Twitching of the Nerves Broken-down System

Now Entirely Cured—Never Used Any Medicine With Such Benefit as Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Headaches, sleeplessness and nervousness are often very disagreeable, but when your nervous system gets into such a condition that the nerves twitch and jerk, and you have peculiar nervous sensations, you are in a dangerous condition for grave ailments. Everybody dreams the thought of paralysis or locomotor ataxia. Nothing is worse to look forward to than Mrs. McKellar's case. She writes: "I was injured some years ago, and that led me with a broken-down nervous system. I could not sleep, and my nerves were in a terrible condition. I then began using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and can say that I never used any medicine that did me so much good; in fact, I am entirely cured of my old trouble. The Nerve Food not only strengthened the nerves, but also built up my system in every way." Under more recent date Mrs. McKellar writes confirming her cure, and states that she has had inquiries from many people who had heard of the great benefits she obtained from Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, 50c a box, for $2.50. The Last Proof-Reader.

When the story of Memnon is printed. And the blinder has laid down his tools; When none of the facts have been stinted—And the deeds of the wise and the fools Have been written by prophets and sages—And found in the rawhide of Man; Then God will blue-pencil it pages, As only the Almighty can. He will see the Kings of the Ages As they rest in their slumbered graves. And measure their virtues with gauges That He'll use for masters and slaves. While Princes whose castles were freighted With laurel wreaths, honors and fame, May find that their souls have been made Though longer than ropes to the same.

The Home Ties.

What could be keeping Bill? Nance Andrews got up and looked out on the stifling street. Bill had never been so late before. They had been married three months, and this was the first time he had not been home to tea. She looked at the fish on the stove. It had lost all trace of its former plumpness. Now it was all crispness. She had filled the kettle twice and the water had boiled away, and still he did not come. Had anything happened to him? That was the thought that kept coming into her mind and would not be driven away. A sound started her and she listened. Someone was coming up the stairs. Who was it? It certainly was not Bill. She knew Bill's step as well as she knew his face. It was a firm buoyant step, and this one was rather tottery, and not even. Vicious accidents came to her in a flash, and she clung trembling to the table for support. She straightened herself and looked at the door. Whoever it was had not bothered to knock. And then round the doorway there came a face, a sheepish, foolish looking face. "Bill," said Nance in a whisper. And then, louder, "Bill!" "Yes, darling!" said Bill, and he stumbled across toward her. "I'm a bit late. The boss kept me."

"The boss kept you?" she said in a tone of disgust. "You're drunk, Bill Andrews!" "No, Nance, my love, not drunk, just a little—"

But Nance interrupted him with a gesture full of scorn. "You can't even talk plain," she said. "You are drunk, more shame to you, Bill Andrews! And it's a bitter day that ever I saw you I'm thinking."

She flung herself on the bed and threw her apron over her head sobbing. Bill watched her with a queer, maudlin expression in his eyes. He was genuinely troubled, but could not explain just at that moment that he was sorry.

And then Nance got to her feet. She did not speak, but went into the tiny room which was her bedroom. She came out at once with her shawl round her head.

"What are you going to do, Nance?" Bill, even in the muddled state of his wits, knew that something was going on that meant disaster. "Go!" Nance said quietly. "Why were should I be going? Didn't I tell you, when we were walking out, that the first time I found you drunk I'd go away and never, never come back to you? I meant it. Bill Andrews!"

Her voice rose, passionately, indignantly. "I'm going home!" Bill got untridly to his feet. He had always got round Nance by a caress. She could never withstand him when he meant to get round her, but when he got to the table, he stood there swaying and clutching at the cloth. He could not reach her.

Nancy watched him with eyes that held all the bitterness of death. This was her Bill and he had promised her. As she turned and fled downstairs Bill lurched forward, and then fell over the plates and cups on the table.

