"I Can Now Do My Work Without Feeling Tired"

Mrs. Thally, St. Paul, Alta., writes—
"For two years I suffered from pain in the back. For three months I could not walk. The doctor told me I had severe kidney trouble, and that it would take a long time to get better. I tried everything I could get, but was not improving. Then I saw Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills advertised in your Almanac. I tried one box, and they did me good, so I took six, and in less than a month I was feeling fine and could do my work."

The Mystery of Rutledge Hall

OR

"The Cloud With a Silver Lining"

CHAPTER XL.

The mystery was solved at last—what Lloyd Milner had suspected was true. Stephen, his heart beating fast, his hands trembling as he leaned toward her, said softly—
"How did it happen?"

"It was an accident," she said, in the same feeble manner, her eyes never moving from their fixed gaze at the grave gentle face, so pitying, so compassionate, bent over her. It was that night—You know, the night of the ball. When I reached home, he had sent the servants to bed, and was waiting up for me himself; he had discovered in some way—that I had meant to go with Frank—and—
"You had meant to be patient, to be a better wife," Stephen said gently, as she paused; "but—"

"But he said such bitter things. He taunted me—he said I had disobeyed him—betrayed him—and—"
The feebly uttered words died away on the white, parched lips. In intense eagerness, too deep for words, they waited; the room was so still that when the low, faint voice spoke again the words were audible to one and all. "And I—resented it—and said I would go with Frank; and—he threw himself between me and the door—and I snatched up the gun which stood in the library—and—we struggled, and—the gun went off—and he—fell!"

A long breath, almost a sob, broke from Stephen Daunt. How blind and mad they had all been not to think of this! But for the supposition that she had fled with Frank, they must have thought of it.

"I did not wait to see—if he was—much hurt," she continued, her voice growing momentarily weaker until it sank to a faint whisper. "I was afraid. I ran up to my room, took off my ball-dress, and put on the dress I had prepared for that other flight, and left the house unseeing. I wonder now how I dared," she went on, her blue eyes widening slowly around the room and finally resting on Stephen's pale, moved face; "but I had got back all my courage and calmness, and I was able to look my peril in the face. I put on the thick veil I had procured for my flight, the close bonnet, the great heavy cloak, and I left the house. It was not snowing then; it had ceased." Again her voice failed, and her eyes closed in utter weakness. The doctor bent over her hastily, forcing some restorative through the pale lips; it was piteous to see the faint look of reproach which crept into her eyes as she opened them and looked at him languidly, as if to ask why he could not let her rest.

"Yes, yes," she said faintly, as her eyes wandered to Stephen's waiting expectant face, "I will tell you! I did not know where to go at first; but I remembered that the night mail passed through Lymouth at one o'clock, and I walked there. I asked for my ticket in broken English. I went to London; from London I came here. I passed for a Frenchwoman—my mother was French, you know—and—I have been here—ever since." "How have you lived?" Stephen asked hoarsely, his anxiety for Frank's safety forgotten in his intense pity for the unhappy woman whose sad condition appealed to all their sympathy so strongly that anger and contempt were alike forgotten.

"At first I had money and some jewels," she answered feebly—so feebly that he had to bend over her to hear the broken words—"and I was afraid to go—out much; but when I had no more money—I sang—at a café chantant—not far—from here. It was a poor place; but I earned—enough, and—I dared not go where I might have been recognized."

"It was no shame to Stephen Daunt's manhood that his eyes were wet with tears which blotted out the beautiful dying face. She had made no excuses for her sin and treachery—perhaps she felt the sin too deep for pardon; but the very simplicity of her narrative made it all the more touching, all the more pathetic. Dr. Farmer's grave face was exceedingly pitiful; he had been much interested in his beautiful patient; he had divined that she had a story, and a sorrowful one, but had not expected such a one as this. The handsome careless face of the young official was saddened and compassionate as it bent over his writing; even Lloyd Milner, who had felt that Sibly deserved punishment and suffering, for all the others had suffered through her sin, felt his lip quiver as he turned away and looked into the smoldering fire. Presently, in the silence which followed—a silence broken only by Sibly's gasping breathing and the scratching of Ernest Lavigne's swift pen as it passed over the paper—the old French woman moved across the room and closed the window. The movement seemed to arouse Sibly from the semi-stupor into which she had fallen; she opened her languid eyes, and almost simultaneously Monsieur Lavigne rose and approached the bed. "Will you sign it?" he said gently. "Must I?" she asked faintly, shrinking as if with terror. "It cannot hurt you now, Sibly," Stephen whispered, compassionately; and the dim falling eyes rose slowly to his face. "Nothing can hurt me now," she said slowly; and a faint smile—the wrath of her old imperial smile—flashed over her lips. "Raise me a little!"

They raised her, and she took the pen in her trembling, almost helpless fingers, groping feebly for the paper with the left hand. Stephen saw that it bore no wedding ring. "Where—where is it?" she said feebly. "I cannot see; it is dark!" With hands almost as unsteady as her own, Stephen guided her hand, and as she wrote the last letter of names the pen fell from her nerveless grasp, staining the fair white linen. Monsieur Lavigne gently drew away the paper; and, as the doctor placed his patient upon the pillows, the others turned to leave the room.

"Stephen, do not leave me!" she said, groping feebly for his hand. "She would not mind; she was—always pitiful!"

And, as the others left the room, Stephen Daunt, pale and moved, resumed his station by the bedside, his heart heavy, notwithstanding his joy at Frank's innocence, for the unhappy woman whose life had been ruined by her own folly, her own sin, and by her mad unreasoning love for himself. If she had sinned, she had suffered.

All through the night they watched her—Stephen and the old woman who had been her kindest friend, and who, while Sibly lay, half in swoon, half in stupor, told Stephen, in a broken husky voice scarcely raised above a whisper, much of Sibly's wretched story—how she had worked for her bread, singing at the tenth-rate café chantant, where alone she felt secure of not meeting any who had known her while at Lambewold or during her own brief season of prosperity; how, even when she was ill and suffering, she had dragged herself thither night after night, fearing lest, if she could continue no longer, she would lack bread to eat; and how her strength had suddenly given way—suddenly and completely. She told him, too, that when she had come among them first, they had thought that she was mad; she shut herself up, venturing out only at dusk, and seemed afraid of every stranger face. And she was so beautiful that they had all pitied her and been kind to her in their small way. And Stephen's heart ached, and his lip quivered as he glanced at the white face on which the lamplight fell, so beautiful even now, and thought of what might have been.

Toward dawn Sibly came slowly out of the stupor which had held her so long, and, moving restlessly, began to talk rapidly; and, though somewhat incoherently, not so much so but that Stephen could understand much of her meaning and could guess much of her past suffering. His slight knowledge of her childhood, of her mother—a French actress—of the English father whom she could not remember, he having died during her childhood; of the aunt, her father's sister, a strict narrow-minded maiden lady who had taken Sibly at her mother's death and given her the education which had fitted her for the position she had occupied at Lambewold—gave him some clew to the meaning of the broken disjointed words. Now she was with her aunt, rebelling against the strict discipline which was so irksome after the gay careless Bohemian life she had lived with her mother; then she was at Lambewold, or at Rutledge, quarrelling with her husband, wrangling with him about Frank and Stephen himself. Now she was shivering and shrinking in terror from the punishment she so much dreaded, and which had haunted her night and day, and she was begging Stephen to save her from it, and from Sidney, until, utterly exhausted, a deadly faintness overcame her, and she fell back, breathing out her last few moments of life.

"Isn't there any way in which one may acquire a good personality?" That question comes from a Letter Friend.

Now "good" is a very broad word. It could mean many things. But I am going to take the liberty of defining it for my Letter Friend. I think she meant a winning personality, a personality that makes people like you.

That question has lain on my desk for several weeks because the answer didn't come to me. The Answer Came. Yesterday it came because my mind was focussed on a beautiful beloved personality, by the passing of that personality from the paths of men.

Yes, I know of a way to cultivate a winning personality. Pick out some person whom you—in common with many others—love and admire and try to be like him or her.

Analyze the attraction. Is it her warm, human sympathy that draws you, her willingness to listen, her real interest in your troubles and joys, her gaiety, her happy outlook on life (I mention these particular qualities because it most often is such as these that endure). They try to cultivate them.

Find a Pattern.

It is much easier to mold yourself on a living personality than on abstract qualities, much more inspiring and rewarding. I could analyze popularly for you, after a fashion, but I think anyone who wants a winning

Boot and Shoe Beliefs

How many of us, no matter how pretensions to scorn such superstitions, would ask for trouble by placing a pair of boots or shoes upon a table, and how few would risk misfortune by cleaning a new pair of shoes before wearing them? In Scotland the belief still exists that to drop a pair of shoes before they have been worn is a sure portent of bad luck. Immunity can be bought, however, by burning the shoes or by burying them.

To place new boots or shoes on a shelf higher than one's head is another harbinger of misfortune according to a superstition which has prevailed in many parts of England for centuries.

It is also considered unlucky to place children's shoes by themselves. They should always be accompanied by a pair belonging to a grown-up person, while dire disaster is supposed to overtake anyone foolhardy enough to walk downstairs inside a house in new shoes before having first walked upstairs in them. The only shoe sign that augurs good luck is the remote possibility of accidentally putting the right shoe on the left foot.

In Norway girls who want to make absolutely sure of getting married never put on new shoes for the first time unless the laces are tied by a married woman, preferably a mother of seven children. They also believe that, if a girl's laces are continually becoming untied, some young man is in love with her.

Arabs and Turks are always particular in placing their sandals and slippers side by side. They regard it as a sign of impending disaster if the toes are pointing away from each other. The Russian believes that an enemy is plotting against him if the shoes, when thrown down, land with one toe on the top of the other.

If a German mother has the misfortune to lose the heel of her shoe she believes that one of her children will die before the end of the year. In Spain old shoes are looked upon as mascots, and a pair is always kept in the house for luck. In Belgium the person who puts on the left shoe first is held to be lucky in love.

While there are many farrier coats, there are still straight and narrow coats.

Funnier Than Charley's Aunt Mr. Dowden Writes on Civic Matters Editor Evening Telegram. Dear Sir--You have been kind enough to publish the letter I sent you earlier with Municipal matters, during the last four years, and in doing so I take it you acquiesce with my respect in the closing paragraph that you give me a little of your valuable space during the next few days to continue my correspondence. I thank you for the favor.

Funnier Than Charley's Aunt Mr. Dowden Writes on Civic Matters Editor Evening Telegram. I said in my last that the deficit which we met on assuming office was wiped out, and it was accomplished without extra burden on the taxpayers. This could only be done by carefully considering every financial question. It should be remembered that while these arrears were being wiped off none of the every day operations were interfered with or curtailed; in fact I hope to show, later, that not only was current work not curtailed but improvements and expansions were made.

Funnier Than Charley's Aunt Mr. Dowden Writes on Civic Matters Editor Evening Telegram. We found also that there were numerous requests for more lights, in all parts of the city, that roads and sidewalks in every section were in need of rebuilding and repairs, that the collection of refuse matter needed immediate change and improvement, that the Battery, Southside and Annex, (for all had been included in the city by the new Charter) had grievances, and just ones, which could not be overlooked or whittled out of sight, not that it was the desire or intention of the Council to do so. We began operations under the new Charter and naturally found things strange, but Councillors Martin, Collier, Viancombe and Ryan who had previous experience were a tower of strength, while those of us who occupied seats in the Council Chamber for the first time worked our hardest to get a grasp of routine work as quickly as possible.

Funnier Than Charley's Aunt Mr. Dowden Writes on Civic Matters Editor Evening Telegram. Right from the start, the Mayor insisted that no monies should be expended without an estimate of costs having been prepared by the Engineer or other official whose department was concerned, and a full and free discussion by the Board. In this he had the earnest support of every Councillor. We all realized that there was much to be done, and very little to do it with, so each took a firm stand to see that as far as possible we would get a dollar's value for every dollar spent. It was only by carefully husbanding our resources that we could carry on.

As I have said, the City and Country, and the greater part of the outside world as well were up against hard times. To make St. John's the ideal city that all wished it to be, could only be accomplished by heavily increased taxation, and this, I for one, was strongly opposed to. And I wish to say, right here and now, that if I have a Platform in this Contest it is that I am opposed and very much opposed to increased taxation. To-day, the great majority of citizens find it difficult to make two ends meet, and if more burdens be imposed many must go even without the necessities of life.

Funnier Than Charley's Aunt Mr. Dowden Writes on Civic Matters Editor Evening Telegram. Another matter which gave great concern is the city debt--the annual interest on which and floating loans amount to over $103,000.00, or about a quarter of the total income. This is not a matter what may be needed for other purposes. The income last year was approximately $406,000.00, out of which the following amounts had to be paid:

It will be seen from the above that three quarters of the revenue goes for eight items, and leaves only $100,000.00 to carry on the various other services. When it is considered that in one night a heavy downpour of rain can do thousands of dollars worth of damage to any city built on the side of a hill as St. John's is, the obstacles confronting the City Councillors can be easily seen.

