Department of Public Works states that it would be unsafe to use any of the stone reported upon by Mr. St. Laurent, and that he has ascertained that good clean gravel can be found on the banks of the Saskatchewan for concrete work, and he recommends that the substitution of concrete, which is now in general use whenever first-class stone cannot be had for masonry, be permitted in the construction of the piers and abutments of the proposed bridge at Edmonton, and further, that as the price of concrete per cubic yard is about the same as that for masonry at Edmonton (for instance, the price per cubic yard for masonry being, he thinks, $17.96, and the price per cubic yard for concrete $17.80 at that place), the amount of the contract remains the same, viz., $36,500.

The Minister, in view of the foregoing, recommends that authority be given to amend the contract.

Now, let this be noticed: Nearly a month after the report of Mr. Coste, which report speaks of the contract as going into operation, the Order in Council that was to authorize the contract, asks that permission be given—

To amend the contract entered into with François Lemoine, of the 17th of August, 1897, for the construction of piers and abutments of the proposed bridge across the Saskatchewan River at Edmonton, N.W.T., in so far as the material to be supplied in the construction of the same is concerned, and to permit the contractor to build them of concrete instead of masonry, as stipulated in said contract, the amount of the contract to remain the same.

I asked for the new contract, and I was told by the officers of the department that the Order in Council was practically it—in fact there does not seem to have been any formal new contract entered into. It will be seen that the documents are self-contradictory, and the theory of those documents is one that cannot be for a moment sustained. I quoted from an offer to take brands of cement to Edmonton; I am now going to show what is the relationship between the ordinary price of cut stone, and the ordinary price of cement. I have here tenders for contract No. 37 of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and also tenders for contract No. 41 of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Here is the proportion that exists between these two classes of work:

Out of forty-eight tenders there is not a single tender that places concrete as of the same value as masonry, and in nearly every case there is a relationship running from more than double to something like two-thirds to one-third.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). What is the date of the tenders read, and where were the works? Was it for a similar kind of work?

Mr. DAVIN. The works were on the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. DAVIN.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). Were they under water or on piers, or of what kind?

Mr. DAVIN. The bridge work was under water.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Where were they?

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. Minister would not allow me to ask him questions, and I am now going to make my argument. Taking the figures of the hon. Minister himself, it cannot be shown that concrete placed at Edmonton was worth more than $10 per cubic yard. If we take the figures I have quoted, the very highest sum that should have been paid was $9 per cubic yard. Here are the plans, and it will be seen from what I have pointed out that there are 1,450 cubic yards. My own calculation is that $9.21 would have been ample for that concrete laid.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My engineer is gone.

Mr. DAVIN. I do not know how to account for what took place. There is more than one Napoleon, I fear, in this Government. We know what one Napoleon can do, and the Heavenly Twins are equal to anything either separate or together—the apostate Castor of Quebec and the hon gentleman who has charge of the Interior Department. There are, I say, some 1,450 cubic yards. That quantity at $9.21 per yard would amount to $13,354. I will put $1,500 for riprap, and that would give a total of $14,854. How does that compare with $36,500? There is a difference of $21,646, or a profit on one item alone of about 150 per cent. Take the piles. There are forty-six piles in each abutment and that would give ninety-two piles as the total quantity. I have here a letter from D. R. Fraser, of Edmonton, as follows:—

Edmonton, Alberta, 25th April, 1898.

Dear Sir,—In reply to your inquiry for prices of material that would be required in the construction of the bridge here, I have pleasure to give you the following quotations:—

- 12 x 12 spruce, 12 to 30 feet long, $16 per M.
- 8 x 8 spruce, 12 to 30 feet long, $16 per M.
- 10 x 10 spruce, 12 to 30 feet long, $16 per M.
- Plank, spruce, 2 and 3 in., 30 feet long, $16 per M.
- Piles, 12-inch diameter, spruce or tamarac, 12 to 30 feet long, $12.50 per M.
- Ready for delivery in May, June and July; 2½ per cent off for spot cash.