When he awoke the next morning he felt strangely uncomfortable. He was sprawled across the table, and Nance was nowhere to be seen. He sat up, trying to recall the events of the night before. Slowly it all came back to him. Nance had gone home. He got to his feet and then held his head. How it ached! And Nance not there! Nance, whose respect he had so cherished, had seen him drunk, and had left him.

He set about getting himself some breakfast, and then went off to work. Nance would come back for dinner, of that he felt quite convinced. But when he got home there was no sign of Nance. She had not been down to see how he got on, had not cared enough about him, he thought, with a rising sense of resentment. And when she had returned at night he made up his mind to go upon and find her and compel her to come back. His worst instincts were aroused. He felt she had not treated him fairly, and so she must be brought to her senses.

Truantly he showed himself at the little house from which he had counted Nance. If he had gone the right way to work he might have perceived Nance to return, for she had found her welcome home none the less.

Her mother had told her plainly enough that one could not leave one's husband for having a glass of beer. Her father had been even more plain with her.

"You married him for better, for ill, my girl. You can't play fast and loose with a chap like this. Go home to him and he'll be sorry enough, no doubt."

But Nance would not make the first advance. However, when she saw Bill's hury form in the door, a spasm of thankfulness came over her. After all, he was her man and she must keep by him whatever he had done. But that feeling quickly passed. Bill was looking at her queerly. Just as if he had bought her, body and soul because he had paid for her keep for three months.

"You've got to come home with me, my lass," he said grimly. "I'm your lawful lord and master, and you promised to obey me. I say you've got to come home with me."

Nance looked at him and her mouth twitched. She did love him just terribly and this short parting had shown her how dear he was to her, but she was not going at his command. "I'm not going to come for your order, Bill Andrews," Nance said quietly. "Besides, I don't want a man who drinks."

"You know that's not true, Nance," said Bill indignantly. "I never took a drop since I promised till yesterday and you know it. Can't you forgive a fellow just once?"

He was pleading now. There was something about the slim figure of her that frightened him even as he was forced to admire her. "How would I be sure you would keep your promise this time?" she said slowly. She had already taken a step toward him, but still only saw the hidden sting to her words.

"So you aren't even going to trust me again, then," he said angrily. "You're one of those good sort of women who send a man to the bad by the time he's left alone. You mustn't use an ordinary man who's no saint."

A wave of scarlet passed over Nance's face, and she stepped back sharply. She would not go to him now. He had hurt her, had sneered at her. She had never heard him speak so before. It made some queer pain sting her, and before she had time to say a word the door had opened and had banged again.

Bill had gone! Weeks went by. Just as the little flat had been home to Bill in the days of their happy months of married life, now it was still peopled in shabby fashion with Nance.

But Nance in the flesh he rarely saw. He had taken the first step, and she had refused to trust him. He was not going to eat humble pie any more.

And so at nights, he sat and brooded over his empty hearth. A woman who was not particular as to cleanliness did for him; but oh, how different it was from the way Nance had looked after him.

He had heard that Nance had got work again. She had been a smart workwoman for days before their marriage, but now that she should have humiliated him so, cut Bill to the quick.

When the call of war came, he went glad to be able to do something that would make him forget, but he never went near Nance, even then. And before he expected he was sent to the front. Here he had time, deep in the sludge and mire of the trenches through that long, dragging winter to reconsider things. He had let too much matter part him from his wife.

If only he was spared! Somehow out here, facing death at every turn he kept that life was immeasurably better than he had realized before. Love was more than pride. No, it would never be such a fool again as to risk love as he had done.

me had tidied it up. And then he heard a sound. It was a queer, rustling sound, and it came from the corner. Scarcely daring to move he tiptoed across the room. There in a tiny cradle, lay a black haired baby.

Was it—could it be? And he had never known. With clumsy arms he lifted the baby up and held it. Then the door opened, and Nance in her shawl, as he had seen her so often in days gone by, stood there.