We admit the superlative adjective has been often worn to death in boosting bills, but in this case it is very fitting. The story has been interpreted excellently and the acting and atmosphere surrounding the piece is correct to the smallest detail.

Funnier Than Charley's Aunt Mr. Dowden Writes on Civic Matters Editor Evening Telegram. As the central character "Cappy Ricks," Mr. J. E. Balfour is seen in a true-to-life portrayal of the part. His accent, appearance and diction are all typically perfect. His is a role that stands out predominant. Florence Ricks is given a beautiful performance by Loreta Nicholson and Charles Hiser as Mat Beasley is just great. Billy Phillips again accepts full responsibility for the comedy element which he handles in his own way. W. W. Hankins shone well as Sills and Kenzon Score in New Film Notable Cast Supports Stars in Tense Drama, "I Want My Man." Milton Sills, one of the most versatile of screen artists, presents another side of many-sided dramatic brilliance in his latest First National photodrama, "I Want My Man," which opens to-night at the Star Theatre. Sills' virility, as embodied in his portrayal of the "Sea Hawk," was no less apparent under the reserve which he handles the dramatic tension of his role in "I Want My Man." Both Sills and Doris Kenyon, who is co-featured with him, give clear-cut interpretations of their difficult roles. Phyllis Haver, May Allison and Paul Nicholson show to advantage in their various roles, and Kate Bruce is the sweetest of screen mothers. It is the story of Vida Eyre, a war nurse, who has tricked Gullian Eyre, into marrying her in the belief that she, too, is a miserable victim of war injury. Because of his blindness Gullian has been hiding away in France from the girl to whom he was engaged, but a successful operation restores his sight and brings back the problem of the girl. Before Gullian can see her with his restored sight Vida disappears, reappearing as a stranger with the determination to win him back on fair terms with the other girl. Gullian returns home to find his home disrupted by the pleasure-mad orgy which has swept the country and to settle the problem of the other girl.

Device by Germans to Avert Disaster

Electrical Apparatus to Treat Helium May Revolutionize Dirigible Navigation.

BERLIN, Nov. 19.—The United Press learned to-day that two youthful chemists of Berlin University have invented a device foreshadowing the electro-helium airship and capable of revolutionizing dirigible airship navigation.

The inventors claim that the Shenandoah disaster would have been avoided with this invention.

Dr. Hugo Eckener, head of the Zeppelin works and pilot of the American Zeppelin ZR-III (now Los Angeles), predicted that it would convert dirigible navigation into a "creative business."

The invention consists of an electrical apparatus which warms and thus expands the gas when required, and cools it subsequently rather than allowing it to discharge, wasted into the air in an emergency, or when a descent is desired.

Hitherto "valving" of helium has been expensive, particularly as the gas is rare and costly.

In the old days Zeppelins were put out into the sun to warm the gas before starting a journey. The new invention is in effect an artificial sun and refrigerator combined.

The inventors are Dr. Kurt Peters and Peter Schlumbohm, chemists of the big university here. Each is 28 years old.

End Catarrh Germs In Three Minutes

Chronic catarrh no matter how bad, and cases of bronchial asthma now yield instantly to the amazing discovery of a French scientist. This dragless method called Laves eliminates the germs in three minutes, yet is positively harmless to the most delicate tissues. Your head and lungs are cleared like magic. Sufferers are relieved in a single night. To prove it and to introduce Laves to thousands of sufferers in one night, I offer to send a treatment free and postpaid to any one who will write for it. No obligation. You can return the favor by telling your friends—if not, the loss is mine. No matter what you have tried, just send me your name and address for this marvelous free treatment and prove that you can be rid of catarrh. W. R. SMITH, 5395 Levee Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

Dr. Luther on Locarno

GERMANY TO WORK FOR DISARMAMENT.

The German Chancellor, Dr. Luther, speaking to the Union of German Merchants and Industrialists, said:

The Treaty of Locarno does not constitute a choice between East and West. Such a choice would in Germany's geographical, economic, and political, economic, and political position have been not merely a crime but folly.

Our choice signifies our firm determination to work with all our power for general disarmament, which, in harmony with the Treaty of Versailles, is regarded as the undisputed complement of German disarmament.

President von Hindenburg, speaking at Stuttgart to-day, declared that Germany's greatest need was unity and the subordination of the interests of political parties to those of the whole country.

It is hoped that these words will have a profound effect on the verdict of the nation and its representatives with regard to the Locarno treaties.

Acrobatic Car

DRIVER'S DARING FEATS TO TEST ANTI-SKID INVENTION.

Travellers on the Bath road near Reading were horrified to see a fully laden American touring car coming towards them at speed and swerving in a most alarming manner from side to side of the wet road.

The acrobatic car was in the hands of an expert driver, who was demonstrating the qualities of a patented device for minimizing the dangerous effects of skidding.

For about half an hour the demonstration car was driven up and down at between thirty and thirty-five miles an hour, while the driver juggled in the most audacious manner.

He would lock his steering wheel over to left or right and am on the brakes hard—a performance that would spell swift disaster under all ordinary circumstances.

Despite the ensuing skid, the car was at all times under complete control.

Again, he would drive along the steeply cambered road at high speed, and suddenly skid sideways violently.

Instead of turning completely round about three times, as I would have expected, he brought his car neatly to a standstill, with both rear wheels locked and not the slightest suspicion of a lateral skid.

These feats were rendered possible by a ball-bearing device fitted to the springs.

This device gives the springs a rapidity of movement which retains instant poise for the car-body in every emergency.

Wednesday, December 2, 1925. To-day's Exhibition

The work of the Newfoundland Poultry Association, whose annual exhibition opens in the C. L. B. Armoury to-day, is deserving of the fullest mention and the widest support, and it is hoped that the efforts to stimulate interest in an industry which has immense possibilities will meet with success.

The activities of the Association are by no means confined to the holding of an exhibition; during the year thousands of eggs are distributed throughout the Island, and lectures on poultry raising are given at the expense of the members themselves in various settlements. Already the results are observable in the improved stock raised and in the increase in the number of eggs marketed.

As conditions in this country appear to be admirably suited to the industry, it is surprising to find that the demand both for eggs and poultry is so greatly in excess of the local supply. Annually about 200,000 dozen eggs and about 150,000 pounds of killed poultry are imported, the value of which is not less than $128,000. There seems to be no reason whatever why one cent of this money should leave Newfoundland. Provided poultry raisers will take the trouble to improve their stock and make themselves familiar with the methods which have been found by experience to produce the best results, this branch of agriculture could be made a very profitable venture.

In addition to the poultry industry, the Association has devoted considerable attention to the development of fox farming and the breeding of Newfoundland dogs. In connection with the former industry, Prince Edward Island in recent years has developed it to such an extent as to make it one of the most profitable undertakings in the Province. At a recent exhibition held in Toronto, P. E. I. farms were represented by more than two hundred animals, and won the world's championships for adult foxes and fox pups, for female adults and pups, nearly all the firsts, and many of the other prizes. Half a million dollars worth of furs passed through Montreal on November 22nd bound for France and places in the United States and the Dominion. In the French consignment alone not less than 239 animals were from the Prince Edward Island farms. If we are not mistaken, some at least of the ancestors of these animals came from the oldest Colony, and why we should not prove a rival to the Gulf Province in this trade it seems impossible to conceive.

In the Newfoundland dog the Colony has a breed of animal, the value and importance of which cannot be too strongly stressed. Such little attention was given to the preservation of the breed in the past that it had almost become extinct. The attention given to the matter in recent years, however, by private individuals and the interest awakened by the Association have resulted in steps being taken to perpetuate the species and to give to the animals raised a recognized status. The Exhibition is the nearest approach to an Industrial Fair of anything of the kind held in Newfoundland, and its particular feature is that the products exhibited are capable of being raised profitably in the Island entirely on their merit, and without subsidy or special protection to keep them going. As such they particularly deserve encouragement by the public, and all those who have given their time and services to their promotion are deserving of the highest credit.

Annual Poultry Show The annual poultry show under the auspices of the Newfoundland Poultry Association opened at 3 p.m. to-day in the C. L. B. Armoury. Judging by the number of exhibitors, the show this year promises to be the best ever held. In connection with this year's show there is a Newfoundland dog and fox exhibition which is sure to be interesting. The show will remain open until Dec. 5th. The official opening takes Honorary Mayor Cook will perform the ceremony.

St. Michael's Christmas Fair Opens St. Michael's Women's Association opened their annual Christmas Fair at 3.30 yesterday. The pastor, Rev. Mr. Nicholls performed the duties of opening. Amongst those present were the Lord Bishop and Mrs. White, Rev. Canon Steves, Donaldson, Brinton, Goodland, Jelving and Lady Horwood. There had been prepared a splendid array of goods including plain and fancy work besides articles suitable for Christmas gifts, all of which were rapidly disposed of. The tea tables, too, were well looked after, and the many who partook of tea spoke in high terms of the ladies in charge. The sale will be continued this afternoon when the stocks will be replenished. At night a concert will be held, a feature of which will be a dialogue by the Girl's Guild.

Help a young man up the ladder of success by voting for T. E. Collett. dec2.1f

Young Newfoundland-lander Ordained Mr. H. F. Shortis received the following Anglo cable message this morning from Pittsburgh, Penna, U. S.A.:

"Brother Jack who for fifteen years was Professor of steel treatment department, Carnegie Tech, was ordained a Priest by Bishop Alexander Mann in Trinity Protestant Episcopal Church, Pittsburgh Monday. As you are a friend of the Davis-Taylor family thought you would like to know this. Kind regards."

The young clergyman is the son of the venerable Mrs. Henry Taylor of Noad Street, Harbor Grace, who did so much in knitting socks, gloves, etc. for our young soldiers during the great war, and now in her 84th year. His grandfather was the famous seal-killer, Labrador planter and enterprising business man, Capt. Nathaniel Davis, who, for so many years commanded the brigantine "Robert Arthur," and other ships with success at the ice-roads. The Davis family is one of the very oldest and most highly respected in Conception Bay, and scores of relations are scattered over Newfoundland. The Scanlan family, so long connected with telegraphy in this country, are cousins. All will be pleased to learn that the young cleric has attained his life object, and we wish him success in his sacred calling.

Having put it to the test, shout Wilson's Certified is best. dec2.1f, eod

Afternoon and meat teas will be served, while large stocks of fancy work, knitted goods, home cookery, candy, etc., will be offered for sale. The sale will be continued to-morrow, and as the proceeds are to be devoted to the building fund of the new hall, it is hoped there will be a very large attendance both days.

Magistrate's Court JUDGMENT DELIVERED AGAINST SIR RICHARD SQUIRES IN INCOME TAX CASE.

In the Cause of the Minister of Finance and Customs Against Sir Richard A. Squires for a Breach of Section 7 of the War Tax Act of 1918. After hearing the evidence submitted on the part of the prosecution and the arguments of learned counsel, and after examining the document with affidavits attached marked "exhibit 1," put in on the evidence of Joseph O'Reilly, assessor purporting to be a statement of the defendant's total income during the calendar year preceding the 1st day of December, 1918, I hold that said document and affidavit are not a return, on oath, of the defendant's total income during the said preceding calendar year, in the form prescribed by the Minister of Finance and Customs as provided for under Section 7 of the War Tax Act of 1918 and I, therefore, adjudge the defendant to forfeit and pay the sum of $900, being $450 per day for 180 days prior to the 1st day of November, 1925, being the date of the issue of this summons. (Sgd.) F. J. MORRIS, Magistrate.

Sale of Work LADIES' COLLEGE AID SOCIETY.

The annual sale of work of the Ladies' College Aid Society and Girl's Guild will be opened in the Gately Hall this afternoon at four o'clock by Rev. Dr. Fenwick. This sale is looked upon as one of the principal sales of work held every year and the ladies also make an effort to keep up the reputation they have made before; this year will be no exception. The various stalls will consist of plain and fancy work, handkerchiefs, toys, vanity, pastry, candy, ice-cream, drinks, kitchen utensils, etc. The tea tables will be a special attraction and those who remember the splendid turkey supper served at this sale last year, will be glad to know that an opportunity of partaking of the same will be again afforded this year. The ladies hope to meet all their old friends during the next two afternoons and nights.

