"Here is a Novel that is a best seller. It is perhaps the best Western Story yet written. Cloth 50c. Postage 2c.

WHISPERING SMITH

(By Frank H. Spearman).

An exciting, adventurous railroad story, located in the Red Desert. A feud between Sinclair, foreman of the bridge, and McCloud, division superintendent, has its beginning in a railroad wreck. Sinclair loses his position and joins a band of outlaws who rob the railroad.

A posse of men under "Whispering Smith" pursues them and there is plenty of gun play.
A breathless tale of intrigue and villainy, realistic of the new life of the west, but softened and brightened by a double love story.

Love a Conqueror

OR WEDDED AT LAST.

CHAPTER XLVIII.

"Heaven knows," Sir Hugh went on, the same unutterable sadness in his voice, "that I never meant to kill him. I had arranged to meet him on the cliffs that morning, and he angered me by his insults and insinuations and—"

Once more his voice failed him, and he became so faint that Guy was alarmed, and anxiously assisted Shirley in her efforts to restore him. It was in Guy's strong arms that he was carried, not back to the attic-room where he had been concealed ever since the Christmas night when he had almost met his death in the snow, but into the inner bedroom on the ground floor; and here he was laid upon the bed, weak and faint, with the hue of death on his cheeks and lips, and dark marks, almost like bruises, under the dim eyes. Even had he been the murderer in intention that he had been in deed, no one could have denied him the meed of pity that his condition demanded. That he was dying was but too evident.

As he watched Shirley tending him so gently, trying to smile into the falling eyes which rested upon her with such love, Guy's heart bled at the thought of the anguish she had suffered, the misery, the fear, the thought was unbearable agony; no misery he had ever imagined for her could equal that which she had endured; and he turned away from the bedside to hide his agitation, and went into the sitting room, where he threw himself into a chair, bowing his head upon his hands.

What thoughts succeeded each other in his brain during the short solitude which followed he never knew. His head was confused and bewildered, and he could feel only a dull reproach for the hatred and detestation with which he had thought of the unfortunate Latrelle. He could not yet realize the dreadful complication which had arisen, that Hugh, instead of being the victim, was the murderer, and that he had been concealed because the danger of detection would be terrible, and that a new trial was possible for poor Shirley, one which would be infinitely harder to bear than the last one had been, for where as then she had been assured of the innocence of the accused, now she could not doubt his guilt.

A light touch on his bowed head roused Guy, and, looking up, he saw that Shirley was beside him. Her face was very pale still, and there were traces of tears upon it; but it had lost the look of fear and horror which had been so painful to witness; and, when her eyes met Guy's, it seemed to him that they were softer and clearer for the tears they had shed.

He was too deeply moved to speak to her for a moment, but he took her hands in his in a close friendly clasp,

Radway's Ready Relief

Mrs. L. Ditzner, 710 E. 145th St., New York City, writes: "I caught a cold. I used one bottle of your Radway's Ready Relief with wonderful results. I have also found it acts like a charm for sore throat. I used it with great benefit for several ailments my children have had, and recommended it to my friends."

NEURALGIA

The Relief is the best counter irritant known, and therefore the best analgesic that can be used in Neuralgia. Rub it on the part affected, and keep hands soaked with it on the seat of the pain until ease is obtained, which will usually be in the course of ten or fifteen minutes.

and looked up with frank kindly eyes in which there was no passion of tenderness now, into the lovely changed face; and Shirley saw before her the Guy Stuart of old, who had pleaded with her for Hugh's forgiveness in the stately drawing room of the grand London house where she had reigned as mistress.

"Shirley," he whispered brokenly, "forgive me."

"I have nothing to forgive," she answered unsteadily. "If you had really doubted me, it would have been but natural. But—but"—her lip trembled a little here—"do not talk of it; we want all our courage and all our faith now. Will you come to him?"

"Yes—at once."

"And—and"—she hesitated as they approached the door between the two rooms, and turned to him with a timid sweetness which made him feel as if he could fall at the feet of this woman who had borne so much misery and sorrow, and had only been enabled by the suffering—"and you will be gentle with him, Guy? He has suffered, oh, so terribly, and he will need all our kindness and forbearance!"