With a bound she was across the little room. "Bill!" she cried. "My Bill! Oh, thank God! I'm sorry, Bill. Forgive me! I'll stand the mad, dazed. Nance wanted forgiving. He's Nance wanted him."

Bill took three steps to the cradle. Nance watched him with piteous, eager eyes. "Let there, young nipper," he said, and there was a proud catch in his voice. Then he turned and opened his arms. And with a little cry Nance ran in, and he closed them round her.

Paralyzed Limbs.

"To-day it is sleeplessness, headache, digestive trouble, and irritability. Next thing you know some form of paralysis has developed. Mr. Alex. Homburger, 10 Moore street, St. Catharines, Ont., writes: 'Nervous trouble developed into paralysis of the limbs so that I became helpless. Doctors failed me, but after using ten boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I resumed work, and now feel better than I did for 20 years.'

Starting at Defeat.

Under the above caption, the New York Times, in a recent issue, has the following excellent article on Germany's present position in the war:

Germany now is the plight of a chess player, handicapped by having fewer pieces, whose brilliant and audacious attack has failed. His adversary, even with his plan of attack, can win the game simply by forcing an exchange of pieces until at last the advantage of a mere pawn is insurmountable. Germany cannot afford to exchange pieces; yet she will be obliged to do so. She cannot afford to compete in killing an even terms; yet that is what her enemies now are in a position to force upon her.

The elementary principles of warfare are very simple. You beat your enemy in one of two ways only; you kill him or you capture him. To be able to starve, to break him economically, that is only to capture him by the rules of Germany and Austria was clear from the beginning. With 115,000,000 people they challenged 235,000,000. That was one against two in terms of population. In terms of soldiery it would be practically the same, not at first perhaps, but ultimately so, for the ratio of effective fighting males to the total population does not vary greatly among the countries of Europe, except, of course, as one may be better prepared than another for first offensives. Therefore, warfare in fact, for each Englishman, each Frenchman, each Russian and each Italian soldier killed, a German or an Austrian soldier also lost his life was and is a kind of warfare utterly without hope of success to Germany. One German might, in the average, kill his man—and a half (no "entente militarist could expect more) and the disaster would be only a short time postponed.

From the outset it must have been clear to the General Staff that German victories would have to be victories of strategy. Competition of slaughter was hopeless, by reason of arithmetic. Teutonic valor could not destroy all the non-Teutonic armies of Europe. But Teutonic strategy might accomplish miracles. Armies that could not be destroyed might be captured, and besides, at the very first, the Germans had the numerical superiority in effective numbers. The enemy's strength was partly potential. Germany's was actual. There fore, Germany had to win the war before it could settle down to a contest in killing, before her adversaries could begin to force her to exchange pieces.

If you think of it so, the outlines become all very clear. Preparedness to strike the first crushing blow, the haste to reach France even at the cost of invading Belgium, and, failing in that, the heroic, magnificent attempt to get a decision in Russia, pursuing it headlong at a pace to break men and beasts, all of this was with one aim, namely, to win a war again, a superior numbers by strategy. And every effort has been baffled. No army has been captured; no great military decision has been won; but, on the contrary, non-Teutonic Europe's potential force has become actual, and Germany's enemies in their own way may exchange Englishmen, Frenchmen, Russians and Italians for Germans with abolute certainty that the supply of Germans will run out.

With this in mind the Allies' drive on the west front assumes to Germany an ominous aspect. In the Champagne country, where in 451 Attila, the great Hun King of the barbarians from the North Sea to the boundaries of China, was defeated by the Romans and their Christian allies, the Franks and Visigoths, the French in the year 1915 may fail to break the German line and fold it back right and left against itself disastrously, which would be a triumph combining both killing and strategy. Further north the Anglo-French forces may fail to bend backward in Flanders the top of that same line, breaking it away from the North Sea. Strategically, that is by the Germans, and yet they are bound to lose it irretrievably in another way. It forces them to exchange life on fairly even terms, and that is the very thing they can least afford to do. It brings them rapidly nearer to the point of being overwhelmed by sheer numbers in competitive killing.