More Light on the Great Bacon Controversy

For many years new scholars and lovers of English literature have been disagreeing over the authorship of those works which the world calls the plays of Shakespeare. Few subjects outside of religion, have been so often and so acrimoniously discussed as this famous question. It is a matter which most people seem to be unable to speak of without heat. The supporters of the Bacon theory are as enthusiastic as those who claim Shakespeare to be the sole author. Literary societies use this theme as a subject for debate; books are written about it every year; and in spite of the fact that nearly three centuries have elapsed since the death of Shakespeare and Bacon, the controversy (which of course is of more recent origin) seems as far as ever from being settled. At last however a discovery has been made which settles the question forever. One of the great brains of the century has found out that Shakespeare was aided by Bacon in his literary works. It appears that one of the favourite dishes of the Elizabethan age, was bacon, boiled or roasted, and Shakespeare must have often eaten this tasty dish, thus nourishing the great intellect which produced the famous plays. Now we cannot promise that the use of Bacon will make Shakespeares of all our customers, but we do promise that Wilson's Certified Bacon will make happy and satisfied users.

Annual Meeting Feildian Ladies' Association

On Monday last the annual meeting of the Feildian Ladies' Association was held in the College Hall and was largely attended. The chair was occupied by Mrs. Andrew Carrell, the President, and the reports of the Secretary and Treasurer having been read and adopted, the meeting proceeded with the election of officers, which resulted as follows: President—Mrs. Andrew Carrell, 1st Vice-Pres.—Mrs. Ferlin, 2nd Vice-Pres.—Mrs. H. Knight, Treasurer—Mrs. B. Stafford, Secretary—Mrs. F. F. Barton, Asst. Sec.—Mrs. E. Ellis Weston. In thanking the meeting for having elected her to office for a second time, Mrs. Carrell expressed her appreciation of the loyal assistance given by the members during the past year and trusted that with the same co-operation and with increased membership the work of the Association during the coming year would prove even more successful. The President also referred to the great success of the Bazaar held recently. Just a year in existence, the Association promises to become a most important factor in advancing the various interests of the College. The reports presented were gratifying and showed that a most satisfactory fund had been collected as a result of the year's work. Part of the amount is devoted towards effecting improvements in Bishop Feild College and part to the laying out of recreation grounds on the Tannery Field. Considerable discussion took place with regard to the programme of work to be undertaken, and the hope was generally expressed that everyone who had the welfare of the College at heart would join the Association, as the work of erecting new buildings would have to be undertaken in the immediate future owing to the dilapidated condition of the present building and the necessity for increased accommodation.

Did Not Benefit Financially Judging by the notices published in Tuesday's Telegram by one of the specialty performers in "Mrs. Malone at the Circus" which by the way is quite correct, there apparently is some misconception as to the disposition of the proceeds. Accordingly, it is up to me to give a financial statement. Needless to say, I too did not benefit from this performance. On the contrary, in my enthusiasm, I practically forgot my own work for a week and am now feeling the loss of that week's production. The total receipts of the show were as follows: Monday, $387.15; Tuesday, $381.50; Wednesday, $206.51 and Thursday, $108.00, totaling $1087.16.

Address Delivered by Mr. H. F. Shortis in 1915.

fore been taken by the French. He had 16 guns in his own ship, and managed to get 14 guns more, and within one month he built four forts. The men of the place seeing Holman's bravery and prudent management, came to his assistance. It is recounted in the records that the French arrived with two powerful frigates with ninety guns, but Holman and his crews so battered them, that they ran away, leaving anchors and chains and eighty to ninety Frenchmen as prisoners. This so discouraged the enemy that they gave over their intended raid to spoil the trade of the whole country. It is pleasing to tell that our hero, Capt. Holman, received the thanks of the Lords of the Admiralty for his gallant services, and they presented them with a gold medal and chain for defeating the French on this occasion. It is a shame on us in Newfoundland that we have nothing to commemorate Christopher Martin and William Holman and in fact very few know their names, but they showed an example of heroism for us all.

1694 was a memorable year for Newfoundland, and there must have been a very few here come down to us. Early in this year Chevalier Nesmond, with a large French squadron, attacked St. John's, but two hastily constructed forts, one at Chain Rock and the other on the opposite side, defended the entrance. Nesmond's powerful fleet was completely routed by the undisciplined defenders with the valor of the Newfoundland crews. Later in the year D'Iberville and his trained soldiers made the greatest effort ever put forward by the French to take possession of Newfoundland. Finding that St. John's was impregnable from the sea they determined to attack by land. After the English ships had left the coast in September, this daring enemy, started the horrors of a winter campaign, and spread desolation and misery at every harbor from Placentia to Ferryland, and thence up the shore to St. John's. At Petty Harbor a desperate fight occurred, where 36 of the inhabitants were slain. Hearing of this fight, St. John's men went to the assistance of their friends, but a mile outside of St. John's they encountered the French on the Southside Hills. There were 400 disciplined French troops, but these courageous planters struck to it, until 24, nearly half of their number, were slain. Then they retired in good order to Fort William near where the Prince's Rink now stands. The unfortunate settlers in St. John's found themselves without ammunition or supplies, and no officers to command or lead in the defence. For three days they held the Fort. One of their number, William Drew, was captured, and barbarously treated, and they threatened to scalp every prisoner. All on his back through the Fort, terms of surrender were arranged. All terms to depart for England, but the French commanders dishonorably evaded it. The invaders continued their march to Portugal Cove, and thence around Conception Bay, in the middle of winter. This was a great military feat, but they met their match when they reached Carbonar Island, where the Harbor Guard and Carbonar people, to the number of two hundred, had determined to defend themselves against all attacks.

John Bryn was the leader, ably assisted by Davis and Garland, and put up the most heroic defence that even Lord Kitchener or Baden-Powell could wish for. Several attempts were made by D'Iberville to land on the Island, but the night of the 31st of December they went all around in boats with ninety picked men ready for a desperate attack. There was one spot, the Bench Rock, still pointed out, where they made a determined effort to land, and were challenged at pistol shot distance. The French version says that they were able to touch the rock with their hands, and ready to leap ashore, but the tradition at Bristol's Hope, says, that one man did jump ashore, but he was driven back to the Bench into the water. When we remember that Carbonar Island is about three miles in circumference, and being attacked in the dark by six boats, and no one knowing where they were going to land, it must have been an exciting time for the small garrison, who must have been scattered in all directions. After finding their best efforts failed, D'Iberville continued his march down the North Shore, then across to Old Perlican and up to Heart's Content. Here an Irishman had built a small fort made of boards, with port holes above and below, and in it he had thirty men besides women and children. The French version says they surrendered on being summoned, but I don't believe it. I pin my faith to the local tradition, which still tells of a fierce battle with the French at New Perlican, which is quite near the entrance to Heart's Content coming up the shore, and in a celebrated "Look Out." It is a most likely spot where a defence would be put up. This place still goes by the name of Bloody Point, and everyone will tell you that it was a fight with the French. Who ever heard of an Irishman having surrendered on being summoned? Is that what we heard about the Connaught Rangers a few days ago. I will never believe that French version. The very mention of an Irishman in charge belies this statement, and only proves that there is another hero, whose name is unfortunately forgotten, and shed his own blood, and that of a good many Frenchmen, before they were finally overcome. D'Iberville now took the short cut across from Heart's Content to Carbonar to finish his work by capturing the Island. He arrived on the 17th January only to find that the garrison had succeeded in taking several of their men prisoners. D'Iberville, finding that he could not succeed in taking this Gibraltar of Newfoundland, by fair means, resorted to treachery. He entered into negotiations for exchange of prisoners. The plan agreed upon was just out of the gunshot of the Island. For trivial excuses the French Commander raised a dispute, seized the English leaders and kept them prisoners. No doubt he thought when their leaders were gone the others would quickly surrender. But they reckoned wrong that time, and it showed the pluck and courage of that noble two hundred fishermen, who refused all terms of surrender and held out to the bitter end. Ten days later D'Iberville had to admit his failure to take Carbonar Island and left again for Trinity Bay. If I wasn't writing about Newfoundland here I would mention D'Iberville's exploits in Hudson Bay, where he defeated the English at all their important stations, destroyed their fleet of men-o-war, and captured their great stronghold, Fort Nelson. When you read of their exploits you can get some idea of the men our humble Newfoundland fishermen were fighting against. His journeys to Hudson Bay and sea fights were simply marvellous, and old John Pryn, Davis and Garland were men who showed him the stuff real Newfoundland heroes were made of. The losses in this war in 1696 were tremendous. Ferryland alone is put down at $60,000.00, and that is nothing compared to St. John's, Harbor Grace and Carbonar. What must have been the destitution of this raid to the people of Newfoundland at this time? We know from the Census in 1675 that there must have been fully 2,000 people living here during the winter. When we think of the suffering they had to undergo with the sacking and pillage by these Frenchmen and Indians, then the burning of their houses in mid-winter, and no chance of getting any provisions till the following spring, it must have been terrible. We know something of what the great fire in 1892 was, and what suffering had to be undergone; but that was in mid-summer, and assistance was sent from Halifax within two days, and every kind of relief offered; but if that fire had happened in mid-winter and no opportunity of relief offered for four months, and not that alone but a pitiless enemy standing guard over you demanding everything you held dear, you can get some idea of what the Newfoundland settlers had to undergo, and I am not exaggerating when I say our Newfoundland heroes were ten times worse off than over this stories we hear of Belgium to-day. It was only after this destruction of all the Newfoundland settlements that the English Government was aroused to send assistance by soldiers and navy to help in defending the country against these invaders.

In reading Abbe Bandola's journal, while it gives interesting facts, we must remember that it was intended for French readers, and therefore accounts of British bravery is minimized to a mere nothing; but happily we have some fragments of actual occurrences that give us some facts of what did happen. Only a few lines come to us about John Earle, a young man who lived with his family on Little Bell Island in Conception Bay. He anticipated an attack and had a cannon on the cliff. To make believe he had a considerable force, he had scarecrows dressed up. The French attacked him with two barges filled with soldiers. With a well directed shot he sank one barge. That man Earle deserved the Victoria Cross. His valor was unquestionable, and such were the deeds of the men who won our British Empire. There were probably fifty men in those two boats, and here was one young man who attempted the impossible. He defied the lot of them, and by his ingenuity and resourcefulness won a complete victory. What bravery that man did show! How long would he and his family live if the Frenchmen had landed and found what fools he was making of them? They would have quartered and hanged him to the nearest post as an example to any others who would play such tricks on them.

I have no doubt there are some of your readers who have heard of Skipper Jim Wilcox of Brigus, who always went by the name of Britaliner, and his son after him was the Young Britaliner. I want to tell you how Jim Wilcox got the name of "The Britaliner." It was back in the French wars in the early part of the past century. Capt. Wilcox was out fishing in one of the small covered-in jacks, and had two men and a boy besides himself. They had done very well, and had a nice bit of fish, and were ready for home when one of the large French bankers came along with a crew of twenty-five men. In those troublesome times "might was right," and the Frenchmen thought it was an easy way to get their fish by ordering the boat to come alongside and hand over whatever fish they had to them. They hailed Capt. Wilcox and told him to come alongside, but to their surprise he took no notice of them. They at once got out the big row boat and twenty of the crew started in chase of him and were soon alongside. Jim Wilcox was one of those small sturdy set men who feared nothing, and when he saw the boat alongside he looked for a weapon to defend himself. There wasn't a gun or anything of the kind on board, the only thing he could get was an axe; but he stood up to the gunwale of that little boat and spoke a mighty oath. I won't give the words exactly, but he said that "Not a d— Frenchman would ever come aboard while there was a Britaliner aboard." He kept his word, and that boat made one attempt after another, but that valiant little hero with the hatchet was more than a match for them, and the Frenchmen had to give up their intended raid. You can well believe that story was repeated many a time when the crew got back to Brigus, and the name of Britaliner stuck to Jim Wilcox for the rest of his life, and that of his son after him.

Capt. Wm. Jackman was the great hero of 1867. There was a terrible storm at Labrador on the 9th of October. He rescued twenty-seven persons, mostly females, from drowning, bringing them all on his back through the surf.