"You may trust me, Shirley," he said, so gently, yet so gravely, that the words fell upon her heart like balm. He was so strong, so brave so true. Oh, yes—oh, yes, she could trust him!

She opened the door for him and let him enter alone, while she waited for a few minutes until the tears which his gentle words had caused had ceased to flow. When she followed him, Major Stuart was sitting on the bed, supporting Sir Hugh on his arm with all the tenderness of a woman; their hands were clasped in a grasp which took them back to the old days when Shirley's beauty and sweetness had won both hearts, and Sir Hugh's eyes, sad indeed still, met his wife's with a little smile in their depths.

"I knew we could trust Guy," he said, in his low faint voice. "My darling, it makes me so happy, to think that you will no longer be alone. Give me some more of that stuff Litton left me, Shirley," he added, in a moment—"it puts some life into me—that I may tell Guy all that I told you that Christmas night, my poor child, when you saved my life, and I nearly frightened you to death."

There was something unutterably touching to Guy Stuart in Hugh Glynn's expression when he looked at his wife, it was so full of passionate adoring love; but it had so much humility and reverence, such intense sorrow and compassion, that Shirley herself could hardly meet it with any thing like composure; and Guy's lips quivered as he watched her trying to smile as she lifted Hugh's head and held the cordial to his lips with pitying tenderness which was almost maternal in its deep compassion. She had never seemed so beautiful in the eyes of these two men, who had loved her with such a fatal passion, as now, when the luster of her beauty was dimmed and faded by sorrow.

"I wish you would rest a little, Shirley," said Sir Hugh entreatingly. "You are quite worn out. Leave me with Guy, dear, for a time. Do you know, old friend," he went on, "that I have been happier during the days I have been concealed here than I have been for many a long year—except on that day which began so well and ended so terribly? If she had loved me as deeply as I loved her, she could not have been kinder and gentler. And yet," he continued unsteadily, "it is but heaping coals of fire upon my head."

She touched his lips with her finger with a little entreating gesture, and he smiled slightly.

"Leave us, my dearest," he said tremulously. "Try to sleep for an hour. Ah, how many nights it is since you have had any rest!"

"Go, Shirley," Guy put in gently. "Remember how much depends on your keeping well just now—and even an hour's rest will refresh you."

She smiled faintly as she turned away and passed into the little sitting room, where she sank down into an arm-chair, far more exhausted even than she knew by the terrible anxiety she had undergone, and which seemed so wonderfully lessened by Guy's sharing it. For a few moments she leaned back, thinking of all the misery and suffering, and shuddering at the thought of what was yet to come; then her fatigue overcame her, her eyes closed, and she sank into the heavy sleep of prostration.

Meanwhile, in the inner room, the two men who had been friends and bitter enemies, and were friends once more, were talking earnestly in low broken voices; and Sir Hugh was telling his story with long pauses between, caused by his weakness; and Stuart listened with an aching heart, feeling that for every sin his companion had committed such misery must have atoned.

"You must let me begin at the beginning, old fellow," Hugh said, in his feeble voice. "It will avail nothing to hide any of my sin and shame from you, and perhaps it will make you excuse me a little; although, indeed, you, in your uprightness and honor, Guy, can hardly understand how low I have fallen."

"Can I not? Ah, you hardly know how my anger made me fall, Hugh! I am a murderer in intention, although not in deed—for I could have killed you in my heart."

"No wonder!" Sir Hugh said sorrowfully. "But I loved her so madly and I was so wildly jealous that you had succeeded where I had failed. It saddened me too to know that your love was so much purer and better than mine. I felt that, had the cases been reversed, you would have gone away and left her to me, concealing your sorrow in order to spare her pain. Yes, beyond hatred, beyond jealousy, beyond every other feeling, was that awful sense of humiliation and it galled me into madness. Believe your love, mine looked so worthless. You would have given your life for her happiness; I would—and did—sacrifice her happiness to my passion. Ah, it is not only now that I see this, Guy; although now, when the end is so near, I see it yet more clearly! The sin stands out in all its blackness."

"Dear old fellow, do you not think of it now," Guy pleaded gently, his eyes dim as he looked down at the pale face and emaciated form which had once been so handsome and strong. "Surely it is not necessary!"

"I should like you to know it, Guy; it will make you think more gently of me in the time to come, and you will more readily forgive the sin against yourself."