Hoping that these figures may be satisfactory, and to be favoured with your orders,

I remain,

Yours truly,

(Sgd.) D. R. FRASER.

Now, Sir, as I say, there were 92 piles, and if we take these piles at from 15 to 20 feet long at $1 a foot; if they were 15 feet long you have $1,380, and if 20 feet long, $1,840. Now, piles at $12.50 per thousand, board measure, is a fraction less than five board feet to one lineal foot of the pile, or 1,250 multiplied by 5 and you get $6,250 per thousand, or 6.250 cents per foot. This contractor, therefore, gets for driving piles 93.750 cents per foot, whereas 12 cents is enough. One contractor offered to do the work for 30 cents a foot for piles, and that would have left him 12 cents a foot clear profit. Now, if the piles are 15 feet long he gets $966 in excess of what would have given him a large profit, and if 20 feet this contractor gets $1,248 more than would have left him a large profit. Add the profit on piles to $21,646.50, and you have, according as the piles are 15 or 20 feet long, $22,787.10 or $23,115.30, on this contract of $36,500 for a lump sum and so much for the other details; or, you have 153 per cent profit in one case and 155 per cent in another. Now, Mr. Chairman, I say in regard to this contract, we have suspicious circumstances connected with the letting of this contract, and in the next place we have an incredible story. We have suspicious circumstances connected with the changing of the contract, we have calculations which will not bear analysis, and the conclusion to my mind is irresistible that it was determined to give the contract to Lemoine, that conditions were attached to the specifications to make other contractors tender high, that Lemoine must have been told that no fines or forfeitures would have been enforced, and it is to be feared the transaction is typical of what is now the system in the Public Works Department. I say, Sir, that it is a most serious thing; I say that the whole story leading up to the change from masonry to concrete reads like a fable on analysis, and that when it was determined to change it from masonry to concrete no attempt was made to make a better bargain. No attempt was made to get, as could have been got in a few minutes, tenders from others for the concrete, and no consideration was taken of the fact that one of the contractors had tendered 70 per cent lower for piles driven, than François Lemoine. Therefore, I come to the conclusion that Lemoine was a favoured individual, and now that I have completed my statement of the circumstances I would be glad to know how the Minister is going to explain them.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Shall this item be carried?

Mr. DAVIN. No, Sir, it will not be carried without some explanation.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not think I should repeat what I have said. I have no more to say.

Mr. DAVIN. Well, Sir, then I understand that he is incapable of explaining the incredible story told in this report. He is incapable of explaining the extraordinary story, which I will emphasize to his heart's content:

As soon as the contract had been awarded, Mr. Lemoine had proceeded to Edmonton, to come back at once and report that he could not find stone of the dimensions or quality of the specifications. He was told to procure it elsewhere, but replied he had also examined the stone found at Calgary, and was of opinion that it would not be accepted. Then Mr. Arthur St. Laurent, engineer of this department, was sent to examine the quarries, and he reported having examined the quarries, under date August 30th, 1897.

The copy of the report placed before us here is dated Ottawa, August 30th, 1897. On the 17th August the contract was signed in Montreal, from the 17th to the 30th of August Lemoine could go to Calgary. He could not leave Calgary before the morning of the 23rd; he could not leave Edmonton before the following Thursday; he says that he examined that quarry at Edmonton and the quarries at Calgary, and that he came back here, and saying he could not carry out his contract, Mr. St. Laurent is sent to make a report, and he could make a report dated the 30th of August. Sir, if the Minister sits silent there it is because he cannot say a word.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Shall this item be adopted?