When I get started telling stories I cannot stop, so now I must give you a typical one about the seal fishery. There were not many herds amongst those men that will forever be the greatest romance in the history of Newfoundland life that it is hard to make special mention, but I don't believe there was a greater exploit than that of Capt. Wm. Bartlett, who sailed out of Brigus about one hundred years ago in quest of seals. It wasn't an iron clad or even a wooden steamer that he had, but one of those old-fashioned shallops, an open boat of about twenty tons with movable deck boards. Judge Prowse tells us that these old shallops never went past the headlands, but Capt. Billy Bartlett did. He hoped to find the seals at Baccalieu, but they weren't there, so he followed on to Cape Bonavista; still there was no ice there, so he said, "Boys, we will follow on till we get them." He followed on to the Funcher; still there were no seals, so he told the boys, "We will follow on again"—and he followed and followed on till they reached the Spotted Islands on the Labrador Coast, and there, off Hiscok's Island they met the ice and lots of seals. They soon loaded her and drifted south with the ice until they reached the latitude of Conception Bay. Talk of heroes, but who ever heard of an ordinary mortal going to Labrador in mid-winter in an open boat? When we hear of such men we wonder if they are only things of the past; but history repeats itself, and Capt. Bob Bartlett, one of his descendants, even beats that record to-day in the voyage of the Karliak. He tells his story as if it was all in a day's work, how he brought the old Karliak through many dangers; but when her doom was sealed he saved his crew, and if the scientists had followed his advice they would also be alive to-day. We have already heard of D'Iberville's Military Exploit, of a two hundred mile tramp during a Newfoundland winter, but here was Bob Bartlett tramping 1100 miles in the depth of an Arctic Siberian winter with one lone Eskimo, who was frightened out of his life, that they would meet a stranger. What anguish Bartlett must have suffered when he reached the first settlement, looking for assistance, to find the only two families living there were on the verge of starvation, and instead of getting relief for himself, he at once divided his slender stock of provisions with them. For days his legs and feet were benumbed and powerless from constant soaking in the icy water and slush, so that he had to rest in spite of his spirit urging him on. We talk of our heroes of olden days, but here we have one right up to date, and well might we all say that we are proud of him, and if we could only get him to give a proper account of what he did go through, it would turn my lecture into a summer dream.

New let us come back to our early Newfoundland history. After D'Iberville's invasion the British Government sent valuable assistance to Newfoundland. The city was rebuilt, and the forts and batteries at St. John's, as well as Carbonear Island, were put in good shape for several years.

In 1704 the French made another heavy attack on Newfoundland. This time they took Bonavista by surprise, but Capt. Gill, a hardy New England Trader saved the situation, and by his heroism repulsed the French squadron. It was a tough fight, but Capt. Gill settled in Newfoundland, and his descendants are to be found here today. His son, Michael Gill, was the Colonel of the first Regiment of Local Militia started in St. John's in 1757. During the next twelve years there were many attacks of the French in Placentia, in St. John's and the outports. Carbonear Island was gallantly defended by our heroes, Davis and Pynn, who resisted all attacks to the mortification of the French. In March 1705 St. John's put up a gallant defence against a French invasion from Placentia, and never surrendered, although every intimidation of barbarity, flattery and offers of bribery were attempted by the enemy. Lieut. Moody and Lieut. Lanthan were the heroes of this occasion. What horrors people will do in time of war. It will give you one instance.—The French sent a messenger to Fort William with a flag of truce in one hand, and a small child with its throat cut in the other, an intimation that every person in the Fort regardless of sex was going to be put to the sword.

Nothing could get these worthy men to surrender, but the whole trade of St. John's, Conception Bay and Trinity Bay was ruined. The losses amongst the early pioneer planters were enormous and the records state that fully one million dollars were lost to the merchants of Ferryland, St. John's, Harbor Grace, Carbonear and Trinity Bay. The following year, the British had revenge on the French establishments on the French shore. It gives some idea of the fighting that our Newfoundland forefathers had in the settlement of this Newfoundland of ours. Surely with the blood of those old conquerors in our veins, there should be no difficulty to raise any amount of men to fight the battles of the Empire.

In 1709 a much better organization was arranged, and we find our old hero John Pynn was placed in charge of Carbonear Island. The Pynns were a worthy and noted family, and many of their descendants are with us today. They were amongst our earliest settlers of Harbor Grace and Bristol's Hope, and every generation had some noted member of this family. I will have more to say about them later. They were an old Bristol family, and tradition tells us were cousins of Sir Wm. Penn, who founded Pennsylvania, but there was very little of the quaker spirit in this branch of the family.

There was about fifty years of peace till the next war broke out in 1762.

In 1762 both France and Spain declared war on England. The French Government were particularly anxious to obtain possession of Newfoundland, and their first effort was to despatch a strong squadron, which not alone took the British authorities by surprise, but made a sudden attack on Newfoundland. They arrived the 24th of June at Bay Bulls, and meeting no resistance at once despatched troops over land to St. John's, and took every advantage of a total absence of any preparation. They seized every kind of property, and immediately began to repair the fortifications of the town and harbor. The British Government at once started the means to recapture Newfoundland. There were several Naval and Military men then in Halifax, who studied the means to drive the Frenchmen out. By the 18th of September Colonel Amherst had landed troops at Tor Bay and Quidi Vidi and had captured the forts at Signal Hill, and pointed the guns towards the town. The French Admiral taking advantage of a thick fog slipped his cables, and escaped, leaving about 700 of his compatriots as prisoners including several officers, of which there were two Colonels. The greatest credit must be given to these British Officers for the able way they had handled this campaign, but special mention is always made to one or two of our Newfoundland Merchants, who were our heroes on this occasion. Robert Carter of Ferryland by his prudence and indefatigable exertions found a means to secure a supply of provisions and necessaries for the support of the garrison on the Island of Buoy and also for the relief of the inhabitants who locked there for protection from June 24th to October 9th. Carter also sent one hundred boats and crews to Bay Bulls, but when they arrived the enemy had left. The other merchant was Charles Garland of Harbor Grace, who supplied at his own expense for a considerable time, a garrison for Carbonear Island. He was also most active and successful in providing a number of seamen from his District for the English Squadron. Both Mr. Carter and Mr. Garland were fully indemnified afterwards for this expense, and their services were most honorably acknowledged, but the reward for this distinguished work comes in the remembrance of the general public to those high-spirited heroes, who came to the rescue at that critical time. It is needless to say that the descendants of these worthy men are with us to-day.

New York Criticism of "Man on the Box"

BY DOROTHY HERZON IN "THE MIRROR."

Syd Chaplin covers himself with glory and sends his audiences into gales of merriment at Warners' Theatre this week, where he stars in Harold McGrath's story, "The Man on the Box."

This laughter is a mixture of straight comedy, burlesque and slapstick. Even the Sphinx would shriek at Syd Chaplin's canny gift of fun, his clever acrobatics and female impersonation on the order of that in "Charley's Aunt."

Director Charles "Chuck" Reisner has sustained the laughs until the final fadeout. He never permits the story to drag, and has bolstered it with humorous sub-titles and side-splitting "gags."

A rather large and adequate cast supports the star, with the Black Mammy (not credited on the programme), especially good. Alice Calhoun makes a poor heroine, being too heavy and moony.

Bob Warburton is a youth with good intentions but anti-climatic excursions! First he is thrown out of the house of an inventor who thinks he is after his wife. Then he drives a hansom, becomes a groom, a butler, and, at last, a maid. Interwoven with this lively action is a slender romance, which ends as it should.

The Black Mammy catches "butling" Bob taking a plum out of his cheek and she having reprimanded him before for eating everything in sight, gasps in horror and ejaculates: "My Gawd. You ain't a man. You're a pelican."

Take our tip and put "The Man on the Box" on your "must" list. We're going to see again with more anticipation than we saw it the first time.

The outbreak of Typhoid at North Harbor, P.E. has been checked and Inspector Lawlor and Dr. McDonald, who were despatched there a few days ago are returning to-morrow. There were eighteen cases at the place and three deaths resulted, one of the patients, a woman, passing away only a few days ago.

Have You Seen "Man Without Conscience"

Exceptionally Powerful Photoplay At The Nickel.

At last, that much heralded picture "The Man Without a Conscience" came to town, at the Nickel Theatre. It is an exceptionally strong picture, surprising in its characterization, tending in the development of the story.

The title role is entrusted to that versatile actor and genius of characterization, Willard Louis. Mr. Lewis is supported by such capable artists as Irene Rich, whose many successes in other Warner Bros. "Classics of the Screen" are film history by now; June Marlowe, "the girl with the soulful eyes," who plays the extremely difficult part of Anna; Robert Agnew, the handsome and clever juvenile of many screen plays; John Patrick, William Orlandum and Helen Dunbar.

The story is from the original Continental novel by Max Kretzer and has been well transposed for the screen by Hope Loring and Louis Durrell Lighton.

It is one of the rare pictures wherein all the characters are dominant and of almost equal importance, so interwoven are they in the mesh of circumstances.

"The Man Without a Conscience" is the story of a man armored in ambitions that override all obstacles. He laughed at the heartaches of others, defied Fate and garnered wealth and position, until relentless conscience and truth found him out.

A strong picture directed by James Flood.

At the G. W. V. A. Circus

That the Great War Veterans' Association first Annual Circus and Hippodrome show is the most popular event ever staged in the city is attested by the immense gatherings at the Prince's Rink each night since the opening on Nov. 23rd. Last night there was scarcely standing room and it was only by moving with the crowd that one could take in all the interesting side shows. Despite the great throng of people present the best of order prevailed. The two hours of thrilling entertainment provided by the acrobats is undoubtedly the best value ever given for the small sum of twenty-five cents, and those who have not seen the performances of the Kellers, Professor Alfreno or the Faustus should avail of the opportunity by attending to-night.

An EASTERN CAP

Fortunes in Frocks

(By Margaret Chute)

Give any woman the chance—just the chance—of spending £200 a month (not her own hard-earned money, but her manager's) on silk stockings, £25 a week on perfume, £2,500 a year on lingerie—what would she say? The answer is not hard to guess. Gloria Swanson has that chance—and uses it.

Such joys form part of the everyday routine of a film star's existence; though, in a sense, the joy is tempered with sadness, since it is not possible to lay out sums of money running into five figures without considerable sacrifice of time and patience, to say nothing of the skill required in choosing the right things.

Some of the figures "revealed" in connection with screen stars' garments and their necessary accessories are positively staggering. Clothes are a tremendous item; not only those worn when facing the camera, for which the management has to pay, but also those in which a star is seen in public at restaurants, theatres, race-meetings, in her car—which she must provide herself. And her contract stipulates, probably, that she must be seen in public constantly, dressed in the very latest, most up-to-the-minute fashions.

Once upon a time, an actress was expected to provide her own stage clothes, as well as those she wore in private life, except in the case of costume plays. But the enormously elaborate wardrobe required by an up-to-date screen star, and its huge cost, has made this quite impossible. So the management provides the clothes; the star wears them, only once, before the camera; and then—well, then she likes a dress sufficiently well, she may buy it for her private wardrobe, from her manager, for a mere fraction of its original cost.

But this does not happen often; so the elaborate day and evening gowns the silver-sheet beauties must wear continue to make a large hole in the substantial weekly pay-envelope that sounds so enormous until the cost of clothes and living comes into the picture.

Tiaras on Hire.

To dress Gloria Swanson for the screen costs something like £35,000 a year. That does not include any jewellery. When such casual items as tiaras, rings, bracelets, and necklaces come to be reckoned, these light and airy trifles represent at least another £125,000 in value. But they are not purchased outright—for which a manager must have a sigh of vast relief. They are merely hired, as wanted, at about ten or fifteen per cent of their full value.

Shoes, in Miss Swanson's case, are a heavy item; twenty-five pairs of shoes for one production is a modest estimate. As for her stockings, already quoted as costing £200 a month, these are bought in bunches of twelve dozen, and are mostly of the finest, sheerest black silk, at £8 a pair. And no pair is worn more than twice.

To these essential possessions must be added two hundred hats. Gloria Swanson does not allow her hat-cupboard to contain anything less than two hundred smart hats at one time. Possibly fifty per cent of the collection have never been worn after the initial trying-on stage; but they are ready for any sudden emergency.

For a single screen-play it costs, on an average, £12,000 to dress Miss Swanson. In one play, called "Her Love Story," the star's clothes cost no less than £24,000.

Wearing such gorgeous gowns in the correct manner necessitates a slender, graceful figure; so Gloria Swanson's contract—like those of other screen stars—stipulates that her weight must not exceed 150 pounds; which is, perhaps, the fly in the ointment, the snag that calls forth visions of endless dry toast and lemon, lamb chops and pineapple, ad nauseam.

Popular Marion Davies wears clothes costing thousands of pounds in her screen pictures. When she played "Janice Meredith," she used no less than twenty-two costumes, costing nothing under £30 each, plus two cloaks at £125 each.

This pales considerably before her clothes-bill for "Yolanda," when her wardrobe was more elaborate, for every dress cost at least £125, and the dresses ran into dozens. Marion Davies makes many "costume" pictures, which take about six months to complete. Consequently her dresses have to be made of the finest and most expensive materials, in order to stand the strain of long and hard wear in the studio.

For her private use Miss Davies allows £12,000 a year, most of this representing invested capital, not extravagance. Spanish shawls, for example, are a craze with Miss Davies; she pays as much as £400 for one shawl, but most of them are worth far more than she gave for them, and she could sell her fine collection for a very large sum of money at any time.

Norma's Nervous Bill.