"I forgive long ago, Hugh—fully and freely."

"Yes, I know you did," he answered, a faint smile irradiating his pallid face. "Still I want to tell you, so that you may know that, if I sinned, I have suffered. Even when I congratulated you on your engagement," he went on, after a pause, "I was resolved to steal her from you if I could, and I racked my brain to know how I could succeed. That very night I told her how madly I loved her; I fancied that my wealth— you were a poor man then, Guy, although you were rich soon after— would tempt her, that, like many other women, she was to be bought. I am afraid my previous experience of the sex had taught me to think of them as mercenary"—with a faint, bitter smile; "but I do not know whether I hated or loved her most."

Girls! Just Try It, Beautify Your Hair

Make it thick, glossy, wavy, luxuriant and remove dandruff—Real surprise for you.

Your hair becomes light, wavy, fluffy, abundant and appears as soft, lustrous and beautiful as young girl's after a "Danderine hair cleanse." Just try this—moisten a cloth with a little Danderine and carefully draw it through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. This will cleanse the hair of dust, dirt and excessive oil and in just a few moments you have doubled the beauty of your hair.

Besides beautifying the hair at once, Danderine dissolves every particle of dandruff; cleanses, purifies and invigorates the scalp, forever stopping itching and falling hair.

But what will please you most will be after a few weeks' use when you will actually see new hair—fine and downy at first—yes—but really new hair growing all over the scalp. If you care for pretty, soft hair and lots of it surely get a 25 cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug-gist or toilet counter, and just try it.

when she turned to me and said so proudly that you would not so betray your friend. Well, I tried to disguise my anguish; but Latrelle—Heaven knows that I would not speak in anger now!—tempted me. He told me how Shirley's mother had been inveigled into a Scotch marriage; and how easy it was to steal a wife in Scotland; and from the time I heard that story, Guy, I never rested from seeking an opportunity of obtaining the same power over Shirley as another miserable traitor and coward like myself had obtained over her mother. And the opportunity soon came. You were called away, which removed one obstacle from my path, and then came her brother's letter, which she opened in my presence. Do you remember, old fellow, that almost your last words to her had been that she was to trust me?"

"Yes," Guy Stuart said.

THE AGE OF CONDENSATION.

BY RUTH CAMERON.

Have you ever noticed to what extent this age is an age of condensation?

Little things are in the ascendant: the smallness of an article is often advertised as its greatest recommendation: almost everything has shrunk since the days of our fathers.

Take books, for instance. Where are the ponderous tomes of yesterday? Shrunken by the use of thinner and thicker paper into slender and easily handled volumes. I saw a book which I thought would be useful to me in the public library one day. It consisted of two large volumes. I ordered the book from the publisher, and when my purchase came it was one little volume, not so large as either of the other two. "This isn't the book I sent for," I said. But it was only in a new edition, in which, by the use of extremely thin paper, the 1267 pages, which the book contained, had been squeezed into a single volume about an inch and a half thick and weighing scarcely a pound.

The tiny books known as muff and vest pocket editions are peculiarly the product of the twentieth century. The vest pocket is, by the way, a favorite measurement for the desirable smallness of an article. "It will go in your vest pocket" is the last word of recommendation. Camera manufacturers of fifteen or twenty years ago would have probably thought it impossible to make a good camera small enough to go even into a man's coat pocket. To-day we have several makes of cameras that will go into a man's vest pocket, and not toy cameras either, but first class products.

Again. Do you remember the first fountain pen you bought some ten or fifteen years ago? What a bulky and elephantine thing it was compared with the elegant and efficient little thing of to-day. The watch is another article which demonstrates this generation's demand for condensation, as a comparison of the expensive watches of to-day with the expensive watches of your grandfather's time will show you.

Of course our modern apartment houses are the most striking example of condensation. Probably they are at the root of the whole business. When a scrap of space that would have been a "jog" or an entry way in an old-fashioned house, passes for a room; when the stately and spacious old-fashioned kitchen is shriveled up into the unbelievable tiny kitchenette; when garrets have disappeared altogether; what wonder that we are obliged to compress all our belongings to fit into these crumpled dwelling places?

What wonder that even the women themselves have grown slenderer and the men no longer have the massive shoulders of yesterday.