Mr. DAVIN. No, not before we get an explanation. I will extort the courtesy of an attempt of an explanation from the hon. Minister anyway.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am very sorry the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) takes things in that way. I have not been unwilling to give to the House any reasonable explanation, but I do not feel bound to say anything more, because I think I have satisfied all reasonable members of the House that I have done the best in this case. Four tenders were received, as follows: F. Lemoine, $36,500; Joseph Bourque, Hull, $42,759; Mr. Burns, $44,900; Bourque & Harrison, Winnipeg, $59,500. I awarded the contract to the lowest tenderer. I do not think I have much more to say. The changes made have been fully explained, and I have read to the House the reports of the engineers on which I based my action. I cannot undertake to convince my hon. friend (Mr. Davin) and now that I have said this much, if he feels bound to make any more speeches, he is perfectly welcome to it. He has the full right to talk just as long as he wishes, but I cannot give him any more explanation. If I had any more I would give them to him. When he alluded to these contracts of the Canadian Pacific Railway he should know that in all these contracts the comparisons that he made about concrete in the Edmonton bridge have no bearing at all. I say again, I have no doubt that the reasonable members of the House are perfectly satisfied that this contract was a fair one, and that everything was done above-board.

Mr. DAVIN. I doubt if in the whole time I have sat in this House, and observed this House from that gallery, anything has occurred so calculated to give pain as what has just occurred here. Here is a contract for something like $40,000, and when circumstances of a character to create suspicion in Parliament and in the public mind are brought before the Minister, all he can do is to say, "I cannot say anything, I cannot explain anything"; and he has something like the effrontery to say that he has given explanations. He has not given explanations; he has not attempted to explain the impossible story that is told. Take that comparison which I made between the tenders of these various contractors for stone, masonry and concrete. The point of that is that in forty-eight tenders there is a large disproportion between the cost of masonry and the cost of concrete. In the present case the ground of calculation of price for stone masonry is admitted to be high. Everybody knows that $14 per cubic yard for dressed stone is an exorbitant price; all it costs in Ottawa is something like $7; and, in these forty-eight tenders there is not a single instance of a contractor estimating the cost of concrete as anything like the cost of dressed stone. Yet we have here the cost of concrete measured by the cost of dressed stone at a fancy price—an exorbitant price as compared with the usual prices; and I say it is a humiliating and painful thing. We have had no explanation, and I see the acting leader of the House turn to the Minister of Public Works and bid him be silent and not attempt to explain, because he knows he cannot explain without probably putting his foot in it, and letting us see exactly how things are. My object is not, of course, to attack the building of that bridge. My object is to do what we have a right to do here—criticise the expenditure of public money and guard the treasury which the former leader of hon. gentlemen opposite said he had to lie on his arms to guard from the plunderers of his own party. Our duty is not only to do that, but if we have a Government that either in whole or in part is corrupt; if any member of that Government, especially any man who is at the head of a great spending department is corrupt, it is a sacred duty to the credit and the honour of Canada to try and drag into light any iniquities that may have been perpetrated. That is a duty which I will never shrink from so long as I have the honour of a seat in this House; and I only regret that the duty has been thrust upon me to drag into light in this instance an act which the Minister responsible for it has to stand dumb before, and impotent to explain or to cover over. I must say, from the way the hon. gentleman deals with his estimates, that he is pretty skillful to weave a web; but this time the hook is in the gills of the fish, and the more he wriggles the deeper the hook will go.

Mr. TARTE.

Mr. FOSTER. We will get through as quickly as possible, but I scarcely think the Minister of Public Works will allow the statements that have been made to go without at least some explanation.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am very sorry I cannot say anything more to the hon. gentleman. If he has followed me, he will admit that the explanations I have given are complete, and could not be more complete. I think the report I have read to the House fully justifies every circumstance of this case. As my hon. friend will admit, I am always happy to give any explanation that is asked of me; but I do not feel bound to answer two rambling speeches that have no bearing at all on the case. If there is any point on which my hon. friend desires information, I will be very glad to give it; but I think I have answered every point that has been made.