Another silver-sheet star whose clothes cost a fortune is Norma Talmadge. In one of her productions, called "Sacrifice"—not her most expensive production by any means—about £5,000 was spent on her clothes.

Normal Talmadge makes at least four big pictures a year, so in the course of twelve months her husband and producer, Joseph M. Schenck, spends from £15,000 to £20,000 on her screen dresses. Like other stars, Miss Talmadge is photographed in many dresses in which she is not seen in the finished film; dozens of effects are tried before the right one is reached.

In the screen version made by this popular star of the stage play "Secrets," she was filmed for one short scene only no fewer than eight different times in eight different dresses. She is seen in just one of these dresses in the finished film; seven pictures were discarded, and the best retained—that is the way some of the money goes!

As in the case of other screen stars with a vast following of "fans" all over the world, Norma and Constance Talmadge buy very few handkerchiefs, because they receive hundreds from unknown friends at Christmas and on their birthdays. This is perhaps the only modest item on a heavy expense-sheet.

To dress a screen beauty or a king's daughter must be, of necessity, an expensive matter. And it seems highly probable that the favoured favourites of filmland spend money at a rate that no princess could afford. But to keep up their position on their screen-thrones, stars must glitter incessantly—backed by their managers' money.—Answers.

Woman Keeper Killed by Tiger

Attacked While Cleaning Cage at Manchester Zoo.

With a single blow with one of its fore paws a tiger killed a woman at Belle Vue Gardens, Manchester, where she was one of the best known keepers.

The woman, Mrs. Lambert, aged fifty-five, was cleaning out the back of the cage, and had apparently forgotten to make secure the door communicating with the front of the cage.

Through this the tiger must have crawled, and while Mrs. Lambert's back was turned to it, pounced on her.

It is stated that the tiger then struck her on the back of the neck with a fore paw and killed her.

Fellow keepers at once rushed to Mrs. Lambert's aid before the animal had time to maul her and drove it away.

First Woman Keeper.

Mrs. Lambert was the widow of a former keeper at these famous Northern zoological gardens, and she is described as being on friendly terms with most of the larger animals.

Mrs. Lambert was appointed five years ago as the first woman keeper of wild animals at the Belle Vue Zoo.

She succeeded her husband, who, before his death, had been for many years in the service of the Belle Vue Company.

She was in the Wild Beasts' House, and had charge of some of the larger animals, and knew each of them by name.

Many times she could be seen fondling the animals in their cages, and they always welcomed her.

In the Wild Beasts' House are lions, three tigers, pumas, leopards and other large animals.

Billiards. "The Half Ball Stroke."

What is the half-ball stroke? It is an endeavour on the part of the striker to hit his own ball dead in the middle while aiming at the edge of the object ball—that is, to say that half of each ball meets the other. To practice for this all-important stroke one should place the spot ball on the centre spot of the bank line with the small spot on it exactly in the middle. Now play to hit that spot when striking aim to go perfectly straight (over the other three spots on the table) to the top cushion, with as much freedom as you can use, letting your arm come well out and finishing with your cue on the table. To bring the ball back over the bank spot is absolutely the most difficult thing for the beginner to do. It looks absurdly easy, but it is not. If you can do this with a fair amount of accuracy you are well on the way to become proficient at the half-ball stroke.

It is absolutely essential to success that one should try and keep the cue steady and straight during the time he is taking his three or four swings at the ball before striking. Any deviation of the cue or arm will cause a mishap.

The half-ball stroke is accompanied by striking your own ball in the middle naturally, without screw or force, and aiming your cue through your ball at the extreme edge of the object ball. It follows that the balls must always leave each other at the same angle, and this is called the natural angle at billiards. By screwing or forcing one makes the angle different; by hitting the ball fine one makes it different.

Halley (B.L.S.)—400—11, 16, 14, 13, 21, 14, 15, 16, 23, 10, 14, 21, 14, 216. W. Rodger (Masonic)—397—16, 17, 15, 11, 24, 10, 12, 11—116. To-night's Games. 7.15—F. Rabbits (Masonic) vs. W. J. Canadians Defeat Boston in Rough Game.

The Canadians of Montreal defeated Boston Bruins at the Boston Arena last night by 3 goals to 2. The game was brilliant for its many good plays, particularly the individual rushes by Joliet and Moroz, for the victors, and Herbert and Carson Cooper for Boston. Several fouls were handed out by Jerry Lafamme during the game. At times it got very rough, particularly in the opening of the third period, when three players were banished from the ice. A feature of the game was the clever goal-keeping of LeCroz, for Canadians, who substituted for the veteran Vesina. In the first period Cooper scored a lone tally for Boston, on a pass from Jackson. Canadians had the edge on their opponents in the second, and due to the great work of Moroz, with the assistance of Joliet, two goals were accounted for. The third period was fast and interesting. After ten minutes of play Joliet made the score read 3 to 1, and the final goal came one minute before the close when Cooper, for Boston, beat LaCroz, on a close-in shot. The game was broadcasted play by play through WBZ, Springfield, Mass. The announcer was very distinct, and at times the cheers of the crowd could be heard.

Professor W. Seeley.

After a very successful trip to Hart's Content, Carbonar and Brigus, meeting many friends and enrolling a number of pupils, I will now be in St. John's for about four months: December, January, February, March. Along with my training and studies, I will promote some very interesting boxing and wrestling bouts, will also enroll many pupils both personally and by mail. Don't miss seeing the performance in the Star Theatre Friday and Saturday nights, December 14th and 15th. You will see four strong men perform, three of my pupils had myself and I can guarantee we will please you. Professor Seeley has always something new to show to the audience. One act will be the chewing of a heavy tea cup; I can break any tea cup or glass tumbler with my teeth. This show will be for men, women and children; it is well worth your while to come and see our local boys perform and to see what can be accomplished through physical culture under the proper training in a short space of time. All three men have only been training about nine weeks. You will see their photographs on display at the Star Theatre, Thursday, Friday and Saturday; you will have the pleasure of seeing many of my pupils perform in the near future, both boys and girls. Are you going to join the large number and be strong, healthy and happy? Don't forget the special offer I made you all a few days ago. I can do things that no other man living can do. I can also build up the weak faster than any man living. Are you ready? You will find me at my office, Renout Building, Phone 2146, P. O. Box 1302.

Truth About Dale.

A committee has now been set up to consider the working of the unemployment insurance scheme and what changes may be necessary. Lord Blanesburgh (formerly Sir George Younger) is chairman, and the other members are: Miss Bondfield, Sir James Curtis, Prof. Carless-Davis, Mr. J. Hamilton, Sir Hugh Horst, Mr. Frank Hodges, Mr. A. Holmes, Mr. Lawrence Holt, Sir James Lithgow, Sir W. McChintock, Viscountess Milner, Sir G. Hamilton-West. The secretary of the committee will be Mr. J. A. Dale, of the Labor Ministry. The representative character of the committee is shown by the inclusion in it of two members of the late Socialist Ministry—Miss Margaret Bondfield, former Parliamentary Secretary at the Labor Ministry, and Mr. Frank Hodges, ex-Civil Lord of the Admiralty. Appointment of the committee was announced by the Government as the result of insistent statements that there was widespread abuse of the dole system, and that many preferred living on the taxpayer to looking for work. The Labor Ministry announced that 1,367,790 persons were recorded on November 2 last on the Employment Exchanges. This is 24,898 less than a week ago and 20,235 less than a year ago.

To the Voters in the Forthcoming Municipal Elections.

During this week I will endeavour to show you how money can be raised for city improvements. In yesterday's Telegram I suggested the forming of an Insurance Company to be managed by the St. John's Municipal Council. To-day I will suggest taxing the Farmers who use our city streets, why should this class of our city drive out to town two or three times a week, use the city streets and peddle around from door to door selling his produce and at the same time underselling the city grocer who has to pay such taxes as rent, water rates, ground tax and stock tax. Why should the farmer be given more privileges than the city man? I say build three markets one west, one central and one east and let the farmer dispose of his goods in such a market at the same time paying a tax for its upkeep. Then again we will take the country butcher—better known as hawkers—who come to town Saturday and peddle around from door to door underselling the city butchers. They can easily do it as they have not any city taxes to pay. Furthermore I would like to say that the city butcher has an inspector calling two or three times a week inspecting his store and the least speak of dust or dirt has to be remedied and his store kept clean when a country butcher can build some kind of a box on his express and that serves the purpose of a clean store. Do you think this box affair is sanitary? If you do, I don't. Then again the driver, how often does he wash his hands, before he handles meat? This is a question I cannot answer as I have not seen any doing so. Mr. Storekeeper or Butcher if you agree with the above improvements I ask you to vote for T. E. COLLETT, Mayor Candidate. Watch for to-morrow's issue of the Telegram regarding a tax on foreigners—ed:111

Hearing Postponed.

In the cause of the Minister of Finance and Customs against Sir Richard Squires for a breach of Section 7 of the War Tax Act of 1918, judgment was handed down by Judge Morris, after which Mr. Jerrett asked that the hearing of other pending cases be postponed until to-morrow owing to Mr. Howley, K.C., not being able to appear to-day. Mr. L. E. Emerson for the prosecution consented and it was ordered accordingly. The cases to be heard are in reference to income taxes for years 1919, 1920, 1921, 1922 and 1924.

Results in Three Flowers.

Great interest was manifested in the Three Flowers Limerick Competition advertised in the Evening Telegram and run in conjunction with the Vanity Stall at the L. C. A. S. D. C. The first prize was won by Miss Rita Ryan, Placentia; second prize, Miss Elizabeth Christian, St. Pleasant Street, City; third prize, Miss Mary Galway, 139 Patrick Street. Miss Elizabeth Christian, City. THIRD PRIZE. There was a young hero of Ours Who fought through the War of the Flowers; But at the Vanity Stall he fell after all. For the girl that used fragrant Three Flowers. Miss Mary Galway, City. Several of the other limericks sent in are worthy of special mention and will be published from day to day. Invention to View Bodies Moving at High Speed.

Paris, Nov. 24.—Stereoscope is the name of a new apparatus shown by the Academy of Sciences by George Claude. The new instrument, the invention of the two brothers, Seguin, projects powerful lightning-like flashes from a tube of neon gas. These flashes when directed on anything which is rotating rapidly, even in full daylight, make the rotating object appear to be completely still, or if it is so desired, to be turning very slowly. The industrial world will find the apparatus of importance in permitting the examination of rapidly moving bodies while in full action. An airplane propeller, making 1200 revolutions to the minute, appeared to be absolutely motionless. A bit of string fastened to one end of a propeller blade also appeared motionless in place, but assumed a peaceful curve under the air pressure.

Court of Revision in Session.

The court of revision for the apportionment of property opened in the Municipal Council Chambers, City Hall, on yesterday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock with Hon. P. J. Morris, K.C., and Mr. F. E. Rendell, in attendance together with the City Solicitor and City Appraiser. Some twelve cases were adjourned during the session. The court will sit every lawful day in the afternoon during the month of December, and all taxpayers are asked to govern themselves accordingly. Mr. Rendell, who has been appointed Judge of the apportionment, is a son of the late Hon. George Rendell. His father before him was also one of the Judges of the Court of Revision for a number of years.

Magistrate's Court.

A resident of Manuels arrested yesterday evening from on board the outgoing train was fined $2 or seven days. Evidence was given that the man was drunk and disorderly. An agent who failed to stop his motor car whilst passengers were alighting from a street car at Adelaide Street on Nov. 24th was fined the minimum sum of $5.00 as it was shown that there was not a deliberate breach of the Act. A motor mechanic, charged with parking his car on the night of Nov. 28th last, without having lights on, was allowed to go on paying costs. Defendant was attending a wake and had, he said, left his car at the disposal of the family of the deceased. When he took the car from the garage his battery was down and during the night he kept a constant watch on the machine. A sailor of foreign nationality, arrested for being drunk, was also charged with a breach of Sec. 15 B of the Alcoholic Liquors Act. It appears that when the defendant was searched, a lemonade bottle, filled with liquor, was found on his person. Mr. Parsons, for the Controller, contended that the burden of proof to show that the liquor was obtained from the Department, lay with the defendant. Being placed in the box the sailor satisfied the Judge that the liquor in question was obtained legally. A fine of $10.00 was imposed on the conviction for being drunk.

Civic Affairs.