That the Teutonic allies have failed to gain one decisive triumph and have now to face the arithmetic of their physical inferiority is a fact which cannot be sealed, no more from Germany than from the world, and no doubt explains the anxiety of German comment on the allied offensive at the west. All that Germany has won is territorial, which, in the event of a capital strategic victory she might have been able to trade upon, but which, in any other case, she will be obliged to defend with declining relative forces. Her territorial successes in Russia require to be held by a line so long and vulnerable that to weaken it much by transferring men to the western front would invite disaster. They are, in that sense, a liability. Russia has only to bide her time and produce numbers beyond Germany's power to resist. In every other way Germany has failed. Her airships, her submarines, her frightfulness, all have failed, and she is reduced to the arithmetic of killing. In that direction lies certain and utter defeat. And the fact of its having come to this is closes the door to further hope of a miracle in the art of war which alone could avert or postpone disaster. No wonder the thought has occurred to Berlin of defending Germany on the Rhine.

The man who doesn't know is first conditions about distributing the knowledge that he hasn't got.

The caution of the New Englander in giving a direct answer to a direct question is proverbial. Two natives of a New Hampshire town met after the funeral and the first asked: "Was not your father's death very sudden?" Slowly drawing one hand from his pocket and pulling down his beard the other replied thoughtfully, "Wall, rather sudden for him."

THE ACADIAN.

WOLFVILLE, N. S., OCT. 22, 1915.

Editorial Brevities.

Senator David MacKenzie, of Cape Breton, has been appointed Lieutenant Governor of Nova Scotia. The term of Governor MacGregor expired on Monday of this week, and Mr. MacKenzie assumed office on that day.

No soldier can be stopped for debt. In this connection the following significant notice is inserted in the last issue of the Militia Order: "Notice is hereby given to the general public that a soldier's pay cannot be seized for debt, and consequently merchants who sell to soldiers on credit do so at their own risk."

The Baptist Convention of the Maritime Provinces closed its annual meeting at Truro on Tuesday night. There was a large attendance of delegates and ministers, and much enthusiasm was manifested throughout the meetings. Among those present from Wolfville were Dr. and Mrs. G. E. DeWitt, Drs. Oakes, Cutten, DeWolfe, Archibald, Manning, Brown; Revs. Harkness, Freeman, Barrs, McGregor, Gullison and G. R. Starr, Esq. Dr. DeWolfe was elected President of Convention.

New Compulsory Attendance Act.

The attention of parents and guardians is called to the new Town's Compulsory Attendance Act, which passed the Legislature of Nova Scotia, April 23rd, 1915. This Act is more stringent than any Act heretofore in force. This Act compels the Town to enforce the same and provides:—

"That every child between the ages of six and sixteen must attend School during School hours on every day on which such School is open, unless such child has been furnished by the School Board with a certificate excusing such child from attendance, by mental, physical or other good and sufficient reasons.

"Any child over twelve years of age who has passed a satisfactory examination on Grade VII work is exempt. Any child over thirteen years of age who shall show to the satisfaction of the School Board that it is necessary for him to go to work, may also be granted a certificate exempting him from attendance, while actually in some remunerative employment.

"Further, every parent or person shall cause such child to attend School as provided above, and every parent or person in charge of any child who fails to send such child to School shall be liable to a penalty of twenty dollars and in default of payment, to imprisonment not exceeding one month.

"After any child has been absent five days, not necessarily consecutive, without good and lawful excuse, the teacher is required to report the same to the Board and that it is necessary for him to go to work, may also be granted a certificate exempting him from attendance, while actually in some remunerative employment.

"For the past few years the Children's Aid Society and other organizations have endeavored to interest our quiescent School Board in the education of the young of Wolfville, but so far without avail. It will be interesting to note what will be done in the direction of enforcing the act. The people of Wolfville are expending a large amount annually on their public schools and as far as we have been able to observe, with rather meagre results.