Mr. FOSTER. It is a little difficult for me, just listening to the statements on either side, and not being an expert—being much in the same position as my hon. friend in that respect—to make a technical criticism; but there are some points that struck me as being necessary to be explained of which a full explanation has not been given by my hon. friend. The points are these. Here is a large public work. Granted that it had been in the air for a considerable length of time, and that the Minister was very anxious to bring it to a conclusion, as he thought time was the essence of the contract. These considerations are all very well as modulating the hon. gentleman's action, but they ought not to be allowed to go too far. There are certain things to be guarded against even in the face of such a laudable desire. The total work will probably come to about $75,000, of which $25,000 are to be paid by the people of Edmonton. Here is one item of expenditure, involving some $36,000. It is peculiar that my hon. friend should advertise in eastern papers for tenders from eastern contractors for a distant work of such magnitude, and give only nineteen days' time for the tenders to come in and be opened. That is the first thing that strikes a man who is not technical, but who has a little common sense. No man can make a reasonable tender for a public work of that size, thousands of miles away, satisfactorily in the time that elapsed between his receipt of the call for tenders and the time that the tenders were to be opened, if that total time is only 19 days. How is it possible for a man to get on the ground in that time? How can any man, who has not been on the ground, adequately make an estimate for a public work at Edmonton, where the circumstances, the geography of the country, and the lay of the land and other circumstances are different and present their own difficulties? That is the first point, and the hon. gentleman ought, in calling for the construction of large public works of that kind at such a distance, when he depends on eastern contractors to make the tenders, to give them reasonable time to visit the place and make their investigations, so as to base their tenders upon practical knowledge.

What is the other point in the way of criticism? The hon. Minister, in calling for tenders, gave but little over two weeks for men to make up their tenders, and coupled with that limited time the condition that the whole work was to be finished in three months. Doing his best, it would take an eastern contractor nearly a fortnight before he could get his men out there and he would then have to look for his stone material and the hundred and one things incident to a contract of that kind, and yet that whole work, of a magnitude measure by the expenditure of some $36,000, was to be done inside of three months. I am not putting it too strongly when I say that these two conditions are, under the circumstances, unusual. My hon. friend will not deny that. And to that extent they are suspicious. In a department, which is not noted for the lightning speed with which it takes hold of large public works and finishes them, such conditions are certainly unusual. My hon. friend has business right under his nose, which it was essential should be done at once, and yet with which he has dilly dallied, as one hon. gentleman has explained it, for more than a year without having yet commenced it, and there are other public works close by which have been lacking completion for a long time. But here is a distant work, and lightning speed is made in calling for tenders, and the whole thing must be finished inside of three months. Those two things are unusual, and to that extent are fit subjects for criticism, and my hon. friend must not find fault because he is criticised. From the calculations given to-night, it appears that more than lightning speed must have been used by the gentlemen who was sent to make what were supposed to be the necessary inquiries for the guidance of the hon. Minister. No man could go to a quarry 50 miles from Edmonton and return to Calgary and get back there to Ottawa and make his report in the short space of the time in which he appears to have done all this, from the reports submitted to this House. I would like to have a photograph of the man who did this, because I would like to have embalmed in my memory the officer of the Department of Public Works who nearly ran himself to death in order to find where there was a stone quarry and make his report to the Minister. What happened afterwards? The conditions upon which those tenders were called for were that the abutments were to be made of ashlar masonry, whatever that means, but it certainly does not mean cement. They were to be of stone, and every man who tendered understood so. Nobody had the least suspicion that they were to be of anything else than masonry. More than that, there was attached to the contract the condition of quick fulfilment within three months, and a penalty of $2,000 for not doing the work, and of $50 for every day delayed in doing it over the three months. All those things were difficulties in the way of an ordinary tender, but were not difficulties in the way of a man who happened to have the ear of the Minister or a pull on the party. There was no difficulty in his way, because he could go upon the assumption that he would in any case escape the penalty and the fine.