Editor Evening Telegram. Dear Sir,—One of your correspondents—an ex-newspaper man—seeking re-election as a city grandfather seems to think nothing of taking up columns of valuable space to inform the public that he has no platform because great men like the late Mr. J.W. Withers, etc., etc., say the impossibility of accomplishing what they desired. Now, really, we want something a little more modern than this. Some new blood! Your correspondent is like those people who said that we would never, never, have an hotel. He is like those people who said that the women would never, never, have the vote. Now the late Mr. Withers was one of the first men asked to give a word of encouragement to help Newfoundland women get the franchise. He refused because he was absolutely certain that women would never, never, have the vote. He said "Go home, women, and learn to bake bread." Now Mr. Withers proved a poor prophet as far as the vote was concerned. Whenever woman franchise is mentioned in Newfoundland the names of Mrs. McNeil and Miss Kennedy stand out as two of the chief workers to obtain the vote for 130,000 women. Mrs. McNeil and Miss Kennedy are great workers. Give them a chance citizens, and you will see inaccessible mountains turned into molehills. Those who for their sisters worked New earnestly appeal. Give three cheers. For the Pioneers! Kennedy and McNeil! Clean up! Keep Clean our City For an Honest Deal. We're making noise. They'll have our votes. Kennedy and McNeil! The year is going! Let him go. The joy-bells soon will peal. We have no fears. For four good years Kennedy and McNeil. adv.

PEPYS BEHIND THE SCENES. December 1st—Settled my accounts with my wife for housekeeping, and de see that my kitchen, besides heating, and washing, comes to about $55 a week or a little over. I did commend my wife for her care of the house and bid her see that it was always kept with the same economy. So abroad, and the month seems to have brought with it a great frost. Indeed, 'tis so cold that I learn how more than 30 motor coaches did freeze last night, and am in great fear that the same may happen mine own, and so do think it wise to store it for the winter. Mr. Stafford calls for me this day in his motor coach and takes me to the new hotel, where I have not been before, and mighty amazed at the progress that has been made with it, being that the roof is already in course of construction. From the 7th floor, did obtain the most beautiful view that I have ever seen of the city, save on the occasion when I did fly above it in an air coach. The harbour may be seen beyond the Dock, and one sees the town set, as it were, in a valley, encircled by hills. Meeting Mr. Cameron, that is Superintendent of Construction, he do explain the plans to me, mighty interesting. It do make me madd this day to learn that I am blamed for the writing of the letter in the news sheets signed 'The Wretch,' being a silly thing, nor had I ought to do with it. But so far as it refers to the women that stand as Councillors, I do not hesitate to repeat that I will vote for all three of them, not so much because I have changed my views concerning women's suffrage so much as to give them an opportunity to see what they may do.

If a Voter votes for more candidates than he is entitled to vote for, or places any mark on the ballot paper by which he can afterwards be identified, his vote will be void and will not be counted. If a Voter takes a ballot or ballot paper out of the Polling Station, or fraudulently puts any other paper into the Ballot Box, than the paper given him by the Deputy Returning Officer, he will be subject to punishment by a fine of Five Hundred Dollars or by imprisonment for a time not exceeding six months, with or without hard labour.

SAYS SPIRIT PHOTOGRAPHS WERE FRAUDULENT. NEW YORK, Nov. 23.—Fraudulent spirit photographs, which in his opinion have hoaxed Sir Arthur Conan Doyle and others are dealt with by Dr. Walter Franklin Rouse, research officer of the Boston Society for Physical Research, in an article printed in the Scientific American. His article purports to show they were hoaxes.

After describing the famous spirit photograph of St. John the Evangelist and Cupid, which Sir Arthur declared to be the most remarkable spirit photograph he had ever seen, Dr. Rouse continued: "Do London spiritualists have hung their national galleries? They hang, and I suppose hang now, the original of that picture of St. John and the four recognized children immortalized and unaccounted. Am I the first to discover the fact that the upper two thirds of a print of St. John's holy family is what 'finished' the basis of this 'spirit photograph'? St. John was meant by the artist for the Delta, the four recognized children are the cherubs common in such pictures two and a half centuries ago, the dove has been blotting out 'ectoplasm' and the lower half of the picture cut away. But I will not dispute that this is the best spirit-photograph ever."

Feats of a Modern Miracle Man

Those who read of the "Feats of a Fakir" are apt to say "Fakir! Fakir! Fakir!"—but merely illusionist dependent on atmosphere, hypnotism, super-juggling and the like."

But Tahra Bey is not a fakir of that type. He is neither illusionist nor juggler. What he does is not just a show. It is propaganda with a high purpose behind it. All that he is paid goes to form a fund for the establishment of a "school" at Florence where the world, if it will set aside its scepticism, may learn to do as he does.

Buried Alive. His role is to be that of a healer by proving that the soul, through the medium of the harness and obedient will, can dominate the body, cure it of its disease, make surgical operations of less import than the taking of a pill, and in short, alter the whole outlook of human life.

Tahra Bey is a young man of twenty-eight and looks even younger. He is a qualified doctor. By race he is an Egyptian and a Chibik—a member of a caste or tribe of fakirs. He is full of fun, with high levish spirits. He must not marry. No woman must enter his life. He has an ancestry thousands of years old. His own astounding gifts are inherited, but he wants others to acquire them.

What does he do? First, by will-power he puts himself into a cataleptic state, and after a time resumes consciousness. He then invites any member of his audience to push knives into his body, to insert needles through his cheeks—to do, in short, what they will.

Doctors on the Continent, eager to test and possibly expose him, have accepted the challenge. He has asked whether or not they would like blood to issue from the wound. If their choice is the latter, no blood comes; if the former, blood flows. There is no pain, however, and, most amazing of all, no scars! His "wills" that there shall be no pain, no blood, or some blood!

The material part of him is absolutely under his own control. He has been put into a coffin; the latter has been filled with sand, sealed down, and buried under more hundred-weights of sand—and he has remained there, unharmed, for whatever time has first been named. In the coffin he is cataleptic, but returns to consciousness in fifteen or twenty minutes, or longer.

Can You See Your Thoughts? If you can't, that is the secret, Tahra Bey writes. There is some. He is but doing with his will what you do daily by your will.

Many who live to rise early, and at varying hours, never rely upon an alarm clock. They wake at the proper time—unhappily, we might think. But it is merely a matter of "will"; they have ordered themselves to wake, and so.

Tahra Bey does nothing more. In fact, he claims no supernatural powers. He "wills" to come out of the cataleptic state at the stipulated time—and does.

And what of disease? Again it is simple. To arrest in himself or in others, the circulation of the blood means that germs die! The age-long problem of pain—not entirely banished by modern anaesthetics, for there are the after-pains—would seem to have been solved by Tahra Bey. He has often placed himself on the points of four pointed swords, had a large stone laid on his chest, and let men smash the stone with hammers. He has "willed" that there should be no pain, and there is none.

It is obvious, of course, that he is submitting to extremely severe tests. That is why his "performances," if one must use that term, are not continuous. The strain is severe—a thousand times greater than would be required by an ordinary person in ordinary circumstances. He has to rest for two or three days before being buried in the coffin, as neither gas nor food must be in the body.

He is a thought-reader, too, but not of the usual type. He bids you think of something, and instantly reveals your thought. He "wills" that the vision of your thought shall be seen by him, and it is! Astounding, but true, the four recognized children immortalized and unaccounted. Am I the first to discover the fact that the upper two thirds of a print of St. John's holy family is what "finished" the basis of this "spirit photograph"? St. John was meant by the artist for the Delta, the four recognized children are the cherubs common in such pictures two and a half centuries ago, the dove has been blotting out "ectoplasm" and the lower half of the picture cut away. But I will not dispute that this is the best spirit-photograph ever."

Nothing short of a successful series of tests by a committee, which includes an investigator experienced in physical phenomena, by a photographer familiar with camera trickery and an expert conjurer, ever will or should convince an intelligent public, Dr. Rouse says.

Accounting for His Stewardship

Editor Evening Telegram.

Dear, Sir.—As it seems in order for the present Councilors to give an account of their stewardship, I would also like to fall in line. As you know my first experience in City work was during the Hon. M. P. Gibbs' Mayorality. At the end of that term, from experience gained, I did not seek re-election, as I found things did not look the same from an inside view as they did from the outside, although Councillor Ellis, who was then a candidate for the Mayor's Chair, did all he could to persuade me to come again, as also did Sir Edward Morris, to whom I replied that there were two considerations that would induce me to offer myself again as a candidate, the first and most important of which was that the Government would give the city full measure of incorporation, and which I am still convinced is the only way out, or to divide the city into wards. His reply to the first of my requests was that the class of men who were offering as candidates were not the class of men that property owners would like to handle their property to raise money on; and his reply to my other request was that the ward system had been tried and had failed. I therefore declined further nomination. My next experience was when I was appointed by the Government of Sir Richard Squires as a Commissioner under the Chairmanship of a mutual friend, I. C. Morris, Esq. Now at the risk of being personal I may say the first thing I did on that board was to call the attention of my colleagues to the condition of Mullins Bridge on Hamilton Avenue, which I considered was a great menace to the public as it was only about ten feet wide and was rotten from end to end. At my suggestion the Commission visited the place and unanimously decided to put a concrete bridge there, and it is now a good asset to the city. Now coming to the present term: I consider the present Council has fully justified their election from the amount of work that has been accomplished by them without any great flourish of trumpets. When I decided to seek election, I made up my mind to try and influence the Council, if it were at all possible, to build a good stable for the Sanitary Department, as the old stables were condemned thirty years ago and were not fit for man or beast, and no private citizen would be allowed to keep such a place, and why these stables were not looked after by the Society for the Protection of Animals, I could never understand. However, that is now passed and the City has a stable it can be proud of. The horses are now well stabled and well looked after and having the whole stable under one roof has been the saving of a considerable lot of stock in the food line, as under the old shacks there was naturally a waste. There is also contained in the building for the men who are out at night a good sized room supplied with hot and cold water, and necessary conveniences for the men to have their lunch, before again going to work at the ashes, etc. There have also been a lot of other improvements, such as widening Waterford Bridge Road, LeMarchant Road, water and sewerage in all parts of the City, new lights and other improvements, which to my mind are all assets to the City. All of this has been accomplished within in our income and were not done by the big men who preceded us but by the most incompetent Council who ever sat at the Board, according to some of our friends. Hoping this will be taken by my fourteen hundred friends as an account of my stewardship. I think I am again justified in asking for their vote and influence the third time.

Yours truly,
S. G. COLLIER.

Viola Dana at the Majestic

"DON'T DOUBT YOUR HUSBAND," THE BIG ATTRACTION AT THE POPULAR THEATRE TO-DAY.

"All quarrels can be avoided if your husband will do just as YOU say."

"Jealousy and suspicion don't get you anywhere, but they keep you going."

"It's queer more men aren't doctors—they're such a good excuse to get out at night."

"Never apologize to the woman who's trying to break up your home, your husband will do it for you."

These are the titles taken from the newest Viola Dana picture, "Don't Doubt Your Husband," a Metro production which is shown at the Majestic Theatre to-night. They give an idea of the story by Sada Cowan and Howard Higgin that is said to make the merriest photoplay of Miss Dana's career.

Miss Dana appears as a smart, young suburban wife who bumps along the road of matrimony with jealous outbreaks marking each bump. When she notices that her husband, played by Alan Forrest, is more interested in the ankles of a beautiful interior decorator (Winifred Bryson) than in the decorations, she decides to trail him. As luck has it, the husband, driving the other woman home, gets into a smash-up and sprains his ankle, and is taken to her home. The wife arrives there in a frenzy of anger.

It's a real matrimonial smash this time, but everything gets mended in a series of incidents that are said to sparkle with the sunshine of good humor, smart satire and dramatic situations.

Besides Miss Dana, Miss Bryson and Mr. Forrest, the cast includes John Patrick, Willard Louis, Adele Watson and Robert Dunbar. The photography is by John Arnold.

"North of 39" will be shown again on Saturday afternoon so as to give the school children a chance to see this wonderful feature.

Buyers' Responsibility

IN IMPROVING THE CURE OF FISH.

Business Men, Read This and Do Some Thinking.

Editor Evening Telegram.

Dear Sir.—The methods of doing business in this country have changed quite a lot in the past thirty years, the latest being for the business man to do business and make money without a profit on his merchandise. Is this possible? I, myself, have been in business for the past thirty years and up to the present time I have not learned this method. It surely is the best method ever invented for the poor fishermen. When I do learn this method I shall be very happy. I know for a fact of so-called merchants selling their goods under invoice cost, not counting the cost of having the goods landed and made ready for the public. How they can do this and pay the expense of keeping up a business place and other necessary expenses is a mystery. This is the way business is being done in some of the outports, and a little of it is being done in St. John's. This is the chief cause of so many failures in the past few years. Surely these men can see the foolishness of doing business in this way.