This is an age of condensation. We, as well as our belongings, are being cut down to fit into it.

Ruth Cameron

Bethlehem Town.

As I was going to Bethlehem-town,
Upon the earth I cast me down
All underneath a little tree
That whispered in this wise to me:
"Oh, I shall stand on Calvary
And bear what burthen zeeveth thee!"

As up I feared to Bethlehem-town,
And thus he quoth: "A wondrous sight
Hath I spread before mine eyes this night—
An angel host most fair to see
That sung full sweetly of a tree
That shaketh up on Calvary
What burthen saveth thee!"

And as I got to Bethlehem-town,
Loy' wise men came that bore a crown,
"Is there," cried I, "in Bethlehem
A king shall wear this diadem?"
"Good sooth," they quoth, "and it is he
That shall be lifted on the tree
And freely shed on Calvary
What blood redeemeth us and thee!"

Unto a child in Bethlehem-town,
The wise men came and brought the crown,
And while the infant smiling slept,
Upon their knees they fell and wept.
But, with her babe upon her knee,
Naught recked that Mother of the tree
That should uplift on Calvary
What burthen saveth all and me!

Again I walked in Bethlehem-town
And think of Him that wears the crown,
I may not kiss His feet again,
Nor worship Him as I did then.
My King hath died upon the tree,
And hath outpoured on Calvary
What blood redeemeth you and me!

Canton, China.

By GEORGE FITCH.

Author of "At Good Old Sivash"

Canton is the metropolis of China. It contains two million people according to the most accomplished guessers. All of these people look alike to the occidental visitor and for all we know, the Chinese government may have been marching a few thousand Cantonee around and around past the census enumerators for the last ten thousand years.

Canton looks from the hills around it like a large prairie of red roofs. It has no great buildings and very few moving picture theatres. It has 300 streets through some of which fat men have to edge sideways and two large pagodas which form its only sky-line. When the tourist invades England he is shown buildings 700 years old. But Canton's biggest pagoda is 1,300 years old and is still in perfect health.

Canton is situated on the Pearl River in the south part of China and can be reached by steamer from Hong Kong, 70 miles away. The principal occupation for tourists is waiting for the return boat and hunting for a breeze which blows toward the city instead of away from it. Canton is cleaned regularly during the visits of Haller's comet.

Most of the houses in Canton are two stories high. The city occupies 10 square miles or about one eightieth of the area of Chicago which is slightly more populous. It does not stop when it reaches the river, but marches across it. The house boat section of Canton is very large and if the babies who have fallen off the boats in the last thousand years had grown up, Canton would now rival London in size.

Canton has a large trade in tea with the western world and has a white population of 400. Neither sewers nor typhoid fever are known in the city a fact which causes visiting physicians to scratch their heads in a puzzled manner. Canton people are very hospitable when approached properly and offer the visitor such delicacies as fried dog, stewed cat, hulled owls, pickled rats, smoked bon-constrictor and birds nest soup. On account of this hospitality, Americans do not much visit much in Canton.

Canton is so old that the cemeteries cover more ground than the city and stretch over the hills for miles. It was introduced to Europe by the Portuguese in 1517. It began selling tea in England in 1667. A light snow fell in the city in 1835 and the British blew large irregular holes in it in 1861. The first game of baseball was played in the vicinity in 1902.

Set your scrubbing pail in a shallow box with casters and it will save the inconvenience of continual lifting.

Mother Is Child's Stomach Sour, Sick?

If tongue is coated or if cross, feverish, constipated, give "California Syrup of Figs."

Don't scold your fretful, peevish child. See if tongue is coated; this is a sure sign its little stomach, liver and bowels are clogged with sour waste.

When listless, pale, feverish, full of cold, breath bad, throat sore, doesn't eat, sleep or act naturally, has stomach-ache, indigestion, diarrhoea, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the foul waste, the sour bile and fermenting food passes out of the bowels and your baby has a well and playful child again. Children love this harmless "fruit laxative," and mothers can rest easy after giving it, because it never fails to make their little "insides" clean and sweet.

Keep it handy, Mother! A little given today saves a sick child tomorrow, but get the genuine. Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly on the bottle. Remember there are counterfeiters sold here, so surely look and see that yours is made by the "California Fig Syrup Company." Hand back with contempt any other fig syrup.