What happened after the lightning investigator had done his work and come back and made his report to the Minister that stone of the proper kind could not be found at Calgary or Edmonton? The Minister's engineer made a report in which he recommended that concrete be substituted for stone. Now, that varied the condition entirely. The call for tenders was on the basis of stone being used. Then the information was elicited that stone of a proper quality could not be found out there, and that consequently the department was going to build with concrete made from cement. Why was it not considered a matter of prudence and of right dealing with the public that this altered condition should be allowed to inure to the prospective benefit of the public? The conditions were altogether changed. There was no longer any penalty, no longer a fine for delay, the three months time was indefinitely extended, and the material was entirely changed from stone to something else. Would it not then have been prudent for the Minister of Public Works to have advertised for new tenders? That would not have taken much time. It certainly would not, according to the lightning speed which the Minister displayed before. He only allowed 19 days for the first tendering, and it would only have taken 19 days more to call in the second tenders, and it is impossible for the hon. Minister to argue that a delay of 19 days would have been in any way fatal to the speedy building of that work at Edmonton. But the hon. gentleman took care not to do that. To those three criticisms, which are founded in a fair basis, we have not had a fair reply.

The hon. Minister said he did not call for tenders the second time, for two reasons. One was that he wanted the work immediately proceeded with, and the other was that Mr. Lemoine had plant there and consequently would be able to do the work more speedily. Now, the statement that Mr. Lemoine had any plant there was challenged in this House. A member of this House, on his own responsibility, questioned the misstatement, and give it as his opinion that there was no plant there. Has there been any proof that there was? No one is going to say that he would distrust the word of the Minister. That is not the point in criticism at all, but every member has a perfect right, when a Minister gives a reason, to question whether it is well founded, and the Minister has no right to refuse to reply. Has he any proof to give? If there was a plant there, he or his officers must know it, and he could easily demonstrate that in this House. As to the immediate building of the bridge, judging by the Minister's previous action, the only delay that could have taken place by the calling of new tenders would have been 19 days. If I had been Minister, I would have considered that insufficient in each case. But taking his own rule of 19 days, that would have been sufficient delay in which to ask for tenders on the altered conditions, and the hon. gentleman would then have had the benefit of public competition on the new conditions, which are absolutely different from the old ones. He did not get the work immediately done. It is not yet done, and a delay of 19 days would not have made any essential difference. The statement is made, and it is borne out by figures, that cement can be taken to Edmonton this year and concrete can be made of it there and laid, at a figure not exceeding $10 per cubic yard. And the hon. Minister is paying $17 per cubic yard.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). There is cement and cement.

Mr. FOSTER. Not in this case, because the Minister of Public Works says he is using Belgian cement and the figures quoted here are for Belgian cement.

Mr. HUGHES. Is it $17 per cubic yard of cement?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Not for the cement alone, but for the—

Mr. FOSTER. For the concrete.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Quite so.

Mr. FOSTER. An hon. gentleman rises here and gives quotations from dealers showing the figures from which they are prepared to lay down this material. A calculation is made and admitted by the House as to the quantity of cement it takes to make a cubic yard of concrete—a barrel and a third, or about 500 pounds—and, adding what is necessary for gravel and sand, with a good price for laying it, and you do not exceed $10 per cubic yard. The Minister of Public Works, under this privately-given contract, is paying $17 per cubic yard. I have never seen it before, and I would not like to see it now that a Minister should sit in this place and say: I have said all I have to say. If he does not answer he must expect to be condemned. There will be a suspicion that he had no answer to give, and that he has thrown up the sponge. I would not like to see my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) in that light. He occupies a difficult position; many eyes are upon him; many thoughts are thought about him; and I am anxious that he shall acquit himself like a man, and shall make himself a grand success in this Cabinet, of which he was the founder and builder, and of which he is to-day the directing genius. The big policeman from Ontario no longer counts. When the wiry little man from Quebec issues his ultimatum—it goes. Now, I say to that hon. gentleman: Rise to your responsibility; do not sit silent under an accusation of this kind; do not let the world say that you have no answer to give. These are the points of my criticism. Are they fair or not? I leave it to my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) to give his opinion.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I must again thank my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) for the great interest he takes in me. I hope that he and I shall live for some time more together in this House.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). In your respective places.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In our respective places. I quite admit that if I had not already explained the point just made by the hon. gentleman I should be bound to make an explanation. But when he says that I sit here and make no answer, he is quite unfair. If I remember aright, I spoke for over an hour on this very question. I do not like to speak too much on any question; I am not in favour of long-winded speeches. On this occasion, I think I have made the point very clear, reading not from my own speeches, but from the reports of competent men. Well, now, my hon. friend insinuates, in so many words, that these two officers, Mr. Coste and Mr. St. Laurent, are corrupt men.