I would also like to say a word regarding the way the fish business is being conducted. I have been a fish exporter for the past twenty-five years. I still do a little, but it seems as though I will have to give it up altogether unless a change takes place soon. It is about thirty years since the quality of fish exported has been falling off in quality. If it continues going down in quality, twenty years from now codfishing will not be the staple industry of Newfoundland. The quality will be so bad that we will not find markets that will pay us enough for our fish so as to pay the expense of catching it. And every merchant knows what an expense it is to get ready to catch fish. I do not blame the fishermen for making bad fish; it is the buyer who buys it. Why should he make good fish when he can get the same price for bad fish? We have a few men who do make good fish, but they get no encouragement to continue doing so. These men are becoming fewer every year. They are following in the footsteps of their neighbours, half making their fish and getting the same price.

Here is an example of how fish is made and bought in Newfoundland. Two fishermen, Tom Jones and Tom Brown, are living in the same place; both catch twenty quintals of fish; the buyer comes, Tom Jones sells twenty quintals of good fish at eight dollars; Tom Brown sells twenty-five at eight dollars. His fish was half made, it gained five quintals, and yet he gets the same price as Tom Jones. How long do you imagine Tom Jones is going to continue to make good fish? This will show you that it is not the fishermen who are to blame; it is the merchant in St. John's who sends out his buyers, some with very little experience, who buy fish of all qualities. They pay the high price for the bad as well as the good and buy fish that no sane man would pay a good price for. If this way of handling our staple industry will continue to pay, I know very little about fish after all my years of experience.

Hoping that this will at least make some buyers give encouragement to the man who does make good fish that is fit to eat, and thus help by doing so to save our good name in the foreign markets.

Yours truly,
EXPORTER.

Grading the Roads

A great census of Britain's roads, undertaken by the Ministry of Transport, and on which 5,000 men have been busy for a fortnight, has just been completed. Notebooks in hand, the watchers were stationed at various points on the main roads all over the country, noting the traffic, everything that passed, with the exception of pedestrians and perambulators, being included in the lists. Herds of cattle, flocks of sheep, mail-carts, and wheelbarrows were all counted as traffic.

The highways are divided in two classes, Grade I and Grade II. To the upkeep of the first the Ministry of Transport makes a grant of fifty per cent, and to that of the second twenty-five per cent. Roads are graded, not according to their condition, but according to their popularity, and as a result of the census just made, some Class I roads may be relegated to Class II. On the other hand, roads at present in Class II may be graded as Class I. It is estimated that two years will be required before all the figures can be properly tabulated.

If you are a young voter, cast your vote for T. E. Collett, the young candidate.—dec1,8f

After alluding to further possible complications in the East, the New Statesman concludes:—
"The danger will not be averted by France divesting herself of the Syrian mandate, as angry English idealists and angry French realists are demanding she shall. It will only be averted by a new policy that will enable France to retrieve her position by conciliating the Arabs whom she has so intemperately provoked."—Public Opinion.

The Lost Submersible M-1

Submarine M-1 was one of the vessels planned by the famous Lord Fisher.

She was, in effect, a submarine monitor, armed with a 18-inch gun. This was mounted inside a thin shield. It was loaded on the surface and could be fired in any condition provided the muzzle was above water. The general idea was to use such submarines for bombardments or for an attack on hostile battleships. They would load before entering the danger zone and then submerge, in which condition there were arrangements for keeping the bore of the gun perfectly watertight.

The gun was hydraulically mounted and could be trained, elevated, loaded and worked without a man being on deck. A good elevation was allowed so that the range was considerable. The gun fired an 850 lb. shell, and weighed 46 tons.

The M-1 was originally known as K-18, and was similar to the K class, the last of which are now being scrapped. She was, however, slower and had Diesel engines, where the K's have steam engines. On the surface her speed was 15 1/2 knots, and submerged 9 1/2 knots. She was of 1,900 tons and was 305 ft. long, so that she was as large as a small cruiser. She was "heavily" armed as the Big Ben clock-tower at the Houses of Parliament is high.

She was completed in April 1918, but was never used in the war, as the Admiralty feared that the design might be copied by the Germans and used against our seaboard towns for bombardments. Strict secrecy was maintained concerning her.

There are two other vessels of similar type, M-2 and M-3, in the Navy. M-2 carries, in addition to the 12-inch gun, one 12-pounder gun and four 19-inch torpedo tubes.

All big submarines are difficult to handle and control, and there have been many mishaps with them. Of the K class three were sunk in the war; but all by collision; and K-5 dived and never reappeared in peace exercises on January 20, 1921.

For diving, a submarine closes all apertures and admits water to her diving tanks, which are like planes running horizontally outside her hull, and, running with electric power, forces herself below the surface. To lie on the bottom she fills sufficient tanks to overcome the lifting power of the water.

The M-1 left Portsmouth in company with the other vessels of the 5th Submarine Flotilla to which she belonged. They were going to Gibraltar to carry out exercises.

T.A. Ladies' Auxiliary

Think U.S.A. Made a Mistake

One well-informed writer is of opinion that Americans may have made a mistake in rejecting the recent French settlement. Here is the plea put forward.

"Viewed in calm retrospect, it seems to me the most obvious comment on the Washington affair must be that the French representatives made an honest and honourable offer to discharge a debt which their country regards as legal rather than moral, that it was a serious offer, since it amounted to two-thirds of our demand, and that the fact of the offer marked the total abandonment by the French of the old idea of cancellation." writes Mr. Frank H. Simonds in the American Review of Reviews.

"Since, moreover, we had taken our position on the principle that the capacity of the debtor to pay was to be the sole criterion and since the cause of failure was the difference in opinion between the two delegations not as to present but future capacity of France to pay, and since only the future can settle the merits of the dispute, failure was inevitable. "Again, since the British had accepted substantially the estimate of future French capacity which M. Caillaux presented to us, there was a further certainty that our views would not be accepted.

"Despite the general optimism following the widespread bitterness in this country over the result of the negotiations, I must set down here my conviction that we shall never have as good an offer made to us again and my feeling that a mistake was made in rejecting the French terms.

"It has been the universal experience in all post-war monetary affairs, notably reparations, that the longer they are left unsettled the smaller is the final figure. In 1919 the Allies fixed the German obligation at $32,000,000,000 and the Germans offered $25,000,000,000.

"To-day conservative observers do not fix the prospective amount of German payments as much beyond $250,000,000.

"No French, or Italian government, will ever dare to flout its own public opinion to the extent of meeting present American demands, just as no American administration will venture to flout American opinion by accepting the European judgment. This means a present deadlock, while as the war and the benefits resulting from the loans become more and more forgotten willingness to pay largely will diminish."

President Coolidge and Locarno

It is entirely natural that Mr. President Coolidge should regard the result of the Locarno Conference as highly favorable to his hope of calling a second conference on the reduction of armaments. No surprise will be felt at the nature of the despatches from Washington. The President's position can be quite simply stated. A good opportunity comes to him in a few weeks for testing the feeling in Congress as to a fresh American initiative. It will be provided by the Senate debate in December on the renewed proposal that the United States shall enter the World Court, subject to the reservations drafted by the former Secretary of State, Mr. C. E. Hughes.

Should the Senate accept, Mr. Coolidge will unquestionably move towards the calling of a disarmament conference. But his path cannot be free from difficulty. An agreement upon naval armaments was the only possible approach to Washington in 1922. A second conference would of necessity have to discuss armies, and there the United States has nothing to bargain with. This consideration has hitherto been decisive with the State Department; the heads of which have recognized that the question of armies is an essentially European question.

The Danger Signal in Syria—And Some Facts

The newspapers seem at a loss with regard to the inner situation at Syria, and the New Statesman, in an illuminating article on the question of the League of Nations taking action, and possibly to relieve France of its mandate in Syria, pointedly observes: "It is impossible for the Council of the League either to dictate day to day policy to its mandataries or itself to exercise mandatory powers. It is not even the simple matter that some of the critics seem to think it to relieve a mandatory State of its mandate. 'France ought to resign her mandate for Syria,' they cry. But, apart from the technical difficulties which we need not discuss here, how is France to be made to resign her mandate against her will?"

"It is idle to talk of the League of Nations as though it were a Trade Union or a cricket club. The League, as we know, does and can only do what its most powerful members wish it to do. And the mandate system, like the rest of its activities, depends on their good-will and honesty of purpose.

"But let us come down from principles to facts, and ask whether we really want France to 'resign' from Syria. Supposing she did, who would, or could, take the mandate? The answer is plain enough: No one. The Syrians would then be free to manage their own affairs. Now, we dare say they are capable of doing that with satisfaction to themselves at any rate, and we are not opposed to the idea of an independent Syria.

"But it is desirable to consider the possible effects in Western Asia of immediately. One obvious possibility is that Syrian independence would be a very short-lived thing. If we are to be honest about the present state of the Middle East, we must admit that it is a mass of discontents, of racial and religious hostilities, of sinister ambitions and fanaticalisms.

"The main, if not the only, restraint, is the influence of Great Britain and of France. The influence of both, no doubt, rests fundamentally on force. But force need not mean violence or injustice, and so far as our position in Palestine and Iraq is concerned we are entitled to say that it does not mean either of these things. We are, indeed, entitled to go further and to say that we are doing what we can to substitute other influences for that of force.

"The French in Syria, we may assume, started with good intentions, though they have backslided. What is important now is not so much that they should be punished for their fault—they have, in fact, punished themselves pretty severely—as that they should be brought back to their earlier good intentions.

"The task that faces us—and by us we mean Britain and France—in the Middle East is twofold. It is in the first place to keep the peace, and, secondly, to get the peoples of Western Asia into the way of keeping the peace themselves when we have gone, as we must presently. We do not pretend that it is an easy task; it may prove to be an impossible one.

"There are the Turks to be reckoned with; there are nationalist Arabs, Pan-Arabs, Anti-Zionist Arabs, and Bedouin Arabs who fit into no scheme. There is Feisal in Iraq and his brother Abdullah in Transjordan; and Ibn Saud in the Nejd. There is a Kurdish problem and a Persian problem. And behind the chances of conflict between Turk and Arab, or Turk and Kurd, or Arab and Arab, there is the chance of a combination of all of many of the Moslem peoples against the domination of the West.

"We do not ourselves believe that Pan-Islamism is a pressing danger; but it is nevertheless something that needs to be guarded against by the greatest prudence and tact. And it is not safe to assume that religious fanaticism is of no more account in Asia, abolished the Caliphate and comes to the Assembly at Angora in a top-hat and dress-clothes."

Swallowed by a Sperm Whale

Sir Francis Fox, in his work, "Sixty-three years of Engineering, Scientific and Social Work," just published in London, recalls the circumstances under which a sailor was swallowed by a sperm whale off the Falkland Islands.

About ten years ago a friend of the author, the late Rev. D. MacCalman, while travelling on a passenger steamer to the far north of Great Britain, was questioned by an elderly man as to his belief in the Bible story of Jonah being swallowed by a whale. The minister replied that he did believe it, upon which his interrogator declared it was "a mere fairy tale, for a whale feeds on animalcules."

The vessel put into port for 38 hours and as there was a whaling station in the vicinity the couple visited it and questioned the manager, who said the sperm whale's throat was such that it could take lumps of food 8 ft. in diameter, and in the stomach of one they found the skeleton of a shark 16 ft. in length.

Sir Francis later obtained information of a "well-accredited instance in recent times of a man being swallowed by a whale and being rescued alive after remaining hours in its stomach."

The incident, he says, was carefully investigated by two scientists, one of whom was the late M. de Parville, the scientific editor of the "Journal des Debats," of Paris. The account given is as follows:—

Taken From Whale's Stomach.
"In February, 1891, the whaling ship Star of the East was in the vicinity of the Falkland Islands, and the lookout sighted a large sperm whale three miles away. Two boats were launched and in a short time one of the harpooners was enabled to spear the fish. The second boat attacked the whale, but was upset by the lash of its tail and the men thrown into the sea, one man being drowned, and another, James Bartley, having disappeared, could not be found. The whale was killed, and in a few hours the great body was lying by the ship's side and the crew were busy with axes and spades removing the blubber. They worked all day and part of the next."

"Next morning they attached some tackle to the stomach, which was hoisted on to the deck. The sailors were startled by something in it which gave symptoms of life, and inside found the missing sailor doubled up unconscious. He was laid on deck and treated to a bath of sea water, which soon revived him, but his mind was not clear, and he was placed in the captain's quarters, where he remained two weeks a raving lunatic. He was kindly and carefully treated by the captain, and the officers of the ship, and gradually regained possession of his senses. At the end of the third week he had entirely recovered from the shock and resumed his duties.

Awful Experience.
"During his sojourn in the whale's stomach Bartley's skin, where it was exposed to the action of the gastric juices, underwent a striking change; his face, neck and hands were bleached to a deadly whiteness, and took on the appearance of parchment. Bartley affirms that he would have probably lived inside his house of flesh until he starved, for he lost his senses through fright, and not from lack of air.