HEALTHY AND UNHEALTHY LIGHTING.

Gas, it may be said, vitiate the atmosphere. True. But it also helps to purify it. Its purifying power is greater than its vitiating power.

Much evidence has lately been adduced to show that gas is more useful than the electric light in promoting efficient ventilation of air. It is for this, amongst other reasons, that gas is being frequently substituted for the electric light.

He would merely add that no member who had experience of their meeting room under the old conditions could deny the improvement that had taken place since gas had been substituted for the electric light.

Special to the Evening Telegram. PHILADELPHIA, March 3. Thirteen deaths, due to the storm, are reported in this city and vicinity; also four at Scranton. A young man was frozen to death, while snow-bound in a sleigh at Hazleton.

BRUSSELS, March 3. Seven coal miners were drowned to-day in a mine at Bracquenes, by the bursting into one of the galleries of a subterranean stream. The danger signal was sounded throughout the mine, and hundreds of employees escaped.

SYDNEY, N.S.W., March 3. Three French sailors from the French ketch Gaudeloupe, were eaten by natives of Malekula, New Hebrides, recently, according to a story of the master of the vessel, received here. The vessel was engaged recruiting, and had called at the island to obtain laborers. Cannibals attacked the three men as soon as they landed, and ate them on the spot.

LONDON, March 3. The Pall Mall Gazette declares a general election inevitable. Unions in both houses will unite to force the Government's hand. The Ulster "covenanters" will mobilize as soon as Home Rule passes the Commons. The Chronicle says that the Cabinet will not consent to the dismemberment of Ireland, but will propose that education and licensing remain under Imperial control, with the police for six years.

LONDON, March 3. Replying to a question as to the death of Mr. Benton, Sir Edward Grey said in part: "All efforts that have been made hitherto, have failed to secure an investigation into the facts respecting the death of Benton. The persistent difficulties in the way of such investigation, create the strongest presumption, desire and intention to conceal the truth, on the part of those responsible for what has happened." Communications with Washington are still proceeding, but I would repeat what I said last week, these communications do not imply that the United States Government have any responsibility for what has taken place, by which I mean, of course, the death of Benton.

Fourteen Life Savers were Drowned

Queenstown, Feb. 21.—Fourteen lifeboat men were drowned when they went out from Pethard, to rescue the crew of the Norwegian barque Mexico, driven into the rocks near the Saltee Islands, Wexford, last night. Two lifeboats had answered the distress call of the Mexico, bound from Laguna, Mexico, to Falmouth. The first to reach her was stove in, but the life savers were able to scramble on board the wrecked Mexico, where they remained all night. When the crew of the barque and the lifeboat men landed safely on one of the islands to-day they found that the second lifeboat which they had waited for all night had sunk with her crew of fourteen men.

Under Ground Inspection.

Editor Evening Telegram. Dear Sir,—Kindly allow me space in your valuable paper to state a few facts which are of much importance to the miners who work underground in this country. We are very quiet but at the same time we take stock of what is going on in the Government ranks. The Government can find a means of raising some salaries 200 per cent, but they can't find money to pay a practical miner to inspect and report to the Government Engineer on all the under ground workings and conditions under which our laborers have to work. If it was reported that a fisherman caught a lobster with only one eye and a sign of spawn on its tail, the Government would spend thousands and pay a heeler a big salary to watch Mr. Lobster and advise him not to crawl into the fisherman's net. If it was reported that some one shot a black crow up the country, the Government would send out an army of game wardens to capture the slayer or the poor crow, but the miners are human beings who have to work in the bowels of the earth for their bread and butter. It's no difference about them getting their heads shot off and getting their lives crushed out. Is it possible that the wild animals in the country are of more value to them than miners' lives. Why is it that the Government ignores the miners' appeal for protection by law? I have had thirty years of practical experience in mining, both in this country and out of it, and Mr. Editor, and gentle readers, I am prepared at a moment's notice to give a sworn statement of conditions under which our miners have to work, and which if published, would be an eye-opener for the reading public. If Sir E. P. Morris and Hon. M. P. Cashin had their sons working under ground in Newfoundland, we would have inspectors and overseers appointed by the dozen to advise our mining conditions. Why is it that the Government Engineer doesn't advise on the above matter? We notice he can advise the Government to appoint railroad inspectors by the bushel. That is of no earthly use whatever, either to the Government or to the contractor. We are going to look to the Government Engineer in the future for better protection than what we have got in the past. Why not give us at least two good practical miners and have them to report every week to the Government Engineer. I know of several cases in the country where men lost their lives all through no inspection by a practical man. One poor fellow was ordered to work in a place that was condemned by others. He worked two hours when a piece of ore four tons fell from the roof over his head and crushed out his life. The excavation was 75 feet long, 52 feet wide and 24 feet high without one stick of timber to protect the workmen's heads. I will hold over the name of the miner for the sake of the poor fellow's friends; I know of others that were sent to their death in a similar way.