Mr. HUGHES. Or blunderers.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That they are corrupt men. The insinuation is clear, for I did not make these reports. Mr. Coste made the reports on information furnished by Mr. St. Laurent.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) would allow me, there are two points to which I would like to call attention. In the first place, he should not put words in my mouth as to insinuation of corruption on the part of his officers. I do not think that is fair. The other point is that as a Minister he is responsible, and I do not care if he has 500 officers, and they make 500 reports. It is his duty to make up his mind as to the action to be taken, and, when the action is taken, he is responsible.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I understand that. But the hon. gentleman has admitted, as we knew before, that he is not an expert. I am not an expert either. When Mr. Coste presented to me the report I have read to the House, stating on his reputation and his knowledge as an engineer that concrete, in his opinion, would cost $17 per cubic foot at Edmonton, I had nothing to do but to accept that report.

Mr. FOSTER. I say quite differently—

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not object to be interrupted, but I wish to finish my statement if my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) will allow me. When Mr. Coste made this report as chief engineer, I questioned him very closely. I quite understood that there was a change and it would be challenged in the House. He submitted to me the two reports of Mr. St. Laurent. These reports proved in a conclusive manner that the quarry at Edmonton would not supply suitable stone—

Mr. FOSTER. I do not question that.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Then, we all agree upon that. That is a very important point. I admit now that sufficient information had not been obtained by my engineers, and it is through this that this trouble has arisen. I told Mr. Coste, when he came with this report, just what I am saying now. I asked him how it was that he had in his office a sample of the stone out of which that masonry was to be built. He said: I made an investigation and had every reason to believe that the stone was good. But the stone was found not to be good, and changes had to be made. Mr. Coste reported to me that the prices he laid before were the real actual prices that the contractor, Mr. Lemoine, had to pay for the broken stone, for the sand, for the cement, and for laying a scaffolding. Hon. gentlemen opposite challenged these prices. If they will make a careful calculation, a fair and honest calculation, they will find out that the cement alone necessary to build a yard of concrete will cost $8.70. Besides the cement, you have to have the broken stone or the gravel and the sand, then you have to pay for the labour of mixing and for laying and scaffolding. I suppose it cannot be disputed that it will cost $8.70 to build up a yard of concrete. There remains, then, over $1.30 for the work of preparing the mortar, and so on. Well, it will be readily assumed that those prices are fair.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman has given us the cost of the cement, now will he give us the cost for a cubic yard of each of the other materials?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. These are the prices my chief engineer has given me: Broken stone, delivered on the site of the work, $3.50 per cubic yard. This is Mr. Coste's report. I am not an expert, and do not profess to be. I say once more that a Minister should not be accused when he comes before Parliament with the report of his chief engineer. If Mr. Coste is an ignorant man, if he has deceived me in this case, the sooner I know it the better.