He says he remembered the sensation of being thrown out of the boat into the sea and of dropping into the water. Then there was a fearful rushing sound which he believes to be the beating of the water by the whale's tail—he was then encompassed by a great darkness, and he felt he was slipping along a smooth passage of some sort that seemed to move and carry him forward. This sensation lasted but a short time, and then he realized he had more room.

"He felt about him and his hands came in contact with a yielding slimy substance that seemed to shrink from his touch. It finally dawned upon him that he had been swallowed by the whale and he was overcome by horror at the situation.
"He could easily breathe, but the heat was terrible. It was not of a scorching stifling nature, but it seemed to open the pores of his skin and to draw out his vitality. He became very weak and grew sick at the stomach. He knew there was no hope of escape from his strange prison. Death stared him in the face. He tried to look at it bravely, but the terrible quiet, darkness and heat, combined with the horrible knowledge of his environment overcame him. The next he remembered was being in the captain's cabin.

"According to the record the skin on his face and hands never recovered its natural appearance, but the health of the man did not seem affected by his terrible experience. It is stated that on the return of the vessel to England Bartley went to a London Hospital to be treated for the injury to his skin."

Sir Francis adds: "As the story of Jonah is often a source of merriment with some persons—and a matter of difficulty to many more—it seems only right to show that the story is not necessarily absurd."

"Red" Party Illegal Judge Declares

London, Nov. 26. (Canadian Press cable).—The imprisonment of virtually the whole executive of the Communist organization here for sedition and incitement to mutiny in the British forces as the outcome of the trial and conviction of the twelve Communists may possibly not end the Communist Party's discomfiture, since justification of further proceedings against the party may be regarded as embodied in a significant phrase used by Judge Swift in sentencing the twelve men yesterday. He said: "You are members of an illegal party, carrying on illegal work."

The conviction of the twelve Communists is the leading topic of all the newspapers. Many of the papers applaud the prosecution of the "Reds" as providing a healthy warning and none of them question the legality of the conviction of the twelve, though some of them express doubt as to the wisdom of driving the subversive activities of the Communist underground.

The Manchester Guardian, Liberal, while admitting the illegality of the acts of the Communists, who were sentenced yesterday to imprisonment and saying there are few people who do not detest their doctrines, suggests that the popular confidence of the English people in the administration of the law is not what it was 15 years ago when members of Parliament circularized a battalion of the Grenadiers in London inciting them to mutiny in the interests of the Conservative Party.

The Guardian continues: "The Field Marshal took a hand in the dirty work of seducing the soldiers from their duty."

Lord Birkenhead gleefully prophesied, as some of the sanguine Communists do now, that the army would break in the government's hands if ordered to enforce the law where the law was extremely distasteful to his own party.

"Lord Carson boasted that the army is with us."

Lord Carson was made a Judge. Lord Birkenhead was made a Lord Chancellor.

The Guardian concludes by saying that it would be childish optimism to expect that such causes would be without their effect, and suggests that the good name of British criminal justice is not altogether safe in the hands of the present Home Secretary, Sir William Joynson-Hicks, under whose department the movement against the Communists' activities has been begun.

Crisis Arises in Irish Free State

London, Nov. 26.—A crisis, the gravity of which is universally realized, has arisen in the Irish Free State consequent on the resignation of John MacNeill from the Ulster Boundary Commission, and it is feared that the stability of Cosgrave's government will be imperilled as a consequence. It is also accepted both in Belfast and Dublin that the work of the commission will go by the board, although official circles are still debating whether a report signed by only two of the commissioners would be valid, the opinion generally being that it would be so.

The reasons for MacNeill's resignation have some elements of mystery.

Up to a few weeks ago it is known that the work of the commission was proceeding satisfactorily, compromise adjustments along the frontier being agreed upon and the chief difficulty being what to do with Newry. MacNeill wanted Newry to come into the Free State, but the other two members of the commission opposed this and decided to leave it with Ulster.

The Morning Post recently published what purported to be the gist of the commission's findings, in which all the key towns were given Ulster and only strips of valueless land in Armagh, Tyrone, Germanagh and Donegal had been awarded to Ulster. Members of the Daily started protesting as soon as these reports were published, and Cosgrave's position became desperate, and this was followed by MacNeill's resignation, as a matter of course.

There is not the slightest doubt that the Morning Post obtained its information from Ulster sources, though not represented thereon.

Premier Cosgrave's charges that political pressure has been brought to bear on the commissioners is warmly resented by Judge Feetham of South Africa, the chairman and Joseph Fisher, the third member of the commission, and the charges only served to add fuel to the flames.

IF BACK HURTS FLUSH KIDNEYS

Drink Plenty Water and Take Glass of Salts Before Breakfast Occasionally

"Too much rich food forms acids which excite and overwork the kidneys in their efforts to filter it from the system. Flush the kidneys occasionally to relieve them like you relieve the bowels, removing acids, waste and poison, else you may feel a misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headaches, dizziness, the stomach sour, tongue coated, and when the weather is cold you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get irritated, often one to get up two or three times during the night.

To help neutralize these irritating acids and flush off the body's surplus waste, begin drinking water. Also about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine and bladder disorders disappear.

This famous salt is made from acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys and stop bladder irritation. Jad Salts is inexpensive and makes a delightful effervescent drinking water drink which millions of sick and women take now and then to help prevent serious kidney and bladder disorders.

Ask your druggist for Jad Salts today.

Women Who Can Help Our Trade

PROBING AN EMPIRE PROBLEM.
By LADY ALEXANDER.

Lady Alexander, widow of Sir George Alexander, the celebrated actor, discusses this important question from the point of view of the average housewife.

Unless you are a baker, suppose for a minute that you make bread for a living. Try to imagine that you have a brother who is a butcher, and an uncle who is a tailor. Where would you buy your chops and steak and Sunday joint?

It goes without saying that you would patronize your brother's meat shop, even if he sold nothing but the best English meat. When you or your butcher brother wanted a new suit of clothes, you would not consider going to any tailor but your uncle, although his fine cloth and latest cut might cost slightly more than that of other tailors in the town. In the same way, you would doubtless have a standing order to supply your brother and uncle with their daily bread and an occasional birthday cake.

Buy From Britons.

In every family there is a natural and praiseworthy desire to "pull together." You would not object to paying a little more for your meat, because you would know that you were getting the best and were keeping the business and the money in your own family. This would help you indirectly, because the prosperity of each member of the family is the same as the prosperity of the whole. You would never dream of buying clothes from, say a cheap foreign tailor and seeing your uncle and his wife and children lose business before your eyes!

Within the British Empire you have brothers and uncles in a wider sense. They or their forefathers all came from Great Britain. They are of our family. And they are all producing something that you want every day.

Some are growing wheat; others are producing fruit; many are breeding cows and sheep. Cannot you look upon them in the same way that you regard your nearer relations at home? If you buy their produce, and if they buy goods from you, everyone will benefit. By trading together, the prosperity of the whole Empire will be increased.

500 Per Cent. Profit.

Going out on Saturday night with perhaps only a small amount in her purse to do the week's shopping, I know it is difficult for the average housewife to give much thought to Empire trading. To keep house on a small sum of money, to buy boots and clothes for the children, and put a few shillings aside for a holiday in the summer, you have to count every penny. The cost of living is still very high, and the average woman finds it a severe problem to make ends meet in the household. Many commodities have not been reduced in price much since the war, and there is still a certain amount of profiteering.

Startling revelations were made recently in regard to the huge profits in the retail trade of Great Britain, and it was stated that as much as 500 per cent. was not uncommon. Rather than lower prices, some grocers will let stocks go bad!

Towards Cheaper Living.

From a pennyworth of seeds about 500 lettuces are grown by one market gardener, and he sells them at Covent Garden at one farthing each. But only three miles from where they are grown they are bought at fourpence each. Cod was once obtainable from local fish markets at two-pence. Mackerel were eight for a shilling. They are now eightpence apiece.

I could multiply instances, but they are well known to you. What is required, at the present time is a realization amongst the women of the country that they have it in their power to reduce the price of food, and also to do away with much of the unemployment in the country.

Fancy suggesting that we buy British Dominion goods which cost more than foreign goods! Fancy expecting hard-pressed housewives to do this when house-keeping is such a problem! The idea is ridiculous! I can imagine some making these objections. But one must take a long view of the situation. If every housewife would forego a penny or two occasionally in order to buy Dominion goods, much of the foreign stuff would soon disappear.

This means sacrifice, but the result would be that in time Dominion goods would be reduced in price. Food generally would be cheaper, because the quantity of Dominion goods required would be much greater. When goods are produced in large quantities they cost less.

Inside our Empire there are raw and manufactured products to supply the wants of all the people. Not only in this, but if these goods were distributed properly they could be sold at a much lower price than at present, which would bring down the cost of living considerably.

During four recent years the United Kingdom imported $58,000,000 hundredweights of wheat. Does it not seem absurd that 61 per cent. of this huge amount came from foreign sources, whilst the fields of our own Empire lie waste? Our own wheat suppliers do not want to charge more than their foreign competitors. The average price paid to the foreigner was 20s. 5d. per hundredweight, whilst the average price paid to the suppliers within our Empire was only 17s. 5d. In other words, three shillings more was paid to foreigners than to our own people! Throwing away $250,000,000 a year! That is the estimated amount of money we give to foreigners which might be spent within the Empire.

If we bought more goods from the Dominions they would have more money to spend in this country. They would buy more of our cutlery and china and crockery. The sale of Dominion foodstuffs would also help the Dominions because they, too, have their share of unemployment.

Many girls leave school without a very clear knowledge of what foodstuffs are produced in various parts of the Empire, and the seasons when these are at their best and easy obtainable. Siberian salmon is bought in this country, but often people do not know whether they are buying Siberian or British Columbian salmon.

The Patriot's Pledge.

To assist housewives it is essential that Empire products, such as preserves, dried fruits, apples, and meat, should be fully advertised. The Government has put aside £1,000,000 a year to foster trade with the Dominions.

Thousands of people have signed a pledge binding themselves, wherever possible, to purchase Empire goods. But, on the other hand, Dominion exporters might pay a little more attention themselves to studying our particular needs. Jam, for example, tins after being used to glass jars, should not be packed in tins, because British housewives do not care for fruit bottles might, remember that the climate of this country is cooler than that of the Antipodes, and that some of us would like a little more sugar in our bottles of fruit.

Women will help to save Britain's trade as soon as they realize that there is a close connection between their shopping and the prosperity of the Empire.

Where Error is Death!

SIGNAL-BOX WONDERS.
It takes twelve years to make an efficient railway signalman.

At the age of sixteen the aspirant starts as a train register-book clerk. Later he is taught the use of the telegraph and telephone. He is given practical instruction in giving and receiving messages, and it is during this period that the need of accuracy is impressed on him.

At eighteen he becomes a signal-lamp man. His sight is carefully tested at this stage, and if any trace of colour blindness is found his work in the signal-box ends.

A Signalman at Last

At the age of twenty-four the man who has passed his tests becomes an understudy in the signal-box, and is allowed to "receive" and "pass" trains. Four years of this and, if he is successful in a stiff practical examination, he is at last recognized as a qualified signalman.

I listened with slightly-raised eyebrows while a railway official gave me these facts (writes the Tit-Bits man). It seemed a long apprenticeship for a matter of pulling levers! But after I had paid a visit to Signal Box A, that long, glass-walled cabin through the narrow thoroughfare inquired to Waterloo Station, London, I was indeed humbled!

In the long, narrow room stand two rows of levers, 256 of them. In charge of them are six men and an overseer who work in eight-hour shifts, and whose duty it is to pass trains all day and night through eight lines, and then distribute them so that they may discharge their loads on twenty-one platforms.

Waterloo's Glass Guardian

The average number of trains that these men have to deal with in twenty-four hours is 1,500. This necessitates 2,400 lever movements a day, and one error might mean a terrible disaster. On busy days the traffic is considerably heavier. During one hour on a certain race day, 32 electric trains, 16 steam trains, and 8 "specials" left

A Tragi-Comedy of Married Life in the First Year
by SADA COWAN and HOWARD HIGGIN
Directed by
HARRY BEAUMONT

RICHARD had always been so good to her during their year of courtship. He was the original "Yes, dear" kid. How much liberty was he going to have—no questions asked—It's a smash!

the station; 23 electric trains, 20 steam trains, and 8 "specials" entered. Thus in sixty minutes 117 trains passed to and fro beneath the glass guardian of Waterloo.
The six men who are in the box have two short respites for meals, and that is all. Every other minute of their eight hours is occupied with work that calls for quick and accurate action.
The walls of the signal-box are lined with maps of the various routes, and blinking lights mark the progress of each train. Indicators that show the action of certain points flash their messages and the changing of telegraph bells and the shrill ring of telephone bells. Coloured lights