Now, Sir Edward Morris I want you to please answer a few practical questions. (1) Have the Government got a statement from all the mining companies, of all ropes and cables used in and around the mines, and how many years are the said ropes and cables guaranteed for and the name of the manufacturers of same? (2) What kind of timber is being used underground. Who inspected said timber. What method is used in timbering the mine excavations? (3) Are the guard rails put up on all landings and crossings? (4) Are the guard rails used on all ore cars and skips under ground? (5) Are the manways left open for the exit of men. Are there any compartments fitted with a special cage or car for the accommodation of the men, and is there a special engine employed in the hoist?

Yours truly, MINER. Feb. 18th, 1914. Bay Service Resumed. The s.s. Ethie arrived at Placentia from the Red Island route at 1 p.m. yesterday and sails again for the westward after the arrival of to-day's train.

Drowning Tragedy.

BOY FALLS THROUGH ICE IN THE HARBOR.

A sad drowning occurred in the harbor, near Franklin's premises, yesterday afternoon, the victim being Patrick O'Neill, son of Andrew O'Neill, cabinman. The young lad O'Neill with several of his companions was "copying" on the ice in Tessier's dock just astern of the cruiser Fiona, and went down through some slob which he thought was safe ice. The little fellow made a desperate struggle for his life. The accident was witnessed by the bosun of the Fiona, who threw a rope to O'Neill, which unfortunately he failed to grasp, with the result that he soon sank from view. The dock was dragged for the body and was brought to the surface by Captain Bartlett of the dredge Priestman. The accident happened about 5 p.m. and the body was not recovered until 5 45 p.m. The remains were taken to the home of the deceased's parents, to whom the sad news of the occurrence was broken by Rev. Fr. McDermott. The Telegram unites with the whole community in the general sympathy extended to the grief stricken parents.

A swindler now under indictment in the United States advertised, "Throw away your glasses." Those who sent him five or ten dollars received in exchange a small box of tablets which the United States mail officials found could be manufactured for twenty-five cents per thousand. There is no medical, chemical or mechanical means of restoring to normal an eyeball which is irregular in shape for such is the condition in most cases when glasses are worn for constant use. Hypermetropia, myopia, and the various forms of astigmatism are simply cases where the cornea, or clear front portion of the eyeball, is not absolutely spherical, and there is no other known means of overcoming such defect excepting by adjusting glasses. It is to be hoped that none of our Newfoundland friends have been duped by the swindler referred to above. You are always safe in consulting R. H. Plain Speech.

Old Ebenezer Jimpeon Jinks takes pride in saying what he thinks. "I do not mince my words," says he, "but I speak my mind out, bold and free; and if I do not like a gent, I make it plainly evident, I air my views to beat the band, and people know just where I stand." He takes a foolish pride, methinks, does Ebenezer Simpson Jinks, in being rude and rough of speech, but few regard him as a peach. He keeps his neighbors hot and sore, and they denounce him as a bore. "We'd pay the freight," they often say, "if he would only move away!" And people dodge him on the street; they hate to hear old Jinks repeat "his honest views" on this and that, which views are spoken through his hat. When he steps up to join a crowd, you'd think a cold and clammy shroud had fallen on that bunch of men, who all disperse to meet again when there's no Jinks to give the blues expounding "his straightforward views." If you would have a grist of friends you'll bear in mind that friendship ends, and cordial feeling slinks behind, when you begin to "speak your mind."

LONDON GOSSIP.