Childhood Constipation.

Baby's Own Tablets will promptly cure constipation of childhood. They act as a gentle laxative, regulate the bowels and stomach, and are absolutely safe. Concerning them Mrs. A. Crowell, Sandy Cove, N.S., writes: "I can strongly recommend Baby's Own Tablets to all mothers whose little ones are suffering from constipation. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

The Boston American Baseball team, known as the Red Sox, are again the world's champions in the baseball world, having won four straight games from the Philadelphia National team in the world series recently played.

NOT ENOUGH CHILDREN

ever receive the proper balance of food to sufficiently nourish both body and brain during the growing period when nature's demands are greater than in mature life. This is shown in so many pale faces, lean bodies, frequent colds, and lack of ambition.

For all such children we say with unmistakable earnestness: They need Scott's Emulsion, and need it now. It possesses in concentrated form the very food elements to enrich their blood. It changes weakness to strength; it makes them sturdy and strong and active.

Odds and Ends About the War.

Here is an extract from a letter written by a young American who is serving with the Allies, which recently appeared in a Maine newspaper: "I've been mixed up with the British soldier for some time now, and I tell you there is not a cleaner fighter nor a better gentleman in the world than the average Englishman. They know how to win and they know how to lose. They never forget they are gentlemen no matter what they do, and they have the courage that knows no ending. Braver and truer men than the officers never lived. They share the hardships with the men, and never ask them to do what they won't do themselves. The men worship them and will follow them anywhere. . . . You say it is not my quarrel. I say it is the quarrel of anyone worth calling a man. I'm not fighting for Great Britain. I am fighting for Humanity.

Since the war started Germany has done great things, no doubt, but after all, she has failed in every big thing she has undertaken. She failed to crush France, to destroy the Russian army, to take Egypt, to blockade England, to take Calais, and so far to terrorize England with her Zeppelin raids.

A good deal of capital is being made out of the large German population in the United States. But the anti-German, pro-Ally element, is much stronger, the figures standing about four millions to six in the matter of birth. In blood or descent the preponderance in favor of the Allies is still more marked.

These lines, by Harold Begbie, the well-known English journalist, are, I think, worth reproducing:

"What will you lack, sonny, When the girls line up in the street Shouting their love to the lads come back From the foe they rushed to beat? Will you send a strangled cheer to the sky, And grin till your cheeks are red? But what will you lack when your mate goes by With a girl who cuts you dead? Where will you look, sonny, When your children, yet to be, Clamor to learn of the part you took in the war that kept men free? Will you say it was naught to you, if France Stood up to her foe, bunked; But where will you look when they give the glance That tells you they know you funk'd? How will you feel, sonny, How will you feel in the far-off winter night, When you sit by the fire in an old man's chair And your neighbor talks of the fight? Will you slink away as it were from a blow, Your old head shamed and bent, Or say—'I was not with the first to go. If I went, thank God, I went.' Why do they call, sonny, Why do they call? For men who are brave and strong? Is it naught to you if your country fall And Right is smothered by Wrong? Is it football still, and the picture show, And the pub and the betting odds, When your brothers stand to the tyrant's blow And the Empire's call is God's."

Nova Scotia Sunday-School Association.

More than 200 delegates from all parts of the Province are expected to attend the annual Convention of the Nova Scotia Sunday-School Association, to be held in Halifax, Oct 26-28.

The Convention of this year offers unusual values, and is creating special interest among Sunday School workers. Rev. Anderson Rogers, D.D., formerly of Halifax, now of Antigonish, is the President, and Rev. W. A. Brown, D. D., of Chicago, is to be the International Representative. Dr. Brown, while in Halifax, will be the guest of the Rotary and Commercial Clubs at their noonday lunch hour, and will address the High School students of the city. In addition to the usual programme and popular evening addresses, simultaneous meetings will be held on Wednesday evening at the J. Wesley Smith, and first Baptist churches.