I have a right as a Minister, having taken office, having retained the officers which were appointed by my predecessor, to expect from the other side of the House better treatment than is being given me. I have kept in my employ the officers who were appointed by my predecessor, and when I come before Parliament with calculations made by those officers, my own honour is assailed. I say it is not fair, and I shall not stand it very much longer.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman does not wish to stand it, he can sit it; but as long as he is a member of this House, and we have seats here, we will criticise these things, no matter what officers make them.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have the floor. I will say immediately that the words I have just spoken were not addressed to the hon. gentleman. This is what I say, that if Mr. Coste has deceived me, I shall not stand that very much longer—that is just what I mean. I quite admit, no one will admit more readily than myself, the right of members of Parliament to criticise me; but I say that if officials appointed under the late regime deceive Liberal Ministers, we are not bound to stand it. Let the hon. gentleman understand me well, I am not addressing myself to them at all. They have no doubt a right to criticise everything that I bring before the House. I am sorry that my officers, in whom I have confidence, are placed in that difficult position, I am sorry for them; I think they are advising me to the best of their ability. I have been reproached over and over again by Liberal members of this House for retaining officers that had been appointed under the late Administration; and since my estimates have been discussed before the House in the manner that is well known, I have been reproached more severely than ever. I have been told this: There are some of your officers who are trying to put you in a hole. But I do not believe it, yet I am speaking in the presence of the men who have cast that reproach at me. As I have said, I am not an expert. I come before this committee with calculations made, I say it again, by officers who were trusted by the late Administration. If it were only the exactitude of those calculations that was assailed, I should not speak as I do; but when my own honesty is assailed on account of those calculations, I resent those accusations, because they place me in a position in which I should not be placed. Now, Sir, I listened with respect to every word that my hon. friend uttered.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? When you speak of $3.50 a yard, do you mean a yard of broken rock, or is it the portion of the broken rock that makes up a yard of concrete?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Here are the words of the report of Mr. Coste, which I hold in my hand :

Price of a cubic yard of concrete, I estimate as follows :—Broken stone delivered on the site of the work, $3.50, sand 20 cents, cement mortar, $10.80, laying and scaffolding, $2.50.

Those were the figures put into my hand, and on those figures I acted. I may have been wrong, but I hope not. My hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver), who lives in Edmonton where the work is being carried on, says that I am right. The town of Edmonton is contributing $25,000 to this work, and I say that if anything had been going wrong, if an excessive price had been paid, I would have been informed of it. I read to the House a resolution of the board of trade congratulating me on the success of that very work. Now, Sir, I was reproached by the hon. gentlemen on account of the short time that was given to the tenderer. I may say that the officers of my department inform me that the usual time given is 30 days. My hon. friend from Alberta explained in a very clear way this afternoon the reason why we proceeded a little quicker. The season was advancing, Parliament had just been prorogued, and I could not deal with that question during the session, of course. As soon as the session was over, I took it up, and asked for tenders in the month of July. The first contract was given in the month of August. As the hon. member for Alberta explained, the season is short, and my chief engineer, who knew the place well, and Mr. St. Laurent, who had gone on the spot and made a plan, both informed me that the work could be carried out in three months. I had to take their word for it, as I am not an expert. The reason why we shortened the time for the tenders was because both these gentlemen told me that the work could be done in three months.

There was competition, for we had four tenders. The lowest tender was accepted. I have given all the information in my possession, and there is no other to be furnished on this question. The reason why the time after the receipt of the tenders was short was because the season was brief, and my engineers thought the work could be carried out during that season. My friends at Edmonton were very anxious to have the work carried out immediately, and we were endeavouring to comply with their wishes on that point. The hon. gentleman has expressed his desire to have a photograph of Mr. St. Laurent. He is an old appointee of the department, and was appointed to his present position by Sir Hector Langevin ten or twelve years ago. I think he is one of the ablest young engineers in the public service. I believe he is thoroughly honest and honourable, and I will keep him in his present position because I have full confidence in his ability and honesty.

Mr. TARTE.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I fully endorse the character given to Mr. St. Laurent. I know him personally, and he is one of the best men that could be employed by the department.