LONDON, Feb. 27th, 1914.

THE SMALL DANCES AT COURT.

With the opening of Parliament the season may be said to have begun. It is almost certain that before going to Paris the Queen intends to give at least one dance at Buckingham Palace, and it is rumoured that she intends to dance a good deal herself, as next year, when Princess Mary comes out, the Queen will no longer dance except in the state quadrilles and lancers. Already the many young girls in Court society who consider themselves entitled to the honor are speculating whether they will receive the coveted invitation to the Palace dance or dances. At these informal balls as opposed to the state balls, things are done much as at any great London house, though there is not the promiscuous sitting-out on the stairs, for instance—that there is at private balls. There are always, however, any number of men and therefore few or no wall-flowers at the Royal dances, for the Queen sets a good example to the Queen's set and endeavours that no girls shall be forced to sit out while others dance. The supper at Buckingham Palace is much like any other, with the addition of the King's hock cup, made after a recipe that King Edward particularly approved. It is said that the younger members of the Royal Family would like to see on the ball programme some of the much-talked-of dances of the moment. But this wish is not granted, and rightly—for unless well danced the new dances are grotesque.

KING GEORGE AND MEN'S DRESS.

The King's example in the matter of ordinary wear during the London season will be in the direction of the utmost simplicity of detail. For evening wear, such as his Majesty wore at the smoking concert of the Royal Amateur Orchestral Society, the waistcoat was black, with moderate points, inconspicuous studs, two for the stiff-fronted shirt, and well-defined pointed wings to the collar. It is believed that his Majesty will make use of the blue coat rather than the formal dinner jacket, even on occasions of informality. For lounge suits as well as for formal morning attire, the preference in the King's new supply is for trousers and waistcoats of the same material as the coats. White soft-fronted shirts will be used by him during the summer on suitable occasions, his Majesty has not as yet discarded the knotted scarf for a bow in habitual wear. The Chesterfield coats which are being worn in the present weather have plain woollen or silk linings, and fur trimmings are not favored. As the warmer months come on, gray rather than blue, will be the dominant note of the Royal clothing.

THE SHORTAGE IN THE BRITISH ARMY.

Colonel Seeley's admission that on January 1 not only was the Territorial Force deficient of 61,348 warrant officers, non-commissioned officers, and men, but that there was also a shortage in these ranks of 8,989 in the Regular Army is not likely to pass unnoticed. There is a growing feeling that these serious differences between the actual and authorized Regular peace establishments, demand a much closer scrutiny than they have hitherto received. The unavoidable suspicion is that they are merely an unworthy device for saving money, for the deficiency always seems to be a substantial one whatever the season may be at which a return is demanded. The explanation that recruits are not coming forward in sufficient numbers is a somewhat disingenuous one, as it is always open to the authorities to keep their establishment up to the authorized limit by relaxing the 10 per cent rule under which hundreds of men are annually sent back into civil life who would gladly stay on in the ranks if permitted to do so. When we remember that less than 23 years have elapsed since a Government was turned out of office because its reserves of credit were inadequate, it seems strange that the statement of a deficiency of 9,000 men in our Regular peace establishment should be received with comparative equanimity.

ARMY AND NAVY: A CONTRAST.

A representative of a very big firm here made a curious comment to-day on the Army canteen case which, as readers will be aware, is concerned with certain charges of bribery and corruption against a big provision firm. "If people could only see the different prices that the Army and Navy pay for exactly the same things," he said, "it would give them a shock." The difference, it seems, is very much in favor of the Navy. When you are supplying something for the Army canteen, he declared, you name your price. When you are supplying a similar article for the Navy, messes you have to give exact technical details of the goods supplied just as if you were supplying an expert wholesaler, and you have to give a guarantee that those details are correct. And while the Navy buyers tie you to supply goods according to this exact specification, they beat down the price so that it barely pays you. "In fact," he added, "only for the name of it it would not be worth while to supply the Navy unless you happen to want orders to keep your place running." He told me of one case within his knowledge in which certain articles supplied for a naval mess had afterwards been sold off by auction for some reason or other, and had then fetched a higher price than had originally been paid for them. The Navy it seems has one expert department to buy for the whole service. In the Army the buying is done separately for each regimental mess or canteen. My informant may have exaggerated about the Army, but he was obviously telling the truth (and with some depth of feeling, too) about the sharpness of the Navy. "It is gratifying to hear that even in these small things our first line of defence keeps up its tradition of keen efficiency. I have heard engineering contractors to the Admiralty give the naval men exactly the same character."