Special conferences for memorial elementary, secondary, and adult workers, also for county and district officers, have been arranged. The exhibit of the latest in Sunday School methods and matter promises to be unique. Sunday School workers interested in the development of the youth of the Province have a special privilege in store of hearing the best in men, and seeing the latest in matter in their Departments.

Montreal Journal of Commerce:—The campaign for good roads being carried on throughout Canada is only part of the general awakening of the people to the causes which have led to the enormous increase in the prices of the necessities of life. Motor transportation is being rapidly developed and utilized by the farmers. By this means, greater distances can be covered and farmers at a considerable distance from markets with the advent of better roads, will be able to bring their produce to the consumer in larger quantities and at less expense.

Crop Report.

Ottawa, Oct. 15, 1915.—The Census and Statistics Office issued today its monthly report on the 6-10 crops of Canada, based upon returns made by crop reporting correspondents at the end of September. The report gives the second or provisional annual estimate of the yield of the principal grain crops, a statement of the quality of these crops at the time of harvesting and the condition of root crops on September 30.

YIELD OF PRINCIPAL GRAIN CROPS.

For wheat, oats, rye and flax the provisional estimate now issued shows yields higher even than those reported a month ago, but in the case of barley and oats the present estimate is less than that of August 31. The total wheat crop of Canada is now placed at 336,258,000 bushels from 12,986,400 acres, representing an average yield per acre of 25.89 bushels. This total is 174,978,000 bushels more than last year's inferior yield of 161,280,000 bushels, the crop this year being therefore more than double, or 108 p. c. more than that of last year. It is 104,541,000 bushels, or 45 p. c. in excess of the previous highest yield of 231,717,000 bushels in 1913 and 149,232,000 bushels or 72 p. c. in excess of the annual average yield of 199,026,000 bushels for the five years 1910 to 1914. Of oats the revised total yield is 481,035,500 bushels from 11,305,000 acres, an average per acre of 42.53 bushels. Barley comes out at 50,868,000 bushels from 1,599,350 acres, an average per acre of 33.70 bushels. Rye is now at 2,478,500 bushels from 112,000 acres, or 21.97 bushels per acre, an increase of 18.64 bushels from 1,832,000 bushels from 1,027,600 acres, or 12.48 bushels per acre. In the three Northwest provinces the estimated yield of wheat is 392,200,000 bushels and of oats 305,089,000 bushels. The remaining grain crops of Canada, whose yields are now reported on for the first time this year, are as follows: peas 3,240,400 bushels from 196,210 acres, an average of 16.52 bushels per acre; beans 511,000 bushels, 43.31 acres, 13.71 bushels per acre; buckwheat 8,101,000 bushels, 341,800 acres, 23.50 bushels per acre; mixed grains 17,128,500 bushels, 466,800 acres, 36.69 bushels per acre; corn for husking 14,594,000 bushels, 253,370 acres, 57.62 bushels per acre. In arriving at these estimates certain deductions have been made for quantities reported as destroyed by the weather in the province of Ontario, chiefly sprouting in stock through the excessive rain during August. These deductions do not represent a total loss, as the sprouted grain will be used for feeding. They amount on the average to 11 p. c. of the total crop for wheat, 9 p. c. for oats, 8 p. c. for peas, and 6 p. c. for beans.

QUALITY OF GRAIN CROPS AT HARVEST.

Correspondents were asked to report on the quality of the grain crops at the time of harvest, as measured against a standard of 100 representing grain well headed, well filled, well saved and unspiced to any appreciable extent by frost, rust, smut, etc. The average results for the whole of Canada are as follows: wheat, oats, barley, rye, and mixed grains from 90 to 95; peas, beans, buckwheat, flax and corn for husking from 79 to 84. The quality of spring wheat is exceptionally high in the Northwest provinces, being 93 in Manitoba, 96 in Saskatchewan and 97 in Alberta. Last year the corresponding figures for Canada were below 80 in nearly all cases and even in the good season of 1913 they were not so high as they are this year.