A NEW NATURALISATION TROUBLE.

The Imperial Naturalisation Bill, by abolishing one anomaly will create another. The anomaly to be abolished is that an alien may be naturalised in one of the Dominions and eventually become its Prime Minister, yet when he sets foot in this country or another Dominion he automatically becomes an alien again without citizen rights. The anomaly that is to take its place is that of a double naturalisation. The dominions will retain their right to naturalize immigrants on their own conditions as they do now. As now, that naturalisation will be strictly local. At the same time aliens in the dominions will be given an opportunity of qualifying for Imperial naturalisation. Thus, for example, a Russian in Canada might content himself with the Canadian naturalisation open to him after three years or go on from that to the Imperial naturalisation granted under much more searching conditions after five years' residence within the Empire. This double citizenship, local and Imperial, is an extension of constitutional principle of far-reaching importance. A single Imperial naturalisation would certainly be more logical, and may be inevitable in the long run, but our Foreign Office was significantly reluctant to make naturalisation so much a matter of course as some of the dominions eager for population do.

THE CRISIS IN SWEDEN.

Sensational reports have been coming from Sweden. It was stated, and has since been contradicted, that King Gustav was dangerously ill. It was next stated—also to be contradicted—that His Majesty has decided to abdicate in favour of his son, the Crown Prince. What is not doubtful, however, is that the ministry has resigned. As may be recalled, Sweden has been divided on the question of national defence. In the rural districts the inhabitants seem to be warmly in favor of increased armaments and some 30,000 of them marched the other day to tell the King so. In the towns, the industrial population appears, on the contrary, to have been dead against armaments, and the King was fiercely attacked for an alleged breach of the constitution in assuring the rural electors that he agreed with them.

Black bean soup is almost a meal in itself.

Rod and Gun.

There are as usual many things to interest the sportsman in the latest issue of ROD AND GUN IN CANADA, the March issue, which has recently come to hand. The Ojibways at Abitibi by Bernard Muddiman; A Walrus Hunt within the Arctic Circle; A Caribou Hunt in the Yukon; The Little Lake of the Big Trout; Angling Notes by H. Mortimer Batten; and other stories and articles, along with the regular departments devoted to the interests of the trap line, trap-shooting, etc., etc., which are as usual well maintained, are combined to make a magazine that should be read by all Canadian sportsmen and by those Americans who come to Canada annually for their hunting and fishing. This magazine which is the only publication devoted wholly to the interests of Canadian outdoor life is published by W. J. Taylor Limited, Woodstock, Ont.

Apropos.

Editor Evening Telegram.
Dear Sir—I will thank you to publish the enclosed letter, which I take from the Canadian Churchman. The letter speaks for itself, and at this particular time any comments of mine thereon would be superfluous.
Yours, etc.,

CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP AT PRINCE RUPERT.

To the Editor N. Y. Churchman:
"As an example of how special circumstances calls for a liberal interpretation of a rule drawn up for ordinary conditions, may I be permitted to mention an incident which I regard as one of the most precious experiences of my life?"
It was five or six years ago, Easter was approaching. For many months I had been the only representative of the Christian ministry in the town of Prince Rupert, which was struggling into existence on the shore of Kwan Island. Members of all denominations had been attending our services. I told them that as a Bishop of the Anglican Church, which was first on this coast by many years, I counted it a great privilege to minister to them, and as I knew many would exceedingly their Easter Communion I should be glad to welcome to our Easter Celebration those who were communicants of other Churches—"all such," I added, "in the language of our Prayer Book, 'as shall be religiously and devoutly disposed'."

The scene on that Easter Day was a memorable one. Roman Catholics, Orthodox Greeks, Lutherans, Presbyterians, Methodists, Baptists, as well as Anglicans came.
Together we sang most heartily "The Church's one Foundation is Jesus Christ, her Lord."
Together we knelt side by side and partook of those sacred elements which, variously interpreted, meant for each and all the Holy Communion, the fellowship divine.