CONDITION OF ROOT CROPS.

The condition of root crops at September 30, measured against a standard of 100 as representing a full crop, is for Canada 73 for potatoes, 55 for turnips, 87 for mangolds, carrots and sugar beets, 83 for fodder corn and 88 for alfalfa. These figures are below those of September 30 last year for potatoes, but are about equal in the case of other crops. Owing to the heavy rains, the potato crop this year will apparently turn out to be poor, especially as compared with last year's splendid showing. In New Brunswick and Nova Scotia the condition of potatoes is only 68 and 69 and in Ontario it is as low as 54.

More Than Good Looks

Taking care of your teeth means better health. Neglect of them leaves acids and hurtful germs of decay that harm not only the teeth but often seriously affect the throat and stomach. Proper care of the teeth means daily cleansing with something that will remove the acids and destroy the germs.

REXALL TOOTH PASTE

does these things, we believe, better than any other dentifrice. It not only tends to preserve the teeth and keep them free from tartar and discoloration but it helps insure the health of other parts of the digestive apparatus. Also delightful to use.

Letters to the Editor.

Ma Editor:—I have been thinking seriously of the position we in this Dominion are in, if this war should end in favor of Germany. What means could we take to defend ourselves under present circumstances? We have good men, but they are altogether untrained in the use of rifles, machine-guns, and artillery, neither do they know anything about camping, or marching, or intrenching, and it takes time to make soldiers out of the raw material that perhaps never fired a gun, even at a rabbit.

In my young days every man from 18 to 45 years was called out to drill at least one day in the year; and the whole militia of the province was kept organized from the first. Drafts were made whenever necessary to garrison forts or quell disturbances. Besides that, nearly every boy was taught the use of the shot gun, and you could scarcely find a house in the country without a loaded gun hanging up ready for use on hawks, foxes or other game. We don't find that now. Everything is changed. The old flint-lock smooth-bore musket that was only good for 100 yards has given place to rifles of precision, good for 1,000 yards, which require practice sighting. We found in the old volunteer companies that the men who knew best how to use the shot gun were, as a rule, most successful with the rifle at target practice.

I should like to see the whole militia reorganized and drilled, but I do not suppose that the country is ready for that yet, though it may come before long. Meantime cannot something preparatory be done to help make things look a little better or more secure.

What I am about to propose may not have any effect on this war, but it may place us in a better position for future emergencies:

First, put every school boy over 12 through a course of physical and military training as part of his education. The details of this can be worked out later.

Second, divide the country into sections or districts, to count in for the rural, say, 30 or 40 men from 16 to 45 years. In the villages and towns they may be larger. Have regular days and hours arranged for drill, so that a qualified drill instructor can attend to a number in succession. Rifle practice should follow preliminary drills. Prizes should be offered for the highest average of points, both for individuals and sections, to keep up the interest and induce competition between the different sections or platoons. When drilled sufficiently form these into companies with the regular number of officers and non-commissioned men, then into battalions and regiments with annual drill and review.

If an emergency occurs you know where your men are, and what they have had enough drill to be able to work together and to use the rifle. They are called out for service to preserve order, defend the country, or to do our full share in the service of the Empire to which we belong.

Hoping that these crude ideas may lead to something practical, I shall subscribe myself as an old

MILITIA OFFICER.

A bad automobile accident occurred on Sunday last at Willow Hollow where a Windsor car was accidentally drawn into the ditch and turned over. The accident was caused by the driver attempting to close the rear door and losing control of the car. Miss Hopkins, of Beaver Bank, who has been relieving the station agent at Horton Landing, who was an occupant of the car, was badly injured. Her left elbow was crushed and her right hip badly injured. Dr. Avery deWitt was summoned and attended to the injuries and Miss Hopkins was taken to her boarding place at Hortonville where at last report she was doing well.
